Dear Mr. Pichai:

To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with Big Tech to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand how and to what extent the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech. To this end, we have asked for communications between Alphabet and the Executive Branch, internal Alphabet communications discussing communications from the Executive Branch, and Alphabet communications with third parties that may have been working with the Executive Branch, in addition to other key information. Your response without compulsory process has been woefully inadequate.

In contrast to Alphabet, Twitter recently set a benchmark for how transparent Big Tech companies can be about interactions with government over censorship. The Twitter Files have exposed how Big Tech and the federal government have worked hand in hand in ways that undermine First Amendment principles. Numerous internal documents from Twitter reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which this occurred at Alphabet as well.

Accordingly, please find attached a subpoena.

Mr. Chip Slaven
Former Interim Executive Director & CEO
National School Boards Association
1680 Duke St., Floor 2
Alexandria, VA 22314-3493

Dear Mr. Slaven:

The Committee on the Judiciary (Committee) is conducting oversight of the misuse of criminal and counterterrorism resources by the executive branch against concerned parents at local school board meetings and the effect on parents' protected First Amendment activity. On September 29, 2021, as Interim Executive Director and CEO of the National School Boards Association (NSBA), you co-signed a letter to President Biden urging the executive branch to use counterterrorism tools, including the Patriot Act, in response to parents protesting controversial educational curricula and policies.[1] The NSBA letter led to Attorney General Garland issuing a memorandum on October 4, 2021, directing federal law enforcement to investigate parents.[2] Whistleblowers have disclosed that this memorandum resulted in the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) establishment of a "threat tag" and the Justice Department has confirmed that the FBI investigated at least 25 incidents as a result of the NSBA letter you co-signed.[3]

In a letter dated January 27, 2023, the Committee requested that you appear for a voluntary transcribed interview to provide information about the impetus for the September 29, 2021, letter and related matters.[4] This request remains outstanding.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[5] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee is authorized to conduct oversight of the Justice Department and FBI—including with respect to the agencies' use of law-enforcement and counterterrorism resources and their policies to protect civil liberties—to inform potential legislative reforms.[6] These potential legislative reforms include, among other proposals, legislation to prescribe how federal law-enforcement entities investigate constitutionally protected activity, legislation to educate federal law-enforcement personnel on civil liberty protections, and legislation to prevent the misuse of federal law-enforcement and counterterrorism resources in the future. Based on information in publicly available documents, you have unique information that is relevant and necessary to inform our oversight and potential legislative reforms.[7]

Ms. Nina Jankowicz

Washington, DC 20036

Dear Ms. Jankowicz:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the so-called "Disinformation Governance Board" within the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), its creation, its activities, and related matters. We have repeatedly sought information from you concerning your official actions and duties as a DHS employee and former Executive Director of the Board, including how the Board intended to define disinformation, how it planned to collect information and from what sources, how it anticipated countering disinformation, and how it proposed to protect First Amendment rights.

We first wrote to you on May 5, 2022, requesting your voluntary cooperation with our oversight of the Board, its operations, and your work as Executive Director.[1] In a subsequent letter dated December 1, 2022, we again requested that you provide documents and appear for a voluntary transcribed interview with the Committee.[2] We reiterated our request for a voluntary transcribed interview in the 118th Congress in letters dated January 27, 2023, February 16, 2023, and March 1, 2023.[3] To date, however, you have declined to comply voluntarily with our request for a transcribed interview.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[4] Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives authorizes the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct oversight of matters involving civil liberties to inform potential legislation.[5] Our oversight of the so-called "Disinformation Governance Board" and its effect on Americans' civil liberties fall squarely within the Committee's jurisdiction and are "subject[s] on which legislation could be had."[6] These potential legislative reforms include the prohibition of such a federal "disinformation" entity, restrictions on the executive branch's authority to collect speech-related information about American citizens, or enhanced protections surrounding civil liberties. As the former Executive Director of the Board, you are uniquely situated to provide information that is relevant and necessary to inform the Committee's oversight and potential legislative reforms.

Accordingly, and in light of your disregard of our earlier voluntary requests, please find attached a subpoena compelling you to appear for a deposition.

Sincerely,

Jim Jordan

Dear Mr. Gilligan:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and the extent to which the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand how and to what extent the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech. To this end, we have asked for communications between the Executive Branch and the Center for Internet Security. In addition to other key information, we have also asked for communications between companies including social media companies and the Center for Internet Security, in order to understand, among other things, the extent to which content moderation occurred as a result of the government's influence. Your response without compulsory process has been inadequate.

The Twitter Files and other public reporting have exposed how the federal government, Big Tech, and various intermediaries have worked hand in hand in ways that undermine First Amendment principles. Numerous internal documents made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which the federal government or one of its proxies worked with or relied upon the Center for Internet Security in order to censor speech. This includes intermediaries who may or may not have had a full understanding of the government's efforts and motivations.

Mr. Mark F. Pomerantz
Former New York County Special Assistant District Attorney
Free & Fair Litigation Group
128 E. Broadway, Unit 793
New York, NY 10002

Dear Mr. Pomerantz:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the New York County District Attorney's unprecedented indictment of a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. On March 22, 2023, we requested that you voluntarily cooperate with our oversight by providing relevant documents and testimony pertaining to your role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into the former President's finances.[1] We received a reply letter dated March 27, 2023, stating that, at the instruction of the New York County District Attorney's Office, you would not cooperate with our oversight.[2] You enclosed a copy of a letter from the New York County District Attorney's Office directing you not to cooperate.[3]

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[4] Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives authorizes the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct oversight of criminal justice matters to inform potential legislation.[5] Congress has a specific and manifestly important interest in preventing politically motivated prosecutions of current and former Presidents by elected state and local prosecutors, particularly in jurisdictions—like New York County—where the prosecutor is popularly elected and trial-level judges lack life tenure. Among other things, if state or local prosecutors are able to engage in politically motivated prosecutions of Presidents of the United States (current or former) for personal acts, this could have a profound impact on how Presidents choose to exercise their powers while in office. For example, a President could choose to avoid taking action he believes to be in the national interest because it would negatively impact New York City for fear that he would be subject to a retaliatory prosecution in New York City.

As a result, the New York County District Attorney's unprecedented prosecutorial conduct requires oversight to inform the consideration of potential legislative reforms that would, if enacted, insulate current and former Presidents from such politically motivated state and local prosecutions. These potential legislative reforms may include, among other things, broadening the existing statutory right of removal of certain criminal cases from state court to federal court. The local prosecution of a former President also raises the potential for conflict between the federal law-enforcement officials required by federal law to protect a former President and local law-enforcement officials required to enforce an indictment and exercise control of him throughout his presence in the local criminal justice system. The Committee may consider legislative reforms to address or remedy this potential conflict. In addition, the New York County District Attorney's Office has acknowledged that it used federal forfeiture funds in its investigations of President Trump, including during your tenure in that office and during the time when former President Trump was in office and a candidate for re-election.[6] The Committee may therefore consider legislation to enhance reporting requirements concerning the use of federal forfeiture funds or to prohibit the use of federal forfeiture funds to investigate a current or former President or presidential candidate.

Based on your unique role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into President Trump's finances, you are uniquely situated to provide information that is relevant and necessary to inform the Committee's oversight and potential legislative reforms. Although the New York County District Attorney's Office has directed you not to cooperate with our oversight, you have already discussed many of the topics relevant to our oversight in a book you wrote and published in February 2023,[7] as well as in several public interviews to promote your book.[8] As a result, you have no basis to decline to testify about matters before the Committee that you have already discussed in your book and/or on a prime-time television program with an audience in the millions, including on the basis of any purported duty of confidentiality or privilege interest.

Your book discloses various details about the New York County District Attorney's Office's investigation of President Trump, including internal deliberations about the investigation. Indeed, you discuss how members of the Office viewed the credibility of a key witness in the case, and you note their concerns about the case's dim prospects. For example, in your book, you recount a "mini-revolt" that occurred following an internal Office meeting on September 21, 2021, about the investigations into President Trump.[9] You offer details about a disagreement between you and the Office's Major Economic Crimes Bureau Chief, Julieta Lozano, about Michael Cohen's credibility as a witness in the investigation.[10] You also complain about concerns expressed by Chris Conroy, the Office's Investigative Division Chief, during a meeting on November 12, 2021.[11] According to you, Conroy "spoke about his misgivings" about the Trump investigation, which stemmed from a recent case involving financial and accounting fraud charges that mirrored the charges that the Office was considering pursuing against President Trump.[12] That case apparently ended poorly for the New York County District Attorney's Office.[13] Like Lozano, Conroy also expressed concerns about Cohen's viability as a witness.[14] You accuse other lawyers of being "relentlessly negative, dwelling on all the difficulties and issues with the case, and refusing to acknowledge the positives" during an internal meeting on December 10, 2021, referring to your former colleagues as "conscientious objectors" merely for opining that the case was "weak" and pointing to its "many fatal flaws."[15] You ultimately dismiss their concerns about the investigation by suggesting that they were either too lazy to do the work, did not know the evidence, or were somehow afraid of bringing charges against President Trump.[16]

Your book, described as a "300-page exercise in score-settling and scorn,"[17] also reveals the extent to which the New York County District Attorney's Office's investigation of President Trump appears to have been politically motivated. Specifically, you describe your eagerness to investigate President Trump, writing that you were "delighted" to join an unpaid group of lawyers advising on the Trump investigations, and joking that salary negotiations had gone "great" because you would have paid to join the investigation.[18] You frivolously compare President Trump to mob boss John Gotti,[19] and claim that the District Attorney's Office was "warranted in throwing the book" at President Trump because, in your view, he "had become a master of breaking the law in ways that were difficult to reach."[20] You explain that this "collective weight" of President Trump's conduct over the years "left no doubt in [your] mind that [President] Trump deserved to be prosecuted."[21] In other words, as a special assistant district attorney, you seem, for reasons unrelated to the facts of this particular investigation, to have been searching for any basis on which to bring criminal charges.[22]

Although you claim that you were "able to put aside [your] personal feelings about [President] Trump" during the investigation, the depth of your personal animosity towards him is apparent in your writing. You wrote of President Trump:

> I saw him as a malignant narcissist, and perhaps even a megalomaniac who posed a real danger to the country and the ideals that mattered to me. His behavior made me angry, sad, and even disgusted.[23]

You additionally "marveled at the thought" of being "at the center of what might become one of the most consequential criminal cases ever brought."[24] You reflect on your "only similar experience," which you indicated was the "indictment of Osama bin Laden and other members of al Qaeda for the bombing of the United States embassies in Kenya and Tanzania."[25] Drawing a parallel between these two vastly different matters speaks volumes about the mindset that you brought to the investigation of President Trump.

These perceptions appear to have colored your work as a special assistant district attorney, to the point that you even resigned because the investigation into President Trump was not proceeding fast enough for your liking.[26] In your resignation letter, you prejudged the results of the District Attorney's investigation, writing that "Donald Trump is guilty of numerous felony violations," and vowing not to be a "passive participant" to "a grave failure of justice."[27] Your public resignation reportedly left District Attorney Bragg "deeply stung," and caused him to issue an "unusual" public statement "emphasizing that the investigation into Trump and his business was far from over."[28] Your book also contributed to the "political pressure" on District Attorney Bragg to bring charges against former President Trump.[29]

The Honorable Christopher A. Wray
Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
935 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20535

Dear Director Wray:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) handling of domestic violent extremism investigations against Catholic Americans and its effect on protected First Amendment activity. Based on the limited information produced by the FBI to the Committee, we now know that the FBI relied on at least one undercover agent to produce its analysis, and that the FBI proposed that its agents engage in outreach to Catholic parishes to develop sources among the clergy and church leadership to inform on Americans practicing their faith. This shocking information reinforces our need for all responsive documents, and the Committee is issuing a subpoena to you to compel your full cooperation.

We have repeatedly sought information from the FBI relating to a January 23, 2023 document generated by the Richmond Field Office entitled "Interest of Racially or Ethnically Motivated Violent Extremists in Radical-Traditionalist Catholic Ideology Almost Certainly Presents New Mitigation Opportunities" ("FBI's Richmond document").[1] In this document, the FBI purported to categorize Catholic Americans based on theological distinctions and relied on the Southern Poverty Law Center to suggest that certain kinds of Catholic Americans may be domestic terrorists.[2] On February 16, 2023, we first wrote to you requesting documents and information to inform our oversight.[3] After receiving no response, we reiterated our outstanding requests in a subsequent letter dated March 20, 2023.[4] On March 23, 2023, we received a substandard and partial response consisting of only 18 pages—many with significant redactions of "personally identifiable information" or "specific non-public information about [FBI] investigations, sources, and methods" that prevents the Committee from fully assessing the content and context of the documents and obtaining information requested from the Bureau.[5]

The limited information that was provided to the Committee makes clear that we must possess all responsive material without redactions. From this selective production, we know that the FBI, relying on information derived from at least one undercover employee, sought to use local religious organizations as "new avenues for tripwire and source development."[6] For example, in a section of the document entitled "Opportunities," the FBI wrote:

> In addition to [redaction], engage in outreach to the leadership of other [Society of Saint Pius X] chapels in the FBI Richmond [area of responsibility] to sensitize these congregations to the warning signs of radicalization and to enlist their assistance to serve as suspicious activity tripwires.[7]

The FBI similarly noted two other opportunities to engage in outreach with religious institutions in the Richmond area, citing a desire "to sensitize the congregation to the warning signs of radicalization and enlist their assistance to serve as suspicious activity tripwires."[8] This outreach plan even included contacting so-called "mainline Catholic parishes" and the local "diocesan leadership[]."[9] The FBI also expressed an interest in "leverag[ing] existing sources and/or initiat[ing] Type 5 Assessments to develop new sources with the placement and access" to report on suspicious activity.[10]

This information is outrageous and only reinforces the Committee's need for all FBI material responsive to our request. The documents produced to date show how the FBI sought to enlist Catholic houses of worship as potential sources to monitor and report on their parishioners. Americans attend church to worship and congregate for their spiritual and personal betterment. They must be free to exercise their fundamental First Amendment rights without worrying that the FBI may have planted so-called "tripwire" sources or other informants in their houses of worship.

Although the FBI claims to have "numerous" and "rigorous" policies to protect First Amendment rights,[11] the FBI's Richmond document plainly undercuts these assertions. The document itself shows that its contents, including its proposal to develop sources in Catholic churches, were reviewed and approved by two senior intelligence analysts and even the local Chief Division Counsel. We know from whistleblowers that the FBI distributed this document to field offices across the country. It is unclear, however, how many FBI employees explored "new avenues for tripwire and source development" in Catholic houses of worship across the country as a result of the FBI's Richmond document.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[12] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee is authorized to conduct oversight of the Justice Department and FBI—including with respect to the agencies' use of law-enforcement and counterterrorism resources and their policies to protect civil liberties—to inform potential legislative reforms.[13] These potential legislative reforms could include, among other proposals, legislation to prescribe how federal law-enforcement entities investigate constitutionally protected activity, legislation to educate federal law-enforcement personnel on civil liberty protections, or legislation to prevent the misuse of federal law-enforcement and counterterrorism resources in the future. The information we have requested about the FBI's Richmond document is necessary to inform such potential legislation.

Accordingly, and in light of your disregard of our earlier voluntary requests, please find attached a subpoena for the requested documents and information.

Dear Mr. Stamos:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and the extent to which the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand how and to what extent the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech. To this end, we have asked for communications between the Executive Branch and the Stanford Internet Observatory. In addition to other key information, we have also asked for communications between companies including social media companies and the Stanford Internet Observatory, in order to understand, among other things, the extent to which content moderation occurred as a result of the government's influence. Your response without compulsory process has been inadequate.

The Twitter Files and other public reporting have exposed how the federal government, Big Tech, and various intermediaries have worked hand in hand in ways that undermine First Amendment principles. Numerous internal documents made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which the federal government or one of its proxies worked with or relied upon the Stanford Internet Observatory in order to censor speech.

Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[2] In addition, H. The Honorable Lina Khan
Chair
Federal Trade Commission
600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20580

Dear Chair Khan:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the Federal Trade Commission's (FTC) abuse of its statutory authorities in investigating Twitter. On March 10, 2023, the Committee wrote to you requesting relevant documents and information about the FTC's recent actions against Twitter.[1] To date, your voluntary compliance has been woefully insufficient. Accordingly, the Committee is issuing a subpoena to compel the production of documents necessary to inform our oversight.

On March 7, 2023, the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government released a report revealing how the FTC made inappropriate and burdensome demands coinciding with Elon Musk's acquisition of the company.[2] The Select Subcommittee's report revealed how the FTC harassed Twitter in the wake of Mr. Musk's acquisition, demanding, among other things, the identities of the journalists with whom it was engaging and all communications relating to Mr. Musk.[3] Based on the information in this report showing how the FTC had abused it statutory and enforcement authority, the Committee requested information in its March 10 letter to inform our oversight.[4]

On March 27, 2023, you sent a response letter seeking to justify the scope of the FTC's inquiry into Twitter by linking it to the terms of a narrower FTC Order related to Twitter's privacy practices.[5] However, as our March 10 letter outlined—and the Select Subcommittee report explained in detail—the FTC's requests to Twitter were not limited to the scope of the Order,[6] making the FTC's justification pretextual at best. In addition, your letter addressed only one of the Committee's requests, instead deferring to unspecified "further engagement on [the Committee's] other requests."[7] The FTC also produced none of the requested documents.

The Committee sought to engage with the FTC on its outstanding requests during a hearing of the Committee's Subcommittee on Responsiveness and Accountability to Oversight on March 29, 2023.[8] During this hearing, the Director of the FTC's Office of Congressional Relations testified that she was largely unaware of any progress being made toward satisfying the Committee's requests.[9] For example, the Director did not know which FTC employee was overseeing the FTC's compliance with the Committee's requests,[10] and provided no information as to what information had been gathered or what sources were being reviewed for production, if any.[11] Following the hearing, in an exchange with Committee staff on April 3, 2023, FTC staff confirmed that the FTC had no immediate plans to provide the Committee with the documents and information it had requested.[12]

Based on this information, the Committee has good reason to believe that the FTC will not voluntarily produce the documents requested in our March 10 letter. The FTC's refusal to provide this material is unacceptable. As Subcommittee Chairman Cline explained at the March 29 hearing:

> The absence of a sound and transparent administrative process results in failed and costly Government policies. This is what we are seeing unfold at the FTC under Chair Lina Khan. It is incumbent on Congress to provide oversight to these matters. And such oversight will remain necessary while the FTC continues to take actions on matters its enabling statute does not authorize.[13]

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[14] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized to conduct oversight on matters relating to the

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and the extent to which the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand how and to what extent the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech. To this end, we have asked for communications between the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), private companies, and other third-party groups such as nonprofit organizations, in addition to other information. Your response without compulsory process has, to date, been inadequate.

The Twitter Files and other public reporting have exposed how the federal government has pressured and colluded with Big Tech and other intermediaries to censor certain viewpoints on social and other media in ways that undermine First Amendment principles. The First Amendment prohibits government officials from imposing viewpoint-based censorship restrictions. State action doctrine stands for the proposition that government officials may not circumvent constitutional strictures by using private actors—whether through coercion, encouragement, entwinement, or joint participation—to accomplish what the government cannot directly.

Dear Director Easterly:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and the extent to which the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand how and to what extent the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech. To this end, we have asked for communications between the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), private companies, and other third-party groups such as nonprofit organizations, in addition to other information. Your response without compulsory process has, to date, been inadequate.

The Twitter Files and other public reporting have exposed how the federal government has pressured and colluded with Big Tech and other intermediaries to censor certain viewpoints on social and other media in ways that undermine First Amendment principles. The First Amendment prohibits government officials from imposing viewpoint-based censorship restrictions. State action doctrine stands for the proposition that government officials may not circumvent constitutional strictures by using private actors—whether through coercion, encouragement, entwinement, or joint participation—to accomplish what the government cannot directly.

J. (Aug. 12, 2022); Editorial Board, How the Feds Coordinate With Facebook on Censorship, WALL ST. J. (Sept. 9, 2022).

Numerous documents made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which CISA coerced, pressured, worked with, or relied upon social media and other tech companies in order to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes understanding the extent and nature of CISA's involvement in this censorship.

On March 22, 2023, the Committee wrote to CISA seeking voluntary cooperation with our oversight.[2] Among other things, we asked for communications between CISA and private companies, internal CISA communications, and communications between CISA and other third parties discussing content moderation. To date, CISA has failed to respond or to produce any documents responsive to the Committee's request.

Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[3] In addition, H. Res. 12 authorized the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government to investigate "issues related to the violation of the civil liberties of citizens of the United States."[4]

Accordingly, and due to CISA's inadequate voluntary compliance, please find attached a subpoena.

Sincerely,

Jim Jordan

The Committee's investigation, along with other public reporting, and publicized discovery in an ongoing federal court case, *Missouri v. encouragement, entwinement, or joint participation—to accomplish what the government cannot directly.[4]

Numerous documents that have been made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which DOJ officials have coerced, pressured, worked with, or relied upon social media and other tech companies to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes understanding the extent and nature of DOJ's involvement in this censorship.

On April 18, the Committee wrote to you seeking your voluntary cooperation with our oversight.[5] Among other things, we asked for communications between DOJ employees and private companies, internal communications, and communications between DOJ and other third parties discussing content moderation. To date, DOJ has produced only a single document: a publicly available transcript of a civil deposition of Federal Bureau of Investigation Assistant Special Agent in Charge Elvis Chan from Missouri v. Biden. Through its investigation, the Committee has uncovered evidence that contradicts several statements in Agent Chan's deposition, particularly as they relate to his communications with social media platforms.[6]

This production is woefully inadequate and omits voluminous responsive material, including communications between DOJ and tech companies, internal communications, and communications between DOJ and other executive branch entities.

Notably, on July 4, the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Louisiana in Missouri v. Biden enjoined multiple government defendants from communicating with tech companies for the purpose of influencing their content moderation policies.[7] The court found that government defendants:

> "jointly participated" with the social-media companies to such an extent that [they] have become "pervasively entwined" in the private companies' workings to such an extent as to blur the line between public and private action. Therefore, Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits that the government Defendants are responsible for the private social media companies' decisions to censor protected content on social media platforms.[8]

The Committee has engaged with the FBI in identifying the Committee's highest priority documents and information in both letters to you and during calls with Committee staff.[10]

Chief Executive Officer, Citibank N.A.
c/o Mark G. Eliades
Director & Associate General Counsel
Compliance & Investigations
388 Greenwich Street, 17th Floor
New York, NY 10013

Dear Mr. Garg:

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government are conducting oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and its receipt of information about American citizens from private entities. On June 12, 2023, we requested your voluntary cooperation with our oversight to determine the extent to which financial institutions, such as Citibank, have worked with the FBI to collect Americans' financial data.[1] To date, Citibank has declined to comply with our request voluntarily, and counsel has represented that it will only comply pursuant to a subpoena.

The Committee and Select Subcommittee have obtained evidence showing that at least one major financial institution provided the FBI with private financial data without legal process. As first noted in our June 12 letter, testimony from current and former FBI officials shows that Bank of America (BoA) provided the FBI—voluntarily and without any legal process—with a list of individuals who made transactions in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area with a BoA credit or debit card between January 5 and January 7, 2021.[2] The Committee has also learned that individuals who had previously purchased a firearm with a BoA product were elevated to the top of that list, regardless of the time or place of the firearm purchase.[3] Given this concerning testimony, the Committee has written to other major financial institutions, including Citibank, to determine whether those entities were involved in similar conduct.

[2] Transcribed Interview of Mr. George Hill 74-75 (Feb. 7, 2023) (describing that "Bank of America, with no directive from the FBI, data-mined its customer base. And they data-mined a date range of 5 to 7 January of any BOA customer who used a BOA product"); Transcribed Interview of Mr. Steve Jensen 146 (May 19, 2023) (stating that "one of my unit chiefs . . . advised that a number of leads had gone out regarding Bank of America information of subjects"); Transcribed Interview with Mr. Joseph Bonavolonta 11 (May 4, 2023) ("I am aware of information that was forwarded to us related to a Bank of America lead, yes"); Transcribed Interview of Mr. Steven D'Antuono (Jun. 7, 2023) (recalling that "[he learned that Bank of America provided information] probably through the course of the investigation at some point.").

Documents recently obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee have reinforced our concerns. These documents show that the FBI supplied BoA with specific search query terms, indicating that the FBI was "interested in all financial relationships" of BoA customers transacting in Washington D.C. and those customers who had made "ANY historical purchase" of a firearm, or that had purchased a hotel, Airbnb, or airline travel within a given date range.[4]

In addition, the Committee and Select Subcommittee have recently obtained documents that raise new concerns regarding the extent to which financial institutions, including Citibank, may have shared customer information with federal law enforcement despite the customers having no individualized nexus to criminal conduct. In particular, these documents indicate that a Citibank representative was included on emails and Zoom discussions organized by the FBI and the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) focused on "identifying the best approach to information sharing, both strategic and operational," in the wake of the events of January 6.[5] These documents suggest that the executive branch was brainstorming informal methods—outside of legal process—for obtaining private customer information from financial institutions.

Federal law enforcement's use of back-channel discussions with financial institutions as a method to investigate and obtain private financial data of Americans is alarming. The documents received to date only bolsters our need for all materials responsive to our request. The Committee and Select Subcommittee must understand how and to what extent financial institutions, such as Citibank, worked with the FBI—and potentially other executive branch entities—to collect Americans' data without an individualized nexus to criminal conduct.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[6] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee is authorized to conduct oversight of matters involving civil liberties and criminal law to inform potential legislative reforms.[7] In addition, H. Res. 12 authorizes the Select Subcommittee to examine "how executive branch agencies work with, obtain information from, and provide information to the private sector . . . to facilitate action against American citizens."[8] The potential legislative reforms could include, among other proposals, legislation to prescribe how federal law-enforcement entities collect or receive private consumer data, legislation to enhance the protections of civil liberties for customers of financial institutions, or legislation to prevent the misuse of Americans' private financial information. The documents and information we have requested from Citibank are necessary to inform such potential legislation.

Accordingly, and in light of your lack of compliance with our earlier voluntary request and the representation from your counsel that Citibank requires a subpoena to comply with our oversight, please find attached a subpoena from the Committee on the Judiciary to compel the production of the requested documents.

Dear Ms. Holley:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the Executive Branch's commitment to impartial justice, as well as investigating the veracity of statements made in response to congressional inquiries related to the Department of Justice's investigation of Hunter Biden. As a part of this oversight, the Committee requires testimony from several Department officials, including you, who have first-hand knowledge of the Department's investigation.

In a letter dated June 29, 2023, the Committee, along with the Committees on Ways and Means and Oversight and Accountability, requested transcribed interviews with eleven Department officials, including you.[1] The Department declined the request for voluntary compliance.[2] On July 21, 2023, the three Committees made a second request for voluntary transcribed interviews.[3] Once again, the Department did not agree.[4] As such, the request for information from Department officials remains outstanding.

According to publicly available information, the Department and FBI have been investigating tax and other matters concerning Hunter Biden since at least 2019.[5] The investigation has been led by David Weiss, U.S. Attorney for the District of Delaware, and the FBI's Wilmington Resident Office, part of the Baltimore Field Office. Veteran Internal Revenue Service (IRS) investigators have revealed how the Department deviated from its established practices in this investigation, preventing investigators from speaking to certain witnesses or pursuing certain lines of inquiry. As one investigator explained: "The normal process must be followed. If search warrants or witness interviews or document requests that include the actual subjects' names are not allowed, for example, that is simply a deviation from the normal process that provided preferential treatment, in this case to Hunter Biden."[6]

An FBI supervisory special agent later corroborated these allegations in transcribed testimony, stating that FBI Headquarters preemptively tipped off U.S. Secret Service Headquarters and the Biden transition team about investigators' plan to interview Hunter Biden and other case subjects the following day.[7] Additionally, for the first time in his twenty-year career with the Bureau, this supervisory special agent was told that he had to wait outside the case target's house to arrange an interview with the target after the target first contacted him.[8] The Committee is concerned by these allegations because they illustrate abnormal conduct from federal law enforcement in carrying out its investigative duties.

In May 2023, around the time the whistleblowers first testified to the Committee on Ways and Means about irregularities in the Department's investigation, the Department began negotiating with Hunter Biden's lawyers about potential plea and pretrial diversion agreements.[9] The agreements, reached on June 20, 2023, shifted a broad immunity provision from the plea agreement to the pretrial diversion agreement, which would have benefitted Hunter Biden and prevented the District Court from being able to scrutinize and reject that immunity provision.[10] Additionally, the Department would have given up its ability to bring charges against Hunter Biden at a later date if it concluded that he had breached the pretrial diversion agreement.[11] Rather, the Department would then have to seek District Court's permission to bring charges, even though the District Court normally has no role in overseeing a pretrial diversion agreement in that manner.[12] U.S. Attorney Weiss signed off on this unconventional agreement.

On July 26, 2023, Judge Maryellen Noreika of the United States District Court for the District of Delaware declined to accept the Department's unusual plea and pretrial diversion agreements with Hunter Biden.[13] Subsequently, the Department has moved to withdraw the criminal information filed before the District Court in Delaware, stating that plea negotiations were "at an impasse."[14] Although the Department had previously agreed to bring the case in Delaware to allow Hunter Biden to plead guilty, it now has asserted to the Court that the proper venue for Mr. Biden's offenses were in Washington, D.C. or California.[15] With the plea negotiations stalled, the Department has indicated it intends to restart prosecution, believing that "the case will not resolve short of a trial."[16]

The Department's filings came shortly after Attorney General Merrick Garland named U.S. Attorney David Weiss as special counsel.[17] Although both Attorney General Garland and Mr. Weiss had stated that Mr. Weiss had "ultimate authority" over the investigation and prosecution of Hunter Biden, the Attorney General now asserted that special counsel status was necessary to pursue the case. In other words, after roughly four years of investigating and making critical decisions with the FBI, the Department now needs a special counsel due to the "extraordinary circumstances" relating to Mr. Biden's case.[18] The timing of this decision also comes after whistleblowers have raised serious and unchallenged allegations of impropriety in the Department's investigation.[19] The decision to grant Weiss special counsel status, especially in light of his handling of the case to date and his inconsistent statements to Congress about his authority, raises serious questions about the Department's handling of this investigation, and reinforces the Committee's need to speak with individuals with knowledge of the investigation.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[20] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee is authorized to conduct oversight of the Department as well as criminal justice matters in the United States to inform potential legislative reforms.[21] In this matter, potential legislation could include, but is not limited to, strengthening laws protecting whistleblowers from retaliation, reforming the "special attorney" statute,[22] codifying the special counsel regulations,[23] and reforming the Department's Tax Division.

The Supreme Court has also recognized that Congress may seek information from the Executive Branch about "corruption, maladministration or inefficiency in agencies of the Government."[24] Here, whistleblowers have brought forward numerous concerns—backed by contemporaneous documentary evidence—of corruption (e.g., preferential treatment for the President's son), maladministration (e.g., retaliation against whistleblowers), and inefficiency (e.g., an investigation so bogged down by delays and micromanagement that the statute of limitations lapsed before prosecutors could file certain charges). These are among the matters about which the Committees require testimony to inform potential legislative reforms.

Based on information provided by whistleblowers and made available to the Committee, you have unique information that is relevant and necessary to inform our oversight and potential legislative reforms.[25] For instance, according to whistleblower testimony, you attended a meeting on October 7, 2022, at which U.S. Attorney David Weiss allegedly said he was "not the deciding official on whether charges are filed" against Hunter Biden.[26] Additionally, as Assistant Special Agent in Charge of the Bureau's Baltimore Field Office, you would have had oversight of the Hunter Biden investigation in the Wilmington Resident Office.[27] The Committee has sought to obtain the Department's voluntary compliance with our request to conduct a transcribed interview with you, and has engaged in good faith with the Department to address the purported reasons why it could not comply. Even still, the Department has not agreed to make you available.

Accordingly, and considering the Department's non-compliance with our earlier voluntary requests, please find attached a subpoena compelling your appearance at a deposition.

Dear Mr. Sobocinski:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the Executive Branch's commitment to impartial justice, as well as investigating the veracity of statements made in response to congressional inquiries related to the Department of Justice's investigation of Hunter Biden. As a part of this oversight, the Committee requires testimony from several Department officials, including you, who have first-hand knowledge of the Department's investigation.

In a letter dated June 29, 2023, the Committee, along with the Committees on Ways and Means and Oversight and Accountability, requested transcribed interviews with eleven Department officials, including you.[1] The Department declined the request for voluntary compliance.[2] On July 21, 2023, the three Committees made a second request for voluntary transcribed interviews.[3] Once again, the Department did not agree.[4] As such, the request for information from Department officials remains outstanding.

According to publicly available information, the Department and FBI have been investigating tax and other matters concerning Hunter Biden since at least 2019.[5] The

Dear Mr. Ahmed:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and to what extent the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee must first understand the nature of how the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediates to censor speech. To this end, the Committee asked that the Center for Countering Digital Hate (CCDH) produce communications with the Executive Branch relating to the moderation of content online.[2] In addition, we also asked for communications between companies including social media companies and the CCDH, to understand, among other things, the extent to which content moderation occurred as a result of the government's influence.[3] In response, your counsel has informed the Committee that CCDH will not comply voluntarily with our requests.

The Committee's investigation, along with other public reporting, and publicized discovery in an ongoing federal court case, Missouri v. Biden, have exposed how the federal government has pressured and colluded with Big Tech and other intermediaries to censor certain viewpoints on social and other media in ways that undermine First Amendment principles.[4] Numerous internal documents made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. For example, internal Facebook documents, obtained by the Committee, show that the Biden White House repeatedly relied on CCDH's report titled "The Disinformation Dozen," in its unconstitutional pressure campaign against social media platforms[5] to censor Americans, including Robert F. Kennedy Jr., who CCDH maligned as "anti-vaxxers . . . responsible for almost two-thirds of anti-vaccine content circulating on social media platforms."[6]

It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which the federal government or one of its proxies worked with or relied upon CCDH to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes intermediaries who may or may not have had a full understanding of the government's efforts and motivations.

On August 3, 2023, the Committee wrote to CCDH seeking its voluntary cooperation with our oversight.[7] In particular, we requested communications between the Executive Branch and CCDH, internal CCDH communications discussing communications from the Executive Branch, and CCDH communications with third parties that may have been working with the Executive Branch, in addition to other key information. To date, CCDH has failed to produce a single document, despite admissions to the Committee and to the press that part of CCDH's work includes directly engaging with the Executive Branch and social media companies.[8] CCDH's counsel informed Committee staff that CCDH does not intend to supplement its perfunctory August 17 response with additional information and that CCDH will not voluntarily produce any documents requested by the Committee.[9] By declining to produce anything of substance in response to the Committee's request, CCDH is hindering the Committee's ability to fulfill its constitutional oversight obligations.

Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[10] In addition, H. Res. 12 authorized the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization

Dear Dr. Wagner:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and the extent to which the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand how and to what extent the Executive Branch coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

The Committee's ongoing investigation has exposed how the federal government, Big Tech, and various intermediaries have worked hand in hand in ways that undermine First Amendment principles.[2] Numerous internal documents made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which the federal government or one of its proxies worked with or relied upon the University of Wisconsin in order to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes intermediaries who may or may not have had a full understanding of the government's efforts and motivations.

On August 15, 2023, the Committee wrote to the University of Wisconsin seeking its voluntary cooperation with our oversight. In particular, we asked for communications between the Executive Branch and the University of Wisconsin, internal communications discussing communications from the Executive Branch, and communications with third parties that may have been working with the Executive Branch, in addition to other key information.

Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[3] In addition, H. Res. 12 authorized the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government to investigate "issues related to the violation of the civil liberties of citizens of the United States."[4]

Dear Special Agent Chan:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and to what extent the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee on the Judiciary must first understand the nature of this collusion and coercion. As the primary liaison between the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) Foreign Influence Task Force (FITF) and social media companies, you are uniquely positioned to aid the Committee's oversight.[2] On January 17, 2023, and again on March 3, 2023, the Committee requested that you voluntarily appear for a transcribed interview.[3]

The Committee's investigation, along with other public reporting, and publicized discovery in an ongoing federal court case, Missouri v. Biden, have exposed how the federal government has pressured and colluded with Big Tech and other intermediaries to censor certain viewpoints on social and other media in ways that undermine First Amendment principles.[4] The

First Amendment prohibits government officials from imposing viewpoint-based censorship restrictions. State action doctrine stands for the proposition that government officials may not circumvent constitutional strictures by using private actors—whether through coercion, encouragement, entwinement, or joint participation—to accomplish what the government cannot directly.[5]

Numerous documents that have been made publicly available reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which FBI agents coerced, pressured, worked with, or relied upon social media and other tech companies to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes understanding the extent and nature of the FBI's involvement in this censorship. For example, through its investigation, the Committee has uncovered evidence that appears to contradict several statements in your deposition in Missouri v. Biden, particularly as they relate to your communications with social media platforms.[6]

The Committee was ready and willing to proceed with your transcribed interview under the Committee's established protocols. After the Committee repeatedly requested that you voluntarily appear for a transcribed interview, the FBI agreed to schedule your interview for September 15, 2023, with full knowledge of the Committee's longstanding protocol for conducting transcribed interviews.[7] Then, only three days before your scheduled interview, you and the FBI requested special treatment to deviate from this protocol, which the Committee repeatedly and clearly denied. Just one day before your scheduled transcribed interview, you threatened to withdraw your appearance due to this disagreement and today you failed to appear for your interview.[8]

The Constitution affords the House the authority to determine its own rules and procedures.[9] Consistent with this authority, House committees have developed, over both Democrat and Republican majorities, protocols for conducting voluntary transcribed interviews. These protocols, which mirror House rules for conducting a deposition pursuant to a subpoena, include that a witness for a transcribed interview has the choice of being represented by either agency counsel or personal counsel, but not both. The FBI, Department of Justice, and your personal counsel are all well aware of the Committee's protocol—early in the 118th Congress, the Committee notified the Department about this specific protocol—and every other voluntary transcribed interview of FBI employees in the 118th Congress has operated under these protocols without incident.

The Committee's right to adopt and insist on its rules and procedures is especially important where, as here, a witness's personal interests depart significantly from the institutional interests of the agency for which the witness works. The Committee has information that suggests you were not fully candid in your sworn deposition in federal litigation—a deposition during which you were represented by Department counsel and a matter in which you face personal liability in a manner that departs from the FBI's and Department's institutional interests.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[10] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[11] In addition, H. Dear Mr. Moynihan:

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government are conducting oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) receipt of information about American citizens from private entities without legal process. On May 25, 2023, we requested your voluntary cooperation with our oversight efforts to determine the extent to which financial institutions, such as Bank of America Corporation (BoA), worked with the FBI to collect Americans' data.[1] In response, the Committee has received 223 pages of documents responsive to our original requests. However, to date, BoA has refused to provide the Committee and Select Subcommittee with the filing it turned over to the FBI.

In 2021, BoA provided the FBI—voluntarily and without any legal process—with a list of individuals who made transactions in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area using a BoA credit or debit card between January 5 and January 7, 2021.[2] When that information was brought to the attention of Steven Jensen, the FBI's then-Section Chief of the Domestic Terrorism

And they data-mined a date range of 5 to 7 January of any BOA customer who used a BOA product"); Transcribed Interview of Mr. Steve Jensen 146 (May 19, 2023) (stating that "one of my unit chiefs . . . advised that a number of leads had gone out regarding Bank of America information of subjects"); Transcribed Interview with Mr. Joseph Bonavolonta 11 (May 4, 2023) ("I am aware of information that was forwarded to us related to a Bank of America lead, yes"); Transcribed Interview of Mr. Steven D'Antuono (Jun. 7, 2023) (recalling that "[he learned that Bank of America provided information] probably through the course of the investigation at some point."); Transcribed Interview of Mr. Steven Jensen 147 (May 19, 2023) ("My understanding of that information was, it was certain purchaser transaction records of individuals that Bank of America provided over to the FBI that wasn't requested by the FBI. It was of their own volition.").

Operations Section, he acted to "pull" the BoA information from FBI systems because "the leads lacked allegations of federal criminal conduct."[3] Documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee show that the FBI also provided BoA with specific search query terms, indicating that the FBI was "interested in all financial relationships" of BoA customers transacting in Washington D.C. and that had made "ANY historical purchase" of a firearm, or those who had purchased a hotel, Airbnb, or airline travel within a given date range.[4]

As always, thanks for the very quick communication/response over the phone this morning.

To recap our morning call, we [FBI] are prepared to action [immediately] the following thresholds:

- CTD/SPES/SEU is interested in all financial relationships that meet the following thresholds:
- Customers confirmed as transacting, either through bank account [debit card] or credit card, Washington D.C. purchases between 1/5/21 and 1/6/21, with the additional [identifying] targeting thresholds:
- Purchases made for hotel/airbnb RSVPs in the DMV area [the day before and during Inauguration Day] -----since 1/6/21.
- ANY historical purchase [going back 6 months generally, for weapons or weapons related-vendor purchases].
- Secondarily, purchases made for returns to Washington, D.C. and the surrounding DMV area:
  - With Airline travel to DMV area for Inauguration Day
  - With no identified airline purchases for the DMV.

- SEU intends to capture, with its FI-partner concurrence, all customers who might be more strategic in carrying out attacks related to CTD interests; travel with weapons by vehicle and [not by] air, given the current threat and aftermath of the 6 Jan Capitol building incidents. The intention by SEU is to identify all potential networks of threats vs. individual threats to Inauguration Day and beyond.

In its June 22, 2023, letter to the Committee, BoA asserted that its actions "were within a legal process initiated by the United States Department of the Treasury."[5] Contrary to these assertions, however, documents on file with the Committee and Select Subcommittee indicate that the FBI—not the U.S. Department of the Treasury—initiated contact directly to BoA, and without legal process.[6] As a result, it is unclear what "legal" process permits the FBI or BoA to share the sensitive customer information of potentially thousands of BoA customers and implicate them in a federal law enforcement investigation without any clear criminal nexus. To that end, BoA's letter claimed that certain federal laws—namely, the Anti-Money Laundering Act and the Bank Secrecy Act—permit such an arrangement.[7] However, these laws and corresponding regulations primarily contemplate information-sharing with the U.S. Department of Treasury and its components, not external correspondence with the FBI.[8]

Indeed, if such a lawful authority exists, as BoA asserts, for BoA to freely share private financial information without any legal process or specific nexus to criminality, Congress has a responsibility to consider reforms that adequately protect Americans' information. It should not be the case that federal law enforcement has carte blanche access to Americans' financial information by deeming a transaction or class of transactions as "suspicious" or otherwise. For that reason, to inform such legislation, it is critical that the Committee understand the full extent of the information-sharing between BoA and the FBI, including review of BoA's "filing" that it emailed to the FBI.[9]

Dear Mr. Rabbitt:

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government are conducting oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and its receipt of information about American citizens from private entities. On June 12, 2023, we wrote to your client to request their voluntary cooperation with our oversight efforts to determine the extent to which financial institutions, such as JPMorgan Chase, engaged with the FBI's effort to collect Americans' data.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[1] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee is authorized to conduct oversight of matters involving civil liberties and criminal law to inform potential legislative reforms.[2] In addition, H. House's censorship efforts is specialized and unavailable to the Committee through other means.[5] Your testimony will inform the Committee's legislative reforms aimed at preventing the Executive Branch from wielding its immense power to pressure social media platforms to censor disfavored viewpoints.

The reasons for your noncompliance with our request, as articulated by your attorney, are unpersuasive. In your attorney's July 11, 2023, response to the Committee, he asked that the Committee "contact the White House Counsel's office to address any Executive Branch confidentiality protections that may attend an interview."[6] In our September 29 letter, we informed you that the Committee had "already engaged with the White House" about the topics identified by your attorney and that the White House had declined to engage substantively.[7] As a show of good faith for the White House's asserted position that the Committee must first solicit information from other sources, we notified you that the Committee had "exhausted other options for information, including by issuing document subpoenas to federal agencies, technology companies, and other relevant third parties, as well as interviewing personnel at these entities."[8] We reiterated our request for a transcribed interview and asked that you schedule it promptly.[9]

Despite the Committee's representations, your attorney notified us on October 13, 2023, that you "again respectfully request that the Committee have that discussion with the White House."[10] As we explained, however, the White House has declined to engage substantively on arranging your testimony and instead has asserted without basis that the Committee must first obtain all possible information from other sources before requesting information concerning the EOP.[11] This assertion is inapplicable here for two reasons. First, we are primarily seeking information that is unique to you and not in the possession of other sources. Second, the White House's interpretation of the exhaustion doctrine—to the extent it applies—seems to require that the Committee must obtain all responsive material from Executive Branch agencies before it may even request information in the custody of the EOP.[12] Because the EOP controls and coordinates the workings of the Executive Branch, the White House's position would allow it to effectively deny the Committee any White House information by delaying indefinitely the compliance of subordinate Executive Branch agencies with the Committee's requests, thereby preventing the Committee from ever obtaining all responsive documents. Such an extreme interpretation of the exhaustion doctrine does not reflect established separation of powers principles and is contrary to the Executive Branch's own guidance set forth by the Justice Department that a committee must only exhaust the "possibility" of obtaining material through other means.[13]

The White House has also asserted a concern about ongoing litigation relating to the matters on which the Committee is conducting oversight.[14] This assertion also lacks merit. In Sinclair v. United States, the Supreme Court noted that the pendency of litigation does not impede Congress's ability to conduct oversight, stating:

> It may be conceded that Congress is without authority to compel disclosures for the purpose of aiding the prosecution of pending suits; but the authority of that body, directly or through its committees, to require pertinent disclosures in aid of its own constitutional power is not abridged because the information sought to be elicited may also be of use in such suits.[15]

The Court has further noted that "a congressional committee . . . engaged in legitimate legislative investigation need not grind to a halt whenever responses to its inquiries might potentially be harmful to a witness in some distinct proceeding . . . or when crime or wrongdoing is exposed."[16] In addition, any implication that a federal court has authoritatively protected you from providing testimony in this matter is unfounded.[17] Our oversight authority, which is based in the Constitution, is not the same as civil litigation, and courts have been clear that senior White House officials do not enjoy absolute immunity from congressional testimony.[18]

Your attorney has also raised amorphous "potential confidentiality issues" as a basis to resist the Committee's request.[19] Although the nature and contours of these claim are not apparent from your attorney's letter, the confidential nature of information is not a sufficient basis alone on which to withhold such material from Congress.[20] As such, we find this assertion unpersuasive.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[21] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[22] In addition, H. Accordingly, for all the reasons explained above, please find attached a subpoena for a deposition. The Committee continues to be willing to work in good faith with you—as well as the White House, if it chooses to engage substantively—to address any legitimate Executive Branch equities stemming from your testimony.

Dear Mr. Flaherty:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and to what extent the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee must first understand the nature of this collusion and coercion. As one of the primary liaisons between the Executive Office of the President (EOP) and social media companies, you are uniquely positioned to advance the Committee's oversight.[2] On June 23, 2023, and again on September 29, 2023, the Committee requested that you voluntarily appear for a transcribed interview.[3] This request remains outstanding.

As detailed in previous correspondence to you and your counsel, the Committee has obtained documents that demonstrate the central role you played in communicating the Biden White House's censorship efforts to social media companies, including the White House's demands to censor true information, memes, satire, and other constitutionally protected forms of expression.[4] As explained, we understand that the information you possess about the White

Despite the Committee's representations, your attorney notified us on October 13, 2023, that he had forwarded our letter to the White House and indicated that you would be willing "to work collaboratively with the Committee once [the] process of inter-Branch negotiation and compromise concludes."[10] As we explained, however, the White House has declined to engage substantively on arranging your testimony and instead has asserted without basis that the Committee must first obtain all possible information from other sources before requesting information concerning the EOP.[11] This assertion is inapplicable here for two reasons. The Honorable Merrick B. Garland
Attorney General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20530

Dear Attorney General Garland:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the Justice Department's use of its law-enforcement authority to obtain the private communications of Members of Congress and congressional staff members.[1] On October 31, 2023, we wrote to you to request information from the Justice Department regarding the Department's subpoenas to obtain private communications of Legislative Branch employees.[2] Due to the Department's inadequate response to date, the Committee must resort to compulsory process.

On November 8, the Department informed the Committee via e-mail of "a change to the Department of Justice's policies and procedures in criminal investigations involving Members of Congress and their staff" that "impose[s] new requirements to consult with, or receive approval from, the Public Integrity Section."[3] This communication, however, provided no update on the status of the Department's response to our October 31 letter. After receiving no subsequent information from the Department, on November 28, 2023, the Committee wrote to you again reiterating our requests and requesting material relating to the Department's policy changes as announced on November 7.[4]

On December 4, 2023, the Department finally provided a response to our letter of October 31, offering a timeline and a brief description of the Department's recent policy changes for investigations involving Members of Congress and congressional staff.[5] In response to the Committee's request, the Department provided only two publicly available documents concerning the indictment and guilty plea of a Senate Select Intelligence Committee (SSCI) staff member.[6] The Department produced no other documents responsive to the Committee's requests.

In its letter to the Committee, the Department represented that the legal process used—which reportedly sought the private communications of both Republican and Democrat employees in both the House and the Senate[7]—were related to one investigation "into the unauthorized disclosure of classified information in a national media publication."[8] According to news reports, this investigation centered on FISA warrants obtained by the Justice Department on former Trump campaign associate Carter Page.[9] At the time, the FISA warrant on Mr. Page was the subject of robust Congressional oversight and vigorous debate in Congress.[10] The Justice Department Office of Inspector General later determined that the Department abused its FISA authority to surveil Mr. Page,[11] and the Department admitted there was "insufficient predication" for the warrant.[12]

If the Department's representation is accurate, it indicates that the Executive Branch used its immense law-enforcement authority to gather and search the private communications of multiple Legislative Branch employees who were conducting Constitutional oversight of the Department's investigative actions—actions that were later found to be unlawful. Because the Department has not complied in full with our requests, we cannot independently determine whether the Department sought to alleviate the heightened separation-of-powers sensitivities involved or whether the Department first sought the information through other means before resorting to legal process. The Committee also has concerns that aspects of the Department's investigation may have been a pretext to justify piercing the Legislative Branch's deliberative process and improperly access data from Members and staff involved in conducting oversight of the Department.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose

Potential legislative reforms the Committee may consider include, among other proposals, establishing certain requirements for the Justice Department to provide appropriate notice when it seeks to access private information belonging to an employee of the Legislative Branch. The Committee may also consider legislative proposals to reform how often the Department may request an extension on a non-disclosure order without providing a compelling justification for the continued secrecy. Dear Director Haines:

The Committee on the Judiciary (Committee) is conducting oversight of how and to what extent the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to restrict the circulation of content and deplatform users, the Committee must first understand the nature of this collusion and coercion. To this end, we have asked for communications between the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI), private companies, and other third-party groups such as nonprofit organizations, in addition to other information.[2] Your response without compulsory process has, to date, been woefully inadequate.

The investigative work performed by the Committee and its Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government, along with other publicly available information, have revealed how the federal government has pressured and colluded with Big Tech and other intermediaries to censor certain viewpoints on social media in ways that undermine First Amendment principles.[3] The First Amendment prohibits government officials from imposing viewpoint-based restrictions on speech.[4] State action doctrine prohibits government officials from circumventing constitutional strictures by using private actors—whether through coercion, encouragement, entwinement, or joint participation—to accomplish what the government cannot directly.[5]

The Committee and Select Subcommittee's investigation has revealed how the Executive Branch has weaponized federal authority to censor speech online directly and by proxy. It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which ODNI officials have coerced, pressured, worked with, or relied upon social media and other tech companies to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes understanding the extent and nature of ODNI's involvement in this censorship.

On April 18, 2023, the Committee wrote to you seeking your voluntary cooperation with our oversight.[6] Among other things, we requested communications between ODNI employees and private companies, internal communications, and communications between ODNI and other third parties discussing content moderation on social media. ODNI failed to timely respond to the Committee's request. Committee staff subsequently followed up with ODNI on May 4, May 12, May 24, June 8, and August 15.[7] It was not until August 16, almost four months after the Chairman's initial letter regarding this matter, that ODNI personnel responded to Committee staff.[8]

Despite additional correspondence on September 6, September 8, October 2, October 3, November 7, November 8, November 9, December 11, and December 18, ODNI has yet to produce a single document in response to the Committee's request.[9] ODNI did not provide a formal written response until January 8, 2024, and that response did not include any documents.[10] Publicly available information regarding the ODNI's Foreign Malign Influence Center makes clear that records related to the Center's activities fall within the scope of the Committee's request for documents.[11] Moreover, the Committee is in possession of documents that demonstrate that ODNI personnel were invited to meetings between major social media

The Honorable Fani T. Willis
District Attorney
Fulton County District Attorney's Office
141 Pryor Street SW
Atlanta, GA 30303

Dear Ms. Willis:

On August 24, 2023, the Committee on the Judiciary wrote to you requesting documents in the custody of the Fulton County District Attorney's Office (FCDAO) relating, in part, to its receipt and use of federal grant funds issued by the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ).[1] Since that date, we have sent two additional letters, on September 27, 2023,[2] and December 5, 2023,[3] reiterating our requests.[4] To date, you have failed to comply voluntarily with any of our requests.[5]

The Committee's oversight of your office's use of federal grant funds is particularly relevant in light of public whistleblower allegations that it has misused federal funding. According to a recent report, your office unlawfully "planned to use part of a $488,000 federal grant—earmarked for the creation of a Center of Youth Empowerment and Gang Prevention"—to cover frivolous, unrelated expenses.[6] DOJ awarded this grant to the FCDAO for the purpose of creating the "Fulton County Center of Youth Empowerment and Gang Prevention [to] work with boys and girls ages 12-17. . . ."[7] The Center, through funding by the federal grant, was intended to "establish a community network . . . in Fulton County[] to identify and address service gaps and barriers and create a comprehensive system of service for youth at risk of becoming gang involved or continuing in the gang lifestyle."[8]

[4] In addition, in light of allegations that you improperly used taxpayer dollars to pay a "Special Assistant District Attorney" named Nathan Wade more than $650,000 over the course of two years, we wrote to Mr. Wade to request documents in his possession. See Letter from Rep. Jim Jordan, Chairman, H. Comm. on the Judiciary, to Nathan J. Wade, Esq. (Jan. 12, 2024).
[5] Your correspondence to this Committee dated September 7, 2023; October 11, 2023; and December 19, 2023—as well as your response dated January 26, 2024, on behalf of Mr. Wade—all dismiss the Committee's requests and demonstrate your unlawful refusal to comply with the Committee's oversight.

According to reporting about the whistleblower's allegations, instead of using these federal grant funds for the intended purpose of helping at-risk youths, your office sought to use the grant funds to "get Macbooks,. . . swag, . . . [and] use it for travel."[9] Moreover, the whistleblower's direct supervisor stated that these planned expenditures "were part of [your] vision."[10] The whistleblower has stated that she warned you that the use of the federal grant funds in this manner was "impossible" because the terms of the grant were "very, very specific."[11] The whistleblower was in charge of "vetting, selecting, and securing [the FCDAO's] grant partnerships" and was "the only contact" DOJ had with FCDAO.[12] Less than two months after receiving this warning, you "abruptly terminated [the whistleblower] and had her escorted out of her office by seven armed investigators."[13] These allegations raise serious concerns about whether you were appropriately supervising the expenditure of federal grant funding allocated to your office and whether you took actions to conceal your office's unlawful use of federal funds.

Our previous letters—in particular, our September 27 letter—explain in detail the Committee's Constitutional authority and jurisdiction for our oversight. To summarize that explanation, the Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[14] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning DOJ grant programs and criminal justice to inform potential legislative reforms.[15]

Potential legislative reforms the Committee may consider include, among other proposals, establishing clear guidelines outlining the permissible uses of federal grant funds under 34 U.S.C. §§ 10261, et seq., and 12291, et seq., creating penalties for unlawfully misusing federal grant funds under Title 34 of the United States Code, constructing stringent automatic audit requirements for DOJ grant managers, or modifying eligibility requirements pertaining to

It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which NSF officials have coerced, pressured, worked with, or relied upon social media and other tech companies and third parties to censor speech. The scope of the Committee's investigation includes understanding the extent and nature of NSF's involvement in this censorship.

On May 1, 2023, the Committee initially sought voluntary cooperation with our oversight.[6] Among other things, we requested communications between NSF employees and private companies, internal communications, and communications between NSF and other third parties discussing content moderation on social media, including those relating to NSF's Convergence Accelerator Track F program, which funded projects aimed at developing advanced tools and techniques "to address issues of trust and authenticity in communication systems, including predicting, preventing, detecting, correcting, and mitigating the spread of inaccurate information" and "misinformation campaigns" online.[7]

NSF failed to timely respond to the Committee's request, responding only with a letter on June 13, 2023, that failed to produce any of the requested documents.[8] Committee staff subsequently followed up with NSF on August 15, 2023, and then, to assist NSF in complying with the request, highlighted the Committee's highest priority documents in a phone call on August 17.[9] On August 25, nearly four months after the Committee issued its initial request for documents, NSF produced four documents totaling only thirteen pages.[10] These documents contained no information or communications relating to NSF's Convergence Accelerator Track F program. Committee staff subsequently followed up with NSF on October 2 and again on December 7.[11] On December 15, NSF produced only another 116 pages, none of which included any internal communications between NSF personnel regarding the Track F program or communications between NSF and Track F grantees.[12] Since NSF's December 15 production, Committee staff has followed up with NSF multiple times.[13] On February 5, 2024, after Committee staff informed NSF that the Committee was considering issuing a document subpoena, NSF produced 27 documents totaling 165 pages, much of which contained already publicly available information and none of which included any internal communications from the Track F program director regarding the Track F program or any communications between NSF and Track F grantees.[14] To date, NSF has not produced the highest priority documents requested by the Committee.

Publicly available information regarding the NSF Convergence Accelerator Track F program makes clear that records related to Track F's activities fall within the scope of the Committee's request for documents.[15] Moreover, the Committee is in possession of documents that demonstrate that NSF personnel regularly interacted and communicated with organizations receiving NSF funds, including for projects that focused on combatting alleged misinformation online.[16] NSF has yet to produce any records related to these communications or any other meetings.

Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[17] In addition, House Resolution 12 authorizes the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government to investigate "issues related to the violation of the civil liberties of citizens of the United States."[18]

Accordingly, given NSF's inadequate voluntary compliance, please find attached a subpoena for the Committee's requested documents and information.

Subcommittee's legislative work in addressing the vulnerabilities online speech faces from governments hostile to the freedom of speech.

Recent reporting has indicated that certain social media platforms are being "forced by court decisions to block certain popular accounts in Brazil" or else face serious consequences, such as incurring large fines, arrests of employees, and causing the platforms to shut down in Brazil.[3] On December 22, 2023, you posted a statement that censorship demands from Brazilian courts required the decision "to disable access to Rumble for users in Brazil."[4] To that end, the attached subpoena compels you to produce documents and records relating to efforts by the Superior Electoral Court in Brazil and/or the Supreme Federal Court in Brazil to compel Rumble—including documents related to orders Rumble received regarding content moderation—to censor certain accounts.

Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[5] In addition, House Resolution 12 authorizes the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government to investigate "issues related to the violation of the civil liberties of citizens of the United States."[6]

Accordingly, please find the attached subpoena.

Sincerely,

Jim Jordan
Chairman

Colette S. Peters
Director

320 First St, N.W.
Washington, DC 20534

Dear Director Peters:

On March 5, 2024, pursuant to the House's ongoing impeachment inquiry and our legislative oversight authorities,[1] the Committee on the Judiciary ("Judiciary Committee"), along with the Committee on Oversight and Accountability ("Oversight Committee"), requested a narrow and specific set of materials relating to claims of unfair treatment of Hunter Biden's business associate Jason Galanis.[2] As we explained, Mr. Galanis alleges that he has been targeted for "retribution" to suppress his testimony about the Biden family's influence peddling scheme.[3] To date, you have failed to respond to these requests.

Since Mr. Galanis's transcribed interview earlier this year, the Committees have received additional information that strongly suggests the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) has been retaliating against Mr. Galanis for his cooperation with the Committees' inquiry. On February 4, 2023, Mr. Galanis applied to the BOP for home confinement pursuant to the CARES Act.[4] His application proceeded through the process as normal. In March 2023, the U.S. Probation Office serving the San Diego location of the Southern District of California approved Mr. Galanis's post-confinement residence.[5] The warden of the BOP facility where Mr. Galanis resided at the time, FPC Pensacola, later signed off on the application, and Mr. Galanis's application went on to the Residential Reentry Management (RRM) center in Long Beach, California.[6] On June 9, 2023, the Long Beach RRM approved Mr. Galanis's request for home confinement and reached out to the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York (SDNY) regarding the application's approval.[7]

On June 12, 2023, the Oversight Committee announced that it had subpoenaed Mr. Galanis's business partner, Devon Archer, to testify about his relationship with Hunter Biden and the Biden family's business activities.[8] Around the same time as the Oversight Committee's announcement, an SDNY Assistant U.S. Attorney, Negar Tekeei, responded to the Long Beach RRM with her "strongest objection," and threatened to go "hard on this" to the BOP Director if Mr. Galanis's application went any further.[9] On June 22, 2023, a BOP official informed Mr. Galanis that his application had been denied on June 13—the day after the Oversight Committee's announcement.[10]

On August 8, 2023, Mr. Galanis appealed the denial of his home confinement to the warden of FPC Pensacola, who subsequently denied his appeal on the erroneous grounds that the "amount of time" he requested on home confinement "was not appropriate." On September 22, 2023, Mr. Galanis appealed the warden's denial to the Southeast Regional RRM and, after receiving no response, he appealed to the BOP Central Office.

On February 8, 2024, the Committees informed BOP that they intended to interview Mr. Galanis at the BOP facility where he presently resides, FPC Montgomery.[11] The next day, the BOP Central Office sent Mr. Galanis its denial of his appeal, which was dated January 4, over a month earlier. In this denial, BOP changed its reasoning from an "inappropriate amount of time" for home confinement to the "CARES Act has expired." This reason, however, is also not a proper basis for denial. Per BOP practice, and consistent with basic due process, anyone who applied for home confinement prior to expiration of the CARES Act—and whose appeal rights have not been exhausted—remained eligible to be considered under the Act.[12] In fact, Mr. Galanis initially applied for home confinement on February 4, 2023, well before the May 31 expiration of the CARES Act.[13] Three days after Mr. Galanis sat for a transcribed interview with the Committees, BOP gave Mr. Galanis its final denial of his home confinement application under the CARES Act.

The documents and testimony requested are directly relevant to both the impeachment inquiry and the Judiciary Committee's legislative oversight of the Department. Mr. Galanis's allegations suggest that the Biden Administration may have politically influenced BOP's internal procedures and decision making. Congress's authority to access information is broadest during

In addition, pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Judiciary Committee has jurisdiction to consider potential legislative reforms to the Department of Justice and national penitentiaries.[17] Such potential legislative reforms may include, among other things, creating additional protections to safeguard the ability of those in BOP custody to cooperate with congressional investigations, ensuring the integrity of BOP's home release and confinement policies, and reforming the BOP's administrative practices.

Dear Mr. Rabbitt:

On April 24, 2024, the Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government wrote to JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (JPMorgan Chase) requesting additional documents and information regarding federal law enforcement's receipt of financial information about American citizens without legal process and its engagement with the private sector.[1] On May 30, 2024, the Committee and Select Subcommittee wrote to JPMorgan Chase reiterating its request and asking JPMorgan Chase to produce all responsive documents by June 6, 2024.[2] On June 4, 2024, your counsel informed Committee staff that JPMorgan Chase required a subpoena to produce documents responsive to the Committee's and Select Subcommittee's requests.[3]

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[4] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee is authorized to conduct oversight of matters involving civil liberties and criminal law to inform potential legislative reforms.[5] In addition, House Resolution 12 authorizes the Select Subcommittee to examine "how executive branch agencies work with, obtain information from, and provide information to the private sector . . . to facilitate action against American

Dear Mr. Clark:

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government are continuing to conduct oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) misuse of the security clearance suspension and revocation process.[1] Between August 2021 and August 2023, you served as the Unit Chief in the FBI's Security Division (SecD). The Committee has learned that in this role, you were involved in key decisions with respect to the FBI's adjudication of security clearance matters.[2] From the documents and testimonial information available to the Committee, we believe that you possess information vital to our oversight and inquiry. Your attorney has represented that you require a subpoena to cooperate with our oversight. Accordingly, please find attached a subpoena compelling your appearance for a deposition on August 1, 2024.

The Committee on the Judiciary has legislative and oversight jurisdiction over the FBI pursuant to Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives.[3] In addition, House Resolution 12 authorizes the Select Subcommittee to examine how the executive branch "collect[s] information on or otherwise investigate[s] citizens of the United States, including ongoing criminal investigations."[4]

Dear Mr. Nellis:

On August 1, 2024, the Committee on the Judiciary wrote to Loren Merchan, the President of Authentic Campaigns, requesting information and documents to advance the Committee's oversight of the Manhattan District Attorney's political prosecution of President Donald J. Trump.[1] You responded on August 13, 2024, declining to comply voluntarily with the Committee's oversight or provide any requested documents.[2] On August 16, 2024, the Committee wrote again to address your articulated concerns and to reiterate its August 1 requests.[3] On August 23, 2024, you again declined to comply with the Committee's oversight and requests.[4] As such, the Committee is left with no choice but to resort to compulsory process.

As we made clear in our August 1 and August 16 letters, the Committee is continuing to conduct oversight of politically motivated prosecutions by state and local officials.[5] Popularly elected prosecutors, such as Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg, have engaged in an unprecedented abuse of authority by prosecuting a former President of the United States and current nominee for that office. Of relevance to the Committee's oversight is the impartiality of Judge Juan Merchan, the presiding trial judge, due to his refusal to recuse himself from the case in light of his apparent conflicts of interest and biases.[6] One such conflict is Ms. Merchan's—daughter of Judge Merchan and President of Authentic Campaigns—work on behalf of President Trump's political adversaries and the possible financial benefit that Ms. Merchan and Authentic Campaigns received from the prosecution and conviction of President Trump.

Public reporting makes clear that both you and Ms. Merchan have been closely involved in the presidential campaigns of both President Biden and Vice President Harris. Ms. Merchan previously served in then-presidential candidate Harris's campaign in 2019 while remaining employed at Authentic Campaigns.[7] During Ms. Merchan's employment with the Harris campaign, Authentic Campaigns received over $7 million in compensation for its services.[8] You also worked for then-presidential candidate Harris and it appears you continue to do so.[9] Authentic Campaigns conducted work for the 2020 Biden-Harris campaign and, according to public records, was paid just over $2 million in a one-month period for its work.[10]

In your August 13 response to the Committee, you indicated that responsive records existed for at least two of the Committee's requests but later, in your August 23 response, you suggest that records only exist for a single request. Regarding this request, you attempt to evade oversight by arguing that the Committee's request for records related to Authentic Campaigns' work performed as it relates "to the indictment, prosecution, or conviction of President Donald J. Trump"[11] is "irrelevant to any investigation."[12] You also argue that "any content relating to the trial was an extremely small amount . . . ."[13] Such a determination is not yours to make, and in any event, the Committee has explained the relevancy of these records to its oversight and the quantity of responsive documents—even if small—does not create an exception to the Committee's request. Neither does your assertion that "Ms. Merchan had no involvement in any such content . . . ."[14] The Committee's investigation is not limited to Ms. Merchan. Rather, as has been explained, the Committee is investigating "whether Authentic Campaigns services President Trump's political adversaries."[15] As such, your rationales for refusing to provide responsive documents are unpersuasive.

In response to the Committee's other request, you first argued in your August 13 response that "[a]ny communication" that Ms. Merchan may have had with her father, Judge Merchan, regarding the trial would have been "in her personal capacity . . . and entirely unrelated to Authentic or its clients."[16] You then asserted on August 23 that Authentic Campaigns has no responsive documents or communications at all.[17] This shifting representation raises significant doubt about the accuracy of your assertions. Your first statement on August 13 about the nature of Ms. Merchan's communications with Judge Merchan suggests at least some knowledge about those records such that you could attest that they were all made "in her personal capacity."[18] Notably, in this initial response, you did not assert that Authentic Campaigns possessed no responsive records. Your subsequent, blanket assertion on August 23 that no records exist—made without explaining your basis for this statement—viewed in light of your August 13 response, suggests that you may be artificially narrowing the Committee's request to only records of a non-personal nature. The Committee's request makes no such distinction. If Ms. Merchan used Authentic Campaign accounts, devices, or other electronic communication systems to communicate with Judge Merchan about President Trump's trial, even if the communications were made "in her personal capacity," those records are responsive to the Committee's request.

In your August 23 response, you also argue that the Committee does not have a "valid legislative purpose" and that the Committee does not have "any legitimate reason" to conduct its inquiry.[19] As we have explained twice, the Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."[20] Early last year, a federal district court judge denied District Attorney Alvin Bragg's attempt to block the enforcement of the Committee's subpoena in this very investigation. Judge Mary Kay Vyskocil held that the Committee's subpoena "was issued with a 'valid legislative purpose' in connection with the 'broad' and 'indispensable' congressional power to 'conduct investigations.'"[21] As Judge Vyskocil explained:

> Jordan and the Committee have identified several valid legislative purposes underlying the subpoena. . . . [The Committee] identif[ies] the possibility of legislative reforms to insulate current and former presidents from state prosecutions, such as by removing criminal actions filed against them from state to federal court. Congress, of course, has authority to consider, and to investigate, this potential legislative reform. And Congress also has authority to investigate legislative reforms to prevent local prosecutions that could potentially interfere with federal elections.[22]

We have explained the proposed legislative reforms that the Committee and the House have been examining. Judge Merchan's conflicts of interest and biases in the case against President Trump, the Republican nominee in the upcoming 2024 presidential election, implicate serious federal interests.[23] Congress has a specific and manifestly important interest in preventing politically motivated prosecutions of current and former presidents, especially in venues in which real or perceived biases exist. Among other things, if state or local prosecutors are able to engage in politically motivated prosecutions of Presidents of the United States (current or former) for personal acts, this could have a profound effect on how presidents choose to exercise their powers while in office. The requested material will inform the House's consideration of whether to move forward with legislation, informed by the Committee's oversight, which, if adopted, would remedy politically motivated local prosecutions by allowing a current or former president to remove the case to a more neutral forum in federal court.[24] If such a mechanism were in place at the time of DA Bragg's prosecution, Judge Merchan would not have presided over President Trump's trial.

The Committee is charged by the House of Representatives with upholding fundamental American civil liberties and with promoting fairness and consistency in our nation's criminal justice system. Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives authorizes the Committee to conduct oversight of criminal justice matters and matters involving civil liberties to inform potential legislation.[25] The records requested from Authentic Campaigns are relevant to the Committee's oversight work. These documents will allow the Committee to better understand and assess the apparent conflicts of interest and bias in the prosecution of a former president by a local elected prosecutor in a local tribunal before a clearly conflicted judge.

Accordingly, in light of Authentic Campaigns' failure to comply with our earlier voluntary requests, please find attached a subpoena compelling the production of the requested documents. As an accommodation, the Committee has limited the scope of this subpoena to two of its initial requests made on August 1. To ensure accuracy and completeness in the Committee's investigation, and based upon the noted inconsistencies in your previous responses, we direct your attention to instruction 19 in the enclosed subpoena schedule requiring a certification about your efforts to identify and produce responsive material. If Authentic Campaigns indeed has no responsive records for the other requests made by the Committee on August 1, as you have asserted, the Committee requests a sworn certification under the penalty of perjury[26] that Authentic Campaigns made a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search for responsive documents and was unable to locate any responsive documents. We also ask that you detail with specificity the steps that you took to conduct this search, including the email account(s), text message(s), and other means of communications that you reviewed. Finally, we

Dear Mr. Wade:

The Committee on the Judiciary continues to conduct oversight of politically motivated prosecutions by state and local officials, as well as the Fulton County District Attorney's Office's (FCDAO) receipt and use of federal grant funds. As part of our oversight, on May 9, 2024, the Committee requested that you appear for a transcribed interview relating to your work for the FCDAO.[1] To date, you have failed to honor our request, despite the Committee making numerous efforts over the course of many months to obtain your voluntary cooperation. As such, the Committee must resort to compulsory process to obtain your testimony.

After two months of communications following our May 9 letter between your counsel and Committee staff, your counsel informed the Committee on July 19, 2024, that you agreed to appear voluntarily for a transcribed interview on September 18, 2024.[2] In the week preceding the scheduled interview, the Committee contacted your counsel twice via email and did not receive a response.[3] Instead, on September 13—just five days before your scheduled interview—your

In furtherance of our oversight, on January 12, 2024, the Committee initially sent you a letter requesting six specific categories of documents relating to your work as Special Prosecutor for the FCDAO. Letter from Rep. Jim Jordan, Chairman, H. Comm. on the Judiciary, to Mr. Nathan Wade (Jan. 12, 2024) ("Jan. 12 Letter"). On January 26, 2024, the Committee received an unsolicited letter from District Attorney Willis responding on your behalf to the Committee's letter that refused to provide the Committee with any responsive documents. Letter from Dist. Att'y Fani T. Willis, Fulton Cty. Dist. Att'y's Off., to Rep. Jim Jordan, Chairman, H. Comm. on the Judiciary (Jan. 26, 2024). counsel informed the Committee that, due to an unsolicited letter from Roy Barnes,[4] counsel to Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis, you had to "postpone" your appearance.[5] Notably, your counsel offered the Committee no alternative date for your testimony.[6] Finally, on September 17, your counsel confirmed that you would not appear for your scheduled interview based on "concerns" raised by the Barnes letter.[7]

The eleventh-hour intervention from District Attorney Willis does not excuse your failure to appear for your transcribed interview. As an initial matter, it is not entirely clear whether Mr. Barnes represents District Attorney Willis in her individual capacity, or in her capacity as the District Attorney for the FCDAO, your former employer.[8] In his letter to you, Mr. Barnes represented his "client" as District Attorney Willis and identified himself as "counsel for Fani Willis, District Attorney of Fulton County."[9] Press reports and public accounts indicate that Ms. Willis retained Mr. Barnes to defend her in a Georgia State Senate proceeding relating to Ms. Willis's political prosecution of President Trump.[10] As such, it is not readily apparent that Mr. Barnes represents the FCDAO.

However, even if Mr. Barnes is authorized to represent the institutional interests of the FCDAO, the concerns he articulated are baseless, unpersuasive, and have already been rejected by a federal court in a similar case. In his letter to you, Mr. Barnes stated that the FCDAO would "demand[] to have a representative present at any interview so that [District Attorney Willis] may assert any necessary privilege objections" to the Committee's questions.[11] In support of this position, Mr. Barnes stated that the FCDAO is entitled to such an accommodation because the "procedure was recently followed in Bragg v. Jordan."[12] However, Mr. Barnes misunderstands the Bragg litigation and the circumstances concerning the deposition of Mark Pomerantz, a former special prosecutor of the New York County District Attorney's Office (DANY).

In that case, the deposition occurred after DANY unsuccessfully sought to enjoin the Committee's subpoena in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.[13] Importantly, Bragg does not support the idea that the FCDAO must be present to address potential privilege issues; in fact, the court specifically acknowledged that the DANY's concerns about protecting privilege were "unpersua[sive]."[14] The court explained that Pomerantz "is a very experienced, sophisticated, and extremely capable attorney . . . [and t]he Court is confident that Pomerantz and his counsel are fully knowledgeable about the privilege and confidentiality obligations he owe to DANY . . . ."[15] The Court concluded:

> [District Attorney] Bragg provides no reason to assume those accomplished lawyers would not also be fully knowledgeable about Pomerantz's ethical obligations with respect to privilege and confidentiality. Accordingly, the deposition should proceed in the normal course, question by question, and Pomerantz is free to object, personally or through his counsel, and decline to answer any questions when (and if) appropriate.[16]

Given that we have no doubt that you are also an "experienced, sophisticated, and extremely capable attorney," represented by effective counsel, who "is free to object, personally or through [your] counsel" as appropriate, there is no reason why a representative of the FCDAO must be present during your testimony.

In addition, according to reports, you have spoken publicly on several occasions about topics relating to your employment with the FCDAO.[17] To the best of our knowledge, the FCDAO has not objected to your interviews or sought to intervene in those settings. One could conclude from your statements—and the FCDAO's apparent failure to intervene—that the FCDAO has waived any potential privilege.

More fundamentally, we must address Mr. Barnes's assertion that you owe a duty of confidentiality to the FCDAO. As an initial matter, there is good reason to believe that the attorney-client privilege does not apply to a prosecutor "because no particular client reveals information to him for the purpose of obtaining legal advice."[18] As the American Bar Association explains in its Standards on Prosecutorial Investigations, "[t]he prosecutor's client is the public, not particular government agencies or victims."[19] However, even if his assertion is accurate, the Committee is interested in questioning you about topics that are not subject to the attorney-client privilege—for example, because they are discussions that were not made in confidence or for purposes other than seeking or obtaining "legal advice."[20] As such, a blanket assertion that your testimony is barred on the basis of the attorney-client privilege is unpersuasive.[21]

As discussed above and in previous letters to you, the Committee is conducting oversight of politically motivated prosecutions by state and local officials, and the FCDAO's use of federal funds.[22] More specifically, the Committee is examining your role in the politically motivated prosecution of a former President of the United States, and whether federal funds were used for this.[23] As explained previously, you have reportedly "profit[ed] significantly" from District Attorney Willis's prosecution, with unsealed court filings showing that you have been paid "almost seven hundred thousand dollars ($700,000) [from the FCDAO] since May of 2022 alone."[24] District Attorney Willis reportedly compensated you and financed her politically motivated prosecution using a mixture of taxpayer funds, possibly including part of the $14.6 million in federal grant funds that her office received from the Department of Justice between 2020 and 2023.[25] While receiving taxpayer funds, you apparently coordinated with Democrats in Washington, D.C.—"quietly me[eting]" with staff from the partisan January 6 Committee, which allowed you to review information it had gathered,[26] and you had two separate meetings with the Biden White House, including with the White House Counsel.[27]

Pursuant to Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee has jurisdiction over Justice Department programs and criminal justice matters in the United States.[28] Here, Congress has a specific and manifestly important interest in preventing politically motivated prosecutions of current and former presidents, especially in venues in which real or perceived biases exist. Among other things, if state or local prosecutors are able to engage in politically motivated prosecutions of Presidents of the United States (current or former), this could have a profound effect on how presidents choose to exercise their powers while in office. in retaliation for actions and decisions he takes while in office, the President could have an incentive to refrain from making decisions that may be in the national interest, but not in a particular local interest, as a way of guarding against future criminal liability. Your testimony regarding the FDCAO's prosecution will therefore help the Committee to assess whether there is a need for the House to advance legislative reforms to address this problem. For example, it will inform the House's consideration of whether to move forward with legislation, informed by the Committee's oversight, which, if adopted, would remedy politically motivated local prosecutions by allowing a current or former president to remove the case to a more neutral forum in federal court.[29]

The Committee is also considering potential legislative reforms establishing clear guidelines outlining the permissible uses of federal grant funds, under 34 U.S.C. §§ 10261, et seq., and 12291, et seq., creating penalties for unlawfully misusing federal grant funds under Title 34 of the United States Code, constructing stringent automatic audit requirements for Department grant managers, or modifying eligibility requirements pertaining to grant recipients that misuse federal funds. Your testimony will inform the House's consideration of these legislative reforms.

In light of your continued failure to cooperate with our investigation, please find attached a subpoena compelling your testimony before the Committee on September 26, 2024. Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Jen Easterly
Director
Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency
U.S. Department of Homeland Security
245 Murray Lane
Washington, DC 20528-0380

Dear Director Easterly:

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government are conducting oversight of how and to what extent the Executive Branch has coerced or colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor lawful speech.[1] To develop effective legislation, such as the possible enactment of new statutory limits on the Executive Branch's ability to work with social media platforms and other companies to censor speech, the Committee and Select Subcommittee must first understand the nature of this collusion and coercion.

As the Director of the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), you are uniquely positioned to aid our oversight, as CISA, under your leadership, has participated in efforts to unconstitutionally monitor and censor Americans' speech on social media platforms.[2] After CISA twice refused to provide your availability for a public hearing regarding your role in CISA's unconstitutional censorship efforts —first in July 2024 and then in September 2024—on September 13, 2024, we requested that you voluntarily appear for a transcribed interview.[3] On September 24, we offered you a final opportunity to appear for a transcribed interview on October 4.[4] To date, you have refused to schedule your transcribed interview. Accordingly, please find attached a subpoena compelling your appearance for a deposition on October 11, 2024.[5]

The Committee's and Select Subcommittee's investigation has uncovered how the federal government has coerced and colluded with social media companies and other intermediaries to censor American speech.[6] The First Amendment prohibits government officials from imposing viewpoint-based censorship restrictions. State action doctrine stands for the proposition that government officials may not circumvent constitutional strictures by using private actors—whether through coercion, encouragement, entwinement, or joint participation—to accomplish what the government cannot directly.[7]

In addition to the Committee's and Select Subcommittee's oversight, other publicly available documents reflect the weaponization of the federal government's power to censor speech online directly and by proxy.[8] From the information already available to and obtained by the Committee, it is apparent that CISA has played a central role in the Executive Branch's censorship efforts.[9] It is necessary for Congress to gauge the extent to which CISA coerced, pressured, worked with, or relied upon social media and other tech companies to censor speech.

The scope of the Committee's and Select Subcommittee's investigation includes understanding the extent and nature of CISA's involvement in this censorship under your tenure.[10]

The Committee and Select Subcommittee have sought your testimony for months. On July 2, 2024, we requested that you testify at a public hearing that the Select Subcommittee had tentatively scheduled for July 31.[11] CISA staff declined to provide information about your availability on that date, insisting instead that the Committee make premature representations about extraneous matters, such as the identity of other potential witnesses.[12] After nearly two weeks of discussions, CISA staff eventually claimed that you were scheduled to be out of town on the date of the hearing.[13]

In an effort to move forward in good faith, and as an accommodation to you, the Committee next offered three potential dates for a public hearing in September 2024 to better accommodate your schedule.[14] Despite several attempts to engage with CISA about the narrow question of your availability—basic information that federal agencies ordinarily share to allow Congressional committees to schedule events during the compact legislative schedule—CISA refused to engage substantively, only to eventually claim you were unavailable on all of the dates offered by the Committee.[15] CISA refused to offer any alternative dates on which you would be able to testify before the Committee.[16] Here again, in these discussions, CISA staff demanded to know specifics about the potential hearing that were irrelevant and extraneous to the narrow question of your availability to provide testimony.[17]

The Committee's typical practice, especially when attempting to schedule the testimony of an Executive Branch official in a public hearing setting, has been to first settle the witness's availability to testify on a date and time that is compatible with the Committee's busy schedule. While we share the purpose of the hearing at this juncture, we often defer on finalizing other hearing details until we secure a date because the witness's availability is the necessary first step in this process and the witness's unavailability may mean the Committee chooses to not proceed or to schedule a hearing on a different topic instead. We attempted to follow our ordinary practice here when seeking to schedule your testimony in a public hearing, and, as we explained previously to CISA staff, confirming your availability was the necessary first step.[18] However, we could not proceed with scheduling a public hearing because CISA, for weeks, would not confirm your availability for any of the Committee's proposed dates and declined to offer any alternative dates.

Consequently, and given the importance of your testimony to the Committee's and Select Subcommittee's oversight, on September 13, we requested that you voluntarily appear for a transcribed interview.[19] On September 20, CISA responded via letter, noting concerns with the Committee's and Select Subcommittee's request without indicating your availability to provide testimony.[20] In yet another attempt to obtain your voluntary appearance, the Committee wrote you on September 24, responding to the concerns raised by CISA and reiterating our request that you appear for a voluntary transcribed interview.[21] On September 27, CISA responded claiming that a hearing is the "most appropriate" means for the Committee to obtain for your testimony.[22] Incredibly, CISA made this claim despite twice refusing to work in good faith with the Committee to schedule your testimony at a public hearing.[23] You cannot have it both ways. You cannot dodge invitations to appear at a public hearing and then decline to participate in a transcribed interview because you prefer to appear at a public hearing.

The Committee has made several, repeated attempts over the course of many months to obtain your testimony. We have offered both public hearings and transcribed interview settings. We have offered multiple dates. Each of the Committee's attempts has been met with resistance and a failure to work in good faith toward obtaining your testimony. To date, you have failed to schedule your appearance to testify voluntarily, and it is now necessary to use compulsory process to obtain your testimony.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys of defects in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling the Congress to remedy them."[24] Pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction to conduct oversight of matters concerning "civil liberties" to inform potential legislative reforms.[25] In addition, House Resolution 12 authorized the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the

Mr. Jeffrey B. Veltri
Special Agent-in-Charge
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Miami Field Office
2030 SW 145th Avenue
Miramar, FL 33027

Dear Mr. Veltri:

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government are continuing to conduct oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) misuse of the security clearance suspension and revocation process. On May 15, 2024, based upon information that you were involved in key decisions regarding the adjudication of security clearance matters by the FBI Security Division (SecD), the Committee requested that you appear for a voluntary transcribed interview.[1] On September 25, 2024, we reiterated our request for a transcribed interview and asked that you schedule the interview by October 9.[2] To date, you have failed to honor this request. As such, the Committee must resort to compulsory process to obtain your testimony.

Recent information received by the Committee and the Select Subcommittee confirms many of the whistleblower disclosures about your conduct at SecD. In September 2024, a nonpartisan whistleblower advocacy group disclosed to the Committee, in detail, the various actions that you took to override due process requirements during the SecD investigation into former FBI Staff Operations Specialist Marcus Allen.[3] For example, whistleblowers disclosed that "rather than sending the information about Mr. Allen to be assessed by [the Clearance Referral Evaluations Unit], SC Veltri cut the normal process short and directed that it go directly to [the Clearance Investigations Unit] to have an investigation opened."[4] According to whistleblowers, your successor later criticized your actions as a deviation from the process.[5] Whistleblowers have also alleged that although there was "no basis" to suspend Allen's clearance, you ordered it revoked regardless and later went on an "extended rant" about the investigation.[6]

During his testimony to the Select Subcommittee last month, Inspector General Horowitz confirmed that you short-circuited the normal process to quickly open the investigation into Mr. Allen.[7] Specifically, Inspector General Horowitz testified, "[a] SecD management official reviewed the emails [from Mr. Allen], advised FBI [Office of General Counsel] that SecD would be opening a security investigation of Mr. Allen, and then directed SecD subordinates to open a security investigation."[8] A SecD employee told Inspector General Horowitz's office that "the opening of the Allen security investigation was a departure from SecD 'best practices' because SecD management issued a directive to open the investigation, rather than allowing the allegation to follow the normal SecD referral and assessment standard operation procedures."[9] Overall, Inspector General Horowitz concluded that "the handling of Mr. Allen's security clearance investigation and adjudication are concerning."[10]

In addition, the Committee continues to learn new information about the use of a politically motivated questionnaire within SecD to demand inappropriate information about the political and personal views of FBI employees.[11] For instance, SecD investigators, using this questionnaire, quizzed an FBI employee's colleagues about whether the employee ever "vocalize[d] support for President Trump" or "vocalize[d] objection[s] to Covid-19 vaccination."[12] The questionnaire warned these colleagues that if they "refuse[d] to answer or fail[ed] to reply fully and truthfully," they would face potential disciplinary action and loss of their own security clearance.[13] During his testimony, Inspector General Horowitz confirmed that the material in this questionnaire was "highly inappropriate."[14]

For all these reasons, we believe that you possess information vital to our oversight to inform potential legislative reforms. The Committee on the Judiciary has legislative and oversight jurisdiction over the FBI pursuant to Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives to consider potential legislative reforms. In addition, House Resolution 12 authorized the Committee's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal 801 PENNSYLVANIA AVE N.W.

WASHINGTON, DC 20004

[redacted] Good morning, Ms. Sanborn.

This is a transcribed interview of Ms. Jill Sanborn. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Ms. Sanborn. Jill Sanborn.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone from the committee who is here at the table introduce themselves.

[redacted] [redacted] also with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Committee senior adviser.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman -- with Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] I'm the chief counsel for oversight for Chairman -- or for Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questions will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break after each hour, but if you need to take a break at any time just please let us know.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

Ms. Sanborn. Absolutely.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is. Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everyone present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. And it is my understanding that you are appearing today with personal counsel. Is that correct?

Ms. Sanborn. That is correct.

[redacted] Could counsel please state your name for the record?

Mr. Burwell. Carter Burwell. I work at the law firm of Debevoise & Plimpton. And you kindly let two of my colleagues come today, Chris Carter and Cameron Wolfe, who are down at the other end of the table.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to the question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give your best recollection. It is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else, just indicate how you came to know the information. If there are things you don't know or cannot remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that although the interview is not under oath today, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

Ms. Sanborn. I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand this?

Ms. Sanborn. I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution or perjury or for making false statements under Title 18, USC 1001. Do you understand this?

Ms. Sanborn. Absolutely.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you do not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporters so that they can go into the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That is the end of my opening remarks. Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] Sure.

Thank you both to [redacted] and you, [redacted] and especially to our witness, Ms. Sanborn.

I want to echo, thank you for agreeing to appear voluntarily today. And I also just want to note thank you for your long and distinguished career in the United States Government.

I do want to note just two things for the record. The organizational meeting for the members of the committee is still ongoing, and the rules package has not yet been voted on. Obviously, this is a transcribed interview so circumstances are a little different, but I did want to note that for the record.

And then I did want to note that, as [redacted] noted, Ms. Sanborn is represented by private counsel. I understand that FBI agency counsel was not permitted to attend today. I understand that FBI's position is that they would be here representing the executive branch equities, not the equities of Ms. Sanborn, and so they do object to being excluded today.

That's all. Thank you.

[redacted] And just for the record, the policy is a witness can appear at the transcribed interview with agency counsel or personal counsel, so it's the witness' choice. So the FBI wasn't excluded. The witness decided to come today with personal counsel.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] The clock now reads 10:09 a.m. We will start our first hour --

[redacted] And I have one more note to make. I'm sorry. The rules have been adopted by the committee, so we're now operating with committee rules, not that that's relevant for a transcribed interview.

[redacted] Thank you. I apologize. I wasn't aware when I came upstairs.

Mr. Burwell. [redacted] I have an opening statement as well. Ms. Sanborn did not. So I'd like to give that if I may.

[redacted] Absolutely.

Mr. Burwell. Thanks for inviting us up here. Now, we're here, as you said, voluntarily, because Ms. Sanborn deeply respects Congress and its oversight authorities, and that's why she responded immediately through counsel to the chairman's request -- sorry, it was then Congressman Jordan's request -- back in August. And, again, I think that's really important. She responded to Congressman Jordan's request back in August of last year, and she's tried to consistently cooperate with then Congressman and now Chairman Jordan's request.

The other thing that I think is important, because we're here today to talk about whistleblower allegations against her, is that Ms. Sanborn deeply respects the whistleblower process. This is not news to you because we've talked about this during this process since we got the letter. But she started her career working with whistleblowers and she acknowledges how important they are, particularly to congressional oversight. And she's going to deny the allegations, but she respects the process.

So that's kind of why she's here voluntarily, of her own free will, to respond to those allegations that were publicly made back in August of 2022.

We've offered to have a less formal interview to talk about broader issues, and the committee has kind of been -- now the committee has been insistent that this should be a transcribed and just last week now a videotaped interview. So we're extremely mindful of that.

The other thing I think we're mindful of is that Ms. Sanborn does not work for the FBI anymore, and she's deeply conscious that this is the first interview in what will be a host of interviews, and of the letters that the chairman sent out last week asking for FBI to come and respond, that the scope and breadth of this committee's investigation has expanded significantly ever since, well in advance of -- sorry, since August of 2022.

We're grateful that you confirmed last week that the whistleblower allegations against her have not changed materially since that August 2022 letter, and we're grateful for you sharing that with us. And that's another reason why she's here voluntarily to try and address those allegations.

A couple other things just for the record.

We're less concerned about agency counsel stuff, but we did get finally just a couple days ago authorization from the FBI for her to speak. We felt like that's important and it's appropriate, because a lot of these allegations -- sorry, the allegation relates directly to her work as a senior official at the FBI, that there's ongoing requests of the FBI.

And the other thing that I think I want to put on the record, and I think Ms. Sanborn will say, is that we're conscious that this is a path forward for a lot of other FBI officials, former and current, and that she's trying to -- she understands that she's charting that path. And I think you guys recognize that and are appreciative of that.

So she's here to categorically and vigorously deny the allegations against her. She's been retired from the FBI for almost a year, as you know. She hasn't reviewed any documents with the FBI. She hasn't had the benefit -- you're asking for those materials. I think you kindly noted some of that in your opening, but I think it's worth reaffirming.

Because of that and on numerous reasons, she's not an appropriate stand-in for the FBI. She's here to address the personal allegations against her. Probably for the record, they want me to note that she's not here and I'm sure you're not going to ask her about national security information or ongoing investigations of which she hasn't been a part of.

For the record, I've got to note attorney-client privilege, and I know that this is ongoing and evolving, especially because of the Supreme Court's decision. But we're going to hopefully not have to go into any of those details because certainly it doesn't matter to the allegations.

She's prepared. She prepared when she testified before the Senate and the House when she worked for the FBI. And she's prepared to address these allegations today in a videotaped, transcribed interview.

And I appreciate your willingness to let us make this opening statement as well.

[redacted] Okay. And I would just like to add something to that.

Whistleblowers have come forward and expressed objections to what they see is happening at the FBI, and they have identified Ms. Sanborn as potentially a fact witness to those allegations. And so you have set up your remarks that the whistleblowers have made charges against Ms. Sanborn, and I think it's more appropriate to say the whistleblowers have made charges against the FBI and what's happened and that Ms. Sanborn happens to have relevant facts. So --

Mr. Burwell. You know, look, we're happy to be here. You sent a letter -- the then Congressman Jordan sent a letter back in August with a specific allegation against her related to reclassifying figures. That's the only allegation we've heard against her.

[redacted] I understand. But we haven't jumped to any conclusions.

Mr. Burwell. Thank you.

[redacted] We're just moving forward with talking to people that have information relevant.

So now we can start our hour.

[redacted] Okay. The clock now reads 10:16 a.m. We'll start with our first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Sanborn, I'd like to start by going through your extensive tenure at the FBI.

When did you retire from the FBI?

A April of 2022.

Q And then you went to Roku. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And are you still the senior director of geopolitical strategy and risk analysis at Roku?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And when did you take that position?

A A couple weeks after retiring. So it still was April, I don't remember the specific day, but still April of 2022.

Q Okay. And in that position, do you have any interactions with the FBI?

A Not at this point.

Q Okay.

A You're probably very well aware that there's a cooling-off period, and so when executives retire they, for the first year they're retired, should try to separate themselves from the organization. So while I still have friends there that I talk to, I don't engage them as part of my official duties at Roku, if that's what you mean.

Q Okay. And do you still interact with the FBI in any official capacity?

A I am a member of DSAC, so that's -- I forget what it specifically stands for, but it's an organization for private sector. My boss is the main member of that, and I'm an add-on member. So I am a member of an entity that can receive information in that relationship that private sector has with law enforcement, but that's it.

Q And can you kind of describe what information you might receive through that?

A They put out alerts. Like if there is a cyber attack, they might notify private sector to be aware of a certain vulnerability in software.

There hasn't been a lot in my 10 months so far, so I'm sure there's a wide variety that I might not capture, but that's the flavor of it.

Q Okay. And during your tenure at the FBI, would you say that you specialized in counterterrorism or terrorism cases?

A Yep. Yes, ma'am.

Q And did you work on both foreign and domestic terrorism investigations?

A Yes. However, I would say, if you were going to break it into percentages, probably 90 percent of my career was terrorism, international terrorism focused, and primarily overseas international terrorism.

So I was on what they call extraterritorial assignments where I focused on the foreign terrorists overseas, not necessarily individuals here in the United States acting on their behalf.

Q And when were you appointed the assistant director for Counterterrorism Division?

A It was in 2020, roughly around February. I remember reporting sometime

February, March of 2020.

Q And when did --

A I don't have the specific date, but I could get you that.

Q When did you leave that role?

A So I started transitioning to EAD first couple of months of 2021. The former EAD had advised me that he would soon be retiring and that he had recommended I potentially replace him, and while that was still up to the supervisor. So I started transitioning probably in February-ish of 2021 and officially took over, I believe, the official date is like April of 2021.

Q Okay. And as the assistant director for the Counterterrorism Division, can you generally and briefly describe your roles and responsibilities?

A Yes. So, I mean, roles and responsibilities at headquarters in general would be sort of oversight. So I viewed my role as very similar to what you all do, which is oversight over the field offices, the quality and efficiency of how they work their investigations as it relates to terrorism matters.

Q And was it just field offices that were under your oversight or did you have like squads or divisions within the FBI?

A Yeah. That's a great question.

So I didn't supervise the field offices. The field offices report up to the deputy director.

Q Okay.

A So they were not in my sort of chain of command. I program managed their cases and their work. Under me directly was sections and units when I was AD.

Q Okay. And who was your direct supervisor at the time?

A Yeah, when I was an AD my direct supervisor was EAD John Brown.

Q And was he the EAD for the National Security Division?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And how many people directly reported to you in your role as AD?

A Directly, like direct reports as AD?

Q Yeah, direct reports.

A Somewhere probably between a dozen to 24 maybe. So I had an executive staff. And then all of the DADs would've reported to me. So I could get you that exact number, but it feels like somewhere between a dozen and 24.

Q And can you kind of help us understand the org chart. So it was EAD John Brown, then you, and then directly below you, you had an executive staff?

A Yes. So it was EAD John Brown; then me, AD; and then directly reporting to me at an executive level would've been three DADs; and then section chiefs under them.

And then I also had an executive staff that would've had a chief of staff, a special assistant, a special assistant, somebody that answered my telephones, about half a dozen people that did sort of administrative duties, helped me prepare for my testimony, those kinds of things.

Q Okay. And they were all primarily also focused on oversight of the field offices?

A So my executive staff was primarily focused on my day-to-day duties and what I needed to accomplish.

Underneath the DADs and the section chiefs are where that oversight program management happens. And so the section chiefs, unit chiefs, and SSAs would be the ones that would be overseeing and communicating with the field about their casework.

Q Okay. And did you work out of headquarters at that time?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And did you ever do a stint at a field office or primarily worked out of headquarters?

A So when I was AD, primarily at headquarters. In fact, that was during COVID. I'm not even sure I traveled much. As EAD, I had a short period of time where I worked remotely out of the Phoenix, Arizona, office.

Q And in your role as AD, did you have regular --

Mr. Burwell. Can I just jump in?

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Burwell. That you were the SAC in charge of an office before you were --

Ms. Sanborn. Oh, yes. I thought she meant was I assigned as an AD somewhere.

Mr. Burwell. Yes.

Ms. Sanborn. I was a special agent in charge of the field office. I don't know if you were --

BY [redacted]

Q Yes.

A Okay.

Q And did you have regular interactions with the FBI director and/or the deputy director when you were AD?

A Yes.

Q And how frequently?

A Daily.

Q Daily. And just for the record, who was the FBI director when you were the AD?

A Director Wray.

Q And the deputy director?

A Initially, when I was the AD, Mr. Bowdich. And then right around the same time I transitioned to EAD, I believe he retired and Deputy Director Paul Abbate took over. I don't remember specifically if I promoted before that transition or quite after, but --

Q And were there regularly scheduled meetings with the director?

A Yes, daily, in the morning.

Q Okay. And just like a check-in meeting?

A Usually updating him on things that are going on, things that he should be worried about, and then also an intelligence portion, us paying attention to the latest intelligence on the threats.

Q And was it all senior leadership at the headquarters --

A Yes.

Q -- that would meet?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And how regularly did you interface with FBI field offices?

A I didn't have like a cadence. So the question you asked me about the director was more of an established we do this every day cadence; where with the field offices it was more ad hoc, they would call me and want to question or I would call them.

I don't remember, quite honestly, as AD or EAD, that being very frequently. Like I can't -- I think there were some instances where situations required a conversation, but I don't remember it being very frequently.

Q Okay. And so then you said you were starting to go into your role as EAD of the National Security Division February 2021. April 2021 was the kind of the more official start date.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q What were your duties and responsibilities in that role?

A So as the EAD over national security, I also still saw the terrorism program, and that AD then reported to me. But I also oversaw the Counterintelligence Division, and that AD would've reported to me; the Terrorist Screening Center, and that AD would've reported to me; and then the Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate, and that AD would've reported to me. Also, I had an executive staff up there as well.

Q Okay. So then you were kind of then in John Brown's role?

A Absolutely, correct.

Q So the org chart would kind of look similar to how he set it up?

A Yes.

Q And you were at headquarters then?

A Correct, with the exception of what I told you. There was a period in time where I worked as EAD remotely, some from Arizona.

Q Okay. And did you still have those daily meetings with the director and deputy director?

A Yes.

Q And Director Wray was the FBI director at that time?

A Correct.

Q And how regularly did you interface with FBI field offices when you were EAD?

A Probably less than as AD, and, again, sort of ad hoc as issues came up, not a normal cadence. I think the only sort of normal engagement, both as EAD and AD, and they sort of changed a little bit because of COVID, was we had SAC conferences once or twice a year that we usually are physically together. But other than that, not very frequently.

Q And when you were EAD, what was your involvement with field investigations or managing individual cases?

A So really the like -- and I think this is a great question. And I think hopefully you asked the Bureau to kind of dive into detail here, because I think they can give you a little bit more granularity probably with walking you through org charts and explaining some of the nuances of program management.

But sort of the day-to-day watching cases, what's going on in the cases, is done at a very junior level at headquarters, GS-14 and 15s. So I didn't have visibility on -- at any given time, there's thousands of cases there. I probably only had visibility on the ones that were getting briefed to me, sort of top of mind for those program managers.

And so not very often was I involved in the cases, period, unless they warranted, hey, this is somebody that's starting to pose an imminent threat or something is going on here that you need to be aware of. So only when the younger and junior executives-slash-leaders felt there was something that warranted briefing-slash-notifying me of. Does that make sense?

Q Yes. And was that the same when you were the assistant director for the Counterterrorism Division, it was the junior staffers who --

A Yes.

Q -- oversaw cases?

A Yes. Yeah, so every -- they're broken up so that they have portions of the country that they supervise. And so those young SSAs are supervising certain field offices and then reporting up what's going on with cases.

Q So if there was a case you needed to know about, those junior staffers would let you know?

A Via the chain of command. So it's a very hierarchical sort of the supervisor would tell the section chief who would then tell the DAD and they would brief me. So usually the briefings were done at a hierarchical level. Does that make sense?

Q Uh-huh.

Mr. Burwell. And for the record, I don't know if "junior staffer" is the best way to describe some of these folks who have been in the field for 20 years --

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah.

Mr. Burwell. -- or --

Ms. Sanborn. "Junior" meaning entry level to headquarters. So you have to spend a minimum amount of time in the field office before you can come to headquarters because probably good case agents make better program managers because they know what they're looking for. So they are new to headquarters in sort of that oversight role. So if that clarifies it.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So now I want to turn to how the FBI classifies domestic violent extremism cases, or we'll use DVEs for short.

Are you familiar with how the FBI classifies and categorizes investigations?

A Yes.

Q And those would be into categories such as like DVE or hate crime, et cetera?

A Correct.

Q And at what stage in the investigation are cases given an investigative case classification such as a DVE?

A Yeah. I think -- I think these are -- this is a very important question. I feel a little bit in a tough situation here for a couple reasons. I feel like you deserve the best answer, and it's a complicated answer, it's a detailed answer. And hopefully, again, FBI gives you the answer to these.

And I also appreciate the point you made, and I did cognizantly choose personal counsel versus FBI counsel because I'm here representing myself, and so I think that's important.

So the answers I give you, because I haven't been involved in the opening cases in a really long time, both as a former executive as well as I went up my role that my role in that was less and less, so I want to be careful to not give you an answer that's incomplete or lacking what the Bureau could give you, if that makes sense.

Q Yeah. So we'll focus on what in your experience.

A Yes.

Q When was a case classified?

A So case classification should be happening simultaneously with openings. So as I get -- as an allegation comes in, evaluating that allegation, the agent and the supervisor should be determining what the classification is, and that happens all in the field office.

Q And you said the agent and the supervising agent?

A Correct.

Q Is that correct?

And so in your experience the one responsible for determining and applying the investigative case classification, when the tip comes in and the case is opened, is the special agent on the case?

A Special agent and supervisor. So all case openings have to be approved by a supervisor.

Q Okay.

A And in domestic violent extremist cases, which is your primary focus here, there's an extra step in that where the chief division counsel in a field office participates in that process.

Q And is headquarters notified at any point, in your experience?

A They are. I don't remember like how soon they're notified, whether it's the day of opening. There's different rules for different types of cases, international terrorism cases, and when that notification happens, domestic. And I'm sure the criminal program has different times when that happens.

So I definitely don't want to misspeak on that. There is notification I believe on all cases as they're opened, but would refer you to FBI to make sure that's correct.

Q And in your experience, was there collaboration between the supervisory agent and the special agent for what the case classification should be?

A It should be.

Q Okay.

A So painting a picture for you, that's the squad that sits in a field office. And so that's typically fairly small, and they should be having very intimate sort of conversations all day long about their casework.

Mr. Burwell. Maybe, how many agents are on a squad?

Ms. Sanborn. It depends. They have to have a minimum of seven, I believe. You can double-check that's still current with the FBI. But I believe you have to have a minimum of seven agents.

BY [redacted]

Q And would the supervisory special agent then give any input for what the case classification, or is that more of the special agent's decision?

A I mean, I would be remiss to give you that answer because I think it's specific to each style of an agent and a supervisor. I know I had conversations with my supervisor -- my agents when I had the squad at Washington field, so I would assume that that's what -- it's sort of a back-and-forth conversation. But I couldn't give you a specific, because I'm sure probably every agent and supervisor's relationship is probably unique in how they interact.

Q And would the division chief, would they have any input then as well?

A So they definitely have input in the domestic violent extremism cases.

Q Okay. And are those treated differently than other cases when applying the classification?

A No. I think -- yes and no. I don't know of another case type that requires the CDC's participation in that process, and I think that's intentional. And, again, refer you to the FBI to make sure what I think is true.

But I think that that's intentional, because of the complexity and the importance on the domestic violent extremism cases, to make sure that we are not opening cases based on First Amendment-protected activity. So there's an intentional insert of the chief division counsel to advise there.

Mr. Burwell. And when you say "we," you mean the FBI, where you used to work?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah. I know. Sorry, yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. So in your experience then, the CDC for DVEs would have some sort of input in the DVE classification?

A Correct.

Q And then when you got to the headquarters level, when you became assistant director, did you have any role in classifying cases?

A No.

Q When you were executive assistant director of the National Security Division, did you play any role in classifying cases?

A None.

Q You wouldn't provide any input on how cases should be classified?

A I can't remember an incident where somebody sought my opinion or that I gave guidance on classifying cases one way or the other. However, if somebody came to me, say a section chief or a DAD came to me and said, hey, we have this case and here are the facts and here's what the allegation is, we think it's this, what do you think, I would've dialogued with them. But I can't remember a specific incident where that specifically happened.

Q And that was both as your time as EAD and AD?

A Correct.

Q And it's not uncommon for cases to cross over multiple threat categories like DVE and hate crime or alike?

A No.

Q Okay. And how often are cases reclassified from one category to another, in your experience?

A I really have no idea. Like as you're -- you could open a case and think that the allegations say this and then as you're investigating find out that it's actually something different.

So case reclassifications do happen. I mean, I remember -- and, again, they have to be approved by a supervisor. I probably remember a handful of times when I had a squad at Washington field where my agents would reclassify a case, but it is documented and approved by a supervisor.

But volume-wise, I think it's just -- just it's dictated by where the investigation leads you, is what it should be.

Q So the supervisory special agent would be notified if a special agent was reclassifying a case?

A My understanding is for a case to change classifications, at a minimum the special agent would be writing something in our database that has all of the documents pertaining to a case and then asking the supervisor to approve their change in case classification.

Q Okay.

A But, again, please double-check that with FBI that that's it, because it's been a long time since I've been a squad supervisor.

Q Yeah. And if a case was being reclassified as a DVE, so then the agent would have to get their supervisor's approval, and then in addition would the CDC weigh in?

A I believe so, but, again, please double-check that with the FBI.

Q Uh-huh. And in your experience, how did the FBI or how did you define a domestic violent extremism investigation when you were at the FBI?

A Yeah. So domestic violent extremism really is defined by the statute, the domestic terrorism statute, which is 2331. I won't probably do it specific justice trying to recite it, but it's basically the case has to be involving an individual who's about ready to do an act that's dangerous to human life, happening in the United States, and with the intent to coerce, intimidate, and there's a couple other things, the United States Government.

Q Okay. And as the assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division, would you receive notice if a full DVE investigation was being opened?

A No.

Q No. Same as EAD?

A Correct. Again, if it was significant, potentially. Like if it was, wow, she really should be aware of this, we're going to let her know. But on an everyday case opening basis, no. I mean, I think the volume wouldn't necessarily afford that.

Q And are you familiar with the letter that Mr. Jordan sent to FBI Director Wray on July 27th, 2022, regarding protected whistleblower disclosures related to the FBI's handling of DVE cases?

A Most likely. I mean, I've seen a lot of those letters in the media, so possibly.

Q I'm going to introduce that to the record.

A Okay.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So I'd like to mark the July 27th, 2022, letter to FBI Director Wray as exhibit No. 1.

A Thank you.

Q Ms. Sanborn, if you could take a minute to review and let me know once you have reviewed.

A Okay.

Q So have you seen this letter before?

A It looks familiar, so, yes, I believe this is one of the ones I've read.

Q And do you know when about you might have become aware of the letter?

A Sometime after August 10th.

Q Okay. I'm going to read the first few sentences on page 2 of the letter in that first paragraph there.

"New whistleblower disclosures made by multiple FBI employees from different field offices indicate that the Biden administration's narrative may be misleading. We have received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases of DVEs to satisfy their supervisors. For example --"

Mr. Burwell. Sorry. "Superiors."

BY [redacted]

Q Superiors. Thank you.

"For example, one whistleblower explained that because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases even though there is minimal circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification."

Ms. Sanborn, what is or was your reaction to these allegations?

A I think if individuals are encouraging, asking, pressuring agents to change classification of a case inappropriately is unacceptable. So that was one reaction.

Q And during your time at the FBI, are you aware of any instances where an agent has been told to reclassify a case?

A Not that I can recall, no.

Q Any instance where an FBI agent was pressured to reclassify a case?

A Not that I can recall.

Q During your time at the FBI, do you know if there is an -- was an initiative to prioritize DVE cases?

A Again, I would -- great question to kind of dive into how we do this at the FBI, so please ask this.

But there is a process for prioritizing threats, and I think it's a yearly if not biyearly process, very mindful process, that takes into account a lot of different things. And it's very intelligence based. It's something that I believe is done well on the heels of the lessons we learned from 9/11 to not base prioritization just on volume of cases.

So when I came in that's how priorities got set in field offices, was the squad that had the most cases. And so I think this process that's rooted in intelligence then gives you how the cases should be ranked -- I mean, how the cases -- how the threats should be ranked.

And going through that process definitely during my time as AD, and I believe I saw some of this as EAD, made the DVE threat fall more elevated on that continuum than it maybe would've been 5 years ago.

Q And is the process you're referring to, is that the Threat Review and Prioritization process, the TRP process?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And is that separate -- we're hearing that there are different systems, the Threat Review and Prioritization process and then a system to promote and rate FBI officials. Are those the same process or different?

A Completely separate, to my knowledge. Like great question on kind of the promotion-slash-process for the FBI. But I don't ever remember that being discussed during TRP. Does that make sense?

Q Uh-huh.

A They're separate, I believe, completely separate processes.

Q And so sticking with the TRP process, do headquarters operational divisions develop national threat strategies for each threat issued during that process?

A I believe that's correct.

Q And those threat strategies, are they then used to guide, in your experience,

FBI-wide mitigation efforts?

Mr. Burwell. I think I'm just going to object for the purpose of where we started with this is that the FBI is a great witness to talk about how this process works, and it's complicated. The factual allegations that anybody was involved inappropriately I think are really -- is the nature of your August request for her interview.

I think we are voluntarily trying to help guide you, but the FBI is in the best position, and that you've asked the FBI to come and provide detailed information about this complicated process.

BY [redacted]

Q And I think, as Ms. Sanborn alluded to, this TRP process is kind of how they prioritize cases. And as part of the TRP process, are there metrics that have to be hit?

A Again, great question for the FBI, and happy to try to shed some light from my knowledge on this, but I would ask that anything that you take as official please be consulted with the FBI.

I do not remember anything having to do with the TRP process crossing over into performance and performance appraisals and performance plans. Does that make sense?

Q Yeah. And so as part of those performance plans, were there metrics?

A Not that I remember. I do not remember ever reviewing one of my performance plans. Like let's stick with what I remember about me?

Q Yeah.

A I don't ever remember reviewing one of my performance plans and making note of, oh, they're telling me I need to, whether it's case numbers or budget, do X, Y, Z in a specific granular level like that. It was broader categories of business acumen and achieving results.

So, no, I do not remember ever in mine there being a metric, both in the plan or in the appraisal at the end of the year.

Q And so what is your reaction that multiple agents from different field offices have come forward to say that they're being pressured to reclassify cases as DVEs to hit a metric?

A Yeah. I have two reactions to that.

One, which I already sort of said to you, if that kind of behavior is going on, it's inappropriate.

But then the second part is, it's not me. I have never focused on metrics. I've never pressured agents to do anything inappropriate. I believe Mr. Rogers said this in something I read open source today, like I took my role both as an agent and as a leader in the organization to act with integrity, follow the rules, and uphold the law, and everything I did I tried to do that.

So I had two reactions to that. If it's happening, it's inappropriate, but it's definitely not me.

Q And you weren't aware of any of that happening while you were at the FBI?

A Not that I can -- not that I can remember.

Q And so back to how cases are classified and the supervisory special agent. Is that who supervises the special agents then?

A Yes.

Q And so they would have some sort of input on how to classify a case?

A Correct.

Q What about the assistant special agent in charge at any of the field offices?

A Potentially, yeah.

Q And the special agent in charge, would they have a role?

A Again, there is a detailed, complex policy how cases are opened, and so, please, hopefully the FBI will give you this.

I think the two people that are required for every case opening are the agent and the supervisor, and then the CDC for domestic terrorism cases.

That could change based on different threat categories. I don't remember there being a specific need for an ASAC or a SAC to be involved in that. However, in a field office they could be having those conversations all the time.

Like when I was SAC Minnesota, I had weekly staff meetings. Possible that during those weekly staff meetings people would've briefed me on a case they were working, and there could be dialogue based on that, if that makes sense. But they're not -- I don't believe there's a policy where they're inserted specifically in the process.

Q And as the assistant director for the Counterterrorism Division, did you perceive that you had a handle on what the Counterterrorism Division was doing, the cases that the division was handling?

A I guess I would wonder what you mean by handle. Like I felt like I was a good leader and that they put things appropriately on my radar, but I don't know what you mean specifically by handle.

Q Did you have a general understanding of the content of the cases that your subordinates or the agents below you were handling, or was that handled at the level below you?

A Yeah. I probably would've only been aware, like I mentioned earlier, of those cases that rose to a level that they felt to discuss with me.

So at any given time there could be 5,000 cases in a division. I definitely didn't have a handle or a knowledge of all 5,000. I would have sort of the tip of the iceberg of the ones that for whatever reason they felt warranted being on my radar, whether it was in an IT sense, whether it was somebody who was going to commit an attack, those kinds of things.

Q And as the executive assistant director for the National Security Branch, did you have a general awareness of the cases that were being handled, or was it more high level?

A Same thing. So it would've been a very small number of cases that the ADs would've put on my radar and would've discussed with me.

So as AD, I'd have had this -- a dozen, to just throw out a number, and as EAD I'd have had a dozen but spread across those four divisions that I talked about. Does that make sense?

Q Yeah. And when you were the AD, did any agent or anyone below you on the org chart, did they ever come to you and express that they were overwhelmed by their caseload?

A I mean, I don't know that I would say that they came to me specifically and said they were overwhelmed. I think that the volume of cases in the domestic terrorism section grew pretty quickly, and it started in 2020. And it takes time to then adjust resources to help with that.

So there was a time inside the domestic terrorism section where they felt like they had more cases than people to help program management.

I don't know that they came and, quote/unquote, complained of feeling overwhelmed, but they definitely felt like, hey, we're staffed at a level of cases from a year ago, and now we've got double that cases and need more resources. And so I did spend some of my time trying to figure out how to get more resources to them.

Q And those agents that would come to you, did they ever express that they were under any sort of pressure?

A Not that I remember. And, again, they probably didn't come to me around the chain of command that I remember. I definitely remember the DAD that worked for me explaining how busy the section was and that they could use more resources, but I don't remember a complaint of pressure or anybody going around the chain of command to come to me directly, not that I recall.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with the August 10th, 2022, letter that Representatives Jordan and Johnson sent to you requesting your testimony?

A Yes, ma'am.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Okay. I'm going to mark that as exhibit No. 2. If you can just take your time to review and let me know once you have.

Ms. Sanborn. This one I know really well, so I think I'm good with this one.

[redacted] Okay. I'll wait for it to be passed.

Okay. I'm going to read the second paragraph of that letter on the first page.

"Whistleblower disclosures made by multiple FBI employees from different field offices suggest that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases of DVEs to satisfy their supervisors. For example, one whistleblower explained that because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases even though there is minimal, circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification.

"Another whistleblower stated that a field office Counterterrorism Assistant Special Agent in Charge and the FBI's then-assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division pressured agents to move cases into the DVE category to hit self-created performance metrics. These whistleblowers identified you as one official who exerted pressure on agents --"

Mr. Burwell. Sorry, just to be clear, it's singular, "This whistleblower."

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. "This whistleblower identified you as one official who exerted pressure on agents to reclassify cases as DVE matters."

What was your reaction when you learned of these allegations?

A That it wasn't me. Like shocked because this isn't me. And I think we said in the letter back to Mr. Jordan it's counter my leadership and my philosophy of cases.

And I think I have said this to the folks that work for me and probably even to reporters that have shown an interest in me talking about, quote/unquote, case numbers, that for me case numbers are, one, only an allegation. Until proven they are somewhat meaningless. Like I feel like innocent until proven guilty. So I've never focused on case numbers because, believe it or not, case numbers are closed without proof.

Second part of why I've never focused on case numbers is I learned a lot out of 9/11. I was in the Phoenix office, admin agent for the person that wrote the Phoenix Memo, and really took to heart the fact that we needed to be an intelligence-driven organization.

And case numbers are case numbers. They're not looking at things holistically as an intelligence-driven entity. And so for a lot of reasons, I've never thought case numbers were very meaningful.

I think case numbers are important for one thing only, quite honestly, which is you definitely need to work the case to get to the bottom of it. And so volume, squads need people and divisions need people to get to the bottom of the cases in front of them. Like you can't just ever grow the case number and never bring them to resolution, either closing them because the person's innocent or finding enough evidence to charge them.

And so case numbers for me help you decide how many resources to allocate so you can get to the bottom of it, but they're not indicative of the threat, and they're allegations. People are innocent until proven guilty.

Q And when would these case numbers be tabulated, or when would you set case numbers?

A So it depends. Like whenever I would have testimony, always knew that I would potentially get a question about case numbers. And so I definitely paid attention and asked for people to provide me numbers so that when asked by the Senate or the House I would have appropriate answers and data to give them.

They could've come up in the morning meetings. Oftentimes the deputy and the director would ask, how many cases do we have on this? So sometimes a due-out could come from the morning meeting wanting to know how many cases on a certain threat.

So the need to go and look at them and calculate them was sort of at an ad hoc basis based on the request. There wasn't like a standing, hey, every Tuesday at 10 give me an update on the number of cases kind of battle rhythm. Does that answer your question?

Q Yeah. And when you were looking at case numbers to help allocate adequate resources, were those cases that had been opened, or were those possible cases?

A Opened cases.

Q Opened cases. Was there any point in time where it was possible cases that could be opened?

A No, not that I remember.

Q And I want to talk a little bit about the self-created performance metrics. Is that done within the promotion process?

A So this is another one where I hope FBI responds to you, because I am not -- I've never served in the HR portion of the Bureau that would have intimate knowledge of kind of all the things that go into rating somebody and giving them any sort of kudos for their performance. So I'll speak to me and what I remember in my process.

Q Absolutely.

A So, again, I mentioned I don't remember metrics ever being a part of the plan, like, hey, Jill, we hope you achieve this this year, and I don't remember ever having an award or something about me where it then reflected on the same, with one exception.

I received meritoriously the Presidential Rank Award, and there were two references in there, I believe, to case numbers, which one was about the overall case numbers that I oversaw throughout my time in CTD, and then one was a comment about also oversaw the increase in DVE cases.

And so just for context on the Presidential Rank Award, I was nominated for that for my time as AD, nominated in, I believe, March of 2021, for my time as a whole executive.

So I don't remember ever a metric being in my plan, and that's the only time I ever remember in my personal, hey, this is how you did, Jill, being reflected in there.

Q And in your performance plan or performance review, is that done on an annual basis?

A Yes.

Q And what kind of factors can, in your experience, negatively affect your performance review?

A It's a hard one to answer because I don't know that I ever had anything specifically negative.

Q Oh, sure.

A But I would say that how I viewed my plan is they're asking me to do well in these categories. And, again, please get the categories from the FBI. But I remember two of them being business acumen, like managing my budget well, and one being achieving results.

And so I would read my plan and know like, hey, I need to be judicious with my money and balance my budget, and I also need to focus on achieving results and making progress on cases. But I don't remember anything more detailed than that.

Q And can you dig in a little bit more to the achieving results and progressing in your cases? What did that look like?

A For me, it meant that my program managers were making sure that field offices were not missing in investigative technique in their cases, like I said, pushing those cases to some sort of closure. We don't sit on cases and do nothing with them for months and months and months. Like a person is either innocent or they're guilty, like work your cases.

And field offices and supervisors have a battle rhythm of how they're supposed to go through cases. Great follow-up for the FBI. But I believe it's every 90 days you're supposed to sit down with your supervisor and go over the progress on your cases.

For me, business -- achieving results is that divisions in field offices are doing that. They're reviewing cases every 90 days. They're trying to move them to fruition, whether that's closing them because the allegation is false, or gathering evidence, improving the allegation, and taking the person through the justice process.

Q And when the performance review one of the tenets was pushing to close cases, was there a specific number of cases that were supposed to be closed?

A No. No. And nothing that granular is in the performance appraisal. So there isn't a line in there that says make sure you push cases to closure.

Q Is that done at the supervisory special agent level? Are they telling their special agents to make sure they're closing cases or --

A I wouldn't review it -- I wouldn't put it that way. Like I'll -- back again, I'll try to put my when I was a supervisor at Washington field hat on.

I didn't want my agents to sit on their cases and do nothing. So I would sit down with the case agent and say, tell me what you've done in 90 days on this case. And if it was nothing that's not good. Like you need to dedicate time and energy to getting documents, interviewing people, all the different techniques that they should be doing.

Q And when you were the assistant director for the Counterterrorism Division, did you have any interactions with field offices to close cases?

A No.

Q As executive assistant director of the National Security Branch, did you interface with field offices about cases they should close?

A Not that I remember. I mean, it would be unusual for either an AD or an EAD to be involved in the closure conversation.

Q Is anyone at headquarters involved with these performance reviews?

A What do you mean? Like you mean like an individual performance review?

Q Correct.

A Well, there's definitely a chain of command. So if I was going to -- somebody who reads my performance appraisal, first my supervisor writes it and then the next supervisor over them approves it.

So, for example, when I was AD at CTD, John Brown would've wrote my performance appraisal and then the deputy would've approved it. So there's a rating official and then a reviewing official.

Q Okay. And so the reviewing official, would they have any input in the performance review?

A They could, because even though they are one removed, they do have visibility of that next level down. And so they could have, hey, you forgot that Jill did this or you forgot that Dave did that. So they definitely could have input in the process.

Q And would they be involved with which cases needed to be closed?

A So, again, closure of the cases is at the field office level. There's notification to headquarters on the closure of cases in some instances, and would also ask you to follow up with FBI on this.

But my recollection, for example, is in the international terrorism world, because we want to make sure that they're not closing a case where somebody really poses an imminent threat, like they don't do all their checks and balances to make sure that the threat isn't there, the notice goes to headquarters to make sure that that GS-14 at headquarters that is their program manager approves their closure.

Q Uh-huh. And as you go up through the hierarchy, are the supervisory special agents, are they also given performance reviews from there?

A Yes. Everybody, in my understanding -- and the Bureau could correct me if I'm wrong -- I believe every employee gets a performance appraisal, gets a plan, and then a rating at the end of the year.

Q Yeah. So when you were the assistant director for the Counterterrorism Division, you had a performance review?

A Yes.

Q And that was done by John Brown, then the EAD?

A Correct.

Q So then when you were EAD, you were responsible for the performance review of the AD?

A Correct.

Q And when you were EAD, did you receive a performance review?

A I'm sure I did. I don't remember it specifically. But, I mean, it would've been part of the requirements in the process.

[11:04 a.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so, in your experience, if an agent or supervising agent did not meet one of their performance review's requirements, would that negatively affect whether they were promoted or have any impact on that?

A It could potentially. Again, I would refer you to the Bureau on, quote/unquote, the "promotion process." But I can't imagine that your performance appraisal wouldn't be considered at some point in whether you promote or not.

Q Uh-huh. Okay.

I'm going to let -- Mr. Gaetz has a few questions.

Hello, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Good morning. My name's Matt Gaetz. I serve on the House Judiciary Committee, and I have a few questions for you.

You mentioned in your testimony that, when you had congressional testimony, that would often trigger a review of the number of DVE cases. Do you recall how many times that occurred?

Ms. Sanborn. I don't remember how many times I testified. I mean, I can remember some of my specific testimonies. So I probably got case numbers before the Rules testimony that I did. I probably got case numbers before -- I definitely got case numbers before one of my last testimonies, which was Senate in January, I think, of 2022.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it fair to say you got DVE case numbers before every instance of your congressional testimony?

Ms. Sanborn. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And who helped you assemble that information?

Ms. Sanborn. So usually how it was done is, my staff would ask the section that owns -- so, in this case, it would be the Domestic Terrorism Section -- to provide case numbers.

Mr. Gaetz. Which members of your -- can you name the members of your staff who helped you in that process?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah. It would've been [redacted], [redacted], [redacted] [redacted], [redacted], [redacted]. And then, when I was EAD, probably would've added in [redacted], [redacted], and maybe [redacted].

Mr. Gaetz. Would you meet with that group of people collectively or individually in conducting this work?

Ms. Sanborn. Usually collectively. Like, my prep would be the staff providing me materials and me talking through the materials that they provided. I don't remember -- I had a special assistant and a chief of staff. Those two people I could've potentially met one- --

Mr. Gaetz. And what were their names?

Ms. Sanborn. [redacted] and [redacted] and [redacted].

Mr. Gaetz. And in conducting those meetings and getting that information back about DVE cases, did you ever reflect on the information they provided you regarding those case numbers, internally?

Ms. Sanborn. What do you mean, "reflect"?

Mr. Gaetz. Well, did you ever say, "Wow, that's a lot of DVE cases," or, "That's fewer than I expected, or "That's along with the trend line I expected"? Did you ever react to the data?

Ms. Sanborn. I'm sure I did. I can't remember a specific -- a specific notice one way or the other, but I'm sure I probably had some sort of reaction to it. I can't imagine

I didn't.

For example, they grew pretty quickly, right? So I'm sure that the first time that the data -- I think when I started as an AD, we might've had around 900 or so cases. And so I would imagine that my first or second testimony, those numbers were probably different. Because, 2020, we grew a lot of cases due to the violence that was going on around the country. So I'm sure my reaction in one of the first ones was, "Wow, that's quite a bit more than the last time."

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever express your pleasure with that --

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Gaetz. -- change?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever reflect externally, beyond that team, with friends, family, social acquaintances, about the size of that caseload in DVE?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that I remember. I mean, I think probably the biggest reflection I probably had as AD about the growing case numbers was I felt, as a leader, a responsibility to the section that was working those. Like, I felt like they had a lot on their plate, right? You have a lot of cases; how can I get you more people?

And so, for a while, a part of my energy was spent asking the DADs to maybe temporarily assign people to help them out. Like, I felt like, you know, they woke up one day and they had X number of cases and then the next day they had quite a bit more. And me, as a leader, I owed it to them to try to get them more resources.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm eager to chat about that resourcing process in a moment. But, still, in your preparation of congressional testimony, you mentioned that DVE was always something you wanted to have the data on to be able to respond to questions. Were there other categories where you also --

Ms. Sanborn. Oh, that's a great -- yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. -- made it as part of your regular course and practice to make sure that you always had access to that data?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah. I think that's a great question, and I would say two things about it.

The majority of my testimonies were DT-related, and so I was interested in that data because the topic of the hearing was typically DT-related.

But I always -- and I can give you an example. I always was also wanting some of those IT numbers, because I think it's fair to try to do some comparison. And so --

Mr. Gaetz. What's IT?

Ms. Sanborn. International terrorism. Sorry.

So I usually had both international terrorism and domestic terrorism data numbers in front of me even if the hearing was specifically about DT.

Mr. Gaetz. Earlier, in response to my colleague's question, you talked about this review process where you would meet with agents and talk about what they had done. And if a term of 90 days had concluded and not much work had been on the case, you said that was not a good thing.

Do you ever recall that dynamic occurring with DVE cases?

Mr. Burwell. Sorry. Just to be clear, she was explaining what supervisors would do with line agents, not when she was AD or EAD.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Well, let me clarify that point, because maybe I heard it differently.

Did you ever meet with agents and express displeasure that over some term of days not a sufficient amount of work had been concluded?

Ms. Sanborn. So I think I'll expand the answer a little bit.

When I was a squad supervisor at Washington Field Office, I was in charge of international terrorism cases overseas. There's a requirement in the Bureau that every 90 days a supervisor sit down -- we call it a file review -- sit down and go through the file review with their agents.

I'm sure there were times -- I don't remember a specific one, but I'm sure there were times that, on that squad, I sort of said, hey, you know, whoever the agent is, you haven't done a lot on this in the last 90 days, what are you doing, right? Like --

Mr. Gaetz. When were you --

Mr. Burwell. Just to help, she was a squad supervisor a long time ago, so --

Ms. Sanborn. 2012.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. Thank you.

Ms. Sanborn. I didn't have an involvement in that process as AD at all, and wouldn't have.

Mr. Gaetz. When you conducted file reviews, did you ever do that on DVE cases?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you did a file review, at any point in your career, did you ever utilize that file review meeting to reclassify a case?

Ms. Sanborn. No. Well, not that I remember, right? Like I was explaining -- I don't think you were here when I was explaining it -- in order for a case to be reclassified, an agent would type something in our database that houses all the documents, and then a supervisor would have to review it. On my international terrorism squad, they probably were all the same classification, based on what I was assigned. And so I do not remember during the file review process ever having that specific conversation, but it's possible.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

You talked about performance reviews in your testimony today. When you conducted performance reviews of others in your AD role, did you ever discuss DVE cases?

Ms. Sanborn. I'm sure -- I'm sure I probably did, right? So, when I was an AD, the DAD and the section chief that were responsible for the DT program, I'm sure we talked about the DT program writ large, and it maybe involved a conversation about cases. I wouldn't -- I don't remember a specific conversation.

Mr. Gaetz. So I want to just drill down on that. Can you list for me every Bureau employee for which you were involved in a performance review where DVE cases were discussed?

Ms. Sanborn. Well, it would probably -- two things on that. It would probably just be those two people that I mentioned, so the DAD and the section chief, because of the way the review cycle works. You review it just two levels below you. I do not remember specifically talking about DVE cases in that. But it's possible that when we talked about the performance review that would come up.

It would be uncommon for that to be part of the process, right? The process would probably be at a higher level about their overall performance, right? Are they collaborative, are they managing their budget, those kinds of things, not the granular level of talking about cases. Maybe a specific case, but not case numbers.

Mr. Gaetz. You discussed in the reclassification process that there would be a basis for the reclassification that would be documented.

Ms. Sanborn. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. Who would typically draft those documents?

Ms. Sanborn. It should be -- and, again, please make sure that this is still true with the FBI, but it should be the case agent. And then that's approved by the supervisor.

I would imagine, in DT cases, because of the requirement when you open them for the chief division counsel to also be included in that process, that if you change a classification I would imagine that the chief division counsel also gets involved in that process. But I'm not positive, just because I've never -- I was not a supervisor of a DT squad ever, and so I don't have firsthand knowledge of that.

Mr. Gaetz. So you were never involved in the approval or review of the document that established a basis for a reclassification to DVE?

Ms. Sanborn. Correct. The important part of that is on DT cases.

Mr. Gaetz. How many times did you participate in any decision to reclassify a case to a DVE case?

Ms. Sanborn. I do not remember a conversation ever about reclassifying a DVE case.

Mr. Gaetz. Or a case to DVE?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Gaetz. You talked about resourcing based on acuity, not volume, earlier -- and that's my word, not yours -- but that, you know, your experience showed that when you simply resource based on volume, that can ignore very serious matters.

Is that a fair way to characterize your testimony?

Ms. Sanborn. I would say yes. I think that how you assign resources, the way that I view it is the resources should be assigned commensurate with the threat and probably the complexity of the case.

So, for example, bank robbers are something that the Bureau works. Working a bank robbery case is different than working an international terrorism case with a FISA. A bank robbery case agent can probably have 20 bank robberies and that caseload be okay. An international terrorism agent with a FISA wouldn't have 20 cases assigned to them. That would be a volume that they couldn't handle.

And so you're assigning resources based on the severity of the threat, but also taking into account the nature of the case and what it might need. Does that make sense?

Mr. Gaetz. Is there an example you can share where a DVE case would meet that criteria, where there wouldn't be sufficient volume but there'd be such acuity that you had to make a resourcing decision based on it?

Mr. Burwell. That you can remember.

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah, not that I can remember.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Well, that seems like a good stopping point.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We are back on the record. It is 11:28 in the morning.

I am [redacted] I'm the Democrats' chief oversight counsel. I'm going to actually turn it over to Congressman Cicilline, who is here, to begin our round of questioning.

Mr. Cicilline. Thank you.

Good morning. It's a great honor to meet you.

Ms. Sanborn, I had the chance to review the biography of you that's posted on the National Security Institute website. Are you familiar with this biography?

Ms. Sanborn. Yes, I am.

Mr. Cicilline. And did you write the biography yourself?

Ms. Sanborn. Probably not by myself. I believe people inside the organization before I retired from the FBI probably helped me write the original one, and then I've continued to update it.

Mr. Cicilline. And did you approve it before it was posted?

Ms. Sanborn. Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Cicilline. And is it a fair representation of your professional background?

Ms. Sanborn. I believe so.

Mr. Cicilline. Thank you.

And I would like this marked and introduced as an exhibit into the record.

[redacted] I believe we're on exhibit 3.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Cicilline. I'm particularly impressed by the note in here that you were the first woman promoted to the position of executive assistant director of the National Security Branch. Is it true that you were the first woman that was promoted to that position?

Ms. Sanborn. Can you tell me where you're at? It should say first woman to the assistant director position.

Mr. Cicilline. Yes.

Ms. Sanborn. Sorry. Not EAD, but assistant director.

Mr. Cicilline. Correct.

Ms. Sanborn. Correct.

Mr. Cicilline. And who selected you for this position?

Ms. Sanborn. I think it was probably a combination of Director Wray and the deputy director.

Mr. Cicilline. And do you know what the criteria was for that position?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Cicilline. What are the responsibilities of the executive assistant director of the National Security Branch?

Ms. Sanborn. So the executive assistant director over all national security oversees the Counterterrorism Division, Counterterrorism Division -- counterterrorism, counterintelligence, weapons of mass destruction, and Terrorist Screening Center.

Mr. Cicilline. I also understand that you received a number of awards during your time with the Bureau. Is that correct?

Ms. Sanborn. That is correct.

Mr. Cicilline. And how many awards did you receive, if you know?

Ms. Sanborn. Definitely remember four, potentially five of them.

Mr. Cicilline. And would you describe those awards?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah. I believe one was when I was a case agent. Back then, we used to call them quality step increases, QSI.

One was an award from the Department of Energy -- I mean Department of Defense, SOCOM specifically.

One was a CIA award for my efforts on international terrorism.

One was an award from the DNI for my efforts on FISA 702 reauthorization.

And then the last one was the Presidential Meritorious Rank Award.

Mr. Cicilline. So, just to be clear, one of the awards you received was a Joint Civilian Service Award for your work in Iraq during the early 2000s?

Ms. Sanborn. Yes, sir.

Mr. Cicilline. And then you received another award, the George H.W. Bush Award, for your work when you were detailed to the CIA in 2010?

Ms. Sanborn. That's correct.

Mr. Cicilline. And then you received the National Intelligence Award from the Director of National Intelligence in 2018?

Ms. Sanborn. Correct.

Mr. Cicilline. And a Presidential Rank Award for your work as assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division?

Ms. Sanborn. The Presidential Rank Award is supposed to be for the whole time you served as a Senior Executive Service. So, yes, it included my assistant director time, but it would've also included my section chief and my SAC time.

Mr. Cicilline. These are obviously very impressive awards, but I want to particularly note the Presidential Rank Award, because, according to 5 CFR 451, these awards are reserved for the top 1 to 5 percent of Senior Executive Service career employees across the Federal Government.

And with respect to that award, who selected you for that award?

Ms. Sanborn. I'm not sure I know the actual selection process. I know that my leadership nominated me for it. I believe the selection actually gets approved by the Department of Justice, and then, hence the name, I think it goes to the President. But I'm not positive.

Mr. Cicilline. And that selection was made during the administration of former President Donald Trump. Is that correct?

Ms. Sanborn. Correct. I was notified in the first part of 2021 that I had been nominated. So I had -- most of my service, as I mentioned, was when I was section chief, SAC, and 2020, AD.

Mr. Cicilline. And do you remember who told you that you were selected for this award?

Ms. Sanborn. Probably the deputy director, probably Mr. Abbate.

Mr. Cicilline. And do you remember the explanation he provided as to why you were selected?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that he said anything specifically.

Mr. Cicilline. Do you have with you a commendation document that might refresh your memory as to what he said as to the reason you were selected for this award?

Ms. Sanborn. My attorney does. It's a long write-up.

Mr. Cicilline. Does that refresh your memory as to why you were selected?

Ms. Sanborn. Yes, sir.

Mr. Cicilline. And why were you selected?

Ms. Sanborn. For a variety of things: serving as a section chief in the Counterterrorism Division; serving as a special agent in charge in Minneapolis Field Office; returning to CTD as the assistant director; and being promoted as the executive assistant director of national security. And then it goes on to talk about various aspects of those assignments.

Mr. Cicilline. Thank you.

And I'd just like to conclude by thanking you for your service to our country. It's very clear to me that you've led an exemplary, distinguished career. And I think there's no question that our Nation is substantially safer because of your extensive work fighting terrorism, both here and around the world, and we're grateful for that.

Ms. Sanborn. Thank you.

Mr. Cicilline. And I'll yield to the attorneys the balance of our time.

[redacted] Thank you.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Ms. Sanborn, I want to just go back to a couple things that came up in the earlier conversation, and then I have some additional questions about your background.

But you mentioned, in the discussion of the process for opening cases, you said that you had not been involved in this in many years. I just want to get some clarity. How long, about, do you think it's been since you were involved in that?

A So case openings would've been when I was a squad supervisor. I definitely could get you the exact date, but I believe that was 2012 through 2015, so about 2-1/2 years.

Q Okay. So 7 or 8 years since you would've been involved in that?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

You said that the division chief may have input in a case opening, for example, to ensure that the FBI is not opening cases based on First Amendment-protected activity.

Can you elaborate a little bit on that? Why is that an important thing for them to be mindful of?

A Yeah. So I would say a couple things before I answer that, is, I was never a supervisor over domestic violent extremism cases, so my knowledge of it is definitely removed --

Q Understood.

A -- and based on, you know, written policies and procedures primarily.

I think that the intent behind having the CDC involved, chief division counsel, in a field office -- again, this is all happening in a field office -- is to be very mindful that we don't open cases based on First Amendment-protected speech.

Q And why is it important to protect that speech?

A Yeah. I mean, the FBI has a two-part mission: to protect the American people and to uphold the Constitution. And I think I have said this numerous times in my testimonies: Not one is more important than the other. And no matter how repulsive somebody's beliefs might be, it's our job in the FBI, when I served there, to protect an individual's right to believe what they want to believe, coalesce around their belief, talk about their belief. That's their right, and it's our right to protect it.

Q Thank you for that.

On the question about reclassification, you said that it happens a handful of times, I believe, and that it's dictated -- classification should be dictated by where the investigation leads you.

Can you explain a little bit more what you mean by that and why that's important?

A Yeah. I think, you know, again, I'll probably talk a little bit in sort of a hypothetical, because I haven't been involved in such a long time in the actual hands-on experience.

Q Uh-huh.

A But I would envision you open a case based on an initial set of allegations. The case agents out collecting information, you may find evidence or information as you're collecting on that case that then says, oh, this person isn't actually this threat; they're this threat.

So you probably heard myself and the Director talk a lot about a blending of threats, like, that somebody might at first look like they have an ideology associated with the Boogaloo Boys, and then, as you get into it, you might actually find that they're doing something to support something else, right, like an international terrorist organization or something.

So, as you uncover the facts of a case, it could then warrant the change in a case classification.

Q And why would it be important to classify it correctly?

A So, the case classifications help us understand at least a volume, right? Like, to my point that I made earlier, in and of themselves, by themselves, are kind of somewhat meaningless because they're allegations, but they help you understand a volume of issues that you have at any given time.

And I think it's important, as you're trying to divide up the different threats that we have on our plate, that you're able to divide them correctly, right? You can classify -- use al-Qaida and ISIS, for example. Like, I'm much more familiar with the international terrorism. It's very important to know if the actor is aligning with al-Qaida or ISIS. And so that case classification tells us what is at the root of that case.

Q Thank you.

On the TRP process, you mentioned that -- you referred to the lessons learned from 9/11 and that one of those lessons was not to prioritize based on the number of cases.

Can you explain what you mean by the "lessons learned from 9/11"?

A Well, I learned a lot of lessons from 9/11. And I think I said this earlier: Me, personally, two of the ones that sort of reflect. And probably the most important is to be an intelligence-driven entity and to really look holistically at each individual threat so that we understand the severity of it.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then the other is, because of that, case numbers, again, as allegations only, are only one indication or one factor of that process.

Q And you said that the process is rooted in intelligence, I believe; is that right?

A Correct.

Q Can you explain what you mean by that?

A So I'm trying to think of the best way to explain it. And, again, this is a very complicated process, and I hope that FBI sits down with you --

Q Understood.

A -- and walks you guys through how this is done.

But, as you're talking about a threat, you know, at a very high level, you're thinking about, what is the impact of the threat, and what do we need to mitigate it?

And so asking yourself those kinds of conversations bring in, maybe, intelligence products written by State and local partners, intelligence products written by the United States intelligence community. So it's not just evaluating what we in the Bureau are collecting in our cases but taking a wider view and considering all intelligence on a specific threat.

Q Thank you.

I want to switch gears a little bit here. I want to take you back a little while and talk about how we got here.

So when did you join the FBI?

A 1998.

Q And why? Why did you choose to join the FBI?

A I started out at Los Alamos. I spent 5 years at Los Alamos National Laboratory investigating whistleblower allegations, and so, very familiar. And part of the reason I'm here today is I appreciate and respect and think it's a very important aspect of what we need to have.

So, in that process, a lot of my cases that I worked at Los Alamos National Laboratory I worked closely with the Department of Energy inspector general. And an agent that I worked closely with encouraged me to apply to the FBI as, you know, something I might want to do in the future.

That, combined with the fact that I was fortunate enough when I was 16 years old to come here to the D.C. area and be a congressional page. And so I already knew at a very young age that I wanted to be doing something in public service because of my time here serving Congress. Then add in the encouragement and what I had done at Los Alamos, and chose to apply to the FBI.

Q And can you walk me through your early career experience? You were assigned in Phoenix; is that right?

A Correct, the Phoenix office. In '98, I worked a variety of cases as a new agent, everything from bank fraud to computer intrusions to public corruption.

I had volunteered to go to the international terrorism squad and was actually supposed to report on September 17th of 2001, I believe, but, because of the events of September 11th, reported, obviously, days early.

Q And where were you -- after you reported to the -- I'm sorry, the --

A Phoenix.

Q -- the Phoenix counterterrorism squad, where were you based after that?

A So, primarily, I was based in Phoenix, the metropolitan area, and from 2001 until 2006, I worked international terrorism cases there.

Q Okay. And can you describe broadly your duties in that role?

A Yeah. So, I mean, back then, a large portion of my time, at least in the first early years of my assignment on that squad, was still focused on the attacks of 9/11.

Q Uh-huh.

A Phoenix had very significant connections to the 9/11 hijackers, and so we had a lot of cases that we looked at as a result of that. So a lot of that was spent on investigating allegations of individuals who might be supporting al-Qaida and their intent to harm the United States.

Q And how long were you in that assignment?

A 2001 until 2006.

Q And what happened in 2006?

A In 2006, I came here to D.C. to be a part of the Counterterrorism Division's Fly Team.

While I was in the Phoenix office, I went on temporary assignment to London. And as I was headed back to my job in the Phoenix office, I realized that an important aspect for me professionally, developmental, and to really understand the international terrorism threat, going overseas and being a part of, you know, really learning that would be helpful to my career and my value to the organization to tackle the threat of international terrorism even better.

And I thought the Fly Team was a great way for me to not work terrorism only from the United States but really have a much more holistic view by seeing what's happening overseas and how that is then impacting the threat here in the United States.

Q Thank you.

What's the training process like for the Fly Team, or what was it when you went through the process?

A Yeah, I don't remember specifically, but there's an application -- if I remember correctly for me, there was an application process, and then you get picked to come and try out, and then there's a tryout.

Q And is that a physical tryout? What does that entail?

A Various different things, if I remember correctly. Probably testing how we do under stress and pressure and how we would do overseas. I don't remember specifically.

Q Were you deployed anywhere when you were on the Fly Team?

A Yes. I deployed to London, Iraq, Kenya, Yemen, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia. I think that's it.

Q And when you were deployed to these locations, what were your responsibilities?

A So I worked really closely with the Department of Defense and the CIA [redacted] And, really, the goal of --

Mr. Burwell. Sorry. I just want to be careful that we're --

Ms. Sanborn. I won't go into any classified information.

BY [redacted]

Q Just broadly. Just broadly.

A Yes. Working closely with interagency partners [redacted] knowing that what we went through in 9/11 emanated from overseas, and so trying to work with those entities in those overseas environments to maybe get early indicators and warnings of things that might be potentially putting America in harm's way.

Q And did you receive any awards from your time with the Fly Team?

A Yes. I received the Department of Defense award from SOCOM on the Fly Team. And part of my CIA award would've been for my time on the Fly Team because of my deployments, and then was detailed to the CIA.

Q Thank you. And when were you detailed to the CIA?

A I believe 2010 through 2012.

Q Okay. And can you tell us anything about how, again, without getting into national security information --

A Yeah.

Q -- how you ended up being detailed there?

A Asked to put in for it, I believe, from leadership. And, again, because of my Fly Team assignments, already sort of embedded in those interagency assignments, I think people mentioned that a detailee assignment over there was open, and I was interested.

So I think a combination of encouragement from my leaders as well as my interest in an opening.

Q Okay.

And, broadly speaking, can you describe what your duties were with the CIA?

A Yeah. The official title I think I had, at one point, was deputy director of law enforcement to the CIA's Counterterrorism Mission Center, and so really acting in a liaison capacity, again, learning some of the lessons from 9/11, which is making sure we're sharing information back and forth --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- so that we are as agile and able to protect, you know, imminent threats from happening. And so most of the duties would've been the sharing of that information and making sure that we each had what we needed to do to protect the United States.

Q And I think you alluded to this earlier, but did you receive any awards during your time at the CIA?

A Yes. I received the George H.W. Bush Award.

Q And are you aware of the criteria for that award?

A I am not aware for the specific criteria, but I was told upon receiving the award that I was one of the first non-CIA employees. I think it's an award typically awarded to members that are employed, you know, actual CIA employees and that I was one of the first non-CIA employees.

Q And did you receive a write-up or anything like that, to your knowledge?

A I think I do have a write-up that came with a medal at my house. I don't remember what it says specifically. Sorry.

Q And you said that you were with the CIA until 2012?

A 2012.

Q And what happened after that?

A Then I went to be a unit chief, where I was in charge of all of overseas international terrorism cases for all of southeast Asia, so the Philippines, Afghanistan, Pakistan.

Q Okay. And what does it mean to be a unit chief? What does it mean to be in charge of those cases?

A Yeah. So a unit chief has a unit under them where the supervisors and analysts assigned have program management oversight over field office cases.

Q Uh-huh. And what type, broadly speaking, of investigations would your teams be responsible for, or the teams that you oversaw?

A Yeah. So, when I was a unit chief, it all, again, was international terrorism cases -- overseas international terrorism cases. So the subject of those cases would have been located overseas.

Q And you referred to southeast Asia. What's the extent of southeast Asia? I'm not familiar with the FBI's geographic --

A Yeah. I don't remember specifically all the different countries, but it would've included, like I said, Malaysia, the Philippines, Afghanistan, Pakistan.

Q Thank you. And how long were you there?

A Probably right around 2 years, if I remember.

Q Do you have any estimate of maybe how many cases you would've handled in that time or your teams would've handled?

A No.

Q Where did you move next?

A From unit chief, I went to be a supervisor at Washington Field Office.

Q And were you a supervisory special agent?

A I was.

Q What does that mean?

A So it's the first level of supervisor in a field office, and I would've supervised a squad with agents on it.

Q And how many agents would have been on that squad?

A It was probably right around seven or so. And it was a squad in charge of all international terrorism cases for Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Q And can you broadly describe your duties as the supervisor of that squad?

A Yeah. So, in general, assisting the case agents with their investigation on particular cases. I would've been responsible for case openings. I would've been -- signing them, approving them.

I would've been responsible for approving, you know, an interview that they did. I would've signed that into the file. So, similar to introducing documents for the record, they would submit things for submission to their case, and I would approve off their work.

Q And how long were you with the Washington Field Office?

A I think it was just slightly over 2 years.

Q Until about?

A 2015 was when I went to -- got promoted from there to Los Angeles.

Q Are you from Los Angeles?

A No.

Q So can you describe how you ended up being assigned to Los Angeles?

A Yeah. So, for me, how I did my promotions is I would see a job opening in, you know, sort of the job database and apply for it. So I saw an assistant special agent opening and applied for it and went through an interview process with the leadership of that field office and got selected.

Q Are you familiar with the criteria for that promotion?

A It changes. I don't remember specifically.

Q What were your responsibilities when you were the assistant special agent in charge?

A So I was the assistant special agent in charge of terrorism. So Los Angeles has their field office broken up by criminal, admin, intel, terrorism. So I was the assistant special agent in charge of terrorism in Orange County, California. So I was responsible for all terrorism cases in Orange County and the Inland Empire, so Santa Ana --

Q Was San Bernardino part of your territory?

A Yeah. So I had been assistant special agent just for a couple of months when the attack on San Bernardino happened.

Q And that was the attack on December 2, 2015, at the Inland Regional Center?

A Yes.

Q And did the investigation into that attack fall under your purview?

A Yes.

Q Can you speak broadly about your role in that?

A So I was the assistant special agent in charge, and so I had squads under me and agents under me that worked that specific attack case.

Q And what would your role have been then?

A I mean, really, it's an oversight role.

Q Uh-huh.

A You know, the agents and the supervisor of the squad have the day-to-day responsibility of the investigative work and approving it and putting it in the file. I think I viewed my role, again, as oversight over what they were doing, making sure they had the resources they needed.

Q And after you were in Los Angeles, were you promoted again after that?

A Yes.

Q To what position were you promoted?

A From there, I was promoted to section chief in the Counterterrorism Division, which oversaw all international terrorism cases overseas. So, again, still international terrorism, and back to being focused on the subjects being located overseas.

Q And where was that located?

A Here in the D.C. area.

Q Just so that we can get a sense of the responsibilities, again, that you handled, could you describe the Counterterrorism Division generally? How many branches does it have?

A Again, great question for the FBI. I think it's got, you know, intelligence operations and support type --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- is how it's broken up. And I would've been in the operations side and just one section under that side.

Q And what were your responsibilities?

A So my responsibilities, again, as section chief were overseeing all international terrorism cases overseas.

Q Okay. And did you receive any awards from your time there?

A So I received an award during my time as section chief but not for the traditional --

Q Okay.

A -- day-to-day assignments of a section chief. I received an award from the DNI for my participation on an interagency team that worked to educate and get FISA 702 reauthorized.

Q And who's the DN -- who -- can you explain just what "DNI" stands for?

A Oh, Director of National Intelligence, and I don't remember who it was at the time.

Q And how long were you there?

A Section chief, not quite 2 years.

Q Okay. And were you promoted again at the end of that?

A Yeah. So, at the end of my section chief time, I put in for -- again, my promotion has always been, until EAD, a job opening and I apply for it. I saw an opening for SAC Minneapolis, and I put in for that.

Q And why Minneapolis? Was it just there was a position open?

A I grew up in Montana, so I knew I would like the area. Minneapolis has a great reputation for being a good office, good casework.

Q Okay. And what were your responsibilities as head of that field office?

A So, as SAC, I was over the whole office, and the office covers all of Minnesota, all of North Dakota, and all of South Dakota. And, again, like I said, a wide variety of criminal violations in that specific spot. One of the ones of which I hadn't ever been exposed to is they do a lot of Indian Country work.

Q Uh-huh. Would you also have international terrorism --

A Yes. All programs.

Q And domestic terrorism as well?

A Correct.

Q And, in 2020, you were promoted to be the assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division. Is that right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Who selected you for that promotion?

A So, again, I applied for it, and I was interviewed by the EAD at the time. And then I believe -- I don't think any other interviews. And then that goes before a board, and the board picks you.

Q And do you know what the criteria are for that promotion?

A No.

Q And I think we went through kind of broadly your responsibilities in that earlier. I do want to ask, do you know about how many individuals would have reported up to you at this time?

A As an assistant director?

Q Uh-huh.

A I think it depends on what you mean by "report." Direct?

Q Direct report, direct report.

A So I would've had three DADs, and then I had an executive staff.

Q Okay. And can you talk broadly about the type of cases that would've come through that division at that time?

A All terrorism cases. So international terrorism cases overseas, international terrorism cases here in the United States, domestic terrorism cases.

Q And during that time, is that when you received the Presidential Rank Award?

A Correct.

Q Was the -- did you receive --

A Well, nominated for it.

Q I'm sorry, nominated. Did you receive the Distinguished Senior Professional Award or the Meritorious Senior Professional Award?

A Meritorious.

Q And am I -- I think Congressman Cicilline quoted this earlier, but 5 CFR, part 451, says that Meritorious Senior Professional Awards are limited to 5 percent of the total number of appointees.

Does that sound about right to you?

A That's what I've read, yes.

Q Okay. So it's fair to say that you were recognized as one of the top 5 percent of senior-level employees across the country?

A Yes.

Q In 2021, you were promoted to executive assistant director of the National Security Branch?

A Correct.

Q Who selected you for that promotion?

A Definitely the Director, but I'm sure it was a combination of the deputy and maybe even the former EAD recommending me.

Q How does the EAD position fit into the broader structure of the FBI? Or, at least, how did it at your time there?

A I think that's a great question for the FBI, but there's a handful of EADs that have certain responsibilities --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and those EADs report directly to the deputy director. And so, for me, what I was over was counterterrorism, counterintelligence, weapons of mass destruction, and the Counterterrorism Center.

Q Okay.

A Terrorist Screening Center.

Q So, sorry, just to make --

A Terrorist Screening Center.

Q The Counterterrorism Division --

A Counterintelligence.

Q -- counterintelligence, Weapons of Mass Destruction --

A Directorate.

Q -- Directorate, and the interagency Terrorist Screening --

A Terrorist Screening Center.

Q If you know, what's, about, the total volume of the staff for those divisions?

A Probably around 3,000 for all of them combined, I would guess. But, again, I know the FBI could give you a much more accurate number.

Q Did you oversee the Joint Terrorism Task Forces?

A They would've definitely been a part of the Counterterrorism Division, correct.

Q And do you know how many Joint Terrorism Task Forces there are under the NSB's purview?

A So every single field office has one, and some field offices have more than one. So, for example, in California, there are several JTTFs.

Q Uh-huh.

A So I don't remember the specific number.

Q Okay.

When did you retire from the FBI?

A April of 2022.

Q And can you talk broadly about the circumstances surrounding your retirement?

A Sure. In May of 2021, my mom got in a rollover car accident -- sorry -- and my dad had dementia, and so I retired to take care of my parents.

Q Thank you. I'm sorry. I'm sorry to hear that.

I just want to step back to just summing up the career, the long process we just talked through.

Mr. Burwell. Do you need to take a break?

BY [redacted]

Q Do you want to take a break? Do you want to take a minute?

A No.

Q So we went through your time starting in 1998 in Phoenix all the way through your time in Iraq with the FBI. By my count, it looks like you were promoted at least eight times in your career. Does that sound about right to you?

A Supervisor -- well, I was supervisor on the Fly Team. So not only did I serve the Fly Team, but I was also a supervisor on the Fly Team. So a supervisor on the Fly Team, unit chief, field supervisor, assistant special agent, section chief, SAC, AD, EAD. Eight.

Q And you received about four awards, maybe five?

A Correct. The first award I think that we talked about, the Department of Defense SOCOM award, probably was not when I was in a supervisory role. It was probably for my time as a case agent on the Fly Team.

Q Understood. Understood.

We have a November 29, 2022, letter from Carter Burwell to then-Ranking Member Jordan. Are you familiar with that letter?

A Yes.

Q I'm going to introduce this as exhibit 4.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And who is Carter Burwell?

A My attorney.

Q In the third paragraph, I believe, of this, it states that you spent over two decades serving our country on the front line of the war on terror and oversaw both foreign and domestic national security investigations, which disrupted countless terrorist plots and attacks.

Do you agree with this statement?

A Yes.

Q Do you want to elaborate? Is there anything further you'd like to say about that?

A No.

Q Are you proud of your time at the FBI?

A Yes.

Q During your 23-plus years with the FBI, were you ever subjected to any disciplinary actions?

A Not that I can remember at all, no.

Q And was there ever any substantiated allegation of misconduct against you?

A No.

Q Okay.

This letter also states, in the second-to-last paragraph, that you are known for emphasizing that the nature of the national security threat landscape, rather than the quantity of the individual or ongoing investigations, should guide the FBI's strategic focus and operational resources.

Do you agree with this statement?

A Yes.

Q Could you explain what "the nature of the national security threat landscape" means?

A So, for me, when I say that, it's sort of the complexity of all the different threats that we face and the severity of each one of those. So, as we evaluate the different threats facing us and how severe those threats are.

Q And what do you mean by the nature -- or what does it mean that the nature of this threat landscape should guide the FBI's strategic focus and operational resources?

A I think I've talked a little bit about this earlier, but that how you view each threat is complex and involves numerous different aspects of the threat, right? Like, a lethal threat, the impact of getting that wrong is significant.

And so, as you think about the nature of each threat, asking yourself, like, what's the impact of getting the threat wrong and what do we need to do to mitigate it is different for each threat that you talk about.

Q And when you say "the impact of getting it wrong," what are the type of factors that you might take into account when you're evaluating that?

A Yeah. This is a very, very complex process. And so, you know, as I mentioned earlier, I think it would be great and hopefully the FBI will walk you through this, because, for me, it's something that I'm proud of, feeling like I was a part of the Bureau adopting this process through my time in my different roles.

But there are various things that you -- questions that you ask about each threat. And, again, I think lethality is the most easy for me to kind of describe to you. Like, if we don't prevent this threat, is there going to be significant harm, is there going to be loss of life, those kinds of questions. And you get an answer to that as you're going through the process.

And then you're also asking yourself, do we have the tools to mitigate it, right? Do we have good liaison relationship with the State and local partners where we would get alerted to this potential threat? Do we have sources that collect and advise on this threat? Do we have other partners that collect on this threat that write intelligence products that we're reading?

Q Uh-huh.

A You ask yourself those kinds of questions. And you either feel like, I have a good understanding of this threat or, boy, I'm really dark here, right? There's somewhere on the scale that that comes out. And then those types of questions then help rank each threat.

Q And when you say "rank each threat," would that play a role in, for example, how resources would be devoted to it?

A Yes.

Q And what do we mean by "resources"? Is that human personnel? Is that money? What does that mean?

A Definitely human personnel. I don't know specifically -- I'd defer you to the Bureau -- like, if money gets divvied up based on the TRP process, I don't know. But it's an effort to focus resources and attention.

Q Okay.

And could it be the case, then, that there may be, you know, 50 cases -- I think you referred to a bank robbery earlier -- that one agent could handle, but then, you know, something that may present a greater lethality threat, for example, might be one case but could demand a greater number of operational resources?

A Yeah. Again, it's a very complex process and very detailed, and slightly frustrating to not have FBI here to be able to maybe help answer that. But, yes, it's a way to focus your resources and your attention on what is believed to be the gravest, most urgent threats that we, the American people, face.

Q And, again, looking at this November 29th letter from Carter Burwell, it states that "the notion that Ms. Sanborn pressured subordinates to manipulate case numbers flies in the face of her well-known skepticism of focusing on that metric."

Do you agree with this statement?

A Yes.

Q "That metric" refers to case numbers?

A Correct.

Q Can you explain why you're skeptical of using case numbers as a metric?

A Yeah. I think I explained this earlier. And, again, it's complicated. But, for me, case numbers are allegations until proven guilty. And so it doesn't adequately describe the severity of the threat, because allegations can be false, right? We do close cases, we close investigations because there's no evidence to prove the allegation.

And so it has never seemed to me like an appropriate way to, by itself, be a gauge for anything. It informs decisions based, you know, on volume, whether you put more resources toward that. It's definitely part of the conversation, right? If you're seeing an increasing number of allegations in an area, that could be indicative of a growing threat.

Q Uh-huh.

A So it informs the threat, sort of, process. But if you look at it by yourself, you're not doing the threat justice. You're only considering a very myopic part of the threat.

Q And you referenced earlier and again just now the need to close cases, potentially, I guess, if there's no "there" there, if the investigation comes to nothing. Can you explain why that's important?

A I mean, I think that we should be -- when we get an allegation of somebody breaking Federal law or about ready to do something to harm the United States, we should be collecting to prove that one way or the other. And if you're not finding information-slash-evidence that supports that allegation, you should close it.

Q So, from your perspective as a former supervisor and former AD and former EAD, if there is no "there" there and if there is no threat, it is important to close that case.

A Correct.

Q And so, if there is a "there" there, presumably you would --

A I mean, there's --

Q -- pursue that?

A -- lots of cases that warrant being open for a really long time because we're still collecting and we're still trying to get to the bottom of it. Like, I just recently read about progress in Pan Am 103, which was one of my cases, right? Like, there's a reason that case stayed open and you keep working it.

But if you're not gathering and going towards, "Yes, we're getting evidence," it should be closed.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

It is 12:08. We don't have any more affirmative questions right now, so I'm happy to turn it over or take a break.

[redacted] Yeah, we can go off the record.

[Recess.]

Mr. Gaetz. We'll go back on the record.

I'm going to begin asking you a few questions before my colleague takes the reins.

You mentioned the Statute 2331 that helped make these determinations about DVE cases. And I want to understand, practically, how that statute was applied during your time as AD.

When you talk about acts dangerous to human life, how would you assess when someone's online activity reached that threshold?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah, I think that this is -- again, I really appreciate your interest in wanting to get to the bottom of this. I feel a little bit like I'm not the best witness for you on this for a couple reasons. I've never been responsible for case openings on DVE threat -- on DVE cases. And, as an AD, I wouldn't have been involved in that process.

And so I feel a little like it's hard to separate me from the FBI in some of this. And so I'm trying to give some --

Mr. Gaetz. But you participated in file reviews on --

Ms. Sanborn. No. So I only participated in file reviews on international terrorism cases. So sorry about if I misunder --

Mr. Gaetz. No problem. I appreciate the answer.

Were you aware of any structural changes at the Bureau that aligned some of those terrorism cases that were foreign-directed to more domestic-directed, in terms of changes of personnel or departments or anything of the like?

Ms. Sanborn. So there definitely -- so, like, for example, as AD, I only control the people in my division. And so I think you and I discussed earlier, I felt obligated to give the agents working overseeing the domestic terrorism cases more people, and so asked my deputy assistant directors to temporarily assign people over to help them. And so there was sort of a temporary assignment, while I was AD, of people to help them work those cases.

Mr. Gaetz. So, as a resource allocation matter, there were circumstances where people who had been working on foreign terrorism cases were reassigned to look at domestic terrorism cases.

Ms. Sanborn. Temporarily. So I think the important -- and it's a really important nuance, and I would ask you guys to definitely follow up with FBI on this -- not completely reallocating them, right? That's a very complicated process that, because of budgetary this and that, probably has specific things you have to do. But they were temporarily assigned over there to help them.

And I'll give you a good example. When I was the ASAC over San Bernardino, temporarily every single squad in my purview worked that attack. And so, for a temporary period, I surged resources to help on the San Bernardino case, very similar to what happened under me as AD. For a temporary period, I surged resources over to help the domestic terrorism agents work cases.

Q Was there any circumstance in which that shift from foreign terrorism to domestic terrorism was permanent for anyone?

A I think that they definitely went through a process of trying to -- for example, reviewing whether or not they needed as many agents as they needed in all of the Terrorism Section and could some of them get permanently reassigned.

I don't know that, quote/unquote, that "whole process" took place before I retired from the FBI, but there definitely was a discussion about, can we look into potentially reallocating on a more permanent basis? Because what they found was, this come-and-go and come-and-go was not good continuity for the case, if that makes sense.

Mr. Gaetz. And when did that discussion occur?

Ms. Sanborn. I don't remember specifically. I think some of it started to occur because of the volume of cases growing in 2020 due to the violence around the country. So I think some of the original, "Hey, we need more people helping us here" started in 2020, and the numbers kept growing, and the need for sort of some relief for them kept being discussed.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you remember who those people were?

Ms. Sanborn. It would've been -- I don't remember specifically, but it definitely would've been my DAD and probably my section chiefs -- DADs, probably all three of them.

Mr. Gaetz. Did it ever trouble you that foreign terrorism assets were being refocused to domestic terrorism?

Ms. Sanborn. I wouldn't necessarily use the word "trouble." I will give you, I think, potentially a concrete example of, I asked for people to consider taking from lower-priority threats to help the domestic terrorism program. But, again, as AD of CT, I only owned my resources, right? And so, rather than let the agents in the DT program not have relief, I did something temporary to help them out.

Mr. Gaetz. What would be an example of one of those lower-priority matters?

Ms. Sanborn. Well, I mean, it could be anything, right? Like, as we talked through that prioritization scale, anything that wasn't in a top, you know, 1 or 2 or 3 banded threat, in my opinion, potentially was a lower threat, less urgent, less imminent, and could have moved over temporarily to help them.

Mr. Gaetz. During your time, did you ever observe changes made in lines of reporting to help focus on domestic terrorism and extremism instead of terrorism abroad?

Ms. Sanborn. Can you better describe for me what you mean by "lines of reporting"?

Mr. Gaetz. Just who people had as their supervisors and how information had to be transmitted pursuant to the chain of command.

Ms. Sanborn. Not specifically. I mean, it's possible that there was a realignment of, like, "Hey, this unit's now going to report to this section chief and up." I don't remember a specific realignment.

I think some of that started to happen before I got there, if I remember correctly. Like, I believe when I entered as AD of CTD, they talked about a reorganization in the division, but that happened before I got there.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever observe circumstances where specific language or expression of political viewpoint or expression of policy goals by someone was designated as a sign of extremism?

Ms. Sanborn. Can you give me, like -- maybe repeat it again.

[12:17 p.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. Sure, sure. Did you ever observe a circumstance where the speech or expression of a political view or expression of policy goals rendered someone extreme or potentially extreme in the eyes of the Bureau?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that I can remember. Again, I think that that process that we described earlier about -- if you're talking about investigations where we talked about the CDC being involved in that, I think that that's part of the reason the CDC is involved in that conversation, if that's what you're talking about.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, did you ever observe a discussion of border policy as an indicator of potential extremism?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever --

Ms. Sanborn. In fact, I don't -- I tried very hard in my testimonies to get this point across, and you bringing up the word "extremism" reminds me of this.

It doesn't matter what the belief is. Period. Right? And it's why I tried very hard to always remind people it's the "v", right, it's the "violence" in that phrase that's important. It doesn't matter the belief because the belief is protected.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever observe in any of these DVE matters someone's expression of supporting President Trump being an indicator of extremism?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Gaetz. How about an embrace of nationalism?

Ms. Sanborn. No. Not me personally, I don't. No.

Mr. Gaetz. How about the phrase "build the wall," was that ever deemed an indicator of extremism?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that -- I don't ever remember that phrase coming up in any conversations with folks with me.

Mr. Gaetz. In your work as AD, were you familiar with a contractor called Mitre, M-i-t-r-e?

Ms. Sanborn. No.

Mr. Burwell. Miter.

Mr. Gaetz. Miter. I'm sorry.

Ms. Sanborn. No, no.

Mr. Gaetz. Someone's familiar with it. It's not you.

Ms. Sanborn. Not me.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Burwell. It's a big kind of contractor, like I said.

Mr. Gaetz. You never did any work with Miter?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that I'm aware of.

Mr. Gaetz. And any of the people that you supervised weren't involved with that contractor?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that I'm aware of. What do they do? I don't even know what they do.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Gaetz. That's what we're trying to figure out.

Those are all the questions I have. I'm going to yield to my colleague.

[redacted] Okay, Ms. Sanborn. Again, my name is [redacted]

Mr. Burwell. Thanks for coming, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q So Director Wray had said that DVE cases are a priority for the FBI. How does that work functionally? Is that discussed on a daily basis?

A So again, definitely, this is what I have been referring to as the TRP process, and it's very complicated. And I hope that FBI sits down with you and walks you through it.

I think that the threat process actually informs the director. So field offices and divisions walking through that very methodical, thoughtful process actually feeds in and informs him. Does that make sense?

So it's sort of an up process, not a down process. We at headquarters do our process first, and so that feeds into the field office's process. But it's the intel analysts and case agents and supervisors working it that sit down and have that conversation and then go through that metric.

Q So with the TRP process, when you have the top one to three banded threats, and DVE was one of those, would they -- would that threat then be discussed by Director Wray at the daily meetings that you used to have?

A He definitely would be advised of the results of the TRP process. And DVE, just to be clear, is not itself a banded threat. There are the categories within it that are banded threats.

Q Okay. And is it fair to say that field agents may from time to time believe certain types or categories of cases ought to be worked as a priority or instead of other types of cases?

A I don't know. I mean, it's been a long time since I've been a case agent in a field office to speak on behalf of their beliefs. So I'm not exactly sure what you mean. So I think I would be remiss.

Q Yeah. So when you were the AD of the Counterterrorism Division, if a case fell outside of the top one to three banded threat issues would agents under that purview, would they kind of perceive other cases as not as high of a priority as the DVE cases?

A I don't know. I could send my husband to you to answer that question because he was a GS-13 agent, and he probably has great views on it. But I don't know.

Q And how do you explain or what is your reaction to how field agents have told us they have felt pressured to work DVE cases?

A Again, like I told you before, two reactions to that. Like if that's happening, it's inappropriate, and it's not me.

Q Uh-huh.

A It's inappropriate, right? Like I mentioned earlier, I think Mr. Rogers said, this is something he wrote recently, leaders in the organization should lead with following rules, upholding the law, and integrity. And that would be not following the rules and not integrity.

Q And during your time at the FBI, did senior leadership, Director Wray or deputy director, did they place an emphasis on DVE cases?

A When you ask that question, I'm not exactly sure what you mean. But the whole reason that you do the threat prioritization process is to focus on the higher priority threats. So I don't know that that means, "emphasis," but that process then focuses the Bureau on what is perceived to be the most important threats.

Q So if DVE or domestic terrorism was one of those top threats, would the director then take -- place an emphasis or place a priority on that?

A I don't think it's him exclusively. The whole organization prioritizes and functions because of that threat review process. So I'm not exactly sure what you mean by emphasis specifically from him. But the whole reason that process occurs is so that the organization as a whole can focus on the higher priority threats.

Again, I think -- and I can't say enough because I'm proud of the process, I think it's a good process, but it's complicated, and, hopefully, they will meet with you and walk you through it.

Q Okay. And in October of 2021, were you the executive assistant director of the National Security Branch?

A Yes.

Q And you were at headquarters?

A So October of 2021 is a blurry a little bit where I was and when I was because of my mom's rollover car accident. So I don't remember specifically where I sat in October because I spent a couple of months on family sick leave, and then I spent a couple of months working remote from Arizona.

Q Are you familiar with Attorney General Garland's October 4th, 2021, school board memorandum?

A Yes.

Q And when did you learn about the Attorney General's memorandum?

A I don't recall specifically. I definitely probably would have been aware of it fairly quickly after it being issued, but I don't recall specifically when I first became aware of the memo.

Q Were you involved in any conversations related to alleged threats or violence at school board meetings?

A So I definitely remember at some point, and again I don't remember where I was or when this was specifically, but I definitely remember one of my assistant directors letting me know that they would be talking or discussing an increase in violence in the next week, and that he would keep me posted kind of email. Like that there had been an increase and they were going to collaborate-slash-discuss.

Q And who was that assistant director?

A Tim Langan.

Q And did Assistant Director Langan come to you before the October 4th memo was issued or after?

A I definitely think that sort of a concern about what they were seeing was an email to me prior to the issuance, if I remember correctly.

Mr. Burwell. And just again to note for the record, you haven't reviewed any --

Ms. Sanborn. Yes, I think that's -- thank you for that. I have not reviewed any documents having to do with the FBI in well over 10 months. So --

Mr. Burwell. Certainly not her emails --

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah.

Mr. Burwell. -- related to October 2021 or anything.

Ms. Sanborn. Correct.

[redacted] And to you recollection, did you direct Assistant Director Langan to do anything based upon him making you aware?

Ms. Sanborn. Not to my recollection.

Chairman Jordan. If I could, Ms. Sanborn, your conversation with Mr. Langan happened prior to the October 4th memorandum?

Ms. Sanborn. It wasn't a conversation, if I remember. And if I could review my emails or eventually look at them I could better answer this.

But I vaguely remember an email mentioning something to the effect of next week we're going to talk about the increase in violence at school board meetings and I'll keep you posted kind of. So him sort of just putting something on my radar kind of notice. And I definitely feel like I remember that happened prior to the memo.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] And do you know who Assistant Director Langan was going to discuss the increase in violence with?

Ms. Sanborn. Not specifically like an individual, but I believe the sense I got from the email was a discussion with the Department of Justice.

[redacted] The Department of Justice? Do you know which branch or division? Just the Department of Justice in general?

Ms. Sanborn. Like I said, if I'm recalling this correctly and there's an email, it's probably in that email, but I don't recall off the top of my head.

Mr. Burwell. Just do you recall whether that was before or after the memo was released?

Ms. Sanborn. If I remember correctly, I believe it was before, but not like months before. Like I feel as I try to remember it like it was shortly before.

[redacted] Just so you know, the assistant director has testified to HPSCI that he discussed the memo and the initiative before the Attorney General promulgated the memo?

Ms. Sanborn. Discussed? Can you better --

[redacted] He testified to HPSCI that the idea of targeting parents at school board meetings was discussed inside of the FBI before Attorney General's Garland's memo was officially released.

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah. Yeah, I think that would be consistent. Like I don't know if discussed. Define discussed. But I definitely feel like he sent an email to me: Hey, I plan to meet with the Department next week on this topic.

BY [redacted]

Q And do you recall any other discussions or correspondence related to violence or threats at school board meetings that occurred prior to October 4th?

A No, no.

Q So then the Attorney General's memo comes out on October 4th. Were there any discussions after the October 4th memorandum that you remember of what actions the FBI could take or the FBI's involvement?

A I don't remember me personally being involved in a discussion about what the Bureau could do or not do. It's possible there were other discussions about what guidance, lack of guidance. But I don't remember myself personally being involved in a conversation.

Q And after Assistant Director Langan's discussion with the Department, did he give you any readout of the meeting or how the discussion went?

A If I remember correctly -- and, again, reviewing my documents would be helpful -- I think the time before the memo coming out was so short that I don't -- I'm not sure that the meeting happened. I think that it could have, the email to me could have been like late at the end of the week, and I think the memo came out in the first part of the following week. So I don't remember whether or not a meeting ever even happened.

Q And do you know if the discussion of how the FBI could become involved or any discussion about the FBI's involvement in school board threats, was that just Assistant Director Langan, or do you know how that started?

A No. I mean, I can't piece like a timeline together for you. I mean, I know I was privy to conversations about the fact that it happened. I remember being in -- hearing retired agents talk about it.

Mr. Burwell. "It" in that sentence is what? Is it the issuance of the memo?

Ms. Sanborn. Yes. I remember current and former employees, and probably more so current because I was married to one, talking about, holy smokes, this memo. Like I think there was a lot of sort of buzz, for lack of a better way, that, hey, this memo came out, were you aware of it? People asking questions about it.

I don't remember ever being a part of like an executive level, me as the EAD, sitting in the conference room, talking with the other EADs and the deputy or the director about the memo and what we should do about it. Does that help?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. And what was your personal reaction when the memorandum came out?

A I don't know that I had a specific personal one.

Q Did you think that threats or violence at school board meetings rose to the level of Federal involvement, Federal law enforcement involvement?

A I don't know that -- again, and I don't mean this as an excuse, I don't know that I was that potentially aware of it. And maybe I would have been more so just because of my situation at the time.

So I had spent a couple months completely removed from the organization on family sick leave with my mom and just kind of transitioning back. And so I don't remember being aware before the memo came out of sort of an increase. But that could be because I was slightly disconnected.

Q And in addition to the release of the memorandum, there was also a press release that the Attorney General put out that talked about the creation of a task force on school board threats that would involve other Department of Justice divisions as well as the FBI. Were you involved in the creation of that task force?

A No.

Q Did you attend any meetings of that task force?

A Not that I remember.

I think my biggest involvement in this whole process was probably answering the question in one of my last testimonies about it. And knowing I was going to get a question about it and researching what I could to appropriately answer that question, I think, me personally, my involvement was probably that was the extent of it, the email from my AD telling me that they might meet on this topic and then me knowing I would get questions on this topic and preparing for the question and trying to research.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember the background of this memo was the Virginia Governor's race?

A No, I didn't remember.

Q And there was -- at the time there was a lot of commotion going on at school board meetings about wearing masks, about Critical Race Theory. Do you remember that time period?

A I do not. And, again, a large portion of 2021 I sat in Phoenix, Arizona. So while I probably would have been reading news and picked up on that had I been here in Virginia at my home, but I was already working remote from Arizona.

Q Okay. And after the memo came out and it caused some -- I mean, it was quite controversial. And the National School Boards Association subsequently had to withdraw it or apologize.

A Uh-huh.

Q What did you do inside of FBI once that letter was withdrawn, if anything?

A I don't remember anything. I mean, there could have been something done, but I don't recall specifically anything being done once withdrawn.

Q I mean, if an initiative was promulgated by the Attorney General to go look for parents at school board meetings and target parents? And did that give you any concern whatsoever that this was a little too much, that it was a misuse of Federal law enforcement resources?

A I feel, I think, the same way that I testified about it in January of 2022, the way I would tell you about it today. I did not feel like it changed the Bureau, how we should do our business. Like there are guidelines of how we should open cases. And as we talked about the DVE cases, they have to meet those criteria. It has to rise to a level to be -- to warrant FBI resources for us to even look at it.

And I feel the same way today about that as I did back then, like, memo or no memo, it didn't change the way the Bureau did our business. We have policies and procedures that need to be followed in case openings, and it wasn't required -- nothing in that was going to make us go outside our policies.

Q Were you aware that FBI agents did, in fact, go visit parents?

A I was not aware of any specific --

Q Okay. We've received reports that parents were visited because of comments they made, they believe they were First Amendment-protected comments, were visited by FBI agents.

A Yeah.

Q I mean, does that concern you?

A I mean, as you heard me say earlier, I viewed -- me, Jill Sanborn, right, I'm here representing myself -- I viewed my role, especially as AD and EAD, because that's when I had the DT program, of protecting First Amendment-protected activity. Like Americans have a right, no matter how repulsive their beliefs, to believe, coalesce, and talk about it. Period.

Q I mean, you're the top official at FBI for the National Security Branch at this point, correct?

A Yes.

Q So if not you, who in FBI would stand up and say, this is going too far?

A I guess, I think, because of what I said in my testimony, I feel was our position. Like we felt like -- I didn't -- I was not aware -- I'm sure I have read in open source since retiring of the incidents that you mentioned about visiting parents.

But I believed that if agents and supervisors and analysts and employees followed our policies and procedures, it didn't matter what the AG put out in a memo, because our policies and procedure would keep us within our guidelines. Like it has to meet that three criteria for it to warrant FBI doing anything with.

Q And do you recall any discussion about whether the Attorney General was going to withdraw his memo?

A No. If there was one, I wasn't involved in it.

Q And was there any discussion about whether the Attorney General ought to withdraw the memo?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q And did you give any guidance to the field that maybe they ought to pump the brakes on this initiative?

A I did not give any guidance to the field.

Q Okay. And why not?

A I don't know that it -- I felt -- again, like I feel like we have policies and procedures. I did not view that the AG's memo -- like I work for the FBI, the director. I feel like we had our policies and procedures, that if agents did the right thing and followed them, the memo was not going to change how we do business.

Q Are you aware of an official named Carlton Peeples?

A Yes.

Q Who is that?

A I think he was a -- I mean, he's an FBI agent. I can't remember a specific position. I think he was assigned to the Criminal Division, probably section chief DAD level, if I remember.

Mr. Burwell. How do you know -- or where -- how do you know this person?

Ms. Sanborn. That's a complicated answer. I mean, I just -- yes, I know of him.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

A I know the name --

Q Was he in your chain of command? Was he in your chain --

A No, absolutely not. He was not in my chain of command.

Q Okay. Because he pushed out an email that was produced to us by a whistleblower about this EDUOFFICIALS threat tag. A threat tag was created in light of the school board initiative in Attorney General Garland's memo.

Are you familiar with the threat tag that was --

A I'm aware of that. I actually talked about it in my testimony in January of 2022.

Q And did you think it was worthwhile to set up that threat tag?

A So I wasn't involved in the decision to do it. Like so hindsight's 20/20. I think what I said in my testimony is what I would say today, which is threat tags do serve a purpose. I don't know that I would have done the same thing. But it's easy for me hindsight to make that decision.

But the threat tag does provide us the ability to give granularity on threats. So, for example, a case classification just tells you IP and DP and it may be a tiny bit more granular. But often we want to know a much more granular level. So, for example, RMVEs, was it advocating for the superiority of the White race? Or was it Blacks feeling like they are being repressed?

Without that threat tag, you can't get to that granular level of information.

Mr. Gaetz. So what was the granular utility of the threat tag that was used as per these school board matters?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah, I think -- again, I appreciate your interest in this, and fair question. Having not been involved in either the memo or the email guidance sending it out, I'm definitely not the best positioned.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you were --

Ms. Sanborn. And I didn't have a conversation about it.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you were a senior official in this space. As you sit here today, are you able to assess any granular utility to that particular tag?

Ms. Sanborn. I don't remember. I think the best way to potentially answer your question is I do not remember anybody coming and briefing me and saying, hey, here's what I'm briefing you on, and knowing that they were able to use the threat tag to give me that briefing. So --

Mr. Gaetz. So do you have any basis to say that the threat tag was useful as you sit here today?

Ms. Sanborn. Not this specific one. Threat tagging in general. Sorry.

Mr. Gaetz. No, I'm talking about -- yeah, I'm talking, yeah, about the questions pertaining to this tag.

Ms. Sanborn. No. No. No, I do not have a -- I don't have a specific recollection of being briefed where I would have went, oh, that threat tag really helped us out here.

In general, threat tags help us get granular breakdowns. But I don't remember ever anybody coming to me and saying, I'm briefing you on this, and me being able to tie that to the benefit of this threat tag. Is that what you're asking?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes. And did you observe any circumstance where other people questioned the utility of that threat tag?

Ms. Sanborn. Not that I remember.

BY [redacted]

Q And, again, if not you, who in the FBI should have caught this, that this maybe was an overreach?

A I mean, I think that's a fair question. But I think -- but, again, I go back to I don't think that the memo or even the email threat tag put us in a position where we would not follow our policies and procedures, like --

Q But agents in the field, I mean, they're overwhelmed with work, correct?

A Some of them.

Q And there's a -- you know, on any given day, there's a set of cases they can pursue, but they have to follow what their chain of command identifies as the priority.

A Yeah.

Q Correct?

A Correct.

Q And when they get a memo from the Attorney General, and they get email pushed out from an assistant director referring to this new initiative, I mean, isn't it fair to say that cases like this are going to take priority over other cases that maybe didn't get that type of attention from the Attorney General and from senior people at the FBI?

A I mean, I don't -- I don't know. I don't know whether the email that you're referring to went to a granular level of the case agent sitting at the desk or if it went to SACs. I don't remember the distribution of the email. But --

Q I mean, it's our understanding it went down to the line agent level?

A Yeah. I guess my feeling is, is still follow our rules, uphold the law, and do it with integrity. So my feeling is, is regardless of the email guidance and/or the memo, that we have policies and procedures in place that would have kept us within our authorities correctly.

And I'm not aware of anybody inappropriately doing anything. I was not personally aware of anybody. And I definitely didn't do anything inappropriate related to it.

Chairman Jordan. [redacted] go ahead.

[redacted] Go ahead.

Chairman Jordan. So -- but we are familiar with in times past where the rules and procedures weren't enough. We have inspector general reports after inspector general reports that demonstrate that following the rules and procedures are not.

And then we have this situation where -- and I respect your position that our rules and procedures are going to govern and prevail here. But then you got a memorandum from the Attorney General of the United States. And then 16 days later you got an email from top people at the FBI going out to field agents across the country with this threat tag designation that is going to be put on parents who had been reported on the very apparatus the Attorney General set up.

And you said that threat tag, to your mind, doesn't distinguish in any way, give you any real help. It's just that threat tag.

So it's not just what happened, it's how quickly in time it took place. It was boom, boom, boom, and here we go. And that is our concern, is isn't that going to send a message to agents that this is a priority for the folks in Washington?

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah. I mean, again, I totally appreciate your looking into this. I think it's valid questions that you have. I don't feel like I have firsthand knowledge to give you, I think, anything to help here, because, again, I wasn't involved in a memo. And the only thing I remember being involved in in the email was that one heads-up they were going to discuss an issue, and then being aware of it after the fact.

I totally appreciate your thoughts here. And, hopefully, nobody did anything improper. I take your point about you've seen people do things improper regardless of the rules. Upsets me too. I think Mike Rogers said the same thing in his piece that he put out this week, that people that break the rules in the organization make those of us that don't equally as upset. So I totally understand all your points.

BY [redacted]

Q Is Mr. Langan, do you think, the official at the FBI best positioned to answer our questions on this topic?

A I definitely would refer you to the FBI. I definitely think people that had more firsthand knowledge of it would. And it sounds from what you have pointed out about Carlton Peeples and him, they definitely have more knowledge than me because they were more involved in it than I.

Q Did this ever come up in your, to the best of your recollection, at the morning meetings that you used to have with Director Wray every day?

A Not that I remember. And, again, some of that I was not dialing in every morning because I was in Arizona. So not that I remember.

Q So you don't ever remember it? You don't have any recollection of this topic ever coming up with the director?

A I definitely remember this topic coming up.

Q Okay.

A I remember being at a retired agent event where he got a question to it. Like I definitely remember this being discussed. I don't remember a discussion in a format that I think you're looking for, which is, did they discuss a strategy or what to do? Like I definitely, me included, answered questions about it and tried to respond to it, but I don't ever remember being a part of a discussion about, okay, now what do we do? Do we need a strategy? Do we need to do something different? I don't personally remember being involved in that.

Q Okay. And in hindsight, do you think there's anything you would have done differently? If you could go back in time, and it's now October or the end of September 2021 when this is brewing, what would you have done differently?

A So I think this is why I wanted to talk informally with you all. Like I think there's a lot things that aren't appropriate for this setting, like a transcribed interview isn't a place for Jill Sanborn's opinions. I'm here because, sir, you asked me to come here and talk about whistleblower allegations against me or against the FBI reclassifying cases writ large. I don't know that this is the best forum for Jill Sanborn's hindsight opinions. I'm sorry.

Q Because we have the top official in this space, the National Security Branch, and you here today, and we're asking about this matter that concerns virtually all of our Republican Members of Congress. And we're just going back and we're trying to find out what could have been done differently so this can be prevented in the future. I think asking you what could we do differently is an entirely appropriate question given your experience, given your knowledge of the responsibilities that you had as the EAD.

A Yeah. I don't disagree with you. I think the forum makes me uncomfortable. Like I don't disagree with you that maybe Jill Sanborn someday wants to be a part of solutions, but I don't feel like this setting is the setting for that.

I think I've said on the record in my testimony how I feel about after actions. Like I've never met an after action that I didn't learn something from. I forced my squad to do an after action out of San Bernardino. Everybody thought we ran the San Bernardino case great. But guess what? We learned things that we could have done better. And I told Senator Klobuchar the same thing after the Capitol investigation.

So I'm a big believer in after actions. This makes me uncomfortable for you to ask me in this setting is why I advocated for a more informal conversation, because maybe someday Jill Sanborn can help.

Q Okay. But from a congressional oversight perspective, when something gets fouled up, Congress has a right to ask questions about it.

A That's why I'm here.

Q And you're well suited to answer questions because you were the top official in this space. And so it leads us, I think, to the conclusion that when things go wrong at the FBI there's nothing you can do to fix it, because the agents or the executives with responsibility can't even look back in hindsight and talk about what can be done differently or what can be done to prevent it in the future.

Mr. Burwell. I'll step in for just a moment and say, now, Chairman Jordan sent a letter back in August 2022 about a whistleblower allegation of gross and kind of absurd misconduct about reclassifying cases.

Ms. Sanborn. Me, towards me.

Mr. Burwell. And that's why we're here in a now videotaped transcribed interview, to, as Ms. Sanborn has done repeatedly, dispute, rebut, and reject those allegations. And we're grateful that you've given us that opportunity.

I think there's a lot of broader questions that are related to the FBI that I think she's been generous in responding to and in a way that she has been retired from the FBI for quite some time and is not prepared to and hasn't reviewed materials and, as we talked about, just hasn't even had the opportunity to review materials because those are in the FBI's hands, and you're asking for them.

[redacted] Are you trying to make a scope limitation here? Is that where we're going?

Mr. Burwell. I'm positing that we're well beyond the scope of the August 2022 letter. But Ms. Sanborn is here voluntarily because she respects Chairman Jordan's investigation --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Burwell. -- and the letter that she got in August of 2022. And as I said at the beginning, and I'm not trying to speechify here, I'm really -- maybe this is a bit of benefit for now Chairman Jordan. She is here because she respects congressional oversight and believes that it's appropriate here and that it's a valid, fair opportunity.

But you did --

Ms. Sanborn. Can I just -- I'm going to interrupt.

I've talked -- you haven't been here -- I've talked about my background in working with similar investigations and my respect. I started my career in public office serving Congress. That's why I'm here. You wrote me a letter and everybody said he's not the chairman, don't show up, make him subpoena you. You wrote me a letter 8 days after my dad passed away. But I respect you, what you're doing, so much to be here.

Chairman Jordan. Sorry for your loss, but I didn't know that.

Mr. Gaetz. Who told you to wait for a subpoena?

Ms. Sanborn. Everybody thinks that any FBI agent that would appear without being subpoenaed probably failed their academy classes, right, like --

Mr. Gaetz. Can you give names?

Ms. Sanborn. No, no names, like opinions. Like everybody thinks that --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, what you said is of interest to me, that there were people that suggested that you not engage in this work.

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm curious who those people are.

Ms. Sanborn. A variety of people. Nobody that you would be interested in. Could I put it that way?

Mr. Gaetz. No, because I don't think you can define the scope of my interest.

Ms. Sanborn. People I golf with. I mean, a lot of people have said, Jill, you went through training where why in the world would you voluntarily show up for an interview on an allegation against you? And it's because I follow the rules, I uphold the Constitution, and I respect the oversight you have. It's irrelevant who said something to me, sir. I understand your question.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, were any of those people that at any point in time worked for the FBI?

Ms. Sanborn. No, no, and that's a very -- I'm glad you asked that. That's a fair question. No --

Mr. Gaetz. Were any of those people any people who at any point worked for the Department of Justice?

Ms. Sanborn. No. That's a very fair question. Can I just finish on that?

Like nobody has prevented me. I made it very clear. I'm married to a combat marine. Like nobody's going to tell me what I can and can't do with my own personal business. I made it very clear when I got your letter, sir, that I was coming, period, and I was talking, period.

So nobody tried to prevent me, nobody was an obstacle. I think people know me well enough to know that when I make up my mind, I'm going to do it, and that's why I'm here.

I respect your oversight. I respect, even though I think the whistleblower is incredibly wrong about me, I respect that they have a perspective, and I appreciate and applaud them for sharing it, because we won't ever get to the bottom of things if people don't do that. And so that's why I'm here.

Chairman Jordan. I appreciate that.

[redacted] So we'll just bring this back. I mean, we have a top FBI official here in you.

Ms. Sanborn. A former.

[redacted] Or at least former FBI official. And so you'll have to forgive us if we're asking a question that your counsel thinks is outside the scope. But the school boards issue, for example, is one of -- not many -- but it's one of just issues that are just very important to our Members. And so we would be derelict in our duties if we didn't ask you a couple questions. But we are going to move on as [redacted] is going to --

Mr. Burwell. And just to be clear, it wasn't in your August letter.

Ms. Sanborn. Yeah.

Mr. Burwell. But we're here to try and --

[redacted] Right.

Mr. Burwell. -- be a model as you move forward.

[redacted] I mean, just because we don't put something in a letter, I mean, we don't outline every question that we might ask of a potential witness. I mean, I've never --

Mr. Burwell. We're talking past each other. But your August 22nd letter was pretty darn clear. And we've been clear all along that this is what it's about.

But we're here. Ms. Sanborn's here.

Ms. Sanborn. I always want to be the best, most accurate person for you, and I, 10 months retired, not necessarily knowing all the different things we might talk about, I might be convenient today or definitely, like you said, but I'm not necessarily the best, most accurate person for some of this.

[redacted] Sure.

Ms. Sanborn. And you deserve that.

BY [redacted]

Q During your tenure at the FBI, did you work with an agent named Timothy Thibault?

A Yes.

Q And how closely did you work with Agent Thibault?

A During my time as AD of the Counterterrorism Division he oversaw international terrorism cases, so terrorism cases overseas, and would have been three levels below me.

Q Did you speak to him on a daily basis?

A No.

Q And was there a deputy assistant director that kind of was his supervisor that then reported to you?

A Deputy and a section chief. So he was three levels below.

Q Okay. And are you aware of what was Mr. Thibault's position on January 6th, 2021?

A No.

Q Do you know what his job duties entailed at any point in time?

A Just what I told you. I don't -- he was an assistant section chief in the international terrorism section that covers all terrorism cases overseas.

Mr. Burwell. When you were what?

Ms. Sanborn. Assistant director.

BY [redacted]

Q What were your personal experiences with Agent Thibault? Was he a good agent? Did he seemed biased?

A I wouldn't -- you know, three levels below, I wouldn't even be involved, as we talked earlier this morning, in sort of the rating and reviewing process. So I wouldn't be privy to like his performance appraisal even. Most of my interaction with him would have been him briefing me on -- potentially briefing me on international terrorism cases. So limited interaction.

Q And are you aware of some of the whistleblower allegations regarding Agent Thibault's conduct while at the FBI?

A I'm aware of the one in your thousand-page report.

Q Okay. And are you aware of did Agent Thibault have any involvement or supervision of domestic terrorism investigations?

A In his -- as he was assigned as the assistant special -- as the assistant section chief, no, he would have been in charge of international terrorism cases.

Q And did he work out of the WFO, the Washington Field Office, or headquarters?

A Both. So eventually he left the Counterterrorism Division and went over as assistant special agent in charge at WFO.

Q When he was the ASAC at the Washington Field Office, was he in your chain of command anymore?

A No, completely removed. So as mentioned earlier in the morning, that the field office reports up through their leader of the field office at WFO. It's an assistant director who then reports to the deputy.

Q And are you generally aware of the allegations that Agent Thibault pressured agents to reclassify cases as DVEs?

A Only as it relates in what you sent me about me in the thousand-page report.

Q Did you have any firsthand knowledge or witness it?

A No.

Q Did any FBI personnel ever disclose to you any impropriety on the part of Agent Thibault?

A No.

Q Did any FBI personnel ever disclose to you that Thibault is pressuring them to reclassify cases?

A Not that I remember.

Q So after the events that occurred here at the Capitol on January 6th, 2021, we've learned from whistleblowers that there may have been some regular conference calls with agents with ASAC Thibault as well as you. Is that correct? Did you take part in --

A I was not involved in any of those field office calls that you're mentioning. I do vaguely remember, I think, that the section and maybe even the division had field office calls. I was not involved in them. I don't even think I sat in on one, let alone on the cadence.

Q Were you ever on any conference calls following January 6th, 2021, with ASAC Thibault?

A Not that I remember. I can vaguely remember -- like this is separate -- but I can vaguely remember we did critical incident response calls. So we did field office calls in 2020 as it related to all the violence going on around the country.

I don't remember me participating in field office calls with Tim Thibault as it related to the Capitol. But keep in mind, I was transitioning to EAD, so between the transition and then being eventually assigned EAD, I would have been removed from that.

Q And what was your involvement with the investigations surrounding the events at the Capitol on January 6th, 2021?

A So I was definitely there that day, and so part of the beginning of it all unfolding. And then, again, by March, April, transitioning to EAD. So it would have been the AD for a couple months.

Q And were you familiar with how the investigations into particular subjects of January 6th investigations were being run?

A Vaguely, yes.

Q Are you familiar with a letter that Mr. Jordan sent to FBI Director Wray on September 19th, 2022, regarding the WFO's handling of these investigations?

A I vaguely recall reading it online, but not intimately familiar with it.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] We can enter it into the record. I think it'll be No. 5, exhibit No. 5.

[redacted] I can get it. What's the date?

[redacted] September 19th.

BY [redacted]

Q Please take your time to review.

A Okay.

Q Have you had sufficient time to review?

So as the letter states, we received protected whistleblower disclosures that indicate the WFO's handling of DVE investigations diverges from established practice in a way that it overstates the national DVE threat.

During your tenure as assistant director and then executive assistant director of the National Security Branch, how often did you interact with the WFO?

A I can remember only a handful of times probably that I had conversations with the AD over there. So not very frequently.

Q And then following January 6th, 2021, did you have more regular interactions with the WFO?

A Not really, because, again, very shortly, I was moving up to EAD and focused on a wider variety of things than just the counterterrorism mission.

Q So following January 6th, 2021, did the FBI set up a command post or task force at headquarters of the WFO specifically to handle these cases?

A I believe that's correct. But I would definitely refer you to FBI and WFO on what exactly they stood up and when.

Q And to your recollection, since the events occurred in Washington, D.C., was it natural for the WFO to handle the investigations?

A So I think there's -- again, I feel like a convenient answer, not the best answer -- but I think there's precedent in policy for how this is done.

I'll use bank robberies, for example. If a bank robbery occurs in Dallas, Phoenix, and Washington, D.C., there's probably cases in all of those locations because of the bank robbery. And then if the individual resides in Florida, there might be a case on the actual subjects.

I think it's a very complicated process, and it goes back way before I was even in the Bureau, and you call it like an originating office, like there is an original office that opens an investigation, and then you have other investigations that can feed into that.

So I don't know that it's written in policy or that there is anything different to how this was done. I definitely recall precedent for how this is done based on my time in the Bureau.

Q So how we understand it, and I think just how you explained this, ordinarily the full investigations are labeled according to the originating field office, and then there might be leads cut to other field offices or --

A Not leads, cases.

Q Cases. So other cases could be opened in the other field offices.

A PENTTBOM is a good example. Like the 9/11 investigation was run out of New York. But field offices had, not leads, cases as a result of that.

So me in Phoenix, as a case agent, I had cases that were mine in Phoenix but were part of the 9/11 attack investigation. Everything I wrote on my case, I also then routed into the overarching New York case.

Q So it would look like there was a case open in Phoenix and then in New York as well.

A Well, the overarching case in New York was the whole attack investigation. And then individuals as they popped up as being involved in some form or fashion in 9/11 were separate individual cases run by that field office.

Q Okay. So the full investigation into the events at the Capitol on January 6th, 2021, would be the Washington Field Office.

A Correct.

Q And then other field offices across the country may have other cases.

A Correct.

Q Did you receive any sort of notification when these cases were opened in the other field offices in your position as AD or EAD?

A No, not that I recall.

Q So turning back to the September 19th letter, I'm going to read the inset portion on page 1 here. It says -- this is from a whistleblower disclosure we received -- it said:

"'Instead, task force members in Washington, D.C., identify 'potential subjects' and possible locations where these individuals reside. The task force disseminates information packets with instructions to open full investigations to [local] Field Offices around the country. As such, if a subject lives in Dallas, the Dallas Field Office is expected to open the case.'

"Although, the local field offices therefore appear to be running the cases on paper, the WFO is directing the field office special agents to just 'open the case' in their geographic area and the WFO is performing and approving 'all of the investigative work and paperwork for the casefile.'"

In your experience and during your tenure at the FBI is this like a normal procedure that's followed for all investigations?

A I mean, like I said, I recall 9/11 being very similar to this in structure, and I'm definitely not associating the Capitol attack to the same as 9/11. I'm talking about just the running of a big case that involves multiple subjects being very similar to this.

Q And so we received whistleblower disclosures that the FBI was not following the regular procedure. So what are your reactions to those allegations? Do you think the agent is just misunderstanding? Or why do you think there's this impression that these cases are being handled differently?

A I have -- I mean, again, I support the whistleblower process. I don't know why they believe that. I'm not upset that they reported it. You know, if they feel that that's what is -- if something is improper they did and we'll look into it, like you all are. But I have no idea why they would have reported that.

[redacted] Do you guys have any questions?

I think we'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We're back on the record. It's 1:22 in the afternoon. This is again the Democratic staff up for questioning now.

Before we get too far, I do want to introduce as an exhibit -- and [redacted] I apologize, I'm not sure what exhibit number we are on?

[redacted] We are on No. 6.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] No. 6. As exhibit No. 6, the write-up and the listing of the criteria for qualifications per the Presidential Rank Award that was awarded to Ms. Sanborn. And I don't have any further questions about this, but I did want to introduce it for the record.

Mr. Burwell. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Sanborn, did you agree to appear here voluntarily?

A Yes.

Q And I know we went down this road a fair amount before, but could you sum up real quickly why you agreed to appear voluntarily?

A I think I would sum it up into I appreciate the whistleblower process. I think it's important. I appreciate the congressional oversight I think is in process. It's important.

And I also think my responsibility as a former executive in the FBI is to lead by example and hope that my appearance before you voluntarily may potentially be a good example for people.

So those three things probably sum it up.

Q Thank you.

You said a number of times today that I hope the FBI is here to answer some of these questions, or I hope the FBI will come in, these are outside of the scope of what I feel comfortable talking about today.

You did testify before Congress a number of times in your prior career, correct?

A Correct.

Q Do you know how many times about?

A Less than six, more than two. Somewhere in there.

Q Can you explain why from your perspective you're in a different position now as a private citizen than you were in your professional capacity as an FBI employee?

A Yeah, I think -- I might have alluded to this earlier -- but I always viewed any responsibility when I testified as providing the most accurate and complete answer possible. I think that's what Congress deserves.

I feel as now a former executive, 10 months removed, and really removed, like not engaged with the FBI, I think as we discussed earlier this morning, at all really, especially in this 1-year cooling-off period, that I don't have the ability to do what I pride myself on doing, which is providing the complete, most accurate answers to some of these questions, and that the FBI or other employees in the FBI would be much more suited to do what I used to do and provide the best, most accurate answer.

Q I have a letter dated January 31st, 2023, from Mr. Carter Burwell to Mr. [redacted] and Ms. [redacted] Are you familiar with this letter?

A Probably, but if I could look at it real quick.

Yeah, I'm familiar with this one.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I want to -- I'm going to admit this as exhibit No. 7. This letter says:

"For the record, we continue to believe that an informal interview would be more appropriate and beneficial to the Committee, especially because we now understand the Committee intends to videotape the interview and exclude agency counsel."

Starting with the first part of that, can you again explain why an informal interview you believe may have been more appropriate and also beneficial to the committee?

A Yeah, I think you kind of hinted on it a little bit in your first question to me, which is I figured the committee would be interested in talking about my time, but I didn't feel as a former executive that I had the best, most accurate, most current answers. And in a very formal setting that's being videotaped and transcribed, I felt like it would be inappropriate for me to come across like I felt I was the accurate-slash-best answer, because I don't believe that's me anymore.

Q And when did you learn that the committee intended to videotape the interview?

A Last week. I don't remember when specifically, but sometime last week.

Q And when did you learn that they intended to exclude agency counsel?

A Maybe last week, but definitely this week.

Q Earlier in the letter it says:

"As we have repeatedly stated, Ms. Sanborn looks forward to speaking with the Committee and refuting the whistleblower allegation against her, and we appreciate that you recently shared with us that there have been no material change in the scope of these allegations since your August 2022 letter."

Can you explain what your understanding is of the scope that you agreed to appear under?

A Yeah. So I have been under the impression from letters and then conversations that my attorneys had with the committee that definitely an allegation that I might have been personally involved in asking, pressuring agents to reclassify or misclassify cases to DVE, probably a little bit of that in general, was I at least aware of that pressure even if it wasn't me. I probably felt a little bit of that was the scope, and I think that kind of captures.

So my personal involvement and/or my knowledge may be of others doing that as it relates to classifying and/or reclassifying cases.

Q Thank you.

I do want to move on. I want to touch briefly on the school boards memo question. Not going to spend a lot of time on it, but I do have a couple follow-up questions.

A Okay.

Q You referenced that you stated that the memo -- have you read the memo, first of all?

A I don't remember. I would be surprised if I didn't back then, but I do not remember.

Q Okay. You stated that the memo wouldn't have much of an impact on the day-to-day operations of the Bureau because any case would still have to meet three criteria.

What are those criteria? You might have stated them earlier, but just again for the record,

A That's a good question.

I think at least from my perspective, if a case were going to be opened in the Counterterrorism Division, it would have to meet the three criteria of what's required for domestic terrorism cases, which is -- and, again, make sure I get this right with FBI -- but an act dangerous to life, primarily occurring in the United States, with the intent to coerce or intimidate the government.

And so that would need to be met in order for anything to be open on behalf of the Bureau as it related to any allegation to include allegations regarding school boards.

Q Okay.

A Violence at school boards.

Q I do want to turn to the actual memo itself very briefly. And I have a copy here.

A Okay.

Q If you want to take a look and let me know if you think you've seen it before or --

A Okay.

Q And I do want to -- and now that you've had a chance to look at it, do you recall whether you reviewed it?

A I think so.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And I am going to admit this as exhibit No. 8.

And I just want to look at the second sentence of that first paragraph. It reads:

"While spirited debate about policy matters is protected under our Constitution, that protection does not extend to threats of violence or efforts to intimidate individuals based on their views."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. The reference in that, the first clause of that sentence, "spirited debate about policy matters is protected under our Constitution," do you agree with that statement?

A I mean, does it -- I feel a little bit, same as I said earlier today, like I'm not sure that --

Q I can rephrase.

A Yeah.

Q I can rephrase. You said earlier that the First Amendment is taken very seriously, and that in opening any case, agents, supervisors must be mindful of First Amendment concerns. Would that seem to comport with that sentence, with that clause?

A I believe so. I think the two words that jump out at me that seem congruent with what I said is the word "violence." And then that it's not about the views, which I believe I said earlier today, like it doesn't matter the view or the ideology, no matter how repulsive it might be, it's the violence. So not my words, but, yes, it seems congruent.

Q And are you aware in fall of 2021 whether any other memos were issues by the Attorney General about violence or threats of violence against other groups of people?

A Possibly. I don't want to miscorrect. But potentially against the Asian community, if I'm remembering correctly, but I could be wrong.

Q Do you recall a memo, for example, about threats against election officials?

A No.

Q Do you recall a memo about threats against airline flight crews?

A No, not specifically.

[1:34 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q I want to turn to this threat tag question quickly just to clarify the record on a couple points.

What's the actual purpose of a threat tag for the FBI?

A So I think it's important to definitely get their current opinion on it, but I will at least remind you of what I said under testimony prior to retiring, which is: The purpose of it is an administrative tool to be able to look for trends and/or quantify a certain number of allegations in a certain area.

So it's an administrative tool to get a lower level of granularity than a case classification gives you.

Q Does it drive the way that a case is investigated in any way?

A No, which I also said in testimony, right? Like, it didn't change -- it wasn't a particular focus, and it didn't change how we do our business.

Q I believe the majority counsel made a reference to threat tags being put on parents. Are threat tags applied to cases or to individuals?

A Again, would refer you to the FBI, but I believe the application of them, the way I know it, is that it's a tag applied to a case.

Q Um --

A Which, I think what I said in my testimony fits here. It already has to have risen to warranting Federal attention, right? It has to already meet a criteria that we would have jurisdiction-slash-authorities here before you could even apply a tag to it.

Q And may multiple tags be applied to a single case?

A I don't -- I believe so, but, again, check with FBI.

Q All right. I don't think we have any more questions. Thank you.

Mr. Burwell. Thank you.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. The time is now 1:37 p.m.

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Sanborn, right after you were appointed executive assistant director of the National Security Branch in May 2021, the FBI redesignated the 2017 shooting of congressional Republicans at a baseball field in Alexandria, Virginia, as an act of domestic terrorism carried out by a domestic violent extremist.

Do you remember that happening?

A To the best of my knowledge, I was not aware it was, quote/unquote, "redesignated." I don't know where that came from, but I was not aware that it was redesignated anything.

Q Yeah, it was redesignated in a report that was issued in May of 2021.

Were you involved in the redesignation at all?

A Which report was it in May of 2021?

Q Yeah. I have it with us. Actually, we can enter it as an exhibit if that would be helpful.

Okay. I believe we are on exhibit No. 8 -- 9.

Mr. Burwell. Nine.

[Sanborn Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is the FBI-DHS Strategic Intelligence Assessment of May 2021. I'll direct your attention -- let me just make sure I get the right page here.

A Thirty-five of 40.

Q Uh-huh.

So, on page 35, it lists -- says, "An individual with a personalized violent ideology targeted and shot Republican Members of Congress at a baseball field and wounded five people. The subject died as a result of engagement with law enforcement." And it lists the category as domestic violent extremist.

Is that correct?

A That's what I see here, yes.

Q And so one of the times that you testified before Congress was April 29, 2021, before the House Appropriations subcommittee. Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q And do you generally remember the topic you were testifying about?

A I'm sure it was domestic-violent-extremist-related.

Q Uh-huh.

A Was it appropriations?

Q Yes.

A Yeah.

Q Uh-huh. And you were asked a question about the 2017 shooting and was it being considered an act of domestic terrorism. You stated that you were not aware of the rationale for why the case was not being considered as an act of domestic terrorism but that if it were to happen today we would open this as a domestic terrorism case.

That was April 29, 2021. And then it was reclassified when this report was released on May 14th of 2021. To your knowledge, do you know what was occurring during that time period?

A So I think this is -- I would encourage you to do one thing. I don't know that it wasn't ever listed on a similar report.

Q Uh-huh.

A I think there's two potential topics here: reclassified as a classification in our case system versus inclusion on this.

So I don't know if a version of this report ever existed before and whether it was included or not included, but I would encourage you to at least double-check that.

To my knowledge, prior to my retirement, in our case system, it's never been case change classification like we've talked all day. I don't think there is a document that exists where somebody went in and changed the case classification from one to another.

Q Uh-huh.

A So I think there's two separate issues going on here: this report; and was it ever included before. And I believe that, prior to my departure, it was never changed as a case classification in the system.

Q Okay.

And do you have any knowledge from your tenure as to why the FBI initially classified the shooting as a suicide by cop?

A I mean, I know from hearing people talk about it. I did not have firsthand knowledge. I wasn't involved in -- my role at the time wouldn't have been anything to do with domestic violent extremism or whatever it was categorized in.

Q Uh-huh.

And are you aware that at the time the FBI designated the 2017 shooting as suicide by cop, it contradicted substantial evidence in the shooting and the local prosecutor's conclusion?

A I'm aware of all of that, yes.

Q And is that a normal course of action for the FBI to --

A Again, I would refer you to the FBI. I had nothing to do with this case. I've had to talk about it post- it and why I said, look, if it happened today, it would be considered a domestic terrorism. I was completely removed from this whole thing.

Q Okay.

And switching back to the Washington Field Office, did you ever interact with an individual named Steven D'Antuono, I believe?

A Yes. He is the assistant director in charge of the Washington Field Office.

Q And how often did you interact with him?

A Not very often. Maybe half a dozen to a dozen times during my time as AD and EAD combined.

Q And during your time as AD and EAD, was he always at the Washington Field Office?

A I don't remember. I believe so, but I don't remember if he got promoted before I did or I, him. I don't remember.

Q From your involvement in the January 6th-related investigations, was he also involved?

A He would've been the ADIC in charge of the investigation.

Q And can you describe, from your knowledge and your tenure at the FBI, what the ADIC in charge -- what their responsibilities would've been?

A Very similar. They are the equivalent of a special agent in charge. It's just a larger field office, so it's a larger responsibility, so they call it an assistant director. So he would've been in charge of all investigative activity in the Washington field area of responsibility.

Q So would he have had interactions with special agents as to what cases to open, how to classify the cases?

A He definitely had special agents that reported to him. I can't speak for what his interactions may or may not have been.

Q Uh-huh. And what were your general experiences with D'Antuono? Was he a good agent?

A I don't even really have an opinion, honestly.

Q And during your tenure at the FBI, did you ever get the impression that the FBI was sacrificing other Federal law enforcement cases in order to pursue January 6th cases?

A No.

Q No?

A Not that I'm aware of. Like, if there's an instance out there, not that I'm aware of, especially using the word, quote/unquote, "sacrifice." I'm not sure I know what that means, but -- in this context --

Q Did they direct more resources to January 6th investigations? Did the FBI?

A Well, very similar like I talked with San Bernardino.

Q Uh-huh.

A Again, I'll give an example I know.

Q Absolutely.

A And as I mentioned to you, my whole branch worked the San Bernardino. I can't imagine that the Washington Field Office didn't surge resources to handle that. But I would've been completely removed from their resource decision.

Q Okay.

And during your tenure at the FBI, did you ever have any involvement with the Confidential Human Source Program?

A Different levels, right? Like, as an agent, I had sources; as a supervisor, I would've approved. So I'm aware of the program.

Q And what was your -- did you have any involvement with the CHS Program when you were assistant director or EAD?

A I think it would depend on what you mean, "involvement," right? Like --

Q Did you have any oversight, know of any cases where CHSes were involved?

A Well, I definitely was aware of CHS use, right, because it would be part of probably what I was briefed on a case, right? "Here's our case, and here's our coverage. We have physical surveillance. We have this surveillance." So I definitely would've been briefed on whether a source was being utilized or something --

Q Okay.

A -- on cases that rose to my attention.

Q And during your experience at the FBI, were confidential human sources used in domestic terrorism or domestic violent extremism investigations?

A I'm sure they were, yeah.

Q And did any FBI employees or CHSes actively participate in the events of January 6, 2021, to your knowledge?

A Well --

Mr. Burwell. I'm going to object to this question as being --

Ms. Sanborn. I think I would just refer to, like -- go ahead.

Mr. Burwell. You've done a wonderful job talking about all sorts of issues, but now this one goes squarely into what I understand to be ongoing investigations. So I will object, although she kind of may have answered a little bit.

BY [redacted]

Q In your role as executive assistant director, you oversaw the FBI's Counterintelligence Division. Is that correct?

A As EAD, I saw --

Q As EAD? Okay. And the Counterintelligence Division houses the Foreign Influence Task Force, correct?

A Correct.

Q And was that ongoing while you were EAD?

A Yes.

Q And what role did you play in overseeing the Foreign Influence Task Force's work?

A Again, of their work, not really, right? Like, I'm removed, right? There's the task force; they probably report to a DAD, who reports to an AD, who reports to me. So --

Q Uh-huh. Were you generally aware of what they were working on, or was it too far removed?

A Only when it rose to the level of something that they put on my radar, right? Like, I would not be involved, you know, three, four levels down on their day-to-day activities.

Q And during your tenure at the FBI, which FBI components or offices were involved in the Foreign Influence Task Force work?

A I'm surprised Carter is not doing this. I feel like this is way beyond what you guys -- like, this has absolutely nothing to do with domestic violent extremism, which at least, if we agree, we had some scope in the letter. This is 180 degrees away from --

[redacted] Look, it's a voluntary interview. If you want to answer the question, answer it; if you don't, don't answer it. But, you know, the scope -- I mean, we -- you know, we're going to ask you other questions.

We've done -- you know, congressional committees have done hundreds of these transcribed interviews -- hundreds, thousands probably, since they started again back in 2007.

And so, if you want to answer it, answer it. If you're not going to answer it, just you can say it, and we'll move on.

Mr. Burwell. Well, I think it's --

Ms. Sanborn. I don't want to inappropriately answer, right? I've been retired-slash-former-executive for 10 months --

[redacted] That's fine. Then don't answer it.

Mr. Burwell. Well, thanks. And we know you're asking other people from the FBI to come up and talk about this with more direct, immediate, firsthand knowledge. And we appreciate you understanding that she's trying to --

[redacted] Great.

Mr. Burwell. -- provide information.

BY [redacted]

Q So, during your tenure at the FBI when you were EAD, did the Foreign Influence Task Force have any meetings with social media companies that you were aware of?

A Same. I'm not going to -- I feel like, you know, this isn't a conversation about my whole career and everything I had knowledge of. You sent me a letter in August. It was pretty tightly scoped. We've talked way beyond that because I feel like it at least is in the spirit of the scope of your letter.

I don't believe the Counterintelligence Division, what they're doing, is in the spirit of what you asked me to appear before you today. I don't want to be a convenient witness-slash-interview. You deserve the best, and I, 100 percent coming into this blind, don't think that's me today.

Q Uh-huh.

[redacted] Do you have any more questions?

[redacted] Have you worked through everything?

[redacted] Uh-huh.

[redacted] We'll go off the record a second, caucus, and then hopefully we'll be done.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q I just want to give you a chance to -- voluntary. You can answer these questions or not. But on the content moderation question, if you're willing, we'd like to ask some questions, and you can decide whether you want to answer them or not, or we can end the interview.

A I think I'd start by just saying a couple things to you. And I think I've said one already, which is, you deserve the best, most accurate answer possible. I have absolutely the least, right -- like, I feel uncomfortable not only because I'm not the best and I'm not the most accurate, but the least knowledge in this area, right?

Q Okay.

A Like, I was the AD of CTD and then promoted up. I was never the AD of Counterintelligence Division, so my knowledge here is a sliver.

And so I don't want to go down a road where I even hypothesize on some of these answers, because I'm not the right person for you here.

Q Okay. Was it in your overall portfolio though?

A As an EAD, I supervised this, but, again --

Q Okay.

A -- and I don't mean this as a crutch -- a large portion of my time as EAD I was on family sick leave and in Arizona.

Q Right.

A So, of all the things that I know in my 24 years in the Bureau, this is probably some of the least.

Q Okay. Would it be okay, then, to just sort of ask the question, and if you're unable to answer it, you can just tell us that?

I would hate to -- I'd hate to go back and help our members understand how we asked some of these questions but, you know, we weren't able to get into it. I'd hate to have a situation where somebody wanted to invite you back, so to speak.

A I think my caution here is -- and, you know -- is, I don't want my inability to answer to be perceived as an unwillingness to answer.

Q Okay.

A It's not that I'm necessarily unwilling. It's that you're going to ask me questions where I feel like I'm going to do you a disservice versus any service by answering.

Q Okay. I mean, I think our questions are relatively high-level. Isn't --

Mr. Burwell. Why don't we try, and we'll see how it goes?

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Burwell. We want to try and be voluntary and cooperative --

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Burwell. -- with the committee.

[redacted] Great.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So I think I asked this question before, but the Foreign Influence

Task Force had meetings with social media companies. Were you aware of that during your time as EAD?

A I don't have any firsthand knowledge of, like, their day-to-day. And so, again, I think, not a great person to answer that question for you.

Q So you were never aware of these meetings?

A I mean, it's hard to separate what I'm, quote/unquote, "aware of" and what I'm not, because I also do read, you know, open source, and so I read a variety of your issues and concerns with various aspects. And so attributing necessarily what I'm knowledgeable of in this space from my expertise in employment versus what I've read in the paper is hard in this area.

Q And other than the Foreign Influence Task Force, are you aware of any other units or task forces under your purview as EAD that worked or work with social media companies on content moderation?

A So this one I feel more comfortable with, because I will at least pivot to CTD.

Q Uh-huh.

A So CT, when I was there, definitely had an entity inside the Counterterrorism Division that did interact with private-sector companies.

Q And this was during your time as assistant director?

A Yes.

Q And can you tell us a little bit more about the meetings with private-sectors?

A I was never involved in them. My understanding from them -- and, again, it would've been a section reporting to a DAD and then me -- is, a lot of it was educating them on the threat that we were experiencing in the terrorism space.

So, like, ISIS's use of the internet, for example, and how that's being used to radicalize and recruit people in the United States was probably a topic, I would imagine.

But I was never personally involved in any of those meetings.

Q And when you say "educating them," was that the FBI educating the social media companies or private sector?

A I'm sure it was some exchange. I mean, they probably see stuff that I'm sure they mentioned.

Q Uh-huh.

A But, again, no firsthand knowledge. Like, wasn't involved in it. So it's really worth you getting more detail from the FBI on that.

Q Okay.

And now I want to turn to how the Foreign Influence Task Force or other components of the FBI, the CTD, worked internally on content moderation.

Which FBI personnel were responsible for assessing online content? Do you have any knowledge?

A I am not aware of how you phrase it there at all.

Q Okay.

And are you able to describe during your tenure at the FBI what the internal process was for monitoring online content?

A So I think I have at least -- I will pivot to at least a testimony I've had about online monitoring and I think what our responsibility is in the FBI.

So we don't passively and persistently monitor things that are out in the open, right? We have to have an authorized purpose to be looking even at publicly available information.

Q Uh-huh. And so would the FBI intake tips or reports of problematic content, from your experience?

A I can't imagine that they don't, right? Like, I'm sure that the tip line probably has instances of that. But I don't have any firsthand knowledge of an example.

Q And, to your knowledge, were there any differences in the FBI's processes depending on whether it was a U.S. citizen or a non-U.S. citizen?

A I'd again refer you to the FBI on that one.

Q Okay.

And, at the CTD, did you ever have any awareness or oversee how the FBI approached reporting concerns or content to private-sector partners?

A No. Not that I can recall.

Q And so I think you briefly spoke about this a little bit earlier in regards to the CTD section, how they would be educating the private-sector partners. Was it just educating them on what to be aware of, what to be looking for?

A Again, having not been personally involved in that, I would be, I think, remiss in trying to give you an answer, that I'd feel too far removed to give you an answer.

Q Uh-huh.

Mr. Burwell. And is it fair that folks at the FBI would be talking -- "educating" is maybe too one-sided, I think, for what the interaction was.

Ms. Sanborn. Never having been involved, I don't even want to hypothesize on that.

Mr. Burwell. Right. I think there was an exchange, but whether it was one-sided or both-sided, you don't know, and it's not --

Ms. Sanborn. I'm not privy to that.

Mr. Burwell. I think I just want to be careful, given her knowledge is so limited in this space, that I don't want her to suggest that the FBI was educating someone, given what we understand the allegations broadly, that she can't really speak to.

BY [redacted]

Q And while you were EAD or AD, did you ever coordinate with DHS, their Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, CISA?

A Oh, I didn't -- no. Me, I never worked with CISA. I'm sure that people in the organization might have, but I did not ever work with CISA.

Q Was there anyone that was one of your direct reports or DADs that was in charge of interfacing with CISA?

A You know, not that I remember. And I do remember a lot of -- especially given what they do, coordination probably is in line with the Cyber Division, which did not fall under me.

Q Uh-huh. And while you were EAD or AD, were you ever aware of the FBI coordinating with any other Federal entities?

A I mean --

Q On content online, I guess, to specify.

A Oh, all of this is content-related?

Q Uh-huh.

A No, I know nothing about content -- especially the way you word it -- moderation at all.

Q Are you generally aware of reporting on a special relationship between the FBI and Facebook?

A Only from watching Director Wray's testimony recently.

Q And what did you learn from that testimony?

A I think he just got questions from somebody about the relationship between the FBI and Facebook.

Q But when you were EAD or AD, you never were aware of any sort of special relationship?

A No. I know -- I mean, I would assume that Facebook is one of the folks that that section that I talked about probably engaged with. But definitely not aware of how you phrased it, "special relationship," at all.

Q Uh-huh.

And during your time as EAD or AD, were you ever aware of agents receiving information from Facebook or any other social media company that was not obtained with user consent or through the legal process?

A Not that I can recall, but, again, I would refer you to the FBI.

Like I said, I can appreciate your interest here, but I don't want to give -- especially -- and I appreciate your frustration with me -- especially because I didn't even give thought to this, right? Like, I'm very mindful and want to make sure that when I give you guys answers that I've at least thought about it. And this isn't one that I've prepared for, thought of. You know, former executive, didn't have firsthand knowledge -- like, there's a lot of reasons where I'm ill-suited to be commenting on this.

[redacted] That's all the questions I have on that.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Who should we talk to in this space?

A I mean, I don't have a specific person. I definitely would start with -- you probably do all your requests through Congressional Affairs, and they could get you to the right POC and probably for both divisions. But --

Q Uh-huh. But this was in your purview, so, I mean, you're in a position to know who might know --

A I don't know --

Q -- hopefully.

A I don't know who would be the best person for you.

Q Okay.

A Sorry.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 2:06 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

JASON FOSTER

EMPOWER OVERSIGHT

[redacted] It is 10:00 a.m., and I think we can go on the record. Good morning.

Mr. Hill. Morning.

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of George Hill. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Would the witness please state their name for the record?

Mr. Hill. George J. Hill.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone else in the room introduce themselves as well.

Mr. Foster. I'm Jason Foster, counsel for Mr. Hill.

Mr. Hill. Again?

[redacted] I think so.

Mr. Hill. Okay. George Hill.

[redacted] Good morning. [redacted] I'm the chief oversight counsel for Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] professional staff member and legislative aide for Ranking Member Nadler.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] I'm an intern with the minority.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] I'm a staff assistant for the minority.

[redacted] [redacted] senior advisor [inaudible].

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] with Mr. Jordan.

[redacted] senior counsel with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] with Mr. Jordan.

[redacted] I'd now like to go over the rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let me know.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

Mr. Hill. Yes, I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose, and it is my understanding that you are appearing today with counsel. Is that correct?

Mr. Hill. Yes.

[redacted] Could you please state your name for the record, counsel?

Mr. Foster. Jason Foster.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let me know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. And it is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else; just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

Mr. Hill. I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand that?

Mr. Hill. Yes, I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury for or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C., 1001. Do you understand that?

Mr. Hill. I do.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Mr. Hill. No, there is not.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we may use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

That is the end of my preamble. Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] We have nothing to add. Just thank you to the witness for appearing today.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] And I just want to add one thing about the confidentiality. We just want to avoid the situation where the questions we ask one witness get written down, notes taken, passed on to another witness.

Especially this is a concern when individuals come in from FBI or the Department of Justice or some other government agency. If they come with agency counsel and if agency counsel is making notes and is going to come with additional witnesses, there's an opportunity to help the witnesses understand the types of questions we're asking.

Creates a roadmap.

So we're not trying to imply that there's some sort of 6(e) requirement for this interview, but we do mention the confidentiality, and hopefully everyone can work with us on that.

[redacted] Okay. The clock now reads 10:06. We will start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Hill, when did you first join the FBI?

A Let's see. I left -- so 2010. But before we start, can I just make a brief statement?

Q Yes.

A Very brief, recognizing --

Q Sure.

A -- everyone's time here is valuable.

Q Yes, certainly.

A In the Hoover Building, there is a plaque with a quote from J. Edgar Hoover. And I'm going by memory, so if I botch it up and offend someone, I apologize, but it basically goes: "It's impossible to do our job without the help of the American public," end quote.

So I'd like to add, especially in my experience during the Boston Marathon bombing and subsequent investigation over 2 years, in the modern age, we rely very heavily on our State and local law enforcement partners.

And my reason for wanting to appear here today, number one, is to be as helpful as possible, because I believe that we all want the same thing, which is a functioning FBI that engenders the trust of the American public.

So hopefully that wasn't too long.

Q No, I appreciate that.

So you said you joined in 2010?

A I did. I joined in 2010.

Q Okay. And can you briefly tell me a little bit about what you did before joining the FBI?

A Sure. So, for 5 years prior to joining the FBI, I was with the National Security Agency. I was in the Counterterrorism Mission Management Center. It was at the height of the war in Iraq, where -- and we had theaters as well in Afghanistan and Pakistan. And I did what's called "find, fix, finish" operations.

I think anything beyond that goes outside the realm of this briefing in terms of classification level.

Q That's fine. And when did you retire from the FBI?

A I retired officially October 1st of -- let's see, it's 2022, so it's been over a year, so it'd be 2020? Yeah.

Q And what was the title in your last position you held with the FBI?

A So I was the supervisory intelligence analyst, which is a GS-14 position.

My last 2 years there, I had -- when I first joined the FBI, I had all the national security programs -- counterterrorism, counterintelligence, and cyber. And for my last 2 years, I took a new squad, the I-6 squad, and I had the Boston Regional Intelligence Center, the BRIC, as it's referred to, the acronym, and I had an embedded analyst there. And then I had embedded analysts, plural, at the Commonwealth Fusion Center in Maynard, Massachusetts, where we would interface with the members of the Commonwealth Fusion Center. And I was also responsible, dual-hatted, and I ran the Investigative Support Center, the ISC, for the High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area for the six-State New England area. So I also had three contract analysts. We would 1099 them at the end of each year.

So that was my last tour with the Bureau, which, for someone who spent their entire career in national security matters, was a real eye-opening tour of duty for me. Thoroughly enjoyed it.

Q And how long were you in that?

A Just 2 years.

Q Just -- okay.

A Yeah.

Q Two years. Who was your direct supervisor during that time?

A [redacted]. He's an SSIA, senior supervisory intelligence analyst. He's a GS-15.

Most offices have converted the ASAC, the Assistant Special Agent in Charge, from an 1811 agent to an 0132 job series, and that's what, you know, [redacted] is. He's an intelligence analyst.

Q And who was the SAC, the Special Agent in Charge, at the Boston Field Office?

A Joe Bonavolonta was the SAC. That was not his first time at Boston. He was briefly for a period of time the ASAC in charge of the intelligence program. And then he went to headquarters, and he was -- went to the Counterintelligence Directorate. He was the cleanup man for Peter Strzok.

Q And how many people directly reported to you?

A At the time of my leaving?

Q Uh-huh.

A At one time, when I had the national security programs, plural, and the Boston Marathon Bombing Task Force, I had 26 direct reports. That was the highest number.

Do I need to stop?

Oh, okay.

At the HIDTA, I had -- one, two -- three FBI intelligence analysts, 0132 job series, and three contracted analysts for the HIDTA, so six.

BY [redacted]

Q Going back to the Peter Strzok reference --

A Yes.

Q -- can you help us understand what you meant by the "cleanup man for Peter Strzok"?

A Oh. So I'm using Joe Bonavolonta's words --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- when he first came back to Boston.

He's a very likable, gregarious man. His father was [redacted] handler, so his blood runs FBI blue. So he was quite proud of the work that he did at the Counterintelligence Directorate prior to coming back to Boston.

Q And what do you mean by Peter Strzok's "cleanup man"?

A You'd have to ask Joe Bonavolonta.

Q Okay. What did you understand that to mean?

A That Peter Strzok had left the Counterintelligence Directorate in a less than functional manner.

Q Okay.

A That was my interpretation. If you want --

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you will hold any other positions during your time at the FBI?

A The only time I was dual-hatted, like I said, was when I had the national security programs and I was the co-supervisor on the Boston Marathon Bombing Task Force, which ran 2 years, up until the death penalty portion for Dzhokhar Tsarnaev. So, yeah.

Q Can you tell me a little bit about what you did for that task force, the Boston Marathon bombing one?

A So, eventually, it whittled down, down, down, down, down. So the actual task force itself consisted of myself and an 1811 SSA, and I had -- one, two -- I'm just going to give first names, just for my -- so I can count out loud. So Jamie, Dave, Scott -- so I had three intelligence analysts. And then on the task force there were -- they called them the "killer B's" because their names began with the letter B -- two agents.

And so that was 2 years going back and forth with the U.S. attorney's office over at the Moakley Courthouse -- of course, trial preparation, working with the defense attorneys, numerous meetings with the U.S. attorney, Carmen Ortiz.

So, I mean, the amount of paperwork generated in that 2-year task force, "voluminous" doesn't even come close to it. I don't know how many finished products I worked with my analysts and agents to move forward into the serialization process. There were FISAs, FISA renewals. It was all-encompassing.

Q So would you say during your tenure at the FBI you specialized in terrorism and counterterrorism?

A No. Like I said, I had all three national security -- so counterterrorism, which when I first joined the Bureau took up a lot of my time, because, like I said, there was ISIS that was on the rise at that time, a lot of homegrown violent extremists.

So I would say, if I had to look at -- supervisors don't TURK their time. And I'm sorry, I don't know what that acronym means. It's T-U-R-K. But supervisors don't TURK their time. But just rule-of-thumbing it, it probably took up 75 percent of my time, terrorism.

Q Terrorism?

A Yeah.

Q Okay.

A And that changed over the, you know, 1, 2, 3, 4 years into the job, whereas counterintelligence and cyber took up the majority of my time.

So it was all national security matters. Yeah.

Q And did you work on both foreign and domestic terrorism cases?

A Oh, yeah.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. Worked very close, especially domestic terrorism, during my time at the Commonwealth Fusion Center.

Q Did you receive any honors or awards during your time in Federal service?

A So I received the ODNI Award for Excellence -- it's a medal -- for my work during the Mumbai attack.

Q Okay.

A And I'm not going to go into any details there. Even when they awarded it, they couldn't go into any details in front of the office.

And then I got the Director's Award, which is kind of a big deal, for the marathon bombing. It's a huge production done here in D.C. The plaque is absolutely gorgeous.

It's cut crystal. It's -- you almost need some upper-body strength to lift it.

Q All right.

I want to talk to you a bit about domestic violent extremism and DVE cases.

Are you a familiar with how the FBI classifies or recategorizes investigations?

A So that can be done as a matter of policy on any case. So, for example, say, for instance, you are working innocent images -- which is the term that we use for what people understand to be child pornography, things of that nature -- and you come across the commission of another crime. Typically, then, you just tag that case, which is a term for SENTINEL, which is the system of record for the FBI.

Q Uh-huh.

A And you would just tag it.

So, say, for example, you're working innocent images and you come across evidence of -- I'm blanking on it -- political corruption, you can just tag it "political corruption."

Now, of course, then, if it becomes during the course of your normal investigation -- you can't ignore it, so if it becomes part of your normal investigation, the supervisor might decide to open up a whole new case on it, maybe reassign an agent to the PC, the public corruption -- yeah, public corruption, I'm sorry, public corruption -- may decide to move that to a different squad.

But, yes, you can tag it. Yes.

Q And at what stage in an investigation are cases given an investigative case classification?

A So the migration, especially for, like, domestic terrorism -- because I think that's why we're all here today -- typically begin as a Guardian lead.

Q Okay. And can you explain what a Guardian lead is?

A Sure.

So Guardians almost exclusively start at the law enforcement level, which means they start at the public level. So people will either call in to the police, call their attention to something, and it is a mechanism whereby local law enforcement can use an unclassified FOUO system, for official use only, and forward that -- I don't want to use the term "lead," because it means something else when we're talking about SENTINEL -- but forward that information to the FBI in the form of a Guardian.

So then those Guardians are handed out to an agent through the Guardian system, and a clock starts ticking. So we would have weekly Guardian meetings, and I forget what day of the week they're on. I think they're on Mondays or Tuesdays. And the supervisor would review only, like, the Guardians that are, like, aging beyond where they should be and trying to gain determination as to whether or not we want to proceed with a full field investigation or close the Guardian out.

And, regarding Tamerlan Tsarnaev, that came in as a Guardian as well, and there was some -- there's a heightened level of concern. People are maybe, not more bound, but concerned to close a Guardian out too soon if they -- you know, they make sure they want to have all their due diligence done before closing it out.

Because most of the Guardians that we get are EDPs, emotionally disturbed persons. And I'm sorry -- just so you know, you know, I've been counseled on 1001, told not to guess. But I'd say it's within the realm of probability that probably about 75 percent of the Guardians we get are EDPs, emotionally disturbed persons. And the FBI is not a social services agency. We start to get into privacy issues. And it's unfortunate, there's not a lot that we can do with those.

Q Who is responsible for determining and applying an investigative case classification or category?

A So it depends on how it comes to our attention. If it comes to our attention during the commission of a crime, say, a cyber intrusion or proprietary information walking out the door from MIT, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, you know, that could be a predication for it.

But, essentially, it comes down to a conversation between the squad supervisor and the agent that it's possibly going to get assigned to. And that's based on not just caseload but also, does that agent have a good background to pursue that? You know, you wouldn't want to give -- I can't think of an example. But you'd want to send in your best player that had some background to go out there, to go after something.

Q So would an agent's supervisor help them determine what classification to give a case then?

A I don't understand what you mean by "classification." Whether it's a domestic terrorism?

Q Right.

A Right. So almost all of your Guardian leads are going to be either DT or IT, domestic terrorism or international terrorism.

Q Okay.

A The majority of Guardian leads are domestic terrorism.

So those discussions are held -- so each CT supervisor will see the Guardians as they come in, and they will pull them out.

So, for example, say I'm the supervisor for CT3, which has Iran. CT3 in Boston, Iran is one of their areas of responsibility. I see a Guardian come in. Clearly, it's domestic terrorism. I'm just going to ignore it.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then the supervisor for CT2 would then pick that up.

Or say, for example, a Guardian came in and it was just unclear, is it DT, is it IT, does this person have any connections to a foreign terrorist organization, an FTO? There would be a discussion that would ensue.

It's not just -- there's no automated fashion to it. This is why, you know, personal relationships are so important.

Q What is the difference between a case classification and a case tag?

A Sure. So a case classification is the primary program-slash-crime that is being investigated. The case tag means that you have -- there may be some connections that we have observed during the course of our investigation.

So, in terms of subordination, a class casifi- -- sorry -- case classification -- English is my first language -- case classification would be primary to a tag.

Q So you would have multiple tags possibly apply to one case?

A Oh, yeah, absolutely. And in the TRP process, they actually encourage you, when you're writing your program notes, to tag -- it's not in SENTINEL; it's in the intelligence program management tool -- to tag crossovers.

So, say, me as the national security intelligence supervisor, I am working or my squad, my analyst, my SOS, staff operations specialist, is working a cyber case, and there is reason that we have to communicate -- maybe the case is tagged with counterintelligence, so I want to capture that in the program note, that these programs are crossing over with one another.

Q And you said the TRP process, which I want to get to in a little bit, encourages that behavior to --

A Oh, yeah. It actually comes out, like, in the field office health measures.

Q Okay.

A So, yeah, it's kind of a big deal.

Q Okay. I want to touch on that more in a bit.

Are you familiar with the threat tag "EDU officials"?

A I am, but that was only after I left the FBI, and I'm not qualified to comment on any of that. I have no firsthand knowledge.

Q Are you familiar with how often cases are reclassified from one category to another? Does that happen often?

A The IPC, the intelligence program coordinator, for each office would have those numbers. I would have to guess, and I don't want to do that.

Q Okay.

So it sounds like it's safe to say you worked on domestic violent extremism cases --

A Oh, yeah.

Q -- during your time at the FBI?

A All the time. Yeah.

Q What percentage of your cases were --

A So my last 2 years, it was all -- it was exclusively DVE. So I would work very closely with the supervisor of CT2 on those cases. And then my two analysts, one at the BRIC and one at the Fusion Center, would also have heavy interaction with both the entities that they support as well as the CT2 supervisor.

Q Were there instances where cases would be classified under one category but given "domestic violent extremism" tags?

A So I know -- I have firsthand knowledge of that occurring. I can't give you the exact number that that happened.

Q Okay.

A But, if I may, I just want to back up a little bit --

Q Okay.

A -- to provide some context as to how that happens.

The Director, Director Wray, puts out weekly his weekly minutes. And so I don't know, ma'am, if you've had the opportunity to look at my resume, but I'm 13 years Marine Corps, 13 years Navy. So there's a thing in the military -- and I don't know if it's this way on Capitol Hill, but they call it commander's intent. So there's a tone that is set by the commander, and people respond to that.

So there was a tone that was set by Director Wray and Assistant Director Sanborn to identify opportunities where cases could be tagged as domestic terrorism threats.

So anyone in pursuit of a smoking gun email or directive, their time would be ill-spent.

Q And those were weekly calls?

A Weekly emails that would come out from the Director, yeah.

Q All right. I want to touch on some more of that later.

First, are you familiar with the letter of then-Ranking Member Jordan sent to FBI Director Wray on July 27, 2022, regarding protected whistleblower disclosures related to the FBI's handling of domestic violent extremism case classifications?

A I am familiar with it. I have read it. But if you're going to ask me specific questions about it, my memory is not that good.

Q That's okay.

I would now like to enter it into the record as exhibit No. 1.

[Hill Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The letter reads, in part, "New whistleblower disclosures made by multiple FBI employees from different field offices indicate that the Biden administration's narrative may be misleading. We have received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases of DVEs to satisfy their superiors. For example, one whistleblower explained that because agents are not finding enough DVE cases they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases even though there's minimal circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification."

Are you aware of any instances at the FBI where an agent was encouraged to reclassify a case?

A Not specifically, no. Tagging, yes; reclassification, no.

Q So you're aware of instances where agents were encouraged to tag cases?

A Yes.

Q To be DVE?

A Yes, to tag them as DVE, yes. It's kind of, you know --

Mr. Foster. Can I clarify?

Do you mean tag as DVE even though there was insufficient reason in your view to do so?

Mr. Hill. Oh, yeah. Yes. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q That was what my next question was.

A But the whole DVE, the whole domestic terrorism/international terrorism construct is kind of awkward, because, for example, when does a red-blooded American who is planning to commit some sort of act of terrorism -- simply because they visit a Wahhabist website, does that make them under the control of a foreign terrorist organization, or are they still a domestic violent extremist? There's some subjectivity here in that construct that one could slip and fall down on.

And I can think of -- I don't remember the details of the case, and we're not authorized to discuss cases in here anyway. But we had a case, a young man by the name of Faradels (ph), that they insisted was an international terrorist, and, you know, I think today we probably could've easily gotten him declared as a domestic violent extremist.

But, yeah, it's subjective, a lot of the times. And it can be shifted depending upon commander's intent.

Q Okay. So, in your professional opinion, you've seen cases be assigned tags that did not warrant those tags?

A Correct. And I have firsthand knowledge -- I don't know whether we want to get into it -- examples of that happening.

Q Yes, we would like to hear some of those examples, if you feel comfortable sharing them in this forum.

A So probably the most egregious and one of the things that pushed me over the edge was a tirade by Steve Jensen, who was at the time a section chief with the Domestic Terrorism Section.

And on these phone calls that took place beginning on January 7th -- it took place twice daily for a couple of weeks and then went to daily and then eventually went to weekly. But these calls took place over all 56 fusion centers, so -- and anybody could dial into that number.

Q And what were these calls related to?

A I'm sorry?

Q What were they related to, the topic?

A The January 6th events.

Q Right. Okay.

A So there were three individuals that Philadelphia was pushing back on wanting to open up a case on. And they had done their due diligence. They had --

Q I'm sorry. Pushing back on who?

A Steve Jensen on this conference call with literally thousands of people listening.

Q So Steve Jensen was encouraging --

A I'm getting to that. Sorry.

Q No, that's okay.

A So, you know, this is a conversation that took place almost 2 years ago. But the Philadelphia office said, well, there's no evidence of any kind of, you know, violent leanings or insurrectionist leanings, to which Steve Jensen said, you know, I don't give a blank, they're goddamn terrorists and we're gonna round them all up.

And, you know, so it was that kind of narrative that was not so blatant. I sent that email in April, so 4 months later, so I think that Steve Jensen had pretty much run out of patience by that time. Prior to that, it was much more subtle to get these reclassified as DT cases.

So, essentially, they were case managing with people who were not FBI, from Seattle to Miami, from San Diego to Bangor, with this narrative.

And then there were other instances that I can speak of, when the committee here thinks it's appropriate, regarding things that actually happened in Boston that I was witness to. So you'll have to let me know when you want to go into those.

Q We'll get there. Do any of those instances deal with the reclassifications or --

A No. They have to deal with --

Q Just the tagging?

A No.

Q Okay.

A -- with "you will open up a case on these people."

Q Okay.

A Right.

Q Let me --

Mr. Foster. A criminal case.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

Why do you think there was this, as you called it, commander's intent to push DVE tags? Was it done to bolster numbers or --

A So the TRP process, which is -- really, I mean, hopefully the committee plans on getting Dave Schlendorf in here to testify about the whole TRP process, the genesis of it and how it is so -- it is the construct that everything resides within.

So, when the threat review prioritization takes place at headquarters and they set the national threat priorities and the threat banning levels, that's driven not just by caseload but it's driven also by conversations that take place with our partners throughout the country when you're talking domestic issues, whether it be violent crime, innocent images, public corruption, domestic terrorism, and then our other intelligence community partners, you know, when you're talking matters of counterterrorism, you have the NCTC weighing in on that. So that all is done at headquarters.

But the IPM, by construct, is supposed to be responsive to what our partners are seeing. So, if our partners are seeing a big uptick in domestic violent extremists, then the TRP process needs to reflect that.

Q Uh-huh.

A So one can create that perception -- my MBA is in marketing, so excuse me if I get into that realm. But one has to create that perception, then, that if you want TRP to reflect a rise in domestic terrorism numbers, domestic violent extremist numbers, then you need to -- and I'm not saying this is done, because I don't have any proof of it, I don't sit with Director Wray or the Director of National Intelligence -- but then one would need to create the perception that these cases are all over the country and in numbers that the TRP needs to reflect some sort of mitigation plan attached to it.

Q Okay. I want to ask you some more about that.

First I'd like to enter into the record an October 21, 2022, letter from the FBI to then-Ranking Member Jordan as exhibit No. 2.

[Hill Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this letter talks a bit about the TRP process.

A Uh-huh.

Q I won't read it in full, but I'll read an excerpt.

"The FBI uses the Threat Review and Prioritization process as a standardized method for reviewing and prioritizing threats within operational programs to inform threat strategies, mitigation plans, and resource allocation. Headquarters operational divisions use the TRP process to uniformly define threat issues for the organization, determine their prioritization at the national level, establish FBI National Threat Priorities, and develop national threat strategies for those threats to the FBI enterprise. Field Offices then consider the results of the national-level TRP process to prioritize threat issues and create threat strategies to mitigate threats based on the threat landscape of their specific areas of responsibility."

According to the FBI, it conducts the TRP process to prioritize threat issues and create threat strategies on a biennial basis. However, the TRP process may be conducted annually at the discretion of the field office or a headquarters operational division head.

Was that true during your tenure at the FBI?

A Yes, it was true then. And to the best of my knowledge, speaking with friends that are still with the Bureau, that remains the case, yes.

Q Do you know if, as part of the TRP process, headquarters operational divisions develop national threat strategies for each threat issue?

A Well, they -- yeah, they do.

Q Okay.

A But, you know, for example -- so, like, when they do the TRP process, there are just some things that are -- like, this is the FBI term, not my term, but there are offices that have programs called Indian Country, where the FBI has investigative authority to go onto Native American reservations.

Obviously, that's going to be on the TRP. And, you know, there's just basically a line through it for Boston. So sometimes it just doesn't pertain to you. So it rolls out nationally, you know.

So, like --

Q Yeah.

A -- this is funny point. I mean, Boston had the last IRA case, Irish Republican Army case, in the country. Other offices aren't getting IRA cases.

Q So, then, these national threat strategies guide the FBI-wide mitigation efforts?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you help us understand a bit how that works in practice?

A Sure.

So this rolls out from headquarters, the TRP. And the IPC, the intelligence program manager, who is an O132, will set up meetings with each ASAC responsible for the program that that falls within.

So, in Boston, one ASAC had both counterintelligence as well as cyber. Then there was a CT ASAC, who had the whole gambit, from domestic terrorism to international terrorism. And then they had the criminal ASACs. I did not participate in those criminal programs, other than what little sight I had on it at the HIDTA.

So those meetings would be held. So everyone would sit down in a conference room probably about the size of this, maybe a little bigger, and they would have the documents in front of them. And they would, you know, give everyone a chance to say, you know, headquarters rates this threat as a, you know, level 4. And I don't remember -- sorry, it's been 2 years since I looked at them, so I don't want to wing it and give wrong information. But they would give it a ranking. And so -- on a national scale.

So then we would say, well, what is it in this office? You know, because clearly there are some issues, like I said, that relate more closely to other offices, say, San Antonio, than they would to Boston. And, okay, in this office, it's only down at number three.

Okay. So what steps do we need to mitigate those? And that's where the FOS, the field office strategic plan, comes into place. You know, how much time and effort and agents, analysts, are we going to spend towards this? And, you know, so what steps are we going to take to mitigate it?

And it was all heuristic, meaning rule of thumb. It was, like, eh, I think we need two finished products and a couple human sources and maybe a Title III and a FISA, you know, depending on the program, and everybody think that's good? And everybody nods this way.

And it's intentionally low-balled, because at the end of the year or during the course of the year, you know, if you're exceeding those metrics, say, I'm going to write 50 intelligence IIRs, information -- IIR -- what is an IIR? Anyhow, an IIR is an unfinished intelligence product, meaning there's no analysis to it, it's just the facts, it's just a Joe Friday -- I'm going to write 50 IIRs regarding Iranian cyber activity, knowing that I want to get 75, I'm winning.

Q All right.

So did these national threat strategies identify a targeted number of cases under each category that the division sought to open or pursue?

A No. No.

Q Okay.

A No. It was always about the overarching threat and then the steps to mitigate it. Those were the only thing that was part of the TRP process.

Now, the program review manager, which sits in the Intelligence Directorate, has a lot of sway over that.

Q Okay.

A So they would interact with the SSA, the supervisory special agent, saying, you know, we're seeing this level of activity, you know. And there would be a dialog going back and forth, maybe an email, that we want to see, you know, more cases on this, you know. And the SSA might say, well, we don't have predication, or we disagree with the level of activity you're seeing from, you know, international terrorist organizations or domestic terrorist organizations. So there's a dialog that goes back and forth.

So, yes, there is a discussion that takes place between the Intelligence Directorate, the program manager within the Intelligence Directorate, and the SSA responsible for whether it's international terrorism or domestic terrorism.

Q Okay.

We have learned that the FBI dispenses awards and promotions based upon whether a supervisor hits a specified number of investigations or cases in certain categories.

A Right. So that's all part of the field office health measures.

Q And so you're aware of this system?

A Oh, yeah. Yeah.

Q And the field office health measures, are those separate and distinct from the FOS, the field office strategic --

A They're divided from the FOS, to some degree, yes.

Q Okay.

A Because it encompasses other things, like how many people participated in the employee survey, interactions with State and local partners. There's a whole bunch of measures that are hard to quantify, that are more qualitative measures. But that would be one that could be measured in a quantifiable manner.

Q And how is that system related to the TRP process?

A It is not. It's more related to the SAC's bonus process, the field health measures are.

Q The field health measures --

A Yes.

Q -- are related to the SAC's bonus.

A Structure, yes.

Q Okay.

[redacted] You want to defer to Mr. Gaetz?

Mr. Gaetz. I'm going to jump in for a moment here, sir. My name is Matt Gaetz. I'm a majority member of the House Judiciary Committee.

Is it your testimony today that the threat review prioritization process was improperly manipulated?

Mr. Hill. It's flawed from its inception. And let me explain why I say that, because I think it has to be qualified.

I think most of the people in this room are lawyers. I had a short period of time, in between wars, in the private sector. During that time, I became an ISO 9000 certified auditor, which is the gold standard for performance metrics.

The entire TRP process has no foundation. It's -- if you can create a narrative that feeds the TRP process, then there's no foundation for it. It is a construct out of whole cloth, out of thin air.

Mr. Gaetz. And does that lack of a foundation make the TRP process more susceptible to the subjectivity that you testified to?

Mr. Hill. Oh, 100 percent.

Mr. Gaetz. Would you describe it as highly subjective?

Mr. Hill. That's a good adjective. If I could think of one stronger, I would, but not right now.

Mr. Gaetz. In the follow-on to January 6th, do you believe that the perceived threat was enhanced in order to justify higher prioritization of January 6th-styled cases?

Mr. Hill. Look, I'm going to answer that question, but I need to precede it with the following, because I had direct observation.

The number of CT cases for international terrorism started to decline almost in a linear fashion with the level of activity in Iraq, the implementation of the TSA, the hardening of aircraft cockpits. CT cases based on international terrorist organizations were largely driven by the rise of ISIS and their presence on the internet, to the point where there were discussions in the TRP process whether or not to reduce the staffing on the squads that handle international terrorism.

There were over 385,000 violent crimes in the United States in 2022 -- 2021. There was no discussion about enhancing the effort there.

So, when we got into these discussions in terms of resources, where they could be shifted, the discussion was domestic terrorism, to the point where, in Boston, during the process of carving out a separate squad, the domestic terrorism squad also handles special operations like DOD explosive ordnance disposal, some other things, and creating a whole new squad for that just so they can focus on domestic terrorism.

Did that answer your question, sir?

Mr. Gaetz. Other witnesses have told us that resources that were outward-focused, looking at terrorism abroad, were, during this time period, shifted for an inward focus. Did you observe that as well?

Mr. Hill. Yeah. I had direct observation of that, from international terrorism to domestic terrorism, at a time -- which would have made sense, because international terrorism has been declining for the last 5 years. But there are other instances, like violent crime, over -- the CDC records, over 100,000 overdose deaths -- there was no redirecting of resources to that.

Mr. Gaetz. Understand.

So, as you observed the threat level abroad lowering --

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. -- and as you observed violent crime in the United States on the rise, did you ever assess the propriety of realigning those previously outward-facing resources to domestic violent extremism rather than to the violent crime?

Mr. Hill. If I -- I hope -- I want to try to get your question right, because, like I said before when I came here, I want to be helpful. So if I get it wrong, please correct me.

The drop in international terrorism cases should have freed up resources to address the rise in other areas that the FBI is chartered for -- violent crime, gangs, drugs, those things. Instead, those freed resources were moved towards domestic violent extremism.

Does that answer your question, sir?

Mr. Gaetz. And did you assess the propriety of that?

Mr. Hill. In the TRP process, to the SAC and the ASACs and the people seated there, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So you -- well, I mean, I guess --

Mr. Hill. Because I'm allowed to participate in the TRP process.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure.

Mr. Hill. So I would argue that, because it -- I'm going to botch the word -- it's an iterative process where we discuss, you know, things that are going on, it's supposed to be, you know, a forum where we can have those discussions in terms of shifting of resources.

So, yes, I did raise it during the TRP meetings for years, even before the events of January 6th, and we were seeing declines in other areas and not a shifting of resources into areas where it's increasing.

Mr. Gaetz. Why did that not occur? Why did the shifting of resources not append to the rise in violent crime rather than to the subjective perception of domestic violence extremism?

Mr. Hill. I could only give my opinion on that. I can't give a conversation or present a document to answer that question. If you want my opinion, I can give it. If not --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you were a part of this process.

Mr. Hill. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So I'm trying to understand, as you're observing this TRP process serve this subjective narrative about domestic violent extremism --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. -- rather than serve a need in the actual data for rising violent crime, did you come to any conclusions in your own mind about why that process was serving the subjective narrative rather than the objective rise in domestic violent crime?

Mr. Hill. Right. It was unsupported, the shift that they made, based on the evidence that one would normally look at during the TRP process. So the only thing I could conclude was one of two things: It was either leadership failure, or it was in pursuit of commander's intent, which was, we need more DV cases.

Mr. Gaetz. And it's your testimony today that you believe that Director Wray's weekly minutes that he put out facilitated servicing the subjective narrative around domestic violent extremism rather than resourcing law enforcement assets to address violent crime.

Mr. Hill. Yes, sir. It's pretty clear on his weekly email that he sent out. One doesn't have to be Carnac to interpret his meetings, minute meetings -- or meeting minutes.

Mr. Gaetz. So you described this prioritization process, which I'm sure a lot of Americans want the FBI to get right because we do have limited resources and we have to apply them to the threat. And you described the circumstance where, because of these minutes from Director Wray and because of this commander's intent, you're seeing resources improperly applied during that TRP process.

Have you ever seen that before in your career? Have you ever seen subjective narrative capture the TRP process in the way you're describing?

Mr. Hill. Oh, no. No. Absolutely. It was always evidence-based, evidence-driven.

Mr. Gaetz. And this is the first time you felt as though there was a departure from an evidence-, data-driven approach to the allocation of these --

Mr. Hill. That's my observation.

The TRP process didn't come into -- and I'm sure Mr. Schlendorf would be able to correct the record here, but I believe it was either 2012 or 2013 the TRP process came into effect. Prior to that, it was called the SAPR, semi-annual program review. And that was something that Director Mueller had kicked off, trying to emulate what Bernie Kerik and Mayor Rudy Giuliani were doing in New York.

Mr. Gaetz. So this unprecedented change in the TRP process that you had not seen before, where we were captive to narrative rather than data, do you believe that that resulted in enhanced DVE tags on cases that agents were working across the country?

Mr. Hill. I think that's a fair assessment, but I would -- using my FBI disciplinary process, I would say -- I would assess with low confidence that that's the case, because I think you need more witnesses and more testimony.

But I would not make that an intelligence gap and say I don't have information to make that assessment. I would say that there's enough information out there to pursue further investigation that, yes, sir, that is the case.

Mr. Gaetz. I want to go back to these calls that began on January 7th with Steve Jensen. You mentioned that there were thousands of people on these calls. Do I --

Mr. Hill. I'm just doing that by mathematically. I don't know for a fact how many people were on these calls. But there are 56 fusion centers, and in those fusion centers -- and they vary in size. In my particular case, we probably had 10 people in between the fusion center and the BRIC, the Boston Regional Intelligence Center. But you get into places like California and New York, you have hundreds. And --

Mr. Gaetz. So thousands were invited. Is that right?

Mr. Hill. Thousands were invited, right. So --

Mr. Gaetz. And, yeah, I don't expect you to know precisely at this moment how many participated, but --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. -- safe to say a large number from across the country, right?

Mr. Hill. Yes, sir. Thousands.

Mr. Gaetz. And how many of these calls do you think you participated in, ballpark?

Mr. Hill. I sat through them for months. So I finally had reached my limit with Jensen's outburst in April. So they started, I believe, on January 7th, these calls. And they were twice daily for almost 2 weeks -- almost 10 days. And then they went to daily, and then they went to, like, later on, like 6 months out, weekly.

So these were nationwide calls that anybody could dial in if they had that number, and you were automatically muted. That's how they set up the -- so it was -- you know, unless the person conducting the call unmuted you.

So, the instance with the Philadelphia office, you know, when Steve Jensen was essentially telling them, "You're going to open up these three individuals as cases," they could decide if they were going to unmute your microphone.

Mr. Gaetz. So I want to get a good sense -- and we may have to come back to this in the next majority hour, but I want to get a good sense of the types of things that happened on those calls.

So one thing you identified is the direct ordering of opening up cases. Were tags discussed specifically and --

Mr. Hill. Yeah. So that usually would fall under kind of, like, the warm-up act, which was Timothy Thibault. He would kind of set the tone for the call. And --

Mr. Gaetz. And what was that tone?

Mr. Hill. I learned early on in my military career, only panic when human life is at stake, and when human life is at stake, don't panic.

I would characterize Mr. Thibault's tone, sometimes bordering on hysterical. He's speaking to thousands of people, using the bullhorn that is the FBI and its reputation, to drive the narrative that our democracy almost ended on January 6th.

Which would then lead into: We're working with these people, we're working with Silicon Valley, we're working with other law enforcement partners, we're looking at maybe past foreign influence, you know, these are the kinds of things we're doing.

Which is not uncommon for an FBI briefing to have. I would do the same thing on the quarterly JTTF meetings in Boston. Because you want to know -- people need to know what it is you're doing to mitigate it. But it was the hyperbolic manner on a daily basis that he went through this --

Mr. Gaetz. Had you ever observed that type of a tone before on this type of a call?

Mr. Hill. No, never, any kind of call. I mean, it's just not what an intelligence or a law enforcement professional does. You want to engender trust, and the way to engender trust is to convey that you're in control of this situation as opposed to reacting.

Mr. Gaetz. So the calls would start with Mr. Thibault.

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. And you would view that as sort of a hysterical --

Mr. Hill. The warm-up.

Mr. Gaetz. -- warm-up. And then what would happen next?

Mr. Hill. And then Steve Jensen would get in and talk about details, what we're seeing in each field office, you know, what they're getting from Capitol Hill Police, so more operationally driven.

[11:01 a.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. Did that include discussion of tags and how to use these DVE --

Mr. Hill. That was usually Steve Jensen's -- not Steve Jensen's. I'm sorry. Thibault's role.

Mr. Gaetz. But did they encourage the use of DVE tags in this case?

Mr. Hill. Yeah, absolutely.

Mr. Gaetz. And was Ms. Sanborn ever a participant --

Mr. Hill. No. I never heard her on the calls.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know if the calls were ever recorded?

Mr. Hill. I don't know.

Mr. Jordan. You said twice a day for 10 days, once a day for months. How long total?

Mr. Hill. So I'm going by memory, so -- and I know this is sworn testimony -- but to the best of my recollection, yeah, 10 days, twice a day, and then once a day for -- I'd say almost at least until June of that year. So at least six months.

And it was very odd, too, because when the FBI switched over to the new Microsoft Office suite of products, they have this product called OneNote. And for over a week, WFO had a OneNote up there that anybody with access to the FBI UNet system, the unclassified system, could go in and just put in a name for further scrutiny. Highly unusual and kind of -- it was just unusual that they would do that.

Mr. Gaetz. Had you seen that practice before?

Mr. Hill. No, I never saw that before.

Mr. Gaetz. What do you think caused that?

Mr. Hill. I think the hysteria. I really do. I mean, if you're in command, which Timothy Thibault was -- if I had a commanding officer, a head of a military operation, come out with that level of -- I want to choose the right word, and I don't want to be hyperbolic -- but that level of excitement, it would not engender my trust in their leadership going into that maybe hostile environment.

Mr. Gaetz. I mean, you've been in the military for decades, at NSA, at FBI. As you were observing the leadership cast this vision, engage in this hysteria, did you do that as best law enforcement practice, or did you do that as a deviation from best law enforcement practice?

Mr. Hill. That is as far deviation as one can get. We used to have a saying in the Marine Corps that he or she would not follow that individual out of curiosity to see what they would do next.

Mr. Gaetz. I think that's a good spot for us to maybe hand it to the minority.

[redacted] I'm going to ask just a couple questions.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q So these calls, that started on January 7th?

A Yes. To the best of my recollection, it was the day after.

Q And it involved the whole country?

A Yes.

Q And it seems to me -- and correct me if I'm wrong -- that the entire FBI, the whole country that is represented on these calls, is asked to put things on hold and focus on the events of January 6th?

A Absolutely. That was crystal clear that this is on the scale of 9/11, Pearl Harbor, all hands on deck, everybody grab the rope and pull in the same direction.

Q So the long list of other cases that all the field offices are busy working are essentially put on hold to deal with the events of January 6th?

A That's fair.

Q So drug cases? Gang cases?

A Yeah, I'm not saying they stopped. But like I said, the commander's intent was J6 domestic violent extremists. That's where the focus needs to be.

You said gang cases and drug cases. I just want to deviate for just a second. That is the one portion of the FBI that has stayed ideologically pure to the FBI's mission. And this is based on direct observation. They don't get sucked up into the vortex because they're dealing with some of the worst people on Earth, and they know where the threat is. And they deal with them on a daily basis, and they take some degree of risk.

Q Based on your experience, what types of cases did take a back seat to pursuing these January 6th matters?

A I can't say because I was directly involved with these matters, so I couldn't see where assets were pulled. In my conversations with the domestic terrorism squad's supervisor, I do know that he had offers of help from other agents, but there was nobody being pushed on him and on that squad to work DT cases.

So, like, after the bomb went off on Boylston Street, everybody was working the marathon bombing. That was not the case for January 6th. Not in the Boston office. I can't speak to the other field offices.

[redacted] Okay. I think our time is up.

[redacted] It is.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] We'll let the minority question you for an hour.

Mr. Hill. Okay.

Mr. Hill. I'm fine. I mean, everybody in here is probably a lot more busy than I am.

[redacted] Okay. We're going to go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 11:18 in the morning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Again, I'm [redacted] I'm the Democrats' chief oversight counsel. And thank you, again, for joining us today.

I want to go back to one thing you mentioned because I think I might have misheard you. When did you retire from the FBI?

A My official retirement date was October 1st of 20- -- this is 2022, so -- I was there for 10 years. I got there in 2010, April 2010. I was there for a little bit over 10 years. So I guess it would be October 1st of 2021, my official retirement date, yeah.

Q And when you say "official," was there some date before that where you stopped working with the FBI?

A No. No. I mean, I took a lot of leave to burn that up in between. But yeah.

Q Okay. Thank you.

And taking another step back, you talked through your background briefly. I don't know if we ever got to your education. Can you talk through your educational history? Where did you go to school? I know you said you were in the Marine Corps?

A Sure. So let's see. I had just come back from Japan and decided to go and get my bachelor's degree, and that would have been 1984, I think, 1984. So I have a bachelor's -- BSBA, bachelor's of science in business administration with a concentration in finance.

Q Okay.

A And I graduated from East Carolina in May of 1990 even though I had got out of the Marine Corps in November of 1989 because I couldn't meet the reenlistment criteria because I was a single parent.

Q Okay. And I know you said you have an MBA. From --

A Yes. Drexel.

Q And when did you receive that?

A 1996.

Q Okay. Do you have any other degrees?

A No. No. I was thinking of maybe going back for a doctorate. Instead, I got certified as a scuba instructor. It seemed more fun.

Q Maybe that counts as a degree.

Okay. And no degrees in, like, national security studies or anything like that?

A No. No. But I do teach a master's program in homeland security studies. So my students are all master's candidates.

Q You mentioned very early on in the interview Peter Strzok.

A Yes.

Q Did you ever meet Mr. Strzok?

A No, I never did.

Q Did you ever meet Lisa Page?

A No.

Q Did you ever -- were you ever based in Washington, D.C., with your work with the FBI?

A No. I visited numerous times because I was there for either training or conferences or things of that nature, maybe meeting with other law enforcement partners -- I'm sorry -- intelligence community partners. But, no, I never actually went there and clocked in each day and went to work.

Q Okay. And you never based out of the headquarters here?

A No, never.

Q Okay. Did you ever work on Crossfire Hurricane?

A No. Not worked on it, no. I was familiar with it. I read Inspector Horowitz's review of it, which is over 400 pages, which is great if you can't get to sleep.

Q But you never -- you didn't personally work on the case?

A No, no.

Q Did you ever work on Crossfire Razor?

A No.

Q Did you ever do any work on the Midyear Exam investigation?

A I did not. Again, I read all the IG reports on all of those.

Q We talked a little bit about threat tags earlier. Can you just clarify, how does the FBI use threat tags, in your experience?

A So hopefully everybody understands, like, threat tags. So how Sentinel works. But it's just -- we're not talking, like, paper case files. It's just an electronic means of putting, you know, like a Post-It note on something. But it's just, like, you just hit a bubble, and it fills out, you know, domestic terrorism.

So the IPC, the intelligence program coordinator, who is almost always an 0132 GS-14 supervisory intelligence analyst, rolls up those numbers almost quarterly -- I'm sorry -- monthly as to how many cases we've had, how many have been closed, how many have been reclassified, how many have multiple tags and things of that nature.

And as I said in testimony earlier, any time an agent or an analyst is given the opportunity to show cross-programmatic coordination going on is a big plus for the health measure for the office.

Q Is it kind of fair to say that they're used to help gather statistics? Would that be a fair --

A Well, there are statistics. Yes. Yeah. Yeah, absolutely.

Q Okay. And are tags placed on cases, or are they placed on individual people?

A No. They're on cases.

Q Okay.

A Now, those cases, though, are tied to people. Somebody owns it.

Q When you say "somebody owns it," you mean agents?

A Some agent owns it, yeah.

So an analyst, an FBI analyst, cannot open up an investigative case.

Q Okay.

A They can populate it, which they do voluminously, especially, like, in instances like the Boston Marathon bombing, but they do not open cases.

Q You talked about a call that set you off.

A Yes.

Q Can you provide a little more information about that. For example, do you recall what day that was?

A I don't. It was April. Let me see if I have it, if I wrote it down here. Because I sent an email to my own personal account to basically say don't forget this guide.

Jeez. I am so, so sorry. I mean, obviously, I don't have my laptop here. But it was in April of 2021.

Q Do you recall if it was in the morning or the afternoon or what time it was?

A That I sent the email?

Q No, that you were on this call.

A They're always in the morning.

Q Okay.

A Well, there's afternoon calls, which were usually shorter. But by April, we had moved to just one call a day, if not one call a week.

Again, it's a while ago. I don't recall if four months down the road we were at one call a week or one call a month. I would say that it's probably one call a month. I'm sorry. I'm sorry. One call a week at that time.

Q Okay. And can you describe the circumstances that you yourself happened to be on this call?

A It's my job.

Q Were there -- can you talk about that a little bit more? When you say it was your job, was your job to be on these calls?

A So as a supervisor, my number one responsibility -- not my responsibility, but the thing that I think that I personally embrace as a supervisor is, are my analysts making -- it was pretty easy in this case because I was only working with one SSA. Well, actually two. But in terms of DT, just one SSA.

My primary concern at all times was, are my analysts putting a smile on this person's face? Are they doing the kinds of things that they want to help make them successful? So -- I'm so sorry. I lost track of my -- your question.

Q So I was asking how you -- you said it was your job to be on the --

A Oh, why I was on the call. Sure. Yeah. So I want to make sure -- the only way I can do that -- I can't do that by being locked away in my office doing something else. I need to know what the atmosphere is like. And after January 6th, it was Thibault and Jensen who were controlling that atmosphere. So I needed to know firsthand where their -- in this particular case, they were kind of like the commander. So I had to know what their intent was because my SSA that my analysts supported, even though they weren't interacting directly with Thibault and Jensen, they were interacting with people that work for those gentlemen.

So my goal is to make sure that my analysts are responsive to the SSA, who in turn can be responsive to WFO, Washington Field Office.

So you can't do -- one cannot do that by doing something else. So even though I had the HIDTA, the High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area -- I don't want to use too many acronyms so the people are like, you know, what are you talking about?

So even though I had dual responsibility of the HIDTA, you know, HIDTA business can just wait until that daily phone call or weekly phone call by that time is over so that I don't -- I don't want to get secondhand from one of my analysts what a section chief said. I don't. I want to hear what that person said, where their mind is at, where they're driving towards, so that I can respond to it and meet their expectations.

Q Did anybody instruct you to join these calls or order you to join the calls?

A No, no. It's just the job. I mean, yeah.

Q And were there others from your office on the call? I know you said there were thousands of people.

A Sure. So I had an IA that would participate --

Q I'm sorry. Can you define IA?

A Intelligence analyst. I'm sorry. I just got through saying I'm not going to use all these acronyms.

My intelligence analyst. So they're a 0132 job series. I had one in the BRIC, the Boston Regional Intelligence Center, and another one in the Commonwealth Fusion Center. So two IAs.

And then usually on those calls would be maybe somebody from the BRIC sitting with the IA out there. You know, one or two people from the BRIC depending on their time and availability. And there would be somebody, one or two individuals, from the Commonwealth Fusion Center sitting with the IA on that call.

Q And did that IA, the intelligence analyst, did that person report up to you?

A Yes.

Q And was there anybody who you reported to also on that call directly?

A I didn't report to anybody on the call. My boss, who did not participate in the calls because he has the entire intelligence program -- I had given his name in testimony before, but he's an SSIA, supervisory -- senior supervisory intelligence analyst.

Q And he did not participate on the call?

A I've never -- I've never discussed -- you know, I've never heard him -- I discussed the call -- I briefed him on the calls. He never briefed back to me. So I'm just assuming, for all the danger that that incurs, assuming that he participated in the calls.

Q Okay.

A You don't really participate unless they want you to participate. You basically sit and listen.

Q Okay. You made a comment about case numbers or report numbers, I guess, and you said if you are exceeding your numbers, you get bonuses. Do you recall that?

A No. The only person who gets a bonus is the senior executive. So the only person who is going to get a cash bonus would be the SAC, the supervisor agent in charge of the office. So that's the number one person in most field offices. New York, Los Angeles have SACs, plural, and then they also have ADICs, assistant director in charge, which is senior to an SAC.

Q And can you talk about how you know about the bonus structure? You were not an SAC, correct?

A I know of the bonus structure. It was common knowledge. People speculate as to what that amount is. The SAC has jokened about it. I've had, I don't know, four or five SACs in my time in Boston, and they would joke about their bonuses, I mean. So it was -- it's common knowledge. I'm not speculating. It exists.

Q Did you ever ask anybody what the structure was for the bonuses for the SACs?

A How they get it? It's -- I know that based on -- it's usually done in a jocular manner because it's kind of awkward that the SESs get bonuses. I don't find it awkward.

I think if you are the senior executive in charge of a 400-person field office, I think there should be some sort of recognition of superior performance.

But it's largely derived from the field office health measure and the TRP numbers at the end of the year.

Q And, again, your source for -- how do you know that it's based on the field health --

A From the SAC who gets it.

Q And I'm sorry. Sorry to be -- but the SAC, can you -- did an SAC tell you that?

A They would joke about it in public, make light of it.

I don't know what your optic is on the FBI, but it's not like military. I mean, we joke, and we talk, and we talk about families and things of that nature. And it's not uncommon for an SAC to say, "Oh, I need to" -- just joking around. Like, "Yeah, we need to get those numbers up," or whatever. Yeah. So it's common knowledge.

Q Can you describe a particular time when an SAC might have made a joke about that to you?

A Sure. During the TRP process.

Q When was that?

A We do it every year.

Q Sorry. Could you possibly provide a date for that?

A I don't know when the TRP process is. It's an iterative process that takes place over a period of weeks. I'd have to go back and look at my FBI calendars. But they're unavailable to me.

Q Okay. You referenced -- I think you said a number of violent crime. I think it might have been upwards of 300,000. Do you recall that?

A I think I said 385- or something like that. 385,000. So that's from the Uniform Crime data from the FBI's own website.

Q When did you learn that?

A I looked at before coming in here to make sure I didn't speak out of turn.

Q But that wasn't something you learned when you were on the -- when you were working in the FBI field office?

A I kept abreast of all those numbers.

Q Do you recall the numbers from when you were with the FBI field office?

A No, I do not. No, I do not. Because -- I'll give you another example. One of the things that I argued for -- obviously I'm not an unbiased advocate, but I wanted more resources towards counterintelligence.

So I kept abreast of all -- I argued that we should see less resources in international terrorism.

So you manage numbers. You lead people. In order to lead people, I need to understand the numbers, and I need to manage those numbers.

Q Can you explain a little bit more about what you mean by that?

A I can't move resources and motivate people to do their jobs unless I understand what it is that I'm asking them to do.

So here's George's formula for a happy employee. Do you have the right amount of work? And by that, I mean not too much, not too little. Not so much that you're overwhelmed and not too little that you're bored and finding other things to do that are not directed towards the mission. And is the work that you have intellectually challenging? And that formula has served me well for over four decades in leadership positions.

And so in order to make sure that a person has enough work, I need to understand the numbers. In order to ensure that a person has intellectually challenging work, they need to be in the right program.

I'll give you an example. I had an intelligence analyst, West Point graduate, practiced law in the city of Chicago. First name Chris. Could do international terrorism in his sleep. Total waste of an intellectual giant.

And it took me -- because you can, if you want to, but I don't think it's a good way to operate. It took me a couple years to move him into counterintelligence. And the first year of him being in counterintelligence was brutally painful for him, me, and the supervisor.

But once he got his feet under him -- because it's far more complex in terrorism matters -- he became a giant at that. And his happiness increased. His desire to stay, to just be an FBI employee and do his job, increased.

But you've got to find that happy -- I know I'm just giving you my opinion. So tell me to shut up if I'm going on too -- but you got to find that happy place for people in order for them to do their job.

It's not that I'm a warm and fuzzy guy. I'm an ex-jarhead. But happy people tend to do their jobs better. And in order to get to that point, you need to identify the right intellect for that job and predilection, and understand the amount of work that's coming in there.

In Chris' case, I had a superior intellect with a dwindling amount of work. It's just a formula for trouble. Next thing I know, I would have had him on a performance improvement plan.

Q You mentioned that you argued for more resources for counterterrorism?

A Counterintelligence.

Q Counterintelligence. I'm sorry. Counterintelligence.

Who did you make that argument to?

A So I made that in the TRP process, and I would make it in performance reviews with my boss. I was a broken record. Anybody who would listen to me.

Q Do you recall if anybody responded to you?

A Yeah, no.

Q In the moment -- so, for example, in a performance review, if you delivered your opinion --

A Right.

Q -- nobody responded to you in that situation?

A Look, I don't want to give you or anybody else the impression that I was not listened to. That is not the case. But they have their jobs. So my SSIA has his job, and he reports to the DSAC who has his job, and they have to strike a balance, you know.

So I think any good supervisor, if they see a disparity between the threats coming in and the amount of resources directed towards those threats, has a moral obligation to raise those concerns to their superiors.

Q And were you ever in the room when the actual resource allocations were made?

A Yes, I was, multiple times throughout 10 years, where people were moved around.

Q So you were part of the discussions on how many agents, for example, would be assigned to a particular --

A Not agents. Analyst intel was my lane. I was not involved, privy to, probably not even -- maybe secondhand information, somebody venting their spleen to me about maybe losing an agent or gaining an agent. But I was never -- it just wasn't my lane.

Q I think earlier there was a question about why shifting of resources did or did not occur, and you said you can only give my opinion. Do you recall that?

A Yes.

Q And why is it that you can only give your opinion?

A Because I don't have firsthand knowledge of discussions that took place.

Q Around the shifting of resources?

A Yes.

Q And who would have had those conversations?

A So what are we talking about here? I want to make sure I answer your -- again, staying with my overarching goal, I want to be helpful, I want to be clear. What is it that you want to -- where are you going? Because I want to answer your question to the best of my ability.

Q Sure. So there was a question about -- I think there was a comment that the drop in certain terrorism cases should have freed up resources to focus on other areas.

A Right. So the drop in international terrorism cases should have freed up agents from the international terrorism squads to go wherever the stronger argument existed to have those agents.

Q And do you believe that occurred?

A No. I do not believe that occurred because the size of the international terrorist squads was the same as when I arrived at Boston as it was when I left.

My opinion is, because I'm not -- no one ever said this to me, so I'm just giving you my opinion -- my opinion is, is people are -- rightly so -- concerned about another 9/11-sized attack on the United States. And that's why people are reticent to pull resources from international terrorism squads and move them anywhere.

Q But you were never in the room when the decisions were made about whether to pull agents and move them or not?

A I don't want my conversations with supervisory special agents overriding my memory of firsthand knowledge. So that's why I'm pausing. I don't think I was ever firsthand knowledge privy to those discussions.

Q Okay. Thank you. We can move on.

We talked a little bit about the TRP process.

A Yes.

Q And you said that you were a part of the TRP process.

Can you explain a little bit more what you mean by part of the TRP process? Were you ever part of the process for determining what the TRP should be?

A So the answer is yes. So when the TRP comes from the intelligence directorate, the intelligence program coordinator will take that. And they print out documents from the IBM tool, an integrative program management tool. And then we all just meet in a room. And we have the criteria attached to the tables with each threat. So the criteria for the ranking and the steps to mitigate.

It's been over two years since I've sat in a room, but I've done multiple of those beginning in -- I think I said it before. I don't remember if it was 2012 or 2013 that that process started.

So let's just go on the low side. So between 2013 and my time of retirement, I participated in -- they were every other year, but you still have to do your FOSP, your field office strategic plan.

So I participated in those for at least seven years, just talking about the FOSP, on mitigation efforts. But that is part of your -- almost your daily routine, making sure that you are moving towards the steps that you articulated at the beginning of the fiscal year to mitigate the threat.

So even though the meetings take place for the FOSP every year and for the TRP every other year, there are discussions that take place regarding the FOSP and the TRP.

A week never goes by where you're not discussing either with the intelligence program coordinator or my own boss or the supervisory special agent, a week never goes by that you're not looking at, "Hey, this is what I said we were going -- this is what we said we were going to do. Are we doing what we said we were going to do?"

Q You said just now that you would get the criteria. Were you ever part of the discussion about how to set the criteria?

A So there is latitude. So the criteria comes from the director of intelligence. And then there is a mechanism -- so say, for example, the director of intelligence says that -- what do they call them? -- environmental activists are a tier three, let's just say. I'm just picking out things for purposes of this discussion.

So say they say that environmental activists are a tier three and they pose a threat at that level. Well, that might not be the case for Maine if they're putting in a new power line. So we can go back to headquarters and say, we want to -- we discuss it in quorum like this where everybody is together, and we say we want to raise it from a three to a two. So there's a mechanism for that.

So it may come down from headquarters as such, but we have the mechanism to say, "No, it's not a three. It's a two." Or, "No, it's not a two. It's a three. We don't have that kind of activity here in Boston."

We have a little bit of it for, like I said, Irish Republican Army. That might show -- it wouldn't, but I'm just using an example -- it shows up on the Tulsa Field Office that we don't have any IRA people here.

Q You mentioned the need for an evidence- or data-driven approach. In your opinion, should the TRP process be driven -- or should threats be prioritized based on the number of cases?

A So that would be -- go back to kind of -- that would be more representative of the SAPR, the semiannual program review, that Director Mueller had.

Since you asked me for my opinion, I'll give it. The TRP creates a mechanism of collection without the need to open cases. So we're talking about "Minority Report" levels of law enforcement. And my opinion is, is that the TRP process is only there to support the intelligence program, not so much the investigative effort.

Q And in your opinion -- you mentioned the SAPR process --

A Yes.

Q -- which is more driven by --

A Cases, yes.

Q -- case numbers. Do you have a belief between which one -- in your opinion -- which one was the superior process, the superior method?

A The SAPR process was more reminiscent of law enforcement activity opening up cases based on predication, whereas the TRP process is built on a more amorphous, these are things that are happening, and some people might do those things, so therefore we need to allocate these resources to address these things that people might do. And that probably makes no sense at all, so I'm ready for your follow-on question.

Q I'm just wondering if you have an opinion as to which method -- which is a superior method.

A I think the SAPR is more representative of what a law enforcement agency should be doing, and I think that the -- I would assess that the TRP process is a tool that is rife for abuse.

Q Okay. Thank you.

You mentioned Timothy Thibault -- Thibault?

A Yeah. I mean no disrespect to him. I don't know if that's how he pronounces his name or not.

Q Have you ever met -- did you ever meet him in person?

A I never did, no.

Q Okay. You described his comments as hyperbolic?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain what you mean by hyperbolic?

A So there's a tone that one sets in a leadership environment of calm and serenity in that, "Yes, this happened, this is what we're doing to address it. This is a direction that I'm leading you people in. Follow me."

When you get an increased level of volume and emotion in a voice -- and if I may, just for effect, to try to answer your question, you know, "Our democracy almost ended on January 6th!" -- that is not the kind of tone that a leader would set to engender trust. And not just in that individual, but that what did occur on January 6th would be addressed in a deliberative investigative fashion.

Q Okay. I want to change subjects a little bit.

Do you recall appearing on a podcast called "The Kyle Seraphin Show," which aired on January 9th, 2023?

A Yes.

Q And did you -- you appeared on that podcast?

A Yes, I did.

Q What were the circumstances that led to you appearing on that podcast?

A By circumstances, do you mean, like, the genesis of it? Like, what do you mean?

Q Were you asked to appear? Did you volunteer? Who reached out to you?

A So the first reach-out was on Twitter direct message from me to Kyle Seraphin. He had made a post about the FBI. I don't remember what the post was. And I direct-messaged him back and said that, "Hey, I worked for the FBI, too. I know you have resources to check me out. I'm not some weirdo that" -- you know.

So we talked for, I don't know, probably -- I think this is when he was just kind of getting this whole podcast thing going, which was only a month ago. We talked for about a half an hour. He said, "Yeah, I'd really like to do a long-form interview with you." And I had no idea what a long-form interview was.

So he called me one day, he said, "Hey, I'd like to do that podcast" -- whatever the date was that you just said -- "I'd like to do it at 9 o'clock. How does that work for you?"

And I'm like, it was only -- it was, like, 8:45 in the morning. So I quick reestablished -- I forget what platform, software platform, we used to do the interview.

But, yeah, that was how it came about.

Q On that podcast, you stated, quote, "I don't think we need a domestic intel program." Do you recall saying that?

A I don't recall those exact words, but I do think -- there was a discussion during the 9/11 Commission whether or not to create a domestic intelligence program, and if so, what would it look like? Would it look like the British MI-5 version where you have MI-5 domestic and MI-6 international, so CIA international and the creation of an MI-5?

And it was agreed upon by Members of Congress and the Senate in joint committee that they would create this intelligence capability, domestic intelligence capability, but it would belong to the Director of National Intelligence.

And so the FBI saw an immediate plus-up of over, budget-wise, of over 50 percent. And I gave the wrong number when I talked to Kyle. I think it was about 63 senior executive positions for this new intel capability, all of which were filled by 1811s. Now, that has changed to some degree, who fills those senior executive positions.

But I teach in my class that -- and just, again, we were talking earlier about numbers. The data in terms of international terrorism do not support a -- let me rephrase that.

It's up to Congress to decide, based on feedback from their constituency, whether or not the tradeoff between having a domestic intelligence program is worth the price of even the perception of an erosion of civil liberties.

Q And I don't want to cut you off, but I have another question, so --

Mr. Foster. I was just going to ask. If you're going to be going through various things that you say that he said, do you have a transcript that you can show him?

[redacted] We do have the video we can play, if that would be helpful.

Mr. Foster. So you don't have a transcript?

[redacted] We do have the video, if that would be helpful. I think I did email you yesterday to notify you that I might be going through this.

Did you have a chance to review the video after I -- did your attorney let you know that I --

Mr. Hill. He did, and I did not review it last night.

Mr. Foster. Don't answer questions about conversations with your counsel.

Mr. Hill. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to read a couple more quotes. If you'd like us to play the video, I'm happy to do that.

During the podcast, you stated, "The Congress with the Patriot Act gave them a mission. They gave them a domestic intelligence capability. George Bush challenged Bob Mueller. Bob -- he told Bob Mueller -- he said, 'I know you're going to find the people who did this, the 9/11 attack. What I want to know, Bob, is what are we going to do to stop the next one?'

"And that was the genesis. That was the very beginning of how we got to where we're at today of this 'Minority Report' manner of law enforcement where we're trying to do predictive analysis of when a crime is going to be committed."

Do you recall this?

A It sounds about right.

Q Do you recall what you meant by, "What are you going to do to stop the next one"?

A I didn't say it. President Bush said it.

Q What was your interpretation of what that meant?

A That your mission has changed from investigating the commission of a crime into the prevention of a crime.

Q And what is your opinion of that?

A Prevention of a crime is the role of public safety, which we're talking about law enforcement on the street. The FBI, to my understanding, is the investigative arm of the Department of Justice.

Q Do you believe that the FBI should be involved in what you described as the prediction of crime or the prevention of crime?

A The Congress, in response to 9/11, created that construct. I think it's up to Congress and their constituency to provide them feedback as to whether or not that should continue.

Q Okay. What did you mean by, quote, "We're trying to do predictive analysis of when a crime is going to be committed"?

A That's exactly -- just by --

Q Can you explain what you mean by "predictive analysis"?

A Sure. That's what we do.

So when you write intelligence -- you have intelligence bulletins. You have intelligence notes. And then you have intelligence assessments. Assessments are typically written -- jointly authored by the intelligence director at FBI headquarters and usually an IA, and it takes sometimes nine months to get one through the approval process.

So those bulletins are kind of like more like a heads-up. Those are U//FOUO documents.

Intelligence assessments are based on some sort of intelligence, whether it's electronically collected intelligence or human-collected intelligence, whereby the analyst puts forth an assessment. And in that assessment will be multiple assessments, graded either low, medium, or high, whether or not -- or not whether or not -- but that they would make an assessment -- I'm trying to think of an example that would help this conversation.

Q I think I understand where you were going. We can move on.

A Oh, okay. Go on. I don't even understand.

[Laughter.]

Q During the podcast you also stated, quote, "And people can take a dump on the TSA all they want, but at the end of the day, the bottom line is they are a deterrent, no more different than a set of Jersey barriers in front of the gate causing people to have to zigzag. And that's really how we got to where we're at today from an international terrorism standpoint. Well, now we have to create a whole nother bogeyman with domestic terrorism because we have to keep this machinery going."

Do you recall saying that?

A That sounds about right.

Q What do you mean by, "We have to create a whole nother bogeyman with domestic terrorism because we have to keep this machinery going"?

A So just staying with our earlier conversation regarding numbers, if you have a precipitous drop in international terrorism numbers, the IT focus -- so we're talking a national apparatus starting at NCTC, CTC at CIA, the counterterrorism folks at NSA. There's a huge mechanism that exists for international terrorism.

If one then takes an objective look at the theaters where these could -- the international terrorists could gestate and come to fruition and pose a threat to the United States, that environment has changed.

But you have this large construct out there that exists for maybe a couple of reasons. They are well-funded kingdoms. And there's also that possibility that, ooh, we might be wrong, there might be something that we missed, which causes another horrific event here. So there's a degree of risk in dialing that down.

Let me give you a good example of this. When Russia invaded Ossetia, I was in the Counterterrorism Mission Management Center, and we walked into the NSA operations floor for what's called the standup with the director. It was on a Monday morning.

And my boss, who was the senior executive, gives me the sharp elbow, and she says, "Who are all these people standing here?" And I said, "These are all the people that were forgotten about on 9/11." These were all people that were older than me, sixties, seventies, all old-school Russian analysts.

And the director started asking these people questions regarding what we had in terms of collection capabilities in the theater. And it was all, "We don't have it. We don't have it. We don't have it. We don't have it."

So I'm pretty adamant in my assertion that if the international terrorism numbers have dropped, which the data supports, that somebody, beginning at the ODNI level, needs to take a look at where these resources are going to be allocated so there's not another situation where it may be apparent to say, "Well, what do we have for resources here?"

Q Continuing on the podcast, you stated, quote, "So we need the money. We need the SES positions. We need the expansion. We need more authorities. We need more cooperation from the FISA Court. And we need some of these shackles moved because," quote, "'No American must die.'"

Do you recall this?

A I don't recall those exact words, but what I did say and what I can speak to is that in my day -- and I'm looking around here, I'm probably the oldest person in this room -- national security met the continuation of the United States and the protection of the Constitution.

On 9/11, that changed. It changed to no American shall die at the hands of a terrorist.

Q And what is your opinion of the "no American must die"?

A So one doesn't want to say, "Well, hey, people died. That happens." So I'm not going to say that.

What I'm saying is, is there's a tradeoff between how much predictive analysis you're going to do and how much you're willing to see an erosion of civil liberties.

Again, not my decision. It's the decision of the constituents that our congressional and senatorial represents.

Q You said later, "If you think about it, it goes down to what we talked about an hour ago. No Americans shall be harmed.

"When you have a zero-tolerance policy and you have a zealous, supercharged, empowered investigative/intelligence workforce, they're going to get after it."

Can you recall what you meant by "when you have a zero-tolerance policy"?

A Probably the best example that I can give is the zero policies that a lot of schools have for different things. And it doesn't allow for intervention and mitigation.

So if you have a zero -- if that's your standard, you're going to have a zero policy, it doesn't allow a lot of latitude and freedom to address a problem that could maybe mitigate it along the periphery as opposed to, "This cannot be."

Q Is the zero-tolerance policy that you're referring to, does that mean zero tolerance for terrorism? Zero tolerance -- what does that mean?

A No. The policy means that, no, not one single American shall die at the hands of a terrorist. That's what I refer -- that's what I mean by a zero-tolerance policy.

And, look, I've put my life on the line for this country more than once. I've buried friends. I'm still burying friends that are dying of burn pits. I don't want to leave you or anybody else here on the committee that I'm a callous, heartless person. I don't want anybody to die until God decides to call them home.

But life is full of risk, and we have to decide, collectively as a nation, how much risk are we willing to take relative to our level of protection of civil liberties?

Q And thank you for your service, sir.

You stated in the podcast, "There needs to take place a reeducation, and people need to understand that line in the national anthem, 'and the home of the brave,' willing to accept some risk." What did you mean by "there needs to take place a reeducation"?

A Lyndon Johnson ended the civics being taught in schools, I think in 1964, '65, or something of that nature. People don't understand, like, that someone who -- you get in a car, you take a risk. You get in a plane, you take a risk. But we don't think of it because it's in the back of our mind. We go about our daily business taking risk every day.

But I've seen over the course, especially over the last three years, of this desire for zero risk: That no one shall die of terrorism, no one shall die of COVID, no one shall die of whatever. And the simple truth of the matter is, is that people do die, they do get hurt, and we need to take steps to mitigate the possibility of that occurring.

So, like, when I was in the military, both in the Navy and the Marine Corps, we did a RAC, a risk assessment code. And you undertake dangerous things, whether it be the movement of troops or into a combat zone. And then, okay, what are the things we need to do to mitigate the detrimental effects of the operation that we are undertaking?

We've forgotten that as a society, that you put your seat belt on. Maybe you wear a mask or maybe you maintain safe distance or you wash your hands when you leave the bathroom. I mean, this understanding that there are some degree of risk in just being alive.

I went hunting on Saturday. It was 11 degrees and our kayaks were coated with three-quarters of an inch of ice. That hot shower I took at the end of the day was the best shower I think I ever had.

I mean, you take risk, you put yourself out there, and it gives you a deeper appreciation of the nice things that you do have, or going home to see your family or whatever it is. That's what I meant by that. And if I came across as callous, I want to apologize to you and anybody else who saw the video.

Q And I just have one more question on this line, and it's on the embracing risk that actually you were just talking about. You said people --

Mr. Foster. Is the question, what did you mean by something he said on the podcast?

[redacted] I'm just going to ask the question, if that's okay.

Mr. Foster. Well, I've let this go on for a while. Hang on. I've let this go on for a while. So I'm sure George is flattered that you're interested in his opinions on various things that he said in previous forums.

But the video is out there and speaks for itself. If you want to have him on a podcast and talk about these things you're free to do that.

You have a witness here who actually has factual information about things that he witnessed while working at the FBI. So he's here to help, and it's a voluntary interview, and he'll answer your questions if he wants to. But I think it would be a better use of everybody's time if we focus on factual information that he may have.

[redacted] Thank you for that. This goes to credibility and it goes to his position on various actions that the FBI may be taking. He was a supervisor. So I'm going to ask the question. You know, he's obviously welcome to decline to answer.

Mr. Foster. Of course. What do you mean, it goes to credibility? What question have you asked that goes to credibility?

[redacted] I'm just going to ask the witness. I don't have a ton of time left. So I'm just going to wrap this line up.

BY [redacted]

Q In the podcast, you continued, "People have to learn to start embracing risk, not only in terms of achieving success, but quite frankly there's a little bit of excitement to it."

And you continued on. You talked about snowshoeing in New Hampshire. And you said, "Zero risk is not a fun life."

Can you explain "zero risk is not a fun life"? What did that mean?

A Sitting at home watching Netflix all day and eating Cheetos.

Q That's zero risk, in your opinion?

A That's what it seems to be, yeah.

Q And why is that not fun?

A Not healthy.

Q Sir, did you have an opportunity to meet former FBI Director Bob Mueller?

A Yes, I did. I got my picture taken with him and everything.

Q What were the circumstances of that?

A He visited our field office. I don't remember why.

Q Okay. Do you remember about when?

A Oh, goodness. So obviously before Comey. So probably 2010, 2011, maybe. Maybe 2011.

Q Okay. On the podcast, you said that when you met Director Mueller you asked him, quote, "Why are there no 0132 SESs?" Do you recall asking Director Mueller about SES positions?

A I do. I was in an audience in front of the whole office.

Q And what is a 0132?

A It's an intelligence analyst.

Q Okay. And why did you ask him that?

A Well, if you have an intelligence -- if I'm having electrical work done, I really don't want a plumber coming in and telling me how the electricity should be installed. If I'm having an intelligence program, I think we should have an intelligence program -- or intelligence professionals running it.

For example, Maureen Baginski, who came from NSA, who Bob Mueller brought on early on after 9/11, was unceremoniously shown the door after less than two years.

Q On the podcast, you said, "They gave the FBI 20 positions, SES positions, all of which were filled by 1811s agents."

A So I was wrong. It's 60-some positions.

Q 60-some positions, not 20 positions?

A Yeah.

Q And what's an 1811?

A An 1811 is a Federal law enforcement officer. So the FBI has 1811s. DEA has 1811s. Secret Service has 1811s. That's what people normally associate with a man or woman with a badge and a gun.

Q And why was it of concern to you that -- or was it of concern to you that the positions were given to the 1811s instead of the 0132s?

A Again, I'm not going to call an electrician to fix my plumbing.

Q Okay. And what was your position?

A At that time?

Q Uh-huh.

A Supervisory intelligence analyst.

Q Was that a 0132?

A Yes.

Q On the podcast, Mr. Seraphin responded by saying, "That's a big deal. So you've opened up basically -- you've opened up people, getting them off the GS scale. They're no longer beholden to the $175,000 or so -- whatever it is -- 158,000 to 175,000 that they're otherwise capped at. SESers are at a higher pay scale, number one. They've got bonus structures, number two. And now that's 20 more FBI agents who can jump into the senior executive ranks because of this particular thing. So it's about money in this case."

To your knowledge, was Mr. Seraphin correct that SES positions are paid at a higher rate and under a different bonus structure than those on the GS scale?

A GSs can get cash awards. They don't get bonuses. And so there is no bonus structure for a GS.

[12:10 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever apply for an SES-level position?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you want to apply for an SES-level position?

A No. I'm 26 years enlisted. I'd much rather be a little bit closer to where things are actually happening.

Q Okay.

A I'm not a big vision person.

Q And I think you said this earlier, but can you remind me of what your GS level was at the time that you retired?

A GS-14, step 9.

Q Okay. Are you comfortable telling us what the salary was at that rate?

A I have no idea. I don't remember.

Q Okay.

Getting back to your meeting with Director Mueller, you said on the podcast that Director Mueller responded to your question about the FBI not having 0132 SES-level positions by stating, quote, "'When you show me a 0132 qualified, I'll put him in that position,' and I'm like, 'Well, they'll screw you too, Bob.'"

A That was my internal monologue. I did not say that out loud to the Director of the FBI.

Q But what -- thank you for clarifying. What did you mean by "they'll screw you too" in your internal monologue, understanding it wasn't something you said out loud?

A It was offensive. It was offensive.

I went -- I was -- I don't remember the year. It was at least 5 years ago. I went to Quantico. I volunteered, not too long after the Tsarnaev conviction, the death penalty conviction, to be a field supervisor at the FBI Academy in Quantico. And I was lashed up to -- the FBI trains its agents and its analysts together, and then they break off at different times, but for those first 3 weeks, they're together all the time.

And so I had the opportunity, with my other agent colleagues, who were also field counselors, to have a lunch with Director Comey at the time. And I posed to Director Comey and his entourage some of my concerns about the intel program, which was our hard-and-fast requirement that all intel analysts have a bachelor's degree.

And I said the following, which was: After almost 15 years of war in two theaters, that we have thousands of men and women in the intelligence community that are highly trained, experienced intelligence analysts who are comfortable, who thrive in team environments and are results-oriented as opposed to process-oriented, but, instead, we insist on hiring college graduates with no experience. Can we at least revisit that requirement, to hire already trained and experienced intelligence analysts even if they don't have a college degree?

And no less than three people of his entourage threw me a verbal beat-down in front of everybody.

Q Finishing out the -- and this will be my last question, because we're a little short on time for this session.

A That's my fault. I'm too --

Q Finishing out your Mueller story on the podcast, you stated, quote, "I'm like, 'All right. So, nice meeting you.' And then people asked me, how come you didn't smile when you had your picture taken with the Director? I don't know, 'cause maybe he's an A-hole. I don't know."

Do you recall this?

A No.

Q Okay. Would it be helpful if we played it for you?

A No.

Q If we play it for you, maybe it will refresh your recollection?

A For the purposes of what?

Mr. Foster. The video speaks for itself. It is whatever it is. People can look at it.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you believe that FBI Director Mueller -- what was your opinion of FBI Director Mueller?

A I was offended by his comment that, "You show me an 0132 that's qualified, I might consider putting him in the position."

Q And can you explain why you were offended?

A Let's see. That would've been, what, 2011, 2012 probably? So, by that time, there were, I don't know, 3,000 combat vet intel professionals out there that -- you know, commissioned officers, former majors, O4s, O5s, O6s, any of whom probably could have stepped into the job.

So it was -- the condescending manner in which he addressed me and dismissed me was offensive.

Q Okay. And, actually -- well, we're at time. I'll -- [redacted] You have a couple minutes left.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] You have 4 minutes left, I think.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever have the opportunity to meet FBI Director Wray?

A Sure.

Q When?

A He came to our, I think, annual employee -- I think they call it a holiday thing. So we have one event that takes place in the morning in the field office, and then there's usually some sort of social event late in the afternoon, early evening afterwards. So he came and spoke to us.

Q Did you directly engage with him in any way?

A My only engagement with Director Wray has been during the employee surveys.

Q Is that direct, the engagement with him?

A Is that direct? Well, he assures us, both verbally and in writing, that he reads those. So, yes, I have raised concerns with Director Wray.

Q But you've never had an immediate --

A Verbal? No.

Q No. Okay.

A No. It just wasn't that kind of a forum, opportunity, like, "Hey, you got a minute?" It just doesn't work that way.

Q You never had your picture taken with him.

A I did.

Q Okay. So you did have your picture taken with him?

A Yes.

Q Just the two of you, or was it a group photo?

A It was a group photo.

Q Okay.

A I also had my picture taken with Director Comey when I received the Director's Award for the Boston Marathon bombing.

Q What is your opinion of Director Wray?

A I don't know him. I'm sure he has to respond to pressures from various -- I don't like to criticize, in terms of their job performance, people that are above me, because, having been in that position and having had subordinates, they don't understand the balancing act that I'm engaged in, and I don't understand the balancing act that Director Wray is engaged in. Does that make any sense?

Like, he has, you know, the FBI, the DOJ, all the programs. He has political pressures. I just -- abiding by my own rule, I'm not going to criticize up, because I don't know what he has to deal with.

Now, I can criticize Jim Comey for the speech that he gave on July 5th -- I think it was July 5th -- criticize that particular speech. But his overall tenure as FBI Director? I don't know what he was dealing with.

I had a GS-14 -- same pay grade as me, but he rocketed on up; he was on the marathon bombing task force -- come into me, screaming and ranting and raving. And I said, "Don't come back in here again unless you've got two solutions to the problem that you're coming to me with."

And I only share that just to kind of give you an idea of where my head's at --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- in that. I had no idea what Director Wray was dealing with, no idea whatsoever.

Q Okay. Thank you.

Is there anything else you'd like to add?

A No. I think I talked too much. I apologize.

[redacted] We'll end our session now. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] The time is 12:25, and we're ready to go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Hill, I want to talk now about your involvement in investigating the events that occurred at the Capitol on January 6th. Could you describe a bit to us what you were doing at the time and how you helped with that investigation?

A Sure.

So, working with my intelligence analysts and the supervisory special agent of CT2, we would get leads, either through Guardian or in the form of emails from WFO saying to investigate this. And those emails would go to the SSA. And then I would, you know, task my analyst in, you know, least intrusive method, you know, looking into what it is that they're asking us to investigate.

And this went on on a pretty regular basis, a trickle. You know, like, we got one Guardian, a woman sent in pictures of her neighbor's truck with a Trump sticker on it and a 2A sticker, and it was, you know -- and the lead that she sent to us saying that the truck was gone on January 3rd and didn't come back until the 7th, and you should investigate this -- you know, silly things like that.

And then there were other, more egregious taskings that came in from WFO, and I don't know -- asking for us to investigate. I don't know if you want to talk about those now or later.

Q I do.

Let me follow up on the truck with the Trump stickers. Was that tasked by someone in the Boston Field Office, or was that sent -- was that a lead that was cut --

A Yeah, that just came directly from someone in the Boston area that sent it right into the tip line.

Q And a Guardian was created on this?

A No. No. It just came in through the tip line. They -- you know, and the -- to his credit, the SSA said, no, we're not opening up a case on a missing truck with inappropriate -- or what the neighbor thinks are inappropriate bumper stickers.

Q Okay. Because it lacked relevant predication?

A There was no crime committed. He moved his truck.

Q Okay.

What are these other examples that --

A So the two things that really jump to mind, the first one being: I believe it was either on January 7th or 8th. The Bank of America, with no directive from the FBI, data-mined its customer base. And they data-mined a date range of 5 to 7 January of any BOA customer who used a BOA product. And by "BOA product," I mean a debit card or a credit card. They compiled that list. And then, on the top of that list, they put anyone who had purchased a firearm during any date.

So it was a huge list. I did not see the list, but I did see the EC that the FBI used it to bring it into the -- into SENTINEL. That list then was then racked and stacked and sent out as leads to the field office in SENTINEL from that case that WFO opened.

The SSA said that there's no predication, there's no crime that was committed by using a BOA product in the District or around the District, and said, you know, no further action required, to which WFO came back on a peer-to-peer level, an SSA to SSA, and said, no, you need to open up cases on these, to which he said, no, we're not going to.

And the SSA and I had already talked about it, and the SSA had already talked to the ASAC about it. WFO said that they were going to have someone call the ASAC to get CT2 to open up cases on it.

They called the ASAC, who's retired right now, and said, "No, we're not going to open up cases on it."

And they said, "Well, we're going to call your SAC."

And he said, "Well, go ahead." And, to his credit -- and I've already given his name -- Joe Bonavolonta said, "No, we're not going to open up cases based on credit card or debit card activity that took place."

Now, what I don't know and could not give accurate testimony to -- I don't know if WFO, in turn, then, took it upon themselves to open cases.

Q Okay. I want to dig into that a bit more.

Was the list that Bank of America provided targeted just to the D.C. area for those --

A Yes.

Q -- dates?

A Just the District and surrounding area, so, like, the NOVA area.

Q And the surrounding area.

A Yeah.

Q And it's anyone who used a Bank of America either debit or credit card --

A Right.

Q -- to conduct a transaction.

A Any transaction. To buy a hotdog. Doesn't matter.

Q Okay.

And then my understanding is that they created a second list where that first list was prioritized based on individuals that had purchased a firearm?

A They just basically just built on top of it, anybody who committed a -- you know --

Q A firearm purchase?

A -- these are your priorities, these are your number-one individuals that you need to go after. Not only did they use a BOA product in the District, but they've also purchased a firearm at some point in time, any time.

Q This list was provided then without any legal process to the FBI?

A Correct.

So my understanding of the DIOG and amateur assessment based on law is that, you know, if a citizen sees a crime in commission, there's nothing wrong with injecting that and opening up a case.

But, to my knowledge, you know, using a debit card or a credit card in the District does not provide adequate predication for the investigation of a crime. So there was no legal process either asking for it or -- you know, from the Bureau or from DOJ or anybody.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Hill, you described the process by which this Bank of America data pull is lashed to data regarding firearm purchases. What was the geographic envelope for those firearm purchases?

Mr. Hill. They would had to have met both criteria: used a BOA product in the District -- but there was no geographic framework if they had ever, ever bought a firearm.

Mr. Gaetz. What about the firearm purchase as a feature of time? Did --

Mr. Hill. No, there was no time -- there was no --

Mr. Gaetz. So that --

Mr. Hill. That was not in the data range, date.

Mr. Gaetz. So, presumably, if someone had purchased a firearm years earlier in Florida --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. -- and then had an ATM withdrawal at the MGM casino in Maryland, that person would be captured within that criteria, presumably?

Mr. Hill. Yes. But I don't know the mechanism that BOA did the --

Mr. Jordan. As long as the withdrawal was within the timeframe of 5th --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Jordan. -- to the 7th.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. But the gun purchase could be anywhere --

Mr. Hill. Anywhere, anytime. You could live -- you could be a resident of Iowa, be a BOA customer, purchased a shotgun in 1999, go to the District, use your credit card to pay for a hotel on January 5th and check out. You're going to rise to the top of that list.

Mr. Gaetz. Were there any other criteria, other than the BOA transaction and the firearm purchase, that were prerequisites?

Mr. Hill. No.

Mr. Gaetz. So no review of online activity, just those two things --

Mr. Hill. No. So we were expected to review that online activity when those leads were sent.

So here's who -- BOA took it upon themselves to say, "These are people you, FBI, need to look into," to which the reply from the Boston Field Office was, "No, we're not going to look into it." There were seven people on that list for Boston.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

Mr. Jordan. And it's your understanding this happened in field offices all over the country, a similar process where they were sent these lists in their respective area?

Mr. Hill. My understanding was it was a one-time transmission of the list, and, yes, that went to every field office that had people on that list.

BY [redacted]

Q And let me just ask you: Was the list of people that had B of A transactions?

A Yeah, you had to have had a BOA transaction or purchased an airline ticket to BWI, Dulles, or Reagan.

Q But to get on the list, did you also have to have a firearms purchase?

A No.

Q Okay. So that --

A No. That that was just an additional set of criteria to move you to the top of the list.

Mr. Foster. And was WFO insisting that all of the people on the list, that you open on all of them, whether or not they had had a firearms purchase in the past?

Mr. Hill. The seven names that we got, WFO insisted that we begin at least a PI, preliminary investigation, into. I don't recall whether or not any of those seven people were firearms owners.

Mr. Gaetz. So what were the initial steps of that preliminary investigation upon receiving that list from the Washington Field Office?

Mr. Hill. So they just set a lead in SENTINEL.

So you take a list. You cannot just upload a BOA-generated list into SENTINEL; you have to attach an EC, an electronic communication, to it. And then that list becomes an attachment. So think of it as an email that you're sending to a family member with a picture. The picture would be the list. The email would be the EC in SENTINEL.

So you write an EC, upload it to SENTINEL with the list attached. And then, from there, you can then set leads to individual field offices to come up with --

Mr. Gaetz. And if a field office received that lead, what would be the requisite next step?

Mr. Hill. Either proceed with preliminary investigation, least intrusive means -- so you would look at, you know, online activity, any kind of criminal history, you know, just basic, almost, like, open-source research stuff.

There's another instance that we're going to get to in a little while, but it did not pertain to this particular case.

Mr. Gaetz. All right. I don't want to get ahead of you. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q So let me just get this straight. So, if my sister visited me on January 5, 2001, and if she was a Bank of America customer and she made a transaction at the Safeway --

A 2021.

Q 2021.

A Right.

Q -- you're saying that somebody would then get a --

A Yes.

Q -- a tasking, you know, back in the -- she was out in California. So some FBI office back in California is going to be referred because my sister was here?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And do you find that to be outrageous?

A Again, I'm not a lawyer. I'm surrounded by much more better educated, smarter people than myself. But I think it's unlawful.

Q And there's obviously hundreds, if not thousands, of financial institutions in the country, but only B of A customers were subjected to this? B of A --

A Correct. To my knowledge, BOA was the only financial entity that took it upon themselves to data-mine their customers' private financial information and send it to the FBI without --

Q Okay.

A -- anyone asking for it.

Q So it's very conceivable that, in the example I used, somebody like my sister could get a call from the FBI saying, "What were you doing in D.C.?"

A Correct.

Q Okay. That's pretty sad.

[redacted] Yep.

BY [redacted]

Q And I just want to be clear that just because the SAC in Boston refused to do PIs on these seven individuals, that doesn't necessarily mean that an SAC in another field office would decline the opportunity to --

A Correct.

Q -- follow up, correct?

A Correct.

I mean, people have this -- not people in this room, but, you know, some people think the FBI is just this monolithic, homogeneous organization, that we all, automatons, march in lockstep. I mean, that's not the case at all. And I'll call balls and strikes. I'm proud that Boston said no on this.

Q Are you aware of any other field offices that did act on it? Was that anything that you were interacting with other --

A I would only know secondhand.

Q Okay.

A Or not even secondhand. So I just -- I don't want to -- I don't want to -- I don't want to get into that, because I can't support it with anything.

Q Do you know what entity was responsible for uploading that information into SENTINEL? Was it Washington Field Office?

A WFO uploaded it.

Q WFO.

A I -- let me rephrase that. I don't recall. I'd have to look at the opening EC, which that would have been, whether it was DTOS, Domestic Terrorism Operations Center, or when it was moved to WFO. At that early on, it might have been DTOS.

Q Okay.

A But I don't -- I don't know. I don't -- because I can't recall.

Q You mentioned another instance that you wanted to tell us about.

A Yeah. So probably -- I mean, as uncomfortable as that situation was, there were two individuals that organized buses to go down to D.C. for the rally. You know, so let's -- you know, if people -- you know, they think of the unlawful events that took place later on in the day on January 6th, but up until that time, it was a rally. People were, you know, either driving to it, flying to it.

Two individuals in Massachusetts organized buses to go down to the rally. And Boston opened cases on those two individuals because we were shown definitive evidence from WFO of them entering restricted areas in the Capitol. And they were -- I don't know where they are on the prosecutorial timeline, if they've already been charged or not, but they were entered into the legal process because they broke the law. You know, so we did open up cases on those two individuals.

But those two individuals organized these buses, and there were 140 people on those two buses. And WFO wanted us to open up a case on each and every one of those 140 individuals, to which the SSA in Boston said, "They were going to a political rally, which is First Amendment-protected activity. No, we're not starting cases on these people." To which they said, "Well, we're going to call your SAC." And the SSA said, "Go right ahead."

Because, when you're pushing back, you know, you want to make sure that you have your six covered. So the SAC and the ASAC were intimately aware of these kinds of exchanges that were going on. And, again, to his credit, Joe Bonavolonta said, no, we're not opening up cases on people who went to a rally.

And I forgot a key part. The SSA for CT2 said, "Happy to do it. Show us where they were inside the Capitol, and we'll look into it." To which WFO said, "We can't show you those videos unless you can tell us the exact time and place those individuals were inside the Capitol."

To which the SSA responded back -- and I was privy to these conversations firsthand -- "Why can't you show us -- why can't you just send us the -- give us access to the 11,000 hours of video that's available?" "Because there may be" -- may be -- "UCs," undercover officers, "or CHSes," confidential human sources, "on those videos whose identity we need to protect."

Q And you heard this firsthand?

A Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Any idea how many?

A No.

Q Are we talking tens? Hundreds? Thousands?

A I don't want to guess. I don't know.

Q Okay.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. If you can -- let me just back up.

So Washington Field Office contacts you and says, we want to open up investigations on the two people who organized these two buses --

Mr. Hill. And we did.

Mr. Jordan. -- who were inside the Capitol.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. And you said, fine, because they were inside the Capitol.

Mr. Hill. Because they were able to show us pictures of them inside the Capitol.

Mr. Jordan. Definitive proof they were inside the Capitol.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. So you open up investigations on them.

And then Washington Field Office asked you, we want you to look at everyone who was on the bus who came to the rally?

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Jordan. You said, show us why --

Mr. Hill. Show us proof they were in the Capitol.

Mr. Jordan. -- and you'd be happy to do it.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. And then they said, we can't show you proof.

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Jordan. And you asked, "Why can't you show us proof?" Is that correct? "Why can't you show us proof?"

Mr. Hill. Either show us pictures or give us access to the videos, the 11,000 hours of video.

Mr. Jordan. Back up a second. The two who you opened cases up on the initial two --

Mr. Hill. Those came through with pictures.

Mr. Jordan. So they had pictures of them --

Mr. Hill. Yeah.

Mr. Jordan. -- inside the Capitol.

Mr. Hill. In the Capitol, yeah.

Mr. Jordan. Got it.

Mr. Hill. It was clear-cut violation of the law.

Mr. Jordan. Got it. The other 140, they had no evidence, no proof that they had actually violated the law and were inside the Capitol.

Mr. Hill. They may have, but they refused to share it with us.

Mr. Jordan. Refused to share it with you.

And then you said, we're not going to open up an investigation --

Mr. Hill. Right, because all we had was they --

Mr. Jordan. Before you said that, you said, show us the proof, show us the video or pictures, whatever you have. And they said, we can't.

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Jordan. And the reason they gave you was?

Mr. Hill. There may be UCs, undercovers, or CHSes, confidential human sources, and we need to protect their identities.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. And they said that to you and to the special agent in charge who was -- this is a phone call you were having with him? Or this --

Mr. Hill. The supervisory special agent of CT2.

Mr. Jordan. And who's that?

Mr. Hill. I'd be happy to give his name outside of recorded testimony.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. And then the special agent in charge is the Joe that you've mentioned a couple times.

Mr. Hill. Yes. Joe Bonavolonta.

Mr. Jordan. Bonavolonta. Okay.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. Who got this information? You and the assistant special agent in charge?

Mr. Hill. I'm sorry, sir. What information?

Mr. Jordan. The communication you were having with the Washington Field Office.

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Jordan. When you said, show us why we should open investigations on these 140 --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Jordan. -- it was just you and the special agent in charge, the name you said --

Mr. Hill. On that conversation. I don't know how the conversation between Joe and whoever called him -- it would had to have been another senior executive, so it had to either be Jensen or Thibault. I don't know how that conversation went.

Alls I know for a fact is that Joe supported us in saying, no, we're not opening an investigation because they took a bus to a political rally.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

One more question, and I'll turn it back to you.

Who was calling you from the Washington Field Office telling you to open these --

Mr. Hill. I don't remember the name. There were different people calling at different times.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Was it usual to have the Washington Field Office email or call, telling you all to investigate certain --

A It never happened before January 6th.

Q It never happened --

A Never.

Q -- before January 6th?

A No.

Mr. Foster. Clarifying question: Do you know whether or not the Washington Field Office opened up cases on any of the 140 people on those buses and, if so, what happened on those cases?

Mr. Hill. I do not. And before coming here today, I circled back with the SSA in charge of CT2, and he does not, either, know whether WFO opened up any cases on those 140 individuals.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry to belabor the point, and I apologize for the rapid-fire format with multiple people asking you questions, but I want to make sure we get specificity on this.

What can you tell us about the person or persons who said that the basis for not providing additional evidence could be the revealing of UCs or confidential human sources?

Mr. Hill. Other than it was a voice of an SSA on the phone from WFO, I have no --

Mr. Gaetz. Male or female?

Mr. Hill. Male.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you recall if the person identified themselves?

Mr. Hill. Oh, yeah. Absolutely. Yeah, no --

Mr. Gaetz. Would you have notes, or would there be any documents between --

Mr. Hill. The SSA from CT2 may have notes, but typically -- not "typically" -- we're required to keep notes if they're related to a case. So, like, I've been to countless meetings where I've taken notes. If they're not related to a case, I just shred them when they become irrelevant. So I don't know if he would have that information.

Mr. Jordan. Is it --

Mr. Gaetz. Go ahead, Mr. Jordan.

Mr. Jordan. Is it likely the person, this male individual from Washington Field Office who communicated this to you, is that the same person who sent you the seven names of the Bank of America request --

Mr. Hill. I understand the question. I don't know -- because I don't remember -- I don't know the name of the individual who set the lead to Boston, and I don't remember the name of the individual --

Mr. Jordan. That was an electronic communication.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. So there would be some physical --

Mr. Hill. There would be a record of it, yes.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Hill. Hopefully.

BY [redacted]

Q How would you describe the relationship between FBI headquarters, the Washington Field Office, and the Boston Field Office during your time there?

A I know at my level, at the GS-14 level, probably contentious, because we said "no" so many times.

I can speak from experience and direct observation that Joe Bonavolonta is a man of integrity, and I'm sure that he handled this push-and-pull with diplomacy and tact. I don't -- I'm just assuming that based on my observations of him, you know, in the years that he's been there.

Q Is he still employed --

A He's still there. He's still there, yeah.

Q Did you ever feel that WFO micromanaged January 6th investigations of the field office?

A Oh, I know they did, because based on just on those two cases alone, they tried to micromanage it.

Q Do you have -- let me reword this. In your professional opinion, do you have reason to believe that the FBI employed UCs as CHSes on January 6th?

A I don't know, but this is what I do know based on experience of working in the intelligence community for decades, both overseas and domestic and observation of the FBI: The FBI protects UCs and CHSes more aggressively than they protect their own, for the reasons I first stated when I opened up here today, is that the FBI not only needs the support of the American people to do its job but these days it needs the support of our law enforcement partners, whether they be State, local, or Federal.

So, based on how aggressively the FBI has been protecting those CHSes and UCs, I can make assumptions, but I don't want to do it out loud here, and I don't want to do it on the record.

Q Okay. That's all right.

A whistleblower disclosed to the committee that the FBI has not followed regular procedure with respect to the January 6th cases, which should all be led by the WFO and categorized as WFO cases.

I'm now going to enter in a letter for the record that Mr. Jordan sent to FBI Director Wray on September 19, 2022, regarding the Washington Field Office's handling of DVE investigations in the wake of January 6th.

[Hill Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'll read an excerpt of this letter that contains the whistleblower disclosure.

It says, "New whistleblower disclosures indicate that the WFO's handling of DVE investigations related to January 6 diverges from established practice in a way that overstates the national DVE threat.

"One whistleblower has described how cases are ordinarily characterized and labeled by the originating field office, with leads cut to other field offices for specific assistance in the geographic location.

"The whistleblower alleged the FBI has not followed regular procedure with respect to January 6 cases, which should all be officially led by the WFO and categorized as WFO cases, explaining:

"Instead, task force members in Washington, D.C., identified potential subjects and possible locations where these individuals reside. The task force disseminates information packets with instructions to open full investigations to local field offices around the country."

And then it goes on to say, "As such, if a subject lives in Dallas, the Dallas Field Office is expected to open the case."

"Although the local field offices, therefore, appear to be running the cases on paper, the WFO is directing the field office special agents to just open the case in their geographic area, and the WFO is performing and approving all of the investigative work and paperwork for the casefile."

Are you testifying that that was something that you saw during your time at the FBI?

A So there's a couple data points in here. And they're separate and can exist without support from the other.

Number one is that cases are typically investigated where the infraction takes place, but, instead, in regard to January 6, they were set to the various field offices around the country. So that is outside of usual FBI practices.

So, if the violation of law took place in Washington, the case would be executed in Washington, and then they would just set the lead for -- I'm just using my own name -- "George, you need to go out and interview John Smith," and it would be managed out of where the violation of law took place.

Q Okay.

A Does that make sense?

Q Yes.

A So, as far as populating agents' cases, I cannot speak to that, because I have no direct knowledge of that occurring in Boston. So I'm sorry. But --

Mr. Foster. Just to be clear --

Mr. Hill. -- it doesn't mean that one --

Mr. Foster. Just to be clear --

Mr. Hill. -- has to be supportive of the other.

Mr. Foster. Just to be clear, you're not the source of this particular disclosure to the committee?

Mr. Hill. Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q Earlier, you testified it was unusual that the Washington Field Office was calling and emailing, asking you to follow up on various leads, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

A I mean, it just -- it just -- if they had set a lead to us to do something, then -- and we weren't doing anything -- so, say, I got set a lead, "George, go out and interview John Smith," and 3, 4, 5, 6 months goes by and I haven't done anything with it, so I would expect a phone call, you know, like, "Hey, how come you haven't done this?" "Oh, I did. I just forgot" -- it would be unacceptable, but, "Oh, I forgot to upload my EC. I talked to the guy, and he's a quadri/paraplegic, and I think you've got the wrong guy."

So -- shoot, I'm sorry. Could you --

Mr. Foster. Just to clarify here, so just -- you and your people who reported to you were intel analysts.

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Foster. You're using that as an example. You didn't actually --

Mr. Hill. No. Correct.

Mr. Foster. You and your people didn't go out --

Mr. Hill. No. We don't --

Mr. Foster. -- and interview people. That's what case agents do.

Mr. Hill. Correct. Yes.

So, I'm sorry, could you just refresh my memory just a little bit on your --

BY [redacted]

Q I wanted to know why you think January 6th cases were handled the way they were by WFO, where they were calling and texting and asking --

A Yeah, so that's kind of confusing, why they insisted that all these cases be outside of WFO, because, at the same time, they plussed up their staffing level to handle January 6.

So one could maybe make an argument that we need to farm these out to the various field offices where these individuals reside because we just don't have the manning level here. But they did both. They farmed it out and increased the manning at WFO to handle the events of January -- or the individuals associated with the events of January 6th.

One can only, you know, guess or surmise, and, again, I don't want to do that in sworn testimony. I don't want to take a guess.

Mr. Foster. Just another clarifying procedural question. So, normally, under normal circumstances, the office of origin, whoever is in the FBI system as the office of origin in opening a case, that is the office that has control of that case and determines whether or not it's going to stay open or whether it's going to be closed. Is --

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Foster. -- that correct?

Mr. Hill. Yep.

Mr. Foster. Right. And so the difference that you were describing earlier between that and setting lead is that, if you set a lead to a field office, as opposed to asking them to be the office of origin, then there's some accountability back to the office that set the lead --

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Foster. -- that it has to be followed up.

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Foster. But it's your testimony, as I understand it, that what was happening in January 6th cases was that the Washington Field Office was asking the field offices to be the office of origin and yet --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Foster. -- attempting to control the investigative steps --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Foster. -- and instructing the investigative steps --

Mr. Hill. Right. Right.

Mr. Foster. -- as opposed to setting leads.

Mr. Hill. Yeah.

And, in some cases, it's being done offline. It would be just an email with a name and, "You need to open up a PI," preliminary investigation, "on this individual." You know, now, granted, you know, that's all captured in the email string.

But, you know, there were multiple channels at Washington Field Office, both through usual channels, even though the requests were unusual, through SENTINEL, or the usual channels through Guardian -- again, not how we usually handle things -- or, "Hey, I sent you an email. You need to open up a case on these individuals."

BY [redacted]

Q Was that latter, for it to be offline, would you consider that unusual?

A Yeah. I mean, it's no different than, like, evidence. You want to have some sort of chain of custody in evidence. You still want to have some sort of communication chain as to why you're doing this --

Mr. Foster. So --

Mr. Hill. -- especially when you're lacking predication.

Mr. Foster. Again, perhaps this will help the committee understand. So, for example, the seven individuals that came from the Bank of America data-mining, that the Washington Field Office wanted the Boston Field Office to open a case on each of those individuals; Boston refused. You said you didn't have any personal knowledge of whether WFO opened a case.

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Foster. If WFO had opened a case and WFO was the office of origin on those cases, they could have set a lead to the Boston Field Office to instruct a Boston FBI agent --

Mr. Hill. To go out and talk to them.

Mr. Foster. -- to go out and interview those people --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Foster. -- correct?

Mr. Hill. Yep.

Mr. Foster. Okay. But you don't know that that was ever done?

Mr. Hill. I know from my conversations with the SSA that no lead was ever set by WFO for CT2 to go out and interview one of those seven individuals. That doesn't mean that -- and I'm not saying it happened. I'm just saying the possibility exists, that WFO just didn't send an agent up for a long, you know, 3 days to interview XYZ.

Mr. Foster. Right. WFO could've taken all number of other investigative steps --

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Foster. -- to examine those seven people.

Mr. Hill. Yep.

Mr. Foster. All right.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to go back to these nationwide calls as it relates to WFO pressuring y'all to open cases.

You said that during one of these calls either Jensen or Thibault pressured the Philadelphia Field Office to open a case on, I think, three individuals? Could you give us some details of what that --

A All right. So Philadelphia was set a lead from WFO on three individuals, and the expectation was -- is that they were going to open up cases on those individuals.

And Jensen took it upon himself to ask on a conference call with maybe hundreds, maybe more, of individuals on there, you know, "Where are we on this?" to which Philadelphia responded, you know, "Yeah, you know, they have some things on their social media posts that may be, you know, pro-2A or, you know, they're anti-abortion, whatever, but that doesn't mean that they're insurrectionists seeking to overturn our democracy," to which Jensen said, "I don't give a blank. They're all bleeping terrorists, and we're going to round them all up."

And I don't remember the exact wording, but I believe they took it offline after that for a little one-on-one conversation.

Q Do you have any awareness of what happened after --

A I don't.

Q -- after --

A I don't.

Q -- that incident?

A I don't. I don't know whether Philadelphia eventually acquiesced and opened up cases or WFO opened up cases. I don't know.

I do know that -- yeah. That's -- sorry. Not very helpful here.

Q No, that's okay.

Are there any other examples that you wanted to provide the committee?

A Those are the only ones that I can actually submit to the committee that, through other interviews or data-pulls out of SENTINEL, that the committee can verify for themselves.

Q Okay.

A There were a lot of uncomfortable conversations that is just, you know, coffee office talk that really has no relevance to the committee and is not a good use of the committee's time. I'm making that decision on my own, obviously, but I only wanted to give things that were helpful.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. Hill. Yeah, forgot about that one. There was one other case.

So we had a case that came through normal channels from WFO, set a lead to us, with a picture of an individual inside the Capitol.

We did a full field investigation into the individual. His attorneys produced a video of the bicycle barriers being removed hours before he entered the Capitol. And we closed the case and cited the video as our reason for closing the case, to which WFO was not pleased with our investigative outcome.

Mr. Gaetz. And how were you aware of the Washington Field Office's displeasure with that outcome?

Mr. Hill. Phone call.

Mr. Gaetz. From who?

Mr. Hill. The same entity, individuals that would be interacting with the SSA from CT2.

Mr. Gaetz. And were you the only one that received that phone call, or --

Mr. Hill. No. The SSA from CT2 did and let me know that -- so my information is secondhand.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. So one of your superiors informed you that they had received a call from the Washington Field Office where someone from the Washington Field Office expressed a displeasure with the result in that matter.

Mr. Hill. That's not entirely accurate.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Mr. Hill. So my peer and, in the interest of full and fair disclosure, personal friend, this supervisor from CT2, got an unpleasant phone call from WFO for closing that case based on that video.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Are you aware of other such matters, where the observance of lower criminal acuity brought ire to the Washington Field Office when cases weren't pursued?

Mr. Hill. Not for Boston, no, I don't. And anything else would be second-, third-, fourth-, fifthhand. I don't -- I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. So --

Mr. Jordan. What were the facts in the case again? You were sent a lead with a picture --

Mr. Hill. Of this --

Mr. Jordan. -- of this individual inside the Capitol.

Mr. Hill. -- individual inside the Capitol in a restricted area.

Mr. Jordan. Restricted area.

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Jordan. And the individual didn't do any harm or anything like that.

Mr. Hill. No. No interaction with law enforcement. Walking around taking pictures, turned around and left.

His attorneys were able to --

Mr. Jordan. Video of that?

Mr. Hill. Yes. There were pictures of that the WFO provided us.

Mr. Jordan. Not pictures, but video?

Mr. Hill. No. Pictures of --

Mr. Jordan. Pictures.

Mr. Hill. Yeah.

The video came from his attorney that showed that the barrier -- timestamp -- was removed hours before he just followed the crowd into the Capitol.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Foster. So, to be clear, his attorneys are making the argument he had no intent to go to a --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Foster. -- restricted area.

Mr. Hill. Because there was no indication that it was a restricted area.

Mr. Jordan. And so you guys said, we're not going to pursue this case.

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Jordan. And then you got the call that Mr. Gaetz was just talking about now.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Hill. Sorry. I want to be clear. I obviously just failed.

BY [redacted]

Q Going back to also something that you testified about earlier, what did you mean by the tone set by Wray and Sanborn to identify opportunities to examine domestic violent extremists?

A It's just -- I can't quote verbatim what's in the weekly emails, but the narrative was that, you know, we have a growing segment of our population that is seeking to overturn the democratic process and we need to pursue these individuals aggressively.

You know, I'm just -- I'm synthesizing and paraphrasing. You probably won't find that exact language on the email. But it was clear to the reader that there was a great deal of concern coming out of CTD, Counterterrorism Directorate, and Director Wray's office of a growing domestic violent extremist problem across the country.

Q So were these emails sent in conjunction with one another with Wray and Sanborn on it, or --

A No. She would -- not as frequently as he did, but she would send out her own --

Q Okay.

A -- emails as well.

Again, commander's intent. He sets the tone, and then maybe a day or two later one of his subordinates follows up, maybe sharpens it a little bit, and sends it out.

Q Can you speak to the tone, specifically, if you remember, of Sanborn's emails?

A I wouldn't say it was any louder than Director Wray's or more heightened in terms of concern. I'd say, you know, if we were talking from a musical standpoint, I'd say that she was on the same sheet of music as Director Wray, not any louder or the tempo was any different.

Q Okay. But you said it was sharpened?

A Maybe with a little more granularity of things that we need to do, whether it be, you know, joint tagging cases, looking for areas of crossover, those kinds of things, things that would affect the TRP and that process.

BY [redacted]

Q Some of the people involved with the incursion into the Capitol on January 6th, were they all considered DVE cases, or were they all given the tag "DVE"?

A No, they were all DVE. And then, of course, as investigations ensued, you know, some of those people were attacking law enforcement or stealing or destroying government property, so -- but they all began -- their genesis is domestic violent extremist.

Or, in the case of -- I don't know the details of the migration, how it got to that, in the case of the members of the Proud Boys, were charged with sedition. I don't know if that was the original charge or case that was opened.

Q But you'd agree there's a big difference between --

A Criminal trespass and the domestic violent extremist?

Q Correct.

A Yeah, I would.

Q But even the criminal trespassers were getting the DVEs?

A They would start out as a DVE, sure.

Q And do you think that was fair?

A Well, how else are you going to conduct a Federal investigation? Are you going to conduct a Federal investigation using the full force and power of the DOJ and the FBI for criminal trespass?

Q Well, I think that begs the question, though, of, you know, were resources misplaced here?

A That's not up for me to decide, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, but I think what we have to ascertain for our legislative function is, in events like these, whether or not these tagging systems are overutilized and whether or not that overutilization creates a resource shift that puts the country in some other peril.

And you've talked about that --

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. -- to great extent today.

Mr. Hill. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. And so what we're trying to ascertain is whether or not you viewed these DVE tags on criminal trespass matters as necessary to pursue criminal trespass.

Mr. Hill. Right. So I would equate using the DVE case designation or tag in a lot of cases, based on the eventual outcome of over 400 cases -- I think we're up to 423 that have been adjudicated by now -- that number may have changed -- the majority of which are criminal trespass, akin to using a backhoe to put in some tomato plants. I mean, it's just not --

Mr. Gaetz. So one could easily have pursued the criminal trespass matters in the absence of the DVE tag, right?

Mr. Hill. Right. But then the question remains: Is that the role of the FBI, to pursue people for criminally trespassing?

Mr. Gaetz. And so could one -- is it your testimony today that, given your full observation of this constellation of facts -- the phone calls, the emails, the commander's intent, the pressure on specific cases that you learned about in both Boston and Philadelphia -- is it your testimony today that the DVE tag was not a necessary law enforcement tool but that it was utilized to direct resources where they were using the backhoe to plant tomatoes?

Mr. Hill. Yes, that's my assessment. You can't mobilize the full force of the Federal Government law enforcement mechanism to go after criminal trespassers.

[redacted] But that's what happened.

Mr. Hill. Well, based on the case adjudication, yes, that's what's happened, based on what's actually happened. Like I said, over 423. I think they're closing in on around 900 or, like, 500 more out there that are in the process, and WFO's own public press release statements that they expect 900 more by the end of 2023.

Mr. Gaetz. You're a very seasoned national security professional. What are the fail-safes that are supposed to exist in the system so that matters of criminal trespass are uptagged or upcoded by the Washington Field Office or anyone else?

Mr. Hill. So the fail-safes are, beginning at the bottom: obviously, you know, your supervisor, the SAC, to which, in my particular case, the SAC and the ASAC for counterterrorism conducted themselves, I would think, in a law enforcement -- or, I'm sorry -- in a lawful, exemplary fashion.

Having observed that kind of behavior across the country myself, the mechanism that I used was my ability to communicate with Director Wray directly through the employee survey, in which I expressed my concern that we were quite possibly misallocating resources and eroding the trust of the American people.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of any other people who utilized that survey tool --

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. -- to share that perspective?

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And who are those people?

Mr. Hill. I'd be happy to give the name outside of sworn, videotaped testimony.

Mr. Gaetz. But you weren't the only one that utilized that?

Mr. Hill. Oh, gosh no.

You know, look -- again, I want to call balls and strikes. I don't know how many people turned out to arrest Roger Stone from the Miami office, but it wasn't three or four.

When Director Comey was fired by President Trump, the office became instantly polarized the next day with memes and tchotchkes within days of "Comey is my homie," and it was very clear within days of Comey's firing which side of the equation you were on. And if you didn't have the appropriate tchotchke displayed in your cubicle or office, it was known to everybody that they're not one of us. It's crystal-clear.

Mr. Foster. And is it your view that's a positive or a negative dynamic for what's supposed to be a nonpolitical law enforcement entity?

Mr. Hill. Everybody should check -- it's hard, as human beings, it's hard to check your bias, but there is no room for political bias in a law enforcement organization, zero. It's easier said than done, though. I'm not -- oh, that's where I was going.

There's still a lot of great people in the FBI, and I talk to them on a regular basis. To say that they're brokenhearted doesn't even come close to capturing how bad these people feel. They truly love the country. They love the FBI. I love the FBI.

But, just like a parent, you know, tough love is still love. If you take your child's tablet away or put them in timeout for a reason, it doesn't mean you don't love them anymore. I desperately want to see a highly functioning, apolitical, high-performing FBI.

Mr. Gaetz. After Comey got fired and you described this polarized system where you were either pro-Comey or anti-Comey, had you ever seen the FBI divided like that at any other time in your work in the national security space?

Mr. Hill. Not like that. It was clear. I mean, when the Kavanaugh hearings were on, there were throngs of people standing in front of the TV sets. Just, the language coming out of people that I'd never heard before was just -- I couldn't believe that they were that polarized.

Mr. Gaetz. Overtly political language?

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Recall anything from those times that would inform on that?

Mr. Hill. Oh, rapist, you know, why -- you know, lack of judicial prudence. I mean, you know, just -- I just couldn't believe how upset people were.

Mr. Gaetz. [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q In your experience, did most January 6th-related investigations involve misdemeanor crimes?

A Based on the data from the FBI's website -- I think it was the FBI or the DOJ. That's where I got the 423 number. But when you -- it's multiple, obviously, multiple pages. When you scroll through them, there are -- the majority of them -- and I tried to get a hard number. I asked multiple people, you know, what are the exact metrics as to -- you know, what is the final adjudication on these cases? But, as I scrolled through them heuristically, you know, just looking and reading, the majority of them seem to be criminal trespass and mischief.

Q Do you perceive pulling resources from crimes such as child sexual abuse cases antithetical to the FBI's mission?

A I think it's irresponsible to direct resources to areas that are not existential threats to the democracy or to our Constitution or to American citizens.

So, like I said, there's -- you know, what was the number I gave for violent crime? 358,000 in 2021. 100,000 opioid deaths. You know, there are other areas that Americans are dying. And yet the threat review program or prioritizations seems to be skewed.

[1:17 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q So we've talked about private entities, like Bank of America, working with the FBI. I would like to ask you a few questions about big tech.

During your tenure at the FBI, did the FBI work with social media companies, such as Twitter, Facebook, and Google, on investigations related to January 6th?

A Not to my knowledge. I know how that process works having been involved in investigations. But to my knowledge, direct knowledge, or secondhand, I do not know that the FBI worked with those companies relative to January 6th.

Q So are you aware of reporting on the special relationship between the FBI and Facebook?

A Open source reporting?

Q Uh-huh.

A Yes.

Q Did you --

Mr. Foster. Were there -- I'm sorry.

Were there references on the calls, the big calls with lots of people from around the country, were there references on those calls --

Mr. Hill. So in the warm-up act conducted by Timothy Thibault, he would make reference that we're working with Google, Facebook, Twitter to identify individuals of -- that are seeking to overthrow our government and we're working with them to identify them.

So you put a -- the process would be to put a -- what's it called? Not a restraining order. Where you ask them to freeze the records of -- preservation order.

The legal process is to put a preservation order on each individual. So I don't know if -- how the flow of information was working, whether the FBI was sending preservation orders to Google, Facebook, Twitter, or Google, Facebook, Twitter was sending stuff in the manner in which BOA sent stuff.

Mr. Foster. Okay. So to be clear -

Mr. Hill. So I don't know.

Mr. Foster. Right. So to be clear, then, all you know about this is what you know from Mr. Thibault talking on those calls?

Mr. Hill. Correct.

Mr. Foster. And what exactly he was referring to, you don't know.

Mr. Hill. Correct, I do not know. So, yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q So you don't know, for instance, Google's involvement with being able to identify or help the FBI be able to identify, you don't know if that was geofencing or who was using their Gmail --

A I only had heard through open source that Google geofenced the District within a certain date and time range. But, again, that's open source, not willing to -- not going to defend it or -- yeah. No.

Q Are you aware of any instances where the FBI requested that a social media company, quote, "take action" on an individual user's account?

A Not without proper predication on cases that I worked prior to January 6th. So I'm not aware of any related to January 6th.

And I do know that, especially for the marathon bombing, we sent preservation orders. We had the U.S. attorneys in the command post with us. It was all done on the up and up.

Q Just back to Thibault briefly. Are you aware of allegations that Thibault mishandled public corruption investigations?

A I am not.

Q Are you aware of allegations that Thibault was part of a scheme to discredit derogatory information disclosed to the FBI regarding Hunter Biden?

A I am not.

Q Are you familiar with Steven D'Antuono?

A I only know the name from open source reporting. I have no direct knowledge of any interaction between D'Antuono and the Boston office.

Q Are you aware that Biden administration officials have described domestic violent extremism as the greatest threat facing our country?

A I've heard them say it multiple times, and where I would look for evidence of that is in the TRP. And I haven't seen a TRP in a couple years, because I have been gone from the Bureau, but I would want to see where DVEs, domestic violent extremists, rank on the TRP for the FBI, see if it synchs with the -- in this case, the commander's intent coming from the White House.

Q Are you aware that in June 2021, Director Wray stated the FBI had a very, very active domestic terrorism investigation program and that the FBI had, quote, "doubled the amount of domestic terrorism investigations"?

A That's accurate. I am aware, and it is accurate. I think what we're talking about here today is the mechanism by which he got to those numbers.

Q Correct.

Do you believe those statements are misleading since the number was only doubled based on a single event?

A Correct, correct. We're not seeing that. We know -- so when we do TRP, when we start talking about domestic violent extremists, we talk -- we would rank above, like, neo-Nazis and White supremacists.

In the Boston area, we would rank environmentalist extremist groups above those groups because we see more activity from them. Not more social media posts; more activity.

Q Can you talk about those tags a bit more? Would tags be that granular in terms of what the DVE threat is?

A No, tags are not granular. You would have to then support it with an EC, an electronic communication.

Q Could you give me examples of specific tags that would be assigned?

A Well, any program, whether it be -- it could be VC, violent crime, PC, public corruption. Any tag -- any program that the FBI has you have the opportunity to tag it.

Q Okay. So it wouldn't be, like -- a tag wouldn't be like antifa or Boogaloo?

A No, no.

Q Okay.

A No, not that. Not that --

Q Granular.

A -- granular.

Q Okay.

A So you would have to -- well, first off, there's a narrative out there that antifa is nothing more than an ideology. But if you did not ascribe to that narrative, if you were working an antifa matter, say, as like a RICO -- which we don't -- you would -- it would start out as a domestic violent extremist, and then it would be an EC, and ECs plural, talking about your investigation of antifa and subjects and possible violations of U.S. Code.

[redacted] Thank you.

I have no additional questions.

[redacted] Yeah, we can go off the record.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 2:03. We are back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Hill, we just talked a fair amount about your experience with the January 6th investigations.

I just want to get clarity for the record. How many January 6th cases did you personally handle?

A I don't handle cases.

Q Okay.

A The SSA handles cases. I don't know how many the CT2 supervisor handled.

Q So did you handle -- what did you specifically handle for the January 6th investigations, were you personally involved?

A So my analyst would support CT2, who also has an embedded analyst. So we would primarily liaise with -- we were the communications element between the Boston Regional Intelligence Center and CT2 and the Commonwealth Fusion Center and CT2.

Q Did you handle specific products as part of that intelligence reports or anything like that?

A So each of my analysts is required to write three finished intelligence products a year.

Q Okay.

A So they can write an intelligence note -- three intelligence notes. They can do an intelligence assessment. I'm trying to remember the -- those are probably the big ones. Intelligence notes is usually typically the big one that they go to.

Q Okay.

A And an intelligence assessment is never in support of the case. That's operational intelligence.

Q So you and, I guess, your intelligence analysts were not directly involved in any cases. Is that right?

A My analysts may do research in support of a case, yes, but not interviews. They may respond to a lead from a case, but they're not responsible for the case.

Does that make --

Q It does. I'm trying to get a sense, could you estimate how many cases they may have supported?

A Related to January 6th?

Q Correct.

A I wouldn't say it's a great deal. I'd say less than a dozen.

Q Okay.

A Because as I pointed out in earlier testimony, a lot of the potential cases were shunted off at the SAC -- at the SSA, SAC level and, no, we're not going to do this.

So it could have been 140 more cases, but it wasn't. I don't think it reached a dozen.

Q Okay. And to get clarity on your role, you were the supervisor, then, that would have overseen those intelligence analysts while they were handling that approximately dozen?

A Correct. And if they had written any product, whether it be -- well, they wouldn't have written an intelligence bulletin, but they may write an EC doing social media searches or whatever. I would review that before -- it would show up in my SENTINEL queue, q-u-e --

Q Okay.

A Is that how you -- I don't think that's how you spell it. Sorry.

Mr. Foster. C-u-e?

Mr. Hill. Yeah, your cue, your line to approve.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to turn to the Bank of America request that you talked about a little bit ago.

Do you know whether the FBI requested that list?

A They did not request that list.

Q And how do you know that?

A You know what? That's a very good question. Because the narrative was they sent it to us. It wasn't they replied to a request from us. So if we're going to get hung up on language, I'm inferring that it was sent without a request.

If they had responded to a request -- the FBI was founded by lawyers and accountants. They're very specific on language. If they had responded to a request, the SSA would have said they responded to a request for identification.

Q Okay.

Mr. Foster. Can I ask a clarifying question?

So in your role as an intelligence analyst, a supervisory intelligence analyst, if there had been a request, would it be one that you would have been aware of?

Mr. Hill. No, because it would have emanated -- it would have originated out of WFO, Washington Field Office, or, at that earlier stage, out of DTOC, Domestic Terrorism Operations Center.

BY [redacted]

Q You referred a couple of seconds ago to "the narrative was."

Can you explain what you mean by "the narrative"? Where did that narrative come from? How did you learn about it?

A Well, it was quite clear in Timothy Thibault's opening remarks each day during the phone call that, paraphrasing him, that our government was almost overthrown, our Capitol sacked, we haven't seen anything like this since 1812.

Q Okay.

A That's the kind of narrative I'm referring to.

Q I understand. I understand.

You said that the Bank of America list was provided without any legal process to the FBI. What's your basis for knowledge of that?

A I just said, based on the language used by the SSA, quote, "We received a list from Bank of America," not we reached out to Bank -- the language that would be used -- like, when you are in this line of work, there's a way of speaking that people recognize, wording and phraseology that is familiar to the ear.

So the phraseology that I would have been looking for: We sent a request to BOA for a list of any activity from their customers that occurred on the following date range.

That would have been something that would have been overt, out there, right from the beginning. It probably would have -- it would have been talked about by Timothy Thibault on January 7th.

Q Okay.

A Instead, it was a conversation between two supervisory special agents saying, "We got a list from Bank of America."

Q Okay. And --

A And so it's kind of like a strain of logic.

Q No, I understand. So you're saying you inferred it from the language. Is that right?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

Mr. Foster. Well, you weren't told of it -- to be more specific --

[redacted] I'm so sorry. This is actually -- these are my questions. I'm happy to give you time afterwards, but --

Mr. Foster. I understand. But I want to make sure the record is clear about what he's saying.

So just to be clear, what you're saying is your basis for that belief is that you weren't told about any legal process or request.

Mr. Hill. Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned in that same conversation: We used the word "case," and we also used the term "preliminary investigation."

Can you describe the difference between those?

A So there is a PI, preliminary investigation, and then an FFI, a full field investigation.

A preliminary investigation does have an opening EC, and then the findings of that preliminary investigation then become a full field investigation.

So what you and others refer to as a case could be either one. It could be a preliminary investigation, case closed, or a full field investigation, we're off to the races.

Q And you used the term "least intrusive means."

A Least intrusive methods.

Q Methods. I'm sorry.

A Correct.

Q Can you explain what that is?

A So, for example, say, we had a guardian on someone who was blowing things up in their backyard. Least intrusive methods would be, okay, who is that person? What is their social media profile? Stuff without interrupting people's daily routine. So are there any police records related to this individual? Were there any other reports related to this individual?

So least intrusive means, essentially, you're not disrupting someone else's daily routine.

So then it could escalate from there, which it typically does, especially like on a guardian. You may go and do some door knocking and talk to some neighbors, you know, "Hey, how's Joe Schmuckatelli doing across the hall, you know, across the street? You know, "Oh, no, just checking." You know, heard whatever. Try to make it as innocuous and, again, as unintrusive as possible.

So you escalate the level of intrusivity each time. So least intrusive method as possible, not disrupting anybody's day. Escalating it again, maybe talking to school officials, people in the neighborhood, that sort of thing.

Most intrusive would be, we found something, we're going to go full field investigation. Do we need a Title III, if it's a criminal matter? Do we a FISA if we suspect international terrorist connections?

So that's what I mean by least intrusive.

Q And the initial stage is the least intrusive method?

A Yes, always, default setting, least intrusive. Unless you've got pictures of someone putting an explosive device underneath a transfer station somewhere, then, boom, you're off to the races, full field investigation, least intrusive methods be darned.

Q Okay. I want to turn to the conversation about where you said there was a comment made that there may be CHSs on the video whose identity we need to protect.

A Correct.

Q That conversation, do you remember when that conversation took place?

A No, I don't remember the exact day.

Q Can you recall if it was like January, February, March --

A Oh, no, no, no, no, no. It would have been a couple -- at least 4 to 8 weeks down the line when they were asking us to pursue this.

Q So maybe end of February, early March? Would that be about right?

A That's fair. But, like, please don't marry me to a date because I don't know.

Q Okay. And you -- I think you said you don't know who said that?

A I do not. I don't recall.

Q Okay. But you can remember their words exactly?

A No, I can't remember their exact words.

Q Oh, okay. So that was just a paraphrase that you --

A Yes, yeah.

Q Okay. But you believe the words were "there may be"?

A I know the word "may be" used, may be, quotations, used, yes.

Q Do you believe that there were potentially confidential human sources involved?

Mr. Foster. Just testify to what you know.

Mr. Hill. I don't know that there were potential human sources, CHSs, or UCs. I don't know that.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I think that you were asked if you had any notes, and you said they may have been -- they may have been shredded?

A No. They asked if the CT2 supervisor had any notes.

Q Okay.

A And I said we're required to keep all handwritten notes for any kind of case, but if they're just like notes of the daily routine check with so and so on this, those kinds of things, we usually keep them like in a spiral notebook. And if it's case specific, it will have its own notebook. If it's just day-to-day operations, they're just going to get shredded.

Q Okay. And just to clarify, did you hear this line about the CHSs? Did you hear that directly, or was that told to you?

A No, I heard it directly.

Q You heard it directly.

A Wait, wait, wait, wait, wait, wait. It's over 2 years ago.

Ah. I asked the CT supervisor the same question that he asked the other Washington Field Office supervisor, to which he said... and then he said no, yada, yada, yada. So secondhand from a peer and a personal friend.

Q And I'm sorry. Again, who was that?

A I would be happy to give his name outside the --

Q No, I don't need the name, but his position.

A The CT supervisor, CT3 -- CT2 supervisor, the domestic terrorism squad.

Q And CT2 stands for?

A Counterterrorism 2. So there's CT1, CT2, and CT3, just like we have CI 1, CI

2, CI 3, CI 4, Cyber 1, CY1, CY2, that kind of thing. Nothing fancy or --

Q Okay. I don't know the acronyms, so --

A No. I'm sorry. I said I was going to try to avoid that, and I failed again.

Q There was a comment made -- sorry. I'm trying to read my writing.

With respect to the comment about the bicycle barriers being removed, that case --

A Yes.

Q -- you said that the Washington Field Office was displeased.

Can you state again, how did you know the Washington Field Office was displeased?

A So, again, very similar to the -- oh, the sources. Similar conversation.

And this is -- again, this is just part of the daily routine of me checking with my counterpart. So I was offsite at the Commonwealth Fusion Center. I would go into Boston once a week for my daily ONDCP, Office of National Drug Control Policy, calls.

So I would talk to that CT2 supervisor daily and see him at least once a week, and he was recapping what had happened with the -- like I said, we didn't have many cases, but recapping what happened with the one case where he escaped prosecution because of the video. And he said that, quote -- well, maybe not quote -- but WFO is not happy about that.

Q Okay. And you did hear that secondhand?

A Secondhand, yes.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And I apologize for jumping back, but back to the Bank of America list that we talked about just a couple of minutes ago. Did you see that list yourself?

A I saw the EC in SENTINEL. I didn't open up the list. It was huge.

Q Okay. And you mentioned the seven names on that list.

A Yes.

Q Did you see those names?

A I did, but I don't remember them.

Q Okay. How did it come about that you were looking and you saw the EC in SENTINEL? Was it part of your regular duties? Did somebody ask you --

A Yeah. No, no. It was just regular coordination with a counterpart.

Q Okay. So it wasn't that somebody said, "We need you to run this down. Can you take a look at this list?"

A It never got to that because the CT2 supervisor said, no, we're not doing this based on that.

Q Okay.

A So there was no request for my squad to do any work on behalf of -- and, quite frankly, with just seven names, he could have had anybody on his squad help out with that.

If one of those -- if during a [inaudible] -- let's say, for instance, let's say they did run down those seven names and they found that one of them had an extensive criminal history in Boston, then I would become more detail involved with the Boston Regional Intelligence Center.

Q Okay. But, in this particular case you just happened to be on SENTINEL and you saw it?

A No, I didn't happen to be on SENTINEL.

Q It was your job to be on SENTINEL?

A Yes.

Q Sorry. I didn't mean to diminish your -- part of your work.

You mentioned -- you were talking about your opinion of the use of the DVE threat tags --

A Yes.

Q -- and that they were -- and the prosecution of the cases -- the January 6th cases -- as misdemeanors.

Are you -- and you're not a lawyer, right?

A Correct.

Q Are you familiar with who would have jurisdiction to prosecute crimes that occur on Federal property?

A The U.S. Attorney's Office, whether it be the AUSA or the U.S. Attorney's Office.

I don't know about the relationship with the Capitol Hill Police and the District of Columbia. I know nothing about that.

Q Okay. So you wouldn't know if the FBI would ordinarily investigate crimes that took place on Capitol Grounds, for example?

A No, I would not.

Q Okay.

A However, the FBI is not investigating all of those crimes that took place on Capitol Grounds in Washington. Those crimes are being investigated around the country by FBI offices in other parts of the country.

So if the FBI does have primacy on investigating crimes that take place within the District, then I will ask you, why weren't those cases then opened up in Washington Field Office?

Q Thank you for that.

The Republican counsel said -- asked you if it was antithetical to pull resources from crimes, such as child sex abuse cases, to investigate the January 6th cases. And I'm paraphrasing, so that's not a direct quote.

Do you know if there were resources pulled from child sex abuse cases to work on January 6th crimes?

A Not in the Boston office. Again, our SAC and ASAC team are hardcore FBI seasoned professionals, married at the hip to the Constitution and the rule of law. We've had women in those positions as well. Utmost integrity -- I mean, they are the embodiment, the physical manifestation of the word "integrity." They stand by their oath.

Q So you have no knowledge of resources being -- any resources being pulled from child sex abuse cases?

A I do not. I do not.

And I had a friend of mine who worked on that squad as a staff operations specialist. At any time -- we used to commute together when we took the train and stuff. So if I went down for a cup of coffee or something like that, I never saw a bunch of empty cubicles.

That's just an observation. I don't look at manning tables or anything like that. But according to her, they were just as busy as ever.

Q Thank you.

I want to turn to -- just staying on the question about January 6th and the cases.

Mr. Hill, where were you on January 6th, 2020?

A In the Commonwealth Fusion Center in Maynard, Massachusetts.

Q And do you -- are you aware that President Trump gave a speech on The Mall that day?

A Yes.

Q And were you aware of that at the time?

A No. I mean, I was just going about my regular daily routine. I mean, keep in mind that I also had the High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area as well, and I can't recall if I were in the middle of any kind of hiring initiatives or anything like that. But I always had a pretty full schedule.

Q Okay. At some point during -- so when did you become aware of that? After the fact, I guess?

A Probably not until I got home -- well, I'm trying to think if there was any traffic on the FBI network. So probably towards the end of the day.

Q Okay.

A And I don't recall the details of that email traffic that was coming out.

Q Did you have any reaction to the email traffic or the news when you learned about it?

A If I had to summarize my reaction in a phrase, it would probably be, "Oh, my God."

Q And can you talk a little bit more about that?

A Just incredulous. I can't believe that this happened, I mean, because I know the security.

So as a national security supervisor, I am responsible for signing off on what's called the threat assessment. And threat assessments are done on, say, the Boston Marathon, on the July 4th stuff, the Super Bowl parade, stuff like that.

I am intimately familiar, because it's my job, with steps that are taken by Federal, State, and local entities to secure public gatherings.

Q Okay.

A So I was, "Oh, my God," incredulous. But I was also mortified, "How the hell did this happen?" having been involved in so many other planning activities regarding threat assessments and the level of detail and work that goes into those.

Q Thank you for that.

So you mentioned that you were incredulous, that you couldn't believe that this had happened, given your prior experience with threat assessments, et cetera.

A Uh-huh.

Q Are you aware that individuals broke windows to enter the Capitol?

A I saw it on TV.

Q Okay. That night?

A Probably, yeah.

Q Okay.

A When I went home.

Q I'm sorry?

A When I went home.

Q Understood.

Reports have indicated that certain individuals entered the Capitol without authorization and they were wearing body armor when they did that.

Are you aware of those reports?

A I have heard those reports, yes.

Q Do you have any reaction to them?

A Not really. I mean -- you know, here's my experience, in decades in this line of work, is that there are idiots throughout every segment of society. And if I got worked up over every stupid thing that every stupid person did, I would be sitting in the corner sucking my thumb unable to take any action on anything of consequence. And

I'm just going to let it go at that.

Q Okay. There's photographic evidence that some of the individuals who entered the Capitol without authorization carried Confederate flags and had clothing on with Nazi emblems.

Are you aware of that report?

A I've seen those pictures, yes.

Q And do you have a reaction to that?

A Again, stupid --

Mr. Foster. Can we stipulate that he's seen all the news coverage of January 6th and is aware of the things that we're all generally aware of and that he has whatever reactions that he has to them?

I mean, he has to drive back to New Jersey tonight and --

Mr. Hill. Delaware.

Mr. Foster. I'm sorry. Delaware tonight. And he's here voluntarily to answer your questions. He's been doing it for -- since 10 o'clock this morning. It's now 2:26.

So can you please like focus on some things that are factually relevant to the committee's inquiry?

[redacted] So I have -- he's welcome to decline to answer questions. I do have 60 minutes. It's a voluntary transcribed interview. He's welcome to decline to answer the questions.

Mr. Hill. Okay.

[redacted] I do have 60 minutes, though, to ask questions.

Mr. Foster. Okay. Well, he's someone who has personal factual knowledge about some matters that are going to be of controversy and examined by the committee. And so if you could ask him about those things, it would be a more productive use of his time.

[redacted] Thank you for that.

BY [redacted]

Q Some people have described the individuals who entered the Capitol as rioters.

Do you agree with that description?

A After observing the peaceful protests after the George Floyd incident, I'm not so sure what the current definition of the word "riot" means.

Q So you don't know if you would describe the individuals who entered the Capitol as rioters, in your own words?

A As I said, the word has been perverted. I don't know what it means anymore.

Q Is there another term you would use?

A Stupid people doing stupid things.

Q Okay.

A Let's just get this clear for the record. I don't support, under any circumstances, attacking police officers, breaking into restricted areas, destroying of government property, and doing stupid things. Every person that broke the law needs to be identified and prosecuted to the fullest extent.

What I take umbrage with is casting in a sea net covering miles and scooping up everything that they can and the erosion of civil liberties surrounding that.

Okay.

Q Thank you for that.

Are you -- you're aware -- or are you aware that there were recent convictions for seditious conspiracy in Federal court?

A The Proud Boys, yes.

Q Do you have a reaction to that conviction?

A I'm not a trial attorney. I don't know if any of those cases are going to be on appeal. I can only -- and I want to trust the legal system and that all processes were observed and they were charged and prosecuted in accordance with our laws and guidelines.

Q Are you familiar with the death of Ashli Babbitt?

A Yes.

Q Can you tell us, in your own words, what your understanding is of the circumstances surrounding her death?

A She was being pushed by a crowd. She tried to escape that crowd through a broken window.

For the record, I'm a U.S. Concealed Carry Association certified instructor. What I saw was the unlawful use of deadly force by Lieutenant Byrd.

Q And, in your opinion, should Mr. Byrd be prosecuted for that?

A Based on my observation of the shooting and the details that I know, which there may be more that I'm not privy to, but based on what I know, it was not a lawful shoot. It was not a lawful use of deadly force.

Q Are you familiar with the death of Capitol Police Officer Brian Sicknick?

A Yeah. He died a few days of, I believe, was it a brain aneurysm, after the events of January 6th?

Q So that's your understanding of the circumstances surrounding his death?

A Well, he wasn't bludgeoned in the head with a fire extinguisher. I know that.

Mr. Foster. Just to be clear, all the questions, the last several questions, all your knowledge from all of that is based on the same knowledge that the counsel has from watching news and reading news accounts, correct?

Mr. Hill. Correct. I mean --

Mr. Foster. You have no personal knowledge about any of these?

Mr. Hill. No, no personal resources. I mean, if she --

Mr. Foster. If you want to spend the resources to pay the court reporter to have a discussion about publicly known facts, I mean, that's obviously -- you know, you can do that. I don't know how much more he wants to sit here and do that.

[redacted] That's fine. He's welcome -- like I said, he's welcome to decline to answer the questions.

Mrs. Hill. Well, I don't want to undermine my credibility.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Hill, do you have a Twitter account?

A Yes, I do.

Q What is your handle?

A You're welcome to conduct searches. You might already have it.

Q Is it @SeniorChiefEXW?

A Yes, it is.

[redacted] Okay. And I -- how should I do this?

So I'm just going to admit this for the record to make the record of your Twitter account.

Do you know what number we're on?

Mr. Foster. Four.

[redacted] Four.

BY [redacted]

Q So is this your cover page, the header?

A Yes.

Q So 13 years Active-Duty USMC, another 13 years USNR?

A Yes.

Q Retired FBI national security intelligence supervisor, current adjunct professor. And it says you joined August 2021. Is that correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q On January 19th you tweeted an Epoch Times story reading, "New body cam footage boosts interest in release of 14,000 hours of January 6th video and dramatic body cam footage showing protestors doing CPR on the lifeless body of Jan. 6 protestor, Rosanne Boyland," has hats off.

You commented, "I'm disappointed @SpeakerMcCarthy ended the #J6 committee. There needs to be a real investigation. #RosanneBoyland."

Do you recall tweeting that?

A Yes, it's in there.

Q Okay. And I'm going to admit this as exhibit No. 5.

[Hill Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Who was Rosanne Boyland?

A She was one of the people trampled to death inside the -- what do you call it? -- the tunnel, yeah.

Q And what did you mean by, "There needs to be a real investigation," if you recall?

A You know what? This is First Amendment-protected activity, I'm not going to go and defend it. You can read it for yourself. You can interpret what I said or misinterpret what I said. It's entirely up to you.

But I'm not going to get in, in this setting, to defending First Amendment-protected activity, no differently than we did with the people that we were getting leads on engaging in First Amendment-protected activity.

Q Understood.

On January 19th, you tweeted a military.com article reading, "3 Active-Duty Marines Who Work in Intelligence Arrested for Alleged Participation in Jan. 6th Riot."

You commented, "#J6Entrapment."

Do you recall that?

A I guess. I don't know. If you have it in front of you.

[Hill Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I'm going to mark this as exhibit No. 6.

Here's a copy.

Do you recall what you meant by #J6 entrapment?

Mr. Hill. Again, I'm not --

Mr. Foster. Can I have a copy?

Mr. Hill. Here.

[redacted] There's two copies there.

Mr. Hill. Again, I'm not going to get into defending stuff that you can read for yourself. Again, First Amendment-protected activity.

[redacted] Okay. On January 18th, you tweeted an article from pjmedia.com headlined, "Oops: Joe Biden Just Torpedoed the Left's Entire Jan. 6 'Insurrection' Narrative." And reading: There was no insurrection. It's a massive lie that the left has constructed in order to discredit and destroy the America-First -- and then it cuts off.

You commented, "#J6."

Do you recall that?

Mr. Hill. No. But, obviously, you have physical evidence of it.

[Hill Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And that is being marked as exhibit No. 7.

On January 8th, you retweeted a post from Glenn Beck stating, "It's not just Ray Epps who the government has ignored. @DarrenJBeattie told me he, quote, 'pulled out all the stops' to identify the Jan. 6 rioter 'Scaffold Commander,' but found nothing. If his identity is actually uncovered, it is going to be one of the biggest scandals in the country."

You commented, "Somebody" -- "Someone knows the identity of the #NWScaffoldCommander. Seek #Whistleblower protection and step up. Be a #Patriot."

Do you recall that?

Mr. Hill. Not entirely, but I'm sure you have physical evidence of it.

Mr. Foster. I'm sorry. Before we go on to exhibit -- what I assume you're about to mark as exhibit 8.

[redacted] Yeah.

[Hill Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Foster. Exhibit 7, I just want to make sure the record is clear. Are those your words, or are those the words of the person who you retweeted?

Mr. Hill. Where?

Mr. Foster. Well, the ones that she read into the record. They appear to be the same.

Mr. Hill. Yeah. So that would be -- that's just the headline. I just retweeted it with the #J6.

[redacted] So the #J6 is your words?

Mr. Hill. Right.

[redacted] Okay. And in this one, your words are, "Someone knows the identity of #NWScaffoldCommander. Seek #Whistleblower protection and step up. Be a #Patriot."

Do you have any --

Mr. Foster. Could you just give him a minute to look at that?

[redacted] Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Hill. Again, I'm not going to engage in a defense of my First Amendment-protected activity.

[redacted] Okay. On January 6th you tweeted a revolver.com story entitled, "Meet Ray Epps, Part 2: Damning New Details Emerge Exposing" -- and it cuts off.

You commented, "#insurrection #RayEpps #Fedsurrection #J6."

Do you recall this?

Mr. Hill. I know I did read some articles from Revolver. So all I did was add hashtag to it. Okay.

[redacted] Marking that as exhibit --

Mr. Foster. This is 9?

[redacted] No. 9.

[Hill Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q You don't recall what you met by fedsurrection?

A Again, I'm not going to get into defending or explaining First Amendment-protected activity.

Q Okay. On January 6th, you tweeted a photograph of a man with words atop him reading, "Where's Ray Epps? Why has he not been arrested?"

And you commented, "Happy Anniversary Ray Epps, from your friends in The Deep State. Job well done! #J6."

Do you recall that?

A I don't know. I don't know how many Twitter posts I have. I don't recall every single one. But, obviously, this came off my profile.

Q Okay. Marking that as exhibit No. 10.

[Hill Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Foster. Can you give us an idea of how many more of these you have? I mean, everybody can go look at his Twitter account for themselves and read what's in it.

[redacted] I'm just going to keep going. Thanks.

Mr. Foster. Indefinitely or --

[redacted] I have 60 minutes. So I have 60 minutes to ask, under the agreed-upon rules, anything I'd like.

Mr. Foster. Well, he's here voluntarily, and I'm asking you, is this how you're going to spend the rest of the 60 minutes, is going through every single Twitter -- tweet on his Twitter account?

[redacted] We'll see how far I can get. You're welcome to --

Mr. Foster. So that's your plan?

[redacted] You know I do have 60 minutes. We had agreed upon 60 minutes.

Mr. Foster. Well, you agreed with them. You didn't agree with him.

[redacted] If you don't want to answer the questions or if you want to advise your client not to answer the questions or to end the interview, that's your --

Mr. Foster. Well, I'm trying to manage his time, because he has to drive a considerable amount this afternoon. So he's here to help. He's here to be helpful.

If you're going to give him an inquisition on his political opinions that you don't like or news articles that you don't think he should have retweeted or hashtags that you don't think he should have used, that's not a valuable use of his time.

So I'm trying to get an assessment so he can make an informed decision about whether he wants to remain here.

Mr. Hill. Yeah, I mean, if this is all we're going to do is go over my tweets, the answer is going to be the same each and every time, that this is First Amendment-protected activity. It's the same kind of answer that we gave to guardian leads and other conversations.

So, I mean, if you want to spend the time creating a video, an audio record of me saying this is First Amendment-protected activity, like you said, it's your time.

[redacted] Okay. And I do think, you know, you've talked about your handling of the January 6th cases or your overseeing of it. So I think this just provides something of a fuller picture.

On December 28th, 2022 --

Mr. Foster. Well, it may, it may, but the point of this exercise is supposed to be able for the committee to find out what he knows, to get facts out of his head that's not already available for everybody to look at it themselves on the internet if they want to.

[redacted] I have 60 minutes. Again, you are not obligated to sit here for the 60 minutes. But as long as I have 60 minutes, I'm going to finish out my question line.

Mr. Hill. So is this what it's going to be, about the Twitter tweets for the next 60 minutes?

[redacted] I don't want to preview. It's possible that the question lines could lead us in another direction.

Mr. Foster. Actually, you started at 2:03, so you don't have 60 minutes.

[redacted] I'm sorry. I mean I have 60 minutes total. I have whatever is left in the time frame.

Mr. Hill. I mean, like I said at the very beginning, my goal is to be helpful. If we're going to be killing trees and handing out printouts of Twitter tweets we may be done, I mean, unless you've got -- [redacted] I intend to ask about additional tweets.

Mr. Hill. Okay. Well, I guess it might be time to hit the road if that's all we're going to be doing is reading my Twitter account.

Mr. Foster. Can we go off the record?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] Okay. And it's 2:40.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We're back on the record.

It's 2:45. We just had a 5-minute break.

Mr. Foster. Before you go on with your questioning, George would like to request, respectfully, that given that he has articulated what his answer will be to this entire -- to this repeated, repetitive line of questioning, and that it's not a useful exercise in terms of illuminating any factual questions for the committee, for anybody on either side, he, respectfully, requests that you -- he will stipulate. You've already established this is his Twitter account. Everybody can go look at it and see what's on it. I'm sure you have copies of everything already. There's not any use in going through each and every one of them and asking him what he meant, because what he meant is what he said. And you can take it for what it says.

So he would, respectfully, ask that you not continue with that line of questioning. If you have factual questions that you would like to get at, where there's actual information that might be useful for the committee that he knows that you could get out of him, that's a perfectly productive use of our time.

[redacted] Thank you for that. I appreciate the request.

I will say, in some cases, the language that he used, it's not clear to me. It's not clear to me what hashtags mean or what particular references mean.

Obviously, he's welcome to decline to answer, and that's completely fine.

Mr. Foster. Well, he's going to give the same answer to every questioning.

I don't know if you -- have you ever taken a deposition or a transcribed interview where someone pled the Fifth?

[redacted] You know, my experience isn't really relevant here. I would like to get through my question line --

Mr. Foster. Well, typically after you go through it multiple times, like it's just polite, especially if the person is here.

[redacted] So is he pleading the Fifth? Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Foster. No, he's not pleading the Fifth. I'm making an analogy. I'm saying he's telling you that there's -- he's going to give you -- that's something that frequently happens. Someone will come in and they'll say, "I'm going to answer this way to every question that you pose." Right? Every question along this line he's going to answer that way. Okay?

So it's a waste of everyone's time, and it's a waste of government resources to have a court reporter sitting here going through it when all this information is publicly available, anybody can look at it and draw whatever conclusions they want to from it.

So he -- if there's anything that's -- I mean, if there's anything that is genuinely ambiguous and relevant to something that the committee needs to inquire into, he'll consider your question. But if it's just going to be putting tweets before him for the next however minutes you have left, we would, respectfully, ask that you not do that and move on to another area of questioning.

[redacted] I appreciate that.

I have a handful of tweets that I would like to ask about that there are unclear references in. I do appreciate your position --

[redacted] I would just like to reiterate the request, because if we have whistleblowers that are brave enough to come forward and they realize that when they do come forward they get about an hour of substantive questions and then the rest of the time is spent just interrogating their First Amendment activity, that could be a chilling effect, and so --

Mr. Foster. It will absolutely be a chilling effect.

[redacted] So I just don't --

[redacted] And I would note that these are confidential, and the terms of the transcribed interview were that nothing that takes place in this room is to be discussed with anyone else, including, I would presume, with other witnesses.

So I appreciate where you're coming from. I have, I think, about five more tweets now --

Mr. Foster. Well, we all know that they will become public at some point. There's no restriction. Any of you guys can walk out of here, despite what you've asked of us, any one of you can walk out. And despite the position that that puts him in, he's come here, and he's taken his time, at his own personal expense and his time, to come here and try to help you.

[redacted] I appreciate that.

Mr. Foster. Right. So that's not a very -- it's not a productive use of his time to go through tweet after tweet after tweet.

And at some point those transcripts, if history is any guide, will be public, and that will deter other whistleblowers from coming forward if they think that the reaction from the committee staff is going to be to waste their time.

[redacted] I appreciate that.

You know, I understand that he may not want to talk about these things. I do have questions to ask him. So I'm going to continue on my line. I can tell you I have about five questions left on this line.

Mr. Foster. Thank you. That's what I was asking you before that you wouldn't tell me. I appreciate you now telling me how many more we have to go.

[redacted] On December 28th, 2022, you retweeted a post from @LynneS700 stating that, "Patriots were the only ones trying to stop the fake insurrection violence being committed by implanted antifa. (Pelosi's buddies)."

You commented, "Insurrection my a$$. It was a setup and, sadly, there's no shortage of idiots willing to take the bait."

Do you recall this?

Mr. Hill. I don't recall it exactly. But based on what you've just shown me, it does look like it's my tweet.

[Hill Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Okay. We're marking that as exhibit 11 for the record.

On December 22nd --

Mr. Foster. I'm sorry. Could you give me a second to look at the exhibit, please?

[redacted] Uh-huh.

And I would like to note for the record that we did just have about a 4-minute conversation about this, and now Mr. Hill's attorney is taking about a minute to review the tweet.

Mr. Foster. It hasn't been a minute. I'm done.

[redacted] On December 22nd, 2022, you tweeted a Just the News story stating that, quote, "Contemporaneous emails and text messages show Pelosi staff involved in failed security planning ahead of Capitol riot."

You commented, "@SpeakerPelosi and her staff have blood on their hands. #J6."

We're marking this as exhibit 12.

[Hill Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Do you recall this?

Mr. Hill. I don't recall it, but it does look like my tweet.

Mr. Foster. Let the record reflect that the witness didn't even look at the exhibit before he said that, so --

[redacted] Would you just take a look and --

Mr. Foster. So he's taking your word for it.

BY [redacted]

Q Please take a look, sir, and then let me know if you --

A That is my ugly mug, and that is my Twitter handle.

Q Okay. Do you recall what you meant by Speaker Pelosi and her staff have blood on their hands?

A Again, First Amendment-protected activity. I'm not going to go into any explanation.

Q Okay. On November 30th, 2022, you retweeted a tweet from Marjorie Taylor Greene reading, "If the FBI had so many informants inside a group, why don't they stop J6 from happening?"

You commented, "The #FBI are the brown shirt enforcers of the @DNC. By the Bureau's own policy, they are obligated to disrupt if innocent lives are at risk. But #Trump supporters aren't ever innocent, are they?"

Do you recall this?

A No, I don't.

Q We are marking this as exhibit 14 --

Voice. 13.

[redacted] 13. I'm sorry.

[Hill Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Hill. For the record, it looks like my picture and my Twitter handle.

BY [redacted]

Q And do you know what you meant by "brown shirt enforcers"?

A Again, First Amendment-protected speech. I'm not going to explain it.

Q Okay. On November 26th, 2022, you tweeted an Epoch Times article with a picture of now Chairman Jordan. The headline of the article reads, "FBI Waited Over a Year to Fully Investigate Jan. 6 Pipe Bombs: House Judiciary."

You commented, "The reason that bomber is not already in jail is because this is part of a larger #Democrat plan using their enforcement arm, the #FBI."

Do you recall this?

A I don't.

Q We're marking this as exhibit 14.

[Hill Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Hill. For the record, that is my Twitter handle.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you tell us what you meant by larger Democratic plan -- larger Democrat plan?

A First Amendment-protected activity. I'm not going to explain it.

Q Okay. On November 6th, 2022, you tweeted an Epoch Times story headlined, quote, "Oath Keepers Trial: Stewart Rhodes Testifies That 2020 Election Was Unconstitutional."

You commented, "Please take a minute to read this."

Do you recall this?

A No.

Q And that's marked as exhibit 15.

[Hill Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Hill. For the record, that is my Twitter handle.

[redacted] On January 6th of this year, you tweeted a picture of a man and a woman standing next to each other. It reads, "This needs to be posted daily until that SOB is arrested and stands trial."

It says on top, "Michael Byrd murdered Ashli Babbitt January 6th, 2021."

Do you recall this?

Mr. Hill. No. That is my Twitter handle, and those people standing next to each other are Michael Byrd and Ashli Babbitt.

[Hill Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] We've marked that as exhibit 16.

We have just about, I think, 10 minutes left.

Mr. Foster. But you're done with tweets?

[redacted] We'll see.

Mr. Foster. I think we got to five. That was your magic number.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to turn back to the podcast that you appeared on. On the Kyle Seraphin podcast you stated, "The Republicans are talking about a 21st century, a 2023 version of the Church committee."

You added some comments about English literature. We're happy to play this for you if that would be helpful.

And you continued, "I think what Shakespeare said, if you're going to kill the king, make sure you kill the king. If they're going to go after this new committee, after the intelligence community, they better make sure they get every bit of cancer that's out there, because I can tell you right now it's going to come back, and it'll come back stronger, more vicious than ever."

Do you recall this?

A Yes.

Q And can you tell us what you meant by the committee needing to get every bit of cancer?

A Again, First Amendment-protected activity, not going to get into explaining my comments on a podcast.

I'll be honest with you, you seem to have so many questions about podcasts and tweets. I'd be happy to sit down with you if you ever -- do you have a podcast format or program that maybe you and I can get on, on an informal -- okay. Sorry.

Q And I'm sorry. I do actually have two more tweets.

On November 26th, 2022, you tweeted a Washington Examiner article headlined, quote, "Here are the 24 [sic] Biden administration officials House Republicans have put on notice."

You commented, "Hearings are great. Get it all into the news stream. That the current #DOJ will do nothing should not stop the hearings."

Do you recall this?

A No.

[2:57 p.m.]

[Hill Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q We've marked this as exhibit 17. Are you able to --

A That is my Twitter handle.

Q Okay. Are you able to tell us what you meant by "get it all into the news stream"?

A Again, First Amendment-protected activity. I'm not going to get into explaining it.

Q And can you tell us whether you consider it important to get this information out?

A I think any information that doesn't threaten national security sources and methods always does well in the sunlight.

Q On August 13, 2022, you tweeted, quote, "Wray has never lost a minute's sleep over @ChuckGrassley, @SenTedCruz, or @Jim_Jordan. I'm sorry, but it's true. No one in #DOJ or #FBI has ever paid a price for unlawful conduct and never will. Sad but true."

Do you recall this?

A Was that a tweet?

Q It was a tweet, August 13, 2022.

A I don't know. Can I see it?

Q Sure.

A I don't remember it.

Q And we are marking this as exhibit 18.

[Hill Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Hill. Yeah. So I don't even know what this tweet was in response to, but that is my Twitter handle.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Do you recall what you meant by "no one in DOJ or FBI has ever paid a price for unlawful conduct and never will"?

A Again, First Amendment-protected activity.

Mr. Foster. I just note for the record that the exhibit shows that the tweet that it was in response to appears to have been deleted.

[redacted] That's accurate. And we've admitted the whole tweet for the record, so that will be reflected.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to talk a little bit about your preparation for this interview.

A Uh-huh.

Q Just some kind of background questions.

And, actually, before we even get into that, Mr. Hill, have you ever been charged with a crime?

A No.

Q Have you ever been involved in any other legal claims or lawsuits?

A No.

Q Have you ever been accused of misconduct at the FBI or in any of your other previous jobs?

A No. Just the opposite. I've been decorated.

Q Okay.

Have you ever received monetary compensation for speaking about the FBI?

A Never.

Q Have you ever engaged in discussions related to the possibility of being paid for relaying your story, such as compensation for --

A No.

Q -- writing a book or article?

A No.

Q Were you compensated for the podcast that you participated --

A No.

Q -- in?

Mr. Foster. Let her finish the question --

Mr. Hill. Oh, sorry.

Mr. Foster. -- so we have a clear record.

Mr. Hill. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q How did you prepare for this interview?

A I had conversations with [redacted] [redacted] and another gentleman's name who's blanking on me right now. Probably no less -- maybe about half a dozen conversations with them and probably half a dozen conversations with the gentleman seated to my left, Jason.

Q Did you review any documents in preparation for the interview?

A No documents related to the interview. The only thing I did look at, which I referenced in my interview, is I looked at the uniform crime data so that I spoke accurately, and I went to the CDC site so that I spoke accurately about overdose deaths.

So that was -- as far as any looking at things, that was -- I don't know if that would -- I'm not a lawyer. I don't know if those qualify as documents. I just went to some websites, both government --

Mr. Foster. Public information.

Mr. Hill. Yes.

Mr. Foster. Yeah.

Don't answer any questions about our communications, obviously.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know a gentleman by the name of Steven Friend?

A I know of him.

Q Okay. And how do you know of him?

A He's in the news.

Q And what do you know of him?

A Not much other than what's in the news. I know -- I don't know if he's retired or still in the -- I think what I'm giving away is I don't really know very much.

Q Okay. Are you aware of any allegations that he might have made?

A I didn't know he made allegations against the FBI.

Q Do you know a gentleman named Garrett O'Boyle?

A Never heard the name.

Q Okay.

A O'Boyle?

Q O'Boyle.

A Never heard the name.

[redacted] I think we are just about at time, so we can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Back on the record.

Mr. Foster. So, just before we close, the minority staff spent a lot of time going through various what I would call political opinions that you have posted since leaving the FBI.

Is it fair to say that those opinions were based on the concerns that you had about what you saw while you were in the FBI as well as public reporting?

Mr. Hill. Yes. Nothing's changed.

I love the FBI. But, like with any parent, I mean -- or if someone calls themself your friend, if they're not willing to say, "Hey, you need to adjust yourself," they're not your friend. If all they do is just say, "Hey, this is great, this is great, this is great, keep going the way you're going," they're truly not your friend and they're not a very good parent.

Nothing's changed. I want the FBI to be successful.

Mr. Foster. So the minority staff also, in the first round of questioning, said that your statements on the podcast went to your -- claimed that they went to your credibility. I didn't hear anything that suggested that you were dishonest in any way, in any form, anywhere, anytime.

Is everything that you testified to today with regard to the facts accurate and truthful, to the best of your knowledge?

Mr. Hill. Regarding fact testimony, yes. Opinions are opinions, and, unfortunately, I probably gave too many of those.

[redacted] And I should clarify. I did say "credibility." I meant to say "bias."

Mr. Hill. Huge difference.

[redacted] And I -- yeah, I did not mean to impugn your credibility, and I do apologize.

Mr. Hill. I -- for the record, I -- quite frankly, I found it offensive.

[redacted] I apologize.

Mr. Hill. I don't know if you've ever been subject to a full-scope lifestyle poly, but it's -- yeah. You went there.

[redacted] And, for the record, it is fair to ask any witness about credibility questions to establish credibility for the record.

Mr. Foster. Of course. But none of your questions went to anything related to any of his truthfulness in any form, anywhere, ever.

[redacted] And, with that, I think we can go -- I would say that was, you know -- as I said, it goes to bias -- and I think we can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 3:05 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

All right. That's the end of my preamble.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] We have nothing to add.

[redacted] Okay. The clock now reads 10:07. We'll start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. O'Boyle, I want to start with your tenure at the FBI.

When did you join the FBI?

A I was hired in July of 2018.

Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

A So prior to becoming an FBI agent, I was a police officer for about 4 years, and before that, I was an infantryman in the Army for about 6 years.

And I've always loved this country. Once I decided I wanted to get into law enforcement, the FBI has always been held up as the pinnacle of that profession.

So once I became a police officer, it kind of became a dream of mine to work for the FBI, and I slowly started working towards that goal.

I never really thought it would be realized, honestly. For the years I did have that badge and those credentials, often when I'd clip that badge on my belt, I thought, wow, I actually did it, I became an FBI agent.

And leading up to that process, while I was a police officer, I ended up going back to school to finish my bachelor's degree, and I finished it at Marquette University, where I graduated cum laude with a degree in criminology and law studies.

Shortly after that, I discussed with my wife my goals and desires to become an FBI agent. I think she thought it was kind of a pipe dream, and she said, yeah, go ahead. And, you know, she later told me that she didn't think it would happen, and I didn't either.

And so I started the application process, and about a year after that, I had made it through everything and got hired and headed off to Quantico.

But the primary motivation is, I want to take care of my fellow citizens in this country and do right by them and uphold the Constitution. It's been a longstanding value of mine. And that's why, in large part, why I joined the military, why I became a police officer, and then eventually why I became an FBI agent.

Q Okay. And let's talk about your service to this country.

You were an infantryman in the Army, correct?

A Correct.

Q And how long were you in the Army?

A Approximately 6 years.

Q And did you deploy with the Army?

A I did. I spent a year in Iraq and a year in Afghanistan.

Q Did you receive any service awards?

A I did. I can't list them off the top of my head. I'd have to reference my DD 214.

Q Yeah. About how many?

A I'm not sure. I mean, I'm thinking of the ribbons on my dress uniform. There are probably somewhere around ten on there, maybe.

Q Okay. And you received an honorable discharge from the military?

A I did.

Q And then you became a police officer, correct?

A Correct.

Q And where were you a police officer?

A At a place called Waukesha, Wisconsin.

Q And how long were you a police officer there?

A Approximately 4 years.

Q Now, going to your position at the FBI, when you started in 2018.

Can you walk us through all of the positions you have held at the FBI?

A Yeah. So initially the FBI has people who are trying to become agents. They're called a new agent trainee, a NAT for short. So that's kind of what you are at Quantico for the 5 months or so that you're there.

And then once you graduate, you're a special agent, sworn into full duty. And after graduation, I was assigned -- well, I guess during Quantico, I was assigned to the Kansas City Division, and then later on, I was assigned to the Wichita Resident Agency, which is a smaller office, a satellite office for the Kansas City Division in Wichita, Kansas.

So when I got there, I was assigned to the Joint Terrorism Task Force, and that is where I worked up until my suspension, really.

I think I'd been in the FBI for about 2 years, at which point I tried out for the SWAT team, and I got selected for that, which that had been a longstanding goal of mine, was to make SWAT. Initially, it was at the police department, but thankfully it materialized with the FBI, which I don't think there's very many overall, in the history of the FBI, who have made SWAT.

So I think the FBI would probably try to categorize me as a malcontent, but that's -- couldn't be further from the truth. I loved my time in the FBI, it's the best job I've ever had, and I worked hard to attain special positions like SWAT, and also while working on my cases.

So I still remained on the Joint Terrorism Task Force, and then had my additional duties of SWAT. I also was an assistant weapons of mass destruction coordinator for the Resident Agency in Wichita. I'm trying to think what else I've done.

So shortly before I got suspended I tried out for a new position, a new unit that the FBI was creating, and the tryout was held at Quantico. So, again, it wasn't just a position that anybody could take or accept. You had to try out and get picked for it.

So I did that tryout in May of 2022, and then in June I found out that I had been selected for that new unit and that new position, and I accepted those transfer orders in June.

And between June and September, I was working on the transfer and wrapping up some casework in Wichita, also some additional training for the new unit that I was heading to.

And in August we sold our house and closed on our house there. My wife was pregnant at the time. So the FBI knew all this.

And we were living in temporary quarters until the baby was born. She was born on September 8th. And shortly after that, maybe a week or so, we went to Wisconsin where we thought we were just going to be visiting family for a short period before we moved here to -- or not here, but to Virginia.

And on September 23rd, I spoke with who was going to be my new boss at the new unit and told them that I still intended to come to the new unit the following Monday to report, which was Monday, September 26th.

So I did travel at personal expense, which it would've been -- I mean, the FBI would've covered my travel had I not been suspended. So I traveled at personal expense to Virginia to report, and when I tried to report, instead I was suspended, which came as a shock to me at the time and still really is.

So then the next day I headed back to Wisconsin. And that, yeah, I guess that really wraps up my time in the FBI thus far.

Q And so at the Wichita Resident Agency in 2021 and 2022, you were at SWAT team, JTTF, and then the weapons of mass destruction coordinator. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And who was your direct supervisor at Wichita?

A Initially it was Supervisory Special Agent Sonia Garcia. And then she later got promoted, and then eventually got promoted again and left the Wichita Resident Agency. And once she got promoted the first time, my supervisory special agent was Sean Fitzgerald.

Q And the new unit you tried out for that would have transferred you to Virginia, what was the name of that unit?

A They were calling it the National Surveillance Team. I don't know if that is still the name or not. It was brand-new, so I would've been one of the first members of that team.

And the plan, my understanding was that that first -- the first people who got picked for it were going to help kind of establish the mission set for it.

Q And who would have been your supervisor on the National Surveillance Team, did you understand?

A Supervisory Special Agent Mark Grado, G-r-a-d-o.

Q And do you know about how many members were going to be on the National Surveillance Team?

A I think there was going to be about 12.

Q Okay. And you said on the first day that you were supposed to report for duty you were walked out of the Virginia office.

Can you tell us a little bit about what happened?

A Sure. So the National Surveillance Team falls under the FBI's CIRG, C-I-R-G, which is the Critical Incident Response Group. And I reported to the CIRG, I guess it would be, like, their admin building. I'm not even entirely sure what it was other than it was where I was told to report.

So I thought I was going to be receiving, like, my security in briefing, but instead once I stepped in, I was ushered off to a different conference room where I think it was FBI special agents, I don't recall for sure, I don't recall them giving me their names or anything like that, and they asked me some questions.

And then eventually I was provided a litany of paperwork and escorted off the premises after my gun, badge, creds, work cell phone, work credit card, access badge were all seized. I've honestly not heard a ton about my suspension in the meantime.

Q Do you know who walked you out?

A No. It was unidentified agents.

Q And were you given any reasons for your suspension at that point in time?

A The reason on my paperwork was that on August 23rd, an unidentified person -- or at least unidentified to me -- made an allegation that I had been making unprotected disclosures to the media.

And even though on that paperwork it said that it was an allegation, the very next sentence said that my actions -- which for an investigative agency like the FBI, kind of strikes me as them not really doing their due diligence where they can leap from an allegation to then assuming it was my actions.

But anyway, the next sentence said that my actions essentially mean that I could no longer -- or I was no longer deemed fit to hold a security clearance.

Q And do you know who signed that paperwork?

A That was from, I think her title was an assistant director. Her name is Jen Moore.

Q And she signed the paperwork that revoked your security clearance -- or suspended it?

A Suspended it, correct.

Q And at that time did you refute the allegations that the FBI -- that you had made an unauthorized disclosure to the media?

A I did.

Mr. Binnall. And I'm going to, real quick, say that he can answer this question, but we are not able to go into any details about the investigation -- the ongoing investigation itself due to confidentiality requirements by the FBI.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. O'Boyle. The FBI essentially directed me not to discuss in detail what's going on.

But I did refute the allegations, and I told them that I had not made any unprotected disclosures. And at that point, I didn't really know what else to do, so I told them I had been making protected disclosures to Congress.

And they still wouldn't tell me where the allegations came from or anything like that, but they had made up their mind, which, to me, I'll probably never believe otherwise, but it seems clear to me that it's whistleblower retaliation, that they somehow found out that I had been coming to Congress because I had been doing it for nearly a year.

Mr. Binnall. And don't get into detail with your communications on that.

BY [redacted]

Q What was your reaction when you were walked out?

A I was stunned. I think I was in shock about the whole process, them asking me questions about media leaks that I hadn't done and then seizing my badge and gun and everything I had worked so hard for, from my perspective, just trying to do what the FBI's mission is, which is to uphold the Constitution.

And so I just was stunned that that's how they would treat someone who actually meant that oath. I've taken that oath many times, when I was in the military, as a police officer, when I reenlisted in the military, when I became an FBI agent. And so I was stunned that that's what they would do to somebody.

And then without even doing their due diligence to ascertain whoever made this allegation, if that was even true, but just say, good enough for us to suspend him, or suspend his clearance, because that's what they have done, they've weaponized that clearance process.

They know that if they claim national security that they, carte blanche, can do whatever they want. And you have to have a security clearance to work in the FBI. So if they find any reason to strip you of that clearance, they'll do it, and they'll send you packing, and then there's no -- hardly any recourse for you to take because the FBI investigates itself.

So when I say, I didn't do what you're saying I did, they say, okay, well, we're going to conduct an internal investigation. So the FBI's going to investigate the FBI. That doesn't make any sense.

When I was a police officer, if I arrested somebody for burglary and then said, hey, I arrested you for burglary, why don't you do the investigation, that is not reasonable at all, in any -- in anybody's imagination.

But that's what the FBI does. They take it all internal. And it's like a dog chasing its tail. And they say, well, we found that we did no wrongdoing, have a nice life.

And that's, I think, what they're in the middle of doing right now, although I don't know. It's been nearly 180 days, and I've really not heard anything about where the status of my security clearance is or anything regarding that.

Q And you said that you need a security clearance in order to work for the FBI, correct?

A Correct.

Q And so if they revoke or suspend your security clearance, then are you indefinitely suspended?

A Correct.

Q And can you have outside employment?

A So, you can, but they -- so they've essentially fired me, right? Like they've stripped me of my duty, they've stripped me of my job, my pay, my new position, all of that, and they say, you still have to follow our rules, though. And one of our rules is that if you want to get a job that's not in the FBI, you have to get our permission to get that job.

Now, I haven't even started to look for a job yet because -- this is another interesting aspect of my whole story.

So I'm suspended on September 26th. At that point the FBI essentially rendered me and my family homeless because we sold our house in Kansas and we had not yet closed on the house in Virginia.

While doing our own due diligence, we told our lender, hey, there's been an adverse employment action against me. We don't really know how long it's going to take or what is going to happen. And they said, well, we can't, in good conscience, be your lender for this home loan.

So, again, like I said, we just had a baby. She was about 2 weeks old when this all happened. And then we ended up living in my brother-in-law's RV for, like, a month because we had nowhere else to stay.

And to me, it seems like the FBI did it maliciously knowing how difficult they were going to make it on me. And I thought the FBI was being weaponized against agents or anybody who wanted to step forward and talk about malfeasance inside the agency prior to this. But now, after what has happened to me, I don't think I can ever be convinced that it's anything different than that.

I mean, again, based off this allegation that, as far as I know, is still unsubstantiated, they've done this. And it's -- I mean, I almost have a hard time coming up with the words to describe how beyond the pale it really is, because it's not like they've -- they have said, you're a spy, we're convicting you or arresting you for being a spy, and now we're going to make you and your family homeless.

It's some internal procedure that someone -- I have my theories -- but someone made this allegation against me, and it's, like, based off of what? Because I told them then and I've told them since, I have not made an unprotected disclosure to the media, I had only gone to Congress, and it's -- they never even had responded to that, because, again, that goes back to the weaponization of the clearance.

In October I had an "opportunity" -- I say opportunity, but I use my finger quotes on that, because it's really just a sham of a process.

They said I could do a written appeal. So I did. And I explained some of -- I didn't explain in detail my protected disclosures, but I, again, said how I had made protected disclosures to Congress, not unprotected to the media.

And then after that -- and I also had seven colleagues write supporter declarations on my behalf, which I probably could've gotten more, but other employees in the FBI are so afraid that the same thing is going to happen to them, even for supporting somebody like me, that people don't want to even say, hey, I worked with that guy and I don't think he would do something like that.

But I still was able to get seven of my former colleagues to write a supporter declaration.

And then after the written portion, there was an oral part of that appeal. And in that oral part, they essentially read a script at me, saying that they couldn't discuss any of the merits of the suspension because it was security-related.

And so I said on that oral portion, I said, well, if we can't discuss the merits, what is even the point?

And then they just went back to the script and said, we're here today to see if you can maintain your duty and pay as an agent, or whatever their script was.

And it's, like, well, if we can't address the security clearance portion, what are we actually addressing with this, because they couldn't even address anything of substance.

So they basically split hairs and say, well, the security thing is separate, and so we're going to suspend your pay and duty because we can't even address the security matter.

And that is essentially the last I've heard from them.

Q And let's talk a bit more about your transfer from Kansas to Virginia. You said that you accepted the position in June and then moved. Your first day was September 26th, I think you said. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q So during that time, you sold your house in Kansas, correct?

A Correct.

Q And then were your personal belongings moved or shipped to Virginia at some point?

A They were. So after we closed on our house in -- or I guess right before we closed on our house in Kansas, we had a contract -- I mean, they contract through the government to some degree, came to our house, they packed up our stuff, put it in a truck and brought it to Virginia, where it was put in storage. And we were supposed to get that -- those belongings delivered to the new house once we closed on it.

So I'm trying to think of my dates here. So September 26th I get suspended. So between September 26th and November 3rd we're trying to figure out how we can get our stuff. And for the vast majority of that time, we essentially got the runaround from the FBI and the business they contract with on how to release our goods, on if we can get them shipped or not. And I think I have most of that in email.

But essentially we kept being told, oh, they're not going to release your goods, they're not releasing your goods, we can't give you your stuff.

And then eventually it was certain criteria for me to come get it myself.

And so typically all of this is paid for, it's part of the transfer, and you pay, like, the tax bill on this stuff.

But instead, in my case, they said, you can come and get it, you have to inspect all of your stuff at the warehouse that it's being stored, and then sign off on the paperwork, and see ya.

So at my own expense, again, I rented moving trucks. A friend of mine came with me from Wisconsin. Honestly, I couldn't have done it without him. He has worked in the moving industry for many years. And without his expertise, I don't think my brother and I, who also -- he flew in to help -- would've been able to even pack it up correctly, because they essentially just pull it all out and say, here's your stuff, make sure it's all there.

So we spent the whole day doing that. And, yeah, it cost about $10,000 out of my own expenses to handle that. That doesn't even account for the labor costs that would've been associated with it. And then it's interesting that on that same day is when I was told that my pay was suspended.

And so then --

Q What day were you told your pay was suspended?

A I think that was on November 3rd.

Q Okay.

A So maybe it was November 2nd that we drove down, I don't know, it was, like, right around that date. It was a Friday -- well, we drove down on a Thursday, loaded on a Friday, and started driving back Friday evening and then all day Saturday, right around that date.

Q And when were you say you were getting the runaround on being able to get your personal goods, is that from the FBI?

A Uh-huh.

Q And so for over a month you weren't able to access your personal goods. And can you describe what that includes furniture-wise, what?

A Everything. I mean, it was, yeah, other than, you know, I think our daughters all had, like, a backpack with, like, a toy and some clothes. And then my wife and I, same, had, like, a backpack of clothes and stuff like that.

And we obviously did not anticipate this happening, so when our stuff got packed up in August, we had summer clothes because we thought, oh, by late September, early October, we'll be here, which the climate is much more moderate than in Wisconsin. So in October in Wisconsin it's practically winter and we're -- just give me a minute.

Q Take your time.

A You know, we're begging and borrowing from family for coats for our kids and warm clothes for our baby because the FBI won't let us have our stuff.

Q And so I just want to make sure that we have everything, kind of, the facts straight on this.

So you're notified in June that you make the new unit and you're going to be transferred from Kansas to Virginia, correct?

A Correct.

Q And so to accommodate this transfer, you put your Kansas City home on the market and sell it, correct?

A Our Wichita home.

Q Your Wichita home.

A Well, we lived in a suburb called Derby.

Q And during that time, did you look for housing in Virginia?

A We did. And that's another interesting aspect of it.

So as part of the transfer, you're supposed to get a house-hunting trip, 10 days. I didn't know at the time, but I found out later, that once you accept orders essentially your job is to focus on that transfer and work on that transfer.

Instead, I was directed by my boss to try to finish up some casework that I had. So I didn't even really get to focus on that transfer like I should have.

But I was able to come back to Virginia. I was here, I think, for 9 days or so, for training for that new position. So every night after -- or just about every night after training was over, I would meet with my realtor, and we'd go look at houses.

I think in those evenings over that time span, I think I looked at around 30 or 35 houses. So even though I didn't get the 10-day house-hunting trip or anything like that, I was able to look for housing while I was at that training, which was in August.

Q So then did you put an offer on in a house here?

A We did. My last day of that training, which I think was like either the last day of August or the first day of September, is the last house I looked at, and I was like, oh, this is the one.

And once I got back to Kansas, I talked to my wife about it, showed her pictures and stuff. And we put an offer in on it which was accepted and -- yeah, so we were, like, okay, that part's done, now let's have this baby and then carry on. But obviously that -- it didn't work out as planned.

Q And so you packed up all your belongings in August, and then the FBI moved those belongings to Virginia, correct?

A Correct.

Q So you're now in Virginia, your Kansas City -- or your Wichita house is sold, and your belongings are in Virginia, and then on the first day at your new job in Virginia, you're walked out, correct?

A Correct.

Q So then you have to wait over a month to retrieve your belongings because, as you've said, the FBI was giving you the runaround, correct?

A Correct.

Q Did you have access to those belongings during that period of time?

A I did not.

Q And did you ask the FBI for access to those belongings?

A We did. We asked if we could come get them and -- because there was really no other way than -- that's when it was just back and forth, back and forth, or then not hearing from them, and then them saying, oh, we're trying to figure out the best way to get you your stuff.

And then at one point, we're, like, well, can you ship them here? Because we're not living in Virginia now.

And then I think at one point they were, like, oh, we might be able to do that, but it's going to cost you $17,000. And we were, like, whoa, no, we -- I'm suspended.

Like, we knew my pay was going to get suspended. It hadn't been suspended yet. But we were, like, no, we're not paying you $17,000 for you to send us our stuff that you took to Virginia.

So then we were able -- they eventually they agreed to let me go and get it. That still cost, like I said, about ten grand, but I guess that beats 17.

Q And the FBI wouldn't -- in the normal course of things, if you're transferred, the FBI pays for those expenses, and then, as you said, you're in charge of the tax bill. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q So then in order to retrieve your goods after a month of them being held by the FBI, you had to spend over $10,000 of your own money, correct, to retrieve those?

A I would have to do the math, but it's right around ten grand.

Q And in your opinion, do you believe this whole ordeal with recovering your personal goods and having to cover those costs, was that just another episode of retaliation?

A I believe it was. I think every step of the way it just -- the whole process continues to get weaponized. And people are complicit in it because they claim, well, I'm just doing my job and I was told to tell you that I can't let you come get your stuff, or whatever other excuse they can come up with to justify it in their own minds.

Q And you're currently on unpaid, indefinite suspension, correct, from the FBI?

A Correct.

Q Is your security clearance suspended or revoked?

A It's suspended.

[redacted] Would you be willing to -- and you can confer with your counsel -- and supply us the list of names of every person that you interacted with, with the FBI, on this saga?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes, sir, I should --

[redacted] Not here for today.

Mr. Binnall. Yeah, yeah.

[redacted] Talk to your counsel.

Mr. Binnall. We'll discuss that and see what we can get you.

[redacted] This type of outrageous conduct needs to be fully evaluated, and we need to speak with individuals that are involved with this blatant retaliation.

Mr. O'Boyle. I agree. Thank you.

[redacted] And so I think you alluded to this earlier, but while you're on unpaid, indefinite suspension, you have to seek approval from the FBI to get any outside employment? Is that correct?

Mr. O'Boyle. That's correct. So once I got my notice of indefinite unpaid suspension, they included a form in there. It's an FD -- FD form -- I forget the number after the FD part -- but it's essentially an FBI employee request form for outside employment.

And you have to submit that to your potential employer. And they have to fill out some portions of it. And then you have to submit it back to the FBI. And then they get to approve or deny if you can work somewhere else.

I mentioned earlier my background is in law enforcement. That's all I've done since I got out of the Army. And I thought, okay, well, I guess I'll just go back to being a cop. And one of the few colleagues who is not afraid to speak to me these days told me that they'll never let you be a cop. And I said, why not?

And he would know, he's been in the FBI for over 20 years. He's a lawyer for the FBI as well. And he said, they just won't, they won't let you work for another law enforcement agency, and they'll claim, well, we might investigate them for public corruption someday or it might pose a national security threat to let him work for another law enforcement agency.

Now, I don't know if I finished my answer, but I have not even begun to look for a job yet because I'm, trying to see what my life even looks like and figure out what our family life is looking like, you know, like school.

That's another thing. Our two oldest, just -- yeah, it's been so weaponized that if it wasn't for how oppressive it is, it would be laughable, because you can't even make this up in your worst dystopian novel.

I mean, we have a 7- and 5-year-old who are in school. Thankfully, we home school them. But even that, with this whole process, we fell way behind because we're trying to figure out all the suspension stuff.

But for people who don't have kids in school -- or who do have kids in school, I mean -- for them to get their life flipped upside down on this, that is just even more of a clear blatant weaponization against people who are trying to do what is right.

Like I said, when I swore that oath for the, I think it was the fourth time, or maybe the fifth by the time I got in the FBI, I meant those words.

Every single American deserves the rights that are provided to us in the Constitution. And every single FBI agent should uphold those rights. And every single FBI agent, when they see that the agency they work for are treading over those rights, they have to speak up. But when you speak up, this is what happens.

I didn't want to -- I don't want to be here. I want to be an FBI agent. That's all I ever wanted to be. And I wanted to take care of America in my little way, the best I knew how.

And speaking up has taken my life from attaining my dream job -- which I had it great because not only was it a dream job, but I got to enforce the laws of this country. I got to uphold the Constitution of this country.

But when you do that and you say, hey, FBI, I think you're taking it too far for these reasons, all the reasons that I've provided to Congress, and the FBI finds out about it, they cancel you.

[redacted] Along those same lines, in 2022, during testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, FBI Director Christopher Wray said, quote, "I condemn in the strongest possible terms any prospect of retaliation against whistleblowers."

Given your experience, is that an accurate statement?

Mr. O'Boyle. Given my experience, no, that is not accurate. I think that's just another lie that he's told.

[redacted] I want to make sure I give Congressman Gaetz time to ask questions.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. O'Boyle, I'd like to start by thanking you for your service to our country.

Can you help us better understand why you made a decision to make protected disclosures to Congress?

Mr. Binnall. And you can explain why. Just don't get in right now to the disclosures that you actually made.

Mr. O'Boyle. Okay.

I think the biggest reason why is my faith. I'm a Christian, and as a tenet of my faith, when we see things that are wrong, that are harmful to people, that are unloving, or that are against the law, it's my duty to speak up.

I can't, in good conscience as a Christian, when I see something that's wrong, just let it go by without addressing it.

There's a verse in James that I put in my written appeal that essentially says, when you know something's wrong and you don't address it, that's a sin for you to do, or not do.

And that's basically what it boils down to for me, is I knew if I didn't address these things that I saw that were wrong, that I would not only be doing the American public a disservice as an FBI agent, I would be sinning against my God.

Mr. Gaetz. So there's a difference between things that are wrong and things that are against the law.

Did you see concerning conduct that fell into both of those categories?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did.

Mr. Gaetz. And why Congress?

Mr. O'Boyle. So every year in the FBI you get an annual whistleblower training, and as part of that training it lays out what are called designated authorities for whistleblowers.

Other designated authorities are, like, my supervisor, for instance, or his supervisor, all the way up to the Director, or the DOJ OIG, and there are other designated authorities too.

But I had brought some concerns to my chain of command -- knowing what I know now, I believe those also were protected disclosures -- and no action was taken.

So at that point, after basically struggling to -- and even sometimes they would agree, or at least to my face would agree with me about things that I brought up, but then no action was taken.

Mr. Gaetz. Help me understand the sequence of that.

Did you first try to utilize the chain of command for protected disclosures?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did in my initial matters that I thought were appropriate to be --

Mr. Gaetz. And I'm not going to ask you about those matters. But can you tell me who you made that initial disclosure to?

Mr. O'Boyle. I initially made it to my first line supervisor Sean Fitzgerald. And then another time, I want to say in September, maybe September or October of 2021, his boss, so Assistant Special Agent in Charge Jeff Berkebile -- I think it's B-e-r-k-e-b-i-l-e, I think that's how you spell it -- and his boss, SAC, so Special Agent in Charge Charles Dayoub, D-a-y-o-u-b, were in Wichita for a meeting with the RA.

And after that meeting, I asked my boss Sean if I could speak to them. And so we did, in his office. I spoke to all three of them and brought up some concerns I had.

And my SAC at the time told me: Wow, I hadn't really thought about it from this perspective. Would you mind giving me your notes, and I can start running this up the chain of command?

And I told them at that time that I was worried about retaliation, so I was going to think about it.

And then the next day, ASAC Jeff Berkebile called me and said: Hey, I really thought it took some courage for you to do what you did yesterday, and I want you to know that I agree with what you talked about and brought up.

But, you know, like I said, nothing happened.

And then fast-forward another month or so, we're into November of '21. I brought up some of those same concerns again, and again nothing happened.

Mr. Gaetz. To whom?

Mr. O'Boyle. So that time it was an email, and it was to my boss, Sean, ASAC Berkebile, SAC Dayoub, as well as the chief division counsel, his name is Bob Stuart, where I included a lot of things that I believed were indicative of a violation of law, rule, or regulation.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you still have that email?

Mr. O'Boyle. I'm not sure if I do. I may have it saved somewhere. I think I might've saved a pdf of it.

Mr. Binnall. We'll talk offline to see if that's something that's available.

Mr. O'Boyle. Otherwise, it should be in the FBI server somewhere.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it -- without getting into the substance of those discussions -- is it safe to say that you presented the same concerns to Fitzgerald, Berkebile, and Dayoub?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did.

Mr. Gaetz. And other than Berkebile, who expressed agreement with some of your concerns, did you ever get feedback from Fitzgerald or Dayoub regarding whether they thought you were crazy or whether they thought you were on point with your concerns?

Mr. O'Boyle. I would say the feedback from all three was that they thought I was raising valid points. And the points I was raising even included case law and things of that nature that I thought were applicable to that topic.

And then, after that, that's when I started going to Congress, because I was, like, okay, they're not doing anything about this.

And then once I started --

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever get a response to your email?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did, from the SAC.

Mr. Gaetz. This would be Dayoub?

Mr. O'Boyle. Dayoub. And if I remember correctly, it was like a sentence, and it was, like, thanks for your email and make sure you're sharing this with HRD -- which is the Human Resources Division, which I didn't share with them because it's, like, you're the boss, like, isn't it incumbent on you to do something? But I don't think he thought that it was.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, in your mind, did this strike you as a human resources matter, or did it strike you as a different type of matter?

Mr. O'Boyle. It struck me as a legal matter more than anything, and a legal and civil rights matter probably more than anything.

Mr. Gaetz. So your path to Congress, as I understand it, you utilize the chain of command, you go to your boss, you go to your boss' boss, you have a chance to interact with the special agent in charge. You seek permission to voice these concerns to the special agent in charge. You do. Then one of the people in this chain of command acknowledges your courage to bring these issues to the forefront.

You send an email encapsulating all of those things. You get a reply that is, in essence, confirming receipt of the email, directing you to HR.

And at that point, is it safe to say that you came to Congress because you had lost confidence that utilizing the chain of command was going to result in addressing these concerns?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes, that's safe to say.

And then, at that point, I think in a lot of ways I was, like, oh, the FBI's not actually what I thought it was, where you have people who want to serve this great Nation and keep it strong and uphold the Constitution.

Rather, you have people who just do what they're told and want to climb that ladder and get that pension. And those things are more important than doing what's right.

And so in a way, at that time, I would say the scales kind of fell from my eyes.

Then also, right around that time I was, like, okay, every time I see something that I think is a violation of law, rule, or regulation, an abuse of authority, or gross mismanagement -- so those are protected categories for whistleblowers -- every time I think I have a reasonable belief that that's happening, I have to make a protected disclosure, which that's what I then did.

Mr. Gaetz. And from that point forward, you made all of your protected disclosures to Congress exclusively?

Mr. O'Boyle. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you ever think about utilizing some of the other tools that were part of your whistleblower training, like the inspector general?

Mr. O'Boyle. I thought about it, and I came to the conclusion that if what I was seeing in the FBI from leaders in the FBI, who, I would say -- so they're all FBI agents, these people, my boss, his boss, his boss. If they can't do what's right when someone says, hey, look at this, this is why I think what we're doing is wrong, if those people can't say, yes, I agree, this is going to be a difficult road, but we have to push forward and do what's right, then how could I trust DOJ OIG or anybody else to do it?

That's the conclusion I arrived at, was, if the FBI won't do what's right, nobody else will. So that's why I went to Congress, because I couldn't trust any of those other avenues.

Mr. Gaetz. As you were working to voice your concerns through the chain of command, did you ever speak with your other colleagues about -- other than those you've named -- about your frustrations and about the violations of law you believed you were observing?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did. In Wichita, it's kind of a small office, and it's broken into two squads. I was on the Joint Terrorism Task Force, so those are the people I worked with every day, and I knew them the most. And I would say we were pretty close-knit and all had similar like-mindedness on a lot of these topics, I would say.

Mr. Gaetz. And give me a sense of how big that group of people was in Wichita in the JTTF?

Mr. O'Boyle. The JTTF was probably anywhere at, depending on staffing or whatever at any given time, I think there were, like, five or six agents and, like, two or three TFOs, which is a task force officer, so like a local partner.

So we had Kansas Highway Patrol, two TFOs from them, and one deputy from Sedgwick County was a TFO. And then we had some support personnel as well, like an analyst. So probably anywhere between, like, 6 and 10.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm particularly interested in that task force and how they were thinking about these things, and so -- I won't ask you to do it now -- but if later we ask you and your counsel to provide a list of those individuals, is that something you would be able to recall?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you say that they were like-minded, are we to assume then that they shared your concerns, were sympathetic to your concerns?

Mr. O'Boyle. I would say that's accurate.

I guess, that being said, I don't think any of them were willing to take that next step and try to shine a light on some of the impropriety that we saw almost every day.

Mr. Gaetz. During any time with your work at the FBI, did anyone ever tell you that the reason that they were worried about coming forward and becoming a whistleblower was retaliation?

Mr. O'Boyle. I wouldn't say anybody ever said it that way. I think it was more just like an aura and a sense that you had, because you would see the way people who speak up might get treated or chastised or sent to an assignment that they don't like or whatever.

So with whistleblowing, I mean, I would say that that's an even bigger step in that direction. So I think it -- I think in some ways it's been set up that way by the FBI to say: Hey, you have this whistleblower protection, and we're going to train you on it every year because we have to, but don't do that, otherwise, it's going to go poorly for you.

And I think what is extremely indicative of that is that just this week it's come into the public domain that the FBI has, instead of having those separate annual trainings on something like whistleblowers and insider threat, they've merged those two.

So while I was in the FBI, every year we had an insider threat training and a whistleblower protections training. This year, for some reason, I would say my belief is that because so many FBI whistleblowers have come to Congress, the FBI is now overtly saying, don't do that, you're an insider threat if you whistleblow.

Mr. Gaetz. And how is that overt message being delivered?

Mr. O'Boyle. I think it's simply by just combining those trainings and saying, here's your annual whistleblower and insider threat training. And it's, like, well, wait a second, a whistleblower is protected, an insider threat is not.

Robert Hanssen was an insider threat. He was a spy. People who are blowing the whistle to Congress or any other designated authority are not insider threats.

But now the FBI has merged those two trainings, and to me, especially as someone who has been retaliated against in the fashion I have, it seems very clear that that's an overt threat to say, don't whistleblow or else.

Mr. Gaetz. Was your assignment to the Joint Terrorism Task Force something that you had a role in manifesting?

Mr. O'Boyle. To some degree I think it was.

So in Quantico, once you get assigned to your division, you fill out like a short bio, and then you get -- you can put, like, what violation you might want to work. And I put JTTF on there.

I had worked traditional criminal matters as a police officer. In college I had written some papers where I touched on things that the JTTF around the Nation has done.

And, you know, harkened back to my time in the military, deploying to Iraq and Afghanistan, that 9/11 was a huge part of why I became, I guess, even on this path to join the military, become a cop, become an FBI agent.

I know it had an impact on every American. For me, it kind of put me on this path of service back to the Nation.

And so that terrorism piece has always been of interest to me, and I thought, if I can do my part on the JTTF to help combat terrorists at home, then that's what I wanted to do.

So I did have some --

Mr. Gaetz. So you were happy with the assignment?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes, sir, I was.

Mr. Gaetz. And you expected -- I mean, what kind of work did you expect to do on the JTTF?

Mr. O'Boyle. So going to Wichita, I thought, how much terrorism could be there? Like, I guess when I thought of the JTTF, I was thinking more like international type of terrorism, which one of my cases was that to a degree -- or it was under that threshold to a degree. I won't get into details on that.

But then I primarily transitioned into domestic terrorism-related cases, which, I guess in Kansas they're --

Mr. Gaetz. When did that transition occur?

Mr. O'Boyle. It actually kind of started right off the bat.

So initially I was assigned to international terrorism, not a ton of that in Wichita, but my first two cases, one was under that international terrorism banner, and then the other one I got as a relatively new agent was under the domestic terrorism banner. And then I remained --

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry. The timing here is very important to us.

So when did you get sort of repositioned from outward looking to international terrorism to inward looking to domestic terrorism?

Mr. O'Boyle. Probably around sometime in 2021, I would say. Even though I was technically assigned to international terrorism, I primarily, my whole time there, I primarily worked domestic terrorism.

Mr. Gaetz. So it was more a transition in line with the work you were already doing?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. I only have a few minutes left, and pardon me for asking these questions, but I have to ask them.

You ever take any gifts from the media?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Ever take any sporting tickets?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Ever take any concert tickets?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you aware of any of the people you worked with taking gifts from members of the media?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Ever go on any expensive dinners with any reporters?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Ever do any travel with any reporters?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of inspector general reports that analyze the extent to which people associated with the FBI were taking gifts from the media?

Mr. O'Boyle. Minimally, to some degree, yes.

[11:03 a.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. I've got a number of other questions, but they sort of go into new vectors of discussion. So, if my colleagues have --

[redacted] Four minutes.

Mr. Gaetz. -- have any other --

[redacted] Yeah, I can ask a few more questions.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you aware that Mr. Jordan and House Judiciary Republicans have sent several letters to the FBI regarding revoking security clearances in whistleblower retaliation?

A I am.

Q And in response to those letters, the FBI has made some statements regarding their approach to whistleblowing. For example, they have said that "employees should feel they can raise their concerns about wrongdoing and, if those concerns are not addressed within their chain of command, take them to an approach place without retaliation."

"The FBI is taking considerable steps to ensure that employees are aware of whistleblower protections and of the whistleblower process. The FBI and the Department have worked and continue to work to improve the process, including educating employees and providing guidance so they know the process."

Given your experience, is that an accurate statement?

A No, not accurate.

Q And the FBI has also stated that "the FBI is committed to addressing misconduct head-on and following the disciplinary process."

Given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A No, that's not accurate.

Q In other response letters back to Mr. Jordan and other House Judiciary Republicans, the FBI has stated, "The FBI takes very seriously our responsibility to employees who may make protected disclosures under the whistleblower regulations. Whistleblowers play a crucial role in ensuring public trust in government. By coming forward, they ensure public institutions hold themselves accountable and, in doing so, affirm and strengthen the public's trust. FBI employees who report evidence of wrongdoing through a protected disclosure are required to be protected from retaliation. All employees should feel they can raise their concerns and, if they are not addressed at their chain of command, take them an approach place without retaliation."

Given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A No, it's not accurate.

Q In that same response, the FBI stated, "The FBI does not target or take adverse actions against employees for exercising their First Amendment rights or for their political views."

Given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A It's not accurate.

Q Culture-wise, is the current FBI the same FBI you signed up to work for?

A Not at all.

Q Why?

A I think the biggest reason is how they have become weaponized against anyone who doesn't just toe the line that they want them to toe. I think I'm a primary example of that. I start shedding light on things, on wrongdoing that is happening in the FBI; I get suspended.

And I know I'm not alone. There are a number of other whistleblowers out there who are in a similar situation after being suspended. Some of them, after -- it said -- they claim they don't retaliate for First Amendment-protected activity. I know for a fact that they do, because one of my protected disclosures was about that, about the FBI retaliating against employees for engaging in First Amendment-protected activity, and those employees got suspended.

Q Uh-huh. Thank you.

With that, we'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Hi, Mr. O'Boyle. How are you doing today?

Mr. O'Boyle. I'm okay. How are you?

[redacted] Good. Thank you for being here. And also thank you for your service.

Again, my name [redacted], and I am going to be asking you some questions about some of things that you just stated a couple minutes ago.

Mr. O'Boyle. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So one of the first things that I want to go over was just kind of the timeline of when you came to Congress to initially talk about some of the issues that you were seeing. So was it multiple times?

A It was multiple times.

Q Okay. Let's just start with the first time, and then we can go from there.

Mr. Binnall. And I'm going to instruct him not to talk about specifics of any of his disclosures to Congress --

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Binnall. -- because those are confidential.

[redacted] Okay. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q So, again, don't talk about any of the substance, but I just want to know the general timeline.

So the first time you came to Congress was when?

A Late November of 2021.

Q Okay. And when you came, did you provide any sort of documentation to Congress? Again, you don't have to say what the substance of it was, but did you disclose any documents?

A I did have documents. I don't know how many they took or copied. And then I sent additional via email.

Q Okay. So you provided some in person when you were here and you also provided some via email.

A Well, I didn't -- I wasn't here.

Q Okay.

A But to my Congressman's office in Kansas.

Q Okay. So when you say you came to Congress, you meant that you were in Kansas; you went to go see your Congressman in Kansas?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And can you tell me the name of that Congressman?

A It was Ron Estes.

Q Okay.

Okay. And so, when you went to go see Congressman Estes, you provided some documents. Did you provide him with a copy of the suspension notice?

A I had not been suspended at that time.

Q Okay.

And you said you went to Congress on another occasion. So can you tell me when that was?

A So I had some back-and-forth, initially, with Congressman Estes's office from, yeah, late November -- I don't know. I talked to them a couple more times, probably, leading into January-February of 2022. And then after that, like, in March, I started going to a different Member of Congress.

Q And this is March 2022?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

So let's go over who you spoke with. Can you give me the names of those individuals that you spoke with?

Mr. Binnall. You can give the individuals. Again, no substance of what you discussed.

Mr. O'Boyle. At Congressman Estes's office, it was Roger Erickson. And then there was another person I spoke with there. I don't remember her name.

BY [redacted]

Q About how long did you speak with them for?

A I was probably there for at least an hour, maybe longer.

Q Okay.

And then for the second time, who did you speak with then? This was during the January-February --

A After the -- so it was mostly with Roger then after that.

Q Okay.

And each time that you spoke with them, it was in person?

A No.

Q Okay.

A Sometimes on the phone. Sometimes email.

Q How many times did you actually go into the physical office?

A Just the one time.

Q Okay. So every other time was over email or on the phone. Okay.

And then did you go a third time? Or did you speak with anyone a third time? Because you said there were two instances. So, the first time, you spoke with Roger. The second time, you spoke with Roger. Was there a third time that you spoke with anyone?

A Not at Congressman Estes's office, but just -- it was with Roger mostly then.

Q Okay. And so there was another Congressman's office that you were in communication with, so --

A Correct.

Q -- can you tell me who that was?

A So, in March, I started going to Congressman Jordan's office.

Q And this was March 2022?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And so did you go into Congressman Jordan's physical office?

A No.

Q Okay. So it was only over the phone?

A Phone and email.

Q Okay. About how many email communications did you exchange back and forth?

A I don't know.

Q Five?

A More than five.

Q Ten?

A More than 10.

Q Twenty?

A More than 20, probably.

Q Okay. Around 40?

A I would have to go back and count.

Q Were you emailing directly with Congressman Jordan, or was it --

A With staff.

Q Okay. Do you remember the staff's names?

A It was [redacted] and [redacted]

Q And did you provide any document productions?

A I did.

Q How many documents in, like, a ballpark range do you believe that you provided?

A I don't know. Ballpark. Not really. I don't know.

Q Fifty?

A Maybe around there. I mean, it's just --

Mr. Binnall. Only answer if you know.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't know. I don't know. I'd have to count.

BY [redacted]

Q Aside from -- so there was an instance in March 2022 when you spoke with Jim Jordan's staff members, and that was through an email exchange?

A Initially, it was an email.

Q Okay.

A And then later it was over the phone, and --

Q When did you guys speak on the phone?

A The first time was in March.

Q Do you remember an exact date?

A No.

Q Did you have any other communications aside from the email exchange with the initial conversation and then the phone conversation in March? Were there any other communications?

A There were.

Q Okay. Can you tell me about them?

A Not the substance.

Mr. Binnall. Not substance. I mean, if you remember times and dates, you can let her know.

Mr. O'Boyle. I mean, we communicated back and forth multiple times between March and my suspension and even a little bit after. I don't -- I don't have specific --

BY [redacted]

Q And you were suspended in September 2022?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

I want to talk about your suspension notice. So you received it from the FBI when?

A September 26, 2022.

Q Okay. And who gave it to you?

A I don't remember what her name was, but I believe she was the acting security officer for CIRG.

Q Okay. And can you tell me about the contents of the security -- or, excuse me, the suspension notice that you received?

Mr. Binnall. You can discuss basically what the suspension notice said. You should not go into any detail as to the substance of the investigation afterwards.

Mr. O'Boyle. Like I said in the first round, there was an allegation against me that I had made unprotected disclosures. And then, based on that allegation, they thought that was reason enough to suspend my clearance.

The letter is, like, over a page, so there's other information in there, but that's really the root of the suspension notice.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So you received a letter; it was over a page. Can you tell me a bit more about what else was specifically in that letter?

A I mean, not really without pulling it up. But, yeah, they made that allegation, stripping my clearance, and, yeah, to the best of my recollection, that -- that's why.

Q Do you have a copy of that with you today?

A I could probably pull it up.

Q Okay.

Mr. Binnall. No, we're not producing any documents.

BY [redacted]

Q Have you provided anyone else with a copy of that?

A My counsel.

Q Okay. Have you provided it to anyone else's office in Congress?

A I don't know for sure. I may have provided it to Congressman Estes's office, but I would have to go back and check. Oh, and -- oh, yeah, I provided it to Congressman Jordan's office too.

Q So -- and you talked a little bit about this in the first round. So, upon receiving this notice, what steps did you take to contest your case, if you did at all?

A So --

Mr. Binnall. I'm going to ask to limit that by timeframe and a little bit more detail as to "contest the case," what you mean by that.

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. So did you provide any written documentation? Did you provide any affidavits? Did you provide written statements? Did you provide an oral presentation? I'm looking for those kind of things.

Mr. Binnall. To who?

BY [redacted]

Q To any board at the FBI? To anyone at the FBI?

Mr. Binnall. Again, you can say whether you produced documents, but do not go into any detail about the substance of the investigation.

Mr. O'Boyle. So I touched on it in the first round. There was a -- I had a chance to do a written appeal, which I did. And then, after that, they had an oral portion that was part of that same process, which I participated in that as well.

BY [redacted]

Q And have you received any type of decision?

A No.

Q Okay. So is it correct to say that the case is still currently under review?

A As far as I know.

So, I guess -- so, if you remember, I was talking about how they, like, split hairs over the security portion, duty status, and pay portion. So this part that -- the only part that's, like, I guess, complete is the decision on the duty status and pay, where they wouldn't address -- they wouldn't address demerits.

So that's what this written appeal was about, even though in my written appeal I addressed everything. I didn't know that they weren't going to address that until the oral portion happened.

And so I did receive a decision after the oral panel regarding my duty status and pay, which -- that was the decision to suspend my pay.

Q So you're still waiting to hear on the status of your security clearance. Is that correct?

A Correct.

And then I also tried to file an EEO complaint with the FBI. I don't remember the exact date without looking, but I emailed them in early October, shortly after my suspension. And part of that complaint process was going to be for whistleblower retaliation. That's one of the things we can file an EEO complaint over. And they have never responded.

Q And so, when you say they never responded -- so you filed a case with EEO?

A No. So, for the FBI's process, the EEO process, you have to contact the FBI's EEO office. And my understanding is, once you contact them, then they'll assign a counselor, an EEO counselor, to you, and then you'll start that whole process.

So I sent them an email, and I said, "I would like to file an EEO complaint," and I have yet to hear back from them.

Q Who did you send an email to?

A I don't remember the email address off the top of my head, but it's, like, the -- so it's not an individual person; it's the main EEO office for the FBI.

Q Have you followed up with them at all?

A I tried to make a call to an EEO counselor, and they didn't answer. And then I haven't followed up again.

Q And who is the individual that you tried to call that was a counselor?

A Her name's Carrie Ann Reali (ph), R-e-a-l-i.

Q Okay. And when was this?

A Sometime in early October.

Q Okay.

So, during the period that your clearance has been under review, have you -- because I know you mentioned there's a process through which you can seek outside employment. And so is that something that you followed through with that process? I think you said you started maybe doing some of it, but I -- did you complete that process?

A No, I have not.

So I started kind of looking for a job, but it's just been difficult with -- I mean, like, traveling here for instance, you know, if I had just started a job and had to take off work, or, you know, other family situations. Just trying to figure out life, like I said in the first round.

So I haven't, like, obtained any type of employment or gone down that avenue any further.

Q Okay. So you haven't filed any specific request form with the FBI to seek employment outside of the organization.

A Right.

Q Okay. Have you tried to seek any type of unemployment compensation?

A No.

Q Okay. Have you asked if there is an opportunity for you to be able to maybe perform unclassified functions?

A I have not. I don't -- so my understanding is that that's not permitted in the FBI, that to enter an FBI space, an FBI building, you have to have a clearance.

Q Okay.

And you haven't made any requests for leave or anything?

A I did. So that was part of -- once my pay was suspended, part of that, like, document or documents that they sent saying that my pay was suspended, they said I could request annual leave and sick leave, which I requested.

And I don't -- I actually don't really know the status of that. I believe I was getting some of my annual leave. It was being used. But I just checked our -- I don't know if you guys have the same system. Ours, we go on "My EPP." And so I checked my ELS on there, and it said that I still have leave hours.

So then I emailed -- this is, again, it's, like, an overall FBI email, it's not a person, but it was, like, an HR, I think -- or -- I think it was an HR email. And I said, "Hey, I just checked my ELS, and it looks like I still have leave, but the last pay period I was paid for was the one that ended on December 31st." So I was trying to find out why I still have a leave balance if they were going to let me use my leave.

Q Okay.

A And I haven't heard back, as far as I know.

Q Okay.

So, if I'm understanding this correctly, September 2022, your security clearance was suspended, but you still continued to receive compensation, because you said the last time you were paid was December 31st.

A Right. So, initially, they put me on administrative leave until that initial written appeal we talked about.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then the oral, that was kind of, like, part of that same process.

And then their decision was given to me on November 4th, I think. And that letter, I believe, was dated November 3rd.

And in that letter is when they said that they decided to suspend my pay. And then that's also the same letter where they provided the form for getting outside employment and for using your leave.

Q Okay.

So I want to talk a little bit about -- you referred to whistleblower allegations that you made?

A Uh-huh.

Q And so I want to kind of talk about -- so it seems like you made several complaints to various different people, and so I just want to start with kind of going through it in a sequence.

A Okay.

Q So how many times do you think you raised, like, a complaint?

A Like, including to my supervisors and, like, my --

Q Whatever you think is included within your claims that you're saying count as a whistleblower.

Mr. Binnall. And this is internally to the FBI?

You can answer that question as to number, not substance.

Mr. O'Boyle. To the FBI. Probably around five times, I'd say.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And for each of these times, do you recall if you ever went to, let's say, the Office of Professional Responsibility?

A I didn't -- I did not. I mean, people in my chain of command may have sent my name there, but I don't -- I wouldn't know that.

Q Okay.

What about the FBI Inspection Division, Internal Investigations Section?

A So, shortly before I transferred, Kansas City was under an inspection, and I did make a disclosure to the inspector that I was assigned to. And he told me if I faced any retaliation for that to file an EEO complaint. So, once I was retaliated against, I tried to do that, but then I never heard back from EEO.

Q Okay. So this was when you were in Wichita. You said that you spoke with someone who was from the Inspection Division?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. Do you remember that individual's name?

A He was a supervisory special agent. I think his first name's Charles. Wilkes is the last name.

Q Did you provide anything in writing?

A I might have sent him an email. We -- he -- if I didn't send him an email, he sent me one. But it was on our classified email system, so I don't have -- I don't have that.

Q And when was this?

A August. I think it was August of 2022. That's when I first made my complaint to him.

Q For any of the other complaints, did you talk with the FBI Office of Professional Responsibility?

A No.

Q What about anyone from the Inspection Division, Internal Investigations Section?

A No.

Q Director of the FBI?

A No.

Q Deputy Director of the FBI?

A No.

Q The highest-ranking official in the FBI's Wichita office?

A I did -- well, let me think. I did. So that was my first boss, but -- so I raised some of my concerns to her, but I don't know that --

Q And this was Sonia?

A Yes. I don't know if -- well, I don't recall all of those conversations entirely, so I don't know if, you know, she thought they were protected or if I was just raising the concerns and -- yeah, I don't know. I mean, I guess we'd have to ask her what she thought.

Q Okay. And, just to confirm, she was the highest-ranking official in the Wichita --

A Right.

Q Okay.

A So she was my SSA initially, when I first got there. And then maybe, like, 2 years later, she got promoted to what's called an SSRA, which is the senior supervisory resident agent or something like that.

Q Do you have any written documentation of the complaint that you made to Sonia?

Mr. Binnall. You can --

BY [redacted]

Q You don't have to say the substance.

Mr. Binnall. Correct.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't.

So I think one of the times I made a complaint to her, she had been promoted to ASAC in a different division.

BY [redacted]

Q What does "ASAC" stand for?

A It's assistant special agent in charge.

So she had been promoted, and there had been some things with my supervisory special agent, Sean Fitzgerald, that -- so that -- it's the same subject matter that I ended up telling SSA Wilkes about. So I talked to her about that same topic. I don't know if -- I may have texted her, like, on my work phone, but I don't recall. And I no longer have access to that, so I couldn't say it for sure.

Q Okay.

So, just so I just have this clearly, for any of the times you presented a complaint -- and I think you said it was around five or so times -- at any point in time did you present it in an email format where you laid out the substance of your claims, or was it -- like, did you present any type of written documentation and give it to anyone?

A There has been, yes. Not every time, but there's been certain subject matter that is in email form.

Q Okay. And out of the five, how many would you say are in email form, or written documentation form?

A I guess, including the email that SSA Wilkes sent me as documentation, maybe two or three.

Q So, at any point with these two or three written communications, did you ever receive any response from, like, the Office of Professional Responsibility or anyone else with relation to your claims?

A No.

Q Do you know whether or not there was an investigation that was conducted into any of your complaints?

A I don't know.

Q Did you ever follow up with any of the people that you -- either at the Internal Investigations Division or with Sonia about your complaint?

A No. Like I said, I never went to IED or OPR or OIG.

Q Okay.

A So I don't know -- I mean, my -- based on the whistleblower training we get, our chain of command up to the Director is a designated authority. So I've made disclosures to and through my chain of command, and I've gotten responses from them, like, "Hey, email received," or verbal responses, like, "I see the points you're bringing up." But, to the best of my knowledge, there's been no followup on any of that.

Q Okay.

So your understanding of the whistleblower protections was that you could say anything to anyone who is a status above you, and if you tell them, then that would trigger whistleblower protections for you. Is that correct?

A Right, if it's something that falls into one of the major categories of wrongdoing, which these were.

Q What do you understand those categories to be?

A So I don't know all five off the top of my head, but the main ones that I made disclosures on were violation of any law, rule, or regulation, which is just one category.

And then abuse of authority is one; and gross mismanagement. And I don't know the other two off the top of my head.

Q Okay.

So you stated that you feel you were retaliated against. So I want to talk a bit about why it is the case that you believe that.

A I think I covered --

Mr. Binnall. Let her ask the question.

Mr. O'Boyle. Oh. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Strike that.

So I'm going to your security clearance suspension. Have you -- you said you were suspended for making protected disclosures, correct?

A Well, I said that I was suspended for an allegation against me that someone, who I don't know -- or, I mean, maybe I know that person, but their identity hasn't been given to me. But someone made an allegation against me that I had made unprotected disclosures. That was why I was suspended.

Q Did your notice of suspension specify to you the types of disclosures that you were believed to have made?

A No. It just said unprotected to media.

Q Within that suspension notice, did it include any information detailing if your suspension had to do with anything related to your involvement in the Joint Terrorism Task Force?

A No.

Q Did the suspension disclosure provide any information about -- strike that.

So there's nothing that you remember in your suspension disclosure that you can tell us?

A That's not accurate.

Q Okay. Can you tell me a bit more about what was in that page that you received with respect to a suspension notice?

A I told you the substance of it is that an allege was made against me that I had made unprotected disclosures. So that's the reason given to me in that notice.

Q Did they state where these unprotected disclosures were made?

A No.

Q So it didn't say that these protected disclosures were ones that you made to Congress?

A It didn't state that, no.

Q Okay. So, when you said that it was because you came to Congress, it was more of an assumption. It wasn't the case that was stated in the letter that you received?

A What was stated in the letter was that an allegation was made against me that I made unprotected disclosures. I did not make unprotected disclosures.

BY [redacted]

Q I'm sorry to jump in, but you said that you provided a copy of the suspension order itself to Chairman Jordan's staff?

A Correct.

Q Do you have a copy with you today that you could provide to us?

A I do not.

Q Okay. Would you be willing to provide that to us?

Mr. Binnall. We can talk offline about any document productions, but as of right now, we're not intending to do any document productions.

[redacted] Okay. But a copy's been provided to the majority staff. So if they wanted to share one with us, they could do that.

[redacted] Well, that's not the one way it works. I mean, when we deal with whistleblowers, everything is completely confidential, and anything we do with information we take from the whistleblower, we get their permission. If they give us any materials, we only share it, we only use it if they okay it.

[redacted] Okay. So you're not -- you're not willing to provide us with a copy of the notice. That's fine. I just wanted to get it on --

[redacted] We're not able to provide -- we don't have the authority to provide to you.

[redacted] Have you asked Chairman Jordan's staff if they would be willing to provide us with a copy?

Mr. Binnall. That's something he would have to do in consultation with counsel. And that's not a request that's previously been made, and we're not going to --

[redacted] Okay. Well --

Mr. Binnall. -- we're not going to do it here today.

[redacted] -- we'll make it.

Mr. Binnall. But that's something --

[redacted] So we'll make the request for today. And I understand right now Chairman Jordan's staff is not willing -- or says they're not able to provide it.

Mr. Binnall. Well, they're legally not able to. The request is being made right now, and it's a legal decision that requires confidentiality. It's something that requires legal analysis. It requires any number of different things.

That's something that we can certainly --

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Binnall. -- go through the correct process to do. But, being that that is not something that's been previously made, we can't give you an off-the-cuff answer --

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Binnall. -- right now.

[redacted] I understand. But you have provided a copy to Chairman Jordan's staff. And you may have provided a copy to Representative Estes? Is that right?

Mr. Binnall. Yeah. I think his testimony was that he doesn't remember exactly on that.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Binnall. But we'll take those -- you know, you just made the request for the first time, and that's something that we can take into consideration.

[redacted] Okay. I appreciate that. I think we had asked the majority staff if they had any documents, and they had said that they weren't able to provide anything to us. So that's why I --

Mr. Binnall. And I think that's probably legally correct.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Mr. O'Boyle, I want to turn to a different subject matter at this point. And so this is going to be dealing with January 6, 2021.

A Okay.

Q Do you recall where you were on January 6, 2021?

A I do.

Q Okay. Where were you?

A Why is this relevant?

[redacted] Wait, what's the question?

[redacted] I asked him where he was on January 6, 2021.

[redacted] Okay. Sorry, I didn't --

BY [redacted]

Q And you asked me why it was relevant.

A Yeah.

Mr. Binnall. So that I can get -- so that I can know how to advise my client on this line, I'm going to ask for a -- ask for a recess.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] It is 11:51.

[Recess.]

BY [redacted]

Q So where were you on January 6, 2021?

A I was in Kansas.

Q Okay.

A I can elaborate if you want.

Mr. Binnall. Can you say just where in Kansas?

Mr. O'Boyle. I was standing at my desk, watching the events of the day unfold --

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

A -- with the rest of my office.

Q So, when you say standing at your desk, you're saying that you were at work --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- at the FBI.

A Correct.

Q Are you aware that President Trump gave his speech that day on the National Mall in Washington, D.C.?

A I'm aware that he spoke. I don't know that I was aware of his location when he spoke.

Q Okay. But were you aware that he was speaking in Washington, D.C.?

A I don't know if I was at the time. I may have found that out after.

Q Okay. So you were aware that he was talking, but you were unclear on where he was talking from, like, the location.

Mr. Binnall. Is there a question there?

BY [redacted]

Q So is it the case that you were aware that President Trump was giving a speech somewhere in the United States of America but you were unclear on the exact location that he was in?

A I don't know if I was aware that he was giving the speech on January 6th. I may have found that out on January 7th or 8th. I'm not entirely sure.

Q So you did not watch any speech at all on January 6, 2021, pertaining to Donald Trump?

A I don't recall if I did. At our office, we typically have the news on, so I recall seeing events of that day unfold. I don't recall a specific speech.

Q When you say "seeing the events of that day unfold," what do you mean by that?

A People -- you can -- I mean, people have used all sorts of words for it, but entering the Capitol Building, and other words have been used as well.

Q What did you think it was that those people were doing?

A It seemed to me like there was some degree of civil unrest happening, some degree of protest. And -- I'm trying to think back to that specific moment in time.

Q Do you know why people -- you said that it seemed like there was civil unrest, people were -- I don't -- did you say chanting? Are you --

A I didn't say chanting. But there was chanting, sure.

Q Okay. What is your understanding of why people were engaging in civil unrest, as you put it?

Mr. Binnall. I'm going to ask you to clarify which people.

BY [redacted]

Q The people that you said had entered the Capitol. What was your understanding of why they proceeded forth to enter the Capitol --

Mr. Binnall. And you can answer as to what your personal understanding of that is. Don't testify as to anyone else's motives that you don't know.

Mr. O'Boyle. So I don't know every individual's motive.

BY [redacted]

Q Just your personal understanding.

A My personal understanding was that some of those people were upset with the election results and some of those people likely got caught up in the emotion or urging of others at the time with a groupthink-type of mentality.

Q Are you aware that individuals that you mentioned entered the Capitol, some wore body armor?

A I'm aware of that.

Q How did you hear of it?

A I don't know for sure if it's something I saw on the news, but, as you can possibly imagine, or maybe you have knowledge of this, the FBI has worked lots of cases involving January 6th, so I can't say for sure if some of it came from my work or some of it came from public media.

Q When you say the FBI works cases involving January 6th, are you referring to the prosecutions of individuals that engaged in entering the Capitol on January 6th?

A Sometimes FBI work is congruent with prosecutions of those cases, yes.

Q These people that entered the Capitol are sometimes referred to as "insurrectionists." Do you agree with that term?

Mr. Binnall. You can answer it to the extent you have a personal opinion, but don't give any legal conclusions.

Mr. O'Boyle. Yeah, my personal opinion is that some of them probably did want to start an insurrection, but I don't think that's the case for everybody.

BY [redacted]

Q Just real quickly -- I'm going to diverge a little bit -- how did you get here today?

A An Uber.

Q Thank you for that.

Where are you currently located? Like, where do you live?

A I live in Wisconsin.

Q Okay. How did you get from Wisconsin to Washington, D.C.?

A I flew.

Q Okay. Who paid for that?

A I did.

Q You're not being compensated by anyone else for being here?

A No.

Q Okay.

A Honestly, that's -- it was -- you know, as I think everybody now knows, I'm unpaid, and I have, aside from myself, five other mouths to feed.

Q Yeah.

A And so, you know, I also said in the first round, I don't want to be here. I would rather not be here. But this is something I have to do, and I think this is something that far more FBI agents should be doing, regardless of where they stand politically or whatever other biases they might have.

So, yeah, I would -- I would not choose to be here. I would have chosen a very different path.

BY [redacted]

Q Is this your first trip to Washington, D.C., in association with this complaint, or this matter?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So you haven't flown up previously to speak with anybody, staff at the Capitol?

A No.

Q Okay.

A So, yeah, I paid for it on my own. And, I mean, even then, it's like, ugh. I'm like -- it's just money always going out. It's just going out, going out, going out, to try to continue to do what I believe is the right thing.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you have knowledge of what "The Suspendables" is?

A I do.

Q Can you tell me what it is?

A So I believe the origin of that came from a New York Times reporter. Alan Feuer, I think, if I'm saying his name right, labeled -- so there are some other whistleblowers who are in the public domain, and I believe he labeled them that or somehow concluded that they were calling themselves that.

Q Do you identify yourself as a Suspendable?

A I guess I don't really understand what you mean by that.

Q Do you consider yourself to be part of the Suspendable group?

A I mean, I'm suspended, so --

Q So you do consider yourself to be part of this group of employees that call themselves The Suspendables?

Mr. Binnall. I think that's asked and answered.

BY [redacted]

Q You can answer.

A I suppose so, yes.

Q Okay. Have you made any money off of being in this group called The Suspendables?

A No.

Q Okay. Do Suspendables sell any merchandise?

A They do.

Q Have they sold any of that merchandise?

Mr. Binnall. Answer to the extent you know.

Mr. O'Boyle. I know one member had family members that bought some. Other than that, I'm not sure.

BY [redacted]

Q So you have no -- you haven't reaped any of the proceeds?

A No.

Q Okay.

Do you consider the individuals that were involved in January 6th political prisoners, those who were prosecuted?

A I would have to know more about the individual cases, which I don't. I don't know about all of them.

Q Okay.

Do you have a Twitter?

A I do.

Q Okay. Can you tell me what your Twitter handle is?

A It's GOBactual.

Q Do you use Twitter often?

A Not -- I wouldn't say often, no. It's a relatively new account.

Q Do you use Twitter enough to understand how it functions?

A Yes.

Q So you understand, let's say, how to create a tweet?

A Correct.

Q And you understand how to, like, like a tweet?

A Correct.

Q So, on February 5, 2023, Kyle Seraphin posted a tweet, and he said, "We are going to have Chris on the Kyle Seraphin show podcast for Monday. Apparently, his open letter was scrubbed from @FBIWFO's email when the thin skinned executives decided it didn't help them rounding up #J6POLITICALPRISONER types."

This is a tweet that you liked, Mr. O'Boyle.

What do you understand Mr. Seraphin to be referring to when he says #J6POLITICALPRISONERs?

Mr. Binnall. Answer to the extent that you know personally what he means.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't know what he means. And I wouldn't say that a like is an endorsement of every single aspect of somebody's tweet.

BY [redacted]

Q What did you like about this tweet in particular?

A So I've also spoken with former Agent Gonzales, and I think that his email that he sent out should actually be part of this Weaponization Committee and that hopefully he would be willing to testify as well. So I was glad to see that he was going to have a platform to talk about it further on.

Q Okay. And so, just to clarify for the record, when you say "Agent Gonzales," you mean the Chris that's referenced in this tweet. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Thank you.

Do you think the government should be prosecuting individuals that were involved on January 6th?

A Some of them, yes.

Q So, on January 28, 2023, there's a tweet in which you write -- or, excuse me, you responded to a tweet from Kyle Seraphin. And he said, "I want you to consider the Criminal Complaint is a tool that you use because you don't have time to take your case to a GJ to indict. 'This is of the essence.' @j6patriot's complaint was sworn out on 1/6/23 for a 2 yr old 'crime' but served this week."

I am handing you a copy of what I just read.

It can be marked as exhibit 1.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And, in response to this, you wrote, "I wonder how many other complaints/warrants/indictments were sworn out on J6...the symbolism is important to sycophants seeking that next promotion."

What did you mean when you were writing this tweet?

Mr. Binnall. Object. It's not the exact words on the page that were just read. But I'll -- to the extent that -- [redacted] I can read it again.

Mr. Binnall. Okay. Yeah, please go ahead and read it again.

[redacted] Which part were you saying was incorrectly read?

Mr. Binnall. I'm just saying that the tweet that you read was not correctly read. That paragraph wasn't.

[redacted] Okay. I'll start from the top.

BY [redacted]

Q Kyle Seraphin: "I want you to consider the Criminal Complaint is a tool you use because you don't have time to take your case to a GJ to indict. 'This is of the essence.'" Strike that. "'Time is of the essence.' @j6patriot's complaint was sworn out on 1/6/23 for a 2 yr old 'crime' but served this week. That makes it theater."

You, in response, wrote, "I wonder how many other complaints/warrants/indictments were sworn out on J6 2023...the symbolism is important to sycophants seeking that next promotion."

So my question was, what did you mean what you were writing this tweet?

A I mean that I think the question is worth asking: How many others were sworn out on that day?

Because part of the problem that I see with the FBI comes from the headquarters area, which oftentimes encompasses WFO because they're so close to nature. And oftentimes those who are more on the FBI for promotion over for other matters, they will ping-pong back and forth between headquarters and WFO, maybe Baltimore Field Office, and a couple others in the area.

And so I do wonder how many other complaints were sworn out on January 6th, because I think, to people who are seeking that promotion or that feather in their cap instead of just focusing on the work, I think that symbolism does matter to them more than just simply doing the work.

Q And just for the record, what does "sworn out" mean?

A Well, like, when you get an arrest warrant, you have to swear it out in front of a judge, or I guess sometimes we do it over the phone too.

Q Are you familiar with the death of Capitol Police Officer Brian Sicknick?

A To some degree.

Q Can you tell me in your own words what your understanding of his death and the circumstances surrounding that are?

Mr. Binnall. To the extent you have any knowledge of that, you can respond. Don't guess.

Mr. O'Boyle. My understanding is that he died a couple days after the events of January 6th.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you believe that law enforcement officers died as a result of the events on January 6th?

Mr. Binnall. Again, to the extent you have independent knowledge, you can respond and answer, but don't guess.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't know about that.

BY [redacted]

Q So you're unsure whether officers died as a result of the events on January 6th?

A Correct.

Q Are you familiar with the fact that on January 6th pipe bombs were found outside the headquarters of the Democratic National Convention and the Republican National Committee?

A I am.

Q How'd you become aware of this?

A Through news media sources.

Q Did you have a reaction when you first heard that?

A I probably did. I'm trying to recollect back to that time. I mean, probably something like "holy crap" would be what I would -- first hearing that, what I would -- what my reaction would be.

Q So, on January 6, 2023, an individual named @KanekoaTheGreat tweeted a tweet that you liked. And this person wrote, "Hey @FBI, am I doing it right?" -- you have a copy, so you can read and follow along -- "am I doing it right?" and posted two photos.

So the one on the left says "Peaceful Protester," with an individual standing before what looks like a burning building, and another picture on the right that says in quotation marks "Domestic Terrorist," with a woman holding the flag inside a building.

And you liked this tweet.

So my question is, what is your understanding of this photo?

Mr. Binnall. First of all, it I think assumes facts not in evidence. So I'm going to ask you to ask another question first.

BY [redacted]

Q I'll correct the record that there's no quotation marks around "Domestic Terrorist."

We're not governed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in this situation --

Mr. Binnall. I understand. I understand, but --

BY [redacted]

Q -- in this proceeding. So I'm going to continue forth with my question, which is, what is your understanding of this photo?

Mr. Binnall. That's a fine question. To the extent you have an understanding, you can answer.

Mr. O'Boyle. My understanding of it is that it's more of, like, a meme than anything else.

And, again, I'll say that my First Amendment-protected activity, such as liking a tweet, is not an endorsement of agreeing with what people say or with what they post. I have liked all sorts of things that I may not --

BY [redacted]

Q Do you often like things that you do not like?

Mr. Binnall. If you understand the question, you can answer.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't understand the question.

BY [redacted]

Q So you mentioned that you liked this tweet, but, even though it is the case that you liked this tweet, it does not mean that you're endorsing this tweet.

So my question is, do you often like things that you do not like? Because you liked this tweet, so I'm just trying to understand what you're saying here.

Mr. Binnall. Same instruction.

Mr. O'Boyle. So, just because -- are you familiar with how Twitter works?

BY [redacted]

Q You can tell me.

A Okay. So it doesn't give you many options on how to react to whatever's posted. So, when I hit the "like" button on Twitter, it's not necessarily me endorsing what the person tweeted or said or whatever else. Even in a retweet, that might not be the case.

Sometimes I may like something just because of the ironicness of it, such as this photo. To me, it's pretty ironic that, on one side, you have a guy holding his hand in the air with a raging fire behind him and the words "Peaceful Protester" below and then, on the other, you have an elderly woman holding an American flag with the words "Domestic Terrorist" below.

That's ironic to me. And I try to live and act in a way where irony is not lost on me, because I think irony can be interesting from time to time.

Q Do you believe the events of January 6th qualify as domestic terrorism?

Mr. Binnall. I think, to the extent you can answer to your own personal knowledge without making any legal conclusions, you can answer.

Mr. O'Boyle. Based on my own personal knowledge? Again, it would have to be broken down by cases. I don't know if it's correct to characterize everyone that was there as a domestic terrorist.

[12:18 p.m.]

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I'd like to admit exhibit 2 into the record, please.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I would also like to admit the exhibit that we discussed earlier, that had the #J6 political prisoners. We can admit it as exhibit 3.

Mr. O'Boyle, do you believe that the votes in the 2020 election were fairly and accurately counted?

Mr. Binnall. Again, to the extent you have any independent knowledge, you can answer.

[redacted] This is your own personal belief. Do you believe that the votes in the 2020 election were fairly and accurately counted?

Mr. O'Boyle. Based on everything I've seen, yes. That's what we've been told.

[redacted] Okay. On January 7th, 2023, there's another tweet that you liked, and it links to an article that says, "New evidence of election fraud POURS" -- "POURS" in all caps -- "out of Wisconsin."

And you have a copy in front of you there today. And I will mark this as exhibit 4.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Do you believe that there was election fraud in Wisconsin during the 2020 election?

Mr. Binnall. Give him a moment to review this tweet.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Binnall. Let me know when you're done reviewing it.

Mr. O'Boyle. I'm done.

Mr. Binnall. Okay.

Mr. O'Boyle. I have no personal knowledge that there was. I wasn't living in Wisconsin at the time.

But, again, like I've said, just because I like a tweet doesn't mean that I endorse the contents of that tweet. I do think it's important, as a citizen, to take in various forms of media from all sides so we have the clearest picture on what's happening in our country.

BY [redacted]

Q So why did you like this tweet?

A Well, like I said, I think it's important to take in various forms of media to paint a bigger picture of the occurrences happening in our country.

Q Do you believe that voter fraud impacted the outcome of the 2020 election?

A I don't know.

Q From your own personal perspective, do you believe that voter fraud impacted the outcome of the 2020 election?

Mr. Binnall. Asked and answered. That was from his personal perspective.

If you have any other answer, you can answer.

[redacted] I can move on.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So I'm showing you what's been marked as exhibit No. 5, and it's a tweet by you dated January 16th, 2023. And I can hand you a copy of it as well.

And so this tweet was in response to President Biden, who wrote, "The battle for the soul of this nation is perennial. It's a constant struggle between hope and fear -- against those who advance racism, extremism, and insurrection. But at our best, the American promise wins out."

In response you write, "It's a constant struggle between truth and fear -- against those who advance lies, half-truths, and destruction. But at our best, the American promise to reject lying politicians wins out. Too bad we've not been at our best for a long time."

Mr. O'Boyle, can you tell me what you mean by, "It's a constant struggle between truth and fear -- against those who advance half-lies [sic], half-truths, and destruction."

A I think, for the most part, this stands on its own as my own First Amendment-protected speech. In some ways, what I mean "between truth and fear" is what I've been doing with whistleblowing, trying to bring the truth to light and having to live in fear since then. And then others who may have been thinking of doing a similar thing are living in fear as well.

And then, as far as "lies, half-truths, and destruction," my own personal opinion is that this country is very divided right now, and it's -- I think we have a long way to go for some cohesion to come back into order.

And I guess, like, half-truths and lies, I would say things, like, have been uncovered with the Twitter Files or other things that are coming out now years after those things were taking place that shows that lies and half-truths have led to some destruction.

Q Who do you see is advancing those half-truths and destruction and lies?

A I mean, it comes from all sorts of places. Media, politicians, other bad actors, sometimes foreign influence. It comes from all over.

Q What specific American politicians do you see as liars?

A It's going to be a long list.

Q Happy to hear them.

A No, I don't know off the top of my head.

I do think that President Biden has lied from time to time. I think that could be said about most Presidents. I think most of them have lied from time to time as well.

Q Can you tell me what you think President Biden lied about?

A Just in this tweet, or --

Q In general.

Can you provide an answer, Mr. O'Boyle?

Mr. Binnall. Take the time you need to. It's a fairly narrow question. Take the time you need to consider it.

[redacted] We do have a clock running, so I do ask that you --

Mr. O'Boyle. I'm thinking about it.

[redacted] -- think about it and provide an answer.

Mr. Binnall. He's not going to be rushed on a question. If you want to withdraw the question and move on, that's fine. But if you want him to answer this question, he needs to take the time as best he can, especially with a broad -- a very, very broad question like this.

Mr. O'Boyle. Yeah. It's broad. I mean, one example that comes to mind for me is his dealings with his son Hunter and all of that. I think that's becoming evident that that's a clear lie.

[redacted] What do you mean by his dealings with his son Hunter?

Mr. O'Boyle. Well --

[redacted] We can withdraw that question. We can withdraw the follow-up question and just leave it at that.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to actually change topics a little bit and get back to your work on the Joint Terrorism Task Force for a minute, if we could.

A Okay. Sure.

Q I know you said you dealt with both international terrorism and then domestic terrorism.

Could you describe, just without getting into any specific cases, what your duties would have been?

A I mean, I guess, broadly speaking, my duties would be to investigate any allegation that could be a -- that I had an articulable, factual basis that there was a potential violation of Federal criminal law.

Q Okay. So you were actually the person on the ground doing the investigation?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. During your -- and, I'm sorry, you started with them in 2018?

A Correct.

Q And you were on the JTTF until you started your transfer process, right?

A Correct. And I still -- even when I was in that transfer process, I still technically was -- I still was working the cases that I had.

Q So, like, summer 2022. Is that right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. During that period, other than -- I know we talked about the shift from -- like, you had one international terrorism case, right? But then there wasn't a lot of international terrorism in Wichita, so you ended up doing more. Am I summarizing that right?

A Correct.

Q Did you witness any other resources shift with the JTTF?

A I did. I would say the biggest -- and, again, Wichita is pretty small. Like, there's not a ton of us there. But after January 6th, we got lots of leads to cover potential violations associated with that.

Q Okay.

A That was a -- I think when I left, there were still some active investigations or leads going on and being covered.

Q And were there additional agents brought in to cover those?

A Not necessarily brought in, but, like, the way it's structured -- so I mentioned TFOs earlier. They essentially have the same job as a special agent.

Q And I'm sorry. Could you state again what a TFO is?

A A TFO is a task force officer.

Q Thank you.

A So they are a local partner that gets basically deputized into the FBI so they can investigate Federal crime.

And so the way the structure was in Wichita, like, I was assigned to domestic terrorism. You had an agent or a TFO assigned to, like, counterintelligence, an agent assigned to international terrorism, the various types of counterterrorism. I guess, broadly speaking, all of those things fall under counterterrorism.

So after January 6th -- so I guess, technically, like, the DT body would be who would get all the January 6th cases because that was considered domestic terrorism by the way the FBI conducts their investigations.

But after January 6th, like, everybody was getting leads because there were so many to cover. So, like, not just the DT agent or TFO would get them.

Q Okay.

A Does that answer --

Q It does. I guess, did you see resources -- like, in your experience, were there other crimes that were not being investigated because of the focus on the January 6th cases?

A I guess I would say yes. But, like, we weren't pulling, like, agents from the other side, the criminal side.

Q Can I give you an example?

A Yeah.

Q Did you ever see an agent pulled, for example, from an investigation on a child sex abuse case, for example, to work on the January 6th cases?

A I never saw that, no.

Q Okay. Did you ever see anybody pulled from working on a case on child sexual abuse material to work on the January 6th cases?

A I didn't see that.

Q Okay. Did you see anybody pulled from violent crime?

A I didn't see that, no.

Q You mentioned -- and I think I only have a couple minutes left. So you mentioned that you had applied for a transfer to the National Surveillance --

[redacted] I think we're done.

[redacted] Okay. I'm sorry about that. We'll follow up on the next. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] The time is now 12:38 p.m.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. O'Boyle, I kind of want to ask your perspective about some things.

Are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4th, 2021, memorandum regarding alleged threats and violence at school board meetings?

A I am to some degree, yes.

Q In October 2021, you were an FBI special agent, correct?

A Correct.

Q Were you at the Wichita Resident Agency at that time?

A I was.

Q And when did you learn about the Attorney General's October 4th, 2021, memorandum?

A I don't remember exactly. We may have gotten that emailed to us. Sometimes we get memos from him or the whole DOJ does. I don't know for sure if that was one of them. But I learned about it probably within the week, at least.

Q What was your reaction when you learned of the memo?

A I was stunned that the highest-ranking law enforcement official in the country would publish something like that to the workforce.

Q And why were you stunned? Were you stunned by the content of the memo?

A The content and then the overall direction it seemed to be leading.

Q And what direction was that?

A To me, it was leading towards targeting parents for speaking up about their children's education.

Q And given your law enforcement background and your work at the FBI, did you perceive threats or violence at local school board meetings to be a matter that required Federal interventions?

A I did not. That was probably what was the most striking at first because, as a traditional police officer, if there was something like that, then whoever is at the school board meeting would call the police.

So I was surprised that it would be coming from such a high-ranking Federal official to be designated as an area for Federal law enforcement to hone in on.

Q And in your office, did agents and employees discuss their reactions to the memo?

A We did. I recall my supervisor, who was Sean Fitzgerald at the time, actually saying we will not be going to school board meetings in this office, which I was grateful that he was willing to state that.

Q To the extent you know, do you know if he communicated that to anyone in his chain of command?

A That, I don't know.

Q Were you involved in any official conversations or correspondence related to how the FBI could help address alleged threats of violence at school board meetings?

A Not that I recall.

Q And to the extent you know, when Sean Fitzgerald said that you would not be going to school board meetings, did he know if other FBI agents were being sent to school board meetings?

A I'm not sure.

Q In the memorandum, the Attorney General required each U.S. Attorney's Office, in conjunction with the FBI, to convene meetings with local law enforcement partners in their judicial district.

Did you ever attend any of these meetings?

A I did not.

Q Did they happen in the judicial district for Wichita?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q And in your role in Wichita, did you regularly work with local law enforcement?

A I would say it was pretty regular, yeah.

Q Did you have a sense of whether you thought, given your partnership with these local law enforcement agencies, that they could handle any threats of violence at school board meetings?

A I think they would be capable of that, barring maybe some small town that might need some assistance if something went really off the rails. But even then, they would probably not call us. The FBI is a small office in Wichita, so they probably would ask a different local department or sheriff's office for help before even coming to us.

Q And did any of the local law enforcement agencies that you worked with, did any of them ever come to you, or to the extent you know, to any of your colleagues, saying that they needed help with these threats of violence at school board meetings?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Are you familiar with an email that was sent by Carlton Peeples, the deputy assistant director of the Criminal Investigative Division for the FBI, on October 20th, 2021?

A I am.

Q And is it your understanding that that email announced the creation of an EDU OFFICIALS threat tag?

A I am aware of that.

Q Did you receive this email?

A I did not. I think how I became aware of it was that it was brought up on the news.

Q And what was your reaction to seeing this EDU OFFICIALS threat tag on the news?

A Again, it was shock and surprise, especially -- so Carlton Peeples was in charge of the Criminal Investigative Division, but also as part of that email was, I believe, Timothy Langan, who was from the Counterterrorism Division.

And it was already surprising that the FBI's CID would be involved in something like this, but then to have both CID and CTD, the Counterterrorism Division, sign off on a threat tag like that was troubling to say the least.

Q And just like the memorandum, did agents and employees within your office discuss their reaction to hearing the news of the EDU OFFICIALS threat tag?

A It is something we discussed just at the squad level, TFOs and agents, which I would say, in my experience, everybody I talked to about it was -- had a similar reaction as me, like, why are we inserting ourself into this type of matter?

Q Were you involved with any official conversations or correspondence about the creation of the EDU OFFICIALS threat tag?

A No.

Q And given your law enforcement background and your work at the FBI -- or I guess when you were at the FBI -- did you have any knowledge of or participate in any investigations that were labeled with the EDU OFFICIALS threat tag?

A No.

Q Are you generally aware that the FBI did in fact use that threat tag?

A I am.

Q And are you aware that several parents were investigated by the FBI for protected First Amendment activity?

A I am.

Q Given your law enforcement background and your work in the FBI, does this concern you?

A It does.

Q And do you think, given your background, does knowing that you could be investigated by the FBI for speaking up at your child's school board meeting, do you think that would chill parents from exercising their First Amendment right?

A Absolutely.

Q Given your law enforcement background and your work at the FBI, does the EDU OFFICIALS threat tag have any law enforcement utility? Is there any reason to have it?

A I don't believe so.

Mr. Gaetz. If I could ask a question here.

Did anyone -- did any of your coworkers ever advocate for that tag directly to you?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. So no one ever -- in these discussions that you described where people were saying, well, this is odd or different than our usual course and function, there were never voices that spoke up and said, no, we really need to be doing this?

Mr. O'Boyle. No, sir, not that I'm aware of. Nobody ever told me that. It was more -- I would say the reactions were similar to mine, like, why is this being created? Why is the Federal Government getting involved with this? And that came from agents and TFOs who we all were like, what's going on here?

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Thank you.

[redacted] And are you family with a letter that Mr. Jordan and other House Judiciary Republicans sent to the Attorney General on May 11th, 2022, regarding this EDU

OFFICIALS threat tag and its use?

Mr. O'Boyle. I am.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I'm going to mark that as exhibit No. 6.

Mr. Binnall. Thank you.

[redacted] I'll give you a minute to review.

Mr. Binnall. Let us know when you're done reading reviewing it.

Mr. O'Boyle. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I'm going to direct your attention to page 2, the bullet point material there.

A Okay.

Q And I'll read for you the first bullet on page 2. And in this context, "you" or "your" refers to Attorney General Merrick Garland.

"In one investigation begun following your directive, the FBI's [redacted] Field Office interviewed a mom for allegedly telling a local school board 'we are coming for you.'

"The complaint, which came into the FBI through the National Threat Operations Center snitch-line, alleged that the mom was a threat because she belonged to a 'right wing mom's group' known as 'Moms For Liberty' and because she 'is a gun owner.'

"When an FBI agent interviewed the mom, she told the agent that she was upset about the school board's mask mandate and that her statement was a warning that her organization would seek to replace the school board with new members through the electoral process."

Mr. O'Boyle, given your law enforcement background and as a former FBI agent, what is your reaction to hearing this?

A As a former FBI agent and police officer and as a parent, it's shocking that a Federal agent would show up at someone's door for that.

Q And why is it shocking that they would show up for that?

A Because, one, if somebody does want to make a complaint about this, why are you referring it to the FBI? Right off the bat, "we are coming for you," that's what they have on a, what, on a -- "telling the local school board 'we are coming for you.'"

Okay. If you have an issue with that statement, you call your local police, and you tell them what you know, and you tell them who said it, what you think they meant, and then the police go and investigate further to find out what the FBI agent eventually ascertained, was that we were going to replace you.

This is not a Federal crime. This is not a Federal matter. But we have FBI agents doing it now.

And that -- not only is it chilling to have a Federal law enforcement officer show up at your door, but I bet that mom is still scared about going to her kid's school board meetings and speaking up because she doesn't want the FBI coming to her door again.

Q In your opinion, is this a proper use of FBI resources?

A No.

Q Moving on to the second bullet.

"The FBI's [redacted] Field Office opened an investigation, subsequent to your directive, into a dad opposed to mask mandates. The complaint came in through the National Threat Operations Center snitch-line and alleged that the dad 'fit the profile of an insurrectionist' because he 'rails against the government,' 'believes all conspiracy theories,' and 'has a lot of guns and threatens to use them.'

"When an FBI agent interviewed the complainant, the complainant admitted that they had 'no specific information or observations of...any crimes or threats,' but they contacted the FBI after learning the Justice Department had a website 'to submit tips to the FBI in regards to any concerning behavior directed toward school boards.'"

Mr. O'Boyle, given your law enforcement background, what's your reaction to hearing this?

A This is a perfect example of how the DOJ and the FBI has become weaponized. This complainant hears that the Justice Department now has an open website for anybody to come and submit tips. So they go on the website to submit tips against someone that, it sounds like, they disagree with ideology, with their ideology. So they submit the tip hoping that the bogeyman, the FBI, will come and handle the situation.

And, again, from a law enforcement perspective, even if this was true -- okay, "fits the profile of an insurrectionist." What does that mean? One. "Rails against the government." That's First Amendment-protected free speech. "Believes all conspiracy theories." That's First Amendment-protected free speech. "Has a lot of guns and threatens to use them."

Okay. Do you have any articulable, factual basis that they are making threats? Because just owning guns is Second Amendment-protected activity.

And then that person who made the complaint admits, I have "no specific information or observations of...any crimes or threats." But they utilize the snitch-line so they can weaponize or have the FBI weaponized against this person that they just disagree with.

Q And in your opinion, was this a proper use of FBI resources?

A Absolutely not.

Q Okay. And on to the third bullet.

"In another case initiated after your directive, the FBI's [redacted] Field Office opened an investigation into Republican state elected officials over allegations from the state Democratic party official that the Republicans 'incited violence' by expressing public displeasure with school districts' vaccine mandates. This complaint also came into the FBI through the National Threat Operations Center snitch-line."

Given your law enforcement background and work at the FBI, what is your reaction to hearing this?

A It's another example of people thinking, oh, we have this open snitch-line, let's go and report it to the Feds.

So even if this complaint that Republicans were inciting violence is substantiated, it's a local law enforcement matter. There's nothing that I know of, based on my training and experience in the FBI, that brings this to a level of Federal concern.

And even if that is the case, you still -- if violence is imminent and it was incited, the FBI is not coming like the police do. You call 911, or you call your police and say, I'm worried about this, I think they're inciting violence, and let them do their investigation.

And if the local department says, this is beyond our scope, or we do think there might be a Federal nexus here -- which I would say at first blush, without additional information, it sounds like there is not any Federal nexus.

So, again, why is the FBI being called? And I think the logical conclusion is because they have been weaponized against parents and others in this country.

Q In your opinion, is this a proper use of FBI resources?

A No.

Q Given your law enforcement background, do you believe the FBI should be using counterterrorism resources to investigate parents for voicing their concerns at local school board meetings?

A No.

Q Do you believe the FBI should be using criminal investigative resources to investigate parents for voicing their concerns at local school board meetings?

A No. They should be using no resources for voicing opinions.

Q And this should be handled by local law enforcement?

A If there's something that rises to the concern of potential law violation, yes, that's where it should be started.

Q Do you have reason to believe that the FBI is using and creating threat tags in a politicized way?

A I do.

Q Can you tell us a little bit about that?

A Well, aside from the EDU OFFICIALS threat tag -- so the threat tagging process is one that doesn't even get utilized a ton, I don't think. But threat tags do exist. They're kind of like the hashtag in our system. And so you can go on our system and search for that threat tag.

Sometimes if you start typing one up, like, it'll prepopulate what threat tags might start with those initial letters that you started typing with.

Another one -- and I'm sure there are more, but one I can think of off the top of my head, I don't remember the name of it exactly, but it was regarding, like, threats to the Supreme Court officials.

So the name of that threat tag was, like, threats to SCOTUS, which is, like, okay, that seems like a legitimate use because threatening a Supreme Court official is a violation of Federal crime.

But then the guidance regarding that threat tag was -- it shifted and began focusing in on pro-life adherence. So that threat tag came into existence after the Dobbs decision that reversed Roe v. Wade.

And so when this threat tag came out, it was like, why are you focusing on pro-life people? It's pro-choice people who are the ones protesting or otherwise threatening violence in front of Supreme Court Justices' houses.

But even in that threat tag, which seemed like a legitimate use, the FBI twisted it and said, we want you to focus on pro-life, on pro-lifers. And it's like, they're probably happy about the decision, so why would we focus on them? Didn't make any sense.

So that's just two examples. Like, I don't know any others off the top of my head, but I'm sure there are other threat tags out there that are in this similar bent that are clearly directed towards a certain set of people.

Q And when you say it was -- the guidance focused on pro-life advocates, what do you mean by that?

A If I recall correctly, it was -- I think they wanted us to, like, look into -- oh, what are they called? -- pregnancy -- pregnancy centers. Like, the antithesis to abortion clinics. Whatever those are called. I'm forgetting the verbiage off the top of my head.

And I was like, why would we go and talk to these people about threats when, if somebody is going to be getting threatened, it would be them, because people thought that abortion was suddenly outlawed, which that wasn't the case either. It was just remanded back to the States.

I'd have to pull up or see if I have that guidance about that threat tag. I'm not remembering entirely everything about it. But I remember it struck me as odd at the time.

And then I later even got -- it's called a request for collection, because I had a confidential human source who was a pro-life person, and I was asked to ask that person a bunch of questions about the threats to the Supreme Court.

And even when I got that, I was like, why would this person know about those threats? He's pro-life. Like, he's not the one going and threatening the Supreme Court Justices.

So it didn't add up at the time. It still doesn't, to me.

Q And so when you were in Wichita, you worked on domestic terrorism, correct?

A Correct.

Q And so are you aware that one of the forms of domestic terrorism is abortion-related violent extremism?

A I am.

Q And so the leak of the Dobbs opinion occurred in May, and then in June, the final decision was released. In between May and current, there's been over a hundred attacks on pro-life facilities and churches, pregnancy resource centers.

Did you ever receive any guidance from the FBI to investigate those incidents?

A I never did, no. Of my own volition, I reached out to a local pro-life clinic or ministry. But, big surprise, they never responded back to me because they probably didn't want to talk to the FBI.

But, no, I -- no, that -- other than that, no.

Q Okay. Let's switch topics a bit.

So committee Republicans released a report in November 2022 that detailed the problems as recounted by whistleblowers and from other public information that undermines the FBI's fundamental law enforcement mission.

So whistleblowers have told committee Republicans that the FBI Washington hierarchy is, quote, "rotted at its core," end quote, maintains a, quote, "systemic culture of unaccountability," end quote, and full of, quote, "rampant corruption, manipulation, and abuse," end quote.

Do you agree with these statements?

A I do.

Q What is your reaction to hearing these statements?

A It's really one of sadness. The FBI has long been held up as -- I mean, they tell you at Quantico, not only does FBI stand for Federal Bureau of Investigation, it stands for fidelity, bravery, and integrity. And based on things that I have disclosed as well as what other whistleblowers have disclosed, it seems like that couldn't be further from the truth.

And, you know, rank-and-file members of the FBI, I think, by and large, in my experience, try to do what's right. They try to do the right thing. But most of them fall short of that line when they see something that's wrong, most of them don't report it, because they're trying to get to that 20-year mark and get that pension or whatever, whatever is inhibiting them.

I've had people tell me before: I can't do what you've done because I can't risk losing my paycheck. And it's like, well, I really couldn't risk it either, but it had to be done. Because if we aren't going to do it internally, it's never going to change. It's never going to get fixed.

So I hope that more whistleblowers come forward. But I think the only way that that can happen is if this weaponization against whistleblowers and against parents and whoever else, it has to somehow be stopped now. And it doesn't seem like that's happening any time soon.

Q And does it surprise you that FBI employees and agents have made these characterizations of the hierarchy?

A It does not. After the experience I'm going through right now, it doesn't surprise me one bit.

Q Given your experience with domestic terrorism cases, I want to ask you about some information that the committee has learned regarding domestic terrorism cases and domestic violent extremism.

So we have learned that the Biden administration's narrative about the FBI's work on domestic violent extremism -- abbreviated as DVE -- cases may be misleading. We have received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases of DVEs to satisfy their superiors.

For example, one whistleblower claimed that, because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases, even though there's minimal circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification.

Do you have any information regarding the reclassification of cases as DVEs?

A I would have to think about that further because I don't remember exactly where I heard this from.

But in the FBI, we classify our cases -- we call it a TURK code. TURK is, like, time, utilization, and record keeping.

So there's, like, an alphanumeric code for every type of case, every type of investigation you work. Domestic terrorism, for instance, the numeric part all starts with 266, and then there's a letter after the number.

And then, like, for Kansas City, if it's a domestic terrorism case in Kansas City, it's, like, 266, a letter, which indicates what type of domestic terrorism, dash KC, dash a handful of numbers. That's your case code.

And so I don't remember if I learned this at work or if I heard it. I can't recall exactly, but I learned at some point that FBI agents were being directed to reclassify 170- -- I think it was 176 cases, so that would be domestic cooperation with police -- to reclassify any of those into some type of domestic terrorism case.

But, again, I don't remember if I heard that secondhand or if that was something I learned at work.

I guess along that same line, as a DT agent, I encountered similar stat padding or case bolstering, in that I had a case -- and I'll try not to get into too many details because I think it might still be open, but I don't know. It's a case I was trying to wrap up before my transfer.

And truth be told, it was one case. But the FBI had me open up four different cases because they had me open a case for every individual that I had an articulable, factual basis that there may have been potential Federal law being violated.

And when I first got these cases, I'm like -- because I initially -- they were transferred to me from another agent. And I think it was, like, two at the time. And I asked my boss, I was like, why do I have -- these are the same. Like, everything I wrote, every 302, every 1057, everything I did, I started putting into all four cases because they were really just one case.

Where, like, on a criminal case, say you were working, like, a gang, which this case was, I guess, like, a militia, if you're working, like, a gang, you have a case open on the gang, and you have a subfile for each person in it. Like, John Doe one, two, and three, they would all have their own subfile.

Where in my case, John Doe one, two, three, and four all had their own separate case because then the FBI can -- from my perspective -- the FBI can come back to Congress and say, look at all the domestic terrorism we've investigated. Where, really, I was working one case.

But the FBI can then say, well, he actually had four, and so we need you to give us more money because look at how big of a threat all this domestic terrorism is.

So that's just my personal experience with that.

Q So it was the usual practice that if there were multiple individuals involved with one case, you may open a subfile for each individual? Is that correct?

A If you're working traditional criminal matters, yes. But I believe it's policy on the CTD side to open up all these separate cases, when in reality then that's just -- they're just obscuring the truth and the facts.

Like, all my guys that I was working on were related. They should have just been in one case. But they weren't because --

Mr. Gaetz. Who gave you the directions, Mr. O'Boyle, to open four cases in that matter rather than categorize all that conduct in one case?

Mr. O'Boyle. So, sir, I don't know if anybody even gave me a specific direction. It was more like, this is the policy. Because once --

Mr. Gaetz. Describe that to me.

Mr. O'Boyle. I think my -- I think when I first got the cases -- I don't even remember who my boss was then. I don't know if anybody described it to me, but I believe I may have read it in our policy, because I think I might have asked maybe another agent or something.

I was like, hey, I'm going to open up on these two other guys. Do I need to open up separate cases?

And they were like, yeah.

And I was like, why? Like, it's all related. Can't I just merge it into one?

And they were like, no, you can't.

So then I think I pulled up the policy and read it and was like --

Mr. Gaetz. But you don't recall who that -- who participated in that discussion with you?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And were you aware of other instances where people were opening up more cases than necessary in order to accommodate that policy?

Mr. O'Boyle. I guess the only other one that would be similar, I had an abortion extremism case. So it was a 266 whatever. And then that was also opened up on the criminal side as a potential FACE Act case.

And that one actually had a different case agent assigned to it, but she never worked on the case. I worked on it alone. So even with that one, I would serialize everything I did to my case and to her case.

So optically, it's like, oh, we've got an abortion extremism case, but we also have a FACE Act case. But we really only had one case.

So to me, it seems like it's a clear numbers game, where they can [inaudible] and say, look, look, look, we have all this domestic terrorism or international terrorism or whatever other type of terrorism.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever complain about that inefficient use of resources to any superior?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did. To --

Mr. Binnall. Be careful about disclosing any protected disclosures.

Mr. O'Boyle. Okay.

Mr. Binnall. Except to the extent --

Mr. O'Boyle. Oh, I don't know that this was protected, too.

Mr. Binnall. Okay.

Mr. O'Boyle. Like, I discussed it with my boss, Sean, and he agreed. He was like, yeah, I know it's stupid. That's just the policy. He was like, yeah, I'm fine if you just serialize everything into -- you know, whatever you do, just put it in all of them.

But then, yeah, as a case manager, then you're tracking all these four different cases where it's really just one.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you say Sean, you're speaking about Sean Fitzgerald?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So did you express your concern about this before or after you opened up the additional cases?

Mr. O'Boyle. It was after they were all open.

Mr. Gaetz. So you have the initial case. You see that there are these other individuals, which in the normal course of business would be subfiles within that initial case heading.

Among your colleagues and coworkers, you learn from their feedback that, actually, the policy would require this inefficient separate opening of cases.

You then do that, you perform the separate opening of those cases, you serialize all of the content to all of those cases, and then complain to Sean Fitzgerald that this is inefficient.

Fitzgerald then agrees with you that it is inefficient and tells you to do it anyway.

Do I understand that correct?

Mr. O'Boyle. That's correct. I mean, yeah. He was like, yeah, that's just the policy on this side. Because I think he had worked criminal matters earlier, so he knew that.

And then a close friend of mine who worked on the JTTF and SWAT team with me, he eventually transferred to the criminal side. And that, I think, is when I maybe first became more aware of what was happening.

Because he was like, man, it's awesome over here. I've got this case open and, look, I just have subfiles for everybody.

And I was like, what?

And he said, yeah, you don't have to open up all these other cases.

And that's when I started kind of connecting the dots in my head, like, well, why is the FBI doing this, then?

And then it's like, well, look at the budget every year. They push terrorism, and lately it's domestic terrorism.

And, to me, that seems like a logical conclusion to draw, like, oh, that's why.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I want to drill down on that for a moment.

Who, in speaking with you, connected the stat padding with the budgeting and resource allocation process?

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't -- I don't know if anybody -- can you say that again?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. You described these circumstances where the stat padding is in service of trying to draw more resources into DVE. But who did you have those discussions with?

Mr. O'Boyle. I mean, I guess just with my squadmates who agreed. You know, they've worked that stuff, too. Sean, my boss, seemed to agree, at least to my face.

Mr. Gaetz. So, again -- sorry to belabor the point, but I want to draw a fine point on it.

In your expression of concern to Mr. Fitzgerald about this practice, you came away from that conversation believing that the reason Mr. Fitzgerald wanted you to do this anyway, even though there wasn't really a law enforcement value, was because there was a budgetary value.

Mr. O'Boyle. I wouldn't say that he characterized it that way. But after talking with him and him saying, like, that's just the policy or the way it is on this side, I drew those conclusions on my own.

Mr. Gaetz. Great. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Were you ever told that you had to open a certain amount of cases that were tagged or classified a certain way?

A I wouldn't say I was ever told that, like, in an overt fashion like that. But it was often alluded to, like, you got to have cases open, like, so you can justify what you're doing.

And it's like, well -- which one thing that's common, at least in the CTD side, is cases will just stay open for years and years and years. And if you -- as long as you put something to the file -- we call it -- internally, we call it papering the file -- if you just paper the file every 90 days, you're good.

And there's not any real investigative work being done, but, hey, I can run it up the chain of command and say, look, I got these cases open.

And sometimes -- and I would say it was probably more common with international terrorism-type cases or maybe CI ones as well -- they're just opened, like, for years, years and years and years.

And then even sometimes, if you're trying to close it -- like, what, this case has been open for 5 years, here's all the things we've done -- you'll get pushback from headquarters or maybe even your boss or their boss.

And it's like, well, we've done -- we've taken the logical steps in this case, and there's no indication that there's Federal crime occurring -- or at least that we couldn't find -- but there's enough where we can't justify keeping it open. And sometimes you get pushback from headquarters people or even in your own chain of command.

Q So you would get pushback from headquarters that you would need to keep cases open?

A Correct.

Q And then you would just paper the file every 90 days to keep the case open? Is that accurate?

A That is a common practice, yes.

Q We've learned that former counterterrorism Assistant Special Agent in Charge Timothy Thibault and the FBI's former Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division Jill Sanborn allegedly pressured agents to move cases into the DVE category to hit self-created performance metrics.

Are you familiar with either Mr. Thibault or Ms. Sanborn?

A I am, but just tangentially.

Q Did you ever interact or work with them?

A No.

Q And are you aware of these self-created performance metrics?

A So to some degree, I am. This is actually another disconcerting aspect of the FBI.

Every SAC -- so every special agent in charge over a specific division -- they can get a monetary bonus at the end of the year if they meet metrics. They have an Excel spreadsheet that has all sorts of things listed in it, and if those metrics are met, then they get their bonus.

And I think a large driving factor in the FBI is to meet those metrics. And I think that raises grave constitutional concerns to be saying to law enforcement officers, you have to go and do X, Y, and Z so the boss gets his bonus.

Nobody comes out and says it that way, but when you get the spreadsheet where -- or the SAC Excel spreadsheet is red in these categories, we've got to fix it, we've got to do this and that to get it back up to green and then to gold so he gets his bonus. Nobody is saying it that way, but that certainly is what is implied.

Q And what are the metrics?

A There's a wide range of them. I don't even know them all. But it's -- one that I do have personal experience with is -- they're called -- I think they call them, like, enhanced -- enhanced techniques or something to that degree. I'm forgetting now.

But it's, like, Title IIIs, Title III wiretaps, or FISAs, or other sophisticated -- sophisticated techniques. That's what they're called. Things of that nature.

Like, this is just an arbitrary number I'm giving you because I don't know what they are, and they're different for different field offices, but, like, at the beginning of the year the SAC's metric might be, get three Title IIIs.

And it's like, how do you know you're going to get three? And what if you don't get three? Well, then you're not marked gold in that category.

So I think that that leads to a pervasive culture of not letting the case dictate where the investigation goes, but it's the manager or the agent pushing for a certain avenue of where a case goes.

And my personal experience with that is, when I was a new agent, when I wasn't even aware of some of this stuff, my case, a case I had, was going in the direction of getting a Title III.

And me and my co-case agent, a TFO who had been there for years, we had a meeting with my boss. It was Sonia Garcia at the time. And we were talking about this Title III affidavit that I'm writing -- or that me and Chad are writing.

And we wrap up the meeting, and she says, you guys, I really need this Title III.

And it struck me as odd.

So we walked out of the office. And I was like, Chad, can we go to the conference room? And so we went in there and talked. And I was like, what did she mean, like, I really need this Title III? And he started laughing.

And he's like, you'll see. The longer you're here, you'll see. And he told me, like, there are metrics that need to be met, and then your boss or their boss can write to that, oh, while I was the supervisory resident or supervisory special agent, I had a Title III on this case.

And they can write to that on what's called an FD-954, which is, like -- basically like your internal resume that you have to submit when you want to get promoted.

And it's like, oh, she really needed that because it helps her get promoted. And then it also helps the SAC because then he's got a Title III for his Excel spreadsheet. So he's one Title III closer to being gold in that way and then getting his bonus.

And I would say, like, by and large -- I mean, a Title III, you listen to people's phone calls. Like, that's an extreme measure to take. And now with the FBI saying, get this arbitrary number of Title IIIs because then the big boss gets his bonus? Like, that's not how law enforcement should be working.

And I would say the vast majority of Title IIIs come in gang-related cases. So it's like -- mine came in a domestic terrorism investigation, but -- and then once you have it open, you can write them over and over and over to try to keep them going, which hopefully, like, agents are doing their due diligence.

But with that lingering aspect of, oh, if you get the metric, then you're good, like, the boss will leave you alone because you did something that helped that metric. And it's, like, that's not what law enforcement should be in a country that's allegedly free.

Q And so these metrics, they're listed out in a spreadsheet? Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And do you know who is in charge of updating the spreadsheet or --

A I don't know for sure, but if I remember correctly -- if I had access to my email, I could just pull one up. But I think the administrative officer.

So every office has an AO, an administrative officer. She or he is basically like the secretary, I think, to some degree, for the SAC. So I think she was the one who would send that out, but I don't recall for certain.

Q And did agents within the office, did they have visibility into the spreadsheet to see where you were at with hitting these metrics?

A I think we did to some degree. Like, I'm trying to think. I can't say for certain.

Q And so while there wasn't spoken pressure to hit the metrics, was it felt by all of the agents?

A I think so, yeah.

Q And it was kind of like a commonly held feeling or belief that you had to hit the metric so your SAC could get their bonus?

A Correct.

Q And according to the Biden administration, investigations into domestic violent extremists have increased significantly.

In June 2021, FBI Director Christopher Wray testified before the House Judiciary Committee that the FBI has a, quote, "very, very active domestic terrorism investigation program," end quote, and that the FBI had doubled the amount of domestic terrorism investigations.

Attorney General Garland has repeated this talking point, publicly stating that, quote, "The number of open FBI domestic terrorism investigations this year has increased significantly," end quote.

Given your background, what is your reaction to hearing these statements?

A I mean, I would say that's probably true on paper because every single January 6th case that I'm aware of was listed as a domestic terrorism case.

I don't think -- I guess I don't know for sure, but I don't think they were labeled as anything else, and the FBI holds that up as the biggest investigation that it's ever had. So if you're categorizing all of them as domestic terrorism cases, yeah, they would double.

But I think it's kind of a misnomer to say that because the vast majority of those, at least in my experience, we would get leads related to those, and we'd work the leads and then send back to WFO, who was running -- kind of running everything, like, hey, this lead, you know, it's unfounded or it is founded.

And then if you had one that you thought there was more to, then you would work that case that was opened in WFO and -- I guess I can't say for certain -- but I think you also would open a case locally.

But everything was basically ran through WFO and the AUSA, who was also coordinating heavily with the AUSA here to determine how to work those cases. So they aren't or weren't always left to the local field office to work how they deemed fit.

Q Do you know, did the WFO pressure other field offices to keep January 6th cases open or open cases?

A I would say they pressured us to open cases to some degree. One example that I have personally -- I made this as one of my protected disclosures, so I'll just touch on it a little bit.

But I received a lead about someone based on an anonymous tip, and in law enforcement anonymous tips don't hold very much weight, especially without evidence that you can corroborate pretty easily.

I wasn't able to corroborate anything they said, even after speaking with the person they alleged potential criminal behavior of.

While I'm trying to figure all that out, I get another lead from the same agent who sent me that lead. And they essentially tried to get me to violate policy or law.

[1:26 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And who was that?

A I forget what her name was. It was an agent who was working the WFO at the -- what did they call it? They didn't call it a task force, but -- WFO set up, like, a unit to help work all the January 6th stuff. And one of my coworkers actually knew that agent. He was like, "Oh, I went to Quantico with her. Let's just give her a call and talk to her about this stuff."

And after talking to her, my mind was blown that she was still trying to get me to do some legal process on the guy that I got the anonymous tip on. Because there was no rational explanation that anybody could come up with, especially with the additional information I had found, that would have permitted me to do legal process even if I wanted to.

And so I ended up writing that all up and denying it. But that was a personal example for me where it was like, okay, this has gone way off the rails here.

Mr. Gaetz. Who was the individual who had gone to Quantico with the female at the Washington Field Office?

Mr. O'Boyle. His name was Ryan Ross.

Mr. Gaetz. And had you complained to Mr. Ross about the pressure you were receiving before that subsequent phone call?

Mr. O'Boyle. I did. I was like -- because he was my training agent too, and he's a lawyer by trade, so I would often pick his brain about things that I thought were amiss. So I was like, "Hey, Ryan, can you come look at this?"

And so he looked at the two leads. I told him some of the additional information I had gathered. And he was like, "This is insane." And he's like, "I know her. Let's give her a call. I'm sure we can sort it out."

When we got off the phone, I was like, "I'm just going to close this." She still wanted me to do what she wanted me to do in the lead, and I was like, no. I can't. I can't. I mean --

Mr. Gaetz. So, to your knowledge, that case was closed?

Mr. O'Boyle. To my knowledge, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And when you say "legal process," what are you referring to?

A So they were trying to get me to do the grand jury subpoenas, when there was no rational way to conclude that the legal process she wanted was in any way associated with the anonymous tip --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- which -- yeah.

[redacted] We've got 10 minutes left if -- Mr. Gaetz, do you have more questions?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, I've got some.

I'm going to go back to some of the retaliation features that we discussed in the first round.

Did the people you worked with at the FBI know you have a family?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And how would they have known that?

Mr. O'Boyle. I told them. I had pictures by my desk. They all knew my wife was pregnant. Even my receiving unit, they knew. When I accepted my orders, I told them, like, "My wife's pregnant right now. She's due in September." And they were like, "We'll work with you on all that."

Mr. Gaetz. So the field office you were leaving knew, the field office you were arriving to knew, and the FBI logistics team facilitating the move knew.

Mr. O'Boyle. As far as I know.

Mr. Gaetz. Who do you believe made the allegation against you, that you had improperly made media disclosures?

Mr. O'Boyle. So I don't know for sure, it's just my theory, but I believe it was my former boss, Sean.

Mr. Gaetz. And what's your basis for that belief?

Mr. O'Boyle. So, in some of the paperwork I received from the FBI, it said that the allegation was made against me on August 23rd. And August 23rd was my travel day for that training in Virginia for my new unit, so I was away from the office. So it gave him time to speak on the phone or openly with whoever he may have spoken to about me.

And that also came on the heels of the protected disclosure I made to SSA Wilkes. So that protected disclosure was about Sean and some things that I believe he had done. And --

Mr. Binnall. Without going into the substance of that.

Mr. O'Boyle. Yeah. I won't go into any further substance about that, but --

Mr. Gaetz. Is it safe to say that the substance of your protected disclosure informed your belief that Sean was the person who had made this allegation?

Mr. O'Boyle. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And the timing --

Mr. O'Boyle. The timing.

Mr. Gaetz. -- also is a basis for that belief?

Mr. O'Boyle. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever observe Sean exhibit political bias?

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't think so, no.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you ever presented any evidence regarding the allegations against you, that you had made improper disclosures to the media?

Mr. O'Boyle. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you ever told what media entity people believed you had made an improper disclosure to?

Mr. O'Boyle. Not in conjunction with the suspension.

Mr. Binnall. And as far as the substance of the investigation, kind of not answer on that.

Mr. O'Boyle. Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. Just, like, in the broadest sense, who do you believe is doing this to you?

Mr. O'Boyle. I mean, I think -- I think it goes back to the central rot at the core of the FBI, that they found out -- or maybe when Sean or whoever made this allegation, then they started looking, and they're like, oh, this guy's probably making disclosures, protected -- because they -- I'm sure they can pull up things that I downloaded or whatever that would include protected disclosures I made -- and they said, ah, we gotta get rid of him.

So I think, especially in conjunction with other whistleblowers who have been suspended, it -- to me, I don't know if I'll ever be swayed from the position that it's retaliation from the top down.

Mr. Gaetz. What do you mean when you say "the top"?

Mr. O'Boyle. I think the seventh floor of the Hoover Building. And that may include the Director, I don't know. I don't know how much he's kept in the loop on some of that day-to-day stuff. But at least AD Jen Moore, who signed that letter, and probably other people at that same or similar level who all work in concert at the Hoover Building.

Mr. Gaetz. The retaliation that you've testified to today seems to have an enhanced feature of cruelty to it.

Mr. O'Boyle. I agree. I agree.

Mr. Gaetz. You know, are you and the other whistleblowers, the cases that you're aware of, are there features of such acute cruelty?

Mr. O'Boyle. Not like this. My situation is one that all the other whistleblowers I've talked to are like, "I just can't believe" -- I mean, and they're in a similar situation, they're suspended without pay, and they say, "I can't believe what has happened to you."

You know, earlier, I alluded I went to Iraq and Afghanistan, a year each, as an infantryman. I received the Combat Infantryman Badge for -- I mean, that is awarded to infantrymen who fight the enemy. So I've been shot at. I've had rockets shot at me, IEDs. And it's different, but this, what I'm going through right now, is harder than those deployments.

When I got home from Afghanistan, I knew I was getting out of the Army. I had 10, 11 months left. And I was like -- I had just turned 25, and I was like, "I'm done. The hardest thing I will do in my life, I've done it, and now I can move on."

And then this happened. And it's not war, but it's very war-like, in what it has done to me mentally, what it's doing to me and my family. And I didn't have a family then. You know, I just had my wife. And, you know, yeah, it's just -- it's hard to believe.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. And do you know why your matter seems to have -- actually, strike that.

In these other suspensions, there doesn't seem to be this purposeful manifestation of cruelty to someone's family, to someone's living situation, to someone's ability to secure future employment. Why do you think the acuity of the cruelty is so much higher with you?

Mr. O'Boyle. I wish I knew. I think it probably just goes back to the pervasiveness of how the FBI has deemed -- they've decided they're going to do what they want, on their agenda, on their terms, that they're the law, and they're not going to have someone internally shining a light in the darkness on the bad things that they are doing.

And I think they realized, we have him in the perfect position to completely flip his life upside-down and cause torment to him. Because then they can come back and say, well, look at his mental status, or, you know, he's clearly unstable, he hasn't had a job, or whatever they might try to drum up in the future, which I wouldn't be surprised at anything they try to drum up. But --

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe they're making an example out of you?

Mr. O'Boyle. I do, yeah. I think it's clear. I mean, and I think that also has a cooling effect on speech, because any FBI employee who hears my story I'm sure would be stunned.

Mr. Gaetz. So you believe that you and your family are being be tortured so that the FBI can send a message to any future whistleblowers that this is what life will be like for you?

Mr. O'Boyle. I do.

Mr. Gaetz. Since your suspension, have you had any communication with former coworkers?

Mr. O'Boyle. Minimally.

So, from one coworker -- from a coworker, he called me shortly after my suspension, and he told me that they were told -- or that Sean, my boss, had a meeting and told them that I was going to be charged and fired and convicted, or indicted, or something. I don't remember now exactly.

And he was really upset about that. And he said, we were -- he said they all had received an email that said to not discuss classified matters with me because my suspension -- because my clearance had been suspended.

But he said, after that meeting, that they were all led to believe, like, that they just couldn't talk to me at all. But he was like, no, I had to call you and see how you were doing, and stuff like that.

And then I heard from another former colleague who knew someone at the new unit I was going to, and he said that they were told, essentially, like, do not have any contact with me or you could have some type of consequence. And I've not heard from any of those people. But --

Mr. Gaetz. So, both at the field office you were leaving and the field office you were going to, what you had heard from others was that they had participated in discussions that smeared you.

Mr. O'Boyle. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know when the meeting occurred with Sean and your prior coworkers regarding your status?

Mr. O'Boyle. I would have to look. I think I have the date somewhere. But it was early October.

Mr. Gaetz. And I'm not asking for it now, but if in the future we ask you to provide a list of the people who might have attended that meeting or might know the substance that was discussed there, is that something you could think about and provide to us?

Mr. Binnall. We can talk about that.

Mr. Gaetz. All right. I think our time has concluded.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[1:57 p.m.]

[redacted] All right. We can go back on the record. It is 1:57 in the afternoon.

Thank you again for joining us.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to go back to the discussion, I think earlier in the hour that just passed, on the school board's letter.

Have you ever met Carlton Peeples or Tim Langan?

A I have. I've met Tim Langan.

Q What was the context of that?

A He was the SAC of the Kansas City Division for maybe, like, a year and a half of my time there.

Q So when would that have been?

A Roughly -- let me think here. I got there in '18. Maybe, like, 2019 through halfway through 2020 maybe.

Q And then he left? Is that right?

A Correct.

Q Did you ever have any conversations with him about anything related to school boards?

A No, not about school boards, no.

Q Okay.

I want to go to the -- did you ever work on any school-board-related cases?

A No.

Q Okay.

And I want to go back to the May 11, 2022, letter. I think it's exhibit 6, if that's right.

You just walked through a couple of examples --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- in here, the three bullet points.

That first bullet point begins [inaudible] "investigation began following your directive." "Your" refers to Attorney General Garland.

You said, you know, based on your view of this, this is not a Federal crime, it's not a Federal matter.

Was this your case? Did you work this case?

A No.

Q Okay. So do you know if there was ever a criminal case filed in response to this incident?

A Oh, I'd have to have more information than this.

Q Okay. So everything that you said about it is based just on the paragraph that you read?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

What about the following one, "The FBI's [redacted] Field Office opened an investigation"? Was that your case?

A No.

Q Did you have anything to do with it? Did you assist on it in any way?

A No.

Q Okay.

You said -- so everything, every comment you can make about this case is just based on that paragraph in front of you.

A In combination with my training and experience.

Q But you have no knowledge of the facts of the case, beyond what's in front there.

A I have -- right.

Q Okay.

And it looks like the -- one, two, three, four, fifth -- sixth sentence -- sixth line down, it says, "An FBI agent interviewed the complainant."

To your reading, does that refer to the person who made the -- who called in to the National Threat Operations Center or to the actual individual who was the subject of the investigation?

A My understanding of that would be "the complainant" as the person who made the initial tip.

Q Okay. So, based on this, we have no -- we don't know if the FBI ever actually spoke to whoever the alleged person that was the focus of the tip was?

A Correct.

Q Did you ever -- I'm sorry. And just the third one, "in another case initiated after your directive." Was that your case?

A No.

Q Did you have anything to do with that investigation?

A No.

Q Do you have any knowledge of the facts of it beyond what's in this paragraph?

A No.

Q Okay.

In your role with the JTTF or otherwise with the FBI, did you ever have tips from the tip line referred to you?

A I have.

Q And was it your obligation to investigate those tips?

A To some degree.

Q If they contained a threat of violence, would you be obligated to investigate them?

A To some degree, yes.

Q Okay.

We talked a little bit about threat tags.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I think you said -- well, what's your understanding of what a threat tag is?

A It's part of our mechanism for identifying particular types of incidents that are inside of the FBI's system.

Q And how -- are there many threat tags?

A I guess it would depend on your definition of "many."

Q Are there more than 10?

A Probably, but I don't know how many there are.

Q How many might you have used in your experience with FBI? And just a ballpark.

A I don't recall ever using one, actually.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And so, to the best of your knowledge, did the use of a threat tag ever drive any investigative techniques?

A Yes.

Q In what way?

A So, once you apply that threat tag, there's a number of -- well, not even just that. Once you get a tip or lead or whatever type of way it might come in, that almost immediately triggers investigative techniques.

Q So, if you -- let's go to the "SCOTUS" threat tag, for example.

A Uh-huh.

Q If somebody tagged something with a "SCOTUS" threat tag, that would lead the FBI to investigate in a different way than it would if it was just an ordinary case of violence?

A Not necessarily, I wouldn't say, but I suppose it could, depending on who initiated the threat tag and why, and who opens that initial information-based tip or whatever, and then, also, what work is done initially on that and then who it gets sent to. Like, in this case, it would be an agent most likely in the field. And that would depend on that agent's internal processes as well as policy as they understand it to drive, like, how that would go forward.

Q Okay.

On your discussion about pregnancy centers, you said that you had -- in your experience, you had some cases related to abortion-related violent extremism.

A Correct.

Q So you're familiar with the FACE Act?

A I am.

Q So can you tell us what your understanding is of the FACE Act?

A So I believe it was enacted in the '90s to protect abortion clinics as well as places of worship or other pregnancy-related centers that people may go for pregnancy-related counseling or treatment.

Q So your understanding is that it does also apply to pregnancy care centers?

A Correct.

Q Are you aware that in October of last year the Associate Attorney General of -- do you know who Associate Attorney General Vanita Gupta is?

A No.

Q So she is the third-ranking official at the Department of Justice.

A Okay.

Q Are you aware that in October of last year she spoke with representatives from the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and with representatives from pro-life pregnancy care centers to encourage them to come forward to report any FACE Act violations?

A I was not aware of that.

Q Okay.

Are you aware that at the end of January the FBI offered a $25,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of individuals who had vandalized pro-life pregnancy care centers?

A I am aware of that.

Q And are you aware that the FBI, at the end of January again, arrested two individuals in association with attacks on pregnancy care centers?

A I was not aware of that.

Q I wanted to turn back to the discussion about what has been referred to as, quote/unquote, "padding cases."

A Uh-huh.

Q Did you have any role in budgeting decisions?

A No.

Q Did you ever talk to anybody, superiors or others, about how resources were being allocated?

A I have.

Q What were the context of those conversations?

A So the FBI has this -- I don't know. It's like a -- I guess it's kind of how they designate some of the metrics for, like, the next fiscal year, is my understanding of it. It's called a FOSP. So it's a Field Office Strategic Plan, I think is what that stands for.

And then the FBI has another mechanism called the CSG, which is the Consolidated Strategies Guide.

So the FOSP -- the CSG is, like, FBI, like, high-level, these are our threats that we're going to work. And then the FOSP kind of runs congruent to the CSG.

And both the FOSP for your field office and the CSG, both get updated every year with the different types of threats that the FBI will work. And it goes through what the FBI calls, like, a banding process.

So -- are you guys aware of this? I'll skip if you are.

Q I'm aware. I think -- and we can actually -- my question is just, did you have discussions about the way resources were allocated in association with case numbers?

A With case numbers. I guess not. I don't know if I have specifically to that, but I've had discussions to hopefully further help myself understand how and why the FOSP and CSG function the way they do.

Q Who did you have those discussions with?

A I've had those with my previous boss, Sonia, as well as I discussed it with former SAC Langan at one point as well.

Q Okay.

You said that, particularly -- you said that there was encouragement to paper the cases, paper them every -- to keep them open every 90 days, and that this was particularly relevant in international terrorism cases. Do you recall saying that?

A I do.

Q Okay. You said that headquarters pushed people to keep cases open. Do you recall saying that?

A I do.

Q Who at headquarters pushed?

A So I don't know if I can provide you a specific name, but oftentimes -- and this wasn't even always the case with my personal investigations, but could be from other agents I've talked to or just general knowledge of the FBI.

But when you have a case open, it has to go through a certain closing process. And for domestic -- or, for all terrorism-related cases, you have to get headquarters to agree that the case could be closed.

So, when you want to close a case, it starts locally. You know, you compile all the things you've done in that case. And it's easy, like, if you make an arrest and it goes to trial and somebody gets convicted or whatever. Like, that's easy. Then, once evidence and trial and discovery and all that is done, like, then you close it.

But if it's one that just stays open perpetually, it is more difficult to close, because, based on my experience, it seems like the FBI wants to keep those cases open so they can say, look, we are working this matter or that matter to this degree.

And I just don't think that's always the case, because, in my experience again, a lot of those cases, there's very little being done. The case agents are like, "I don't have anything left to do on this case, but I can't close it because headquarters won't let me close it," or "the boss won't let me close it."

Q So it's communicated to you directly from headquarters that the case can't be closed?

A Sometimes, yes.

Q And how is that communicated?

A Either email, phone call. We have Skype messages.

Q So you would get an email, potentially, from headquarters in Washington, D.C., saying, this case needs to stay open?

A You could. Or more like, hey, did you try this method, or that? So --

Q Okay.

A -- I mean, there's a whole range of --

Q Okay. So it could also be suggesting, like, other investigative techniques or something like that?

A Could be. Yep. Yep.

Q Okay.

I want to get to your discussion about the January 6th anonymous tip that you felt you couldn't corroborate.

A Uh-huh.

Q The Washington Field Office agent that communicated with you, was she at your level? Was she a higher level than you?

A She was a special agent just like me.

Q Just like you. Okay. And she encouraged you to take action in this case, and you declined to do so. Is that right?

A I don't think that's accurate.

Q Okay. Could you explain?

A So the initial tip I received from her I did investigate and did due diligence.

Q Right.

A And then the second tip, where then she's asking me to get legal process, when there wasn't a rational link between what she wanted me to get the legal process for from the one tip and associating it with the previous tip she had sent me the day or maybe 2 days prior.

Q Okay. And so you declined, you didn't seek legal process, right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Were there any punitive actions against you for declining to take that step?

A No, but I think that's only because I think I was very meticulous in how I wrote it up, and after my boss read it, he was like, "Huh."

Q Okay. So, at the end of the day, you exercised your judgment, and you weren't -- there were no consequences for that.

A As far as I know.

Q Okay.

I want to get to the media disclosure piece again. And I feel like, I know we've talked about this a lot, but I just want to make sure I have it exactly right.

The suspension notice that you received, it said that you had made unauthorized media disclosures. Is that right?

A To that effect, yes.

Q Okay. And your testimony is that you never spoke to the media at all?

A I did not provide them any type of unprotected disclosure.

Q Okay. But you did speak to the media?

A Not prior to being suspended, no.

Q Okay. So your testimony is that you never spoke to the media, that it was entirely false, what was in the suspension notice that you were handed?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

There was a discussion about -- I think Mr. Gaetz was asking you, you know, who was at fault for -- who was the cause of the retaliation action against you, and you said that you believe it was Sean, your supervisor.

And I'm sorry, what was Sean's last name?

A Fitzgerald.

Q But you also said that you believe there's retaliation from the top down by the FBI.

Have you ever met FBI Director Wray?

A I have.

Q When did you meet FBI Director Wray?

A I don't remember exactly. Last -- sometime last spring.

Q Before your suspension notice.

A Correct.

Q Did you ever make any of the whistleblower allegations that you brought to Congress to -- did you ever raise those with Director Wray?

A No.

Q Have you ever met Assistant Director Moore?

A No.

Q Did you ever raise those disclosures with Assistant Director Moore?

A No.

Q Did you ever raise them with anybody in headquarters in D.C.?

A No.

Q Okay.

And then getting back to the claim itself, your belief, as you stated it here, is that you were retaliated against for making a whistleblower claim, effectively protected disclosures to Congress. Is that right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. But you're being -- and you've said that those -- the whistleblower claim contained various allegations of wrongdoing, right?

A Not various. Just the one.

Q One allegation of wrongdoing.

A Yeah.

Q Okay. So all the conversations you had with Ranking Member Jordan -- or, sorry, with Chairman Jordan --

A Oh, I may not have -- can you repeat your question?

Q Sorry. So, backing up, your belief is that you're being retaliated against for making a whistleblower claim to Congress. Is that a fair --

A Yes, that's fair.

Q Okay. And you've said that the whistleblower claim you made to Congress, to Chairman Jordan's staff and to Representative Estes's staff, contained allegations of misconduct, of wrongdoing?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And multiple allegations, you said?

A Correct.

Q Okay. But you're being advised by counsel now not to tell us what the actual allegations were?

Mr. Binnall. Under the statute, that's right. That is confidential by the statute.

And so my advice to him is to not disclose exactly what was disclosed.

[redacted] Okay. And which statute are you referring to?

Mr. Binnall. Oh, I'm sure I can -- I can get you a -- I don't know a citation off the top of my head, but I'm sure I can get that to you.

[redacted] Okay. And is it -- can you tell me the act? What was, like, the --

Mr. Binnall. I'm sure I could get you that information.

[redacted] Okay. I think that'd be helpful for us to have. Have you shared that with the chairman's office?

Mr. Binnall. No. An exact statute number? Not that I'm aware of, but --

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Binnall. Yeah.

[redacted] I just want to make sure, because you're saying that it's protected, and so I just want to make sure that we have the --

Mr. Binnall. Yeah.

[redacted] Do you think it's not protected?

[redacted] I'm sorry?

[redacted] Do you think it's not protected?

[redacted] I'm actually asking the questions, [redacted]

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] So I think I'm just trying to get clarity on what the claims are being made right now.

BY [redacted]

Q So you're being advised by counsel not to tell us what the complaint was about. So our position is that you say that you've made a complaint but we're not able to get any information about what that complaint is about. Is that fair?

A For today it is, yes.

Q Okay.

One last question, and then I'll turn it over to my co-counsel here.

We went through earlier how you were able to come out here, that you paid for your ticket out of your own pocket.

How are you -- are you paying your attorney?

A I have a nonprofit that's paying for my legal fees.

Q Okay. What nonprofit is that?

A It's called Fight With Kash.

Q Okay. How did you find out about them?

A Another whistleblower.

Q Okay. Who owns Fight for Kash, or who runs Fight for Kash, if you know?

A I guess I don't know if it's ran by a board or an owner or --

Q Do you know what other -- what other type of claims, or what other type of -- what other type of individuals they might be providing resources to?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

Okay. I'll turn it over.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Hi, Mr. O'Boyle.

I know we've talked a lot about your security clearance. And so are you aware that Title 32, Part 147 of the Code of Federal Regulations establishes adjudicative guidelines for determining eligibility for access to a security clearance?

A I wouldn't say that I'd be able to, like, cite that --

Q Okay.

A -- off the top of my head, but that probably is included, like, in my suspension paperwork and whatnot.

Q Okay. I'll just go through each of the guidelines, and you can just say, yes or no, whether or not you're familiar with it.

A Okay.

Q So allegiance to the United States?

A Yes.

Q Foreign influence?

A Yes.

Q Foreign preference?

A Yes.

Q Sexual behavior?

A Yes.

Q Personal conduct?

A Yes.

Q Financial considerations?

A Yes.

Q Alcohol consumption?

A Yes.

Q Drug involvement?

A Yes.

Q Emotional, mental, and personality disorders?

A Yes.

Q Criminal conduct?

A Yes.

Q Security violations?

A Yes.

Q Outside activities?

A Yes.

Q Misuse of information technology systems?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall if any of these categories that I just listed were cited in the letter that you received regarding your suspension?

A I don't recall. I want to say that that media one, that they claimed that they had some type of internal reference to, but I would have to look at all that paperwork.

Q Okay.

So I know you've mentioned several times how you really loved being an FBI agent and it was something that you were very proud of.

So I'm going to show you an exhibit which is a tweet from December 19, 2022, and I will enter it into the record as exhibit 7.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so this is a tweet, again, which you liked. And it's a post by @catturd2.

And this individual writes, "The FBI interfered in the 2016 election. The FBI interfered in Trump's entire Presidency. The FBI interfered in the 2020 election. The FBI interfered in the 2022 election. Where TF is the GOP?"

First, do you understand what "TF" is?

A I do.

Q Can you just state it so we have it for the record?

A It means "the" and then the F word.

Q Thank you.

Do you agree that the FBI interfered in the 2016 election?

A You know, like I said before, when you bring up tweets that I've liked, me liking a tweet is First Amendment-protected activity. It doesn't necessarily endorse the tweet. But the things that are listed here, I think it's good for people to question and ask and wonder about some of the things the FBI has done.

Q Okay. So the reason why you liked the tweet is because you think it's good for people to ask these questions of the FBI?

A I do. In a free and open society, it is good.

Q Okay. So what about Trump's entire Presidency? Do you think the FBI interfered with that?

A Are you familiar with the FBI's Operation Crossfire Hurricane?

Q Mr. O'Boyle, I'm asking the questions today, so I'm just going to ask that you answer them.

So, again, what about Trump's entire Presidency? Do you believe that the FBI interfered in Trump's entire Presidency?

A So I think it's clear that, throughout Trump's Presidency, Operation Crossfire Hurricane, which the FBI was conducting, did interfere with his Presidency. And it has now been proven, even to the point where the FBI has instilled additional training trying to rectify the problems that were caused by the FBI during that Presidency and that investigation. So that's what I'm referring to.

Q And can you just clarify briefly what Operation Crossfire Hurricane is?

A It was an investigation into President Trump and his campaign and alleged foreign interference.

Q Okay.

What about the 2020 election? Did the FBI interfere in the 2020 election?

A So, again, this is my personal opinion, not anything to do with my previous work. But, yeah, I think they did. I think it's clear, with the Hunter Biden laptop interference that the Twitter Files have now brought to the fore, that the FBI did interfere as well in 2020.

Q Okay.

And this tweet also mentions the 2022 election. Do you think that the FBI interfered in the 2022 election?

A So, again, like I said, when I like a tweet, it's not indicative of every part of that tweet. So I'm not aware of any FBI entanglements with the 2022 election.

Q Do you know what it means when this individual says "Where TF is the GOP?"

A Yes.

Q Can you elaborate?

A It means, where the F word is the Grand Old Party?

Q So "GOP," from your interpretation, is the Grand Old Party?

A Correct.

Q What is the Grand Old Party?

A That's the Republican Party.

Q Okay. So what's your understanding of "Where TF is the GOP"?

Mr. Binnall. You can answer to the extent that you have personal knowledge.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't have personal knowledge of what the original tweeter means.

BY [redacted]

Q I'm just asking for your understanding when you read it.

Mr. Binnall. Same instruction.

Mr. O'Boyle. My understanding is that they're asking where the Republican Party is.

[redacted] Meaning that the Republican Party should be investigating the allegations above? Is that fair?

Mr. O'Boyle. You would have to ask Catturd.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q I'm showing you what is going to be marked as exhibit 7. And this is a tweet, again, you liked on December 19, 2022. And it is a post by @OfficeofMike --

[redacted] I think we're on 8.

The Reporter. It's 8.

[redacted] Oh, excuse me.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this reads, "The FBI is a bigger threat to our democracy than Russia ever was. Let that sink in."

Do you believe that the FBI is a threat to our democracy?

A I think, based on my personal experiences and what has happened to me, that it's reasonable for someone to make that allegation.

Q Do you believe the FBI is a bigger threat to our democracy than Russia?

A No, I wouldn't say that.

Q Why did you like this tweet?

A Like I've said before, I think it's good for people to be raising these points and asking these questions, especially as a whistleblower who's been retaliated against by the FBI. It seems very KGB-esque for them to be retaliating against me like they have.

Q So I'm going to show you another tweet. This is from December 22, 2022. And it will be marked as exhibit No. 9, I believe.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this is a tweet by @TaraBull808.

And this individual writes, "I might get banned for this, but it's time to dismantle the FBI."

Do you believe that the FBI needs to be dismantled?

A No. I do believe they need massive reform.

Q Why did you like this tweet?

A Again, when I like a tweet, it's not indicative of every aspect of that person's tweet. So, for someone like this tweeter to raise that point in a free and open society, using their First Amendment-protected activity, I think that's good for them to do, and I like when people utilize their First Amendment rights.

Q Okay. I'm going to turn to a different subject area, and this will go over -- it'll be concerning COVID.

And so I'm going to talk about another set of tweets. This one is from January 14, 2023. Alex Berenson tweeted, "I will try not to use the term pureblood anymore. It was necessary when unvaccinated people had to stand together against overwhelming pressure (I can't believe that actually happened, but it did). But no one is bragging about being jabbed anymore. We won. Let's be grateful."

In response, you tweeted on January 15, 2023, "I'm still using it. It's true. You should never stop speaking the truth. There are still plenty of bragging about being jabbed and still think we are killing people by not."

Can you tell me what "pureblood" means?

Mr. Binnall. And I'm just going to point out that it's not word for word, the tweet that was given.

But to the extent you understand, you can answer.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Mr. O'Boyle, can you please read this tweet?

A Mine or Alex?

Q Both of them, please.

A Okay.

"I will try not to use the term pureblood anymore. It was necessary when unvaccinated people had to stand together against overwhelming pressure (I can't believe that actually happened, but it did) but no one is bragging about being jabbed anymore. We won. Let's be graceful."

And then I respond, "I am still using it. It's true. We should never stop speaking the truth. There are still plenty bragging about being jabbed and still think we are killing people by not. Also this."

Q What does the term "pureblood" mean to you?

A So, in meme culture of the internet, some people will use the word "pureblood" as indicative of them not getting that COVID vaccine.

Q And what do you mean when you said "we should never stop speaking the truth"?

A I think stands for itself. We should all speak the truth.

Q And that truth being pureblood, having not had the vaccine?

A You know, another thing about the internet is, it doesn't always encapsulate a full meaning. But I'm unvaccinated, and there was a tremendous pressure on me, as an FBI employee, to get vaccinated.

And I don't find this coincidental, but every other suspended whistleblower that I know was also unvaccinated. So, in law enforcement, we would call that a pattern, not a coincidence.

Q And so, the last sentence, "There are still plenty of bragging about being jabbed and still think we are killing people by not," can you tell me what you meant by this?

A Yeah. There are people on Twitter and elsewhere who are vaccinated and they brag about it and still think that people who aren't vaccinated are killing people who are.

BY [redacted]

Q Could we take a step back? Just one question.

A Sure.

Q You said that there was tremendous pressure on you to get vaccinated. Can you explain what you meant by that?

A Some of that is part of my protected disclosures, so I don't know how much I can really get into on that.

Q Okay.

You said that you and other -- you've noticed a pattern, that others who have been suspended were also unvaccinated. How do you know that? Have you had conversations with them about it?

A Sometimes, yes.

Q Are those other individuals in the group that we were talking about earlier The Suspendables group?

A Some of them, yes.

Q Okay. And --

A There are others.

Q -- others, as well, outside of that group?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q At the time you were employed at the FBI, was there a mandatory policy to get vaccinated?

A There was.

Q And you mentioned that you were not -- you are not vaccinated?

A Correct.

Q So you chose to violate that policy?

A That's not correct.

Q Okay. Can you explain to me, if there is a policy and there's a mandatory obligation to do something and you decided not to do that, how that's not violating that policy?

A So the policy was only enacted because of the President's executive order in September of 2021. And then there was various processes you could try to go through to not abide by that mandate, which many in the FBI, including myself, believe were unconstitutional.

And then there was a lawsuit which, as part of that lawsuit, there was an injunction against the executive branch for that executive order. So, once that injunction happened, the FBI's policy was halted.

Q Okay. When did the injunction happen, if you remember?

A I think it was January of 2022? I think.

Q Okay.

Okay. So, on January 9, 2023, in replying to a tweet asking why Democrats voted against vaccinations for people crossing the border, you wrote, "They can't have their new voters dying suddenly."

And this will be marked as exhibit No. 11.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q What did you mean when you said that Democrats can't have their new voters dying suddenly?

A So, to me, that's just an off-color joke about illegal immigrants voting in our elections, combined with the phenomena that we've seen of people dying suddenly.

Q So you believe that the COVID vaccine kills people?

A I believe that it may play a role in some of the sudden deaths we've been seeing.

Q Do you think illegal voters frequently vote in elections?

A No.

Q So I want to show you another tweet, and this was one that you wrote a reply to. And so you're replying to a tweet, which will be marked as exhibit No. 12.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And then you can just read it when you have it in front of you.

We'll enter this into the record.

You can read it out loud, please.

A Okay.

"Would the U.S. military forces follow an order to attack American civilians?" And then there's a poll.

And then I said, "99% follow an order to harm themselves with mRNA injections. It's a lot easier to follow orders to harm others. Reserve Police Battalion 101 comes to mind."

Q Thank you. So there was a poll. What did the poll say?

A "Would the U.S. military forces follow an order to attack American civilians?"

Q And then what are the percentages down there below?

A Yes, 48.3 percent, and hell no, 51.7 percent.

Q So what did you mean by "99 percent followed an order to harm themselves with mRNA injections"?

A I believe that the vaccines, the mRNA ones, can potentially be harmful, and there's a lot of that starting to come out now, and that the military had the most severe mandates to take those.

Q What did you mean when you said "it's a lot easier to follow orders to harm others"?

A I think there's a multitude of historical examples that has demonstrated that. I mention one there, Reserve Police Battalion 101. So that's all I meant by that.

Q Can you explain the Reserve Police Battalion 101 very briefly, if you can?

A Sure. So my understanding of that is, the Reserve Police Battalion 101 was a reserve police force in Poland during World War II, and they were initially comprised of just normal people -- butchers and carpenters and different other type of people who had normal jobs or other positions. And then, by the end of the war, they were slaughtering -- they were basically engaging in genocide like the rest of the Nazi regime.

Q So why did the Reserve Battalion 101 come to mind when you were asked about U.S. military forces?

A So I think with this tweet I was just trying to raise a broader scope of the discussion. Like, where is the line? When your commander tells you you have to get an injection even if you don't want to, to some people that's not a difficult line to cross. But it seems, with history as our example, that that line just continues to get moved, and eventually you cross a line like the Reserve Police Battalion 101 did, and you don't even know how you got there.

Q So I want to show you another tweet. This is from January 21, 2023. And this will be marked as exhibit No. 13.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And when you have it in front of you, can you please read it for us out loud?

A "This stuff is scaring the shit out of me. I got vaxxed, two shots, Moderna, because I have asthma. It freaks me out seeing this. I have two young sons who I coach in sports. I want to be around for them. And my wife was hesitant, very hesitant. Damn it."

And then I reply, "I'm glad to see people are waking up to the propaganda we've been fed, not just COVID/vax either but all sorts of topics and for decades. Prayers for you, your family, and all other vaxxed who are realizing what is happening and for more to see the light."

Q Thank you.

So what did you mean when you wrote "I'm glad to see people are waking up to the propaganda we've been fed, not just COVID/vax either but all sorts of topics"?

A Well, I talked about the Twitter Files a little bit, so that's another one that comes to mind. And, I mean, I'd have to spend some time thinking for others.

[redacted] Can we go off the record a second?

Mr. Binnall. Yeah.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Okay. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Have you ever faced any disciplinary actions when you were at the FBI?

A The only time I was disciplined was regarding -- so alongside the -- well, actually, this is a protected disclosure I made too. I'll --

Mr. Binnall. Yeah. So you can answer if you were disciplined, but do not get into the substance of any protected disclosures or any ongoing substance of any investigations.

Mr. O'Boyle. All right.

So I was -- I had made a -- this is one of the disclosures I made to my chain of command, that not only was the vaccine mandate reasonably a violation of law, rule, or policy, the FBI then enacted a mandatory testing for only unvaccinated people.

So I had COVID. I recovered. And, at that time, the FDA's rules were that if you had COVID and recovered, you didn't have to test for 90 days. So I stopped taking the tests.

And then eventually somebody found out about it. And my boss, Sean, and his boss, ASAC Berkebile, tried to get me to just take a test. They're like, "Hey, you've taken the test before. Why are you suddenly stopping?"

And I brought up the FDA's guidelines, which is what the FBI was supposed to be going off of, as well as other guidelines. And I said, they're not following the guidelines they're supposed to be following. I think this is another example of a violation of law, rule, or policy.

And they said, "Well, why don't you think about it over the weekend?" and then, you know, "We'll be in touch." And I said, okay. And then they called me over the weekend, and I told them I wasn't going to change my position.

And so, then, the following workday, they told me not to come in, and my boss came to my house and gave me an AWOL paperwork. And so I was placed onto absent without leave, which at the time was a violation of the Safer Federal Workforce Task Force guidelines, which the FBI was supposed to be following, which said that if the person had an outstanding religious exemption, which I did -- I had applied for one of those -- that they were supposed to be placed on administrative leave. But the FBI broke that rule and placed me and others into AWOL status instead.

So I told my boss, okay, "Now that you placed me on AWOL, I'll take a test," and I went back to testing. And then I think I tested one or two more times, and then shortly thereafter the testing stopped.

[2:44 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q When you said you applied for a religious exemption -- so you did not have a religious exemption. It was something that you applied for and it was denied. Is that correct?

A It was not denied.

Q Okay.

A I don't know the status of it.

Q Okay.

A I never -- after the injunction, they claimed that they stopped processing them. So I never heard back about that.

Q Okay. So could it still be pending or --

A I have no idea.

Q Okay.

So, Mr. O'Boyle, how did you prepare for this interview today?

Mr. Binnall. You can answer the question, but do not go into any communications that you had with your counsel.

Mr. O'Boyle. With my counsel. That's all.

[redacted] Okay. So your counsel is the only person that you talked to with respect to preparing for this interview?

Mr. O'Boyle. As far as preparation, yeah.

[redacted] Okay. Anything outside of preparation?

Mr. Binnall. Anything else? Can you ask a more specific question?

[redacted] Was there anything -- was there any other topic that you spoke with regarding this interview that did not involve the preparation process with anyone else?

Mr. O'Boyle. That did not involve --

Mr. Binnall. To the extent that you understand the question, you can answer it.

Mr. O'Boyle. I don't know if I understand what you're asking.

[redacted] Did you speak with anyone else, outside of your attorney, about this interview?

Mr. Binnall. Or your wife, or anybody else you had a privileged relationship with?

Mr. O'Boyle. I mean, people knew I was coming here, but --

BY [redacted]

Q Did you speak with Steven Friend?

A I don't know that I spoke to him directly about the interview.

Q Did you speak with George Hill?

A No.

Q So you do know who Steven Friend is, correct?

A I do.

Q How do you guys know each other?

A Because we're both suspended FBI whistleblowers.

Q Did you guys work together at the FBI?

A No.

Q Have you discussed your allegations regarding the FBI with him?

A To some degree.

Q What have you told him?

A I don't know everything I've told him. I mean, we've talked about our situations a little bit.

BY [redacted]

Q Has he spoken with you about his allegations?

A To some degree.

Q And what has he told you?

A I mean, essentially the stuff that he says publicly.

Q Have you spoken with Kyle Seraphin --

A I have.

Q -- about your allegations?

A About, like, my protected disclosures?

Q Uh-huh.

A To some degree.

Q Okay. Has Kyle Seraphin spoken with you about his allegations?

A To some degree.

Q Okay. Who else -- have you spoken with any other suspended FBI employees about your allegations?

A Any other suspended FBI employees?

I'm not sure.

Q Okay. Did you speak with either Kyle Seraphin or Steven Friend -- well, sorry, you already -- did you speak with Kyle Seraphin about your preparations for today's interview?

A No.

Q Did you speak with Steven Friend about your preparation for today's interview?

A No.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you tell us what documents pertaining to this matter you reviewed in preparation for this interview? You don't have to tell me what was in the documents, just --

A I've looked at some of the stuff I've sent to Congress.

Q And by "to Congress," you mean Congressman Jordan's office?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And Congressman Estes' office?

A Maybe some of them. I don't know for sure.

What else?

Q Do you have anything to add?

A I don't think so. I'd have to go back and look.

Q Okay.

I want to get back to the discussion -- and, I'm sorry, we keep going back to this -- the discussion about the nonprofit that's paying for your legal defense.

A Uh-huh.

Q You said it was Fight With Kash. Is that right?

A Correct.

Q How do you spell Kash?

A K-a-s-h.

Q And do you know who -- who is Kash?

A Kash Patel.

Q Okay. Do you know Kash Patel?

A I've spoken with him once or twice.

Q And what has the content of your conversations with the Kash Patel been?

A He asked me how he could help. So I told him a little bit of my situation. And he said that he thinks he could get the nonprofit to help.

Q When did you speak with Mr. Patel?

A I think in November. Maybe December.

Q Okay. How did you learn about Kash Patel? Or, I'm sorry, did you reach out to him, or did he reach out to you?

A I don't recall. I think another whistleblower told me he was expecting my call or that -- I don't recall exactly if I was given his number or if he was given mine.

Q Okay. And you said you may have learned about him from another whistleblower?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And you told him -- and so in November you spoke with him and you told him about your allegations?

A Yeah. I'm not sure exactly when. Late November, sometime in December. Somewhere in there.

Q And you said that he said he thought he could help.

A Correct.

Q What did you understand that to mean?

Mr. Binnall. Again, don't guess at what anybody else meant, but to the extent you have any personal knowledge, you can answer.

Mr. O'Boyle. My understanding was that his nonprofit would try to help me.

BY [redacted]

Q Help you in what way?

A With legal counsel. And his nonprofit sent me and my family some money from the nonprofit. So in those ways.

Q Did his nonprofit or did Kash Patel himself refer you to your legal counsel?

A They did help with that, yeah.

Q Okay. So they identified him, or they paid for him, or in what way did they help?

Mr. Binnall. You can answer to the extent you know.

Mr. O'Boyle. Yeah. Kash said that he thinks he could help me with the legal stuff because I had a previous lawyer who was not --

Mr. Binnall. Don't give any details about current or previous.

Mr. O'Boyle. So, yeah, my understanding was that they could help me find --

BY [redacted]

Q So Mr. Patel identified your attorney for you.

A He helped me find one, yeah.

Q Okay.

And are you -- who -- to your understanding, who is Kash Patel?

A My understanding is that he is a former DOD official who now runs that nonprofit.

Q Are you aware that he's a former Trump administration appointee?

A I am aware of that.

Q And are you aware that he's a former Capitol Hill staffer?

A I don't know if I was aware of that.

Q Are you aware that -- are you familiar with WinRed?

A I don't know if I am.

Q WinRed is the Republican National Committee. It's one of their fundraising platforms?

A Okay.

Q Are you aware that they've been raising money for Kash Patel?

A I was not aware of that.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Patel wrote a book called "The Plot Against the King"?

A I think I was aware of that.

Q Do you know what that book is about?

A I can't say I know entirely.

Q Okay. "The Plot Against the King" has been described as "Hillary's horrible plot against former President Trump."

Are you familiar with the QAnon conspiracy theory?

A To some degree.

Q What is your understanding of it?

A I don't know that I have a great understanding of it, but to the best of my knowledge it's a -- it's people, I guess, I would probably describe them as, like, internet trolls who are on various message boards, like 4Chan maybe, and I think that's where it started.

And they've -- they've come up with an elaborate -- I don't even know how to describe it -- an elaborate idea that some person named -- I think some person named Q is going to come and, like, save them all. I don't know. I don't know entirely.

Q Do you have a personal opinion of QAnon?

A I guess my personal opinion would be I don't really understand entirely what they're into, but it seems a little -- a little far out there.

Q Are you aware that Kash Patel has been linked to the QAnon conspiracy theory?

A I was not aware of that.

Q Okay.

Have you spoken with anyone else at the --

A Can I be linked to the QAnon conspiracy theory now because I'm talking about it?

Q I'm just asking questions to figure out what the extent of your knowledge is.

Have you spoken with anyone else at the Fight With Kash organization?

A I don't believe so.

Q Okay. And just to make sure I'm entirely clear on this, you spoke -- you said you spoke with Mr. Patel maybe once or twice?

A Correct.

Q Have you emailed with him?

A I don't believe I have.

Q Have you sent text messages?

A A messaging platform, yeah.

Q And have those been about your case?

A No, just like, how are you doing? Or, not -- I wouldn't say about my case, no.

Q Have you had any other communications with him through any other devices or any other sources?

A No.

Q Okay. I think we are just about out of time.

[redacted] Can we go off the record?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. The time is 2:59 p.m.

Mr. O'Boyle, I wanted to go back to our conversation regarding domestic violent extremism and our conversation about the DT agent.

There was one time where you had one case, and then you had to open four other cases on individuals related to just that one case. And you said that you had referred to a policy.

Do you remember what the title of that policy was?

Mr. O'Boyle. I think it's the Domestic Terrorism -- oh, what's it called? I think it's just the Domestic Terrorism Operations Guide. But I can't say for certain if I remember that that's exactly right. But it's -- yeah, Domestic Terrorism -- it might be -- it's either Domestic Terrorism Operations Guide or Domestic Terrorism Policy Guide, I think. I think it's one of those.

[redacted] Was that specific to your field office, or was that an enterprise-wide policy?

Mr. O'Boyle. It's FBI-wide for all DT program.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I'm going to mark exhibit No. 14 here. Bear with me a moment. This is the letter that Mr. Jordan sent to Director Wray on September 19th, 2022, regarding the WFO's handling of January 6th cases. I'll give you time to review.

[redacted] I'm sorry. What number?

[redacted] 14.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you ready?

A Okay.

Q And I know we briefly spoke about your interactions with the WFO regarding a January 6th case that you were handling. And so I am going to read you a portion of this letter, and I just kind of want to compare and contrast.

A Okay.

Q This is on page 1.

"New whistleblower disclosures indicate that the WFO's handling of DVE investigations relating to January 6 'diverge[s]' from established practice in a way that overstates the national DVE threat.

"One whistleblower has described how cases are ordinarily characterized and labeled by the originating field office, with leads 'cut' to other field offices for specific assistance in that geographic location.

"The whistleblower alleged, quote, 'The FBI has not followed regular procedure,' end quote, with respect to January 6th cases, which should all be officially led by the WFO and characterized as WFO cases, explaining, quote, 'Instead, task force members in Washington, D.C., identified 'potential subjects' and possible locations where these individuals reside. The task force disseminates information packets with instructions to open full investigations to [local] Field Offices around the country. As such, if a subject lives in Dallas, the Dallas Field Office is expected to open the case,' end quote.

"Although the local field offices, therefore, appear to be running the cases on paper, the WFO is directing the field office special agents to just, quote, 'open the case,' end quote, in their geographic area, and the WFO is performing and approving, quote, 'all of the investigative work and paperwork for the casefile,'" end quote.

Mr. O'Boyle, does that kind of jibe with what you experienced, or is there a difference?

A That does sound mostly accurate, I guess, to the last part, where it says all of the investigative work and paperwork for the case file or that WFO is performing and approving all of the -- actually, that is accurate. So, yeah, that's accurate.

With the case once you got -- if you got cut a lead and then decided there does need to be a full investigation here, and you opened it at the local level, it still was associated with the WFO main file.

And then everything was funneling back to WFO. And that was not even just the FBI, but in the limited experience I had in Wichita with it, it was also coordinated with the AUSA's office in Wichita, who was coordinating everything with AUSAs here.

So that does -- that is accurate based on my experience.

Q And is this how cases are normally handled?

A No. I've never seen that before.

Q Why do you think the FBI is handling the cases in this manner given your experience?

A I think it goes back to making that threat appear larger than it actually is, and then WFO kind of being the -- kind of being at the head of everything to try to ensure, as best they can, how the direction of a particular case will go.

Q And so if the main event occurred in Washington, D.C., and then now there's cases opening across the country, would it then look like there are domestic terrorism cases popping up across the country if this is how the FBI is handling?

A Yes, that is how it would look. I don't know if they make a map to that effect that shows. But there are -- you can pull -- or not -- not just anybody, but program managers or higher level FBI officials can pull however many cases of any type are in the specific field office. So you would be able to see that list.

[O'Boyle Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I want to enter one more exhibit. This will be exhibit No. 15. This is a September 14th, 2022, letter that Mr. Jordan sent to Director Wray.

A All right. I'm ready.

Q Are you familiar with investigating domestic violent extremism cases and militia violent extremism cases?

A I am.

Q And you had experience in that working in the Wichita office? Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q I'm going to read the second paragraph on page 1 of the letter.

"On August 2, 2022, a media organization obtained a copy, which new whistleblower disclosures have authenticated, of the FBI's 'Domestic Terrorism Symbols Guide' on 'Militia Violent Extremists.' The FBI's document included symbols like '2A' and states that 'MVEs justify their existence with the Second Amendment, due to the mention of a 'well-regulated Militia,' as well as the right to bear arms.

"The document also includes 'commonly referenced historical imagery or quotes,' like the 'Betsy Ross Flag' and the 'Gadsden Flag,' as symbols of so-called terrorists.

"Additionally, the FBI document includes a section labeled 'symbols of militia networks some MVEs may identify with," and describes one group, called American Contingency, as '[m]ainstream media, nationwide, mostly online activity, low history of violence.'"

Have you ever seen the symbols guide that this document refers to?

A I have.

Q And what was your reaction when you saw the symbols guide?

A I think initially it was shock and disbelief that the FBI would categorize such symbols of America in the way it did, and then to go further and label a business like that as -- what does it say? -- "mostly online activity, low history of violence."

I mean, it's appalling, appalling stuff.

Q And are you aware that the FBI then investigated the founder of American Contingency, Mr. Glover?

A I am.

Q I am going to read to you a paragraph on page 2 of the letter.

"The FBI's recent characterization of American Contingency as a DVE organization is striking in light of new whistleblower disclosures that show that the FBI had concluded as recently as 2020 that the group was not a threat.

"According to whistleblower information, in July 2022, an FBI employee in northern Virginia flagged American Contingency as a 'domestic terrorist group' because Glover 'appears to be rallying individuals to 'take action' and 'speaks about his distaste for how the government is handling the current situations in the U.S. and encourages people to 'join' his cause.'

"Notes made in the FBI's e-Guardian incident reporting system, reflected below, show how the FBI rifled through Glover's life -- obtaining his military records, his veteran's disability rating, and even his monthly disability benefit -- before concluding that American Contingency, quote, 'desires to assist Americans in preparing themselves for catastrophic events and not to overthrow the United States Government. A background investigation and review of Glover's social media failed to support the allegation that Glover is a threat to the United States or its citizens,'" end quote.

What is your reaction to this?

A Especially as a veteran, it's frightening that the most powerful law enforcement agency in the country, if not the world, is investigating other veterans like this.

My understanding of Mr. Glover is that he's gone on to start multiple companies, and he served in the special operations community for many years. And then to have this type of allegation lodged against him, and then the FBI to gather a ton of background information like that, it's -- I don't know.

To me, it's scary. And it's, you know, I know people would say, well, who cares if they gather information? It's just, you know, par for the course when we open an investigation.

This is an example of an investigation that should have never been opened. And now the FBI has those records of his, and they're holding them in their system forever. They will be there forever, unless somehow someone orders the FBI to purge them.

And so now the FBI has his disability rating and all sorts of other things that they really shouldn't have had in the first place.

And this is, again, to me, another example of how the FBI has been weaponized.

Thankfully, in this incident where Glover was investigated, that the agent determined that there was no actual threat there. But then for the other FBI employee to make that allegation in the first place based off of some, you know, very loose information, it's like, what is going on in the FBI?

I mean, it just strikes me as out of bounds for any law enforcement agency to be doing. And then to be doing it to veterans like this and then saying his company has a low history of violence.

Well, what does that mean? I mean, as far as I know, that company has no history of violence. But that doesn't sound as good as low history. So that's how the FBI labels it.

Q Do you think it chills First Amendment activity when Americans know that the FBI could come knock on their door for exercising their First Amendment right?

A Absolutely.

Q Changing subjects.

Are you aware of allegations that the FBI is using security clearance revocations as a tool to purge conservatives from its ranks?

A I am.

Q Do you believe that's occurring?

A I do.

Q Do you believe that the FBI has become political?

A I do.

Q Do you think the extent of the politicization at the FBI is a problem that festers within its hierarchy, or is it nationwide, enterprise-wide?

A I think it's encompassed in the hierarchy and then it trickles down throughout the rest of the Bureau. And those who are especially geared towards promoting will adhere themselves to whatever they need to promote.

I think most people out in the field try to avoid that politicization of the agency, which is good. But it's gotten to a point, it seems to me, that it's like a cancerous point where the FBI has let itself become enveloped in this politicization and weaponization that I don't know how to even begin to fix it.

[redacted] Any questions, [redacted]?

We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 3:23. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Sir, we just talked a little bit about American Contingency in the exhibit marked as No. 15. It's the September 14th letter.

Did you ever investigate American Contingency yourself?

A No.

Q Did you have anything to do with any of the FBI's investigation into it?

A No.

Q Do you know which office investigates American Contingency?

A I think there were multiple that had it associated.

Q Do you know any of them? Did you know any of them?

A Not off the top of my head.

Q Okay. So you made some comments about your opinions on what's in this letter here. But it sounded like you may have learned about it prior to reading this? Is that fair to say?

A I think that's fair, yeah.

Q And can you describe when did you learn about American Contingency?

A So I don't know how much I knew about American Contingency, per se, but I was aware of Mike Glover.

Q Okay. How were you aware of Mike Glover?

A He's a rather prominent figure in, like, the veteran community.

Q Okay. So do you know him personally?

A No.

Q So you had just maybe read about him in media?

A I read about him, YouTube, podcasts. That kind of thing.

Q Okay. Did you know anything about the investigation or what has been described as an investigation into him prior to having this letter put in front of you today?

A I did.

Q And what did you know?

A Pretty much mostly what's in here.

Q And that -- how did you learn that information?

Mr. Binnall. Prior to our previous instructions, you can answer to the extent it's appropriate.

Mr. O'Boyle. This is one of the protected disclosures that I made.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And it involves Mr. Glover?

A Uh-huh.

Q But you personally never -- did not -- were not personally involved in any matters involving Mr. Glover in your capacity as an FBI employee?

A Right. I never investigated him.

Q Okay. And what about American Contingency?

A Correct. No.

Q Okay. So you don't have firsthand knowledge of anything that the FBI may have -- may or may not have done?

Mr. Binnall. You can answer to the extent that it doesn't violate my previous instructions.

Mr. O'Boyle. I mean, I guess, in accordance with my work and my protected disclosure, I had some knowledge of what the FBI had done.

Mr. Binnall. And don't go any further than that.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. But you were not assigned to the case?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And it was not handled out of the Wichita Field Office?

A Correct.

Q All right. I think that's all the questions we have for you. Thank you.

Mr. Binnall. And just real quick on the record.

Mr. O'Boyle does view this as a very important issue, which is why he's here today. He has limited who he has made protected disclosures to, especially to Chairman Jordan, because he does think this is important.

However, he's been limited as to who else he can talk to about this matter on advice of counsel, simply because there's an ongoing employment action regarding [inaudible] at the -- on the advice of counsel.

And, finally, although Mr. O'Boyle was not aware of this directly, his representation by counsel is actually not being paid by anybody because it's pro bono.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] Thank you.

We're still on the record. I just want to thank the witness for coming in.

Voice. We'll go off the record?

[redacted] Yes.

[Whereupon, at 3:28 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Friend, first, I'd like to go over your background and tenure at the FBI. Before you joined the FBI, what did you do for employment?

A I was a police officer.

Q And where were you a police officer at?

A I was a police officer in Savannah, Georgia, and Pooler, Georgia.

Q And when did you join the FBI?

A June 2014.

Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

A I wanted to work at the highest level of law enforcement.

Q And can you walk us through your positions that you held at the FBI?

A I was a new agent trainee at Quantico, Virginia, for the first 5 months. Then my first assignment was to the Omaha Field Office, the Sioux City Resident Agency. There, I was responsible for investigating violent crimes and major offenses that occurred on Indian reservations in northeastern Nebraska.

I transferred to the Jacksonville Field Office, Daytona Beach Resident Agency in June 2021 to work violent crimes against children and child exploitation and human trafficking investigations and was reassigned to the domestic terrorism task -- or, yeah, Joint Terrorism Task Force to work on domestic terrorism in October of 2021.

Q So your last assignment was at the Daytona Beach Resident Agency, correct?

A Correct.

Q And you said that you became a member of the Joint Terrorism Task Force at the Daytona Beach Resident Agency in October of 2021. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Is it correct to say that you were reassigned from investigating child exploitation cases to work on domestic terrorism cases?

A Yes.

Q Were those cases specifically related to January 6th?

A Yes.

Q And how was that communicated to you?

A There was a phone call from the assistant special agent in charge to my supervisor at the time, and he said that the new fiscal year approaching, that they were going to be resourcing manpower differently and that I was going to be reassigned from my current assignment to the JTTF.

My supervisor asked about the investigations that I was working, and the ASAC said that those are to be considered a local issue going forward.

Q Okay. And who was the ASAC that called your supervisor?

A His name was Gilbert Balli.

Q And the name of your supervisor that he called?

A Rob Corley.

Q And were other agents assigned to the JTTF too, or reassigned to the JTTF?

A No one was reassigned. There was already one agent and two task force officers assigned.

Q Uh-huh. So you were the only one that was brought in additionally?

A Yes.

Q Was it communicated to you how to prioritize work on child exploitation cases versus your work on domestic terrorism cases?

A At the time, the supervisor was in an acting capacity, so he told me that as long as I could balance both that he didn't have a problem with it until the permanent replacement arrived.

Q Uh-huh.

A When my permanent replacement arrived in early 2022 he told me that I could continue that. And I did that through -- until my suspension.

Q So who was the supervisor that told you that you could balance the work?

A Greg Federico.

Q Okay. And how was this communicated to you, verbally or in writing?

A Verbally.

Q And were there other agents that were told to prioritize domestic terrorism cases over their regular caseload?

A Not in my office.

Q And so was Federico then your direct supervisor at Daytona Beach?

A Yes.

Q While you were on the JTTF?

A Yes.

Q And did you have any direct reports?

A Direct reports?

Q Like, did any agents report to you directly or --

A Oh. No.

Q Okay.

During your tenure at the FBI, did you ever participate in a review of your performance?

A Yes.

Q Did you generally receive good markings on your performance reviews?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever receive any awards from the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And what were those awards?

A They were performance awards throughout my career for various tasks that I did specifically and then for just overall performance. The most recent one was in, I believe, July of 2022 and was for my performance working child pornography investigations with a local law enforcement partner.

Q Okay.

And I'm going to switch topics to talk more about your handling of January 6th cases.

Are you familiar with the letter that Mr. Jordan sent to FBI Director Wray on September 19, 2022, regarding the Washington Field Office's handling of January 6th investigations?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

I'd like to enter the September 19, 2022, letter from Mr. Jordan to Director Wray as exhibit No. 1.

[Friend Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Friend, I'll give you some time to look over the letter, and just let me know when you've reviewed.

A Okay.

Q I'm going to read the second paragraph on page 1.

It states, "New whistleblower disclosures indicate that the WFO's handling of DVE investigations relating to January 6 'diverge[s]' from established practice in a way that overstates the national DVE threat."

"DVE" in the letter stands for domestic violent extremism.

"One whistleblower has described how cases are ordinarily characterized and labeled by the originating field office, with leads 'cut' to other field offices for specific assistance in that geographic location. The whistleblower alleged 'the FBI has not followed regular procedure' with respect to January 6 cases, which should all be officially led by the WFO and categorized as WFO cases."

Mr. Friend, can you describe how FBI policy dictates the regular procedure for how case files should be labeled?

A Yes. The Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide, the DIOG, sets guidance for that in Appendix J.

It essentially says that the originating office is determined by a multitude of factors. It could be the location of an incident; it could be the location of the subject's residence and other reasons. But once the office of origin is determined, the personnel who work for that office are deemed to be the case managers and solely responsible for bringing the case forward and making all the necessary investigative decisions.

Q Uh-huh. So, per policy in the DIOG, or the Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide, is it correct that FBI agents ordinarily label full investigation case files according to the originating field office?

A Yes.

Q And, per that same policy, if the agent needs specific assistance in another geographic area, does that agent cut leads to a different field office?

A Yes.

Q So, if the field office is cut a lead or sent a lead, is that field office then referred to as the lead office under the DIOG?

A Yes.

Q So, for example, if a Federal crime occurs in Texas, would the originating field office be in Texas?

A Yes.

Q And if there is a witness that needs to be interviewed in Florida, would a lead be cut to a field office in Florida?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And for full investigations opened into the events that occurred at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, would the originating field office for those investigations be the Washington Field Office?

A Yes.

Q And if investigative actions outside of D.C. are required, would or should the WFO case agent then cut a lead to appropriate FBI field offices?

A Yes.

Q And, following January 6th, to your knowledge, did the FBI set up any kind of task force within headquarters or the WFO to work on January 6th investigations?

A Yes.

Q Can you describe that task force? Was it in headquarters or the WFO?

A The WFO. And it was staffed by employees who worked in WFO as well as TDY, temporary duty agents, from around the Bureau.

Q Do you know who was in charge of the task force?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

And since the events occurred in Washington, D.C., it is natural that the WFO would handle the investigations?

A Yes.

Q During your tenure at the Daytona Beach Resident Agency, were you ever assigned January 6th cases?

A Yes.

Q And during your tenure at the FBI, did the FBI follow this regular procedure with regards to January 6th investigations for labeling cases?

A No.

Q How did the handling of January 6th investigations deviate from the regular procedure?

A We received leads from headquarters, from the task force working out of Washington, D.C., with directives to carry out certain investigative actions, in assumption that we were going to be opening cases from our office as the originating office.

Then we would perform tasks and send that information back to Washington, D.C., for their approval or for their request for more work to be done and then ultimately for their decision on how to pursue a case, whether or not to prosecute it.

Q So the task force members at the WFO would send out information packets to other offices, correct?

A Yes.

Q And that would be done by the employees from the Washington Field Office and the TDY'd employees?

A Yes.

Q And do you know how many TDY'd employees were at the WFO for January 6th cases?

A I do not know.

Q Rough estimate? Or --

A I know that there was a continuous rolling 30-day TDY request at one point that I was asked if I wanted to participate. I did not, and another person from my division was sent in my stead.

Q Okay. And who from your division was sent instead of you?

A His first name is Nico, but he didn't work in my office. I didn't know him particularly well.

Q Was Nico a special agent?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So, instead of following the regular case file management procedure, the WFO is directing other field offices to open full investigations, and then the WFO is performing and approving the investigative work.

Is that an accurate characterization?

A Yes.

Q So, if January 6th cases are handled in this manner, does it appear on paper that local field offices instead of the WFO are the originating field offices?

A Yes.

Q And that deviates from the standard practice?

A Yes.

Q And, to your knowledge, is this only happening with January 6th cases?

A Yes.

Q How were your assigned January 6th cases handled? Were they handled in this similar way, where the WFO would tell you what to do and open cases?

A Yes.

Q Were you told or pressured by the WFO to open full investigations?

A We were told to open full investigations and that they would populate them with paperwork or case file work that was pertinent to that particular case.

Q So, if you completed investigative steps, would you have to report back to the WFO on what you had done?

A Yes.

Q And would they tell you if you needed to do more investigating?

A Yes.

Q And what if you didn't believe that there was enough of a predicate to continue to investigate? Did you still have to investigate?

A I was told that we could push back as much as we wanted but they would continue to send us additional requests to perform more work.

Q And "they" meaning agents at the WFO?

A Yes.

Q Were you ever provided any insight as to why January 6th cases were handled in this manner?

A Yes.

Q And what was that insight that you received?

A I was told that there was a coordination call very early on after January 6th, during which there was representatives from all around the country, and the question was posed as to why this protocol was being followed, and that they were told that it was to get buy-in from the field.

Q And so who provided you with this insight?

A A former supervisor, as well as other members of the JTTF in my office.

Q And who is your former supervisor that gave you that insight?

A Dave Brown.

Q Do you know when this coordination call happened?

A I was told it was in the immediate aftermath, so I was under the belief that it was probably within a week or two.

Q Did you get an understanding of who was on this coordination call?

A Yes. I was told that it was people from all around the Bureau who were going to be charged with primarily investigating the cases.

Q Okay. So it included WFO people and agents from across the country in different field offices?

A Yes.

Q And do you know what the substance -- what was discussed on that call?

A That's the only fact that I know that was discussed on that particular call. But in my inquiries, I was told that these coordination calls were going on quite frequently in the aftermath of January 6th.

Q Do you know if an agent, Timothy Thibault, was on those calls?

A I don't know.

Q Section Chief Steve Jensen?

A No, I don't know.

Q And, to your knowledge, does managing or labeling case files in this way create a false and misleading narrative that domestic violent extremism is increasing around the country?

A Yes.

Q Does this, in turn, give the impression that the threat of DVE is present in jurisdictions around the Nation even though the cases all stem from the same related investigation?

A Yes.

Q I'm going to turn back to the letter from September 19th, on page 2. I'm going the read the inset portion on page 2.

It says, "The manipulative casefile practice creates false and misleading crime statistics. Instead of hundreds of investigations stemming from a single, black swan incident at the Capitol, FBI and DOJ officials point to significant increases in domestic violent extremism and terrorism around the United States."

Do you agree with that statement, Mr. Friend?

A Yes.

Q Do you agree that manipulating the case file system in this way allows the FBI to support Director Wray's December 2019 assertion that the FBI is a, quote, "field-based law enforcement organization," end quote?

A Yes.

Q To your knowledge, is the FBI sacrificing other important Federal law enforcement duties to pursue January 6th investigations?

A Yes.

Q In your experience, do most January 6th-related investigations involve misdemeanor crimes?

A Yes.

Q And do you perceive pulling resources from other traditional law enforcement duties as antithetical to the FBI's mission?

A Yes.

Q During your tenure at the Daytona Beach Resident Agency JTTF, were you ever tasked with executing search and arrest warrants for January 6th investigations or subjects?

A Yes.

Q Was it a regular duty of the JTTF to execute search and arrest warrants?

A Pertaining to January 6th or in general?

Q In general.

A In general, yes.

Q Uh-huh.

And were you ever told or notified that the FBI SWAT team would be used during search and arrest warrants for January 6th subjects?

A Yes.

Q Did that concern you?

A Yes.

Q Why did the plans for the execution of these warrants concern you?

A Because the subject of the arrest warrant had been in communication with the FBI at that point and had expressed a willingness to cooperate with the FBI. And, in my experience in dealing with subjects of crimes and bringing them into custody, the FBI tends to use the least amount of force necessary to do that safely, and I felt that the use of SWAT, and coming from my background of being a SWAT team member, I felt that that was an unnecessary tool to use for that particular individual.

Q So the subject of the warrant that the SWAT team was going to be used for was cooperating with the FBI. Is that your understanding?

A Yes.

Q And had mentioned a willingness to come in voluntarily? Is --

A Yes.

Q -- that correct?

And in your experience working on criminal cases and SWAT teams, you said that the FBI normally uses the least intrusive methods. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And is that per FBI or DOJ policy?

A I don't know what policy. I just know that that is the general approach that we always used.

Q Can you explain some of the less intrusive methods that might be used for a subject who is cooperating with the FBI and has said that they're willing to come in?

A You can call the individual and ask them to surrender. You can issue a summons. You can contact their attorney, if they're represented, and ask them to surrender. You can ask for local law enforcement to execute an arrest warrant. You can use surveillance resources to interdict an individual while they're traveling and away from their home base of operations.

Q And, to your knowledge, none of these were used for the January 6th subjects that you were tasked with executing search and arrest warrants for?

A Not on the individual SWAT was going to be used for, no.

Q Did you raise these concerns to your direct supervisor?

A Yes.

Q When did you do that?

A The week before the operations were scheduled to happen. I believe that was August 19th.

Q Okay. And who was your direct supervisor at the time?

A Greg Federico.

Q And what did you disclose to Mr. Federico?

A I raised my concerns about the use of the SWAT team for the arrest. I also raised my concerns about the departures from the DIOG with regards to how the cases were being managed and told him that I believed that it was to manipulate the crime statistics. And I also said that I believed that we were infringing on individuals' Sixth Amendment rights.

Q And what is Mr. Federico's title?

A He's the SSRA, the special senior resident agent -- I can't remember what the acronym stands for.

Q Sure. So the SSRA?

A Correct.

Q Is SSRA Federico still at the Daytona Beach --

A Yes.

Q -- office? Okay. And does he generally have responsibility over the JTTF?

A Yes. He's the frontline supervisor for all the personnel in the office.

Q Okay. And how did SSRA Federico respond to your concerns?

A He said that -- he agreed that there was not a lot of work to be done on JTTF and that he was actually going to lobby to move me back into working child pornography investigations in the next fiscal year. He told me that he was concerned that he was doing file reviews on cases that none of his people in his -- none of his subordinates were actually doing work on.

And he then suggested that I might want to speak to the employee assistance program for counseling; and then asked me, if he brought my concerns up the chain of command, how they thought -- how I believed that they would respond to that, and said that I had a good reputation and that my career could be in jeopardy if I wanted to beg out of participating in the upcoming arrest and searches.

Q Did you perceive that SSRA Federico shared some of your concerns about how the case files were being handled? I know you mentioned that he was concerned that he was having to, did you say, approve some of the investigative work? Can you explain?

A Yes.

So, every 90 days, there's a file review process in the FBI, so every case needs to be reviewed by a supervisor to make sure that there's progress being made on the case. If there's nothing done, then that brings into question of why the case is even open to begin with or what could be done on it.

He said that there were cases in our office where documents were being put into the case files but his people weren't doing it, they were being done from the task force in Washington, and that that was a concern to him.

Q Okay. So he was concerned that docs were being put into the file and his people were not doing it; it was the task force at the WFO?

A Yes.

Q And at any time did you tell SSRA Federico that you would not participate in the execution of the search or arrest warrants?

A I told him I didn't want to. And I volunteered to work the wiretap that my office was at that time engaging in. It has to be manned by somebody, and I asked that I have that responsibility for the day.

Q And so is it fair to say that you had two kind of tranches of concerns: You had one about the DIOG violations stemming from how the investigations were being labeled, and then a separate concern about the use of SWAT team for one of the January 6th subjects who had been cooperating with the FBI? Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you raised both of those concerns to SSRA Federico?

A Yes.

Q Who did you raise your concerns to next?

A I was contacted by one of the assistant special agents in charge of my office, Colt Markofski, and asked to attend a meeting with him and another ASAC, Sean Ryan. And I was contacted by Colt on August 22nd in the evening, and I went and attended that meeting the following day, on the 23rd.

Q How regularly did you interact with Markofski and Ryan?

A Seldom. They were in Jacksonville, so my interfacing with any sort of leadership was typically with Greg Federico in my office.

Q And ASACs Markofski and Ryan, what were their general roles and responsibilities that you understood them to be?

A Sean Ryan was the ASAC who was over national security matters. And Colt Markofski was over criminal matters, but he was in an acting capacity. That position had been left, and he was filling it until a permanent replacement could be assigned.

Q And how did ASACs Markofski and Ryan respond to your concerns?

A They pushed back on my concerns. They said that I had the right to raise my concerns, but I had to follow through on the orders that I was given to do.

Q During your conversation with ASACs Markofski and Ryan, did you ever refuse to participate in the warrants?

A I told them that I didn't want to and that, if assigned to, I would have to consider not going, but I would call ahead if that was going to be the case.

Q And did you raise both your concerns about the labeling of the January 6th investigations as well as the use of the SWAT team?

A Yes.

Q And did you ever participate in any of the operations for the executions of the warrants on the January 6th subjects?

A I didn't have the opportunity to.

Q Why didn't you have the opportunity to?

A Following my meeting, I received an email from ASAC Markofski telling me that I was ordered to not come to work the following day and that I was going to be considered absent without leave.

Q So they ordered you to be on AWOL status? Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q How long were you on AWOL status?

A One day, August 24th.

Q And they never gave you the opportunity to come into the office on that day?

A No.

Q When did you go back into the office?

A August 25th. I emailed my supervisor, Greg Federico, in the evening on the 24th and asked him if I could come back the following day, and he said I could.

Q Okay.

And so, following your AWOL status, did you raise your concerns with anyone else?

A Yes.

Q And who was that?

A I spoke to the special agent in charge of the Jacksonville Field Office, Sherri Onks.

Q And what did you tell Special Agent in Charge Onks?

A The same concerns that I had that I had raised with Greg Federico, Sean Ryan, and Colt Markofski.

Q Uh-huh.

A My conversation with her was not as lengthy as it was with the ASACs. I essentially told her that my feelings on the matter were not changed after being placed AWOL and that I had concerns about the constitutionality of what we were doing.

Q And how did she respond to those concerns?

A She told me that I represented a very fringe belief within the FBI and that I needed to question whether or not I wanted to have a future with the agency.

Q Okay.

So let's make sure we have the timeline right here. So you first raise your concerns to SSRA Federico on August 19th. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And then you get a request to speak with ASACs Markofski and Ryan on August 23rd. Is that correct?

A I got the request on the 22nd --

Q Okay.

A -- and did the meeting with them on the 23rd.

Q On the 23rd. And then later that day, you received an order from, was it ASAC Markofski, to be on AWOL status the next day, August 24th?

A Yes.

Q And so, then, how much time passed between you coming back from your AWOL status and speaking with SAC Onks?

A I spoke to her on September 1st, so it was the following week.

Q Uh-huh.

Did any of your other colleagues on the JTTF or in the Daytona Beach Resident Agency share your concerns regarding the policy violations occurring with January 6th investigations?

A Yes.

Q And who were those individuals?

A Todd Myers is a special agent.

Q Uh-huh.

A Brian Howard is a task force officer.

Q Uh-huh.

A Tarek Husami is another task force officer.

Q Uh-huh.

A And that constituted our JTTF.

Q So the whole JTTF had concerns?

A Yes.

Q Did any of these other individuals raise those concerns?

A No.

Q Did any of these individuals participate in the warrants that were going to be executed on the 24th of August?

A Yes.

Q Did they raise those concerns just to you?

A Amongst ourselves. We all worked in the same area, so we would have conversations, the four of us, where all of us were present and those concerns were being raised.

Q And did they share the concerns about how the cases were labeled and that deviated from the DIOG?

A I don't remember them ever expressing that concern.

Q So their concern was mostly about the use of the SWAT team?

A Yes. And I think they had concerns just about use of FBI resources in general for misdemeanor offenses.

Q And what were their concerns about the use of the SWAT team?

A Just that it was too much force needed to bring somebody into custody for an offense, especially when they were cooperating with us, and a large gap of time had elapsed between the last contact with the individual and this pending arrest.

Q Uh-huh.

Do you believe that raising these concerns is what led to your suspension?

A Yes. After my conversation with SAC Onks, at the very conclusion of it, she told me that she had already brought my -- recommended me for investigation to the Security Division and to the Inspection Division.

Q Uh-huh. And so what's your current status with the FBI?

A I've resigned.

Q And when did you resign?

A This morning.

Q And before that, what was your status?

A I was suspended indefinitely, unpaid.

Q And can you walk us through when that happened and if you were escorted out?

A September 19, 2022, I arrived to work and was met by Greg Federico; the Special Agent in Charge Sherri Onks; Colt Markofski, the ASAC; and James Bache, the chief security officer.

Q Uh-huh.

A They took my badge, credentials, firearm, and all property and suspended me.

They said that -- they issued me a letter from Human Resources Division, signed by Executive Assistant Director Jen Moore, detailing the rationale for suspending my security clearance. And without a security clearance, I can't work in an FBI space and I can't fulfill my duties as a special agent, so I was suspended indefinitely.

I was allowed to exhaust my accrued leave time. And they gave me a mechanism to -- if I wanted to use sick time, it would need justification from a doctor. And I was given paperwork to seek outside employment if I wanted to, and escorted from the building.

Q And what was the rationale that you were provided by Ms. Jen Moore for suspending your security clearance?

A She detailed my refusal to participate in the August 24th arrest warrant and search warrant operations, as well as my refusal to participate in a security awareness briefing, and the improper accessing of documents from the FBI's classified system.

Q And do you refute these claims?

A Yes.

Q Do you believe that you refused to participate in the execution of the warrants?

A No.

Q And why do you believe that?

A I didn't have the opportunity to. I was told the day prior to the actual event that I was considered absent without leave the following day and to not come to work.

Q Uh-huh.

A I did not refuse to participate in a security awareness briefing. ASAC Markofski called me on the phone and invited me to attend one, and he told me that -- well, I asked -- I'd never heard of it. He used the SAB, S-A-B, acronym, and I was not familiar with it, and I asked him to explain what it was. And he told me that it was, we're going to be doing retraining on use of certain Bureau technology and that they wanted me to be aware of that.

Q Uh-huh.

A And when I asked if I was being singled out for that, he said that I made different decisions than others, good, bad, or indifferent, so there was going to be consequences.

So, at that point, I told him that I felt that it might be a disciplinary matter and that I wanted to have an attorney present. He told me that I was not allowed to have one. I asked him to provide me some sort of documentation saying that I couldn't have one and I would attend the security awareness briefing. And he said he would do that.

And that was the Thursday before I was suspended -- or, I'm sorry, the Wednesday before. And then the following Monday was when I was suspended. I didn't ever receive any communication back from ASAC Markofski on that matter.

Q So ASAC Markofski invited you to this security awareness training the Wednesday before you were suspended, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And that was after you had disclosed your concerns with the handling of January 6th cases and use of the SWAT team to Federico and your ASACs and the SAC?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

What was your reaction when you were suspended?

A In the immediate aftermath, I called my wife to come pick me up, and that was pretty disturbing for her. She had a tumor removed from her spine a few weeks before that, and she was not actually supposed to be driving. So she had to come and drive me with a back brace on home.

And then, at that point, I started to communicate with my attorneys about, you know, what to do as far as bringing my concerns to the OIG and to the Office of Special Counsel and to Congress. So we drafted a formal complaint and submitted that to all three.

Q And have you had any communication with your colleagues from the Daytona Beach Resident Agency since your suspension?

A I have one friend who is now a former task force officer. He was not assigned to the JTTF. He was assigned to the Safe Streets Task Force. And he and I are friends, and we go to the gun range together.

Q Uh-huh.

A And the secretary of the office, she sends me text messages just of greetings and hello. But nobody else from the office.

Q What was the reaction of your colleagues when they learned that you had been suspended?

A I can only say what my task force friend said, and he said that everybody just kind of went along with whatever the proceedings were but that, in the aftermath, the office has been extremely reticent to do anything. They don't want to draw attention to the office. So the SSRA Federico is sort of nixing anything operational at this point.

Q And when you say that people are hesitant to take actions, what do you mean by that?

A Nobody ever got fired for doing nothing.

Q Uh-huh.

A So it's pretty easy to extend an investigation out long, as opposed to being more aggressive in your investigative tactics that you use, and it's better to let the dust clear and settle around my situation before you draw a spotlight to yourself.

Q And do you believe that you were retaliated against by the FBI for making protected disclosures to Congress?

A Yes.

Q And do you believe some of your colleagues, some of their hesitance is that they're nervous that they will be retaliated against for speaking up?

A Yes.

Q Following being walked out of the FBI, did you have to sit for any interviews with the FBI?

A I did. I sat for a compelled interview with the Security Division in January 25th of 2023.

Q Uh-huh. And did anything come out of that interview? Did the FBI take any additional actions against you?

A After that interview, I was notified of a secondary interview from the Inspection Division. That was sent to me the following morning at 7:32 a.m., to myself and to my attorney, notifying me of their separate investigation. Even though the investigation had been opened about 2 weeks before, the email arrived to my inbox the first day after the Security Division's final investigative action in their process.

Q Okay. So there were two investigations, one by the Security Division and one by the Inspections Division?

A Yes.

Q And the Security Division one has concluded? Is that correct?

A I don't believe it's concluded. They told me that their investigative actions towards me were going to be summarized and given to another, parallel squad to review and that they would make a recommendation to an outside body concerning the revocation or reinstatement of my security clearance.

Q And did the FBI place any restrictions on who you could discuss your suspension with?

A Yes.

Q And what were those restrictions?

A So, in the Inspection Division's email to me, they told me that I was not allowed to speak to members of my family or friends or the media about the existence of the investigation.

Q Uh-huh. And how long were you on an unpaid suspension? Between --

A So, from September 19th until today is 150 days.

Q Uh-huh.

A But I was able to use my accrued leave for some time in there. So I was receiving a paycheck for the first 7 weeks of my suspension, but it was not for work. It was just exhausting vacation time, essentially.

Q And while on indefinite suspension, were you able to seek -- did you have to seek approval from the FBI to seek outside employment?

A Yes.

Q Did you take any steps to seek outside employment?

A I submitted two FD-331s requesting outside employment. The first one was rejected. And the second one I submitted with also a caveat that I requested my training records, which the FBI has yet to furnish me.

Q So the first form that was rejected, who rejected that?

A I was told that it was rejected by the executive management of the Jacksonville Field Office.

Q Did you get a reason for why it was rejected?

A No.

Q And then you submitted a second form for outside employment and asked for records. What records did you request?

A I'm seeking my firearms training records as well as my training records in general to prove my employment. Both of those are necessary to gain employment from the second outside entity. That's not the first request of those records that I've made either.

Q Uh-huh. And have they given you the requested records?

A No.

Q Do you know why they have not given you the records?

A No, I don't.

Q Who has been denying your request to obtain your records?

A I made a request to the firearms training unit and sent an email to their general counsel. And I sent the second request for outside employment to the chief security officer of Jacksonville Division.

Q Uh-huh. And do you think this is just another episode of retaliation, by not giving you your records?

A Yes.

Q And how has the FBI's retaliation against you affected you and your family?

A Well, it's very unusual. My household, I have two young children, and they have asked, you know, why I'm not going to work and why my FBI vehicle is not in the driveway anymore, and that's sort of complicated to explain to grammar-school children.

Q Uh-huh.

A My wife lost her career shortly after my suspension, and she had to sign a nondisclosure about that, but it was under very suspicious circumstances, and I firmly believe that is related to my situation.

Q Uh-huh.

A So neither one of us are gainfully employed, and that's been a financial burden on us as well as just a stressor, because we lost our health insurance, as well, with her employment termination.

Q And if you had to put an estimate on it, how much has this ordeal cost you both in time and financially?

A Well, I would say, it's difficult to calculate because she received a severance from her prior employer. But myself, you know, being out of work for about 20 weeks, 13 of which unpaid -- you'd have to go back and calculate what my, you know, salary would've been for that time period.

But I don't think you can put a price tag on the stress that it's put on our family. I voiced to my supervisors that working for the FBI was my dream job and that's all I ever wanted to do. So having that opportunity taken away from me earlier than I was expecting has been very disappointing.

And the way that the Bureau has conducted itself against me in the aftermath -- as opposed to actually considering and investigating the righteousness of my complaint, they've chosen to circle the wagons and go after me -- I think is very disappointing and soured me greatly enough that I actually resigned today.

Q Uh-huh.

And I want to make sure that I give Congressmen Gaetz and Bishop time to ask questions.

Mr. Gaetz. And how many -- what's our time? Great.

Well, Mr. Friend, thank you for being here. And as a Floridian, I particularly appreciate the work you've done in my State.

How does one get the on-the-spot financial award?

Mr. Friend. It's -- normally, a frontline supervisor will make a recommendation just based on performance.

Mr. Gaetz. What type of performance?

Mr. Friend. I was working with the Flagler Sheriff's Office. They had one full-time person assigned to work child pornography investigations, and he had heart surgery and was out for a year, so I took on their sheriff's office cases for about 6 months until a permanent replacement could come on.

Mr. Gaetz. So you received this award in July of '22?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And then just a few months later, in August of 2022, they're suspending your clearance, right?

Mr. Friend. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Strikes me as a whirlwind few months for you.

Mr. Friend. A precipitous fall from grace.

Mr. Gaetz. Did the Washington Field Office ever pressure folks at the Jacksonville Field Office and its subsidiaries to do, in your opinion, unnecessary law enforcement work?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Give me an example.

Mr. Friend. We were investigating individuals who we knew had not done anything violent and were conducting interviews with individuals who -- just for status reasons, who were represented by attorneys. So it was essentially draining them financially to have to pay the attorneys from the meetings.

We were also conducting surveillance operations in order to paper files where we hadn't done any investigative work for a number of months. So, in order to show progress on a case, you have to have paper in your file every 90 days. So we would drive by a subject's home on the way home from work and say that we did physical surveillance on a January 6th subject.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe that draining people of their financial resources by conducting otherwise meaningless law enforcement -- or, interviews of meaningless law enforcement value was the point?

Mr. Friend. I think it was a motivating factor, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And what is your basis for that belief?

Mr. Friend. In my experience and just from my earliest time in the Bureau when I was a brand-new agent approaching a subject saying, "Hey, you're going to have to talk to my attorney," I was told by senior agents, "Call their attorney, because that's going to lead them to have to have a billable hour."

Mr. Gaetz. And so, within the context of the January 6th cases, did you ever hear anyone say or suggest that they were calling someone's attorney or setting up an interview for the purpose of draining that subject's financial resources?

Mr. Friend. I never heard anybody say that, no.

Mr. Gaetz. How many times would you guess you did this unnecessary surveillance?

Mr. Friend. Well, we were doing it at least once a quarter per subject.

Mr. Gaetz. So the surveillance you were doing wasn't tied to any activity of the subject; it was tied to the need to have some marking in the file that something had occurred?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And your belief is that that's so that there could be a representation that more January 6th investigative activity was occurring than was really occurring?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And the reason they were doing that was so that they could have more files open to justify a constructed threat, in your testimony?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. How many files -- give me a sense of how many files had this pattern and practice you describe where there was just unnecessary surveillance for the sake of posturing.

Mr. Friend. In my office, we probably had somewhere in the area of half a dozen cases at that point that were pending, that hadn't been, you know, adjudicated or there had been no arrests made.

I was brought over to the JTTF in October, and the first actual operational thing we were going to be doing was that arrest operation the following August. So in that interim 10 months is when we were sort of sitting in limbo where nothing was going on. We were waiting to hear from Washington about how the cases were going to be handled.

Mr. Gaetz. And it sounds like there was some pushback to the Washington Field Office, right?

Mr. Friend. Yes. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. How did that manifest?

Mr. Friend. The agent who had been on the JTTF the longest would be on the phone talking to personnel back in Washington about cases and expressing concern or asking for a status update of, you know, how they were going to be proceeding.

Mr. Gaetz. And what would be the substance of that?

Mr. Friend. Just ask if -- are we going to charge this case or is it going to be declined? And the -- he would then -- I mean, we're kind of talking -- he's communicating things that he's hearing on the phone back to me, so I wasn't first party to hearing them. But, in general, he said, they're making a decision. They're still looking at -- there might be additional charges. They said, we're going to go back through the code book and see if we can charge anything else.

Mr. Gaetz. Did these discussions frequently involve you receiving additional evidence on any of these subjects?

Mr. Friend. Evidence? No.

Mr. Gaetz. Any photographs of those people committing crimes in the Capitol?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Any video of them committing crimes in the Capitol?

Mr. Friend. No. That information was provided at the outset of the investigations.

Mr. Gaetz. But, in your experience, there were none of the cases that you were involved in where that evidence was ever augmented by the Washington Field Office from that initial packet?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And were J6 cases the only DVE cases that you worked during your time with the FBI?

Mr. Friend. No. There were other domestic terror cases that came across that were not opened as full investigation but were matters that had to be looked at. I can think of two particular incidents.

Mr. Gaetz. So, outside of the context of J6 cases -- where you've testified you do believe the FBI was padding the stats, right?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. In those other DVE cases, did you ever see any practices that you believed were padding the stats?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And describe that for me.

Mr. Friend. I suppose the one I'm thinking of is actually an international terrorism case. And it was originally brought to us as a concern about an individual overseas who was radicalizing young people on the internet and encouraging them to participate in school shootings.

That was carried out around the country. There were a number of arrests made. There was an individual who was in our area of responsibility who we contacted and determined that she was not a threat, was mentally disturbed but was under medication.

And in my aftermath to try to close that down, I was told that we were considering opening up an ISIS investigation on that individual. It was not related to anything we were doing originally. And I was part of a briefing where it was explained to us that she'd engaged in conversation on an online format, and another individual in that forum was in a separate forum, and in that secondary forum another individual had posted an ISIS video.

Mr. Gaetz. And you considered that to be an insufficient predicate to open an ISIS investigation.

Mr. Friend. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. So were there other times you were asked to open investigations without sufficient predicate?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. But within -- so that was all discussion outside the context of J6 cases. Now sort of returning to the J6 cases, in those matters, do you believe you were asked to open matters without sufficient predicate for full investigations?

Mr. Friend. We didn't open any January 6th cases when I was brought over to JTTF. Those cases had already been opened, so I was never given a new one to look at. I was given one lead to look at and closed that down for insufficient evidence.

Mr. Gaetz. So why should it -- why did it concern you that the FBI was padding the stats on the J6 cases with this practice you've testified to of keeping matters open without any real law enforcement utility?

Mr. Friend. For two reasons. I was worried that we were violating our rules and individuals' rights, and that could contribute to us essentially losing righteous prosecution against an individual, as well as being violative of their civil liberties.

And, secondly, I believe in the -- I believe that the FBI is supposed to exist for maintaining law and order, and if we are creating the illusion that domestic terrorism is on the rise around the country, it's going to make people nervous, and it's going to contribute to a very toxic environment where we might be shifting the Overton window to the extent that half the country might be cut out of a constructive dialogue.

Mr. Gaetz. There's an opportunity cost too, isn't there?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. What happened to those child exploitation cases that you were working?

Mr. Friend. Well, it's my understanding that they brought in a temporary agent after my suspension to handle those cases. I don't know the status of them. I know one was probably going to be dismissed due to lack of being able to have a knowledgeable person there. Had a righteous human trafficking case that was opened. I don't know the status of that. But ultimately felt that -- and my supervisor agreed with me -- that child pornography investigations are a righteous use of FBI resources, and that was not going to be happening.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you concerned that because the FBI is padding stats and inflaming the illusion of J6 threat and domestic violent extremism that there are other really important areas for FBI law enforcement that aren't occurring?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And why is it a risk to use too much force in arresting somebody, like a SWAT team?

Mr. Friend. I vocalized to my supervisors that, you know, you could have a Ruby Ridge situation, where you essentially show up with a tactical team, and, you know, an individual could be in a rural area and might be taken aback but be coming back from a hunting trip, or something would set up an unnecessary risk, when a phone call would've sufficed to bring that individual into custody.

Mr. Gaetz. So, in your disclosure that you provided to us, you talk about the risk to the individual, to the subject of that SWAT effort at an arrest. But it seems, based on your testimony today, you were also worried about your fellow agents. Is that right?

Mr. Friend. Yes, both.

Mr. Gaetz. And you testified to my colleague's questions about the time that had elapsed in this SWAT arrest between the last contact, and you said it was a lot of time. Do you know about how much that was?

Mr. Friend. I can only speak to my time on the JTTF, so October 1 until August 24th, the following year, where we hadn't taken any investigative action or had any communication with that subject.

Mr. Gaetz. And why did that concern you, that duration of time?

Mr. Friend. Well, I think that if you have somebody -- at least in my investigative experience, if you have somebody that you've voiced that they are under investigation, you need to maintain an open line of communication to them. Otherwise, they're under the assumption that the case was dropped.

And it's my understanding that when they actually did go to some of these individual houses they said, "I thought this was done. I didn't hear from you for so long."

Mr. Gaetz. So, when you showed up in August and were escorted out of the building, you said the Jacksonville special agent in charge had come to the Daytona office for that?

Mr. Friend. Yes. September.

Mr. Gaetz. How many times in the course of your time in Daytona did the special agent in charge from Jacksonville even show up in the office?

Mr. Friend. She came when she was originally assigned as the new special agent in charge, and she came to have her meeting with me on September 1, and she came to suspend me.

[10:00 a.m.]

BY MR. GAETZ:

Mr. Gaetz. So it wasn't as if she was making frequent visits to check on cases?

Mr. Friend. No, that's never a good sign if the SAC's showing up.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you think she showed up regarding your matters to send a message to the other people in that office that if they became whistleblowers, it was a big deal?

Mr. Friend. I suspect that, and my understanding in talking to my one connection back, she came back again after I was suspended to have a talk with everybody about me being suspended.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know anything about the substance of that discussion?

Mr. Friend. From what he told me, it was that it was an ongoing investigation and that I could probably be going through a really tough time. So they were going to encourage us to -- people in the office, if they wanted to reach out to me, that they could do that.

Mr. Gaetz. Why did you resign this morning?

Mr. Friend. I put in these requests for outside employment. I'm married and have a wife who doesn't work and two children, and I need to earn an income. And I was offered a position, and I considered taking that so that I could have an income and be a productive citizen.

Mr. Gaetz. We've talked to a number of other whistleblowers who described the type of retaliation that they face when they make protected disclosures.

Do you believe that denying your requests for other employment was to make an example of you?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Sometimes cruelty is an offshoot of a process and sometimes it's the point.

Mr. Friend. Yes. I think there is new whistleblower training that's been created in the FBI, too, that commingles it with insider threat training. And from my understanding, from the employees that I'm still friendly with, there is a comment section that has a pretty robust protestation to that, saying that they have been doing that or indicating that whistleblowers might be an insider threat.

Mr. Foster. Steve, could you just clarify for the record, it's not just the denial of your request for outside employment, it's also their refusal to comply with their statutory obligation to give you your firearms training records. Could you sort of connect those two and explain why that's necessary for one of your employment offers?

Mr. Friend. Yes, I need to have a Class C private investigator license, and a G license to carry a statewide firearm in performance of those duties for one particular employer. And in order to get those, without having to go through long, lengthy training as a new person or as an intern, essentially, I would need those records to prove my Federal law enforcement bona fides, and they haven't provided them.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe that your clearance was suspended because it was an interim step that the FBI could take to ruin your career in the absence of providing you due process?

Mr. Friend. I think it was a way to immediately remove me from it and, essentially, bypass the Inspection Division process where there was administrative hurdles that they had to go through, and I would, essentially, be able to continue working.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe that revoking clearances is a way the FBI accelerates their actions against employees that they want to purge?

Mr. Friend. Revoking and suspending, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. How long was your compelled interview in January?

Mr. Friend. About two and a half hours.

Mr. Gaetz. What seemed to be the concerns of the interviewer?

Mr. Friend. They were concerned about some of the op-eds that I had published. They said that I was inciting violence, and they were unaware that I had requested and received permission to speak to media, and I had to conform to that and --

Mr. Gaetz. So you existed within the construct -- your public statements existed within the construct of permission you'd been given?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Who gave you that permission?

Mr. Friend. The Prepublication Review Office from the FBI.

Mr. Gaetz. And when did you receive that?

Mr. Friend. I don't remember the date.

Mr. Gaetz. But it was prior to any of your op-eds?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And did any of your op-eds incite violence?

Mr. Friend. I used the phrase, "This is a rhetorical call to arms from my fellow civil servants." And they said that use of the phrase, "this is a call to arms," could be construed as a call -- incitement into violence.

Mr. Gaetz. Was it?

Mr. Friend. No. It's not when it's preceded by the word "rhetorical."

Mr. Gaetz. Because rhetorical means with words, right?

Mr. Friend. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. So do you want anyone to commit violence against anyone else in the name of politics?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you want anyone to commit violence against anyone else in the name of retaliation?

Mr. Friend. No. That's why I blew the whistle to begin with.

Mr. Gaetz. So I guess my final question is this.

Do you think that the cruelty that you've experienced, that your family has experienced, was on purpose, or do you think it was just a function of the FBI going through the motions to deal with your employment status?

Mr. Friend. I'm convinced that it's been punitive.

Mr. Gaetz. And your basis for that belief is?

Mr. Friend. The denial of getting my records, the denial of a request to earn an income, the illegal gag order that was communicated to me by the Inspection Division. It's just been one after another in this process.

Mr. Gaetz. Great.

Well, our hour has elapsed. I'll have some questions for you later in the day.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 10:14. I'm going to give Mr. Meyer a couple of minutes.

Mr. Meyer. Thank you. And real quick, because this is really my client's time with you to explain the circumstance of the situation.

But in the last hour, there was a discussion on the specifics of this case that involved two broad areas of human resource management within the Bureau. One of those is security clearances and access, and the other one is the care and treatment of whistleblowers.

I just wanted to highlight, and, you know, as his counsel, I bring to Steve's advice and counsel the experiences of all my FBI clients, even though I can't tell them about the details of my other clients.

But there is a trend across the board, and it is very disturbing, and it's unique to the FBI. It doesn't even exist, for instance, in its sibling, the Secret Service, which is that the FBI has had a traditional challenge with whistleblowing culture. Senator Grassley had to carry them to the baptism almost 20 years ago to actually get a program set up over there.

But the program that is developed within the FBI is protracted, litigious, and very expensive when you compare it to other Federal executive agency -- branch agencies.

So whistleblowers face a very difficult decision, and they are often forced out, and their resignations are often due to financial reasons when they are briefed by counsel of what it would take to actually get their clearance issue resolved.

Significant in that is the Access Review Committee at the FBI, to my knowledge, has not met in almost 4 years, and nobody knows who the chairman is, and that is unheard of.

Even the CIA, which has just an incredibly long process, 4 or 5 years to resolve issues, you know who is in charge over there.

So that's on the security clearance side -- on the whistleblowing side.

On the security clearance side, what really disturbed me in our Sec D interview, and I've sat with Steve in on it, was that I was in a room with four special agents from the FBI. And I didn't expect Steve to understand this nuance because he's relatively young, and he probably hasn't had a lot of exposure on the classified side of things. But I would have thought that the special agents doing the interview would have been able to explain to him in coherent language the difference between classified information and law enforcement sensitive information.

The FBI and other law enforcement agencies had to develop LES because the classified system didn't give them the leeway they needed for law enforcement operations.

And it occurred to me as we were doing that that part of the problem on this side, and this gets very important with prepublication review, is that I don't think the Bureau really trains its people on the difference between classified and law enforcement sensitive. I think they assume that employees pick it up on the job.

That means that the training standards are all local to individual offices and some special agents in charge or resident agents in charge may not actually do that training.

And that was very important in this situation because I got brought into the team to help him because it was clear that he really didn't have all the knowledge he needed to effectively walk through the situation, the type of knowledge I would have thought he would have gotten from his first line supervisor.

So that's the thought I wanted to put on the record. And thank you for your time -- or not your time.

[redacted] It's now 10:18, and our time will begin now.

Thank you again for sitting here with us today.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q I want to take a couple steps back and talk about how we got here.

When did you first reach out to Congress?

A I reached out to Congressman Jordan on -- after my first meeting with my supervisor, Federico.

Q So would that be September?

A August.

Q August?

A August 2022.

Q End of August?

A Yes.

Q Could you put like an approximate date?

A Sorry. So my meeting with Greg was August 19th, and I believe I drafted the letter to send to Congressman Jordan over that weekend, because it was a Friday that I had that meeting with Greg.

Q Okay. And you said it was a letter that you sent?

A Yes.

Q How -- did you have any help preparing that letter?

A No.

Q How did you -- did you transmit that letter?

A Yes.

Q And how did you do that?

A I sent an email to the Congressman's office.

Q Okay. And after that, did you receive any response to that?

A I had staff from the office reach out to me to confirm the details of the letter.

Q Okay.

And, I'm sorry, you said you sent it via email. Was it a form on a website, or was it an actual email that was sent?

A I sent an actual email from my Gmail account with an attached letter, like a Word document.

Q Okay. And which staff reached out to you?

A [redacted]

Q And when did she reach out to you?

A It was the following week. I don't remember the day.

Q Okay. You said you referred to a document that you attached. Is that a declaration signed by you on September 21st, 2022?

A No, that's the formal document that we submitted to the OIG, special counsel, and then again to Congress, but also to Senators Durbin, Grassley, Johnson, and Congressman Jordan.

Q Okay. The letter or the email that you sent, do you have a copy of that?

A I believe I do.

Q Do we have a copy of that?

Mr. Meyer. Which email was that?

Mr. Friend. The original letter.

Mr. Meyer. We have a copy of the document. I don't know if I have the email that it was attached to, but we can check.

[redacted] So it's actually -- it's the initial email he sent. He said -- so he said he sent an email before he sent the formal document. So the email that was sent over to the majority staff.

Mr. Meyer. I don't have that copy though.

Mr. Friend. The letter?

Mr. Meyer. We have the letter, but we don't have the email.

Mr. Friend. Yeah, I mean, the email would say, like, attached is the letter. There was nothing --

[redacted] But was your declaration attached to it, or was there a letter attached, something else attached to it?

Mr. Friend. It was a letter to Congressman Jordan.

[redacted] Okay. So do you have a copy of that?

Mr. Meyer. We can look for it. We don't have it here.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Meyer. And the letter is different than the declaration that was prepared for the special counsel.

[redacted] Yes, I understand that. That's what I'm trying to get, both of them. You don't have a copy with you today?

Mr. Friend. Not in hard copy. I can get a digital copy for you.

[redacted] That's okay. But we would ask you to produce that to us.

BY [redacted]

Q So you spoke with [redacted] Was that in late August?

A Yes.

Q And did you communicate -- was that in person, over the phone, over email?

A Phone.

Q And how long was that conversation?

A Twenty to 30 minutes.

Q And what did you discuss during that conversation?

A She was -- [redacted] and I believe the gentleman named Michael, and we reviewed the contents of the letter that I had sent, and they essentially asked me to vocalize what was in the letter. I didn't provide any additional. It was just coming from my voice. And then they said they would be in touch with me going forward.

Q And did you do anything after that?

A After that, I had my meetings with supervisors at work and all that.

Q I mean further interactions with congressional staff after that.

A I sent a follow-up letter to my Congressman at the time.

Q Who was that?

A Michael Waltz.

Q Okay.

A I've been redistricted at this point. But I sent him also the same letter, and I sent the letter to Senator Cruz.

Q Okay. And did you have any interactions with staff for Congressman Waltz or Senator Cruz about this?

A The district -- I believe the district manager for Senator -- or Congressman Waltz's office, I went in and spoke to him. And --

Q And, I'm sorry, when was that?

A So I spoke to him the day I was suspended. So that was September 19th.

Q Okay.

A And that's -- his name's Ernie.

And then I spoke on the phone with an attorney, and I don't remember his name, from Senator Cruz's office who had taken the letter.

Q And when did you have that conversation?

A So I sent that letter to him late August. It was after I sent the letter to Congressman Jordan.

Q Okay. And you don't recall the name of the attorney you spoke with at Senator Cruz's office?

A I'm sorry, I don't.

Q Okay.

Do you remember what you told -- we'll start with Ernie from Congressman Waltz's office -- do you remember what you told Ernie?

A I detailed the facts that are in the letter that I sent to Congressman Waltz and Senator Cruz and Congressman Jordan, and I did that in the office, in person.

Q Okay. And how long was that conversation?

A I probably spoke to him for 40, 45 minutes.

Q And what was his response?

A He just took my information down. We had just regular personal chat conversation. And he said he would bring it to Congressman Waltz, but that since this is kind being run by Congressman Jordan it was probably going to be -- default to his staff.

Q And did you have any further conversations with anyone from Congressman Waltz's office?

A Not about this. They invited me to attend an event a few weeks ago.

Q Okay. Was the event -- was the invitation a few weeks ago, or was the event a few weeks ago?

A The event was a few weeks ago.

Q And did you go?

A Yes.

Q Did you meet with the Congressman?

A Yes.

Q Did you discuss your claims with him?

A No. No, it just was a handshake and sat next to him at an event where he delivered a speech, along with Congressman Mills and Congressman Jordan, and then he gave me a challenge going on the stage of the event.

Q What was the purpose of that event and what was the --

A It was a fundraiser. It's called the Lincoln Dinner. That was in Volusia County.

Q In Florida?

A Yes.

Q And that was your last contact with Congressman Waltz or his office?

A Yes.

Q Okay. What about Senator Cruz's office? You said you don't remember the name of the attorney. Do you remember when you spoke with that attorney?

A It was that late August, early September time. It was before I was suspended.

Q Okay.

A And that was a short conversation where he was taking the information down. We had more correspondence because I guess he was having -- he kept changing the meeting time because of his travel schedule, but we really didn't talk in any great detail. He just kind of said that he had the letter and information and would be responding back if they had more inquiry.

Q So you had some back and forth but nothing substantive?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

So getting back to your conversations with the majority, you said you spoke with [redacted] at the end of August and Michael -- is it possible Michael Koren?

A Yeah, I don't remember.

Q Okay.

A I just remember Michael.

Q That's fine.

Did you have any further communications with him after that?

A Yes. I've had a number of just check in, status on how I'm doing. And then [redacted] asked if I would be willing to participate in a transcribed interview.

Q Okay. Do you think you had like -- how many interactions with them do you think you had?

A Six, seven.

Q Okay. And were those all via phone, were they via email or a mix?

A Phone, text message. Like, she text messaged my flight itinerary to me. And emails would be like: Are you available for a phone call? So I would say the substantive part of our conversations was on the phone.

Q And how many phone calls do you think you had?

A Probably six to eight, something like that.

Q Okay. And did you ever speak with Congressman Jordan directly?

A At the Lincoln Dinner, he came up to me and shook my hand and said that he would be in touch, and I told him that I had been in communications with [redacted] He said [redacted] was great. And that was the extent of our interaction.

Q And that's the only interaction you've had with him directly?

A Yes.

Q Have you spoken with anybody else in Congressman Jordan's office?

A I don't think so.

Q Okay. And you said you provided a letter at the end of August. And did you also provide a copy of your formal declaration?

A To Congressman Jordan?

Q Uh-huh. Or to anyone else in Congress.

A Yes, to Congressman Jordan, to Senators Durbin, Grassley, and Johnson.

Q Have you provided any other documents to Congress?

A I have sent to Congressman Jordan's office additional information about the updated training on whistleblower being commingled with insider threat training.

Q Okay.

A And I made that as a formal disclosure to their office as well.

Q And was that -- what actually did you send? Was it a copy of the announcement? Was it a description? What did you actually send?

A Slide deck. There's photographs of the slide show that is in the training.

Q And could we have a copy of whatever you sent?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Mr. Meyer. I'll put that on the list.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you send any other documents?

A I don't think so.

Q Okay. And taking a step back to the slide deck, how did you come into possession of that?

A An individual sent them to me anonymously, not wanting to get himself in trouble.

Q How did you receive them?

A He sent me a Signal message.

Q Okay. So it was a Signal message from a phone number you didn't know?

A No, it's from an individual who I know.

Q Okay.

A And does not want to be brought into it. He has concerns -- he and she -- he or she has concerns -- and essentially laundered the information to me because I'm burned, and me bringing the information forward doesn't out this individual.

Q Okay. Is the individual an FBI employee?

A Yes.

Q When you spoke with Congressman Jordan's staff or Senator Cruz or Senator Waltz -- or Congressman Waltz's staff, did you suggest other individuals that they should speak with?

A I don't remember. I think I might have just -- because my circle of individuals who I am friendly with, but I believe they already either predated my communication with the office or was coinciding.

Q Okay.

A So maybe just referring to: Well, have you talked to so and so?

Q And do you recall who those people might have been?

A Yes.

Q Could you share their names?

A Kyle Seraphin and Garret O'Boyle. And I think that's it.

Q Okay. I want to move on. I want to make sure I'm clear on the timeline, both for your whole career and then also around the events in question.

So you said you started at the FBI in 2014. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q In Omaha?

A I started in 2014 in Quantico.

Q In Quantico, right.

A And then in November was sent to Sioux City, Iowa, which is a resident agency for the Omaha Division.

Q And you were there until 2021?

A Yes.

Q And June of 2021?

A Yes.

Q And did you ask to be transferred, or how did that come about that you were transferred to Jacksonville?

A I worked on Indian Country violations, and it's tough to slot the field, so they give an exit benefit. So even though I was serendipitously sent to that assignment, to entice people to volunteer to do it, if you work a certain length of time in that position, you can get to transfer somewhere else after a certain length of time elapsed.

So I fulfilled my obligation there and then was able to sort of pick from an array of options to transfer. And we, as a family, elected to go to Daytona.

Q Okay. So you were in Daytona from June until October, primarily doing human trafficking and child sexual abuse cases. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q And were you doing those -- did you work with the local sheriff's office on that, or was that based out of the FBI, or how did that work?

A So I opened FBI cases, but I worked in conjunction with the Volusia County Sheriff's Office, Lake County, Flagler County, and Putnam County Sheriff's Offices. Those are the four counties that we interface with, as well as the Daytona Beach Police Department.

And I worked those cases on paper, on my timesheet, until October. And then, even though I continued to work those cases on my timesheet, I was told that I was working domestic terrorism.

Q And so what were your responsibilities, just again, when you were purely assigned to those cases or purely working on those cases? What were your responsibilities?

A I mean, assist the local partner as needed. But if we were able to adopt an investigation of possession of child pornography, traveling across State lines to engage in sexual activity with a minor, human trafficking allegations, those -- if there was a Federal nexus to open up a Federal case and bring those to the Federal prosecutor, I would do that.

Q Okay. So they were local cases, but your job was to figure out if there was a Federal crime involved?

A Yes. And then oftentimes there's both. So you had the opportunity to sort of pick what's going to be the better, more strategic option.

And then also, a lot of leads were sent my way to identify victims from other field offices who were kids who, essentially, produced images of themselves at the behest of pedophiles. And we would try to identify them and then bring them forward as victims for those cases in other field offices.

Q And could you estimate about how many cases you handled? Again, just during that time period.

A Yeah. A few dozen.

Q Okay.

And then you said in October you were told that you were going to be put on the Joint Terrorism Task Force. Is that right?

A At the end of September, just before the fiscal year ended on September 30th.

Q Okay. And at that time, how was that communicated to you?

A Gilbert Balli, the ASAC over the resident agencies, called up my acting supervisor, Rob Corley (ph). It was at the end of the day, and I was in the room with Rob when he called, and he said, "We're going to be moving Steve over to work domestic terrorism on the JTTF."

Q But you said that even after that you continued to work on the human trafficking and child abuse cases that you had previously worked on, right?

A Yes. Rob told me that I could go ahead and do both until the new boss arrived. And then when the new boss arrived, I explained that situation, and he told me that he didn't have a problem with me doing that as long as it didn't interfere with the JTTF work -- because who is going to say no to someone doing more work?

Q And you referred in the earlier line of questioning to an on-the-spot financial award that you received?

A Yes.

Q And that was in association with your performance on behalf of the sheriff's office. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q Which sheriff's office was that?

A Flagler.

Q And you said that you were effectively detailed to that office. Is that a fair way to cover for somebody who was not there?

A I wasn't officially detailed.

Q Okay.

A I just approached them and said, "Look, I will try to keep the ship afloat until you find somebody, until either the person who is assigned here comes back or you find another permanent person."

So I fielded the tips that were sent to them at a local level and then opened up investigations that I could take Federal.

Q Okay.

A And anything that I wouldn't be able to take Federal but could be a State prosecution, I would bring to the State prosecutor.

Q And you said that was for about a 6-month period?

A So the full-time person started there as a replacement, I would guess, probably July of 2022.

Q Okay.

A So it was shortly after I got my award that they brought on somebody new.

Q Okay. And when did you start doing that work?

A I mean, I started doing that work immediately upon arriving to my office.

Q Okay.

A But I took on that responsibility. I vocalized that to them. I don't remember the time that he went out on medical leave, but it was probably early on in 2022.

Q Okay. So from early 2022 until about July 2022, you were handling all of the leads for the -- I'm sorry. I forgot the name of the sheriff's office.

A Flagler. Yeah, they come through. They're called cyber tips. They come through a database. That gets filtrated and then disseminated to whatever area that they think might have the responsibility for it.

Q Okay.

A So I was given an access to that database that locals would typically have and monitored it and was either closing things down that were not -- couldn't be prosecuted, or if they could be prosecuted, I would open them up.

Q Okay. Do you have an -- could you estimate how many cases or matters you handled during that time period?

A I brought a couple ahead to prosecution. But then there are so many that you can't prosecute or you can't determine a subject or something. So I would estimate two to three a week would come in that I could close down because it was mistaken or something like that.

Q Okay.

A So whatever time that is, if you extrapolate it out.

Q Okay.

And then during that time, you were also assigned to the JTTF, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then your last day with the JTTF, your last day doing any of that was August 20 --

A September --

Q September --

A 19th --

Q -- 19th, okay.

A -- was the last day because I was suspended that day.

Q Okay. I want to move on to something slightly different.

Your attorney mentioned earlier that you -- the difference between unclassified, classified material -- classified materials and unclassified law enforcement sensitive information.

Do you understand the difference between that, between those things?

A I would say I have a general understanding that comes from some training, but in reality all of my work was unclassified --

Q Okay.

A -- until I was moved over to work on domestic terrorism. So it was not something that I extended a whole lot of brain power to memorizing because everything was unclassified. It wasn't worth the time investment.

Q Did you have a security clearance?

A I did.

Q What was your level?

A It was TS/SCI.

Q Okay. And what kind of training did you receive as part of that clearance?

A You get training in the academy and then you have annual training on classification and protocols that could go into it. It's virtual training.

I received that clearance, though, when I was first assigned to Sioux City, and I was told you're the new guy and you have to be able to go into the SCIF to turn the alarm off if it goes off. So they issued me a TS/SCI clearance.

Q Did you have to turn the alarm off a lot?

A Yes. We had a very old building.

Q So you have received training in classified information.

A Yes.

Q Just it maybe wasn't -- it was virtual.

A Yes. And I've done the polygraph for it as well.

Q Okay. When did you do the polygraph for it?

A I did it towards the end of my tenure. I know it was after 5 years because they are supposed to do it every 5 years, and I thought that that was concerning that they hadn't done mine.

And I did that probably in the 6th year that I was in Sioux City, and the polygrapher asked me if I wanted to even have it, and I told him that I had to turn off the alarm, so I needed it.

Q Okay. Have you ever been in a position where you've accessed classified information without authorization maybe because you didn't understand it was classified or something like that?

A No, not classified.

Q Okay. Have you ever accessed -- have you ever accessed classified information without authorization?

A Not without authorization.

Q Okay. Have you ever removed classified information from a device without being authorized to do so?

A Classified, no.

Q Have you ever removed information from a classified system that maybe was not classified without being authorized to do so?

A Yes.

Q What were the circumstances?

A My attorney asked me to get him information about the employee handbook and disciplinary processes. So I went and accessed those, as well as a flow chart of the way the Inspection Division works and the OPR process works. And I got copies of the last five OPR quarterlies as a go-by for precedent for punishment for my situation. I was hoping they had some sort of rubric to go by that would be an acceptable punishment.

Q And when was that?

A I got that after I met with my SAC on September 1st. So I believe it was the 3rd or the 4th.

Q Okay. And was the attorney who asked you to do that, was it Mr. Meyer?

A No.

Q Who was that?

A It was Dan Isaacs.

Q Okay. Who -- what -- is Mr. Isaacs with a firm or --

A He is a defense attorney and does other legal matters, and he's in New York City.

Q How did you find Mr. Isaacs?

A My older sister is an attorney, and I called her and asked her if she could recommend that I talk to anybody, and she recommended Mr. Isaacs.

Q Did you pay Mr. Isaacs?

A No. He did everything gratis.

Q So you obtained -- you said you accessed the employee handbook and some disciplinary-related information from the high side system but it was not classified?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And you provided that to your attorney?

A Yes.

Q Do you know if he did anything with that?

A I don't. I emailed it to him, and I assumed that if he had some sort of record keeping system, he did whatever he needed to do with it.

Q Okay.

We talked a little bit ago about the declaration that you submitted, and I'm going to admit that into the record. Exhibit 2. It's dated September 21st, 2022.

[Friend Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall writing this?

A Yes.

Q Who prepared this declaration?

A I prepared it in collaboration with Mr. Meyer and Mr. Foster.

Q Mr. Who?

A Mr. Foster.

Q Mr. Foster is Jason Foster sitting there?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Did you rely on any documents to prepare this?

A Yes.

Q What documents were those?

A The "Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide."

Q I'm going to get back to that in a second, but before we do, paragraph 19 of the declaration references a September 16th, 2022, letter.

Can you explain what that's a reference to?

Mr. Foster. What paragraph?

[redacted] Paragraph 19.

Mr. Friend. I believe that's the letter for -- that's the email that I got from my assistant special agent in charge telling me not to come to work on the 24th.

[redacted] Okay. Have you produced that to anybody in Congress?

Mr. Friend. I don't know. I don't remember. I believe --

Mr. Meyer. I would have to check.

BY [redacted]

Q Could we have --

A I have a copy.

Q Could you produce it to us?

A Yes.

Q Who -- it looks like -- do you know what your attorney did with this --

A This declaration?

Q -- declaration?

A Submitted it to the OIG, the special counsel, and to Congressman Jordan and Senators Grassley, Johnson, and Durbin.

Q Okay. And do you know when he submitted that?

A I believe it was that week. I think it was -- I think we drafted it on Monday, Tuesday of that week. So the 19th, 20th; and 21st, 22nd, somewhere in there, it was submitted. I know we did it forthwith.

Q Okay.

In paragraph nine of this declaration -- and in other places as well -- you cite to the "Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide," I think sometimes also called DIOG.

Can you explain just briefly -- I know we talked about this before, but, again, for the record -- briefly what the DIOG is?

A It's the rule book for the FBI. Like how to do intelligence gathering and investigations.

Q Did you access the DIOG when you were writing this document?

A Yes.

Q And where did you access the DIOG?

A I did get a copy of the DIOG that I sent to my attorney. Because of the disclosure, I went forward and included Appendix J.

Q Where did you get a copy of the DIOG?

A On the FBI system.

Q From the classified system of from the --

A Yes.

Q Okay. So you also removed that from the classified system?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And do you know which version of the DIOG you accessed?

A I believe it's probably the most up-to-date one, because if you look for DIOG, it comes up pretty quickly because it needs to be at your fingertips.

Q Okay. And when did you access the DIOG?

A The same day I got all the other information. So it was the 3rd or the 4th of September.

Q Okay.

On page 5 of your declaration, there is a long block quote. Do you see that?

Mr. Meyer. What paragraph? Do you have the paragraph?

[redacted] So it's paragraph 9, but the paragraph -- but it's not labeled as nine on that page because it starts on the prior page.

Mr. Friend. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you see at the beginning it reads: "Anyone in a supervisory role, dot, dot, dot." At the beginning of that, there's some markings that says: "(U//FOUO)."

A Yes.

Q Do you know what that means?

A Unclassified for official use only.

Q And what's your understanding of the term for official use only?

A To my understanding, if you're using it for work-related matters within the FBI.

Q Okay. And I'm not sure if you're aware of this, but the older versions of the DIOG are available on the FBI vault website.

A Yes.

Q So I want to introduce into the record a section from the FBI DIOG. This is the September 17th, 2021, version of the DIOG. And I'm introducing section 2.7.1.

This section reads that:

"A departure from the DIOG is a deliberate deviation from a specific known requirement or action governed by the DIOG?"

"The word 'deliberate' means the employee was aware of the DIOG requirement and affirmatively chose to depart from it for operational reasons before the activity took place.

"Approval of the departure must be based upon a specific circumstance involving a specific administrative or operational need.

"An approval may be for the duration of an investigation or relate to a specific classification, cannot extend beyond the scope of authority of the approving official, and must be approved in accordance with the guidance provided in this subsection."

Were you aware of this paragraph before I read it to you just now?

A In the communications from inspector general, they mentioned the latitude to depart from rules that are spelled out in the DIOG.

Q Okay. Did they cite to this paragraph, if you recall?

A I don't know, but the content of which was very similar.

Q Okay.

Discussing the January 6th -- handling of the January 6th cases, you referred to a call that took place shortly after January 6th. Do you recall that?

A Yes.

Q Were you on that call?

A No.

Q Who told you about the call?

A Several members of my JTTF, as well as my former supervisor.

Q Do you know if they were on the call?

A Yes.

Q They were on the call.

Did they ask -- did they mention anything about a departure?

A No. My former supervisor told me that the question went out on that call about why they were following this departure, I guess. I don't know if that term "departure" was used. And that's when they got the feedback that it was to get buy-in.

Q Okay. Were you involved in the decision-making process around how January 6th cases would be handled?

A In my office or in general?

Q In general.

A No.

Q Were you -- sorry.

You started with the FBI in 2014. You were a special agent for the entire duration of your time there?

A Yes.

Q Were you ever in a supervisory position?

A Yes.

Q In Daytona?

A No.

Q Okay. And nobody reported up to you?

A No.

Q Okay.

A I mean, there were a day or two where the boss was out and they asked me to be the acting for the day, but never in any sort of permanent slot.

Q Okay. So you weren't in kind of the leadership capacity of the office in any way?

A No.

Q Were you ever based out of Washington, D.C.?

A No.

Q Were you ever based out of the Washington Field Office?

A No.

Q Okay.

In your declaration, you cite to various paragraphs of the DIOG, including 3.5.2.1. This is in paragraph 9, I think on the same page. Approval/Review of Investigative or Collection Activities. And Appendix J: Case File Management and Indexing.

Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And so from your perspective, the cases were being handled under the authority of the DIOG, basically, or they should have been handled under the authority of the DIOG?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the FBI's Counter Terrorism Program Guide?

A No.

Q Have you ever read the FBI's Counter Terrorism Program Guide?

A No.

Q Are you aware of whether it's classified or not?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with, for example, the FBI Counter Terrorism Program Guide guidelines for managing cases related to a mass event?

A No.

Q Did anybody ever mention the Counter Terrorism Program Guide to you in your office?

A No.

Q Are you aware of whether the Counter Terrorism Program Guide describes permissible procedures akin to those described in your affidavit in which the field office in which the subject resides would open cases but significant investigative steps may be taken elsewhere?

A No.

Q Okay. And so you're not aware of whether the DIOG or the Counter Terrorism Program Guide kind of governed the handling of January 6th cases?

A Multiple cases for the January 6th investigations were criminal cases. So those would have been under the DIOG.

Q Okay. But you weren't involved in any of the decision-making out of Washington, D.C., as to how the cases -- which guide might cover the handling of the cases?

A No. But when I see a case that has a criminal designation number on it, that's my belief, that it's going to be governed by the DIOG.

Q Okay. And nobody said anything otherwise to you in your office?

A No.

Q Okay.

You said that after your clearance was revoked you were essentially without pay for how many weeks?

A So I had about 7 weeks of accrued leave that I was allowed to exhaust, and then since that point I've been unpaid.

Q Okay. And so could you -- do you recall the last time you received a paycheck from the FBI?

A If I -- September 19th, go out 7 weeks from there, it would probably be into early November.

Q Okay. And so you have not received a paycheck since early November?

A Correct.

Q Through today?

A Correct.

Q How did you get here today?

A I was flown.

Q And who paid for that flight?

A I believe the committee or whatever funds were used from -- I know I didn't pay and that [redacted] sent me an itinerary.

Q Okay. So you don't know -- you just got the ticket in your text message, you said?

A She -- well, she texted me the hotel, but she emailed me my flight itinerary.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Just for the record, the committee paid for his trip here and the hotel.

[redacted] Okay. Just getting clarity.

[redacted] And are you -- you're represented by counsel today?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

[redacted] And is that Mr. Meyer?

Mr. Meyer. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q How did you find Mr. Meyer?

A I was referred to Empower Oversight and Jason Foster when I sent my original letter to Congressman Jordan's office. They said that his organization was charitable, that would -- was intended to assist whistleblowers. And then Mr. Foster retained Mr. Meyer for me through his organization.

Q Okay. So it was Congressman Jordan's office that referred you to Mr. Foster?

A Yes.

Q And do you know who it was that referred you?

A No, I don't. I mean, I know I communicated with [redacted] There might have been somebody else that was in that chain, but my interface has always been with [redacted]

Q Okay. Are you paying Mr. Foster?

A No.

Q Are you paying Mr. Meyer?

A There was an original retainer, and I covered $1,000 of it.

Q And how did you pay for it?

A Through my own personal savings.

Q Okay. Were you still receiving an FBI paycheck at the time?

A At that time, yes.

Q Okay. Do you know if anybody else is compensating either Mr. Foster or Mr. Meyer for your -- for their services at this time?

A I believe Empower Oversight covers some of Mr. Meyer's retainer, and I don't know who pays Jason. I think he kind of runs his own show out of Empower Oversight.

Mr. Meyer. I mean, I can put on the record that the time I put in that's not covered by either Stephen or Jason's organization is just my donation.

Mr. Foster. It far exceeds what we were able to afford.

Mr. Meyer. Yeah, you're at about 200 percent of your retainer right now, chief.

[Laughter.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you ever heard of GiveSendGo?

A Yes.

Q What is GiveSendGo?

A It's a crowdsourcing mechanism to raise money for various reasons.

Q Okay. How are you familiar with GiveSendGo?

A It's in the public domain. And I am aware of a particular GiveSendGo account that Kyle Seraphin set up to raise money for one of -- for Garret O'Boyle.

Q Okay. And did Kyle Seraphin tell you about that directly?

A Yes. We talked about it.

Q Okay. And, I'm sorry, who did you say -- what did you say the purpose of that account is?

A We are raising money for Garret O'Boyle.

Q Okay. And how do they go about raising money?

A Whenever we have an opportunity to advertise the existence of the account, we try to encourage individuals who are feeling charitable to donate to that cause.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce the GiveSendGo cover page. We just printed this off of the website I think yesterday at 5:38 p.m. And this is exhibit 4.

[Friend Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Foster. I'm sorry, exhibit what? Four?

[redacted] Four.

BY [redacted]

Q On the second page of this -- and, again, this is a printout of a website, so it's just used to scroll down on the actual website.

The second full paragraph reads: "This fund will be used to support three whistleblower families who have been suspended without pay and legal bills incurred by Kyle Seraphin, Stephen Friend, and a currently unnamed FBI whistleblower with four young children, including a newborn baby only weeks old."

Do you know, were you -- did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Did you -- were you in contact with Kyle when he set this -- with Mr. Seraphin when he set this up?

A I know I was in contact with him starting in September. So I would have to look back to when he had started, when he actually set it up. I know that he set it up pretty quickly after Garret was suspended, which would have been September 26th.

Q Okay. Has the money derived from this fund been used to support either your legal bills or your personal funds?

A No.

Q Have you received any money from this fundraiser?

A No.

Q So why do you think Mr. Seraphin would list your name here?

A He's offered, as managing it, if I needed any funds from it, and I have refused it, to take money from it, because I want all the money to go to Garret.

Q Okay. Have you received money from any other type of online funders and platform?

A No.

Q Have you received money from any other fundraising or other source not online?

A Kash Patel's organization gifted me $5,000.

Q Okay. Who is Kash Patel?

A He is a former government representative and now runs an outside organization.

Q And what's the name of his organization?

A It's like Winning With Kash.

Q Could it be Win With Kash?

A Or Win With Kash, yes.

Q K-a-s-h?

A Yes.

Q And do you know what his role was prior to what he's doing now?

A I don't know his official title. I know he was high ranking in intelligence, in counterinsurgency.

Q Okay. According to his website, he was the chief of staff to the Department of Defense during the Trump administration.

Have you spoken with Kash Patel?

A Yes.

Q How many times?

A He called me originally and offered to gift me the money through his organization. And then he talked to me as a follow-up for trying to get me in touch with the Center for Renewing America. And then exchanged like text messages or something like that as an acquaintance.

Q And you said he initially contacted you?

A Yes.

Q When was that?

A That was, I believe, before -- somewhere around Thanksgiving. I know I was visiting family because I had to pull away from the dinner table to answer his call.

Q Okay. And when did it come about that he gifted you $5,000?

A He immediately did. So it was in the mail within a week, and I received it at the end -- so in November, I believe, of 2022.

Q And when he reached out to you in November, did he indicate how he had learned about you, how he got your information?

A Well, he's, I know, in touch with Kyle, and Kyle told him about my situation. So that's who shared my contact information to Kash, was Kyle.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I'm going to turn it over to my colleague, [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Hi, Mr. Friend. How are you doing today?

A I'm all right.

Q Thank you for being here.

So when you were speaking with Congressman Gaetz, you said that you received permission to make media disclosures. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And who gave you that permission?

A The FBI's Prepublication Review Office.

Q Do you have the name of the specific individual that gave you permission?

A I don't know. I know I received an email, but it was from a general email. But it might have been on the -- do you have it?

Mr. Meyer. Michael G. Seidel.

[redacted] And this is a copy of the permission that was granted that you received from the FBI?

Mr. Meyer. Yes.

[redacted] And I can have a copy of this.

BY [redacted]

Q So can you just tell me what exactly it said in writing with respect to you being able to post media disclosures?

A From my understanding, I could speak to the details of my complaint. And they asked me to not share information about personnel who were not already public, like the special agent in charge or the assistant special agent in charge, because those are on the public website for the FBI.

Q Okay. And so when you say you understood it to allow you to provide information about your complaint, are you referring to the information that you are giving to us today?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so this was in October 21st, 2022?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Did this letter provide a definition of what constitutes media?

A It may. I'd have to look at it to remember.

Q Okay. What is your understanding of what media is?

A A platform that's used to exchange information publicly and disseminate it.

Q Okay. And so before October 21st, 2022, you never made any type of media disclosures with reference to your complaint?

A No, I made media disclosures before.

Q Okay. So it is the case that you made media disclosures prior to receiving this written permission?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Where did you make those media disclosures?

A I had an appearance on Dan Bongino's Saturday show, and that was October 18th or 17th, somewhere in there. Because I know I received the permission the following Monday. So it predated it by a couple of days.

Q Okay. So the only media disclosure you made prior to this October 21st, 2022, letter was on the Dan Bongino show, which you appeared before on October 17th or 18th. Is that correct?

A I think so, yes.

Q Okay. What is the Dan Bongino show?

A It's a once-a-week cable news show that he -- I believe it's an hour long. I was one segment. I believe it was 7 or 8 minutes that I spoke to him.

Q Okay. And did you appear in person or was this virtual?

A Virtual.

Q Okay. And where did you take this interview from?

A My driveway.

Q Okay. And was it recorded via video, or was it just something that you called in?

A It was recorded on video in a truck, and we recorded it on Friday evening, and it was edited and aired the following night.

Q What did you disclose in this media appearance that you had with Dan Bongino?

A I spoke about the details of my complaint.

Q What specifically did you state in this media disclosure to Dan Bongino?

A Talked about the -- not following the DIOG rules and that my concern about manipulating statistical information to give a false impression that domestic terrorism is around the country when, in fact, it's -- those numbers are being derived from one particular incident.

He asked me -- I think that was around the time that there was a case going on with -- some Russia case, and I didn't really have any knowledge about it. So I didn't currently offer a comment.

Q Okay. And did you provide any type of documents to Dan Bongino before going on the show or after?

A I might have sent him the complaint, but at that point, it was public.

Q And by complaint, do you mean this declaration that you provided that's dated September 21st, 2022, or are you referring to the letter that you provided to the various Congressmen?

A The declaration.

Q Okay.

A Whatever Congressman -- or Senator Johnson and Grassley published.

Q Okay. And so outside of this declaration that you provided to Dan Bongino, did you give him anything else with respect to your complaint?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you give him anything, any type of information that did not have to do with your complaint that contained any type of FBI files?

A No.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Have you engaged in any discussions about the possibility of being paid for relaying your story, such as compensation about writing a book or any articles?

A Yes.

Q And which is it, a book or articles?

A I have never been paid for articles.

Q Okay.

A I have a book that's in pre-sale.

Q Okay. What's the name of your book?

A "True Blue: My Journey From Beat Cop to FBI Whistleblower."

Q And when is that scheduled to be released?

A July 18th, 2023.

Q Okay. So you said it's in pre-sale now. Can you explain what that means?

A You can buy a copy of it now on Amazon, and when it eventually goes to press and published, it will be delivered to you in July.

Q Okay. Have you obtained any income from the pre-sale?

A No.

Q When did it go on pre-sale?

A Two weeks ago.

Q Okay. So it just went on?

A Yes. Yes, I think it was two Mondays ago.

Q Okay.

When did you decide to write a book?

A I was approached by Post Hill Press in -- late September? So it was shortly after my suspension. And I then talked it over with my wife and had nothing but free time. So I typed a book of 60,000 words in 30 days and sent it to them.

Q Okay. And you said it was Post Hill Press?

A Yes.

Q Who from Post Hill Press approached you?

A His name is Anthony, and he has an Italian last name that I just see it and know that it's got lots of Z's and C's.

Q That's fine. Could I ask your attorney to follow up with us on that name?

Mr. Meyer. Sure.

Mr. Friend. And spoke to him. And then after I had the manuscript and communicated back, there was an editor who I've been in communication with going back and forth where they do original edits and then a final proofread and then asked me to submit any blurbs or recommendations from individuals, as well as introduction and prologue and formatting and then that sort of thing.

[11:07 a.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Did Anthony with the Italian last name -- did he indicate how he'd learned about you?

A Well, he learned about me because my name became in the public sphere when Miranda Devine wrote a story about me in the New York Post. And she wrote a book, "Laptop From Hell," that his company published. So I believe that she facilitated that because she was friends with my attorney, Dan Isaacs, in New York.

Q Okay.

A And, through word of mouth, I was able to communicate with Anthony.

Q Do you have an agent to help you with your book sales or your book discussions?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you receive an advance for your book?

A No.

Q Does your contract include any type of funding for a book tour?

A I believe it's going to be included, yes.

Q Okay. Do you have a copy of the contract for your book?

A Yes, but not on me, but, I mean, that's --

Q Could that be produced to us?

A -- something I could forward to you, yes.

Q Does your book include any co-authors or people who may have written an introduction or a forward?

A Yes. Miranda Devine is doing the introduction, and Terry Turchie is doing the prologue.

Q And who is Ms. Devine?

A She is a columnist for the New York Post and an author.

Q Okay. And I think you said you met her through your attorney. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q And can you describe, did she contact you? How did that --

A I had a phone call with her.

Q Okay. And she called you?

A No. My attorney was there with me. So we did, like, a three-way call.

Q Okay.

Mr. Meyer. And this would be Dan Isaacs.

[redacted] Dan Isaacs, not you. Okay.

Mr. Meyer. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q And so this would've been in September, right?

A Yes. It's September, October -- like, late September, early October.

Q Okay.

A Somewhere in there.

Q And under what terms did she agree to write the introduction to your book? So is she being compensated, for example?

A No. She's just doing it out of generosity.

Q Have you edited her forward, or do you know what it says?

A No. She hasn't sent me her copy yet. It's supposed to be in by the end of this month.

Q Okay. And you said somebody else wrote the introduction to your book?

A Terry Turchie.

Q How do you spell that?

A T-e-r-r-y, T-u-r-c-h-i-e.

Q Okay. Who is Mr. Turchie?

A He is a retired FBI agent and an author as well.

Q And --

Mr. Meyer. Can we establish why this is related to the legislative purpose?

[redacted] You know, so, as a preliminary matter, we have 60 minutes; we can ask whatever we want. It's a transcribed interview. There's no rules. As a practical matter, it goes to his motivation for speaking about his situation.

Mr. Meyer. Okay. Okay.

So just remember, it's voluntary.

[redacted] It's voluntary. You can decline to answer any questions.

[redacted] If you're going to ask about his motivation for speaking, why don't you ask him about how he doesn't have any income right now?

[redacted] [redacted] I'm actually asking the questions, so --

[redacted] Well, you said you're interested about the motivation for speaking --

[redacted] I have 60 minutes. I have 60 minutes. And if you don't want me to go down this road, he's welcome to -- he's welcome to --

[redacted] It's a voluntary interview. He can answer whatever he --

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] -- wants, and he's got some lawyers here. But --

Mr. Foster. I think the concern is, yes, as [redacted] points out and as Dan has pointed out, it's a voluntary interview. This whole line, we've let go on. It's fine. But I think there's a legitimate question as to how this is related to the committee's work and what your legislative purpose is.

We're spending government time -- you are spending government time and government resources to inquire into his exercise of his First Amendment rights. And I'm just not sure as to what the purpose of the committee -- if that's what your view of the committee's role is, and why is that? What is the legislative purpose?

[redacted] Thank you for that. We are paused right now, and I think it's been 2 minutes.

What I will say -- and are we still on the record? Okay.

What I will say is that, you know, we do have 60 minutes to ask questions. If he doesn't want to answer, he's welcome to decline. But there has been no scoping agreed upon with us. And so I'm going to continue my question line.

Mr. Foster. Right. But what we're asking is for you to -- in order for him to make an informed decision about whether he wants to voluntarily answer your questions about his exercise of his First Amendment rights, in order for him to make that decision, we'd like for you to articulate how this relates to the legislative purpose or oversight purpose of this committee.

[redacted] And thank you --

Mr. Foster. So if you can --

[redacted] -- for that. Thank you --

Mr. Foster. If you're offering that --

[redacted] -- for that. I am not under any obligation to provide that to you.

Mr. Foster. I understand you're --

[redacted] If you'd like to tell your client to decline to answer, that's fine.

Mr. Foster. I understand you're not under obligation. I'm asking you if you could articulate a connection to the legislative purpose of the committee so that he can make an informed decision about whether he wants to voluntarily answer your questions.

[redacted] I'm just asking him some questions about his sources of compensation. He earlier said that -- he earlier indicated that he had no income.

Mr. Foster. Which he has answered.

[redacted] I would like to continue my question line, and we are -- it is now 11:12. We have been off the record for about 4 minutes. So we are going to go until it's 11:22.

BY [redacted]

Q Who is Mr. Turchie?

A He's a retired FBI agent.

Q Okay. And how did you meet him?

A He reached out to me in support of my predicament after I was suspended.

Q And when was that?

A I was suspended September 19th.

Q Okay. And under what terms did he agree to write an introduction to your book?

A No terms. He's just a really nice guy.

Q Okay. Has he compensated you in any way?

A No.

Q Is he being compensated in any way?

A No.

Q Okay.

Mr. Meyer. And can you just summarize what compensation you've actually received?

Mr. Friend. I have not received any compensation at all.

BY [redacted]

Q For the book?

A Correct.

Q Do you know how much your book is going to be costing, how much a copy of your book will cost?

A No, I don't know. I think they'll probably put it on Amazon for one amount and it'll fluctuate with demand.

Q Okay.

I want to go back to your declaration. On paragraph 16 of your declaration, you say, "At no point was I advised or counseled on where to take my disclosure beyond the reprising officials above. The threatened reprisal constituted a de facto gag on my whistleblowing."

Do you recall writing this?

A Yes.

Q And what did you mean by a "de facto gag"?

A When I sat in a meeting with my supervisors and brought my concerns forward, they said, you have the right to bring that forward to us. And then there was no followup of, maybe we should take this to a third party or another way to do it.

And then, essentially, by ordering me to be AWOL the next day, it kind of separated me from my work colleagues, from the work that I was doing. And then it was one of these situations where nobody wanted to talk to you, and just wait for the smoke to clear on you.

Q Uh-huh.

A So that's -- if I'm making a, at the time, pretty uneducated whistleblower disclosure to a frontline supervisor, I think that they should probably identify that and say that they're -- you know, go through the processes if it's a, you know, concern of mine that I could -- lay out the avenues for me.

Q Okay.

Did you ever undergo whistleblower training at the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And can you describe that training?

A It's virtual training. Well, now it's co-mingled with threat -- insider --

Q Uh-huh.

A And you click through a PowerPoint and then take a test.

Q And how often is that?

A Once a year.

Q Did you undergo any training when you were in Quantico when you began your career?

A The same training.

Q Just virtual?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay.

A Yes.

Q Did you ever submit your complaint to the DOJ inspector general?

A Yes.

Q And what were the circumstances of that?

A In the aftermath of my suspension, on September 19, 2022, I drafted the declaration, and my attorneys and I edited it and then submitted it to Office of Special Counsel, Office of Inspector General, Senator Grassley, Senator Johnson, Senator Durbin, and Congressman Jordan.

Mr. Meyer. Do you want me to place on the record what my legal advice was to you on that?

Mr. Friend. Sure.

Mr. Meyer. So, in my experience with the FBI, you can file in one of two places. You can go with OPR, or you can go to DOJ IG. The OPR --

[redacted] And, I'm sorry, is that FBI OPR or DOJ OPR?

Mr. Meyer. FBI OPR.

[redacted] Thank you.

Mr. Meyer. So my experience with FBI OPR -- that office has been in a little bit of a turmoil lately. And, in general, they don't do as good a job as handling it as the DOJ IG, which is expeditious. And one of the things that I advise my clients is that speed is important, because the longer this goes out, the more costly it becomes.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Meyer. So it's a standard practice for all my clients, not just Steve, to file with the DOJ IG, and then it goes over to OARM for adjudication.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you for providing that advice that you provided to your client.

Mr. Meyer. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Did the inspector general -- anybody from the inspector general ever contact you about your case?

A I received an email from the Inspector General's Office.

Q When was that?

A I don't know the date. I don't know. I know we received an email that -- and I -- I'm sorry, I had a phone call with them --

Q Okay.

A -- within the first few weeks after my suspension. They were pretty quick in responding. Had a conversation with one of their attorneys about the details of my complaint, then subsequently received an email from them saying that they had declined to pursue the matter.

Q Let's get back to the phone call. When was that phone call?

Mr. Friend. Do you remember?

Mr. Meyer. We'd have to look it up.

BY [redacted]

Q Were you represented by counsel?

A Yes.

Q And how long was that phone call?

A An hour.

Q Do you recall who you spoke with?

A No. It was a female that we were having trouble with, because we had to go on the phone; we were going to do a Zoom.

Mr. Meyer. That's right. We couldn't get the Zoom to come up.

BY [redacted]

Q And so has the inspector general rendered a decision in your case?

A Yes. They've declined to pursue it and recommended that I take it to the Office of Professional Responsibility from the FBI.

Q And that was in November?

Mr. Meyer. December, I think it was.

Mr. Friend. Yeah.

Mr. Meyer. It was early December.

Mr. Foster. To be clear, you're talking about the underlying disclosure, not your claims of retaliation?

Mr. Friend. Correct.

Mr. Foster. The OIG has not rendered a decision as to whether to open or what to do about the claims of retaliation.

Mr. Friend. Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q Have you made a separate filing with respect to the claims of retaliation?

A Yes.

Q And what is the status of that?

A Pending.

Q Okay.

So I want to introduce a January 31, 2023, letter from Empower Oversight regarding a request for records relating to DOJ OIG's decision not to investigate a whistleblower allegation of systemic abuses by the FBI. We'll mark this as exhibit 5.

[Friend Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Have you previously produced this to the committee?

Mr. Meyer. No.

Mr. Friend. I don't think so.

Mr. Meyer. We did not submit it to the committee.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

So, on page 11 of the letter, it says on December 2, 2022, which is about 2-1/2 months after you filed the complaint, the inspector general informed you that they're declining to open an investigation into your allegations.

I assume that's the email that you received?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So it was in December of 2022.

Have you -- according to the Empower letter, the OIG recommended that you take your allegations to the FBI's Inspection Division. Is that accurate?

A Yes.

Q And what is the Inspection Division?

A It's essentially an internal affairs mechanism for the agency.

Q Okay. And did you take your allegations to them?

A No.

Q Okay.

Mr. Meyer. They are the one that has the open administrative review, though.

Mr. Friend. Yes. Yeah.

[redacted] But that's separate.

Mr. Friend. Yeah, that's separate.

Mr. Foster. That's a different scope.

BY [redacted]

Q So are you appealing the OIG decision in any way?

A No.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the Office of Special Counsel?

A Yes.

Q What is your understanding of what the Office of Special Counsel is?

A It's an investigative arm for any particular government agency that reviews out --

Q Okay.

A -- righteous allegations against -- of misconduct.

Q Okay. Yeah. According to its website, it's an independent Federal investigative and prosecutorial agency. Its primary mission is to safeguard the merit system by protecting Federal employees and applicants from prohibited personnel practices, especially reprisals for whistleblowing.

Have you had any engagement with the Office of Special Counsel?

A Yes.

Q Can you describe that?

A Submitted the declaration to them --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and they rendered their decision.

We did not have a conversation with that office?

Mr. Meyer. Not before their decision letter, you're asking?

Mr. Friend. Yeah.

Mr. Meyer. Correct.

Mr. Friend. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with Sharyl Attkisson?

A Yes.

Mr. Foster. Can I just ask a clarifying question before you move on?

So you made a disclosure to OSC. FBI agents -- the OSC does not have jurisdiction to investigate reprisal for FBI agents. So you did not make a reprisal claim to the OSC --

Mr. Meyer. It was the disclosure --

Mr. Friend. Correct.

[redacted] Thank you for that.

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Attkisson posted on her website a story, "Office of Special Counsel dismisses FBI whistleblower complaint about the agency."

Are you familiar with this?

A No.

Q Okay. I'm going to enter this into the record as exhibit 6.

[Friend Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know how Ms. Attkisson would have come into possession of this purported letter from the Office of Special Counsel?

A I told her.

Q You provided a copy to her?

A Yes.

Q And were you aware that she had produced this on her website?

A No, but it doesn't surprise me. She's a journalist.

Q Okay.

According to the letter -- and if you want to look through it quickly, does the letter look like it's tracking with the actual letter you received?

A Yep. It looks like she took the letter.

Q Okay.

So, according to the letter, it concludes -- the OSC concluded that, "although we understand you strongly object to the FBI leadership's decision to depart from the DIOG's guidance for the J6 Task Force casefiles, you were not involved in the decision-making process, and you have not provided specific information to establish that the departure was made improperly. Therefore, we cannot find with a substantial likelihood that the agency has violated a law, rule, or regulation, or has abused its authority. Therefore, we will take no further action in this matter."

Have you attempted to appeal OSC's determination?

A No.

Q Okay. So, at this time, both the OIG and OSC have denied your complaint.

Mr. Meyer. This is the disclosure?

[redacted] The disclosure.

Mr. Meyer. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you pursuing any other administrative remedies at this time?

A No.

Q Are you pursuing any other legal remedies?

A With regard to my disclosure?

Q Uh-huh.

A Legally, no.

Q Are you pursuing any other --

A Communicating with Congress.

Q Okay.

And you said with regard to your disclosure. Are you pursuing other remedies unrelated to your disclosure?

A Yes.

Q And what is that?

A Speaking about the details of my declaration.

Q Are you pursuing legal remedies -- a court case, for example?

A No.

Q And are you pursuing any administrative remedies?

A For my declaration?

Q For the reprisal that you've described.

A Yes.

Q What are those?

A The inspector general is investigating the reprisal.

Q Okay. And right now that is still open?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Mr. Foster. He also still has a pending records request that's been made.

[redacted] Thank you for that.

We can go off the record now.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

I believe Mr. Meyer had some comments he wanted to make.

Mr. Meyer. Yes. So three sort of wrap-up things from the last hour.

The first is, as my co-counsel Jason has pointed out, this is a -- there was a disclosure before DOJ IG in the FBI program. They're a part of it. The disclosure is nonappealable unless they decide not to do anything with the disclosure, they're not going to send it on to Congress, whatever they do. And then the reprisal aspect is still sitting there.

They were both embedded in the same document, so it gets confusing, whether you're talking about the disclosure or the whistleblower complaint.

So there is no appeal process for a disclosure. Effectively, this is, okay? He's brought it before Congress, which is the pinnacle of Article 1 of the Constitution. It's 1 for a reason. Congress is the place where sovereignty lies in our Constitution, so that's why he's brought it up here to Congress.

With OSC, the other thing that we brought back to them -- because there was confusion in the record on this -- is what my client has put into the record in the first hour, which is that he was placed in the AWOL status. He did not refuse to participate. He didn't get to that point, and I won't speculate on whether he would have refused, because, frankly, his supervisor stepped in and took him off the line and sent him home and told him to list himself as AWOL.

I don't understand that process. It doesn't seem to make sense to this former Naval officer. I would've never done that with a sailor. But the FBI seems to have a common practice of it.

And then the last thing, which I think is very important, is that, when -- I was the one who said to Stephen, "I love the constitutional references; it's great. But Congressmen can cite to the Constitution. Special agents should be looking for the regulations." And when he called me and said, "Well, I could use the DIOG," I said, "What is it marked?" And the document -- over the phone, he said -- I said, "Is it law-enforcement sensitive?"

This is why the confusion in the Sec D interview really alarmed me, because I'm hearing from agents on both sides of this issue a confusion of FOUO, law-enforcement sensitive, classified information.

And it was just marked FOUO. Well, with FOUO, it's usable for official government functions. And my position with my client -- and I'll take responsibility for this decision -- is that he can give me an FOUO document if I'm going to use that to accomplish an FBI mission. And the FBI mission, in this case, is the promotion of whistleblowing.

Now, if the current leadership of the FBI does not agree that that's a mission, that's a problem you can take up with them. But whistleblowing is a legitimate Federal mission. Employees are encouraged to do it. And that's why we saw no problem with using FOUO for that.

I would not have the same position if it was marked law-enforcement sensitive, because if it's marked law-enforcement sensitive, there are concerns about prosecution. That's why you control that information -- or protection of sources.

And, again, I'm not hearing, as I go through all my FBI clients -- and I had a whole bucket of these over the last 18 months -- I'm not hearing an understanding of the distinction between the two. I don't know what's going on down at Quantico, but they're not having their operational information in their head.

So that was my --

Mr. Foster. Can I just clarify two quick things very quickly?

So there was questions at the end of the last hour about what is administratively pending or whether things have been appealed.

Not only -- you can't appeal the disclosure to OIG. I also -- my understanding is you can't appeal the disclosure to OSC. So OSC made its decision.

I would note that, if you read through the letter, the OSC does not address the SWAT issue at all, one way or the other. And yet they dismissed -- you know, they didn't proceed with their procedures on what they normally do with disclosures. There's no administrative real process that we can take with that.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Meyer. Or just bring it to the Congress. That's what -- yep.

[redacted] Thank you both.

The time is now 11:36, and we'll begin our hour of questioning.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Friend, during our first hour, we discussed how the FBI's retaliation against you has affected you financially. Just to clarify, you are currently without a paycheck, correct?

A Correct.

Q No monthly income on your behalf?

A None.

Q And your wife lost her job under suspicious circumstances following your suspension from the FBI, correct?

A Yes.

Q And you said that on the day that she came to pick you up after your suspension she was in a brace from having surgery related to removing a tumor from her spine, correct?

A Yes.

Q Has she had to have any other medical treatments during the period of time when you've been suspended?

A Yes.

Q And after she lost her job, you lost your healthcare coverage, correct?

A Yes.

Q And so all of those medical bills have had to be paid out of your own pocket and savings?

A Yes. I was able to get on the Bureau's plan, whether pulling -- just pulling money from my bank account every month, but there was a gap in there where we were uninsured. And she has several health issues, the spinal tumor being one of them.

Q Uh-huh. Do you mind discussing some of those health conditions?

A She has PKD, which is -- she gets these cysts on her kidney, and it's eventually going to lead to needing a kidney transplant. So that has to be monitored regularly.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then her recovery from the tumor operation was extensive, and it's been -- she's finally cleared for regular activity within the last month or two.

Q Uh-huh.

And even though you have a book coming out in, I think you said, July of this year, you have received no money for that book yet?

A No.

Q Okay.

To jump around a little bit more --

BY [redacted]

Q Just one more question. Did you mention that you have children as well?

A Yes.

Q How many children?

A Two.

Q So you're trying support a family of four --

A Yes.

Q -- on zero income. Is that correct?

A Yes. We had squirrelled away some money in anticipation that, you know, I might be facing some sort of consequences for my decision. We talked about it ahead of time. And we've been living off of that.

Q Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And during our first hour as well, you spoke about a new agent that came on, following your suspension, to take over the child exploitation cases that you are working. Is that correct?

A Yes. Not a new agent, but a temporary agent from Indianapolis came to the Daytona office for a 90-day tenure. She called me with questions on two occasions. And I believe it was sometime around November that she called me. And I helped her, assisted her with those cases, because I believe in those cases that I had opened, and then had never heard from her again.

Q So when did she come on?

A I think that must have been shortly after she came on, because, in reviewing the cases, she probably would have had the questions at that point.

I didn't really discuss her length of tenure. I just know that my one friend said it's a 90-day person that's taking over the child porn cases, which I kind of laughed at because I was told they were a local matter, but I guess --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- now that I was walked out the door, they were going to pay for somebody to fly halfway across the country to live in a hotel for 3 months and work the cases that I was content to work.

Q So did about roughly 2 months pass between your suspension on September 19th and when the agent came on? Is that about right?

A Yes. That's my understanding.

Q So, in those 2 intervening months, was anyone working the child exploitation cases that you were supposed to be working?

A I don't think so.

Q And so then you said you assisted her via phone call. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And that was on your own time?

A Yes.

Q And you were suspended, so you weren't working for the FBI, but on your own time you decided to assist her?

A Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q So you were investigating how many potential suspects?

A For child pornography?

Q Yeah.

A At any given time, I probably was carrying 10 cases, let's say.

Q Okay. So there's 10 bad guys out there that you're investigating. And during this 2-1/2-month period, no action was taken by the FBI with respect to these cases. Is that correct?

A I assume none.

Q So these bad guys are presumably out there being child predators, correct?

A Yes.

Q With no interdiction from law enforcement. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q With no interdiction with the child -- the victim's family. Is that correct?

A Yes. I saw a news report that one subject that I was investigating was recently arrested by the local law enforcement agency. So I was investigating him in September, and it was probably a month or two ago that he was arrested. So it's a pretty long lapse in time, when I had enough to go and arrest him at that point.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q We touched on this in the first hour as well, but is it fair to say that the FBI is using the suspension of security clearances and indefinite suspensions as a way to punish or retaliate against FBI agents for their protected whistleblower disclosures to Congress?

A Yes.

Q And are you aware that every Federal employee of the Department of Justice and FBI has an unfettered right to communicate with Congress without the approval, consent, or awareness of the Department or the Bureau?

A Yes.

Q Are you aware that the Federal law protects these disclosures?

A Yes.

Q And that the Federal law prohibits any sort of employment-related activities, known as prohibited personnel practices, from being taken based upon these disclosures?

A Yes.

Q In 2022, during testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, FBI Director Christopher Wray said, quote, "I condemn in the strongest possible terms any prospect of retaliation against whistleblowers."

Given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A No.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Jordan and House Judiciary Republicans have sent several letters to the FBI regarding revoking security clearances and whistleblower retaliation?

A Yes.

Q In response to those letters, the FBI has made some statements regarding their approach to whistleblowing. And I'm going to read those and then ask you if those are accurate statements.

For example, the FBI has said, quote, "Employees should feel they can raise their concerns about wrongdoing and, if those concerns are not addressed within their chain of command, take them to an appropriate place without retaliation. The FBI is taking considerable steps to ensure that employees are aware of whistleblower protections and of the whistleblower process. The FBI and the Department have worked and continue to work to improve the process, including educating employees and providing guidance so they know the process."

Mr. Friend, given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A Partially accurate, in that they provide that information, but they do so in a way that is -- creates an impression that it's frowned upon.

Q And the FBI also stated that, quote, "the FBI is committed to addressing misconduct head-on and following the disciplinary process," end quote.

Given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A Can you read that --

Q The FBI has stated that they are committed to addressing misconduct head-on and following the disciplinary process.

A No, that's not accurate.

Q In another response to letters from House Judiciary Republicans, the FBI stated, quote, "The FBI takes very seriously our responsibility to employees who may make protected disclosures under the whistleblower regulations. Whistleblowers play a crucial role in ensuring public trust in government. By coming forward, they ensure public institutions hold themselves accountable and, in doing so, affirm and strengthen the public's trust. FBI employees who report evidence of wrongdoing through a protected disclosure are required to be protected from retaliation. All employees should feel they can raise their concerns and, if they are not addressed up their chain of command, take them to an appropriate place without retaliation."

Mr. Friend, given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A Completely inaccurate.

Q In that same response, the FBI stated, quote, "The FBI does not target or take adverse actions against employees for exercising their First Amendment rights or for their political views," end quote.

Given your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A Exercising your First Amendment rights outside of employment?

Q Uh-huh. It says, "The FBI does not target or take adverse actions against employees for exercising their First Amendment rights or for their political views."

A I would disagree with that.

[redacted] I believe Mr. Gaetz had some questions he wanted to ask next.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

I want to go back to the treatment of these January 6 cases.

You talked about information packets that the Washington Field Office would send out around the country. Could you give me a sense of the categories of evidence that would be included in those packets?

Mr. Friend. It would have information with photographs of surveillance footage tied to social media, facial recognition, to ensure that it matched with the individual's, say, their Facebook profile.

It would be GPS information for the person's phone. And that information was provided by the phone providers to the FBI. And they were able to geolocate -- geo-fence if that phone was in the area.

It included tips that came in through the public at large. In the aftermath of January 6th, there was a large push to get that information, so many, many people made phone calls or provided electronic communications to turn in who they thought were subjects.

It could be anything from -- confidential human sources might be able to provide some information.

So that would all be assembled into a packet and disseminated to the field to pursue investigative -- logical investigative action.

Mr. Gaetz. Were bank records ever included in those packets?

Mr. Friend. I can't say if they were or weren't. I don't remember.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you remember seeing any Bank of America information in any of those packets?

Mr. Friend. No, I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. How did you know facial recognition software had been used?

Mr. Friend. It was included in the very -- Guardian lead that was sent to me. So, in the one particular case I'm thinking of, they told me that it was negative, that there was no facial recognition for the individual who was accused of being there.

Mr. Gaetz. So facial recognition was used to exculpate people as well as implicate people?

Mr. Friend. In that case, it really wasn't considered. They said it was -- they said, no, but go talk to them anyway.

Mr. Gaetz. And just so I understand this, in these packets, you observed information regarding confidential human sources?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Foster. Can you explain what happened when you went and spoke to that individual who there was no facial recognition indicating they were in the Capitol?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

It was an anonymous tip from Rhode Island. Facial recognition was negative. The phone was negative.

At that point, I said, it's probably -- it's not worth resourcing because we can't pursue an investigation, even if the person confesses to being there, because we don't have a complainant on this case. And I was told that, yeah, we got those all the time, especially right after January 6, and you have to go talk to them; otherwise, Washington is going to keep kicking it back to us.

So I went and talked to him and knocked on his door, identified myself, and asked him if he was at the Capitol, and he told me that he wasn't because that was the day of his son's funeral. So I gave him my business card and I left.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you get any other feedback from the Washington Field Office on that matter?

Mr. Friend. No, not on that one.

Mr. Gaetz. You provided in your disclosure testimony that members of the JTTF were pressured to open full investigations.

And in the first hour, we talked about the phone calls from the Washington Field Office that were part of that pressure campaign on the JTTF.

Other than the phone calls, was there anything else that constituted that pressure campaign?

Mr. Friend. Well, I know that there was discussion originally in coordination that they had to have a predicate to open up, you know, a counterterrorism investigation, and there has to be an ideology associated with that. And it was disseminated that anybody with -- they would consider anybody subscribing to "stop the steal" as having an ideology that warranted a counterterrorism investigation.

The pushback that my colleagues were doing was met with, "We're just going to consider the options." And I know it was multiple times that I heard the agent, who was kind of our most senior one, would get off a phone call and say, "They want us to do surveillance," or, "They're going to go back to the code book and look and see if there's any extra violations." They said that there were --

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry. When you say the "code book," what do you mean by that?

Mr. Friend. The U.S. Code book to see if there's any extra laws that had been violated that they could potentially charge.

Mr. Gaetz. And your perception, as someone working the line on these cases, was that that was a way to upcharge people? Or did you view that as part of legitimate law enforcement activity?

Mr. Friend. I mean, in my understanding, in my experience, the violation is pretty clear on its face. You can look through to cull through, but I'm also a believer that -- there's that "Three Felonies a Day" book, where the book is so cumbersome that, you know, everybody is violating laws all the time.

So, in the spirit of going through that and trying to find, it could either be to stack charges on somebody or you don't really have a legitimate charge for what you alleged originally and you're trying to find it as a backup.

Mr. Gaetz. So part of the pressure campaign, as you've testified, were these phone calls. Other than phone calls, was there any other medium in which that pressure campaign manifested? Emails? Directives? Other information?

Mr. Friend. I didn't receive emails. I know that there was probably Instant Message within the FBI, because he was corresponding with them that way a lot. And there were communications, I know, for one group that they said they wanted surveillance done on them because they had been talking in online forums, so I know they were being monitored. And they wanted us to surveil them to a school board meeting.

Mr. Gaetz. What more can you tell us about that?

Mr. Friend. There was an anticipated very -- going to be a very contentious school board meeting in Flagler County, because there had been some disturbing books that had been found in the library, and a lot of parents were displeased, and some of these individuals were going to go attend the meeting. And we were asked to surveil them to the meeting.

And then, once we arrived, we kind of looked around and said, this looks bad. It was right after the EDU threat tag had emerged. They told us to get out before we were identified as Federal agents.

Mr. Gaetz. Who told you? Who gave you that direction?

Mr. Friend. My acting boss at the time, who was Rob Corley (ph).

Mr. Gaetz. Were there other circumstances where you were asked to surveil parents, or was that the only one?

Mr. Friend. That's the only time I had to.

Mr. Gaetz. You've testified that a subject having a particular ideology would enhance the amount of law enforcement activity that would be directed at that subject, right?

Mr. Friend. Yes. If you have a predicate to open a case, that opens up the toolbox to use a whole slew of other things at your fingertips that you wouldn't have if it was just an assessment.

Mr. Gaetz. So I want to understand how FBI agents determine whether or not an ideology is dangerous. And you mentioned one feature of that content was if anyone said "stop the steal."

Is there any other content that you can describe to us that would put someone in the dangerous ideology category rather than First Amendment-protected speech as you understood it as an FBI agent at that time?

Mr. Friend. I would be hard-pressed to provide you the information. I know that I asked questions because I was unfamiliar with the national security world a lot. And there was an incident in my office where a police officer was killed by a member of a radical organization, and I was told that that wasn't a predicate, a group, so that we couldn't open up a case on that. So it seemed like sort of a nebulous issue.

I do think that Second Amendment advocacy is something that is viewed as problematic, certainly in light of that recent release about the radical traditional Catholics and the concerns about them being a --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, Mr. Friend, I want to really zero in on where you have personal knowledge where the manifestation of a particular ideology was deemed dangerous by the FBI.

Mr. Friend. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever personally observe, you know, anything at the FBI that would lead you to believe that someone expressing their support for the Second Amendment would increase the acuity of the law enforcement directed at them because of ideology?

Mr. Friend. I would say it would raise the -- it opened up the matrix of use of, like, a SWAT team to apprehend somebody, but not as far as opening up the investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. What about someone's views on immigration?

Mr. Friend. I can't speak to that.

Mr. Gaetz. What about someone's views on political parties?

Mr. Friend. I think that the "stop the steal" was probably individuals that believed that President Biden didn't win the election. So that would probably be an advocacy for another political party.

Mr. Gaetz. Other whistleblowers have shared with us that if someone said "MAGA" or "build the wall" or "2A," that that would result in supervisors directing frontline agents to give more attention to those matters.

In your personal knowledge, did you ever observe anything like that, other than the "stop the steal," triggering that type of increased law enforcement attention?

Mr. Friend. I didn't see anything that I could speak to authoritatively.

Mr. Gaetz. I want to get to the use -- your allegations regarding the use of your name on files where you believed that that use was inappropriate.

Can you talk to us about that?

Mr. Friend. I thought that the inconsistency following the DIOG's guidance was essentially making me or one of my colleagues a case manager or a case participant on a January 6th investigation when, essentially, we weren't really making the -- calling the shots on how to bring that investigation forward.

Mr. Gaetz. So do you believe that there are internal -- or, strike that. Do you believe there are any documents where your name was used improperly?

Mr. Friend. If you were to print out the opening communication for any one of these cases, it would have my name as a case manager on it when I hadn't performed any work.

Now, I was brought over so late, so, you know, that wouldn't be necessarily a problem. But if the lion's share of the decisions being made on how to investigate a case are not being handled by the case manager or directed from that, that's a problem.

Which was really the gist of -- I said, I'm going to have to go to court and testify, and the defense attorney is going to say, "Agent Friend, are you the case manager?" and I'll say, "Yes," and they'll say, "Did you do anything on this case?" and I'll say, "No, I didn't." And then I might be in a position where the defense attorney is going to have that, and the prosecutor is going to have to impeach me as a witness, and it would put us in a pretty bad predicament in court.

Mr. Gaetz. In how many matters do you believe you were improperly listed as the case manager despite having not managed the case?

Mr. Friend. At the point where I was brought over, there was maybe a half-dozen cases that were in my office. I was either a case manager or a case participant on them; I can't say one or the other. But it would've been -- it gave me access to view the case and to take investigative action on it and approve documents and put anything I wanted into the case.

Mr. Gaetz. But you didn't do those things, did you?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. So, if the committee was interested in the cases where you believe your name was improperly listed as the manager, is that something you and your counsel could work on providing to us?

Mr. Foster. He doesn't have access.

Mr. Gaetz. So, no, you don't have access to that?

Mr. Friend. I certainly don't now. My security clearance was suspended, and I'm actually not an employee anymore.

Mr. Gaetz. Are there other people at the FBI who you believe were improperly listed in management roles or other cases where they weren't engaged in management activities?

Mr. Friend. It's my contention that anybody on a case where the case is being run from an office of origin that is not the Washington Field Office could be a potentially improper case manager or participant.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, but are you personally aware of other people sharing this concern that their name was improperly used as a case manager when they were not in fact a case manager?

Mr. Friend. The other members of my JTTF.

Mr. Gaetz. And so it would be likely that each member of the JTTF might be listed as a manager, in a similar paradigm that you found yourself in?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And are you aware why those specific concerns about the improper use of your name were not deemed valid by the Special -- by the Counsel's Office and by the OIG?

Mr. Friend. They told me I wasn't there for the decision on this departure from Appendix J and that I couldn't speak to it. But if there's a departure, it's my belief that you have to have a justification for that documented somewhere, and I certainly wasn't privy to it.

Mr. Gaetz. You testified that SSRA Federico told you that the FBI plans to prosecute every subject associated with January 6, right?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And why did that concern you?

Mr. Friend. He told me that we were expecting another wave of cases to come out, that this first wave was just getting to its end, and that the new view was going to be anybody standing on the perimeter of the Capitol was going to be charged with a case.

And, at that point, I think if you're standing on the lawn of a building, I'd have to question the legality of some sort of criminal investigation or even if it's a violation of the use of government resources at the Federal level to charge a misdemeanor -- which, I was always told and taught that the FBI is supposed to be for big crimes, and, you know, misdemeanors are not really in our --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, on most matters, every subject doesn't get prosecuted, do they?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it unusual to hear a supervisor at the FBI say on a particular matter, the goal is to prosecute every subject?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Had you ever heard that before?

Mr. Friend. No. No. But what's unique about this is, it's not one investigation. So it's -- we want to charge the subject of each investigation, but by opening a separate investigation for each subject as opposed to one case, it kind of creates this dynamic that's inconsistent with how we typically do things.

Mr. Gaetz. I want to take you now to the conversations you had with SAC -- is it "Onks"?

Mr. Friend. Onks.

Mr. Gaetz. Onks. And you gave in your disclosure a recollection that she talked about the fear she felt on January 6th.

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. How did she express that to you?

Mr. Friend. She told me that I wasn't there, that she had been on the seventh floor of the J. Edgar Hoover Building the day that the individuals descended on the Capitol and tried to seize our democracy.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you think that personal experience she had was impacting her decision-making on these cases?

Mr. Friend. I think her use of that type of language indicated that she believed in the righteousness of the cases. And that's not really our job. We're supposed to just be fact-finders. So I would argue yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe she was making good judgments in the use of these law enforcement tools?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And you believe that bad judgment was clouded by her fear?

Mr. Friend. Fear and use of the process to be a punishment for individuals.

Mr. Gaetz. The August 24 warrants that you really objected to, did any of the cases where your name was improperly used result in that series of warrants where you objected to the arrests?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Foster. Did you object to the arrests, or did you object to the use of SWAT in the arrests?

Mr. Friend. I objected to -- yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry. Let me strike -- let me clarify. I meant the manner of arrest.

Mr. Friend. Yes. The manner of the arrest. Those were cases that -- using SWAT, even for a felony charge, or even arrest operations where we were deploying teams of agents early in the morning with a show of force, when individuals were in communication, I thought that was inappropriate.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. And I'm just trying to connect the dots here, that, you know, there are these series of cases where you've given us testimony that you believe your name was improperly used as a manager, and then there are these series of matters where you objected to the manner of arrest. And what you're saying is, there are cases that fit in both of those buckets.

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm going to yield back to my colleagues so that they might ask additional questions.

[redacted] I think Congressman Bishop has some questions.

Mr. Bishop. Mr. Friend, you've testified and your declaration talks about the Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide, the DIOG.

In your experience with the FBI, what exposure did you have or training did you have about the existence of the DIOG?

Mr. Friend. You receive fairly extensive experience about using the DIOG and navigating it in the academy. It's a document that's at your fingertips for any preference going forward.

In my work experience in working on Indian reservations, where you have a high, voluminous caseload, I had opportunity to open up full investigations well beyond what most agents do, so I was rather familiar with the DIOG.

Mr. Bishop. You said that it's the rule book for the FBI, sort of the Bible by how you conduct criminal investigations?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. In the course of your experience or training or your use of the DIOG in the course of being an FBI agent, did you ever receive any training that departures from the rules were permitted, or under what circumstances?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Bishop. When you first asked questions about departures from the DIOG in these J6 cases, who was your supervisor who answered that question?

Mr. Friend. His name is Dave Brown.

Mr. Bishop. Brown. And he told you about a coordination call? Is that correct?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. And do I understand from your previous testimony that he said that, in that coordination call, a question was raised about this departure, and the answer was that it was, quote, to create buy-in from the field?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. What did you understand that to mean?

Mr. Friend. I had two working theories of that, and they would just be my own opinion. There's no term of "buy-in from the field" that, you know, I could pull up from the FBI.

Mr. Bishop. What theories would you have based on your understanding of it?

Mr. Friend. The first would be, we don't think individuals in the field are going to work hard on these cases unless their name's on it, as opposed to just cutting a lead. But if you ask anybody, you pursue a lead as if it's your own case because you expect that same professional courtesy when you cut a lead. So that struck me as a little bit macabre.

The second one was that we're going to get buy-in by raising the number of cases in the field -- that was going to assist the FBI, each field office, in meeting its predetermined metrics for opening up a certain amount of cases, domestic terrorism cases, which are difficult to come by, and also going to ensure compensation for the Senior Executive Service members that are running each one of those field offices.

Mr. Bishop. You subsequently had your interaction with SSRA Federico, with Assistant Special Agents in Charge Markofski and Ryan. And you raised in each of those conversations your concern about these departures from the DIOG, correct?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Did any of them ever explain to you that there was an EC requesting a departure from the DIOG that had been approved in Washington?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Bishop. Did they give you any answer like that, anything to explain that there had been a process and the reasons for a departure such as was described on the exhibit offered by minority counsel in asking you questions earlier?

Mr. Friend. No. The only explanation I got was from Markofski. He said that this was unprecedented.

Mr. Bishop. But he didn't explain the reasons?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Bishop. So the FBI, then, has trained you in its rule book, and then when you asked questions about instructions from higher-up to depart from the rule book, they retaliated against you. Is that your perception?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. And they never offered you any kind of explanation that there had been appropriate process or to disclose to you what the process was for a departure from the DIOG you had been trained to follow, correct?

Mr. Friend. Correct.

Mr. Bishop. Did any supervisor ever explain to you how to reconcile the notion of your being made a case manager with the fact that you weren't making the investigative decisions -- or, you know, let me withdraw that and ask a different one.

Did anyone ever give you an explanation reconciling your being named case manager with your not exercising the typical role that that entails?

Mr. Friend. No.

Mr. Bishop. What other JTTF members can you name, give us the names of, during your tenure, tenure there in Daytona Beach I guess it is?

Mr. Friend. I listed them earlier. It's Todd Myers. He's a special agent. And then two task force officers, Brian Howard and Tarek Husami.

Mr. Bishop. Do you have personal knowledge that cases would've been opened with them as case agent in the same way, in which they weren't actually acting as case agent in accordance with typical practice?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. All right.

That's all I've got. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q I know we briefly touched upon the school board issue, so I'd like to flip to that, if we can.

Are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum regarding alleged threats and violence at school board meetings?

A Yes.

Q And in October of 2021, you were an FBI special agent at the Daytona Beach Resident Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q And you were assigned to the JTTF at that point in time?

A Yes.

Q When did you learn of the Attorney General's October 4th memo?

A I think it was disseminated that day.

Q What was your reaction when you learned about the memo?

A I appeared at a school board meeting in September, so I was a little bit humored by the fact that I might be investigating myself.

Q And did it concern you at all that the FBI was going to be investigating other parents who might have showed up at meetings?

A Yes.

Q And, given your experience, did you perceive threats or violence at local school board meetings as a matter for State and local law enforcement?

A Yes.

Q Did colleagues in your office generally have the same reaction that you did to the memo?

A Yes. We didn't take it seriously to the point where we were going to pursue investigations.

Q Were you involved in any official conversations or correspondence related to how the FBI could help address alleged threats or violence at school board meetings?

A Nothing official, no.

Q And, in the memo, the Attorney General required each U.S. attorney's office, in conjunction with the FBI, to hold meetings with local law enforcement partners within their judicial districts.

Did you ever attend any of these meetings that took place in Florida?

A No.

Q Do you know if any meetings took place?

A I don't know. The Middle District of Florida was our area, so I'm not sure.

Q And in your role you said that you regularly interfaced with local law enforcement. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Did you get any hint that they might not be able to handle any violence or threats that popped up at school board meetings within their jurisdiction?

A No. They're all professional law enforcement agencies. They're fully capable.

Q And are you familiar with an email that was sent by Carlton Peeples, the Deputy Assistant Director of the Criminal Investigative Division at the time, on October 20, 2021, that announced the creation of an EDU officials threat tag?

A Yes.

Q Did you receive that email?

A I don't think I did.

Q When did you learn of the creation of the EDU officials threat tag?

A When it came into the public sphere. I think Kyle Seraphin released that to the public.

Q And what was your reaction to learning about this threat tag?

A It seemed to me that it was consistent with this "the demand for terrorism vastly outstrips supply, so we're going to try to expand out as much as we can in order to meet the metrics that we have to in order to show that we're a successful agency."

Q So you thought that this was just another way for the FBI to pad the domestic terrorism stats. Is that correct?

A Stats as far as opening on subjects and stats as far as actually creating intelligence products.

Q And what was your understanding of the metrics that needed to be hit?

A Every year, the field offices go -- and the FBI at large goes through a process, the IPM, integrative program management. Begins, there's a threat prioritization, TRP, and that is disseminated to the field offices. And then the field offices come up with their strategic plan, the FOSP, where they make a slew of numbers about what's going to be -- how they're operating successfully. And it can be anything from training to interfacing with local partners, to how many people attend the fitness test. It's all across the board. And included in that are numbers of cases and the outcomes of certain cases.

And it's not just within national security; it's criminal matters as well. So I was certainly familiar with that because, as the fiscal year came to an end, we'd always hear, "Hey, we're short on X. Do you think you're going to be able to get another arrest or an indictment before the end of the fiscal year?" or, "Hey, we already hit that number. Do you think you can delay that indictment until next fiscal year so that we can use it for next year?"

[12:16 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And did headquarters require field offices to create these FOSPs?

A Yes.

Q And so in the process of creating these FOSPs, the field office would set the numbers, is that correct, for how many arrests?

A Yes. Yes. And they did that in coordination and communication with FBI headquarters. It's sort of a negotiation, that they want to show -- they can't keep the number is very low, because obviously that would look like you're trying to set yourself up to be very successful. But headquarters comes back and forth with the field offices where they sort of reach a compromise on what they deem to be an appropriate number for each particular category.

Q So headquarters can negotiate what the number is for the field office. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q What happens if you don't hit these metrics?

A I don't know. I know that they give a color, gold, green, red, but I didn't dig too much into it. I don't ever think I came across a red number, certainly in the violations that I was working.

Q When you were asked if you could make another arrest before the end of the year, was that regular that you were receiving those kinds of requests or other agents were receiving those types of requests?

A Yes. You would get them throughout the year because the calendar is sort of set and it's a cycle. So when they would be doing status updates 6 months out, I would have an intelligence analyst reach out and say, "We need two or three more disruptions before the end of the fiscal year. Do you think that you're going to be able to attain those before October?"

Q And it was the intelligence analysts who would make those requests?

A In those situations, yes.

Q Were they directed by any supervisors to make those requests, or was it just the intelligence analysts?

A In the early sort of coordination meetings, intelligence analysts are heavily involved with that. But I know there's other program managers and supervisors that are also into it. But I wasn't really a supervisor, so I wasn't privy to most of those communications.

I had a small interaction with it throughout the year, and then in the 3 months that I was an acting boss I got to see sort of the meetings at the end of the fiscal year were how they kind of transpired. But because I was acting, not very much was asked of me.

Q And as a special agent, when you were asked to either make an arrest or push an arrest off for a couple months, would you describe it as an environment of pressure to hit the metrics?

A Yes. I was told on one instance where there were nine subjects on a case that if I arrested them all in the same day it would count as one disruption statistic. But if I arrested one each day for nine straight days, it would count as nine statistics, so I should space out those arrests.

Q So would you say that the pressure to hit the metrics, did it cause you to make changes to how you were doing your law enforcement duties?

A Yes.

Q So turning back to the school board issue, you mentioned that you were asked to surveil a school board meeting. Is that correct?

A We were asked to surveil these individuals to the school board meeting, then we parked outside, and then we decided on what to do. And we were given that directive from the acting boss to just -- to leave and go home.

Q And I believe you said that you were told to get out before you could be identified as agents. Who told you that?

A My acting boss.

Q And who was that?

A Rob Corley (ph).

Q And around what time was this? Was this before or after the Attorney General's memo?

A I think it was after, because that was on his mind, certainly all of ours, that we're actually doing this.

And we had these subjects who were January 6th subjects, and trying to connect them to this EDU threat tag seemed troublesome to me.

So essentially we just documented the license plates of the people that were parking at the school board meeting who were January 6th subjects, or people that were in the parking lot with them interacting that we thought could be in their sphere of influence, and then we left.

Q So was it a directive that you received to, as you said, try to connect these January 6th subjects to the EDU officials threat tag?

A I wasn't given that specific of a directive, but they said that we should -- because they were anticipating there could be a more explosive rhetorical environment at the school board meeting that they wanted us to follow along to these guys as they went there. And we communicated with the sheriff's office to let them know that these individuals were there, that to be on the watch for those guys.

Q And what was the local law enforcement's reaction?

A I talked to one task force officer, and he asked for permission, because it's classified, as to what he could share. And I said just let them know that there could be subject of FBI investigations that are in attendance.

Q And you said that you were told that it was supposed to be a contentious school board meeting because disturbing books were found in the library. What did you understand the disturbing books to be?

A They were arguably pornographic material, and parents were displeased with that.

Q Okay. And I think you already answered this, but given your law enforcement background, does knowing that you could be investigated by the FBI for speaking up at your child's school board meeting chill parents from exercising their First Amendment rights?

A Yes.

Q And you said you had attended a school board meeting and you were nervous that you could be under Federal investigation. Is that correct?

A Yes. My colleagues teased me about it.

Q Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry. I have a clarifying questioning.

You spoke of a circumstance where there were nine subjects and you were told to arrest them on separate days. Could you tell me a little more about that?

Mr. Friend. Yes. So it's a statistic called a disruption, and it is essentially, if there's a criminal organization with multiple individuals, there's certain activities that you could do that would constitute disrupting their activity for the day.

And it's sort of double counting, because if you arrest somebody you count the arrest, but because it's an organized activity, they want to -- that's a very valuable statistic in this FOSP.

Mr. Gaetz. Was this a DVE case?

Mr. Friend. No. This was an Indian Country case that crossed over into public corruption. So essentially both programs got to claim credit for one statistic.

And in my situation, it was a public corruption case that was going to be nine disruptions, and the metric for the year was to get ten disruptions for the entire program. So they obviously wanted me to get 90 percent of their work done if I could.

Mr. Gaetz. I understand. Okay. Thank you for clarifying that.

[redacted] Are you familiar with the letter that Mr. Jordan sent to FBI Director Wray on July 27th, 2022, regarding protected whistleblower disclosures related to the FBI's handling of DVE case classifications?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

[redacted] I'm going to mark this as exhibit -- I think we might be on 7.

[Friend Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Feel free to take a moment to familiarize yourself with the letter.

A Okay.

Q I'm going to read from the second page of the letter, the first full paragraph.

The letter states: "New whistleblower disclosures made by multiple FBI employees from different field offices indicate that the Biden Administration's narrative may be misleading. We have received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases of DVEs to satisfy their superiors. For example, one whistleblower explained that because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases even though there is minimal circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification."

Then at the bottom of the paragraph, it says: "Every whistleblower has called it an environment of 'pressure' within the FBI."

Mr. Friend, is this similar to the environment of pressure to hit the metrics that you were describing earlier?

A Yes.

Q And do you have any information regarding reclassification of cases as DVEs?

A Not firsthand.

Q And given your law enforcement background and tenure at the FBI, what is your reaction to hearing that FBI agents are being pressured to reclassify cases as DVEs?

A It's par for the course in my experience across the board.

Q And committee Republicans released a report back in November of 2022 that detailed some of the problems as recounted by whistleblowers and other publicly available sources that undermine the FBI's fundamental law enforcement mission.

Whistleblowers told committee Republicans that the FBI's Washington hierarchy is, quote, "rotted at its core," end quote, maintains a, quote, "systemic culture of unaccountability," end quote, and is full of, quote, "rampant corruption, manipulation, and abuse," end quote.

Do you agree with these statements?

A Yes.

Q And what is your reaction to hearing that this is how people characterize the FBI?

A It sounds consistent with just about everybody that I've talked to who has never gone to headquarters.

Q So it doesn't surprise you that fellow FBI employees and agents are making these characterizations?

A No.

Q According to the Biden administration, investigations into domestic violent extremists have increased "significantly."

In June 2021, FBI Director Christopher Wray testified before the House Judiciary Committee that the FBI has a "very, very active domestic terrorism investigation program" and that the FBI had "doubled the amount of domestic terrorism investigations."

Attorney General Garland has repeated this talking point, publicly stating that, "The number of open FBI domestic terrorism investigations this year has increased significantly."

I believe some of those quotes are on page one of that letter.

Given your law enforcement background and tenure at the FBI, what is your reaction to hearing about this?

A I believe it's justified by the January 6th cases.

Q And justified because they're manipulating the case filing system or --

A By opening a separate case for each individual as opposed to one case with however many subjects are involved, they've turned one case into a thousand cases. And by spreading them to the field they've given the impression that those domestic terror cases are around the country when, in fact, the subjects, if they committed any sort of violation or infraction, they committed a crime at the Capitol on one day as opposed to being a cell that's operating in El Paso or Cleveland.

Q So by manipulating the case files and managing January 6th cases in this way, they may be able to justify these statements. But do you believe that in reality it's accurate?

A No, it's not accurate.

[redacted] Mr. Gaetz and Mr. Bishop, we have 10 more minutes if you have more questions.

Mr. Gaetz. No.

Mr. Bishop. I've got some.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Bishop. So Mr. Corley (ph) directed you to surveil how many people going to the school board meeting?

Mr. Friend. From the group we were watching, we didn't know how many were going to be going, but we set up at -- near one individual's -- the primary subject's house. When he left in a pickup truck we surveilled him to the school board meeting.

And then once we got there, we were in the parking lot, it's a fairly large parking lot, and we were able to kind of look from a distance and see that he was meeting up with other individuals.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. So the person who was driving the truck, he was the subject of an existing open investigation relating to January 6th?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Did he have people that were accompanying him in his truck to the meeting?

Mr. Friend. I didn't see him arrive. I don't know if there was anybody anything else in the truck with him. But I know that there was a group of people that met up in multiple vehicles around him in the short time that I was there before we left.

Mr. Bishop. So you made a comment that, "We were actually doing this." I think you quoted or said words to the effect of, "We were actually doing this," came out of the mouth of Mr. Corley?

Mr. Friend. No. No. That was just a thought that I had to myself because --

Mr. Bishop. I see.

Mr. Friend. -- it was in the aftermath of the uproar about this threat tag becoming public.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. Did you -- does that mean that you had misgivings about the propriety of doing it?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Why?

Mr. Friend. Because attending a school board meeting is your right to do as a citizen. And if there's a security concern that's legitimate, then that's going to be handled by the local law enforcement.

Mr. Bishop. And does the fact that there was an open investigative file on the one subject related to January 6th justify surveilling such an individual at events that are completely unrelated like that?

Mr. Friend. I don't think so.

Mr. Bishop. Is there any guidance in your training or experience at the FBI that would indicate whether that's appropriate or not?

Mr. Friend. I think that conducting surveillance is going to be furthering your investigation to prove somebody's involvement in a particular incident.

So going to a school board meeting isn't going to prove involvement in January 6th. It might prove activity in some sort of domestic violent extremist ongoing investigation, which was the school board threat tag related to it.

So it seemed to me that it was almost like we were trying to link two cases together that the facts really didn't support.

Mr. Bishop. Was there adequate predication to undertake any surveillance related to school board activities that would suggest it was a -- well, was it an adequately predicated counterterrorism investigation?

Mr. Friend. So there was an open counterterrorism investigation on that individual, so there had to be legitimate predication for it. But in general, for the school board meetings, I think those are just parents expressing their opinions.

Mr. Bishop. Was there any adequate predication to do any surveillance of persons other than that January 6th subject for that school board meeting?

Mr. Friend. None. None that I was aware of.

Mr. Bishop. Yield back.

BY [redacted]

Q I just have a couple questions.

During the last hour, my colleagues on the Democrat side, I was interested, they were asking you questions and it seemed like they were almost investigating your conduct. Is that the way it felt to you?

A Yes.

Q They asked you about interactions you had with your counsel?

A Yes.

Q And you had a second counsel too?

A Yes.

Q And they asked you about interactions with your second counsel?

A Yes.

Q And you didn't claim attorney-client privilege or anything, you just answered the question, didn't you?

A Correct.

Q They asked you how you were referred to your lawyer?

A Yes.

Q Is that correct?

They asked you how you were referred to a whistleblower organization?

A Yes.

Q And you agreed to answer that question. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And your communications with congressional staff about your protected whistleblower disclosures, when you made them you were under the presumption that they were privileged and confidential. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And did the staff tell you that when you were having those communications with the staff?

A Yes.

Q But nevertheless, here today, when asked about it, despite the fact that it was privileged and confidential, you agreed to answer those questions, didn't you?

A Yes.

Q You were asked about who is paying your legal fees? Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q You were asked whether you have received any money from a GiveSendGo account? Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you testified you haven't taken any money from this GiveSendGo account?

A No, I haven't.

Q You were asked about the Kash Patel organization?

A Yes.

Q And did Mr. Patel's organization provide you any money?

A He gave me a $5,000 stipend.

Q You were asked about files that you accessed on the classified system in relation to assisting your attorney with preparing your defense?

A Yes.

Q And you agreed to answer those questions, didn't you?

A Yes.

Q While you were answering those questions, did you feel --

[redacted] Sorry, [redacted] --

[redacted] I'm on the record here, and I'm going to keep going.

[redacted] Okay. That's fine.

BY [redacted]

Q While you were answering these questions, did you feel like your conduct was under review here today?

A Yes.

Q How did that make you feel?

A Like they're investigating me as opposed to the information I'm trying to bring forward voluntarily.

Q Were there any questions about the school board's memo from the Democrat side?

A No.

Q Did the Democrat side ask you about any conduct of the whistleblower disclosures that you made here today?

A No.

Q Or that you've made historically?

A No.

Q Did it seem like a hundred percent of their questions were all geared towards investigating you?

A Yes.

Q And did you expect that here today?

A Yes.

Mr. Foster. I think a good percentage were aimed at investigating you, [redacted] and your staff.

BY [redacted]

Q And getting back to these nine subjects that the FBI was asking you to -- or your supervisor -- when I say the FBI, I mean your supervisory chain of command was asking you to arrest or disrupt on different days.

I mean, isn't it true, if there's a group of nine people that are in cahoots together and you start arresting them on different days, by the time you get to the sixth, the seventh, the eighth, the ninth guy, they might not be around?

A Yes.

Q Did that ever happen in your experience?

A No. It was a white collar matter and people didn't have the ability to really travel around much, so they deemed that to be a worthwhile risk.

Q Okay.

This statistics-driven focus that you have testified about today, has that always been the case with the FBI since you joined it?

A Yes.

Q And has there been any change since the change in leadership?

A No.

Q And is that something that is primarily locally driven, or is that a national organizational focus?

A It's national. From my understanding, it started around 2012, 2013.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I think we're almost out of time, so --

[redacted] Yeah. We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 12:45. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Friend, at the end of the last hour you were asked a number of questions about information that you provided during the course of this interview today.

You are represented by counsel today, right?

A Yes.

Q And he's been sitting next to you the whole time?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And do you recall at the beginning of not the last hour but the hour before that, he made some comments about advice he had given to you?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And he did that just of his own accord, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. There were some references made to a protected disclosure that you made. Is that a reference to the September 21st, 2022, declaration?

A It might be, or it might be just going to my supervisor on August 19th.

Q Okay. I think protected disclosures to Congress --

A Okay.

Q -- in specific, is that a reference to the declaration?

A Yes.

Q Okay. But other than the letter that we talked about, the initial letter and that disclosure, that that's been the extent of the disclosures that you've made, right?

A I provided additional information about the training on the whistleblower --

Q Right. I'm sorry. You did mention that.

Mr. Foster. Sorry. Is the context of your question to Congress?

[redacted] To Congress. To Congress.

Mr. Foster. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to get back to what we were discussing about the school board, the surveillance incident.

You said that there was an open counterterrorism investigation into the group, that the individual was a member of the group that you were watching.

What was that group?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

A I don't remember.

Q You had just been assigned to surveil?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you said it was related to a January 6th investigation?

A Yes. He was a subject of a January 6th investigation.

Q And do you know if that individual was ever charged?

A I believe so.

Q Do you know his name?

A No, I don't remember.

Q Okay. And when was the date of the -- if you can recall, just --

A It was the August -- one of the people that were arrested on August 24th.

Q Okay. And the surveillance took place in October?

A I believe October 2021. It was in close proximity to the issuance of the Attorney General's memo about the school board.

Q Okay. And who were the individuals arrested on August 24th?

A I don't remember all their names. There was four subjects, I believe, from my office.

Q Okay. And you don't recall what group that they were with?

A No.

Q You don't recall if it was, for example, the Three Percenters?

A It sounds like it. If you refresh my memory, it very well could be.

Q Okay. Okay.

I want to go back to the September 21st, 2022, declaration that you provided to Congress.

Are you aware if this has been made public before?

A Yes.

Q And where has it been made public?

A Congressman Grassley and Johnson issued a letter and attached it as an appendix to that.

Q Okay. Do you know if it's on their website?

Mr. Foster. Senator Johnson put it on his website.

Mr. Friend. I'm sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you.

In paragraph 12 of your declaration, this discusses your August 22nd, 2022, meeting that's come up earlier in this conversation today. You say -- you say, "I told" -- I think you meant, "I told him," or the ASAC -- "that the irregular case dissemination, labeling, and management processes could be considered exculpatory evidence" -- "that," I think it means -- "must be disclosed to defendants in accordance with the Brady rule."

A Yes.

Q What did you mean by the Brady rule?

A It's we have to hand over everything that's related to a prosecution so that the defendant has that access to that information and can mount a defense.

Q And how do you know about the Brady rule?

A Experience as law enforcement, training as a police officer and as a special agent, and I've been to multiple trials as an agent.

Q Okay. You're not an attorney yourself though?

A No.

Q Okay. So it would be -- you learned about it just through your experience in the field or in the --

A No, we get specific training on the Brady rule in the academy.

Q Okay. Do you know where the term "Brady" comes from?

A It's the case that's precedent.

Q Okay. I want to refer to section 2.5 of the FBI "Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide." It's on page 2-10. And, again, this is all from the September 2021 version, which is publicly available on the FBI's website.

Mr. Foster. So this is an exhibit you're marking. It's one page from that document?

[redacted] Yeah. It's one page from the DIOG, and we're marking it as exhibit 8.

[Friend Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q It says: "The AGG-Dom, this DIOG, and the various operational division PGs are set forth solely for the purpose of creating internal DOJ and FBI guidance. They are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable by law by any party in any matter, civil or criminal, nor do they place any limitation on any otherwise lawful investigative and litigative prerogatives of the DOJ and the FBI."

Were you familiar with this paragraph before I read it just now?

A No.

Q Okay. It wasn't cited in any of the communications you received from the inspector general?

A I don't think so.

Q Was it cited in the special counsel letter?

A I don't remember.

Q Okay. Also, in paragraph 12 of your declaration, again, the declaration that was produced to Congress, you state: "I expressed my concerns about violating citizens' Sixth Amendment rights due to overzealous charging by the DOJ and biased jury pools in Washington, D.C."

What's your understanding of the Sixth Amendment?

A It's a due process protection that affords -- is afforded to all American citizens.

Q Okay. So what was your reference to it here? What did you mean by it with your reference to it here?

A It's not pertaining to what you're talking about with the DIOG, but it's my feeling that in monitoring the progress of the cases that are going forward, in my experienced opinion, as having gone to trial and being a law enforcement professional, that it seemed that a lot of the motions that were being put forth were being rejected and people were being convicted at an extremely fast pace that was inconsistent with anything I'd ever seen before in any of my trial experience.

Q Have you received training on the Sixth Amendment?

A Yes.

Q Have you ever tried a case?

A As an attorney?

Q Uh-huh.

A No.

Q And have you ever studied constitutional law?

A Yes.

Q In what context?

A I received constitutional law in the police academy and the FBI Academy.

Q Okay. But you never went to law school, for example?

A No, no degree-issuing --

Q And did you study law in college at all?

A Yes. I studied some -- I had a few undergraduate courses on law, but not like a degree.

Q Okay.

Mr. Meyer. Can I make a point about definition? And it was in the special counsel's letter, I think you just referenced it, I don't think Steve focused on it, where they cited that language about not relying on rights.

This is a fundamental problem in whistleblower law. I was surprised I --

[redacted] Sir, I'm sorry, can I ask you to hold this until the end? I'm using my time --

Mr. Meyer. Okay.

[redacted] -- and I want to keep going. So I'm happy to get back to you at the end.

[redacted] We're happy to pause the time for you, [redacted]

[redacted] I'd like to keep going. Thanks.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You referred to biased jury pools in Washington, D.C., in that same sentence. What did you mean by that?

A So during voir dire there's a process where they try to weed out anybody who could have a particular bias. And in reading about the cases from publicly available information, it seemed to me that there were people being let on the juries that might have had some biases.

Q And why do you say that?

A I think if you had family members that were in the Capitol or you were monitoring the January 6th Committee hearings very closely to think that might contribute to having a biased opinion of and render you incapable of being an unbiased jury.

Q And you're making these statements though based on information you read in the public, like open source reporting?

A Correct.

Q Were you ever involved in any of the cases in Washington, D.C.?

A No.

Q Have you ever been involved in any case in Washington, D.C.?

A No.

Q So you've never been involved in a jury trial in Washington, D.C.?

A Not in Washington.

Q Okay. And we said earlier, you've never been assigned to FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C.?

A No.

Q You've never been based out of Washington, D.C.?

A No.

Q Okay. You continued on in paragraph 12: "I cautioned about the similarities between Ruby Ridge, the Governor Whitmer kidnapping case, and the J6 investigation."

I think you discussed Ruby Ridge earlier and you said, for example, if an individual is in a rural area that he might have just come back from a hunting trip or something, he might have guns easily accessible.

The August 24th individuals, were they located in a rural area?

A Some of them were, yes.

Q Okay. And what did you mean by the Governor Whitmer kidnapping case?

A I was involved with the arrest operations that happened with the Detroit

Field Office when they arrested the Wolverine Watchmen militia for the alleged crime of wanting to kidnap Gretchen Whitmer and assassinate her.

And in my interactions and my experiences with what went on at the end of that case, I saw an overlap with -- and what transpired afterwards in just following the case -- saw some overlap that I thought was concerning that should probably be brought to the attention of my supervisors consistent with my training.

Q And did you bring that to the attention of your supervisors?

A Yes.

Q Are you aware that four of the individuals in that case were, in fact, convicted?

A I'm aware that there was a mistrial for two and that in the subsequent retrial now all four of them have been convicted.

Q Okay. Your declaration continues: "It is the FBI's job to gather facts, but we are not responsible for determining if an individual should be prosecuted." I'm sorry, that was a quote from your supervisor that you were relaying.

And then you said: "I countered that former FBI Director James Comey's actions indicated this was no longer an FBI practice when he stated that 'no reasonable prosecutor' would bring charges against former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton."

What did you mean with your reference to former FBI Director Comey?

A Just what I said, that Director Comey laid out to me a paradigm shift in the way that the FBI pursues investigations where it essentially has more input into the veracity of an allegation and the worthiness of bringing a case or not bringing a case.

Q Was it a reference to his comments in the summer of 2016?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

A I believe it was the fall. Sorry.

Q Okay. We can check the date on that.

So you felt that Comey's statements gave FBI agents more authority to determine whether to bring charges?

A I would say that it called into question the fact-finding, just-the-facts "Dragnet" approach that I was under the impression was always what we were supposed to do. And it was at the time I said to them, I had a great -- I was very upset that he'd brought that in, and that was solely up to the discretion of the Attorney General.

Q Okay. And so that was 2016. You joined the FBI in 2014?

A Yes.

Q And so between 2016 and August 2022, effectively, did Comey's statements make any impact on the way that you conducted your work?

A No. I tried to present facts to the U.S. Attorney's Offices, and if they wanted to pursue a case, they would; if not, they declined.

Q In paragraph 13 of your declaration, you state that, quote: "ASAC Markovsky unironically asked if I thought that the individuals who, quote, 'killed police officers,' end quote, should be prosecuted."

What did you mean with the use of the term "unironically"?

A He's asked that -- posed that as a legitimate question. It wasn't done tongue in cheek or for sarcasm or hyperbole, no turn of phrase. He said that straightforwardly as a -- or he asked that straightforwardly.

Q Okay. And according to your declaration, you replied to him that "there were no police officers killed on January 6th, 2021."

What did you mean by "there were no police officers killed"?

A No police officers at the Capitol were killed on January 6th, 2021, by the protesters.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the death of U.S. Capitol Police Officer Brian Sicknick?

A Yes.

Q What's your understanding of the circumstances surrounding his death?

A He succumbed to a stroke on the following day, and the Department of Justice has rendered that to be a line-of-duty death.

Q And do you have an opinion on that?

A I do.

Q And what is your opinion?

A I don't think my opinion matters to the Congress.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the death of U.S. Capitol Police Officer Howard Liebengood?

A I'm aware that the ruling was a line-of-duty death.

Q What is your understanding of the circumstances around his death?

A I don't -- I don't remember his circumstances.

Q Okay. Do you have an opinion on his -- on the circumstances around his death?

A I would have to educate myself on that before I formed an opinion.

Q Okay.

Mr. Foster. Your knowledge is secondhand on these issues, right?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with the death of Capitol Police Officer Jeffrey Smith?

A No.

Q But, again, you said that, in your opinion, no police officers were killed on January 6th?

A Yes. No officers were killed by protesters on January 6th at the U.S. Capitol.

Q So in your position -- so is it your position that the deaths of Officer Sicknick and Officer Liebengood -- and I understand you aren't familiar with the death of Jeffrey -- Officer Smith -- that they were unconnected to the events of January 6th?

A I can't speak to Liebengood, but it is my understanding from secondhand information that Brian Sicknick died of a stroke.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce into the record exhibit 9?

[Friend Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is the cover page and the executive summary from a -- oh, sorry. This is the cover page and pages 27 through 29 of a bipartisan report from the chair and ranking member of the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs and the chair and ranking member of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. It's a section of that report called "Experience of Law Enforcement Officers."

Page 29 of that document reads: "Three officers lost their lives following the attack. USCP Officer Brian Sicknick, a 13-year veteran and member of the First Responder Unit, was stationed on the West Front of the Capitol where rioters attacked him with bear spray. Officer Sicknick passed away at 9:30 p.m. on January 7th. Officer Howard Liebengood, a 16-year veteran of USCP, died on January 9th. Officer Jeffrey

Smith, a 12-year veteran of MPD, died on January 15th."

Now, the paragraph immediately prior to that reads: "Approximately 140 law enforcement officers reported injuries suffered during the attack. The Capitol Police Labor Committee released a statement recounting some of the more serious injuries. 'I have officers who were not issued helmets prior to the attack who have sustained brain injuries. One officer has two cracked ribs and two smashed spinal discs. One officer is going to lose his eye, and another was stabbed with a metal fence stake.'

"Patrick Burke, executive director of the Washington D.C. Police Foundation, reported that one officer suffered a heart attack after being attacked several times with a stun gun."

Were you familiar with this report before I brought it to your attention today?

A The existence of it, yes, but I haven't read it.

Q You haven't read it. Do you have a reaction to these paragraphs that I just read?

A Sure. The deaths of the -- the untimely deaths of the Capitol Police officers and the Metro police officers did not occur on January 6th.

And my ASAC asked me if I thought that individuals who killed police officers on January 6th should be held accountable, and I said no officers were killed on January 6th by the protesters.

Q Okay. And sorry for jumping around, but I want to go back to paragraph 10. I'm moving on from this.

Mr. Meyer. Paragraph 10 of the disclosure?

[redacted] Paragraph 10 --

Mr. Foster. Of exhibit 2?

[redacted] I'm sorry?

Mr. Foster. Of exhibit 2?

[redacted] Of the December 21st statement, which I believe is -- yeah?

Mr. Foster. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And this is about the SWAT -- the arrest of the individuals on the 24th with the SWAT team.

You state in that paragraph that: "During the week of August 15th, 2022, I became aware of imminent arrests of J6 suspects and searches of their respective residences within the FBI's Jacksonville and Tampa Field Office areas of responsibility. Simultaneous takedowns were scheduled to occur on August 24th, 2022."

How did you become aware of the arrests?

A Emails were circulated around my office saying that everybody needed to be available on those days. In a small office, you try to assist others as necessary, so they said be available on August 24th.

Q And who sent those emails?

A My supervisor did.

Q Okay. You said that you have a small office -- it was a small office. How many people worked in your office?

A I believe it's eight special agents and two -- or three full-time task force officers at the time, and there were some part-timers and some assistant staff -- administrative staff.

Q Okay. And you were on the JTTF, but you were also sometimes assigned to the SWAT team?

A Not in Jacksonville. I was in the SWAT team in the Omaha Division.

Q Okay. Were you to be assigned to the SWAT team in -- for the August 24th arrest?

A No.

Q Okay. So you just received the email saying that people needed to be aware?

A Yeah, we received an email that there were going to be arrest operations happening, SWAT was going to be involved, and I would need to be free on the 24th.

Q Okay. And you were involved -- you were on the SWAT team in Omaha?

A Yes.

Q Did you undergo training for part of that?

A Yes.

Q What type of training?

A You have to -- so for selection on the team, once you get selected to the team there's like in-service training, and then you go to SWAT basic academy where it's a 3-week indoc, where you receive basic operator training.

Q Okay.

A And then afterwards you can go for extra training for specialties.

Q Okay. And you said earlier, I think in the first hour, that you weren't entirely clear on the standards about when a SWAT team would be deployed.

What is your understanding of when a SWAT team would be deployed?

A There's a matrix that is considered and various elements. If they are satisfied then it justifies use of the SWAT team. But it's -- there's a subjective consideration with that between executive management of a field office and the SWAT team supervisor and the SWAT team leader about how to use the SWAT team if it's going to be appropriate.

Q Okay. And you said that you had concerns about the use of the SWAT team because one of the individuals was cooperating. Do you recall that?

A Yes.

Q Who was that individual?

A Am I authorized to say his name if it's classified or anything? I don't want to share --

Mr. Foster. Well, if it's classified, no. I mean, I don't know if someone's name can be classified.

[redacted] Is it classified?

Mr. Foster. Can we go off the record for a second and discuss it?

[redacted] Sure. It's 1:06.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] It is 1:10. It was about 5 minutes that elapsed, so we will go until 1:50 with our question line.

Mr. Foster. We're back on the record?

[redacted] We're back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q So you indicated that there was a witness who was cooperating, and because of that you felt that a SWAT -- it was inappropriate to use a SWAT team to arrest that individual.

By "cooperating," can you tell us if you meant that he was agreeing to interviews with the FBI or other law enforcement agencies, or if he was, in your understanding, a cooperating witness with the case?

A It's my understanding that he -- you know, I learned about his willingness to want to cooperate with the FBI on a law enforcement sensitive document, so I'd prefer not to speak to that.

Q Okay. But it is your testimony that he was cooperating and that's why you felt that it was inappropriate to use a SWAT team?

A Yes.

Q Okay. In paragraph 11 of your declaration, you say: "I responded that it was inappropriate to use an FBI SWAT team to arrest a subject for misdemeanor offenses and opined that the subject would likely face extended detainment and biased jury pools in Washington, D.C."

So was the thrust of your concern the misdemeanor offense or was it the cooperating aspect?

Mr. Meyer. Or both?

Mr. Friend. I think both is a reasonable concern. I had dual concerns about potentially using too invasive or too much of a resource that was too strong with somebody who expressed a willingness to cooperate and interpreting the SWAT matrix in a fashion that essentially allows you to use this tool for somebody who was going to be charged with a misdemeanor offense.

BY [redacted]

Q And did you raise the cooperation concern to your supervisor?

A Yes.

Q Okay. But you didn't note that in your declaration, right?

A No.

Q Okay. And was there a reason you didn't note that in your declaration?

A Just oversight.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce the criminal complaint and statement of facts for Tyler Bensch, B-e-n-s-c-h -- this is D.C. case number 1:22-mj-00184 -- into the record. I also want to introduce a printout of a D.C. U.S. Attorney's Office website page for Mr. Bensch which indicates he was arrested on August 24th, 2022.

So we will mark the complaint and statement of facts as -- we'll mark them as 10. Sorry, we're going to mark the complaint as No. 10, and we're going the mark the statement of facts as No. 11. They're two separate documents.

[redacted] Do you have more copies?

[redacted] Oh. I thought we passed down --

[redacted] We just have one. We need some for our members.

[redacted] I don't have any more copies. I'm sorry.

Mr. Foster. So, I'm sorry, can you be more clear about what you're marking what?

[redacted] So we're marking the complaint as No. 10, the cover page.

Mr. Foster. So that's just the page one?

[redacted] Just that. That's page one. There are two separate documents on the case, so we're marking them separately. So that's No. 10.

[Friend Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And the statement of facts is No. 11.

[Friend Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Is Mr. Bensch the individual that you were scheduled to arrest with the SWAT team about whom you had concerns?

Mr. Friend. He was one of the individuals. I don't know which individual SWAT was being used for, because I was never privy to the operations plan that was drafted.

[redacted] Okay. I want to turn to the statement of facts that accompanies the criminal complaint. Page 3.

Mr. Foster. So you're on exhibit 11?

[redacted] This is exhibit 11, yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Page 3 of the statement of facts reads, quote: "The individuals named herein self-identify as 'three percenters' (AKA '3%ers', 'III%ers', or 'Threepers') based on their adherence to the sub-ideology or common belief known as Three Percenterism."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with the Three Percenters?

A Yes.

Q How did you become familiar with them?

A Just reading about individuals who were arrested for their involvement on January 6th and the predication for a lot of the investigations involving some groups like Three Percenters or Oath Keepers or Proud Boys is that information is circulated within the national security side of things in the FBI.

Q And had you been privy to that information?

A Yeah. If I wanted to research it in more detail, yes, I could.

Q As part of your official responsibilities, would you have researched that information?

A Not -- no, not for this case.

Q Okay. But you could've had access to it?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

There's a footnote on this page, it's footnote number 2. It describes the Three

Percenters as, quote/unquote, "violent extremists."

Do you agree with that term as applied to the Three Percenters?

A I don't have an opinion on it.

Q Okay. So you've not really looked into the Three Percenters?

Mr. Foster. I think he already testified to that.

[redacted] The footnote continues: "Some III%ers" -- and it's the Roman numeral III, the percent sign, e-r-s -- "regard the present day U.S. Government as analogous to British authorities during the Revolution in terms of infringements on civil liberties."

Do you agree with this statement about the Three Percenters?

Mr. Friend. I don't have any opinion, and I don't think my opinion really matters on the Three Percenters. I'm here to talk about malfeasance within the FBI's case management practices.

[redacted] Okay. The paragraph continues: "Many of the individual militia-style organizations" -- I'm sorry, this is up in the actual body of the text.

"Many of the individual militia-style organizations have local chapters and names, such as Georgia Security Force, the Michigan United Patriots, Three Percent, the California Patriots -- D.C. Brigade, and -- in this case -- the Guardians of Freedom."

Mr. Foster. Sorry. Where are you reading from?

[redacted] It is in -- yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q "As explained below, Cole, Preller, Crowley, Rockholt, and Bensch are also self-identified members of a Guardians of Freedom subgroup called B SQUAD."

Are you familiar with the Guardians of Freedom?

A No.

Q Are you familiar with a Guardians of Freedom subgroup called B SQUAD?

A I've heard the name B SQUAD, yes.

Q How have you heard the name B SQUAD?

A That term was associated with the individuals in this case.

Q Okay. And what do you know about the subgroup B SQUAD?

A Just that these guys were characterized as B SQUAD guys.

What you have to understand is, this investigation was done before I was brought onto the Joint Terrorism Task Force.

Q Okay. But you have an opinion on whether a SWAT team should be used even though you haven't actually been involved in the investigation?

A I believe that Cole, Preller, Crowley, Rockholt, and Bensch are American citizens, and they're entitled to due process. And I believe that the FBI was potentially violating their due process rights.

Q Okay. On the following page there's a photograph of a flyer distributed on December 24th, 2020, by this group. It reads: "Remember this, it comes straight from our Declaration of Independence that whenever any form of government becomes destructive, it is the right and duty of the people to alter or abolish it. That is why you are here. For massive change to occur massive action must be taken. Patriots, we are the lifeblood of this great nation, and it's time we prove that."

Do you have an opinion about this statement?

A It seems like First Amendment-protected activity.

Q Okay. On page 9 of the statement of facts it describes members of the B SQUAD attempting to force their way into the Capitol. And it states that: "Tyler Quintin Bensch moved with the other four B SQUAD members and was present when one of the heave-ho pushes against the officers occurred."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q And then if we go on to page 14 of the complaint, there's a description of Mr. Bensch. It says that while he was on the Capitol Grounds he was wearing green military fatigues and tan gloves; a military-type helmet and goggles with the brand name strip Smith & White on a black strap; a tactical vest with a patch associated with the "Three Percenters" movement, i.e., "III"; a black gas mask with a green filter; and a drab-colored scarf with a distinct pattern.

There's a picture of Mr. Bensch here. Does that picture appear to match the description that I just read out?

A Yes.

[1:15 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And then it says, "Bensch also possessed one or more chemical irritant canisters on the front of his tactical vest, a black radio and antenna on his left side, and a GoPro-style camera mounted on his right shoulder."

There's a picture. Does that picture also seem to show the chemical irritant canisters?

A There are canisters. I don't know what they contain.

Q Okay. What about the radio?

A Yep.

Q And GoPro camera?

A Yes.

Q Page 8 -- in your opinion, if an individual is carrying chemical irritants, is that indicative of intent to peacefully enter somewhere?

Mr. Meyer. What page, 18?

[redacted] No, just looking at the picture that we were just talking about on 14.

Mr. Meyer. Oh, this picture here?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Meyer. Could you restate the question? I think I stepped on it.

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q So it's a picture of -- there's a picture of a man with the chemical irritants on his vest, and it describes up above what he was wearing and what he was carrying.

In your opinion, if someone is carrying chemical irritants like that, if they have a radio and antenna, do you think that's indicative of intent to peacefully enter a building?

Mr. Foster. I'm not sure that question is relevant to any of your -- [redacted] He's talking about his experience as an FBI officer.

Mr. Foster. Yeah, but --

[redacted] He's talking about whether or not he -- whether or not a SWAT team was appropriately deployed for this person.

So I'm just asking the question. If he wants to decline to answer, that's fine, but we're going to keep asking.

Mr. Foster. But you're asking him questions about things that occurred on January 6th that -- those aren't relevant to -- [redacted] I'm asking about him and his experience as an FBI officer.

BY [redacted]

Q As an FBI officer, if an individual is carrying a canister of chemical irritants --

Mr. Foster. [redacted] can I just speak for a moment? Thank you.

You're asking him questions that seem to imply that he had some problem with whether or not the case against these individuals was a righteous case or not. He has not indicated in any way whatsoever that these people shouldn't have been held accountable for what they did on January 6th.

He had an objection to the safety, about safety concerns related to how the warrant was going to be executed --

[redacted] And I'm getting to --

Mr. Foster. -- which is not relevant to that question.

[redacted] -- what concerns might come up when a SWAT team is deployed.

So it is -- that was a minute. We'll go until 1:56. Back on the clock.

Finally, on page -- sorry -- on page 36 of the statement, it says, "A witness described Bensch posting photos and videos of himself outside the Capitol with a gas mask, body armor vest, all black or camouflage attire, and an AR-style rifle."

Do you see that description?

Mr. Meyer. What page was that again?

Mr. Friend. Thirty-six.

Mr. Meyer. Thirty-six. All right.

Mr. Friend. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Based on this description, could it be reasonable for law enforcement to conclude that Mr. Bensch possessed an AR-style rifle?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

On page 37, the statement states that on December 12, 2020, Bensch posted video on his Facebook account of a rally which resulted in, quote, "violent clashes between Trump supporters and counter-protestors. Open-source videos associated with the event contained images of Bensch based on that individual's helmet, goggles, body armor, military fatigues, drab scarf, and right shoulder camera."

Do you see that?

A Yes.

Q And based on that description, could it be reasonable for law enforcement to conclude that he had previously engaged in acts of violence?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So your September 2022 affidavit says that you told your supervisor it was inappropriate to use an FBI SWAT team for this arrest. Was this a reference to the arrest of Mr. Bensch?

A I don't know if it was for Mr. Bensch. I don't know who the SWAT team was going to be used for.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the February 2, 2021, death of FBI Special Agent Daniel Alfin and Special Agent Laura Schwartzenberger?

A No.

Q Okay. So you're not aware of whether they were part of a SWAT team or whether they were serving a warrant on somebody else who was not deemed needing -- worthy of a SWAT team?

A Are you referring to the Miami ones?

Q Yes.

A Yeah, then I am familiar.

Q Okay. So what's your understanding of the circumstances around their deaths?

A The night before, the squad supervisor was exposed to coronavirus and was unable to be on scene and had to defer to his subordinates, and the takedown was not handled according to how it should've been. And when the child pornography subject engaged in gunfire through his door, they did not get assistance from local law enforcement who was present at the scene.

Q Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Foster. What's your basis for that, for all those facts?

Mr. Friend. I have a relationship with George now, who was the supervisor at the time in Miami.

[redacted] Okay.

I'm going to turn to my colleague Agbe Patty.

[redacted] Thank you.

Thank you again for being here, Mr. Friend.

BY [redacted]

Q So, a couple hours ago, you handed me a copy of your October 21, 2022, letter that you stated included the approval for you to make media disclosures. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you have another copy for yourself of that October 21, 2022, letter?

Mr. Meyer. I should. Give me a couple minutes to find it.

Mr. Foster. Has that been marked as an exhibit?

[redacted] No, it has not been.

Mr. Meyer. It probably should be at this point.

[redacted] Yeah, we can mark it as an exhibit.

[redacted] If you have a copy, we can mark it.

[redacted] It's exhibit No. 12, I believe.

[Friend Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] If you have multiple copies, that would be great, if you can pass them around.

Mr. Meyer. I think I just have one other copy. Yeah, here. I have a copy here.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Foster. Do we need to defer this until everybody has a copy?

[redacted] Well, I don't -- we were not given this piece of paper until right --

Mr. Foster. I understand, but --

[redacted] -- now, and so I'm going --

[redacted] We're gonna ask the question.

[redacted] -- I'm going to continue forward.

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] I'm going to continue forward with my questions about it, because Mr. Friend was kind enough to provide me with a copy.

BY [redacted]

Q So you have a copy in front of yourself? Is that correct, Mr. Friend?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So can you point to me in this letter where it states that you received approval to conduct media disclosures?

A This isn't the letter. This is from Jen Moore.

Q So do you have the October 21, 2022, letter in front of you?

A No, this is September 16th.

Mr. Meyer. Oh. Oh, oh, oh. Sorry about that.

[redacted] Let the record reflect that the witness had the wrong copy in front of him.

Mr. Foster. That's the reason why I suggested perhaps -- [redacted] We can pause and go make copies.

Mr. Foster. Yes.

[redacted] Okay. Why don't we hit pause on the clock.

[redacted] Do you want to go off the record?

[redacted] Yeah, we can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Okay. It is now 1:31, and we have about 24 minutes left.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Mr. Friend, so you have a copy of this October 21, 2022, letter in front of you that you stated included approval of your media disclosures. Is that correct?

A I don't have it in front of me.

Mr. Meyer. Somehow we lost our copy.

Mr. Foster. Which has been marked exhibit 12?

[redacted] Which has been marked exhibit 12, and we'll enter that into the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So you have a copy in front of you now, Mr. Friend?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And this is the October 21, 2022, letter that you handed me earlier that you said included approval for your media disclosures. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you tell me where in this letter there is approval for you to disclose media -- make media disclosures?

A This was a referral over to the Prepublication Review Office that they sent to me.

Q Okay.

So you'll see in paragraph 1, it says, "Per 1065PG, Section 4.3.3, you are cautioned that disclosure of information by current or former personnel without the appropriate prepublication review may be subject to sanctions, if warranted, based on the content of the disclosure. The FBI cautions that future disclosures involving FBI equities should be cleared by the FBI before publication occurs."

Did you ever receive approval to make media disclosures?

A I did from the Prepublication Review Office.

Q Do you have a copy of that in writing stating that you have approval?

Mr. Meyer. So the email we sent out, they responded and said that they would work with us if the declaration had sensitive information in it. So the declaration is the one that's --

Mr. Foster. Exhibit 2.

Mr. Meyer. -- exhibit 2.

So they came back with that letter, cautioning him on speaking before he had approval, and there was no comment on the declaration.

[redacted] Okay. So just --

Mr. Meyer. And then he took no comment of the declaration as approval to stay within the bounds of the declaration, which had been previously released by Senator --

Mr. Foster. Johnson.

Mr. Meyer. -- Johnson.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you for that.

BY [redacted]

Q Just so I'm clear, within this letter that you received from Michael Seidel, this does not state that you had permission to make media disclosures. Is that correct?

Mr. Meyer. Um --

[redacted] I'm asking Mr. Friend.

Mr. Meyer. Okay.

Mr. Friend. Yes. It refers me over to the FBI prepublication office for matters that I was asking for permission to speak to.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

And then you'll see in paragraph 3, at the start, it says, "Compliance with the PRP does not relieve you of the obligation to comply with the standards of ethical conduct for the executive branch and other applicable FBI and Office of Government Ethics regulations or policies."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So what this is saying is that, even if it is the case that you were given approval for media disclosures, you still have to clear it through more individuals before you're able to release your media disclosures. Is that correct?

A It says I have to comply with the standards of ethical conduct.

Q Okay. Did you consult the standards of ethical conduct for the executive branch or other applicable FBI and government ethics regulations or policies before making media disclosures?

A No.

Q Okay.

And then you'll see the line continues in paragraph 3: "Prior to taking any further action with respect to media contact, consider applicable regulations as set forth in the FBI Ethics and Integrity Program Policy Guide 1120PG, with particular attention to Sections 4.8 and 4.9."

Do you see that?

A Yes.

Q Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Did you make sure that your media disclosures were in compliance with FBI Ethics and Integrity Program Policy Guide 1120PG, with particular attention to Sections 4.8 and 4.9?

A I didn't have access to that policy guide, but when I asked for permission from the Prepublication Review Office, I took on good faith their response to me that they had consulted that before they authorized me to speak to the details of my disclosure.

Q Okay. So, even though it is the case that within this paragraph they are telling you to specifically make your own determination whether or not you are in compliance with these ethics and policy guides, you're saying that you just trusted the Prepublication Review Office to do that for you even though they tell you to do that yourself?

A I was unable to consult that document.

Mr. Meyer. FBI policy requires single point of contact on prepublication review. They don't want the employee contacting multiple offices. I do these every week. So there is one point for the processing of the prepub review.

I'll go on record and say that was the most unprofessional prepub review I've seen from the FBI because it's completely vacuous. When I do these for the DNI, CIA comes back and redacts stuff that's a problem.

We sent the declaration over --

[redacted] Thank you for that, Mr. Meyer.

Mr. Meyer. We sent the declaration over --

[redacted] We're on a time clock. I'm going to ask you to --

Mr. Meyer. We sent the declaration over, and we received it back.

[redacted] -- cease speaking, and we can take this up at another time.

BY [redacted]

Q So, Mr. Friend, you'll see in the third paragraph, that last line, it says, "Please also ensure that appropriate approval within your chain of command is attained prior to participation when the information relates to your area of expertise within the FBI."

Did you consult your chain of command about media disclosures before you made them?

A In being referred over to the PRO, I took that to mean that's their chain of command and I was --

Q Okay. So, even though it says with your chain of command, you interpreted that to be the PRO's chain of command. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And just one last question. So do you think it is the case -- when you get approval from PRO to make a media disclosure, is it your interpretation that that's a blanket approval that you just have -- you can make all the media disclosures that you want?

A I didn't ask to. I asked for permission to speak about the declaration.

Q Okay. So, earlier, when you said you were on Dan Bongino's podcast, so you never had any type of pre-approval to go on that show. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Going back to your -- sorry, we're jumping around a little bit.

Going back to your declaration, your September declaration, in paragraph 8 of that declaration -- and, again, this is exhibit 2 that we're looking at -- you refer to the January 6, 2021, Capitol Hill protest.

What was that a reference to?

A The individuals going into the Capitol that were being investigated by the FBI.

Q Okay. And why did you use the term "protest" here?

A Would you prefer I use a different word? I think it sort of was a protest that -- I don't know. I don't know why. What other word do you want me to use?

Q I'm just asking you why you chose the word "protest." That's all.

A I felt that it was an adequate noun.

Q Okay. Some have referred to the events of January 6th as a riot, for example. Do you think -- do you agree with that description?

A It depends on the context. Some, yes; why not? Some people have called it the worst thing since the Civil War. So I think it's all kind of up to, you know, interpretation. I used "protest" because I felt that that was an apropos noun to use for this declaration.

Q Okay. And where were you on January 6th? Were you here in D.C.?

A No.

Q Okay. So you weren't here to witness the events yourself?

A No.

Q Okay.

You said that you were put on the JTTF and assigned to handle January 6th-related cases. How many cases, or matters, I guess, did you personally handle?

A How many that my name was on, or how many did I handle?

Q Both.

A My name was attached to probably a half-dozen.

Q Okay.

A I assisted with one that -- I was a scribe for an interview. And then I was sent the lead to go and interview the gentleman whose son had died and he hadn't been there.

Q Okay. So about eight total that you had involvement in, six of which your name was on?

A I think that's fair.

Q Okay. And during that time, you were also doing the work for the sheriff's office, right?

A Yes.

Q Doing the child-sexual-abuse-material-related work?

A And other work as well.

Q I'm just going to ask you some knowledge about -- some questions about your knowledge about the events of January 6th.

You know, there were reports that there were individuals who entered the Capitol without authorization who wore body armor. Are you familiar with those reports?

A Yes.

Q Do you have a reaction to that report?

A Sounds like it's pretty bad guys. I hope we follow due process rules and put them in jail for doing anything illegal.

Q There is photographic evidence that some people who entered the Capitol had Confederate flags and they had Nazi emblems. Are you aware of that?

A No.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with an organization called the Oath Keepers?

A Yes.

Q Were there any Oath Keepers-related investigations under your purview related to January 6th?

A I don't think so. I think that Oath Keepers cases that stemmed from my office predated my assignment to the JTTF.

Q Okay. Do you have an opinion of the Oath Keepers?

A It's an opinion from reading publicly available information, but I don't know if it's pertinent to bring forward here.

My point is saying, a lot of these guys are bad dudes, and they should go to jail. And we didn't follow our rules, and we set ourselves up to get crushed at trial if we -- or consider ourselves up to lose on appeal. I want to win.

Q Okay. So your concern was the process, not with the people?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

A I told my supervisors I didn't vote for either major political party's candidate for President. I don't have a dog in the fight. My dog in the fight is I want my agency to follow the rules so we can do our job properly.

Q I want to turn to some conversations that you've had. There's been -- we just talked through the media disclosures and some disclosures that you've made publicly. You've been on a number of podcasts, and you've written some articles and things like that, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you've mentioned before Kyle Seraphin. You mentioned him earlier.

A Yes.

Q Who is Mr. Seraphin?

A He is a friend of mine who is also a whistleblower and an indefinitely suspended FBI agent.

Q Okay. How did you meet Mr. Seraphin?

A He reached out to me when my name was put into the public sphere and contacted me.

Q Over email? Over phone?

A Phone call.

Q And do you know how he got your information?

A I think that he has a pretty extensive network, and maybe a contact of his had a contact with somebody who I knew, but I never really nailed down on actually how he got my phone number.

Q Are you aware of whether he has a podcast?

A Yes.

Q And what's the name of that podcast?

A "The Kyle Seraphin Show."

Q Have you appeared on that podcast?

A Many times.

Q Okay. How many times, do you think?

A I don't know. Eight? Ten? I'm not sure.

Q Okay. And did you receive prior approval before appearing on those podcasts?

A No.

Q Not for any one of them?

A No.

Q Okay. Were you ever compensated for any of your appearances on his show?

Mr. Foster. Other than the approval that he's already testified about.

BY [redacted]

Q But you didn't specifically go to the FBI before you appeared on the podcast and sought approval?

A No, I did not.

Q Okay. Were you ever compensated for any of your appearances on his show?

A No.

Q Do you know if you ever promoted your -- the online fundraising?

A Yes.

Q Would you do that every show?

A I know we've done it several times. I don't know if we've done it every single time.

Q Okay.

A But, typically, at the end of his show, he will say, you know, "Follow us on a social media, and if you want to contribute to this GiveSendGo, we're raising money for our buddy."

Q Uh-huh.

A And that's what we do.

Q Okay. Have you ever promoted your upcoming book on his show?

A Yes.

Q In what context?

A Last Friday, I was really excited because I got a bump in sales and my publisher contacted me. So I brought that up, that I had gotten to a number-five ranking on one of the categories on Amazon, and I was pretty excited to share that.

Q Okay. And did that indicate -- what was the bump in sales?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

A I just know my publisher said, you had a good surge in sales today. And when I -- I don't have any insider access to Amazon, but if you go and click on your book, it says where it ranks on a number of categories, and I saw that it was ranked number five on, like, law enforcement memoirs or something like that.

Q Okay.

Have you ever used the term "The Suspendables" to refer to yourself?

A Yes.

Q What's the meaning of that term?

A It is a -- it began as a tongue-in-cheek reference to ourselves as a -- "The Expendables" trilogy series by Sylvester Stallone. Over the -- so we said that maybe one day we could all form a private investigator business or a MERC business and call ourselves The Suspendables.

And then -- we did it as a joke. And Alan Feuer from The New York Times must have got wind of it and published it. So then we figured, since the paper had recorded it, we should probably take it seriously.

Q Are you aware that Kyle Seraphin sells The Suspendables merchandise on his website?

A Sure. I helped design the merchandise.

Q Okay. Do you know how much of that merchandise has been sold?

A No idea.

Q Okay. Have you received any income from the sale of that merchandise?

A No. That is out of my -- I don't have access to it.

Q Okay.

A The only thing I know is my mom bought a T-shirt.

Q Okay.

Mr. Foster. And Kyle Seraphin got the money?

BY [redacted]

Q And, moving on, you are -- you're familiar with an individual named Jason Foster?

A Uh-huh.

Q Is he here today?

A Yes, I'm familiar with Jason.

Q And you testified earlier that you are not paying him, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Are you paying anyone else associated with Empower Oversight for their work on your behalf?

A Just the retainer that I gave to Mr. Meyer originally. That's the only out-of-pocket.

Q Okay.

Do you have a Truth Social account?

A Yes.

Q What's your handle?

A @Real_SteveFriend.

Q Okay.

On October 26, 2022, you posted, quote, "If you are looking for a worthy charitable cause, please consider donating to Empower Oversight. It's a nonpartisan charity that helps whistleblowers with legal assistance. They are helping me, and I hope they will be there for others willing to speak out."

We're going to admit this as exhibit 13.

[Friend Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So what did you mean by "they are helping me"?

A I meant that Empower Oversight was helping me retain an attorney and give me legal counsel.

Mr. Foster. What exhibit is this?

[redacted] This is 13.

BY [redacted]

Q They did not provide you any financial assistance?

A No.

Q But they did help you find your attorney?

A Yes.

Q And you said they provided you legal counsel?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you promoted them on your Truth Social account?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with Sputnik Today?

A Yes.

Q What do you know about Sputnik Today?

A It's a Russian propaganda newspaper.

Q Okay. Are you aware that it's been sanctioned and banned by the European Union?

A No.

Q Okay. Do you believe me when I say that?

A Sure, I'll take you at --

Q Okay. We can introduce the document otherwise, but --

A -- face value. That's fine.

Q Okay. Have you spoken with anyone associated with Sputnik Today?

A I've never spoken to anybody at Sputnik.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with Ekaterina Blinova?

A That was a reporter who reached out to me on Twitter through a direct message. I've never spoken to him.

Q Did you communicate over Twitter?

A Yes.

Q And how many times did you communicate?

A Once. He asked me for -- he asked me three questions, and I provided him three written responses. And then he sent me the link to the article.

Q And this was all over Twitter, all over DMs, I guess?

A Direct message, correct.

Q Did you have any email communication?

A No.

Q Any Signal communication?

A No.

Q Okay.

So I want to introduce an article entitled "Under Biden Federal Agencies Turned Into Instrument of Intimidation, FBI Whistleblower Says," by Ekaterina Blinova. It was published on Sputnik Today on January 20, 2023.

And this is exhibit 14.

[Friend Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Did you review the story after it was published?

A Yes.

Q And what's your impression of it?

A Made sure that he took my quotes and didn't alter them in any way, and he did. And then I didn't read, because I knew the information I provided him. That was all I was concerned about, that it was reported accurately.

Q Okay. So you just looked at the quotes to make sure that they were accurately relayed?

A Yes.

Q You checked them off with the DMs?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with Russia Today?

A Yes.

Q What's your understanding of what Russia Today is?

A It's another propaganda arm for the Russian Government.

Q Okay. Do you know if Russia Today ever referenced your comments during its broadcast?

A I did not know until I had my meeting with the Security Division of the FBI, and they accused me of appearing on Russia Today. And I had to inform them that they probably just lifted my appearances from other media sources and replayed them.

Q Okay. But so you are aware that they have -- you've never appeared intentionally, but they've taken your statements and broadcast them?

A I never went looking for it. I'll take what Security Division said on its face as accurate.

Q Are you familiar with the Epoch Times?

A Yes.

Q What is your understanding of what the Epoch Times is?

A I believe it's owned by a Taiwanese company. It is a newspaper, and it has a sister television network.

Q Okay.

Oh -- and, sorry, I just want to back up to the Sputnik Today. Did you receive any kind of clearance from the FBI before speaking to Sputnik Today?

A I had the Prepublication Review Office's permission to speak to the details of my declaration.

Q But you didn't specifically say, "I've had this outreach from Sputnik Today. Am I authorized to speak to them?"

A No.

Q Okay. And sorry for jumping back.

Going back to the Epoch Times, have you spoken with anyone associated with the Epoch Times?

A Yes.

Q Who did you speak with?

A Joe Hanneman is a reporter. And I know that -- I don't remember the acronym for the television network, but they had me appear on there for a couple-minute segment.

Q Okay. What was the segment?

A I don't remember.

Q Do you remember who the host was?

A No. I just knew that they were definitely -- English was a second language, but it was -- they were all Taiwanese.

Q Do you remember when?

A This was pretty shortly after I got permission. So probably October, late October.

Q Okay. And did you get specific clearance from the FBI to -- or approval from the FBI to have this conversation? Like, did you reach out to them and say, "I've been contacted by the Epoch Times. I would like to have a conversation. Am I approved to do so?"

A No. I'd, on each of these, taken my permission from the PRO to mean that I could speak to these details.

Q Okay.

Did you know that Kash Patel also has a column with Epoch Times?

A I did not know that.

Q Okay. Did you know that he discussed you in one of his columns with the Epoch Times?

A No.

Q Okay. I want to introduce into the record -- it's dated September 30, 2022, and this is exhibit 15.

[Friend Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So have you reviewed -- sorry, I'll let you get a copy.

Have you reviewed these comments prior to just now?

A No.

Q Okay. Let me move on, since you've not reviewed them.

A Correct.

Q Are you familiar with Glenn Beck?

A Yes.

Q Who is Glenn Beck?

A He is a radio and TV show host and author.

Q And have you spoken with him?

A Yes.

Q And what were the circumstances?

A I appeared on a television special with him on TheBlaze, and then I appeared with him on radio, and I have asked him to provide a blurb for my forthcoming book.

Q You have asked him to provide a blurb. Is that going to be another second -- or how do you intend to --

A I hope his staff puts my book in front of him and he reads it, and if he wants to comment on it, that would be much appreciated.

Q Okay. And did he reach out to you or did you reach out to him, initially?

A He never reached out to me. A member of his staff reached out to me.

Q Okay. How did they reach out to you?

A Through social media. Yeah.

Q Twitter? Facebook?

A LinkedIn.

Q Okay. Did they indicate how they had learned about you?

A No. They reached out to me after my name was released into the public, and I think that they were looking to communicate with me shortly after that.

Q Were you compensated for either of your appearances on Glenn Beck's shows?

A They paid for my travel, but I wasn't compensated.

Q And where were they?

A They flew me to Dallas, and I stayed in a hotel, but they didn't give me any per diem or anything like that.

Q Do you recall if you mentioned your fundraising campaigns during that appearance -- either of those appearances?

A I don't remember if I did.

Q And, again, did you get specific approval from the FBI to speak with Glenn Beck?

A No.

Q In total, if you had to estimate, how many podcasts do you think you've appeared on?

A I couldn't tell you. I've made a lot of appearances. It would be irresponsible for me to just throw out a number.

Q Okay. Have you been compensated for any of them?

A Well, the Beck show flew me out, and Brandon House flew me to Memphis --

Q Okay.

A -- and, again, grat'd the hotel stay, but no compensation.

Q Do you know offhand if you've regularly mentioned your fundraising -- the online fundraising platform on those appearances?

A I try to. Whenever I'm asked for people who want to contribute, I try to mention the GiveSendGo, I try to mention Empower Oversight.

Q Okay.

Mr. Foster. And if he does, how does that affect -- [redacted] I just have one more question, and then we're about out of time.

Mr. Foster. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And did you receive specific approval from the FBI for any of these podcast appearances?

A Just the Prepublication Review Office's general response to me that I was able to speak to the details of my declaration.

Q Okay. Thank you.

We are out of time.

[redacted] [redacted] you can go ahead and just keep going.

[redacted] Okay. You don't have any further questions?

[redacted] Not as of right now.

[redacted] Well, we do, but --

[redacted] Not right now.

[redacted] -- I think we'll do it --

[redacted] Well, if you have further questions, I'd rather actually go in the order that's laid out -- 60 minutes, 60 minutes, 60 minutes.

[redacted] Just keep going.

[redacted] So you're not going to have further questions after I go?

[redacted] No, I am, but just keep going.

[redacted] Go ahead. Go.

[redacted] I think she just said she wants to stick with the format that we --

[redacted] Yeah. So, if you don't have questions now, then we can end the interview.

[redacted] Oh, we can end the interview?

Mr. Meyer. Well, I wanted to put my part, my little last piece.

[redacted] Hold on one second.

Mr. Meyer. I wanted to put my little last bit on there. Are we on or off the record?

[redacted] We're still on the record.

Mr. Meyer. We're still on the record. Okay.

You're doing a great job over there, by the way.

[redacted] We don't have any questions.

[redacted] I think we're good, actually. So, if you have questions, I would want time after your questions to potentially respond, but I --

[redacted] Fair enough.

[redacted] -- don't have anything.

[redacted] Of course. So we'll just switch around.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Okay. We'll go back on the record. It's 1:58.

Mr. Meyer, I believe you had something you wanted to --

Mr. Meyer. Yes. Just in the previous -- so, actually, two sessions ago, there was this discussion about OSC's letter and the definition of a disclosure and whether this was an interpretive policy issue or whether this was a rule. This is about the DIOG, the document in question.

I actually called OSC and said, look, you know, there's no appeal process for disclosures, but the definition they used was out of bounds, okay?

The bottom line is, the whistleblower laws are written so you're reporting a violation of law, rule, or regulation. And an agency just classifying something as policy doesn't get them off the hook if that policy is really effectively a wolf in sheep's clothing, if it's really a violation of law, rule, or regulation and they're calling it a policy in order to get around the whistleblower laws. And there's a long tradition by agency counsels of telling their bosses to label documents as policy to get around the whistleblower laws.

In this case, you've got to look at the actual DIOG, and when you look at it, that's a set of rules for agents to follow. And, yes, all rules have exceptions, okay? Court rules have exceptions. There's exceptions -- it's part of the way we think in this country.

But the bottom line is, we want the agents to follow the DIOG in the best way they can interpret it at the time, not based on what they're going to be told 3 or 4 months later as somebody goes through [inaudible].

I want that on the record, that you can't go down the track of classifying this as a policy just to get rid of the disclosure.

And the second thing, I just want to clarify on the fundraising in the last session. My client has not taken money from the social media site fundraising. Where he has referenced it, it has been for other FBI agents.

Am I correct on that?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Meyer. Yeah.

And those agents -- I have to be -- you know, I can't give too much out of there -- those agents needed that money because they are even in dire straits, one of which had a newborn baby that was sleeping in a drawer of a dresser because the FBI had moved him across the country and then stranded him with no furniture for a 4-month period.

So I just wanted that on the record just so there was proper context. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Friend, you testified this morning that there's a number of ways to apprehend a suspect without using a SWAT team.

A Yes.

Q You said you can call their lawyer, I believe?

A Yes.

Q Make an agreement to have the lawyer bring in the suspect?

A Yes.

Q You said you can call the suspect directly and see if the suspect is willing to turn himself in?

A Yes.

Q And I think you went down and identified three or four other options. Local law enforcement I think you mentioned.

A Yes.

Q You said the use of a summons.

A Yes.

Q If the particular suspect in question is a gun owner, does that require the use of a SWAT team?

A It's one of the elements that you can consult in the SWAT matrix and actually use a SWAT team for.

Q But just simply being a gun owner, is that enough to warrant a SWAT team?

A FBI executive management could say that, yes.

Q Okay.

The individuals that you expressed concern about for August 24th, were you aware of any factors that would counsel in favor of a SWAT team?

A I think being a gun owner meets that matrix, and those individuals were. I think that being, you know, accused of a felony is something that can be taken into consideration. And, ultimately, if local law enforcement requests permission to use a SWAT team, then the FBI will do that as well.

Q Okay. But if the individual in question was willing to turn themselves in, then you wouldn't need a SWAT team. Is that right?

A That's my contention, yes.

Q And if the individuals had lawyers that were working with the FBI and agreed to produce the person, then you wouldn't need a SWAT team. Is that correct?

A That's right.

Q And was it your understanding in this instance that was a possibility?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

You also mentioned -- and, again, this is a question you may not feel comfortable answering here on the record -- that her wife lost her position because of what happened to you, or lost her job?

A She lost her position in middle of October.

Q Okay. And who was she employed by, if you don't mind saying on the record here?

A She was employed by a -- I'll give her industry. She was employed in fertilizer logistics.

Q Okay. And do you have any idea why your situation may have negatively impacted her at her job?

A A couple theories, one being perhaps there was a politically minded person in a position to remove her and disagreed with my contentions; secondly being that fertilizer is WMD-adjacent, and there are tripwire communications between the Federal Government and fertilizer importers. So there might've been that. And this is all theoretical.

And the manner in which she was told that she was being dismissed was very unusual. It was in the middle of a pay period, in the middle of a week. Her supervisors told her that she was doing a great job and they had a lot of work coming up and they thought it was best that they parted ways. So that sort of contradiction, to me, was very strange.

And they gave her a 6-month severance, an NDA, and asked her to do 2 more weeks. She asked if she could just use her vacation time for the 2 weeks, and they said that they prefer she didn't because, by using 2 more weeks, it would get her into November and that her family would have insurance for an extra month. So they were trying to arrange for her to leave under the best possible circumstances.

So we believed that they were just not really good at executing the order to execute her from working.

Q Okay. Did she have any followup communications with her employer about you and whether it had anything to do with your work situation?

A Just when she followed up and asked if she could use vacation time, she said, "Does this have anything to do with my husband?" and they said no.

Q Okay.

You testified briefly -- and I just wanted to follow up on this vignette that you offered -- that a tip had came in from Rhode Island after -- I believe it was in November?

A Yes.

Q And you were sent to Palm Coast, Florida?

A Yes.

Q To knock on someone's door? Could you sort of back up and unpack that situation?

A An anonymous tip came into NTOC, essentially the 911 system for the FBI. It came in from Rhode Island; they were able to trace the call there. And the individual said that this person who lived in Palm Coast was one of the folks that is on the most wanted January 6th website list.

The task force in Washington did a check of this individual's cell phone. It came back negative. Did a cross-reference of this individual's driver's license photo and social media with the pictures at the Capitol, and that came back negative. And they sent it to our office for interview, request that we do an interview.

Mr. Foster. What do you mean by "negative"?

Mr. Friend. It means that they couldn't -- his picture did not match with anybody at the Capitol.

BY [redacted]

Q So his picture didn't match. The phone number didn't match. What else didn't match?

A That's it. Then just --

Q But they had no evidence linking this particular person in Palm Coast, Florida, to the tipster, right?

A Correct.

Q And then what happened?

A Well, I asked the other guys on my squad, because they had done these before, what I was supposed to do with it, and they said, you have to go attempt to interview him, which is a waste of time because there's no complainant and there's no evidence. Even if he confesses to being there, he's not going to get charged.

Q Okay.

A So they said if I didn't go and sent the lead back to Washington without any action on it, that they would continue to ping-pong it back to us.

Q Okay.

A So I drove to Palm Coast and --

Q How long does it take to get to Palm Coast?

A About a 90-minute drive.

Q Okay. So what happened when you went to this gentleman's residence?

A He lived in a large condominium complex, and knocked on his door, identified myself. Was pretty straightforward and asked him if he was at the Capitol on January 6th, because, obviously, the FBI was investigating that. And he said, no, that was the day that my -- of my son's funeral.

So I had to, from my perspective, make the man relive probably the worst day of his life. And he demanded to have a copy of my business card, so I figured, yes, I'll provide that to you. And I kind of hoped that he would complain. And I left.

Q Do you know if he did complain?

A I never -- nothing ever crossed my desk on it.

Q Okay.

So a tip came in. There was no evidence that the tip linked up to this particular individual, but you were sent to Palm Coast, Florida, anyway?

A Yes.

Q Ninety-minute drive?

A Yes.

Q So it took you most of the day to get down to Palm Coast and come back?

A Yes.

Q Subsequently, did any further work happen on this individual at the FBI?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q So that was the end of the matter?

A Yeah. I wrote up my interaction with him and sent it back and never received anything back from them.

Q Okay.

And I understand your -- getting back to your wife, I had one more question about that, and then I believe I'm done, unless my colleague has anything, or Mr. Gaetz.

I understand your wife has been kicked off Facebook?

A Yes.

Q Could you help us understand that, to the extent you're willing to walk us through that?

A Sure.

The week that I became public, we went to church that Sunday. And she received a message that, after we got done at church, she looked at. It was from a friend of ours who was friends with a woman who's with Moms for Liberty in Volusia County. And they had seen my name and my picture pop up on the news, and they recognized me from having attended a school board meeting. So this woman tracked me down through our friend and said, "What can we do?"

So my wife went on her private Facebook account and sent a private message to this woman and said, "I'm Steve Friend's wife. We really appreciate it. At this point, we're not speaking out, but we would really appreciate if you could share his story with your membership and encourage them to put it on their social media."

Thirty minutes later, her account was suspended for violating community standards. She appealed. And the following day it was permanently revoked.

And I'll note that her account was hacked several months before this happened, so she had to have it restored. And when she restored it, she used her -- my wife's an immigrant from Ukraine, so she used her Ukrainian name and spelling in the Cyrillic alphabet.

Q Uh-huh.

A She didn't put anything up there that identified herself as my wife. She didn't post publicly. She only used it for direct message and looking at pictures.

And I joked that by saying you're Steve Friend's wife, the word "friend," the algorithm probably couldn't catch that. But apparently it did, or her account was being monitored.

Q And has your wife been -- has her Facebook privileges been restored?

A No. She started a different account with a different name and a different birthday.

Q Okay. So what was the outcome of the suspended account? It just remains suspended?

A It's gone, correct. And we got in contact with that -- the lawsuit that's being filed by the attorney generals of Louisiana and Missouri, and I believe we're paragraph 393, 394 of that lawsuit.

Q Oh, okay.

I think that's all the questions we have. I'll turn it back over to --

[redacted] We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It's 2:12. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned the SWAT team matrix. Just one quick question on that. Did you review the SWAT team matrix prior to the August 24th arrest?

A No. Just familiar with it with my experience on the SWAT.

Q On the Palm Coast tip that you followed up on, real quickly, did you actually review the -- sorry, what's the NTOC? You referred to that.

A The National Threat Operations Center.

Q Okay. And did you review the tip that the NTOC sent?

A Yes.

Q And what did it say?

A It said a caller from Rhode Island alleged that this individual in Palm Coast was, in fact, this particular unidentified person on the FBI's list of January 6th subjects who were yet to be identified.

Q Uh-huh. Did it say the most wanted list, like, most wanted --

A I think it says most wanted, but it's got an acronym connected to it.

Q Okay. And how long was your conversation with this individual?

A Maybe a couple minutes.

Q Okay. And so you drove down and you spent a couple minutes talking to him, pretty quickly concluded that he wasn't the person?

A Yes.

Q And then ended it, right?

A Yes.

Q And did you put in a report to that effect?

A Yes.

Q And what did that say?

A It detailed that I'd driven there and asked him that question and that the answer he provided to me was that he wasn't because he was at his son's funeral that day.

Q Okay. And so that would've been related back to the Washington Field Office?

A Yes.

Q And, to your knowledge, no further actions were taken on that case after that?

A To my knowledge, none.

Q Okay.

I think that's all I have. Agbe, did you have anything?

[redacted] Yeah, I just had one quick followup.

BY [redacted]

Q So, with the SWAT matrix, is it tailored to the specific facts of each individual case?

A It's a general matrix where you would consider different features of a particular case and see if it meets --

Q Okay.

A -- that matrix. Kind of like a decision tree.

Q Okay. So it does take into account the facts of a particular case, and then you use the SWAT matrix to make a determination.

A Yes. If it satisfies those components, then you can consider SWAT. And then, even then, it's within your discretion whether or not to use it.

Q Okay.

[redacted] That's the only question that I had, but I did want to -- Mr. Foster, I know you mentioned earlier that the FBI has a specific statutory obligation to provide firearm records to individuals.

Do you have the name of that specific statute, or the title of it, just for our records?

Mr. Foster. Under the Privacy Act, you have a right to obtain records about yourself from any company.

[redacted] Okay. So it's just the general Privacy Act. There's not a -- we were looking for a firearms-related act. There's nothing to that effect.

Mr. Foster. No, it's not related to firearms. It's records about your own self and your employment that you are entitled to receive under the Privacy Act and under the FOIA.

[redacted] Okay. That answers the question. Thank you.

Mr. Foster. Those requests were made in January, I think, right?

Mr. Friend. Yes.

Mr. Foster. And despite constant assurances both to the inspector general and to us that we would be provided those records so that he could obtain the license he would need in order to work and earn an income, the records have not been forthcoming.

[redacted] And it's still outstanding, effectively. Okay.

All right. That's all we have.

[redacted] do you have anything further?

[redacted] No.

[redacted] Okay. We can go off the record. Thank you.

Mr. Foster. I'm sorry. Can I request to say something at the end here?

[redacted] Okay. Of course.

Mr. Meyer. Can we go back on the record?

[redacted] Sure. We can go back on the record.

Mr. Foster. So I just want to address -- earlier, there were some questions from the minority staff about how Steve Friend came to be referred to me. I don't think those are necessarily appropriate or connected to any legislative purpose of the committee, certainly not necessary in order to understand his disclosures.

I would just point out that our organization is listed on the House Whistleblower Ombudsman website, along with several other organizations that are like-minded across the ideological spectrum that I have worked with cooperatively for many, many years. And it's perfectly appropriate for people to be referred to those organizations, and any insinuation otherwise is not well-taken.

[redacted] Thank you. Anything further?

Okay. We can go off the record then. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 2:16 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they so choose.

We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record. So we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand that?

Dr. Garcia. I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is. Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. And it is my understanding that you are appearing today with counsel.

Is that correct?

Dr. Garcia. It is.

[redacted] Could counsel please state your name for the record?

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Yes. My name is Susanne Sachsman Grooms. I'm with Kaplan Hecker & Fink.

Mr. Jain. And my name is Amit Jain, also with Kaplan Hecker & Fink.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible. So we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know.

Our questions will cover a wide range of topics. So if you need clarification at any point, just say so. Please give us your best recollection, and it is okay the tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to our question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

Dr. Garcia. I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview.

Do you understand this?

Dr. Garcia. I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 USC, Section 1001.

Do you understand this?

Dr. Garcia. I do

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Dr. Garcia. There is not.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For that same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporters so they can go in the official transcript and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That's the end of my opening remarks.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] We have nothing to add. Thank you.

[redacted] Dr. Garcia, I understand that you have a statement that you would like to give.

Dr. Garcia. I do. Okay.

[redacted] Go ahead.

Dr. Garcia. Well, good morning to everyone.

My name is Viola Garcia, and I'm a lifelong educator dedicated to my local school board and school boards across the Nation. A proud Texan, I received my bachelor's degree from Texas Woman's University and my master's and doctorate in education from the University of Houston.

I have served on the Aldine Independent School District board of trustees as an unpaid volunteer since 1992 and am the past president of the Texas Association of School Boards, one of the largest school boards associations in the country.

I have dedicated much of my career to training future teachers for local school districts at the University of Houston-Downtown where I am now a professor emeritus.

In 2021, I was elected to be president of the board of directors of the National School Boards Association, and I was the first Latina to ever hold that position. I have also previously served as the president of the Mexican American School Board Members Association.

Currently, I volunteer on the National Assessment Governing Board, a nonpartisan board that overseas The Nation's Report Card. I was appointed to that position by Secretary of Education Cardona and serve in the role of the local school board member. I also continue to serve as a volunteer on my local school board.

I have dedicated over 30 years of my life to service and have continued that service into my professional retirement.

I understand that you have questions about a letter that I signed when I was at the National School Boards Association, and I have traveled from Texas to be here today and will try to answer your questions to the best of my ability.

Thank you for your time.

[redacted] Thank you.

The clock now reads 10:06. We'll start the first round of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Dr. Garcia, when did you join the National School Boards Association?

A It must have been about 8 years before I became president.

Q And when did you become president?

A I don't recall the year.

Q Do you know how long you served as president?

A You serve as president 1 year.

Q One year.

And what were your roles and responsibilities as president of the NSBA?

A To advocate for NSBA, to lead the quarterly board of directors meetings, and to be of service.

Q And you would be considered one of the officers of the NSBA as the president?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And when did you leave your role as NSBA president?

A March? It was in March of 2022.

Q March of 2022?

A Uh-huh.

Q Do you currently have any role with the NSBA?

A I do not.

Q Are you still considered a member of the NSBA?

A I am not. Individuals -- the member -- NSBA's members are State associations, not individuals.

Q And you serve on a school board right now, correct?

A I serve on the -- my local school board, yes.

Q And which school board is that?

A The Aldine Independent School District in the Greater Houston area.

Q And is that school board or the State of Texas a member of the NSBA?

A No. Currently, no.

Q Okay. And how long have you served on your local school board?

A Since 1992.

Q Since 1992. Great.

And you worked in the education field prior to that, you said?

A I did.

Q And what did you do?

A I'm an educator.

Q And what is your understanding of how the NSBA serves local school boards across the country?

A NSBA's members are State school board associations. And those State school board associations serve local school board members within their State. So NSBA is a service organization to the State associations and, therefore, to local school board members.

Q And prior to September 29th, 2021, how many State school board associations were members of the NSBA?

A Forty-nine.

Q Forty-nine.

A As best as I can remember.

Q Yeah.

A Forty-nine.

Q That's fine.

And the NSBA has officers and then a board of directors, correct?

A That's right.

Q And who's the ultimate decision-maker at the NSBA?

A It is a joint responsibility of the board of directors to confer and vote and approve recommendations that come before the board, So ultimately the board of directors.

Q And what role do the officers play?

A The officers are the leaders of the organization elected by the members.

Q And does the NSBA have a staff that runs the day-to-day operations?

A NSBA has a staff, yes.

Q Do you know how many members are on the staff?

A Currently, I do not know.

Q And what role does the NSBA executive director and CEO play?

A The NSBA executive director manages the day-to-day operations of the organization and is the administrator of the organization and staff.

Q So the staff report to the executive director of the NSBA.

A That is right.

Q And as of September 29th, 2021, who were your fellow NSBA officers?

A The officers are considered to be: Past President--At the time that was Charlie Wilson. President-elect was Frank Henderson. And the secretary was Kristi Swett.

Q And how often do the NSBA officers meet?

A We meet quarterly at the quarterly board of directors meetings.

Q Okay. And besides meeting quarterly, do you exchange emails or phone calls or text messages regularly?

A We communicate with the executive director or did at the time communicate with the executive director.

Q And who was the executive director on September 29th 2021?

A There was an interim executive director. Chip Slaven was the interim executive director at that time.

Q And how often did the NSBA board of directors meet?

A Quarterly.

Q Quarterly?

A Four times a year, uh-huh.

Q Okay. And in 2021, the board of directors met quarterly?

A That's right.

Q Okay. Did you attend all of those meetings?

A I did.

Q Did you speak at any of those meetings?

A I did.

Q Do you remember what the content of your remarks were at those meetings?

A I conducted the meeting. I opened the meeting and followed the agenda that had been developed for each of those meetings.

Q Okay. So when would have been the last board meeting before September 29th, 2021?

A I don't recall. Quarterly meetings generally were March, April, January. So it may have been a May meeting.

Q Okay.

A I don't recall.

Q And did you prepare your own communications and agenda for each board meeting?

A No, not alone.

Q Oh, okay. Who had input in those?

A The officers and the executive director and his chief staff.

Q So would you go back and forth on the agenda, sending it, circulating it?

A Yes.

Q And they all provided input?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So when did you become aware that Mr. Slaven was considering requesting Federal intervention at local school board meetings?

A I don't recall the specific -- a specific date.

Q Okay. I'm going to enter as exhibit No. 1 an email from September 8th, 2021, between Mr. Slaven and the board -- the officers. Excuse me.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Please take a moment to review.

A Okay.

Q Okay. Do you remember receiving this email, Dr. Garcia?

A I do now that I've read it.

Q Okay. I'm going to direct your attention to the email from Mr. Slaven on Wednesday, September 8th, at 5:47 p.m. I'm going to read that first part.

It says: "Hi, Charlie and officers. I have been very concerned over these issues for several weeks. This rhetoric is troubling and reminds me of similar language during the 1990s after Waco and Ruby Ridge.

"I've been exploring several options to try and address these issues, including contacting the Department of Justice and our Department of Homeland Security and asking for a threat assessment for school boards and public schools. We are also looking at some best practices to help to manage meetings, but I want to make sure we vet those practices with some experts first."

Did you read this email when you received it?

A Yes, I routinely read email that I received.

Q And did you express any concerns or give Mr. Slaven any feedback about contacting the Department of Justice or Department of Homeland Security?

A I do not recall doing that.

Q So you didn't raise any concerns about the Federal intervention.

A I didn't -- don't recall that.

Q Okay. And did Mr. Slaven, besides this, ever come to you again about the alleged threats and violence at school board meetings and the need for Federal Government intervention?

A I don't recall that either.

Q Okay. When did you become aware that Mr. Slaven was drafting a letter to the President on behalf of the NSBA?

A Shortly before the letter was issued is what I recall.

Q Okay. Were you involved in the drafting process at all?

A Not at all.

Q So you didn't provide any input during the drafting process itself.

A No.

Q Are you aware who actually drafted the letter?

A Not specifically, no.

Q Okay. Do you know what kind of due diligence was performed in conducting research for the letter?

A I do not.

Q I'm going to enter another exhibit, No. 2.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is an October 27th and 26th email chain from Mr. Slaven to the officers. Refresh your recollection. Okay.

A Okay.

Q Okay. I'm going to read from the bottom of that page an email from Mr. Slaven to the officers on September 26th, 2021, at 7:29 p.m.

"Good evening, Viola, Frank, Kristi, and Charlie. I wanted to share with you the letter we plan on sending the President regarding threats to school board members in public schools.

Deborah Rigsby worked on it and did a great job. It is very bold and calls for threat assessments to be conducted by various Federal law enforcement agencies. It also calls out several of the problems that have been publicly reported.

"We will be doing some more editing in the morning, but I wanted to make sure I shared it with you prior to it going out.

"Jason believes this will get some attention. Please let me know if you have any questions or see any necessary edits.

"Thanks, Chip."

And the NSBA letter is attached.

Who is Jason?

A Jason works in the communications staff or worked at that time in the communications staff.

Q And when you received the email on September 26th at 7:29 p.m., did you read the letter that was attached to it?

A Yes, I believe I did.

Q And did you agree with Mr. Slaven that it was a very bold letter?

A Generally speaking, I would say that it addressed the concerns that we had about threats of violence, disruptions, and things that were occurring across the country. Yes.

Q And did you suggest any edits or changes to the letter?

A I did not.

Q Did any of the other officers suggest any edits or changes to the letter?

A I see there's a reference in this email to a change or an edit.

Q And so the email right above from Ms. Swett on the next day, September 27th, at 11:07 a.m., says: "Thank you, Chip. The letter looks good. A bit long but the content is relevant and provides perspective to the issues. I would agree with Charlie. I would like to see Viola's name included, unless she has objections."

Is that the first time you were asked to sign on to the letter?

A From what I can remember, we had had a phone conversation, the officers and Mr. Slaven, and it was brought up then.

Q Okay. And did you do any due diligence to review the alleged violent incidents that were cited in the letter?

A I did not review the incidents, no.

Q And would it surprise you to learn that the vast majority of the incidents cited in the NSBA's letter calling for Federal intervention at school board meetings were nonviolent?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q And the top email here on the page from Mr. Slaven back to Ms. Swett and the rest of the officers said: "Good morning. Thanks for the great feedback.

"Viola, if you would like to add your name, we can certainly do that for this letter. Please just let me know what you prefer.

"I agree the letter is lengthy, but the White House has been asking me to provide examples of some of the activity. So we thought the letter was an appropriate means to give them that information.

"Charlie, thanks for the copy edit. I will correct the spelling.

"Take care, Chip."

Was it your understanding from Slaven's email that the examples of incidents were included in the letter because the White House asked for the examples?

A I don't recall the specific reason. I don't recall that that was the reason. There had been, as far as I understand, communication, concern that had been expressed by NSBA about the threats of violence that were occurring across the country. And so there had been communication with the Department of Education asking for assistance, resources for board members as we conducted school board meetings across the country.

Q And was the communication from school boards to the Department of Education or was it the other way, Department of Education to school boards?

A As far as I can remember, the communication was to the National School Boards Association staff.

There was an event that occurred. It was a town hall conducted by Secretary Cardona in August inviting school board members to participate in the town hall.

NSBA facilitated that. And so that was an opportunity for individual school board members across the country and State executive directors who managed our members to participate in that town hall, and it included guidance on back-to-school activities.

Q And what occurred at the town hall meeting?

A I remember offering a greeting, welcoming the members. And essentially the Secretary and his staff were responding to individual school board members.

Q And the NSBA report that came out in May stated that some evidence also suggests Secretary Cardona during an August 16th, 2021, town hall with NSBA members and leadership discussed disruptions in local school board meetings and requested additional information to be sent to his office.

Does that match your recollection of what occurred at the town hall?

A Yes. From what I can recall, the concerns were serious and they were expressed to NSBA. NSBA had shared those concerns with the Department of Education. And I'm assuming that through those conversations requests for additional specific examples were requested by the Department staff.

Q And do you know if anyone from the NSBA followed up with additional information as requested by the Secretary?

A I do not have explicit knowledge of that.

Q And do you know if any of the member associations followed up directly with the Department of Education?

A I do not.

Q Did any of the NSBA member associations raise concerns to you that local law enforcement were unable to handle any violence or threats at school board meetings within their jurisdiction?

A I received no specific communication from anyone related to incidents.

Q And did you personally believe that local law enforcement could not handle any violence or threats that occurred at local school board meetings?

A Again, we were concerned. There was concern among the officers, among the organization members that the threats of violence were serious, that there were national publications, there were incidents that were reported on the news.

And so we were aware generally of threats of violence, of disruptions, of interruptions to school board meetings. So I had that general awareness.

Q And when disruptions occurred at local school board meetings where there were threats of violence directed at school board officials or at the meetings themselves, was that typically something that local law enforcement handled in your experience serving on school boards?

A Typically, NSBA advocates -- and I do, too -- for local control of school boards.

Q By local law enforcement?

A Well, by local school board, there are various resources that various school districts have. They're different across the country. And so they're not all law enforcement. But local control of activities in the jurisdiction is what we advocate for.

Q And can you describe some of those local control measures that school boards have? You said various resources.

A Well, there are -- this is just from personal experience of what occurs at Aldine Independent School District. This is certainly not something that occurs at every school district. But we have monitors out in the hallway. We have greeters to assure that whoever wants to speak is able to speak, signs up to speak. And so from that level to just being generally open to people who are there for school board meetings.

The concern was primarily about school board meetings, but we had also received information that these were generalized activities that were occurring -- threats to teachers, administrators related to masking or not masking, and those sorts of things.

So this was not specific to school board meetings, even though that, obviously, as a national school board association organization, was the focus of our concern.

Q And when you say you received generalized information, where were you receiving that from?

A From what I can remember those were, as I said, video clips on TV news reports, news print, the organization communication, those sorts of things. That's what I can recall.

Q And during your tenure as a school board member, has there ever been an occasion when local authorities were unable to handle violence or any disruption at one of your meetings?

A Not at our meetings, no.

Q What was your understanding of the need for Federal Government intervention at local school board meetings?

A Again, the concern was -- the essence of the concern was that the disruptions were threats. They were threats of violence. These disruptions produced fear. And these threats caused people to be concerned about their safety. And so we were, as well, concerned about the safety and security of school board members, administrators, staff, students.

Q And was it your opinion that the local authorities who normally handle these threats couldn't handle those threats?

A I didn't have an opinion. I'm not a legal expert or a police officer. And as I said, there are over 50 million students in the country and many, many school districts and each locale is uniquely different. So each one handles its own.

Q And when you were reviewing the letter, the September 29th letter, did you form any sort of opinion or think this is why the Federal Government needs to get involved?

A Well, generally speaking, what we understood was that the threats of violence appeared to come through mail, email, across jurisdictions often. And so that was a concern, that there was some activity that could have been or may have been, I don't know, I don't know the essence of that, but that may have been organized in such a way that perhaps local resources would not be sufficient to get to what was really happening.

Q But during your tenure as a school board member you've never had a situation where local authorities couldn't handle the disruption or any threats that were received.

A Not in my personal local school district, no.

Q Okay. We talked a lot about the September 29th letter. So I'm going to enter it as an exhibit now.

I'm going to mark the September 29th, 2021, letter from the NSBA to President Biden as exhibit No. 3.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to jump to page 2 of the letter, specifically the last paragraph.

A Okay.

Q Dr. Garcia, when you reviewed the letter, did you raise any concerns about the following language? And I'm reading from the last paragraph on that page, first sentence.

"As these acts of malice, violence, and threats against public school officials have increased, the classification of these heinous actions could be the equivalent to a form of domestic terrorism and hate crimes."

Did you agree with the inclusion of this language?

A I agree that there were acts of violence. And from what I can recall, not having read this letter since then, yeah, we were concerned about those threats, yes.

Q Did you think that anything rose to the form of domestic terrorism?

A I'm not an expert in that area. So I cannot comment on that.

Q And do you know why this language was included?

A I do not know the specific reason, no.

Q Did you think critically about the domestic terrorism language in the letter before you signed the letter?

A I read the letter and I responded to the letter. I did not look at that specifically. And as I said, I'm not an expert on domestic terrorism.

Q Did you have any concerns about the inclusion of the domestic terrorism language and how it could be equated to parents raising concerns at school board meetings?

A I am an educator. I dwell in the life of educators. And so that is my focus.

The primary reason for the letter was to express concern about the activities that were occurring and to ask for assistance. And I did not look at the specific things that you're asking about in the way that someone familiar with domestic terrorism would look at it.

Q Do you know if Mr. Slaven did any research into whether any of these incidents that were cited in the letter would raise to the level of domestic terrorism?

A I do not.

Q Did it concern you whether the correct level of due diligence was done prior to the letter being sent?

A I don't recall that we were concerned prior to the letter being sent.

Q And a lot of parents and others have expressed concerns about being equated to domestic terrorists. What is your reaction to that?

A NSBA's stance and State association -- school boards association and local school boards' stance is that parents are an integral part of the education of students in school districts.

Most school board members, I would say, I don't have data, but I would think that about 80 percent or more of school board members across the country are themselves either parents or grandparents.

And so we were concerned about those parents and their ability to interact, collaborate, work with school boards and school districts for the benefit of their students.

Q And further down in that paragraph, with the sentence starting "additionally," it states, the letter states: "Additionally, NSBA requests that such review examine appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the Gun-Free School Zones Act, the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism, the Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act, the Violent Interference with Federally Protected Rights statute, the Conspiracy Against Rights statute, an Executive Order to enforce all applicable federal laws for the protection of students and public school district personnel, and any related measure."

When you reviewed the letter, did you raise any concerns about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language?

A Again, I am an educator. That is my expertise. As I've said, I did not write or edit the letter. This was a staff-developed letter. And NSBA officers, as we reviewed this, trusted that the staff had done the due diligence that you're describing.

Q Do you think the staff had an understanding of what the PATRIOT Act can be used for and how it is used in regards to domestic terrorism?

A I do not know the detail. I do not know the level of expertise that they have in each of those areas.

Q Do you know which staff would have been in charge of doing this due diligence?

A I do not know specific staff that would have been involved.

Q Do you know if Mr. Slaven had any understanding of the PATRIOT Act and how it is used in regards to domestic terrorism?

A I do not know that.

Q Did it concern you at all that the PATRIOT Act was being used in this letter and how serious the PATRIOT Act is?

A Again, that is not my expertise. I do not know about the PATRIOT Act in that -- to that depth. I am an educator. I deal primarily with developing future educators.

Q Did the letter follow the normal NSBA procedure for reviewing official correspondence to the administration?

A From what I can recall, NSBA has conducted over decades of its service regular communication with the Department of Education in particular related to education issues from prekindergarten through 12th grade. So regular communication with the Department of Education is not unusual for NSBA.

Q And were you concerned, considering the gravity of the letter and what it was asking for, Federal intervention at local school board meetings, were you concerned about the short period of time you were given to review the letter?

A Not, as I can recall, not at that time.

Q Did you become concerned later on that you weren't given enough time to review it?

A Well, feedback from our members indicated concern that they had. And, of course, if our members are concerned, we were concerned.

Q When you say members, was that member State associations?

A The members of NSBA are the State associations, yes.

Q Okay.

A Uh-huh.

Q And what kind of feedback did you receive from them?

A Some positive and some negative from what I can recall.

Q Okay. And what was some of the positive feedback?

A "Thank you for doing that. Thank you for asking for the help that we have been asking for."

Q What was some of the negative feedback?

A The feedback primarily was that they were responding to the negative outcome that was derived from the letter.

Q And what was the negative outcome?

A There were, as you mentioned, from what I can recall, there was a link between what was stated here and an allegation that this was targeting parents. And, in fact, that is not -- that was not the intent of the letter. The intent of the letter was to seek assistance for the threats of violence that were occurring at school board meetings and for administrators and teachers.

Q And looking back now, can you kind of see how maybe some parents would take it as an attack on parents or to target parents?

A I don't know. I can't speak for parents. I mean, I'm a parent, grandparent myself. And the intent, the reason for asking for the letter was -- not the letter -- for the assistance was sincere. We were sincerely concerned about the threats, the disruptions, the intimidation, the things that were occurring across the country.

Q And when did the board of directors become aware of the letter?

A From what I can remember, it was the day before it was sent.

Q And did the board get a chance to review the letter?

A That's when the board received it.

Q So they didn't get to review the letter at all?

A They received it before it was sent.

Q Okay. Were they provided a chance to provide any input to change the letter before it went out?

A Not that I can recall, no.

Q And the board, as you said earlier in the interview, voted on matters before the NSBA. Should this have been something that went before the board, a communication to the President?

A Not that I understand the processes of NSBA as they routinely occurred. As I said earlier, NSBA communicated with the administration regarding prekindergarten through 12th grade education issues routinely.

Q Did you receive any negative feedback from the board of directors regarding the letter?

A There were, as I can recall, there were a few directors who were displeased, yes.

Q I'm going to enter what's marked as exhibit 54 in the NSBA report. It's going to be our exhibit No. 4.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Fifty-four. This one.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. This is a rather long document.

[redacted] I know. It is. There is a particular part. Specifically interested in, on page 3 of the document, or page 209 marked on the exhibit, Dr. Garcia's email.

[redacted] [redacted] I'm sorry. Are you marking this exhibit 4?

[redacted] Yes, ma'am.

Dr. Garcia. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Have you had enough time to review?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. So on page 3 of the exhibit or page 209 that's on there, in an October 2nd email to the board of directors, in response to the September 29th letter, you stated that, quote: "NSBA has been engaged with the White House and the Department of Education on these and other issues related to the pandemic for several weeks now."

Did you have any contact with the White House prior to the letter being sent on September 29th?

A I did not personally.

Q Do you know who was having the conversations with the White House that you referenced in your email?

A I do not know specifically, no.

Q Why did you write that sentence in your email? Did you know who was in contact or no?

A I did not know specifically. I knew that there was contact. And if you'll recall, I mentioned a little earlier that this was in October, that the month and half before there had been a town hall meeting with the Secretary. And so I was referring to that communication, seeking resources, seeking assistance primarily.

Q Did someone tell you that they had been in contact with the White House? Is that why you included it in the email?

A No one told me specifically that they -- that I can recall -- no one told me specifically that they had been in communication with the White House.

Q So why did you include the White House in this email?

A From what I can remember, there was assistance to me in writing this.

Q Okay.

A And I was assisted by the NSBA communications staff.

Q Okay. And who was on that communications staff?

A I don't recall names except Jason.

Q Jason, yes.

A Because Jason was listed a minute ago.

Q What did you understand the content of those conversations to include between the White House and the NSBA?

A I recall, to the best of my knowledge, I recall that the conversations were about the concerns that had been expressed and NSBA's interest in assisting the local school board members who were being challenged with threats of violence and disruptions at school board meetings, interruptions, that sort of thing. The communication was about assisting them.

Q And were you aware that Mr. Slaven was communicating with the White House as early as September 9th?

A I was not aware.

Q Are you aware that on September 21st, 2021, Mr. Slaven sent a detailed summary of the contents of the NSBA letter and a list of what was termed, quote, egregious examples of disruptions at school board meetings to the White House at the White House's request?

A I don't recall that.

Q Did Mr. Slaven ever follow up with you on the White House's feedback on the detailed summary of the contents of the letter?

A I don't recall that either.

Q Did he ever tell you that the White House expressed concerns about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language in the letter?

A I do not recall that.

Q Between late August 2021 and September 29th, 2021, how many conversations did you have with officials at the Department of Education?

A None.

Q None?

A I personally never had conversations with anyone at the Department of Education. Was that your question?

Q Yes, ma'am?

A Would you clarify the question?

Q Uh-huh.

A No, I personally didn't have or communicate with any staff members in the Department of Education.

Q So who was having the conversations with the Department of Education that you referenced in your email?

A NSBA staff, as I recall.

Q Do you remember the contents of those discussions? Did you have any awareness of those?

A I was not involved, and I have no awareness of those.

Q Are you aware that as early as July 30th, 2021, Mr. Slaven was engaged with the Department of Education to discuss threats and concerns related to school board members?

A I'm not aware of that.

Q Have you ever had any contact with anyone at the Department of Justice?

A Oh, no. No, thank you.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. I assume about this issue.

[redacted] Correct, yes.

Dr. Garcia. Oh, okay. All right.

BY [redacted]

Q Yes.

A Well -- okay.

Q Are you aware that as early as September 21st, 2021, Mr. Slaven knew that the White House and Department of Justice were discussing, quote, "any options," end quote, they could pursue in response to Mr. Slaven's request for Federal intervention at school board meetings?

A I'm not aware of that.

Q Did Mr. Slaven ever tell you that the Justice Department expressed concerns about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language in the letter?

A I'm not aware of that, no. I have no knowledge of that.

Q Are you aware that DOJ Public Affairs sent Mr. Slaven a copy of the Attorney General's October 4th memorandum prior to its release?

A I'm not aware of that.

Q Did you learn of these communications after the May 2022 NSBA report came out?

A Yes, I remember reading that. And, specifically, I do not remember what you have just stated. That's been about a year and a half ago that I read that.

Q But you had no awareness of those conversations prior to the report?

A No, not that I recall, no.

Q So to the extent that there were ongoing conversations between Mr. Slaven, other NSBA staff members, and the White House, you were unaware of that?

A As best as I can recall, I was not aware.

Q And to the extent that there were conversations between Mr. Slaven, NSBA staff, and the Department of Justice, you were unaware of those conversations?

A I was unaware, uh-huh.

Q And to the extent there were conversations between Mr. Slaven and NSBA staff and the Department of Education, you were unaware of those conversations except for the town hall that you've discussed?

A Well, no, and as I said earlier, as far as I can recall and remember, NSBA routinely, over decades, it is NSBA's practice to assure that we are supporting school board members across the country.

And so it is not unusual for NSBA staff to engage with the Department of Education about public education matters. So those were routine conversations. There were advocacy issues. There were legislative issues. So those were routine communications.

So to my knowledge there were routine communications with the Department of Education that NSBA had.

[redacted] We're a little low on time.

Congressman Bishop, did you have any questions at this time?

Mr. Bishop. No.

[redacted] Or I can keep going. Okay.

Mr. Bishop. Thank you. Appreciate that.

BY [redacted]

Q When did you become aware of Attorney General Garland's October 4th memorandum?

A I don't recall. It would have -- I don't recall.

Q And have you seen the October 4th memorandum?

A I may have seen it when it came out or shortly after it came out.

Q And Attorney General Garland testified before the House Judiciary Committee on October 21st, 2021, and stated that the NSBA's letter was the basis for his October 4th memorandum. Were you aware of that?

A I have no knowledge of his reasoning or why he did that. No, I have no knowledge.

Q Are you aware of any public reporting that the Attorney General relied upon the NSBA's letter?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q When did you become aware or were you aware that the Attorney General relied upon the NSBA's letter before today as the basis for his memo?

A Not specifically, no. I don't recall that.

Q Are you aware that the FBI created a threat tag to track school board-related investigations?

A I'm not aware of that, no. I'm not familiar with that.

Q Are you aware that the FBI used these threat tags to investigate parents for protected First Amendment activity?

A I have no knowledge of that. That's not my area of expertise. No, I'm not aware.

Q Did you follow the reporting on the NSBA's September 29th letter after it was released?

A Could you specify? What do you mean by reporting?

Q Like news reports.

A Yes.

Q It got a lot of media attention.

A Yes, yes, yes, I was aware of that.

Q And you did media interviews on the letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q Did you follow any of the reaction, either positive feedback or negative feedback, in reporting?

A From what I can recall, I was assisted by the communications staff again in those responses. And so the point that the NSBA was emphasizing was that NSBA was concerned about the safety and security of school personnel, that we had requested assistance for that purpose.

Q And during your tenure at the NSBA, did the organization ever send out a letter to any government agency and receive such a quick response?

A I don't know.

Q And does it concern you at all as a school board member, parent, grandmother yourself, that the use of these resources via the FBI chills protected First Amendment activity of parents?

A I have no knowledge of that and expertise in that. So I cannot speak to that.

Q Do you think if someone is visited by the FBI after they speak at school board meetings, do you think it will make them want to go back and give another speech at a school board meeting?

A I cannot say. I don't know. I do not know. I've never experienced that. So it's not in my realm of knowledge. So I don't know.

Q But the FBI is a pretty scary bureau or agency. It's pretty scary to be visited by Federal law enforcement. Do you agree with that or --

A I don't know. I don't have -- I have never had that experience, so I don't know.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that, after surveying local law enforcement, U.S. Attorney's Offices reported back to Main Justice that there was no legitimate law enforcement basis for the Attorney General's directive inserting Federal law enforcement into local school board meetings?

A What was the gist of your question? You're asking me whether I agree with that --

Q Yeah.

A -- or what was --

Q So at the directive of the Attorney General, the U.S. Attorney's Offices had to report back to Main Justice, to the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, regarding threats that they knew about in their jurisdictions. And the majority of the U.S. Attorney's Offices surveyed their local law enforcement and found that there were no threats to report.

A I have no --

Q Does that surprise you?

A I have no knowledge of that, so I cannot respond. I don't have any information about that.

Q Do you think the Attorney General should rescind his memorandum?

A I think the Attorney General should do what the Attorney General needs to do.

Q The NSBA apologized for some of its language in its letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q Were you involved with that apology at all?

A No, that was primarily, as I recall, NSBA engaged a communications group to assist with the negative, hateful language that was being received. And so that was developed with the assistance of the communications group.

Q So the communications group developed the language?

A In collaboration with the NSBA staff, I would assume.

Q You didn't have any involvement in drafting --

A I did not write or edit or engage in that.

Q Okay. I'm going to mark that as an exhibit here, No. 5.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. This is exhibit 5?

[redacted] Yes, ma'am.

Dr. Garcia. Okay.

[redacted] I think Mr. Bishop has some questions.

Dr. Garcia. Yes. Good morning.

Mr. Bishop. Good morning. Thank you for being here.

If I understood the thrust of your testimony about how this letter came to pass, it seems that you were passive and others were drafting and deciding what the content of the letter was, the original letter to the President.

Is that accurate, do I understand that correctly, you were passive and just signed or allowed your signature to be applied but did not review or study the content of the letter yourself?

Dr. Garcia. From what I recall, we received the letter. The officers received the letter from Chip Slaven. I was not involved nor do I believe the officers were involved in writing or editing the letter.

Mr. Bishop. So is it fair to say then that you didn't even read it?

Dr. Garcia. Oh, I read -- I read -- I think I read -- I do remember reading it, yes.

Mr. Bishop. Did you read all of it?

Dr. Garcia. I do remember reading all of it.

Mr. Bishop. Were you concerned, did the language about domestic terrorism concern you?

Dr. Garcia. As I shared a little bit earlier, my expertise is not related to domestic terrorism. I'm not involved. I'm not an attorney. I'm not a -- involved in legal matters. That means something very different specifically to people engaged in that work than to an educator. So the concern that you've raised, I did not have the same concern that you have.

Mr. Bishop. So you knew that that language, that terminology was in a letter that you were signing, and notwithstanding your position of leadership, you were prepared to see that letter go out without any particular understanding of what was being referred to?

Dr. Garcia. From what I remember, the major concern was about the threats of violence, the disruptions that were occurring at school boards.

The specific elements that you're describing were not -- the general gist of the letter, as we requested or as we understood it, was requesting assistance.

Mr. Bishop. Given the lack of expertise that you've testified to about what domestic terrorism is, does it seem like a significant thing to accuse people of to you?

Dr. Garcia. Well, of course, that term and the use of that term was heightened after this letter. And before that letter, I had a vague understanding and still do about the legal implications of what that is and how things evolve around that.

[10:58 a.m.]

Mr. Bishop. Did it give you any pause when you're reading the letter and you see that there is a description of what's going on as domestic terrorism, that accusation is being made in a letter that will go out over your signature? Did that give you any pause or concern at all?

Dr. Garcia. I don't remember. I have not, no.

Mr. Bishop. You don't have any memory of having it.

As you look at it now, do you regret that you applied your signature to a letter that contained that language?

Dr. Garcia. Well, as I've stated earlier, and as we see here, NSBA offered a letter of apology.

Mr. Bishop. I understand what NSBA has apologized for. I'm asking about you.

Dr. Garcia. Oh, if we --

Mr. Bishop. Does it cause you regret that you applied your signature to a letter that accused people of domestic terrorism?

Dr. Garcia. Yes. Hindsight, absolutely. From what I recall, hindsight is absolutely something that we all wish we had.

And generally speaking, if I were -- we were to participate in a rewriting of the letter, I believe that the intent still would have been true. We were very, very concerned about what was occurring. And perhaps those specific requests that are indicated in the letter could have been generalized and -- yes, and I would agree with that.

Mr. Bishop. Are you aware as you sit here today that the letter and the activity and communication with the White House that occurred in conjunction with the letter is what precipitated the Attorney General issuing his memorandum? Are you aware of that?

Dr. Garcia. I'm not aware of what the Attorney General did and why he did it, no.

Mr. Bishop. Have you followed anything about the news on this at all in the interim?

Dr. Garcia. Initially.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. I'm saying, did you ever -- and you never learned during that process that the Attorney General -- that the Attorney General's memo was precipitated by the letter that the NSBA sent?

Dr. Garcia. I did not. I never spoke to the Attorney General. I do not know his intent, and I don't know his reason for doing it, no.

Mr. Bishop. All right. If I impart to you now that the Attorney General has testified before a congressional committee that his memo was precipitated by the letter from the NSBA, does that cause you concern?

Dr. Garcia. I can't say because I don't know that that -- I have not read that. I do not know that.

Mr. Bishop. So without reading it or knowing it, if I tell you that, you don't -- that's not of concern to you?

Dr. Garcia. I don't know. I don't know that world and the Attorney General's reasoning. And so I don't know that I can accurately answer your question.

Mr. Bishop. Have you ever felt any compunction about inquiring whether the letter that accused people of domestic terrorism over your signature had the effect of causing the Attorney General to begin his assessment across the country, resulted in threat tags being issued by the FBI, resulted in visits by the FBI to people? Has there ever been any concern on your part to inquire whether your letter had an effect like that?

Dr. Garcia. I did not write the letter. I did not edit the letter. The letter --

Mr. Bishop. But you did sign it?

Dr. Garcia. The letter was sent with the intent to seek assistance, and that is what I know. I did sign it, yes.

Mr. Bishop. It was sent over your signature.

Dr. Garcia. My signature was on the letter, yes.

Mr. Bishop. And I understand -- you've described that it was something of a passive process from your perspective. You didn't actually get into the details of what domestic terrorism meant and you didn't formulate that language. But you signed it.

Dr. Garcia. I did.

Mr. Bishop. Have you personally had any compunction or misgivings about having done that that causes you to feel that you need to make amends for it?

Dr. Garcia. Well, as I said, this is a letter of apology. NSBA did apologize for the specific request that you've referred to.

And I am a volunteer. I'm not associated with NSBA now. I continue to do service in my community.

You know, this is something that has happened that cannot be undone. And so I -- you know, I -- you know, to answer your question, I have not done what you've suggested.

Mr. Bishop. And you have no opinion, I think you testified, whether the Attorney General should take any step to rescind his memo or otherwise undo any of what's been done?

Dr. Garcia. I do not know enough to answer that. I mean, I don't know.

Mr. Bishop. Well, you do know that -- you are -- you do believe it was the right action to take for NSBA to apologize for its letter, right, and to retract it?

Dr. Garcia. Yes. I recall that, yes.

Mr. Bishop. Can you think of any reason that if the Attorney General did likewise, did something that similarly was predicated on the letter to affect the First Amendment rights of Americans, is there some reason that he shouldn't likewise apologize and withdraw what he has done?

Dr. Garcia. That is not for me to say. That is for the Attorney General. Honestly, I can't say what the Attorney General should or shouldn't do.

Mr. Bishop. I yield.

[redacted] Okay.

Dr. Garcia. Thank you.

[redacted] We can go off the record. Thanks.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 11:17, and we can go back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning, again, Dr. Garcia. My name is [redacted] I'm with the -- with Chairman -- with Ranking Member Nadler's staff on the House Judiciary Committee. Thank you again for appearing today.

A Uh-huh.

Q Quickly, you're here voluntarily today, right?

A I am.

Q And you took time out of your day, out of your schedule, to come up here?

A I did.

Q And you flew up here at your own expense?

A I did.

Q Thank you for that.

As we get going, I want to turn back to what was marked as exhibit 1 earlier. And this is -- it's exhibit 16 from the NSBA document production. It's an email. And I think we talked about the second email in this chain from Mr. Slaven to Charlie Wilson, to you, to Frank Henderson, and to Kristi Swett.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I think a reference was made earlier to -- the question might have -- was something along the lines of: When did you become aware that Mr. Slaven was considering requesting Federal intervention at school board meetings?

I want to look at this language again. Can you take a look at it? Do you see the word "intervention" in there?

A I do not see the word, no.

Q Thank you.

And he does use the word "threat assessment," right?

A Yes, I see it.

Q And what's your understanding of what an assessment would be?

A An assessment in this case would be, I would think, conducting an analysis of what it is, where it's coming from, why it's coming, and answering a good number of questions about that.

Q Okay. And here it says -- in the actual -- in the next sentence it says: "As for this individual incident, I would recommend contacting law enforcement in Ohio," right? So he actually -- is that correct?

A That's what I read, yes.

Q Okay. So he actually recommended contacting local law enforcement here, correct?

A Yes, I see that.

Q All right. I want to introduce -- and moving on from that -- I want to introduce into the record a memorandum from the National School Boards Association board of directors and Executive Director and CEO Dr. John Heim to NSBA members, dated February 4th, 2022. The subject line is: "NSBA Launches Independent Review of September 2021 Letter to the Biden Administration."

[Garcia Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. That is exhibit 6?

[redacted] This would be exhibit 6, correct.

And let me know when you've read it.

Dr. Garcia. Uh-huh.

[redacted] Okay. Were you familiar with this memorandum before I handed it to you?

Dr. Garcia. It was to the board of directors and executive director, so I --

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. It's from --

Dr. Garcia. Oh, it's from. Okay.

Yes. I mean, I --

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

A That was over a year ago, so -- yes.

Q Do you recall if you participated in drafting this memo or if you reviewed it before it was made public?

A I did not draft it, and I do not recall reviewing it.

Q Okay. I'm going to read from the -- one, two, three, four -- fifth paragraph down. It says: "We are also launching an independent comprehensive review to fully understand the circumstances around the letter sent to the Biden administration.

"The review will be conducted by Philip Kiko, an attorney and the former Chief Administrative Officer of the House of Representatives under two different Speakers, and the law firm Michael Best & Friedrich.

"It will include a review of all relevant policies and procedures relating to the creation, review, approval, and distribution of the September 2021 letter, as well as a review of possible coordination with outside parties.

"The review will seek to address as many questions as possible, and we will share the findings with our members and the Hill as quickly as possible."

Are you familiar with the review process described by that paragraph?

A Yes. I recall, yes.

Q Okay. Were you involved in the process by which the National School Boards Association decided to conduct such a review?

A Yes.

Q And can you describe the process for reaching that decision? Did somebody recommend that NSBA retain outside counsel, for example?

A Yes. So I spoke -- from what I can recall, I spoke earlier about NSBA having engaged a communications firm. NSBA also engaged another firm -- not this particular one -- for advice. And so it was partly a recommendation of that group, who recommended that it would be good if NSBA answered -- was able to answer the questions that the members had.

Q Okay. And to your knowledge, is it accurate that that review was conducted by Mr. Philip Kiko and the Michael Best law firm?

A Yes.

Q Do you know who selected Mr. Kiko?

A I believe that the recommendation came from that firm, advisory firm, and staff.

Q And are you familiar with Mr. Kiko?

A I don't remember.

Q Okay.

A No, I don't.

Q I want to introduce into the record Mr. Kiko's biography, which is posted on the website of his new law firm, which is called Williams and Jensen. And this will be exhibit 7.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I'll give you a minute to review, but I'm actually going to read from a paragraph that's on the second page here.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So on the second page -- and this is a printout from the internet, I should say. So on the internet, it's all one page. But as we print it out, it's on two -- or on three, I guess.

The big paragraph in the middle reads: "Phil's service on the Hill also included high level policy work while serving under Chairman Jim Sensenbrenner, Republican of Wisconsin, as his personal office Chief of Staff, and later Chief of Staff and General Counsel for the House Judiciary Committee and as Deputy Chief of Staff on the House Science Committee. During his tenure at the Judiciary Committee, Phil successful shepherded more than one hundred bills through the legislative process to the President's desk.

"He also served as Chief of Staff of the House Administration Committee under Chairman Dan Lungren, Republican of California, and under Chairman Trey Gowdy, Republican of South Carolina, as Chief of Staff and General Counsel of the Select Committee on the Events Surrounding the 2012 Terrorist Attack in Benghazi."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Were you aware that Mr. Kiko served as the Republican staff director for the House Judiciary Committee?

A I was not.

Q Were you aware that he was the Republican general counsel on the Benghazi select committee?

A No.

[redacted] For Benghazi, he was the staff director.

[redacted] I'm sorry?

[redacted] For Benghazi, he was the staff director.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. The staff director and general counsel.

[redacted] He was on the Benghazi committee. He worked on the Benghazi committee.

And you said that you're generally familiar with the review that was conducted by these individuals, but you have not read it recently, right?

Dr. Garcia. No, I have not read it recently.

[redacted] Okay. I'm going to hand you a copy of this report.

Yeah, we will, even though it's going to gum up the record a bit. We're going to introduce this as exhibit 8, even though it's 56 pages long. And I'm not going to ask you to read it. Don't worry.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

Dr. Garcia. Thank you.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. We're on 7?

[redacted] This is 8, 8.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Eight. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q So I'm going to ask you to turn to page 6 here. Under review procedures. The bottom of page 6. Roman numeral III, and then letter A. Scope of review.

A Okay.

Q It says: "The review was conducted independently from the influence of the NSBA, its staff, or the Board of Directors," parentheses, quote, "(NSBA parties)," end quote, end parentheses.

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not.

Q Okay. Does this generally track with your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q Okay. It continues: "The NSBA Parties did not impose any constraints on the Review and provided their full cooperation."

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not.

Q Okay. Does it generally track with your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q Okay. The next sentence: "The NSBA provided access to all relevant materials Counsel requested."

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not disagree.

Q And does it track with your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q Okay. Moving on to page 7. "Counsel was able to request an interview with any individual for any amount of time."

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not disagree.

Q Does it track with your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q And did you yourself sit for such an interview?

A I did.

Q Do you recall about how long it lasted?

A I do not recall.

Q Okay. Continuing on that page 7. "Counsel's independent e-discovery vendor was provided with administrative access to NSBA's electronically stored documents and other data."

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not.

Q Okay. Do you have -- does it track with your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q Okay. "Counsel further conducted an exhaustive search of publicly available data, documents, and news articles and reports."

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not.

Q And does it generally track with your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q Okay. A little further down it reads: "Based on the search parameters above, Counsel received 334,296 files, approximating 155 gigabytes of data, from NSBA's internal Microsoft office platform, including documents, photographs, records, and communications."

Now, you may not have been personally tracking the numbers, but do you have any reason to disagree with this statement as it's written?

A I do not.

Q Okay. And does it generally comport with your recollection that they accessed a lot of data?

A They did access a lot of data.

Q Okay. And then finally, on page 8, it reads: "Counsel also reviewed correspondence from potentially relevant non-custodians who communicated with NSBA staff and executives, including non-custodians from the White House, Department of Justice, Department of Education, and Department of Homeland Security."

Do you have any reason to disagree with this statement?

A I do not disagree.

Q Does it generally track your recollection of the review?

A It does.

Q Okay. So based on the statements that I just -- we just went through a lot of them, I know -- do you agree that Mr. Kiko and the Michael Best law firm conducted a fairly extensive review of the events surrounding the NSBA's September 29th letter?

A Yes.

Q Do you have any reason to dispute the findings that they made?

A I do not.

Q Okay. I'm going to go through just two of those findings now.

A Uh-huh.

Q The first is on page 13. It says: "Counsel's review did not find communications between the Department" -- which refers to the Department of Education -- "and the NSBA that indicated that the Department specifically requested the NSBA to make an official request for aid or federal intervention."

Do you have any reason to dispute this finding?

A I do not.

Q And to your knowledge, did the Department of Education ever ask the NSBA to make an official request for aid or intervention?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q Okay. The second finding that I want to read is on page 26. It says: "Counsel did not find direct or indirect evidence suggesting that the administration" -- which refers to the Biden administration -- "requested the letter or specified, edited, or otherwise specifically requested that it be written."

Do you have any reason to dispute this finding?

A I do not.

Q And to your personal knowledge, did the Biden administration ever request the letter?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q And did it ever specify, edit, or otherwise specifically request that it be written?

A I have no knowledge of that either.

Q Okay. I think we went through this in detail, but I just want to make sure I have the timeline down. Moving on.

A Uh-huh. Okay.

Q The majority has asked you a fair amount about the September 29th letter and the timeline and the drafting of it.

Actually, sorry. I'm going to withdraw that.

A Okay.

Q I'll move on even further.

A Okay.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Counsel, when you were reading from the conclusion sentence, you didn't read the full sentence. I just wanted to make sure you --

[redacted] Oh, sorry. On which one?

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Page 26.

[redacted] I might have transcribed that wrong.

BY [redacted]

Q I'm sorry. Let me re-ask that question.

A Okay.

Q "Counsel did not find direct or indirect evidence suggesting the administration requested the letter or specified, edited, or reviewed the contents of the letter before the letter was sent or otherwise specifically requested that it be written."

Did I read that correctly this time around?

A Yes.

Q Do you have any reason to dispute that finding?

A No, I do not.

Q Okay. And do you have any personal, any knowledge or any evidence that the administration did request the letter or specified, edited, or reviewed the contents of the letter before it was sent or otherwise specifically requested that it be written?

A No, I have no knowledge of that.

Q Okay. Thank you.

We talked through a little bit ago in the first hour what interactions you might have had with the executive branch. So I'm going to go through that again with a little more specificity.

A Okay.

Q And so some of it may be repetitive, but I just want to make sure I have everything down correctly.

Are you familiar with an individual named Mary Wall?

A I am not.

Q Okay. Mary Wall was a White House employee. Does that refresh your recollection at all?

A It does not.

Q Did you ever have any interactions with her?

A I did not.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an individual named Julie Chavez Rodriguez?

A I'm not familiar.

Q So Ms. Chavez Rodriguez is a senior adviser in the Office of the White House, Office of Governmental Affairs. Does that refresh your recollection at all?

A I do not recall that name.

Q Okay. So the two individuals I just named are both employees of the White House. Do you recall if you ever discussed your work with the National School Boards Association with either one of them?

A I did not.

Q Okay. I'm going to move on to the Justice Department. And I think you said earlier that you never had any communications with the Justice Department, correct?

A That's right.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an individual named Anthony Coley?

A I'm not.

Q Okay. Mr. Coley was previously the director of the Justice Department's Office of Public Affairs. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an individual named Alivia Roberts?

A I'm not.

Q So Ms. Roberts was previously the special assistant to Mr. Coley in the Justice Department's Office of Public Affairs. Does that refresh your recollection at all?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Kevin Chambers?

A No.

Q Okay. Kevin Chambers was an Associate Deputy Attorney General with the Department of Justice. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Myesha Braden?

A No.

Q Ms. Braden was also an Associate Deputy Attorney General. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Shaylyn Cochran?

A No.

Q Okay. Ms. Cochran is the chief of staff for the Justice Department Civil Rights Division. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Okay. So to the best of your knowledge, did you ever communicate with anyone at the Department of Justice in connection with your work with the National School Boards Association?

A I did not.

Q Okay. And I'm not going to go through a list of names for this, but to the best of your knowledge, did you ever communicate with anyone at the Department of Homeland Security regarding your work with the National School Boards Association?

A I did not.

Q Okay. I'm going to move on to the Department of Education.

A Okay.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Suzanne Goldberg?

A I am not.

Q Okay. Ms. Goldberg was the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Education and Outreach at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Aaliyah Samuel?

A No.

Q Okay. Ms. Samuel was previously Deputy Assistant Secretary for Local, State, and National Engagement at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Sheila Nix?

A No.

Q Ms. Nix was the chief of staff at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Ian Rosenblum?

A No.

Q Mr. Rosenblum was previously Deputy Assistant Secretary for Policy and Programs at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A I do not recall the name.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an individual named Larry Bowden, B-o-w-d-e-n?

A No.

Q Okay. He was the special assistant in the office of Secretary Cardona at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection at all?

A No.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Nicholas Simmons?

A No.

Q Mr. Simmons was a senior adviser in the Office of Secretary Cardona at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A No.

Q Okay. Almost done.

A Okay.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Emma Leheny, L-e-h-n-e-y (sic)?

A No.

Q Okay. Ms. Leheny was previously general counsel at the Department of Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A No.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with an individual named Scott Sargrad, S-a-r-g-r-a-d?

A No.

Q Okay. Mr. Sargrad was the deputy chief of staff for policy and programs at Education. Does that refresh your recollection?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you ever discuss the September 29th NSBA letter with anyone at the Department of Education?

A No, I did not.

Q And aside from the town hall that you mentioned earlier, did you have any conversations with the Department of Education, to your knowledge?

A To my knowledge, I have not --

Q Okay. In connection with your work at the NSBA?

A No, I did not.

Q Okay. Did you ever discuss threats against school personnel, school administrators, or school board members with anyone at the Department of Education?

A I did not.

Q Okay. You mentioned the town hall.

A Uh-huh.

Q And do you recall when that took place?

A Generally speaking I'm not good at dates. I recall that it was in August.

Q Okay. You participated in that town hall then?

A I did.

Q Okay. Do you know who organized it?

A The Secretary's office organized it.

Q Okay. And I want to introduce --

A As far as I know, the Secretary's office organized it.

Q I'm going to introduce as exhibit 9 a press release from the NSBA entitled: "School Board Leaders Meet With Education Secretary Cardona During Virtual Town Hall Meeting to Discuss Back-to-School Challenges."

[Garcia Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this is a press release -- sorry. Let me know when you have read it.

A Okay.

Q Okay. You're quoted in this press release as stating, quote: "Our members greatly appreciate the opportunity to speak with Secretary Cardona about the challenges of creating safe environments for students and educators as they return to school buildings this fall."

Was that a reference to ensuring that students and educators stayed healthy while the COVID-19 public health emergency was still ongoing?

A As I recall, yes. It encompassed the gamut of concerns and activities occurring at the beginning of the school year.

Q And why was it important for your members to have those concerns heard?

A Because there were requests for assistance. How can we do this better? What are the best practices that we can use? Share with us any resources that you might have that would be useful. And that sort of activity.

Q And why was it important for them to have students return safely?

A Well, it's just always important for students to return to school safely. They've been off during the summer. And so it's always a concern. Safety has been a big concern among the school board members and school districts for a good number of years.

Q And you had mentioned earlier that you were an educator and that you had also served on a school board for a long, long time. And you just said again for a good number of years.

For you personally, has prioritizing student and educator safety been a priority?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q And can you say anything more about that?

A Well, I would just say that we understand and know that students work best, employees, teachers work best, administrators work best, in a safe and secure environment. If there are threats or if there is concern about health, safety, or any issues like that, they're not focused on the primary thing that public schools are intended for, the education of students.

And so school boards across the country, for a good number of years, have emphasized the return to school or the academic year being a safe and secure place for all that come to that setting.

Q Okay. And you said that you're a parent and a grandparent. In your role as a parent and a grandparent, is that something that matters to you, student and educator safety?

A Yes, absolutely.

Q And in your experience as a school board member, did you hear from other parents who were concerned about student and parent safety -- or student and educator safety?

A Yes, particularly during this time. During the pandemic, there was great concern for health and safety of the employees, students, and community, the community that came in and out of the schools.

Q Thank you. Okay. And I apologize. I thought I was done asking about your interactions with the executive branch, and you said you have had none. But I want to go back quickly. I apologize for hopping around.

A Okay.

Q You said that you had basically no communication -- no communication at all with the White House or the Department of Education, with DOJ, with the Department of Homeland Security. But you said that you think others may have at the NSBA.

A Yes.

Q During -- do you have any indication that anyone at the NSBA during those interactions ever mentioned the name Terry McAuliffe?

A I don't recall that name.

Q Do you know who Terry McAuliffe is?

A I do not.

Q Okay. And I want to turn to exhibit -- the NSBA letter, which I think is exhibit 3.

A Okay.

Q You were asked earlier about who at the NSBA had communicated or who may have had communications. Do you know -- there's language in here that NSBA -- the reference to domestic terrorism is at the bottom of page 2. NSBA requests that a review "examine appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the Gun-Free Schools Act," and so on and so forth.

Do you have any personal knowledge of anyone at the White House or any of the administrative agencies ever requesting that that language be included?

A No, I have no knowledge of that. I do not recall that.

Q Okay. All right. Staying with this letter -- and I'll give you some time to review it. Can you take a look and let me know if the word "parent" is ever mentioned in this letter, or if you know offhand?

A I have reviewed that previously for that specific purpose, and the word "parent" is not in this letter.

Q Okay. And you said earlier that the focus of the letter was on concerns, not on the actual -- not on parents, right?

A Yes.

Q And the concerns -- you spoke just a couple minutes ago about the concerns you were hearing from both school boards and then also from parents, potentially, about safety for their children.

Is it fair to say that this letter was written in response to those concerns?

A Yes, I would say that's true.

Q Okay. So to the extent that some people are claiming that this letter asked the White House or Federal agents to use Federal law enforcement tools, quote, unquote, against parents, do you think that's a fair assessment?

A The intent of the letter was to ask for assistance regarding the threats of violence, intimidation, disruptions that were occurring. And so the gist of the letter was to ask for assistance with those threats.

Q And it never actually says the word "parents," right?

A I never did -- I reread it after that statement was made after the letter was released, and the word "parent" is not in this letter.

Q Okay. And I want to introduce as exhibit 10 an October 5th, 2021, article from the Associated Press. It's entitled: "Posts mischaracterize school board organization's letter to Biden."

[Garcia Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this article before?

A I have not.

Q I'll give you a second to read it, if you'd like.

A Okay. Uh-huh.

Do you want me to read the whole thing?

Q I'm going to ask you about the very first couple paragraphs.

A Okay. Go ahead.

Q At the beginning of the article, it says: "CLAIM: The National School Boards Association is asking the Biden administration to label parents who protest school policies domestic terrorists."

And the AP assessment is: "False. The organization -- the NSBA, for short -- is not asking Biden to label parents who protest at school board meetings as terrorists."

Do you agree with that assessment from the AP?

A I agree that the letter, from what I've just seen, does not include the word "parents." And so the focus was not on parents. It was on the safety of those engaged in school-related activities.

Q Okay. And you agree that the intent of the letter was certainly not to label parents who protest at school board meetings as terrorists?

A Yes. I believe I said earlier that it's one of the tenets of local school boards, State associations, NSBA, to engage parents actively in the education of their children.

Q Why is that important?

A It's important because parents are a child's first teacher, and they are very influential and important to the education of children.

Q And that's based on your experience as an educator?

A Educator, mother, school board member. The greater the engagement of parents, the likelier the benefit to the student.

Q Okay. And I also want to introduce as exhibit -- actually, was the Attorney General's memo already introduced?

[redacted] It was not.

[redacted] Okay.

Do you have it? Thank you.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this will be exhibit 11. It's the Attorney General's October 4th memo. And I don't recall if you said that you've reviewed this or not. But I'm going to ask you to take a look and let me know if you see the word "parent" or the word "school" -- the phrase "school board meetings" in this memo anywhere.

A Okay.

Q Do you see the word "parent" in that memo at all?

A I do not.

Q Do you see the phrase "school board meetings" in that memo?

A I do not.

Q Okay. In your experience, are school board administrators such as principals, for example, often parents themselves?

A Yes. I would say so. I would -- yes. Yes.

Q Are teachers often parents themselves?

A Quite often, I would think, yes.

Q And you were a teacher?

A Yes.

Q And you're a parent?

A Yes.

Q In your experience, are school board members often parents themselves?

A I think I stated a little bit earlier that we believe that a good number of school board members are in fact parents or grandparents.

Q And, again, you're a school board member, and you're a parent and a grandparent.

A Yes.

Q I'm going to introduce two tweets from an individual named Christopher Rufo, who is a senior fellow with an organization called the Manhattan Institute. And actually, it looks like there's three tweets on here, but it's a tweet thread. So it's one tweet up top and one tweet down below. And this is exhibit No. 12.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So Mr. Rufo states, quote: "The NSBA's gambit to label parents 'domestic terrorists' has collapsed."

And then he continues on: "I'm going to explain exactly how we did it."

And then in a tweet below that: "First, when the letter came out, we immediately framed the narrative on social media that the NSBA and AG Garland wanted to, quote, 'label parents'" -- parent -- I think it means parents -- "'domestic terrorists.' My initial tweet did 14 million impressions, sparking a week-long media cycle that exploited their reckless language."

Have you seen this tweet before?

A I have not. I do not follow Twitter necessarily.

Q Are you familiar with Mr. Rufo?

A I am not.

Q Okay. Before I read this tweet to you, were you aware that Mr. Rufo has taken credit for, quote, unquote framing the narrative that the NSBA wanted to, quote, "label parents domestic terrorists"?

A No, I was not aware.

Q Okay. And as you said just a couple minutes ago, the NSBA letter never even used the word "parents," right?

A That's right.

Q And the AP article also found false the claim that the NSBA want to, quote, "label parents domestic terrorists"?

A That's right.

Q Okay. So I want to introduce -- actually, I think it was already introduced as an earlier exhibit. I'm going to refer to a separate section. It's exhibit No. 4.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Which one is this?

[redacted] It's the -- so the top -- it's exhibit 54 from the NSBA document -- from the NSBA appendix.

BY [redacted]

Q And I'm going to look at the bottom of page -- what's marked as 208 on here -- I'm sorry, it's confusing because of the different exhibits -- and then the top and the middle of page 209.

So I want to look first at the email on page 208. It's an email from you dated October 2nd, 2021, addressed to a woman named Janine Bay Teske, T-e-s-k-e. I think I'm pronouncing her name right.

Who is Ms. Teske, if you recall?

A Janine Bay Teske served on the board of directors at that time.

Q Okay. This email that you sent responds to one on the following page from Ms. Teske dated October 2nd, 2021. And I want to look at the line -- it is the -- in the second line it says: "Bad words are words that evoke strong negative reactions. The letter is laced with bad words calling parents terrorists, for example."

And then in the email that you sent, the one on the next page, you said: "I think this is the section of the letter that you reference 'calling parents terrorists.' That's not what the section says, but it is obvious that, quote,

'bad words' create fodder for those intent on misinformation. I appreciate you."

Do you recall what you meant by bad words creating fodder for those intent on misinformation?

A Well, from what I recall, I do remotely remember the email. And from what I recall, Ms. Bay Teske's email to me simply indicated that she had taken a course on messaging, and that in messaging or effective communication one needs to be careful about specific words used.

And so I was just responding that I appreciated her reference to that, and that obviously the bad words that were presented a little bit earlier as well referencing domestic terrorism was flipped -- were flipped to indicate -- or to suggest that the reference was to parents specifically.

Q And Mr. Rufo had said that he, quote, "exploited NSBA's," quote, "reckless language."

Do you think this could be an example of perhaps a choice of words creating, quote, "fodder for those intent on misinformation"?

A Yes, I would agree.

Q Okay. Turning back to Mr. Rufo's tweet, the part I didn't read earlier, the second sentence of his first tweet, it says -- Mr. Rufo states that -- apparently with some level of pride -- that their organization has splintered.

How do you feel about Mr. Rufo claiming kind of victory for splintering the NSBA?

A I have no opinion about Mr. Rufo. I don't know Mr. Rufo, so I have no context to be able to answer your question.

Q Okay. Could you -- and do you need a minute?

A I'm just coughing a bit.

Q Yeah, absolutely. We can pause for a minute or two, too.

A Thank you. Let me just take a large sip of water.

Okay. Thank you.

Q Could you remind me again how long you were a member of the NSBA?

A Oh, I don't know exact number of years, but I would think it would be about eight years.

Q Okay. In your experience, did you and your fellow NSBA members join the organization because you wanted to serve your communities?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q And you were largely volunteers, right?

A It is completely voluntary, almost. Yeah, I think everybody on their local -- to be a member on the National School Boards Association requires that you be a local school board member.

Q Okay.

A And for the most part, most local school board members across the country are volunteers, meaning they are unpaid.

Q Okay.

A And so the same is true for NSBA.

Q Okay. And there was a reference made in the earlier -- the first hour of our discussion today to a negative outcome. Do you think a negative outcome would be, for example, being placed in a political battle?

A Yes. School board positions are nonpartisan. The primary concern of school board members is to educate children and to support the communities and schools that do that work.

Q Okay. And I have just one last set of questions. Then I'm going to turn to my co-counsel.

A Okay.

Q So I'm going to introduce as -- we are out of exhibit -- I think we are at exhibit 13, and I am going to need more labels.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q All right. This article is from USA Today and it's entitled: "The 'Great Resignation' hits school boards. Only 38 percent of members want to run for reelection."

Looking down at the beginning of this article in the first paragraph, it reads -- the first paragraph after the bullets -- "Long gone are the days when school board members held onto political power. Nearly three-fourths of board members don't plan to run for reelection after their current term, new research shows."

Does the percentage three-fourths of board members not wanting to run for reelection surprise you?

A No, I have no opinion of that. I have no knowledge of this research or related research.

Q Okay. Do you think, just from your general experience, if an individual is the subject of harassment or threats, especially violent threats, they might not want to continue on volunteering in the position?

A It's reasonable to expect that one would want to volunteer in a safe environment and people would be more likely to do it in that way.

Q Okay. Are you aware personally of any school board members who are not running for reelection because of the treatment that they've received?

A I am not aware of anyone personally.

Q Okay. Have you heard stories of others?

A I have heard stories of others, but I'm not aware of anyone personally.

Q Okay. Okay. I'm going to turn -- actually, we have -- yeah, we have about 15 minutes left. So I'll turn to my co-counsel.

A Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Hello. My name is [redacted] and I'm also with Ranking Member Nadler.

A Okay.

Q I would like to change topics a bit and go through some of the points about your career and just go over how we got here today.

A Okay.

Q So you received an undergraduate degree in elementary education? Is that correct?

A I did, uh-huh.

Q And where did you get that agree?

A Texas Woman's University.

Q Okay. And when did you graduate from Texas Woman's University?

A In 1971.

Q Okay. Did you receive a master's degree?

A I did.

Q And what was your field of study?

A My field of study there was specialization in reading certification, and curriculum instruction was the field.

Q Okay. And where was that degree from?

A The University of Houston.

Q Okay. And when did you get that degree?

A In 1974.

Q Okay. And you also have a doctorate in education.

A I do.

Q And where was that degree from?

A That was from the University of Houston.

Q Okay. And could you explain for us your field of study for your doctoral degree?

A The field of study was higher education administration that involved knowledge of and work in that field.

Q And when did you receive that degree?

A Oh, it was either 1999 or 2000. Or maybe close.

Q Okay.

A I believe the defense occurred in -- for the dissertation -- occurred in 1999, and the conferring of the degree occurred in 2000.

Q And could you tell us what your dissertation was on?

A It was on the perception that students that were in developmental classes, entry students into college, their perception of their nature of thinking about their own success with that descriptor entering the university.

Q When did you begin teaching students during your education? Was it after your master's?

A No. I began teaching in 1971 under the -- with a bachelor's degree.

Q And what was your first position in teaching?

A My first position was as a bilingual teacher at Lamar Elementary in the Houston Independent School District.

Q And what grade did you teach there?

A I taught second grade.

Q How long were you teaching there?

A I taught at that school for three years.

Q And what was your next position?

A My next position was as an intern in an administrative preparation program. And so I was an intern under an administrator at Foster Elementary for a year.

Q And after that?

A After that, I was a coordinator of bilingual teacher aides at Travis Elementary.

Q And were you ever promoted to a school principal?

A I was school principal -- I became school principal in 1977 at Helms Elementary in the Houston Independent School District.

Q And how long were you principal there?

A I was principal from 1977 until after the birth of our second daughter. And so I believe that I remember I left under a parent request leave in the spring of 2001.

Q Okay.

A No, no, no. I'm so sorry. When she was one and a half. You're having me recall dates.

[Laughter.]

That was a long time ago, '80 -- no, I'm sorry, that was '81.

Q Okay, 1981.

And then you've also taught at the University of Houston-Downtown. Is that --

A The Downtown campus, yes.

Q Do you still teach there?

A No. I retired.

Q Do you still hold any positions there?

A I am a professor emeritus, which allows me library access and various other resources.

Q And what department did you teach in?

A The Department of Urban Education.

Q And what years were you teaching there?

A I believe -- well, I was at the University of Houston-Downtown prior to being in the Department of Education. It was not created.

I began at the University of Houston-Downtown in 1994 in the English Department as an adjunct instructor in developmental classes and that allowed me to pursue the specific research that I was doing for my dissertation. And so I was in the English Department from 1994 until -- I believe it was 1999 that I began in the Department of Urban Education.

Q And then did you hold any roles within that department?

A Yes. I was a faculty member in the Department of Urban Education. I was the assistant chair of the department for about seven years, and then I became the chair of the department after that.

Q And do you remember what year that was?

A I do not recall the year, specific year.

Q Okay. So moving on to your school board experience.

A Okay.

Q What was your first school board position?

A Member. School board member.

Q And what year was that?

A 1992.

Q How long were you there?

A I'm still a school board member in the Aldine Independent School District.

Q And can you tell us about your work on the Aldine Independent School District board?

A My work involves oversight of policy, budget, direct oversight of the superintendent, hiring, evaluating the superintendent, and working with six other elected school board members on the school board business -- I mean, the school district business.

Q Were you paid -- are you paid for your work on the school board?

A No. It is completely volunteer.

Q Okay. You were also president of the Texas Association of School Boards. Is that correct?

A I was.

Q And what years were you with the Texas Association of School Boards?

A I do not recall the years specifically. I'm sorry. I'm not very good at dates.

Q That's all right. Were you -- did you have any positions other than president with the Texas Association of School Boards?

A I did. I was a director on the board of directors. There are 44 directors on the TASB board. I was one of the directors for a number of years. I don't remember the number of years. And then I applied and served as secretary-treasurer, vice president two years, president-elect, and then finally president of the organization. And

I even served the year after my presidency as past president, worked in collaboration with the officers.

Q And could you describe your work on the Texas Association of School Boards?

A That work involved supporting the over 1,000 school boards in the State of Texas, working with the TASB staff to provide products and services that would be useful to local school boards and administrators in the State.

Q Thank you.

Moving back to your work with the Aldine Independent School District, has the Aldine ISD school board earned any awards during your tenure there?

A Yes. I recall the district was very excited. I do not recall the year. But the district is a large urban district currently serving over 60,000 students. But because it is an urban district, it was identified by the Broad Foundation, and the district's name was submitted for consideration and for -- I believe it was three consecutive years Aldine ISD was a finalist for the Broad Prize for Urban Education. And that provided a monetary award of $250,000 each of those years that Aldine was a finalist for the Broad Prize for Urban Education.

And then finally the district shortly after that actually won the prize for -- the Broad Prize For Urban District and received a prize of $1 million.

Q Congratulations.

A Yes. Well, we would have thought if we kept up with the 250,000 for a good number of years, we may have -- but, anyway. That's another story. That's another story.

[Laughter.]

So, yes, that was quite exciting for the population of students. Aldine ISD is an urban school district serving the majority of students in need. And so we were quite excited for the students and the community.

Q That's wonderful.

You're the longest serving member of the Aldine ISD school district board, correct?

A Yes. Currently, I am.

Q And is it true that you have an elementary school named after you?

A I do.

Q And what's the name of the school?

A It's a middle school. It's the Dr. Viola M. Garcia Middle School.

Q All right. And where is that located?

A It is in Aldine ISD.

Q Okay.

A Yes.

Q Are you a member of any other education organizations?

A I am a member of the Texas Association of School Boards. I am a member of the Mexican American School Boards Association. Did I say that?

Q Not yet.

A And officially, I'm not a member. I was a member -- as a faculty member, I was a member of higher ed associations related to teacher education. But since I've retired, I'm no longer a member.

Q And do you or did you have leadership roles in those organizations?

A The Mexican American School Boards Association, the Texas Association of School Boards. Those are the ones I recall.

Q So this is a truly impressive resume. And congratulations for all your success.

A Thank you.

Q I want you to know how much we appreciate your work for children across America.

How long have you been working in education total cumulatively?

A Cumulatively, I began -- actually, I began my work right after high school. I had very little interest in becoming an educator. And shortly after high school, the superintendent of schools selected one of my classmates and I to participate as teacher aides in a Head Start summer program as aides.

It was very beneficial to me personally, to my friend as well, because there was a source of income -- an unexpected source of income -- that was really very, very beneficial to me.

And so I actually began my venture into education and service in that way at that Head Start program. But officially, I became a teacher, a certified teacher, in 1971 and began my first official employment as a teacher in 1971.

[12:15 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And during that time had you won any awards or been otherwise honored for your work since 1971, other than, of course, the middle school?

A I can recall, yes, receiving awards. I can't name them. I remember receiving -- the award that I recall best is at the University of Houston-Downtown.

There are three awards, annual awards, for faculty. One is for teaching, one is for research, and one is for service. And I received the award for service one year while I was at the University of Houston-Downtown.

Q And do you recall receiving the Solo Mujeres Magazine Woman of the Year Award in 2016?

A Now that you said it, I recall it.

[Laughter.]

Q And just to wrap this up, have you been paid for your work in any of these school boards?

A No. The only compensation -- I do recall compensation at NSBA for per diem expenses.

Routinely, the NSBA board of directors holds four board meetings a year, quarterly meetings, and travel costs for directors to attend those meetings is reimbursed.

But when I served as president, there was an additional compensation because the position sometimes required -- it didn't then because of COVID, so there was less travel -- but participating in an additional conference or two, aside from those board meetings. Policy allowed for compensation of $250 a day per diem.

Q So you paid out of your own pocket and then were reimbursed.

A That's right.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

[redacted] That's all we have. Thank you so much.

We are off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. It's 12:39 p.m.

BY [redacted]

Q Dr. Garcia, we've discussed a lot about the intent of the letter. Can you remind us again what your intent was for sending the September 29th letter?

A Yes. The general intent of the letter was to request assistance regarding threats of violence, interruptions, disruptions that were occurring across the country.

Q Was it your intent that it would lead to the Attorney General's memorandum that marshaled all of the Federal law enforcement agencies to look into what could be done to combat concerned parents and threats and violence at school board meetings?

A I don't remember that the specific intent in the request that we were as concerned about how it would be done as that something be done to assist.

Q Was it your intent that FBI agents would visit parents' homes regarding speeches they gave at school board meetings?

A I'm not aware of that or that happening, but that was not the intent.

Q And so I'm going to mark this as exhibit No. 14.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is more of an example of what happened after the letter.

This is a letter from the U.S. Attorney's Office in Montana. And you'll see the last few pages of the letter is a list of statutes that could be used to prosecute threats and acts of violence from parents at school board meetings.

A I'm sorry. I'm going to have to ask for clarification in the statement you just made.

Q Definitely.

A So you're specifically asking about threats from parents? Is that your specific question?

Q So this is a list of statutes that the U.S. Attorney's Office from Montana put together in response to the Attorney General's memorandum, and the first line of the letter states: "In response to a nationwide rise in threats and acts of violence against our educational community, Attorney General Garland has directed the FBI and the United States Attorneys to partner with federal, state, local, and tribal leaders to address the problem."

I'm just asking more for using this as an example. Did you reasonably foresee that prosecutors around the country would be studying up on the statutes that could be used to prosecute Federal crimes?

A I do not recall having any idea of what you've just described.

Q I want to go back to the NSBA apology for a minute. I think it was marked as exhibit No. 6.

A Let me organize.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Sorry.

Dr. Garcia. The message. Okay.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Is it exhibit 5 maybe? Or do I have them mixed up?

[redacted] Sure. It's probably 5. We'll go 5.

Dr. Garcia. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And so the memorandum stated: "On behalf of the NSBA, we regret and apologize for the letter. To be clear, the safety of school board members, other public school officials and educators, and students is our top priority, and there remains important work to be done on this issue.

"However, there is no justification for some of the language included in the letter. We should have had a better process in place to allow for consultation on a communication of this significance. We apologize also for the strain and stress the situation has caused you and your organizations."

Dr. Garcia, you had said that this was done by an outside communications group. Is that correct?

A In collaboration. As I recall, there was a communications firm that was hired that worked in collaboration with NSBA staff. So my assumption is that this was a collaborative effort between the communications group and NSBA staff.

Q Do you recall what language was the NSBA referring to in the apology that there was, quote, "no justification for," end quote?

A I don't know the specifics because I was not consulted or involved in the development of this particular memo.

But I believe that the gist of it is that what was intended was that there be a general request for assistance regarding these acts of violence that were occurring and that perhaps the language that's referred to here was that the requests were specific, not a general request, but that there were requests for various agencies to be involved.

And I think that may be -- I'm not -- I don't know. I didn't participate in the writing of the letter, but that would be what I would think occurred.

Q What you say specific requests, what were those specific requests from the letter?

A That you referred to specific -- from what I recall, you mentioned specific divisions of the Federal Government and their engagement. And I think that that is what is referred to here, that those could have been omitted and a general request for assistance would have been more appropriate.

Q Could the specific references to statutes within the letter have been omitted to make it more generalized? Do you think that's what was --

A I don't know. I don't know that, the answer to that. I don't know.

Q Okay. But you had learned that it was about the specific agencies that were mentioned in the letter.

A I don't know because I was not involved. That is just my assumption, and that is just what I believe occurred during those discussions in preparation of this letter.

Q And a lot of the reaction that you received from the board of directors and those outside of the NSBA organization had to do regarding the domestic terrorism language, correct?

A I believe that that may be true. I don't have an analysis of the responses and how many were about a specific piece or a different piece.

Q So was the NSBA apologizing for the domestic terrorism and PATRIOT Act language in this apology, do you think?

A I do not know. I cannot say.

Q So do you know about when the NSBA decided to issue an apology or that it was warranted?

A I can guess. I don't know. The letter is dated October 22nd, 2021. So my assumption is that it was created, developed in the month preceding that. I don't know the length of time that it took to create this.

Q Do you think it was after the Attorney General issued his memorandum on October 4th?

A I don't know.

Q Did the NSBA receive any feedback that you're aware of from the Biden administration stating that the NSBA should apologize for its letter?

A I don't recall that.

Q Did the Biden administration ever express to the NSBA that there was no justification for some of the language used in the letter?

A I don't recall that.

Q Did you or anyone in the NSBA share the apology with the Biden administration?

A I don't remember that.

Q Did the Biden administration get a preview of the contents of the apology as it did with the September 29th letter?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q Did you or anyone in the NSBA share the apology with the Justice Department?

A I don't have any knowledge of that.

Q And you received a call from President Biden about the letter after it was published, correct?

A I remember that, yes.

Q And do you know about when it that was you received the call from the President?

A I don't remember the specific date. It was in October, I believe.

Q In October. Do you remember about how long the call was?

A From my recollection, it may have been 12 to 15 minutes. I wasn't timing it. So I don't know.

Q Yeah.

A Yeah.

Q What did you and President Biden discuss?

A President Biden expressed appreciation for school board members across the country. He reminded me -- very gracious -- that his wife is an educator and thanked me for my service as an educator, as a school board member, and acknowledged that school boards across the country were having a difficult time. That's the gist of what I can remember.

Q And the report noted that he may have extended an invitation to you to come to the Oval Office. Did you ever take him up on that offer?

A I did not.

Q And based on your call with President Biden, did you believe he was grateful for the letter?

A I don't know. There wasn't any indication. There was no reference to "thank you for the letter." There was no specific discussion about him having received the letter or NSBA having written the letter that I can recall.

Q Did you two discuss the letter on the phone?

A We did not discuss the letter on the phone, other than the aftermath that was occurring was an outcome, it seemed, from that letter. So --

Q And what do you mean by the aftermath that was occurring?

A The media, the things that we've discussed here this morning, the hate mail that school board members were receiving, that sort of thing. So he understood, it seemed, that school boards were having a difficult time.

Q Did you tell anyone about your call with President Biden?

A I did. My husband was with me. We were having lunch, and so I was interrupted during lunch. Walked away to speak and came back and told my husband. I also told our daughters, and I let Chip Slaven know and the officers of the -- of NSBA.

Q Okay. And I want to turn to the report that my colleague entered into the record, the NSBA report.

A I think that's my phone. I'm sorry. I thought I had turned that off. Sorry.

[redacted] Page 23, Susanne.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. This is exhibit 8, page 23.

Dr. Garcia. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q In that first full paragraph, last sentence, it says: "Dr. Garcia confided to Counsel that despite her excitement from President Biden's support, she was reluctant to discuss the call because of the perception that the NSBA was, quote, 'in cahoots essentially with the Biden Administration on this Letter,'" end quotes.

Why were you reluctant to discuss the call with Biden?

A From what I can recall, this was during the interview that was conducted by the firm that was engaged by NSBA to conduct the independent review. And so they had many questions. I don't remember the length of time. And at the end of the interview they had not asked about that call. I volunteered the information and shared it with them, shared the fact that the President had called.

But primarily because of the bad press and the negative response that we were still receiving about the letter and the release of the letter and the misinterpretation, as we've discussed this morning, of the domestic terrorism attributed to parents, there was still very much negative activity towards NSBA.

And so I felt that this probably would have not assisted. And so, though I volunteered to say this to the interviewer, I knew that that also could be or would be, as the information was shared a little bit earlier -- was it the Twitter person? -- that this also could be the use of bad words or whatever Janine had implied. So --

Q And why did you believe that there was a perception that the NSBA was in cahoots with the administration?

A It was not my perception. It was a perception that was out in the country by some.

Q Yeah. But you now know that the NSBA was talking with the administration before the letter, correct?

A The NSBA communicated with the Department of Education, as it routinely does, and that is very different from what was being shared at that time, which was a suggestion that the NSBA was collaborating with or coordinating with or in cahoots with.

I used a -- there was a bad choice of words on my part in that case. But that was my concern at the time, that backdrop was my concern.

Q Yeah. But the NSBA through Mr. Slaven did share the contents of the letter with the White House before it was sent, about a week before it was sent. Is that correct?

A I do not know.

Q We can look at page 18 of the report.

A Okay.

Q So the last paragraph, I'll just read some of this.

A Okay.

Q "On September 21st, Ms. Wall, who was at the White House, reached out to

Mr. Slaven requesting the 'egregious examples' that Mr. Slaven promised to send to her. Mr. Slaven initially responded to Ms. Wall, indicating that his staff would work to send her 'some of the most egregious examples' by the next day and reminding Ms. Wall that, as he mentioned to her a week earlier, quote, 'NSBA is also planning to send the President a letter requesting federal assistance,' end quote.

"Ms. Wall responded to Mr. Slaven for more information on the planned Letter and the egregious examples because of a planned meeting between White House officials and the Department of Justice the next morning, September 22.

"Specifically, Ms. Wall emailed Mr. Slaven as follows." This is from an email that Ms. Wall sent to Mr. Slaven.

Quote: "'Is there any way we can take a look at the letter in advance of release? In specific, I'm meeting with colleagues from other [White House] offices and [the Department of Justice] tomorrow morning to see if there might be any options we can pursue here. So if you have concrete recommendations in your letter (e.g. the threat assessment you mentioned) would be good to know so I can include in discussions.'

"Based on Ms. Wall's notice of the White House meeting with the Department of Justice, Mr. Slaven sent a copy of NSBA's list of 'egregious examples' prepared by NSBA's research assistant to Ms. Wall with a detailed summary of the Letter's contents and the request for intervention."

Dr. Garcia, did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q And do you have any information that would dispute that?

A I have no information whatsoever regarding that activity.

Q So based upon our reading of this report, the White House received at their request the contents of the letter before it was sent, correct?

A That's what it reads.

Q And they received the list of egregious examples, which was the list of incidents that were cited in the letter in advance of the letter, correct?

A I don't know why the words "egregious example" are in quotations, so I don't know the context of that. But it is in quotations.

Q I want to turn to your role on the National Assessment Governing Board, if we can.

A Okay.

Q So when did the Department of Education, Secretary Cardona, appoint you to the National Assessment Governing Board?

A My official appointment began on October 1st, 2022. Is that the question you're asking, or are you asking about the notification?

Q I was just asking when was your -- when did you officially start at the National Assessment Governing Board?

A October 1st, 2022. I mean -- well, I'm sorry. '21. I'm sorry. I'm very bad at dates. I apologize.

Q Don't worry.

And what are your roles and responsibilities as a board member?

A As a board member, there are 20-plus directors on the National Assessment Governing Board. The board is composed of committees. And so there is -- the board meets quarterly to work primarily on the future assessments for students across the country as a representative body of a group of students to see how the Nation is doing, how kids are doing in schools. There is also a reporting element.

And so, generally speaking, when the board meets, the board meets with the National Assessment Governing Board staff, as well as staff from the research arm of the Department of Education.

Q And in your interview for the NSBA review you stated that you first applied for this position in 2019.

Does that sound about correct?

A That's right.

Q And then you had to resubmit your name for reconsideration in 2020 when the position remained vacant. Is that correct?

A That's right.

Q When were you notified that you were a finalist for the position?

A Late summer 2021.

Q Okay. And the appointment was effective October 1st, 2021, I think we discussed, correct?

A Uh-huh. Uh-huh.

Q Were you in communication with the Department of Education regarding your appointment between July and October?

A No. All my communications were with the National Assessment Governing Board staff.

Q And can you tell us the association between the Department of Education and the National Assessment Governing Board?

A One of the committees on the National Assessment Governing Board is a Nominations Committee. The Nominations Committee makes a recommendation to the body of the board of directors of the National Assessment Governing Board recommending who they would submit forward to the Secretary of Education to appoint to the particular seats that may be open.

So the National Assessment Governing Board does the legwork, sending out the call for applications for the vacant positions. The committee, the nominating committee of the board, makes a recommendation to the board. The board discusses it, approves it. Those recommendations, up to six positions, six people for each of the vacant -- vacancies -- on the NAGB board, go to the Department of Education. Ultimately, the Secretary of Education decides which of those to appoint.

Q And were you notified before October 1st of your pending appointment?

A Yes.

Q And what date was that?

A I don't recall the date, but it was -- I believe it was the beginning of August. To complete the process, the selected appointee or the appointee to be named needed to complete an ethics form declaration, as well as a financial disclosure. So I believe I submitted those -- I don't have a date -- sometime around mid-August.

Q And then you were officially appointed by Secretary Cardona on the 1st of October.

A The appointment -- I received -- I believe I received a letter indicating that I would be appointed. But the official -- you're right, the official appointment, the position, the term begins on October 1st of whatever year someone is appointed.

Q And how long is that term for?

A The term is four years, I believe. I believe four, three or four. I believe it's four. Somebody could correct me. I don't know.

BY [redacted]

Q You said you signed the letter but you didn't write it?

A I did not write it.

Q But you do take responsibility for it, correct?

A For my signature being on the letter, yes.

Q Right. And when you were reading the letter before it was sent, did it give you any pause that NSBA was requesting the assistance of the FBI, Homeland Security, the Secret Service? Did that give you any pause?

A From what I recall at the time that I read it, the crux of the letter and the purpose of the letter, as I understood it, the intent was to seek assistance for the threats of violence, disruptions, and other activities like that, that were occurring. That was my focus when I read that letter. So --

Q So you didn't think it was like going overboard to ask --

A That's not --

Q -- for the FBI and DHS and the Secret Service?

A Yeah. Respectfully, that is not, as I've said, my expertise. And so that, I do not know the difference among those and between those departments. And so my concern was that we, NSBA, was responding to requests for assistance from local entities.

Q If parents go to school board meetings and are cranky about COVID restrictions or they're cranky about other things in their community --

A Sure.

Q -- like, how do you go from that -- and, granted, it was heated during this time period, especially with COVID restrictions and the critical race theory discussion -- how do you go from that to allegations of domestic terrorism?

A I didn't write the letter. I did not --

Q Well, you signed the letter.

A I signed the letter. I cannot answer your question.

Q Did you have any like back and forth with Mr. Slaven or the staff --

A No.

Q -- about that or did you just --

A No, I didn't. There was no communication specific to my editing, writing, composing, or doing the research for the letter at all.

Q Okay. So you don't know if there's any set of facts that would support the inclusion of domestic terrorism in the letter and the referencing of the PATRIOT Act and so forth?

A Specifically, I do not have that knowledge to be able to answer your question.

Q In hindsight, if we were doing this all over again, would that give you pause as you sit here today?

A Yes, I think earlier I said if we had -- in hindsight, if we could think of these things, I believe I've already said that it would be probably more appropriate in a request like that to make a general request for assistance rather than to name specific ways in which assistance could be provided.

Q Okay. Now, the letter goes through, and it cites various incidents that had been occurring during this time period.

Was there any evidence that this was a real Federal issue, that the State and local authorities weren't capable of handling this type of disturbances at the school board meetings?

A Yeah, I personally did not have or did not receive any evidence. But my general understanding of what was occurring at that time was that there were activities that were very, very similar occurring at board meetings across the country that appeared to be orchestrated in some way in a manner that would not have been something that a parent or a group of people in a community were involved in.

Q And what was the evidence of that?

A I didn't have any evidence, as I said. Just that was my understanding of what was occurring and why perhaps that was included.

Q You've been an educator your whole professional career. That's true?

A That's true.

Q Have you personally ever had a situation where there was an issue at school board meetings you were presiding over or attending?

A No. But I would say that Aldine ISD is a rather unique school district. I'm very proud to serve on that board. And we fortunately have not experienced that in my local district.

Q And in your community, if you had experienced it, would you have been confident in your local law enforcement to support you?

A We happen to be a large urban district. We have over 60,000 students. And in the mid-nineties I believe the Aldine school district created its very own Aldine ISD Police Department. There are very few school districts across the country that have these. Particularly small rural districts do not have these. And, yes, I have confidence in our department to handle Aldine matters.

Q Okay. So from your perspective you don't need the assistance of the FBI to come in and --

A Aldine ISD does not, and I would just say that is a unique situation at Aldine ISD.

Q And turning back to the exhibit that was marked at the top of this round of questions from the U.S. attorney for the District of Montana, did it surprise you, all the different Federal statutes that the U.S. attorney was looking at to potentially prosecute parents? Is this a big list?

A I have only today seen this and I do not have enough knowledge to tell you this is short list or a long list, given that my background is not a legal background. So I cannot express to you whether I think this is a long list or a short list. It is a list.

Q Okay. Did it surprise you during the time -- during times relevant how quickly DOJ was able to move? I mean, the letter from NSBA came on September 29th and by October 4th, the Justice Department which loves to call itself an elephant, it moves so slowly to do anything, this department that refers to itself, self-identifies, as an elephant, was able to crank out a memo? Did that surprise you at all, how quickly September 29th to October 4th?

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. Let him finish his question, then you go, so the court reporter can get it all.

Dr. Garcia. Okay. Thank you.

Respectfully, I do not have the background or the knowledge to know how quickly or how slowly one in that Department would respond to any sort of letter, whether it's this one or any other.

BY [redacted]

Q But by all accounts, that's a short period of time, correct?

A I don't know the period of time. I don't --

Q September -- all right.

A Okay.

Q September 29th to October 4th?

A About a week.

Q That's pretty quick, right?

A I don't know. I mean, I don't know if that's quick or long. I don't know.

Q Did it surprise you at all that DOJ has had -- has put forth very little evidence that they did any due diligence on the letter?

A I don't -- I can't answer that. I don't know.

Q Okay.

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q So are you aware of anything DOJ did, other than receive the letter?

A I'm not aware of anything other than the letter.

Q Okay. Because it seems to us and it seems to our Members that the letter came in. It was almost like, okay, we're going to direct the whole country, the nationwide Federal law enforcement resources, we're going to realign their priorities to focus on it.

I mean, isn't that -- at any point did you think to yourself or have any conversations with colleagues something to the effect of: "My goodness, what have we done here?"

A Not related to what you've suggested or stated. I didn't have that sort of response, no, because I didn't know any different.

Q In the period of time after the Attorney General's memo, October 4th, and the NSBA apology, what types of communications do you remember having with NSBA officials about what to do? I mean, you're the president of the organization at the time.

A Yes. Yes, we were discussing -- at that time I believe we were discussing the urgent need to communicate effectively. And so we were primarily discussing the engagement of a communications firm to assist us.

Q But were the internal discussions before you hired a PR firm -- I mean, what can you tell us about those communications before you hired the PR firm?

A Well, the internal discussions were about responses that we were attempting to make to the negative press that was rampant.

Q And as the president of NSBA, did you want the apology letter? I mean, was that something that you requested of the PR firm to recommend?

A At the time, initially we had to go through a process of discernment. What is happening? Why is it happening? So if you're asking did I initially believe that we needed to send an apology letter, I don't know -- restate your question so I can understand what you're asking me.

Q But you're the president of the organization. Did you think an apology letter was necessary? And did you instruct the PR firm to look at that opportunity -- that option?

A I would just say that, generally speaking, my leadership on the NSBA board of directors and as an officer of NSBA was a collaborative relationship between the officers and the executives on staff. And so I rarely, I think, would I have made a decision on my own and shared a decision without the collaborative discussion with others in leadership.

Q What conversations were you having at the time with Chip Slaven about this?

A Just I think that the initial conversations were about the responses that were being received.

Q And what do you remember about the context of those conversations?

A Just that what led to the hiring of a communications firm, that we needed to try to do something positive in response to the negative media that was occurring.

Q And in your experience had NSBA done these types of letters before where they reached out to the White House and requested --

A Well --

Q -- a Federal agency to --

A I'm sorry.

Q -- do something -- do something this significant?

A NSBA has an 80-year history of service. So I cannot go back that far, I regret.

But my understanding is, yes, during a turbulent time decades ago there were communications with I don't know who. I don't have specific information.

But as I've shared before, routine communication occurred between NSBA and particularly the Department of Education related to education matters. So that was never -- it's never unusual that that occurs.

Q After the -- or before you signed the letter, did Mr. Slaven give you any indication that, in fact, he was aware that the White House or the Justice Department was going to push an initiative out like this?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q So you don't know whether the Justice Department was going to react at all to the letter?

A I have no information about the Justice Department before it was sent.

Q And Mr. Slaven didn't give you any prediction about this would be received?

A I don't recall that he did.

Q Did he tell us about his communications with the White House?

A I don't recall that he did.

Q Did you know that he was having communications with the White House, or have you only learned that since the report?

A From what I can remember, I recall that the conversations and the discussions were with the Department of Education.

Q Okay. So it came as a surprise to you that Slaven was working directly with the White House?

A Yes, I think so.

Q And when did you first learn that?

A I believe I learned that after the letter was sent.

Q And did you learn it from him, or did you learn it from somewhere else?

A I don't recall. I really don't recall.

Q Okay. And when the report was prepared, did you read the whole report?

A I -- yes, I attempted to read the whole report.

Q And did the report make any -- did it inform you about Slaven's communications with the White House?

A Not specifically about that. I think that, for me, the gist of the report was that NSBA had work to continue to do and part of that work involved identifying those processes for future communications that would be helpful to modify or change.

Q And a couple of times we've had a discussion that the word "parents" doesn't show up in the letter. But tell us who's going to school board meetings for the most part.

A Well, parents go. But you'd be surprised. In Aldine we have vendors. We have various other people who contract with the district.

Q And are vendors coming to school board meetings and complaining about coronavirus restrictions?

A You didn't ask me that. You just asked me who comes to school board meetings. So I'm sorry.

We have parents, vendors. We have community members, business members, chamber, members of the chambers, the management districts. So it's not an exclusive meeting where parents can attend.

Q But the concerns raised in this letter about incidents at school board meetings, were any vendors at the heart of any of these concerns?

A I have no knowledge of that. I don't know.

Q It's parents, right?

A I can't answer that. I don't know the specific incidents --

Q Okay.

A -- and who was involved in the incidents.

Q Okay. But can we agree that the issue here is parents coming to school board meetings? I mean, the parents are the ones that -- okay. So --

A I don't think that I can agree with, no.

Q No, you can't. Okay.

A Okay.

Q Can you point to one example that didn't involve a parent?

A No, I cannot.

Q One incident that happened at a school board meeting from maybe a vendor or a contractor?

A No one shared specific incidents with me.

Q Okay. Do you think it's reasonable, from reading this letter, to think that parents have been implicated here?

A I can't answer that. I mean, my reasoning is different from somebody else's reasoning. I don't believe I can answer that.

Q But if someone would make that conclusion, I mean, could you understand why they might?

A Well, I can understand if someone made that conclusion because they're an active parent. But I cannot make that conclusion based on information I saw a little bit earlier about an intentional attempt to completely change that to mean that parents are the terrorists.

Q Back in during the coronavirus, the height of the coronavirus restrictions in 2021, I mean, you are aware that parents formed local groups to band together to fight those restrictions, correct?

A Some parents.

Q And they wanted to get their schools open so their kids could have in-person learning, right?

A There were some schools that did that.

Q There were some that were concerned about masks, correct?

A There were some, yes.

Q And they banded together in many cases to bring a united front to the school districts, correct?

A I don't know. I can only speak to my school district.

Q But, I mean, you're the president of the National School Boards Association. Surely you have your pulse on the nationwide -- what's going on nationwide at school board meetings, right?

A I'm also a volunteer, and I have other activities that I engage in. So my pulse is not a daily pulse of what is occurring across the Nation.

Q So I'll represent to you that parent groups were formed nationwide. Parent groups were -- parents were collaborating with one another, making their -- trying to make their voices heard.

And don't you think it's pretty scary that if some of those parents were visited by the FBI, don't you think that would have a chilling effect on future efforts to communicate?

A I can't answer that because I don't have that experience. That did not occur to me personally, so I can't answer that.

Q Okay. But had it occurred, I mean, you're experienced with these matters. I mean, if the FBI comes and visits one parent in a parent group that's concerned about COVID restrictions, don't you think that parent's going to tell all the other parents, "I was visited by the FBI"?

A I can't say that. I don't know.

Q And don't you think that would chill, chill speech and maybe discourage the free flow of complaints and the free flow of communications?

A Yeah, I would just add to that I don't know. I don't know how a parent would react to that.

Q Okay. And having -- I mean, I think earlier today you said if an FBI official shows up at someone's door, you wouldn't concede that that would be a negative experience, a scary experience.

A Well, may I just share a personal experience?

Q Of course.

A We had neighbors in my community, in my home, who the husband was seeking a position that required clearance. So we were visited by someone in the FBI for the purpose of helping his clearance.

Q Of course. Doing a background check.

A So that visit, that was not a scary experience for me.

Q Of course not.

A Well, no. So that's why I cannot answer your question because various FBI --

Q Yeah, but what I'm positing to you is FBI agent coming to somebody's house to inquire about First Amendment-protected activity that they voiced at a school board meeting as a potential act of domestic terrorism. You certainly can concede that that would be a pretty scary experience, right?

A I don't know because I don't know that that actually happened and I have no knowledge of it. So I'm sorry, I just cannot answer that question adequately.

[redacted] I think that's all I have.

[redacted] That's all I have.

We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We will go back on the record. It is 1:22 in the afternoon.

BY [redacted]

Q And thank you for your patience. I think we are almost done.

A Okay.

Q So there's light at the end of the tunnel.

A Okay.

Q I want to go back to something that came up in the very first hour that you might not remember.

A Okay.

Q But you were asked about FBI threat tags.

Do you know what a threat tag is?

A I do not.

Q Okay. Do you know how the FBI uses threat tags?

A I do not.

Q And reference was made to the FBI using threat tags to, quote, "investigate parents." Do you know if the FBI uses threat tags to investigate matters as opposed to, for example, using them to compile statistics?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q Okay. I want to turn to the apology letter.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I apologize, but I'm not sure what exhibit number. That was.

A Apology letter. We just had it. This is it here.

Q That would be lovely. Thank you. Okay.

You said this was written by an outside group?

A Well, I believe I said, from what I remember, that it was written -- that a communications firm was engaged and that I believe the letter was written in collaboration between the, I think, the communications group and NSBA staff.

Q Okay. But you -- NSBA retained a communications group.

A That's right.

Q And you said -- and you retained the Michael Best law firm, right, to do the review, the --

A The investigation.

Q -- the investigation?

A Yes.

Q And did you say there was another firm that you retained at well, a third one?

A Yes.

Q Who was that?

A I do not recall.

Q Okay. So NSBA retained three -- three firms essentially.

A And I don't even know that the group that I referred to was, in fact, a firm.

Q Okay.

A It may have been a collaborative --

Q I see.

A -- of --

Q I see.

A -- of experts in this area.

Q You don't remember or did you know at the time how much money the NSBA spent on hiring those outside contractors?

A I do not recall.

Q Okay. But they had to spend some money.

A Yes.

Q They were all hired.

A Yes.

Q Nobody was pro bono --

A That's right.

Q -- to your knowledge.

A That's right, uh-huh.

Q Okay. We went over this a little bit. On the apology letter itself, in the middle of that, that second paragraph, it said there was no justification for some of the language included in the letter. And you said that some of the -- that the -- some of the language referred to the specific requests that were made, right?

A That was my understanding --

Q Okay.

A -- about the language.

Q And the line immediately before that is: "To be clear, the safety of school board members, other public school officials, and educators and students is our top priority, and there remains important work to be done on this issue." Right?

A Yes.

Q So the apology letter doesn't actually apologize for like the examples cited. It just apologizes -- and your opinion is that it was meant to apologize for the specific requests that were made.

A I believe -- let me -- if I'm understanding you correctly, my response is I recall it. As you know --

Q Yeah.

A Clear to me was that the language that is referred to here, there was no justification for some of the language included, my interpretation of that is the specific nature of the reference to the particular divisions of the Federal Government that would be involved, and it would have been more appropriate, I believe, if the request had been a general request for assistance.

Q Got it. Okay.

I want to turn to exhibit 14, which is the District of Montana letter.

A Okay.

Q You were asked various questions about this letter, but I want to highlight a couple of lines.

A Okay.

Q At the bottom of the first -- actually, before I do that, could you take a look at this and let me know if this letter says the word "parent" in it?

A I do not see the word "parent" in this letter.

Q Thank you.

And the first paragraph, the last sentence, it reads: "The Attorney General's directive does not seek to hinder anyone's free speech rights under the First Amendment, only to combat lawful threats and other criminal conduct."

Did I read that right?

A You did.

Q And your intent in sending the -- I'm sorry -- the NSBA's intent in writing the September 29th letter, was there any intent to hinder anyone's free speech rights under the First Amendment?

A No, there was not. As a matter of fact, I think the first paragraph of NSBA's letter explicitly refers to something like that, says something like that.

Q Actually let's refer back to that letter, which is exhibit 3. I think what you're referring to is the line: "Local school board members want to hear from their communities on important issues, and that must be at the forefront of good school board governance and promotion of free speech."

A Yes.

Q Right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So turning back to the District of Montana letter.

A Okay.

Q The last full paragraph, it reads: "The State of Montana has similar criminal laws against threatening and committing acts of violence against members of our educational community. It may be that an investigation and prosecution under those statutes more appropriately addresses individual cases."

Did I read that right?

A You did.

Q Okay. And I want to turn quickly to the actual attachment here. And you're not a lawyer, right?

A No.

Q I'm just going ask you to quickly read through the list in that very first column of, like, the titles of the acts and let me know if any of them refer to domestic terrorism. Do they say domestic terrorism?

A One through nine do not, and in the back one to three do not.

Q Okay. Quick question about the call that you received from the President. You said clearly he didn't mention the letter at all?

A Not the specific letter, not in direct expression of the letter.

Q Right. And he didn't thank you for the letter.

A Not for this specific letter, no.

Q Okay. Did he mention an individual named Terry McAuliffe?

A No. Or not that I recall, no.

Q You were just asked about a situation -- about others who might appear at school board meetings?

A Yes.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to introduce as exhibit 15 an October 12th, 2021, article from the Chapelboro News, which I believe is Chapelboro, North Carolina, but I'm actually not sure about that. It says: "Proud Boys' Presence Leads to Metal Detectors, Deputies at School Board Meetings."

Can you check that?

At the bottom of the second paragraph on that page it says: "At the Orange County Schools in-person board meeting, September 13, a group of parents gathered to protest some of the COVID-related restrictions up for discussions -- such as mask wearing and spectator limits for events. Those parents, however, weren't the only members of the public in attendance."

Do you see where I said that?

A Yes.

Q And then it quotes: "'There were two men in Proud Boys shirt and hats,' said Chair of the Orange County Schools Board of Education Hillary MacKenzie. 'One wore a stocking over his face, which completely obscured his entire face for the whole meeting. The other one told our board during public comment that someone should tie rocks around our necks and we should throw ourselves in the river.'"

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q And so based on that, does that suggest that there, in fact, were people who were not parents in attendance at school board meetings?

A Yes. And as I've said before, there are oftentimes people at school board meetings who are not parents.

Q Right. And in this particular case there were actually members of the Proud Boys at this school board meeting, according to this article.

A That's what this says.

[redacted] Okay. I'm going to turn it over to my co-counsel.

BY [redacted]

Q Again, I'm [redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler.

A Uh-huh.

Q You mentioned earlier that school boards are nonpartisan and that your school board is nonpartisan.

A Yes.

Q Are school boards, just to clarify, are school board members officially associated with one party or another?

A Not in Texas. I don't know -- I cannot answer about the other States. But I believe not.

Q Thank you.

So in addition to serving on the local Aldine ISD school board, you've also served on the Texas Association of School Boards, as we've discussed, correct?

A Yes, yes.

Q And during your tenure on both, did you work with people who had different political opinions from you?

A Yes, absolutely.

Q Would you agree that people who disagree politically can agree about some education decisions?

A Yes.

Q Is it typical for individuals who work in the education field to work together in spite of their political persuasions?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then at the State and national level, is that true as well?

A Yes, I would think so. I would, yes.

Q And you said that people, individuals in leadership, work together in spite of their political persuasion.

A That's my opinion, yes.

Q Dr. Garcia, earlier you were asked about your appointment to the National Assessment Governing Board. And I'd like to talk about your timeline for appointment again.

A Okay.

Q And just to clarify, is the board an independent entity?

A Independent meaning?

Q Meaning that it is separate from the government.

A Well, it is an arm or related to the Department of Education, as I understand it.

Q Okay. I would like to show you a document that was produced by the Department of Education in response to one of Chairman Jordan's requests. It is right here.

A Okay.

Q And I'll give you a moment to review the document.

A Okay.

Q I'm going to mark it as exhibit 16.

A January 21.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I'm also going to read it aloud.

A Okay. Go ahead.

Q So this is an email from Lisa Stooksberry to you with the subject line: "Update from the National Assessment Governing Board."

A Uh-huh.

Q It's dated January 21st, 2021. The text reads: "Dear Viola, it has been some time since I have been in touch. It will come as no surprise to you that the continued delay in appointing a local school board member to the Governing Board was a result of the November election and pending change in administration.

"With yesterday's inauguration and the forthcoming appointment of a new Secretary of Education, the Board is preparing for next steps regarding the local school board appointment.

"The Nominations Committee meets at the end of the month, and the local school board appointment is on their agenda. Once they have determined the next steps -- and once a new Secretary is appointed -- I'll be back in touch to let you know what to expect.

"Under separate cover, you and other NSBA leadership will receive a response from our Executive Director, Lesley Muldoon, regarding your letter of November 16, 2020.

"Thank you for your continued patience. Please do not hesitate to let me know what questions have you. Best regards, Lisa, Deputy Executive Director, National Assessment Governing Board."

Do you remember this email?

A Now that I -- that you've shown it to me, I do.

Q And who is Lisa Stooksberry?

A Lisa Stooksberry is a former employee. Lisa just left the organization a few months ago. She at that time was deputy executive director.

Q Okay. And do you believe -- what do you believe Dr. Stooksberry meant when she said, "It has been some time since I have been in touch"?

A I submitted my application to -- for this position in 2019. And those of us that applied at that time expected an appointment October 1st, 2021 -- no, 2020, I'm sorry, 2020. There were other appointments made for other vacancies but not for the local school board position. And so it had been some time since we had heard -- since I had heard. I don't know about the other finalists.

[1:36 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so she originally reached out to you in 2019?

A No, she did not reach out to me. I found out about the -- a posting for a call for those interested to submit documents in 2019. I don't remember when I first heard from Lisa. It may have been after receipt of the submission of my documents.

Q And when did you submit those documents?

A In 2019. I don't remember dates. It may have been fall.

Q And the ultimate outcome of that application you said was -- what happened next after you applied?

A After I applied in 2019?

Q Uh-huh.

A Those of us applying in 2019 were applying for positions that were vacated and to be filled by October 1st, 2021.

Q Okay.

A I'm sorry, 2020. I'm sorry.

And that particular seat on the NAGB board, the local school board seat, was not appointed in 2020.

Q Thank you.

Who was Secretary of Education when you first applied and received outreach from Lisa Stooksberry?

A During this time?

Q In 2019.

A In 2019. Secretary DeVos. Secretary DeVos.

Q Thank you.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. I think she clarified she did not get an outreach from Lisa during that time.

[redacted] I would like to show you a document dated March 12th, 2021. It's another letter from Dr. Stooksberry. And it's part of the same production from the Department of Education. And I am marking it exhibit 17.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q If you look at the first paragraph, it says: "I am pleased to share the news that you have been selected as a finalist for consideration to serve as a member of the National Assessment Governing Board representing the category of Local School Board.

"For each vacancy, the Governing Board nominates up to six persons who, by reason of their knowledge and expertise, are considered highly qualified to serve. The four-year term for which you have been nominated begins October 1, 2021. Board appointments will be made by The Honorable Miguel Cardona, U.S. Secretary of Education."

This letter is addressed to Dr. Viola Garcia. Do you remember this letter?

A Yes. I have greater recall after seeing it, yes.

Q What is the significance of being a finalist for a position on the National Assessment Governing Board?

A It means -- now that I am on the board, I understand that the Nominations Committee receives the documents, which include a resume, a letter of interest, and supporting letters from others for the position.

And so the compilation of those documents for the finalists are sent to -- for those recommended by the National Assessment Governing Board -- are sent to the Secretary for his review and his staff's review.

Q Do you know how many other finalists were selected?

A I do know that, in the first round in 2019, I think Lisa explicitly mentioned, if not in this email, that there were five. I do not know how many were submitted in the following year.

Q Okay. I'd like to turn to another document from that same production by the Department of Education. And I'll give you a moment to read that document. I'm marking it exhibit 18.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

Dr. Garcia. August 23. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Now, this is an email dated August 23rd, 2021, from Karen Akins. While the addressee is redacted, the text is addressed to you, and it reads: "Dear Dr. Garcia, I am contacting you regarding your interest in serving as an advisory board member for the National Assessment Governing Board (NAGB).

"I am in the office today, Monday, August 23, until 5:00 p.m. and tomorrow through Friday of this week from 7:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Please contact me at your earliest convenience via my office phone number noted in the signature block below.

"Best regards, Karen P. Akins, Committee Management Officer, U.S. Department of Education."

Do you remember this email?

A I remember -- yes, I more clearly remember it now that I see it.

Q Who is Karen Akins?

A Karen Akins? Here it says is committee management officer for the U.S. Department of Education.

Q Did you speak with her in that day or the following day?

A I believe that she called. I believe that she is the one who called me to let me know that I would be receiving information.

Q And what information was that?

A Information that I was considered the nominee, being considered as the nominee.

Q And I'm going to -- I have another document that I'm going to introduce.

A Okay.

Q I'm going to mark this No. 19.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 19

Was marked for identification.]

Dr. Garcia. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And this document is dated August 24th, 2021. And it's from you to Karen Akins.

In it you wrote: "Ms. Akins, thank you for letting me know the good news this morning. I am in receipt of information and will begin working on the required disclosure report with plans to submit it by Friday. Regards, Viola."

What does it mean to be nominated to the National Assessment Governing Board?

A It means that the National Assessment Governing Board, the board itself, has made the recommendation and submitted that to the Secretary of Education.

Q Okay. And was it your understanding at this time that, by being nominated, you would likely be appointed to the National Assessment Governing Board?

A I understood that I would be one of five or up to six whose names would be submitted.

Q Okay.

A Okay. Let me see. For clarification, let me reread this.

Q Of course.

A Oh, "as a result of your nomination." So this is from the Department of Education, not from Lisa. Okay. So she's advising me that -- yes, she had already notified me, because I said on August -- at the top of the email trail: "Thank you for letting me know the good news." So the good news was that I had received notice that I would be the nominee.

Q And so there were no other nominees at this time?

A At that point, no. I'm sorry. No. Just me.

Q Okay. And then I would like to turn to one last document from that same production by the Department of Education.

A Okay.

Q And I'm marking this exhibit 20.

[Garcia Exhibit No. 20

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q All right. Now, this is another email from Karen Akins to you with the subject line: "Appointment-National Assessment Governing Board (NAGB)."

It reads: "Dear Dr. Garcia, please be advised the review process for appointment to serve on the National Assessment Governing Board (NAGB) is complete and Secretary Miguel Cardona has appointed you to serve on the NAGB. A copy of your appointment letter is attached, and you will receive the original letter via U.S. Postal mail. Ms. Lesley Muldoon, Executive Director for NAGB, will contact you regarding orientation for new members of NAGB. Best regards, Karen P. Akins."

Now, what is the date of this email?

A This email is dated Tuesday, September 28th, 2021.

Q Okay. And the NSBA letter to Biden was sent on September 29th. Is that correct?

A Yes. As I can recall, yes.

Q So not only did you finalize all of your application materials and in fact were informed that you would be nominated over a month before the NSBA letter was sent, you were actually appointed to it before the letter ever went out. Is that correct?

A Yes. I had completed all of the necessary documents and submitted them for their review.

Q Okay. Thank you. I'm going to turn this over to my -- oh, apologies.

A Okay.

Q I take that back.

A Okay.

Q Turning back to the NSBA report that my colleague referenced earlier, on Page 23, the report finds that "Counsel's Review has not uncovered" -- well, I'll allow you to get to page 23.

A Okay.

Q All right. Everyone all set?

A Yes.

Q The report finds that "Counsel's Review has not uncovered any connection between the Letter" -- meaning the September 29th NSBA letter -- "despite her signature to the Letter and interaction with the President regarding the Letter before her appointment."

Do you agree with this finding that there was no connection between your signature on the September 29th letter and your appointment to the board?

A Yes, I agree.

Q Thank you. And now, I'll turn it over to my co-counsel.

[redacted] I actually think that we are good. It looks like you don't believe me.

Ms. Sachsman Grooms. No. Are we done?

[redacted] I think we are done.

Do you have anything further?

[redacted] No. We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 1:47 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Good morning.

This is a deposition of Mr. Chip Slaven. Chairman Jordan has requested this deposition as part of the committee's investigation into the Biden administration's misuse of criminal and counterterrorism resources against concerned parents.

On March 6th, 2023, Chairman Jordan issued a subpoena for Mr. Slaven to testify at a deposition on March 17th, 2023. The committee and Mr. Slaven's attorney on his behalf mutually agreed to move Mr. Slaven's deposition to March 27th, 2023.

I'd like to mark the March 6th, 2023, subpoena as exhibit No. 1.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Would the witness please state your name for the record?

The Witness. Chip Slaven, or Stuart Slaven as it's legally known.

[redacted] My name is [redacted] [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here in the room introduce themselves as well.

[redacted]. [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Thank you.

I would now like to go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's deposition.

The committee will conduct today's deposition in accordance with Rule XI of the Committee on the Judiciary's Rules of Procedure for the 118th Congress.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they so choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand that?

The Witness. Yes.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just that person on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well. It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everyone present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose, and it is my understanding that you are appearing today with personal counsel.

Is that correct?

The Witness. That's correct.

[redacted] Could counsel please state your name for the record?

Mr. Rybicki. Certainly. My name is David Rybicki with K&L Gates.

Ms. Hall. My name is Sara Hall, also with K&L Gates.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know.

Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

By law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

The Witness. Yes.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff.

Do you understand this?

The Witness. Yes.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury.

Do you understand this?

The Witness. Yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

The Witness. No.

[redacted] Finally, I would like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For that same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That is the end of my preamble.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] We don't. Thank you.

[redacted] Okay. The court reporter will now administer the oath.

The Reporter. Do you solemnly swear or affirm, under the penalty of perjury, that the testimony you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

The Witness. I do.

[redacted] Okay. The clock now reads 10:04 a.m. We will start our first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, I would first like to discuss your professional background.

A Sure.

Q Prior to joining the National School Boards Association staff what did you do?

A I worked from 2010 until 2019 for another education nonprofit called the Alliance for Excellent Education. It's also called All4Ed.

Q Okay. And before that what did you do?

A Before that I spent about two and a half years practicing private law with a firm here in Washington, D.C.; law school before that for 3 years; and then I spent 12 years in various government positions. I was a congressional employee. I was a gubernatorial employee. I also worked on some campaigns.

Q Okay. Have you ever served on a school board?

A No.

Q Okay. What do you currently do for work?

A I'm currently not working.

Q Okay. When did you join the NSBA?

A I joined -- I believe my first day was June the 12th of 2019.

Q And in what role did you start?

A I started, I was the chief advocacy officer.

Q Okay. And what does the chief advocacy officer do?

A Chief advocacy officer runs the Federal advocacy and public policy team. And so we work with Members of Congress. We work with the Federal Government. We advocate on issues important to public schools. We also release objective policy reports as part of that work.

Q And what was your next position that you held at NSBA?

A Starting on July the 10th, I moved into the interim CEO and executive director role. I think I learned about 2 weeks prior to that I was going to -- it was kind of a sudden move -- that I was going to move into that position.

Q And was there a vacancy that needed to be filled?

A What happened was the executive director who hired me had decided to retire. He left in early June of 20 -- early June of 2021 -- or excuse me, 2020 -- and then Anna Chavez came in as the new CEO, and she only stayed about a year, and she left for a position in private business and gave about 2 weeks' notice. And I was very suddenly thrust in the position.

Q And does the CEO and executive director position, is that for a set period of time?

A Well, I mean, I was an interim. So the understanding was I would hold the position until a new permanent director was sought. And I had the option if I wanted to apply for the position I could have, but I had decided pretty early on not to.

Q Okay. And what were your roles and responsibilities as interim CEO and executive director?

A Obviously maintaining -- I went from a small staff to all of the teams within the organization. At the time I don't remember the exact number we were at. It fluctuated over COVID. Around 70, probably.

Q Okay.

A But, again, that's -- I don't remember exactly the number.

And so it was dealing with the day-to-day operations, supervising, obviously, a number of teams. I had been on the executive team. I was an interim. Then we had to move another person into my old role as an interim.

So it was navigating that. It was signing off on various decisions of the organization, holding events, planning for future events, dealing with the COVID situation in terms of our office, and we were all working remotely.

So it was a pretty encompassing job, lots of different -- typical management responsibilities at that level, working with the board obviously, which I knew the board, but I had not been involved with them like I was in that position.

Q And did all 70 employees report directly to you?

A Well, there were underlying managers.

Q Okay.

A So, I mean, technically they did, but there was a line of command that people would jump to.

Q And who were the underlying managers at the time?

A At the time there was -- Francisco Negron was the chief legal officer. Verjeana Jacobs was -- her title was chief -- I think it changed some -- but it was chief transformation officer. She had a lot under her belt.

And then Jane Mellow, I promoted her to the interim -- well, actually, the previous CEO did it for me -- but we made her the interim chief executive -- or chief advocacy officer.

And so for a short time period those were the folks that I dealt with, a small team.

Later, Renee Joe was elevated, when Verjeana went on leave, to take over that role as interim chief transformation officer. And I also moved Elena Carpenter up, who was a finance person, to act as sort of a chief financial officer, because we had also lost the equivalent of that. We had lost some people, so --

Q Okay. And who is the ultimate decisionmaker for all NSBA actions? Is it the staff, officers, or the board of directors?

A Well, I mean, ultimately, the CEO, according to the Constitution and bylaws, is responsible for the day-to-day operation.

But it depended on what the decision was. There were certainly decisions that other chiefs would make. Typically I would -- they would inform me if it was something that reached a level of importance.

Q Were there any actions that the board of directors would need to approve before they could occur?

A The board approves the budget. They approve -- they hire the CEO. So the CEO really works for the board. They help plan strategy. They do, I mean, typical things that a board of directors would do.

Q And you said that the NSBA had a chief transformation officer. What was their role?

A So that was a position that had been modified when Anna came in. Essentially the chief transformation officer had a bunch of buckets. So she had member services, so working with State associations. She had -- communications and marketing had been moved under her. Events was under her. And I'm probably forgetting -- the Center for Safe Schools, I believe, was under her as well.

So she had a -- she probably had her hand in the most teams in the organization.

Q Okay. And when did you leave the NSBA?

A My last official day I think was December the 3rd.

Q Of what year?

A I'm sorry. Of 2021.

Q 2021. And what position were you in at the time?

A Technically, I guess, I had moved back to my old role, but I was only there less than 2 weeks after that.

Q And your old role was chief advocacy officer?

A Yes, right. A new CEO had come on board.

Q Okay. And who was the new CEO?

A John Heim. He had been the Kansas association executive director before that.

Q Okay. And why did you leave on December 3rd, 2021?

A Mr. Heim decided he wanted to move in a different direction.

Q Okay. So were you asked to resign?

A I was let go.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. When did Mr. Heim -- so on the 3rd of December you were in a different role?

The Witness. Well, yeah. Let me -- what happened -- on November the 23rd, he called, it was just his very first day, and said, "I don't think there's a place for you anymore," and he put me on leave. And then I learned on December the 3rd that they had made it permanent essentially.

Chairman Jordan. But I'm asking, when did you leave the responsibilities of CEO --

The Witness. My last day as CEO --

Mr. Rybicki. Let him finish the question.

Chairman Jordan. When did -- I know you left officially on the 3rd of December.

When did you leave your responsibilities as CEO?

The Witness. November the 22nd would have been my last day.

Chairman Jordan. November 22nd, okay. Thanks.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you currently have any role with the NSBA?

A No.

Q And prior to September 29th, 2021, how many State school board associations were members of the NSBA?

A Sorry. The date again?

Q September 29th, 2021.

A At that time we had 50 members, 49 States and 1 territory, but a number of them hadn't paid their dues yet for the year.

Q Okay.

A So it was somewhat unclear how many we actually had, depending how you look at -- technically, if you don't pay your dues, you can be on suspended status. So we were sort of going through that. I don't remember the exact number, but it was probably at 10 or 11.

Q And why weren't the State associations paying their dues?

A There was a longstanding tension in the organization that had gone back more than a decade. There were various issues with some States had -- were concerned over competition with the national organization, or there were certain policy positions they may not like, on both sides of the issue. It sort of depended -- there were a lot of underlying issues.

Q Okay. And as of September 29th, 2021, who were the NSBA officers at that time?

A The president was Viola Garcia. The president-elect was Frank Henderson, Kristi Swett was the secretary-treasurer, and Charlie Wilson was the immediate past president. Those were -- [redacted] I'm sorry to interrupt, but I think the deposition rules say that only members designated by the committee and committee staff can be in the room. I think we have staffers who are not committee staff who are in the room.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, we were discussing the NSBA officers.

A Uh-huh.

Q Can you kind of describe the dynamic between the staff, the officers, and the board of directors? How did everyone fit together?

A Well, as I indicated I think a few minutes ago, I answered directly to the board and the staff answered directly to me. And so my relationship, though, I primarily dealt with the officers. I met with them typically once a week virtually.

Q And then how often did you communicate with the board of directors?

A Directly, it depended, to be honest, on a number of things. So they received communications from the organization regularly through the communications team. On occasion I would send an email to the entire board. It just depended on what it was. But I mostly dealt with the officers --

Q Okay.

A -- during that period of time.

Q And how did you communicate with the officers?

A We'd telephone, email. We usually had a Teams call when we met as a group.

Q Okay. I want to now discuss the origins of the September 29th letter.

In May of 2022, the NSBA released a report regarding its findings on how the letter came about.

Have you read that report?

A Yes, I read it.

Q And the report detailed some of your interactions with the Department of Education and the White House.

And so according to the report, you had a call with Dr. Aaliyah Samuel at the Department of Education.

Do you remember what Dr. Samuel's role was in the Department of Education?

A I can't recite her exact title. But she was -- she typically was the person that did a lot of the engagement with the organizations around education.

Q With outside organizations?

A Yes, interested parties in education in public schools.

Q And do you remember having a phone call with her on July 30th of 2021?

A Yes.

Q Do you remember what you discussed on that call?

A Yeah. She had reached out originally about vaccination issues, and she asked to have a phone call, I think. I think she asked. And we were talking primarily about school reopening and sort of how to deal with that. And in that conversation she -- we came up with an idea to sort of help school board members to better engage on the issue of having essentially a virtual town hall with Secretary Cardona.

And so we discussed how that would work and when it might be and the logistics of it and ultimately decided that it would be our board, the officers for each State association, State association executive directors, and a few key NSBA staff.

Q And do you remember discussing with Dr. Samuel on July 30th, 2021, threats and concerns related to school board members?

A Generally, yes. That was one of the things we talked about.

Q Can you describe what your general conversation was?

A Yeah. As I recall, she mentioned that the Secretary was concerned for how school reopening was going and the intense pressure that educators were under and school board members were under. And I talked a little bit. I was, like, well, we are definitely seeing a lot of pressure obviously. But the threats were very concerning to our members, very serious.

And so we talked about it, but it was just a part of the conversation.

Q And how long would you say your phone call was with Dr. Samuel?

A I don't remember exactly. I would say 15 to 20 minutes.

Q Fifteen to twenty minutes.

A It could have been as long as 30, but it didn't seem like it was.

Q And you said the discussion focused on school reopenings and setting up a town hall, and then you also generally discussed threats, correct?

A Yes.

Q Was anyone else from the Department of Education on the call?

A Not that I was aware of, no.

Q Anyone else from the NSBA?

A No.

Q Were there any follow-ups or to-do items that came out of the call for you to do?

A There were logistical issues around setting up the actual events. So there were emails and things about setting it up. And that did involve other staff at NSBA.

Q And were there any follow-ups for Dr. Samuel that came out of the call?

A Potentially. I think she probably was involved in some of the emails.

Q And you said that Dr. Samuel was in charge of kind of interacting with the outside organizations that interfaced with the Department of Education.

How often did you interact with Dr. Samuel?

A It's hard to say exactly. Occasionally I think would be. I mean, there were a lot of group communications that typically you would see folks with the Department on, including her at times. So it's hard to say.

And it changed -- my role changed somewhat when I became the interim CEO. I knew her prior to that and dealt with her some. But in the new role I dealt with her a little more. I want to say maybe she and I had two calls or three over time.

Q Okay. And --

A But I don't remember exactly, so --

Chairman Jordan. Could I just ask one clarification?

The Witness. Sure.

Chairman Jordan. Did she call you or did you call her?

The Witness. Mr. Chairman, I can't recall exactly. I think she called me, but I'm not sure of that.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

The Witness. I think we did arrange to have a time to call. She most likely called.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] And in your role as interim CEO and executive director, just in general, how often did you interface with anyone from the Department of Education? Was it once a month, twice a month, weekly?

The Witness. Again, it depended. I mean, we would get emails that would go routinely to other education groups as well on a pretty regular basis. They would occasionally have a briefing or something where you would get with on the staff. It could be a new CDC guideline coming out or something on a completely different issue.

Oftentimes other groups that met, education leaders -- there's a number of education-related groups that sort of meet together, and sometimes a member of the administration would be asked to join a call like that depending on what it was.

Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Again, most often did those emails come from the Department of Education out to you?

The Witness. They came -- well, they would come to me but also potentially others.

Chairman Jordan. Understand.

The Witness. Yeah. And there also were, obviously, other agencies at times that would reach out, depending on the issue.

Chairman Jordan. Who decided that you were going to discuss threats and concerns related to school board members? Was that coming from Dr. Samuel to you? Did she set the agenda for that call when she called you?

The Witness. No. That was an issue I brought up.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And on that call you discussed the town hall that would be occurring with Secretary Cardona?

A Uh-huh.

Q Did you participate in the August 16th, 2021, town hall?

A Yes. I actually opened the event up.

Q And did any other Department of Education officials besides the Secretary participate in the town hall?

A I'm sure there were others on the -- I think it was a Zoom format. But I don't recall who they were.

Q Okay. And the NSBA report says that Secretary Cardona during the town hall discussed disruptions in local school board meetings and requested additional information be sent to his office.

Did he bring up the disruptions at school board meetings or did someone from the NSBA?

A I can't recall exactly. I believe, though, that we probably brought it up because it was such a concerning issue at the time. And I think, though, in context of asking for information, I think that was on a whole range of education issues to let us know if there's other issues that we need to be aware of.

Q And when you say "we brought it up," who do you mean?

A NSBA.

Q NSBA.

A Yeah, people on the call, school board members.

The only people that spoke on NSBA's behalf were school board members, other than me. And like I said, I did a very quick introduction. And I do remember Viola Garcia asked the first question, but I don't remember at this point if we made it on threats or the general climate or if it was on something else.

Q Do you remember what the contents of the discussion were related to disruptions at school board meetings at the town hall?

A Not specifically. It was an underlying issue, but it was really -- I want to make one clear point here. It wasn't just school board meetings. It was lots of social interactions and threatening calls and things like that, and then also just the general how are we going to reopen schools.

The focus of the call on the 16th was on a number of issues related to trying to get schools reopened during the pandemic, and we were weeks away at that point. In fact, a few places may have already been open. So we were starting -- they were doing -- school boards were really trying to get kids back in school safely.

Q Did you personally follow up with additional information on disruptions at local school board meetings with Secretary Cardona?

A Not that I recall, no.

Q Did anyone from the NSBA follow up with additional information for the Secretary?

A We may have followed up with additional information in general --

Mr. Rybicki. Chip, just let her finish the question before you answer.

The Witness. Oh, I'm sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q I'll re-ask the question.

Did anyone from the NSBA follow up with additional information for the Secretary?

A We may have, but I don't remember.

Q Did you ever speak with Secretary Cardona one-on-one?

A No.

Q According to the NSBA report, you began considering the notion of requesting Federal involvement or Federal law enforcement intervention at local school board meetings as early as August 2021.

Does that match your recollection?

A I don't remember the exact date. Again, though, it was not just school board meetings. It was much broader than that.

Q I'd like to mark as exhibit No. 2 a September 8th, 2021, email from Mr. Slaven to NSBA officers. It's also NSBA exhibit No. 16.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

The Witness. I can't read this.

[redacted] You can't read it?

The Witness. No.

[redacted] Oh. Are all the exhibits like that?

Mr. Rybicki. The first page is illegible. The second page looks good.

[redacted] We can skip this for now --

Mr. Rybicki. Okay.

[redacted] -- and go back and reprint that.

Mr. Rybicki. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, do you remember having a conversation with Charlie Wilson about a threat that he sent to you regarding a school board in Ohio?

A I recall an email.

Q An email. And what do you recall about that email?

A It was, I mean, a pretty troubling message. As I recall, it came from an anonymous source. It was a long -- I think there had been a number of incidents in that school board in particular. It was an example of some of the things we were hearing and seeing, though.

Q Do you remember what you thought about the letter? Did you think that it rose to the level of a criminal threat?

A I --

Mr. Rybicki. I'd like to object to the question because it's calling for a legal conclusion.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] Yeah, the only objections really are to preserve a privilege.

So the witness can answer the question.

Mr. Rybicki. Okay.

The Witness. Could you repeat the question?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. Do you remember if you thought that it constituted a criminal threat or not?

A As I recall, I thought it constituted something that should have been reported to the police, but I wasn't sure it reached -- if it would reach that level or not. But everything's in context. I thought it should be reported certainly.

Q And to the police, you mean the local authorities, correct?

A Or, yeah, whoever was appropriate.

Q Okay. And when did you first decide to send a letter to the Biden administration requesting Federal assistance at local school board meetings and with threats to school board members?

A The day that I made the decision to send the letter was September the 8th of 2021.

Q Okay.

A And the next day I told a staff member to start the process.

Q And who did you direct to draft the letter?

A Jane Mellow, the chief interim advocacy officer.

Q And do you know, did she draft the letter?

A She emailed a staff member to begin the process. Deborah Rigsby drafted the letter.

Q What was Deborah Rigsby's title?

A I'm going to mess up her exact title.

Q Okay.

A She was essentially the equivalent of our legislative director. I should remember her title, but I don't off the top of my head.

Q And what was her role at the NSBA?

A She had been a long-term employee. She's very experienced. She dealt with a lot of the day-to-day issues on Federal issues that were going on, whether in Congress or with agencies. And she did a lot of our writing. She's a very good writer.

[redacted] Okay. We'll try this again. I'm going to mark as exhibit No. 3 the September 9th, 2021, email regarding drafting the letter. It's also NSBA exhibit 18.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] This one looks legible.

Mr. Rybicki. Is this 2 or 3?

[redacted] We're going to go with 3 since I marked the other one.

Take a moment to refresh your recollection, Mr. Slaven.

The Witness. I'm good.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, do you kind of generally remember being cc'd --

A Oh, yes.

Q -- on this email chain?

A I sure do.

Q So according to Ms. Rigsby's email, you initially wanted to send the letter to Attorney General Garland or FBI Director Wray. Is that correct?

A Yeah, potentially, or someone else in the administration. I wasn't -- I had not determined yet who we should send it to.

Q And why were your initial thoughts the Attorney General or the FBI Director?

A Well, because we were dealing with potentially law enforcement issues.

Q And who decided the letter should then go to President Biden?

A That ultimately happened, I think in part, after another organization had already written the President. And when it came back, the letterhead, we just used the President and we just decided to go. It was not particularly thought out, like who we were going to send it to. It just sort of organically happened. In the end we thought, well, the President's already been alerted to this, so we should just write it to him.

Q And what was the name of the other organization who sent a letter?

A The National Association of Secondary School Principals sent a letter, I believe it was 1 week later.

Q And did you generally work with that organization in the NSBA?

A We were on many of the same calls and things.

Q So they were one of the education organizations --

A Yes.

Q -- that kind of interfaced with the --

A Yes. They represent high school and middle school principals. And they also run, I believe, the National Honor Society.

Q Okay. And on September 9th, 2021, according to the NSBA report, you participated in a call involving White House officials.

Do you remember that call?

A Yeah. It was a call organized rather quickly, and it was in reference to -- it was briefing education groups on what was expected to be in the President's speech that evening on the pandemic.

Q So the White House requested that call?

A I think so.

Q Do you know who all participated in that call?

A A number of other education groups. I can't remember all of them. But it was a sizeable number.

Q Did Ms. Mary Wall participate in the call?

A I believe she did, yes.

Q And do you remember what her title was at that time?

A She was involved with COVID-19 efforts. I don't know exactly what her title was.

Q Okay.

A She was a newer name to me at that point, I think.

Q And how often did you communicate with Ms. Wall?

A Unless she was on, like, a bulk or chain email, I had never personally communicated with her prior to that day. She emailed me later that day. That was the first time that I ever communicated with her. I do recall, though, she was one of the staff members on the call, though.

Q And prior to the September 9th, 2021, call, did you do calls with the White House?

A A few times.

Q And who would you normally interface with if it wasn't Ms. Wall?

A Probably someone in Intergovernmental Affairs.

Q Do you remember a name?

A I don't, to be honest, off the top of my head. There was a group of people.

And we had also -- a White House official had participated in an event we had in early June that we prerecorded. It was a Q&A with our CEO at the time. And so there was a call just to talk about the logistics of that event.

Q Would you have normally interfaced with Julie Rodriguez who was the deputy --

A I believe she ran that --

Mr. Rybicki. Chip, again, please just let her finish the question --

The Witness. I'm sorry.

Mr. Rybicki. -- so we know what the question is first.

The Witness. I'm sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q Would you normally interface with Julie Rodriguez, who is the deputy assistant to the President and director of the Office of Intergovernmental Affairs?

A Potentially.

Q And how regularly did you communicate with the White House?

A Again, I would be speculating how often. It was -- it happened on occasion.

Q And what did you normally communicate with the White House regarding?

A It would have been something like the President's speech, they were preparing a briefing, letting us know about it, or they were sending information around, unless there was something specific NSBA-related which didn't happen that often.

Q But had it happened before, specific NSBA-related --

A Well, I mentioned we invited some of the administration to speak to our members, so that was an example, one example. Our CEO may have had interaction with them at times, too, the previous CEO.

Q Do you remember what White House officials were on the September 9th call?

A I cannot remember that. I'm sorry.

Q What about NSBA officials?

A I believe I was the only one on that call.

Q Okay. Were any other administrative agencies represented on the call besides the White House?

A I do not know. I do not remember.

Q And you said that the call was a briefing regarding COVID-19. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q What else was discussed on the call?

A It was -- I mean, that was it. It was COVID-19 and the impact, in particular, the sections that we're to talk about in education.

Q Okay. And during the call you directed NSBA staff to work up a statement regarding President Biden's announcement that was being discussed on the call?

A Correct.

Q And on that call you expressed concern to Ms. Wall over the many threats school board members were receiving and requested the White House's assistance.

Do you remember that?

A Well, that's not entirely accurate.

Q Okay.

A What happened -- and it wasn't to Ms. Wall. It was to everyone on the call.

Q Okay.

A We were all given an opportunity to speak. And, again, this was focused on COVID-19 and how schools were going to reopen.

I expressed concern over misinformation that was getting out around how to properly reopen schools. And in the course of that discussion, I mentioned school board members were getting a lot of threats and pressure on this because of misinformation, so it's very important that we are provided accurate information from the administration. And others on the call agreed with that assessment.

Q What did you view as misinformation?

A Just various things when a school is trying to reopen or not reopen and that they were making decisions and making sure that the guidance they were getting from healthcare officials was the right guidance so they could try and explain it to why they were making the decision. Whether they were making a decision to open with masks or stay closed if there was an epidemic or reopen without masks. Whichever position, they needed to have the best information possible.

So that is where I was coming from on that. But I did mention in the terms of here's the pressure that people are under right now and it's important we have accurate information.

Q Were you worried that the wrong information was getting out?

A I was worried that -- well, there was -- I think there was wrong information coming from numerous sources.

So when you're -- you know, we're relying on professional health folks in the government, and we want to make sure -- I was just trying to emphasize it's very important you get out the right information and you get it to us accurately as soon as you have it so that we can better prepare school board members and schools to reopen.

Q And did threats to school board members come up on the call? Did you bring it up?

A In the context of hostility, I think I brought it up.

Q Hostility. Can you describe the hostility?

A Well, school board members being -- and other education officials being threatened because of their positions on various issues such as COVID-19.

Q Did any --

A On both sides of the issue, by the way. There were also threats. There were threats, people that didn't want masks, and there were threats of people that did want masks. And there were a whole other range of issues related to that.

Ms. Hageman. Could I ask a real quick question?

When you use the word "threatened," what do you mean by that?

The Witness. Well, if someone -- there's a number of ways to be threatened obviously. Someone threatening in the sense of: We know where you live. You are not going to be able to go out in public.

So outright death threats. Certainly there was some of that going on.

BY [redacted]

Q Did anyone on the call respond to your statement regarding hostility to school board members?

A As I recall, several did, agreeing with my assessment.

Q Several of the education organizations --

A Yes.

Q -- that were on the call? Okay.

And later that evening Ms. Wall reached out to you over email. Is that correct?

A I believe that's right.

Q Okay. I'd like to mark as exhibit No. 4 a September 9th through September 11th email chain between Mr. Slaven and Ms. Wall, which is NSBA exhibit 25.

Please take a moment to review it?

[Slaven Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, do you remember this email chain?

A Yes, I do.

Q Okay. In her email -- this will be on page 1 -- she said -- she asked to catch up in greater depth and said the White House would "love to do anything we can to support members making tough calls on behalf of kids."

Did I read that correctly?

A Well, I think you paraphrased it.

Q Yeah.

A But I think the intent seems correct.

Q And the email chain included the NSBA's press release. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And this press release was in response to the announcement that President Biden made that day?

A Correct.

Q And in the top email on page 1, you responded to Ms. Wall: "I appreciate your concern for local school board members. In addition to my concern over public schools and the health of students and staff in general right now, I worry over the many threats school board members are receiving. Anything that you can do to help us better prepare them with information and resources will certainly help. We appreciate what the President and Administration are doing to deal with these tough challenges."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes. And that was sent out 2 days later, September 11th.

Q Did you have any further communications that day with Ms. Wall or any other White House officials?

A On which day?

Q On the 9th, 10th, or 11th?

A No.

Q And when exactly -- do you remember, was it before the September 9th phone call with the White House that you decided that the letter was going to go to President Biden, or was that made after?

A Again, the decision to send the letter was made on the 8th. I directed it on the 9th. The decision over who to send it to came later.

Q So is it fair to say that on September 9th Ms. Wall knew you were looking for help from the White House regarding threats and hostility toward school board members?

A I don't know that I would say that I was asking for direct help, other than we were asking for help with getting the correct information out. I certainly expressed, though, my concern.

Q And you did say: "Anything that you can do to help us better prepare them with information and resources will certainly help."

So were you asking for information and resources from the White House there?

A I was asking generally, as all the education groups, to make sure -- I was -- what I said there was I was reemphasizing what I said on the call that day when I said we need to make sure that schools are very well prepared to reopen. So that's specifically what I was talking about.

Q And according to the NSBA report, you had another call with Ms. Wall on September 14th, 2021. Is that correct? Do you remember that?

A Well, let me make a distinction there.

Q Yeah.

A The first call was a call with many other people.

Q Okay.

A The call you're talking about was a one-on-one call, yes.

Q And was that the first one-on-one call you had had with Ms. Wall?

A Yes.

Q And that was on September 14th, correct, to your recollection?

A Yes.

Chairman Jordan. And that call on the 14th is directly related to your statement: "I would love to have a conversation with you to discuss these issues in further detail."

You sent that on the 11th?

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. And 3 days later you had the call --

The Witness. Right.

Chairman Jordan. -- directly on this point.

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And on that call, according to the NSBA report, Ms. Wall requested the NSBA's list of examples of threats and disruptions at school board meetings.

Do you remember that?

A She didn't request a list of -- like some prepared list. She just said generally: Well, can you give me an example of some of the threats that are going on?

And I said: Yes.

And then she later followed up and asked for more examples.

Q And so did you provide her with some examples on that phone call?

A I'm sure I did. In reference to an example of some of the threats, I'm sure I did. I don't remember specifically which ones I talked about. It was not a long call.

Q How long would you say the call was?

A Fifteen minutes maybe.

Q Fifteen minutes?

A Yeah.

Q And it was just you and Ms. Wall on the call?

A Yes.

Q And so in the NSBA report it refers to this egregious examples list.

Do you know how the NSBA staff who created that went about creating it, researching it?

A Well, I think the list they're referring to was a document that was produced -- I believe I got it actually on September the 9th. If you look back at the email on -- or excuse me. September 10th I believe is when I received it.

Q Okay.

A September the 9th was the day that Jane sent the email to Deborah. And if you read that email, she references our researcher, that she had asked her to get us some incidents. And she was a very good researcher. She got us -- she did a quick sampling the next day.

Eventually that's what I sent Ms. Wall several weeks later. And it was a list of just incidents and press clippings is really what it was.

Q So the researcher did kind of an open source search --

A Yeah.

Q -- or a Google search, if you will?

A Exactly.

Q Okay. But you did not provide that full document of disruptions to Ms. Wall on the 14th, correct?

A That's correct.

Q What else did you two discuss on the phone call that day?

A I told her that we were considering asking the Federal Government -- again, I didn't specify the President -- but we were thinking about asking for a threat assessment. And that was my way of -- without coming directly out and saying we're sending a letter -- but we may be asking for something.

And a threat assessment, I want to state why that's what I was asking for. If you look at some of the Secret Service documents on schools and threats, they say that threat assessment is essentially the best practice so you can prevent a lot of school violence by knowing in advance what may happen. So that was the reason for that request.

Q And so on September 14th Ms. Wall knew that in some sort of capacity you were going to be requesting at least a threat assessment?

A Potentially, yeah. I can't remember how firm I was. The call was more on just the situation that was going on. And, again, we talked a little bit more about school reopening.

Q Okay. And when was --

Mr. Biggs. Can I ask a question?

At that time, what did you think a threat assessment was?

The Witness. Well, a threat assessment is you take a sampling of what's going on. You analyze incidents. You analyze threats that are being reported. You look at the general climate.

Again, I would leave that to law enforcement professionals to do that.

Mr. Biggs. So you had had experience with what threat assessments were before?

The Witness. I -- when I was in the -- I worked for the West Virginia Governor's office after -- in the 9/11 time period, and I was the person that was actually responsible for interacting with the Governor and the Federal Government.

And in that role, particularly after 9/11 and the anthrax incident, I was actually put on the State threat management team. And while I'm not a law enforcement official, I was brought in and regularly briefed on threats and sort of what both Federal and State law enforcement considered a threat and what they didn't.

Mr. Biggs. And did you have any specific agencies that you were trying to direct to conduct a threat assessment in mind?

The Witness. You mean at this time?

Mr. Biggs. At that time.

The Witness. I mean, certainly I thought of the FBI, but also the Secret Service. The Secret Service does a lot of threat assessment around schools.

But also just law enforcement in general. Particularly it's very important, I think, in my experience, for local, State, and Federal law enforcement to work together on certain issues and communicate.

And so I think that's what I was doing. As someone representing school board members, I wanted to know, well, what is -- it seems like it's very bad to me. So I wanted to see what their position was.

Mr. Biggs. Thank you.

Sorry to interrupt.

Mr. Issa. Chairman Jordan, if I may, maybe one more.

Earlier you said that there were threats or possible statements made both for and against masks.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Issa. So when you were giving examples, did you give any examples of those people who were demanding masks or those people who were hostile, if you will, to the opposite side?

The Witness. I don't recall defining any threat in that example. In one sense, it didn't matter. A threat is a threat. You shouldn't be making threats. And I think, in fact, that's probably how I put it. I said that in the media, that it doesn't matter where you stand on masks, you shouldn't be threatening people over it.

Mr. Issa. Well, did you ever look in the disinformation field that there were threats coming both from the left and the right of the political spectrum?

The Witness. Oh, yes.

Mr. Issa. Did you relate that to the administration, that you were very concerned about left-wing organizations and/or parents who were liberal in addition to perhaps those who would be the opposite party?

The Witness. Well, I never made reference to parents. I made reference to, again, to groups or individuals that were making threats. And, again, it didn't matter which political party or ideology they were following. I considered it very serious if you were threatening someone. So I cast it in those terms.

It was a nonpartisan issue, as far as I was concerned. People shouldn't be receiving threats.

Mr. Issa. And when you saw threat assessments come back to you, did you see threat assessments that included, if you will, individuals or groups on all parts of the political spectrum?

The Witness. I didn't receive a threat assessment.

Mr. Issa. So you don't know if the administration ever looked anywhere toward one political side or the other?

The Witness. No. But I would expect them as a Federal law enforcement agency to look -- to not look at it from a partisan view.

Mr. Issa. Lastly, when you were looking at all of these examples and you said threat or harassment or whatever, what's your minimum standard for that? In other words, give me an example or two of things which you think are inappropriate but are the most benign and yet should have been investigated by the administration.

The Witness. Again, if someone is following someone to their car, saying, "We know where you live, you aren't going to be able to go out in public," taking pictures of their license plates -- which could be legal, but it also could be considered threatening, depending on the situation, or menacing -- certainly I would start there.

But certainly someone who says, "We're going to kill you," or, "You should be hung from a tree," and suggesting maybe they might do that, those are definite threats.

Mr. Issa. So showing up at somebody's home or threatening to show up at somebody's home would certainly rise to that.

The Witness. Showing up at someone's home, I don't think it's the best protest, no matter who it is, first of all. It is not necessarily illegal to do that, but if you --

Mr. Issa. But from a threat standpoint --

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Issa. -- where you said --

The Witness. Well, It's concerning.

Mr. Issa. -- "We know where you live," would be a threat?

Mr. Rybicki. So there's a clean record, let him ask the question, and then you answer the question.

The Witness. It's concerning I think when people just show up at someone's home.

Mr. Issa. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Biggs. And I'm sorry.

In response to one of Representative Issa's questions, you said that you never made reference to parents. Is that exclusively in the call on September 14th, or are you talking about any of your communications with the White House or --

The Witness. I don't believe I ever referenced that parents were threatening anyone. I referenced individuals were. Because many of the people that were making threats were not necessarily parents. They could be; they could not be. It didn't -- in the sense of what we were talking about, if you're making a threat, it should be investigated.

Mrs. Cammack. Mr. Chairman.

In talking about threats, and it was alluded to that there was a lot of open source Google searches in compiling this list, would you consider commentaries surrounding the election of these school board members, as in, "We're going to run a candidate against you, you're going to lose your next election," do you consider that a threat?

The Witness. No, not in the sense of a violent threat. It's a threat to try and vote them out of office, which is perfectly acceptable.

Mrs. Cammack. Were any kind of those conversations surrounding the elections of these school board members, was that ever brought up in any of your conversations?

The Witness. The only reference that could have been made to an election is just that the election might be fueling some of the threats, the underlying threats. But in terms of groups running people for school board or opposing someone, that's the American way. That's democracy. That's not what I was talking about.

Mrs. Cammack. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, when was your next interaction with Ms. Wall at the White House after September 14th?

A The next time I interacted with her was when I copied her on the letter that I sent to the White House on the 29th, I believe it was.

Q Do you remember discussing over email with her on September 21st, 2021, the contents of the letter?

A Uh-huh.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'd like to enter a September 2lst email chain between Mr. Slaven and Ms. Wall as exhibit No. 5.

A Just a point of clarification.

Q Yes.

A I want to make sure I answered that right. You said my interaction after the 2lst, correct?

Q After the 14th.

A Oh, after the 14th. Yeah. So I wanted to make sure I answer that. So there was the series of emails that you're talking about now.

[redacted] Like I said, we'll mark that as exhibit No. 5.

Mr. Rybicki. Thank you.

[redacted] Take a moment to review it, if you need.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember this email chain, Mr. Slaven?

A Yes, I do.

Q So I'm going to refer to the email from Ms. Wall on Tuesday, September 2lst, at 9:37 a.m. It's on page 3 or page 101.

A Yes.

Q In that email Ms. Wall asked you again for your list of, quote, "more egregious examples of your members who have faced safety issues and/or reached out to law enforcement without adequate response."

Is that correct?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q And at the end of her email, Ms. Wall stated that the list, quote, "Would be helpful as we brainstorm solutions."

Did you take that as the Biden White House was independently looking for ways to help?

A I took it as there was some empathy that she felt for school board members after our call and that she was looking for: Is there something we can do to assist?

Q And when she said "something we can do," did that mean the Biden administration or just her personally?

A The Federal Government.

Q And in your response to her on Tuesday, September 21st at 9 --

Chairman Jordan. Could I interrupt a second, [redacted]

[redacted] Yes.

Chairman Jordan. In that email from Mary Wall, it says: "Members who have faced safety issues or reached out to law enforcement without adequate response."

Did you guys have -- did you have situations that were brought to your attention where there was not adequate response from local law enforcement?

The Witness. We had heard some complaints of that.

Chairman Jordan. From?

The Witness. From various school board members.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Did you, like, just someone had told you that on the phone, called your office? How did you hear the complaints?

The Witness. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Did you hear it from the press or --

The Witness. We had heard it -- the Worthington School Board was one such example --

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Wilson?

The Witness.Well, it was referred to Mr. Wilson or someone else. Yeah, that was one example.

And then later there was rumblings of other places. Later the California School Board Association actually wrote a letter to Governor Newsom about this very issue. I don't remember the exact date it actually went out, I think a couple days before our letter did, though.

So it was something we were hearing about.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Thank you.

The Witness. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q And in your response email on page 3, page 101, I'm going to read from there. It says: "As I indicated last week, NSBA is also planning to send the President a letter requesting Federal assistance to help school board members and public schools manage these threats."

When exactly did you tell Ms. Wall that you planned to send President Biden the letter? Was that the first time?

A Officially, in my mind, that was the first time. I had made the references to we may ask for the threat assessment. And honestly, I wrote a letter -- I don't remember if I said it -- I may send a letter asking for a threat assessment, or I just said we may ask for a threat assessment. I can't remember the context of that phone call, how I put it. But knowing at this point, I knew we were going to send a letter, and the NAASP [sic] letter had gone out. We were working also on a joint statement with another organization.

And so I thought it was just fair to let her know you're going to be hearing more about this issue.

Q And in this specific email when you said, "Send a letter to President Biden requesting Federal assistance," did that mean just a threat assessment in your mind, or did that mean more than a threat assessment?

A Well, I had seen the draft at this point. So it meant essentially -- most of the final letter was in the very first draft. So it was pointing out -- the Federal asks were more specific around threat assessment and please involve the following agencies.

Some of the other sections where we cited law, that was as much for our members to just understand there was a Federal nexus at times on threats. If someone puts a stamp on an envelope and sends a threatening letter through the U.S. mail. That is an example of that.

Q And just a little bit below where I read, it says -- you said: "We really appreciate the responsiveness of the administration."

What did you mean by the responsiveness of the administration to that point?

A Well, I think we were generally -- we thought the administration was trying to help schools in a number of ways. So it was the overall situation with the school reopening, and it was her response to my comments.

[redacted] We have about 10 minutes left, so I'm going to turn it over to see if anyone wants to ask a question.

Mr. Issa. Can I ask a question?

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Issa. You mentioned earlier your time in the Governor's office in West Virginia during the 9/11, post-9/11 hearing. So you're very familiar with threat assessments and so on, and, obviously, familiar with what happened on 9/11.

Are you familiar with the activities that led up to 9/11? In other words, the threats that were seen or the information that should have or could have predicted what happened on 9/11 or something like it.

The Witness. Well, obviously, I'm not an expert or anything, but I actually read the 9/11 report when I was in law school. And so I am aware that there were a number of triggering incidents potentially over the summer.

Mr. Issa. And are you aware of the attempt on the Twin Towers by the blind cleric before 9/11?

The Witness. I was a young congressional staffer when that happened. I remember it well.

Mr. Issa. Oh, excellent.

So knowing that there was essentially a decade of threat there before the event, when you were looking at threats and relating to the White House, how far back did you go in the history of tumultuous school board meetings and threats that occurred or would be defined as threats? Two years? Four years?

The Witness. I want to make sure I understand your question. You're asking specifically now about school board threats?

Mr. Issa. I'm going back to school boards.

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Issa. Knowing that you had a decade to look at, or more, of very specific threats from -- in that case, from ISIS or Al-Qaida as it was --

The Witness. Right.

Mr. Issa. -- how far back did you go in threats at school boards?

The Witness. I would have to look, to be honest, Congressman.

Mr. Issa. Would you say it was more than a year?

The Witness. Over time I think that's probably fair, yeah.

Mr. Issa. Would it be more than 5 years?

The Witness. I don't recall.

Mr. Issa. Okay. In the period that you looked at, 1 year, 2 years, 5 years, did you see a specific escalation that you could mark, or did you see ebbs and flows, or did you see a relatively steady this happens at school boards?

The Witness. Well, as an example, looking back -- and I don't remember the date exactly, but it was earlier, probably somewhere between 2010 and 2014 or '15. I know there had been a shooting at a school board meeting in Florida. I think it was Panama City, but I'm not sure of that. And that was a very unusual incident. It was someone upset over his wife losing a job.

And so once in a blue moon something like that might happen, or there might be a disturbance at a school board meeting. But we had never seen anything like what sort of started I think when the pandemic hit.

And we were hearing that all the time. School board members were saying: I've never seen anything like this in my life. That was a pretty common occurrence. And the same thing with teachers and principals.

So it was a universally sort of known commodity in education, like, this is really, really a scary time.

Mr. Issa. So it's fair to say that you felt that the closures, COVID, all were essentially a one-time reason that there was high tension and the kind of tumultuous school board meetings that occurred?

The Witness. It seems like certainly that and related elements were spurring a lot of it.

Mr. Issa. So if the cause or a major portion of this spike was all about COVID, school closing, and so on, the stress on parents, the stress, what would there have been for the Federal Government to go after and investigate if, in fact, this was something that was waning, that you were on the tail end of, when you requested help from the administration?

The Witness. Well, I would not agree that it was waning or was likely to wane, because COVID was not the only issue. There were equity issues that were coming up around school boards and public schools. There was escalating tension.

And looking at what's happening now, they seem, in my opinion, we're still seeing heightened incidents.

[10:59 a.m.]

Mr. Issa. So policies that parents or individuals disagreed with and came to school boards are, in fact, escalating, and you're seeing that now, especially the ones you mentioned.

The Witness. I can give you an example.

Mr. Issa. Please.

The Witness. Yeah, so in addition to the issues around COVID, and some of that has changed now, obviously, there were issues around what was being taught in school, what policies were being followed. I know that -- and I may mispronounce it, but I think it's Eau Claire, Wisconsin, for example. A school board member received a threat, through an anonymous email, threatening to kill him, harm his family, come to the school board meeting that night and shoot it up.

It was not apparent who did it. It was someone from another State. He was since arrested by the FBI and has, I believe, pled guilty and is awaiting sentencing. He also made threats to some other organizations, including Webster's Dictionary. But that's just an example of some of the things that happened.

Mr. Issa. I just want to put an end on this. So you believe that there is an ongoing threat as we speak and that those threats will continue and should be investigated by the Federal Government on a regular basis around school Board members and executive staff?

The Witness. Well, public schools in general, I think. Let me just say it's not just school Board members. And you look at last year. At least I've read, research shows it was the deadliest year for school shootings in a long time. And the previous year before that, until then, it had been the worst.

And so you have to think about this, Congressman. The entire climate, you know, we're dealing with the world that I was in. Yes, I'm responsible for school Board members, and I believe when you're in a leadership position and you learn that there is a threat or you're concerned there's a threat, you're obligated to say something about it. And that's what I was attempting to do.

And so you take this entire climate going on, school board members getting threatened, teachers being threatened and assaulted, individuals showing up at an elementary school with zip ties, ostensibly, to arrest, you know, a principal because they didn't agree with the mask policy. I mean, there were so many things going on that had me concerned.

You know, but schools -- you know, seeing kids getting slaughtered in Texas is a good example -- not a good example. It's a horrible example but an example of the types of things we were worried about.

Ms. Hageman. But that isn't what you were focused on. You were focused on the parents.

The Witness. No, that's not true.

Ms. Hageman. Well, but that's what your letter was about.

The Witness. Our letter was not about parents. Parents aren't mentioned in our letter one time. Zero. The word isn't in there. The word parent isn't in there, parents, mother, father.

I'll tell you, there is one word related to a family member that is in there, and it's about a grandmother, and it was simply recounting a student who was trying to talk about his grandmother who had died in a meeting, and he was -- and this is a student. This is a kid -- shot down by an angry crowd, not allowed to finish.

And so we talk about students in the letter. I didn't specifically mention school shootings, but that should be concerning for all of us, and I think it is. I'm not saying it isn't, but that was very much on my mind.

Mr. Issa. Well, there is a history of local law enforcement working with and the Federal Government having both task forces and direct relations at the local and State level. Why is it you believe, or did you believe, that you had a reason to go directly to the Federal Government and ask for direct top-down assistance?

I'm assuming you were aware that for each of the examples you gave, including school shootings, there are mechanisms with local law enforcement who, by definition, are the first responders, the ones that, in some cases, are even present in the schools.

Why is it, you know -- in other words, we didn't see you asking for training or a policeman to be at school board meetings or other activities. Why look federally to the President and not, in some way, to the historic enforcement and processes that normally work, including if a uniformed law enforcement person is at a school board meeting, people tend to behave differently and so on.

The Witness. Well, you would hope so, but there were a number of instances in which there were uniformed police there and they still, you know, were escorting people out of meetings. There were assaults, et cetera.

But I want to go back to -- this was not just about school board meetings. That's kind of the thing everyone sees, and so, you know, you can point to those and say this is an example of what's happening.

What you're pointing out is absolutely local police or State police are going to be the first responders, but the Federal Government's role or Federal law enforcement's role regularly coordinates on big issues.

I mean, as an example, the FBI typically wouldn't investigate a murder unless there was some Federal nexus that an official has been hurt or a government employee, but they still get involved in tracking information, monitoring what's happening.

Are there national trends here? I mentioned the school shooting in Florida, and, as I said, I think that was an isolated local incident. But what we were talking about, more somewhat upsetting than, you know, a school closing or who the new football coach is. These were broader issues that covered a national perspective and a national scope. And us being a national organization, I felt it appropriate to make sure that Federal law enforcement was aware of the issue, and if they could help, that's what we wanted them to do.

It was much about coordination levels than anything else. It was not about sending Federal law enforcement to a school board meeting. That's not what it was about.

Mr. Issa. Are you aware of any --

[redacted] Gentlemen, I think we lost our hour here. Our hour is up.

[redacted] If you want to go another 5 to close it up.

Mr. Issa. Just the last question.

The Witness. No, I'm fine.

Mr. Issa. Were you aware of any similar communications with the previous administration? Any concerns that came out of your organization or a sister organization?

The Witness. They hadn't really reached the level yet to trigger that. So, no, but that's because the level -- it wasn't there yet. I didn't really start hearing about this probably until late spring. But it wasn't really until the summer that I started thinking, oh, we're seeing a pattern.

Mr. Issa. Thank you.

The Witness. Thank you.

Mr. Rybicki. Can we take a break?

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It's 11:18 and we will go back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, good morning again. I'm [redacted] I'm the Democrat's chief oversight counsel.

A Great.

Q Thank you again for being here today.

A Thank you.

Q Real quickly, going back to something that was said earlier, I think there was a reference made to the quote, unquote, "egregious examples list." Did any document that NSBA ever put together, was it ever labeled the egregious examples list to your knowledge?

A I don't know that we titled it that. It doesn't sound like how we would title something. We probably called it incidents or threats or -- but I'm not sure of that.

Q Okay. I just wanted to get clarity on that.

So, again, thank you for joining us. You are -- you mentioned earlier that you are currently not working, right?

A Correct.

Q Did you travel here at your own expense today?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you're represented by counsel today?

A Yes.

Q And you've had to retain that counsel in response to the majority subpoena, right?

A Yes.

Q And you are taking away time from your everyday life to be here today?

A Yes, absolutely.

Q Reference was made earlier to a report released by the National School Boards Association in May 2022. It's entitled, Final Report on the Events Surrounding the National School Boards Association's September 29, 2021, Letter to the President. And you said you are aware of it?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q Okay.

I have a couple of copies here. I'm going to introduce it. I'm not actually going to ask you to read the whole thing, because that would take up my entire hour.

A Okay.

Q But we have some pages highlighted --

A Okay.

Q -- that I'm going to refer back and forth to.

Before we get to that, are you aware that the National School Boards Association retained a law firm to conduct an investigation and ultimately draft this report?

A Yes. I voluntarily participated in this investigation, including a 3-hour long interview.

Q And do you recall the name of the law firm that was retained?

A It was an individual lawyer, Philip Kiko, and the Michael Best law firm. So there were actually two law firms.

Q Okay. And can you say again the name of the lead attorney who was responsible for conducting --

A Philip Kiko or -- I don't want to -- I think it's -- I think it was Kiko.

Q And I would actually like to introduce Mr. Kiko's biography. It's going to be exhibit No. 7.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this is actually a printout of a website, but so it looks like it's three pages long, but on the website it's one continuous page.

So on the second page, as printed --

A Of his?

Q Of his bio.

I'm sorry. Have you reviewed Mr. Kiko's bio before?

A I'm generally aware of his background, but I don't know that I've read this document before.

Q Okay.

Okay. And so he's now with Williams and Jensen law firm.

A Okay.

Q And this is the biography from that website.

So on the second page, it's the -- it looks like it's the -- like, that big paragraph in the middle. It notes that prior to his current position, Mr. Kiko served under Chairman Jim Sensenbrenner, Republican from Wisconsin, as his personal office chief of staff; and later, chief of staff and general counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, and as Deputy chief of staff on the House Science Committee; that he served as chief of staff of the House Administration Committee under Chairman Dan Lungren, Republican of California; and under Chairman Trey Gowdy, Republican of South Carolina, as Chief of Staff and General Counsel of the Select Committee on the events surrounding the 2012 terrorist attack in Benghazi.

And I believe he is actually the Republican staff director of that committee, although that's not exactly reflected in here.

Were you aware that Mr. Kiko had a long record of working for Republican House Committee chairs, including on investigative committees?

A I knew his background with Mr. Sensenbrenner in particular and that he was, you know, certainly a very experienced person on Capitol Hill.

Q Did Mr. Kiko or anyone working for him ever reach out to you to ask you for information in connection with this investigation?

A They reached out to me, and I don't know if it was Mr. Kiko or one of the other attorneys, in an email. I had legal counsel at the time, and for some reason they didn't reach out to them directly. And so I had my legal counsel reach out to them --

Q Okay.

A -- explaining that I did have personal legal representation, and NSBA knew that.

Q So you actually reached out to him and offered to provide information?

A Well, no, they reached out to us first.

Q Okay.

A My attorney reached out, and then we received the request. I talked it over with my attorney, a different attorney at the time, and we agreed to participate with some rules; namely, that it would be video'd and that it would be transcribed, and I would have an opportunity to have copies of those.

Q Okay. Thank you.

According to page 9 of the final report, you provided a 210-page PDF containing various documents, emails, and text messages.

A Yes.

Q I'll give you a second to find that.

Do you recall doing that?

A Yes. I spent a lot of time working on that.

Q Okay.

And to the best of your recollection, was there anything that Mr. Kiko or anybody else involved with this investigation requested that you did not provide to them?

A I provided everything I thought was relevant to the investigation, and they didn't necessarily ask for some of it. We just offered it.

Q Okay.

Do you know if he had access to all of your emails from your time with the National School Boards Association?

A They should have had access to it. I don't know exactly what was given to them in the end, but they had way more access than I did. I just had certain things that I retained.

Q Okay. And I want to look at page 7 to 8 of the NSBA report. And you were not at the NSBA when this investigation was conducted, right?

A No. I had been gone for a long time.

Q Okay.

So according to page 7 to 8 of the National School Board Association report, Mr. Kiko received, quote, 334,296 files, approximating 155 gigabytes of data from the National School Boards Association, including, quote, "all NSBA Microsoft Outlook data, including calendar files and email correspondence, Microsoft SharePoint data and documents, Microsoft OneDrive data and documents, and Microsoft Teams data and documents for all 13 custodians."

Do you have any information that would dispute that fact?

A No, no.

Q So to the best of your knowledge, that's accurate?

A Yes.

Q And, Mr. Slaven, you said earlier that you agreed to be interviewed by Mr. Kiko, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you recall when that took place?

A It was late April. I don't remember the exact date.

Q Okay.

A It was probably -- I think it was on a Monday. I believe it was the last April -- last Monday in April.

Q Okay. And I think you said earlier that it lasted for about 3 hours?

A Uh-huh

Q To the best of your recollection, did Mr. Kiko ask you any questions that you declined to answer?

A No. I answered every question.

Q Okay. And were you truthful and honest with him?

A Absolutely. In fact, at some point, I'd say if I was under oath, I'd say exactly what I just said.

Q Do you know if he interviewed anybody else as part of his investigation?

A Well, there's a long list of people that they interviewed. So, yes, I'm aware that they interviewed others.

Q Okay. And, actually, I think, according to page 8 of the report, Mr. Kiko interviewed 30 individuals with personal knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the September 29th letter, and many of the interviews lasted between 1 and 3 hours.

So you have no information that would dispute that fact?

A No. No.

I will add there was a 10-minute break in the 3 hours. So I'm counting that in the time.

Q Okay. Thank you for that.

So you've already participated in an extensive investigation regarding the circumstances underlying this letter, including fully cooperating with the investigator conducting that investigation. Is that --

A Yes, that's correct.

Q That's a fair statement?

A Yes.

Q Thank you.

I want to read two findings, just two findings from the final NSBA report now. The first is on page 13, and it says, "counsels review did not find communications between the Department," which means the Department of Education, "and the NSBA that indicated the Department specifically requested the NSBA make an official request for aid or Federal intervention."

Do you have any reason to dispute this finding?

A No. That is correct. The Department of Education had no role in the letter.

Q Okay.

Did the Department of Education ever ask you to make an official request for aid or Federal intervention?

A No.

Q Okay.

And to the best of your knowledge, did the Department of Education ever ask anyone else associated with the NSBA to make an official request for aid or for Federal intervention?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay.

The second finding that I want to read is on page 26, and it says: "Counsel did not find direct or indirect evidence suggesting the administration," -- which means the Biden administration -- "requested the letter or specified, edited, or reviewed the contents of the letter before the letter was sent, or otherwise specifically requested that it be written."

Do you have any information to dispute this finding?

A No. The only information that the White House provided was that I mentioned it in an email with a couple of here's what we may be asking for. That's it. So this is I think factually correct.

Q Did anyone in the Biden administration ever specifically ask you to write the September 29th letter?

A No.

Q Okay.

Did anybody, to the best of your knowledge, did anyone in the Biden administration ever ask anyone else associated with the National School Boards Association to write the September 29th letter?

A Not to the best of my knowledge. And I would think if someone had made that request, as the CEO, I would have been informed.

Q Okay.

And to the best of your knowledge, did anyone in the Biden administration edit this letter or review the actual contents of the letter as they were in the letter before it was sent?

A No. They did not see the letter until it was sent as the final product.

Q Okay.

A And, again, other than I made some descriptions of some things that might be in it.

Q Right, but they didn't see the actual letter --

A They did not see -- in fact, I didn't send it.

Mr. Rybicki. Just let her ask the question first.

What was your question?

BY [redacted]

Q So they didn't see the actual letter?

So you had a draft that was prepared on September 17th, and then the final letter, the final version on the 29th. You never sent the draft to anyone in the administration?

A No.

Q Okay.

And then the actual letter on the 29th was never sent to the administration until it was actually --

A Until it was formally sent that day, that's correct.

Q Okay.

So I'm going to turn a little bit to your work with the National School Boards Association and your knowledge of the National School Boards Association's activities generally around advocacy.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So I want to introduce as exhibit 8 the National School Boards Association About Us page from its website. Could you turn to the third page and read the first -- actually, sorry.

[redacted] can I grab one of those back?

And read the first highlighted statement.

A The Core Purpose section?

Q Yes.

Mr. Rybicki. I'm sorry. Where were you?

[redacted] Page 3.

Mr. Rybicki. Page 3.

[redacted] And, again, this is a website printout.

Mr. Rybicki. Okay.

[redacted] So it's all one page on the website.

BY [redacted]

Q Underneath Core Purpose.

A Yeah. "NSBA's Core Purpose. The core purpose of NSBA is to work exclusively with and through its member State school board associations in carrying out their missions in a full partnership to ensure each student everywhere has access to an excellent and equitable public education where they live, governed by high performing school board leaders."

Q Thank you.

Could you explain your understanding of what the phrase "ensure each student everywhere has access to an excellent and equitable public education where they live" means?

A Yeah, that means that we are working on behalf of our members who are working on behalf of -- I don't know what the current number is, but it used to be around 50 million school kids that were in public schools, to make sure they have access to the facilities they need, that they have access to -- the students with disabilities, that they are receiving, you know, everything they should be under IDEA.

That we're fighting to make sure that kids have broadband when they're home so that they can do their homework, whether fully on remote learning or whether it's just part of their regular in-school activity and when they go home and they're doing homework.

It's making sure there's enough quality teachers. We have a teacher shortage right now. It's about making sure that students in rural areas are being treated fairly, that students in suburban areas are being treated fairly, and urban areas are being treated fairly.

It's essentially about making sure every kid has an opportunity to graduate from high school, hopefully, and that they not only graduate when they walk across that stage, and the school board member, by the way, hands them their diploma, that they're prepared for the next step, whether that's going right into a job or that's undergoing training or going to a junior college or an apprenticeship or on to a 4-year college.

So that's really what we're getting at there. We want to make sure every child in this country has an opportunity to attend a public school and come out on the other end successfully.

Q And would part of access to an excellent and equitable public education, would that include ensuring that students and teachers and school administrators are able to go to school safely?

A Absolutely. You have to be able to go to school in a safe environment and not be -- fear for your life every time you enter a building or you enter a school event. That's why we actually had a center for safe schools that focused on those issues.

Q Thank you.

So a little further down on this exhibit, the NSBA's website states that it will undertake five specific activities to facilitate the mission you just described. Could you read number 4, which is highlighted.

A Sure. Number 4: "Coordinate, facilitate, and implement a united national movement in pursuit of equity and excellence in public education through school board leadership. The association shall focus its efforts on, (a), advocating for and defending high quality public education and school board governance before the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government; and (b), positively influencing public opinion regarding such matters."

Q Could you explain your understanding of the phrase "advocating for and defending high quality public education," in particular, the use of the term "advocacy"?

A Let me go back. I just want to read it again here.

Yeah, so what we mean by that is -- and the pandemic is a great example -- making sure that the Federal Government is providing enough resources for public schools; that, again, that they are providing funding for students with disabilities. And by the way, they're not doing a good enough job on that.

Again, that the FCC is doing everything they can to make sure schools and libraries have access to high quality broadband. Again, very important for education.

We mean advocating to do more to help teachers, to have more professional development, to recruit more teachers. We're losing teachers at a great rate.

And a number of other issues related to that. Certainly, school safety is a huge component of that. Again, making sure that students have a safe environment. We're seeing too much violence in schools.

I mentioned the school shootings, down to, you know, just incidents in schools. We had a six-year-old recently that shot a teacher. It's very concerning that something like that happens. And so that's what we're talking about there.

Q What forms might this advocacy take?

A We do it in a number of ways. We advocate directly with government officials, both at the executive branch and at the agency level within the executive branch, and with legislative bodies, like Congress is one way. So we'll have meetings. We'll have telephone calls. We'll send emails. We also send official communications, such as letters.

They can come in a number of forms. They can be an individual letter, like the letter to the President, to either him or a cabinet member, whoever the appropriate official is. It can be comments during an official comment period. We do that a lot with the Federal Communication Commission and a number of other agencies, which we would submit some type of official comments on behalf of the organization or under the CEO's name.

And then we would sign on joint letters frequently with other groups that were in a coalition in which you agreed on a certain issue. So that would be the bulk of it.

We also then publicly communicated through press releases and webinars and reports and things that we thought were important. So a whole --a number of ways we would communicate.

We did a public poll, in fact, on public schools to get out the information on what the public thought about public schools. We did a couple of those.

Q Okay. Thank you.

The NSBA was founded in 1940. Does that sound about right?

A I don't know the exact date but that sounds about right.

Q Okay.

Slaven Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to introduce as exhibit 9 the history page from the NSBA's website. That will make it clear. So at the top of this it says: "Since its founding in 1940."

A Yes.

Q So the NSBA has been in existence for just about 80 years, or a little bit more than that. Does that sound right?

A That sounds about -- that sounds right.

Q I'm not great in math so.

Could you read the highlighted paragraph, the third paragraph down here?

A Sure. "Passage of the 1965 Elementary and Secondary Education Act, or ESEA, and the subsequent wave of new Federal funds and accompanying regulations prompted NSBA to retool its capabilities to influence Federal policymaking. In 1967, NSBA, based in Illinois, confirmed its commitment to change by opening a legislative branch office in Washington, D.C. In 1976, NSBA moved its offices to Washington, D.C., and in 1984, moved into its current permanent headquarters in Alexandria, Virginia."

Q Thank you.

So according to this paragraph, NSBA first established an advocacy office specifically focused on Federal policy in 1967, right?

A Yes.

Q So that office has been in existence for more than 55 years at this point?

A Yes.

Q And during that time, to the best of your knowledge, the executive branch has been controlled by both Republican and Democratic administrations, correct?

A Yes.

Q And in your experience, I realize you were only there for 2 years, but also based on the historical knowledge of the organization, has NSBA advocated for its members, including engaging with administration officials during both Republican and Democratic administration?

A Yes. That's a regular occurrence.

Q And during the 55 years that the NSBA has had this office specifically devoted to advocacy, Congress, both the House and the Senate, has been under the control of various Republican and Democratic leadership, correct?

A Yes, correct.

Q And in your experience, in particular, your experience as chief advocacy officer, did NSBA advocate for its members before both Republican and Democratic Members of Congress?

A Yes, I did that before both Members, both parties.

Q On what types of issues, for example?

A I mentioned some of them already. One of NSBA's high priority issues was getting increased funding for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. There were about 7 million, depending on the year. You're looking at kids that qualify for IDEA.

And the Federal funding, when it was originally passed, I believe could be as high as 40 percent.

And typically, the Federal Government share has been, you know, anywhere from 13 to 15 percent. I think there were a couple of periods where it was higher. And so, that's a huge issue. That's one of our biggest issues.

Q And do you recall specifically advocating in front of Republican Members of Congress, for example?

A Oh, absolutely. In fact, that's an issue that has a lot of bipartisan support, and we were hopeful that we were going to pass something in the House to get an increase over a 10-year period right before the pandemic hit, and that sort of changed a lot of things.

Q And do you recall any Republicans that you might have spoken with as part of that?

A The best example, Senator Grassley has always been a big proponent of IDEA in the Senate, as an example. And there's a number of Republicans, but we supported legislation that had both Republican and Democrat side.

Q And do you recall ever advocating before, for example, the Trump administration on that issue?

A Oh, yes.

Q Including the Department of Education?

A I'm sure we did, yes.

Q Okay.

Including politically appointed officials of the Department of Education?

A I'm sure on occasion. Remember, I was only there for part of the Trump administration. But, yeah, that was a regular talking point for us, a regular advocacy priority item.

Q I want to introduce into the record as exhibit 10 a letter from the National School Boards Association to Education Secretary DeVos. That's dated March 19, 2020. I'll let you look over it for a second.

Slaven Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall this letter?

A I do.

Q Were you involved in drafting this letter?

A Yes. I don't recall if I -- what sections I worked on, but my staff certainly worked on it, and I saw this letter.

Q Okay. And if you recall, what was the purpose of this letter?

A Let me go back and read it.

I believe this was specifically -- there was concern over, again, students with disabilities, or very unique circumstances. So when school went fully online, they had a whole different set of issues. Obviously, some of them could be more vulnerable to something like a virus like COVID, and so there was concern with not putting them in that situation.

But they also oftentimes need in-person help, or assistance in various ways, and we were trying to get clarity on how that was going to work within the scope of the law and the regulations, because you may not be able to do certain things in a pandemic that you would normally do. And so how do we deal with that? That was a tough issue.

And so this letter -- and I haven't read this in a long time, but this letter is walking through various issues related to that, and again, asking for clarity, help, work with us so that we can figure out how to move forward. And LEA, that's for the local school districts, local educational agencies.

Q And who was the addressee of this letter?

A The Honorable Betsy DeVos, Secretary of Education.

Q And who was she the Secretary of Education under?

A President Trump.

Q Did you advocate before the -- did you ever speak with Secretary DeVos about this letter?

A Not directly, no. But we -- I'm sure that we shared it with her staff at the time.

Q Okay.

A And in that format, which is typically what staff level, what we would do.

Q And do you recall speaking with her staff or with political appointees --

A I recall that our team had conversations. I don't remember on this specific letter, but it would not have been unusual for -- certainly, we're relaying a letter on, you know. So there is communication. And, again, we're in kind of an electronic age now. So I'm sure we emailed. I don't remember who emailed it.

Q Okay.

I want to turn to another letter, and this is -- I'm not going to do a whole bunch of these but --

A That's fine.

Slaven Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'll introduce this as exhibit 11. This is an April 17, 2022, letter from the NSBA to Secretary DeVos. Do you recall this letter?

A Yeah, I do recall this letter. I actually remember this one more than that one.

Q Okay. Do you recall drafting this letter?

A Again, it was done on a team effort. I was involved in the process.

Q And can you describe just briefly the purpose of this letter?

A Again, this was, you know, I think building on the letter we just talked about, but focusing on various issues that schools were having in delivering free appropriate public education, particularly to students with disabilities. And again, it was a really difficult and challenging time for everyone.

And so, we were trying to establish what the guideline is going to be. How can you help us? We were asking the Federal Government for help here, no question about it, on behalf of public schools.

Q Okay.

And you said it was a very challenging time?

A Incredibly challenging time for all of us, but particularly for schools.

Q And this -- can you say who this letter was addressed to?

A This letter was also addressed to Betsy DeVos, the Secretary of Education.

Q And to the best of your recollection, did you or did your staff members have conversations with Secretary DeVos or her staff about this?

A Again, we certainly communicated with her staff in various ways.

Q Okay.

In your opinion, is the National School Boards Association's ability to advocate on behalf of its members through letters like this and through the other means that we discussed earlier an expression of its First Amendment right?

A Sending these letters, as well sending the letter to President Biden, is an absolute protected communication under the First Amendment. They were addressing grievances to an elected official, absolutely.

Q Thank you.

I'm going to turn to some individuals whose names were mentioned in the NSBA report. Some of them we've actually talked through earlier, and you might have engaged with some of these people at the NSBA as part of your advocacy efforts. So I'm going to start with the Department of Education, and I want to talk about that August 16th town hall. I know we talked about this in some detail, but I want to make sure I have the record perfectly clear.

So I want to introduce as exhibit -- actually, did we already -- did we introduce this earlier? No?

Slaven Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to introduce as exhibit 12 an email between yourself and Aaliyah Samuel dated Sunday, August 1, 2021, which is time-stamped 4:30 p.m. And let me know when you've had a minute to review it.

A Yeah, I basically remember this.

Q Okay. And do you recall this email?

A I recall -- yes, I recall it. Yeah, I recall it. I was -- I think I was flying back that day to Washington. So I'm not sure if I was on a -- right before I got on a plane or if I had just gotten off a plane. But yes, I recall.

Q Okay. And the first paragraph -- sorry. Hold on one second.

Could you -- so this talks about setting up the town hall that eventually took place on August 12th. Could you describe the purpose of the town hall as you understood it when you sent this email?

A Yes. Again, it was to help school board members do their job. It was to give them an opportunity to speak to the Secretary of Education and talk about -- ask questions of him of issues that were concerning around school reopening, and it was an opportunity for him to hear what those concerns are and express back to the members, the school board members, you know, what the Department was trying to do and what his views were. So it was a back-and-forth discussion.

Q And in your opinion, was it appropriate for the Secretary of Education to be concerned about the process of reopening schools?

A Absolutely. That's probably the most important thing the Secretary was dealing with at that time. Absolutely, it was the most important thing, in fact.

Q And was that consistent? You had, obviously, engaged with the Department of Education before, both Republican and Democratic administrations. Was that kind of concern about ensuring that schools were able to operate safely consistent across administrations?

A Yeah. I mean, there may be differences of opinion on things, but yeah, I do believe that both administrations were concerned about getting kids back to school and making sure that it was in a safe environment.

Q So, perhaps, differences of opinions over, for example, the actual process by which to go through, but generally people were in agreement that school should operate safely?

A Yeah. You're dealing with public servants at the Federal level and at the local level. And so everyone should have that goal.

Q Okay.

Turning back to this email again, do you recall -- this discusses setting up a large Zoom call, potentially --

A Yeah.

Q -- as a town hall. Do you recall exactly who was expected to participate in this call?

A By the way, I need to make a correction. I apologize. I was thinking this was on the 14th, and I realized this was a pre-call. So I wasn't getting ready to get on a plane.

But yeah, this is -- I mean, this is an email just trying to set up the logistics, talking about the date, how many people, you know, can we have. Obviously, I need to get other staff involved at some point, but this was -- we had just had the phone call on Friday. So this is really, this is really the extent of the phone call.

Q Okay.

And in paragraph 3, it's at the bottom of one page, on to the top of the next, you suggested involving, quote, the NSBA Board of Directors, all the board of directors members from all 50 of our State association members, which is approximately 1,000 people, members of the NSBA delegate assembly, all 50 State association executive directors, the State association government affairs representatives, the NSBA past presidents, and all the NSBA staff.

Is it fair to say that this would total potentially several thousand people?

A Yeah, that would have been a big group if they all participated.

Q Okay.

And do you recall why you believed it was important to have this wide variety of individuals on the call?

A So that we were giving everyone an opportunity to hear firsthand the information from the Department of Education about how they foresaw schools reopening, what resources may be available, and cutting us out sort of as the middleman communicating it and offering a direct route of communication for our members.

Q And so the goal was to make sure that school board members across the country got the information that they needed --

A Yes.

Q -- to reopen schools safely?

A Yes, that was the goal.

Q Okay. Why would school board members have an interest in this?

A Well, because they are -- school board members, let me just say, generally, most of them are unpaid. They are often called volunteers, but they are really -- it's really an unpaid job for most of them, and many of them work in smaller districts. They don't have resources. They rely on organizations like the National School Boards Association to represent them in Washington, and to make sure that they're getting the very best information.

School board members, the only -- to be honest, the one good thing a school board member gets to do is they get to hand a diploma at a high school graduation. The rest of the time they're dealing with budgets. They're hiring and firing superintendents. They're dealing with issues in the schools.

And the pandemic created such a moment of chaos for public school leaders, again, who were probably off doing other jobs, they're parents, they're grandparents, only a few big districts was it sort of a full-time deal. And so, making sure they have the absolute best information is really, really important.

Q Thank you.

Would it also be in the interest of parents to have schools reopen safely?

A Absolutely. I mean, the national PTA is a very engaged parent group. Their CEO and representatives were regularly on calls that I was on around various education issues.

Q Okay. So in your opinion, would the NSBA members that potentially could have participated in this town hall, would they be representing the interest of those parents as well in having schools reopen safely?

A Yes, absolutely, the parents and also the community members. But parents being involved is particularly important to make sure schools are operating successfully.

Q And in your experience, are school board members often parents themselves as well?

A Not always but definitely often. But a lot of grandparents, too.

Q Was there anything unusual about a call between school board members representing the interest of their communities and of parents in their communities and the Department of Education?

A No. I don't think that was unusual at all. We had had one earlier in the year. It was a smaller group of people, but that was something the new Secretary in particular wanted to make -- he wanted to communicate directly when he could.

Q Okay.

And I think you said that broadly the challenges that school board members were facing was discussed on that call, but the primary purpose was to pass information to them to help them better prepare themselves?

A Yeah, and have a back-and-forth Q&A.

Q Okay.

And was there ever a discussion or a request from anyone on that call for specifically for Federal assistance?

A Not in the terms of the letter. There was, I think, comments or questions around kind of what's going on with public schools and some of the hostility we're facing, and I don't recall exactly that discussion, but no one in that conversation asked the Secretary to do anything directly, like a threat assessment.

And conversely, the Secretary certainly didn't ask us to write a letter or to take any Federal action, or request some type of Federal action in that call.

Q And to the best of your recollection, was there any discussion about Federal law enforcement becoming involved in any way?

A Not that I recall, no.

Q Moving on, and I don't believe this came up earlier, but do you recall participating in a virtual meeting with the Secretary of Education and the Surgeon General on August 26th of 2021?

A I do.

Q Okay. Could you broadly describe the circumstances that led to that meeting?

A Yeah, I can't remember if the Surgeon General or the Department put it together. Someone in the administration put it together. It was yet another opportunity to brief school officials on what we could expect from school reopening, particularly around COVID. So that was the first time I had ever been in a conversation with the Surgeon General, as an example.

And this was -- the participants were other education groups, mostly at the CEO level. There may have been a staff member or two representing a CEO that couldn't participate.

Q Okay. And about how many people do you think were on that call if you had to estimate?

A This is definitely -- I'm guessing, guesstimating, 10 or 15 at least, probably.

Q Okay. And what type of organizations were they from?

A Groups representing high school, middle school, elementary school principals, teachers' organizations, other related -- superintendents were probably on there as well. Sort of the big groups that typically are in the education space that sort of have -- their footprint covers public schools.

And there may have been some others invited on that particular call. I can't remember exactly who all was on it, but it would be that universe of organizations.

Q Did the topic of Federal law enforcement arise during that call?

A No. The only discussion around, sort of, the threatening situation, actually, I brought up, but it was more of a comment. And I don't remember -- I think I directed it to the Surgeon General, who I hadn't been on a call with before. Both he and the Secretary answered.

But what I said was -- and, once again, it was about how can we get good information out. And so, I sort of asked him, like, what can you do to help us -- this is where -- of course, how can you help us get information on the pandemic and on the guidelines and what -- you know, the guidelines occasionally changed. Like, what is the right guideline, and how do we do that?

And I recounted in that conversation, though, that, you know, we are seeing a pattern of really, you know, members are getting threatened and the hostility levels are very high. So getting the information out is very important.

And I described a school board member who I knew who had called me, and I had learned of an incident where his school board meeting with hundreds of people, a person had shown up with pictures of his children. A mom, mom and dad, their kids were -- pictures were being, I don't know, passed around. They were shown around the room. And these are young parents, and he's a young, energetic school board member. It was very upsetting to him.

And his request to me, though, was we have to get better information out on the pandemic, and why we are requiring certain things that we're requiring. People don't seem to be getting it.

And so, I was recounting that story just to explain why the information was so important.

Q So the goal of your comment was to get information to share with your members?

A Yes. There was no mention of Federal law enforcement or any request like that. It was simply about what can we do to get information out. And the Secretary and the Surgeon General both -- I don't remember who answered first, but their response was we will do whatever we can to get information out, but the most important person in a community is someone local. Find a local doctor. Bring someone from the health department, someone from the State, so they're hearing locally why this is important.

I thought it was an appropriate answer.

Q So other than those couple of interactions that we just talked through, did you have any other interactions with Secretary Cardona directly?

A There were a few other occasions when he would be on, again, briefing a group of CEOs or government affairs folks. I was on, you know, a few times over the summer. I don't remember exactly.

The Learning First Alliance is an organization made up of public school groups. It's a CEO-level organization. I would sit in on it. There was Chief [inaudible] son as well. I believe the Secretary participated in at least one sort of Zoom-type call there. At least, I know the Department did.

Q Sorry. But those were all before?

A Yes.

Q So nothing after August 26th?

A Yeah, that was the last interaction that I had.

Q And so is it fair to say that all of your interactions with Secretary Cardona were in group settings?

A Yes. I never had, as I stated earlier, I never had an individual conversation. I hoped to at some point, but I never got to that point so.

Q Did the Secretary ever ask you to write a letter to the White House?

A No.

Q Did anyone else at the Department of Education ever ask you to do so?

A No. And I didn't communicate with them directly that we were writing one.

Q Okay.

A Until they were copied on the actual letter.

Q Okay.

Did you tell anyone at the Department of Education that you had been in contact with Mary Wall at the White House?

A No, not that I recall.

Q Okay. So is it fair to say that the first time you told anyone at the Department of Education about the letter is when you actually sent it to the White House copying some Department of Education --

A That is correct.

Q Okay.

And one last question. During all of your interactions with the Department of Education and Department of Education officials, did anyone ever mention the name Terry McAuliffe to you?

A No.

Q I want to turn to your interactions with employees of the White House. So we talked a little earlier about your interactions with Ms. Wall, and I believe that we introduced -- so I want to introduce an email that Ms. Wall sent on September 9th. It's subject line, Sharing the President's COVID-19 Action Report. And this is going to be exhibit 13.

Slaven Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So according to this email -- sorry. Let me know when you've had a chance to review it.

A Yeah, no, I'm good.

Q Okay.

So I want to look down on the very bottom email here. It's subject line, Sharing the President's COVID-19 Action Plan. It says: "Thank you, kindly, for joining me for a preview call for the President's speech today." And then it attaches the COVID-19 action plan and says: "It has three main goals."

You recall, we talked a little bit earlier, participating in that call?

A Yes.

Q And can you say, just so the record is clear, who was on that call? You've talked of the White House officials, but from the stakeholder organizations and others that were listening in on the call.

A I believe the teacher organizations were both represented. I believe that -- I know that Ronn Nozoe from the National Association of Secondary School Principals was on the call because he weighed in with his concerns over threats after I did in a comment. He didn't ask for Federal assistance, by the way, around that or Federal law enforcement assistance.

And I don't remember the others, but it was not just NSBA, it was multiple organizations. I believe -- now, I can't -- I'm trying to remember everyone that was on it, but it was a well-covered call.

Q Do you think that there were more than 10 people on the call, for example?

A Around 10 probably.

Q Okay, from -- and plus the officials from the White House?

A Yeah, yeah.

Q So maybe 15 people total?

A Yeah. Yeah, and again, there tended to be seven or so groups that were always invited, but they included other groups. Like, I know Gray city schools I believe participated because they referenced an email later about it.

Q And do you recall how long the call went?

A Probably a half hour. It was organized that day, as I recall.

Q Okay.

So Ms. Wall's email says that the COVID-19 action plan had three main goals: Number one, get more people vaccinated; number two, decrease hospitalizations and deaths from COVID-19; and number three, keep schools and our economy open.

Are those goals that the NSBA member organizations generally supported?

A Yes.

Q And in particular, keeping our schools open, is that something that would have been of importance to NSBA members?

A Yeah. I mean, I would also say safe--open and safe.

Q Okay.

And so, you mentioned that you had the opportunity to speak, and you mentioned, broadly, the challenges that your members were facing, including -- I think you said that you did mention threats that they were facing.

A I did on this call, yes.

Q And were those threats just faced by school board members or by teachers and educators as well?

A It was across the board. So teachers were seeing it; principals were seeing it; superintendents were seeing it; local school board members; State school board members. It was pretty prevalent. And at this point, it was reaching a fever level, which is why I decided to send the letter.

And so, that's what prompted the comment by me and then others, like Ronn, weighing in.

Q Do you recall if you mentioned that -- you referenced earlier death threats that had been received by both board members and others. Do you recall if you mentioned that on the call?

A I'm sure I said violent threats or threats of violence. I don't know if I said death threats or not. I probably did, but I certainly was referencing violent threats.

Q And would those type of threats, in your opinion, pose -- make it difficult for students to return to school safely?

A Oh, absolutely.

Q In what way?

A Well, if you've got school board members trying to plan with the superintendent to reopen the schools, the superintendent is working with the teachers and the staff to get schools reopened, and while you're trying to deal with actually getting the kids back in the classrooms, you're also dealing with -- you know, worried over someone coming into the school protesting, you know, a mask policy and punching a teacher, which happened in California, I know, or I mentioned earlier the showing up to, you know, attempt to place a principal under citizen's arrest because she's doing her job.

You have probably the most egregious example at that time I can think of. You know, you had the Proud Boys not only showing up at school board meetings, but you had them actually marching on a school in Vancouver, Washington, that forced three schools, according to media accounts, to shut down. You know, I had just learned about that incident, which was really troubling to me.

And so, you had all of these things. So when you have schools locking down -- school was already in at some places at this point. So we were already seeing it. You know, if you have something like that occurring, that is impacting kids' education.

Q During that September 9th call, you mentioned -- you said you talked about the threats people were facing, the violent threats people were facing generally. Did you make any specific requests for Federal assistance or Federal intervention?

A In that call?

Q In that call.

A No. I just was making a comment. Again, the only sort of request I made was we need to make sure we're getting all the information out on COVID and how to respond so that we can have an answer when people were challenged.

Q So you were looking for information to flow from the Federal Government to States --

A Yes.

Q -- to help keep students safe?

A Correct. Directly around the healthcare emergency.

Q Okay.

Did you -- by this point, you said you had made the decision that you were going to send a letter. Did you mention the letter during that call?

A No. And I believe there is an email somewhere in which I said I didn't mention it, in fact. So they had no idea that I was thinking about this.

Q Okay.

And you said that everybody on the call had the opportunity to speak. So it wasn't just you that was speaking up during this call?

A Correct. You could make a comment, or you could ask a question, and I just chose to make a comment.

Q Okay. And you recall that other people did make comments?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And so after that call, after the President's COVID-19 action plan was released, NSBA decided to release a statement, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And that eventually reached Ms. Wall, and I believe that was introduced earlier. It's exhibit 4. It's NSBA exhibit 5 --

A Got it.

Q -- in your report, but it's exhibit 4 for this new investigation.

And I want to look again as Ms. Wall's email that she sent at 9:56 p.m. So that was after the statement was released after the President's speech, correct?

A Yes, it was afterwards.

Q Okay.

Ms. Wall said, "I often think" -- "I think often about the tough position that school boards are in at a time like now." What do you think that was in reference to?

A I think she was showing empathy for what school board members and other educators were dealing with. She mentioned school boards here because that's who I represented. But, you know, one thing that occurred on that call in particular was not only had I made the comment that others weighed in, it was broad agreement that this is a real problem that we're facing, and it's interfering with us being able to successfully do our job and get kids back in school safely.

Q And she said we would love to do anything we can to support members making tough calls on behalf of kids. What did you understand "support" to mean in that?

A I took it -- again, I took it to mean that she was empathetic. She was concerned over what was happening, and she didn't know exactly probably everything that they could do, and she was asking, I think, or saying she would like to figure out a way to help.

Q And in your response, which is the email directly above, it's dated Saturday -- and her email to you was Thursday, September 9, 2021, 9:56 p.m. You responded on September 11, 2021, at 9 o'clock in the morning.

A Yes, 2 days later.

Q Your response said: "Anything that you can do to help us better prepare them with information and resources will certainly help."

Is that -- do you recall saying that?

A Yes.

Q And what did you mean by information and resources?

A I meant, specifically, she was involved in the COVID-19 response. So I meant, again, it was building on what I had been sort of saying before, getting information out on the pandemic, on why certain actions were being taken, why certain recommendations were being made. And, again, it's communicating. You want to overcommunicate and particularly with people that are busy.

And so, that's what I was referring to, specifically, there.

Slaven Exhibit No. 14

BY [redacted]

Q I want to introduce as exhibit 14, an email chain from September 30, 2021, and this is an email chain involving officials at the Department of Education. Have you seen this document before today? I'll give you a second to read it.

A Yeah, this is -- I'm sorry. Who is Thomas, Rachel -- or Rachel Thomas?

Q So these are all Department of Education officials.

A Okay. I just wanted -- yeah, I just wanted to make sure.

To my knowledge, I have not seen these, no.

Q Okay.

A Unless they were referenced in the minority report I read last week, but it doesn't look familiar.

Q Are you familiar with Luke Jackson at the Department of Education?

A I don't think so.

Q Okay. Luke Jackson was a communications advisor at the Department of Education.

According to this chain, on September 30th, Mr. Jackson received a press inquiry about threats to educators' safety, including a reference to a press release from NSBA.

Presumably, that was the letter that was sent out on the 29th.

He responded with a link -- list of -- and he was asked for a comment on this by USA Today. He responded with a list of links to publicly available resources and information. Could you take a look? It's the email from him time-stamped 12:41 p.m. The list, those are all hyperlink documents.

Are you familiar with those resources?

A Some of them. I don't know that I specifically remember all of them. I remember particularly things about the American rescue plan. That one I definitely remember. I'm aware of -- there were other documents like this out there. So although I don't necessarily recognize the title of any of the others specifically, you know, they seem like there are a lot of sort of general guidance and things like that that can be shared. They are resources, public resources.

Q And just based on the face of them and the titles, things like Guide for Physical Security, Guide for -- General Guide for School Safety, Guide for Threat Assessment and Reporting, Guide for Developing High-Quality School Emergency Operations Plan, is that the type of information and resources that would have been helpful to your member organizations?

A Yeah, sure. Absolutely.

Q Okay.

After your September 11th email to her, Ms. Wall responded to you and said, I would love to chat. And then you guys went back and forth for a little bit until you landed on September 14th.

We talked about the September 14th call a fair amount. Do you recall how long the call lasted?

A On September 14th? It was probably about 15 minutes. I was actually with my 88-year-old mother. I was driving her back to West Virginia, and we had spent the night in a hotel, and I did this call right before we left. So she was sleeping in a chair while I talked to Ms. Wall. So it was a relatively short conversation.

Q Okay. When you sat for the interview with Philip Kiko, a transcript was made of that interview. Do you recall reviewing that transcript?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I'm going to show it to you now. I'm not going to introduce it into the record, because I think it's kind of a lousy transcript. The copy --

A It's a little hard to read.

Q It's a little hard to read. It's a little hard to follow, but more just to -- more just to help refresh your recollection a little bit.

I want to look at 1:02:31. And these are timestamps on the transcript. It's 1:02:31 to 1:02:44.

[redacted] I'm sorry, [redacted] Can I --

[redacted] Oh, yeah. Sorry.

[12:13 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q So here, I'm actually -- this is the section that I'm hoping you'll look at. It begins at 1015950 and goes down to 1023880, and it's page -- sorry -- page 41.

A And which, I'm sorry, which --

Q So right in the middle, she said -- you said, and -- sorry, Mike Garrison in this, was that your attorney?

A Yes.

Q Your prior attorney?

So when it says Mike Garrison, is that you?

A No. But it looks like they're quoting me, though.

Q Okay.

A So I'm not sure why it's --

Q Do you recall saying these?

Mr. Rybicki. Well, what are you --

BY [redacted]

Q Sorry, beginning at 10159.960 down to 102 -- I'm sorry, 10244.020.

A Yes, okay.

Q Okay. So in your prior interview you said: It's reached the level that we may ask for some type of more formal help, I didn't go into a lot of detail. I think I said we may send a letter.

And then you said: I didn't really get into we're drafting a letter, just, you know, it's in the works. I didn't tell her that. I chose not to. I just sort of said, you know, I wanted her to understand the situation.

Is that -- do you recall saying that in your prior interview?

A Yes.

Q And is it accurate that you chose not to tell Ms. Wall that you were -- about the details of the letter?

A Yes. For example, I did not say we're working on a letter.

Q Okay.

A I made some broad generalizations about how we might ask for Federal help, we might ask for a threat assessment. But I didn't get into the -- she was not informed, oh, there's a letter being written. And it, in fact, was being written. And I chose not to disclose that because I wanted to wait and see, to let it go through -- the letter go through the process.

Q Okay. And do you recall if during this September 14th phone call if you said anything about the Department of Justice?

A I don't know. I don't, to be honest, I don't know. I guess I could've, but I don't recall it specifically.

Q Okay. Did she request specific examples?

A She said: Tell me what -- tell me -- lay out the situation of what's going on. And I -- she may have said: Are there some specific examples? Or she may have just said what I just said: Tell me what's been going on.

And so it was a very generalized conversation, but I expressed, I just said, you know, I'm very concerned. You know, I've sort of been thrust into this new role, and now I'm dealing with all of these issues around schools reopening.

And it's one thing -- it's already a difficult situation, but I am very concerned over the threats, the threatening messages, and the incidents that are occurring around public school board members, but also educators in general.

And, of course, our students attend the schools. So I was concerned about the impact to them as well.

Q And did you tell her that you were concerned about the impact on students and educators, not just school board members?

A I'm sure I did.

Q Okay. Do you recall if you mentioned, for example, death threats on that call?

A I'm sure I said violent threats. I may have said death threats. I probably did. But I know I was talking -- when I say threats, I was not talking about threatening to run someone against someone for a school board seat. I was talking about real threats of physical harm.

[redacted] Okay. Sorry, I'm just checking the time.

I think I'm at a point where we'll continue on in the next hour. So we can go off the record.

Thank you.

[Recess.]

[12:28 p.m.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. The clock now reads 12:29. We'll start our second round of questioning.

Mr. Slaven, I'd like to direct your attention back to exhibit No. 5. It's your email exchange with Ms. Mary Wall. It has exhibit 27 marked on the top.

The Witness. Twenty-seven?

[redacted] Yeah.

The Witness. Okay.

Mr. Rybicki. You got it?

The Witness. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q And I'd like to direct your attention, we kind of left off after your response to Ms. Mary Wall at 9:34 p.m., and then Ms. Wall responds to you on September 21st at 10:10 p.m. That's on page 2 or page 100 of the exhibit.

A 10:10, yes.

Q Ms. Wall's email to you says: "Is there any way we can take a look at the letter in advance of release. In specific, I'm meeting with colleagues from other WH" -- White House -- "offices and DOJ tomorrow morning to see if there might be any options we can pursue here, so if you have concrete recommendations in your letter (e.g., the threat assessment you mentioned) would be good to know so I can include in discussions."

From that email, it appears that the White House was asking for an advanced copy of the NSBA's letter. Did you take that to mean that?

A They wanted to see a draft of what would be in it, yes.

Q Did you provide them with a draft?

A I did not. I chose to just describe some of the issues that were going to be in the letter. And the reason I didn't is we were still -- I was still processing the letter myself, and I wanted to leave myself the option of changing something later.

Q And from that email, did you gather that Ms. Wall wanted to use any advanced information you provided to guide her conversations with White House offices and the Justice Department the following day?

A Well, I didn't have context exactly what the meeting was about. Was it a general meeting they had with the Department or was it specially planned? I didn't really have a lot of context.

But I decided to provide the information because if someone's attempting to help you, you want to make sure you're providing them with what it is you might need or are requesting. So --

Q And just returning back to her email, she said: "In specific, I'm meeting with colleagues from other WH offices and DOJ tomorrow morning to see if there might be any options we can pursue here."

What did you take "any options we can pursue here" to mean?

A I took it to mean is there information, is there -- for my mind, I was asking some very specific things. I think she was not sure what we might be asking.

I took it as: Can you just tell me what it is you really want from us? Very much like, to give you a good example, having been a congressional staffer, the day I would take a phone call or I'd have a meeting with a constituent, and they were saying: I've got a problem. And I'd, like, come back and say: Well, tell me exactly how we could help you. And so I took it like that.

Q And you followed up at -- oh, it doesn't have the time on here -- but you followed up that day with kind of a detailed summary of the letter and the examples of school board disruptions. Is that correct?

A Yes. It was that evening, I believe. I don't know. There's not a time either. But it was that evening.

Q And did you feel like you needed to provide this information to her for her conversations the next day or -- you followed up pretty quickly, correct?

A Yeah, well, that evening. I think she might've written me originally in the morning.

I wanted to -- I just decided to go ahead. I think I said I'd send her something the next day. And I was still awake, so I just decided to do it, take one thing off my plate for the next day.

So I took a little time and wrote my thoughts. You'll see the first paragraph is a lot of my just opinion on things or things I had learned about. And then I put in -- I did put in the bullets on here the specifics we may be asking for.

And, again, I'm not trying to surprise them. I think it's good practice to let folks know what you may be asking for.

But you can see my concerns over the threats in the first paragraph. I mean, these were real concerns, particularly the Proud Boys references. And that was really the triggering event for me, was learning of the Proud Boys involvements around public schools.

Q And the information inside of the bullet points in your email on page 1 and page 2, those were in the September 29th letter, correct, that information?

A Yes. They may not be quoted exactly the same here, they're close. You know, I think I said, "We may ask," or, "NSBA is considering."

And, again, though, the reason I used that language was I reserved the right, I might decide to take something out or I might add something.

Q Did Ms. Wall provide any feedback on the contents that you included in here?

A As I recall, she didn't respond at all. So I didn't get a, "This looks great." I didn't get a, "Oh, this is a bad idea." I didn't get an acknowledgement that she even received it. So I never heard from her again.

This gets back to your question earlier about communication. There was the 14th, there was this email thread on the 21st. And then the next time anyone communicated, I copied her on the email in which I sent the actual letter. So 8 days, essentially, went by.

Q And on page 2 of the exhibit, the last bullet point there, I'm going to read that to you.

It says: "Additionally, NSBA is interested in a review of appropriate and forceful actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the Gun-Free School Zones Act, the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism, Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act, the Violent Interference with Federally Protected Rights statute, Conspiracy Against Rights statute, an Executive Order to enforce all applicable Federal laws for the protection of students and public school district personnel and any related measure."

So on September 21st, 2021, the White House knew that you might ask for consideration of the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism. Is that accurate?

A It's accurate to say that we were asking them to consider Federal laws that were applicable. And we listed some that we thought were applicable.

Q And you listed the PATRIOT Act, correct?

A Yes.

Q Did anyone from the White House or Ms. Wall, between September 21st and September 29th, express concern to you about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language in the letter?

A I didn't get any, there was no communication at all. So, no. But there wasn't any positive. There was no communication.

Q Did Ms. Wall ever follow up with you regarding her discussions with the Department of Justice that she had the following day?

A No.

Q Did Ms. Wall ever express to you that the Justice Department expressed concerns to her about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language in the letter?

A No. Again, I didn't have a conversation with her, though.

Q And when was the near final draft of the letter completed to the best of your recollection?

A There were copy edits and things going on over the weekend. So we were probably copy editing all the way up to the day before. They were very minor edits at that point. The officers approved it over the weekend. I don't remember the exact, if it was Sunday night or Monday morning, but -- or Tuesday morning -- but it was it was near final.

Q And when did you share the letter with the NSBA officers?

A Again, I can't, without seeing the actual date of the email, I don't recall, but I believe it was over the weekend. And they were -- but they were well aware we were working on it.

Q Well, we can certainly enter that as an exhibit.

I'd like to offer a September 26th and 27th email chain between Mr. Slaven and the NSBA officers as exhibit No. 15.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

The Witness. Sorry, what was the date again?

[redacted] September 26th and 27th.

The Witness. Sounds right, yeah.

[redacted] This was also marked as exhibit 46 in the NSBA report.

The Witness. Thank you.

Mr. Rybicki. This is 15?

[redacted] Fifteen.

Mr. Rybicki. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you take a moment to review?

A Yeah, I'm good.

Q Okay. This was kind of just to refresh your recollection that you sent the letter to the officers on the evening of September 26th, 2021. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q Did any of the officers suggest any edits or changes to the letter?

A Copy edit. There was a copy edit or two. They also -- there was a request, I don't know if it's in this one or not, but one of the officers suggested that our president should sign this letter, which was unusual. And I think the reason being it would be good to have an actual school board member name on the letter in addition to mine. I wasn't a school board member.

Q Why was it unusual for President Garcia to be on the letter?

A It was unusual because the day-to-day operations were typically left to the CEO and particularly advocacy.

The way it sort of works is, the policies and resolutions are set by a delegate assembly of local school board members. I don't want to get too weedy, but that's who sets the policy. We then, as the organization, under the CEO's direction, advocate for those positions, whatever they are, for or against whatever the issue may be.

The board and the officers were not involved in that on a regular basis. So there would be no -- it's just not something they would do. We wouldn't be able to honestly probably get a lot done if we were always going out trying to have an officer sign something, unless we thought it was important or appropriate.

Q So this was the first time that an officer was signing a letter, to your recollection?

A Now, I don't want to say that, because I don't know the answer to that question. It probably had happened in the past. But not to my recollection had the president directly signed a letter on advocacy before this in my 2 years and few weeks at this point.

Q And to your recollection, it was because they thought a school board member needed to be signing the letter? Is that correct?

A Yeah. And I think it was just -- I think they just thought it was such an important issue we were hearing about that we wanted -- we were trying to show that we were leading on behalf of local school boards. And so it added strength, I think, to the letter.

And if you look back, we had done a statement the week prior with another organization representing superintendents, and we had decided to include their president, who was a local superintendent, and Viola on that as well.

And so it sort of was just building on that. It wasn't my intention to add her name to it, but I had no objection to it.

Q And as the CEO and executive director, did you provide substantial direction to Ms. Rigsby on what should be included in the letter?

A The direction that was provided to Deborah, you read it in the memo from Jane. I wanted incidents and potential Federal options. I wanted it detailed. Because I wanted to be able to answer questions like: Why did you write this letter to our members? Is there a Federal role?

We are an organization that advocates for primarily local control, but we also recognize there is a role for the Federal Government depending on what's happening, particularly around things like resources and investment in education.

But I felt like as much -- I don't think I have to educate the administration as much on -- as I do -- as I did our own members. So that's why we included it, knowing people would read it. And I could've just said laws applicable under Title 18 of the Criminal Code.

Q And did you do any due diligence to review the alleged violent incidents that were cited in the letter?

A As I recall, at the time I went through and checked the footnotes and read through the various incidents.

Q And did you perceive those incidents to be violent?

A I perceived them to be disruptive, some of them to be violent or near violent. Most of them, as I recall, if they weren't calling out an actual assault, the room was cleared by the police, the board had to stop their proceedings. So you're impacting education, you're impacting kids' education, because the board can't meet, they can't get anything done.

And not to mention, the people that are there at the meeting who are there to participate, again, whatever position they may have and whether they're a parent or another community member who also has a stake in education in their local community, this kind of disruption can prevent a local school board from getting their jobs done.

So we looked at it as it was setting the stage for here's what's happening, you can see the climate that's going on across the Nation.

Q Did it concern you at all that the inclusion of some of the nonviolent incidents as citations in the letter asking for Federal intervention at school board meetings via Federal law enforcement, did that concern you that it would be chilling to parents' First Amendment rights or individuals' First Amendment rights?

A Well, I need to correct something you just said. We did not call for Federal intervention to occur at school board meetings. We asked for Federal intervention to help with threats and incidents. We asked them that they work with local school boards. I mean, I don't think there's anywhere in the letter where I said that, number one.

And number two, if you read my letter -- and I believe I'm the one that added -- there was a line in the first paragraph in which I expressly talk about communicating with your school board and the community is important, obviously, under the First Amendment. And then I added, but the threats are concerning. I'm paraphrasing what I said.

And so I thought about, of course, the First Amendment. Threats of violence are not protected speech. Anything -- you can be mad all you want, and I hope you can be disagreeable and be agreeable about it.

This was about specific concerns that were happening to public schools and educators and the impact also on the students themselves. If you're creating a climate of violence around public schools, that's a really dangerous thing. I mentioned this earlier.

And so that's what we were trying to do. We were just trying to set a stage of incidents that were happening. And some of those incidents we called out why it might just be the meeting was disrupted. That same district -- Clark County is a good example, this wasn't mentioned, I think, in the article -- but their president also announced that she had received death threats and talked about it publicly. Same thing with several other districts that are cited in there.

And so really there is more to it than just we had one bad meeting. It was a pattern of problems.

Q But there were citations in the letter that it was just about one bad meeting or disruptions, because you said individuals, parents who are speaking at school board meetings can be mad all they want, they have a free speech right to do so.

Did that concern you at all that those were included in the letter that asked for help from Federal law enforcement?

A Again, we were setting a stage for the climate occurring in the Nation. You know, it would be very much like you had a rash of crimes occurring or incidents occurring that were troubling that the Federal Government might be interested in getting information out, if nothing else, to local law enforcement. It still may be a local law enforcement issue in the end. But that's one thing the Justice Department tracks, trends in crime.

And so we included the incidents. We were trying to just set the stage, this is disrupting education. And I think all of the clips suggest disruption of education. They didn't all lead in arrests, but that doesn't mean there wasn't a troubling trend going on.

Mr. Bishop. All of the what?

The Witness. Pardon?

Mr. Bishop. You said all of something involved disruption. I didn't get you.

The Witness. Well, I want to make sure I got it right.

What I was trying to say, Congressman --

Mr. Bishop. I just couldn't hear the word, I'm sorry.

The Witness. No, no. No problem. What I was trying to say was that we were just trying to show a pattern of what was going on, that this wasn't a one-off, one school board meeting or one school district over, again, consolidating schools or something like that, which that happens sometimes. This was a whole swath of things.

And so the thing that most people hear about were the disruptions at the meetings. But this is way more than that. I mean, this is social media threats and people pouring -- showing up at people's homes and doing things. That's what we were trying to talk about.

Mr. Rybicki. Did you say "the clips" when the Congressman asked his question? Was it "clips" that you said?

Mr. Bishop. Thank you.

Mr. Rybicki. You were trying to show "the clips"?

The Witness. I might have said that or incidents. I was referring to the incidents in the footnotes.

Mr. Bishop. In your mind, what does "clips" refer to?

The Witness. A media clip. Yeah, just reporting whether -- and it could be a video clip from a TV station or it could be a newspaper article or something else.

[redacted] And, Congressman Bishop, I believe you may have had some related questions. Did you want to go now?

Mr. Bishop. Oh, if that's okay with you, I will. Thank you.

My name's Dan Bishop.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bishop. I'm a Congressman.

The Witness. Nice to meet you.

Mr. Bishop. Nice to meet you, sir.

You're a lawyer, correct?

The Witness. I am.

Mr. Bishop. So you went to law school and you practiced law, I believe --

The Witness. Yes, I did.

Mr. Bishop. -- privately, correct?

And you were, prior to coming to the NASB (sic), you were at the Alliance for Excellent Education?

The Witness. Correct.

Mr. Bishop. Did your work there involve legal activities?

The Witness. I did some legal work there, some general counsel type work when necessary. We weren't big enough to be a full-time general counsel.

Mr. Bishop. Right.

The Witness. And I also did public policy work on education.

Mr. Bishop. How about as chief advocacy officer at the National Association of School Boards, did that involve legal work?

The Witness. I kept, obviously, my legal licenses up, and they're still up to date.

I worked with the chief legal counsel at times on certain issues, depending on what it was. And he had been the interim chief advocacy officer when I went into the job.

So in related areas I did, I suppose, but I was really more focused on legislative activity.

Mr. Bishop. What background do you have in First Amendment law?

The Witness. Well, I have general knowledge. I did take a class in law school focused on the First Amendment. It was Constitutional Law II, we called it. It got into various issues, things like in commercial speech when can you regulate and when you can't. I still remember it was time, place, and manner. That kind of thing. I remember incidents about people being able -- what kind of T-shirt can you wear in a school.

And so I have some knowledge. I would not call myself an expert.

Mr. Bishop. I took a quick look at your LinkedIn account. You have a resume or some stuff written there. It says that you had -- you have experience in private legal practice, focusing on government contracts, government affairs, and extensive work in white collar criminal law and --

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Bishop. All right. So you're aware of the concept that law enforcement needs adequate predication before it investigates or assesses it, are you not?

The Witness. Law enforcement should have a predicate before they launch a formal investigation.

Mr. Bishop. Must, right? They must have an adequate predication. Isn't that correct?

The Witness. Based on information at the time.

Mr. Bishop. Correct. That's a yes, right? You know that they need to have that. They can't just go look at a citizen for --

The Witness. Oh, no, yes. You're right, yeah, they're not supposed to go willy-nilly launching an investigation. They need to have a reason for it.

Mr. Bishop. And they couldn't, for example, for the sake of threat assessment, go and assess or investigate citizens who were engaged in political speech --

The Witness. Well, there's a difference between free protected speech and violent threats.

Mr. Bishop. Right.

The Witness. That's when you cross the line.

Mr. Bishop. So only the latter, violent threats, would justify government assessing or examining the conduct of people out in the country, right?

The Witness. Right. And that's what we were asking for.

Mr. Bishop. Are you familiar with the case Mahanoy Area School District v. B.L.?

The Witness. You'd have to provide me the details.

Mr. Bishop. All right. Let me do that a little bit. It was about a case arising out of a Pennsylvania school district. A 14-year-old student named Brandi Levy who made a Snapchat post on a weekend, off campus, using profanity critical of the school and the cheerleading squad. Do you remember that at all?

The Witness. I vaguely remember it. I was not involved in it in any way though. Only when you said the Snapchat. Was she a cheerleader?

Mr. Bishop. She was.

The Witness. Yeah. That's about all I remember about it. But I do remember it. I don't even remember the result.

Mr. Bishop. Are you aware that the National School Boards Association made an amicus brief submission in that case?

The Witness. I'm aware that we were involved in that.

Mr. Bishop. Did you have any involvement whatsoever --

The Witness. No.

Mr. Bishop. -- with the preparation or the fact that that amicus brief was submitted in that case?

The Witness. I had no involvement with the brief.

I don't remember when the brief was submitted. As well in my role as chief advocacy officer, I really wouldn't have had any -- or I might've heard about it.

I recall there was one case that we were interested in writing an amicus brief on, as I recall, when I was CEO, and I cannot remember what it was. So I don't know if it was that one or if it was a different one.

Mr. Bishop. All right. Suffice to say you didn't have any responsibility or involvement in that amicus brief being submitted?

The Witness. Well, I certainly didn't submit it, no.

Mr. Bishop. And you didn't have occasion to read that decision when it was issued by the United States Supreme Court?

The Witness. I don't remember reading it.

Mr. Bishop. So if I refresh your recollection that it came out in June of 2021, about 90 days before the correspondence with the administration that we've been asking you about today, that doesn't refresh your recollection --

The Witness. No, that actually is very helpful. That demonstrates that I was not involved at all.

Mr. Bishop. Okay.

The Witness. So as a CEO, I would've -- if we wanted to take that action, that would've come before me for my approval in the form of a memo. I wouldn't have actually probably seen the brief. I might have.

So that was well before I had taken over. So I'm sure, other than hearing about maybe we were going to do it, I had no role in it.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And you didn't read -- I take it you didn't read the opinion when --

The Witness. I don't remember.

Mr. Bishop. You don't remember doing so?

The Witness. No. I might've, but I don't remember it.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. Are you familiar with the Supreme Court's decision in Virginia v. Black, 2003?

The Witness. No.

Mr. Bishop. But you are aware, you said -- and you've drawn the distinction a few times today -- of the true threat doctrine, right, which is a threat that puts someone in immediate fear of violence.

The Witness. [Nonverbal response.]

Mr. Bishop. My own paraphrase. Are you aware of that?

The Witness. Well, I'm aware of a violent threat, what that is.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And so, for example, are you aware that the United States Supreme Court held in that case that even cross burning, if it's a matter of expressing political ideology, is protected by the First Amendment --

The Witness. Well, again --

Mr. Bishop. -- as long as it doesn't -- as long as it's not intended to intimidate a particular person?

The Witness. Again, I didn't read the case --

Mr. Bishop. Yeah.

The Witness. -- and the decision, so I --

Mr. Bishop. Are you aware of that generally?

The Witness. I am generally aware that there is some speech that can be considered hateful that is still legal under the First Amendment.

Mr. Bishop. Let me ask you, if I could, about exhibit 5.

So I understand that exhibit 5 refers to -- is your email correspondence with Ms. Wall --

Mr. Rybicki. Congressman, could you wait one second --

Mr. Bishop. Oh, sure.

Mr. Rybicki. -- while he locates the exhibit, please.

Mr. Bishop. Absolutely.

Mr. Rybicki. It's the big email exhibit.

The Witness. Yeah, okay. Go ahead, sir.

Mr. Bishop. So this is your email correspondence to Mary Wall at the -- she's with the Executive Office of the President? Is that what I understood?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Is that correct?

The Witness. She's a White House staffer.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. She's a White House staffer, and exhibit 5 is your email with her?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And it references, in the second full paragraph, says: "Attached please find an internal NSBA document detailing some of the publicly available information concerning threats to school board members and disruptions of meetings." That attachment doesn't actually appear in this exhibit, though, right?

The Witness. No, I don't see it here.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. But you go on beyond that sentence to list a number of things. Am I correct?

The Witness. You can see the narrative, yes.

Mr. Bishop. For example, you say: "In addition to this summary, I have also been personally informed about several incidents that are very concerning that I will share with you.

"In West Virginia, an individual showed up at a school board meeting and displayed pictures of a board member's young children taken at a camp in which they were not wearing masks. The individual had gone on to the school board member's personal Facebook page and captured the images of his children."

So that's one incident you relate.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Bishop. Do you contend that that sets forth a true threat?

The Witness. I took that as an example of someone in the public attempting to menace and intimidate a school board member. It might be legal. I was just trying to recount, this is the kind of thing that are happening.

That picture, this was a mom and dad, a dad serving on a school board, and their young children are being exploited by a member of the community.

I was trying to point out this is the kind of thing that was happening. I didn't say it was a violent threat, but I considered it concerning behavior.

Mr. Bishop. So, well, in that case then, were you trying to describe illegal conduct or not?

The Witness. I was describing what was happening at school boards.

Mr. Bishop. For the sake of asking the administration to intervene, right?

The Witness. I was trying to make the administration aware of the general ugly climate around school boards. And the reason -- look, the reason I included this particular incident was, one, I had personal knowledge of it.

I did not think it was close to the worst that I heard. But I was trying to set the stage that when you have things like that happening, they can escalate. That was my real concern, is over the escalation. And the escalation, sir, has continued to this day.

Mr. Bishop. Well, when you answered a moment ago, I understood you to testify that you were mindful of the fact that there are First Amendment rights and it's important to have input to school boards, for example.

The Witness. Of course.

Mr. Bishop. You mention that in the text of your letter, right?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. So you weren't looking to ask the administration to undertake action against people based on their exercising protected First Amendment rights, were you?

The Witness. No. And the letter doesn't state that.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. So wouldn't it then follow that the examples that you would cite would be examples of illegal conduct, not examples of rambunctious or unruly political speech?

The Witness. I cite -- the incident I cited in this email was to explain the ugliness that I was starting to see and explain that it can lead to potentially violent incidents.

Mr. Bishop. So as long as it was ugly, you were asking the administration to intercede based on ugliness, correct?

The Witness. I was -- no, that's not correct. I was asking the administration to help in regards to actual threats that could be a potential Federal law enforcement issue, or it could be a State issue but where the Federal Government could potentially work with local and State police, which they do all the time.

Mr. Bishop. So you did not attempt to limit yourself to reporting incidents that involved illegal conduct, threats, true threats?

The Witness. The incidents that we highlighted --

Mr. Bishop. Well, can you answer my question?

The Witness. Well, I'm trying to --

Mr. Bishop. You didn't attempt to limit yourself -- it's a very specific question -- you did not limit yourself to incidents that involved true threats or illegal conduct. Is that correct?

The Witness. We limited ourselves -- anything that was in the letter I considered an example of what was happening, the climate in the country. I didn't say every single incident in the letter was a violent threat in of itself.

We were trying to show there was a pattern occurring around the Nation. And why the incidents related to school board meetings were important was not that we were asking Federal Government to get involved in school board meetings -- again, we did not ask that.

We asked -- we were trying to point out, this is not a one-off. These things are happening everywhere. And often when you'd have a disturbance at a school board meeting, you would later then have follow-up threats on social media.

I cited earlier, and I can't remember if you were here, Clark County, Nevada, as an example. There was a cite around a school board meeting disruption.

But later I learned that that school board president, for example, had been threatened, and she publicly stated.

And so there was a lot of that undercurrent occurring in many of these situations.

Mr. Bishop. In this particular first example that you reported in the body of your email, where it said -- it describes that they were in West Virginia. Somebody came to a school board meeting with pictures of children of a school board member they had taken off her Facebook account, so apparently public, showing her kids not wearing masks.

Presumably that person was trying to make a point. Doesn't that appear likely to you?

The Witness. They were making a point, but they were using young, innocent children to make their point.

Mr. Bishop. I understand.

The Witness. And it could be -- it could be, depending on the circumstance, I wasn't at the meeting, but I will tell you the reaction from parents. I learned about it from the school board member, but I also saw it. I saw reactions to it on Facebook. That could certainly be potentially threatening. Again, it depends on the context.

Mr. Bishop. If the person was presenting the images from a Facebook account to say, "Your children aren't wearing masks, why are you imposing mask requirements on my children?" that would be a purely political -- that would be core First Amendment-protected speech, wouldn't it, sir?

The Witness. Again, it would depend on the context. I wasn't at the meeting.

Mr. Bishop. If it were disruptive or unpleasant, if it were political speech, that wouldn't matter, would it?

The Witness. Political speech is protected as long as it doesn't cross a line into threats.

Mr. Bishop. Okay.

The Witness. Violent threats.

Mr. Bishop. The next example you use right here is: "In Ohio, one school board has been facing large crowds attempting to block entry into meetings, screaming and sometimes spitting at the members, and keying their cars."

I see one act in there described that would be unlawful, and that would be keying cars. Isn't that true?

The Witness. There is another when they actually -- the letter that same school board we cited, it's the Worthington High School Board, and there was other -- were threats sent to them. The FBI, I was told, actually was involved in that case. I was just trying, again, to set the stage here for what we were seeing.

Mr. Bishop. Well, and I'm trying to distinguish in terms of what was in your mind.

If you had an attempt to -- or if you were attempting to communicate information that was illegal or information that was protected First Amendment activity, and I think I understand you're saying that you didn't really distinguish between the two, you were just trying to communicate what the circumstances were. Do I understand you correctly?

The Witness. I was trying to communicate the climate in the Nation at that time.

Mr. Bishop. Okay, a climate. You were asking them to react to a climate.

The Witness. I was asking -- I was setting -- again, I was setting the stage for the actual very serious incidents that were occurring and showing a pattern of disruption.

One of your colleagues earlier was asking me a question related to the first attack on the World Trade Center in the 1990s and the later attack and over the year -- you know, a long period of time. And his question to me was essentially: Isn't this kind of a short-term thing around COVID?

And I guess what we were trying to do was to set the stage that this is a growing threat. A year earlier, I wouldn't have thought of this being an issue, at least a major issue at all. It was just getting worse and worse and worse, and there were assaults going on.

And I will be honest, one of the things I always worry about is someone getting in a meeting, and they have no intention when they went in to do something, but they lose their temper. And we saw this, we saw people grabbing and punching. But what if they have a gun or a knife and they take it a step further?

And then you have someone who might be planning something.

Mr. Bishop. Three sentences on -- and you made reference to this a couple times in your testimony -- you said: "That there are also reports of Proud Boys showing up at various school board meetings and teaming up with anti-maskers."

Now, I'll stop there. The rest of that sentence doesn't end there.

So what were you intending to communicate to the administration in this request for Federal intervention that was precipitated by reports of Proud Boys showing up at various school boards?

The Witness. The triggering event that -- the final event, essentially, in which I decided that I thought we needed to ask for Federal assistance and I directed a letter be sent occurred on September the 8th. And it was a Politico article that I had been interviewed for weeks earlier, and it came out, just happened to come out that day.

And I read that day that there had been an increased police presence in New Hampshire, I don't remember the district, because Proud Boy members had been -- started showing up and people felt intimidated.

I then researched more about -- I found that concerning right off the top because they do have a history of violent activity -- and then I did a little research that day on my own, and I discovered that in Vancouver, Washington, several schools were shut down because a group of Proud Boys marched on the school.

And, fortunately, it didn't lead to violence, it certainly could've, and it disrupted learning for the day and --

Mr. Bishop. You took a First Amendment class in law school?

The Witness. Yes, I did.

Mr. Bishop. Do you remember the case about Skokie, Illinois, and the march of the Ku Klux Klan?

The Witness. Yeah. I don't recall them entering a school though.

Mr. Bishop. Say it again.

The Witness. I don't believe they entered a public school.

Mr. Bishop. This was a school board meeting that you refer to.

The Witness. Okay. Well, this was an email. I'm just referring to the group itself.

Mr. Bishop. Are you under the impression that -- well, if the KKK decided to show up at a school board meeting, would that be cause for Federal law enforcement intervention?

The Witness. Showing up? No.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. Well, why then the Proud Boys if not the KKK?

The Witness. The Proud Boys had marched on a school. The Proud Boys have a long history of violence.

Mr. Bishop. Well, you didn't say that here. You said reports of the Proud Boys showing up at various school board meetings.

The Witness. If they're showing up with the intent to intimidate and harass people, that could be a crime.

Mr. Bishop. Really?

The Witness. Not necessarily every time, but it could be.

Mr. Bishop. How about the next one, meaning the next clause. It says: "QAnon followers now considering running for school board elections and becoming more interested in school boards."

Why did you recite that?

The Witness. Well, they're perfectly welcome to run for school boards, but what was more concerning was that the QAnon movement was starting to focus on schools.

And having been someone that lived down the street from the Comet pizza shop that got shot up a number of years earlier, I worry about certain ideologies getting involved in schools and if someone shows up at a local school thinking they're freeing children, or thinking someone there -- it's just concerning.

There have been a lot of violent threats, unfortunately, committed by some of the believers in that movement.

Mr. Bishop. Who?

The Witness. You'd have to go through the research, but I know there --

Mr. Bishop. When?

The Witness. It's been publicly reported.

Mr. Bishop. If that's so, why didn't you recite that in this paragraph?

The Witness. Because I was writing this to just try and quickly give information to a staffer who had requested some examples.

Mr. Bishop. But as you requested it, you cited the fact that QAnon followers, whoever that is, becoming more interested in school boards and running for school board elections, you included that in a list of what you purported to be grounds for Federal law enforcement intervention in a nationwide -- with a nationwide scope, right?

The Witness. Let me just -- give me a second to review my -- okay, what I said was, if you look up in the beginning of the document, I said: "In addition to this summary, I've also been personally informed about several incidents that are very concerning."

So I didn't ask for Federal law enforcement in this sentence. I was just offering an opinion that I am concerned over the trends that we are seeing.

Again, running for school board, absolutely, they can run for school board if they want. But it concerns me, though, that that movement is -- that, again, has some violent tendencies.

Mr. Bishop. Well, Mr. Slaven, with all due respect, on the very next page of your email you go on to request quite a lot. You requested a joint expedited review by the U.S. Departments of Justice, Education, and Homeland Security with appropriate training, coordination, investigations, and enforcement mechanisms from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, including any technical assistance necessary from, and state and local coordination with its National Security Branch and Counterterrorism Division, as well as any other federal agency with relevant jurisdictional authority and oversight.

And I haven't even gotten to the good stuff yet. You were asking for -- you were asking for that predicated on stuff like appears in your first full paragraph about these incidents. Isn't that right?

The Witness. I'm asking for help around violent threats.

Let me be very clear. You know, you go to law school, one of the first things you learn in criminal law is what is your intent, what's your mens rea, the Latin term they use.

My intent here was to prevent violence or threats of violence. That was my intent. But that doesn't -- you know, by setting the stage, though, for explaining that things are escalating, potentially. And I think that's what we were attempting to do.

And so my intent -- my intent -- let me -- please let me finish this, it's very important -- was to -- I was simply trying to do my job, sir. And I believe when you are put in a leadership position -- and I was put in the CEO position before they even -- they didn't even ask me if I wanted to serve, they just named me, and I agreed to do it after that.

But I felt great responsibility as someone leading an organization that had school board members who then represented local schools. I think when you learn of potential troubling information, you are obligated to report it. And so that's what I was attempting to do.

Mr. Bishop. Whether it's lawful or not?

The Witness. I was attempting to ask them to intervene when it was unlawful.

Mr. Bishop. But you reported a lot of stuff that was lawful.

The Witness. Well, if you look at the actual letter, you'll see in the first paragraph that I made it very clear that protected speech was vital and communication was vital between public school boards and the community.

Mr. Bishop. You're not suggesting, are you, sir, that all of the incidents that are footnoted in your September 29th letter constitute true threats?

The Witness. And we didn't say -- we were -- again, we were highlighting incidents that were occurring.

Mr. Bishop. Before I leave this exhibit 5, let me go on to this next paragraph. [redacted] was asking you about it.

It says: "Additionally, NSBA is interested in a review of appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the Gun-Free School Zones Act, the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism, Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act, Violent Interference with Federally Protected Rights statute, Conspiracy Against Rights statute" -- I'm going to pause there because I want to come back to the executive order later.

What predicate were you suggesting would support an evaluation of the application of the PATRIOT Act in regard to domestic terrorism?

The Witness. This section referred to potential Federal crimes that could be violated. It says, again, if you look, if you read the exact language, it says, "against these crimes." So if there's something recounted in a letter than isn't a crime, we're not talking about that.

Mr. Bishop. Well, which ones, go back and tell me from the front, which ones are a crime that warrant the application of the PATRIOT Act?

The Witness. Well, this isn't the letter, so --

Mr. Bishop. Well, I didn't ask you about the letter. I asked you about this email.

The Witness. Well, I -- and I would have to go back and say potentially the crime of Proud Boys marching on a school could be a crime.

Mr. Bishop. Can you tell me what crime that is?

The Witness. Marching on a school? Entering a school during school operations?

Mr. Bishop. Well, it doesn't mention that anywhere.

The Witness. Well, that was my -- again, you have to understand what my intent was.

Mr. Bishop. So you're asking the White House to engage over this. The conduct that you described as the predicate for that is what you recite in your first full paragraph. I don't know what was listed in the egregious list that was attached to this, of course.

But just looking at the paragraph where you recited specific instances, please testify, tell us, which ones you look at now and say, well, that's what warranted my request for the application of the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism.

The Witness. This isn't the request, number one.

Number two --

Mr. Rybicki. What are you referring to?

The Witness. This, this email that you're referring to, this is not the official request. This is an email telling them we may be asking for help. And then it highlights bullets that, at that point in time, a snapshot of the moment, we were considering.

You will note, I made it very clear, I'll read it just to make sure I get my exact legal writing: "Please bear in mind the letter is not final, and we are still vetting."

And so this was not meant to be a final document. This was meant to say: We may write a letter and it may include some of these things.

And then the above is just me giving some personal observations. I don't claim that there are -- that I'm -- this is it, this is the list.

Mr. Bishop. So right now I'm interested in asking you about your exhibit 5 -- or the exhibit 5, your email. And, again, where I was reading from the second page, it says: "Additionally, NSBA is interested in a review of appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence." And then it lists all the statutes that you believe are applicable.

And what I'm asking you is, these crimes and acts of violence presumably refer what you're talking about in this letter, correct?

The Witness. No, that's not correct. I was referring --

Mr. Bishop. What does it refer to then?

The Witness. It was referring to what was going to be in the actual letter. And it wasn't -- and every incident in the letter, we did not say it was necessarily a crime. Again, I think communicating what we were trying to set is very important.

Mr. Bishop. Let me ask you to look at your letter of September 29th. I think it's marked as exhibit No. 2.

[redacted] No. We're going to enter it as exhibit No. 16.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Bishop. No. 16.

Look at page 2 at the first -- the full paragraph at the bottom -- or the paragraph at the bottom of page 2.

It says: "As these acts of malice, violence, and threats against public school officials have increased, the classification of these heinous actions could be the equivalent to a form of domestic terrorism and hate crimes.

"As such, NSBA requests a joint expedited review by the U.S. Departments of Justice, Education, and Homeland Security, along with the appropriate training, coordination, investigations, and enforcement mechanisms from the FBI, including any technical assistance necessary from, and state and local coordination with, its National Security Branch and Counterterrorism Division, as well as any other federal agency with relevant jurisdictional authority and oversight."

I read that correctly, right?

The Witness. I believe so.

Mr. Bishop. And that language is substantially duplicative of the language that's in your exhibit -- that was in exhibit 5.

The Witness. Very similar, yes.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. So whatever became final was very similar to what was listed in -- or what was written in your email.

So refer to either one. Refer to the ones you list in exhibit 5 or refer to any of the footnotes and tell me which one of those things justified the application of the PATRIOT Act with respect to domestic terrorism.

The Witness. The incidents that were recorded in the letter were meant to demonstrate the growing concerns that we had. There were criminal incidents mentioned in the letter, and there were other incidents that were disruptions in the letter.

We were not asking for any Federal intervention that was inappropriate. And you do expect that the Federal law enforcement would know what was appropriate and not appropriate.

We were reporting on publicly available information. We, frankly, probably could've offered even more examples that got more specific.

But the point was we weren't in a vacuum on this, Congressman. This was occurring regularly. Everyone in the education community was seeing these incidents. We were hearing about them.

A death threat to a child should be -- we should all agree that that's inappropriate and is not protected speech. Those types of things were happening.

So they may not all be listed in our letter, but that doesn't mean they didn't not occur.

Mr. Bishop. If there's a death threat to a child, why didn't you list that as your predicate for asking for Federal action?

The Witness. You know, I don't know why we didn't list every incident like that. But the fact that that existed, and our job wasn't to lay out every single incident for the Federal Government. Our job is to point out, we believe --

Mr. Bishop. Of course not.

The Witness. -- we believe, sir, that these incidents are occurring. I'm writing this letter asking you, Federal law enforcement, are we right, are we correct. And if we're correct, then you should -- here are some of the Federal laws that may be applicable. There was probably others as well.

But there's a pivotal word that you really need to make sure you note, and that's the word "could." I didn't say -- I didn't say "all." We didn't say all of the incidents we recounted here. We just -- we used the term that some incidents occurring in the country could be the equivalent.

Mr. Bishop. Do you think that that is an adequate excuse for having asked the Federal law enforcement across the Federal enterprise to engage over threats to school boards, that you said "could"?

The Witness. The job of Federal law enforcement, or any law enforcement, is to investigate a potential threat. I think that is what we were asking for. And if there was an actual threat that reached the level of Federal involvement, then we were asking for their help.

We were also asking for them to coordinate with local and State police. We were asking them to help local schools. Tell us there isn't a threat. I would -- I mean, if that -- if there really wasn't a threat then -- the threat assessment was the most important thing we were asking for.

Mr. Bishop. Can you -- so, again, I'm going to take you back. You answered a different question than I asked. But I want to ask you again, can you point to all of the incidents, either in your email, exhibit No. 5, or in your September 29th letter, which I think was exhibit 12 -- no -- exhibit --

[redacted] Sixteen.

Mr. Bishop. -- exhibit 16 for the record, can you point to those things that you can say here today involve a true threat or illegal conduct?

The Witness. The Worthington High School Board incident I referred to where the threatening note was sent certainly could've. As I learned later, there was way more to that than just the one communication I had learned about. And I was told -- I don't know this for a fact -- but I was told that the FBI, in fact, was involved in that incident. I don't know what the result was. They oftentimes don't -- they investigate something, and they reach a certain point, and they don't take it any further, or it remains open and we may never know the result.

Mr. Bishop. What else besides the Worthington, Ohio --

The Witness. That's the best example I can give.

Mr. Bishop. Well, I'd like all of the examples that you can recite.

The Witness. I can't recite every footnote off the top of my head, sir.

Mr. Bishop. You certainly have the -- you can refer to the exhibit. You can refer to -- so you don't have to do it off the top of your head. You've got -- let me ask this question.

Presumably in your final letter, in the September 29th letter, you wouldn't have listed the least egregious incidents, would you?

The Witness. Congressman --

Mr. Bishop. Will you answer my question?

The Witness. Well, I'm trying to answer your question.

What we were trying to do was set a stage and --

Mr. Bishop. Yeah, but you're answering stuff, you're going on --

The Witness. Frankly -- well, I'm getting into the incidents.

Mr. Bishop. Well, hold on just a second. Let me withdraw the question. I'll ask it again or try and ask it differently, making sure it's clear.

You include in your September 29th letter 24 footnotes. Do you remember that?

The Witness. That sounds right.

Mr. Bishop. And you can look at it. Do you have it in front of you?

The Witness. Yes, I have the footnotes.

Mr. Bishop. Will you verify that? There are 24 footnotes.

The Witness. Is this out of order?

Mr. Bishop. Is your copy out of order?

The Witness. Oh, no, wait, I'm sorry. I just couldn't see the last number. It looks like there's 24, yes.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And most of those -- most of what is cited in footnotes are media reports. Isn't that correct?

The Witness. Many of them are.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. When you compiled this letter or approved its authorship, you were trying to make your case that this warranted the intervention of Federal law enforcement, correct?

The Witness. I was trying to make the case that Federal law enforcement may need to intervene. They certainly needed to be aware of it.

Mr. Bishop. So if you were doing that, it would stand to reason, would it not, that the incidents you would recite in your footnotes were the most egregious that you were aware of.

The Witness. I think at the time that we were putting the letter together I didn't expect the reaction I would get to sort of this parsing of the various incidents to this degree.

And, again, I don't think you were here earlier, I talked about why some of these incidents were included. Part of what we were trying to show, that there were constant disruptions occurring around school boards in which they couldn't do their job, they had to stop meetings, which is bad for everyone.

Mr. Bishop. So are you saying that you would not include the most egregious incidents in your letter?

The Witness. I would include them. But, again, Congressman, this wasn't a book report or a test. We were just trying to give a sampling and say: FBI or Justice Department, please go look further into what's happening across the Nation.

This was not meant to be every incident in the Nation. We were trying to call out bad -- what we thought could be bad activity occurring. We wanted them to investigate.

If they came back and said, "You know what, Chip, you've overreacted in your letter," I would've said, "Well, we were concerned, but thank you." That's not the reaction they gave. And I think that's really an important distinction here.

Mr. Bishop. But you've testified that it was also a concern of yours not to sic law enforcement on people for engaging in protected First Amendment activity.

The Witness. And we didn't ask them to do that.

Mr. Bishop. And that was in your mind, right?

The Witness. It was absolutely not in my mind to do that, and it's not what our letter does, in my opinion. And you can have a different opinion.

Mr. Bishop. So which of the 24 footnotes cite conduct that you believe makes it appropriate to consider application of the PATRIOT Act for domestic terrorism?

The Witness. I'm not going to parse which section of the PATRIOT Act might be appropriate because I haven't read it in a long time.

What I would say, again, is we were trying to set a stage for what we believed may be occurring across the country.

And part of the reason why you would ask Federal or in some cases State law enforcement to get involved is they do have access to information and intelligence-gathering that we don't have at the National School Boards Association.

Mr. Bishop. Well, if you know what's going on across the country were nothing more than First Amendment speech, you agree, wouldn't you, that it would be wrongful for the National Association of School Boards to ask for Federal law enforcement intervention?

A And if you will -- the National School Boards didn't make that request --

Mr. Bishop. Okay.

The Witness. -- around protected speech.

So, yes, I would agree, any -- if it's a legitimate protected speech activity, whether you agree with it or you don't agree with it, you should be -- that's something that is constitutionally protected.

And I said that publicly, by the way, on numerous occasions that summer when we were being asked about all these incidents occurring.

Mr. Bishop. As you look back at your list in the email that is marked as exhibit 5, your list of statutes you thought might be applicable, would you concede at this point that that seems a bit extravagant?

The Witness. Well, I could've just simply said look at Title 19 -- or 18 of the U.S. Criminal Code. The reason they --

Mr. Bishop. No, I didn't ask what you could've said. I asked you, do you look at that list of statutes you specified and legal remedies and would you concede that it is extravagant?

The Witness. I would say it's detailed.

Mr. Bishop. Detailed? You still believe it's an appropriate list of --

The Witness. If there's a crime that's been committed and if applicable under one of those laws, then it's appropriate. If not, then, no, it's not appropriate.

Mr. Bishop. Well, let me ask you this question. You wouldn't call the police department or 911 in your community and report that there may be activity going on that could constitute a crime, you don't know. You call them if you know there's something that's wrong that requires law enforcement attention because it's illegal. Isn't that right?

The Witness. It depends. So if you see activity, like, you could call 911 and report something you think could be a crime, and you could say: I'm not sure. This might be harmless, but I'm concerned. It looks like someone's on my neighbor's property who's not supposed to be there.

And then it turns out it was the neighbor. They just didn't recognize them, they were wearing a hat.

And so you report things -- it's sort of -- I go back to, if you know something, say something. If it turns out you're wrong, you're wrong. If someone honestly thinks there is going to be something bad happening here or could be happening, I think you're obligated to report it.

If law enforcement investigates it and it turns out it's not appropriate, then it's not appropriate, or you were mistaken.

If you intentionally now submit a false statement, then, sure, that's a whole different incident than saying I want you to look at what's happening and you tell us if something is going on.

[1:23 p.m.]

Mr. Bishop. In your interactions with Ms. Wall or anyone else on behalf of the administration about this subject matter, did she or such other person ever explain to you that Federal law enforcement activity would not be appropriate insofar as people are engaged in First Amendment activity?

The Witness. I never spoke with anyone after I sent the letter until I got a call from the Department of Justice telling me that they were sending out a press release and a memo, and that was the extent of the call. Nothing further.

Mr. Bishop. So they never --

The Witness. I didn't know what they were doing. I had no concept of what was going on.

Mr. Bishop. So no one in the administration ever engaged with you to clarify whether you were reporting true threats or people engaging in First Amendment protected activity, correct?

The Witness. Again, I didn't have any communications over the letter from the time I sent it, other than the emails that are available prior to a phone call that I just mentioned. And so, we didn't have discussions one way or another.

And, again, though, we're a private organization, you know, a nonprofit -- education nonprofit. You know, we're allowed, under the First Amendment, by the way -- this letter is very much a protected document as well. You know, I'm allowed to express an opinion. The organization is allowed to express an opinion. You can disagree with it all you want. And again, that's fine. But, you know, I have a right to write a government official without the government official correcting me.

Now, if they later want to say, We disagree with you, they can, or if they agree with you, they can.

Mr. Bishop. You're actually quite wrong. You do not have a legal right to express -- to report activity that is perfectly legal and request law enforcement activity, but let me --

Mr. Rybicki. Okay. I want to limit this to questions, not conversations.

Mr. Bishop. You're LinkedIn resume says: Moreover, I worked on a successful gubernatorial campaign, four congressional races, and comanaged a successful mayor's race while still in college.

For whose gubernatorial campaign did you work?

The Witness. Bob Wise.

Mr. Bishop. And was he a Democrat or a Republican?

The Witness. He's a Democrat.

Mr. Bishop. What four congressional races did you work on?

The Witness. He was a Member of Congress prior to that.

Mr. Bishop. What four congressional races did you work on?

The Witness. His congressional races.

Mr. Bishop. All right. What other -- oh, all four of his?

The Witness. They were all -- yeah, they were all his. I worked for one Democratic congressman.

Mr. Bishop. All right. And the successful mayor was also him?

The Witness. No.

Mr. Bishop. Who was the successful mayor?

The Witness. Her name was Charlene Marshall. She was an employee at West Virginia University who ran -- she was the first African-American woman in the history of West Virginia to become the mayor. And I was a young college student with a friend of mine, and we wanted to help her.

Mr. Bishop. Republican or Democrat?

The Witness. She -- I don't believe they ran in a partisan race. Those elections were nonpartisan, municipal races.

Mr. Bishop. Do you know whether she was Republican or Democrat?

The Witness. She -- I believe she is -- well, she's a Democrat. I know that from later elections.

Mr. Bishop. What employment did you have between your undergraduate graduation and law school?

The Witness. I spent 12 years working either in campaigns or as a congressional staffer or on a Governor's race, and then in the Governor's office. It's what -- basically what you just outlined.

Mr. Bishop. In the opinion that the United States Supreme Court issued in Mahanoy Area School District on June 23, 2021, that I made reference to earlier, Justice Breyer wrote this: "Third, the school itself has an interest in protecting a student's unpopular expression, especially when the expression takes place off campus. America's public schools are the nurseries of democracy. Our representative democracy only works if we protect the marketplace of ideas. This free exchange facilitates an informed public opinion which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the people's will. That protection must include the protection of unpopular ideas, for popular ideas have less need for protection. Thus, schools have a strong interest in ensuring that future generations understand the workings and practice of the well-known aphorism, I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

Do you agree with the sentiment that Justice Breyer expressed there?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Do you think that's a value that the National Association of School Boards should embrace as much as concern over threats?

The Witness. Well, the National School Boards Association has their own particular position. You asked my personal opinion. I agree with that.

Mr. Bishop. Do you think the National Association of School Boards in the actions it takes should embrace that sentiment as well?

The Witness. I think free speech should always be embraced.

Mr. Bishop. Thank you.

Chairman Jordan. How much time do we have?

[redacted] One minute.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Slaven, when is the last time you had communication with Ms. Wall?

The Witness. It was -- I don't remember the exact date, to be perfectly honest. It was sometime after the letter and before I left the NSBA, which I recounted earlier was -- Chairman Jordan. When was that communication?

The Witness. I believe I --

Chairman Jordan. It was after the letter and after --

The Witness. After the letter was submitted, correct, and -- Chairman Jordan. And before the memorandum --

The Witness. -- before I left.

Chairman Jordan. Well, that's a big span.

The Witness. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. I mean, was it October or November? You left in November, right?

The Witness. I left in November. I can't remember the specific dates. So I will tell you that she emailed me at some point the week after the letter came out, one or two emails. There were -- we had one or two phone calls that were mostly about other things. There were other pandemic-related things, vaccination issues. We would -- the letter came up a few times.

And then I recall leaving her a voicemail at one point, but I don't think she called me back.

Chairman Jordan. Was that in October or November?

The Witness. I'm not sure. It could have been late October, early November. I don't recall, though.

Chairman Jordan. Are you familiar with the report that Michael Best and Friedrich, LLP, did the final report on the events surrounding the National School Boards Association December 9th letter?

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. What did they get out of the report?

The Witness. I thought the underlying conclusion that determined that there was no direct or indirect evidence that the Biden administration had solicited the letter was absolutely correct. There were other issues in the report --

Chairman Jordan. I request to reclaim my time.

The Witness. There were other issues in the report that I didn't necessarily think were the best.

Chairman Jordan. Say again?

The Witness. There were other areas of the report that I didn't think they addressed that accurately.

Chairman Jordan. I'll ask about that next time.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 1:40 in the afternoon, and we can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q All right. Thank you again.

A Thank you.

Q I want to just touch briefly on the conversation that we were just having.

Mr. Slaven, is the -- you said earlier that you were just doing your job, I think, in response to one of the questions.

Is the National School Boards Association a Federal Government agency?

A No, it's not.

Q Is it a State government agency?

A No.

Q Is it a law enforcement agency?

A No.

Q Okay. And you, yourself, are not a Federal official, correct?

A No. I was at one time when I worked for Congress, when I worked for a U.S. Attorney, but that was a long time ago. I'm a private citizen and was then as well.

Q Okay. And you are not and were not representing a Federal agency, right?

A Correct, I was not representing a Federal agency.

Q So you were essentially advocating for the NSBA member organizations, correct?

A That is correct.

Q And you were asking for help?

A That's also correct.

Q And you were asking for help on behalf of those members?

A Yes.

Q And on behalf of the schools that they worked for?

A Yes.

Q And presumably, on behalf of the parents that were sending their children to those schools?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q And the children in those schools as well?

A Also, yes.

Q Okay. Do you think that in your experience when people call the police for assistance, they are always aware that a crime -- what the actual crime is that's been committed or if a crime has been committed?

A I think that often people think a crime is being committed or are concerned one may be committed. It turns out later, no, it wasn't, but they had a reason to call at the time.

Q Okay. And is there -- to your knowledge, is there any constitutional, for example, limit on when somebody may call law enforcement to ask for assistance?

A As long as you're not reporting -- making a false statement, I think, yeah, you can call. And I think they encourage you to call, in fact, even if it turns out not to be anything later.

Q And we went through kind of exhaustively all of the examples listed in the NSBA's letter. Were any of those false? In other words, were any of the items listed in that not true?

A They were all publicly reported media things. So they were all, to the best of my knowledge, true at the time they were printed in the letter.

Q And you were relying on the fact that the media had reported them to say that they were true?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q I mean, as far as you know, they were real incidents?

A Yes.

Q So you didn't submit anything false?

A No.

Q And -- yeah.

I think there was a statement made that you do not have the legal right to raise concerns about legal activity.

Do you agree with that statement?

A I didn't completely understand it at the time, but I believe everything that I said in that letter I had a right to say under the First Amendment.

Q Okay. And you are -- again, you are not a law enforcement official, and you didn't have the ability, for example, to pick up the phone, call, and send in police?

A Right. No, I didn't have that power. I just had the power to point out I had concerns.

Q Okay. I'm going to turn back to the email between you and Ms. Wall.

I'm sorry I have too many exhibits.

Mr. Rybicki. This is exhibit 5?

[redacted] Yeah. Yes, exhibit 5.

BY [redacted]

Q So in her email to you dated September 21, 2021, time stamped

10:10 p.m. -- it's on the second page --

A Yes.

Q -- she said: "I'm meeting with colleagues from other White House offices and DOJ tomorrow morning" --

A Yeah.

Q -- "to see if there might be any options we can pursue here, so if you have any concrete recommendations in your letter (e.g., the threat assessment you mentioned), would be good to know so I can include in discussions."

She said -- she specifically mentioned the threat assessment you mentioned, right?

A Yes.

Q And she didn't mention -- she didn't refer to any particular acts or laws that might come into play, correct?

A Right. She just asked about the threat assessment.

Q And I know we have been over this a couple of times, but can you explain again what your understanding of a threat assessment is?

A A threat assessment is when law enforcement or intelligence potentially, depending on what it is -- could be local, State, or Federal level -- but they look at, you know, a particular situation and gather is there a threat here.

And they sometimes will say, No, we don't think there is. Other times they're like, Well, there is a threat, or somewhere it's in the middle where we're reaching the point where it could become a threat.

So that they can analyze, they use a variety of sources. They reach out to local police and say, Is this happening in your neighborhood? They look at the media. They look at their database to see if they have been having calls coming in.

And so, I think it's a wide ranging -- they ask groups, Are you concerned? And we saw this, I think, with the airline industry when there were a lot of incidents occurring on planes --

Q And the --

A -- as an example. And I know a letter was sent, frankly, then, by one of the organizations, which, frankly, I think spurred this in my mind that maybe we should follow a similar pursuit.

Q So a threat assessment, to your understanding, is not a Federal investigation in terms of it's not -- you know, it's not like the FBI opens a case file on something?

A Correct. There could be case files that impact the threat assessment, of course. But, yeah, is there a potential problem here? That's really what we were -- and that's what we were asking for.

Q Okay. And in this email, this 10:10 p.m. email from Mary Wall, she asks to see -- she said they're looking at options that we can pursue. So it doesn't necessarily -- she doesn't say we will pursue, correct?

A Yeah. To me it sounded like it was going to be brought up in a meeting and they were going to talk about it.

Q Okay. And it said include in -- she said include in discussions. She didn't say that there would be any action item leading off of that?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. So you have this back-and-forth, and you provide -- you sent her your response.

I want to note that, I think, about halfway down, I think this was read out, but the full phrase wasn't set out. So I just want to read it into the record: "In Ohio, one school board has been facing large crowds attempting to block entry into meetings, screaming and sometimes spitting at the members and keying their cars. That same board has also received a letter sent with a fake address claiming they would be coming after the board and will make them pay dearly.

Did you interpret that as a death threat?

A I interpreted that it could be with additional information. And I think we talked about this earlier. I definitely believe it was something that law enforcement should be reported about, and then maybe it's illegal or maybe it's not, depending on the context. But I considered -- I thought it was very concerning.

Q Okay. So you sent this to Ms. Wall. And after that, you didn't hear anything further from her?

A That's correct. The next time there was any communication was when I copied her on the message, the actual letter.

Q Okay. So prior to the -- so outside of these -- and I think it's a total of three email threads, one group call, and one one-to-one call with her, you didn't have any interactions with anyone at the White House prior to actually hitting send on the letter?

A Not prior to hitting send on the letter, that's correct.

Q And you never specifically discussed the -- I'm sorry.

During those interactions, do you recall if the name "Terry McAuliffe" was ever mentioned by anyone in the executive branch?

A No. And I don't know why it would have been. And, again, Mary Wall is the only person I discussed the letter with, in any way, during this period of time prior to it, again, being formally sent.

Q So I want to take another look at the letter and also the subsequent Attorney General's memo here.

So I want to look back at the September 29th letter again that is -- I'm not sure what it's marked.

Mr. [redacted]. 16.

BY [redacted]

Q Exhibit 16. Can you take a look through it and let me know if the word "parent" is ever included in that letter.

A Well, I'm glad to look through it, but I've looked many times to make sure. The word "parent" isn't in the letter. The word "parents," plural, is not in the letter. The word "father" or "dad" is not in the letter, and the word "mother" or "mom" is not in the letter. Grandmother is the only reference to a family member. And, again, it was about a student who was verbally attacked while talking about his grandmother who had died.

Q Okay. Does the letter ever use the word "intervention"?

A I've got to go back and look there.

Q Okay.

A Yes. On page 5, bottom paragraph, the last line reads: "However, with such acute threats and actions that are disruptive to our students' well-being, to the safety of public school officials and personnel, and to interstate commerce, we urge the Federal Government's intervention against individuals or hate groups who are targeting our schools and educators."

And preceding that was actually a sentence I think focusing on the importance of transparency and public discourse, which would be free speech protected.

Q Okay. So the only time it uses the word "intervention" is with reference to people who are specifically targeting schools and educators, and it does not say intervention against parents, correct?

A Correct. And we weren't talking about political targeting.

Q Okay.

A We were talking about violent targeting.

Q So to the extent that anyone is claiming that the letter asked the White House or Federal agents or anyone else to intervene and use Federal law enforcement tools against parents, that's somebody else's language, correct?

That's not language that's in the letter?

A That's absolutely correct. And when I first heard the claim about parents, I had to go and say, What did we say about parents? I don't remember talking about parents. They weren't the focus.

Q And, in fact, school board is only mentioned a couple of times of in here, correct?

A I don't remember how many, but several times. We were talking about -- we talked about teachers, as I recall. We talked about students, yeah.

Q It was much broader than school boards and certainly much broader than school board meetings?

A Exactly.

Q Okay.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. And it was much broader than simply parents at school board meetings?

The Witness. It was, yes, yes, sir. It was individuals who may be causing a problem. Whether they were a parent or not didn't matter.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. You don't -- you didn't know whether or not all of these threats that were coming in and taking place at meetings were from parents or just individuals from the community?

The Witness. That's absolutely correct. And, in fact, I don't recall people referring to these as parent protests in any manner. They might have, you know, but I don't recall if that -- it certainly wasn't how I was thinking about it. Because if that was the issue, I would have gone to the National PTA and talked with them about the situation.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. And I didn't identify myself. I'm sorry. I'm Congressman Hank Johnson.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to introduce into the record as number 17, exhibit 17, an article entitled "Posts Mischaracterize School Board Organization's Letter to Biden." This is a letter dated October 5, 2021.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this article before?

A I have seen this, yes.

Q Okay. So this article assesses as false the claim that the National School Boards Association asked the Biden administration to label parents who protest at school board meetings as domestic terrorists.

Do you agree with that assessment?

A I absolutely agree with that assessment. That's a false claim.

Q I want to introduce next as exhibit 18, something that's been talked about a little bit but not actually introduced. And this is the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is entitled "Partnership Among Federal, State, Local, Tribal, and Territorial Law Enforcement to Address Threats Against School Administrators, Board Members, Teachers, and Staff." This is a one-page memorandum that the Attorney General issued on October 4, 2021.

Have you seen this memo before today?

A Yes, I have.

Q Okay. I'll give you a minute to review it, and then I'm going to ask you if the word "parent" appears in the memorandum.

A Well, I've read it before, and I know that the word "parent" doesn't appear in it.

Q Okay. What about the phrase, "school board meetings"?

A Again, I don't see anything about school board meetings. I see a reference to board members, as well as school administrators, teachers, and staff. And it says specifically to facilitate discussion of strategies for addressing threats.

Q Yeah. Do the words "National Security Division" appear in the memo?

A Not that I'm seeing, no.

Q And what about counterterrorism?

A No, I don't see that word in here.

Q Okay. So I want to actually place the September 29th letter and the October 4th memo side by side and go through them a little bit.

A Sure.

Q Your letter asks the administration to conduct a review to examine appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism.

Now, the Attorney General's memo does not refer to the PATRIOT Act, correct?

A That's correct. It does not refer to the PATRIOT Act.

Q Okay. So you were asked earlier if you had gotten any feedback about your letter asking for things that were not able to be delivered. Would you say a memo publicly posted from the Attorney General that does not incorporate your request could be feedback that they did not agree with your suggestion?

A I think it suggests that that's not what they were focused on and -- yeah.

Q Okay. I want to introduce into the record as exhibit 18 -- 19 -- I'm sorry -- the official transcript from the Attorney General's October 2l, 2021 testimony before the House Judiciary Committee. I'm going to include these pages and the first page of the transcript so it's complete. We're not introducing the whole transcript because I think it's 581 pages long, and that seems absurd.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 19

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Can you turn to page 31, please, and read the highlighted below that which is the Attorney General's response-- that.

A Sure. "And I want to be clear, the Justice Department supports and defends the First Amendment right of parents to complain as vociferously as they wish about the education of their children, about the curriculum taught in the schools.

"That is not what the memorandum is about at all, nor does it use the words 'domestic terrorism' or 'PATRIOT Act.' Like you, I can't imagine any circumstance in which the PATRIOT Act would be used in the circumstances of parents complaining about their children, nor can I imagine a circumstance where they would be labeled as domestic terrorism."

Q So the Attorney General actively declined to pursue the recommendation about the PATRIOT Act, correct?

A In this context, yes, yes. And, again, we were only suggesting that --

Q Right.

A -- there could be an incident --

Q Exactly.

A -- that would lead to --

Q You made a recommendation?

A Yes.

Q And he said he couldn't see a world in which that would apply?

A Yes.

Q So that's feedback to your letter that he didn't agree with your letter?

A Yes. And he's, I believe, talking about protected First Amendment speech, and I would agree with that assessment completely.

Q And he said he couldn't imagine a circumstance in which parental protest would be labeled as domestic terrorism, correct?

A Yes, correct.

Q Okay. I want to introduce pages 9 and 21 from the proquest transcript of the Attorney General's October 27th testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee. This is October 27, 2021, before the Senate Judiciary Committee, and this is exhibit 20.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 20

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So on page 9 -- and this is the proquest transcript because the official transcript is not yet available.

On page 9, Senator Grassley notes that the National School Boards Association apologized for the September 29th letter, then asks: "So, you're going to keep your memo going anyway, right? Is that what you're telling me?"

Could you please read the highlighted below that which is the Attorney General's response?

A Yes.

Merrick Garland: "Senator, I have the letter from NSBA that you're referring to. It apologizes for language in the letter, but it continues its concern about the safety of school officials and school staff. The language in the letter that they disavow is language was never included in my memo and never would have been. I did not adopt every concern that they had in their letter.

"I adopted only the concern about violence and threats of violence, and that hasn't changed."

Q So your letter listed a whole lot of incidents, but he specifically said that he only was concerned about the violence, the threats of violence, and actual acts of violence, correct?

A That's correct. And that's what we wanted him to focus on.

Q Okay. So -- and the Attorney General's memo doesn't actually use the term "intervention," correct?

A Not that I saw.

Q Do you want to go back and take a look?

A Well, a very quick read, but, no, I don't see it here.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So, in fact, the only actual action item in that Attorney General's memorandum is in the fourth paragraph in which the Attorney General says he is directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation and U.S. Attorney's offices to, quote, "convene meetings," end quote, with State and local law enforcement and to, quote, "facilitate the discussion of strategies for addressing threats against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff, and will open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting assessment and response."

Mr. Slaven, I would like you to turn to page 69 of the House Judiciary testimony, which should be attached as the second page of this.

Mr. Rybicki. So now you're back to exhibit 19?

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Rybicki. Okay.

[redacted] And there should be one line highlighted.

[Counsel conferring with witness.]

The Witness. Okay. Go ahead.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you read the highlighted portion aloud.

A Yes. And, again, this is from the Attorney General. Quote: "This is an assessment of whether there is a problem."

Q Okay. So we talked earlier about a threat assessment. Does this appear to ask for an assessment -- to endorse an assessment or actual intervention in your view?

A It's an assessment. It's not an intervention. It's simply asking what really we were asking for. Tell us if we were right in thinking we have a problem.

Q Okay. And now -- and I'm sorry for making you flip back and forth --

A That's okay.

Q -- for you testimony, but back to the Senate testimony on page 21.

A 21?

Q 21. The Attorney General was asked -- page 21.

A Okay. Got it. Thank you for keeping me straight. Got it.

Q He was asked: "How did you determine that intervention by the FBI and the DOJ was necessary, that that was the right approach?"

Could you please read his response?

A Yes. So -- Merrick Garland: "So, the right approach in the letter is to meet with local law enforcement. That's what we have asked for, is to meet, to assess the situation, to see what their needs are to strategize, and to open lines of communication. Now, I'm hopeful that many areas of law enforcement" --

Q I'm sorry. Could you -- many areas of --

A "Now, I'm hopeful that many areas of local law enforcement will be well able to handle this on their own.

"But this is what the Justice Department does every day. We consult with our local and State partners and see whether assistance is necessary.

"And of course, we continue to have our own Federal responsibilities with respect to communications by the internet and on social media and phone and through the mail. But I'm hopeful that we will not be needed in this area that our State and local partners will be able to handle these threats."

Q Okay. So he specifically said that the Justice Department consults with State and local partners every day to see whether assistance is necessary, correct?

A Yes, he does.

Q And he said he didn't foreclose that there might be Federal jurisdiction in certain situations where Federal law applies, but he was hopeful that it would not be needed, correct?

A Yeah. And, again, from my perspective, I would agree with his statement.

Q And he again referenced the need to, quote, assess the situation, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So, again, in your experience -- I think we went down this road again, but -- or before, but are school administrators like principals often parents themselves?

A Yes. More often than not, I would guess.

Q And are teachers often parents themselves?

A Yes.

Q What about school board members, are they parents?

A Often, yes.

Q Okay. And, obviously, the people who are sending their children to school are also parents?

A Yes, as are other school employees, bus drivers, cafeteria workers, teacher's aides.

Q So would it be the case that kind of communication with State and local entities to make sure that they have the resources and the strategies they needed to address any threats to individuals would actually be in the interest of protecting parents?

A Yes, that is correct.

Q And protecting students?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So I think we have gone through and talked a little bit about how the letter and the Attorney General's memo have been mischaracterized. I want to look a little bit about the origins of this kind of false narrative that developed.

And I want to introduce as exhibit 21, two tweets from an individual named Christopher Rufo, who was a senior fellow with an organization called the Manhattan Institute.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 21

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The first tweet is dated October 23, 2021, and it's time stamped 1:24 p.m. Are you familiar with Mr. Rufo? Just yes or no.

A Yes.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with the Manhattan Institute?

A Somewhat, yes.

Q Were you aware of these tweets before I put them in front of you?

A I have seen these before.

Q So Mr. Rufo states in the first one, quote, "The NSBA's gambit to label parents, quote, 'domestic terrorists,' end quote, has collapsed. I'm going to explain exactly how we did it."

His reply to that tweet -- his reply to his own tweet then explains: "First, when the letter came out, we immediately framed the narrative on social media that the NSBA and AG Garland wanted to, quote, label parents" -- and I'm adding an S there because I think he had a grammatical issue -- "domestic terrorists. My initial tweet did 14 million impressions, sparking a week-long media cycle that exploited their reckless language."

Again, your letter did not ask the Federal Government to label parents domestic terrorists, correct?

A That's correct. In fact, we didn't ask them to label anyone as domestic terrorists. We just pointed out there could be domestic terrorism potentially.

Q And we just talked through the Attorney General's memorandum never uses the words "parents" or "domestic terrorism"?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. So this language is language that Mr. Rufo developed apparently?

A Yes, and many other advocates. He kept using that same language despite the fact that we weren't talking about parents or intending parents to be involved in this effort at all.

Q Okay. And here, Mr. Rufo takes credit for, quote/unquote, "framing the narrative around this," right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. I want to turn to another organization's efforts to organize protests against the National School Boards Association. And I want to introduce exhibit 23 -- sorry -- 22, an October 12, 2021, press release from an organization called Moms for America -- sorry -- Moms for Liberty, entitled "Moms Respond to NSBA and DOJ."

[Slaven Exhibit No. 22

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Rybicki. This document says it's from Moms for America, not for Liberty. Is this the right document?

[redacted] Yeah, it's the correct -- I think that's their website address is Moms for America.

Mr. Rybicki. Okay.

The Witness. Yeah, I do know they're two different organizations.

[redacted] So it's Moms for America. Sorry, I apologize. It is Moms for America, not Moms for Liberty.

The Witness. No problem.

BY [redacted]

Q The highlighted portion here says: "The recent letter from the National School Boards Association (NSBA) to the Biden administration and subsequent statement from the Department of Justice likening concerned parents to domestic terrorists is a direct threat to mothers and our constitutionally protected rights."

Do you -- again, do you believe that the reference here to the NSBA letter and the Biden administration and subsequent statement from the Department of Justice likening concerned parents to domestic terrorists is an accurate representation of either the letter or the Attorney General's memorandum?

A That's a false statement regarding both documents.

Q Okay. And do you recall Moms for Liberty organizing a protest outside the NSBA headquarters?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I want to introduce for the record a tweet from a woman named Mercedes Schlapp, dated October 27, 2021. This will be exhibit 23.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 23

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q It's dated October 27, 2021, timestamped 3:33 p.m.

This tweet reads: "MomsforAmerica@CPAC and parents stand together against the corruption and tyrannical behavior of the National School Boards Association."

Were you aware of this tweet before I presented it to you?

A I don't know that I have seen this particular tweet before. I might have.

Q Do you know who Mercedes Schlapp is?

A I do know her name. I know she was at the event in particular. I did know her name from that. I know she is active in a number of political circles.

Q Did you know that she was the director of strategic communications for the Trump White House?

A I knew she had worked in the Trump White House. I was not aware of what her specific position was.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the NSBA headquarters building?

A Yes, I am.

Q Okay. And does this appear to show -- the picture, does this appear to show the NSBA headquarters?

A It looks like it's kind of between the buildings, but yes.

Q And so Ms. Schlapp's tweet references @CPAC, C-P-A-C.

Do you know what that is in reference to?

A I believe it stands for Conservative Political Action Committee.

Q Okay.

A Correct me if I got that wrong.

Q Do you know which political party it's affiliated with?

A Well, it tends to be very conservative and Republican.

Q Okay. And so, it appears that this was a protest organized outside of NSBA headquarters by somebody who was certainly associated with the Trump White House, and she references the Conservative Political Action Committee, correct?

A Yeah. It clearly was a reference to partisanship.

Q And she refers to the corruption and tyrannical behavior of the National School Boards Association.

Do you think that's a fair description of your work?

A No. And that was political rhetoric.

Q Is the National School Boards Association associated with any political party?

A No. We have staff, Democrat and Republican. We are nonpartisan.

Q But do you have staff who are both -- who are from across the political spectrum?

A Yeah. I hired a Republican on my team, so yes.

Q Okay. So you are not a political organization, but you certainly were targeted by political organizations?

A We were absolutely targeted. We are not a political organization. We do not endorse candidates. We don't even endorse school board members that are running for reelection. We just want to make sure they're able to run safely for reelection.

Q And we talked to you earlier that you had advocated in front of both Republican and Democratic Members of Congress and in front of both Republican and Democratic administrations, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. And that's actually part of the NSBA's mission?

A Right.

Q I want to look at -- taking a step back, I want to take a look at a USA Today article entitled "The 'Great Resignation' hits school boards. Only 38 percent of members want to run for reelection."

[Slaven Exhibit No. 24

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And we discussed earlier the climate -- I'm sorry. This is a USA Today article. I don't think there's a date on it, but we printed it off.

Sorry. We're actually going to come back to this one.

A Okay.

Q We can keep that marked. We'll come back to it later.

So, Mr. Slaven, according to -- we talked at the very beginning when I was talking with you 2 hours ago about the large amount of documents that you provided to the NSBA.

A Yes.

Q Particularly Philip Kiko?

A Yes.

Q And in that -- those documents were included in the appendix to the National School Boards Association report, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Some of those documents suggest that you received harassment and online abuse following the letter's publication.

I want to introduce into the record as exhibit 25 a post from the message board site Patriots.win, which was formerly known as TheDonald.win. This is a website that was established after the website Reddit shut down the message board subredditr/thedonald for repeated violations of its policies.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 25

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This post contains a photograph of you, and it reads as follows: This is from -- this was included in the NSBA appendix at page 530-2. And I apologize, because the line I'm going to go through, there's some graphic language. I'm going to try to limit as much as I read.

A That's fine.

Q It says: "This is Chip Slaven. This communist" -- redacted -- "is the CEO of the National School Boards Association. He believes the FBI should target you as domestic terrorists for not wanting your kids in masks at schools."

And I would make note that the post had 16 responses from message board users that included comments referring to you as "looks like king pedo" and "probably a kid" -- redacted.

A Yeah.

Q Are you familiar with this post?

A I have seen this, yes.

Q Can you describe the circumstances around when you became aware of it?

A I can't remember exactly when I found this particular post, but at the time of the letter and in the weeks following, there were numerous things like this occurring. We received emails and text messages and phone calls to the office.

I think I stumbled on this later, because I think there's a few items that were deleted, for whatever reason. So who knows what was said there before. But this was kind of the rhetoric that was going on. I would consider it very menacing, and it's similar to some of the things that school board members were seeing.

Q And just to make the record absolutely clear, this refers to the FBI targeting people as domestic terrorists. You never asked for anybody to be targeted as domestic terrorists?

A Never said it in the letter and never intended it.

Q Okay. And so you, essentially, in your role as the National School Boards Association interim CEO, represented your members, and the reaction to that was this type of online reaction, right?

A Yes, exactly.

Q So I understand you also received private messages through the social media website, LinkedIn. Is that correct?

A I received a few of those, yes.

Q I want to introduce those into the record as exhibit 26. And there's a number difference.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 26

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm not going to actually -- I'm going to wait until everyone has a copy. I'm not going to read these out because the language is fairly vulgar.

So I'm not going to read these out because the language is pretty vulgar. So do you recall receiving these messages?

A Yes. This is just a few of them.

Q And what was your reaction to these messages?

A Well, my first reaction was what was really shocking was it was LinkedIn which is a professional business networking platform. So for people to be taking stands on there like this, I found troubling. It was -- you know, it's concerning to me. And again, what it really demonstrated to me was this is why -- what school board members were going through all the time was behavior like this.

Q I want to introduce a photograph of a handwritten letter postmarked April 22, 2022, exhibit 27.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 27

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Is this a letter that you received?

A It is not a letter that I received. It is a letter that my brother and his wife received.

Q And I apologize. I'm going to read this out loud. It contains graphic language.

A That's fine.

Q "How does it feel to know that 90 percent of this country all wish each and every one of you was aborted.

"If only the women in your family had swallowed we'd all be better for it.

"You're a family of scumbags, Slaven."

You said your brother received this letter?

A Yes. This was targeted towards my family because I was -- people didn't know my home address. I think they found him. He lived 3-1/2 hours away from me at the time that he received this letter.

Q Okay. What was your -- or his reaction, I guess, to seeing the letter?

A He called me immediately. He was very concerned over it. You know, he couldn't figure out why he got it. The only thing he could think of -- he was a professor, and the only thing that sort of happened in our family was this, and my whole family believed it was very aware of this. And when it came -- and it came, you can see, from New York, New York. He lived in West Virginia. It's got a fake address. They list Jill Biden. And it was clearly meant to menace my family.

Q Okay. So you -- the postmark on the photo is April 14, 2022. That was months after you'd left --

A Oh, yes.

Q -- the NSBA?

A Yes.

Q Are you still receiving anything along these lines?

A I haven't received anything recently, but it's not uncommon if my name appears in a headline somewhere that I might get a Facebook message or a LinkedIn message. But to be honest, it's harder to find me now.

Q Right.

A And I try to screen those things much more carefully now so they don't necessarily last if I get something. I just delete it or turn it in if I think it's appropriate. But no one has my email address anymore.

Q Okay.

A So that has slowed down the responses.

Q So the NSBA letter was released on September 29th. Within about a week, Christopher Rufo, and then within about a month, Moms for America and Mercedes Schlapp and others started to turn the narrative. And then you started to receive some pretty serious harassment, correct?

A I wouldn't say it was a week. I would say it was the day the letter was released probably.

Q Okay.

A So on Thursday, September the 30th, I believe is the first time I heard someone say we had called -- falsely had called parents terrorist or domestic terrorists. And, again, I went -- had to go look at the letter, like figure out what it was. So it was immediate, to be honest. As soon as the national media started covering the story of what was going on, the narrative later that day started.

Q Okay. And you personally started to receive harassment?

A Yeah. To give you an example, that weekend -- that was a Thursday when the letter became public. The next day, I had several members of my staff tell me that they thought that I should leave town.

Q And why did they say that?

A They didn't think it was safe.

Q Why was that?

A Because of the types of calls and emails that were coming into the office, and I didn't see all of them. Many of them I didn't see. And so, there was a lot of concern for my well-being and concern for other staff as well, concern for our building and whether it was safe. I know that one advocate not only put the address of NSBA, which is a public address, that's fine, but they also took pictures of the building. And, you know, why would you do that? That's -- to me, that's a way to potentially send someone there.

Q Did you receive any, you know, direct threats to your safety?

A I received a lot of messages that were certainly intended to intimidate me or threaten me in general. The one that stands out I remember getting -- and I don't have a copy of it anymore -- it was, I believe, an email came in, and it referred to me as an insect or a cockroach -- I can't remember which it was -- and that when I walked out on the street, I would be squashed like a bug. That's an example.

There were a number of racial attacks also in a lot of the messages that we were receiving. Again, there were phone calls that came in as well. And our policy quickly became we set up a screening process so that staff weren't directly answering the phone. And, when appropriate, we reported it to the Alexandria Police Department and/or the FBI.

Q Okay. And can you talk a little bit more about that? When was it appropriate for you to report it?

A Generally, I had two people, our communications director and the gentleman that sort of ran our technology in the administration of the office, that would look at things that came in. They often would share them with me. Again, I didn't see everything.

And we would talk about when it reached a certain level of -- and often it may not be -- maybe it wouldn't lead to a crime, but it could be. I know there was one message I was very concerned about, and I don't remember now the full scope of it, but it referenced President Biden. And I remember specifically saying, We need to either call the FBI or the Secret Service about this. Again, they should just be aware of this, of this particular letter.

Q I'm sorry. It was a threat of harm against the President?

A It was -- I can't remember the full -- it was alarming to me, let me put it that way. So it was enough of a -- it was a message that alarmed me to the degree that I thought someone should be aware of it. And I can't remember if it was signed or not by someone or if it was anonymous. We got a lot of anonymous -- I remember getting emails that -- trying to figure out who actually sent it, and they had clearly used -- I mean, not just created like a gmail account, but they had gone to, like, some email services that guarantee you'll never be traced.

Q Okay.

A And so when someone does that, you have to wonder why they're going to that length to do it.

Q And did you go, or did you feel the need to go and check the case law to see if it would qualify as something worthy of law enforcement attention, or was your reaction that you should bring it to the attention of law enforcement?

A It was my reaction, and having worked in government as well.

Q And there's no requirement for you to go and check the case law --

A Right.

Q -- correct?

A I didn't have time to go do that, to be honest. And having -- you know, again, I had worked in government. I had seen troubling messages before and when you should report and when you would not.

I can tell you that when I was in the Governor's office that the State police detail, the executive protection unit always wanted you to tell them about something that bothered you. And then it was up to them to figure out if it was a real threat or not --

Q Right.

A -- or something that eventually they would go back to. It was the trigger -- the start of threatening behavior.

Q So it wasn't your job to figure out if it met the statutory requirements. It was you referred it because you were --

A Right, I wasn't an investigator.

Q And you're not a law enforcement officer?

A That's correct.

Q I want to move on.

We talked in the last round a little bit about some of the incidents cited in the letter, and I think some of these were in the letter and some of them maybe were not in specific detail, but I think it goes to the climate that you were facing.

Do you recall attending an event in Louisville, Kentucky, in August 2021 at which people expressed concern about threats directed toward members of school boards?

A Yes. It was an event, though, that we actually canceled the day before. So there was a smaller group there. I was there with three of the four officers and a couple of other board members.

Q What was the purpose of that event?

A It was a couple of things. So it was going to be the first in-person meeting of the full NSBA, and then it was going to move into something called the Summer Leadership Conference in which other State association officers would be coming in. You know, you would have training sessions and speakers and things like that. But, unfortunately, the COVID spikes hit, and the day before we were forced to cancel. I was already on the plane when we were likely going to cancel.

Q Okay. And can you describe what happened at that meeting?

A We canceled the in-person meeting altogether. We had a virtual board of directors meeting, and we had a virtual delegate assembly. And I mentioned this earlier. This is the local school board members who have been selected to set the policies and beliefs for the organization, and also, they elect officers at a different meeting.

Q Okay. And was there discussion about school board members concerned for their safety at that meeting?

A There was -- the first night that I was there, I had dinner with three of the four officers and the wife of Frank Henderson, who was also there. We talked about it that night at dinner, as I recall. At least, I'm pretty sure we did. I know we talked about it that week.

During the actual NSBA board meeting, I know at least during my time when they were in executive session, I brought up -- I brought up a number of concerns, but I brought up the fact that the climate and the threats were concerning to me. And then I don't remember if I addressed it during the delegate assembly event or not. I might have alluded to it, but I don't have the transcripts from that. I can't remember.

Q I want to introduce as -- moving on -- as exhibit 28 an email chain between you, Charlie Wilson, Viola Garcia, Frank Henderson and Kristi Swett, which was dated December 8, 2021.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 28

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Near the bottom of this email chain there's an email from Charlie Wilson on December 8, 2021, forwarding an email from earlier that day.

Who is Charlie Wilson?

A So Charlie Wilson was the past president at the time of the National School Boards Association. His term had ended, and he remains as an officer as a past president. He was also a member of the school board in Worthington District, which is in the Columbus area.

Q Okay. And Mr. Wilson forwarded an email from earlier that day, and in that email, a Dr. Trent Bowers, who's the superintendent of the Worthington School District, says: "We received the attached mail this afternoon. It is addressed to me on the envelope. Addressed to Ms. Hudson inside the letter. My understanding is that Dublin received the same letter addressed to the Superintendent on the envelope and Ms. Hudson on the same letter. You may want to make a report to law enforcement."

Do you recall reviewing the letter that was attached to this email?

A I do.

Q Okay. The letter wasn't actually included in the NSBA's exhibit -- or the NSBA's appendix, but Worthington School Board Member Nikki Hudson posted the letter to her Facebook account on February 7 of 2021, and I would like to introduce that into the record. This is going to be exhibit 28 -- 29. I'm sorry.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 29

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Can you read the first line of the first paragraph?

A "We are coming after you and all the members on the Washington BoE."

Q I'm sorry. I think maybe it's --

A I thought you said the first paragraph.

Q Sorry. It says Worthington.

Mr. Rybicki. You misread the sentence.

The Witness. Oh, I did? You were talking about right after Ms. Hudson, correct?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. I think it says the Worthington Board of Education, not the Washington Board of Education.

A Oh, I'm sorry. Bad eyes. Yes.

"Ms. Hudson, we are coming after you and all the members on the Worthington BoE."

Q And then what's the next sentence?

A "You all should be tried for treason against the people of America."

Q Can you describe your reaction to this letter?

A Well, it was troubling, and that would be an understated assessment of my reaction.

This was the same day I had learned about the Proud Boys' involvement. And so, then I get this and it -- you know, it just bolstered my concerns about what was going on. I was very, very troubled over this letter. It was one of those letters that it's close to crossing the line. It may not have crossed the line, but it was close enough that I recommended that they contact the local police. And I think I said something along the lines of, When I worked in government, I would absolutely be contacting the State police.

[2:30 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And the last line of the first paragraph reads --

A Sure.

Q Go ahead.

A "You are forcing them to wear a mask for no reason in this world other than control and for that you will pay dearly."

Q How did you interpret "pay dearly"?

A I interpreted it as it was making a threat without being specific as to the threat.

Q Okay.

A So, again, I was very concerned about this.

For a school board -- I've seen a governor get a letter like this on occasion. But to see a school board member get a letter like this, it's really concerning.

Q Okay. And you recommended that they contact local law enforcement.

A Yes, I did.

Q Okay. And you didn't check the statute, right, to see if this qualified as a true threat. Your reaction was you should contact law enforcement to see if this is a threat.

A Yes. I believed it was threatening enough that it should at least be reported.

Q Okay.

[redacted] We have about 10 minutes left.

Do you have any questions you would like to ask, sir?

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. Yes.

When you wrote your -- the NSBA letter to President Biden on September 29th, 2021, it was the result of reports from local school boards across the country that you had received which talked about the threats that were incoming from people appearing at local school boards. Is that correct?

The Witness. It was -- it came actually from a variety of sources. So some of it actually came from the media. They were doing a number of stories about school reopening. A lot of reporters off record would say: Are you aware of this? Are you concerned about this? Some of it started there.

We heard about it. I went to Utah for a retreat of all the State association executive directors. We heard about it there. I had a school board member call me about his kids, which I've talked about earlier, that someone passed around a picture of them at a meeting. And then I started looking more myself into the issue overall.

So it was sort of a combination of things that led to it. And I think one of the other really important things was hearing about it from organizations that represented other education leaders. So I was hearing about it from the high school and middle school principals association, elementary school principals, the teachers organizations, and even I believe the PTA was on some of those calls in which it came up.

It was coming up -- it just kept coming up more and more and more and more.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. In what States do you recall specifically?

The Witness. A number of States. Obviously, we've just talked about Ohio. There were incidents, as I recall, that were very, very troubling in Florida, in California, in Idaho, as I recall, Nevada, Arizona, Pennsylvania. There were a number of troubling issues there. North Carolina.

And I think there were some instances occurring everywhere. It was worse, obviously, in some places than others.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. Even in my home State of Georgia.

The Witness. Oh, yes. Actually, Gwinnett County, Georgia. I'm glad you brought that up. We refer to them in our letter to a school board meeting, as I recall, being closed. But what is not in that article is that two of those school board members got significant threats -- and potentially racially motivated -- that occurred after that.

So, yeah, there were definitely problems in Georgia in places.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. And, of course, this was happening just months after the January 6th insurrection. Is that correct?

The Witness. It was coming in the aftermath of that, yes, sir.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. As you were getting these reports from various sources about disruptions and threats at local school board meetings in numerous States in the Union, did you have reason to suspect that all of this was unrelated?

The Witness. I believe --

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. Let me --

The Witness. Oh, I'm sorry.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. Let me fine-tune that question.

Did you believe that the threats coming in to these local school boards were connected in any way, or were they disconnected?

The Witness. I believe they were connected in the sense of some of the issues that were triggering the threats, obviously, were. There was a series of things. I would say there were issues over masks and COVID. There were certainly issues over racial policies in the schools. Critical race theory has come up a lot. Transgender issues.

And what I think you're asking me is did I see some type of coordination potentially around it. And I was concerned about that greatly, yeah.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. You were aware of various national groups that were behind some of these initiatives, like anti-masking, that kind of thing, critical race theory?

The Witness. Yes, I was aware of that.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. That there were national groups that were involved in those movements against local school boards?

The Witness. Certainly. There was organizing going on by many groups like that. They, of course, can organize. That's appropriate.

But what we were concerned about was the rhetoric that was being used and creating false narratives and then that would lead someone who may believe it to then do some -- take some drastic action.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. So did you believe that there could be some coordination between individuals affiliated with various groups?

The Witness. I was concerned that individuals affiliated with groups, such as the Proud Boys, may be organizing around it, and then that's ultimately what -- again, that was the final straw for me, when I learned Proud Boys had started showing up at meetings and then were showing up at a school, marching on the school, forcing a police lockdown.

And that was really concerning to me because of their track record in Charlottesville with the activity there, the activity they undertook in the streets of many cities like Portland, Oregon, where they committed multiple acts of violence, well-documented, and then their role, obviously, we have now seen in the attack on the Capitol on January the 6th.

So I was real concerned about that group in particular.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. So as the interim director of the National School Boards Association, a private organization, you being a private individual, but you were advocating for -- and in your capacity as interim director you advocate for policies and practices that benefit children and school systems and their employees. You were concerned about this threat environment that you've just described, which is why you wrote the letter dated September the 29th, 2021, on behalf of the organization to President Biden?

The Witness. That is correct. We were concerned over the school board members, the educators. And, of course, the students are who they represent, and the parents of the students, in fact, I would add.

Mr. Johnson of Georgia. Thank you.

The Witness. Yes, sir. Thank you.

[redacted] Okay. We can break now. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It's 2:44 p.m. We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, was October 4th the first time that you spoke with anyone from the Department of Justice?

A Yes.

Q And that was through the form of Anthony Coley reaching out to you via email. Is that correct?

A Yes, asking if I was available for a call.

Q And did you have a call with Mr. Coley?

A I did.

Q And how long was that call?

A It was fairly short, certainly under 10 minutes. I think probably more like 5 minutes.

Q And did anyone else from the Department of Justice join that call?

A Yes, and her name is escaping me, but there is an email. She's the one that later sent the -- I think the press release and the memo.

Q Alivia Roberts?

A Yes. Thank you. Alivia Roberts. She was also on.

Q And what did Mr. Coley discuss with you on the call?

A Well, obviously, I was quite curious what he was going to say, because I didn't know beforehand. But he indicated that he had been with the Attorney General when he had emailed me and that they wanted to make me and the NSBA aware that he was issuing a memorandum in just a short time to come that afternoon. And he thought we needed to know about it because he knew that we would be asked about it because it was certainly referencing things we had brought up in our letter.

And then he thanked me for my leadership and said that this was an important national issue and that, obviously, they had concerns as well.

Q And Mr. Coley told you that the Attorney General had just been with him, correct? The Attorney General was not on the call?

A No, he was not on the call. I've never spoken to the Attorney General.

Q And so when did you receive the Attorney General's October 4th memo?

A Shortly after the phone call. I don't remember the precise -- when the call came in and when the -- when it was sent. And then I believe it went out publicly a short time after that.

Q And did Mr. Coley and Ms. Roberts discuss with you any of the efforts the Department of Justice was taking in regards to local school board-related investigations?

A What I remember was -- I don't know that he -- he didn't read me -- he generally said, as I recall, they were going to coordinate meetings with the local -- with the U.S. Attorney's Offices and the FBI and local State police officials to talk about the issue to see if there was a way that they could help.

And he mentioned there was going to be some kind of task force, but I don't think he went into little or much detail about that. And I thanked him and said let us know if we can support the efforts.

Q Did you discuss the substance of the September 29th letter with Ms. Roberts?

A No. No. Not the substance of it, no.

Q Did Mr. Coley or Ms. Roberts ever express to you that the Justice Department had concerns about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language in your letter?

A That didn't come up.

Q Okay. And you said that they discussed kind of the substance of the Attorney General's memorandum?

A Well, the general, the gist of the memo, as I read it, was that they were going to have meetings. And I can't remember if the memo mentioned the task force. I think it does or the press release did.

Q And did Mr. Coley or Ms. Roberts discuss with you what due diligence the Justice Department had performed regarding the letter that they received or the Biden administration received?

A No, but there was no reason they would have gone through that with me.

Q And then they told you that they would provide you with an advanced copy of the Attorney General's memorandum. Is that correct?

A They were going to provide me a copy, but they also said it's going out in just a little while. So yeah.

Q Did you also receive the accompanying press release with the --

A I can't remember, to be honest. I might have. I might have received both.

Q Okay. Because there is an email between you and Ms. Roberts that says: "I will" -- or, excuse me, you and NSBA staff after you received the memo from Ms. Roberts saying: "I will forward the press release in just a minute."

A Again, I don't remember if I got that separately or not. I actually learned that it was public a short time later from our communication staff who had seen it. But I don't remember -- I can't remember the complete timeline there. It was a really busy day with everything going on.

Q Just in general with the Attorney General's memorandum, or you just had a busy day at the NSBA?

A Dealing with everything, yes. That was -- the memorandum was just a very small item.

Q Do you have any reason or any evidence to suggest that the Department of Justice did any due diligence?

A Again, we didn't discuss that, but my hope would be that the reason they were taking the action was they were seeing the same trends that we saw and the principals saw and many others saw.

Q Does it concern you at all that your letter came September 29th of 2021 and the Department of Justice was marshaling all of the Federal law enforcement apparatus to look into threats against school board members just a few days later, 5 days later?

A No, because you're missing some very important context.

Q Okay.

A Number one, September the 16th, the National Association of Secondary School Principals wrote a Federal request on this very issue. They actually had their members, by the way, in addition to that, they had an action network where they were encouraging their members to write the President and Members of Congress on the issue. I don't know how many went, but that's text message blasts and email blasts.

And then if you look at the -- again, we had issued the statement the week earlier, the public statement, with AASA. The Governor of California had been written by the California School Board Association. The North Carolina School Board Association had written a letter to, I believe, the Governor and the legislature on various issues related to it.

And then you tack on to that all of the incidents that were being publicly reported. There was quite a bit that went on. I'm sure our letter helped and contributed to it, but I believe that they had been looking at this for quite a while.

It's what I suspected, having worked in State government, and you're seeing a trend like this, that they're probably talking quietly about it, is there's something happening here.

Q So in your opinion, the Attorney General didn't need to do any other due diligence? It was just okay to rely upon the letters that were sent by educational organizations and public reporting?

A No, that's not what I said. You're kind of putting words in my mouth.

Q Okay.

A What I said was there were a number of things. There were letters. There were press stories. There were accounts that FBI offices may have heard about. There's a whole wide range of information I would expect them to have looked at.

So it wasn't just our letter. Again, it's a fair -- it's fair to consider it as a factor, but certainly it was not the only factor.

Q So you would have expected the Department of Justice and the Attorney General to do some modicum of due diligence before releasing the memo.

A I would expect that they were seeing the same trends we were.

Q And other than the phone call and subsequent emails on October 4th, did you have any other communications with the Department of Justice?

A The only thing that I recall was I think it was 2 days later I actually emailed Anthony Coley. We were really -- the messages we were receiving were becoming very troubling as an organization. We were receiving now the same messages that school board members were receiving.

And I emailed Anthony Coley to sort of ask him if we should be using the same procedure that school board members were using with the FBI. I mentioned that we were contacting, obviously, our local Alexandria police department first. And he responded with what I thought he would: Yes, use the same mechanism.

But I also sent him that message because I wanted them to be very aware the level was increasing on us now as well. And that's why I sent that email. I remember specifically why I sent it.

Q I'd like to mark as exhibit No. 30 the Department of Justice's October 4th press release that accompanied the Attorney General memorandum.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 30

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Slaven, have you seen this press release before?

A I haven't seen it in a long time. I think when it came out I probably read it, though.

Q Okay. I want to direct your attention to the third paragraph. During the last hour my colleagues discussed the Attorney General's memo and whether it included the National Security Division or not. So I'll read paragraph 3 to you.

"According to the Attorney General's memorandum, the Justice Department will launch a series of additional efforts in the coming days designed to address the rise in criminal conduct directed towards school personnel.

"These efforts are expected to include the creation of a task force, consisting of representatives from the Department's Criminal Division, National Security Division, Civil Rights Division, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, the FBI, the Community Relations Service and the Office of Justice Programs to determine how federal enforcement tools can be used to prosecute these crimes, and ways to assist state, Tribal, territorial and local law enforcement where threats of violence may not constitute federal crimes."

Does the press release have the word "National Security Division" in it?

A You just read it, yes.

Q And then I want to turn back to some other exhibits that we've kind of been looking at a lot, the email that was marked as exhibit No. 5 and the NSBA September 29th letter marked as exhibit No. 16. I'd refer you to page 2 of both of those exhibits.

A You said the letter?

Q The letter, yes, No. 16 and No. 5.

On page 2 of each, the National School Boards Association requested the inclusion of the National Security Branch. Is that correct?

Mr. Rybicki. Take your time.

The Witness. Well, in the second paragraph we asked for the Department of Justice, the FBI, Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Secret Service and its National Threat Assessment Center, which tracks things related to schools and school boards.

[redacted] And then in the last paragraph on that page?

Mr. Rybicki. What's the question?

The Witness. Yeah, what's the word? I'm sorry. What are you looking for?

BY [redacted]

Q The National Security Branch.

A Oh, yes. It says --

Q Did the letter request --

A Yes. Yes. Technical assistance.

Q From the National Security Branch.

A Yes.

Q Correct? Okay.

Mr. Rybicki. Well, previously, you were asking him about the National Security Division at DOJ.

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Mr. Rybicki. And now you're asking about the National Security Branch of the FBI. They're two different things.

[redacted] But the National Security Branch, correct? The letter asks for the National Security Branch.

Mr. Rybicki. Sure, but you were asking about National Security Division earlier, and you asked about National Security Division about paragraph 2.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Rybicki. I just wanted to make the record clear that they're two completely different entities.

BY [redacted]

Q And so the press release then creates this task force with the FBI, which includes the National Security Branch and the National Security Division of the Department of Justice. Is that your understanding of the press release?

A That's what it looks like it says.

Q Okay. Are you aware that the FBI created a threat tag to track school board-related investigations?

A Only through the media.

Q Well, as exhibit No. 31, we will enter the FBI October 20th, 2021, email creating the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 31

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Are you ready?

A Uh-huh.

Q So I'll read from the third paragraph of this email. It says: "As a result, the Counterterrorism and Criminal Divisions created a threat tag, EDUOFFICIALS, to track instances of related threats."

Mr. Slaven, in your September 21st email and the September 29th letter, did you request the assistance of the Counterterrorism Division of the FBI?

A We requested -- in the bullet I wrote, I included -- it says, "including any technical assistance necessary from, and state and local coordination with, its National Security Branch and Counterterrorism Division, as well as any other federal agency with relevant jurisdictional authority and oversight."

Q And on page 2 of the letter, the bottom paragraph?

A Yeah, it says it there as well.

Q Are you aware that the FBI opened at least 25 investigations using the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A Only through media accounts.

Q And are you aware that the Attorney General testified before the House Judiciary Committee and Senate Judiciary Committee in October and stated that the NSBA's letter was the basis for his October 4th memorandum?

A He, as I recall -- I don't have his quotes in front of me -- he mentioned that it was a factor, is how I interpreted it.

Q At any time, did you have any concerns that the Attorney General was using the NSB letter as the -- NSBA letter, excuse me -- as the basis for his memorandum?

A No. I considered it a factor along with many other things.

I think the basis for it was it was actually happening, the actual incidents and threats, not the reporting of them, necessarily.

Q Did it concern you at all that the use of the Criminal Division and the Counterterrorism Division of the FBI to investigate individuals and parents that might show up at school board meetings could chill protected First Amendment activity?

A Well, I think the memo and the press release don't call on investigating parents or individuals. The focus, as I understand it, was on actual threats by whoever was making them. And so I didn't have a concern.

Because the memorandum in particular, I think the Attorney General went out of his way to say that's not what they were doing. It's very, very clear. And our letter I think was also clear on First Amendment protection.

Q But the FBI did investigate First Amendment activity. Are you aware of that?

A You'd have -- I don't -- I'm not aware. The FBI doesn't inform me about their investigations. So I couldn't tell you what they're investigating. I would assume that they are not investigating something that's solely a First Amendment-protected activity.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 32

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] So I'll enter the May 11th, 2022, letter sent by Mr. Jordan to Attorney General Garland as exhibit No. 32. And it's a long letter. I direct you to page 2. I'm going to read from the bullet-pointed material.

Mr. Rybicki. I'm sorry. This was which exhibit?

[redacted] No. 32.

The Witness. And I'm sorry, which bullet?

[redacted] I'm going to read all three of them.

The Witness. Okay.

Mr. Rybicki. Can you give me a second to review this?

[redacted] Please.

Mr. Rybicki. Let us know when you're ready.

The Witness. I'm ready.

[redacted] Okay. So on page 2 of the letter there are a couple or three bullet points of information, and this describes information we received from whistleblowers regarding EDUOFFICIALS threat tags investigations.

The first bullet point reads: "In one investigation begun following your directive, the FBI's [redacted] Field Office interviewed a mom for allegedly telling a local school board, quote, 'We are coming for you,' end quote.

"The complaint, which came into the FBI through the National Threat Operations Center snitch-line, alleged that the mom was a threat because she belonged to a, quote, 'right wing mom's group,' end quote, known as 'Moms for Liberty,' and because she is, quote, 'a gun owner,' end quote.

"When an FBI agent interviewed the mom, she told the agent that she was upset about the school board's mask mandates and that her statement was a warning that her organization would seek to replace the school board with new members through the electoral process."

Did you intend for the NSBA letter to kind of be the impetus for the FBI investigating this type of activity?

The Witness. Well, there's a lot of context that's not listed here. For example, what else was said in the investigation? What led to it? What were -- you know, the quote here, "We are coming for you," what came before or after it?

So it's very hard to answer a question like that based on this. There could be way more context to it. And so this could simply be an FBI agent interviewing someone, asking about a statement, and then moving on if there is nothing to it would be appropriate.

But this is -- I don't have any context for this. If you can give me more, I'm glad to offe[redacted].

But if she's talking about coming for the board members via the electoral process, is that protected First Amendment activity?

The Witness. If she said that, yes.

Mr. Rybicki. Hold on. You've had several questions now about his opinions about whether something is First Amendment-protected speech. He's here to talk about the -- as you indicate in your letter, you had questions for him about the September 29th letter.

And so I just want us to enter an objection for the record that I think it's inappropriate for you to be asking him about legal conclusions and his opinions about what sp[redacted]or may not be protected by the First Amendment. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q The next bullet, it says: "The FBI's [redacted] Field Office opened an investigation, subsequent to your directive, into a dad opposed to mask mandates. The complaint came in through the National Threat Operations Center snitch-line and alleged that the dad 'fit the profile of an insurrectionist'" -- that was in quotes -- "because he, quote 'rails against the government,' end quote, 'believes all conspiracy theories,' and, quote, 'has a lot of guns and threatens to use them,' end quote.

"When an FBI agent interviewed the complainant, the complainant admitted that they had 'no specific information or observations of...any crimes or threats,' but they contacted the FBI after learning the Justice Department had a website to, quote, 'submit tips to the FBI in regards to any concerning behavior directed toward school boards,'" end quote.

Does that concern you, that the FBI is using the NSBA's letter to go after dads?

A You can't make that conclusion from what you just read. This, to me, was someone contacted to make a tip on a potential threat they believed might be a problem. The agent then talked to the complainant, the person who had made it, and then determined there was nothing to it.

So I think this is completely appropriate under those situations -- under these circumstances.

Q But does it concern you at all that the Department of Justice used the NSBA letter to open investigations like this?

A There is no evidence that you just read through that the Attorney General used our letter to open up an investigation.

This is a tip line, by the way, not a snitch line. It's a tip line that's been around for a long time that someone could have submitted a tip prior to this.

So, no, I don't have any concerns over that because I don't believe that's what happened.

Q Even though the Attorney General testified that the NSBA letter was why he issued the October 4th memorandum. Following the October 4th memorandum, the FBI, to effectuate the Attorney General's directive, created a threat tag, EDUOFFICIALS, on October 20th, 2021.

Mr. Rybicki. What was the question? Could you repeat the question?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. I'm saying does it concern you that the NSBA's letter was used by the Attorney General and the Department of Justice to open investigations like this? And I was just walking through the timeline.

A Well, again, there's no evidence that our letter was used to open specific investigations. This was someone that gave a tip believing there was a problem.

But I would also point out that the Attorney General testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee several weeks ago. He had an exchange with Senator Kennedy about this issue in which he stated that the NSBA letter was a factor, not the factor.

Q But a factor. Is that correct?

A A factor.

Q And the third bullet: "In another case initiated after your directive" -- the Attorney General's directive -- "the FBI's [redacted] Field Office opened an investigation into Republican state elected officials over allegations from a state Democratic party official that the Republicans 'incited violence' by expressing public displeasure in the school districts' vaccine mandates. This complaint also came into the FBI through the National Threat Operations Center snitch-line."

Should the FBI be investigating political discourse?

A Again, without further context, you're, I think, jumping to conclusions about what happened here. I'm sure there was more to this.

I seem to recall this maybe being in the media. There may have been more to it. But, again, it's the National Threat Operations Center tip line, not snitch-line.

And it doesn't say that there was any action taken to violate that elected official's position. It just says it was a -- someone made a phone call.

You know, if you were suspicious about something, you could call the local police, and they may determine we don't think there is anything to it, or they may think there is something to it.

So just I think this is really out of context to be able to answer a question like that. It's a leading question in my opinion.

Q Did anyone at the NSBA ever raise concerns about the October 4th memo from the Attorney General?

A Not within the organization itself. The only concern that might have been raised was that it upped the attacks on us.

Q On the NSBA?

A Yes. But I took it as a positive development because it was a positive development. It was a good result. It was we're going to talk to local and State law enforcement about this issue. We're going to have meetings. And if it leads to nothing, it leads to nothing. And it's just, again, we're talking with each other, government talking with other entities in the government about what could be a potential problem.

It's like flood mitigation. You take steps to prevent floods so that if there is a flood, the damage isn't as serious. And so that's how I took all of this.

And, again, if you read that memo, it goes out of its way talking about the -- I'm not here to defend it, but I'm just saying it's black and white letter language in the memo itself and in our letter.

Q And in addition to the Department of Justice reaching out following the September 29th letter, the Department of Homeland Security also reached out. Is that correct?

A They had reached out early. They may have reached out as early as the day after the letter went. I can't remember exactly. They reached out, and I think it was a -- they were seeking just let's talk about the issue.

Q And they initiated the conversation between the NSBA. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you directed NSBA's staff to proceed with scheduling a meeting. Is that correct?

A Yes, as I recall.

Q And in the NSBA report, it says that the meeting that was scheduled never took place. Is that your understanding?

A I'm not sure that's accurate.

Q Okay. Tell me more.

A Yeah. And there were a couple things that Homeland Security -- there is one briefing I know that took place, and it was -- but it wasn't just to NSBA. It was to other organizations as well. It occurred probably 2 weeks after our letter had gone, and it was a number of Homeland Security officials. Secret Service was involved.

And it was simply we're going to tell you what we're hearing and seeing around public school threats. And so, as I said, there were other organizations on. There were a number of people from our organization on. We reached out to our State associations and let them know about it. I know that we had a few of our board members on it. I listened. I did not make any comments in it.

And they walked through. They had several speakers. And as I recall, the only thing that I remember that I think would be important was that one of the officials, I don't remember which one because I don't remember the names of them, but indicated that they had been hearing from local law enforcement that, yes, there was a rise in concerns around public schools and school board members and teachers and principals. So they were seeing exactly what we believed was occurring.

Q And when you say "they", was that the Department of Homeland Security?

A In conjunction with their State and local law enforcement partners they had reached out to. I don't know who all that was.

Q Okay.

A But I remember it was -- once again, it was sort of reaffirming them that, yeah, we were right. We were correct. This is real. This is really happening.

Q And when did that briefing occur?

A I don't remember the date. I'm sorry. It was probably the second full week of October maybe, but I can't remember for sure. So I just want to make sure that's clear. I don't remember exactly when it was.

Q So when was -- when do you think your last communication with the Department of Homeland Security on public school threats was?

A I might have gotten emails and things after that. We -- I believe -- the reason I said I think the report may have been inaccurate saying the meeting never took place is I think that meeting may have eventually taken place. And I only say that because I referenced a meeting that I was getting ready to go on to a Homeland Security call in a text message I shared.

And, again, I can't even remember if I ended up staying on the line for the call. I think I either was waiting and then had to jump off for the call the person was texting me about, which was really important, I had other staff that were going to cover that call; or I thanked them in the beginning and said: I'm stepping off now, I have staff on the call that'll cover it.

And that's all I remember about it. And, again, I think that was what the reference I made to in my text message.

Q And then following the September 29th, 2021, letter, Dr. Samuel at the Department of Education emailed you on October 6th, 2021. Do you remember that?

A I think if it's the email I think it is. I would have to look at it, but --

Q And in that email, she kind of asked how you were doing. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Is that what you recall?

And when was your last communication with Dr. Samuel at the Department of Education?

A I don't remember exactly. That particular communication, though, I took it that she was concerned for my well-being.

Q Okay.

A Because of what I was going through personally.

Q And did you have any further conversations with the Department of Education following the October 6th email regarding the letter?

A We were on communications with the Department of Education on a regular basis. So I can't -- I'm sure there were communications, I can't recall them, and I don't have access to all those emails.

Q Specifically related to school board threats?

A I don't recall any, but there might have been some. Other staff also may have taken them.

Chairman Jordan. I was going to ask the same line of questioning. Is your last communication with Mary Wall at the White House this email chain?

I don't know what exhibit. If you can find this, [redacted]

[redacted] It's exhibit No. 60. We can enter it.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 33

Was marked for identification.]

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Is that your last communication, or did you have subsequent communications with Ms. Wall?

Mr. Rybicki. Hold on. Let them show you the email they're talking about first.

The Witness. Yeah, I'm not sure what email we're talking about.

Mr. Rybicki. Make sure we get the right email.

And this is 32?

[redacted] 33.

Mr. Rybicki. 33, sorry.

Chairman Jordan. Let me back up a second, Mr. Slaven.

Did your board support the September 29th letter? Were they in full support of it?

The Witness. The four officers were in full support of it.

Chairman Jordan. Full support? They'd reviewed it?

The Witness. The four officers had, all of them, and they all approved it in email communications. And that was unusual because letters like this typically were not shared with the board, and it wasn't their role to approve letters or communications to the legislative or executive branches. That was the CEO's job.

Chairman Jordan. All four supported it, and Ms. Garcia signed it?

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. And she's on the board as well?

The Witness. She's the president.

Chairman Jordan. President of the board. So the two of you signed the letter, if I remember correctly?

The Witness. Yes, our signatures went on the letter.

Chairman Jordan. And is it fair to say that the Biden administration was in support of your letter?

The Witness. At the time we sent it, I didn't know what their position was. I'll be honest, when I sent the letter, I wasn't sure what reaction we would get.

Chairman Jordan. But, I mean, [redacted] just went through a series of questions, and basically they followed what you and Ms. Garcia outlined in that letter that your board supported. They basically did what you requested in the letter. Is that accurate?

The Witness. Well, they undertook, I would say -- I would call it threat assessment. And working with local and State law enforcement, we certainly wanted that to happen.

Chairman Jordan. Yeah. So they were, it seems to me, in pretty strong support. Based on the testimony of the Attorney General in both the House and Senate, it seemed to be -- indicate that it was at least a part, I would argue a big part based on the answer he gave me in a hearing or gave to our committee in a hearing, a big part of why they put together the apparatus they did for threat communication and all this.

Let's go to this exhibit then, if we can. So I think it starts on the 5th. "Hi, Chip. Can I grab a phone number for you and for your president?"

So the White House wants, specifically Mary Wall, wants your number and Ms. Garcia's number. Is that right?

The Witness. That's right and I provided it.

Chairman Jordan. And then you provided it right away. It looks like it was just a few minutes later, about 18 minutes later, you sent an email back with those numbers.

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. And the reason they wanted those numbers is because it looks like the next one, that the President was going to call you guys. Is that right?

The Witness. I didn't know if that's what was going to happen. I suspected maybe that could happen. But I also thought it could be Mary Wall wanting to call us both in some regard to what was going on as well.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So then: "Thank you," she says. And then you say: "Will try to call." No, then she follows up with another email: "Will try to call this afternoon/this evening. Feel free to give Dr. Garcia a heads up as well."

Did you give Dr. Garcia that heads-up?

The Witness. I think I did, and I think I told her I thought Mary Wall was going to call. I think when I saw this next email, I thought maybe this is just Mary is going to call or someone else in the administration.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So then a couple days later, Ms. Wall sends you another email: "I know I didn't call on Tuesday, but I think Dr. Garcia got a call from someone way better than me." So that was, I assume, a reference to the President.

The Witness. Yes. I had learned that that call had taken place.

Chairman Jordan. Did that happen on the 6th or 7th? Do you remember?

The Witness. The call?

Chairman Jordan. Yeah, the call from the President of the United States to Dr. Garcia.

The Witness. I am not sure, to be honest. I believe it was the day before, but I'm not sure of that, sir. It might have been that day. So I don't want to give you a wrong answer. I don't recall for sure.

Chairman Jordan. And, again, back to my first question, was this the last communication you had with Ms. Wall?

The Witness. Without access to my emails, I'm not sure.

Chairman Jordan. Could it be the last one?

The Witness. Could it be?

Chairman Jordan. Do you recall any more recent ones?

The Witness. I think it's likely that she emailed me on other issues because she was dealing with a lot of the pandemic-related activities. And, again, I just -- I can't answer because I don't know. I don't remember.

Chairman Jordan. And did Ms. Garcia tell you what the President said to her on the phone call?

The Witness. She said that he thanked her for her leadership and he thanked the organization for the leadership. He discussed --

Chairman Jordan. Leadership in reference --

The Witness. Leadership in leading, in helping public schools.

Chairman Jordan. In general?

The Witness. Yes, general.

And he discussed how concerning things were in the Nation, and he wished we could all work better together and we could tone down the rhetoric. I recall her talking about that.

And then I think he said -- he offered if she was ever in Washington, since she doesn't live there, that she could stop by the White House. And she was actually going to be in town. She and I were speaking at an event later that week, but we were never able to actually go.

Chairman Jordan. Was he thanking her for what you had brought to their attention, the letter that you and Ms. Garcia had sent to him as well, bringing those issues to his attention?

The Witness. Well, I wasn't on the call. So as I recall, my impression was he was thanking her for her leadership as a school board member, as a leader of a national organization, and in part in response to the attention we were calling around the threats.

Chairman Jordan. So it had something to do with the letter?

The Witness. Well, again, I wasn't on the call. Yeah.

I think he was thanking us for our leadership, and we were -- at the time, we were being very -- obviously, we were suddenly in the public sphere.

Chairman Jordan. Because it got some attention.

The Witness. It was getting attention.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And then Ms. Wall says: "Please know we have your back."

What does that mean?

The Witness. I think at that point in time it was the rhetoric against us. It had turned on us, the National School Boards Association. And Viola and I in particular were getting a lot of off-the-wall messages and targeted attacks from various sources, and I think she was just saying you did the right thing and we'll support you where we can.

Chairman Jordan. Did they do that?

The Witness. I didn't ask them to do anything specifically to support me. So I don't --

Chairman Jordan. I didn't ask that. I said did they do -- did they have your back?

The Witness. Well, they had my back I guess in the sense of they took action around the issue we were concerned about. Personally, they didn't do anything to help me and I didn't ask them to.

Chairman Jordan. How about your board?

The Witness. What's the question?

Chairman Jordan. Did they have your back?

The Witness. Did my board have my back? In the end, many -- some of them did. In the end, I think the board made some rash decisions.

Chairman Jordan. Like?

The Witness. Like issuing an apology that shouldn't have been issued.

Chairman Jordan. You don't think there should have been an apology?

The Witness. Absolutely not.

Chairman Jordan. I asked you earlier about this final report that this law firm put together and your overall assessment of that.

The Witness. Well, I think where we left off, I had just answered the question about what my overall reaction was and I think they got the discussion on what happened with the Biden administration correct. I point specifically to a sentence that talks about direct and indirect evidence, and you can read it out. I don't remember the full scope of it.

You know, I think they pointed out there wasn't any request from the Secretary of Education, which I pointed out as well when I spoke with them. It was correctly pointed out that I had actually followed the procedures that had always been followed before. It didn't call it out like I would have liked. I think they really soft pedaled that.

And so in that sense --

Chairman Jordan. What about the rest of the report? Did you like that?

The Witness. I believe they left out things they should have covered.

Chairman Jordan. Well, they basically blamed you for everything:

The letter, however, was not authorized.

No one on the board of directors reviewed the draft except you.

The letter was principally directed, reviewed, and approved by Mr. Slaven.

I mean, I go through this -- I went through this the other day.

Inside the NSBA, evidence revealed limited knowledge about the drafting and existence of this letter except for you.

The letter was the result of 20 days of research and drafting by NSBA under the direction of Mr. Slaven.

I mean, everything in here is like you're the guy that -- you're the guy who was responsible for all this. And then they issued an apology.

It's clear Mr. Slaven made the decision to write the letter for the NSBA and to publicly make requests for Federal assistance.

And then in conclusion, I think, they said it just straightforward: Mr. Slaven was behind the letter, both in origin and substance.

So they blamed you for everything.

The Witness. This is where I mentioned I had some reservations or disagreement about the report itself. And here is my main concern with the report in terms of the internal NSBA issues.

The board of directors at NSBA didn't approve letters to the executive branch or the legislative branch ever, at least during my term there.

And they didn't even approve -- if we say, for example, Congressman, we were -- Mr. Chairman, we were commenting with the Federal Communications Commission on an issue. I did that a lot in my role. They didn't even review that kind of communication.

And that's because it was part of the policies and beliefs of the organization as voted upon by a delegate assembly, which were local school board members. It was a separate entity within the organization.

And so when I actually went through this process on this particular letter, I went above and beyond what normally was done by sharing it with the officers. I just decided I should share it. I had been talking about it. I wanted to get their opinion.

And they enthusiastically supported it. That's why -- I mean, they actually asked to put the president's signature on the letter, which didn't happen on letters like this.

Chairman Jordan. Well, then why did they reach this conclusion?

The Witness. Well, I think they --

Chairman Jordan. So here's what I see. Like, so first you talk to the White House and you give them examples. You reference using the Counterterrorism Division, you reference the PATRIOT Act in communications with the White House, even though the report says that the White House didn't sign off on anything or push for it ahead of time. They were getting access to that information ahead of time.

That is exactly the language that gets used in the memorandum from the Attorney General and in the press statement that goes out the same day. That all happens because of your letter that all four of your board members supported. One of them was asked to sign it and did. And the Biden administration says: Good work, we got your back.

And then when everything happens, they all just leave you hanging there. Is that fair?

The Witness. That's fair.

I would say the organization, the pressure, the political pressure that was exerted on the organization caused some of the board members to basically crumble under it.

And it's -- you know, when you're in a, again, you're in a leadership position and you take a stand you are going to sometimes have negative resistance. You know this. You serve in office. It's part of the job.

And one of the biggest mistakes that our board made was when they -- we quit talking about the letter, to be honest. You know, the Attorney General statement came out. We issued a statement that evening. I think there was a little media the next day. And then at some point, either late Tuesday or Wednesday, the officers said: We'd better stop talking about this, we're getting a lot of pressure.

And that created -- again, I couldn't talk about what happened.

Chairman Jordan. Let me ask a little more specific question.

The Witness. Sure.

Chairman Jordan. Did you have any conversation via email or phone or any type of conversation with Ms. Wall on this subject after the communication on Thursday, October 7th?

Mr. Rybicki. I didn't understand what you were referring to by "this subject." You pointed to something.

Chairman Jordan. The subject of the letter, the subject that -- you know, the letter that we're talking about and the subsequent actions.

Because she says on the 7th: "Chip, I know I didn't call on Tuesday, but I think Dr. Garcia got a call from someone better than me. Please know we have your back, and we're exploring every avenue we can. Happy to give you a ring tomorrow or over the weekend if you'd like to discuss further."

Did you have a call with her the next day or over the weekend?

The Witness. Not that I recall. I remember she left me a message to call her. It probably was going into that weekend. And I returned the call and she wasn't there and we didn't connect over the weekend or on Monday.

My last conversation that I remember having with her was several weeks later, and she called me, and I think she was calling other education leaders on an issue related to COVID-19 and vaccinations.

Chairman Jordan. But not this particular --

The Witness. No. I think we referenced the letter, of course, as you would imagine. I think we talked about how crazy it had gotten.

But, again, I don't remember for sure. I think -- I believe after the apology was issued I tried to call her and probably left her a voice message, but I don't remember when and --

Chairman Jordan. Did she get back to you?

The Witness. No.

Chairman Jordan. She didn't get back to you?

The Witness. No.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Thank you.

The Witness. And, again, that's what I recall. A lot was going on at that time period.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 34

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So I want to talk a bit about the October 22nd memorandum. That was the apology. We can enter it as an exhibit, No. 34, so you can have it in front of you.

Are you ready?

A Uh-huh.

Q You said you did not support that apology. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q Do you know who drafted the apology?

A So remember I mentioned the Homeland Security call I referenced, and I had to jump off for another call?

Q Yes.

A So it was regarding we had brought on -- the board had brought on a public relations firm to assist with the messaging around all of this. And the first time I ever -- I had a chance to meet them, I was on a call with them, with our president-elect, Frank Henderson, who led this effort with I believe NSBA legal counsel -- I'll just leave it at that -- and with another staff member, Renee Joe, who was helping coordinate our communications efforts.

And in that discussion, we talked about issuing -- we had been --

Mr. Rybicki. So you're not going to talk about any discussion with counsel, right?

The Witness. Right, no. I just mentioned he was on the call. There was nothing protected in this call.

But in that conversation we talked about the fact that we had been silent for weeks at this point. We had lost the narrative completely. And, again, I had disagreed with that decision as well. I believe we needed to be communicating about what was going on.

And there were many false assertions about the letter from the -- you know, we didn't call parents terrorists, but we were being accused of it to that was the week, as I recall, all of a sudden they started saying we had -- the White House had written the letter or asked for the letter, which didn't happen at all.

And then we were dealing with internal questions over did the local school board -- State school boards association, they were denying they were aware a letter was being sent when, in fact, I had emailed them and said a letter is being sent.

So we were dealing with all these issues, and I wanted a statement clarifying what we asked for in the letter and what happened, and it started out that way.

And I received some pushback from the PR firm when I said something about we have to get the facts out. I remember this very well. He said: Well, the facts just don't matter anymore.

Kind of a shocking statement. I think facts matter.

But they worked on a draft statement. It was not an apology. Some of the language is in there, as I recall. And we went -- I didn't like it, to be honest. I didn't think it was very good. I didn't think it was very strong. And they wrote back and said: We have another idea. We'll get back with you in a little while. This was between about 4:30 and 7 o'clock p.m. time frame.

And that night we were having a board of directors meeting. It was the first full meeting that I was going to be able to go to. It was going to be open, technically publicly. And so there were going to be some State associations on, NSBA staff was going to be on.

And then I didn't hear anything more from the PR firm, and they were going to be introduced as these guys are going to help us with this issue.

And so the meeting was opened, and they introduced the PR firm, and the PR firm says: We have drafted an apology.

And I immediately began texting Frank Henderson, who was leading this particular effort, saying: I can't -- why wasn't I told about this? I was the executive director of the organization and a member of the board, in the sense as a nonvoting member.

And he wrote back: Not enough time, or something like that. It's in the exhibits.

And then I began emailing or texting with the other officers while the meeting was going on, you know, pretty upset over what had happened. You know, I was sabotaged in a meeting in front of my staff, in front of the rest of the board -- who also didn't know about it, by the way.

I think the officers were informed shortly before, maybe the executive committee, but I don't believe many of the board members saw it prior to it showing up in a public meeting. It should have been discussed, at least in an executive session.

And then I read the language, and I thought it was awful. I didn't think it actually was an apology, if we were going to apologize, and I didn't think we had anything to apologize for. Clarify, yes, absolutely.

And I didn't speak during the public portion of the meeting. I waited until we went into an executive session and then I let my feelings be known very strongly.

Chairman Jordan. Who is all in the meeting?

The Witness. Mr. Chairman, it would have been -- so I don't know if all the board was on. Probably the majority of the board of directors.

Chairman Jordan. So those are the four we talked about earlier.

The Witness. Four officers and then there's another 20-plus members.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. From around the country?

The Witness. Yes. I'm on it as a nonvoting member, but I'm on it. There is a representative of the State association, an executive director. She's a nonvoting member.

And then this particular meeting there were other NSBA staff on it. There were also then -- again, there were folks from State school board associations that had been informed about it, executive directors and officers.

I'm not sure everyone that was on it, but it was, I would consider it, a pretty open meeting. So --

BY [redacted]

Q And you said the PR firm was hired by the board of directors, correct?

A Yes.

Q So is it fair to say that the board of directors via the PR form who wrote the apology were going in a different direction that you would have liked to go?

A I was fine with hiring a PR firm and had made a recommendation I think of one. I think Renee Joe had made a different recommendation, and they went with another one, which was, again, fine.

But, yeah, I felt the direction that we needed to go was to get aggressive again on what we were trying to do and explain, at least to our members, why we did this. And many of our members understood completely why we did it, you know, the idea that everyone was against it isn't really true.

But the pressure, though, built over time, and we were silent. We weren't defending ourselves. And that really lead to -- and I will tell you what I also believed. I believed an apology would only -- I said something in my NSBA interview like it would be like pouring gasoline on a fire, because I didn't think there was any answer that was going to be acceptable based on the false narratives that had been called out by the AP, for example, about what our letter actually said.

People just pushed back and said the AP is lying. They did say parents are terrorists.

Q And in paragraph 2 of the NSBA memorandum, I'll direct your attention there in the exhibit, it says: "On behalf of NSBA, we regret and apologize for the letter. To be clear, the safety of school board members, other public school officials and educators, and students is our top priority, and there remains important work to be done on this issue.

"However, there was no justification for some of the language included in the letter. We should have had a better process in place to allow for consultation on a communication of this significance. We apologize also for the strain and stress the situation has caused you and your organizations."

Do you have any understanding of what the language was that they were referring to, that there was, quote, "no justification for"?

A It could have been anything in the letter depending on whose interpretation you were asking. I think it was a way to say we apologize without throwing -- completely throwing the school board members under the bus that were receiving threats.

But, again, it was -- that was my -- one of my issues with it. Again, I didn't think an apology should be issued at all. But this was not a very good one. And you'll notice it didn't come from me, and I wrote the letter. I sent the letter.

Q What was your interpretation of what language they thought there was no justification for? You said it was open for interpretation.

A It was open for interpretation. You know, people were complaining over all kinds of things. The incidents weren't right. We heard that earlier today. You know, certainly the legal references. You know, why would the FBI get involved?

Q What do you mean by legal references?

A Well, the laws that you've cited that were cited --

Q The PATRIOT Act?

A The laws that were cited in the letter.

Q Okay. Let's go through the laws that were cited in the letter.

There was the PATRIOT Act, correct?

A There was the hate crimes legislation.

Q There was the hate crimes legislation. There was the James Byrd Act. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q There was the Gun-Free School Zones Act, correct?

A Yes.

Q And the Violent Interference With Federally Protected Rights statute. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And so you thought that maybe some of the legal references in here they were apologizing for.

A Well, again, I think they were just trying to make the situation go away. I don't think there was that much thought put into that section based on -- I was very unimpressed with the work of the public relations firm. And I believed it was going to do the opposite of what they suggested, which would be to inflame a situation, and that's exactly what happened, I might add.

Q And did the Biden administration ever tell you that you needed to apologize for the language or --

A No.

Q No?

Do you know if the NSBA memorandum was shared with the Biden administration in advance of its release?

A Not that I'm aware of, and I don't believe so. It certainly wasn't shared by me. Again, I thought it was a terrible idea.

And, frankly, it wasn't the Biden administration's power to decide one way or the other what NSBA does. I mean, I think that's really important. If they did come out and say you should apologize, that doesn't mean we're going to apologize. We were not part of the Federal Government.

Q But you were communicating with the Biden administration in advance of the September 29th letter.

A Like a constituent would with their Member of Congress. It's no different.

[redacted] We have 9 minutes left.

Chairman Jordan. Where is your office? Where is the National School Boards Association?

The Witness. It's in Alexandria, Virginia.

Chairman Jordan. It's in Virginia.

Did anyone -- did you or anyone have any communications with the Democrat gubernatorial candidate or their campaign in the course of this?

The Witness. No, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Do you know former Governor McAuliffe?

The Witness. I met him at a National Governors Association meeting once. I knew of him before he was involved as a political figure.

[3:35 p.m.]

Chairman Jordan. Now, when the letter first went out, did anyone from the governor's campaign, Governor McAuliffe's campaign, or anyone from the Democrat Party in Virginia reach out to you?

The Witness. No.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. I think I'm good.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 3:45 in the afternoon.

BY [redacted]

Q All right. I think we're almost there.

In the last hour, you were asked about a couple things that I want to go back over and try and make sure we have the record clear.

You were asked whether DOJ did appropriate due diligence prior to issuing its memo. Did you ever work for the Department of Justice?

A I was a law clerk --

Q When?

A -- for the Southern District U.S. Attorney's office going into my third year of law school, so it was between June or late May and August 1 of 2006.

Q Did you work for the Department of Justice in 2021?

A No.

Q Okay.

A That was my only work with the Department of Justice.

Q So do you have any personal knowledge of what the Department of Justice did or did not do before it released the Attorney General's memo?

A I have no knowledge of what process they went through.

Q Okay. There was a question earlier that asked something about how your reaction to the Department of Justice, quote, "marshaling all of the Federal law enforcement apparatus to look into the threats." Do you consider the AG's memo to be, quote, "marshaling all of the Federal law enforcement apparatus"?

A No, I don't consider it to have done that at all.

Q Okay. I want to look at this, your memo -- excuse me -- I think it's exhibit 5 -- your email --

A The long email?

Q Yeah. If I can find my own copy.

Thank you.

A I think I have yours.

Mr. Rybicki. Oh, that's right, you have mine.

The Witness. I'll -- let me look for mine. That way you can go ahead and start.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to look at page 2, that top bullet point. It says, any technical assistance necessary from -- you -- you said you worked in Congress, right?

A Yes, I worked -- I was a district director.

Q What's your understanding of the term "technical assistance"?

A Technical -- it can mean a lot of things, but generally, yeah -- yeah, technical assistance, so let's say the State police were opening an investigation and they believe they needed the expertise of an FBI lab they didn't have, or, they wanted to see, did you hear about an issue like this in another State, or, just generally, do you have any data that would support what we may or may not be hearing. So it's that kind of -- I mean, it's what it says, it's exactly what it says, it's technical assistance.

Q Okay. And looking at the October 4th press release that accompanied that Attorney General's memorandum which was marked as exhibit 30 --

A Yeah.

Q -- we spent some time on paragraph 3 of this press release.

A Yep, I've got it.

Q And I think the line that was not read of paragraph 3 was that very first line, so I'm going to go ahead and read it out loud. It says, "According to the Attorney General's memorandum, the Justice Department will launch a series of additional efforts in the coming days designed to address the rise in criminal conduct directed towards school personnel." So it specified criminal conduct, correct?

A Yes. It's very, very clear that's what they're talking about.

Q And it says, those efforts are expected to include the creation of a task force. Do you have any personal knowledge about whether a task force was actually created?

A I have heard references that one was created, but I have no knowledge if it actually occurred -- if it actually was created in the end.

Q And do you actually -- do you know if it actually included any of the divisions that are cited after that?

A I don't.

Q Okay. And it says, -- the sentence continues on. It says, to determine how Federal law enforcement tools can be used to prosecute these crimes. It says, "determine how," right? It doesn't say that any law enforcement will actually be deployed in any particular way, correct?

A Yes. I think what it's saying is, if there's a Federal crime, you know, how -- if it's appropriate, how would you prosecute it. I think that's what it -- what it's saying.

Q And then it says, and ways to assist State, Tribal, Territorial, and local law enforcement where threats of violence may not constitute threats of -- may not constitute Federal crimes, right?

A Yes.

Q So the memo anticipates that not everything is going to be a Federal crime and that in some cases, law enforcement --

A Yeah. That could be the technical assistance.

Q And I'm sorry, I think I said the memo. This is actually the press release.

A The press release, yeah, no, I got it.

Q And this press release was issued by the Office of Public Affairs at the Department of Justice, right?

A That's what it says, yes.

Q And the October 4th memo was actually issued by the Attorney General, right?

A Correct.

Q Do you know who runs the Department of Justice? Is it the Attorney General or the Office of Public Affairs?

A The Attorney General runs all operations within the Department of Justice.

Q You were asked about threat tags, and I want to look at exhibit 31. Have you ever worked for the --

A This one, right?

Q Yeah, that one, yeah.

Have you ever worked for the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

A No.

Q Okay. So do you know what a threat tag is?

A Not precisely. Just general --

Q Okay. Do you have any personal experience with them?

A Not in using a threat tag. I mean --

Q So you don't know what that is?

A I don't recall them. They may have used them when I was doing work in West Virginia, but I don't know that I would've been shared the specific threat tag.

Q Okay. And so you don't know how a threat tag is used, for example?

A Only what I heard described by the Attorney General.

Q Okay. So here it actually says, The purpose of the threat tag. It says, The purpose of the threat tag is to help scope this threat on a national level and provide an opportunity for comprehensive analysis of the threat picture for effective engagement with law enforcement partners at all levels.

So it says that the threat tag is basically used to scope the threat and analyze the threat, correct?

A Yes. And I think it's important to point out in the title, it's actually about edu officials, education officials. So the threat tag seems to me it's about the person getting the threat or reporting a potential threat, and not about anyone else.

Q But, again, you don't have any personal experience with threat tags?

A No, no, I don't.

Q Okay. So this is all just based on what you have in front of you?

A Just what I'm reading right now, yeah.

Q Okay. You were asked about whether the memorandum -- whether the October 29th letter was the basis for the memorandum --

A September 29th.

Q -- sorry -- September 29th letter was the basis for the October 4th memorandum. Did anybody at the Department of Justice ever say, this was it, your letter led the Attorney General to write the memorandum?

A No. They just thanked us for our leadership.

Q Okay.

A And I -- again, I assumed, based on many other things, that it wasn't just our letter. It was a factor, but that's it.

Q Okay. We discussed a DHS meeting that might've taken place after the September 29th letter. That meeting, you said, involved a wide variety of people?

A Yes, the first meeting, yes, correct.

Q Okay. Can you provide examples of who was --

A I'm not sure who all was on the invitation list, but I know there were -- I had callings from other educational organizations on it as well as within NSBA. It was not just our staff. We reached out to State association executive directors, our board members. I know a couple of our board members actually did listen. I know a couple State association executive directors also listened. And so, it was a wide range of people, and then as I mentioned, there were also other education --

Q Yeah.

A -- who were just not affiliated NSBA on that that -- I think it was a Zoom call.

Q Okay. And you said, the topic was public school threats.

A Yes. Generally, yeah.

Q Generally. And so I think you said the only part relevant here was the reference to what people, what they were hearing from local law enforcement. Can you talk, what else was discussed on that call?

A That's -- I mean, that was a big thrust of it. I think they talked about things to look out for and prevention measures, and, you know, making sure -- there was actually quite a bit focus on making sure you maintained a good relationship with your local law enforcement. And then they talked about the important sort of nexus between Federal, State, and local law enforcement.

And then, just as I remember, the thing that stuck out though was, they said, like, yes, we are hearing from our local partners that there are -- you know, there are trends and rising issues that we're seeing. I don't know that they went through any statistics on that. They just --

Q Right.

A -- educated, yes, we're hearing this too and so are local police.

Q Would you say the purpose of that call was to provide information to you and to other organizations about how to keep your communities safe?

A Yes. I think it was about educating and informing the education community on what they needed to be or not be concerned with.

Q Okay. There was a comment made earlier that the White House or the administration said, good work, we got your back. Did anybody at the White House or the Department of Justice or the Department of Education or anywhere else in the administration ever say "good work" with respect to the letter specifically?

A I don't recall that.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q So that's not language that -- that's language that came up here, but that's not language that --

A Yeah, I'd have to go back and look at exactly what was said, but I don't recall that, so.

Q Okay. Just one second, sorry.

A No problem.

Q I want to walk through your interactions with the Department of Justice on October 4th. So I want to introduce -- I had these in order a second ago. Okay -- introduce as exhibit 35 -- a lot of exhibits for this interview -- a email chain between you and Anthony Coley. You can just pass those down.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 35

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Rybicki. Did that not make it in yet?

[redacted] Did you introduce the Anthony Coley email chain?

[redacted] No.

Mr. Rybicki. No, No.

The Witness. I don't think so.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Rybicki. I'm sorry.

The Witness. I think we talked about it.

[redacted] We talked about it, but I don't think it was actually introduced.

Mr. Rybicki. Thirty-five?

[redacted] Thirty-five.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know who Anthony Coley is?

A I did not know him before that day. I -- you know, he introduced his title, and I don't know if it was communications director or something along those lines. And I've seen his name pop up since then --

Q Okay.

A -- on other things.

Q So you know that he was the director of the public affairs office?

A At this time, yes, that seemed to be the role he was in.

Q Did you know that he is not an attorney?

A I did not know that. Didn't come up one way or the other.

Q He's not.

A Okay.

Q Do you know who Alivia Roberts is?

A I did not know her prior to this call.

Q Ms. Roberts was the -- Mr. Coley's assistant. Do you know if she was a lawyer?

A I do not know.

Q She was not a lawyer.

So looking at this email chain, Mr. Coley reaches out to you on October 4th, 2021, at 3:19 p.m., asks if you're available to chat. You respond at 3:21 and say, I'm available to call. He responds at 3:41 and says, I'll give you a call within an hour. And you said, Great, I'll look forward to speaking with you.

Does that refresh your recollection as to what time you actually spoke with him?

A It was -- well, it was obviously sometime after his last email, so probably the 4:00 range, give or take, you know, some minutes on either side of 4:00.

Q Okay.

A I think he called me fairly soon after the last email.

Q Okay. So probably 4:00-ish, thereabouts?

A Roughly, yeah, roughly.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 36

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So I want to introduce as exhibit 36 an email chain between you and Alivia Roberts, and the timestamp on this, she emails you at 4:58 p.m. So I don't have the attachment that went along with this, but it's -- at 4:58 p.m., she emailed you, copying Anthony Coley and says, it's a pleasure to speak with you, and she said, as promised, I've attached the memo from the Attorney General that will be made public later today. That was 4:58 p.m., correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And then I have, sorry, one more email to introduce.

A That's okay.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 37

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm marking this as exhibit 37, and this is the email where she actually provides you with the press release announcing that the memo has gone out.

Do you recall this email?

A I actually don't remember this one --

Q Okay.

A -- but -- yeah, I'm -- yeah, okay.

Q Okay. Sorry. Do you recall the earlier -- the one that I referenced just now?

A I do remember that one because it was the memo itself.

Q Okay.

A I didn't remember if I had received the press release or not from her.

Q Okay. So the press release was sent to Alivia at 6:08 p.m., and so it went public at 6:08 p.m.

A Okay.

Q And she forwarded you the public press release at 6:17 p.m.

So looking at this timeline, you first spoke with Mr. Coley around 4:00.

A Uh-huh.

Q You got a copy of the memo -- of the memo and the press -- of the memo, not the press release, right, just the memo itself -- at around, at 4:58 p.m., and then the whole thing went live at 6:08 p.m., right?

A Yes, that's -- yes.

Q So you saw a copy of the memo roughly an hour and change before it went public?

A Yeah. And I think that's been exaggerated greatly how much notice we had.

Q Right.

A Yes, we got an early copy an hour ahead roughly.

Q Okay. And there was no -- it wasn't sent to you with the idea of, you know, do you want to look at this and make edits or provide any feedback?

A No, no, I didn't make any edits, and it wasn't suggested I could make any edits. It was their document.

Q Okay.

A They were simply informing me this is going to be public soon.

Q And would you describe the outreach that you received from Mr. Coley as a courtesy call?

A Yes. And completely appropriate.

Q Okay.

A And he may have made it to other people too. I don't know who else they shared it with.

Q Okay. Fair. You were asked about the -- or I think maybe you mentioned that you had a subsequent contact with Mr. Coley where you flagged some of the reaction that you had received, some of the alarming reaction you had received, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I want to introduce the email chain from that, maybe, if I can get the exhibit sticker off. This is exhibit 38.

[Slaven Exhibit No. 38

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So at 2:12 p.m. on October 6th, you emailed Mr. Coley to say, we've reported -- we've -- the phone calls and the emails to NSBA are increasing. We have reported several to the Alexandria Police Department, but I wanted to reach out to see who at the FBI -- sorry -- you recommend we should be communicating with on this issue, just to keep them in the loop if things increase. I'm glad to reach out to the local FBI in the Alexandria area but thought I would check with you first since this has risen to such high levels with NSBA's name being out there.

And Mr. Coley responded to you and said, Your instinct is right, threats of violence may be reported to your local FBI office or to the FBI's National Threat Operations Center via its national tip line and online through the FBI website.

So you reached out to him to ask if there was anywhere else you should go, and he basically directed you to the public channel, correct?

A Yes, correct.

Q Okay. And you referenced the National Threat Operations Center line earlier. You're familiar with that line?

A Do you mean in the letter or --

Q Just writ large, in your personal experience as a citizen.

A Yes, very general, but yes.

Q Okay.

A It deals with threats, yeah.

Q Right. And it's any citizen can call into it, correct?

A Yes. And it's been around, as I understand, a long time.

Q Okay. And did you ultimately report any of the threats to the FBI's tip line?

A I did not personally, but our office may have. Again, I designated some staff to deal with those. There was so much coming in --

Q Yeah.

A -- that it was, to be honest, it was too much, and I think they were protecting me from some of it. So I believe we did, certainly to the Alexandria Police.

And, again, I mentioned a very concerning message that referenced President Biden that I remember specifically saying, you need to let -- I don't know if I -- Secret Service would've been most appropriate, but I might've said FBI, or Secret Service and FBI.

Q Okay.

A And I don't know if that occurred, but I expect they took my directive and did report it.

Q Okay. And that was kind of the four corners, the total amount of your interaction with the Department of Justice, right --

A Yes.

Q -- were these emails that we just walked through?

A Yeah. Unless I received some blanket email on something on, you know, that a lot of people received. But I don't even recall getting anything like that. To my -- to my best of my recollection, it was this series of communications we've talked about.

Q Okay. So your communications were with Mr. Coley and Ms. Roberts, neither one of whom are attorneys, right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. I'm going to walk through some other names at the Department of Justice --

A Sure.

Q -- just to get the record clear.

Are you familiar with an individual named Kevin Chambers?

A No.

Q Okay. Kevin Chambers was previously an associate deputy attorney general with the Department of Justice. Does that refresh your recollection?

A No, not -- it doesn't.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an individual named Myesha Braden?

A No, I don't believe so.

Q So Myesha Braden is an associate deputy attorney general at the Department of Justice. Does that refresh your recollection?

A The name doesn't sound familiar to me.

Q Okay. And last one, are you familiar with an individual named Shaylyn Cochran?

A Again, I know people named Cochran, but not Shayna Cochran --

Q Shaylyn.

A Shaylyn. Yeah, yeah, obviously I don't know her, yeah.

Q So Ms. Cochran is the chief of staff for the Justice --

A Okay.

Q -- Department's Civil Rights Division --

A Yeah, I don't know --

Q -- does that refresh your recollection?

A -- I don't know any of the three of them, and I wasn't -- we didn't work with the Department of Justice --

Q Okay.

A -- so I just wouldn't know them.

Q Okay. So the only communication you had with the Department of Justice about the September 29th NSBA letter or regarding the October 4th Merrick Garland memo was the phone call with Anthony Coley and Ms. Roberts, and then a handful of email communications?

A To the best of my recollection, that is correct.

Q Okay. In any of those instances, did the name Terry McAuliffe ever come up?

A No.

Q Okay. I'm not going to go through and list a bunch of names, but to the best of your knowledge, did you ever talk one-on-one with anybody at the Department of Homeland Security, putting aside that one phone call --

A I didn't talk to anyone at Homeland Security one-on-one.

Q Okay. And your only interactions were those two?

A The two. And the second one I can't even remember what my -- if I had any -- I think I thanked them --

Q Okay.

A -- and then hopped off for the call that led to the press statement, so.

Q Did the name Terry McAuliffe ever come up in the context of the limited conversations you had with the --

A No, no.

Q -- Department of Homeland Security?

A No.

Q Okay. I have one more -- no, actually, I don't think I need to do it.

[redacted] All right. I don't think we have anything further.

The Witness. Thank you.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 4:06 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Mr. Klug. Charles Klug from Davis Polk for Mr. Morell.

Ms. Creighton. Claire Creighton from Davis Polk for Mr. Morell.

[redacted] The Committee on the Judiciary and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives are conducting oversight of Federal law enforcement in intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions. This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within the jurisdictions of the committee.

For example, the committees may consider legislative reforms, such as revolving door legislation, for Federal employees with security clearances. These reforms might include allowing Federal employees with security clearances to retain their clearances after employment with the government but limiting their ability to receive access to classified information for some duration after their government employment.

The committees may also consider legislative proposals that would ban or restrict intelligence agencies from engaging in, coordinating, or promoting any political activity related to Federal elections, including candidates for Federal office.

The House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence staff will be constrained to issues relating to the letter signed by the 51 former intelligence officials. On behalf of the committees, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions.

The chairmen also appreciate your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I will now have everyone else from the committees who are here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted] with the House Judiciary Committee.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary --

[redacted] [redacted]

[redacted] [redacted] House Intel Deputy General Counsel for the majority.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary majority.

[redacted] Thank you. I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions, and the interview is over. Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record. So we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions. Do you understand that?

Mr. Morell. Yes, I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is. Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down on the end of the table can hear you as well. It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other, if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible. So we will take our time. If you have any questions or if do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know.

Our questions will cover a wide range of topics. So, if you need clarification at any point, just say so. If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give your best recollection, and it is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information. If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

Mr. Morell. Yes, I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand that?

Mr. Morell. Yes, I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false payments under 18 U.S.C., section 2001. Do you understand this?

Mr. Morell. I do.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Mr. Morell. No.

[redacted] Finally, I would like make not that the content of what we discussed here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discussed in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up. All right. That is the end of my preamble. Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] We don't have anything to add. Thank you.

[redacted] The clock now reads 10:06 a.m. We will start our first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Morell, thank you for being here.

A You're welcome. It's good to be here.

Q Could you please tell us a bit about your professional background?

A I grew up in Ohio. When I graduated from college, I got a job at the Central Intelligence Agency. I spent my entire career there. I ended my career as the Deputy Director. Twice during that period, I was Acting Director. I retired in 2013. I have done a number of things since I retired.

Q Well, what do you do now?

A I do a number of things. I work at a consulting firm called Beacon Global Strategies. I used to work at CBS News. I am no longer there. I'm on a couple of boards. I'm on the board of Fortress Investment Group. I'm on the board of a company called Orbis Operations. I do a lot of my own private consulting. I work for Cerberus Capital Management. I work for another private equity firm called iSquared Capital. So that's not the totality of what I do, but that's the biggest chunk of time I just described for you.

Q And, when you retired from the CIA, that was in 2013 you said?

A In September of 2013, yes.

Q You were Deputy Director at the time?

A Yes.

Q And acknowledging that we're in an unclassified setting, can you briefly describe your role and responsibilities as Deputy Director?

A As Deputy Director of CIA, I was responsible for overseeing all of CIA's activities, including analysis and operations, covert action. I was responsible for the health and well-being of the organization and the people who worked there. I was responsible for representing the Agency at the White House, here on the Hill, and with foreign leaders and the leader of foreign intelligence services.

Q And you were twice Acting Director?

A Yes.

Q Thank you. You were one of 51 former intelligence officials who signed a public statement regarding Hunter Biden's emails, correct?

A Yes.

[redacted] I would like to now enter a document dated October 19, 2020, titled "Public Statement on the Hunter Biden Emails" into the record as exhibit No. 1.

[Morell Exhibit No. 1.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I would also like to enter the Politico article that featured the public statement, dated October 19, 2020, titled "Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say" into the record as exhibit No. 2.

How would you characterize the public statement?

Mr. Morell. I'm not sure what you mean.

[redacted] How would you describe it? What --

[redacted] Politico article.

[redacted] Oh, we're going to strike that from the record. Just one fewer exhibit were going to introduce because that's the statement itself, if that's all right.

[redacted] My apologies.

[redacted] That's okay.

BY [redacted]

A What does it say?

Q Yes. Describe -- what does the statement say?

A The statement says that we are concerned that suspicious -- I think it says

"deeply suspicious" that the Russians played some role in the emergence of these emails at a critical time during the election period.

Q What was the intent of the statement?

A There were two intents. One intent was to share our concern with the American people that the Russians were playing on this issue; and, two, it was two help Vice President Biden.

Q Let me touch on that help President Biden part in a second. In 2020, was the name of one of your Gmail accounts, Michael Gmail New?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

A I don't know.

Q What was your role in the creation of this statement --

A I think Michael Gmail New is MJM 941958, I think.

Q Okay. That's what I wanted to make sure of --

A -- yeah, I think so. I'm not sure.

Q Okay. What was your role in the creation of the statement?

A I organized it.

Q So you drafted that?

A I did not do the first draft.

Q Okay.

A Marc Polymeropoulos did the first draft. Then I redrafted it. Yeah, I'm the organizer, and I played a major role in drafting it.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I would now like on enter a draft of the statement Michael Morell and Mark Polymeropoulous sent to potential signatories, including a request to sign dated October 19, 2020, at 1:38 a.m., into the record as exhibit No. 2.

[Morell Exhibit No. 2.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q That was an email sent from you, correct?

A Yes.

Q Michael Gmail New is --

A Yes, and Michael Gmail New is MJM 941958.

Q Perfect. I just want to make sure it's redacted on one of the copies we have.

A Yep.

Q Now, I would just like to read: Marc, and I drafted the attached because we believed the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate, and we want to give the Vice President, VP, a talking point to use in response.

You said Marc Polymeropoulos held you draft the statement?

BY [redacted]

A He did a first draft.

Q Correct. And we also have texts between you and Mr. Polymeropoulos that I'll enter into the exhibit. You asked him to create some background points for you, I believe?

A Yeah, that's what I saw as the first draft.

Q As the first draft?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I will enter that into the exhibit as exhibit No. 3.

[Morell Exhibit No. 3.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And, in these texts, you said -- I believe you're in gray, correct?

A Yes.

Q You said: Just wondering if you think the Russians played in the Hunter Biden email thing.

And he said: Hey, there.

And you said: It kind of feels that way to me.

And he says: It does to me, too. There was a previous Burisma hack. Plus Ruby and the orbit he plays is all dirty.

Then you responded: But a strange way to get the material into the public domain?

Mark responded: They will always look for a dissem mechanism, third party. Yes, this is odd. A blind computer. But I think of it as throwing crap on a wall. Whatever sticks.

And then you say: I'm thinking of writing something that says the FBI is investigating whether there is Russia involvement in this thing, and that makes sense because it has the feel of a Russian op.

It goes on, and you ask if you want to write it together, and then just send you a list of what you see as the hallmarks.

When you said "but the strange way to get the material into the public domain," did you have any doubt about the veracity of the laptop and what was being reported about it and --

A No, I just meant what I said, right? It's a strange way for the Russians to put this information into the public domain. And I wanted to give Marc an out, right? Because I start by saying kind of feels that way to me. I didn't want to leave the witness. So I wanted to give him an opportunity to say, you know, maybe this isn't what we're saying it is. This was somebody who was subordinate to me at the Agency, and I didn't want right my seniority to drive him to a conclusion.

Q And what did Mr. Polymeropoulos come back and tell you?

A He came back and, you know -- he clearly came back and said, he thinks, you know, he shared my suspicions.

Q Did you have a specific strategy in your outreach efforts to the former officials that you were soliciting?

A The strategy was to get people who had served on administrations -- you know, multiple administrations, Republican and Democrat, that was the goal.

Q Yes.

[redacted] I will enter into the record an email that you sent. I would like to enter into the record an email that you sent from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro, dated October 19th, 2020, at 6:36 a.m., into the record as exhibit No. 4.

[Morell Exhibit No. 4.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I will explain tomorrow on the phone how this came to be. I have sent a draft to David Kris and Lisa Monaco but have not yet heard back. They should sign. I'm looking for two things: Pairs of seniors who served in the same position from different administrations -- Hayden and Panetta, Jeh Johnson and Mike Chertoff, Lisa and Ken Wainstein, Clapper and Coats, et cetera, and then a slew of former IC and national security who worked Russia. Should have something to give to the media through you tomorrow afternoon.

So it looks like there were particular officials that you were hopeful to recruit. And some, such as Lisa Monaco and David Kris, did not sign.

A Correct.

Q What reason did they give you for not signing?

A So, of the people who didn't sign -- and I have to say, I don't know of all of these people who we sent a request to. I don't know if all of these people received a request or not.

Q Okay.

A I don't know that. What I was doing here was just giving examples of pairs.

Q Okay.

A For the people who did not sign, a handful of them said: We're not intelligence officers. We think it's better if this letter come from intelligence officers.

Other people said: I work for a company, and I'm not on the allowed so sign such letters.

Nobody, nobody in making a decision not to sign questioned the judgment --

Q All right.

A -- we were making.

Q Did you task other former officials with roles to promote statement?

A Definition of "promote"?

Q To disseminate it for other signatories to work for the press.

A So, breaking into two pieces here, the first piece is that three of us took responsibility for sending it out to officials to try to get signatories. Myself, Marc Polymeropoulos, and a woman named Kristin Wood. Kristin worked for me at the Agency. She worked directly for me at the Agency as my aide. We were very close friends. I asked her to do that. She agreed. And then, in terms of getting it to the media, that was entirely Nick Shapiro's responsibility here. So he took that responsibility on.

Q Okay. What --

A I had no interaction with the media.

Q What role did John Brennan play, if any?

A A signatory.

Q A signatory. What about Clapper?

A Signatory. And he asked for a -- he asked for a change. I don't know what change it was, but I know he asked for a change.

Q He made an edit, correct?

A Yes.

Q Going back to this text exchange between you and Marc Polymeropoulos, I read that you said: I'm thinking of writing something that says the FBI is investigating whether there is Russia involvement in this thing, and that makes sense because it has the feel of a Russia op.

Why did you think or how do you know the FBI was already investigating it?

A Because there was the USA Today article saying that the FBI was looking at the very thing that we were suspicious about.

Q The --

A I didn't know that for a fact, right, and we actually said that in a statement. But, you know, that got my attention.

Q Had you had any conversations with officials at the FBI?

A No.

Q Had you been privy to any classified briefings --

A No.

Q -- about this?

A No.

Q We know that the statement that's published is different from the draft that was originally circulated. In particular, the last two paragraphs referencing Vice President Joe Biden taking a private and public stand against the then prosecutor general of Ukraine Viktor Shokin were taken out for being what you described as too political. Why?

A Somebody asked that it come out. I don't know who. And that was the point that that person made. I really don't know who asked. And, you know, I didn't necessarily see it as too political. You know, the whole statement is political at the end of the day. But I didn't see it as too political. But the person who asked that it come out did, so we took it out. It's actually an important paragraph for me. But it came out nonetheless.

Q Why was that an important paragraph for you?

A Because the fundamental charge against the Vice President was that he had conducted U.S. policy toward Ukraine, not with the best interest of the United States of America in mind but with the interest of his son in mind. And I thought and I still believe that that to be an inaccurate charge. At this time, you know, there were several investigations, none of which got to that fundamental charge, none of which proved that fundamental charge. And, as somebody who worked at the most senior levels of the Obama administration, I knew that it was an impossibility for the Vice President to conduct foreign policy on his own. So I knew that charge to be false. It was a charge that continued to be made against the Vice President by President Trump, and that is one of the reasons why this letter was important to me: to give the Vice President something to push back on that charge.

Q In an email to Nick Shapiro, you said that you would, quote, explain tomorrow on the phone how this came to be, meaning this public statement.

And I will enter in that email into the record so that you can get a copy of it. We have entered this one into the record. That was the previous one. Can you tell us what you said to Mr. Shapiro during that call? How did it --

A Sure. I told him that I had received a call from Tony Blinken, then a senior official on the Biden campaign, asking me if I had seen The New York Post story. If my memory serves then -- you know, I don't know exactly how you want to do this -- but my memory is sketchy, right? This is a long time ago. I believe I said I had not seen it. I believe he summarized it for me, and he asked me if I thought the Russians may have been involved in any way in the emergence of these emails.

Q So that was -- now --

A I should also say I don't know whether he called me or whether he sent me an email.

Q Okay.

A Just to be clear.

Q In the production the committee received, we did not get an email from him --

A Correct.

Q -- initiating that call except -- but for a USA Today article that he forwarded --

A Yes.

Q -- to you? So he had called you before sending you the USA Today article?

A Sure. He either called me or he emailed me.

Q Okay.

A Right. At this time, I was regularly deleting my emails because of something that happened to Director Brennan in late 2015. So all of the emails that I received and sent as part of this, right, some of those emails had been deleted. So it's possible he sent me an email. It's possible he just called me.

Chairman Jordan. There were two separate communications. There was the first call or email, and then there was the subsequent email with the USA Today article?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. What was the time of the email?

Mr. Morell. So I don't know for sure, Congressman, but I believe he called to ask the question first and then followed up with the email.

Chairman Jordan. Close together?

Mr. Morell. I think -- you know, given the timestamps on here, I feel that, you know, when I say -- Congressman, I say: Just wondering if you guys, if you think the Russians played in the Hunter Biden thing.

That was at 2:16 p.m. on the 17th. He sends me the USA Today article later that night.

Chairman Jordan. Right.

Mr. Morell. Right. I think he called me or sent me an email prior 2:16 p.m. So there's some gap there I think between the first contact and the second.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. That's what I assumed. When you got the USA Today article -- and I believe it was at 10:53 that evening -- was that the first time you had seen USA article.

Mr. Morell. So I referenced the FBI investigation in the early afternoon of the 17th in my conversation with Marc Polymeropoulos. I don't remember whether I saw it.

The first thing I did when Mr. Blinken called me is I did some research. I had not read The New York Post article. I went and read it. I did some internet searches. I did a little bit of research here before I reached out to Marc. It's possible I found it then. It's also possible that, when Mr. Blinken called me, he mentioned it to me. I just don't remember.

Chairman Jordan. In that timeframe, then, you would have got the call from Mr. Blinken prior to 2:16.

Mr. Morell. I believe so, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Excuse me, Mr. Morell, as part of the research that you did in between the contact with Mr. Blinken and the contact with Marc, did you contact any individuals as a part of that research?

Mr. Morell. I did not.

Mr. Gaetz. So the full sum of that research involved your internet searches?

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

[redacted] I would like to enter into the record an email sent that now Secretary Blinken sent to Michael Morell featuring the USA Today article just to make sure we got a fulsome record.

[Morell Exhibit No. 5.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you. And you said now Secretary Blinken was employed by the Biden campaign at the time he sent this email, correct?

A It's my understanding is that he was employed.

Q When he called you, did he direct, suggest, or insinuate in any way that you should write a letter or statement on this topic?

A My memory is that he did not, right. My memory is that he asked me what I thought.

Q Okay. It wasn't: The campaign could use some help on this; could you --

A He did not say that.

Q -- cook up something that we could use?

A It's not my memory that he said that.

Q Okay. Why do you believe he called you then and asked for your opinion on this?

A You know, Tony and I were fairly close. I mean, I wouldn't say we were close friends, but Tony and I were fairly close. During our time in government when he was the Vice President's National Security Advisor and then when he was President Obama's Deputy National Security Advisor, I would be the person that he would reach out to with those kind of questions. When we saw each other post the Obama administration, we would have conversations about what was going on in the world; he would ask me questions. So it was in part natural, you know, for him to do that. But, you know, he asked me a specific question here. You know, he'll have to tell you what his intent was, right, in asking me. You know, my thinking was that, if I agreed, right, that the Russians were somehow involved, my guess was that he would want that out, but that is a guess, right. I do not know his intent.

Q But, prior to his call, you -- you did not have any intent to write this statement?

A I did not.

Q Okay. So his call triggered --

A It did, yes.

Q -- that intent in you?

A Yes. Absolutely.

Q Okay. And then, in the exhibit I just handed out to you, I see that the email from Secretary Blinken was originally sent to him by Andrew Bates, then director of rapid response from the Biden campaign and current White House deputy, Press Secretary.

Do you know or have any reason to believe Secretary Blinken was directed by the Biden campaign to enlist you to write this statement?

A I don't know that.

Q Did he mention communication with Andrew Bates --

A He did not.

Q -- on the phone with you? Do you believe you were enlisted by the Biden campaign to write this statement?

A I don't -- I can't guess their intent.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Morell, are you aware of any other individuals that Mr. Blinken contacted during this time period?

Mr. Morell. I am not. I'm not aware.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you have any reason to believe the Biden campaign planted the USA Today story titled "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign"? The same article that they sent you?

A I don't -- I don't -- I don't believe they did.

Q Do you know whether Secretary Blinken or Andrew Bates had any contact with USA Today or USA Today journalist Caren Bohan, Kevin Johnson, Matthew Brown, or Jeff Neiburg?

A So it seems, right, it seems -- it seems that the campaign was asked questions about this by USA Today and provided quite a bit of material. Because you just -- you know, you read it and you see it.

Q Right.

A So I'm sure they did. There's a hundred percent certainty on that.

Q Did the Biden campaign direct your strategy with reporters on the statement?

A So there is an email, which we'll get to, I assume, where I am telling Nick Shapiro that the campaign would like Shane Harris of The Washington Post to be the one to, you know, write a story about this statement.

Q Correct. Let me go ahead and enter that into the record.

A Yeah, go ahead.

[redacted] I would like to now enter an email sent from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro on October 19th, 2020, at 8:21 p.m., into the record as exhibit No. 6.

[Morell Exhibit No. 6.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q You write: Between us, the campaign would like Shane Harris to go first. Please share with the campaign when you share with Shane, but by all means, give it to the reporters as well. Why did the Biden campaign ask for Shane Harris to go first?

A So I do not remember a communication with a campaign -- where the campaign said to me they would like Shane Harris to go first. I just don't recall that at all. Really, sorry. I just don't. You know, there's a number of possibilities here, but I don't remember that clearly. I told Nick that. It's right here in front of us.

Q So --

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Morell, can you list the people in the campaign that you were in contact with during that time period?

Mr. Morell. Mr. Blinken. That's it.

Mr. Gaetz. No one else?

Mr. Morell. No one else, sir.

BY [redacted]

Q And, to be clear, you don't recall Mr. Blinken asking if Shane would go first?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

A I don't.

Q Why did you instruct Mr. Shapiro to share with the campaign when you share with Shane?

A Because I thought it important for them to know what we did. They had not seen it. All right. We didn't coordinate with this with them.

Q So the Biden campaign did not request that you share after it had been sent to the journalist?

A So I don't know again, right --

Q Okay.

A -- because I don't remember that conversation with Tony or with anybody else. But it doesn't sound right from this. It doesn't sound like they had asked, right? This is me saying. Because I thought they should see it.

Q And it is your testimony today that this was not a coordinated effort with the Biden campaign?

A Not beyond the initial phone call that triggered it as you pointed out earlier.

Q Okay. And Nick Shapiro did, in fact, share a copy of the emails he was sending to journalists to the Biden campaign, correct?

A I believe so, but you need to ask him that.

Q Yes. We will. We will enter that into the record as exhibit No. 7, an email sent from Nick Shapiro to Andrew Bates, director of Rapid Response on the Biden campaign on October 19th, 2020, at 11:22 p.m.

[Morell Exhibit No. 7.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And he says: This is what I gave them.

Mr. Morell. Uh-huh.

[redacted] I would like to enter a series of emails Nick Shapiro sent to journalist Julie Pace of the Associated Press, Shane Harris of The Washington Post, and Natasha Bertrand of Politico October 19th, 2020. And, for the record, this is exhibit No. 8.

[Morell Exhibit No. 8.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Was the idea to send to Julie Pace of the Associated Press, Natasha Bertrand of Politico, and Shane Harris at The Washington Post yours? How did y'all come up with that?

A Nick came up with -- Nick made the decision about who to reach out to, you know, with the exception of Shane Harris, which was clearly my instruction to him.

Q Okay. So he came up with that universe of journalists?

A Yes.

Q And that email also shows you giving Mr. Shapiro a different instruction on what to say to those journalists on the record, off the record, on background. Why did you advise Mr. Shapiro on differentiation?

A I'm sorry, I am not following.

Q On exhibit No?

A I'm sorry. I am not numbering them here. I should be.

Q Oh, sorry. Let me make sure you have got this one.

A So these are the same?

Q Yes.

A Okay. Got it. Go ahead. Sorry.

Q Why did you advise Mr. Shapiro to say different things to the press on record?

A Oh, I see what you're saying.

Q On the record --

A So we're looking at this one.

Q -- on background, yes.

A Yes.

Q This is what Mr. Shapiro sent to the reporters. We have another email from you advising --

A Yeah, so I didn't play any role in what Nick said besides the instruction I gave him. Right? In terms of -- in terms of the on the record and off the record, you know, the on the record is clear, right? I wanted people to know that. The off the record in retrospect doesn't make any sense to me. You know, it was really important to me that people not misread what we were saying. And, you know, as you know, the statement clearly says that we're not saying this is disinformation. The statement clearly says we don't know if these emails are real or not. And that was really important to me that that be said. I don't know why I said off the record. I should have said on the record.

Q And you say: If asked on background from you, why Michael, in talking to people outside of government who he worked with and who know Russia. He was struck by the fact that all of them thought Russia was involved here. Michael thought people should know that. So why Michael is then referring to you --

A Yes.

Q -- having drafted it --

A Yes.

Q -- and put it together?

A Yes. Can I add something here, is that okay?

Q Yes, please.

A So that's actually a very important paragraph, No. 4. It was very important to me that the people who knew Russia best, and Marc was one of those, but a number of the other signatories were as well. Deep Russia experts, Marc was in part a Russia expert, but some of the people other people were deep Russia experts. They had worked on the Soviet Union and Russia their entire careers. It was very important to me that they agreed with what we were saying here. And if any of them had raised their hand and said, "Hey, I think this is wrong," this never would have happened. So that paragraph was very important to me.

Q Are you familiar with the CIA Prepublication Classification Review Board, PCRB?

A Yes, I sure am.

[redacted] In your productions to the committee, we have seen that you provided an email that you had sent to the PCRB, which I would now like to enter it into the record as exhibit No. 9.

[Morell Exhibit No. 9.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this is just a matter of CIA policy, correct?

A It's a matter of a secrecy agreement I signed when I when I first started working for CIA in 1980. It's a lifetime requirement.

Q And, in this, you described -- you described it as a rush job to the officials at the CIA. Why? Were you trying to get it out?

A We were trying to get it out before the debate, yes.

Q Before the debate?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And the debate was on October 22nd, correct? This was dated October --

A Yeah, I don't know the date of the debate.

Q Okay.

A But it was close.

Q And was the email the only communication you had with the CIA?

A Yes.

Q You did not speak to any of the officials on the phone?

A I did not. I did not.

Q Okay. Did any -- are you aware of whether any of the officials at the CIA PCRB had any comments or suggestions about the statement?

A They did not. They approved it as written.

Chairman Jordan. How does that typically work? You said you mentioned rush job in the emails. So tell me how -- I assume you've written a lot of things --

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. -- you've had to go through that board numerous times.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. So who is on the record? What's the typical timeframe? How does the process work.

Mr. Morell. It is a number of staff officers, not contractors, staff officers who work on this board. This is what they do all day long. When they get something, if it's straightforward, they can do the approval themselves. If it's not straightforward, they will send it to the relevant part of the Agency for comment.

Chairman Jordan. So, on previous things you submitted, what was the turnaround time?

Mr. Morell. So, for op-eds, very fast. Within hours.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Morell. Within hours. For my book, it took them longer to review it than it took me to write it. So I've had experiences at both ends of the spectrum.

Chairman Jordan. Is there a number of people on the board? If it's four people, five people?

Mr. Morell. I don't know. It's a small number, yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Morell, are you aware that CIA staff at the PCRB reportedly promoted the letter by asking former CIA officials to sign onto the letter?

A Excuse me?

Q Are you aware that CIA staff at the PCRB reportedly promoted the letter by asking former CIA officials to sign onto the letter?

A I am not aware of that.

[redacted] I would now like to enter a statement David Cariens provided to the committee in an email dated March 5th, 2023, into the record as exhibit No. 10.

[Morell Exhibit No. 10.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Cariens told me, quote: When the person in charge of reviewing the book called to say it was approved with no changes, I was told about the draft letter. The person asked me if I would be willing to sign. I do not recall the person's name or the exact date of the phone call. After hearing the letter's content and the qualifiers and such as we want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to The New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani are genuine or not and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement, I agreed to sign. Until now you had --

A I did not know this until this moment.

Q Were you aware of whether any of your fellow signatories would have reached out to the CIA and asked them to --

A I am not aware.

Q -- solicit?

A No, I am not aware.

Q Okay. Does what I just read to you sound like a quid pro quo to you where Mr. Cariens could have been under the impression that, in order to get his book approved by the CIA, he should sign onto the statement?

A I didn't read it that way. I read it in a completely different way. I didn't read that into it.

Q So your testimony today is that you did not coordinate with the CIA --

A I did not coordinate with the CIA. I would have -- had I known this, I would have reacted very negatively to this. This might -- you know, had I known at the time this might have been in the letter, then I certainly would have reported this to then the Director of the Agency.

Mr. Gaetz. And why would you have done this?

Mr. Morell. Because this is inappropriate.

Mr. Gaetz. And why is it inappropriate?

Mr. Morell. It's inappropriate for a currently serving staff officer or contractor to be involved in the political process.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know the people who were engaged in this review for the CIA?

Mr. Morell. I do not.

Mr. Gaetz. You don't know any of the people who work in that process.

Mr. Morell. I do not, sir.

[redacted] And it's --

Chairman Jordan. How did you get the okay from the letter? Was it a phone call or an email.

Mr. Morell. Email back to me, yes.

Chairman Jordan. Was there a person who you remember?

Mr. Morell. So sometimes -- yeah, so, you know, you usually get the first name. So, if you look at -- what exhibit number is this?

[redacted] This is --

Mr. Morell. Looking at the PCRB response.

[redacted] Nine.

Mr. Morell. Nine. So you'll often know the first name of the person, which in this case is James, because you don't know his last name because of the way they do emails with the Agency. Sometimes the person at the bottom of the note will say -- will put their name. Sometimes not.

BY [redacted]

Q And it is also your testimony that you are not aware whether any of your fellow signatories coordinated with the CIA in promoting lettering?

A I am not aware. And, as I said earlier, I would have reacted very negatively to that.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. One of the documents produced to us from Mr. -- I think from Russ Travers. Oh, no, it's from you, Mr. Morell. That's fine. From Russ Travers back to you responded to you. He says: Hey, Michael, great initiative, happy to sign. Is anyone submitting to ODNI prepub?

Is that the same thing we're referring to here, or is there a different publication?

Mr. Morell. Yeah, so, depending on where you work, right, you have different responsibilities. So, if you worked only at the ODNI, then you need to submit it to that organization, or if you worked at DOD, to that organization, or, you know, at NSA, to that organization?

Chairman Jordan. But this statement, the one signed off 51 was only sent to the prepublication, the CIA board, not to this board?

Mr. Morell. Correct.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Morell. I don't know -- let me be clear, Congressman. I don't know whether individuals who worked for other organizations sent it for review to their organization or not. Right? It's possible that, when I told Russ Travers no, do not send it to ODNI, that he did on his own. I just don't know.

Chairman Jordan. But you wouldn't need -- even though -- I guess, I'm assuming Mr. Travers worked for ODNI?

Mr. Morell. He worked at NTCT, yes.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. You wouldn't need all -- you wouldn't need approval from all these reviews boards, only the CIA?

Mr. Morell. So the responsibility is an individual one, right? The responsibility is not with regard to a document. The responsibility is an individual one. And so, it's really --

Chairman Jordan. Your responsibility there was the CIA?

Mr. Morell. Yes. My responsibility was the CIA.

Chairman Jordan. But other members -- for all we know Mr. Travers did the same thing. I just wanted to understand.

Mr. Gaetz. I have two questions for you. So you said that -- you testified that what triggered this letter was Mr. Blinken's contact to you --

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. -- regarding the Biden campaign's desire to have it?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. And then the goal of the letter was to help Joe Biden, right?

Mr. Morell. Let me just say one thing in response. He asked me if I thought the Russians could be involved in this. As far as I remember, he did not ask me to put out a statement. So, yes, he triggered the statement; he did not ask for it, as far as my memory goes.

Mr. Gaetz. And the goal was to help Joe Biden win the Presidential election.

Mr. Morell. One of two goals, yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And the mechanism that you specifically contemplated with a letter useful in winning that election was the upcoming Presidential debate, right.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So how did you decide who to solicit?

Mr. Morell. We wanted -- you know, I'd say three things. Number one -- and I think I mentioned these before. One is we wanted some senior officials. Two is we wanted some balance across the administrations. And three is we wanted some Russia experts. So that's who we targeted.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you target anyone who had not held a security clearance at some point?

Mr. Morell. I don't know. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Is that one of the gating philosophies.

Mr. Morell. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know whether or not any of the people that you solicited didn't at some point have a security clearance?

Mr. Morell. I would have to look at a list and go through it one by one with you.

Mr. Gaetz. You don't have a security clearance now, right?

Mr. Morell. Yes, I do.

Mr. Gaetz. And did all of the people who signed the letter, do they still have them?

Mr. Morell. I don't know sure, sir. Most of them probably do not.

Mr. Gaetz. In this entire process of creating the letter, soliciting signatories to the letter, and then distributing the letter to these media outlets, at any point did you talk to any current government officials --

Mr. Morell. I did not, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. -- other than this prepublication?

Mr. Morell. Yes, other than the prepublication review, which I did not talk to them; it was an email exchange.

Mr. Gaetz. And your method of solicitation, would that be principally through phone calls or emails.

Mr. Morell. It was all through email, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So did any of those emails germinate in phone conversations that you have with any of those people?

Mr. Morell. I don't believe so.

Mr. Gaetz. Were there text messages?

Mr. Morell. I don't believe so. It might have been text messages between me and Jeremy Bash, but I don't remember that. What I remember are emails.

Mr. Gaetz. Are all of the bases that you have to believe that Russians were involved articulated in the drafts of these letters?

Mr. Morell. I don't know. I can tell you what my concerns were. I'm happy to do that. I think so. But I'd have to go through each of the reasons I was concerned.

Mr. Gaetz. I guess, could you just tell me if there are any reasons, if there were any basis you had for the particulations set forth in the letter that are not in the letter, I would like you to list those.

Mr. Morell. Okay. Let me just list them all because I -- otherwise I would have to read the letter here to remind myself. So one was my knowledge of Russian intelligence capabilities. They are very good. Two was their massive involvement in the 2016 election. Particularly with regard to hacking and dumping of emails and the use of social media to promote discord in the United States of America. Three was the fact that the U.S. intelligence community had, I believe, in August of 2020 said that the Russians the Chinese and the Iranians were interfering in the election. Four was that I believe --

Chairman Jordan. Excuse me, Mr. Morell. Is that last one what you I cited in your counsel's letter to us August 7, 2020, the Office of the Director of Intelligence --

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. -- led by Mr. Ratcliffe. This is a press release stating.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir. Next was the fact that I think it was in September -- I'm not a hundred percent sure -- and these were the things where I found, right, after Mr. Blinken had called me and I started doing internet searches. These are all the things that started coming to me or I found. And this next one is one of the ones I found. So, in September, the Department of Treasury sanctioned a Ukrainian Parliamentarian for interference in the U.S. election. Mr. Mnuchin put out a press release praising the sanction. Secretary Pompeo did exactly the same thing. This person was identified -- this is Mr. Derkach -- this person was identified by the U.S. government as an agent of Russia. And part of his interference in the election I learned when I did my research was that he was -- he was saying an awful lot about Hunter Biden. One of the things I found that he said was that Hunter Biden had stolen millions of dollars from the Ukrainian people and diverted that money into Biden family accounts.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you able to assess whether that was a true or false statement?

Mr. Morell. I have no idea whether it was true or false, but it was certainly, in this case, a Russian agent interfering in our election. And so, you know, I don't know if that's in here. I don't think it is. But that was concerning to me. And then the fact that, you know, two individuals close to President Trump, the fact that they had played a role in these emails getting from the computer repair shop to The New York Post was also suspicious to me.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Morell, all that is circumstantial evidence, isn't it?

Mr. Morell. Intelligence analysts deal with circumstantial evidence every day, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sure they do, but everything you just described is circumstantial evidence, isn't it?

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So you had no direct evidence that Russia was involved in this matter at all, did you.

Mr. Morell. I did not.

Mr. Gaetz. And --

Chairman Jordan. So did the statement put out by the Director of National Intelligence that day or earlier that morning, did that have any influence on your decision with the letter, specifically, what Mr. Ratcliffe said?

Mr. Morell. No.

Chairman Jordan. Even though he said this was not -- the emails were not part of some Russian disinformation operation.

Mr. Morell. It did not because, as a former intelligence officer with much more experience than Mr. Ratcliffe, I don't know how he could have came to that conclusion. How could he know what -- how could he know it wasn't part of Russian disinformation?

Chairman Jordan. And he was good enough to quote in your response to us from August, but 2 months later, when he says he is the guy in government, he is head of ODNI, that had no impact on your decision?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir. What was in my attorney statement to you was not written by Mr. Ratcliffe; it was written by Mr. Evanina, who was the senior official following --

Chairman Jordan. Indeed, on August 7, 2020, the Office of Director of National Intelligence, led by John Ratcliffe, issued a press release stating in part, and then you quote --

Mr. Morell. Right.

Chairman Jordan. -- from ODNI?

Mr. Morell. But the letter was written by another senior individual.

Chairman Jordan. I'm just asking the statement he put out the morning that you actually put the letter out later, the statement out later that day where he says this is not --

Mr. Morell. Right.

Chairman Jordan. -- what you say it is in the statement had no bearing.

Mr. Morell. No.

Chairman Jordan. You just thought he is wrong?

Mr. Morell. So the first statement was 100 percent the first statement from August?

Chairman Jordan. No, I know he is right in August, but he is wrong in October?

Mr. Morell. One hundred percent consistent with what I know they did 2016 and what I had already heard, right, by reading the media what they were already doing in 2020. So it's fully consistent with that. The statement -- the morning that we put this together -- I know it was the morning, or it was different morning, but --

Chairman Jordan. 8:57 a.m. of October 19th, 2020.

Mr. Morell. Okay. I just could not see how he could come to that conclusion; how you could come to a conclusion that the Russians were not involved in this so quickly. It just did not make any sense to me.

Chairman Jordan. You just thought he was wrong?

Mr. Morell. I don't know if he was wrong or right. I don't know how --

Chairman Jordan. He was obviously right. You thought he was wrong on that day.

Mr. Morell. I didn't know if he was right or wrong. I just thought that was way too quick a judgment to make.

Chairman Jordan. So you were obviously aware of Mr. Ratcliffe's statement that morning before you sent the letter out?

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And, as you sit here today, do you believe the Russians were involved in the Hunter Biden laptop matter?

Mr. Morell. I don't know. I mean, I still have suspicions, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Would you organize such a letter today knowing what you know now?

Mr. Morell. I would have to write it differently because we now know the emails are authentic, right? So you couldn't say anymore we don't know whether it's information or disinformation. But I still have suspicions about a Russian role in these emails getting to The New York Post.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, it seems Mr. Shapiro made a call on that very matter that you would have to be -- that you would have to have a different approach on the day when deciphering which information to Andrew Bates would be on the record and off the record, right?

Mr. Morell. I'm not tracking you, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. The exhibit that is the Shapiro to Bates letter, it indicates what would be on the record and what would be off the record and what would be on background?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you involved in deciding what buckets of material were falling into those categories? What would be on the record, what would be off the record, what would be on background?

Mr. Morell. So, yes, to the extent that what Mr. Shapiro did is consistent with the email that I sent him at 8:21 p.m., on October 19th.

Mr. Gaetz. So why did you decide that this matter that we've been discussing for the last several minutes, regarding the authenticity of the material, would be off the record?

Mr. Morell. I don't know. I really don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. So it wasn't a political call you made.

Mr. Morell. No, it was -- there's a somewhere in my review of the materials is an email from me to somebody saying that I'm deeply concerned that people are going to misinterpret this.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Morell, doesn't the fact that you're leaving that element off the record making misinterpretation more likely?

Mr. Morell. I don't know what was -- Congressman, I really don't know what was going through my head when I said off the record.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Morell, are you really testifying that this email triggered by Mr. Blinken, written for the purpose of helping Joe Biden --

Mr. Morell. This statement.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll take that back. So it's your testimony that this statement, triggered by Mr. Blinken for the purpose of Joe Biden winning the election, for him to use in the debate to get distributed through your hand-selected media, contained an off-the-record element of the communication that signals that you really don't know whether or not the material is authentic, and that's not a political calculus?

Mr. Morell. The statement itself said, the statement itself said we don't know whether the information is accurate or not. It made that perfectly clear in the statement.

[10:59 a.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. So why delineate it separately off the record here?

Mr. Morell. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Was that done at the direction of Mr. Blinken?

Mr. Morell. It was not, sir. For some reason, I did that, and I can't tell you why. But it is -- but the statement --

Mr. Gaetz. But you can tell me it's certainly not a political calculus?

Mr. Morell. It was not a political calculus, because we put it in the statement. The statement is caveated to the ends of the Earth.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, its utilization in the debate certainly makes it caveated. Was it?

Mr. Morell. It was not, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And the purpose of the letter was to be a tool to use in the debate.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. I want to travel back. What is your work at Beacon?

Mr. Morell. I am -- my titles are senior counselor -- that's more of a title than a job responsibility -- and I am -- my other title is the global chairman for geopolitical risk.

One hundred percent of what I do for Beacon is brief corporate leadership teams and corporate boards on what is going on in the world and why it matters to them.

Mr. Gaetz. And what's your compensation there?

Mr. Morell. My compensation there is $400,000 a year.

Mr. Gaetz. And is Beacon your largest source of compensation?

Mr. Morell. It is not.

Mr. Gaetz. What is?

Mr. Morell. Cerberus Capital Management.

Mr. Gaetz. And what work do you do for them?

Mr. Morell. The managing partner of Cerberus Capital Management, Steve Feinberg, who was President Trump's head of the President's Intelligence Advisory Board, is the most patriotic person I know in America, and he wants to make investments in firms that make a difference to U.S. national security, and I help him decide what those firms are.

Mr. Gaetz. And what's your compensation there?

Mr. Morell. It varies because I get paid by the day, but it's upwards of $700,000 a year.

Mr. Gaetz. Can you list for me all email addresses that you used in calendar year 2020?

Mr. Morell. Probably not.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. If we ask your counsel to provide that list, is that something you're willing to provide to augment your testimony?

Mr. Morell. I think -- sure.

Mr. Gaetz. And can you similarly provide us all of the telephone numbers that you would've used in calendar year 2020?

Mr. Morell. Yes. That's easy.

Mr. Gaetz. And who was your cell phone provider?

Mr. Morell. I was using a Beacon cell phone.

Mr. Gaetz. Is part of the mission or function at Beacon to provide a place for people to work in between times in which they're working for the government?

Mr. Morell. No. No. In fact, I don't know of any -- I can't think of any -- let me put it this way -- I can't think of anybody who's left Beacon to go back into the administration. But I don't know that it hasn't happened. But it's certainly not a large number. If anybody has, it's a very small number.

Mr. Gaetz. But it's not the organizing principle of the entity?

Mr. Morell. It is not the organizing principle. The organizing principle is to make money, like any business.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Jordan, did you have another question?

Chairman Jordan. When 51 former intel officials push out a statement, caveated or not, it creates an impression or it creates a belief out there. Would you agree?

Mr. Morell. I think it adds -- I would agree that it adds credibility to the statement, yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. I mean, that's why you did it, right?

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Yeah.

And, again, you did that in spite of the one individual who does have access to data that you don't, being that he is in government and you're not, to put out a statement that directly contradicted the impression that you provided to the country. Is --

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. -- that fair?

Mr. Morell. Yes, it is, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. I think we're nearing the end of our hour.

[redacted] We're prepared to go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 11:16, and we can go back on the record.

Good morning again, Mr. Morell.

Mr. Morell. Good morning.

[redacted] My name is [redacted] I'm the chief oversight counsel of the Democratic staff on the House Judicial Committee. And thank you again for joining us.

Mr. Morell. You're welcome.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q I want to turn back to something that came up in the earlier hour. You were talking about -- you were asked about Mr. Ratcliffe's statement.

In your experience -- well, first of all, were you referring to his determination that it was not a disinformation campaign or that there was no Russian involvement when you said that there was no -- when you were describing his findings?

A Yeah, I should've mentioned this.

So my understanding of what Mr. Ratcliffe said was that the intelligence community, you know, determined that this was not disinformation. He did not say that the Russians were not involved in this in any way. He did not say that. So there's a big difference there, in my mind.

Q And what is that difference?

A You know, we -- the only thing that would've -- had I accepted what the DNI said, what we would've changed in the letter was, you know, to take out the disinformation. But the letter would've still stood in terms of our suspicions about Russian involvement in this in some way.

Q And how long would it ordinarily take for the CIA or for other intelligence agencies to determine if there was Russian involvement in something?

A So, you know, my main reason for questioning the DNI's statement is that it's really tough to prove a negative, really tough to prove a negative, I learned over a very long career, and it can take a very long time to learn about the covert operations of another country.

You know, one of the best examples that I know of is, in 1972 -- and I know I'm going -- you know, I'm going way back here, and I apologize for that. But in 1972 the left-leaning German Chancellor, Willy Brandt, was up for a no-confidence vote, and the numbers suggested that he should've lost that vote and should have been replaced by a conservative, but he survived. He survived the no-confidence vote in 1972.

And it was not until sometime after 2015, so nearly 50 years later, or 50 years later, that we learned that the Soviet Union had asked the East German intelligence service to bribe German parliamentarians to vote in favor of Mr. Brandt.

So 50 years it took to discover Soviet and East German involvement in the outcome of a no-confidence vote in West Germany. So it can take a very long time.

Q So, in this instance, the laptop was first revealed in, say, early October, and Mr. Ratcliffe's statement came out on October 17th or October 18th, maybe October 19th. That's a matter of a couple weeks. Would it be possible to determine in that period of time if there was Russian involvement?

A I don't believe so.

Q Okay.

And so your statement was not, in your mind, actually inconsistent with Mr. Ratcliffe's statement, because you didn't think that he was -- that he should've --

A So I'd say two things. One, it was not inconsistent in terms of the Russians playing some role here --

Q Right.

A -- because he didn't speak to that. And I thought it was too quick a judgment to make on whether this was disinformation or not.

Q Okay. And just to home in on this, there is no way to prove a negative, in other words, that it was not a Russian disinformation campaign, in a matter of weeks like that?

A No, not in a matter of weeks.

Q Okay.

I want to turn to the conversation about Mr. Cariens. And we were discussing earlier -- it's marked as exhibit No. 10.

A Uh-huh.

Q Do you know Mr. Cariens?

A You know, I know of him. Maybe he briefed me from time to time. But I did not know him well. I did not know him well.

Q Okay.

And the exhibit 10 that we've been looking at, this is an email dated March 5, 2023, 3:02 p.m., correct?

A Yes, it is.

Q And so that's -- and it's addressed from Mr. Cariens to [redacted]

A Yes.

Q And [redacted] is the counsel sitting down there.

A Yes.

Q So this is -- March 5, 2023, is about 3, 2-1/2 years after the email -- I'm sorry, the public statement was released, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And this is just an email; it's not a sworn statement, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

In this, Mr. --

A But I would hope -- I would hope that, you know, in a letter to this committee that people would be honest. I'm sure you'll agree.

Q But it's not been subject to cross-examination, in other words?

A No.

Q Okay.

In the email, Mr. Cariens says that he retired in 1997.

A Yes.

Q Do you know about how old Mr. Cariens is?

A I do not. I'm sorry.

Q Okay.

He continues on -- so you have no idea if anything in this is accurate. The first time --

A I don't.

Q -- you saw this was today.

A I don't.

Q Okay. And you haven't spoken to Mr. Cariens about his statement.

A No. No.

Q Okay. So you don't know, for example, if he's remembering things correctly. You have no idea.

A I don't. I don't. You're absolutely correct.

Q Okay.

He says in paragraph 1, partway, about three-quarters of the way down, "I agreed to sign," and then his wife agreed to sign as well. He says that the PRB described the letter to him and then he'd agreed to sign.

Are you reading that as he told the PRB individual that he would agree to sign?

A Let me read it, please.

Q Uh-huh.

A So the way I'm reading it is that the person in the PRB explained the letter to him --

Q Okay.

A -- and it was at that moment that he, in his mind at least, agreed to sign. That's the way I'm reading this.

Q So, if there had been -- and your only communication with the PRB was the email we went through in which you asked for clearance and then they came back and said that you were cleared, correct?

A Yes.

Q You never received any communication from the PRB saying that Mr. Cariens and his wife want to join the letter.

A No.

Q To your knowledge, did anybody else who was organizing the letter receive such a contact?

A Not that I know of.

Q Okay.

Do you recall how Mr. Cariens agreed to sign? Do you recall getting an email from him?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

So everything that we know about Mr. Cariens's comments are in the four corners of this letter --

A As far as I know, yes.

Q -- and you have no other information about it?

A As far as I know, yes --

Q Okay.

A No. No, I do not.

Q Okay.

And you produced to the committee any relevant communications that --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- you'd had with the PRB? Okay. And, to your knowledge, nobody else had any communications with the PRB?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q Okay.

I want to get back just quickly -- you said earlier that it was your testimony that there was no coordination with the campaign beyond that one email from Mr. Blinken in which he asked if you were aware of this.

A Besides the initial --

Q Right.

A -- contact, right, whether email or phone call --

Q Right.

A -- and then the second email, which was the USA Today article.

Q Okay. And that's based on your -- only with respect to your own personal knowledge, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay.

All right. I'm going to move on. We talked at the very beginning briefly about your background --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- and I want to go into that in a little more detail. And I'm also going to ask you about the background of some of the people that you worked with.

So when did you join the CIA?

A 1980. November of 1980.

Q Okay. And when did you retire?

A September of 2013.

Q So you spent --

A Thirty-three years.

Q Okay. And you said that was your entire career until you retired?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So you would've worked under both Republican and Democratic --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- administrations.

A Three of each.

Q Okay. Great. Sorry, let me finish my questions so we can get a clean --

A Oh, sorry.

Q No, you're fine.

A I'm sorry. Sorry.

Q Did you consider yourself a career official?

A Yes.

Q Could you walk me through your early career experience?

A So I started out working on international energy issues. It was the second -- it was the Iran-Iraq War. Oil prices had skyrocketed. It was a big issue.

The Soviet Union was offering to build two natural gas pipelines to Western Europe. President Reagan was deeply concerned about that. A lot of research and analysis around natural gas demand and supply and how dependent Western Europe would be on Soviet gas. That was the first 3 years or so.

And then I moved to work on East Asia. And I worked on East Asia for the next -- as an analyst and as a manager for the next 13 years or so, working on Southeast Asia, Japan, some China, a lot of North Korea.

Q And at some point you became the head of the team responsible for the President's daily brief, right?

A Right. So my next job after that was the head of that team, yes.

Q Okay. And can you describe the duties of that position?

A So we would get drafts from the offices of pieces that people thought that the President should see, and it was our responsibility to make sure they met the standards that the leadership or the Agency demanded for those pieces.

So we would work with the analysts to make sure that they met those standards, and we would make kind of a first-cut judgment at what should be in the book the next day and present that to the senior leadership for their decision.

Q Okay. And how did it come about that you were named to that position?

A I had worked on East Asia a long time and it was time to do something else, and this was an opportunity that came up. You know, it was seen as an important job. It was something I was interested in. It would broaden my exposure to, you know, not only East Asia but to the entire world. So it was something that was offered to me, and I said yes.

Q And who were the Presidents when you were managing the President's daily briefing?

A President Clinton.

Q Okay. And did you continue on through when President Bush was elected?

A So, no. So I went from being involved in the PDB process to being George Tenet's executive assistant for 2 years -- 1998, 1999. After those 2 years, I went to run the office of East Asia and Latin American analysis.

And at the beginning of President Bush's term, I was asked if I'd be willing to be President Bush's first daily intelligence briefer, which, next to being the head of analysis at CIA, is the best job an analyst could have. So of course I said yes.

Q And in 2006 you became the CIA's Associate Deputy Director, right?

A Yes. Yes.

Q Who selected you for that position?

A Mike Hayden.

Q Okay. And can you broadly describe your duties there?

A So that position has changed names many, many times. It is the number-three in the Agency. The responsibilities are not substantive, they're not analytic, they're not operational; they are running the business of the Agency.

Q Okay.

A So HR, IT, security, those sorts of issues.

Q Uh-huh.

And then in 2008 you were named the Director of Intelligence, correct?

A Yes.

Q And what are the duties of that position?

A You are in charge of all the analysis and all the analysts at CIA.

Q Okay. Who selected you for that position?

A Mike Hayden.

Q Okay.

And you twice served as the Acting -- I'm sorry. In 2010, you became Deputy Director of the CIA?

A Yes.

Q And who selected you for that?

A Leon Panetta.

Q Okay. And can you describe your duties in that role?

A As I explained earlier, I was responsible for everything that the CIA did. My focus was on analysis and operations and, you know, making sure we were doing the best we could do to serve our customers, get the intelligence we need, and get the analysis right.

And I had a significant outside-the-building responsibility in terms of representing the Agency at the White House at Deputies Committee meetings and on the Hill at the two Intelligence Committees and then with a large number of countries overseas, with the leaders of those countries and the heads of the intelligence services of those countries.

Q And then we talked -- you were twice -- sorry, you twice served as Acting Director at CIA?

A Yes.

Q So is it fair to say that during your 33 years with the CIA and these positions of increasing leadership responsibilities you developed extensive experience in assessing and analyzing foreign influence operations?

A Yes.

Q Is it fair to say that you developed extensive experience with Russian influence operations in particular?

A Actually, I wouldn't say that.

Q Okay.

A I'd say, because the Russians -- you know, the Russians, you know, messed around in our elections on the margins until 2016, when they did so on a massive effort. So I was, you know, familiar with it, but I wouldn't call myself a deep, deep expert.

Q Were you familiar with people who were deep, deep experts?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And we'll get back to that in a minute.

Did you receive any awards during your time at the CIA?

A Yes.

Q What were those awards?

A This is embarrassing. Seriously.

I received the Distinguished Career Intelligence Medal when I retired for everything I had done throughout my career.

I received the Distinguished Intelligence Medal, which is one of the highest awards a CIA officer can get, for my role in the Bin Laden operation.

I received a large number of what are called Director Awards. Directors, you know, have this award that's called the Director's Award. They can hand it out on their own -- you know, on their own decision. And I received, you know, at least 10 of those from many different Directors, including, you know, somewhat surprisingly, after I left, Mike Pompeo gave me one.

Q Okay. When was that?

A I received it at my home the day he was sworn in as Secretary of State.

Q And what was the purpose for that award?

A I have spent a lot of time since I left CIA providing advice to Directors and Deputy Directors, and I've done so with every single one. And I spent some time with Director Pompeo when he was Director, and I take it he was appreciative of that time, and he gave me that award.

Q Okay.

So I want to turn to some of the people that you worked with on this letter. And I think you mentioned the names earlier that I'm going to go through.

Are you familiar with an individual named Marc Poly- --

A Yes.

Q -- -meropoulos? Let me finish my question.

A Oh, yes. Yes.

Q How do you know him?

A I first met Marc when his wife was my executive assistant when I was Deputy Director, and our families became friends. And so I've known him -- actually, let me correct that.

I first met Marc when I was head of analysis and I was on a trip to Amman, Jordan, and he was the deputy chief of station. So that's the first time I met him.

I got to know him when my his wife worked for me on my staff, and we became friends. And I've known him since then.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of his background?

A So he's worked on many different things in his career, a lot of the Middle East.

The reason I reached out to him in this case is, his last two jobs at the Agency were the deputy chief of operations for the region that covers Russia and then the acting chief of operations for the part of the world that covers Russia, and during that time he lived through the 2016 Russian interference in our election.

Q And why was that important?

A Because he had a -- you know, he had a very good understanding of what the Russians did in 2016, probably the best understanding of anybody that I knew.

Q Okay. Do you consider him an expert in --

A Yes.

Q -- in Russian disinformation?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

According to the biography on his website, Mr. Polymeropoulos is one of the intelligence community's, quote, "most highly decorated field officers."

Do you believe that's an accurate --

A Yes.

Q -- statement? Okay.

Are you familiar with an individual named Nick Shapiro?

A Yes.

Q How do you know him?

A I first met Nick when he worked for John Brennan when John Brennan was at the White House. He was an aide to John Brennan when John was the homeland security advisor to President Obama.

When John Brennan was made Director of CIA, John brought Nick to the Agency with him to be his deputy chief of staff. I got to know Nick during that period of time. We became friends. We stayed friends.

And Nick has been my media advisor pretty much since the time that he left government.

Q Do you consider him honest and trustworthy?

A Yes.

Q Do you believe that he exercises good judgment?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

You mentioned an individual earlier, Kristin Wood?

A Yes.

Q How do you know Ms. Wood?

A Kristin was one of my executive assistants when I was the number-three on the analytic side of the Agency. And then I've kept up with her, you know, ever since. I've been a mentor to her.

When I was Deputy Director, I asked her to take on an extremely difficult job of helping to prepare materials for the Director and Deputy Director for their use at meetings -- talking points, for example.

Q Uh-huh.

A It was a very difficult job because the Director and Deputy Director are never happy with what they get. But she did that job, and she did it extremely well. And I've stayed in touch with her ever since.

Q Okay. And I think you described her earlier -- and I don't have the exact quote, but -- as being extremely reliable?

A Yes.

Q Is that a fair description?

A Yes.

Q And do you believe she is honest and trustworthy?

A Yes.

Q Do you believe that she exercises good judgment?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So, in the previous hour, we talked about the October 19th letter --

A Yes.

Q -- fairly extensively. I want to walk through it even more closely, if we can. And I think it was introduced as exhibit 1.

So, as written -- putting aside your motivations, but, as written, the letter doesn't actually endorse any particular political candidate, right?

A It does not.

Q Was that an intentional choice?

A Yeah. It was a -- yes. It was important for me to write this letter as if an intelligence officer was writing it.

Q And why was that?

A Because that's what we were, right?

Q Right.

A That's what we were. And we were making an argument about what we saw and what we believed and what I still believe may be true today, that the Russians played some role here.

Q Okay.

The very first sentence of the second paragraph of this letter reads, "We are all also individuals who see Russia as one of our nation's primary adversaries."

Was this an accurate statement at the time that it was written?

A It was an accurate statement at the time it was written, and it's been an accurate statement ever since --

Q Okay.

A -- the Soviet Union ended and Russia began.

Q And do you see Russia as a primary adversary of the United --

A Yes.

Q -- States today, then? Okay. And could you explain that?

A One of Russia's primary objectives is to weaken the United States of America. One of their primary objectives is to weaken the international system that we built so that they can do things on their periphery without the world interfering with them, as we see today in Ukraine.

Q Okay.

And you said that one of Russia's primary roles is to weaken the United States. So, for example, Russia interfered in the 2016 election.

A Massively.

Q Okay. And you think part of their goal in doing that was to weaken the United States?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with reports from summer 2020 that Russian intelligence hacked -- I'm sorry, that a Russian military intelligence unit secretly offered bounties to Taliban-linked militants who killed coalition forces in Afghanistan, including American troops?

A I was aware of that reporting, yes.

Q Do you think that is an example of an action that Russia could take that would make it an adversary of the United States?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay.

A I don't know if that information is true or not. I'd put that caveat out there.

I didn't have access to the intelligence reporting, but --

Q Right.

A -- I certainly was aware. And if it's true, it is absolutely an example of Russia being an adversary, yes.

Q Okay. And I believe that was actually in a June 26, 2020, New York Times article. So that was public information.

Are you familiar with reports from December 2020 that Russian intelligence hacked the SolarWinds software --

A Yes.

Q -- infiltrating the State Department, Department of Homeland Security, and the Pentagon, among other agencies?

A Yes.

Q And do you believe that that's an example of an action that would make Russia an adversary of the United States?

A I think there's -- you know, I think there's norms around intelligence collection, right? We collect intelligence on them; they collect intelligence on us. So I think I've gotta be a little bit careful here.

I think it's their actions that are designed to weaken us that we need to focus on, in terms of them being our adversary.

Q Okay.

And do you think, in 2020, was there widespread agreement among United States intelligence and national security experts that Russia was an adversary of the United States?

A Yes.

Q And do you think that's still true today?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

The final sentence of the October 19th letter reads, "It is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy."

Do you remember writing that?

A Yes.

Q And can you explain why you wrote that?

A You know, I don't think there's anybody in this room who would disagree with the idea that Americans should determine the outcome of elections, not foreign countries. I think since the founding of the Republic there has been a belief, a widespread belief, in this country that foreign countries should not interfere in our elections, should not have a say in our elections.

And the Russians had tried to play such a role in 2016, and it was absolutely clear that they were trying again in 2020.

Q Okay. And the goal of that -- would you say the goal of that was to weaken the United States?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Can you explain how exposing Russian influence operations helps to counter those operations?

A If the American people know what the Russians are doing, then it makes what the Russians are trying to do less effective.

Q How so?

A If you know -- for example, in 2016, one of the issues that the Russians conducted significant information operations on was the division in the country over race.

And if you know, right -- if you're just seeing social media out of nowhere, you know, trying to divide us on that issue, it's one thing if you know the Russians are behind a big chunk of it. It makes it less credible and, therefore, less divisive, in my view.

Q And we've used a couple different terms here today. We've used "disinformation," "misinformation," and then "information" --

A Right.

Q -- operations. Can you explain the difference between a disinformation operation and an information operation?

A Disinformation is when an intelligence service uses false information, and information is when they use accurate information, is the way I think about it.

Q And how do those play out in practice?

A Well, if you're going to use disinformation, you have to come up, right, you have to create it, and then you have to get it into the public domain.

Information operations are actually easier, because the information is usually already in the public domain and you're amplifying it, you're targeting it at specific groups or even specific individuals, as the Russians did in 2016.

So that's how I think about it.

Q So information operations, in other words, could use true information or accurate information --

A It would. That's the definition.

Q Okay.

Do you believe that Russian information, as opposed to disinformation, operations pose a threat to American democracy?

A Yes. Yes.

Q And how is that?

A Because it is a foreign country amplifying, targeting information with political intent, with the intent on influencing the election. And, therefore, you know, it creates a possibility that they could determine the outcome of an election, which is obviously something that nobody wants.

Q So, in other words, the Russians -- or others, I guess -- could use an information operation in order to help elect a particular candidate?

A Try to help elect, yes.

Q Okay.

There are some people who say that both disinformation and information operations are simply foreign individuals exercising their free-speech rights. What do you think about that statement?

A Foreign governments do not have First Amendment rights in the United States.

Q And information operations involve a government hiding its hand or kind of hiding behind plausible deniability, correct?

A So both of them do, right? Both information and disinformation operations, you would want to hide your hand, right? Because if your hand is seen, it's less effective.

Q And how would you hide your hand?

A You know, for example, in 2016 and again in 2020, the Russians used bots on social media to push out both any disinformation they were using and the information they were trying to highlight and target at specific individuals and groups.

Q So I want to introduce as exhibit 11 the indictment --

A Can I just add one thing here? Is --

Q Absolutely.

A -- that okay?

Q Absolutely.

A I just want to say that, you know, I followed closely media reporting on Russian involvement in the 2016 election, but what I considered to be the most exhaustive report written on it was the bipartisan report of the Senate Intelligence Committee, which I read cover to cover.

Q And why do you consider that to be the most --

A Because they did a thorough investigation of every aspect of what the Russians have done, and they did, in my view, a more thorough investigation than anybody else.

Q And I believe that's a thousand pages or thereabouts long. Is that --

A There were five pieces to the report. I don't know their total length.

Q And you consider that, based on your experience, your 33 years of intel, of working for the CIA experience --

A Yes.

Q -- you consider that to be a reliable report --

A Yes, I do. I sure do.

Q -- and assessment of the 2016 --

A Yes.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce as exhibit No. 11 the indictment in United States v. Internet Research Agency et al.

[Morell Exhibit No. 11.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this is getting back to what we were talking about, Russian influence -- information, as opposed to disinformation, operations.

A Yup.

Q Are you familiar with this indictment?

A Peripherally. I mean, I read about it in the media.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with Yevgeny Prigozhin?

A Describe, please.

Q He's the founder of the Wagner Group --

A Yes, that's how I know the name. Yes.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with the Internet Research Agency?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And I believe that was actually mentioned in the --

A Yes.

Q -- Senate report.

A Senate report, yes.

Q So, on paragraph 4 of this -- it's on page 3. It's paragraph 4 of the indictment. It describes the Russian defendants in this case posing as U.S. persons, creating false U.S. personas, operating social media pages and groups designed to attract U.S. audiences.

These groups -- and I'm not reading this precisely, but -- these groups and pages, which addressed divisive U.S. political and social issues, falsely claimed to be controlled by U.S. activists when, in fact, they were controlled by defendants, "defendants" being the Internet Research Agency here.

Defendants also used the stolen identities of real U.S. persons to post on organization-controlled social media accounts. "Organization" refers to the Internet Research Agency.

Over time, these social media accounts became defendants' means to reach significant numbers of Americans for purposes of interfering with the U.S. political system, including the Presidential election of 2016.

And then much later on, in paragraph 33, the indictment notes that the Internet Research Agency employees, known as "specialists," were, quote, "instructed to write about topics germane to the United States such as U.S. foreign policy and U.S. economic issues. Specialists were directed to create 'political intensity through supporting radical groups, users dissatisfied with [the] social and economic situation and oppositional social movements.'"

I know I just read a long block of text, but, based on your experience, is this consistent with how and why Russia would work to amplify --

A Yes.

Q -- information online?

A Yes.

Q So they do use persons purportedly in the United States or U.S. persons to amplify --

A I mean, one of the things that -- one of the things I noted when I first read it -- I can't tell you when -- was that they actually put people on the ground here to discover what the divisive issues were.

Q Okay. So that --

A That was -- it shows how good they are.

Q And that's a known Russian tactic?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Turning back to the emails that were the actual subject of the October 19 --

A Yes.

Q -- 2020, letter, putting aside the origin of the emails -- and I think you said earlier that you believe that they are authentic based on subsequent reporting -- would Russia have had incentive to amplify them online?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain that?

A The U.S. intelligence community had made clear in August 2020 that Russia preferred President Trump over Vice President Biden.

The whole Hunter Biden-Vice President Biden issue, you know, was part of the public discussion, perhaps as it should've been -- as it should've been. But the one issue that I focused on was -- as we talked about earlier, the one issue I focused on was the allegation that Vice President Biden, you know, essentially sold his country down the road in his dealings with the Ukrainians, which I did not believe, which I didn't think there was any proof of, and my experience in the Obama administration suggested was not even possible. That had a lot of traction.

And the Russians would absolutely have incentive to amplify that allegation.

Q And can you talk more about the Russian incentive? What was their goal in amplifying, do you believe?

A To get people to believe that the Vice President had made a decision on behalf of his son rather than on behalf of the country, which is where his duty lied.

Q And would the goal of the Russians have been to influence the outcome of the election?

A Yes.

Q Do you believe that they were working to -- that they amplified these emails in order to support one candidate over another?

A Yes.

But I've got to make something clear here. I don't know that they did that --

Q Right.

A -- right?

Q Right.

A I don't know that they amplified this message --

Q Absolutely.

A -- right? It's certainly possible, likely, but I don't know that.

Q Right. Agreed. And I'm just asking based on your experience --

A I understand.

Q -- and based on your --

A I just want to be clear.

Q I understand.

And Russia also could've amplified them, though, just based on your experience, in order to sow chaos, right?

A In this case, right. I mean, amplifying racial differences, economic differences in the United States, that's more to create -- to undermine our system and, you know, create chaos.

This would be, you know, with a particular political outcome in mind.

Q Okay.

A In my view. In my view.

Q So, in your view, this was --

A If this happened.

Q -- if this was a Russian information, as opposed to disinformation, a Russian information operation, the goal of it would've been to promote one candidate over another?

A Right.

Q And was that candidate President Trump?

A Yes.

Q Again, in your experience -- and you said earlier, I think we referenced the letter saying that "the Russians need to stop interfering in our elections," is a quote from your letter, or roughly -- is this type of Russian interference -- in other words, a Russian information operation -- equally as concerning as the actual, for example, hacking and leaking of materials or the creation and dissemination of false materials?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A Because it's actually more subtle. When you hack John Podesta's emails and you put them in the public domain, everybody kind of knows where it came from, right? So I think it devalues it a little bit, politically.

What you don't see, right, particularly on social media, in terms of amplification and targeting, that's a lot harder to see and, therefore, potentially more effective in affecting people's thinking.

Q In that situation where it's more effective, is it even more useful to bring attention to the fact of what the Russians may be doing?

A I'm sorry?

Q In other words, in a situation -- you said part of the reason that it's more effective, an information operation can be more effective, is because the Russians or anybody who is conducting it can kind of hide what they're doing and give it some additional authenticity or --

A Yeah, what I would say -- what I would say is, based on my experience -- based on my experience watching this, I think that information operations are often more effective than disinformation operations because it's easier to sustain the truth than it is to sustain a falsehood, and it's easier -- because, as I said earlier, to the extent the information is true, it's already out there, usually, and you're simply amplifying and directing. So it's often more effective than disinformation.

Q And can it be an effective tactic to counter that spread of accurate information but for a, you know, purpose of interfering --

A Absolutely.

Q -- can it be a good countermeasure to call attention to it, in other words, to publicly point out, "This is what the Russians are doing," so that Americans understand what is happening?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A Again, for the same reasons we talked about, right? To the extent that there is a narrative in the public domain that's not accurate, to the extent that their operations support that narrative, right, it's more difficult --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- it's more difficult for our political system, you know, to get to the truth, right, which is ultimately what we're trying to do here.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the declassified version of the 2017 intelligence community assessment --

A Yes.

Q -- that concluded that Russia interfered --

A Yes.

Q -- in the 2016 election? Okay.

We're going to introduce this as exhibit 12.

[Morell Exhibit No. 12.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And you said you're familiar with it --

A Yes, I read it.

Q -- but I can give you a minute to look through it.

A No, I read it.

Q Okay.

A It was a long time ago, but I read it.

Q Were you familiar with this warning when it was issued?

I'm sorry, but I'm also going to introduce as exhibit 13 a joint statement from the Department of Homeland Security and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence on election security, warning about influence operations.

A Yes.

[Morell Exhibit No. 13.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with this?

A What's the date on it?

Q October 7, 2016.

A Yes.

Q Were you familiar with this warning when it was issued?

A Yes. I'm sure I was.

Q Okay.

A I don't remember exactly.

Q Were you familiar with the warning when you were drafting the letter in 2020?

A When I was -- no, I didn't think about this --

Q Okay.

A -- when I drafted the letter in 2020. What I was thinking about related to 2016 was just what the Russians had done in general in 2016.

Q Okay.

Based on your recollection, do you think that the 2017 assessment has a clearer description of Russian interference than the 2016 warning?

A A clearer?

Q Clearer.

A Yes. Yes.

Q It's -- I think, for one thing, it's --

A Yes.

Q -- many pages longer, right?

A Yes.

Q The warning is only three paragraphs.

A Yes.

I would say that the Senate report -- I would say that, based on the Senate report, even in January of 2017, we did not fully understand the extent of Russian information operations, and it took some time to understand the totality of it.

Which is why I put higher value on the Senate Intelligence Committee report than

I put on this. I'm not saying this is wrong; I'm just saying that's more complete.

Q But to the extent that the October 7, 2016, warning was what was publicly released to Americans to warn them about Russian influence operations or Russian disinformation operations, that pre-election warning was much less thorough and provided much less information than the information that came out after the election?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

You've previously called the response to Russian interference in the 2016 an intelligence failure. Do you recall saying that?

A Uh-huh.

Q Is part of that intelligence failure a failure of the national security community, including the intelligence community, to provide a clear warning of Russian interference in advance -- to provide a clear warning of the Russian interference in advance of the election?

A I'd say two things.

Part of this is on me, right? I was Deputy Director at the time.

The Russians conceived of the 2016 operation back in 2013; actually began it in 2014 --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- the information, you know, piece of it, not the hack-and-dump and not the hacking of our election infrastructure. But it went way back, and the intelligence community did not see it at the time.

So I'd say two things. One was to identify in real-time what the Russians were planning and doing and to warn about it in a way that would've made it easier for policymakers to take action that might have made the operations less effective.

Q Is it important for intelligence analysts to be free from political interference --

A Yes.

Q -- or political pressure?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A Because when you put analysis on the table in the Situation Room or in a hearing room up here, right, you don't want anybody to think that you have a political objective or even a policy objective, right, that you are on umpire, you are calling balls and strikes, you are calling it like you see it.

That is beat in to all intelligence officers on day one and then throughout your career. Because you can't be effective if people doubt what you're telling them.

Q In the, kind of, late winter of 2020, were you aware that President Trump was displeased with the intelligence briefings that were being given to Congress about election interference?

A I read that in the media. I don't know if it was true, but I read it in the media.

Q Did that contribute at all to your decision to work with Mr. Polymeropoulos to draft the letter?

A Not really.

Q Okay.

In the spring of 2020, were you aware of allegations that intelligence officials in the Trump administration were putting limitations on what could be said by analysts about Russian election interference?

A Again, I had read that, and, again, I didn't know if it was true.

Q Okay.

A And I wasn't talking to anybody on the inside. But I was aware of it based on the media reports, yes.

Q Did that contribute to your decision to work on the letter?

A Not really.

Q Okay.

And in the summer of 2020, were you aware of allegations that intelligence officials in the Trump administration were putting out statements that drew kind of a false equivalency between Russia, China, and Iran?

A That was a critique that I was aware of from reading the media, and it was my own critique of some of the early statements from the DNI and the DNI staff about interference in the election.

Q Did that contribute to your decision to write the letter at all?

A No, because I was concerned -- I was concerned about not only what the Russians were doing but what the Chinese were doing and what the Iranians were doing as well. What the report from the DNI did not make clear was that Russian involvement was at a scale much, much larger than Chinese involvement or Iranian involvement.

Q And why was that concerning to you?

A It was just something that should have been mentioned, I thought, in the DNI public statement to size these things for the American people.

Q Why would it have mattered for the American people to know that?

A Because the different countries had different outcomes that they were pursuing.

Q Uh-huh.

A The Iranians did not want President Trump to be reelected. The Iranians wanted Vice President Biden to be elected.

The Chinese -- quite frankly, I was never clear exactly what the Chinese wanted, and they ultimately stood down on their involvement. I think the Chinese were torn, is my own personal view.

But the Russians, you know, it was absolutely clear what the Russian preference was. And because the scale of their activities was so much larger, I just thought that was important to know, given that they had different preferred outcomes.

Q Okay.

Let me move on a little bit right now. We discussed the timing of the letter earlier, and it was noted that the letter was released in advance of the second Presidential debate.

You were a private citizen when the letter was made public on October 19, 2020, correct?

A Yes.

Q And all of the other signatories were as well?

A As far as I know.

Q Okay. And would you agree that as a private citizen you have the right to engage in the political process?

A Yes. Not only the right but, I think, the responsibility.

Q Why do you say the responsibility?

A Because I think, as American citizens, we all have a responsibility to make sure this democracy continues.

Q Okay. And did you feel a particular responsibility because you had 33 years of intelligence experience?

A Yes.

Q And we went through this a little bit earlier, but the letter doesn't actually endorse a political candidate on its face?

A It does not.

Q Okay. And, in fact, the closing line is, "It is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy."

A Correct.

Q So is it fair to say that the text of the letter makes it clear that the focus is actually on Russian interference, not on the political candidates?

A It's correct. I would just repeat what I said earlier just to be, you know, totally clear, that there were two intentions here, right? One was to make clear to the American people that the Russians were interfering in the election, and the other was to help Vice President Biden in the debate.

Q So I want to introduce into the record two documents.

The first -- and I'm going to mark it as exhibit 14 -- is a FOX News article dated September 14, 2020, entitled "235 Former Military Leaders Support Trump, Warn 'Our Historic Way of Life is At Stake.'"

[Morell Exhibit No. 14.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The second I'll mark as exhibit 15. And it's a letter from 235 former military leaders entitled "Open Letter from Senior Military Leaders."

[Morell Exhibit No. 15.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The letter isn't dated, but the FOX News article indicates it was released on or about September 14, 2020.

A Yes. I remember seeing it.

Q You do remember --

A Yes.

Q -- seeing the letter, or the FOX News article, or both?

A I remember hearing about the endorsement.

Q So have you read this letter, though, before today?

A I have not. I have not read it yet.

Q So I'll give you a second to review it, if you'd like. And the letter is the one actually marked exhibit 15.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So the letter, briefly summarizing it, states that the 2020 election could be the most important election since our country was founded. It argues that the Democrats' opposition to border security, their pledge to return to the disastrous Iran nuclear deal, their antagonism toward the police, and planned cuts to military spending will leave the United States more vulnerable to foreign enemies.

And then it says -- it urges Americans to, quote, "support Donald Trump's reelection."

It's then signed by 235 retired military officials, including, you know, generals and admirals --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- and vice admirals, lieutenant generals, et cetera.

A Uh-huh.

Q Is that a fair description of the letter?

A Yes.

Q And regardless of whether you agree with what the letter says, do you believe these signatories are expressing their First Amendment right?

A Yes. And I believe they're also -- they are not only expressing their right to be involved in the political process but also their responsibility.

Q Okay. And do you agree that, again, regardless of whether you or anyone else agrees with what the letter says, these individuals who signed this letter have the right to exercise their First Amendment right and to participate in the political process?

A I sure do.

Q Okay.

So I also want to introduce as exhibit 16 an excerpt from the first Presidential debate, in 2020, which took place on September 29, 2020.

[Morell Exhibit No. 16.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this isn't the full transcript, because the full transcript was 100-and-some-pages long, but we're -- it's a cover page and then an excerpt from the middle of the debate.

Did you watch the debate?

A Uh-huh.

Q So I'll give you a minute to review this. But --

A I watched the debate, but I don't --

Q Yep.

A -- I don't have a crystal-clear memory.

[12:09 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I'm going to ask you about the bottom of that page.

A This one?

Q Yes.

A Should I stop reading the rest of it?

Q Whenever you're ready. Sorry. I didn't mean to --

A Okay. Go ahead.

Q So, at the bottom, it's President Donald J. Trump at 28:45 in that block of text.

It reads: As far as the church is concerned and as far as the generals are concerned, we just got the support of 250 military leaders and generals, total support. Law enforcement, almost every law enforcement group in the United States. I have Florida. I have Texas. I have Ohio. I have every -- excuse me, Portland, the sheriff just came out today, and he said, "I support President Trump."

Based on what I just read to you and the review of the letter from the 235 former military leaders, is it accurate to say that senior military leaders' letter in support of Trump was released in advance of the first Presidential debate?

A What was the timing?

Q So it would have been September 14, 2020.

A And the debate was?

Q September 29, 2020.

A Likely.

Q Okay. And is it accurate to say that it played a role in that debate?

A Yes.

Q That it was brought up by President Trump in that debate?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So -- and you agree that these senior military leaders -- they were admirals, generals, lieutenant generals; they're all retired -- they have the right to participate in the political process?

A Yes.

Q And, in fact, their decision to participate did play a role in the political process?

A Yes.

[redacted] Okay. I have about 5 minutes left.

We have about 5 minutes left. I'm going to keep going unless you all -- okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You were asked earlier about an email exchange with Mr. Blinken?

A Yes.

Q And I don't actually remember, I think it was exhibit 5, but we're not going to return to the exhibit.

A Okay.

Q The email was dated October 17, 2020. Correct?

A The email from --

Q From Mr. Blinken to you.

A Yes, yes.

Q And, on October 17, 2020, Mr. Blinken was a private citizen. Correct?

A Yes.

Q You were also a private citizen?

A Yes.

Q And all the other letter signatories were private citizens?

A As far as I know, yes.

Q So this was essentially -- the interaction between you and Mr. Blinken were two private citizens engaged in the political process?

A I didn't see it that way.

Q How did you see it?

A I mean, I saw it as an interaction between me and a senior member of the Biden campaign.

Q But, even as a member of the campaign, he was a private --

A Yes.

Q -- citizen?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so, to the extent that there has been some suggestion that, you know, your -- that you should not have written this letter or that there was something wrong with you writing the letter, do you agree that that could amount to telling you you should not have participated in the political process?

A Rephrase that again.

Q To the extent there has been the suggestion made either today or in public reporting that you should not have sent that letter --

A Yes.

Q -- that you shouldn't have submitted the public letter, would you agree that that would have the effect of -- if you had not -- that if you had -- that it could have a chilling effect on others' willingness to participate in the political process in the future?

A Yes.

Q And would that be problematic?

A Yes.

Q Why?

A Because you want as much involvement in the political process as possible by American citizens. And it's chilled me, to be honest with you.

Q How so?

A You know, I'm not likely to participate publicly in the political process again.

Q Do you think that's possibly true for the other people who signed this letter?

A I don't know. You would have to ask them.

[redacted] I think we're at a stopping point. So we can break for now.

[redacted] Mr. Morell, would you like a break?

Mr. Morell. Yeah, yeah.

[redacted] How long would you like?

Mr. Morell. Ten minutes?

[redacted] All right. Thank you.

Mr. Morell. Great.

[Recess.]

[redacted] The time is now 12:25, and we can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Our committees are deeply troubled by the CIA's engagement and what it's -- my understanding you have testified here today is describing its political activity.

[redacted] earlier noted that the statement that Mr. Cariens provided me was not under oath. I did just want to say for the record that we have requested Mr. Cariens to appear for a transcribed interview and are currently working with him and counsel to provide that.

Are you aware whether the statement was sent to any of the other intelligence agencies? I know you said you weren't sure --

A I don't know.

Q -- if it went to the ODNI?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. And did you speak to any other offices or staff outside of the PCRB at the CIA?

A No.

Q In an email you sent to signatories thanking them for signing on, you described this as, quote, the most important election since 1860 and 1864 when the very existence of the country was on the ballot.

[redacted] And I can enter that into the record, that email, so that we have it for you as exhibit No. 15 -- I believe -- 17.

[Morell Exhibit No. 17.

Was marked for identification.]

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] That's all right.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember sending an email to that effect?

A Yes.

Q Why did you believe that this was the most important election since 1860 and 1864?

A You know, it's funny, reading the letter from the generals supporting President Trump, I agree with a number of the points that they make. I'm as concerned about the defense budget. I'm a pretty conservative guy when it comes to national security. But I have to tell you that, you know, spending 33 years at CIA and watching literally hundreds of world leaders during that time, President Trump's personality traits deeply concerned me, what I believed to be deep narcissism, what I believed to be deep paranoia, what I believe to be a type of sadism where you -- not sexually, of course, but a type of sadism where you, you know, are happy when your opponents have been injured in some way -- I'm talking politically -- that those were all traits that I saw in foreign leaders who did significant damage to their country and significant damage to the democracies of their country. I'm thinking -- you know, I'm thinking of Mugabe in Zimbabwe. I'm thinking of Chavez in Venezuela. I'm thinking of Putin in Russia.

So I was deeply concerned about the potential impact of President Trump on our democracy. And, you know, my fear, in my view, was borne out by his failure to act on January 6, 2021.

So that's what I meant when I wrote that. That's what I was thinking.

Q The public statement --

Chairman Jordan. You couldn't have been thinking about January 6, 2021, because --

Mr. Morell. No. I wasn't thinking about January 6th. I was thinking about everything I said up to that point, sir. You're correct.

BY [redacted]

Q The public statement published in Politico reads in part: If we are right, this is Russia trying to influence how Americans vote in this election, and we believe strongly that Americans need to be aware of this.

I'm sure you also appreciate the weight that your name carries with Americans, what Brennan's name carries with Americans, Clapper's name carries with Americans, Hayden's name carries with Americans, your extensive background, the fact that you have had security clearances, continue to have a security clearance, it's my understanding.

Do you appreciate the fact that it was you and your fellow signatories who, in fact, were the ones that influenced how Americans may have voted in the 2020 Presidential election with this statement?

A You know, the nature of politics, right, is people put their ideas into the public domain. And those that do so with political intent, which is what exactly -- which is what I did -- I can't speak for everybody else here -- what is clearly what I did was designed to have an effect.

I don't know how much effect it had at the end of the day. You know, all of those names you just read, by the time this letter came out, you know, most of America was broken into two camps, as you know. And I think, you know, one camp would see the group of people that you just mentioned as people they admire, and the other camp feels just the opposite about them. So, you know, I have no idea, at the end of the day, how much we influenced anybody.

Q Now that you know that some of the materials on the laptop have been verified, have you considered retracting the statement or issuing an apology or anything like that?

A No, I have not. I have not because I still believe that it is possible that the Russians played some role in the information getting to the New York Post. You know, I told the story about the West German elections earlier. You know, we may never know, but it is still possible.

So, if I was going to rewrite it today, I would say the information is accurate but still raise the possibility that the Russians played some role in it ending up in the New York Post.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you have any evidence to suggest that the Russians played a role in this?

Mr. Morell. No, sir, I do not beyond the list that I gave you earlier, which you correctly pointed out was circumstantial evidence.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware circumstantially of any other interactions between Russians and the New York Post?

Mr. Morell. I'm not. I'm not, and I'm not saying there were direct interactions between the Russians and the New York Post here. I'm not saying that at all.

Mr. Gaetz. So, if you were going to write the letter today, would you express that you believe that the Russians may have been involved in getting it to the New York Post?

Mr. Morell. Yes, it's possible, absolutely.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you regret publishing this letter?

Mr. Morell. I do not.

Mr. Gaetz. Even though it lacks the obvious caveat that the information is authentic?

Mr. Morell. We didn't know that at the time.

Mr. Gaetz. You just used your experience to surmise it?

Mr. Morell. No. We said we didn't know, sir. The letter is crystal clear in that we don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you regret that those caveats that you seem to be relying on heavily today weren't really part of the public discourse and the political discourse around this letter?

Mr. Morell. I knew they wouldn't be. I knew they wouldn't be, as much as we tried, right? As you guys know better than anybody, right, politics is hyperbole and particularly debates. There's a lot of hyperbole around, a lot of people taking things and taking them a little bit further, right? You know that better than I do.

So I wasn't surprised at all that -- you know, when President Biden -- when Vice President Biden talked about this at the debate that he didn't say, "Hey, I have to put some caveats on this." That's not what happens at debates.

Mr. Gaetz. So you knew when you put this product out with caveats --

Mr. Morell. I was hoping --

Mr. Gaetz. Sorry. Let me finish.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir, yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. The court reporter --

Mr. Morell. Absolutely. My fault.

Mr. Gaetz. So you knew when you put this product out with caveats that its utilization politically likely wouldn't include those caveats?

Mr. Morell. I guessed that politicians would not use the caveats. I was hoping that fact-checkers and I was hoping the media -- disappointed in that regard -- would pay more attention to them.

Mr. Gaetz. But you testified earlier that you were accelerating -- you were requesting an acceleration of the review of this material so it could be used in a debate, right?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And you knew in that debate those caveats wouldn't really be referenced?

Mr. Morell. I was hoping that the Vice President, you know, would not say that this was disinformation. All right. I was hoping he was going to say possible Russian role in these emails coming to light, right? That's what I was hoping.

Mr. Gaetz. Would it be fair to characterize the letter that you put out as disinformation?

Mr. Morell. It would not.

Mr. Gaetz. When is the last time you spoke to Tony Blinken?

Mr. Morell. I have not spoken to Tony Blinken in a very long time. I can't remember the last time I spoke to Tony Blinken.

Chairman Jordan. We covered this a little bit in the first hour. Is there a reason that the main caveat, to use the term we've been using, is there a reason why that main caveat was to be presented to the press off the record? Because that's the fundamental issue that you've referred back to several times, and that's the one you wanted presented off the record.

Mr. Morell. Sir, as I said earlier, I do not remember why I said off the record versus on the record versus background. It was in the letter. My intent was not to hide it. I don't know why I said that.

Mr. Gaetz. I want to go back to your communications with Mr. Blinken.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So can we drill down on when you recall your last correspondence or communication with him?

Mr. Morell. This may have been it. This may have been it.

Mr. Gaetz. The phone call --

Mr. Morell. The phone call and the email, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So at no point after the letter's publishing can you recall any correspondence with the Biden --

Mr. Morell. Oh, no. I'm sorry. I'm sorry. Let me correct that.

I did have communication with Mr. Blinken during the transition. I did have communication with him during the transition. I called him to tell him that I was no longer interested in being the Director of CIA.

Mr. Gaetz. Had you previously expressed an interest in that position?

Mr. Morell. Not publicly and not even privately to the campaign, but I knew I was being talked about. I had actually prior -- prior to the campaign, prior to the 2020 campaign, I had actually went to see Tony at WestExec Partners where he worked. And we talked about the election, and I told him I was not interested in being the Director of CIA, but I knew I was being discussed. I was interested, but I remember, you know, losing interest fast as the Democrats came out against me. And I remember calling him and telling him that, hey --

Chairman Jordan. Wait, wait. So when were you -- you said it both ways. When were you interested that you expressed that to him?

Mr. Morell. So I didn't express it to anybody. It was -- it was discussed. I expressed it to people like John Brennan who weren't part of the transition. People would call me up and say, "Hey, are you interested?" But nobody in the transition reached out to me ever to discuss a job.

But, when I was tired of the false allegations being made against me by some Democrats and unable to defend myself against those allegations, I said I'm not interested anymore. I want to end this. And I called Tony --

Chairman Jordan. -- let's go back to you were interested. You were interested. I mean, your background and the awards you've won, I can understand why.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. We appreciate your service, but you were interested back in the summer; is it fair to say?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir, yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of any of the other signatories to this letter having any interest in positions in the Biden administration?

Mr. Morell. Not that I know of.

Mr. Gaetz. No other person on -- who was a signatory contacted you to express any interest?

Mr. Morell. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And you didn't have any other general awareness of that?

Mr. Morell. No. No, I did not, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Can you make a list of the places where you bank?

Mr. Morell. Where I bank?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah.

Mr. Morell. Really?

Mr. Nathanson. That seems awfully far afield from the subject matter of the request.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you heard in the preamble that the committee has an interest in potentially exploring revolving door legislation, and so we may be interested in financial records. It's entirely within the scope of our legislative purpose. If you want to object to it now, we can review a subpoena down the road. It's your call.

Mr. Nathanson. Yeah. Look, respectfully, I'm not quarrelling with the legitimacy of the request. I'm just making clear that Mr. Morell is here voluntarily to answer questions specifically related to the letter. He's indulged a number of questions related to his current employment which is, I think, you know, beyond the scope of what he had agreed to. But I think at this time, you know, we're going to refrain from answering any questions on bank accounts.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Yeah, I would state for the record that inherent in our interest in the letter are the positions that the signatories have held in the government, then their work outside the government for the sake of politics, and what might inform on that work. Someone's financial records would be relevant to that.

You're correct, you're here voluntarily, so you can choose to voluntarily -- you can choose to refuse any question that we ask, but then we, of course, have the tools of compulsory process.

Mr. Morell. And my highest income comes from an individual who was a major financier for President Trump.

Mr. Gaetz. I just asked you to make a list of where you banked.

BY [redacted]

Q You testified that you never had access to classified information regarding the contents of Hunter Biden's laptop. Correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Are you aware of whether any of your fellow signatories have had access to classified information regarding the contents on Hunter Biden's laptop?

A I am not.

Q Okay. Did you not knowingly insinuate to the American public that, given you and your fellow signatories' previous access to classified information, you might continue to have special knowledge about the contents on Hunter Biden's laptop?

A I don't -- I didn't think about that, number one. Number two, as I think about it now, I think the answer is no. You know, most of the individuals here I don't believe had clearances. And, quite frankly, the American people don't know who does and who doesn't have a clearance.

Q Now that the contents of Hunter Biden's laptop have been authenticated, including documentation of shady business dealings with Chinese and Ukrainian foreign nationals, do you believe Hunter Biden is a threat to national security?

A I'm not in a position to judge that at this time. I don't have enough information.

Q Who was in charge of compiling and tracking all of the signatories?

A Oh, it was a group effort between myself, Marc, and Kristin.

Q Okay. Thank you.

A As people said yes to one of the three of us, you know, somebody I think would let -- somebody had a master list. Right? I don't know which one of us did. But as individuals said yes, then we would let each other know, and the name would get added.

[redacted] That's all of my questions.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Morell, Mr. Ratcliffe said on the morning of the 19th -- and I'm going from a news article here -- the laptop, quote, is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign.

At the start of the minority's hour last hour, you were making a distinction there. Can you just refresh me what --

Mr. Morell. Sure.

Chairman Jordan. Because you said you agreed with -- you said something about you agreed with Mr. Ratcliffe, but then I don't -- I don't square with that based on what he said and what you guys ended up doing later.

Mr. Morell. Yeah. So he said -- if you want to read it back to me one more time.

Chairman Jordan. The Biden laptop story is not, quote, is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign. He said this on FOX News that morning, and then this is in a --

Mr. Morell. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. -- print story later that morning.

Mr. Morell. Yeah, yes, sir.

So I would say two things. One is he made no judgment, right, as to Russian involvement in the information getting from one place to another. He didn't make any judgment about that at all.

Chairman Jordan. So how do you read that phrase, "is not part of some Russian disinformation"?

Mr. Morell. And then, when you look at that phrase, right, I read it as what he said, right, that, in his judgment, it wasn't Russian disinformation.

I think -- if I were the DNI and I was going to speak about that, I'd say we don't have any evidence that it's part of Russian disinformation -- part of a Russian disinformation campaign.

Chairman Jordan. Well, he said that. He said: Let me be clear. The intelligence community doesn't believe that because there's no intelligence that supports that.

He said that as well?

Mr. Morell. Right. But that's different than making a judgment that it's not, period, because there may be information that you don't have. That's why I'm so -- that's why I leaned against, you know, putting a lot of weight in what he said because I don't know how you -- how you know what you don't know. This is something that intelligence officers deal with all the time.

Chairman Jordan. That's why you said earlier, I think when I asked you that, you just felt he was wrong to say those things?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir, yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So there was no real agreement when -- you made some distinction between disinformation, misinformation, information. That wasn't -- that's not part of it. You just think he's wrong?

Mr. Morell. Yeah. I think there was a much better way for him to say what he believed.

Chairman Jordan. Okay, okay. What is malinformation?

Mr. Morell. What is what?

Chairman Jordan. Malinformation.

Mr. Morell. I've never heard the term, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. DHS and everyone else is using the term. I just wondered if you knew.

Mr. Morell. Yeah, I don't know.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Let me -- do you know a guy, Mr. Ricchetti? Do you know him?

Mr. Morell. Ricchetti.

Chairman Jordan. Ricchetti, excuse me.

How do you know him?

Mr. Morell. Well, I first got to know him when he was my son's basketball coach?

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Morell. And then I didn't see him for a long time. And then I would run into him occasionally on West Executive Avenue when he was working for the Vice President and I was attending deputies' meetings. And, because he was my son's basketball coach, we would stop and chat with each other.

That's the extent of the relationship.

Chairman Jordan. Did you talk to him at all regarding the statement that you helped organize and put out?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. When did you talk with him?

Mr. Morell. After the debate -- I think it was after the debate -- in fact, I'm pretty sure it was after the debate -- I got a phone call from Jeremy Bash, who I work with at Beacon and who is active politically. And Jeremy said: Do you have a minute to talk to Steve Ricchetti?

I said: Of course.

He was the head of the Biden campaign at the time. And Jeremy got him on the line, and Steve thanked me for putting the statement out. And that was the extent of the conversation.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Let me just walk through the dates and the storyline as I see it, and you tell me if we're wrong.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. On the 14th, the New York Post story comes out. Approximately 3 days later, sometime on the 17th, you got a call or an email from Mr. Blinken.

Mr. Morell. So I would say on or before the 17th.

Chairman Jordan. On or before the 17th --

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. -- you got a call or an email from Mr. Blinken?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. That day you start this process and put this letter together. You and Mr. Polymeropoulos start to put this statement together. Is that accurate?

Mr. Morell. Sir, the first thing I would say is I get the email or call -- probably a call. I get the email or call. I do a little bit of my own research, and then I reach out to Mr. Polymeropoulos to say: Hey, what do you think?

Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. So it's starting to go?

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Later that day you get -- on the 17th, if I remember, 10:53 p.m., Mr. Blinken sends you the USA Today story?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. And Mr. Bates from the Biden campaign, head of rapid response, had sent it to Mr. Blinken.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. 18th and 19th, you actually do put it all together. You get the 51 folks to sign it.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. And, on the 19th, you get the okay from the CIA Publication Review Board?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. The 19th, later the statement is published, and you then tell Mr. Shapiro who the Biden campaign wants to get the scoop; i.e. the Harris or --

Mr. Morell. Shane Harris, yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. The Harris from The Washington Post. And then, sometime after that, the head of the Biden campaign calls to say thank you.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Was that -- do you know the date of that again?

Mr. Morell. I think it was the following Monday, I think.

Chairman Jordan. The following Monday being what date?

Let me ask you this. Was it before the debate or after the debate?

Mr. Morell. After the debate.

Chairman Jordan. So that was after the debate. I had it before.

So, on the 22nd, Mr. Biden, in fact, uses your statement -- the statement in the debate?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. And then after the debate is when Mr. Ricchetti calls you.

Mr. Morell. That's my memory, sir. That's my memory.

Chairman Jordan. And then we also have a number of emails that have been produced to the committee where the people on -- a number of the people who signed it were sort of congratulating each other for the fact that it was, in fact, used in the debate.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And then the one other fact that I think is important that [redacted] asked about earlier is one of the individuals who signed it, when he happened to be -- because he had publication from the CRB, Publication Review Board, he was asked by someone in the government to sign on as well?

Mr. Morell. Sounds that way to me. At least that's what the piece of paper we just saw said.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Okay.

[redacted] Can I just say something?

Chairman Jordan. Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you get any other signatories via that process?

A Of them --

Q So you reached out to a bunch of people?

A Yeah, yeah.

Q More than 51?

A Yeah, yeah, yes.

Q Tray Johnson said no?

A Yes, yes. Some people didn't respond. Right? Some people just didn't respond.

Q Did you pick up any other signatories, you know, that you didn't have on your list?

A So there's -- at the bottom of the letter, I believe it says that there were a number of people who agreed with the letter but could not sign it, but they wanted it noted that, if they could have signed, they would have.

Q Was Cariens on your list?

A I don't remember. Is he?

Q He signed it.

A He signed the letter.

Q His wife signed it. But you don't remember whether he was on your list?

A I don't.

Q Or whether he came to the letter?

A I think we have that information here, right, who I sent a request to sign the letter.

Q Okay.

A But I don't remember.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Would Kristin Wood be someone we should talk about as to how Mr. Cariens came to be on the list?

Mr. Morell. Yeah, I think -- you know, I'm happy to look at the list I sent out and see if he's on my list. Right? But either -- he was either on my list or Marc's or Kristin's, or he reached out to one of us, right, heard about it and reached out to one of us. I think there's a lot of possibilities here, and, you know, I don't want to speculate as to which one it was.

Chairman Jordan. Tell me your definitions again. I think in the last hour you talked about misinformation versus disinformation.

Mr. Morell. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Tell me the distinction.

Mr. Morell. Oh, I don't make a distinction between misinformation and disinformation.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Morell. They're the same to me; inaccurate, false.

Chairman Jordan. False information versus -- oh, so then what you would define as information is true information?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. That's what so many people today define as malinformation, true information but somehow true information that they say presented in some context leads to a bad outcome, or whatever, which I think is particularly scary.

What if Americans say something that is true information, maybe has some bad outcome, you would say that that in no way should be censored or limited, if Americans are engaged in speech --

Mr. Morell. Absolutely not.

Chairman Jordan. And so is it fair to say you -- because I know earlier you said you did it to help Biden in the debate.

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. I think you had three reasons. You said: We believe Russians were involved -- which wasn't -- is now not accurate I think -- we think Trump will attack Biden on information which is fake, and we want to give the VP a talking point in response.

So those are the three motivations driving the --

Mr. Morell. I think of it as two. I think of it as two motivations. You know, one, let the American people know about what we saw as a deep suspicion of Russian involvement; and then, two, helping the Vice President.

Chairman Jordan. You wanted to help the Vice President why?

Mr. Morell. Because I wanted him to win the election.

Chairman Jordan. You wanted him to win; that's why?

Mr. Morell. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. All right.

Okay. I think I'm fine.

BY [redacted]

Q Now that the story has come out about the origins of the laptop, do you have any different views on it; the fact that it was just a careless act, that it was left, it was abandoned at this Delaware --

A You know, I'm still suspicious about how it got from the repair shop to the New York Post.

Q I mean, there has been some reporting -- I don't know if you're aware of it -- that this individual in Delaware, after some point in time -- and it was back in 2019 --

A Yeah.

Q -- had the laptop and was doing outreach to various parties seeking -- you know, sort of seeking a place to put this information.

Are you aware of that?

A No.

Q Okay.

A No. You know, I've seen this individual interviewed on "60 Minutes," and a lot of questions he doesn't answer very well. Look, and I'm not saying that he knew about Russian involvement. We talked earlier with the minority about the Russians putting people here in 2016, right, as part of their information campaign.

You know, my -- one of my theories about possible Russian involvement here when I signed my name on this letter and when I organized it was that the Russians knew what was on Hunter Biden's laptop, what was in his emails because either they hacked it or they learned it from their Burisma hack or, you know, that they were aware in some way and that, based on their hacking of Hunter Biden's phone or laptop, that they knew where the laptop was and, you know, various possible ways, direct and indirect, for them to suggest that you might want to get this laptop to the right people, and there might be some money in it for you.

And then you add, you know, Rudy Giuliani's involvement here and his interaction with a known Russian agent in Ukraine and Steve Bannon, and it gets suspicious. That's what I was thinking.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Getting back to Shane Harris --

A Yes.

Q -- was that name suggested by --

A So this is -- I talked about this earlier. You know, I had -- when you guys first reached out, right, I started thinking about what's my memory here. Right? And I thought there were only two points of contact with the campaign: The first phone call, you know, or email from Tony and then the call from Steve Ricchetti. I thought those were the only two.

Since then, I've learned, right, that Tony sent me the USA Today thing. I didn't remember that when I first started thinking about this. And I learned that there's this email that I sent to Nick saying, "Hey, the campaign wants Shane Harris to be the guy." I have no memory of that, right? I have no memory of the campaign, having a conversation with the campaign about that.

I can think of possible ways that it could have happened, but I really have no memory. I wish I did. I wish I could tell you.

Q As the laptop story was suppressed by Facebook and --

A So I understand, yes.

Q Did you have any idea going into this that potentially your letter led to that type of -- just a blockade of information?

A Yeah. So I certainly didn't think of that going in, and I don't think our letter had that effect. I believe that the suppression started before our letter came out.

Q Okay. Your letter is certainly a data point that goes into --

A So you would need to talk to Facebook and Twitter, which I'm sure you're going to do, about why they made this decision. I have no insight at all, right, no contact with any of the social media companies over this. Nobody called me and said: Hey, do you really believe this?

Q Okay.

A Right? Never happened.

Q But you're a prestigious person, okay?

A Some don't believe that.

Q You know, these 51 officials, a good chunk of them are well-known people?

A Uh-huh.

Q And so signing the letter with the caveats, without the caveats certainly gives this story a stamp of legitimacy?

A Correct. I don't know -- I have no idea as to why they made the decision they made. Right? I have no idea. I don't know if our letter was part of their decisionmaking or not. I just don't know.

Q I mean, you've testified today that it's important to participate in the political process and people who want to influence the outcome as Americans have a right to engage in that and get their information to the people. Correct?

A Yep.

Q But what happened with the Hunter Biden laptop story was quite the opposite; it was a suppression of information. So a good chunk of, you know, the American people didn't get to consider that as they were deciding who they were going to vote for in the 2020 election. Isn't that true?

A I don't know to what extent it was suppressed, right --

Q Well, you know that --

A -- as part of the story. What we did was put a point of view into the political process, right? Our statement did not result in people stopping the discussion about Hunter Biden and the relationship with his father and decisions his father made as Vice President. This didn't end that, right --

Q I mean, Facebook --

A -- by any stretch of the imagination. Right?

And, again, I have no idea why Facebook and Twitter made those decisions.

Q But Facebook and Twitter basically shut this story down, and anybody that posted about the story was -- I mean, the story was wiped away, and people were kicked off platforms. I mean, it was quite extraordinary. Wouldn't you agree?

A I would agree it's extraordinary, and I agree that you guys are going to talk to them about it, right, and have a conversation with them, just like we're having with me, and I think that conversation is perfectly appropriate. I think the American people deserve insight into why they did what they did.

Q Do you think that the information on the laptop, you know, contains, you know, relevant data points for people as they're considering who they're going to elect President?

A Yes.

Q And so an exploration of what's on the laptop -- and I'm talking about certainly the business dealings going on in Ukraine and China, not some of the other items.

A Yeah. I think that's all appropriate to be in the political process for an election.

Q But that part of the dialogue was shut down and wiped out heading into the 2020 election?

A Yeah. And I would say much, much, much less by our letter and possibly more by, you know -- but I'm not a political scientist to sit here and tell you, you know, the degree of suppression.

[redacted] Right.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] Mr. Morell, we have no further questions.

Mr. Morell. Thank you.

[redacted] And we appreciate you coming in voluntarily today.

Mr. Morell. You're welcome. I thought it was important that I come in today.

[redacted] We do have some questions.

[redacted] Well, we defer to the minority for their time.

Mr. Morell. Okay.

[redacted] We'll go off the record for a minute.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q All right. Thank you again. I know this has been a long day, and I think we are close to the finish line --

A You're welcome.

Q -- for what it's worth.

A You're welcome.

You know, just like I said earlier, I think it's important for the American people to know why the social media companies did what they did. I think it's important for the American people to know why I did what I did.

Q Getting back quickly to the timeline that we were just talking through and the supposed suppression, what's been described as the suppression of the story, are you aware that the New York Post article came out on October 14, 2020?

A I think that's the date, yes.

Q Okay. And Twitter stopped distributing it on the 15th, the day after?

A That was my understanding, yes. That's what I meant earlier, yes.

Q And then, within 24 hours, it was unreleased. So, in other words, on the 16th it was no longer --

A Actually, I didn't know that.

Q So your letter actually came out after that. Right?

A Yes.

Q So the timeline would be, the 14th, the story came out; the 15th, Twitter paused the distribution; the 16th, it was unpaused; and 4 or 5 days later, your letter came out?

A I didn't know that they had unpaused the pause.

Q And you said pretty clearly you never had conversations with Twitter?

A I never had conversations with Twitter or Google or Facebook or anybody.

Q Any social media company?

A No.

Q Okay. And did you have any conversations with anybody about social media companies? In other words, did you have any conversations with the Biden campaign about social media companies?

A No, no.

Q Okay. All right.

Okay. There was some comments, discussion earlier about on the record versus off the record. And I wanted to take a look at what the letter expressly said --

A Yep.

Q -- and kind of go through that in detail.

A The statement, our statement?

Q Sorry. The public statement, yeah. It's exhibit 1 here.

So just to make the record clean here, you didn't have any access to any of the supposed emails or to what's been described as the Hunter Biden laptop. Correct?

A Correct.

Q And you didn't have access to any intelligence products or other documents analyzing the laptop or other emails?

A Correct.

Q And you made this clear in the letter. Right?

A Yes.

Q And so you didn't try to suggest that you had access to nonpublic information?

A We did not.

Q Okay. In fact, the fifth paragraph of the letter reads: We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani are genuine or not and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement.

A That's correct.

Q Okay. Did you consider it, when you were writing this, important to plainly state that you didn't know if the emails were genuine?

A Yes.

Q And why is that?

A Because I was trained to say what you know and what you don't know. And, you know, I carry that through everything I do in my life, including writing this letter.

Q And, likewise, did you consider it important to establish plainly on the very first page of the letter that you didn't have direct evidence of Russian involvement?

A Yes.

Q And you did so.

In the second to the last paragraph of the letter, you describe press reports about the FBI opening an investigation into Russian involvement, and then you say: We do not know whether these press reports are accurate.

Do you recall writing that?

A I sure do.

Q So you said earlier -- and just, again, to make the record perfectly clear -- you didn't have any personal interactions with anyone at the FBI --

A I did not.

Q -- regarding reports or investigation?

A I did not.

Q Okay. To your knowledge, did any of the other signatories have conversations with anybody at the FBI?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. And so you made that clear in the letter?

A Yes.

Q And then the email from you to the PRB, which has been introduced already as exhibit 9, the subject line is: Public Statement for Review.

In the email, you say: We are 100 percent confident in it -- meaning that the letter does not contain classified information. Indeed, it specifically says that we don't know whether the IC or the FBI knows about this.

A Correct.

Q Was that a true and accurate statement?

A Yes.

Q And would that have potentially -- in your view, could that have increased the speed at which the PRB could process this type of request?

A Yeah. It was designed to let them know that we didn't have any inside information, right? And it was important for them to know that. But, believe me, they wouldn't take our word for it.

Q That they would go through it?

A Yes.

Q But it was a short letter compared to --

A Yes.

Q How long was your book?

A My book was -- I don't know -- a couple hundred -- 200 pages, 250 pages.

Q And this is maybe 11, 12 paragraphs?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So it would make sense for them to be able to process this more quickly --

A Yes.

Q -- than an extensive book?

A Yes. And it was fully consistent with their processing of other op-eds I had written.

Q I want to look in that letter at what you've described as earmarks.

So the October 19th letter says that the arrival on the U.S. political scene of emails has all of the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation.

If you recall, what did you mean by the use of the term "earmarks"?

A The timing, you know, the timing relative to the election and the debate; the fact that these emails had been around for a long time, you know, in one form or another, and all of a sudden, they come out; you know, the fact that the Russians were already -- we knew from our own intelligence community, led by John Ratcliffe, that the Russians were interfering in this election. We knew from the Treasury Department that a specific Ukrainian was involved in this interference, an agent of Russian intelligence; that we knew that -- and we knew that, you know, two of Trump's most important confidants were somehow involved in this laptop getting from point A to point B.

Q And I'm going to walk through those in a minute. But what's the actual, in your mind, definition of the term "earmark"?

A Example, right, indicator. "Indicator" is the best word.

Q Is it a term of art, or is it --

A No, it's not. It's not.

Q Okay. And, in that paragraph, it says: All the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation.

And you use the term "information operation," not "disinformation operation." Right?

A Correct.

Q Was that an intentional choice?

A Yes. In fact, if you look at the first draft, you know, of what Mr. Polymeropoulos sent me, he used the word "disinformation" all over the place. And, you know, I thought that was a huge mistake, and I wanted to make it clear we didn't know, right? And, to the extent I used the word in here, I chose "information."

Q So you just talked through kind of at a 30,000-foot level the different factors, and I want to go through each one kind of in sequence.

So, in the eighth paragraph of the letter, which is the last paragraph on the bottom of the first page -- I won't make you count them -- it reads: Such an operation -- meaning a Russian operation -- would be consistent with Russian objectives, as outlined publicly and recently by the intelligence community, to create political chaos in the United States and to deepen divisions here but also to undermine the candidacy of former Vice President Biden and thereby help the candidacy of President Trump."

Why would it have been consistent with Russian objectives to create political chaos in the United States and deepen divisions here?

A Because that was part -- right, they were trying, in my view, and I think in the view of the intelligence community, expressed, you know, both at the time and then in the aftermath, as well as the Senate Intelligence Committee's report, is they really had two goals, right? One was to simply create chaos here with all the interference they did in 2016 and the interference they were doing in 2020 and, in particular, you know, damage former Secretary of State Clinton in the 2016 election and damage former Vice President Biden in the 2020 election. That was their -- those were their two intents.

Q And what was your understanding of why Russia would have had an intent to help President Biden over then candidate Vice President Biden?

A To help President Trump?

Q I'm sorry. Help President Trump, right.

A Yeah. Because the Russians hated Secretary Clinton and hated Vice President Biden --

Q Okay.

A -- for the positions that they took during the Obama administration against Russia.

Q I want to introduce into the record a statement from the then National Counterintelligence and Security Center Director, William or Bill --

A Evanina.

Q -- Evanina. Thank you.

[redacted] It's dated August 7, 2022, and it's entitled "Election Update for the American Public." This is exhibit 17.

[Morell Exhibit No. 17.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with this?

A Yes.

Q So can you -- so you're familiar with the National Counterintelligence and Security Center?

A I am.

Q Okay. Can you broadly explain what the mission is of the NCSC?

A Yeah. Their mission is not to do this. Their mission is to make Americans and, in particular, American companies aware of the intelligence efforts of other countries to steal information in the United States, in particular intellectual property, from American countries largely focused on China.

Q Okay. And I know you said it's not their mission to do this, but they did make this evaluation?

A Yes.

Q Do you think this evaluation is reliable?

A Yes, I do.

Q Okay. Could you read the highlighted passage that begins "Russia"?

A "Russia. We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it sees as an anti-Russia 'establishment.' This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him when he was Vice President for his role in the Obama Administration's policies on Ukraine and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia. For example, pro-Russia Ukrainian Parliamentarian Andriy Derkach is spreading claims about corruption -- including through publicizing leaked phone calls -- to undermine former Vice President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party. Some Kremlin-linked actors are also seeking to boost President Trump's candidacy on social media and Russian television."

Q So the statement was released in August 2020, which was 2 months prior to your October 19, 2020, letter?

A Yes.

Q Is this statement from the President Trump appointed head of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center the type of, quote, public and recent reports to which you're referring when you drafted the October letter?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Moving on, the ninth paragraph of the October 19th letter, it's the top of the second page -- sorry -- your letter.

A Oh, sorry.

Q It says: Such an operation would be consistent with some of the key methods Russia has used in its now multiyear operation to interfere with our democracy -- the hacking, via cyber operations, and the dumping of accurate information or the distribution of inaccurate or misinformation. Russia did both of these during the 2016 Presidential election -- judgments shared by the U.S. Intelligence Community, the investigation into Russian activities by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, and the entirety, all Republicans and Democrats, on the current Senate Intelligence Committee.

Do you recall what, quote, judgments shared by the U.S. intelligence Community was a reference to?

A Here we're talking about 2016, so it was the declassified document that you showed me earlier.

Q Okay. Is that the January 2017 assessment?

A Yes, yes.

Q Okay. And paragraph 9 also refers to the investigation by Special Counsel Robert Mueller which led to the April 2020 release of the report on the investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 Presidential election, sometimes called the Mueller report.

A Volume I, right, of the Mueller report?

Q Yes, Volume I.

A Yes.

Q And this report determined that the Russian government hacked into the computer networks of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and the Democratic National Committee and then released stolen Clinton campaign and DNC documents using various personas in order to interfere with the 2016 Presidential election, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then, finally, the last part of paragraph 9 refers to the findings of the Senate Intelligence Committee report, which we've discussed earlier?

A Yes.

Q So this is a reference to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report on Russian Active Measures campaign.

A Yes.

Q The final version was released in October of 2020.

A Yes.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I want to introduce actually part of that into the record as exhibit 18.

A Okay.

[Morell Exhibit No. 18.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is the cover page in the findings section of that report. It's not the full report.

A Okay.

Q Because, again, I think it's a thousand pages long.

A Okay.

Q On page Roman numeral VII, the first sentence of the section entitled "Hack and Leak" reads: The committee found that Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered the Russian effort to hack computer networks and accounts affiliated with the Democratic Party and leak information damaging to Hillary Clinton and her campaign for President.

Is this consistent with the type of concerns that were expressed in paragraph 9 of the October 19th letter?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So paragraph 9 accurately described past methods that Russia has used to interfere in U.S. elections, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And you would agree that there's widespread agreement in the intelligence and national security community that Russia did, in fact, engage in these kind of hack-and-dump and other interference?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And can you explain how this past interference, the knowledge of what happened in 2016, provided important context for you for what you perceived as possible Russian interference again in 2020?

A You know, because I was so interested in what the Russians had done in 2016, you know, I read the three documents that we just talked about that we referenced in the report, right, the U.S. intelligence community review, Mueller's Volume I, and the Senate Intelligence Committee's Volume I, right, which is on what the Russians did. I read those, you know, as closely as I've ever read anything.

And, you know, part of my suspicion for their involvement in 2020 in the way that we describe in the letter was based absolutely on what they had done in 2016.

Q Because what they had done in 2016 suggested future actions by them?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. And is that true of how intelligence analysts work? They look at prior actions and use that --

A Sure.

Q -- to assess people?

A Sure. It's part of what they do, right, part of what they look at.

[1:20 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

The next paragraph, the tenth paragraph, which is the second paragraph on the second page of the October 19th letter, states that "the Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts, targeted Burisma late last year for cyber collection and gained access to emails."

Do you recall the media reports or --

A Yes.

Q -- cybersecurity experts --

A Yes.

Q And can you --

A The media reports about the Burisma hacks, yes.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce as exhibit 19 a January 13, 2020, New York Times article entitled "Russians Hacked Ukrainian Gas Company at Center of Impeachment."

[Morell Exhibit No. 19.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This article states that -- I'll give you a second to review it. I'm sorry.

A No, I know the story.

Q The article states that the GRU used phishing emails to target Burisma and gain access to their computers --

A My microphone just fell off.

Q Oh.

A Fell over.

Q Can you tell us what the GRU is?

A It's the Russian military intelligence service.

Q Okay. Is this the type of media report to which you were referring when you drafted this paragraph?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you have any reason to doubt the veracity of this reporting?

A No.

Q So that's a true statement in this letter?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

I'd say something else, though, too, if it's okay. Right? It's not only what we know about what the Russians did, right, hacking Burisma; it's what we don't know. I mean, this is an incredibly sophisticated intelligence service, so there are probably many, many more hacks we don't know about than we do know about.

Q Right. Understood.

That paragraph 10 continues on: "Ukrainian politician and businessman Andriy Derkach, identified and sanctioned by the U.S. Treasury Department for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election, passed purported materials on Burisma and Hunter Biden to Giuliani."

Sorry, this is in paragraph 10 of the October 19th letter.

A Oh, I'm sorry. I'm sorry, I'm lost. Where am I? I've got too much paper in front of me, guys.

Okay.

Q So the last sentence of the second paragraph on the second page refers to Andrii Derkach being sanctioned --

A Yes.

Q -- for being a 10-year Russian agent. Do you recall how you learned about Mr. Derkach being sanctioned?

A It was after Mr. Blinken called me and I did my internet search. I found the Treasury designation.

Q Okay.

And I am going to introduce that Treasury designation -- or the press release discussing that designation. This is exhibit 20.

[Morell Exhibit No. 20.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this is a September 10, 2020, Treasury Department press release stating, in relevant part, that "Treasury designated Andrii Derkach pursuant to Executive Order 13848 for his efforts to influence the 2020 U.S. presidential election. Derkach, a Member of the Ukrainian Parliament, has been an active Russian agent for over a decade, maintaining close connections with the Russian Intelligence Services. Derkach has directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. presidential election."

So this statement, this directly supports the statements that you made in your letter about Derkach being sanctioned for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election --

A Yes.

Q -- correct?

A Yes.

Q So this was a true statement in your letter, an --

A Yes.

Q -- accurate statement?

And Rudy Giuliani was known to associate with Mr. Derkach, correct?

A My understanding from the media, yes.

Q And what's your understanding of who Rudy Giuliani is?

A He was the President's private attorney. I don't know if he is anymore.

Q President Trump?

A President Trump, yes.

Q I want to introduce a -- okay.

In your experience, in your 33 years of intelligence experience and subsequent experience as well, does the Treasury ever sanction individuals as Russian agents for no reason, or do they usually have a pretty strong body of evidence to support that?

A They have a strong body of evidence to support such a judgment.

Q And can you describe what the process might look like to gather -- what type of evidence might be in that and what the process might be like to gather that evidence?

A So I've never worked at Treasury, I've never worked in sanctions office --

Q Yeah.

A -- right? But, you know, I have some insight because Treasury sits at the Deputies Committee national security table.

And so, you know, they gather -- you know, they see things that raise questions. They're on the distribution for all intelligence, right --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- related to what they do. They usually take the first step, in saying, hey, this might be something we want to look at.

Q Yes.

A They pull all the information together. They often come back to the intelligence community with questions.

Q Okay.

A You know, what do you mean by this? Where did this come from? How much confidence do you have in that?

So there's a dialogue back and forth between Treasury and the intelligence community, based on my knowledge of how the process works. But I've never been inside the process.

Q Understood.

So I want to introduce a Daily Beast article which was published on October 17, 2020, entitled "Rudy: Only 50/50 Chance I Worked with a 'Russian Spy' to Dig Dirt on Bidens and Ukraine."

[Morell Exhibit No. 21.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this article is actually a report of an hour-long interview that The Daily Beast did with Mr. Giuliani in which Giuliani said that he, quote, "viewed his latest leak to the New York Post," referring to the Biden laptop leak, quote, "as an extension of his years-long efforts to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens."

Was it concerning to you or would it have been concerning to you that Rudy Giuliani viewed the leak of the laptop as part of his ongoing work with the Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A It would've been another data point. I wasn't aware of this at the time. In my mind, it would've been another data point. Still circumstantial, but it would've been another data point.

Q Right. And so you do think it's relevant that Rudy Giuliani described it as part of his --

A Yes.

Q -- ongoing work to dig up dirt?

A Yes. And, in particular, doing so, you know, with a Russian agent.

Q Okay.

And the interview reads, in part, quote, "Derkach for years has tried to pass damaging -- and largely false -- information about the Ukraine government's supposed attempts to undermine Trump, and the Bidens' supposed dirty dealings in Kyiv. Derkach dispatched packets of disinformation about the Obama administration and the Bidens to lawmakers on Capitol Hill throughout 2019 and finally met with Giuliani in December 2019 in Kyiv during the middle of the House impeachment process. Derkach and Giuliani appeared together in an anti-Biden television series produced by the Trumpist network OAN, and Giuliani has interviewed Derkach about the Bidens on his YouTube series Common Sense."

Putting aside the comments about this being part of Giuliani's years-long efforts to dig up dirt with the Ukrainians, is just the fact that he was associating with a known Russian agent of concern to you?

A Yes. It's either concerning because he knew about it and, therefore, he shouldn't have done it, or it's concerning that he was not warned off, right, that the government didn't say to him, "Hey, you should not be talking to this guy. He's a Russian agent." Either way, it's concerning to me.

Q And Giuliani also was known to have ties to an individual named Andrii Telizhenko, correct?

A I did not -- I don't know that name.

Q Okay.

You said that it was concerning to you that Rudy Giuliani would not have -- either way, he was associating or people knew he was associating and nobody warned him. But the sanctions that we just walked through were issued in mid-September, correct?

A Yeah. And I don't know the timing of Mr. Giuliani's contact with Mr. Derkach.

Q Right. But we know that the Hunter Biden laptop story was in October --

A Yes.

Q -- of 2014.

A Yes.

Q So that would've been after the sanctions.

A Yes, but we don't know when the New York Post acquired the --

Q Right.

A -- hard drive. Right.

Q So the next earmark that the letter -- sorry. Yeah. The next earmark the letter notes -- that the letter notes that, according to the Post, U.S. intelligence agencies warned the White House that Giuliani was the target of an influence operation by Russian intelligence.

I'm going to introduce the Washington Post article that reports that. It was dated October 15, 2020. It's entitled "White House Was Warned Giuliani Was a Target of Russian Intelligence Operation to Feed Misinformation to Trump."

[Morell Exhibit No. 22.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So the article -- I also want to -- so I want to note for the record, this article was issued on October 15, 2020. When it was issued, it said that Giuliani himself was warned that he was a target of an intelligence operation.

A I didn't know that.

Q The Post later issued a correction to that part of the story in May 2021, and they said Giuliani had not been warned directly --

A Okay.

Q -- but the White House had been warned.

A Okay.

Q And, as you said, Giuliani was President Trump's personal --

A Attorney.

Q -- lawyer for the -- so, presumably, any warning could have been passed along to him.

The October 15, 2020, Post article says that "the warnings were based on multiple sources, including intercepted communications, that showed Giuliani was interacting with people tied to Russian intelligence during a December 2019 trip to Ukraine, where he was gathering information that he thought would expose corrupt acts by former vice president Joe Biden and his son Hunter."

"The intelligence raised concerns that Giuliani was being used to feed Russian misinformation to the president, the former officials said, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive information and conversations."

Was this fact something that added to your concern about the Hunter Biden emails, or the supposed emails, potentially being part of a Russian intent to interfere in the 2020 election?

A I was not aware of this at the time.

Q Okay.

But the statement in the October 19th letter that refers to the Washington Post article -- the Washington Post article was a real article?

A Yes.

Q This statement was not inaccurate in the letter?

A Correct. Correct.

Q Okay.

So we have discussed a number of factors that led you to have concerns about Russia potentially interfering in the 2020 --

A Can we go back and correct something I just said?

Q Sure.

A I was clearly aware of this article, because we cited it here. I don't know if it was something that Marc wrote that I just picked up. I didn't remember the article 2 minutes ago when you asked --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- but, clearly, we cited it. And I either just took it from Mr. Polymeropoulos and trusted him or I went and looked at it myself.

So I just wanted to correct what I said earlier.

Q Okay.

So we've talked through a number of factors that led you to have concerns about

Russian potentially interfering. So I want to actually turn to some evidence that suggests Russia did successfully interfere in the 2020 election.

In particular, I want to introduce a January 7, 2021, intelligence community assessment. It's entitled "Foreign Threats to the 2020 U.S. Federal Elections."

[Morell Exhibit No. 23.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Now, this was actually a classified report, but the de- -- it was classified when it was released in January of 2020. I'm introducing the declassified version, which was released I believe in March of that year.

Are you familiar with this?

A Uh-huh.

Q Have you read it before?

A Uh-huh.

The Reporter. Can you say --

Mr. Morell. Oh, I'm sorry, I'm sorry.

Yes, I'm familiar with it, and, yes, I've read it before.

BY [redacted]

Q So I want to turn to the fourth page of the document, which is actually Roman numeral i.

A Uh-huh.

Q I've highlighted Key Judgment 2, which says:

"We assess that Russian President Putin authorized, and a range of Russian government organizations conducted, influence operations aimed at denigrating President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party, supporting former President Trump, undermining public confidence in the electoral process, and exacerbating sociopolitical divisions in the U.S. Unlike in 2016, we did not see persistent Russian cyber efforts to gain access to election infrastructure. We have high confidence in our assessment; Russian state and proxy actors who all serve the Kremlin's interests worked to affect U.S. public perceptions in a consistent manner. A key element of Moscow's strategy this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives -- including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden -- to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration."

So is this description consistent with the type of concerns about Russian interference that you expressed in the October 19th letter?

A Yes.

Q And based on the Treasury Department sanction, do you believe that Andrii Derkach may have been a Russian intelligence proxy pushing influence narratives?

A I have no doubt about that.

Q Okay.

A I trust the Treasury designation, and it said exactly that.

Q And, to your knowledge, was Rudy Giuliani an individual close to former President Trump and his administration?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And I just want to clarify one more thing for the record.

A Uh-huh.

Q There was some discussion earlier about the emails being authentic or verified or -- you have not reviewed them?

A No. I'm going on the basis of what seems to be a consistent view on the part of media outlets that they are authentic.

Q Okay. So that's just based on your review of media outlets, and you've not had any conversations with anybody in the intelligence community about them?

A No, I have not.

Q Okay. So purely based on public information?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

A It seems to be an accepted view now that they're authentic.

Q Okay.

Thank you. We don't have any further questions.

We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 1:35 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

[redacted] Good morning.

This is a transcribed interview of Mr. Nick Shapiro. Chairman Jordan and Chairman Turner have requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of Federal law enforcement and intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions.

This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within the jurisdictions of the committees.

These reforms might include allowing Federal employees with security clearances to retain their clearances after employment with the government but limiting their ability to receive access to classified information for some duration after their government employment.

The committees may also consider legislative proposals that would ban or restrict intelligence agencies from engaging in, coordinating, or promoting any political activity related to Federal elections, including candidates for Federal office.

The House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence staff will be constrained today to issues relating to the letter signed by the 51 former intel officials. Judiciary Committee staff may have questions that go slightly beyond that, or the Judiciary Committee members.

On behalf of both committees, I want to thank you for joining us here today voluntarily. My name is [redacted] I'm with Mr. Jordan's Judiciary Committee staff.

Mr. Sini. Timothy Sini, partner at Nixon Peabody, counsel for Mr. Shapiro.

Mr. Sandweg. John Sandweg, counsel for Mr. Shapiro.

Mr. Shapiro. Mr. Shapiro. Nick Shapiro. Here to help.

[redacted] [redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler, House Judiciary.

[redacted] Thank you.

I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions for the first hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an hour. It will be a -- you know, the hour will be -- you know, the Republicans will go for the first hour, whether it's HPSCI or Judiciary, and then the Democrats will have that hour.

Typically, we'll take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, please let us know.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record. So we ask that you give verbal responses.

Do you understand that?

Mr. Shapiro. Yes.

[redacted] From time to time, we end up talking over one another, so we may need to back up and we may need to restate our question or have you restate your answer, and that's just the product of having a court reporter here.

We'll do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you at any given point during an hour, just so we keep it tight.

Please try to speak clearly so the reporter can understand everything and so the folks that may not be close to you here in the room can hear you. It's important we don't talk over one another and interrupt each other, which can happen inadvertently. And that goes for everyone here today in the room.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel as they so choose. And it's my understanding that you're appearing today with counsel, who's already identified themselves on the record.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we'll take our time. If you have questions or if you don't understand one of our questions, please let us know. If you have a need to consult with your counsel, just let us know; we can go off the record.

Do you understand that?

Mr. Shapiro. Yes.

[redacted] Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, and if you need clarification, just let us know.

If you don't understand a question or if you don't know the answer and do not remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. We're not bound by the hearsay rules of the Federal Rules of Evidence, so it's okay to tell us about a communication, even if it was related to you by another person, as long as you just help us understand how you know the information.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath and we're not swearing you in, by law, you're required to answer questions before Congress and congressional staff truthfully. And you understand that, correct?

Mr. Shapiro. Yep.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution under 18 United States Code 1001.

You understand that, correct?

Mr. Shapiro. Yes.

[redacted] And is there any reason today you're unable to provide complete and truthful answers?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make a note that the interview today, we're trying to keep this confidential. So, to the extent, after the interview, you can respect that, we'd appreciate it.

For the same reason, the exhibits that we show you here today, whether it's a public document or not a public document, we'll take them back at the end of the interview. Just the fact that we asked you about a particular document, something that, at least for the time being, we're going to just keep here. Even if it's a document that you may have produced to the committee, we will keep it.

That's the end of my welcoming remarks. Please, you know, let me know if you have any questions.

Do the minority staff have any?

[redacted] We don't have anything to add. Thank you.

[redacted] Okay. So we'll --

Mr. Sandweg. Do you have any questions?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

[redacted] Okay. We'll start our hour here.

[redacted] Are you going to keep time?

[redacted] And I'll keep time, yes.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] It's 10:09.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning, Mr. Shapiro.

A Morning.

Q Could you please start by telling us a bit about your professional background?

A Sure.

I started my career working at a public relations firm in New Orleans, where I was doing mostly crisis communications.

Then moved to Washington, D.C., and worked on the 2004 Presidential election.

Then worked at Booz Allen Hamilton, where I was a management consultant, doing mostly crisis stuff.

Became a firefighter, a paramedic.

Then joined the Obama campaign, and then was in the White House, then the CIA.

Then worked at Visa, then Airbnb, and then started my own company.

Q And what did you do at the CIA?

A I was the deputy chief of staff and senior advisor to the Director of the CIA.

Q Who was John Brennan at the time, correct?

A Yes.

Q You left the CIA when?

A 2015.

Q Okay.

Acknowledging that we're in an unclassified setting, can you briefly describe your role and responsibilities as deputy chief of staff and senior advisor to the CIA Director?

A Yeah. So my job was basically to make sure the Director of the CIA could do his job.

Q Uh-huh.

A I helped him manage his time, decide what priorities -- he would decide the priorities he wanted to do, and I typically saw everything before he did, and I would make sure that if it was something that was one of his priorities, that we actioned it immediately; if it wasn't, that I would save it for, you know, later in the day or when he had time.

It was my job to ensure when we traveled that everything he needed to happen happened.

And it was often my job to follow up with people in the Agency after meetings to make sure that things that people said they were going to do -- if they had any questions about what the Director might want, that I was the one to help them, to make sure that whatever they produced was something that would be helpful.

Q Thank you.

You were one of 51 former intelligence officials who signed a public statement regarding Hunter Biden's emails, correct?

A Correct.

Q I would now like to enter a document dated October 19, 2020, titled "Public Statement on the Hunter Biden Emails" into the record as exhibit No. 1.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q How would you describe the public statement?

A How would I describe the public statement? I would describe it as an opinion of 51 former intelligence officials who worked on -- worked for both -- worked for Republican administrations and Democratic administrations, that was informing the American people that it was our belief that the Russians were interfering in the 2020 election.

Q And what was the intent of the statement?

A To let the American people know that we believe the Russians were, again, interfering with the election.

Q And what was your role in the creation of the statement?

A I did not have a role in creating the statement.

Q You did not participate in the drafting?

A No.

Q And how do you know Michael Morell?

A I first met Michael Morell when I worked in the White House and he was either Deputy or Acting Director of the CIA. He's had both titles numerous times.

Q And what role did Mr. Morell play in the creation of this statement?

A He's the one who told me about it, and I think he was helping get it done, have it be written, and find people to sign it.

Q That's the part I wanted to touch on now, is, what was your role in recruiting other signatories to this statement?

A I did not have any role in recruiting anyone else.

Q Oh, okay.

Did you have any specific strategy for your outreach efforts to other former officials?

A I didn't reach out to any other former officials.

Q Okay.

We are aware that Mr. Morell shopped the statement around to numerous other officials who did not agree to sign on. Do you know what their stated reasons for declining to sign on were?

A No.

Chairman Jordan. When did you talk to Mr. Morell first about the draft statement?

Mr. Shapiro. He emailed it to me, and then I believe we got on the phone, like, the next day, I think.

Chairman Jordan. Do you know what day he emailed it to you?

Mr. Shapiro. Sorry?

Chairman Jordan. What day did he email it to you? Was that the 18th or the 17th?

Mr. Shapiro. I think it's in the emails. I don't remember off the top of my head.

Mr. Sandweg. Mr. Chairman, we could show Mr. Shapiro the email if it's helpful.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] I can introduce it into the record.

Mr. Sandweg. Okay.

[redacted] I would now like to enter an email sent from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro, dated October 19, 2020, at 6:36 a.m., into the record as exhibit No. 2.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q It says, "I will explain tomorrow on the phone how this came to be. I've sent the draft to David Kris and Lisa Monaco but have not yet heard back. They should sign. I'm looking for two things -- pairs of seniors who served in the same position from different administrations (Hayden and Panetta, Jeh Johnson and Mike Chertoff, Lisa and Ken Wainstein, Clapper and Coats, etc) and then a slew of former IC and national security who worked Russia. Should have something to give to the media through you tomorrow afternoon."

I don't believe this was your first communication with Mr. Morell regarding this statement, though, correct?

A Yeah. It looks like below I responded to this statement.

Q Correct. And was that the first -- or is this everything? Like, had he call you or anything like that?

A To my knowledge, no. I believe I got this random email.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. So the email on Sunday, October 18th, 6:38 p.m., is when you first talked to Mr. Morell -- or communicated with -- Mr. Morell communicated with you?

Mr. Shapiro. I believe so, yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So you proactively offered to help with the efforts in the promotion of the statement, correct?

A Yeah. I said I'd send it around to folks if he wanted me to.

Q We know that the statement as published is different from the draft that was originally circulated. In particular, the last two paragraphs, referencing, quote, "Vice President Joe Biden taking a private and public stand against the then-Prosecutor General of Ukraine, Viktor Shokin," were taken out for being what Mr. Morell described as "too political."

Do you know why that was --

A I don't, no.

Q -- taken out?

A No.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you have a telephone conversation with Mr. Morell?

A I think so, yeah.

Q And can you recollect anything about that call?

A I think he was just telling me that he was doing this. He knows that I know David Kris and Lisa Monaco, so that's why -- when I said I'd send it around to folks if you want me to, those are pretty much the only two people I would know besides John Brennan. So he was telling me that he'd already sent it to them, which is why I didn't send it to anybody.

Q Do you know why they didn't sign the letter?

A I don't.

Q Do you know why anyone on the list here didn't sign the letter? Like, Jeh Johnson didn't sign. Chertoff I don't think signed.

A I didn't talk to any of these people.

Q Okay.

So, as it turned out, you -- you indicated you'd be happy to send it around, but --

A He knew -- that's why he replied, David and Lisa. He knew that that's probably who I was talking about.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Sorry, [redacted] Go ahead.

[redacted] That's fine.

BY [redacted]

Q In the emails Mr. Morell sent out soliciting signatures for the statement with a draft of the statement attached, Mr. Morell wrote, "Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response."

Was the purpose of this statement, then, to help the Vice President's campaign?

A I think 50 people had probably 50 different reasons. Michael is best to answer why this started. I signed it because I thought the Russians were interfering and was happy to add my name to it.

Q Okay.

Do you know whose idea it was that the statement be drafted?

A Beyond Michael, no.

Q Okay.

Now-Secretary Antony Blinken was employed by the Biden campaign at this time, correct?

A Maybe. I don't know.

Q Are you aware that --

A I think he was an advisor. I don't know if he was employed or not.

Q Are you aware that Secretary Blinken had called Mr. Morell to discuss this issue with him prior to the statement being drafted?

A I think Michael had mentioned he had chatted with Tony about Russian interference, but --

Q Okay.

A -- he didn't say anything about a statement or link it to that.

Q Okay. So you're --

Chairman Jordan. Let me just interrupt, [redacted] Thanks.

So you get the email from Mr. Morell on the 18th, 6:38 p.m. Then you had a conversation with Mr. Morell after that.

Mr. Shapiro. After the email, yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Sometime that same day.

Mr. Shapiro. I don't remember if it was that day or not, but in that time period, yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And during that conversation, Mr. Morell related to you that he had spoke to Mr. Blinken.

Mr. Shapiro. About Russian interference.

Chairman Jordan. About Russian interference. But not specifically about the letter? Is --

Mr. Shapiro. Correct.

Chairman Jordan. -- that accurate? Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q I'd like to enter an email sent from Antony Blinken to Michael Morell of a USA Today article titled, "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign," dated October 17, 2020, at 10:53 p.m., into the record as exhibit No. 3.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Sini. Do you have a copy?

[redacted] I have one more copy.

Mr. Sini. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you have any discussions with Secretary Blinken?

A No.

Q Do you know if Secretary Blinken directed, suggested, or insinuated in any way that Mr. Morell and Mr. Polymeropoulos should write a letter or statement on this topic?

A No.

Q Why do you believe Secretary Blinken sent Mr. Morell that USA Today article?

A I don't know. I think that Tony and Michael go pretty far back and that if Tony was curious about Russian interference, Michael would be a smart person to talk to.

Q The email from Secretary Blinken was originally sent to him by Andrew Bates, then director of rapid response for the Biden campaign and current White House deputy press secretary.

Do you know whether Secretary Blinken was directed by the Biden campaign to enlist Mr. Morell to write this statement?

A No.

Q Did you have any communications with Andrew Bates?

A Not until I sent the statement to the media.

Q Okay. And I'll touch on that in a second.

Did you talk to anyone else at the Biden campaign?

A No.

Q Okay.

You have extensive experience in political campaign messaging. Why --

A I was on two campaigns.

Q Okay. Why would Secretary Blinken forward Mr. Morell an email sent from the director of rapid response for the Biden campaign, in your opinion?

A Again, I think if Tony wanted to talk about Russian interference, Michael was a good person to talk to.

Q Do you have any reason to believe the Biden campaign planted the USA Today story titled, "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign," published on October 17, 2020?

A I have no idea.

Q Do you know whether Secretary Blinken or Andrew Bates had any contact with USA Today or USA Today journalists Karen Bowen, Kevin Johnson, Matthew Brown, or Jeff Neiburg?

A No clue.

Q Did you?

A No.

Q Okay.

I would also like to enter an email sent from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro on October 19, 2020, at 8:21 p.m. into the record as exhibit No. 4.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The first part there reads, "Between us, the campaign would like Shane Harris to go first. Please share with the campaign when you share with Shane. But, by all means, get it to other reporters as well."

Did the Biden campaign direct your strategy with reporters regarding this statement?

A I wouldn't say I even had a strategy. I just did what Michael asked me to do, which was send it to the press and, from this email, to go to Shane Harris first. And it looks like the campaign wanted that.

Q Do you know why the campaign wanted Shane Harris to go first?

A No idea.

Q Mr. Morell never discussed that with you?

A No. Shane's a really good national security reporter though.

Q Why did Mr. Morell instruct you to share with the campaign when you share with Shane?

A My guess is, to make sure the campaign knew what The Washington Post was going to have.

Q Okay. Did the Biden campaign request that, do you know?

A It sounds like that happened with Michael, but not to me.

Q And you did, in fact, share a copy of the emails you were sending to journalists to the Biden campaign?

A To Andrew Bates, yeah.

Q And did Andrew Bates respond to you?

A Not over email. We did an extensive search through my email. It's possible we had a phone call, but --

Q Do you recall anything from that phone call? What was discussed?

A No. I think if there was a phone call, it was along the lines of, "Thanks, man."

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. So the campaign knew that you were the one who was going to do the outreach to the media? They understood that?

Mr. Shapiro. My guess is, from this email, yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And we understand from your productions that there were three journalists that you sent the statement to: Shane Harris of The Washington Post, Julie Pace of the Associated Press, and Natasha Bertrand of Politico?

A Yep.

Q Why those three?

A Shane because I was asked to go to Shane first. And then the AP is a really good outlet you want stories in. And then Politico -- I don't know why I went to Politico after that.

Q Why did Mr. Morell give you different instructions regarding what to say on the record, off the record, and on background?

A So I don't remember, like, having a conversation with him about this. And I know more about dealing with the press than Michael does, and he'd be the first to tell you that.

But, looking back on this, it makes a lot of sense to me. The thing that Michael was wanting to make sure the press understood was that the letter wasn't saying whether the laptop emails were real or were made up by Russia, just that Russia was involved in it. So he's telling me to make sure reporters know that. And so, when you talk to reporters, unless you want them to quote you, yourself -- like, Nick Shapiro -- you have to say "off the record" so they don't quote me. But I'm impressing upon them the importance to use that in their story that they write, which is, make sure you use that part of the letter that says, we don't know if it's real or not real.

And then "on background" was just, if asked, you know, "Why Michael?" that was going to be the answer. But no one asked me, "Why Michael?" I don't think.

And then the on-the-record quote is just framing what the letter's about.

Q We know that Natasha Bertrand is the one that ultimately ran with the article. Why did Shane Harris and Julie Pace decline to do so?

A I don't remember. I know we -- I'm sure we spoke. But you'd have to ask them. Reporters decline things all the time.

Q Okay. But they did get back to you, I assume, over the phone?

A Yeah.

Q Because we didn't have any of those records and --

A Yeah. I looked back at the emails, and it's clear that I spoke to them before I emailed them, which is normal. When I'm talking to a reporter, I'll call them and say, "Hey, you know, I've got this idea. What do you want to do?" And then, considering it was a letter, I'm sure I said, "I'll follow up and send it to you," which is what I did with each of them.

And then, for each of them, we got back on the phone. And Washington Post and AP said no. And Politico -- I think I probably just reiterated these points to Natasha.

Q Okay.

Mr. Sini. [redacted] just to be clear for the record, there is the one -- we do have some -- we have that one email where the reporter --

[redacted] With the Julie Pace thumbs-up?

Mr. Sini. Right.

[redacted] Got it. Thank you.

Chairman Jordan. Let me ask about "off the record." If it was critical that it be communicated that this was -- that you didn't know, just that you thought this was a Russian disinformation operation, why off the record? Why not have that on the record? It doesn't necessarily have to be attributed to you; it could be attributed to the entire group. But why off the record?

Mr. Shapiro. Mr. Chairman, because it was so important, actually. So it's kind of the opposite. It was on the record in the letter, so I was trying to convince the reporter to make sure that, when they write the story about the letter, to call that part out and put that in the story.

So I'm giving them what's called off-the-record guidance, like, don't --

Chairman Jordan. No, I understand --

Mr. Shapiro. -- say Nick Shapiro says this.

Chairman Jordan. I understand how it works. But it seems to me that that could be emphasized on the record as well.

Mr. Shapiro. Michael has a history of doing this. I've worked with Michael for many years, and he often sends me things like "OTR," and I often have to say to him, that could mean "on the record" or "off the record."

Chairman Jordan. Yeah.

Mr. Shapiro. And so that's a known Michael-Nick problem --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Shapiro. -- that I've dealt with for a long time.

Chairman Jordan. All right. Thanks.

Mr. Shapiro. But he writes "on the record" up top. And me knowing Michael, again, he often confuses that.

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

Mr. Shapiro. No offense to Michael.

BY [redacted]

Q And when you were telling the reporters you were giving them each the statement exclusively, you were waiting to hear back as to whether they wanted to give it to the next one?

A Yeah. I think I said, you can have it first, but just so you know, I'll send it to other people too.

Q Okay.

A And then, after two people said no --

Q Then --

A -- third, and then I didn't send it to anyone else.

Q Okay.

A I was tired of this.

Q All right.

Mr. Shapiro, are you familiar with the CIA's Prepublication Classification Review Board?

A Yes.

Q And this statement was sent and approved by the PCRB?

A I assume so. Michael is pretty good about making sure, if there's anything he's involved with writing, that it gets sent there.

Q It was. And I will now enter an email Michael Morell sent to the CIA's PCRB dated October 19, 2020, at 7:11 a.m. into the record as exhibit No. 5.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know why Mr. Morell described this statement as a, quote, "rush job" to the PCRB?

A I don't. But I assume it's because he wrote it quickly.

Oh, thanks.

You'd best talk to him, but I assume it's because he wrote it quickly.

Q Do you know whether the CIA's PCRB --

A Oh, "rush job," meaning he wants them to rush, because he wanted it back quickly.

Q Yes.

A That would be my guess, yeah.

Q Did the CIA's PCRB make any edits to the statement before it was published that you're aware of?

A I don't know.

Q Or did they make any suggestions or comments?

A No clue.

Q Are you aware that CIA staff at the PCRB reportedly promoted the letter by asking former CIA officials to sign on to the letter?

A No.

Q I would now like to enter a statement David Cariens provided to the committee in an email dated March 5, 2023, into the record as exhibit No. 6.

A You said the PRB's staff was recruiting people to sign the letter?

Q Correct.

A No. That's not what the PRB does, though.

Q We were equally shocked.

A Yeah.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Sandweg. This is 6?

[redacted] No. 6, yeah.

[redacted] It's 6.

BY [redacted]

Q In a written statement to the committee, Mr. Cariens told me, "When the person in charge of reviewing the book" -- he had a book that was before the PCRB --

A Who? Sorry.

Q David Cariens. Are you familiar with him, sir?

A No.

Q Okay.

A Is he a former CIA officer?

Q He was. Correct.

He told me that, "When the person in charge of reviewing the book called to say it was approved with no changes, I was told about the draft letter. The person asked me if I would be willing to sign. (I do not recall the person's name or the exact date of the phone call.) After hearing the letter's contents, and the qualifiers in it such as, quote, 'We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement,' I agreed to sign."

Does that sound like it may have been a quid pro quo to you, that the CIA official on the phone was suggesting that we would approve --

A Oh.

Q -- his book if he signed this statement?

A No. I mean, I have no idea what happened here, to be very -- this is the first I'm hearing of this.

But my guess -- and lawyers would probably tell me not to guess or defend the PRB, but what I could've seen happen is someone in the PRB being inappropriate and asking, hey, are you signing this thing? Which, PRB shouldn't be sharing, like, materials they get from one former with other formers. Like, that shouldn't be.

Because, as a former, if you send something -- I've never sent something, but I know people who have -- you're doing that because you're supposed to, but you're also hoping it stays within confidence. Like, usually, if you're going to send something to the PRB, you're sending it elsewhere, and you don't want the PRB spreading that.

So my guess for this was that it was someone who acted inappropriately and was just stupidly outing it and asking these folks if they were going to sign it.

I can't imagine the PRB trying to get someone to sign it by offering to clear something else. That would be really bad.

[redacted] And, for the record, we are working with Mr. Cariens to bring him in for a transcribed interview to hear more about this.

Mr. Sandweg. But, to be clear, you have no personal knowledge of any of this?

Mr. Shapiro. I don't even know who he is.

Mr. Sandweg. And you had no communications with the PRB or anyone at the CIA?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

BY [redacted]

Q All right. So you did not coordinate with the CIA in promoting this statement?

A No.

Q Okay.

Are you aware of whether any of your fellow signatories coordinated with the CIA in promoting --

A No. This was when Mike Pompeo was CIA Director?

Q -- the statement? Correct.

A I'm sorry, who was --

Q This would've been October -- this was October --

A I was persona non grata during that time, because John Brennan was very much persona non grata during that time.

Q Did you speak to any other offices or staff outside of the PCRB at the CIA regarding this statement?

A No.

Q Do you know whether the statement was sent to any other intelligence agencies for review, such as the ODNI?

A Don't know.

Q Okay.

A Usually, it's only people who write have to send it to their place. So

Michael never worked at any other agency.

Q Okay. So the fact that other signatories may have at some point been on, during their career --

A For just signing it, you wouldn't have to send something.

Q Okay.

A Each agency has its own rules. I only know CIA's, because I was CIA. But, like, I think if you worked at NSA and you wrote something, you're probably supposed to send it to NSA. But, to my knowledge -- or, I know Michael never worked at NSA. And I don't think Marc did.

Q The public statement published in Politico reads, in part, "If we are right, this is Russia trying to influence how Americans vote in this election, and we believe strongly that Americans need to be aware of this."

Do you believe that it was you and your fellow signatories who, in fact, were the ones trying to influence how Americans voted in the 2020 Presidential election?

A No. I think we were telling Americans that Russians are interfering in the election and they should be aware of that.

Q How do you feel now that you know that the contents on the laptop were not Russian disinformation?

A Meaning that they were real?

Q Yes.

A I'm sure glad that we put that in the letter, saying that we don't know if this is real or not.

Q The caveat?

A Yeah.

Q Have you considered issuing an apology to the American public or retracting the statement, issuing some sort of followup?

A What would we apologize for?

Q Misleading them by saying that --

A By saying we don't know if it's real or fake, and it turned out to be real? No, I don't think so.

I think if we had said it was fake and it turned out to be real, then we probably would've had a problem. But that's why I'm glad we put that caveat in there, because we didn't know.

Q Do you currently hold a security clearance?

A No.

Q Did you hold a security clearance at the time you drafted the statement?

A No. I didn't draft the statement. But I also didn't --

Q Okay.

A -- hold a security clearance.

Q Correct. When you helped give it out to the press, I mean.

A Yep.

Q Have you ever had access to classified information regarding the contents on Hunter Biden's laptop?

A No.

Q Okay. Are you aware of whether any of your fellow signatories have had access to classified information regarding the contents on Hunter Biden's laptop?

A I have no idea. I didn't know who this person even was.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. In one email that we were just on a little bit ago, the last sentence from Mr. Morell says, "This is a rush job, as it needs to get out as soon as possible."

Why did it need to get out as soon as possible?

Mr. Shapiro. You'd have to ask Michael. But me trying to be helpful to you guys, I'm assuming, considering he was talking about the debate, he wanted it out before the debate.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

So you said earlier your goal was to get information to the American people. To what end? What was the ultimate goal?

Mr. Shapiro. My personal goal was to make sure the Americans knew -- the American people knew the Russians were interfering again.

Chairman Jordan. And you wanted to get it out early like Mr. Morell so that --

Mr. Shapiro. I didn't care.

Chairman Jordan. -- before the debate?

Mr. Shapiro. I didn't care. That wasn't my role or part.

Chairman Jordan. When we spoke to Mr. Morell, he indicated that he had three objectives. It was to, one, tell people that they thought it was a Russian information operation. Two, they wanted something for Mr. Biden to have during the upcoming debate, which was on the 22nd. And, three, he wanted Joe Biden to win.

Are those fair -- were those the same three goals you had?

Mr. Shapiro. No. I was never going back into politics, never going back into the Federal Government. I wasn't trying to do anything other than, Michael asked me to send this to the media, and I believed in the letter, so -- Chairman Jordan. Were you aware of Mr. Ratcliffe's statement on the morning of the 19th, prior to the letter being sent, where he said in an interview on FOX News that morning that this is not part of the Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Shapiro. I don't remember at the time if I was aware. I'm aware of it now. Like, before this interview, I was looking back at the news around then and saw that.

Chairman Jordan. Was Mr. Ratcliffe wrong?

Mr. Shapiro. Did he say information operation or disinformation operation? That's where a lot of this stuff gets ridiculously confused. What did he say?

Chairman Jordan. It "is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign." He said, "The intelligence community doesn't believe that because there is no intelligence that supports that."

He said, "Let me be clear: The intelligence community doesn't believe this is part of a disinformation campaign. The intelligence community doesn't believe that because there is no intelligence that supports that."

Mr. Shapiro. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Ratcliffe went on to say that it is simply not true.

Mr. Shapiro. So, when I was going back and looking at all this stuff, I saw that President Trump's head of counterintelligence, Bill Evanina, in August put out a statement saying that the Russians were interfering in the 2020 election and named this guy, Der- -- I don't know how to pronounce his name -- Derkach, as someone who was trying to spread information about corruption.

And then I remember seeing, a month later, the Secretary of Treasury, Steve Mnuchin, putting out a public statement saying the Russians are making up information. There was some news article that we saw saying that he was spreading deceitful and untrue narratives about Biden to hurt Biden about corruption.

And then I saw Rudy Giuliani speaking in the press, right before the letter, saying, "This information could be hacked. It might not be hacked. I don't know. I'm not disclosing where I got the hard drive." Rudy was meeting with this guy, Derkach.

So all of these things tell a pretty clear story that even the Trump administration was saying the Russians are interfering. There was a Russian agent who was trying to spread information to hurt Hunter Biden about corruption.

I don't see our letter as saying anything different than that.

Chairman Jordan. So the August 7th statement came from the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. So --

Mr. Shapiro. I'm talking about Bill Evanina, not the DNI.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. But -- oh, okay. You're talking about --

Mr. Shapiro. He was the head of counterintelligence. He put out a statement in August saying that Russia is -- and he also said, like, China was interfering, and Iran and other countries too.

Chairman Jordan. Yeah. Okay. Fair enough.

There was also a statement from ODNI in August, and, you know, he said he believed the administration in August but he can't believe them on the 19th. And I'm just trying to --

Mr. Shapiro. No. There is a difference between the word -- that's where I was going with this. "Disinformation," "information," "election interference" -- all these things are getting complicated, I think, for a lot of people.

A disinformation operation is creating fake information.

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

Mr. Shapiro. So, if you read what Treasury Department and Bill Evanina said, they were saying the Russians are creating false narratives about corruption. The Trump administration is saying that. The Trump administration is also saying there's not disinformation. So they were saying two different things.

Which is, I think, part of the reason why our letter is not taking a position on whether it was real or fake. We're just saying what everyone was saying at the time, which is the Russians were interfering in the election.

Chairman Jordan. What's the impression your letter left with the American people?

Mr. Shapiro. That the Russians are interfering with the election.

Chairman Jordan. That's what you think the impression was?

Mr. Shapiro. We are absolutely telling people that Russians are interfering in the election.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q I mean, the letter is about the laptop, though.

A That's how they're interfering with the election.

Q Right. But the letter is largely about the laptop, not about the Russians.

A Our letter is saying, the Russians are behind this in some way; we don't know what way.

Q Right. But you acknowledge that it's mostly about the laptop, right?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Now that the contents of Hunter Biden's laptop have been authenticated, including documentation of shady business dealings with Chinese and Ukrainian foreign nationals, do you believe Hunter Biden is a threat to national security?

A I do not think Hunter Biden is a threat to national security.

Q Why not?

A Because I think the President of the United States doesn't make his decisions based off of anything Hunter Biden is doing.

Q Do you believe Hunter Biden has been compromised?

A I don't know. I'd have to know a heck of a lot more.

Q Okay.

I have no further questions.

Mr. Sini. Could you repeat that last question? I'm sorry.

[redacted] Do you believe Hunter Biden has been compromised?

Mr. Shapiro. It feels like everything's out in the open. And hard to compromise someone when everything's out in the open.

Chairman Jordan. Did you have any communications with Mr. Ricchetti, the chair of the Biden campaign?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

I think [redacted] asked this earlier. Do you regret now that you were part of the effort to get this letter out there -- this statement out there?

Mr. Shapiro. No. But I will say, I am really glad that we have that line in there saying we don't know if it's real or fake, because if it winds up being real or -- if it wound up being real, I would've felt really bad if we hadn't done that.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you have any information about Russian involvement in the laptop situation?

A No. Other than what's in the press, no.

Q What's in the press? Like, what do you understand is the issue with the Russians involved with the laptop?

A Sorry. I was speaking of, like, what Mnuchin and Bill Evanina and everyone was saying. I have no information about Russian -- I have no evidence or anything about Russian involvement. We have our belief that the Russians were playing a role in spreading it --

Q Okay.

A -- or in some way involved in the laptop.

Q And is your belief supported by any evidence?

A It's supported by what Bill Evanina said, what the Secretary of Treasury said under Trump, what the FBI said right before, what Rudy Giuliani did, and my belief that the Russians are trying --

Q Right, but they didn't say anything about, you know, how it got to the store in Delaware.

A No, but they said that this guy, Derkach, was meeting with Giuliani. And Derkach's out there --

Q Right.

A -- being accused by the Trump administration of creating false information about corruption. The laptop had information about corruption. So --

Q Right.

You're not aware of anything on the laptop that was doctored or inserted by the Russians, correct?

A No. We didn't -- what we were saying was that the Russians are playing a role in some way, and we don't know what way. They could've just been spreading the news story.

Q Okay.

Were you surprised by the censorship effort that was implemented on the laptop story?

A I don't know about "surprised," because the media was doing quite a kick in their own behind after 2016. I know there was a lot of handwringing about whether they should've published a lot of the stories about the hacked emails. So I think they were probably being careful this time.

Q Do you think facts relating to a potential President's family, you know, getting money from foreign countries, potentially foreign adversaries, is a relevant story for the American people to consider leading up to the election?

A Yeah. And I think the media was trying to figure out where that information came from and whether it was credible or not.

Q So, if there's facts that says Hunter Biden is taking money from China, that that's a story the American people ought to consider en route to the election?

A I would assume that would be a press story. And I think it was.

Q And were you surprised, you know, with the effort by Facebook and Twitter to just wipe that story clean off their platforms?

A Yeah. I was surprised by that.

Q And so you'd acknowledge that that's pretty remarkable, looking back on it?

A I think the tech companies -- I'm no expert in this, but I think they're all trying to figure out what role they play in disseminating media, and they haven't figured it out yet.

Q Just going back to, I think it's exhibit 1, relating to David Kris and Lisa Monaco. The draft, as you understand it, was sent to them by Mr. Morell?

A From that email. He said, I sent it to them. Yeah.

Q Okay. And did you ever have any communications with David Kris even after this time period about the letter?

A In more recent times. I know David Kris is happy he's not involved.

Q Okay. And can you just tell us a little bit more about your -- like, when did you talk to David Kris about the letter?

A Oh, I don't know. Over the last couple -- it's been 3 years?

Q Okay.

A But I know he is someone who is an excellent lawyer. He was the head of National Security Division Law. And when you guys first sent me your letter, I sent it to him, being like, "What is this? Like, do I have to do anything? I don't know what's going on."

Q Uh-huh.

A And I think in that conversation he was like, "Oh, man, I'm glad I'm not part of this."

Q Fair enough.

A No offense to David.

Q How about Lisa Monaco? Have you ever had any conversations with her, communications about the letter, you know, either at the time -- which I think you said didn't.

A Not at the time, no. I think in the years past -- Lisa and I are friends -- I think she's probably made a similar remark, but I couldn't even, like, pinpoint when.

Q Okay.

And did you hear from Mr. Morell about why Ken Wainstein didn't sign on? Did he give you any information about why any of the folks didn't sign on --

A No.

Q -- such as --

A My conversations with Morell were all about, "Hey, send this to the media."

Q Okay.

Did you have any -- after the story went, was published in Politico, did you have any followup conversations with Morell about it?

A I put this all out of my mind at that point. I mean, he might've said, "Thanks for sending it."

Q Okay.

A You know, that was pretty much it.

Q And subsequently to the time period, the relevant time period, did you have any discussions with Mr. Morell?

A As of -- again, same with -- the opposite of David and Lisa, Morell was complaining that we were all involved in this now.

Q Okay. Did he ever apologize to you for maybe getting you in this mess?

A He has not.

[redacted] I think we're --

[redacted] I have no further questions at this time.

[redacted] -- done for this hour. We might have more questions.

Mr. Shapiro. Yeah, yeah.

[redacted] But we can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[11:03 a.m.]

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q It is 11:03 in the morning. And again, I'm [redacted] I am the Democrat's chief oversight counsel in the Judiciary Committee. I am joined by [redacted] with the House Permanent Select Committee on intelligence.

A Great. Nice to meet you.

Q So we -- at the very beginning of the last hour, we talked through your background a little bit. And you mentioned that you were at the CIA, and you talked through your responsibilities there. But, before that, you were actually in a fairly substantive position at the White House as well, right?

A Two.

Q Can you describe those?

A Yeah. I was the chief of staff senior advisor to the head of counterterrorism and homeland security for a couple years. And, in that role, it was for the same person, for John Brennan, and it was the same role I played at the CIA; it was basically helping make sure he had everything he needed to do his job, helping make sure that every decision was teed up to him in the most functional way where he had all of his questions answered. Typically, he would kind of ask me a question. Then I would go work with people across the government to find the answer and get back to him, and ensuring keeping that he's fulfilling his priorities.

Before that, I was assistant press secretary in the White House with national security and homeland security as my portfolio. So I would advise the President of the United States what he should say in matters of homeland security and national security. I would help ensure the rest of the Federal Government was using a consistent message regarding national security and homeland security, and work with the media to answer their questions about homeland secure and national security.

Q So it's fair to say you developed some amount of expertise in both national security and intelligence matters?

A For sure.

Q Okay. And, in those roles, you -- I believe you probably had exposure to a pretty wide variety of national security and intelligence professionals?

A Absolutely.

Q Did you -- and that's how you crossed paths with Mr. Morell?

A Yes.

Q What was -- in your opinion, when you interacted with him and the period when you're at the White House and the CIA, was he well respected in the intelligence and national security world?

A Absolutely. One of most respected.

Q Can you say more about that?

A I mean, Michael is a legend. He is a career CIA officer, wound up being the head of the analytic branch, was twice Acting Director, Deputy Director for many years, one of the smartest analytical minds I've ever met, and you know, beloved in the intelligence community and the CIA.

Q Okay. So you'd agree that he had the expertise to identify potential threats to American national security?

A 100 percent.

Q Okay. What about Mr. Brennan? Would you -- what's your opinion of him?

A I hold him in the highest regard. He's been like a father to me. He is one of the most incredible professionals I've ever gotten the honor to work with, and I have learned probably more from him than anyone else in my life.

Q Would you agree that he's well respected in the intelligence and national security communities?

A Absolutely.

Q And can you say any more about that?

A That, you know, John Brennan is, again, one of the best leaders I've ever come in contact with. His moral compass is something that sticks out, I think, in front of him more than almost anybody else and all the service he's given to America.

Q And you would agree that he has the expertise to identify potential threats to American national security?

A Absolutely.

Q And so, the fact that Mr. Morell was drafting this letter and taking lead on this letter, and Mr. Brennan was a signatory, was that important to you?

A Yeah. I think, you know, I would -- I was not afraid to sign my name to something that both of those guys signed onto.

Q Because they're so well respected?

A Absolutely.

Q And because you respect their judgment?

A For sure.

Q Were there any signatories that stood out to you as people that were really meaningful for you that were on the list?

A I need to look at the list to remind myself.

Q Exhibit 1.

A Yeah. The fact that you've got -- first, you've got former CIA Directors who worked in Republican -- I think Mike Hayden was one of the people on the list. I believe Panetta was on the list. John McLaughlin is also a legendary long-time incredible CIA officer. Mike Vickers is incredible. Nick Rasmussen, Russ Travers, Doug Wise, I mean these guys are heavy weights in the largest sense. Rodney Snyder, guy doesn't have a political bone in his body. He's a career national security official who has done incredible work. Andy Liepman. David Buckley, who is a former inspector general. Steve Hall is a -- was an absolute expert on Russia. It says he was the chief of Russian operations. I worked very closely with Steve when I was at the CIA. He had, I believe, these jobs when I was there in every -- we dealt with lot of stuff with Russia. And Steve was the guy who was always briefing me and talking to John about what was happening. David Priess, absolutely fantastic analyst. All of these folks are incredible.

Q Thank you. Earlier today, there was -- the very beginning, there was some discussion about possible legislation related to security clearances and people who hold security clearances after leaving government. And I can't remember if you said that you had a security clearance or not in 2020?

A I'm not sure what you're talking about, the legislation. I did not have a security clearance in 2020, though.

Q Sorry. I was referring to the introduction. That actually might have been before we were rolling.

A Gotcha.

Q And so you didn't have a security clearance in 2020?

A I left government in 2015, and have never seen, needed to see, or have any access to classified information since then.

Q Okay. And you personally didn't have any access to any of the Hunter Biden emails or the laptop?

A No.

Q Okay. You didn't have access to any intelligence products or documents that were analyzing the laptop or anything like that?

A Just press reports.

Q Okay. And you didn't have any personal interactions with anybody at FBI, for example, regarding whether there was an investigation?

A No.

Q Okay. And, to your knowledge, none of the other signatories had any interactions with the FBI or any access to classified information?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q Okay. So it was kind of irrelevant whether or not you had a security clearance because to your knowledge, nobody actually had access to classified information or even law enforcement sensitive information for that matter?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And you actually made this clear in the text of the letter itself, right?

A Yep.

Q I think there was some discussion earlier about on the record versus off the record and on background and what all of that might mean?

A Yep.

Q But I want to look at the actual Politico article, which I think is the actual record, right?

A Yeah. Yeah. Yeah.

[redacted] Okay. We're going to introduce that as exhibit 7.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And, actually, I'm sorry. Before we get there, I want to look at the public letter again, and then go to the Politico article. So the public letter was exhibit No. 1.

So, in the letter, you -- in the fifth paragraph of that letter, reads: We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not, and we do not have evidence of Russian involvement.

So this is an example of it being plain on the face of the letter that you didn't have any information about the emails being genuine or not?

A Correct.

Q And the very next sentence begins, quote: If we are right.

Correct?

A Yes.

Q So that suggests that you could, in fact, be incorrect?

A Yes. Yeah.

Q And the following paragraph reads: There are a number of factors that make us suspicious of Russian involvement.

A Yes.

Q And suspicion is different than proof, right?

A Absolutely.

Q On the next page, the third to last paragraph begins with the phrase: Our view is that the Russians are involved -- and you specifically used the phrase "our view," right?

A Yes.

Q So that shows that it's a subjective opinion and not an objective fact?

A For sure.

Q Okay. And then, finally, the second to last paragraph of the letter describes some press reports about the FBI opening an investigation. And then, in the final paragraph, it says: We do not know whether these press reports are accurate, right?

A Yes.

Q So this is another instance this which letter makes clear that this is all based on your understanding of public information, that you have no access, that you're not making a call on it either way if the information is accurate?

A Correct.

Q So we just went through five different instances of that. And would you agree that it makes it -- it's caveated to make it abundantly clear that this was the letter signatories' subjective evaluation of various factors and not an objective --

A One hundred percent. That was the point.

Q Okay. And there's obviously nothing in there that says you had access to nonpublic information?

A Correct. We even say that we didn't, I believe.

Q So let's turn to the Politico article now, which is exhibit 7. And this is a printout. So it's all -- so I'm going to refer to pages, but obviously, on the internet, it's all one giant block.

The very first paragraph of this letter, which is on the top of the next page, the top of the second page as printed, there's a blue hyperlink there to -- signed onto a letter.

Is it your understanding that that links to the actual letter?

A I assume so, yeah.

Q Okay. So anyone reading this article and the very first thing they see is the actual letter, which has all of the caveats we just talked through. They could easily just click through and see that?

A Yep.

Q And the third paragraph of the Politico article plainly states that the letters signatories presented no new evidence, right?

A Yep.

Q So that's in there as well.

And then, further down, it's the 10th paragraph. So it's -- it's actually on the fourth page as printed. It's right underneath the block of text that says: Politico Dispatch.

It reads: We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not, and we do not have evidence of Russian involvement.

So you said earlier that your goal was to make sure that that information got into the article?

A Yep.

Q And the information got into the article?

A It did.

Q Okay. Moving on from that, there was some discussion earlier -- and I think you said there was a lot of confusion around information operations versus disinformation operations versus other influence operations.

What is your understanding of the difference between an information operation and disinformation operation?

A Yeah. First, normally what we call them is influence campaigns. Like, you know, covert influence campaigns is what foreign countries do all the time. The difference between information operation and disinformation operation is disinformation is typically creating fake information and spreading it. And information operation could be as simple as getting access to real information, damaging information, and helping spread it.

Q And so would an example of that be, in 2016, nobody denied that the emails that were hacked from the Democrat Congressional Campaign Committee and the Democratic National Committee were genuine, but the concern was that the emails we being weaponized to sow chaos and influence the election, correct?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. So is this known as a hack-and-leak or a hack-and-dump operation?

A I've heard the term "hack-and-dump." But it's basically a covert influence campaign where they're taking real information that they've gotten through illegal means, hacking, and then are spreading it.

Q Okay. And, even if there's no hack, it could be just an influence operation to spread information?

A Absolutely, just you know, bots and accounts on social media spreading a story, whether that story is fake or real, is an influence operation.

Q And this actually isn't just -- Russians don't do this just with respect to the United States, right?

A Correct.

Q So, for example, we have -- sorry. Hold on one second.

I'm actually going to move on. So information operations, you described them as covert influence operations. They involve a government hiding its hand entirely or hiding behind someone else, correct?

A At least for some of it.

Q And sorry, what do you mean by that?

A Like sometimes governments also want it to be known they did do it. You know, the hacking was clearly covertly done. The Russians didn't want us to know, the U.S. government, to know they were hacking into a political campaign of someone running for President and then putting it out there. And, at the time, if I remember, they were doing it all covertly, and it took some unraveling to find that it was the Russians.

Q In 2016?

A Yeah.

Q So do you agree that Russian information operations pose a threat to American democracy?

A Absolutely.

Q So there are some who would claim that Americans who participate in disinformation or perhaps are used by Russians in information operations are exercising their free speech rights, and do you agree that it's a problem if Americans got involved in information operations?

A Absolutely.

Q I want to turn back to the text of the letter itself. I think you were asked earlier, you know, you didn't have any evidence to support this, and you said that there was news articles you were relying on. So I want to talk through some of the evidence that was in the public sphere you might have had access to?

A Sure.

Q So the 8th paragraph of the letter itself, the last paragraph on the bottom of page 3 reads: Such an operation, which means the Russian cyber operation or influence operation, would be consistent with Russian objectives as outlined publicly and recently by the intelligence community to create political chaos in the United States and to deepen divisions here but also to undermine the candidacy of former Vice President Biden and thereby help the candidacy of President Trump?

A Yep.

Q Can you explain, briefly, in your experience why it would have been consistent with Russian objectives to create political chaos in the United States and deepen divisions here?

A Yeah. And that came, I believe, directly from Bill Evanina, who was the head of counterintelligence at that time in the intelligence community. You know, their goal -- Russia sees the world still as a zero sum game with America. So, if they can create division in America, and we're fighting each other, in their opinion, that's a win for them. It shows that democracy is mean and nasty, and they don't like democracy.

[redacted] And I actually want to introduce into the record the statement from Mr. Evanina. This is going to be exhibit 8.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So, on the second page, there's a paragraph highlighted. I'm going to read that into record quickly. It read: We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it sees as an anti-Russia establishment. This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him when he was Vice President for his role in the Obama administration's policies on Ukraine and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia. For example, pro-Russia Ukrainian Parliamentarian Andrii Derkach is spreading claims about corruption, including publicizing leaked phone calls to undermine former Vice President Biden candidacy and the party. Some Kremlin-linked actors are also seeking to boost President Trump's candidacy on social media and Russian television.

A Yep.

Q So this statement was released in August 2020, August 7th, 2020, and it made clear that this assessment found that Russia was working to denigrate then Vice President Biden, consistent with Russia's prior criticism of him, correct?

A Specifically about corruption.

Q So this is actual evidence of concern in the intelligence community, and actual evidence of, you know, an assessment that that was the case?

A Yep.

Q Okay. And you would agree that this statement is accurate --

A Yeah.

Q -- in your view?

So, moving on, the ninth paragraph of the October 19th letter, and I think it's the top of the next page, top of the second page states that: Such an operation would be consistent with some of the key methods Russia has used in its now multiyear operation to interfere in our democracy, the hacking via cyber operations, and the dumping of accurate information or the distribution of inaccurate or misinformation. Russia did both of these during the 2016 Presidential election, a judgment shared by the U.S. intelligence community, the investigation into Russian activities by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, and the entirety of all Republicans and Democrats on the current Senate Intelligence Committee.

A Yeah.

Q So I'm going to go through those latter assessments one by one.

A Great.

Q Are you familiar with the January 2017 CIA, FBI, and National Security Agency joint assessment detailing a Russian campaign to influence the 2016 election?

A Vaguely, yeah.

Q Okay. I'm going to introduce as --

A Is this the ICA.

Q Yeah.

[redacted] We'll introduce it as exhibit 9.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q We're going to look at -- it's marked as Roman numeral pages II to III of the report, listed as key judgments -- I think it might actually be page 4 of the printed copy. It little Roman numeral -- yeah. Roman numeral II.

So this -- I should say the classified version of this report was released in January. In this setting, we're using the unclassified version, which was released in March of that year publicly, and it's available online.

So the key judgment section on pages -- Roman numeral II to III says that: The intelligence agencies assessed that Russian intelligence conducted cyber operations against targets associated with the 2016 election, including targets associated with both political parties, gained access to the Democratic National Committee computer networks and publicly released materials via WikiLeaks.

So, to the extent that paragraph 9 refers to the U.S. intel community assessments of 2016, this was an accurate assessment. That is what assessment found, right?

A Sure, yeah.

Q And that actually would be evidence that you would -- that's actual hard evidence from the intel community?

A Yep.

Q Okay. Paragraph nine refers to the investigation by Special Counsel Robert Mueller. I'm not going to introduce the entire Mueller Report into the report because it's lengthy.

[redacted] But we're going to introduce as exhibit 10 the cover page, and what's page 36 of volume one, which is the first page of the section entitled "Russian Hacking and Dumping Operations."

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with the Mueller Report?

A Yes.

Q So this report determined that the Russian government hacked into the networks of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and the Democratic National Committee and then released stolen Clinton campaign and DNC documents using various personas to interfere in the 2016 election, right?

A Yep.

Q So this is -- this does -- this is supports what you said in the ninth paragraph or what the signatories said in the ninth paragraph of the letter?

A Absolutely.

Q And would you consider this evidence to support your assertions?

A Yep.

Q And, finally, the last assessment in there, it's paragraph 9 refers to the findings of the Senate Intelligence Committee report.

Is this -- to your knowledge, is this a reference to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report on Russian active measures, campaigns, and interference in the 2016 U.S. election?

A Yep.

Q Okay. And the final version of that was released in August of 2020, which would have been two months, roughly, before the October 19th letter?

A Yep.

[redacted] So I want to introduce as exhibit 11 the cover page and just the findings section of that report.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Again, I think the full report is several thousand pages long.

A That was I think the first -- so there had been work in the intelligence community in Mueller. This was the first bipartisan work where everyone could agree the Russians interfered in the election.

Q So just the -- on page Roman numeral VII, I believe it's highlighted, it reads: The committee found that Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered the Russian effort to hack computer networks and accounts affiliated with the Democratic party and leak information damaging to Hillary Clinton and her campaign for President.

A Yep.

Q So this is another assessment mentioned in here -- the letter, and it does -- it is evidence that supports your statement there?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So you would agree that there's widespread evidence -- or widespread agreement, rather, among United States intelligence and national security experts that Russia did interfere in 2016?

A Absolutely.

Q The 10th paragraph -- going back to the October 19th letter, the 10th paragraph states that: The Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts, targeted Burisma late last year for cyber collection and gained access to its emails.

[redacted] I want to introduce as exhibit 12 a January 13th, 2020, New York Times article entitled "Russians Hacked Ukrainian Gas Company at Center of Impeachment."

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A Probably.

Q I'll give you a second to review, if you want?

A Okay.

Q So this article states that: The Russian intelligence director used phishing emails to target Burisma and gain access to their computer systems, right?

A Yep.

Q And do you have any reason to doubt the voracity of this reporting?

A No.

Q Okay. So this tends to also provide evidence to support the statement in paragraph 10 about Burisma being hacked, right?

A Yep.

Q And then, moving on, paragraph 10 also states that: Ukrainian politician and businessman Andrii Derkach, identified and sanctioned by the U.S. Treasury Department for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election, passed supportive materials on Burisma and Hunter Biden to Giuliani.

A Yep.

Q Are you familiar with the Treasury Department's sanctions on Mr. Derkach?

A Yep.

[redacted] I'm going to introduce the press release that announces those sanctions.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Shapiro. Great.

BY [redacted]

Q So the in-relevant part of the press release says that: Treasury designated Andrii Derkach, pursuant to Executive Order 13848, for his efforts to influence the 2020 U.S. Presidential election. Derkach, a member of the Ukrainian Parliament has been an active Russian agent for over a decade, maintaining close connections with the Russian intelligence services.

A Yep.

Q Derkach has directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. Presidential election.

A Yep.

Q Okay. So this directly supports the statements made in the letter that Derkach was sanctioned for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election, right?

A Yes.

Q And so this was a true statement in the letter?

A Yes.

Q And Rudy Giuliani was known to associate with Mr. Derkach, correct?

A Yep.

Q Who was Rudy Giuliani?

A Besides the former mayor of New York after 9/11, he was a close Trump confidante, advisor, lawyer I think at some point.

[redacted] I want to introduce as exhibit 14 a Daily Beast article that was published on October 17th, 2020. It's entitled "Rudy: Only 50/50 chance I worked with a Russian spy to dig dirt on Bidens and Ukraine."

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A I think so, yeah.

Q If you want a minute to scan, I can give that to you.

So this article reports on an hour-long interview that the Daily Beast had with Rudy Giuliani. And, at the top of the last page of the article, Giuliani is described as saying that he, quote: Used his latest leak to the New York Post as an extension of his years-long efforts to work with the Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens.

A Yep.

Q So there was actual evidence that Giuliani worked to dig up dirt on the Bidens, and he described the laptop leak as an extension of those efforts, right?

A Yep.

Q So this actually is evidence that supports your concerns expressed in the letter?

A Yep.

Q And the article continues that: Derkach has for years -- for years has tried to pass damaging and largely false information about the Ukrainian Government's supposed attempts to undermine Trump and the Bidens' supposed dirty dealings in Kyiv. Derkach dispatched packets of disinformation about the Obama administration and the Bidens to lawmakers on Capitol Hill throughout 2019, and finally met with Giuliani in December 2019 in Kyiv during the middle of the House impeachment process.

A Yep.

Q Derkach and Giuliani appeared together in an anti-Biden television series produced by the Trumpist network OAN, and Giuliani has interviewed Derkach about the Bidens on his YouTube video series "Common Sense."

So this tends to support the concerns raised in the letter about Giuliani's interactions with Derkach, correct?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. Would you agree that it would be concerning for an individual, Giuliani, who was working at -- would you agree that it would be concerning that Mr. Giuliani, who is an American person, working to influence the election with someone who had deep ties to a Russian agent sanctioned for trying to interfere in the election?

A Absolutely.

Q And is that kind of what you captured -- and why is that?

A Sorry. Why is --

Q Why is it that you find that concerning?

A Because you have a known Russian agent closely working with a Trump confidante. Everyone is literally saying out in the open that they're trying to dig up dirt on the Bidens. You have Trump's own government saying this guy Derkach is known for creating fake information, pushing false information. You have Derkach and Giuliani together. Giuliani is looking for exactly what Derkach is saying he's providing, and then suddenly you have this laptop story.

Q So we've walked through a number of the factors raised in the letter and kind of talked through the evidence you had to support the statements in there. And you said earlier that there are many ways that the Russians could have interfered here, could have been information, disinformation, pushing out through information, right?

A Yep.

Q So I want to now look at some evidence that suggests that Russia, in fact, did interfere in the 2020 election.

A Great.

[redacted] So I want to introduce a January 7th, 2021, intelligence community assessment. It's entitled "Foreign Threat to the 2020 U.S. Federal Elections." We'll introduce it as exhibit 15, and, again, this was a classified report. We're introducing the unclassified report into the record today.

[Shapiro Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A I think so, yeah.

Q Okay. So I'm going to ask you to turn to the page -- the fourth page. It's the fourth page of the document. It's Roman numeral I.

Key judgment two, so it's actually -- it's Roman numeral I. It's under key judgments. There's a section there that says "key judgment two"; you see that?

A Yep.

Q And it says: We assess that Russian President Putin authorized, and a range of Russian Government organizations conducted, influence operations aimed at denigrating President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party, supporting former President Trump, undermining public confidence in the electoral process, and exacerbating sociopolitical divisions in the U.S. Unlike in 2016, we did not see persistent Russian cyber efforts to gain access to election infrastructure. We have high confidence in our assessment: Russia state and proxy actors who all serve the Kremlin's interest worked to affect the U.S. public perceptions in a consistent manner. A key element of Moscow's strategy this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives, including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden, to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration.

Do you agree that this paragraph is consistent with the type of concerns about Russian interference that you Mr. Morell and the others expressed in the October 19th letter?

A Absolutely.

Q And, in fact, the Treasury Department's sanctions specifically found that Andrii Derkach was a Russian intelligence proxy pushing influence narratives, right?

A Specifically to denigrate Biden specifically about corruption.

Q Would you agree that Rudy Giuliani is an individual who is, quote, close to former President Trump and his administration?

A Yes.

Q I want to turn -- what time did we start?

Mr. Sini. 11:05 I have.

BY [redacted]

Q You were asked some of this earlier, but I want to just make sure I have a clean record on it.

A Yeah.

Q You said that you did not have any interaction with any social media company regarding the Hunter Biden emails, correct?

A Correct.

Q To your knowledge, did anybody else who signed the letter have such interactions?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. Did you have any interactions with any social media company regarding the New York Post story about Hunter Biden's emails?

A Nope.

Q And, to your knowledge, did anyone else who signed the letter have those interactions?

A Nope.

Q You were asked about the Publications Review Board, and you said you never interacted with them about the letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q You don't know if anyone else did other than Mr. Morell you assumed?

A Correct.

Q When the letter was made public -- when it was drafted and made public, October 17th to October 19th, you were a private citizen, correct?

A Yes.

Q And all of the other signatories were private citizens?

A I believe so. Yeah. The point was to be everyone who was a former official.

Q And would you agree that, as a private citizen, you have the right to engage in political process?

A For sure.

Q And to exercise your First Amendment right?

A Yeah.

Q And the letter itself actually doesn't even endorse a candidate on its face, right?

A Correct.

Q In fact, the closing line of the letter states: It is high time Russia stops interfering in our democracy.

A Yep.

Q And you said earlier your goal was to make it clear that Russia needs to stop interfering in our democracy?

A Yep.

Q Why did you feel that it was important to make it clear that Russia could be interfering here?

A Because it's absolutely nuts that we, as America, are sitting here while Russia is interfering with the election. And if we can't get Russia to stop interfering, the American people should know that what they might be seeing or reading might be because the Russians want them to.

Q Would you describe Russia as adversary of the United States?

A Yes.

Q Do you think that by making this information -- making known that Russia is interfering or may be interfering, it could help to counter that influence?

A Yes.

Q And how does that work?

A Well, if people know that they need to be careful because maybe they're reading something that could be because the Russians want them to read it, they should think twice about whether or not it plays a part in how they think about things.

Q You were asked earlier if you have any regrets about signing the letter, and you said you don't have any regrets?

A Correct.

Q But you also said that, you know, you were kind of caught up in this now. What did you mean by that?

A I regret that I had to leave my home, fly across the country away from my clients, which I'm sure they're not happy with. My dog. And I don't like being named in the media for, again, voicing an opinion that everyone across the political spectrum in intelligence community has all shared, which is that Russian is interfering with the election.

Q Do you think that the fact that you are part of this investigation, that you've been named in the media, that your name is out there now, do you think that would chill your willingness to participate in the political process in the future?

A I hate to say it, but probably. You know, I don't want to be someone who doesn't stand up for their values or morals, but I don't want to deal with this.

Q And do you think that, if others see you being treated like this or being investigated, having your name in the media, do you think that might chill others' willingness to participate in the political process?

A Sure. Yeah.

Q I want to turn back to exhibit 6. And this is the email from Mr. Cariens. You said when you were asked about this you don't know who Mr. Cariens is, right?

A Nope.

Q You never had a conversation with him?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q And, in fact, the addressee in this email is [redacted] who's a committee staffer here, right?

A Yes.

Q And this isn't -- it's not a sworn statement. It's just an email, right?

A Yep.
