Q It hasn't been subject to cross-examination?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q I actually want to look at the back of the email, if you turn to the second page. This isn't actually even the complete email chain. Right?

A Yep.

Q If you look at the bottom, it looks like there was one that was cut off. So we don't know --

Mr. Sandweg. Can we pause here? Just say yes.

Mr. Shapiro. Oh, sorry. Yes. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q So we don't know what interactions there were prior to 4:51 p.m. on March 1st, 2023?

A Correct.

Q And you don't know how old Mr. Cariens is, do you?

A I don't know him. No.

Q He says that he retired in 1997. So he's been retired for at least -- I can't do math.

A Me either.

Q 28 years. Is that right?

A I'll trust your math.

Q Okay. And he's -- he said he doesn't have security clearances. He hasn't had one since at least 2017.

So you don't -- other than the text, the four corners of what's in this email, you have no knowledge about this?

A Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q Hi. Nice to see you. [redacted] from the House Intelligence Committee. There are kind of a couple of questions I wanted to focus in on in this particular interaction.

A Sure.

Q So, when the majority was asking you about it earlier, the -- when this exhibit was first introduced, they described it as the PCRB reportedly promoting the letter. Do you remember that?

A Do I remember counsel talking to me about it? Yes.

Q The majority. From my observations of you, you reacted with some surprise of that statement. Is that fair?

A Very surprised.

Q Because it would be at least a little surprising for the PCRB to be behaving that way, right?

A Extremely. Yeah.

Q So the -- turning back to exhibit 6. This is, from your review of the exhibit, at least an initial email exchange between the counsel for the majority and Mr. Cariens, correct?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q So you have no specific knowledge of whether or not -- excuse me. Let me rephrase.

You have no knowledge of what the PCRB said to Mr. Cariens other than what's presented in this email, correct?

A Correct.

Q And you have no knowledge of what he said to them, correct?

A Correct.

Q And you have no knowledge of the interactions or atmospherics of that call, correct?

A Correct.

Q Did you have any knowledge of this particular interaction before this email was showed to you today?

A No.

Q So your reaction of surprise came from -- and these will be my words, but I'm curious of what you think -- a place of ignorance and first impression; is that fair?

A Yes.

Q That's all I've got. Thanks.

[redacted] I don't think we have any more questions today. Thank you. We might have more questions after the next round.

Off the record at 11:44 a.m.

[Recess.]

[11:50 a.m.]

[redacted] It's 11:15, and we'll go back on the record.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Shapiro, my name is Matt Gaetz. I'm a majority member with the House Judiciary Committee, and I have a few questions for you this morning. First, how long have you known Hunter Biden?

Mr. Shapiro. I don't know Hunter Biden.

Mr. Gaetz. Never communicated with him about the substance in the letter?

Mr. Shapiro. I have never communicated with Hunter Biden ever.

Mr. Gaetz. When did you first come to learn of Burisma?

Mr. Shapiro. In the media during all of this probably.

Mr. Gaetz. What time period would you say?

Mr. Shapiro. I have no idea. I tend to follow politics in the news. So, whenever Burisma became a news event, I would say then.

[redacted] Fall of 2019, during the impeachment?

Mr. Shapiro. I --

[redacted] Or before?

Mr. Shapiro. No --

[redacted] You didn't know about it before impeachment?

Mr. Shapiro. I have no idea when I first heard of Burisma, but it was in the media, just following current events. I have no non -- information about that until I started hearing it in the media.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you seek a job in the Biden government?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And you never communicated with any of the other signatories to the letter?

Mr. Shapiro. I communicated with Michael Morell -- about the letter.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. Other than Mr. Morell?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you speak to Mr. Brennan about it?

Mr. Shapiro. Not at the letter, no.

Mr. Gaetz. Did anyone reach out to you regarding the letter after they saw your signature on it?

Mr. Shapiro. Not that I can remember, no.

Mr. Gaetz. No people in the Biden campaign? No people in the media?

Mr. Shapiro. Because they saw my signature on it?

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. Somebody may have seen that you signed the letter and wanted to follow up with you regarding basis for signing the letter.

Mr. Shapiro. No. I've have had journalist who have reached out to me since then asking me for a comment on the letter, like whether I wanted to sign it or regretted signing or not.

Mr. Gaetz. Has anyone in the government reached out to you about your signature on the letter?

Mr. Shapiro. No.

Mr. Gaetz. So, in Mr. Morell's testimony to us, I'll represent to you that we learned that a principle reason to have the letter was as a talking point for a Presidential debate. Did the two of you ever discuss that?

Mr. Shapiro. No. He might have mentioned it. I saw it in an email that he sent but didn't have any indepth conversation about that at all.

Mr. Gaetz. How did you react to receiving the email indicating that this would be a tool in Presidential debate?

Mr. Shapiro. Without surprise because that's what campaigns do.

Mr. Gaetz. So you understood the letter to be a tool for the Biden campaign?

Mr. Shapiro. Well, I saw Michael's email saying that that's why he wanted to do it.

Mr. Gaetz. So you understood that to be -- did you understand that to be the purpose of the letter, as far as Mr. Morell was concerned?

Mr. Shapiro. I think that it has dual purpose. I think Morell was doing that for whatever conversations he was having for that time period, but I think if you ask most of the signatories, that they wanted to sign it because they wanted to inform the American people that Russians again are interfering with the election.

Mr. Gaetz. But you had no evidence that Russians were interfering with the election at the time, did you?

Mr. Shapiro. No. There were public reports that Russians were interfering in the election again.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Did you have any direct evidence that spoke to the Russians' involvement with this Hunter Biden laptop?

Mr. Shapiro. Not with the laptop specifically, no. Just Russian interference.

Mr. Gaetz. So, because Russians were interfering with the elections, you assumed that the laptop was a feature of that interference?

Mr. Shapiro. I assumed that it could be.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. But you had no evidence that it was?

Mr. Shapiro. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Why didn't you investigate that more thoroughly before signing the letter?

Mr. Shapiro. Because the letter very caveated to say: We think Russians could be involved. We don't know if it's real or fake information that they could potentially be spreading.

And I believed that to be the case.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you believe those caveats were sufficient given the likely realization of this letter as a political device in the Presidential debate?

Mr. Shapiro. Absolutely. I think it makes very clear that we have no access to classified information, makes very clear that we have no evidence about the laptop, makes very clear that our judgement is that the Russians could be involved in some way, but we don't even know how.

Mr. Gaetz. But isn't something that's so caveated irresponsible to put out if you don't have a basis for the underlying claim that this laptop is a feature of a Russian information campaign?

Mr. Shapiro. I don't think so. There was already in the press reports that the FBI was saying that they're looking into whether this was a Russian operation. Rudy Giuliani was already in the press saying: I don't know if this was hacked. It might have been hacked. If it's hacked, I could use it.

So there was certainly enough out there already.

Mr. Gaetz. It sounds like you relied heavily on public press reports to justify your signature on the letter. Is that the case?

Mr. Shapiro. That, and my experience.

Mr. Gaetz. But you didn't have any -- none of your experience indicated that the laptop was a feature of a Russian misinformation campaign, did it?

Mr. Shapiro. No. My experience tells me that Russians are probably interfering with the election, and looking at what was being -- happening, I certainly believed that this could have been a Russian operation, still do.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. But as we discussed, you have no evidence that the Russians had anything to do with this laptop?

Mr. Shapiro. Correct. And I think that the reason I was comfortable signing it is because we said that in the letter, that we have no evidence.

Chairman Jordan. What were classic earmarks then? There was no evidence -- you had no evidence Russians involved. What were the classic earmarks? That was a line that was actually changed from the first draft to the final draft -- went from, I think, it has the feel to it went to it has all of the classic earmarks. So could you define what those classic earmarks are?

Mr. Shapiro. Yeah. I don't know about the change in language. I didn't even know that until you just said that or remember that. But all the classic earmarks of Russian operation are potentially hacking a computer and releasing damaging information, which is what Russians did in 2016. So we thought this totally could be that. Also just spreading negative information that they get their hands on, we thought this could totally be that.

Chairman Jordan. So those generalized, kind of, just broad general techniques are classic earmarks?

Mr. Shapiro. They sure are.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Pretty general.

Mr. Gaetz. Now that we know more about the authenticity about the information that was on the laptop, do these activities -- do these activities concern you that are reflected on the laptop?

Mr. Shapiro. What activities?

Mr. Gaetz. The coordination between the Biden family and foreign governments?

Mr. Shapiro. I think that the President of the United States is -- has not done anything because of anything his family members have or haven't done.

Mr. Gaetz. What's your basis for that belief?

Mr. Shapiro. That I haven't seen anything tell me that President Biden has made a decision on national security or in any way based on his family?

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know why President Biden dissolved the China Initiative at the Department of Justice?

Mr. Shapiro. I didn't even know he did.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. So, if I represent to you that, on the laptop, Hunter Biden is holding the annual dinner for his investment fund at the Chinese Embassy, does that concern you?

Mr. Shapiro. If the Russians are spreading that information, I want the American people to have that information and also know that the Russians want them to have that information.

Mr. Gaetz. Why? First of all, we've covered it pretty extensively that you don't have any evidence that the Russians are involved in this laptop. So I'm asking you about the substantive information. As a national security professional, does the fact that Hunter Biden is having his investment fund's annual meeting at the Chinese Embassy concern you?

Mr. Shapiro. If the President knows about it and has disclosed it, and the government knows about it, then it's less concerning. If it's a secret that is being held over the President of the United States and the President makes a decision based off of that, then that would concern me.

Mr. Gaetz. And, if Hunter Biden, in order to have access to the Embassy, the Ambassador's residence, has to have a private meeting with the Ambassador beforehand, does that concern you?

Mr. Shapiro. I think children of any President, President Trump's children, President Biden's children, shouldn't be using their access -- shouldn't be using the fact that their father is President for access to anything.

Mr. Gaetz. So it does concern you?

Mr. Shapiro. No child of a President should abuse their access, whether it's President Biden, President Trump. Fortunately, Sasha and Malia did not do that when I was in the White House.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll concede that point for sure.

But you didn't write a letter about that, right? It seems as though --

Mr. Shapiro. About what? Sorry.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll strike that. I think those are my questions. [redacted] I'll yield to you.

BY [redacted]

Q The -- you would concede that there are a lot of false information regarding the Russians and President Trump, correct?

A I would concede that the Russians are spreading false information on Trump, is that what you're saying?

Q No. That there's a lot of in false information about the Russians' involvement with President Trump, correct?

A I guess I'd ask what do you mean.

Q Like with their Carter Page FISA. You said you followed the news --

A Sure. That there was a FISA -- yeah.

Q FISA that had just a litany of errors --

A I am aware that there was a FISA that should not have been authorized because there were errors, yeah.

Q And that FISA you know goes onto create this penumbra, this idea that President Trump is colluding with the Russians in advance of 2016 election, correct?

A Yeah.

Q That there's a lot of -- there's a lot of other just elements that, you know, President Trump's political adversaries have tried to tie him to Russia when, in effect, the evidence wasn't there, correct?

A In my opinion, the fact that the Russians keep going out of their way to help President Trump is -- is newsworthy and noteworthy I think. I don't have any evidence of President Trump colluding.

Q But our adversaries do that all the time, correct?

A No. Election interference is something that is a big problem now that was not happening in the past.

Q The Iranians didn't want President Trump to win, correct?

A I don't know. I believe Bill Evanina -- I forgot -- there's a statement in here where Bill Evanina told us who China and Iran and Russia were helping.

Q Right.

A But I don't remember which China and Iran was.

Q I mean, it was represented to us yesterday that the Iranians did not want President Trump to win, that they were big backers of Secretary Clinton and subsequently Vice President Biden --

A Russians are not the only ones interfering in elections. That's for sure. I think other countries saw the benefit after 2016 and said: We should do this too.

Q Right. The Politico story -- I believe it's exhibit 7 -- does the headline concern you?

A Headline is wrong.

Q Did you try to correct it with Ms. Bertrand?

A Not at the time, no.

Q One of the issues with the letter is that 51 former intel officials have this prestige associated with their access to information, their knowledge, their experience. So when 51 former intel officials, especially some of the more marquee names, sign a letter, it creates this impression that they have maybe some inside information; isn't that correct?

A I think that's probably why they went out of their way -- we went out of our way to say we don't have that just in case people thought we did.

Q But the way it works is reporters don't always cover it that way, right?

A Sure. But that's why the letter was the important thing for people to read.

Q Just, I mean, the way Politico presented it isn't -- would you agree it's not consistent with the way the letter read?

A The story is very consistent. The story is a hundred percent accurate. That headline, though, is not. We didn't say disinformation.

[redacted] We're all good.

[redacted] We're good.

[redacted] We'll go off the record at 12:04 p.m.

[Whereupon, at 12:04 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

For THE WITNESS:

ANDREW HERMAN, ESQ.

Gibson Dunn

1050 Connecticut Avenue, NW

Washington, D.C. 20036-5306

[redacted] Good morning.

This is a deposition of Ms. Nina Jankowicz. Chairman Jordan has requested this deposition as part of the committee's oversight of the Disinformation Governance Board within the Department of Homeland Security.

The committee's oversight of the Disinformation Governance Board and its effect on Americans' civil liberties falls squarely within the committee's jurisdiction and are subjects on which legislation could be had. These potential legislative reforms include the prohibition of such a Federal disinformation entity, restrictions on the executive branch's authority to collect speech-related information about American citizens, or enhanced protections surrounding civil liberties.

As the former Executive Director of the board, Ms. Jankowicz is uniquely situated to provide information that is relevant and necessary to inform the committee's oversight and potential legislative reforms.

On March 6, 2023, Chairman Jordan issued a subpoena for Ms. Jankowicz to testify at a deposition on April 10, 2023. I'd like to mark the March 6, 2023, subpoena as exhibit No. 1.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Could the witness please state your name for the record?

The Witness. Nina Jankowicz.

[redacted] Could counsel please state your name for the record?

Mr. Herman. Andrew Herman.

[redacted] My name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table and in the room introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] with the majority staff of the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, majority member of the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Biggs. Andy Biggs, majority member of the House Judiciary Committee.

Chairman Jordan. Jim Jordan.

Mr. Ivey. Glenn Ivey, member of the House Judiciary Committee.

[redacted] [redacted] I'm the chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, Democratic side.

[redacted] [redacted] chief Democratic counsel for the Antitrust Subcommittee, majority.

[redacted] Minority.

[redacted] Minority. Sorry.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] House Judiciary minority.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary minority.

[redacted] [redacted] Judiciary majority.

[redacted] [redacted] majority.

[redacted] [redacted] majority.

[redacted] [redacted] with the majority.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] with the minority.

[redacted] Thank you.

I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's deposition.

The committee will conduct today's deposition in accordance with Rule 11 of the Committee on the Judiciary's Rules of Procedure for the 118th Congress.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour. Then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

The Witness. Yes, I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just that person on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it. And that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know. Our questions will cover a range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. And it is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else; just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or cannot remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

By law, you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

The Witness. I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand this?

The Witness. I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury. Do you understand this?

The Witness. I do.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

The Witness. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That is the end of my opening remarks. Is there anything that my colleagues from minority would like to add?

[redacted] Just thank the witness for coming today.

[redacted] Thank you.

The court reporter will now swear the witness in.

The Reporter. Would you please raise your right hand?

Do you declare and affirm under the penalty of perjury that the testimony you are about to give in this matter will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

The Witness. I do.

The Reporter. Thank you.

[redacted] The clock now reads 10:07 a.m. We will start our first round of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Jankowicz, prior to being named Executive Director of the Disinformation Governance Board at the Department of Homeland Security, what did you do?

A I was a freelancer, basically. I for a long time held a global fellowship at The Wilson Center, which, as everyone in the room will know, is the Nation's premier nonpartisan policy institution here in D.C.

I worked on issues related to disinformation, including Russian disinformation, disinformation and online abuse against women, and issues pertaining to protection of freedom of expression.

Q And when did you start to work at DHS?

A My first day at DHS was March 2, 2022.

Q And was that always as the Executive Director of the Disinformation Governance Board?

A Yes.

Q And how long did you work at DHS?

A My last day at DHS was May 18, 2022.

Q So March 2nd is when you started and May 18th is when your last day was?

A That's correct.

Q Do you currently have any role with the Department of Homeland Security?

A I do not.

Q In your current positions, do you interact with anyone at the DHS on a regular basis?

A I do not.

Q And what do you currently do for work?

A I am the vice president of the Center for Information Resilience, which is a U.K.-based nonprofit that counters disinformation, documents human-rights abuses, and combats online harms against women and minorities through open-source investigations.

Q And has your work always focused on disinformation?

A Prior to my Fulbright grant in Ukraine in 2016 and 2017, I worked at the National Democratic Institute, a nonprofit here in D.C., focusing on protections of democratic rights for people in Belarus and Russia.

Q Okay.

And when did you first learn of the plans to create the Disinformation Governance Board?

A I did not hear the phrase "Disinformation Governance Board" until mid-January of 2022, just before I was due to receive a job offer from DHS.

Q And prior to that, had you heard of an effort at DHS to work on disinformation?

A In my conversations pertaining to the job for which I was being considered, I learned that individuals within the Department of Homeland Security wanted to do more to combat disinformation that had a nexus with homeland security, but it didn't necessarily take on the shape of the board.

Q And who did you learn about the creation of the Disinformation Governance Board or the job offer?

A From Under Secretary Rob Silvers.

Q And how did he communicate these plans to you?

A As I said before, just before I received my official job offer, he gave me a call and told me that the Policy Advisor position for which I was being considered was going to shift to the Executive Director role, and he was just informing me of that.

Q And do you know, was it Under Secretary Silvers who came up with the idea of the board or came up with the idea of combating disinformation with a homeland security nexus?

A I don't have knowledge of that.

Q Okay.

And what did you understand was the impetus for the creation of the Disinformation Governance Board?

A I understood the idea to be based on coordination within the Department. As you know, DHS is an extremely large governmental department with many different, disparate entities spread out not only all over D.C. but all over the country. And some DHS entities, like FEMA, had been doing work to counter disinformation for over a decade, and the idea was to share best practices, to bring people together more frequently, and, you know, to share knowledge across the Department, which can often be quite siloed.

Q And when you learned that they were going to create a board and you morphed from a Senior Policy Advisor to the Executive Director of the board, did you believe that the board was necessary?

A From what I was told, yes, I believed that the board was necessary, again, for the same reasons that I've just laid out, that, you know, this is a large government department, and in my previous research of countries around the world, a single nerve center within government departments to help people share information is always a good thing and, in fact, a best practice in countering disinformation in nations that have, you know, been on the forefront of fighting this threat.

Mr. Gaetz. I've got a few followups just on --

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. When did you first learn of this opportunity?

The Witness. I was first -- well, Congressman, can you be more specific? Of the board or of --

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. When did you first learn of any opportunity to work for DHS?

The Witness. I got an email with a request for a phone call from Under Secretary Silvers in October of 2021.

Mr. Gaetz. And who sent you that email?

The Witness. Under Secretary Silvers.

Mr. Gaetz. Oh, it wasn't from a staff member; it was directly from the Under Secretary?

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you still have that email?

The Witness. Yes, I believe I do.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. If the committee asked you to produce it, is that something you'd be willing to produce?

The Witness. I'd have to confer my counsel about that.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. But you're still in possession?

The Witness. I would have to check. It did come to my personal email. All of these are also, you know, something that DHS would have on file, and I would suggest that the committee could look to DHS or White House PPO for anything related to my hiring.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you know Mr. Silvers prior to receiving this email?

The Witness. Mr. Silvers and I became acquainted when we were both volunteers on the Biden campaign's policy advisory groups.

Mr. Gaetz. And roughly when was that?

The Witness. I suppose it was the summer of the election year, 2020.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Can you describe the nature of that acquaintance?

The Witness. Sure.

So most Presidential campaigns, as you all know, have policy advisory arms. We were both volunteers within the policy advisory groups. I was on the foreign policy advisory group. I believe Mr. Silvers, although I am not certain, was on the homeland security advisory group. And there was a cross-campaign advisory group related to election interference that we both served on.

Mr. Gaetz. And how many people roughly served on that election interference advisory group?

The Witness. I can't say, Congressman. The policy advisory groups are quite large.

Mr. Gaetz. You --

The Witness. I really can't venture a guess.

Mr. Gaetz. In the dozens?

The Witness. I really can't venture a guess. I wouldn't want to go on the record with a guess.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure.

Were those meetings that occurred in person or digitally?

The Witness. That was at the height of the pandemic, so they were all digital.

Mr. Gaetz. So had you ever interacted with Mr. Silvers personally prior to receiving the email with the job opportunity?

The Witness. You know, one of the peculiarities of the pandemic is that we all made a lot of relationships where we never people face-to-face, and I had never met Rob face-to-face before actually starting at DHS.

Mr. Gaetz. And so, during your work together as part of the election interference advisory group, what kind of matters did you work with Mr. Silver on?

The Witness. So there were weekly updates to the campaign about foreign interference, primarily. And there was a sort of plan for how DHS and the Federal Government could potentially address disinformation. There were a lot of kind of ideas being circulated, and so I fed back on a couple of those memos, but they were all very notional.

Mr. Gaetz. And, again, I'm trying to get a sense of how you and Mr. Silvers might have worked together. You're on Zoom; lots of people on these Zoom calls. Were there any specific projects that the two of you were on a smaller group setting with or in any other type of partnership with?

The Witness. I don't believe so. I think our primary interaction was my feeding back on a memo that he had written.

Mr. Gaetz. And what was the subject of that memo?

The Witness. It was about how the Federal Government could respond to disinformation.

Mr. Gaetz. In the election space?

The Witness. Broadly. Mostly focused on foreign interference.

Mr. Gaetz. Was it mostly focused on any particular country?

The Witness. I can't recall, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Would you still have that memo if we asked you to search it?

The Witness. No.

Chairman Jordan. When Mr. Silvers contacted you in October of 2021, did he send you any material with that email?

The Witness. He did not.

Chairman Jordan. Are you familiar with a memorandum he issued to the Secretary in the month prior, in September of 2021?

The Witness. I am only familiar with that because of the whistleblower materials and the FOIA materials. I hadn't seen it prior to that.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And during your prior research in your work, had you worked with DHS officials?

A I had not.

Q So, when you were approached by Under Secretary Silvers about this position, that was the first time you were interacting with anyone from DHS?

A I don't -- I think I had interacted with DHS officials during the Trump administration. I served on a panel with Christopher Krebs once. I'm sure I had some kind of tertiary interactions, but I never did any substantive work with DHS prior to joining the Department.

Q And during the discussions about the job opportunity at DHS, did you have any interactions with the White House?

A I had interactions with White House PPO, yes.

Q And can you describe those interactions?

A As far as I am aware, these were, you know, basic vetting and hiring discussions that every political appointee goes through.

Q And so you were a political appointee in the Biden administration?

A That's correct.

Q And who at the Department of Homeland Security were you in contact with prior to your appointment? Was that just Under Secretary Silvers?

A There were a variety of individuals that I interviewed with, as well as HR officials and the DHS White House Liaison as well.

Q Do you remember who you interviewed with?

A So the substantive interviews on the DHS side were with Samantha Vinograd, Jen Daskal, Rob Silvers -- Under Secretary Silvers, and then finally with Secretary Mayorkas.

Q And was it your understanding that you'd be working closely with Ms. Vinograd, Daskal, and Under Secretary Silvers?

A Yes.

Chairman Jordan. If I could go back a second, [redacted]

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. When you were with the election interference policy group with the campaign, I understand, did you guys have any interactions with the Aspen Institute?

The Witness. No, not to my knowledge. I certainly did not.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Biggs. So I don't know if you're going to go into this today. I'm just curious about your interaction with Secretary Mayorkas. Could you describe the extent of that, please? When did it begin? And this is just in the, I guess, pre-startup phase, if we can.

The Witness. So this was in January 2022. It was the last interview before I received a job offer. And it was a short conversation, essentially a meet-and-greet, I would call it.

Mr. Biggs. It wasn't a Zoom; it was actually a face-to-face?

The Witness. No, it was also a -- it was on Microsoft Teams.

Mr. Biggs. Oh, okay.

The Witness. He asked about, you know, the pictures I had in my background.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

The Witness. And my dog was on the bed behind me.

Mr. Biggs. All right. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And, as Executive Director, what were your roles and responsibilities?

A I like to refer to my job as Executive Director as "lovingly herding government cats," getting people to meetings --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- understanding the work that people all around the DHS were doing, representing DHS at interagency meetings.

And, eventually, although this didn't end up coming to fruition, the idea was that I would also be a kind of point of contact for academic institutions and other nongovernmental institutions for DHS in matters related to countering disinformation.

Q As Executive Director, did you have any employees that reported directly to you?

A I did not. I was the single employee of the Disinformation Governance Board. I didn't have any direct reports. And anyone else working on the board was not a full-time staffer. They were detailed part-time and had other supervisors.

Mr. Gaetz. Excuse me. When you talked about being the point of contact for other entities, can you describe that with a little more detail for me?

The Witness. Sure. So, again, this relates to the kind of depth and breadth of DHS and its portfolio, which is quite large.

The idea is that, you know, if there were an issue of concern that came up with a homeland security nexus relating to disinformation, that rather than ping-ponging requests around the Department, that an entity could bring that request or, you know, issue of concern to me, and then I could deliver it to the right person so that we could kind of cut out some of the lag in response time or, you know, connect people with the right individuals right away.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you envisioned this role that did not come to fruition, were there specific NGOs or university entities that you thought you'd be dealing with more frequently?

The Witness. No. You know, I really wanted to make sure that the working-level individuals at the Department of Homeland Security kind of were exposed to a wide variety of viewpoints and research on disinformation.

Before Congress, in, you know, my previous testimony, I've always reminded everyone that disinformation is a nonpartisan issue. It affects everyone, no matter your political party. And so I consume and read a lot of different things from a lot of different institutions, and, you know, I would put that before everybody as Executive Director as well.

Mr. Gaetz. And what are some of those premier institutions that you draw from?

The Witness. I mean, it depends on the issue, Congressman. I think, you know, there is really a wide nexus of institutions that do work in this space, primarily academic institutions, also other governments as well. So I --

Mr. Issa. Well, can you name half a dozen?

The Witness. I could rattle off a bunch --

Mr. Issa. Please do.

The Witness. -- right now. Sure.

So, you know, I often refer my students to the U.K. Government's work on countering disinformation. There's a number of institutions here in D.C., from, you know, the Brookings Institution; CSIS; Heritage does work on disinformation; the Center for European Policy Analysis.

But, again, this is quite speculative, and I can't say what I would've distributed to the members of the board, because it never happened. So --

Mr. Gaetz. But was one of the reasons you were hired for this position the thought that you had relationships in this community of entities -- NGOs, universities, think tanks -- and that you could coordinate their interface with DHS?

The Witness. I can't speak to, you know, one of the reasons that I was hired. You'd have to ask DHS about that.

Mr. Gaetz. In any of the discussions you had around your employment, did you ever discuss the work you had done with some of these academic entities and think tanks?

The Witness. No, Congressman. We discussed my body of work, but that was it.

Mr. Gaetz. But did that body of work not include correspondence with these universities and NGOs that you discussed that you would be the point of contact for?

The Witness. It discussed my research.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I guess what I'm having a hard time understanding is, if one of your roles that you understood as the Executive Director was to provide this interface between DHS and those who would present, I believe you testified, issues of concern, the committee's trying to understand where those issues of concern might emanate from.

The Witness. Uh-huh. Well, Congressman, respectfully, I think that's speculative, considering that the board doesn't exist anymore.

So, I mean, again, if you're interested in learning about why I was considered for the role, I would suggest that you speak to DHS and White House PPO.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever discuss Clemson University and the work they do on disinformation?

The Witness. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Great.

Thank you, [redacted]

Mr. Biggs. Can I interrupt? Because since we're talking a little bit about the interviewing process, I'm going to tie back just a sec to something that Representative Jordan, Mr. Chairman, referenced as well, and that's that September 13, 2021, memo.

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Biggs. And you didn't see it, is my understanding from your testimony, until it became subject to a FOIA request or something like that?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

But in the course of the interviews, did any of them ever mention -- you know, I guess you talked to Mr. Silvers and Ms. Vinograd and -- I can't remember; you mentioned, I think, a third person besides the Secretary. Did any of them mention any of the content of what became known to you as the September 13, 2021, memo?

The Witness. No, Congressman.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And, Ms. Jankowicz, you've briefly stated that there were others who worked on the board but they were detailed. Who were those individuals?

A There were three lawyers who were working part-time detailed, two from OGC, the Office of the General Counsel, and one from CISA. I have forgotten the third person's name, because I hadn't worked with him very much. But Andrew Fausett was detailed from OGC, and Sebastian Fischer was detailed from the counsel's office at CISA. And, again, it was part-time for them.

And then there was a Policy detailee, Elizabeth Kozey, who was working with us as well.

Q And they just worked with you part-time, you said?

A That's correct.

Q And what was Ms. Vinograd's role with the board?

A So Ms. Vinograd -- Acting Assistant Secretary Vinograd was my direct supervisor. She signed off on my timesheets and such. And she -- and I always get this acronym wrong, so forgive me. I believe her title is Acting Assistant Secretary for the CTTPLE, Center for Targeted Terrorism Prevention and Law Enforcement, entity within DHS Policy.

Q And how often did you interact with Acting Assistant Secretary Vinograd?

A I mean, pretty much daily. Just, she was a very involved manager.

Q And very involved in the work of the board?

A I would say she was more involved in -- this was my first government service, and so she was helping me navigate the quite impenetrable DHS bureaucracy more than anything.

Q And what was Ms. Daskal's role with the board?

A So Jen Daskal was the co-chair of the board.

Q Okay. And so how often did she work on the board? Was it part-time? Full-time?

A Jen?

Q Uh-huh.

A Well, as Deputy General Counsel of the entire Department, she had quite a busy schedule, so I can't really venture a guess about how much of her time was spent on the board, but it was less frequent than most of her other responsibilities.

Q And if you had a meeting related to the board, would Ms. Daskal attend?

A If she was available, yes.

Q And Under Secretary Silvers, what was his role with the board?

A He was also a co-chair of the board.

Q Okay. And how often did he work on board-related matters?

A Again, he had quite a large portfolio, so, as much as possible, we only took issues to him when they were decisional.

Q And with Under Secretary Silvers, if you had meetings that involved the board or were related to the board's work, did Mr. Silvers attend?

A Usually not. He was -- he and Jen were meant to be kind of the -- as I said, they were the co-chairs. So, if we had a board meeting -- which we never did -- the heads of the components from all DHS entities and Rob and Jen would be there. So they were at a higher level. I wouldn't say they were at a working level.

Q And who was the ultimate decisionmaker for the board's actions?

A Well, the board never took any actions, so there was no ultimate decisionmaker. I think if we had had a board meeting, there would've been votes --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and the board would've taken decisions based on those votes. So there was no kind of ultimate decisionmaker.

Q What did you understand the hierarchy of the board -- what would it be?

A How the board would make decisions, do you mean?

Q Correct.

A So, as is laid out in the charter, there are meant to be four quarterly meetings per year that component heads or their designees would attend. And the list of members of the board is in that charter as well. Jen and Rob were the co-chairs.

And issues would be presented before the board. The board would take a vote and make a recommendation. And components could implement that recommendation or not implement it as they saw fit.

Q And what was your role going to be with the board? Would you be a decisionmaker or no?

A I was a nonvoting member. So, again, we never had a meeting, but what I understood was that I would attend the meetings, potentially present issues that we had teed up, and make recommendations for potential decisions.

Q Okay.

I know we've spoken about this September 13, 2021, memorandum from Under Secretary Silvers, and you said you became aware of it following the FOIA request. Is that correct?

A That's true, yeah.

Q I'd like to offer the September 13, 2021, memo as exhibit No. 2.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you had time to review, Ms. Jankowicz?

A Yes.

Q So, on page 4 of the memo, the paragraph directly above Option 3 said that "components would also be responsible for partner engagement in their respective mission spaces, including with the interagency, SLTT authorities, private sector entities, tech platforms, and the general public."

And in some previous questioning with Mr. Gaetz, you discussed some of the private-sector entities and your partner engagement.

Did you have any interactions with any private-sector entities between March 2nd and May 18th?

A Yes.

Q Can you list some of those interactions for us?

A To my knowledge, we had one meeting with the Global Internet Forum to Counter Terrorism.

We had planned meetings or attempted to secure meetings with Twitter -- one meeting with Twitter, which did not take place.

Facebook approached us for a meeting. That meeting never took place.

And I had sent a few inquiry emails to academic institutions to try to convene a roundtable about irregular migration and disinformation surrounding migration.

Q And what were those academic institutions that you reached out to?

A I can't recall.

Q Would they all have been in the space of irregular migration?

A Yes. They were individuals that studied migration.

Q And you said the Global Internet Forum, there was a meeting that you had, correct?

A Yes.

Q And do you remember when about that meeting took place?

A I believe that was in March 2022. It was something that had been arranged prior to my joining the Department.

Q Was it your understanding that the Global Internet Forum reached out to DHS, or did DHS reach out to --

A I don't know.

Q Okay. And who attended the meeting from DHS?

A That would've been Under Secretary Silvers, Jen Daskal, and Sam Vinograd, and myself.

Q And were there any recommendations that came out of the meeting or do-outs that you had to do following the meeting?

A No.

Q And you said that you had secured a meeting with Twitter but it never occurred, correct?

A That's incorrect. We did not secure --

Q Okay.

A -- a meeting with Twitter. We tried to secure a meeting with Twitter, and that did not end up happening.

Q And did DHS reach out to Twitter, or did Twitter reach out to you?

A DHS reached out to Twitter during -- because Under Secretary Silvers was traveling to the Bay Area.

Chairman Jordan. Who did the outreach?

So you get hired in March. You leave in May. You said you reached out to Twitter. Did you do that? And when did you do that?

The Witness. I can't remember, Congressman, if I did the initial outreach and was copied on the email or if -- or, sorry, if I did the initial outreach and copied a colleague on the email or if it was vice versa. That would've been in mid- to late April of 2022.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

The Witness. And, again, coincided with Under Secretary Silvers' trip to the Bay Area.

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

BY [redacted]

Q And what was to be the focus of that meeting?

A It was a meet-and-greet.

Q Uh-huh.

And you said that Facebook approached DHS, correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you remember when about that was?

A I want to say it was around the same time period, mid- to late April 2022, but I might be mistaken about that.

Q And that meeting never occurred, correct?

A Correct.

Q And on page 2 of the memorandum --

Mr. Gaetz. Before we go there --

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. -- I have some followup questions on the irregular migration meeting.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. What was the purpose of that meeting?

The Witness. So one of the things, Congressman, as I testified before, that I really wanted to do as Executive Director was bring in subject-matter experts who had really a depth and breadth of knowledge that working-level staffers can't do because of all that's on their plate and kind of allow them to show us what they saw as potential problems in their subject-matter areas.

So, in this case, given the, you know, amount of irregular migration that DHS was seeing and the fact that a lot of it was driven by disinformation, saying that you could get citizenship upon crossing the border, or that, you know, there were human smugglers who were promising wild things to people who were making that journey, we wanted to understand it better. And that's not an issue area that I had experience in. That's not what my research on disinformation has focused on. And so, looking at individuals who have written about disinformation related to irregular migration, the idea was to convene a roundtable and be informed by their research.

Mr. Gaetz. And who are those experts?

The Witness. I can't remember who I reached out to at this point, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know roughly how many?

The Witness. I think it was about five or six.

Mr. Gaetz. Were they people or entities?

The Witness. They were individuals who had published academic research about disinformation relating to migration.

Mr. Gaetz. And your concern was that migrants would be induced by disinformation?

The Witness. Certainly. I think that's a fact, Congressman, that migrants are being lied to about what is available when they come to the United States and how easy the journey will be. And that was of great concern to the Department.

Mr. Gaetz. Were there other features of disinformation that concerned you to work to have that discussion?

The Witness. Related to -- I don't understand your question.

Mr. Gaetz. What's of some interest to me is that, upon taking this role, one of the very first things you do is seek to convene a discussion around irregular migration --

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. -- not -- you could've chosen any topic in the world. You chose this topic.

So I guess I'm trying to understand, why was this the first topic you chose for such a convention of minds?

The Witness. Right. Understood, Congressman. The answer is simple: Because it was of interest to the board co-chairs, Jen Daskal and Rob Silvers in particular.

Mr. Gaetz. Was this the only issue that they expressed this level of interest in?

The Witness. There were three. And I'm having a little bit of a lapse of memory. So the three pillars were irregular migration, foreign election interference, and the third is slipping my mind. And I'm sorry, I can't remember what the third one is right now. You can blame it on my 10-month-old who keeps waking up at 5:00 a.m.

Mr. Gaetz. No problem.

Was there a particular reason you prioritized this pillar?

The Witness. It was of great concern to the Department at the time. And, frankly, for me, it was an issue that I think cuts across the political noise. It's an issue that matters to all Americans. And I thought it would be, to some degree, low-hanging fruit, that we could convene, you know, nonpartisan researchers about these issues and show kind of proof of concept of the board.

Mr. Gaetz. So you prioritized this pillar, it's safe to say?

The Witness. It was at the direction of Under Secretary Silvers and the three individuals who were kind of my bosses, so to speak.

Mr. Gaetz. And if you consulted with your notes or even your own memory, is developing all three of those pillars and giving the committee a response to what they were, is that something you would do?

The Witness. Can you be more specific, Congressman?

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. I'm trying to understand the direction you received from these co-chairs of the board, and what they were telling you about these pillars seems pretty foundational. You took action on the irregular migration pillar. I think we're going to talk later today about the foreign election interference pillar. And I just wanted to understand what the third one was.

And so I understand you're coming off of low sleep with a 10-month-old, and I don't expect you to remember every single thing. But if it was something you were able to consult your notes on and let the committee know, that would alleviate the need to have another in-person --

The Witness. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. -- get-together.

The Witness. Understood. Congressman, I actually don't have my notebook anymore. I had to give it back to the Department because of some pending legal matters when I left the Department. So they requisitioned everything of mine what I left. So I can't consult those notes anymore.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Thank you very much.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. Can I -- or you --

Chairman Jordan. Go ahead.

Mr. Biggs. Talking about this partner engagement, I noticed from the memo -- well, you didn't even see it before you -- well, until probably after you left, but it talks extensively about working with private entities, partner engagement, et cetera.

I wanted to know what, in your mind -- it's obvious to me, from your testimony, that you contemplated that, because that's your background; you were going to work with private entities. How extensive was that going to be? What, in your mind, going into the job, did you think this was going to look like, with your engagement with private partners?

The Witness. Congressman, actually, before I went into the job, my understanding was that the majority of my work was going to be intra-DHS coordination. And, certainly, even after I had been in the job for a few weeks, that was the majority of my work.

So I wouldn't even say that that was the priority on my plate. It was one thing that we were attempting to do, but it wasn't the main priority for me as Executive Director of the board.

Mr. Biggs. So were you going to be working, though -- I mean, your first meeting was with irregular migration, and he had a lot of, sounds like, a lot of private entities, NGOs, et cetera, coming in.

I would assume that, dealing with these other pillars, that you were going to have extensive, again, working -- bringing them in and trying to interface with DHS personnel?

The Witness. Well, so, Congressman, I would kind of -- respectfully, I don't agree with the premise there. So it wasn't extensive. The meeting never went forward. And I think I sent out, again, a couple of informational queries about whether they would be interested in participating in such a roundtable. But we never set a date. Nothing really went forward.

So it's hard for me to speculate about what the activities of the board would've looked like, because it didn't end up going forward. To some degree, you know, this --

Mr. Biggs. But --

The Witness. Go ahead.

Mr. Biggs. Yeah, I don't want to talk over you, but, I mean, whether it's speculative or not, I'm trying to get to your frame of mind when you were going in --

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. -- and how it intersected with the expectations according to this memo.

And so I wanted to know primarily what you thought your relationship was going to be, since you're coming in from -- and you testified to a rather extensive network of sources and colleagues that you knew in the world that did this type of thing.

Did you not anticipate working with the private sector, bringing them in, interfacing with DHS so they would get a better understanding, for instance, like, in the irregular migration disinformation space?

The Witness. Sure.

I mean, as I said, Congressman, the majority of the work that I expected to do was intra-DHS coordination. And it took up the majority of my time. As anybody -- as I'm sure you all know -- you have a lot of experience with government -- it's a lot of red tape and a lot of emails and a lot of, you know, making sure that you get face time with email people so you can build up those equities. And that was all intra-DHS stuff.

The external stuff, as I saw it, was icing on the cake.

And I would also just note that this was not a document I was working from.

Mr. Biggs. Sure.

The Witness. I was working from the charter. And the charter clearly lays out that the majority of the work that the board was to do was intra-DHS coordination.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

So I just want to sum up what I'm hearing, and you tell me if I'm all right.

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Biggs. You viewed any exterior -- anything exterior-facing to be just something that was going to be something that would be extra benefit; it was not the primary focus of your job. Is that fair to say?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

Chairman Jordan. The board is recommended on this September 13, 2021, memorandum. The decision to form it happens several months later, February 24, 2022. You get hired the following week, March 2nd. But it's not announced until April 27th, almost a month and a half later.

Is there a reason why that was the case?

The Witness. Yes, Congressman.

I worked for the entire 10 weeks I was in -- well, I suppose 8 weeks before the announcement. I was there trying to get the board announced, trying to get it announced transparently, trying to come up here and brief all of you, trying to get a fact sheet out.

And, unfortunately, my recommendations for how to announce and roll out the board were not taken under consideration. And that's the cause of the delay.

Chairman Jordan. And, again, what were your recommendations for how it should've been rolled out?

The Witness. A fulsome rollout plan that would've encompassed pre-briefs with decisionmakers on Capitol Hill on both sides of the aisle, meet-and-greets across the interagency, releasing a transparent fact sheet about the work that we were meant to do, and potentially doing calls with industry, with think tanks, with academics, with folks around Washington who work on these issues to make them aware of the efforts.

Chairman Jordan. And who made the decision not to follow that plan?

The Witness. Sorry?

Chairman Jordan. Who made the decision not to follow the plan you just articulated?

The Witness. I don't know for sure that it was any one person. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. It gets announced on the 27th. Did your outreach to Twitter happen prior to the 27th or after the 27th? You told me earlier it was in April.

The Witness. I believe it was prior to the 27th, Congressman.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Can I go to the memorandum for a second?

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. And I know you now have some familiarity with it.

I want to look at the first -- the very first sentence says, "The spread of disinformation presents a homeland security risk."

The Witness. Sure.

Chairman Jordan. Can you define "disinformation" for me?

The Witness. Well, it's interesting that you bring that up, Congressman, because there's kind of a, I would say -- not necessarily a difference of opinion within DHS of what constitutes disinformation, but CISA has one definition, and one of the things that occurred to me while I was at DHS is that different entities were dealing with different definitions. So that was one of the things that I had hoped to work on.

But, as you can see, the CISA definition is -- well, they haven't footnoted it here, but -- false information that is intentionally or inadvertently injected into the information environment --

Chairman Jordan. But I want to know your definition.

The Witness. My definition?

Chairman Jordan. Yeah. I know what they did. It's the only footnote in the five-page memorandum, and it says that disinformation is anything that they deem false.

The Witness. Okay. That's fair. Yeah. Well -- so --

Chairman Jordan. But we have these -- we have mis-, dis-, mal-. It seems to me, if disinformation is false information, why not just call it -- any false information is what we're concerned with? But that's not what you do -- that's not what they did.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. So tell me how you define it.

The Witness. So the definition that I use in my research -- which, again, is not necessarily a definition that I would've used at DHS, because I wasn't acting in my personal capacity --

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

The Witness. -- is, disinformation is false or misleading information spread with malign intent.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And then --

The Witness. And that is an agreed-upon academic definition that many researchers use.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Then what is misinformation?

The Witness. Misinformation is information that is false or misleading that is not spread with malign intent.

So they might be your crazy aunt or uncle at the Thanksgiving dinner table who likes to traffic in conspiracy theories. That's the example that I usually give. They don't mean any harm.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

And then what is mal-?

The Witness. Malinformation is information that might be true that is injected into an information environment with ulterior motives.

So a good example is when there are hack-and-leak operations that are created by or perpetrated by a foreign government and that information is released into the information environment with ulterior motives.

Actually, a great example happening right now, with the release of the hacked material from DOD around Ukraine. There is, you know, a question if some of that has been altered. And that I would call malinformation.

Chairman Jordan. So the definition here in the footnote doesn't seem to be accurate, according to what you just described. Is that fair?

The Witness. Well, again, Congressman, I think there's room for disagreement. I did not work off of this memo.

Chairman Jordan. Well, I'm just looking at the -- I'm just looking at the footnote. "The term 'misinformation' will be used to reference mis-, dis-, or malinformation that refer to false information."

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. So it's saying they're all false, and you just told me malinformation is actually true information.

The Witness. I would disagree with the way that this footnote has been phrased, yes.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Issa. So would it be fair to say that DHS wasn't using what you earlier described as agreed on within the research community as definitions?

The Witness. I think that would be fair to say. I think one of the reasons to socialize ideas like this and have roundtables is to kind of hear that variety of views. And at least in this particular instance -- and I can't speak to every use of the term that DHS is using, but I think this is overbroad.

Mr. Issa. During your tenure, did you make efforts to standardize these definitions or educate people in a way that you did here with us today?

The Witness. Yeah, Congressman. One of the things that I really wanted to do was convene a working-level kind of away day or, like, little -- it wouldn't have been away; it would've been at DHS HQ -- but a little meeting with working-level staff to kind of talk through what they viewed as the definition and come to a shared understanding of those issues.

Mr. Issa. Chairman, if it's okay to continue for a second?

Your background in education and research is basically on the Eastern European countries in which Russia had used disinformation --

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Issa. -- misinformation, malware, and actual cyber attacks to affect elections.

Is that correct?

The Witness. Primarily, yeah.

Mr. Issa. And so, when you came to DHS, did you feel that you were hired to a great extent because of that expertise?

The Witness. I can't really speak to that, Congressman. I --

Mr. Issa. Did you expect to use that background?

The Witness. Well, certainly, given the timing -- I started just a few days after the full-scale invasion of Ukraine -- I thought it was going to be a pretty significant issue during my tenure, yeah.

Mr. Issa. And was it?

The Witness. I can't speak to whether it might've been. During the 10 weeks that I was there, as I testified, my primary objective was to get the board announced, so I was dealing with a lot of bureaucracy.

Mr. Issa. During those first 10 weeks, actual Ukrainian-related, Russian-generated, or other parties on their behalf, disinformation, misinformation, malware -- how much of it did you see? And could you give us some examples of what you saw and reported or worked on either in your individual capacity or as sort of the herder of cats?

The Witness. My cat will be proud, sitting at home today.

So there was an intra-agency -- or, sorry, an interagency Ukraine response group -- it might've been called something else; I am forgetting the exact terminology that we gave it -- that was headquartered at DHS within CISA. And I was a member of that working group that held weekly kind of calls for across the interagency to kind of coordinate the administration's response to the Ukraine crisis and the disinformation that we were seeing.

So I attended those calls and sometimes piped up as a subject-matter expert, but I wasn't spearheading any initiatives -- yeah. That was kind of the only Ukraine-related work that I did during my tenure.

Mr. Issa. And just as you published your book, you did an extensive interview with direct-quote questions and answers, and you opined significantly on the previous administration, the Trump administration, praising Putin, things that were not helpful. Do you remember that?

The Witness. Can you be more specific about the outlet at least? I do a lot of interviews, Congressman. I'm sure you do too.

Mr. Issa. This one was an alumni bulletin from B-r-y-n, M-a-w-r.

The Witness. Oh, Bryn Mawr College.

Mr. Issa. They put it on two different lines for some reason.

The Witness. I don't recall the specifics of that interview, but -- and I'm also not sure how it's pertinent to the subject at hand related to the DGB's activities.

Mr. Issa. Well, you know, you've made a number of statements, and I just want to sort of -- because you characterized a number of statements, you've said things about "premier" and "nonpartisan." For example, the NDI, which you were with, your characterized it as working, and you named Belarus, a couple of Eastern European countries.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Issa. Isn't it true the NDI is a global operation, operations in, I don't know, probably 70 countries, 50 countries, something like that?

The Witness. I think NDI, yeah, has field offices around the world.

Mr. Issa. And isn't it a partisan Democrat organization by definition?

The Witness. No, Congressman. And I think NDI would definitely respond to that in a very prickly way.

Mr. Issa. Well, isn't it an organization that hires executive directors who have been Democrats, as does the Republican equivalent? Because there are two of those organizations, both nonprofit, both doing the same work, but a partisan divide, in that, even though they work together around the world, they are in fact -- their boards and so on are partisan in nature.

The Witness. Congressman, again, I'm not sure about the pertinence of NDI's work to the Disinformation Governance Board.

Mr. Issa. No, no. I asked you a question of, did you know that or --

The Witness. Of course I -- I know that the executive directors are partisans, but the individual staff are not, and the way that the work is carried out is not --

Mr. Issa. No, no. I'm just asking because you characterized -- I didn't characterize it. I was just listening. You said, you know, "nonpartisan organization," et cetera.

You know, I just want to understand -- you've used the word "nonpartisan" and "premier" and, you know, the Wilson Institute, obviously which is by definition a government entity for a former President. And, you know, I accept -- I heard that; I understand it. But, you know, you worked on the campaign of President Biden. That you would characterize, I assume, as a partisan operation?

The Witness. Certainly.

Mr. Issa. Okay. And your appointment was by people who had been chosen by the President who were partisans by definition?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Issa. Okay. So you did receive a partisan appointment from people who were partisan, and you have worked in a partisan capacity.

I only ask that because, in your research or background, you've dealt with a lot of facts on the operations of Russia and disinformation, but, at least in some of the online things, including right from your Wikipedia, where that alumni interview is a footnote, you appear to have very strong feelings about President Trump being not helpful, that administration being involved in not dealing with disinformation, by whatever definition. And you came into this administration more than a year into it.

I just wanted your impression of, you know, if you feel that that's just a nonpartisan, objective feeling, that, based on your expertise, Trump is bad and Biden was better?

The Witness. Again, Congressman, I don't think that there is pertinency here related to the activities of the Disinformation Governance Board --

Mr. Issa. We're trying to understand your conduct at the board. We're not just researching some board that barely launched. We're looking at a board that appointed you as a partisan, by a partisan, and began its process -- you know, for example, when you were bringing people together on irregular migration, "irregular migration" is not a term that was broadly used in the previous administration. Some would say it would be highly partisan information.

And when we asked you who you invited, you couldn't name one person, even though you said you researched for the scholars that were the best who had written on it. Can you remember even one of those names now?

The Witness. Congressman, the past year of my life has been a really difficult one. I gave birth a few weeks after I left government, and over the past year I have been subject to threats, stalking, and a number of other really stressful and difficult situations.

So, in addition to the sleep deprivation that I faced, in addition to the emotional and security threats that I have faced over the past year, a lot of these details are slipping my mind, and I apologize for that.

I would just like to put on the record that the board never had any operational authority. It did not have the intention to arbitrate, oversee, restrict any thoughts. Everything that you've heard about the board related to it being a, quote/unquote, "Ministry of Truth," is a lie.

And, Congressman, I think if you'll look at my scholarship at the Wilson Center, through which I've, by the way, briefed Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle -- I was a witness at the request of Senator Grassley in 2018, so, clearly, some Republicans thought I was getting something right -- my scholarship has been about arming people with truthful information, not taking away their right to free speech. And if that had been part of my job, I never would've taken the job, and I would've spoken out against that.

So I assure you, Congressman, that, whatever my political opinions might be, as I am entitled to as an American, me expressing my First Amendment rights, they would not have come into question during my work at the Department of Homeland Security.

[11:02 a.m.]

Chairman Jordan. When you were hired on March 2, 2022, was there any type of announcement around your hiring?

The Witness. I don't believe so, Congressman. DHS has a lot of internal communications issues. It took a week or so before there was an announcement to the kind of Policy staff.

BY [redacted]

Q Going back to the memo, the Silvers memo, on page 2, the second bullet, it states, "DHS should not attempt to be an all-purpose arbiter of truth in the public arena. It should instead focus its efforts on disinformation impacting DHS core missions."

A Uh-huh.

Q During your tenure at DHS between March and May, what did you understand DHS's core missions to include?

A I understood them to include any issues related to the portfolio of DHS components. So to list them. FEMA, CBP, CISA, et cetera, et cetera -- anything relating to those core components.

Q And during the lead-up to this rollout that you were working on during the weeks that you were at DHS, how were you focusing the efforts of the DGB on the core missions of DHS?

A At that time, I was attempting to understand how the Department was working, so was doing meetings with counterparts across the agency to understand the work that they were doing, if any, related to countering disinformation.

Q Uh-huh.

We have about 4 minutes left, if any members have questions.

Mr. Gaetz. We may have to return to the subject in our next hour, but I wanted to better understand what you understood the goals to be of the second pillar, the election integrity pillar.

The Witness. Well, Congressman, as I think you'll be aware, the Cyber and Infrastructure Security Agency, CISA, has quite a robust portfolio already, and, as I saw it, I didn't want to touch very much of what they were doing. I think they were doing a good job, work that was started under the Trump administration, and I just wanted to support however I could. And, in that case, it might be sharing best practices between CISA and other entities or --

Mr. Gaetz. Like, what type of other entities?

The Witness. FEMA, for instance. So you might not know this, but FEMA actually was the agency within DHS that started the rumor control program around Hurricane Sandy. So FEMA directors understood that Americans were being lied to about disaster relief or emergency protections and things like that, and so they started piloting this program to get out good, truthful information. That's where CISA got that idea.

So kind of creating those linkages was something that I wanted to do and to make sure that there was information-sharing and kind of resource-sharing across the Department.

Mr. Gaetz. And how would that apply in the enterprise of election integrity?

The Witness. It's hard to speculate, because, as you know, every election is quite different, but -- yeah, I can't really speculate based on --

Mr. Gaetz. Who told you about the second pillar?

The Witness. Again, the three pillars were laid out by Silvers et al.

Mr. Gaetz. Great.

I'm sure we'll have some more questions about that in our next hour, but I think our time has elapsed.

[redacted] We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It is 11:32 in the morning.

Thank you again --

The Witness. Uh-huh.

[redacted] -- for joining us today.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q We talked through earlier how the board was structured, the hierarchy. I want to look a little more closely at how the board intended to support DHS components and how it was structured to do that.

A Sure.

Q So I want to turn back to that September 20, 2021, memo, which I think is exhibit 2. And on page 3 through 5, there's a section that's entitled "Models to Structure DHS Counter-Disinformation Efforts," and it provides different options for how to structure these efforts.

And I know you didn't participate in the drafting of this memo, but you've had the chance to review it, and have you had a chance to review these models?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. So Option 1 describes the, quote, "fully federated model." What's your understanding of that model?

A That is how DHS operated prior to the creation of the board and, I suppose, how it operates today, with each of the components executing their missions fully independently.

Q Okay. And so the components would have operational authority over any disinformation-related work and it would just kind of be decentralized?

A Yeah. The decentralization is, I think, the key component there, that there would be no central coordinating body at all.

Q Okay.

And then Option 2 is the governance board model, right?

A Uh-huh.

Q So I want to read just the first couple sentences of that section.

It says, "Execution of DHS counter-disinformation operations would be federated to components, but subject to overarching Department-wide governance requirements to ensure that a common set of issue-agnostic safeguards and oversight tools are employed. PLCY could convene a governance board that would promulgate policy and legal requirements setting forth baseline requirements that all components must meet in their counter-disinformation work, to include protections ensuring compliance with applicable civil rights and civil liberties, privacy, and legal requirements, such as First Amendment and Privacy Act requirements."

A Uh-huh.

Q So can you explain broadly how this model was intended to work?

A Yeah. So the idea, as I understood it -- and, again, I was working from documents, not this one, from later documents -- was that one of the main issues at hand for the board would be to ensure that Americans' civil rights, civil liberties, and privacy were always being respected as a matter of first course during all of the board's work.

That's not to say that that's not happening, but we wanted to put guardrails on so that, for future administrations, for anybody down the road, it was clear, in black and white, about what was potentially -- what was allowed with regard to this stuff.

Because I think, you know, people have concerns, right, about how the government might be operating in this area. And they're right to have those concerns. I understand those concerns. And we wanted to put those concerns to rest.

Q And so those guardrails would actually potentially limit the components, correct?

A That's correct, yes.

Q Okay.

And their use of the word "governance," I think, is maybe mysterious to people and maybe a little misleading. What's your understanding of what governance means?

A Right. Governance is just making sure that people are following rules within DHS. The idea of the board was not to govern the internet. It was to govern components and their decisionmaking around countering disinformation.

Q Okay.

And on the next paragraph of that, it says, "The board's role would not be prescriptive, instead providing components with guidelines and minimum safeguards applicable across disinformation missions."

And it says, "The board could also develop and share with components best practices."

A Uh-huh.

Q What's your understanding of what that says? And, particularly, what does "not be prescriptive" mean?

A Right. So we wouldn't be saying to CISA, here's what you're going to do related to disinformation in the upcoming election. We would be saying things like, you know, best practices around countering disinformation have to do with media literacy, and here's how you build media literacy in a population.

Again, these are speculative, and I wouldn't say that that's necessarily the road that we would've gone down, because the board didn't go forward. But that's the understanding that I had, as an example.

Q Uh-huh.

And you've used the word "best practices" a couple times. Again, for kind of the layman who's not in the academic world, what does "best practices" mean?

A So, to me, that is the tried and true, tested tactics that other governments or institutions have used with success to counter disinformation.

So I would look -- in my research, I have looked to countries in Central and Eastern Europe that are a little bit ahead of us in recognizing the threat of disinformation. They've been dealing with it for many decades. Some countries in the Nordic space have done this as well. As I mentioned before, the U.K. So, like, looking to places that have tried this out.

Looking at organizations that have tried this out as well. Because there are some in kind of the nongovernmental or kind of tertiary space that have done some work in this area that has sometimes failed, right, and we want to make sure that we didn't repeat those mistakes.

Q So, just to put this kind of into my words, the idea behind the best practices would be to gather up examples of how other entities or other nations have successfully countered disinformation and offer those to components who are already doing this work to help them be more effective --

A Yeah.

Q -- or more efficient?

A Precisely.

Q And, again, under at least the board as suggested through this September memo, which, again, you weren't involved with, that would be -- it would not be prescriptive. It would be suggestions, but not, like, mandatory guidelines?

A Correct. The board had no operational authority.

Q Okay.

So the third paragraph -- and I think this is perhaps confusing to people, so -- says that when a new disinformation threat emerges, the board could determine who within the Department is best positioned to address the threat, make recommendations to the Secretary as to how the new threat should be addressed, and support whichever operational component is taking on the mission in standing up with appropriate governance.

A Uh-huh.

Q Could you explain what that means or what your understanding was of that section?

A Right. So, again, DHS -- big, big agency. Sometimes things might not be as clear-cut as we would like them. So there could be -- again, spit-balling -- a disaster that also affects critical infrastructure, and, in that case, we probably would've tapped FEMA and CISA to respond, right? But just understanding whose portfolio this is within and who needs to then stand up.

Sometimes, as happens with all large Federal agencies, there could be duplication of effort or somebody thinks somebody's doing something but they're actually not and then nothing happens. And the idea here was to make sure that we would be able to respond quickly and with the appropriate resources.

And responding, I should add, doesn't necessarily mean, you know, anything nefarious. It often would just mean putting out good, transparent information from an official source so that people knew where to look.

Q Okay.

And then, moving on in that memo, there's a third option listed, right? I think it's called a Coordinator for Countering Disinformation.

A Uh-huh.

Q And what's your understanding of what that would have entailed?

A Yeah. This is not something I discussed, really, with anybody at DHS, so my knowledge is just what the words on the paper are.

Q Okay. And I think it says that that would have a more centralized role than even the Disinformation Governance Board, right?

A Yes.

Q So the Disinformation Governance Board model was actually, like, the middle of the three options?

A Yeah, as presented here in --

Q Right.

A -- you know, traditional decision-memo style.

Q Right. Exactly. And, again, you didn't have any role, so I --

A Correct.

Q -- think the better person to opine on that would probably be somebody who had a role in that.

A Uh-huh. Uh-huh.

Q Okay.

So we've gone through the memo, which is from September, before I think you were even in conversations about the Department.

A Right.

Q So I want to actually look at the charter establishing the board. Because you're familiar with that, right?

A Yes. That is the document that really guided my work.

Q Okay. So we're going to introduce this as exhibit No. 3.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And do you want a minute to look through it again?

A Sure.

Q Okay. So we've talked about operational responses a little bit, and that's mentioned in the first paragraph. It says, "Whereas Department Components will lead on operational responses to MDM in their relevant mission spaces."

A Uh-huh.

Q Can you explain, again, kind of break it down, what is an operational response?

A Sure. So the operational responses are actually doing things.

Policy -- as with every government department, a policy office makes recommendations, sets guidelines, but it's actually the operational components -- in DHS-speak, the CISAs, the CBPs, the FEMAs -- that are doing stuff.

They are communicating with the public. They are, you know, deciding when it's time to take action, whether that is within the counter-disinfo space or otherwise. They are the ones who have decisionmaking authority, and they're the ones who are actually doing the work.

Q Okay.

And Department components, you said, are FEMA and -- and Policy is -- is Policy considered a component of DHS, or is it --

A Technically, I believe it is, but, again, it doesn't have operational authority.

Q And the components that were engaged in operational responses, as you put it, they've been doing that for a long time?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. So this wasn't changing anything in that structure?

A That is correct.

Q Okay.

And it says that the board will ensure that DHS efforts are coordinated, deconflicted, and harmonized.

A Uh-huh.

Q What's the -- can you explain what that means and also what the purpose of that would be?

A Sure.

So, as I mentioned before, a lot of different entities within DHS that don't always talk to one another. I think, you know, on some calls we had folks from FEMA who had never met their counterparts in CISA, for instance.

Q Uh-huh.

A And I keep using those because they are some of the kind of more robust components in the counter-disinformation space. And there is great value in bringing those people together to say, here's what we're working on, here's how we do it, here's how we can help one another. And so that's the coordination.

Deconfliction: We don't want to, you know, have the government doing things that are at cross-purpose. We don't want to have the government, let alone, you know, two components of the same agency, talking to externals and saying different things or, you know, saying the same thing in two different ways, that sort of thing.

And harmonizing: Making sure that we're all marching to the beat of the same drummer, to kind of mix my metaphors a bit.

Q Uh-huh.

And then, on the following page of the charter, so it's -- I don't think it's actually numbered, but it's Section 4 --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- is what we're going to look at. It says, "Board Responsibilities."

A Sure.

Q And I want to go through these one by one and clear up any kind of confusion that might be out there about what the actual responsibilities of the board might be.

A Great.

Q So it says, "The initial responsibilities will include a review of existing MDM governance policies and practices across the board."

And we talked through your understanding of the term "governance" and "governance policies."

To your eye, does this contemplate just solely an internal-facing review?

A Absolutely.

Q And the value of that review would be to examine what all the components were already doing?

A Correct.

Q And figure out exactly all the moving pieces?

A Yes, that's right.

Q Okay.

The second one says, "Based in part on the findings from initial review, the board will be responsible for developing MDM-related guidance, best practices, and recommendations."

A Uh-huh.

Q And we talked through this in respect to the September 13th memo just a couple minutes ago. But, again, that would be kind of the guardrails that you were describing for the components?

A Yes.

Q And that was to make sure that they were adhering to First Amendment protections, for example?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

And then it says, "The Board will coordinate, deconflict, and harmonize Departmental efforts to address MDM, including by receiving regular and routine updates from components and harmonizing and deconflicting activities."

So the value of this was, again, to put everything under one umbrella?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And that was primarily internal-facing, but it does contemplate some external points of communication.

A Uh-huh.

Q And was that already ongoing? Were there already external stakeholders reaching out to DHS?

A Yes, to my knowledge, there were.

Q And was there sometimes confusion about how that worked?

A Yeah. I think, from what I was told, there was sometimes confusion from external partners about who they should go to if they had a question related to DHS components and their portfolios.

Similarly, there was sometimes embarrassment from DHS components when somebody internally had approached an external stakeholder when they had already been approached by someone else elsewhere in the Department.

So the idea was that kind of central belly button.

Q Okay.

And then the paragraph references procurement guidelines.

A Uh-huh.

Q So the board was just going to establish guidelines for the components to follow, right? It wasn't going to be doing any procuring?

A That is correct. We did not have a budget.

Q Okay.

So you referenced earlier kind of the -- sorry.

You got a letter from Mr. Jordan on March 1st of this year. Do you recall that?

A I don't recall that specific letter.

Q We're going to introduce it. And this will be exhibit 4.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So, on page 2, at the top of this, it asks you to explain how the board would collect information.

Did the board have any authority to collect information from external stakeholders?

A It did not.

Q Okay. And, to the extent you were collecting -- we kind of talked through the charter just now -- you were looking at existing practices and policies internally, right?

A That's correct.

Q So the sole collection of information was internal-facing, not external-facing?

A That is correct.

Q Okay.

On the -- actually, sorry, taking a step back --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- in the first hour, you made a reference to kind of the "Ministry of Truth" and the allegation that's been tossed around.

What's your understanding of what the "Ministry of Truth" refers to?

A It is a reference to George Orwell's "1984," to my understanding.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of what the Ministry of Truth does in "1984"?

A It decides for the government and the people what is true and what is false. And, often, that goes against what is true and what is false in reality and is in, you know, the interest of the governing party.

Q Okay. To the extent that that term has been applied to the DGB, do you think that's an accurate description of what the DGB's purpose was?

A It bears no resemblance to the purpose of the Disinformation Governance Board.

Q Okay.

So, for example, as -- and I realize you were only there for a short time, but would the governance board have had any power to declare an internet post true or false?

A It would've had no power whatsoever to do that.

Q Okay. Would it have had the power to compel internet providers to take any actions?

A No.

Q Okay. What about social media providers? Could it have told Twitter what to do?

A No.

Q Okay. And we've said three or four times it didn't have the authority to make any operational decisions at all?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And, in fact, we have a lot of documents about the board that emphasize the importance of protecting civil liberties.

A Uh-huh.

Q I think in paragraph 2 of this letter, it says there are concerns that the board would misuse its official authority to censor speech under the pretext of addressing disinformation.

A Uh-huh.

Q I want to introduce as exhibit 5 a memorandum from Under Secretary Silvers to Secretary Mayorkas. And this was the section that governed the -- this was the memo that recommended adoption of the charter.

A Yes.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Let me know when you're good to go.

A Go ahead.

Q So we highlighted a sentence in the middle that reads, "The Board's primary roles are to develop and support the implementation of best practices, policies, and protocols that support the identification, assessment, response, and resilience to MDM threats, and that do so in a way that ensures respect for privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties."

A Uh-huh.

Q Can you explain -- the section about "ensures respect for privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties," how did you envision the board carrying that protection out?

A Well, one of the things that I think is pretty remarkable about this policy entity is that it actually included many members on the board itself and then at the leadership that were either lawyers or that worked for the Offices of Privacy, Civil Rights, and Civil Liberties at DHS. So, if you look at the charter, on page 1, the members include representatives from the Privacy Office, CRCL, et cetera.

That was not necessary, right? This was meant to help operational components and support their work. But the idea there is that these components -- Privacy, CRCL -- would be guiding the work to make sure that we were always in compliance, always thinking about those fundamental rights and freedoms that all Americans hold near and dear.

And, again, the big part of our work, as we saw it going forward -- work that was never realized -- was establishing those guardrails, so that when operational components were in the thick of it, they would have something to refer to to say, okay, like, let's think about how to do this to make sure that we are responding to this in a way that doesn't trample any of these rights or liberties.

Q Okay.

And I think you actually said earlier that one of the detailees that was assigned to the board was a Privacy detailee. Is that right?

A No, that's not correct. There were three lawyers -- two from OGC, the Office of the General Counsel, and one from CISA.

Q Okay.

A But three -- three lawyers.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q Turning back to the charter -- and you actually just went through this. So it says, "With respect to each of these lines of efforts, the board will develop and support the implementation of governance, policies, and protocols that, among other issues, protect privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties."

So it's actually written into the charter.

A Yes. Multiple times.

Q Okay. And this is the charter that Secretary Mayorkas signed off on?

A Correct, and the one that governed every day for me at DHS.

Q Okay.

So, in the chairman's March 1st letter, the section I read earlier -- concerns that the board would misuse its official authority to censor speech -- we've talked through how the board wouldn't have had any operational authority whatsoever.

A Uh-huh.

Q Is it your understanding that DHS engages in censorship of speech now?

A DHS does not engage in censorship.

Q Okay.

And you mentioned earlier that sometimes, actually, you know -- well, what's your -- sorry. You said earlier that sometimes the best way to counter disinformation is actually to push out more information.

A Uh-huh.

Q Do you think it's ever appropriate to censor information in order to stop the flow of disinformation?

A I do not. And, in fact, I've written extensively about how we should not play what I call "Whack-A-Troll," which is removing content from online platforms in order to respond to disinformation. It doesn't work. It's proven not to work. And, in fact, we need to add more context, invest in media literacy, invest in the health of our information environment.

Q Okay.

Mr. Ivey. While she's flipping through, let me ask you quickly, still on exhibit 4 --

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Ivey. -- this language about "misuse of its official authority to censor speech," would you have accepted the position if you thought it had anything to do with censoring speech?

The Witness. No, Congressman, I would not have.

Mr. Ivey. And why is that?

The Witness. Without getting too much into my personal backstory, my grandfather was a refugee from the Soviet Union. His family was deported from Poland to a gulag in 1940 and came to the United States as a refugee from communism to live the American Dream. So my family is very familiar with what it's like to be in an oppressive, authoritarian environment.

And aside from that personal backstory, I have worked for the freedom of expression and freedom of press for people in Russia, Belarus, Ukraine, who, again, have very personal experiences with what it's like to not be able to speak freely.

And I believe that it is one of the main things that sets the United States apart, that freedom of speech and freedom of the press. And I would never have accepted a job that had anything to do with censorship.

Mr. Ivey. Same with a Ministry of Truth kind of role?

The Witness. Correct.

Mr. Ivey. All right.

[redacted] I don't have anything else, unless you do?

Mr. Ivey. Nothing that can't wait. We can stop now.

[redacted] Okay.

I think we're done for our time right now.

The Witness. Great.

[redacted] Thank you. We may have more questions on the next round.

The Witness. Okay.

[Recess.]

Mr. Gaetz. We'll go back on the record.

Ms. Jankowicz, I wanted to talk to you a little bit more about exhibit 5, the document my colleagues were referencing in their prior questioning.

And in the highlighted portion, it indicates that the board's primary roles would include the implementation of best practices.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. What are the best practices in countering disinformation?

The Witness. Thanks, Congressman, for that question.

As I testified just a few minutes ago, my view of the best practices in countering disinformation is that it is not extremely productive to fact-check, it is not extremely productive to remove speech.

The best practices, as I see it and that I've written extensively about, have to do with building media literacy, have to do with communicating effectively and truthfully and making sure that there are official sources of information doing that at all times. And, essentially, that would be it, frankly, from the government point of view.

Mr. Gaetz. So, as I understand it, providing additional contextualizing information and enhancing media literacy.

The Witness. Those are the two primary recommendations that I stand on.

Mr. Gaetz. How does the government enhance media literacy in the information environment?

The Witness. So there are a number of activities that I can point to that the Cyber and Infrastructure Security Agency has engaged in. They have, for instance, I believe, developed games in the past that individuals can play to learn about how social media platforms work and how information gets to them. They have put out educational materials about how to spot bots online, things like that.

Sometimes the government is not the best messenger for these sorts of messages, I suppose, to be repetitive, and so there are instances where you might work with a third party to deliver those messages or give a grant to someone, for instance, to develop programs related to that sort of thing. That's just kind of hypothetical.

Mr. Gaetz. So the entity you work for now, does it receive one of those grants from the government?

The Witness. I'm not sure about the pertinency of that to the activities of the Disinformation Governance Board, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Are you going to answer my question?

The Witness. Well, I've been advised by my counsel that I should answer questions that are pertinent to today's inquiry, and I'm not sure that that one is pertinent.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. So, just so that we're clear for the record, you're refusing to answer my question regarding whether or not the entity you currently work for receives a grant from any government?

The Witness. Well, with respect, Congressman, I understand your position, and upon advice of my counsel, I'm not going to answer that.

Mr. Gaetz. I just have a question, not a position. We'll resolve that later. I just want to make sure we have a clear record.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. The other feature of this memo is the discussion of policies and protocols that support the identification, assessment, response, and resilience --

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. -- to these threats.

So what are the different ways the government can respond, specifically?

The Witness. Again, Congressman, the primary response that I think was envisioned is the putting out of more information. But that's pretty hypothetical because the board --

Mr. Gaetz. No, that's an answer to the question.

So it was never contemplated in any of the setup or administration of this board, takedown?

The Witness. Takedown is not something that the government can decide, so no.

Mr. Gaetz. And it was never contemplated to advise private entities on takedown practices?

The Witness. I would argue that the government does not do that today.

Mr. Gaetz. Your argument is that CISA doesn't ever encourage any takedown?

The Witness. I think -- again, pertinent to the activities related to the DGB, we had no intention to take anything down.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

And pursuant to your understanding of this role and the work, in this interagency process that you describe in some detail, there was never the talk of how various features of disinformation would achieve reach or would be suppressed in their reach, was there?

The Witness. No, Congressman, there was not.

Mr. Gaetz. You mentioned that there are countries in Europe that are ahead of the United States on disinformation.

The Witness. Uh-huh. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. Which are they?

The Witness. Well, I've written pretty extensively about the ways that, let's say, Estonia has achieved more resilience in its society, in part through media literacy, in part through reducing polarization between the ethnic Estonian and ethnic Russian population, through building up their public media environment.

So that's one entity that I've written about pretty extensively --

Mr. Gaetz. When you say "public media," just so I understand the definition, is that government-funded media?

The Witness. In this case, yes. So there is an Estonian TV network called ETV Plus that provides objective information in the Russian language to the Russian-language population prior --

Mr. Gaetz. So you assess that when the government is funding more media that that creates a healthier information environment, in the case of Estonia?

The Witness. In the case of Estonia, but I kind of -- so the premise of your question is not something I necessarily agree with. There have to be safeguards in place to ensure editorial independence from publicly funded media.

Mr. Gaetz. But is public media an antidote or -- strike that. Is public media one of the tools that you're describing as a way to enhance media literacy?

The Witness. I wouldn't say that it's a way to enhance media literacy. It's a way to ensure that there is objective information available to the public.

Mr. Gaetz. But who decides what's objective?

The Witness. Well, Congressman, you know, I think, again, that's something to discuss perhaps with journalists, not with me, and it's not something that had anything to do with the activities of the Disinformation Governance Board. We had nothing to do with media or anything related to that, so I don't -- again, pertinency.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, I've been trying to -- the purpose of our oversight exercise is to understand what animated this interest in the Disinformation Governance Board and to what extent are those authorities still being utilized today. So how you thought about these various forms of resiliency are very important to us.

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Gaetz. And so, if you think that one of the areas that enhances resiliency is the government engaging in the information space more with objective information, I'm trying to understand how you thought those assessments would be made.

The Witness. Well, again, with respect, Congressman, I don't believe that the government funding or investing in public media has anything to do with the government deciding what is or is not objective truth.

Mr. Gaetz. Who does, then, in public media decide what is objective truth?

Mr. Ivey. You mean in this particular instance or in general?

Mr. Gaetz. Well, in the case of Estonia. How about that?

The Witness. Again, Congressman, pertinency. If you'd like, you can read my book. Put in a little plug there. I don't believe that that's really pertinent, especially given that DHS had nothing to do with public media. This is just -- you asked me about my personal beliefs, and I've given them to you.

Mr. Gaetz. Other than Estonia, which countries are ahead of us?

The Witness. So Sweden, for instance, has issued a bulletin to all of its citizens that describes how disinformation and informational warfare works. And they sent this out to all of their citizens, describing kind of, without naming Russia, how, you know, Russia has previously interfered in the Swedish information space and what to be aware of in times of crisis and how people manipulate media.

The U.K. has done quite a good job in especially the coordination in the response to disinformation. And that's something that I think certainly more countries could seek to emulate.

Mr. Biggs. Can I just --

Mr. Gaetz. Give me a moment, Andy.

So, wait. Are you a registered foreign agent of the U.K. now?

The Witness. Relevance?

Mr. Gaetz. It's relevant to your testimony.

The Witness. It is not relevant to the activities of the Disinformation Board, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. And in Sweden, the bulletins you just described, those are paid for by the government, right?

The Witness. I believe so.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. So, in Estonia, what you referenced that helps most is public media with objective facts. In Sweden, what you referenced helps most is a government-funded information bulletin.

And you talked about the U.K.'s coordinative efforts. And then I'm asking you if you're involved in those efforts by the U.K. Government to coordinate their response to disinformation. And you're refusing to answer that question?

The Witness. Congressman, if you want to look that information up, I think it's public record. But, again, I'm advised by my counsel that the committee may require me to answer all questions pertinent to the subject under inquiry, which is the activities of the Disinformation Governance Board.

If we turn to exhibit -- was this exhibit 4? -- this references "statements as a government official," right? So I don't --

Mr. Gaetz. Sure.

The Witness. -- I don't believe that my employment post-May 18th has anything to do with the object under inquiry today.

Mr. Gaetz. And you're here, as I understand it, voluntarily?

[redacted] No.

Mr. Gaetz. No. Oh, here under subpoena. Okay. Very well.

Mr. Biggs. I just want a point of clarification for the U.K. Because you did give an example of Estonia, what they're doing, and you gave an example of Sweden, but you didn't really -- I didn't catch, anyway -- maybe you did and I just didn't catch it -- give us information on what the U.K. is doing and why you think that's so --

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Biggs. -- you know, positive and successful.

The Witness. Sure.

So the U.K. has responded to the threat of disinformation in a nonpartisan manner, across political parties, number one.

Number two, they have --

Mr. Biggs. And I don't want to -- I shouldn't say "I don't want to interrupt you."

I do. I want to interrupt you because I just need clarification there.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. Who has responded in a nonpartisan fashion?

The Witness. The U.K. Government. So I would say from the Prime Minister on down through Members of Parliament, but also the civil service in the U.K.

This is something that their government has come together to address and solve. And one of the ways that they've done that is through something called "fusion doctrine" in their National Security Strategy, which says, we're going to have kind of, as I've mentioned before, a belly button within government where we all come together where there's a disinformation issue at hand and we're going to work to solve it.

So an example of that: If you remember, in 2018, the Salisbury poisoning. They all kind of were given the bat signal, so to speak, and they all came together to put to rest the Russian disinformation that was coming out about these guys just being tourists and not there to poison a former double agent.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. So -- all right. Thank you.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. I just wanted to clarify.

I just want to -- I want to go back to something you testified in the first hour.

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Biggs. And I want to make sure I understand it, because, to be honest with you, it was the first I'd ever heard of it. And I didn't really get the name quite right. The interagency Ukrainian disinformation team -- whatever it was --

The Witness. I don't know what the name was either, Congressman.

Mr. Biggs. Something along -- about --

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Biggs. I'd never heard of an interagency -- what was your -- what was your role -- what was the Disinformation Governance Board's role in that? I mean, did you just learn about it because you were on the board? What was that about?

The Witness. That was just a coordination call across government, as I said, I think it was weekly, led by CISA, stood up before I got to DHS. I'm not sure exactly when, if it was directly before or just after the full-scale invasion began. But it was an opportunity for working-level staff to share what their agencies were doing with regard to the Ukraine crisis and share kind of information across government.

Mr. Biggs. And do you know what agencies were involved?

The Witness. It was pretty wide, Congressman, so --

Mr. Biggs. Like, within the Department of Energy, they might have had somebody there because of --

The Witness. I know for certain DHS, State were on the call --

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

The Witness. -- and I'm not sure about others. It was a wide -- again, went out pretty widely, invitation. It was just a Teams call, people phoning in, talking about what they were doing.

And you also -- I neglected to answer your question before about my role. I didn't have any convening role. I was just there as a DHS employee listening to the calls.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

And then, before I give it back to you, just a couple more questions.

I want to go along the lines of what Mr. Gaetz was asking a little bit, because that -- and I had it exhibit 4, but it must be exhibit 5, so I probably messed up in marking those things.

Mr. Ivey. Is it this?

Mr. Biggs. No, no. I'm talking about this memo for the Secretary dated January 31st. Is that 2?

[redacted] Oh, sorry. That's 5.

The Witness. That's 5.

Mr. Biggs. Okay, 5. So I messed up.

I just want to go over some stuff that Mr. Gaetz was talking about, because I want to make sure I understand this as well. Because the way I read that sentence -- which is a compound sentence, and they probably should've broken it up into two or three sentences.

But, in any event, you testified pretty extensively in the previous hour about the phrase "ensuring respect for privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties." And then Mr. Gaetz asked you a few questions. And I want to make sure that I'm getting down to beyond the 30,000-foot level to make sure I understand what's actually going on there.

The primary role is to develop and set forth implementation of best practices.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. How would you develop that? And then how would you support what those best practices are? And who would you be working with?

The Witness. Sure, Congressman. So I can speak to the 10 weeks I was at the board, in which some of this work did begin.

As is, I think, in the charter -- yeah -- it talks a little bit about initial review. So one of the things, as I testified earlier, that I did was speak extensively to my colleagues across DHS about the work that they were doing and tried to develop some recommendations about where we saw gaps and where individuals could use potentially more support, more training. We spoke a little bit about the lack of unified definitions in DHS, right?

So we were putting together a work plan that never went anywhere, never got approved, that included --

Mr. Biggs. Can I interrupt you for that?

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. I'm wondering if you were able to actually develop a work plan within that 10 weeks where you actually had a completed document, an idea.

The Witness. No, Congressman, we were not.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

And somewhere I was reading some documents that maybe CBP was a little bit further behind in its interpretation of -- what are we calling this -- MDM.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Biggs. Is that fair to say?

The Witness. I would say yes. CBP approached the problem as a communications issue, and it's not only a communications issue.

And this is something -- to kind of tie it back to what we were just talking about, other governments understand that it's not an issue of just saying the right thing; you've got to walk the walk and talk the talk.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

So I -- you went through this, but I just want to, if we can, maybe expand on it just a bit.

You were developing protocols that supported the identification of MDM.

The Witness. We did not develop any protocols supporting the identification of MDM during my time there.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. How did you envision that? I mean, you went in with kind of a vision, some idea of what you would want to do there. How did you envision establishing those protocols regarding identification of MDM?

The Witness. So, Congressman, that wasn't really at the top of the list for me while I was there. I thought there was some pretty big gaps in terms of the understanding of the concept. And so, to get to identification, you first have to kind of have an agreement about what you're talking about. You can't say that something is a bear if you don't know what a bear looks like. So that's where we were.

Mr. Biggs. So I'm asking you about your vision. I mean, you've talked about, in response to Democrat counsel -- she specifically asked you how did you envision ensuring respect for privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties, and you had a pretty concrete response to that.

So I'm wondering, how did you envision developing -- I mean, developing these protocols regarding identification, assessment, response, and resilience. I mean, so each one of those.

The Witness. Sure. So I think this work, it's important to understand, was going to be iterative, right? So what happened at the first board meeting was going to affect, necessarily, the steps that we took beyond that. And there never was a first board meeting.

Mr. Biggs. Uh-huh.

The Witness. The way that this would work, as was laid out in the charter, would be conversations with relevant components. So, relating to identification, I&A would likely be the -- Intelligence and Analysis would be likely the entity that did that.

In complete transparency, I had the fewest amount of conversations with I&A during my time there. And so we would understand the work that they were doing to do some analysis and identification of potentially harmful disinformation narratives with a nexus to homeland security and make sure that they had those guardrails on that I mentioned before.

In terms of the other pillars, one was resilience, right? Well, we've talked about that already --

Mr. Biggs. I think that was it, but -- yeah. So we'll get back to this. I'm going to turn it back over.

Mr. Gaetz. You described an interagency process, and so I just want to make sure that my questions aren't stovepiped just to the Disinformation Board.

But in any of these interagency meetings you had or in any communications you had with anyone in the government during your time in the government, did you ever see information targeted that dealt with the origins of COVID-19?

The Witness. No, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever see any information targeted that dealt with vaccines?

The Witness. No, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever see any information targeted regarding racial justice?

The Witness. No, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever see information targeted regarding the U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan?

The Witness. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever see any information targeted regarding the nature of U.S. support to Ukraine?

The Witness. It's possible that I saw information related to Ukraine during the interagency working group on Ukraine, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. How often did that working group meet?

The Witness. As I said, that was about once a week. But it wasn't about support for Ukraine per se. It was about sharing information about what individual departments were doing with relation to Ukraine.

Mr. Gaetz. What can you remember about what those departments were doing?

The Witness. It was very early on in the -- after the full-scale invasion. So, at that juncture, it was a mostly information-sharing working group. And it was stood down before I left DHS. So, didn't meet very frequently and then was stood down.

Mr. Gaetz. What was the reason for it being stood down?

The Witness. At that time, the interagency assessed that there weren't exigent threats to the information space surrounding Ukraine in the United States. So we would just continue on our kind of individual departmental responses. The working group was kind of seen as superfluous.

Mr. Gaetz. Were the meetings recorded?

The Witness. I don't believe so, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you aware of if anyone was taking notes during those meetings?

The Witness. I assume someone was, but they were on Teams, so --

Mr. Gaetz. Were there minutes that were --

The Witness. I can't recall, Congressman.

Mr. Gaetz. -- created?

Were you aware during your service in the government of any special portal that DHS had with Facebook --

The Witness. No, Congressman --

Mr. Gaetz. -- or Meta?

The Witness. -- I wasn't aware.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever interact with officials from the FBI?

The Witness. FBI officials would have been present on subcommittee meetings of the National Security Council that I attended.

Mr. Gaetz. How many of those meetings did you attend during your 10 weeks?

The Witness. A handful.

Mr. Gaetz. And who from the FBI was present?

The Witness. I can't recall their names, Congressman. They were all on --

Mr. Gaetz. Do you recall the area -- their jurisdictional areas?

The Witness. I can't recall, Congressman. Often, when you're on these NSC meetings, you're all piped in from different individual conference rooms, and everybody is on a tiny little thing on a screen. So I can't even -- I wouldn't be know their faces if I walked by them in the hallway outside.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever interact with individuals from the Foreign Influence and Interference Branch of DHS?

The Witness. It's possible they were on these calls, but I didn't have any direct contact with them, to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you ever interact with State election officials?

The Witness. I did not.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you, [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q So I'm going to mark as exhibit No. 6 a March 8, 2022, email between you and some other DHS officials.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I'll give you time to review it.

A This is 6?

Q Six.

A Okay.

Q And in this email chain, it mentions the steering group for the Disinformation Governance Board. Who were the members of the steering group?

A The members of the steering group were working-level officials of each component.

Q And how often did the steering group meet?

A I believe it was a weekly short Teams call.

Q So would that have been -- during your 10 weeks, would you have had a steering group meeting every week?

A We definitely skipped a couple of weeks, but, yes, there were meetings every week or thereabouts.

Q And what was the purpose of having steering group meetings?

A Well, as it says in the charter, the idea of the steering group was to kind of connect everyone at a working level, representing the perspective of their components, reviewing and discussing any proposals submitted to the board -- although we didn't have any -- and essentially just connecting everyone. It was a good chance for people who had never met, who were working on similar issues, to talk to one another. And that was the main purpose, as I saw them.

Q So what was discussed at those meetings?

A During the time that I was there, I asked individual components to give short, 5-minute presentations about the work that they did regarding countering disinformation, the preexisting work that they did, and to talk about any issues that they had teed up relating to the portfolio that they might want feedback on.

Q Did any component give their 5-minute speech about countering disinformation?

A I believe all of the -- I think all of the components did. Yeah.

Q So what was your understanding of what work was being done to counter disinformation?

A It was quite broad and disparate, like DHS -- you know, lots of different entities at work, lots of different portfolios at work.

So CISA would be the most developed. CBP, probably the least developed. FEMA, obviously in a very different mission space than everybody else, but also pretty robust work being done.

And -- I'm trying to think -- then we also, I believe, got a briefing from I&A about some of the work that they did. But, obviously, in an unclassified space they couldn't share very much.

Q And in the first email here, you said, "I am keen to get the steering group meetings into a regular rhythm and set some goals/metrics to orient me/ourselves toward."

A Uh-huh.

Q What did you mean when you said "goals and metrics"?

A Yeah. Especially since I was going on maternity leave at potentially the end of May, early June, I wanted to make sure that we had something to steer toward, right, and we weren't just kind of existing in a weird subliminal space. And so I wanted to make sure that, you know, I had something to point toward.

So, whether that was work toward the first board meeting to get approved a set of principles, or conduct all of the interviews, the initial review that we talked about before, that was me kind of just understanding the space, and those were kind of the ideas that I had at that time.

Q Were there any notes or minutes that came out of the steering group meetings?

A I usually would send a recap via email after the steering group meetings.

Q And do you remember any of the individuals that attended the steering group meetings?

A You should have those in the emails that you have. I think they would be on the distro list that the invites go to, so --

Q Did Ms. Vinograd attend?

A Usually, yes.

Q What about Mr. Patch?

A I can't recall if Milton attended. He was a staff assistant.

Q Mr. Snyder?

A I also can't recall. He was a policy advisor. It's possible he attended a few.

Q Did Ms. Daskal?

A If her schedule allowed.

Q And Under Secretary Silvers? Did he ever attend a steering group meeting?

A He did not.

Q And in the email from Ms. Vinograd, on the second page here, in the second little paragraph, it says, "We will start our governance meetings individually with folks ASAP."

Who were the individuals Ms. Vinograd was referring to?

A I think that would refer to -- although I'm missing some of the context here.

Q Uh-huh.

A I think that would refer to working-level individual components for those initial reviews that we talked about, for me to kind of do a meet-and-greet and understand the work that they were doing.

Q So the governance meetings would have been part of the initial review --

A Yes.

Q -- as you understood it?

A Uh-huh.

Q And I know during our first round we discussed how during this time period the charter was in effect February 24, 2022, but then the board wasn't announced until, you know, late April.

A Yeah.

Q And so you had said that you wanted to roll out the board differently. Can you discuss for us again how you wanted to roll out the board?

A I believe that with any counter-disinformation activity, particularly as undertaken by a government, there is going to be, rightly, some scrutiny and skepticism related to these activities.

And my research has pointed to that. In fact, there's an entire chapter in one of my books about how a Czech-disinformation entity fell victim to similar attacks to what we did. And one of the reasons that I thought it was so important to kind of respond transparently and actively, proactively communicate about our work, was because of that research that I had done.

So I put together several communications plans, again, that included components from pre-briefing Congress, speaking to the media, putting out fact sheets or a press release from DHS, and speaking with counterparts outside of government. I guess that's four prongs, four different prongs. And that is how I believed that we should've communicated about it.

[12:28 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever anticipate when that rollout would occur?

A I hoped over and over that it was going to be next week, and then the next week, and then the next week, particularly, as I said, because I was going on maternity leave, and because, as somebody who had a public profile before I went into government, particularly as the Ukraine crisis began, I thought that my absence from the wider world would be noted. And I thought that, potentially, there would be some scrutiny into kind of my sudden silence. And I thought, again, that it would be important to get in front of that transparently and proactively.

Q So it kind of sounds like you were working with this assumption that you would be able to help with the rollout. Who told you that you would be able to help with the rollout? Or who kind of gave you the direction to start working on the rollout?

A I brought up the rollout with -- under Secretary Silvers and Assistant Secretary Vinograd during my first meeting with both of them, which I believe was in my second week at DHS. And I emphasized to them the importance of proactively and transparently communicating about our efforts.

Q And when about did you learn that they weren't going to go forward with your rollout plan, so to speak, and not in a way that you thought was transparent?

A It was an iterative process. So I developed a plan. Individuals from the communications staff -- so OPA and, to some extent -- although they were kind of tertiary to all of this -- the Office of Legislative Affairs were brought in. Questions were raised. We went back to the drawing board. I developed another plan. This happened several times in an extremely frustrating way for me.

And it just kept getting pushed back and pushed back and changed. And eventually, some of the communications advisors thought that less was going to be more. And that's when we got to about April, and they decided to put just this blurb in a newsletter in order to announce the board.

Q Did you ever express concerns that, you know, less was not more?

A Yeah. I was kind of trying to balance my equities as somebody who was brand new to government, brand new to the department, and not particularly high-ranking within the department. So as I'm sure many people in this room have experienced, sometimes you just kind of have to make a compromise. And I thought that these communications advisors might know better in the situation that we were in.

In retrospect, I wish I had absolutely raised more of a stink because, as I mentioned before, it had enormous personal consequences for me.

Q And do you remember who these communications advisors were?

A So the Secretary's top communications counselor is Ricki Seidman. Their names are probably in some of the emails that you have. I'm not going to remember their last names. Isabella Ulloa is one of them. And then KC is her name. Kristie -- I forget her last name right now. But those were three of the communications advisors.

Mr. Issa. You mentioned earlier about the attack that came out of a rollout in the Czech Republic. Do you want to characterize what happened there, what they disclosed, what the attack was like, and then characterize it relative to what you saw happen in this --

The Witness. Sure, Congressman. So the Czech Republic put together something called the Centre For Terrorism and Hybrid -- or Centre Against Terrorism and Hybrid Threats. Excuse me. That was located within the Ministry of Interior. It was announced in early 2017, and was one of the first unilateral counterdisinformation entities that was put together.

They -- they said, you know, we're going to fight Russian fake news, basically, is how they characterized their efforts. And the Czech people didn't take very kindly to this. They, along with their President, had worries that -- this is what they said -- that the Centre was going to turn off the internet. That they had a button to turn off the internet, among other things. That they were going to decide what was true and false.

That's not what the Centre did or does. They had a very narrow remit relating to, again, terrorism and hybrid threats facing the Czech Republic. And most of the work that they do is interior facing. They educate civil servants about how not to be a vulnerable target to disinformation or cyber attacks, things like that. And then in a very limited area, they do do public fact checks. In my book, I conclude that that is not something that is super helpful.

So when I brought this up at the Department, I said, listen. We don't want to -- we don't want to leave a vacuum for somebody else to tell the story of what we're doing. We want to communicate about that transparently, proactively, and kind of put questions that might come up to rest.

Mr. Issa. And one of the questions would be, do you do fact-checking?

The Witness. It could be any number of questions. I think as -- I think you might have been out of the room, Congressman, when I mentioned this to your colleague. But I think Americans are right to question what the government is doing with regard to civil rights and civil liberties. And I viewed it as my job as the executive director of the board to answer those queries truthfully, honestly, proactively. And unfortunately, we didn't meet that standard that I set for myself.

Mr. Issa. And then you used the term you "fell victim to attacks."

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Issa. Do you want to give us why you felt that you fell victim to attacks because of how they launched this?

The Witness. So, because we did not provide enough information at the outset, we left a vacuum for people to speculate. And indeed, within hours of the board being announced, the phrase "ministry of truth" -- which, again, the board had nothing to do with being a ministry of truth -- was trending on social media.

By the next day, I was receiving death threats because people believed that I was going to, quote, "show up at people's houses with guns and tell Americans what they could and could not say."

Again, the government -- DHS, from then on -- as is, you know, documented in some of the emails that I think you have -- could not muster a response. And the longer we waited, the bigger the vacuum grew, the more scrutiny -- scrutiny isn't even the right term. The more ire and vitriol was directed at me and my family.

I've had to take out a protective order against a man who has repeatedly doxxed my family. I received mail to my house because my address has been released online. People were looking into my extended family members. I was 9 months pregnant at the time. I was huge. Believe me, there was nothing I wanted more than to waddle up here and talk to all of you about the work that I was trying to do, but I wasn't allowed.

And this has had a continued impact on my life. I continue to be under -- because of all that.

Mr. Issa. You said you were preparing to leave for maternity leave. Did you in fact leave for maternity leave?

The Witness. I did not. I resigned before I was due.

Mr. Issa. Was that resignation you decided, or was that one where you were asked?

The Witness. I was given the opportunity to stay on as a policy advisor. If the Disinformation Governance Board were to be disbanded -- as you know, it kind of went under review over the summer. And my thinking at that time was -- again, extremely pregnant, about to have my first child -- that perhaps if I resigned, the threats would go away. That they would be redirected at DHS.

Unfortunately, that's not what happened, in part, because people continued to lie about me and still, to this day, continue to lie about me. Still, I believe that I can do good work outside of government, and it was the right decision for me to have made. I also felt that the Department didn't have my back, and I wanted to concentrate on my time with my family over the summer and caring for my new son.

Mr. Issa. Could you elaborate on what actions did you see or not see from DHS that caused you to believe they didn't have your back?

The Witness. Yeah. So --

Mr. Issa. And can I say, were you thrown under the bus a little bit, in your opinion?

The Witness. I do believe I was thrown under the bus to some degree. I believe DHS made the calculation that it was easier to let the work be undermined than steel themselves and get on with something that they thought was important. And I believe that that is, in a way, how the Biden administration has handled this particular issue of countering disinformation.

I, over and over -- and, again, this will be in emails that you have seen at this point -- voiced my concern that we weren't reacting. That we weren't putting any information out there. That the more that we did that, the threats to my family increased. And that fell on deaf ears over and over again.

And I had spent my career and a large portion of my own kind of personal capital doing work that I thought was important for the American people, and I did not want to risk further damage to that for an agency that clearly didn't have my -- even my safety at heart.

And it was a really tough decision for me because I had spent the entirety of my time since, you know, I was in college -- actually, way before that. I was in Model Congress when I was a kid, right? Public service is something that I have aspired to for a very long time. So it was a decision that I did not take lightly and one that made me very, very upset.

Mr. Issa. Now, you're not personally wealthy, I gather?

The Witness. No.

Mr. Issa. So this was also an economic decision. How did you, on the verge of having a child, deal with resigning?

The Witness. Well, I'm lucky that my husband is employed. And --

Mr. Issa. Only one in government at a time.

The Witness. Yeah. And it has not been easy, Congressman, dealing with the legal implications that have come from my service in government in addition to needing to retain Andrew, who has been great.

Thank you, Andrew.

I've also had to retain several other attorneys in related matters. The protective order, I mentioned. The same gentleman has named me in a civil suit that has cost me a significant amount of money to try to get dismissed that has absolutely no basis in reality.

So, again, in addition to monetary impact, this has affected my family. I get recognized on the street here sometimes by people who wish me harm, and I'm just happy that my son hasn't been with me in those cases.

Mr. Issa. Now, your civil suit was for conduct during the time you were at DHS, I assume?

The Witness. It actually has nothing to do with DHS. He just alleges that I did things that I didn't do, and he's just harassing me through the legal system.

Mr. Issa. So that happened personally --

The Witness. Correct. Yeah.

Mr. Issa. Well, you have not only our sympathy, but from many of us, our empathy on exactly that.

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Issa. Thank you.

Mr. Biggs. Can I ask you a question, too, with regard to that? Because I find it interesting.

And I wanted to know where -- did Mr. Silvers and Ms. --

[redacted] Vinograd?

Mr. Biggs. Yeah. Vinograd. Yeah. Yeah. Vinograd.

Did they kind of disappear as this thing began to -- and I don't want to use the term "fall apart," but it seems to -- looking at the timeline, in retrospect, it looks like, at some point, it began to fall apart. They began to -- from reading all the documentation -- kind of pull in their wheels a little bit and leave you kind of as the face of this prospect.

And I want to know about -- did those two disappear? Did Secretary Mayorkas ever consult with you on what was happening? That type of thing.

The Witness. So Rob and Sam and Jen were great during the time. They were very supportive of me as their staffer and someone they knew personally.

The Secretary, I suppose, perhaps -- well, I can't conjecture who told him to do this. But he did give me a call the Friday after the board was announced to just say that, you know -- that he had my back. But that was the last I spoke with him.

And things -- and I can't really say what was going on behind the scenes because there were a lot of conversations, emails, meetings, that I was not involved in. And that frustrated me, right? Because I was the one who was at great personal risk, indeed physical risk. I was told by a private security consultant that I hired at that time to leave my home when I was weeks away from giving birth.

I was frustrated that I wasn't involved in those conversations. That wasn't Rob, Sam, or Jen's fault. I think things evolved to the point that they were above all of their pay grades, if that makes sense. I think it was things happening at S-1 level, and then even potentially at the White House.

I really can't -- I can't say. But I know that I would often ask Rob for guidance, for -- you know, do you know about X, Y, or Z? If, you know, I'll be allowed to speak to the media? If we're going to put a fact sheet out? And his answer was, I don't know. And even once, I do believe he said, this is above my pay grade.

Mr. Biggs. So the Secretary -- other than gave you the last interview, which you said was incredibly brief -- I said -- you didn't say incredibly. You said it was brief. I said incredibly. And then this call after you take the position. But then as this begins to be a lightning rod for public discourse, you don't hear from him again?

The Witness. So he called me on the Friday after the board was announced. So it was announced on a Wednesday. 27, 28, 29 -- it must have been April 29th. That weekend, all of us were all-hands-on-deck putting talking points together for him because he went on the Sunday shows. And, yeah, that was the last that I heard from him. He defended me on the Sunday shows, and that was it.

Mr. Issa. You described yourself as low level here. Do you believe that part of the challenge was that you were seen as the focal point rather than a coordinator for the board?

The Witness. Yes, Congressman. And I think that, in part, is due to the characterization of me as the disinformation czar or the minister of truth, when in reality, I was a GS-15 herding cats in government. Yeah, I had a profile before entering government, and I think that should have spoke to, you know, the way the administration was trying to carefully consider these issues rather than me being someone who was all powerful.

And I have to say, with due respect, there are people in this room who characterized me as somebody who had a lot more power than they did, and that really did lead to a lot of the conjecture and spin and lies and threats about me.

Mr. Issa. You were saying, though, that you were -- I characterized thrown under the bus, and you didn't disagree. To a certain extent, as Members of Congress, was it unreasonable to believe that you were some of the focal point based on what was publicly available?

The Witness. I mean, you're asking the question, Congressman, so I'm going to answer it. I believe that the way I was characterized by certain Members of Congress, by certain media outlets, was reckless. It had no basis in fact. And it put me and my family at great personal risk, to the point where I was going to my prenatal appointments at a weekly basis at that time, and I felt that I had to basically disguise myself. I wore a hat, sunglasses, and a mask because I was on Fox News every hour on the hour, and I was basically a sitting duck.

And that is not what I signed up for as a GS-15. It is not what I envisioned when I was going into public service. And especially given the complete mischaracterization of the board's activities and of my prior statements, it was just -- it was a really sad experience for me.

Mr. Issa. No, I appreciate that. But I just -- the question I asked was slightly different. And your answer was really good. It's just, my question was more -- you kind of know that there wasn't -- there wasn't a launch of this organization that explained it. The simple launch didn't talk about its power, and it didn't characterize these very significant members of the board who may or may not have attended certain meetings.

So -- and I wasn't one of the people who commented, as far as I know. I'm pretty sure. So given that I don't know anything other than what I'm learning here today, and then what we saw in the beginning, do you believe that the way DHS launched this, it was pretty easy for someone not to know what this organization was going to do, and thus, could have conjecture as to what it could or couldn't do?

The Witness. I believe that DHS did a poor job rolling the board out, but I also believe that it is incumbent on Members of Congress, elected officials, and the media to be very careful about the bully pulpit that you all have, and to understand that words have actions.

So I would have preferred that, you know, this went through normal process before wild speculation unleashed stalkers and all manner of threats on me and my family.

Mr. Issa. And to your recollection, what was the first media that you saw that was incorrect, or maybe even hyperbolic?

The Witness. If we're talking about mainstream media, I believe, by the next morning, there was mischaracterization and lies about the board on Fox News.

Mr. Issa. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to enter into the record an email chain from April 27th, 2022, with the subject line "FYSA - DGB announcement blowback." It probably has some of the communications you are referencing.

And it's a longer email chain. I'll refer to the Bates numbers on the bottom of the page.

A Okay.

Mr. Herman. Is this exhibit 7?

[redacted] Yeah, exhibit No. 7.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.] .

The Witness. That has the name. I couldn't remember. Kristie Canegallo. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So on Page 262 -- and that number is right before the date.

A Yep.

Q You say in here, "However, given tenor of the discourse and those that are sharing it, I wanted to make everyone aware. There is a fair possibility this could escalate and end up on a hostile TV network in the coming days. I would recommend" -- and then DHS has redacted that.

Do you know, were your recommendations ever considered or implemented?

A I don't believe they were ever implemented. I hope someone considered them, but I can't be certain.

Q Can you tell us what you recommended?

A To the best of my recollection, I believe I recommended releasing a fact sheet that we had prepared earlier and going back to my original communications plans that included briefing the Hill, briefing media, and getting third parties on the phone to potentially answer any questions that they had. So folks at think tanks and things like that who ended up speculating a lot about the board in the coming days.

Q And then if we flip over to 260, there is an email from Ms. Erin Waters.

And in that email, she says, "Hi, Nina. Thanks for bringing this to our attention. We are seeing a lot of the traffic on social back end as well. Adding others in OLA on your last message. Sarah/Ruth can advise, but we also have a media inquiry now. We recommend" -- and then that's also redacted.

Who is Ms. Erin Waters?

A I believe -- but I am not certain -- that Erin Waters is an OPA staffer. Office of Public Affairs.

Q How often did you interact with Ms. Waters?

A Given that I can't remember where she was working, I don't believe I interacted with her very much. We were on email chains, but that's it.

Q And do you remember what she recommended in her email?

A I don't.

Q Do you know if those recommendations were ever taken action on or considered?

A I assume, again, they were considered by the people on the email. But given that I don't remember what she recommended and certainly don't think it went forward -- yeah, I don't think it went forward.

Q And then if you flip one more page over to 259, there's an email response to Ms. Waters and her recommendations from you. And in that email on the bottom of the page, you say, "Thank you. That sounds good to me. Let me know how you would like to handle. I have personal relationships with all those highlighted, but happy to follow your lead."

A Okay. So what I think this was was, as I mentioned in my initial kind of recommendations, I had put together a list of third parties that we could inform about what was going on. And I highlighted individuals with whom I had a personal relationship.

Q Do you remember any of the third parties that you considered?

A Sure. For instance, Christopher Krebs. Somebody who had worked at DHS before and was a Trump appointee. I believe I had noted some individuals across the think thank community at places like CSIS or Brookings, academics. I think I had also noted the congressional staff that I had relationships with from when I testified before Congress. So kind of to reach out and tell them, you know, this is what's going on. Here's what we're actually doing. Please don't be alarmed.

Q Did you ever have any of these briefings or meetings with the third parties?

A No. We did not, unfortunately.

Q And a little bit earlier, you said that you, quote, "weren't allowed to come up to the Hill to discuss." Who told you you couldn't come?

A I think that came from a number of different individuals. I can't remember specifically, but I heard "no" from pretty much every corner. And I repeatedly said, I'm happy to go to the Hill. I'm happy to talk to the media. You know, it's my face they're seeing on TV. I should be out in front, and I'm happy to humanize this effort. But I was never allowed to do that.

Q Do you remember --

Mr. Issa. Did that include DHS's leg affairs person?

The Witness. The leg affairs folks were actually very helpful and supportive of me doing that. So it wasn't OLA that made that decision. I can say that for certain.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember what the concern was? If there was a concern of you coming up to the Hill?

A I still don't know what the concern was.

Q And if it wasn't OLA, do you remember what component it was that told you you couldn't come up?

A It wasn't a component. It was probably advisors to the Secretary. So some of the same comms advisors that we mentioned before.

[redacted] Okay.

About 3 minutes, if any of the members have questions.

Chairman Jordan. What's the advisory board that made the recommendation to cancel and stop the Disinformation Governance Board?

The Witness. The homeland security advisory committee.

Chairman Jordan. Homeland Security Advisory Council.

The Witness. Ah, council, yes.

Chairman Jordan. Do you know who those individuals are?

The Witness. I believe the cochairs of it are former DHS Secretary Michael Chertoff, and also Jamie Gorelick. I'm not aware of the further membership, though.

Chairman Jordan. Did you have any interaction with that advisory council prior to them making the decision?

The Witness. I did not.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. I want to do real quick if I can -- I want to just give you something. I just want your reaction.

Can you pass this out? This is a -- we have some copies.

This is an email from the White House on January 23rd, 2021, to Twitter. From Clarke Humphrey to folks at Twitter. I'm just curious. We talked about disinformation, misinformation, malinformation earlier. If you could take a look at that.

And then look at the underlying tweet from Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., if you could.

Mr. Ivey. And this is exhibit 8?

[redacted] Yes. We'll enter this as exhibit 8.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Ivey. Okay.

Chairman Jordan. So the White House -- I don't know if it is a male or female -- Clarke Humphrey sent this email to Twitter and said, "Hey, folks. Wanted to flag the below tweet and am wondering if we can get moving on the process for having it removed ASAP."

Do you think it's appropriate for the White House to be telling Twitter what should happen on its platform or not?

The Witness. Congressman, this is the first time I'm seeing this, of course. Again, it doesn't relate to the activities of the Disinformation Governance Board. So I'm not sure it's pertinent to the subject at hand.

Chairman Jordan. Can you take a look at the tweet from Mr. Kennedy? From Robert Kennedy, Jr.?

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. Is there anything in that tweet that's not accurate?

The Witness. I don't know, sir. Again, I'm not a COVID expert. I'm not an expert -- I don't even remember this happening. So I can't give you an assessment of that.

Chairman Jordan. Hank Aaron is a real person.

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Hank Aaron took the shot. Hank Aaron passed away a few weeks after the shot. That's what the tweet says. It doesn't say cause and effect.

And then we have the White House telling Twitter this tweet needs to be taken down as soon as possible. And this is part of disinformation. In fact, he calls it misinformation, which I think, according to your definition, is false but no malign intent.

Mr. Ivey. Mr. Chairman, I thought she already said that she doesn't know anything about this.

Chairman Jordan. She was going to be the chair of the Disinformation Governance Board..

The Witness. Yeah. My reaction, Congressman, is that I had no ability to be an arbiter of truth. I was not going to be deciding what was true or false online. So my opinion on a tweet that was sent more than a year before I entered government service is irrelevant.

[redacted] Our time is up.

Chairman Jordan. Thank you.

[redacted] We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Just addressing a couple of things that were raised in the earlier hour.

We talked through some best practices, and you used as examples things that Estonia is doing and things that Sweden is doing, for example. Those are just examples, right?

A Yes.

Q And it wasn't your intent, you know -- going in, it was your intent to gather information. There was no intent necessarily to put into place any kind of, like, recommendation that we follow the Estonian system, right? That was all just examples?

A Yeah. That's correct.

Q Okay. You mentioned the recommendations that you had made to DHS.

A Uh-huh.

Q And you said you don't know if any of your recommendations were put into place. You hoped they were.

I want to introduce as exhibit 9 a fact sheet that was released.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with this?

A Yes, I am.

Q Okay. And this is dated May 2nd, 2022?

A Uh-huh.

Q Did you have a role in working on this?

A I did.

Q And can you explain how it came to be?

A So one of the fact sheets that we had created prior to the announcement of the board was used as a kind of draft. And with much input from various corners of the Department and communications staff, this is the document that resulted. So you can imagine the sort of commenting process that went through there. But it was a long and drawn-out process.

Q And what about the process for releasing it on May 2nd?

A That was outside of my personal knowledge. So once I inputted on the document, it was then signed off on by various and different entities around DHS, and potentially within the White House as well.

Q Okay. But to your -- so -- but it was actually released?

A Uh-huh.

Q And it was -- did you want this to be released?

A I wanted it to be released when we announced to the board. Not more than 5 days afterward when people were clamoring for information.

Q Okay. Got it. And then just one more question on a separate issue.

We talked a little bit about CISA and some other entities. To your knowledge, what is -- can you explain, actually, what CISA stands for?

A Yeah. CISA is the Cyber and Infrastructure Security Agency.

Q And what is CISA's role within DHS?

A Again, like many DHS entities, it plays a lot of roles. But they deal with the protection of critical infrastructure.

Q Okay. And how did you foresee the DGB interacting with CISA?

A So, as I mentioned before, CISA has a pretty robust portfolio in this area. They are one of the ones that have been working on this issue for a long time. And so, I wanted to give them space to do what they did and support them where they needed support, but not substantively change any of the work that they were doing already.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with a different group called the Center for Internet Security? It's sometimes called CIS.

A I am only familiar with them from what I have seen in the news from last week.

Q Okay. Are you aware that CISA and CIS are different entities?

A I am aware of that, yes.

Q And to your knowledge, is CISA a government entity or a private entity?

A Is CISA?

Q Sorry. CIS.

A CIS, to my knowledge, is a private entity.

Q Okay. But you don't have any personal knowledge of what they do or anything?

A No. I just learned about them last week.

Q But they are different than CISA?

A They are.

Q Okay.

[redacted] All right. That's it. We're good. Thank you.

We can go off the record. It's 1:11.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. It's 1:12 p.m.

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Jankowicz, I want to go back to the charter. I believe it's marked as exhibit No. 3. I'm going to refer to section one, the second paragraph there. And it goes through the lines of effort.

What did you understand cross-functional lines of effort to mean?

A The areas in which DHS was already working.

Q So the first one is identifying MDM. How did you understand DHS was already conducting work in that line of effort?

A This was something that I was seeking to understand better. But to the best of my own knowledge, from my short time in government, I understood that within each operational component, there were individuals working to look at or identify disinformation with a nexus to homeland security.

So FEMA was on the lookout for disinformation about disasters or disaster benefits. CISA was on the lookout for disinformation about cyber or election infrastructure issues, et cetera.

Q And what was your understanding from the charter and your work within the 10 weeks at the board -- what was your understanding that the role of the board would be in that line of effort?

A Very little. Setting the guardrails, as I mentioned before, for how to do that work with privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties in mind.

Q And what guardrails did you think were necessary?

A It was too soon to say. Again, I was trying to understand where the gaps were and where we needed those guardrails. So that was in a very early stage, and I can't really conjecture where the work might have led.

Q And were you able to identify any of the gaps in DHS's work?

A I would say the gaps that I identified were less related to identification. And, again, as I mentioned before, the work is iterative, right? So I thought we had to start at the ground floor and talk about some of the big-picture ideas before we drilled down into some of the other things. So I can't testify to kind of any gaps in identification because I just didn't get to that granular of a level at that point.

Q Yeah. And understanding that you weren't able to get to a granular level, did you have any concerns about how DHS was identifying MDM at the time?

A No, not from what I learned.

Q And you said that -- one example you used was FEMA. Had they identified any MDM?

A Yeah. So if we refer to Exhibit 9, one of the things that we talked about was Hurricane Sandy, Maria, and Ida. FEMA actually had a really robust mechanism for during hurricane season to kind of track these scams and disinformation about safe places to take shelter, things like that.

So that was kind of a shining star, in my understanding. And they were able to kind of communicate information out based on their tracking of the broad information space.

Q And during some questioning by Mr. Gaetz, you talked about some of the best practices and how you said something about contextualizing information.

Would that have been an example of when you needed to contextualize the information that was out there?

A With FEMA, I mean, I think that is such a life-or-death situation for people. It's less about contextualizing and more just reaching people that are in harm's way.

But contextualizing -- an example of that could be, you know -- a great example, actually, from the 2020 election. If you recall the joint effort by DOJ and DHS in responding to Iranian disinformation that was attempting to disenfranchise voters, kind of threatening them before going to the polls. And they were able to get out there and do a news conference and say, Actually, we're able to prove that this is coming from Iranians who have targeted you specifically. You shouldn't buy into this. That was really effective. And that's the sort of contextualization that works well.

Q And how would you define contextualization that works well?

A It has to do with adding more information, responding quickly, and doing so from an authoritative source. So the government or, you know, a trusted local organization often -- you know, as I mentioned before, the government is not the best messenger. So that's where, you know, partnerships with State, local, Tribal, and territorial entities could come into play. Just, again, hypothetically.

Q And the second line of effort here is "assessing and analyzing the risk that such MDM poses to homeland security."

What work on that line of effort did you do in your 10 weeks there?

A Again, I would say that the majority of my work had to do with getting the board announced and then conducting these initial review, kind of interviews with people. So in terms of risk assessment, that hadn't really gone forward. Ditto for kind of how we would respond or how we would build resilience.

Q And when you had these steering group meetings where the components kind of talked about the work -- the MDM work that they were doing -- I think you talked about 5-minute speeches -- did they ever mention any of the risk or risk assessments that they had performed?

A Not to my knowledge, no.

Q And number three line of effort is "responding to these MDM threats." Would contextualizing --

A It could be a response, yeah.

Q What other responses did you think?

A Putting more information out there. The sort of educational efforts that I spoke about before that CISA was already engaged with. But again, all pretty hypothetical because we never -- the work didn't continue.

Q And number four, for building resilience to MDM. Did you have the opportunity to work on that line of effort?

A We did have one sub-working group meeting for anybody who was interested in discussing information literacy, and how or if DHS entities might be involved in that. It was just one kind of very basic meeting. And that, I believe, had representation from FEMA and CISA.

Those are the only two I can recall off the top of my head. But it was just, again, kind of a -- what is this thing, and how does it interact with our mission set?

Q And is the working group different from the steering group?

A So this was a sub-steering group.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. So the steering group was working-level people, and this was just a sub-steering group of anybody interested in kind of the information literacy vein of things.

Q And how many subgroups of the steering group were there?

A That was the only one.

Q And you said it just had that one meeting of discussing media literacy?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. And then I'll turn to section four here, "board responsibilities."

The first sentence there says, "Components will lead in MDM-related operational responses and other efforts to counter MDM in their relevant mission spaces."

Can you provide examples of MDM-related operational responses that you are aware of?

A Yeah. I would refer back to the fact sheet that DHS put out. So CBP doing a communications campaign trying to dissuade potential migrants from coming to the U.S. illegally. FEMA getting good information out there about how to access aid and, you know, different emergency responses. And CISA identifying disinformation coming from foreign -- foreign entities.

Q So in the 10 weeks that you spent at DHS working on the board, did you ever have any discussions related to best practices for operational responses?

A The only discussion that I think could be considered barely robust enough to touch on that would be what I just mentioned, the sub-steering group on media literacy. Otherwise, we were just at the very, very beginning of setting things up and getting them moving.

Q On the last page of the charter, section seven, "relationship to other departmental governance bodies," the second sentence reads, "As such, all DHS-wide or component-specific proposals for funding related to efforts to counter MDM should be appropriately coordinated with the board, including in advance of submitting any final funding proposals."

During your work at the DGB, did you ever discuss funding proposals?

A No.

Q Ever discuss a process for reviewing the funding proposals?

A No.

Q What did you understand that those funding proposals would include? Or what is DHS spending funds on?

A So my understanding was that there would be a central kind of coordination mechanism for grants related to disinformation.

So as an example, the science and technology component, which is -- S&T is a member of the board -- they do research related to disinformation. The idea was that, you know, that component would inform the board and other components about the work that they were doing so that everybody could benefit from it.

Or if there was a grant that was undertaken from CISA to -- I mentioned a game that they developed before -- that other components would be informed so that, if necessary, or if applicable, if warranted, they could potentially use those resources as well. It was meant to ensure that taxpayer funds were being used appropriately and not kind of duplicated, if that makes sense.

Q And during your time at DHS, did you ever kind of get a grasp on what funds were being expended on the countering MDM or --

A I did not.

Q No inside as to the grants that were out there?

A A very top-level insight that that was going to be something that we would look into further as the work developed.

Q What was your top-level insight?

A Like a number?

Q Yeah.

A I have no idea. I don't know.

Q What would you define as top-level insight?

A Kind of understanding the different areas of expenditure. So again, I mentioned most of them. Grants for kind of implementation, grants for research, and then different sorts of software, like FEMA in particular, in order to assess threats in the information space. It had, like, a social listening software, probably similar to what many congressional staff use.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I'm going to enter as exhibit No. 10 an April 20th, 2022 email regarding a case study between Ms. Jankowicz and other DHS officials. This is exhibit No. 10.

A Thanks.

Q Take your time to review.

A Okay.

Q Do you recall being on this email chain, sending these emails?

A Vaguely, yeah.

Q So on the first page here, Bates No. 181, in an email on April 20th at 3:44 p.m., you said, "Thanks, Rob. Here's where we stand with the case study."

What was the case study?

A Yeah. This was a series of conversations between I&A, CBP, and policy staff.

That was Siri.

A series of conversations between those three entities to understand how they were responding to disinformation around irregular migration. So part of the kind of review of operations.

Q And then on the next page, 182, at the very top, it says, "In short, however, we have not yet been able to identify a false narrative that meets the threshold for departmental response."

How would you define false narrative?

A In -- so this would be false information that is leading migrants to take the journey to travel to the United States illegally.

Q And what did you think in this email was needed to meet the threshold for departmental response?

A Something that was cut-and-dry false that had no questions about it. In this case, this would be coming from a foreign entity, and that -- the other thing to keep in mind is that, often, when governments attempt to respond to disinformation, sometimes they inadvertently give more oxygen to things that aren't actually a problem.

And so, the idea here is that none of these things were also big enough to push back on, because we didn't want to actually inadvertently amplify them, if that makes sense.

[1:27 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And how would the Department have pushed back?

A Releasing good information, potentially through kind of the preexisting campaigns, like "Say No to the Coyote."

Q So would the board have kind of set guardrails or best practices on how best to assess whether a narrative is true or false, or --

A That was one of the things I had hoped to do in the future, yeah, but it was pretty far away from where we were on April 20th.

Q And so, in order to be a false narrative and meet a departmental response, it would have to be cut-and-dry false? Were you going to set best practices on how to determine if something was false, cut and dry?

A I had hoped to do that, yeah.

Q And what did you think that that would look like? Had you given that any thought?

A That would have been determined in coordination with the rest of the board. It wasn't up to me.

Q And did you have any discussions with the rest of the board about how that would go?

A Nope. Board never met, so I never met any of the members of the board either.

Q And before the board was terminated, it was paused. Do you recall that?

A I do.

Q And do you remember why the board was paused and why it was decided to pause it rather than immediately disband it, if you will?

A It was explained to me that the board would be paused so that it could be reviewed by the Homeland Security Advisory Council, and they would make a decision about how to proceed with the board.

Q Were you involved in any of the conversations surrounding the pause?

A I initially was told that the board would be disbanded and was offered that policy adviser role that I mentioned before. Then I was told actually the board would be paused, did that change my calculus at all about whether I wanted to stay? And it did not, so I still resigned.

Q Were you able to be involved in the discussion, have your voice heard? I know you've mentioned some frustration. Did you feel like your frustrations were heard?

A I did not, and I was not involved in any of those conversations.

Q And when was one of the times that you thought your frustration wasn't heard?

A I repeatedly asked and expressed my willingness to come up to Capitol Hill and talk through the concerns that lawmakers had about the board with them personally.

I repeatedly asked to be allowed to speak on the record about the board's work because it, as you have heard today, is a lot less scary than it was being characterized as. And, as the person who had unfortunately become the object of public derision, I felt that I was owed that opportunity.

I wanted to release materials, fact sheets, press releases, et cetera, about the board's work and the plans that we had. And, in fact, we did have one or two briefings with congressional staff.

And the guidance from up above was that we were to be as vague as possible, which I found very frustrating, because there were things that I have spoken to here today that I felt that we could elaborate on at that meeting, at those briefings that occurred.

Q And who was telling you to be as vague as possible?

A I think guidance was coming from elsewhere in the building, but it -- Jen Daskal did those briefings with me, and this was her guidance as well.

Q So Jen Daskal gave you that guidance, but it came from someone else. Do you know who that came from?

A I don't.

Q Were you told that it was the Secretary's decision, or advisers around the Secretary?

A I don't know for sure.

Q And how many briefings did you have?

A I believe there was one with House staff and one with Senate staff on related appropriations and authorities committees.

Q And did you ever get a sense of why you were told to be vague?

A No. That didn't make much sense to me, frankly.

Q Did you feel that the whole response from DHS was vague?

A Yes.

Q Did you ask Jen Daskal why?

A I don't believe I did. It was a pretty kind of ad hoc set of days that was very intense. And so it was kind of just what was communicated to me right before getting on the call, and I had to run with it.

Q And do you know, did Ms. Daskal share your concerns about being vague or wanting to share more information?

A I think Jen is a very cautious person. She's also a lawyer. And so she didn't want to sign us up for anything that we couldn't deliver on potentially. And that was my understanding of how she was approaching it.

I know she was very personally upset for what I went through. And, actually, she and Rob had faced similar threats, but not to the degree that I did. But I think she just had a very different stance toward public communications than I did.

Q And do you know, did anyone else share your frustrations about the rollout, whether it be Under Secretary Silvers or Ms. Vinograd?

A Under Secretary Silvers definitely shared my frustration as well. Yeah, I think he felt really bad for what happened to me.

Q Do you remember what the sum and substance of his concerns were with the rollout, if he was concerned or frustrated?

A I know Rob and I had a couple of conversations about our frustration with not being able to speak to the media. He had also been -- he volunteered himself for some of those interviews, and obviously way outranked me.

But he also was not allowed to speak, to my knowledge, and I think that was frustrating to him. But that was at the point where, as I think I mentioned before, he said, "Well, it's kind of -- it's being decided above my pay grade."

Q And so it's your understanding that Under Secretary Silvers did raise his willingness to speak on the record about the board?

A That is my understanding, yes.

Q And it's your understanding that he was told he could not?

A Yes.

Q And when were you told that the board would be terminated?

A I'm trying to think about dates here. So I resigned on Wednesday, May 18th -- 17th, 16th -- it would have been May 15th, I believe, a Sunday. Jen and Rob called me and said, "Hey, it looks like this is the way that things are going to be going. We'd like you to stay on. You know, the work is important. You could stay on as a disinformation policy adviser. Let us know what you think."

Q And during the pause in the decision to terminate, were there any efforts to change the mission of the board or restart it, to your knowledge?

A I had no communication with anybody outside of -- or anybody within DHS after May 18th.

Q And so, when you and Under Secretary Silvers were discussing your willingness to come to the Hill or speak publicly, do you know who was telling Mr. Silvers that he couldn't speak?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know who made that decision?

A No.

Q Did he ever tell you who made that decision?

A Nope. It was all a mystery to me.

Q Did you think it was a good idea to terminate the board?

A I did not.

Q And what was your thought process on the termination and the pause?

A It was clear to me during my time at DHS that coordination was something -- more coordination was something that could benefit DHS and something that could benefit the Federal Government.

In fact, I've written papers about this before as well, that coordination mechanisms, as we talked about before with the U.K. Government, are really important to responding to disinformation appropriately and to making sure that the response is effective.

And the conclusion that there was no need for a Disinformation Governance Board was, frankly, in direct contradiction to some of the issue areas that I identified as needing support during my time at DHS.

Q And I just kind of want to go to some of the decisionmakers here.

So do you know who made the ultimate decision to terminate the board?

A I do not.

Q Was it at the level of the Secretary?

A I believe that the Homeland Security Advisory Council made a recommendation to the Secretary, and he took that recommendation on board. But I will caution that I have only read about this in the press, so I know as much as you do.

Q Was there any White House involvement to your understanding?

A I have no idea.

Q And in regards to not pushing more information out publicly, not allowing Under Secretary Silvers or you to come to the Hill, do you think that was a decision made by the Secretary?

A I don't know.

Q If it was above Under Secretary Silvers' pay grade, who would -- who is above him?

A Yeah. The Secretary or potentially somebody at the White House, but I don't know how far above.

Q But it was above Secretary -- or Under Secretary Silvers' pay grade to your understanding?

A That was what he told me.

Q Okay. And how did he communicate that to you?

A In a phone call.

Q Do you remember when about that phone call was?

A It would have been the end of the week before the pause, termination of the board. So mid-May, like May 13th or 12th, maybe.

Q And what do you remember about that call?

A I called Rob because I was extremely frustrated with the continued personal attacks on me, my family, my body of work, the threats that we were under, and statements that had been made on the House floor about me. And I said that I wanted to speak to the media, and if they didn't allow me to, then I was going to consider either leaving or doing it without their sanction.

Q And I know you weren't involved in the conversations to disband the board, as you've mentioned today, but what is your understanding for why the board was disbanded? Why do you think it was disbanded?

A I really can't -- I can't speculate on the reasons that they came to this conclusion, so --

Q Do you think that you could have gotten past the blowback of the rollout of the board and done positive work with the Disinformation Governance Board?

A I think, for as long as DHS let this issue fester, it had clearly become a divining rod in politics based on the false accusations about what the board was meant to be doing. And essentially they were -- they felt that they were forced to give it up, is what my sense of the situation was. Yes.

Q And, when you say the issue, let the issue fester, was that the kind of botched rollout of the board, so to speak?

A The botched rollout and the lack of communications, efficient communications, from there on out.

Q And I know you've testified today that the work of the DGB was to help coordinate the ongoing MDM efforts at the Department. Are those efforts still ongoing to your knowledge?

A I don't have any knowledge other than what has been reported. I know there have been stories in ProPublica, for example, that have uncovered how a lot of that work has been paused since the disbandment of the board.

Q Do you think it would be wise for the Department of Homeland Security to restart something similar to the Disinformation Governance Board?

A In this political environment?

Look, I believe in efforts like this. I believe in efforts that seek to help government work better on behalf of their citizens. And at its heart that is what this effort was meant to do.

So, yes, if DHS or another Federal entity were to set up a coordinating mechanism to help the government respond to disinformation that makes Americans less safe, I would be in favor of that. I just probably wouldn't give it the name that they gave it.

Q And you don't have any work that involves interactions with DHS, I believe you said at the very start of the deposition?

A I do not.

Q During the 10 weeks that you served as the Executive Director of the board, did you communicate with anyone at the White House?

A I communicated with a few NSC personnel. And I cannot remember their names, unfortunately.

Q What was the context for those interactions?

A It was related to National Security Committee business around disinformation, so -- and I've forgotten. They've got different verticals. I think these folks were on, like, the democracy vertical, team democracy, something like that.

Q And do you remember what issue areas they worked on?

A They worked primarily on countering disinformation and hostile state influence.

Q Did you ever receive any orders or actions that you were supposed to take from the White House?

A No.

Q Did you ever communicate with anyone regarding the work of the board at the White House?

A Yes. So with those same individuals on the NSC, we talked about plans for the board just based on kind of the charter and the things that we've walked through today, kind of how to be a coordinating mechanism and how best to support DHS components.

Q So the plans that you discussed were just around how you would coordinate efforts at DHS?

A Uh-huh.

Q Did you go into any details about what your best practices may look like?

A No, because they weren't determined yet.

Q And did you ever communicate with anyone at the White House regarding MDM generally?

A I was, as I mentioned before, involved in a couple of sub-NSC convenings related to foreign interference primarily.

Q And did the NSC have any role in the Disinformation Governance Board?

A No. Just as -- ideally what would have happened if the board had continued with that would be that the board would be kind of the belly button for NSC input into DHS' counter-MDM efforts. How many buzzwords can you fit into one sentence?

[Laughter.]

Q And what other government agencies would have been interacting directly with the DGB in the ideal world?

A Anybody who had any sort of counterdisinformation remit within their portfolio.

Q And outside of DHS, did you have any regular meetings with other government agencies?

A Not regular meetings, no, that weren't organized by the NSC. Just those NSC meetings that I mentioned.

Q So were the only other government agencies that you met with at all NSC, or did you meet with other government agencies during your time with the board?

A I met with some State Department officials and someone at ODNI who had come on at a similar time period as me to work in a counterdisinformation function at ODNI.

I'm just trying to think if there was anyone else. I mean, as I mentioned before, at some of those sub-NSC meetings there were individuals from across the interagency, but I didn't have specific meetings with them.

Q And, speaking with ODNI, what did you understand was ODNI's MDM-related work?

A I believe there was some -- I'm not an expert on this, so I'm going to be paraphrasing -- there was a bill that was passed in a previous Congress about setting up a -- some sort of counterdisinformation coordinating cell within ODNI, and that person was working on that, some of that work. But I don't know the details of it.

Q And were you aware of any specific ODNI efforts?

A No.

Q Was that your only interaction with an official from ODNI?

A Yeah. And I would say it was more social than anything else. We had lunch.

Q Did you -- I know that at the top of the deposition you talked about outreach to Twitter, and Facebook reached out to you. Were there other social media companies or tech platforms that reached out to you?

A I got one email from a vice president at Substack, but we never met.

Q And you talked about a Twitter meeting that never occurred. Is that correct?

A Yep.

Q And that was because Under Secretary Silvers was going to be in the bay area?

A That's why we reached out to Twitter, yes.

Q Did he already have meetings set up with Twitter, or why was he going to be in the bay area to your understanding?

A It was unrelated to the board. I can't recall what his travel was based around. But it was a series of public engagements related to another part of his portfolio.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I'd like to enter as exhibit No. 11 a Twitter memorandum from April 28th, 2022.

Sort of skipping around here.

A So this is 11?

Q Yes, 11.

A Okay.

Q Okay. And on the last page, page 4, the page numbers are kind of towards the right there.

It says that the staff responsible for briefing memo was Ms. Jankowicz.

So did you draft this memo?

A In coordination with one other staffer who -- I guess it's probably my phone number that's blacked out. But there was another staffer involved.

Q Do you remember who was involved?

A Elizabeth Kozey.

Q And what was Ms. Kozey's role?

A She was the detailee from Policy that I mentioned before that was working to support the board.

Q Was she an attorney?

A She was not an attorney. She was a long-time civil servant from CISA.

Q And when you were kind of working to set this meeting up or interacting with Twitter, what was your understanding of who was planning to attend the meeting?

A Under Secretary Silvers and one staffer, whose name I can't recall, but who was traveling with him to the bay area.

Q One of Under Secretary Silvers' staffers?

A That's correct.

Q And did you have an understanding of who from Twitter's side would attend?

A We were hoping that Nick Pickles and Yoel Roth would attend. But this request for a meeting really never went beyond initial emails.

Q And on page 1 of the memo, under the background section, it says, "Propose that Twitter become involved in Disinformation Governance Board Analytic Exchanges on Domestic Violent Extremism and Irregular Migration."

A Uh-huh.

Q How would you define analytic exchanges?

A Yeah. So the Analytic Exchange Program is something that has been going on at DHS. It notes that CISA has an analytic exchange program as well.

This is an opportunity for working-level staff at both the industry and government sides of things to talk about things that they're seeing in their particular issue space. It's not about making recommendations of any sort. It is just an exchange of information basically.

Q So Under Secretary Silvers was going to propose that Twitter become involved so that they could be informing DHS what they were seeing? Is that what I'm understanding?

A It goes both ways. The information goes both ways. So Twitter could say, "We've been seeing these coyotes saying X, Y, and Z about smuggling people. These are narratives that you should be informed of to protect the homeland," right? That sort of thing, and vice versa.

Q Were there existing analytic exchanges that you were aware of?

A As it notes here in the memo, Twitter was involved in the CISA analytic exchange program on election security.

Q And do you know who was involved in those analytic exchanges?

A I don't know the exact members, no.

Q But it would be DHS and then the private sector that tracked --

A Outside entities, yeah.

Q Outside entities. And how would you define outside entities? Would that include tech platforms, academics, private sector institutions?

A To my knowledge, each analytic exchange has kind of a memo that governs it, and so each one has different participants. But it could involve any of the entities that you've mentioned.

Q So if the Disinformation Governance Board analytic exchanges kind of got up and running, there would have been a memo? Is that what I'm understanding?

A That's correct.

Q So these analytic exchanges never --

A Not even close.

[Laughter.]

Q Were you working with other individuals to be involved in the analytic exchanges?

A Do you mean within or outside of government?

Q Both.

A So the lawyers who were working with me were responsible for kind of creating the architecture for the analytic exchanges. We were still working on that. It was very nascent at the time.

And then I think the analytic exchanges may have gotten mentioned in very loose terms to the Global Internet Forum to Counter Terrorism. They might have been involved in the DVE-related one. And that will have been it.

Q And what do you mean by that architecture of the analytic exchanges? Can you explain that?

A Yeah. So one of the key things about these exchanges is that they have rules governing them so that no one misunderstands what they're about. They are simply an exchange of information.

So under no circumstances should there be recommendations issued, especially to the kind of outside-of-government entities. That is, like, enshrined in the rules.

They have very narrow foci. So, like, this DVE exchange, we wouldn't be able to bring up something about election security there and vice versa. That's to make sure that they don't create kind of a snowball effect and create more -- or like the semblance of impropriety where there is none.

Q And then that next bullet, it says, "Ask what types of data or information would be useful for Twitter to receive in Analytic Exchanges or other ways the Department could be helpful to Twitter's counter-MDM efforts."

A Uh-huh.

Q What was your understanding of Twitter's counter-MDM efforts?

A This would be within Twitter's policy shop to identify and respond to disinformation on the platform.

So if we go back to the Iranian example I used before, I think the idea here was to share information and say, "Okay, we've got this Iranian email chain that is trying to disenfranchise voters. Here you go." Right? Like not dictating what any platform should do, but just providing information that we might have that they do not have.

Q And the bullet, the first bullet under the background section, it says, "Note, Nick and Yoel both know DGB Executive Director Nina Jankowicz."

Did you know them from your work prior to the DGB?

A I had met them at conferences, yes.

Q At conferences? And how long had you known them for, would you say?

A I met each of them once. I met Nick Pickles once, in 2018, and Yoel once, in -- I believe it was 2020. It's in that hazy prepandemic couple of months. I think it was the beginning of 2020. But those were the only interactions we had in person.

Q And did you interact with Yoel and Nick during your time at the board?

A I did not.

Q So you didn't reach out to them regarding this meeting?

A As I testified earlier, I can't recall who sent the initial email, if I was just copied on it or if I sent the initial kind of outreach.

But other than that initial outreach about the meeting, we did not interact. And, again, I'm not even sure that was me. It might have been something that I was copied on or vice versa.

Q And earlier in the deposition you talked about Facebook reaching out in April.

Do you remember kind of who was going to be invited to attend that meeting? Or what stage were you at with that meeting?

A To my knowledge, Nathaniel Gleicher reached out to Under Secretary Silvers, who was unable to take the meeting, so he bounced it to me. And at least Sam Vinograd and Jen Daskal were going to be involved.

It was going to be a virtual meeting, because we were all in different parts of D.C. on that day. And I'm not sure who Facebook intended to bring to the meeting.

Mr. Biggs. Can I go back to that last document you had just real quick before you leave it?

[redacted] Yes, sir.

Mr. Biggs. Sorry. I thought you had more, so I was -- I didn't want to interrupt.

[redacted] That's fine.

Mr. Biggs. But I just didn't want you to leave it.

So I'm looking at the document. And this -- as I understand correctly -- it's 11, whatever it is -- the Twitter document. You prepared that with a colleague. Is that --

The Witness. As most briefing memos, yeah, it was kind of cobbled together from preexisting documents.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. And that's what I wanted to get at.

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. Biggs. Because you actually have -- you don't have policy recs and you don't have operational recs. What you do have, however, are substantive factual statements in here in various places.

So, for instance, under Ukraine, the second bullet point on page 4, it talks about, "Following actions taken by the U.S. and allies, we have seen increased instances of MDM."

And I don't know whether I'm to take it that you put that substantive statement in, that whole paragraph, or you got that from someone else or some other part. So I'm asking for clarification.

The Witness. Sure. Absolutely.

So I would say that, on page 3, the first chunk, where it says, "DHS Efforts on MDM," introduce the DGB, talk about the DGB, that's the only part of the memo that deals with the board.

The rest is talking points for the Under Secretary to update the Twitter colleagues about work that was ongoing at the Department, not something that I was personally involved in, and had been, again, kind of copied over from other briefing memos.

Mr. Biggs. That's what I want to a make sure I understand.

So you must have had interaction with other colleagues and said, "Look, Under Secretary is going to be out there, whoever is going to be out there, and I want to know what we should hit on."

They said, "We're just going to talk about Ukraine. They're going to talk about DVE."

And so you took their talking points and basically copied and pasted it in here? Is that fair to say?

The Witness. So the staffer that was going to be accompanying him on the visit called me up, said, "Hey, we'd like to set up a meeting with Twitter. Can you put together a notional agenda and talkers for us in case the meeting goes forward? We'd like to introduce the board. We want to talk about public-private partnerships, and we want to talk about current activities." And she listed off a couple.

And then DHS has a SharePoint, so all of the documents are there. I grabbed what I thought was relevant, as did my colleague Liz.

Mr. Biggs. I see. Okay. Thank you very much.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

BY [redacted]

Q And going back to the meeting with Facebook, what did you understand the context of that meeting was going to be?

A It was going to be a meet and greet.

Q Did you know, was there a plan to ask them to get involved with the analytic exchanges as well?

A It was -- I don't even think we had an agenda for the meeting. And it got moved a million times because of competing schedules. So we didn't have a solid plan beyond saying, "Nina is at DHS now. Here is kind of the broad framework for the board. What's up with you?"

Q And you also said that you received an email from Substack. Is that correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q And they reached out to you?

A That's correct.

Q And do you remember what they wanted to discuss?

A Again, I think it was kind of just a meet and greet, get on the radar sort of situation.

Q Did you ever go forward with the meeting?

A We did not.

Q Did you have -- did you know anyone at Substack?

A I believe the woman who emailed me knew a mutual friend of mine.

Q And do you remember who that mutual friend was?

A The mutual friend?

Q Yeah. Was it like a DHS official, or --

A No. It was a personal friend.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to enter an email from May 2nd, 2022, between Under Secretary Silvers; you, Jankowicz; and another DHS official. This will be exhibit No. 12.

Just take your time to review.

A Thanks. Okay.

Q So on May 2nd, 2022, Under Secretary Silvers forwarded you an email from a technology company requesting a meeting to discuss the board.

As part of the forwarding message, he said, quote, "What have you been doing re:

requests from platforms?"

Do you recall receiving this email?

A Yeah, vaguely.

Q Do you know the company that was referred to in this email?

A I mean, looking at it, it looks like it's probably Google, but I don't know for sure.

Q Do you know if the meeting ever took place?

A Not while I was at DHS, it did not.

Q And in the email from the company, which may or may not be Google, it says, "Hi Rob and KelliAnn. I hope that this finds you both well! With the recent announcement of the misinformation, disinformation governance board, we would welcome the opportunity to meet and discuss the goals and how we can be most helpful in achieving them."

What did you understand would be a helpful role for a tech company such as this one?

A It's a good question.

I think, again, especially at these early stages, we were just in the beginnings of meeting and greeting and saying, "This is what we hope to achieve. Would you like to potentially be involved in these analytic exchanges?" if they had gone forward.

But it's very speculative, and so I can't really say what would have been discussed at a meeting with maybe Google.

Q Yeah. And what did you -- why were these tech companies reaching out? You know, Substack reached out. Facebook reached out. This tech company reached out.

Why do you think they were reaching out?

A Speculation. Again, I'm not in their heads, and certainly I've been extremely critical of those tech platforms throughout my career.

But I think there is a degree of reticence about, in particular, foreign disinformation and the ways that foreign disinformation has been allowed to flourish on those platforms, especially back in 2016.

And there is an idea that these exchanges of information between government and social media platforms can help both entities stay ahead of the curve and achieve more together.

Q And with the charter and the work that you were doing with the rollout and getting the board up and running, did you see any sort of relationship between the DGB and tech platforms?

A Well, I think in the context of the analytic exchanges that was what was envisioned. And, again, those would be very narrow, very bounded, and very driven by specific threats that we saw.

Q Would the DGB have put into place any guidelines, or was it contemplated that the DGB would put any guidelines in place regarding content moderation?

A Absolutely not. That was not something that I saw as within the DGB purview. And certainly these platforms are private entities and can enforce their content moderation guidelines and make them as they see fit.

Q And in response to the Under Secretary's message, on the first page here, you say, "I haven't gotten any from the big folks yet."

A Uh-huh.

Q What did you mean by "big folks"?

A Yeah. Facebook, Twitter -- Facebook and Twitter basically.

Q Okay. So to put this in context, this was before the outreach from Facebook?

A So no. The outreach from Facebook would have been earlier. This is from kind of in the aftermath of the board announcement.

Q Okay.

A I hadn't gotten any outreach from Twitter and Facebook.

Q And you said that that call with this tech company never took place, to your knowledge?

A Correct.

Q Did you interact with any other tech companies while working for the board?

A Not to my knowledge, no.

Q Did you ever interact with any tech companies regarding MDM?

A During my time at the board?

Q Yes.

A Other than the meetings that we have discussed that never occurred, no.

Q To your knowledge, were any other DHS employees that were detailed to work on the board taking meetings with tech companies?

A They were not.

Q Do you know if Under Secretary Silvers or Ms. Daskal or Ms. Vinograd had any meetings?

A Not -- I -- they might have had meetings that weren't related to the board. But if there was a board-related meeting, I would have been there.

Q And to the extent that there were interactions between the DGB and tech companies, as you've said, it would be more of an exchange of information? Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And that's what you foresaw?

A Uh-huh.

Q That there would be no role for the DGB and telling them what to moderate?

A Absolutely not.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 2:07.

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you. Again, I know it's been a long day.

You know, we've been talking a lot about disinformation and DHS' role. And I think there is some kind of baseline things that we never got established. So I want to go back, take a step back.

You've been publicly referred to as an expert in disinformation, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you've published two books on it? Is that right?

A That's correct. Yeah.

Q Okay. And how many articles do you think?

A Probably about a hundred in different formats, yeah.

Q Okay. All right. So you -- I think we can stipulate that you are an expert in this area.

So talk about the analytic exchanges.

Why is DHS concerned about disinformation?

A I think we have seen a number of areas that fall within DHS' portfolio. We've named many of them today -- election security, irregular migration, domestic violent extremism -- which, by the way, is that third pillar I could not remember before -- DVE, disasters -- that all have elements of disinformation and falsehoods that people are using for -- often for profit, right? The coyotes who are smuggling people are using them for profit. The folks who are trying to scam people out of their disaster relief are doing so because they can make money from it.

And I think that should be pretty anathema to most Americans. And it, frankly, makes Americans less safe. And that is why DHS is concerned.

Q And what about foreign disinformation in particular? Does that also make Americans less safe?

A Yeah. I think not only does it make Americans less safe, it makes us vulnerable to foreign interference. But it also often deprives people of their democratic rights. It either encourages them to stay home and not vote, or it puts false information out there so that they're misled about their decisions at the voting booth.

And I think every American should be concerned about foreign entities that are interfering in our election process. And of course CISA, that's a part of their mandate.

Q And when was CISA created? Do you know?

A CISA was created in the Trump administration, I believe.

Q Okay. And that would have been under Secretary Nielsen?

A Yes. And Christopher Krebs was the first head of CISA.

Q Okay. And do you -- you don't remember when the actual bill passed that established CISA, do you?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

Okay. We talked a fair amount in the first -- or, sorry, in the hour we just went through -- about what's been described as the botched rollout from the DHS perspective.

I want to look a little bit about the external forces that were helping to drive that.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I want to start with April 27th, which was the day that the board was actually rolled out, correct?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q So the board was first announced in a April 27th, 2022, Politico Playbook blurb, right?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q Okay. And I want to actually introduce that blurb into the record.

A Okay.

Q That will be -- oh, we are -- what exhibit are we on? Twelve, maybe?

Mr. Herman. I believe 13.

[redacted] Thirteen.

[redacted] Thirteen.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And it's on -- this is -- obviously this is, I think, an email newsletter, and so it all appears as one page on the screen. But for our printed off purposes, I'm going to look at page 10. We've actually highlighted the blurb here.

So it says -- and have you -- you saw this -- you've seen this before?

A Yes.

Q Okay. It says, "DHS is standing up a new Disinformation Governance Board to coordinate countering misinformation related to homeland security, focused specifically on irregular migration and Russia. Nina Jankowicz will head the board as Executive Director. She previously was a disinformation fellow at the Wilson Center, advised the Ukrainian Foreign Ministry as part of the Fulbright Public Policy Fellowship and oversaw Russia and Belarus programs at the National Democratic Institute."

A Uh-huh.

Q In your opinion, was this three-sentence blurb an accurate description of the board?

A It was accurate, if vague.

Q Right.

A Yeah.

Q So it probably could have been -- maybe potentially could have been longer, but there is nothing in here that's inaccurate?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So this was released at 6:58 a.m., and then, I think, updated at 7:39 a.m.

A Uh-huh.

Q Within a few hours that afternoon an individual named Jack Posobiec started tweeting about the board.

A Uh-huh.

Q Are you familiar with Mr. Posobiec?

A I am.

Q Okay. What's your understanding of who he is?

A He is a conservative commentator, is the nicest thing I can say about him.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I'm going to introduce as exhibit 14 a June 10th, 2017, New York Times article entitled "A Pro-Trump Conspiracy Theorist, a False Tweet and a Runaway Story."

So we've highlighted the first couple sentences here, and I'm just going to read them into the record quickly.

It says Mr. Posobiec "had his Twitter sights set on James B. Comey.

"A pro-Trump activist notorious for his amateur sleuthing into red herrings like the 'Pizzagate' hoax and a conspiracy theory involving the murder of a Democratic aide, Mr. Posobiec wrote on May 17th that Mr. Comey, the recently ousted FBI director, had 'said under oath that Trump did not ask him to halt any investigation.'

"It mattered little that Mr. Comey had said no such thing. The tweet quickly ricocheted through the ecosystem of fake news and disinformation on the far right, where Trump partisans like Mr. Posobiec have intensified their efforts to sow doubt about the legitimacy of expanding investigations into Mr. Trump's associates' ties into Russia."

And then the article goes on to describe how Mr. Posobiec's inaccurate and misleading tweet spurred a, quote, "alternative first draft of history" in conservative media about what Mr. Comey said.

A Uh-huh.

Q So this is an example in the past of Mr. Posobiec taking something out of context and spinning it and making it into, quote, "alternative draft of history," right?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. And I also want to introduce into the record an exhibit -- as exhibit 15 -- an article from the Southern Poverty Law Center summarizing past anti-Semitic statements and pro-White nationalist statements from Mr. Posobiec.

We actually have two articles. I want to introduce them as 15 and 16?

[Jankowicz Exhibits No. 15 and 16

Were marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The first one's dated July 8th, 2020. It's entitled "Twitter Gave Free Rein for Jack Posobiec to Publish Anti-Semitic Hate and Disinformation."

The second is dated July 8th, 2020. It's entitled "Jack Posobiec's Rise Tied to the White Supremacist Movement."

And I'll give you a second to look through these, and then I'm going to ask if they're generally consistent with your understanding of his background to the extent that you're familiar with him.

Are those generally consistent with your understanding of his background?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And they're long articles, so I'm not going to read them into the record, but they'll be available as part of the full record.

So Mr. Posobiec tweeted about you several times on April 27th. Are you familiar with those tweets?

A Yes, vaguely.

Q Okay.

A Uh-huh.

Q I'm going to walk through them. And I know they may be a little offensive, so I apologize.

A Yep.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So his first tweet was posted at 2:13 p.m. on April 27th, 2022. And we will mark this as exhibit 17.

Pretty straightforward. It says, "Breaking: Biden Admin Department of Homeland Security to Create a 'Disinformation Governance Board' dedicated to 'countering misinformation.'"

Were you aware of this when it was posted?

A Yes, I was.

Q So he then moved on to target you directly.

A That's correct.

Q So we're going to introduce as exhibit 18 his 2:20 p.m. tweet. It's a photograph of you appearing on what appears to be an MSNBC show.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q It says, "The DHS board will be headed by Nina Jankowicz, who once claimed militarized Trump supporters would show up at the polls with weapons to intimidate voters."

Are you -- were you familiar with this tweet when it was posted or shortly thereafter?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Was Mr. Posobiec's statement that you "once claimed militarized Trump supporters would show up at the polls with weapons to intimidate voters" accurate?

A No.

Q Okay. And there is a photo in here. It looks like it's showing you on an appearance at an MSNBC show hosted by Ali Velshi. The caption's a little faded out, so it looks like, "how to lose information," something?

A Uh-huh.

Q Do you recall this appearance?

A I'm not sure what the specific appearance was, but I think the chyron probably says something about my book. That's the titled of my book, "How to Lose the Information War."

Q Okay. And so to the best of your knowledge, and realizing that you might not know the appearance, did it have anything to do with what Mr. Posobiec wrote in his tweet?

A I'm not sure. I'm not sure.

Q Okay. He then posted another tweet at 2:24 p.m., again targeting you. We're going to introduce that as exhibit 19.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 19

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q It reads, "Jankowicz is also known for forming a Harry Potter 'wizard rock band' known as The Moaning Myrtles."

A Yes. It's okay.

Q What was your reaction to this tweet?

A I mean, I wasn't sure how what I did when I was a teenager was relevant to my professional career. Clearly Mr. Posobiec was trying to embarrass and undermine me.

Little does he know that people who have backgrounds in musical theater are very hard to embarrass.

[Laughter.]

So it didn't work.

Q But your impression was that he posted this basically as an attempt to embarrass you, you said?

A A gotcha moment, yeah.

Q Okay. He then posted another tweet. He referenced a tweet you posted in October 2020. I'm going to introduce this as exhibit 20.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 20

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q He said, "Here is Nina in 2020." And then he posted a tweet that you posted in 2020.

Did he take this out of context?

A He did. So this was during the Presidential -- one of the Presidential debates, and I was live-tweeting the debate. These are the words of both candidates, Biden and Trump, kind of a summary of what the candidates were saying.

So then candidate Biden was talking about the letter that 50 former national security officials signed, and Trump responded: Russia, Russia, Russia.

And then after this happened people believed that I had made some sort of pronouncement about the content of the laptop, when I had done no such thing.

Q And are you aware that he actually just used a screenshot of your tweet, so he didn't actually even link to your tweet so that people could get the context? He just posted this out there?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so that probably helped propel some of the false narrative, right?

A To some extent. I don't believe that a lot of people do a lot of research when they're looking around Twitter threads. But yes.

Q So then he posted two more tweets, and we're going to introduce them just to have the full context.

A Uh-huh.

[Jankowicz Exhibits No. 21 and 22

Were marked for identification.]

[redacted] He tweeted at 2:47 p.m. a summary of your biography. And he doesn't actually cite the source. And he says the comment -- he has the comment, "Jankowicz formerly worked as an advisor to the Ukrainian government under a Fulbright-Clinton scholarship (sic)."

And at 3:29 p.m., he tweeted the Politico announcement with the quote, "What could go wrong?"

The Witness. These are exhibits? Were you introducing this?

[redacted] Twenty-one and twenty-two.

Mr. Herman. Twenty-one and twenty-two.

[redacted] Twenty-one and twenty-two, yeah.

So shortly thereafter, Ms. Hemingway -- do you know -- are you familiar with Mollie Hemingway?

The Witness. I'm not.

[redacted] Mollie Hemingway is a -- the editor-in-chief of The Federalist. She's a conservative journalist. And she's the author of the book "Rigged: How the Media, Big Tech, and the Democrats Seized Our Elections."

The Witness. Okay.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 23

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q After -- in the middle of Posobiec's tweet thread about you, she posted a comment in response to his very first tweet. It said, "Ministry of Truth."

Have you seen this tweet before?

A I don't believe I have.

Q So we looked back. I think this was the first time that that was -- are you familiar with the words "Ministry of Truth" being used prior to 3:16 p.m. on April 27th, 2022, in regard to the Disinformation Governance Board?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. So later in that day, just to lay out everything that happened on April 27th, Mr. Posobiec tweeted that Ministry of Truth was the number one trend in the United States after news the Biden admin launched a Homeland Security "Disinformation Board."

This is going to be exhibit 24.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 24

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So we've kind of laid out the story here of how all of this goes down. Could you summarize in your words what was happening on kind of conservative social media on the day of the rollout?

A I would say that a lot of baseless speculation and lying was occurring with an intent to undermine the board effort and also to specifically put me in the crosshairs of individuals who wished me harm.

Q All right. And, in fact, are you aware that the next day Mr. Jordan actually brought up your name during a -- during testimony -- during Secretary Mayorkas' appearance before the Judiciary Committee?

A I am.

Q And are you aware of whether the statements he said that day are accurate or not?

A There have been a lot of statements that Chairman Jordan has made about me, so I'd have to look at those specific statements.

Q But you're aware that he made statements about you?

A Yes.

Q Are you aware that he tweeted about you the next -- that afternoon?

A I am aware. I don't know the content of the tweet. But I know he started to tweet.

Q Was there any effort by Mr. Jordan or his staff to reach out to you that day to verify the facts about the Disinformation Governance Board before he spoke with Mr. Mayorkas or before he tweeted?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. And so what was out there, though, was this spin in conservative media, right?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And then, sometime later on, you got a letter from Mr. Jordan, right?

A I believe in May, yes.

Q Okay. And do you know if the statements made in that letter were accurate?

A I believe most of the letters that we received from Congress, from the congressional Republicans, included allegations or misstatements of fact about the board, about my previous statements, and about my work.

Q And are you aware that at some point in May Ms. Boebert, who is a Member of Congress, introduced a bill to dismantle the Disinformation Governance Board?

A I am aware of that.

Q And that was before you -- before the board was actually paused, right?

A Yes.

Q And are you aware that Mr. Jordan was actually at the press conference announcing that bill?

A I was not aware.

Mr. Ivey. Could I ask --

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Ivey. -- did the death threats and calls that you started getting start happening at around the time of the Posobiec text messages and Twitter and as well as Mr. Jordan's comments?

The Witness. It was within days, so -- I'm a disinformation researcher, right? It was clear which way this was going by that evening. That evening, my husband and I purchased a security camera for the front of our house.

By the next day, I had engaged a private security consultant, because I didn't believe that DHS was doing the work necessary to look at the dark web and kind of respond to the threats, and I wanted to be aware of them.

And by that Friday -- so the board was announced on a Wednesday -- by that Friday, that private security consultant had told me that I -- it was his estimation that I should leave my home.

Mr. Ivey. So you called a private security firm on the -- was that the 27th?

The Witness. I think it was the next day, the 28th.

Mr. Ivey. The next day?

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Ivey. Okay.

The Witness. So, within that 48-hour period he made the estimation that I should leave my home and go somewhere that was kind of off grid.

Mr. Ivey. I think you testified earlier that sometimes if you -- sometimes statements get made and the government needs to be careful about how it responds, because it could give it a bigger platform and more oxygen.

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Ivey. Yeah. Is that your sense about what happened here?

The Witness. I'm not sure, Congressman. I think this was personally -- my estimation is that it was more of a case of the government not being able to respond rapidly.

I think there was a desire to respond. The wagons were circling, and they just kept circling and circling and circling, and there was just not -- nobody -- nobody felt they could -- they could call it and get a response out there. It was less about giving it oxygen.

At this point Mr. Posobiec has millions of Twitter followers. It was clear -- and there is a clear pipeline often between folks like him and cable news networks like FOX. And so I thought it was clear that that was going to be on TV by the next day.

Mr. Ivey. Uh-huh. And so just the timeline -- and I'm looking back for one of these exhibits.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Ivey. So the announcement is made by Homeland Security about the board.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Ivey. And that's on -- is that the 26th?

The Witness. 27th.

Mr. Ivey. 27th. Later on the same day, Mr. Posobiec starts putting out these statements.

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Ivey. And was it the 28th that Mr. Jordan made comments at the hearing?

[redacted] April 28th, correct.

Mr. Ivey. April 28th? And then on the -- did you get the home security on the 28th or the 29th?

The Witness. Security camera on the 27th, private consultant on the 28th, yes.

Mr. Ivey. Okay. And then I think the statement of facts is what I'm looking for. Yeah. Fact sheet. That was released on May 2nd.

The Witness. Yep. Took way too long.

Mr. Ivey. Yeah. So the fact sheet came out too late.

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Ivey. But the fact sheet was necessitated by the false statements that had been made leading up to that point.

The Witness. I would say that the fact sheet should have been released when we made the announcement. I don't -- again, I can't speculate as to why they decided not to release the fact sheet and then we went on a 4-day editing spree after that.

But, yes, they decided to put the fact sheet out, and by that point the vacuum was so large that it barely made a dent in it.

Mr. Ivey. Okay. And the vacuum that they left was filled by Mr. Posobiec and others?

The Witness. And many other commentators, Members of Congress, and influencers.

Mr. Ivey. Okay. And some of the Members of Congress we just talked about, Mr. Jordan and Ms. Boebert, I guess?

The Witness. Yes. And I consulted my notes, and Mr. Issa indeed did make a lot of statements about me despite his memories to the contrary.

Mr. Ivey. And that was during this timeframe?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Ivey. All right.

Go ahead.

[redacted] Okay.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 25

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q On May 12th Mr. Jordan posted a tweet that I'm going to introduce as exhibit 25, and we're actually introducing an archived copy of this for reasons that I'll explain in a minute.

A Twenty-five?

Q Twenty-five. We just doubled the number of exhibits.

[Laughter.]

Have you seen this tweet before?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And, before we get into discussing it, are you familiar with the Internet Archive?

A I am.

Q Can you explain briefly what the Internet Archive is, or what your understanding is?

A Sure. The Internet Archive, sometimes known as the Wayback Machine, allows any individual to capture essentially a moment in time on the internet. If that web page is to change in the future, it will have captured it based on that date.

Q Okay. So on the tweet that I just introduced or the exhibit that I just introduced, see in the upper right-hand corner where it says May 12th, 2022, and that's in yellow, highlighted in black?

A Yes.

Q What's your understanding of what that means?

A That this is what this tweet looked like on May 12th, 2022.

Q Okay. So we've introduced the archived version of this because it references a Disclose.tv post --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- which is no longer in existence. So I'm actually going to introduce now the tweet. It's still up, but as it looks now, just so we have a complete record, and we'll introduce this as 26.

Okay. And this will be 26.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 26

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So you can see here that it says the tweet's unavailable. It's been removed. So going back to the version as it existed on May 12th, 2022, Mr. Jordan tweeted,

"1984." And then he has a link to a video on a Disclose.tv lead.

Are you familiar with this video?

A Yes.

Q And can you describe -- it's a -- how long is it, the version in the Disclose.tv link?

A It is one minute long. Would you like me to describe kind of the contents of it?

Q Sure.

A This is a video of me discussing the then nascent Birdwatch program on Twitter. I was asked a question in a discussion that I was appearing in about what Birdwatch is. And now it's known as Community Notes.

This is an entity where -- or a program through which individuals on Twitter can add context to misleading tweets.

I, in order to kind of simplify the concept for the individuals with whom I was speaking, I said that they could edit the tweets.

And this video was stripped of context. It was -- my remarks were cut short. It was stripped of its time in which it took place, which had been earlier. It was way earlier than my joining the board, January 2021.

And it was presented as if it was my current beliefs, not a description of a program that Twitter had put into place, and that it was something that I wanted, when, indeed, actually, further on in the video, I actually criticized the program.

Q So is it fair to say the one-minute video that Mr. Jordan linked to just made it sound that you were endorsing editing tweets?

A Correct. I would refer to it as a manipulated video.

Q Okay. And the actual full context, do you know how long the actual conversation was it was taken from? Was it more than an hour, for example?

A I believe it was at least an hour long.

Q Okay. And immediately before the section -- so the one minute of you talking about this product, immediately before that, was it clear that somebody had asked you a question that you were responding to?

A It was clear in the longer version of the video, yes.

Q Okay. And what Mr. Jordan posted was manipulated. It removed that section.

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And, in fact, at this point the original host of that video has taken it down?

A Oh, yeah. I'm not aware of that.

Q Okay.

A It's possible that that happened.

Q Yeah. So the current version of the tweet shows that the tweet -- that the video has been taken down.

A Oh, this, yeah.

Q Yeah.

A Okay.

Q So Mr. Jordan relied on this kind of manipulated video to say "1984," right?

A Uh-huh.

Q That's the comment he made.

What's your takeaway from that? Do you think that was an honest assessment of your words at that conference?

A No, I don't believe so. It was an attempt to scaremonger people into thinking that I wanted to edit their tweets or add context to tweets, and it fit with the narrative that I was going to be an all-purpose arbiter of truth, which couldn't have been farther from the truth.

Q And did anybody on -- from Mr. Jordan's staff ever reach out to you to apologize for posting a manipulated video of you?

A They did not.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 27

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And I actually, just to close out this line, I want to introduce as exhibit 27 an AP article. It's dated May 14th, 2022, just 2 days after Mr. Jordan posted his tweet. It says, "Old comments by disinformation board director misrepresented online."

I'm going to ask you to review and then ask if this kind of accurately assesses the misstatements in the video -- or the way the video misrepresented what you said, I guess.

Does that accurately represent kind of what we just talked through, the way your words were manipulated?

A It does.

Q Okay.

I want to move on to another tweet, and I apologize for, like, putting you awash in paper here.

A It's okay.

Q Mr. Gaetz posted a tweet on May 16th, 2022, that I'm going to introduce as exhibit 28.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 28

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And this links to an article that we'll introduce as exhibit 29.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 29

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Have you seen this tweet before?

[2:37 p.m.]

The Witness. I think I have, yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And are you familiar with the Revolver article?

A Unfortunately, I am.

Q Okay. So what -- can you summarize briefly what the article, the Revolver article says?

A So it is a conspiracy theory that alleges I have been involved with entities that seek to censor independent thought throughout the West broadly.

Q And --

A Although it's hard to state --

Q Right.

A -- because it's a long and meandering thing.

Q And the article refers to the Integrity Initiative. Do you think that conspiracy theory about the Integrity Initiative is true in your experience?

A It is not true. And I'll just testify under oath that, although my name appears on a spreadsheet, I have never had any sort of interaction with the Integrity Initiative. I happened to be, I guess, on a mailing list.

Q Okay. And that was going to be my question. So the article is not an accurate representation of any work that you've done or any role that you've played?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And -- but Mr. Gaetz linked to this in his tweet, and he posted, Oh, my, as his statement. What's your interpretation of the meaning of that?

A Again, I think this is more scare mongering and incitement against me. And I would say also that the editor-in-chief and kind of, I believe, the author of this article is someone who has, even prior to my government service, incited pretty severe misogynistic and anti-Semitic hate against me, and I believe he has a relationship with Mr. Gaetz in the past.

Q Okay. And so, what was your reaction to Mr. Gaetz amplifying this -- this misinformation or this -- could we call it misinformation? Is that dis --

A I would say it's disinformation.

Q Okay. What was your reaction to Mr. Gaetz amplifying this disinformation about you online?

A I wasn't surprised, because, again, Mr. Gaetz has had a relationship with Mr. Beattie, who runs Revolver, which is known for the conspiracy theories that they spread. And it was just another conspiracy theory in the very well-stocked quiver that the GOP was using during this time to target me and the work at the board.

Q Okay. So when we talked earlier about kind of the bungled rollout of the plan, it was happening in the environment of these conspiracy theories and the scare mongering being amplified, right?

A Yes.

Q Do you think that had an impact on how DHS was able to respond to, you know, the -- what you -- what we've referred to as the bungled rollout?

A Absolutely. I mean, I still wouldn't excuse the way that DHS chose to respond, but I think the environment was extremely hostile.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 30

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And the last tweet I'm going to introduce, we'll introduce it as exhibit 30. This is a tweet from Mr. Jordan on May 18, 2022, when the board was dismantled or after the board was dismantled. It's -- it retweets or reposts a Washington Post reporter -- or, I'm sorry, a FOX News reporter saying that the board has been dismantled, and Mr. Jordan says, huge win for free speech.

Were you aware of this tweet when it was posted?

A Yes.

Q Okay. What was your reaction to this?

A I actually believe that it is not a win for free speech. I think that, you know, without the board and activities to put guardrails on certain activities that are being undertaken in the Federal Government that I -- I'm worried about what a potential other administration might do with powers like those that -- that DHS or other agencies have.

And my -- as I've testified, my desire was to put those guardrails on. So it was sad for me, but it was also not surprising because Chairman Jordan was actually one of the first people to spread disinformation and lie about my past statements, so it was expected that he would react this way.

Q Do you think this was any type of a kind of a claim of victory by Mr. Jordan that his efforts had come to fruition and he'd taken the board down?

A Absolutely. We saw not only Representative Jordan celebrating, but certainly Representative Boebert. I believe she posted a picture of the board dead and buried, which itself is a bit of a dog whistle. And other members of the GOP were also celebrating the dissolution of this working group.

Q Okay.

Mr. Ivey. I was curious, you mentioned earlier about an advisory council?

The Witness. Uh-huh.

Mr. Ivey. And that -- I think you mentioned Jaime Gorelick, and was that Chertoff?

The Witness. Chertoff, yeah.

Mr. Ivey. And what was the context of that? They had a connection with your board in some way?

The Witness. No, no real connection with the board, no. The Homeland Security Advisory Council was -- is, to my knowledge, an advisory council made up of people from different political parties that works with the Secretary to kind of advise him on broad issues. When the uproar about the board began based on these falsehoods, the Secretary and his advisors decided that the advisory council would advise him on the fate of the board. But I never, during my time at DHS, met with anybody on the council.

Mr. Ivey. And is it your understanding that they advised dissolving the board?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Ivey. Okay. Did they have any role or decision-making with respect to the board prior to that, to your knowledge?

The Witness. They did not.

Mr. Ivey. Okay. That's it for me.

[redacted] Thank you. We can go off the record.

BY [redacted]

Q We'll go back on the record. It's 2:51 p.m.

Ms. Jankowicz, do you understand that you're here under subpoena?

A Yes.

Q And do you understand that you're required to answer questions today?

A Yes.

Q Where do you currently work?

A I work at the Center for Information Resilience.

Q And what's your position with the Center for Information Resilience?

A I'm the vice president for U.S. operations.

Q And it's been publicly reported that in that position, you have registered under the Foreign Agents Registration Act. Is that true?

A Again, I'm not sure how that is pertinent to the proceedings today.

Q Do you refute the public reporting?

A I am going to stand on my objection and not answer the question.

Q So you're not going to answer the question --

A That's correct.

Q -- even though you're required to answer questions from Congress?

A We're required to answer questions pertinent to the subject of the committee, and I'm not sure how my current employment today is relative to the activities of the disinformation board last year.

Q And are you aware that on the Center for Information Resilience website, it says that the Center receives funding from the U.K. Government, the U.S. State Department, USAID, and Australia's Department for Foreign Affairs? Do you refute that?

A I don't refute, but I also don't understand the pertinence to the inquiry.

Q Are you aware that that's listed on their website?

A Sure.

Q And I am going to enter the May 5, 2022 letter that the House Judiciary Committee GOP sent to you, and that'll be Exhibit Number 31. Take your time to review.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 31

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Jankowicz, did you ever respond to this letter?

A We drafted responses, but it was up to the Department to send them, and that was not something that I was able to push forward.

Q Do you know if the Department sent those responses?

A I do not.

Q And you said last hour that there were some inaccuracies in the letter?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So we're going to go paragraph by paragraph here. So on April 27, 2022, Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas testified that the Biden administration had established a so-called Disinformation Governance Board to combat alleged disinformation and misinformation.

According to news reports, which you acknowledged on Twitter you will lead the board as its executive director, this board is un-American, undemocratic, and a dangerous escalation of the Biden administration's embrace of government-endorsed censorship. In addition, judging from your past statements, Americans cannot and should not trust you with your new-found authority to act as the Biden administration's arbiter of the truth.

What do you perceive as inaccurate?

A Well, I appreciate the opportunity to lay this out for you. So the board was not un-American, it was not anti-democratic, and it had nothing to do with censorship, as I have testified over and over and over again today. It was a coordination mechanism, within the Department of Homeland Security, to make sure that the Department was doing its work in a way that comported with American civil rights, civil liberties, and privacy.

I had no operational authority or ability to act as an all-purpose arbiter of truth, and I would not have taken the job if that had been the case. In fact, I would've spoken out against it.

Q And on May 5, 2022, at that time frame we had the May 2, 2022, fact sheet. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you were being told by DHS to be vague in congressional briefings at that time. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you were being told that you couldn't come to the Hill to explain what the board was about. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q So the information that we were operating on was the fact sheet. Is that correct?

A The information that you were operating on is the fact sheet, and frankly, the fact sheet refutes a lot of the allegations that are in this letter.

Q And so, the next paragraph is, "The Biden administration has shown that it has, at best, a tenuous relationship with the truth. For example, President Biden has repeatedly and falsely asserted that facts about Hunter Biden's business dealings would correct Ukrainian and Communist Party linked Chinese nationals or Russian disinformation.

"President Biden made these assertions despite an independent Senate investigation substantiating many of the allegations. The New York Post has similarly reported on these dealings for years. And the New York Times and the Washington Post have more recently confirmed much of the original reporting."

Do you refute that the New York Times and Washington Post confirmed the original reporting?

A I don't know the specific articles that are talking about this, but this is -- has nothing to do with me, so I'm not going to respond to that paragraph.

Q But you responded to tweets from Mr. -- I'm forgetting his name right now -- Mr. Posobiec that were in relation to your October 2020 tweets regarding Hunter Biden last hour. Is that correct?

A I didn't respond to his tweets specifically. I responded to the mischaracterization of my own words.

Q And so, in this paragraph it talks about how on October 22, 2020, the same day as the tweet that was introduced by my colleague last hour, you argued that the laptop story was a fairy tale about the laptop repair shop.

A That's a mischaracterization of my statements. And also, I'm not sure how my statements prior to my appointment as executive director of the board more than a year prior have anything to do with my conduct during the time when I was at the board. And I am searching for somewhere here your letter to us. Where is it? Not this one. Maybe it's this one? No, this is the subpoena.

There is a letter which you said that you would only be asking me about my statements as a government official, and I -- this was, again, more than a year prior to my joining the board, expressing my First Amendment rights, so not sure how it's pertinent.

Q But prior to being named executive director of the Disinformation Governance Board, you worked on disinformation, correct?

A Yeah, that's correct.

Q And so in 2020 you worked on disinformation. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. I'm going to enter as exhibit No. 32 your October 22, 2020, tweet.

A Exhibit?

Mr. Herman. Thirty-two.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 32

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is number 32. So the tweet states: Not to mention that the emails don't need to be altered to be part of an influence campaign. Voters deserve the context but a fairly tale -- fairy tale -- about a laptop repair shop.

[redacted] I think you misread that. Could you read that again? I think you misread it.

BY [redacted]

Q Yep. Not to mention that the emails don't need to be altered to be part of an influence campaign. Voters deserve that context, not a fairly (sic) tale about a laptop repair shop, correct? And you remember tweeting this?

A Yeah.

Q And then in the next paragraph of the May 5, 2022, letter, it states, "You have also pushed left-wing disinformation about the so-called Steele dossier, the false and tawdry set of allegations about President Trump generated and pushed by Democrat operatives during the 2016 election cycle.

"On April 22, 2020, you promoted the false narrative that the Steele dossier began as a Republican opposition research project. In fact, it was a Hillary Clinton's" -- "it was Hillary Clinton's campaign and the Democratic National Committee that paid Fusion GPS beginning in April 2016 for research that eventually became the basis for the dossier.

"You later promoted an interview with Steele that you described as providing some great historical context about the evolution of disinfo. You also promoted other theories, for instance, about disclosures made by then-director of national intelligence John Ratcliffe that turned out to be false."

Do you refute that on April 22, 2020, you tweeted about the Steele dossier?

A Once again, pertinence. We agreed ahead of time that we were not going to discuss my statements prior to joining the board.

[redacted] We didn't have that agreement. I mean, we sent you a letter on Friday. I can read it.

Mr. Ivey. I think the line she's referencing is in the March 1 letter?

[redacted] Yeah. But, I mean, we don't -- this committee's letter from Friday, April 7th, says the committee is in receipt of your letter dated March 24th, in which you raise several subjects that you and your client -- this is, of course, directed to your lawyer -- claim were not pertinent to the committee's stated purpose.

As a general practice, the committee does not pre-negotiate or disclose in advance its specific deposition questions. Moreover, the committee does not agree with your assertion that specific subjects addressed in your letter are not relevant to the inquiry.

And these -- I mean, this question flows from, you know, the letters we've written, so clearly, that's, you know -- we've telegraphed it. We have an interest in these things.

Mr. Ivey. Well, let me read this language from the March 1 letter in the second paragraph: The references in that letter to your previous statements pertained to your untested commitment to civil liberties as a governmental official -- which is in italics -- in your then-new role as executive director of the so-called Disinformation Governance Board, and concerns that the board would misuse its official authority to censor speech under the pretext of addressing disinformation. Contrary to your attorney's representation, the committee's interest in obtaining documents and testimony concerns your actions as a government employee -- in italics -- as we articulated in our letter of February 16, 2023.

[redacted] Right. But these -- you know, the information contained in the tweets and in our letter, I mean, forms the whole backdrop of this matter.

The Witness. And if I may, [redacted] the entire backdrop of this matter is based on lies, as I've testified over and over and over again. The board had nothing to do with arbitrating truth, and therefore, my expressions of my First Amendment rights as an American citizen have nothing to do with the board's activities.

[redacted] Okay. I mean, we'll ask the questions. You can answer them or you cannot, and we'll go forward.

The Witness. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q On April 22, 2020, did you tweet about the Steele dossier?

A Not pertinent.

Q Did you, in your tweet, say that it began as a Republican opposition research project?

A Not pertinent to the Disinformation Governance Board.

[redacted] So you're refusing to answer the question?

The Witness. The Disinformation Governance Board had no authority to arbitrate or censor American speech. Therefore, my political inclinations have very, very -- in fact, zero pertinence to this investigation.

[redacted] Okay. But just for the record, you're not going to answer that question?

The Witness. I stand on my objection, yes.

[redacted] So you're not going to answer the question?

The Witness. I am not going to answer questions that are not pertinent on the advice of my attorney.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And so the Steele dossier that has come to light was the product of Hillary Clinton's campaign and the Democratic National Committee. Do you believe that the Steele dossier was disinformation?

A To be clear and on the record, I never answered any -- I never said anything about the contents of the Steele dossier, and you can look back on that. I never said anything about the contents of the Steele dossier. And actually, Mr. Jordan was one of the first people to spread disinformation about my opinions about the Steele dossier.

Q Do you believe that the Carter Page FISA was disinformation?

A I have no comment about that. I don't even know what you're referring to.

Q What are your views on the Steele dossier?

A Pertinence. There's no reason for me to answer questions that have no purview related to the Disinformation Governance Board. As the Disinformation Governance Board, we wouldn't have touched the Steele dossier with a 100,000-foot pole, so don't understand why we should be talking about it today.

BY [redacted]

Q Right. But we just asked you about it and then you said that we got it wrong, or Mr. Jordan got it wrong. So can you help us -- what -- like, what do you mean by that?

A I never commented on the Steele dossier publicly, and I'm not going to comment on it today.

Q Okay.

A My tweets have been mischaracterized in this -- in this letter. That's all I'm trying to set the record straight on. I don't -- I don't have any interest in commenting on the contents of the Steele dossier, alleged or not.

BY [redacted]

Q And so the April 22, 2020 tweet, we can go ahead and enter that into the record as exhibit No. 33.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 33

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you had sufficient time to review?

A Uh-huh.

Q So in the last tweet in the thread there from you it says, and you're probably aware that it began as a Rus -- Republican, excuse me, opposition research project, too. The report covers explains that the inclusion of the Steele dossier didn't influence the conclusions of the ICA. Have a nice day.

A Uh-huh.

Q And in the letter, it says, on April 22, 2020, you provided the false narrative that the Steele dossier, quote, "began as a Republican opposition research project," quote. Is that accurate?

A I -- again, I've been advised to answer questions that are pertinent to the Disinformation Governance Board's activities, and I don't understand how this tweet from almost 2 years before my joining the board has any pertinence over the activities of the board.

Q And so, you were named to be the executive director of the Government Disinformation Board which was to set best practices and guardrails for the whole of DHS to identify misinformation. And, you know, it -- would you concede that it could make people nervous that you are making these types of assertions on Twitter, and yet, you're supposed to lead this board that's supposed to set best practices and guardrails?

A This is one tweet, less than 240 characters, of bodies of -- my body of work, which includes two books, four congressional testimonies, some at the behest of your Republican colleagues in the Senate. I would suggest that you, if you want to look at my work and my commitment to civil liberties and disinformation, look at the rest of my work and not cherry-picked tweets that have been used to defame me, and frankly have led to significant threats to me and my family because they've been taken out of context and without nuance.

[redacted] We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 3:09 p.m.

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 34

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'm going to introduce as exhibit 34, and I'm not going to ask any questions, but I'm just going to introduce an article from the New York Times. It's dated October 27, 2017, by Ken Vogel and Maggie Haberman, and the title of the article is, "Conservative Website First Funded Anti-Trump Research by Firm That Later Produced Dossier."

[Jankowicz Exhibit No. 35

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q The next document I want to introduce, we'll introduce as exhibit 35. This is a March 8th Politico article, March 8, 2023, Politico article entitled, "A Surreal Experience: Former Biden Disinfo Chief Details Harassment."

Are you familiar with this article?

A I am.

Q And did you participate in an interview for this article?

A I did.

Q Okay. So the article describes a situation in which you had to go to court to obtain a restraining order against an individual who had been stalking you for a year. We talked about that earlier, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. On page 3, the article says that when you were 18 months -- I'm sorry, when you were 8 months pregnant strangers online were calling -- calling her, meaning you, a Nazi, ugly, and said that you should die. Is that an accurate description of your experiences?

A That is the sanitized version, yes.

Q Okay. And you did -- you received a lot of death threats as part of --

A I would characterize them in the tens of thousands of death threats, yeah.

Q The article says that a reporter reached out to Mr. Jordan's office to ask about the, quote/unquote, blowback that you encountered and was told by an aide that you had agreed to serve as the board's public face and thus should be held accountable in public. Do you think you have anything to be held accountable for?

A I only took a job in my area of expertise, something, again, that both Republicans and Democrats in this Congress have benefited from over the past 6 years. And to say that anybody, Republican, Democrat, in between, martian, I don't care, should receive death threats, or it should be okay that people are receiving death threats because they're in public is very concerning to me as an American, and it's concerning for me as someone who hopes that other people won't be dissuaded from going into public service because of what I've been through.

I think we could be losing a lot of, especially women, especially people of intersectional identities and minorities, because they know that it's much worse for us in public -- public service, and being a public figure, and the fact that we have Members of Congress and media who act like it's a game, and that there aren't real consequences to the words that they say is really -- it's disturbing for me as an American.

[redacted] Thank you. We don't have any further questions. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 3:15 p.m., the deposition was adjourned.]

Certificate of Deponent

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

MARC S. ZAID, P.C.

1250 CONNECTICUT AVE., NW

SUITE 700

WASHINGTON, DC 20036

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of Marc Polymeropoulos. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation into the letter about the Hunter Biden laptop that the 51 former intel officials signed.

The Committee on the Judiciary and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence are conducting oversight of Federal law enforcement and intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions. This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within the jurisdictions of the committees.

For example, we may consider legislative reforms, such as revolving door legislation for Federal employees with security clearances. These reforms might include allowing Federal employees with security clearances to retain their clearances after employment with the government, but limiting their ability to receive access to classified information for some duration after their government service.

The committees may also consider legislative proposals that would ban or restrict intelligence activities -- I'm sorry, intelligence agencies -- from engaging in, coordinating, or promoting any political activity related to Federal elections, including candidates for Federal office.

The HPSCI staff will limit their questions to the letter. The Judiciary staff, we may have a question or two on a couple other topics, and we can deal with that as we go forward.

I want to thank you for appearing here today voluntarily. Also, thank your counsel for facilitating this.

My name is [redacted] I'm with Mr. Jordan's staff. I'll have everyone on the staff introduce themselves for you.

[redacted] with the House Intelligence Committee.

[redacted] House Judiciary Committee.

[redacted] House Judiciary minority.

[redacted] for the Judiciary.

[redacted] House Intel majority.

[redacted] minority Judiciary.

[redacted] chief oversight counsel of the House Judiciary Democrat staff.

[redacted] with the minority.

[redacted] House Judiciary.

[redacted] House Judiciary.

[redacted] House Judiciary.

Mr. Bishop. I'm Dan Bishop, a member of the committee.

[redacted] House Judiciary Minority.

[redacted] House Judiciary minority.

[redacted] I'll go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions for one hour and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time. We'll alternate back and forth.

We'll take a short break at the end of each hour. If you'd like to take a break apart from that, please let us know, to consult with your counsel or for any other reason.

As you can see, there's an official reporter here taking down everything we say to make a written record. We'll do our best not to speak over one another. Sometimes we do have to stop and go back and say a question because we get talking.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committees to freely consult with counsel. And it's my understanding that you're here today with Mr. Zaid. Maybe he can introduce himself for the record.

Mr. Zaid. Sure. Mark Zaid for the witness today, Z-a-i-d.

[redacted] We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we'll take our time. If you have any questions or if you don't understand a question we pose to you, please let us know.

We're not governed by the Federal Rules of Evidence or the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. So if we do ask you a question and it calls for hearsay, just let us know how you've learned the information, and we can deal with it that way.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, of course it's best not to guess. Give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you've learned the information from somebody else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and that will be fine. And you can inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to help us answer that question.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, we're not swearing you in, that by law of course you're required to answer questions before Congress truthfully. And you understand that?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 United States Code 1001. You understand that?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yes.

[redacted] And of course is there any other reason that you're unable to provide truthful testimony here today?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'll make a note that we aim to keep this information confidential as we go through a number of folks we're interviewing. So to the extent, we ask the courtesy of not sharing the Q&A. As other witnesses come in, we'd hate to have their testimony clouded by any information they may have learned from you.

And along those lines, to the extent we mark exhibits, we'll keep them, even if it's an exhibit that you may have provided us.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Sure.

[redacted] Just for the sense of keeping the interview as confidential as possible.

That's the end of my welcoming remarks.

Democrat counsel have any?

[redacted] No. Just thanks to the witness taking time out of your schedule for joining us.

[redacted] Mr. Bishop, do you have anything?

Mr. Bishop. No, thanks.

[redacted] Okay. And from time to time, we'll turn around. We'll like to make sure that Mr. Bishop or any of our other members have a full opportunity to ask questions. So sometimes we might just stop in the middle and pivot to Mr. Bishop just to make sure he has an opportunity to get all his questions answered.

All right. I'll turn it over to [redacted] who will lead our questioning today.

[redacted] Okay. The time is 10:09.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning.

A Good morning.

Q I have a few warm-up questions that I do for each individual. But given the nature of the work that you did and that this is an unclassified setting, if anything I'm about to ask you, you don't want to answer, or you can't answer, just feel free to let me know. All right?

A Okay.

Q Could you please tell us a bit about your professional background, Mr. Polymeropoulos?

A So I spent 26 years at CIA. Primarily worked on Middle East counterterrorism in the end of my career, on Europe and Eurasia. That's all in my unclassified bio or cleared bio.

Q When did you retire from the CIA?

A July 2019.

Q Okay. And what do you do now?

A Couple different things. I give talks on leadership. I wrote a book on leadership. I have a contract with MSNBC as an intelligence and national security analyst. And I also work for the Washington Examiner. I write a column for them maybe every two weeks on intelligence and national security.

Q All right.

You were one of 51 former intelligence officials who signed a public statement regarding Hunter Biden's emails, correct?

A Correct.

[redacted] I would now like to enter a document dated October 19th, 2020, titled "Public Statement on the Hunter Biden Emails" into the record as exhibit No. 1.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And I would also like to enter the Politico article that featured the public statement dated October 19th, 2020, titled "Hunter Biden Story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say" into the record as exhibit No. 2.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q What was the intent of the public statement?

A The letter?

Q Yes.

A Well, I think that it was certainly to provide some context, based on my experience and experience of others, on essentially Russian information operations, information warfare, and the possibility that they had once again engaged in such.

Q And what role did Mike Morell play in the creation of the statement?

A I believe this is what we provided to the committee. I think Mike Morell on the -- I think it was on the 17th -- had wrote me a text asking me if I thought there was any -- kind of any Russian involvement in this. I said that I thought that there was, based on my professional background. He asked if I would be willing to write something with him on this. And that's how this began.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I would now like to enter a draft of the statement Michael Morell and Marc Polymeropoulos sent to potential signatories, including a request to sign, dated October 19th, 2020, at 1:38 a.m., into the record as exhibit No. 3.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q In this it says, "Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response."

I'll ask about the use of this letter and the debate at another time, but for now I want to establish a bit of who did what in the creation of it.

A Sure.

Q So Morell asked if you would be willing to co-draft the statement with him, correct?

A Actually, he asked if we would write something together.

Q Okay.

A At first it was -- I wasn't sure what the medium would be, whether it would be an op-ed or not. In fact, I think it was -- that was the -- that was my thinking, it would be an op-ed.

Q All right. And he sought your opinion before drafting the statement?

A That's right.

Q And asked whether you thought, quote, "the Russians played in the Hunter Biden laptop thing."

Why do you believe Mr. Morell asked you that? Do you believe that was him expressing uncertainty over whether the Russians were involved and he wasn't sure and wanted to get a second opinion or have you had a longstanding relationship with him?

A Sure. So we definitely had a relationship, Michael as the Deputy Director and then the Acting Director. I had briefed him numerous times, knew him quite well from times, whether I worked -- have to be careful -- when I worked in headquarters roles, when I would brief him, and then when I was in the field at field stations when he would come visit.

Prior to that, my wife, who was an Agency officer as well, had been his executive assistant. So we got to know Michael well. You know, he turned into not only a professional colleague, but a friend.

I think he was asking -- based on my last role at the Agency and what I can tell, disclose about it, I was the acting and then -- I was -- I'm sorry, I was the deputy and then acting chief of operations in Europe and Eurasia between early 2017 and then in 2019 when I retired.

And so I had some I wouldn't say expertise, but I certainly had a professional background on Russian active measures. That's why I think he asked me.

Q Okay. That was the last role you had before leaving the CIA, correct?

A That's right.

Q Did you get the sense that he was asking because he was uncertain himself whether the Russians, quote, "played" --

A I don't know. I don't know.

Q Okay. And then you sent Mr. Morell a list of what y'all described as hallmarks that he used to write the first draft, correct?

A Right. I sent him -- and I think that was provided to the committee as well --

Q Yes.

A -- I sent him kind of a backgrounder on just my thoughts. I don't recall if he was going to take exact language from that or not, but he certainly -- that was for him to draft.

Q And I will enter that into the record as well.

[redacted] I will now enter an email Marc Polymeropoulos sent to Michael Morell dated October 17th, 2020, at 8:01 p.m., into the record as exhibit No. 5.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I think it's 4.

[redacted] Oh, is this 4? Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q So we took some time to review the list of hallmarks that you sent. We also now know that the contents on the laptop have been authenticated.

Do you still believe that the Russians played in the laptop thing?

A I don't know.

Q You don't know?

A I think that ultimately that chapter has not been written. I don't know. And even with the understanding that the laptop has been authenticated, that was, I think, part of the thinking involved, that it certainly could be real.

Q Did you have a role in recruiting other signatories to the statement?

A I was asked to provide some email addresses of some other former colleagues. That was certainly not my primary role in this at all.

But I do recall Michael asking, and I think we submitted that as well, to some email addresses of some other colleagues. That was not my responsibility in this. Mine was really the background piece.

Q Did you have a role in outreach to former officials in terms of strategizing who you wanted on the letter with you?

A What I can recall is just the names that I -- there was that text, I think, where I gave some names of individuals. But that wasn't -- that was based on, I think, Michael asking me: Who else do you think would be interested in considering signing?

Q We know that the statement was shopped around to a variety of officials, some of which did not sign on, including, for example, Lisa Monaco.

Do you have any knowledge as to why some officials declined to sign on, including Ms. Monaco?

A No. I was not involved in that. I have no idea.

Q Okay. Did you play any role in tasking other officials that we either intend to speak to or have already spoken to with roles in the creation or the promotion of the statement, such as Kristin Wood? Did you give her any sort of assignments or duties on how to get the word out there?

A I don't recall. I think Kristen's role in this, again, from what I remember, was to do what you're talking about now, is the outreach to others. I don't recall if I gave her any advice on what to do or not. Again, I go back to that, those text messages on individuals who I have their email address.

Q Okay. In regards to the draft itself, did any of the former officials have edits or suggestions to either the input that you provided or initial versions of the draft that went around?

A So the input I provided, I sent this document or I sent only to Michael. And in terms of the drafts and other folks' comments, I was not aware of any of that.

I think there were some emails in which people agreed to sign on. That was part of what we provided. But in terms of the substantive nature of it or if they had any edits, I was not privy to any of that.

Q Okay. We know that the statement as published is different from the draft that was originally circulated. In particular, the last two paragraphs referencing, quote, "Vice President Joe Biden taking his private and public stand against the then Prosecutor General of Ukraine, Viktor Shokin," were taken out for being what was described as too political.

Do you know why that was?

A I'm not aware of any of that, no.

Q Okay. And you don't know who suggested taking that out?

A No.

Q Okay. In emails Mr. Morell and you sent out soliciting signatures for the statement with a draft of the statement attached, you wrote, "Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response."

Was the purpose of the statement then to help Vice President's Biden campaign?

A Well, this is Michael's email that he sent out. I didn't -- this is not my language.

Q Okay.

A So obviously I saw it. But the draft, this is Michael's email that he sent out to others. So that statement on giving the Vice President a talking point to use in response, that's not from me. I mean, I think that if you take a look at this, clearly that was the intent when it went to others when they're asking to sign on, but that's not my language.

Q But do you agree with that? Had you also hoped that it would be used in that way?

A Yeah, I think so.

Q Okay. Are you aware that now Secretary of State Antony Blinken called Mr. Morell some time on or about October 17th, 2020, to inquire as to whether Mr. Morell believed Russia might have been involved in the Hunter Biden email story in some way?

A That's the first I heard of that. I was not aware of that at all.

Q Were you aware that Secretary Blinken also sent an article to Mr. Morell from USA Today titled "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign"?

A No.

Q How does it make you feel to know that?

A That's it's a high-level individual. I have to think about that for a bit.

Q Are you aware that Secretary Blinken at the time was employed by the Biden campaign?

A I know he was a -- I don't know. I think obviously he was a supporter of Biden. But I had no contact. I've never even met Blinken or talked to him.

Q I assume the answer is going to be no, but are you also aware that the email from Secretary Blinken was originally sent to him by Andrew Bates, then director of rapid response for the Biden campaign and current White House deputy press secretary, who then sent it to Blinken; Blinken then sent it to Morell?

A No, not aware.

Q Okay. Did you speak to Secretary Blinken at all?

A No.

Q When Mr. Morell spoke to you, he did not bring up the fact that he and Mr. Blinken had been in contact about this issue?

A No.

Q Okay. We are aware that the Biden campaign coordinated with Mr. Morell on a strategy to get the statement to reporters as well. Were you aware of this?

A No.

[redacted] Let me just back up a second.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you say you had a conversation with Mr. Morell?

A About?

Q About this letter. Or was it only over text message?

A So I think from what I recall, two -- a couple things happened. First, he wrote me the text. I then -- I believe he asked, and I looked at my records and I just don't have the exact date, but shortly after that he asked me to come over to his house.

Q Okay.

A And we discussed this there.

I don't recall how it morphed from what I thought was an op-ed into a letter. He did mention to me that someone in the kind of Biden world had asked about doing this.

Q But he didn't --

A He did not tell me who it was, and I did not ask.

Q So you prepared the backgrounder that's exhibit 4.

A Right.

Q Was that before or after you went to Morell's house?

A I believe it was after, but I actually don't recall. I see that text was on the 17th, and I think I sent the backgrounder on the 17th as well. But I actually don't recall if this was before or after.

Q And as you understand it, Mr. Morell took your backgrounder and turned it into the letter?

A That's right.

Q And do you know if any other person helped him do that?

A I don't know.

Q Or whether he did it himself?

A I don't know.

Q How long did you have this discussion with Mr. Morell at his house?

A It was probably over a coffee usually when I went over to see him. It was -- there's other elements that we were discussing.

This was also a time in which I was about -- I had some pretty severe health issues. I had suffered from a traumatic brain injury, I think this is well known, what we call AHIs or Havana Syndrome, from my time in -- trip to Moscow in 2017. And what I had done -- I was actually engaged in quite a long and lengthy battle with the Agency for healthcare.

Q Okay.

A And on the -- within days of this, I think on the 20th was the scheduled -- a scheduled press piece, media piece, by Julia Ioffe about me in GQ, in Gentleman's Quarterly, in which I was going public with my pleas for healthcare because I was in such kind of bad straits.

And so I had a discussion with Michael about this too, and, frankly, the ramifications of doing this. I think he was concerned about kind of the Agency's response.

Q To the Havana Syndrome issue?

A Yeah, to the Havana Syndrome issue.

So the point I'm making is there were a lot of other things on my plate besides this, including what I was talking to him about.

Q Okay. And you don't remember what day that was?

A I can't. I looked in my records. I don't know exactly when I went to see him at his house.

Q Okay.

A I presume it's got to be after, on that 17th, 18th timeframe, I would imagine.

Q So after you prepared this backgrounder and sent it to him --

A Yes.

Q -- did you do anything else related to the letter other than sign it?

A No. I don't recall doing anything else.

Q And do you remember having any other conversations with Mr. Morell about the letter?

A I don't recall.

Q Or it was just at his house?

A Yeah. Other than what he sent when he sent this cover piece on the 19th.

Q Okay. And any -- the cover piece, did it have an attachment?

A It was the letter.

Q The letter was attached?

A Yeah. Yeah.

Q And from your standpoint, that was pretty much the end of it?

A Yes.

Q Did you have any other communications with any of the other 51 officials?

A I don't recall if I did or not. I don't know. I mean, I'm friends with a lot of these people. John Sipher and others are very good friends of mine. So I just don't recall. I'm sure I had communications with them all through this time. It might not have been about this issue.

Again, I was very concerned about the upcoming press piece on -- it was a story on me -- and kind of the reaction that this would entail. So that was my focus.

Q So to the best of your knowledge, the sum total of the communications before the letter went out was the text with Mr. Morell --

A And then --

Q -- the visit with him --

A Right.

Q -- then sharing the backgrounder.

A Yeah.

Q And then you signed on.

A Yeah. That's correct.

[redacted] Okay. I'll go back to [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Talking just now to [redacted] you said that when you were at Morell's house someone high in the Biden campaign had, quote, asked for this --

A I don't --

Q -- or about this.

A Right.

Q Do you know if they were asking for it to help the campaign, like they had asked -- was it your impression that they had asked for it?

A I think -- I want to be very careful on exactly my statements because I don't remember. What I recall from that time is that Biden said that someone in that -- and he might have said the campaign, he might have said around the Bidens, something like that -- had asked for this.

[redacted] Morell said that.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Morell said that to me.

[redacted] Morell?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yeah. And he did not give me the name.

[redacted] You said Biden.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Oh, I apologize. Morell said that to me, that someone from kind of the Biden world had asked for this. And he did not tell me who it was or any of the other kind of details of it.

BY [redacted]

Q And by "asked for this," it sounds like they were hoping to initiate it with Morell to get this, something that could be published?

A I would -- that sounds plausible, sure.

Q Okay.

A And the key piece on that, again, is -- and I don't know when it switched from kind of my thought that this would be an op-ed to a letter signed. I just don't recall. But that was my initial thought, was when he said let's write something together. Him and I had done, I think, one or two pieces before for The Washington Post on other issues.

Q Have you ever had any communications with Andrew Bates?

A I don't know who that is. I'm sorry.

Q Okay. He was the -- at the time of this, he was the director of rapid response for the Biden campaign and is the current White House deputy press secretary --

A No.

Q -- the individual that sent the original USA Today article to Blinken who then forwarded it to Mr. Morell.

A Right.

Q Okay.

A No, and I have not.

Q Did you play any role in the dissemination of the letter to the press?

A No.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the CIA's Prepublication Classification Review Board, known as the PCRB?

A Very. I talk to them probably once a week.

Q Do you?

A Yep.

Q What does the CIA's PCRB do?

A It ensures that no classified information is published by, I would say, former and even current officers when they write something for the press. And so it's a very simple review process. You send it in. They review it and they get it back to you.

Q And Mr. Morell and you sent the statement to the CIA's PCRB, correct?

A Michael sent it. I did not send it.

Q Okay.

[redacted] And I will enter that into the exhibit mail -- it is an email Michael Morell sent to the CIA's PCRB dated October 19th, 2020, at 7:11 a.m. -- into the record as exhibit No. 5.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q At the very end it says, "This is a rush job as it needs to get out as soon as possible."

Do you know why Mr. Morell described the statement as a rush job to the PCRB?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know if the intent was to be able to use that for the debate, which was in just a few days?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. Do you know whether the CIA's PCRB made any edits to the statement before it was published?

A I don't know. I was not on the response.

Q Okay.

A But Michael did say that it was cleared, so I'm assuming he has that in his private.

Q Are you aware that CIA staff at the PCRB reportedly promoted the letter by asking former CIA officials to sign on to the letter?

A No.

[redacted] I would now like to enter a statement David Cariens provided to the committee in an email dated March 5th, 2023, into the record as exhibit No. 6.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Cariens told me, "When the person in charge of reviewing the book called to say it was approved with no changes, I was told about the draft letter. The person asked me if I would be willing to sign. (I do not recall the person's name or the exact date of the phone call.)

"After hearing the letter's contents, and the qualifiers in it such as, 'We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement...' I agreed to sign."

Does what Mr. Cariens described there, that interaction with the PCRB, sound like a quid pro quo to you?

A I can't comment on this. This is -- to me, this is something that the PCRB in my experience would never engage in something like that. They are just straightforward back and forth in terms of approval. The idea they would have a comment on any other thing that they were working on, that to me is not even close to what I've experienced with them.

Q Does that concern you?

A If it's true, it would concern me, for sure. But I just -- I have a hard time believing that occurred. If it did, that's incredibly unprofessional.

Q Do you know David Cariens?

A No.

Q You had no communication with him? Did he reach out to you to ask to sign on or anything like that?

A No. I don't know who that is.

Q Okay. We know that your article that you've mentioned, I think it was in the Rolling Stone, was --

A GQ.

Q GQ. Related to AHI --

A Yeah.

Q -- was published around this time, I think on October 19th?

A It was the 19th or 20th. That's right.

Q Did you talk to anyone who was approving that article about this letter, the statement?

A That article was not approved.

Q Okay.

A So when I, if I write something, the PCRB has to approve it. If I give an interview to someone else, that's not part of the process.

Q Okay. So there was no substantive information that you had to run by the PCRB ahead of time of that GQ article?

A No. No, what I did in terms of the substance of that article and a lot of my kind of writings on the AHI issue, I certainly engaged with them on the AHI issue after. But that's it.

Q Okay. Do you know if any of your fellow signatories coordinated with the CIA in promoting the statement through the PCRB?

A No.

Q Did you have any contact with the PCRB directly about this statement?

A No, Michael's the one who sent it in.

Q Just Mr. Morell?

A Yeah. I think on this he had me CC'd on this. But on their response, I was not on.

Q Okay.

A So this is the only -- he was in charge of dealing with the PCRB on this issue.

Q Did you speak to any other offices or staff outside of the PCRB at the CIA regarding this?

A No.

Q Okay. Do you happen to know whether the statement was sent to any of the other intelligence agencies, such as the ODNI, for approval?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

A That's not part of our obligations to do so.

Q All right.

A But no.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Other signatories of the letter you mentioned had some role in pushing it out, such as Kristin Wood.

What were her responsibilities, as far as you know, with the letter?

A That's what I recall, just that she was going to be involved in finding others to sign.

Q And do you know if she did find others?

A I don't know.

Q And did you have any conversations with her about that?

A I don't recall.

Q So it was just related to you by Mr. Morell?

A That, or there was several occasions in this timeframe over a month where myself and Michael and Kristin met, because we were writing a lot. I can't recall if when I told you that I met with Michael that time, if Kristin was there or not.

Q Okay.

A But Kristin, I think, had written some pieces together, and we had been -- we would meet at Michael's house to kind of discuss just op-eds on totally separate issues.

Q Do you know any of the other signatories, did they have any role or responsibility with regard to the letter?

A Other than signing?

Q Yeah.

A I don't know. Other than -- I think Nick Shapiro signed. So he was, as you know, had been involved in this -- he was involved in this in some fashion.

Q And what was your understanding of his role?

A I think he was the one who was going to kind of push it to the press. That's what I recall.

Q Since the letter has been -- became public, did you have any communications with the other signatories about the fallout for lack of a better word?

A Over the last two and a half years?

Q Yeah.

A Yeah. Sure.

Q And can you just tell us who you've talked with and maybe we can go through some of those conversations?

A Sure. I think that -- I mean, it was more of not even the letter itself, but kind of the, as you say, the fallout.

So I'm very close with John Sipher, Doug Wise, in particular. I think both of them have been in the media commenting on it as well.

I mean, this is over a two and a half year period. So I'm sure I have spoken with them quite a bit on this.

Q Any others?

A Clearly Michael and Nick. Kristin as well, I believe. This is when, again, when this became a very sensitive issue.

And so I think that at a time where it was clear we were going to come down here, I think people were asking about do we need counsel, what is it going to be like, what this is going to entail. So there was plenty of conversations.

Q Were you or any of the folks you spoke with surprised at how effective, for lack of a better word, the letter was in quashing the discussion of the story?

A I don't even know.

Q I mean, the letter had a remarkable effect. Would you agree with that?

A I think the effect of the letter had to do with statements that Vice President Biden made mischaracterizing it.

Q And what were those statements?

A I think it was clear that he called it -- well, I mean, I think not only during the debate, but I think other times too when they said that the -- called it disinformation, which is not what the letter said.

And in a sense at one point, I can't remember where I saw this, even if it was as I was reviewing this, Biden said that the whole laptop issue is false. That's not what we were saying. So it was clearly mischaracterized.

Q And it's been acknowledged now that the contents of the laptop are more or less authentic, correct?

A Correct.

Q So the Russian disinformation aspect, it had the hallmarks of Russian disinformation. Now that you look back on it, do you disagree with that assessment?

A The word "disinformation," sure, because, again, the notion of information operations, information warfare that the Russians have successfully done over the years has been everything from hacking into campaigns, what they did in 2017 with the French Presidential elections, but they will take accurate information and then promulgate it.

The notion, by using the word "disinformation," that's the concept of pushing out something that is false. So that, in that sense, that is not what we said. And I'm not -- I think at the time, particularly when Michael and I talked about this, there was the very real possibility that the laptop was -- had -- at least some aspects of it had authentic information on it.

Q When you were putting the letter together, did you realize that it was a political operation?

A What's that?

Q Or would become a political operation? I mean, it was a device to be used for the -- I mean, ultimately for the campaign.

A Right. So I think it was two.

One, it was a warning, because, again, my sense was that the Russians were doing again what they had done when they hacked into the DNC server, when they hacked into Macron's campaign. But clearly it was going to be designed to be used by the Vice President.

Q And do you think the signatories to the letter all understood that, that it was essentially a political move to help the campaign of --

A I think that Michael's cover letter that he sent out was very explicit on that, when he said this is designed to help the Vice President.

Q And were you surprised by the censorship that subsequently occurred on social media platforms?

A I wasn't following that. And I say that honestly. I was going through my own -- with that GQ piece that came out, that kind of dominated my life after that. It really did. I was really struggling then.

Censorship issue, I certainly have followed recently, but --

Q But you're aware that the platforms essentially wiped the story --

A Right.

Q -- off their platform?

A With the -- I guess with the notion that this was disinformation, right, yep, which is not what we said in the letter.

Q What do you think about that?

A In terms of?

Q Do you think that was appropriate?

A Of them? That's a much longer conversation.

Q Right.

A I think it's a very legitimate debate on what should be allowed on platforms and not. I think that's very legitimate to have that.

Q Do you think the effect of wiping it off the platforms played a role in the outcome of the election?

A I don't know.

[redacted] Mr. Bishop, do you --

Mr. Bishop. What you just said about platforms, what is it that you think? What should be allowed on platforms? What was your thought there?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. In terms of what is on platforms such as Twitter, Facebook, other places like that?

Mr. Bishop. Things regarding social media platforms.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yeah, social media platforms.

Mr. Bishop. What information do you believe should not be allowed on it?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Well, I think if there's -- if we know something is absolutely false, I think there is a kind of a legitimate debate to be had whether that should be allowed or not. But then you have to counter that with the notion of free speech.

But I think that questions on this, this is a debate that obviously is ongoing now, whether what Twitter did was right or wrong, and I think that it's fair to question what they did in taking it down.

Mr. Bishop. What if it's true? Do you believe it ought to be kept off the platform if it's true?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. No.

Mr. Bishop. Now, your thoughts about this I imagine are most thoroughly or most directly captured in the emails marked as exhibit 4, right? That's your -- you wrote that.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. This is the background piece?

Mr. Bishop. It says at the top on the page I'm looking at, it says from Marc Polymeropoulos, subject, "My thoughts..." dated October 17th, right?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yeah. This is the background piece I sent to Michael. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. So you summarized your thinking about what the laptop -- about the laptop in these comments to him, right?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. What do you understand disinformation to be?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. So my use of "disinformation" in the backgrounder was incorrect.

Mr. Bishop. What do you understand disinformation to be?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Disinformation operations are where you take something that's false, where a hostile service takes something that's false and promulgates it out for a desired effect.

Mr. Bishop. I'll just point out to you in the first paragraph, first sentence, that you described your background, and I think Mr. Morell's, in battling the Russians and their covert action disinformation campaign, right?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Uh-huh.

Mr. Bishop. You need a verbal answer.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. And then in paragraph three, it's marked B at the front, third line from the bottom, you talk about "and at times himself promulgate specific SVR and GRU disinformation campaigns," correct?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. You're reading from it. I assume that's correct. I can't follow it.

Mr. Bishop. Well, I'm just saying that you got the words "disinformation campaign" in that portion of your memo. That's all I'm trying to say.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yes. That's right.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And in the next paragraph, the third line down -- and I haven't read the rest, but you guys also have, "one can push disinformation on the cheap." You're talking about Russians doing this.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Right.

Mr. Bishop. So you -- it's fair to say -- well, I see another one. Down at the bottom of the page, in paragraph F, it talks about platforms "such as Facebook that generally allow for such disinformation to prosper" -- perhaps what you intended there is misspelled -- "have a demonstrated history of pushing Russian disinformation," right?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Right.

Mr. Bishop. So it's fair to say, isn't it, that the disinformation quality, the falsity of the information, was what was a significant factor in your mind when you put down your initial thoughts?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I think my initial -- my use of the word "disinformation" here, I should have written "information warfare," because I was -- and as later as obviously the letter that went out it was corrected to write "information operations."

It has to encompass two things. It has to encompass when the Russians push out real, true information and also disinformation, when something is false, what they've made up. There's a long history of them doing that.

Mr. Bishop. But there are several points in there. One is, disinformation was certainly in your mind as of October 17th. Fair?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And you didn't know whether it was disinformation or not?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. That's right. We weren't sure if the laptop was real, if it was elements were real and elements were altered with, or if it was totally false. So it was the idea of putting --

Mr. Bishop. You said a moment ago if information is true, you believe it should not be prohibited from social media platforms. That's your opinion, right?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Right.

Mr. Bishop. Would it also be true that if the information is true, you wouldn't want to be out using your professional background as an intelligence official to attempt to discredit it?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I'm sorry. I don't understand the question.

Mr. Bishop. If the information is true --

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Right.

Mr. Bishop. -- would you have participated in attempting to discredit it?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I think it would have been important to put out that the Russians were involved in pushing it out if that was the case.

Mr. Bishop. So if it was from the Russians but true, then you think it would be important to put that out?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yes, for the American people to understand that part of it, yes. That is totally separate from the idea of censorship by social media platforms.

Mr. Bishop. You gave your opinion a moment ago that if it was true, you didn't think it -- you don't think it should be banned from social media platforms.

Do I understand that nevertheless, that if it's true, you do believe your role as a former intel official includes letting the American people know of its source?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. That's right. I think that's fair.

Mr. Bishop. I'll come back later. Thank you.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you currently hold a security clearance?

A I don't think so. I think mine has lapsed.

Q Did you hold one at the time you drafted the statement?

A So I think there's two things on it.

One is there's -- I'm not sure -- when you retire from the CIA, I think your clearances don't lapse for 3 to 5 years. I'm not sure exactly what that was.

And also at the time I had been doing some consulting work for a group down in Florida called Patriot, in which we were -- I was helping train members of Joint Special Operations Command in an unclassified setting, on unclassified issues such as how to operate effectively in an embassy, but Patriot might have held my clearances at that time.

So it's entirely possible I still had them.

Q Had you ever had access to classified information regarding the contents of Hunter Biden's laptop?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you not knowingly insinuate to the American public that, given you and your follow signatories previous access to classified information, you might continue to have special knowledge about the contents on Hunter Biden's laptop?

A No. I don't believe we did that.

Q Now that the contents on Hunter Biden's laptop have been authenticated, including documentation of shady business dealings with Chinese and Ukrainian foreign nationals, do you believe Hunter Biden is a threat to national security?

A I think that an investigation of Hunter Biden, which I understand is ongoing, is legitimate.

Q Have you considered retracting the statement in any way or --

A No, because, as I mentioned at the beginning, I'm not -- the statement itself, I think, is very different from how it was characterized and used. And I still -- I don't -- the final chapter on this, regarding possible Russian involvement or not, I don't think has been written.

But it's entirely possible there's no Russian involvement, but I, of course, am keen to find out at some point.

BY [redacted]

Q How would the Russians have been involved in this, now that we know a little bit more about it?

A I mean, I think it's -- there's -- well, there's a couple different ways. And I think part of the basis for the statement, which caused me a great deal of suspicion, was the role of Rudy Giuliani as the President's lawyer and his contact with Andrii Derkach, who is someone that the Department of Justice has named as a Russian intelligence agent. I believe this -- that contact was back in 2019.

And so as Giuliani was working with someone whom we know was very closely tied with a Russian intelligence source, that to me was very suspect because that's Russian modus operandi on how they would engage with individuals who are either witting or unwitting. And so to me that was something that still to this day is troubling.

Q What was your understanding of Derkach and Giuliani's relationship?

A It was only based on press reports that Giuliani had met him in Ukraine. I believe Derkach was a former parliamentarian and that they were involved in kind of Giuliani's efforts to dig some dirt up on the Bidens.

Q And do you know anything about the -- you mentioned the blind individual at the store.

A Right.

Q What did you know about him other than from press reports?

A Nothing other than press. Nothing.

Q Okay. So the fact that he was blind -- you mentioned in your backgrounder, first paragraph, "No joke, you can't make that up."

A That was a dumb joke on my part. That has nothing to do with -- it's obviously an individual who you wouldn't really be thought would be involved in such a -- in something. But I don't even know why I wrote that.

Q Did that give you maybe some concern that the Russians were involved, if a blind computer store clerk was pushing out the information?

A The notion that he was blind was silly. I don't think that was any --

Q Okay. Yeah, I'm not trying to be silly here.

A Yeah, I mean, I'm just trying to --

Q I'm just wondering if that --

A Right. Yeah. I just -- the entire affair seemed unusual to me.

Ultimately, what the Russians will use is any kind of dissemination mechanism. I think what everything comes back to for me and my thinking -- and I do recall this -- was that the Giuliani connection was to me, because of his work with Andrii Derkach, that to me made this most suspect.

I think that if this laptop had come from anything other than through the hands of Giuliani, I might have had a different view, because Giuliani's tied to someone who is a Russian intelligence source.

Q In hindsight, there doesn't seem to be facts out there that the laptop was taken to the computer store for any other reason other than genuine reasons, to get it worked on. Is that correct?

A I don't know.

Q And that the laptop -- I mean, you're not aware of any other reason that the laptop was left at the and essentially abandoned at the computer shop, correct?

A Correct. I don't know. No.

Q The contents of the laptop, Hunter Biden's business deals, would you agree that that is information that the American people ought to be aware of heading into a Presidential election?

A You know, I think that's something the Department of Justice should be aware of for sure, whether it's he broke the law or not. Whether it's someone who's the son of a senior official, I don't know.

Q If the son of a senior official running for President is trading on that, on his name --

A Right.

Q -- and getting huge payouts from some of our adversaries --

A I think that's --

Q -- that's certainly an issue --

A That's an issue. Sure.

Q -- that ought to be discussed in a Presidential campaign, correct? And so the quashing of that story presents serious concerns, don't you think?

A Well, I think the quashing of the story is different than the letter that we wrote. The quashing of the story --

Q Fair enough. But as we know, the story was essentially quashed by Facebook and Twitter --

A Right.

Q -- and a lot of news organizations, and that had serious implications on the election. Would you agree with that?

A I can't comment one way or the other. I don't -- I mean, I don't know. I don't know the implications it had on the election.

Q But certainly it's fair to believe that it did have implications if you believe that. I mean, that's certainly a fair belief, isn't it, for a reasonable person to believe that the quashing of the story had a material impact on the election?

A I don't know. I don't know the effect it had on the election at all.

Q But you can understand the concern?

A Sure.

Q And it's a fair concern that a reasonable person would have?

A Sure.

[redacted] You seemed to cast aspersions on the statement David Cariens provided to me in an email. You have no reason to believe that he or any other CIA official, former CIA official, would lie to me, do you?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I don't know him at all. I just -- I think the idea that the PCRB was advocating folks signing this, I think that -- I find that very implausible.

[redacted] For the record, we have requested Mr. Cariens to come in for a TI like this as well. So we will get to talk to him about that as well.

BY [redacted]

Q So you had no familiarity with Mr. Cariens or his wife?

A I don't know that name, yeah.

Q Of the 51 who did sign the letter, how many of them were you familiar with?

A Easily three quarters of them --

Q Okay.

A -- just from professional -- I mean, some personal. Again, John Sipher and Doug Wise are friends of mine, but others just I knew through my course of duties in government.

Q But there were some in the letter that you had never heard of?

A I'd have to go back and take a look again. I think there's a couple I wasn't -- I didn't know.

Q And Cariens was one of them?

A I don't know him, no.

Mr. Bishop. Who did you say was one?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I'm sorry?

Mr. Bishop. Who did you say was one of the ones you were unfamiliar with?

[redacted] Mr. Cariens.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Cariens. Cariens. Yeah.

Mr. Bishop. Could you look through the list and give us the names of the ones you did not know?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Sure.

[redacted] I think it's No. 2 or No. 1.

Mr. Bishop. Exhibit 1.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Can I go through it now?

Mr. Bishop. Yes, sir. You can just read through it silently. You don't have to read them all out loud, just pick out the ones as you go that you were not personally --

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Do you want me to read them out. I'm sorry. Should I read them out loud? The one I don't know.

[redacted] The ones that you don't know.

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Thomas Finger, I don't know. Rick Ledgett, I do not know.

Mr. Zaid. Just, do you not know them personally, or you didn't know their names or weren't familiar with them or heard of them?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Finger and Ledgett, I never heard. I don't know either of them, both personally and even the names I don't recognize.

John Moseman, that name is not familiar to me. David Buckley, not familiar to me. James Bruce, not familiar to me. There's David Cariens, again, not familiar. Janice, same thing. Peter Corsell, not familiar to me. Roger Zane George, not familiar to me. Tim Kilbourn, not familiar to me. Pam Purcilly, not familiar to me. David Terry, not familiar to me.

That's it.

Mr. Bishop. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q So you don't know how those folks got on the letter?

A I don't know.

Q We had a couple questions about some of the health issues you experienced.

A Sure.

Q My colleague [redacted] is going to ask you about some of those, if that's okay?

A Yep.

[redacted] As [redacted] alluded to, Mr. Polymeropoulos, [redacted] Good to see you.

Just a few questions that we think your expertise could really help the committee.

Do you currently suffer from a brain injury?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Yep.

[redacted] Could you give me some more details on the symptoms and how you've come to that conclusion?

[11:02 a.m.]

Mr. Polymeropoulos. Sure. So, in December of 2017, I was on a temporary duty assignment in Moscow. Something happened that evening where I suffered from an incredible attack of vertigo, a splitting headache, tinnitus. This resulted in really degenerative health issues that has affected me even to this day.

Ultimately, I was treated at Walter Reed's National Intrepid Center of Excellence, and I was diagnosed by the Walter Reed doctors with a traumatic brain injury as well as significant anxiety.

[redacted] What do you believe caused that brain injury?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I was in Moscow when this attack occurred, so my conclusion is the Russians.

[redacted] What exhibit are we up to?

[redacted] Six.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this would be 7. Okay.

At this time, I'm entering a Wall Street Journal article by Mary Anastasia O'Grady, dated March 19th, 2023, titled "Havana Syndrome Revisited." I will pass this around.

Mr. Polymeropoulos, are you familiar with this article?

A I am.

Q Have you reviewed it before today?

A I did read it.

Q Who do you believe is responsible for what we call Havana Syndrome?

A My belief is it's the Russians.

Q Now, when you say the Russians, do you believe Vladimir Putin himself has involvement in this syndrome?

A I don't know. I think the Russian intelligence services certainly do.

Nothing much happens in terms of Russian intelligence operations without Vladimir Putin's okay, so I would not be surprised if he certainly was aware.

Q So unpacking that answer, if they don't do anything of which he is not aware, then it's your testimony he is aware of this Havana Syndrome and ultimately inflicting it on others?

A I would think so, yeah.

Q Are you aware that Avril Haines, Director of National Intelligence, said that it's "very unlikely" a foreign adversary is responsible for the brain injuries commonly referred to as Havana Syndrome?

A Yes.

Q What is your view of that?

A I do not agree with her assessment.

Q There's been some reporting in this exhibit and some others that essentially Havana Syndrome is a mass psychogenetic illness. Essentially when people think they're sick they become sick.

What is your view of that as it relates to Havana Syndrome?

A I think that's insulting to the victims. And it also doesn't make much sense for people like myself and other victims that I know who were affected by this, other victims whose children were affected as young as 6 months old. That explanation doesn't fly for me.

Q Would you say that -- is it your opinion that mass psychogenetic illness is not a real condition?

A I think it is a real condition.

Q Well, so then is it your testimony perhaps that Havana Syndrome is, in fact, a mass psychogenetic illness?

A Not at all. But psychogenetic illness is real. But I think it has nothing to do with what happened to my colleagues who were serving.

Q Now, you believe it was the Russians who are perpetrating this Havana Syndrome symptoms on American intelligence officials?

A Well, considering it happened to me in Moscow, yes.

Q But there's been some testimony, or at least been reporting, that it could be the Cubans as well.

A Sure.

Q What is your understanding? How do you make heads or tails of that dichotomy?

A This is my opinion, not based on anything that -- in terms of any kind of classified information. I couldn't talk about it here, but it's not. It's just my assessment that the Russians were involved.

But given the history of the Russian-Cuban relationship, what happened to my colleagues in Havana, I'd be very surprised if the Cuban intelligence services were not involved.

Q So would you agree that sort of making these sort of accusations has serious consequences for American foreign relations?

A In terms of the possible Russian involvement, sure, and it should. I don't make that accusation lightly. I make it based on what I believe has been going on and has affected both myself and my colleagues.

Q Well then, building on that, doesn't it behoove sort of a responsible characterization to determine whether it's the Cubans or whether it's the Russians before such accusations are made publicly?

A I think there is plenty of evidence out there, not just blindly making accusations, plenty of evidence that the Russians were involved from a history of their work on such weapons programs to what I understand is some solid work going on in the open-source field that has -- that pinpoints Russian involvement in this as well.

Q So, finally, in your opinion, why would the Director of National Intelligence say otherwise?

A This is going down a road of a separate issue, but I think that ultimately my belief in this is that -- two things.

One is, there is concern over potential liability for officers who have been affected.

But more importantly, it's the notion -- and again, this is just my assessment of if we deem officers at risk overseas it's going to be pretty damn hard to get people to go serve in stations and embassies abroad.

So I think there's quite a sense or a need or a requirement for this to be swept under the table.

Q So there's an attempt to say this is essentially not real?

A Right. That's my assessment.

Q Have you seen anything like this before in your career?

A I think what seems familiar to me is the U.S. Government response to things such as Agent Orange, Gulf War syndrome, burn pits, where it took a long time to figure out the health or what was behind some pretty serious health incidents for U.S. servicemen and -women serving abroad.

So to me, kind of the initial U.S. Government response to these kind of health concerns has always been suspect. It takes a while for the truth to come out.

[redacted] What do you think was going on? Do you think the Russians were just trying to injure you, or were they trying to get your information on your phones or computers?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. No. Well, there's -- well, this is a whole other -- to put it in briefly, I think that it's very likely that these kind of weapons or even collection systems perhaps were revised and improved over time.

Perhaps it started off as a collection mechanism for signals intelligence when people were injured. They realized they could weaponize it, and then they've done so successfully. That's just -- that's certainly my sense for me and for many others.

You know, I was at the top of my game. I was in the Senior Intelligence Service. I had a pretty successful career, spent almost 3 years in our conflict zones, and had done a hell of a lot for the country. And so it's a way to kind of take me and others off the battlefield.

And I think about some of my other colleagues who were affected, and these were the tip of the spear for the U.S. Government. And to take them off the battlefield in almost a nonattributable fashion would be a pretty remarkable feat. But I think that's what the Russians have done.

[redacted] So you think they were trying to injure you, not necessarily collect information?

Mr. Polymeropoulos. I think over time that's what they concluded. Again, just my assessment.

[redacted] Okay. I think our hour is up, so we need to stop here.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 11:19.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning again. I'm [redacted] I'm the chief oversight counsel for the Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee.

I want to start out circling back to a questioning line that we went through a little earlier.

You were asked about the role or whether your -- whether the October 19th letter played any role in, I think, quote, a decision to censor the laptop story.

Do you believe that your letter played any role in that?

A I have no idea about the --

Q Okay.

A -- the machinations within kind of social media circles, Twitter, Facebook, or others. So I don't know.

Q And do you know the date that Twitter made the decision first to halt distribution of the story?

A I do not.

Q Okay. And do you know the date that Twitter made the decision to release or permit the story to be shared?

A I do not.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to introduce as exhibit 8 a New York Times article from October 16th, 2020, saying that, "In Reversal, Twitter Is No Longer Blocking New York Post Article." This will be marked as exhibit 8.

So this says that -- have you seen this before?

A No.

Q I can give you a minute to review if you'd like.

A Sure. Okay.

Q Okay. So this article says that on Wednesday, which would've been October 15th, Twitter put a pause on the article, and by the following day, 24 hours later, had unreleased the article.

And so your letter was published October 19th, right?

A Right.

Q So that was after all the decisions involving Twitter, correct?

A Looks that way, yes.

Q So presumably your letter couldn't have played a role, because it actually postdated the time of the Twitter article or the Twitter issues?

A Okay.

Q Do you agree?

A Sure. Yes.

Q Okay. And I want to turn next again to something that came up earlier. You were asked about the use of the term "disinformation" in your email to Mr. Morell, which is dated October 17th, 2020, at 8:01.

A This is the backgrounder?

Q Yeah, that's exhibit 4.

A Right.

Q So I want to look at actually the actual October 19th letter itself, which is exhibit 1.

A Right.

Q The bottom of the second -- the last sentence of the second paragraph says, "A few of us worked against Russian information operations in the United States in the last several years."

So this letter says "information" not "disinformation"?

A Correct.

Q And the fourth paragraph down, the last sentence -- the last clause of the last sentence says the story, quote, "has all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation," right?

A Correct.

Q And so the letter that was actually made public used the word "information" not "disinformation."

A That's correct.

Q And to your knowledge, before we discussed it today, before you produced it to the committee, was your email, which is exhibit 4, the backgrounder, was that ever made public?

A No.

Q So your use of the word "disinformation," and I think you've said it was a mistake, that was never part of the public discourse?

A No. It was only for Mr. Morell.

Q Okay. And it didn't make it into the final?

A It did not.

Q Okay. I want to move on and look a little further at exhibit 4 and some of the issues, the items that you highlighted in here.

So what were your hoping, looking at this broadly, what were your hoping to accomplish by sending Mr. Morell this list?

A So I wanted to give him some context in both kind of a history of Russian information warfare and also what I thought would be kind of their goals in this, how they would go about doing it, and of course why I was suspicious of what had occurred.

Q And is it fair to say that this list of hallmarks draws on your background as a CIA operations officer?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And your experience working -- your experience understanding and working against Russia?

A That's right.

Q Okay. And we just kind of went through this.

Was this draft ever intended for public consumption?

A Not at all. This is just for background and for Michael.

Q Okay. And he actually was the one that wrote the statement, the final --

A That's right.

Q -- the final letter?

A Yes, he did.

Q Okay. In the first paragraph you write, "We need to assess several key traits for covert action and determine if it matches what we have learned over the last week." And you base this on your decades of experience, but without the benefit of being inside the IC at the time -- at this time -- and privy to whatever intelligence the USG has collected.

USG is a reference to U.S. Government?

A That's right.

Q Okay. Is it fair to say that in this analysis you're applying your decades of experience to what's been made publicly available?

A That's right.

Q And you went through it earlier. You didn't have access to any classified information?

A Not at all.

Q And any -- no access to nonpublic information that --

A None.

Q -- may have not been classified?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. In paragraph C of this list, it's about halfway down the page, you write, "One can push disinformation on the cheap. We are likely counting for this operation only a handle of individuals in the Ukraine who are pushing such schemes, a likely hack of the Burisma company server via the Russian intelligence services (as reported by The New York Times) and then perhaps travel costs for Rudy Giuliani on his Kiev adventures."

What were the "Kiev adventures" you were referring to?

A This is when Giuliani was reportedly, as seen in the press, going back and forth traveling throughout the Ukraine trying to dig up dirt on the Bidens.

Q And why would that have been concerning to you?

A He was -- well, first of all, he was meeting with individuals, as noted here, who were tied to Russian intelligence. And so -- and it also is, frankly, in kind of Russia's backyard, where they would have pretty easy access to him. So --

Q And why does your mind go to Rudy Giuliani specifically when you were writing this paragraph?

A It's because of Giuliani's relationship -- again, as reported in the press -- with Andrii Derkach, who was a Russian intelligence agent, as he was indicted or is named by DOJ. And so the idea that the President's lawyer was working with someone who, not a suspect, but is, per DOJ, confirmed as a Russian intelligence asset, is very concerning.

Q And I want to get back to Mr. Derkach in a minute. But in paragraph D of the hallmarks list, you assess whether the Russians would have, quote, "Agents in place."

A Right.

Q And you write this Giuliani is, quote, "at best a nonpaid but witting player."

Why did you write that?

A So when I said "witting," and I think that's key, is that, again, from what I learned from press, is that the Department of Justice had been very clear in warning the White House that Giuliani was -- had a relationship with someone who is tied to Russian intelligence. So presumably, in my mind, Giuliani knew what he was doing. And I think, you know, I guess, my sense was that they were thinking the ends justify the means.

So ultimately this is not something that Giuliani or the White House didn't know was occurring. They were warned that Giuliani had a relationship, some kind of relationship, and digging dirt with someone who was a Russian intelligence asset. That to me is very troubling.

Q And why specifically is that troubling?

A That's classic Russian modus operandi. So they would have their recruited agent, who was Andrii Derkach, and their role would be to find means to promulgate Russian active measures campaigns.

This is a classic -- classically what the Russians would do. Sometimes they would do it via someone witting or unwitting. Either case, they're looking for a dissemination mechanism. So Derkach working with Giuliani really fit that bill.

Q Do you believe that Russian -- and we talked earlier information versus disinformation operations.

A Right.

Q Do you think that Russian information operations pose a threat to American democracy?

A Absolutely.

Q And can you explain the nature of this threat?

A So it's the idea of, again, hacking into a server, pushing out embarrassing information. They did it with the DNC server hack. Again, looking over -- I'm just trying to find examples that I know have been -- that are out in the public world. Looking what they did to the French election campaigns.

But it's the idea of collecting what they call Kompromat, compromising information, and pushing it out for a goal.

So I do think that in the sense that Russia is an adversary to the United States, if they are doing this, that's something that should be exposed.

Q And do you think the American public have a right to know about that information?

A Absolutely.

Q Do you think there's some duty to inform the American public of that?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I want to introduce into the record an article about an interview with Rudy Giuliani. It was in The Daily Beast. It's entitled "Rudy: Only '50/50' Chance I Worked With a 'Russian Spy' to Dig Dirt on Bidens in Ukraine." We'll introduce this as exhibit 9.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A I don't recall, no.

Q I'll give you a minute to review it.

In the middle of the third page of the article, as printed, I think we actually highlighted it -- yeah, it's on page 3 -- when Rudy Giuliani was told the information on the Hunter Biden laptop might be in some way linked to the Russians, Giuliani replied, "Wouldn't matter. What's the difference?"

Do you agree or do you disagree with this view?

A I disagree. I think that working with an adversary, an enemy of the United States, does make a difference.

Q And would it be concerning to you if an American was participating in disseminating information that was -- that's part of a Russian influence campaign?

A Yes.

Q And why is it concerning to have an American involved in that?

A Well, that's how Russians would do two things. That's how they would promulgate the information. But it's also in a sense hide their hand. It makes it more legitimate.

Q On page 5 of this article, at the top, it reads, "Giuliani said he viewed his latest leak to the New York Post as an extension of his years-long efforts to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens."

And this, again, is taken from an hour-long interview directly with Mr. Giuliani by The Daily Beast.

Would it be concerning to you if Giuliani apparently viewed his, quote, leak to the Times (sic) as part of his ongoing work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens?

A Sure.

Q And can you explain a little bit further?

A I mean, again, this is unethical. It's working with an adversary. I believe that as an American, the idea that we would work with individuals, with countries that would wish to do us harm is something that should not occur at all.

And that's, at the very least, it should be certainly something that the American people would see, whether it's against U.S. law or not. That's for the Department of Justice to determine.

Q Okay. And this article references Mr. Giuliani working with Andrii Derkach?

A That's right.

Q What's your understanding of who Andrii Derkach is?

A Again, referring to press reports here, former Ukrainian parliamentarian who the Department of Justice has named as an agent of Russian intelligence and, again, someone who certainly does not have the best interests of the United States at heart.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And I want to introduce into the record the Treasury designation dated September 10th, 2020, designating Mr. Derkach -- sorry, designating -- sanctioning Mr. Derkach for attempting to influence U.S. electoral process.

This reads, "Treasury designated Andrii Derkach, pursuant to Executive Order 13848 for his efforts to influence the 2020 U.S. presidential election. Derkach, a member of the Ukrainian Parliament, has been an active Russian agent for over a decade, maintaining close connections with the Russian Intelligence Services. Derkach has directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. presidential election."

A Right.

Q Is this generally consistent with your understanding of who Mr. Derkach was?

A Yes.

Q Do you know if you reviewed this prior to preparing the list of hallmarks that you sent to Mr. Morell?

A Something of that sort. I mean, it was out there in the public sphere.

Q Okay.

A Clearly, everything we had to do on that had to be obviously sourced to open-source, readily available information. So --

Q Okay. And the fact that Mr. Derkach -- or that Treasury determined Mr. Derkach maintained close connections with the Russian intelligence services, is that something of concern --

A Absolutely.

Q -- particularly in relation to his work with Mr. Giuliani?

A This was, to me, my recollection of this, and it remains to this day, kind of center to my concern that Rudy Giuliani, the President's lawyer, was working with an agent of Russian intelligence. That, to me -- and it's a comment that we would -- or a characterization we would make that there's kind of a lot of stink on him, and that means everything that he touches, who he touches, is going to be suspect. And with Giuliani working for him, that was, to me, a glaring signal.

Q And can you say more why was it a glaring signal?

A Because it was the President's lawyer who was digging dirt and was gathering information from a Russian intelligence agent.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an individual named Telizhenko?

A No, not off the top of my head. Sorry.

Q This article refers to Mr. Giuliani's interactions with him, but if you --

A Okay. Gotcha.

[Polymeropoulos Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I want to introduce as exhibit 11 a Washington Post article dated October 15th, 2020. It's entitled "White House was warned Giuliani was target of Russian intelligence operation to feed misinformation to Trump."

Are you familiar with this article?

A That must have been one of them that we referred to, yeah.

Q So The Post actually -- this article -- we've printed off the October 15th version just for clarity for the record -- this article says that Mr. Giuliani was warned directly himself. The Post later issued a correction saying that Giuliani was not directly warned, but the White House was warned.

A Right.

Q And so the part I'm going to ask you about is about the White House specifically.

A Okay.

Q So it says, "U.S. intelligence agencies warned the White House that President Trump's personal lawyer, Rudy W. Giuliani, was the target of an influence operation by Russian intelligence, according to four former officials familiar with the matter."

It says, "The warnings were based on multiple sources, including intercepted communications, that showed Giuliani was interacting with people tied to Russian intelligence during a December 2019 trip to Ukraine, where he was gathering information that he thought would expose corrupt acts by former vice president Joe Biden and his son Hunter.

"The intelligence raised concerns that Giuliani was being used to feed Russian misinformation to the president, the former officials said, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive information and conversations."

The fact that Giuliani was being used -- that may have been being used to feed Russian misinformation to the President, can you explain why that would be concerning to the intelligence community?

A Well, of course -- well, first of all, Giuliani is being used as, again, whether a witting or unwitting collaborator. That's classic Russian modus operandi. It's something that an intelligence service will do. They'll look for kind of dissemination mechanisms, and Giuliani obviously was that.

And I think that ultimately the notion that there was a warning issued and that was ignored, again, that to me is pretty concerning. That shows also a level of complicity on Giuliani's part. Ordinarily, if an American is warned that they're talking to a Russian intelligence asset, they will cease and desist on any activities, particularly if it's someone involved in any kind of U.S. Government affairs.

Q And in this case, even if Mr. Giuliani was not warned directly, if the White House was warned --

A Right.

Q -- and they didn't then subsequently warn Giuliani, would that be concerning?

A Absolutely.

Q For the same reason?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. Did the fact that the warning apparently was made but didn't have any impact, did that heighten your -- was that part of the reason -- did that contribute to your decision to write the letter?

A I think it certainly made things more suspect, because ultimately, again, when someone is usually warned, they will stand down. The fact that he didn't care was very disconcerting.

Q And did you believe that the American public had a reason -- had a need to know about that?

A Sure. Yes.

Q And what was the value in informing the American public of that?

A Well, again, it's the notion that -- two things.

One is that Rudy -- that the President's lawyer is willing to work with Russian intelligence. I think that's something that's pretty disturbing.

But, again, it's the notion of what information comes out of that is going to be suspect, whether it's, again -- and, again, it's part of the information warfare aspect. So it can be true information that's part of kind of this notion of compromising information, it can be information that has been true and then somewhat altered, and then total disinformation. It's all part of the Russian playbook.

Q And so is it fair to say that by putting the October 19th letter together and pushing that out you were working to put information into the public sphere to counter those Russian --

A That's right.

Q -- what you understood to be a Russian operation?

A Correct.

Q All right. Just quickly, you were asked earlier if you were aware that Mr. Morell coordinated with the Biden campaign. You have no information about that any way, in any direction?

A My comment was I didn't know who he talked to, but that he did make me aware that he spoke to somebody. But I did not know who. I did not -- he provided no details.

Q Okay. Did you have any interaction directly with any social media company about the Hunter Biden emails?

A No.

Q Okay. And to your knowledge, did any of the other signatories have any interactions with any social media company?

A I don't know. Not to my knowledge, no.

Q Did you have any interaction with any social media company about the New York Post article specifically?

A No.

Q And to your knowledge, did any of the other signatories have any such interactions?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. On October 19th, 2020, when the article was made public -- or when the letter was made public -- you were a private citizen, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And to your knowledge, were all of the other signatories private citizens also?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Would you agree that as a private citizen you have a right to engage in the political process?

A Yes.

Q And you have a right to exercise your First Amendment?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And looking at the letter itself, it doesn't actually endorse a political candidate, correct?

A It does not endorse a political candidate, no.

Q Okay. In fact, the closing line of the letter says that, "It is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy."

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q Is it fair to say that the letter -- the focus of the letter was actually a concern about Russia as opposed to the Presidential candidates themselves?

A It was certainly a focus on Russia. But, you know -- so, yes, it was a focus on Russia. I mean, the Morell email to everyone did put into play the reviews by the Vice President. There's no doubt about that, though.

Q But on the face of the letter?

A The face of the letter, nothing on politics, no.

Q Okay. And the letter itself, we went through earlier that you didn't have any direct access to any nonpublic information? You didn't have any access at all to any nonpublic information?

A None.

Q Okay. And the letter actually makes it clear, right?

A Very clear.

Q So you didn't -- there's nothing in the letter that suggests any of the signatories had any --

A No.

Q Okay. So the --

A I think that's done on purpose.

Q And can you say that --

A I mean, we have to be very clear on that. You know, we are retired, left government service. We do not have access to that kind of information, nor would it be appropriate to even insinuate that we did, because that just doesn't happen.

Q And why was it important for you to include in the letter so that the American public would know that --

A Because it's just our assessment as retired U.S. Government officials. That's it.

Q Okay. So you didn't intend to imply, in other words, that you had any access to nonpublic information?

A No.

Q And that's actually fairly clear on the face of the email, right?

A Yes.

Q So, for example, the fifth paragraph says, "We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails, provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not," right?

A Right.

Q And then the very following paragraph says, "If we are right," suggesting that you could not be right, right?

A Right.

Q Okay. And then the paragraph after that says, "There are a number of factors that make us suspicious of Russian involvement." It doesn't say that you know that there was Russian involvement?

A Correct.

Q Okay. You were asked earlier about the Mr. David Cariens email.

A Uh-huh.

Q You said you don't know who Mr. Cariens is?

A I do not.

Q And you don't have any personal knowledge of his interactions with the PRB?

A No.

Q Okay. And you said you thought it would be almost unthinkable for the PRB to have done -- or very surprising, I guess?

A I would be very shocked if that is what they did.

Q And I want to look at the actual email quickly. It's exhibit -- majority exhibit 6.

A Okay.

Q And so this email was sent from Mr. Cariens to [redacted] who is the majority counsel. Nothing in here has been subject to cross-examination, right?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. And you say you don't have any personal knowledge of the interaction between Mr. Cariens and the PRB. It actually says here that -- let's see, one, two, three, four -- fifth line down in parentheses, "I do not recall the person's name or the exact date of the phone call," right?

A Uh-huh.

Q And so he actually says he can't remember key details, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And the email that's one giant paragraph there, it's not broken out, it's possible that he is misremembering or he wrote the email unclearly, correct?

A Correct. And one other notion on this is, all of my -- in my two and a half -- in all my time since July 2019 when I retired and the numerous times I've engaged with the PRB, over 50 articles I've written for the Washington Examiner, multiple other articles for Just Security, for The Washington Post, others, I never had any contact over the phone. Everything with them is done over email, including approval processes.

You have to have that in writing when something is approved, or if something is denied with the changes you made.

But it's always -- I would never take any kind of approval over the phone. That would mean nothing to me. It would have to be an email for the record. So I just noticed here that he said it was based on a phone call. That doesn't seem plausible.

Q I'm sorry, could you say that again?

A That doesn't seem plausible.

Q How many interactions do you think -- could you estimate you've had with the PRB over your career?

A Probably, in two and a half years, at least 70, 80.

Q Okay. And can you talk, how long does it usually take for the PRB to respond to a request?

A It depends. If I write something with a suspense time of a day or two, they will honor that. When I wrote my book it took them several weeks. But they usually honor kind of a suspense on things. So as long as you're specific on it, they kind of put that to the top of the pile.

Q So it's not unusual for them to turn around a request quickly?

A No, I've had them turn it around in several hours.

Q Okay.

A But, again, all in writing. I would never take anything verbal from them.

Q And just a couple quick questions to wrap up.

A Sure.

Q And then we can hopefully let you get on with your day.

You mentioned, I think, the fallout of the letter earlier. Has the aftermath of signing the letter, like the fact that you're involved in this investigation, that your name has been in the New York Post, has that impacted you in any way?

A Sure. I've had numerous death threats. The Vienna police are involved. I've sent them kind of the emails that I've received. Have consistent phone calls to my landline, consistent phone calls to my cell phone, people threatening me, threatening me and my family.

Q And your family?

A Yep.

Q Do you have children?

A Yep.

Q The fact that you've participated in writing this letter, which is an exercise of your, as a private citizen, an exercise of your First Amendment rights, participating in the political process, do you think that what you've experienced in the aftermath could chill your willingness to participate in this type of activity in the future?

A I think that -- I think it would -- for myself, no, only because I served 26 years at the CIA. I did operational meetings in the back alleys of conflict zones. So I have a pretty high tolerance for fear.

I do think, though, that for others, the idea that one would be subject to kind of such vitriol and threats would be -- would certainly be something that would question -- or would cause them questioning into speaking out. No doubt about that.

[redacted] Okay. We don't have anything further. Thank you. We can go off the record.

[redacted] We have no further questions on our side either, so we're prepared to end this and go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 11:49 a.m., the interview was concluded.]

[redacted] OFFICE OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of Agent Timothy Langan, an Executive Assistant Director at the FBI. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the Bureau.

Would the witness please state your name for the record.

Mr. Langan. Timothy R. Langan, Jr.

[redacted] And I understand you're joined here today by two lawyers from the Bureau. Would you please introduce yourself for the record.

[redacted] Sure. [redacted] from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

[redacted] [redacted] from the FBI's Office of the General Counsel.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you and your agency counterparts here today for appearing to answer our questions. We appreciate your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] I'm with the majority staff, with Mr. Jordan. And I'm going to have everyone here in the room introduce themselves from a staff perspective.

[redacted] [redacted] with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jim Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jim Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary minority.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] I'm going to go over the ground rules and guidelines we'll follow during today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for an hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask you questions as well, and we'll go back and forth until we're done. Typically we take a short break at the end of each hour as we switch around, but if you'd like to take a break, break apart from that, let us know.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter here taking down everything we say to make a written record. Accordingly, we will ask you from time to time to give verbal responses if you -- you know, if you have not.

Mr. Langan. Yes.

[redacted] And I'm sure you understand that.

Mr. Langan. Yes.

[redacted] So the reporter can take a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you during a 1-hour -- each 1-hour period. For the most part, we'll have one questioner, and if one of us doesn't understand or wants to jump in, we may. And that is sort of how we do that. And the same goes, you know, for the minority -- minority staff.

So please try and speak clearly so the reporter can understand and the folks at the end of the table and around the room can hear you. It's important that we don't talk over one another and interrupt. Usually that's something the questioner tends to do, and we will try to avoid doing that. We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we will take our time.

If you have any questions or do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, none of which should come as a surprise. We've written letters on, you know, all the topics that we have questions about for the most part. And so, if you don't understand a particular question or don't remember, it's best not to guess. Of course, you understand this. Give us your best recollection.

It's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. The Federal Rules of Evidence aren't applicable here. The hearsay rules aren't. So it's okay to tell us something that isn't your firsthand recollection as long as you help us understand how you learned it.

If you don't know something or you can't remember, just let us know. Some of these things happened a while ago, and no human being can remember everything, and all we're asking today is for your best recollections.

You should also understand that, while this interview is not under oath, that by law you're required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. You understand that?

Mr. Langan. Yes.

[redacted] As I mentioned, we say that to all witnesses --

Mr. Langan. Yes.

[redacted] -- and mean no disrespect to a decorated FBI agent such as yourself.

Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for making false statements under 18 United States Code 1001. You understand that?

Mr. Langan. Yes.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss today is confidential, and that is so we can bring in other witnesses and get their unvarnished testimony. And so we would ask you, but also FBI counsel, not share the Q&A that we have today with the witness with future witnesses. Is that something you can agree to? I'm asking the FBI counsel.

[redacted] I've never been asked to make a representation on the record --

[redacted] It's what we do when agency counsel comes with witnesses. You know, we -- the questions that we ask today, you know, we might ask a very similar set of questions, and we would ask the agency not to give a roadmap of the types of questions the committee is asking. And we would also ask the agency not to share the testimony of today's witness with potential future witnesses.

[redacted] I can certainly commit to not influencing the testimony of any witnesses. As you know, you have additional witnesses on the same topic.

[redacted] Correct.

[redacted] So I certainly would not disclose the roadmap. But I can imagine that there would be times where I would ask the witnesses some very basic questions that would repeat some of the questions that you're going to ask today, so that's what I just want to be careful of.

[redacted] Okay. Well, we're not asking the FBI to make an extraordinary -- go to extraordinary lengths not to do that. What we're just asking is that you don't walk witnesses through the specific questions we've asked --

[redacted] Sure, of course.

[redacted] -- other witnesses --

[redacted] Of course.

[redacted] -- on the one hand. On the other hand, we're asking you not to share with other witnesses what today's witness provides as testimony.

[redacted] Sure. Understood.

[redacted] The committee's practice is to video record interviews, and we intend to video record future interviews with Department -- current Department personnel. We first requested today's interview, and a number of interviews that we've asked for going back to 2022, some of them going back to 2021. We sent a letter on -- a set of letters on January 17th and again on March 3rd.

In the March 3rd letter, we asked for 16 witnesses. To date, this is the first witness we've been able to schedule. I understand the Department has characterized its cooperation as being diligent, and they said that they have -- they've told us that they've scheduled these on expedited timeline.

And I would just note for the record that, of the 16 witnesses that we asked for in January and again in March, you know, today is the first one. So it's hard for us to understand that that's diligent or expedited. A number of these have been scheduled, you know, going out into the month of May, and that's almost halfway through the year. So we would just note that frustration for the record.

[redacted] I would note for the record that the committee has not proposed any earlier dates for any of the witnesses and has accepted the dates that were proposed. So we are happy to be here today. We are happy to continue to have additional witnesses before the committee.

In terms of the video, I would just put on the record that the FBI is a component of the Department of Justice, and we are bound by requirements of Department witnesses.

[redacted] And what are the requirements, and where is that articulated?

[redacted] I would refer you to the Department.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] Obviously, they're not here today. But I know you've been in communication with counsel from the Department of Justice, and I just want to be clear about that.

[redacted] We have, indeed. The Department hasn't identified any reason other than the nebulous idea of a longstanding policy. The, you know, committees in the House have been video recording transcribed interviews for the last 3 or 4 years now, and so that's just something that our members have asked us to do.

We've made an accommodation today. We are foregoing the video because we'd like to -- we'd like to engage with the witness. We'd like to get this -- as many facts as we can and get on with our investigation. But we -- we do reserve the right to bring today's witness back for a second interview with the video component. We also reserve the right obviously to bring witnesses in to public hearings.

So that's the end of my remarks. Do the Democrats' staff have any?

[redacted] No.

Thank you to the witness for appearing today.

[redacted] My colleague [redacted] will lead the questions, and we'll get the clock started.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q And, again, Agent Langan, my name is [redacted] and I work for Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll start with a line of questioning: When did you join the FBI?

A In 1998.

Q And what position do you currently hold?

A Executive Assistant Director over the Criminal, Cyber, Response, Services Branch.

Q When did you start in this position?

A It was June of 2022.

Q Do you work out of the FBI Headquarters?

A I do.

Q Can you describe your roles and responsibilities in this position?

A I currently lead five divisions in the FBI: Criminal Division, the Cyber Division, the International Operations Division, the Crisis Response Division, and the Victims Services Division.

Q Who is your direct supervisor?

A Direct supervisor is the Deputy Director, Paul Abbate.

Q And how many people directly report to you?

A Between 2,000 and 3,000.

Q During your tenure at the FBI, what positions have you held?

A Do you want me to run through the whole --

Q If you're able to recollect.

A -- the career? Of course, yeah. Do you want me to start from the beginning or start backwards?

Q That would be great.

A Okay. I started in the FBI after my military and police time. In 1998, I was sent to the Dallas division where I was an agent. I worked violent crime and Mexican narcotics organizations. I was on the SWAT team. I transitioned to working counterterrorism.

From there, I took a specialty assignment to protect Attorney General Gonzales and Ashcroft on the Attorney General's protection detail, which the FBI has responsibility for. So I did that for several years, and then I was assigned my first headquarters assignment in the gang unit, in Criminal Investigative Division, focusing on violent crime and gang work. I then took an overseas position in Sofia, Bulgaria, at our Embassy, and I was overseeing our office there that oversees Bulgaria, Macedonia, and Albania. For about 4 years, I was there leading the FBI's work there.

I then took a transfer and promotion to be a supervisory special agent in Nashville where I worked financial crimes, public corruption, and civil rights. From there, I was promoted to assistant special agent in charge of the Miami Field Office Criminal Enterprise Branch, where I investigated gangs, violent crime, violent crimes against children, transnational organized crime. There I lead the Miami division's response to several mass casualty incidents, one being Marjory Stoneman Parkland massacre, along with a mass killing that happened in the Fort Lauderdale Airport.

From there, I was promoted in, I believe it was 2018, to the Executive Service back to International Operations, where I saw the FBI's operations in Asia, Africa, and the Middle East. From there, I was promoted after about a little over a year to become the special agent in charge of the Kansas City division. While I was in the Kansas City division, I led one of the largest criminal surges, Operation Legend, that focused on violent crime and criminal activity of activities going on in Kansas City.

After serving approximately 2 years, a little less than that, in Kansas City, I took a position as the Assistant Director of Counterterrorism. And so I came back to FBI Headquarters, and I had that position for approximately a year before the position that I'm in now.

Q And can you describe the organizational chart for your office as Executive Assistant Director?

A Sure. So as I mentioned, five divisions that I oversee, those five divisions that I stated previously, and so those all are led by an assistant director with several deputy assistant directors underneath them, and then other senior executives, section chiefs, and then senior -- senior leaders would be unit chiefs underneath them, and then other supervisory position program managers on down to agents and MAPAs, analysts, within those large -- each one of those divisions. It's a very large structure on their own.

Q Of course. And how many deputies? I know you said several.

A Yes.

Q Do you have a number of how many deputies you have?

A In the whole branch --

Q Yes.

A -- right now? I don't. It would be, let's see, if there's five ADs, some of them have up to three DADs, so there's maybe a dozen maybe. I don't -- I'd have to look at the chart of how many DA -- Deputy Assistant Directors there are in the branch.

Q Do you know of the DADs, the -- anyone who you could remember their names and titles, roughly what they're DAD over?

A Sure.

Q Could you list them?

A The DADs in my current branch?

Q Correct.

A Okay. You know this isn't the branch that I was in. It's a different branch. If you want to -- if you want to know about this branch, definitely we'll tell you about it, but this isn't the branch when I was Assistant Director of Terrorism.

Q That's all right.

A Okay.

Q The one that you're in now.

A Okay. Gotcha. Okay.

Q Yeah. Thank you.

A So, then, all right, so starting with -- I'll start with Criminal Division. So the Assistant Director is Luis Quesada, and the Deputy Assistant Directors are Joe Perez, Aaron Tapp, and Cassandra Butler.

Then going to Cyber Division, the Assistant Director is Bryan Vorndran, DAD David

Scott, DAD Cynthia Kaiser, and I think there's an acting DAD Phil Frim.

International Operations, the AD is Ray Duda, the DAD is Jason Beachy, and there's an associate DAD Jenny -- I don't know Jenny's last name.

Then, in the Crisis Response Division, there is AD Paul Haertel, DAD Steven Palmer, and there's one other DAD. He just got named, and I forget his name. It was -- oh, it escapes me, but it was recently.

And then with Victims Services, the Assistant Director is Regina Thompson, and she does not have a DAD, but she -- Kim is her chief executive. But --

Q Thank you. And then, in 2019, you were the special agent in charge of the Kansas City field office, as you mentioned.

A Yes.

Q What were your roles and responsibilities as the special agent in charge?

A So the special agent in charge of a field office is in charge of all investigations operations for that -- for that division. The Kansas City division covers the western district of Missouri, so basically half of Missouri, and the entire State of Kansas.

The agent in charge is responsible for the external relationships, the overall investigative strategies for that division, responsible for the members of the division, responsible for coordinating any major significant exchanges with headquarters, with outside agencies, collaboration with the U.S. Attorney's Office, with other Federal agencies, leads the relationships with other private and public sector entities.

Q And then, as Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division, what were your roles and responsibilities in that role?

A In that, you're leading the strategies and program management of the Counterterrorism Division and leading those employees in -- in those areas. They oversee guidance, policies, and program management of the investigations involved in Counterterrorism Division.

Q And did you take this role from Jill Sanborn?

A I did.

Q What subject matters more specifically did you oversee?

A In Counterterrorism Division?

Q Correct.

A Yes. So Counterterrorism Division covers all aspects of international terrorism, which would include many of the groups that you're familiar with probably, whether it's ISIS, al-Qaida, Al Shabaab, Hezbollah, and others that might be international nexus, includes domestic terrorism as well. Then it also includes kind of hybrid, like nation -- this is not classified, right?

[redacted] No, we're in a nonclassified setting.

Mr. Langan. And this is a nonclassified --

[redacted] Correct.

Mr. Langan. So Iran, as well, as an actor, so --

BY [redacted]

Q And who was your direct supervisor in this role?

A It was Jill Sanborn.

Q And how many people directly reported to you when you were the Assistant Director of Counterterrorism?

A About 1,000.

Q Did you work out of headquarters in this position?

A I did.

Q Did you have regular interactions with the FBI Director and/or Deputy Director?

A Yes, usually morning briefings.

Q What about any other senior leadership from headquarters?

A Yeah. As needed, you'd interact with other assistant directors or other executives, most commonly whether it's International Operations, whether it's the Criminal Division, whether it's Financial Division, our Financial Facilities Division, so, yes.

Q How regularly did you interface with the FBI field offices?

A Kind of as needed. It wouldn't be directly all the time, but sometimes you might have a discussion with an SAC about some type of issue or topic on an as-needed basis.

Q And what was your involvement with field investigations?

A The Counterterrorism Division oversees the investigations but does not have direct control of the investigations. So the program managers -- so there would be program managers that were assigned different regions, and so as far as underneath in the breakdown of Counterterrorism Division. And so certain program managers might oversee one or two offices in their investigations and ensure that those investigations are being conducted appropriately and per policy.

Q And, during your time as Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division, how often did you interact with EAD of National Security Branch Jill Sanborn?

A Often.

Q Did you have weekly meetings with her?

A Not always. I didn't always have weekly meetings with her.

Q If you were able to describe how often you met with her, what would be your best guess?

A She was -- she was working outside of the Phoenix office much of the time. So communications would be -- I'd have communications with her very often, whether they are probably either voice communications or emails or messages, something like that. And then meetings with her, again, probably -- and when she would come back every few weeks maybe.

Q And did you perceive that she had a handle on her area of jurisdiction in that role?

A In Counterterrorism?

Q Yes.

A Yeah, she's -- she's one of the leading experts of counterterrorism, I'd say, in the Bureau at the time.

Q Would you say that she knew what was going on day-to-day?

A I -- I couldn't speak to what she knew of on day-to-day.

Q Did she generally know about the issue areas within the Counterterrorism Division?

A Yeah. If there was a major issue, we would bring it -- we would make sure that we informed her.

Q Now, I'm going to switch topics, be a little bit more specific discussing the National School Boards Association memo. Are you familiar with the National School Boards Association in September 29, 2021, letter to President Biden?

A Yes.

Q Moving forward, I will refer to them as the NSBA, by the way.

A Okay.

[redacted] And I'm going to mark this letter as exhibit 1 for the record.

[Langan Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q When did you learn of the NSBA September 29th letter?

A I believe it was October 2nd.

Q When did you learn that the Justice Department was going to take action related to school board-related threats?

A The discussion started on October 2nd.

Q And why did the Justice Department believe it needed to take action?

A I don't know. You'd have to ask the Justice Department why they felt they needed -- well, the -- the -- the discussion was involving threats to the school -- to members of school boards, so I assume it was because of threats stemming from school boards. But you probably want to refer --

BY [redacted]

Q And who were you discussing that with on October 2nd?

A So I got an email, was the first that I had heard from it, from, I believe it was Steve Jensen, who was a section chief, who was the domestic terrorism operations section chief, that day informing me of a communication that -- sent forward from him from DOJ where there was discussion on wanting to put out some messaging and engage on this letter.

Q So --

Chairman Jordan. Can I -- Mr. Langan, thank you for being here.

Mr. Langan. Mr. Jordan.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Jordan from Ohio. So, Mr. Jensen, who did he get that communication from?

Mr. Langan. I'd have to refer to the email. I don't remember -- assuming from DOJ.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. We'd like that email.

[redacted] I would just say for the record that the FBI is not asserting a deliberative process privilege. That's obviously something that we would defer to the Department. But he is certainly here to discuss what he knows and communications that he was involved in today.

Chairman Jordan. So I believe October 2nd was a Saturday?

Mr. Langan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. So, on a Saturday, you get an email from Mr. Jensen?

Mr. Langan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Jensen is -- what's his title again?

Mr. Langan. He's a section chief.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And, in that email, you remember it being conveyed that he had been contacted by someone from DOJ --

Mr. Langan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. -- saying that they were going to put out this memorandum?

Mr. Langan. I don't know if it was put out memorandum, looking at engaging, like, you know, the -- looking for either messaging or looking for Bureau engagement on this issue.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And then -- go ahead. I want to know about these discussions, but go ahead.

BY [redacted]

Q Absolutely.

Now, at a November 3, 2021, hearing before the House Intelligence Committee, you testified that the DOJ and FBI conducted a discussion the weekend before the issuance of the memorandum. Do you remember that testimony?

A Yes.

Q And what were the contents of these discussions that happened that weekend before, to your knowledge?

A So not a lot. It was an email from Steve Jensen describing or sending -- forwarding the email from Justice. I remember asking back, what is this involving, what kind of threat is this, is it -- I forget if I used -- is this a specific threat, what's going on, and then having a phone call with my DAD, then his superior, which would be a DAD named Jim Tarasca, having a phone call with Jim: Do you know what this is coming from? What is -- you know, what's -- what is this, and what's -- what's this involving?

I don't believe Jim knew either, as far as, you know, trying to find out was this a specific threat we're working on, where is this from.

And then like a follow-on email saying: Okay. We'll -- we need to talk about this, so let's talk about it on Monday with more engagement so we can find out exactly what we're dealing with here and maybe engage with people in Justice on Monday.

Chairman Jordan. Was it unusual to get an email on Saturday from Mr. Jensen?

Mr. Langan. No. I -- with Counterterrorism Division, my phone never stopped.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And, to your knowledge, whose idea was it to issue a memorandum?

A I believe it was Justice.

Q And, during your hearing, you testified that the Department was looking to put out some messaging. What did you mean by that?

A Pretty much like I told you now, looking at somehow wanting to, I guess, address what they -- they had information on a -- on a threat that was happening to school boards.

BY [redacted]

Q And you talked about a specific -- looking for a specific threat. What due diligence did you do on the threats?

A Me?

Q Yes.

A On that day?

Q Uh-huh.

A I told my -- I told the team: Hey, let's, you know, drill down, see what they're talking about.

Q And what did your team find?

A I think, it was when we got back together that week, don't know if anything on like Monday, but said: Hey, we'll start looking to see what they're talking about.

And I don't think we got too much further before then DOJ put out an external message, but I don't recall ever being told of any specific threats that they had at that time.

Chairman Jordan. Is that unusual?

Mr. Langan. So one of the reasons -- so -- and again, trying to recall what was told to me on that day, don't remember exactly how things happened, but no -- nothing that was Earth shattering, to my knowledge.

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

Mr. Langan. No, because if -- that's one of the reasons why we then subsequently put a threat tag on this, which, again, wanted to try to clarify this is not a laser designator on a human. This is a card catalog system. Because without a threat tag, it may have come to us as just some type of interstate threat --

Chairman Jordan. I understand that, Mr. Langan.

Mr. Langan. Okay. But --

Chairman Jordan. I'm more interested in the prompting of all this, according to testimony of Attorney General, it was, in fact, the letter from the school board association on the 29th.

Mr. Langan. Right.

Chairman Jordan. So you have a group that puts out a letter on September 29th. Three days later, on a Saturday, you get an email from one of your bosses who says: Hey, we need to start working on this.

Mr. Langan. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. What exactly were the instructions in that email? What did he specifically want you to do?

[redacted] I just want to clarify, sorry, sir, it was not your boss who sent you the email.

Mr. Langan. No.

Chairman Jordan. You get it from Mr. Jensen.

Mr. Langan. Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. What's the relationship between you and Mr. Jensen now?

Mr. Langan. He's two levels below me. He's one of my -- he's a section chief.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And so you get this email from Mr. Jensen.

Mr. Langan. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Again, just 3 days -- on a weekend, 3 days after this group puts out the letter and before the memorandum from the Attorney General --

Mr. Langan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. -- directing any type of process and scheme to be put in place?

Mr. Langan. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. What else -- what did Mr. Jensen's email say exactly then?

Mr. Langan. Had concerns with -- that this is coming out for a quick response. We need to talk about this. I think, you know, had some concerns of what's -- what's this about. We need to -- we need to engage more in this, which I concurred with: Yes, we need to find out what are we talking about. What's the scope of this threat? What are our goals?

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And then the memo comes out on the 4th. Is -- was that unusual that -- and, well, let me back up a second.

Did you know on the 2nd that the Biden administration had received a memo from the School Boards Association? Was that conveyed as the catalyst for this?

Mr. Langan. I believe it was in the email that was forwarded to me, but --

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So the email Mr. Jensen forwards to you has the school boards title.

Mr. Langan. I believe it had this mem -- this in it, this -- I believe that's what was attached to it.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Okay.

Mr. Langan. But I -- I haven't looked back at that to see if that was -- I knew it was attached, but I think it was this, and -- but it did not -- you know, I don't know if I opened that attachment.

Chairman Jordan. And then, 2 days after this communication on Saturday, the memo goes out. Had you ever seen anything like that before where in a 5 day time span you saw things move that rapidly based on some letter from a political bureau?

Mr. Langan. I think it's hard to look at this differently. I've seen other things move very rapidly but in a different context. As far as a memo from Justice, this was my first experience. I'd probably been in that position -- you know, I just came from leading the Kansas City field office for 3 months. So this was my first experience with maybe a memo like this coming from DOJ, so I don't have a lot of foundation to base it off of, but --

Chairman Jordan. Okay. I'm going to wait until we get to the -- I think it's exhibit 5.

BY [redacted]

Q Absolutely.

And, during her transcribed interview, former EAD Sanborn stated that, prior to the issuance of the October 4th memorandum, you let her know that you would be discussing an increase in alleged threats or violence at school board meetings and that you would keep her posted. Do you remember this interaction?

A Uh-huh.

Q What -- were these the same discussions that you referred to in your hearing testimony or different conversations?

A That all happened that weekend, yes.

Q Okay. And former EAD Sanborn also testified during her transcribed interview that you had more knowledge on the school boards issue than she did. Specifically, she testified that, you and Carlton Peeples definitely have more knowledge than me because they were more involved in it than I.

Do you agree with that?

A Yes.

Q What was your involvement in the memo roughly?

A What memo? Which one?

Q The Attorney General's memo.

A Nothing.

Q Okay. And what due diligence occurred at the Justice Department, to your knowledge, between the September 29th letter and the October 4th memo?

A My only knowledge is the email communication that came in to Steve Jensen. I was not involved in any of the discussions with anyone from Justice at that point, so I -- I can't say if anything else happened with Justice, but nothing to my knowledge.

Chairman Jordan. And, again, why would -- why would Steve Jensen be the entry point for FBI? Was there a reason?

Mr. Langan. Yeah. So there is -- so as he -- he is a section chief, and he's got his interlocutors, and they contact frequently between the National Security Division from DOJ. So that's a very -- that's very common. I actually as AD kind of sit at a gap to where I didn't have that much direct communication with DOJ that position. The EAD did, and then actually the section chief or DAD below me. They just didn't have that much direct, and so it was not uncommon that they would be talking directly to DOJ and I would not.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you aware if the Justice Department looked at any of the incidents cited in the NSBA's letter?

A If they looked at any of them and cited --

Q The incidents cited in NSBA's letter?

A I don't know.

Q Did you personally look into any of the incidents cited in the --

A I did not.

Q Okay. Would it surprise you to --

BY [redacted]

Q Did your team look at any of the incidents cited in the --

A I don't know if they did. And, again, I have a branch, and I told the Deputy Assistant Director: Hey, look into this, see -- see what, you know, see what this is involving.

Q And did the Deputy Assistant Director report back to you?

A I'm sure he did. We would meet constantly. I don't remember anything significant coming out of -- you know, I know what you're trying -- like, I want to answer -- I don't remember any like, yes, this was the big case that started this. I don't recall that.

Q Uh-huh. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Would it surprise you to learn that the vast majority of incidents cited in the NSBA's letter calling for Federal intervention at school board meetings and equating parents to domestic terrorists were nonviolent?

A It wouldn't surprise me.

Q And, according to a May 2022 report commissioned by the NSBA, on September 21st of 2021, 8 days before the NSBA sent its letter, the NSBA sent a detailed summary of the contents of its letter and a list of incidents at school board meetings to the White House at its request. Are you aware of those communications?

A Subsequently, I think I've heard about them.

Q In an email to the NSBA, White House official Mary Wall stated: Is there any way we can take a look at the letter in advance of the release? In specific, I'm meeting with colleagues from the -- from other White House offices and DOJ tomorrow morning to see if there might be any options we can pursue here. So, if you have concrete recommendations in your letter, e.g., the threat assessment you mentioned, would be good to know so I can include in discussions.

Have you ever interacted with Mary Wall?

A No.

Q Did you take part in a discussion that, according to the email, occurred on the morning of September 22nd between the White House and DOJ?

A No.

Q If not, do you know of anyone who did participate in those discussions on September 22nd?

A No.

Q Did you take part in discussions regarding threats and violence related to school board discussion -- related to school boards before September 29th?

A No.

Q If not you, did any FBI officials take part in these discussions, to your knowledge?

A Those discussions related to this or just a general discussion on school boards, not to my knowledge, but they could've happened at a lower level. I don't think anybody was involved with the White House discussion. But I couldn't help -- you know, I couldn't say that at some time someone was in discussion, you know, talking about potential threats that occur. So, again, so 1,000 people, those could've come up. I mean, that's part of what they do is discuss threats, but I'm not aware of it.

Q Thank you. No, I appreciate it.

Now, moving on to the October 4th memo, are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum regarding alleged threats and violence at local school board meetings?

A Yes.

[redacted] And I'm going to enter this memorandum into the record as exhibit 2.

[Langan Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q At the time this was published, you were the Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division, correct?

A Yes.

Q When did you learn of the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum?

A On October 4th.

Q Did you have any involvement with drafting the memo at all?

A No.

Q Were you provided the opportunity to weigh in on the substance of the memo previously before it was published?

A I reviewed some previous emails that looked like there was some type of at least knowledge that this was coming out, but I don't remember reviewing a draft. I don't think I would've -- I don't recall reviewing the draft. But her -- somehow there's communications, hey, this is coming out today, and I think that was it.

Chairman Jordan. Did Mr. Jensen review the draft?

Mr. Langan. I don't know if he did or not.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember who else was on those emails?

A I think our -- I think our OGC, I think, maybe [redacted] was on the email there, maybe Jensen, [redacted], you know, I think.

Q Do you remember if anybody else weighed in on the substance of the memo?

A I don't know if -- I think -- I'm trying to recall that.

[redacted] Weighed in with whom?

BY [redacted]

Q Weighed in on the email communications that he's referring to.

A [redacted] might have said something; I'm not sure though. I don't have direct recollection of whether -- what she said. I thought she might have made a comment or something. I'm not sure.

Q That's okay. Thank you.

In the memo, the Attorney General required each of the United States Attorney's Offices in conjunction with the FBI to hold meetings with local law enforcement partners in each judicial district. Was that the impetus behind involving these two entities? Or what was, I'm sorry, the impetus behind involving these two entities, the United States Attorney's Office with -- and the FBI?

A What was the impetus behind him putting that out?

Q The impetus behind him involving the United States Attorney's Offices and FBI with local law enforcement?

A I could assume it was as a relation to the weekend discussions related to the school board threats.

Q Did you think it was appropriate for the FBI to be involved in a local law enforcement matter?

A It's not uncommon for us to be involved in threats. It's -- we do that every day, and whether -- and we -- we work with local law enforcement daily on -- so working on threat issues is something we do daily.

BY [redacted]

Q What did you understand the Federal nexus to be for FBI's involvement with local school board meetings?

A Well, that would have to be part of the scoping that we alluded to wanting to find out, you know, what exactly -- you know, we're only -- we only want to be engaged in threats if they do involve a Federal nexus, so that could be a threat that occurred via a wire transmission, interstate.

Most threats of direct violence are handled at a local level. If the threats do include an ideology, then that could be a Federal matter if it is -- if it does fall into a domestic terrorism situation, a threat or act of violence. So that's -- that's usually where we would be involved. But there's oftentimes when there's -- there are discussions with local law enforcement daily about things that -- instances that come up, and, hey, is this something that would be Federal or State.

Q So, at the time of the October 4th memorandum, when it was issued, was there an understanding of what the Federal nexus would be or was that to scope?

A No, we didn't -- again, this -- this came out and then it was not -- it was not our messaging. So, at that point, we would be -- we looked at this, as we started to read this, well, let's be responsive to this in what this could possibly mean with local -- other local law enforcement, Federal officials in the area, and we can discuss this.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever attend any of those meetings?

A No.

Q And, to your knowledge, did any of these meetings occur in the judicial district in which the FBI Headquarters is located?

A I don't -- no, I -- headquarters in the Washington Field Office. I don't know if Washington Field Office held a meeting on it.

Q Did anyone who worked for you in the Counterterrorism Division attend any meetings?

A No. That the U.S. Attorney's Office would've set up in their districts?

Q Yes.

A No, not to my knowledge.

Q Are you aware that, after these meetings occurred, the United States Attorney's Office reported to Main Justice on what they found?

A I had heard that they did.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that reports back to Main Justice of school board-related threats or violence were almost nonexistent?

A No.

Q In fact, the reports back to Main Justice show that there were no legitimate nationwide law enforcement justification for the Attorney General's directive. And, in the press release accompanying the memo, it announced the creation of a task force consisting of representatives from the Department's Criminal Division, National Security Division, Civil Rights Division, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, the FBI, the Community Relations Service, and the Office of Justice Programs. Did you have any involvement in drafting this press release?

A No.

[redacted] I'd like to enter the press release into the record as exhibit 3.

[Langan Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Chairman Jordan. If the letter comes out on the 29th, you get called 3 days later -- or you get an email 3 days later from one of your section chiefs on a weekend, and then the memo from the Attorney General of the United States goes out 2 days after that on the 4th, and we find out that there was really nothing going on out there, and your answer to that was you were not surprised.

That's -- your answer surprises me because it seems like the intensity and the sequence and the -- that short timeframe would say like this is -- this is critical. We've got a huge problem. We're doing emails on Saturday, and it's all turned around in 5 days, but yet didn't really find anything.

Mr. Langan. And I think, you know, as far as -- you know, I'm trying to -- with I'm surprised now, would I know that they're -- after we scoped it and had very few incidents and then just not really knowing at the time, I don't recall ever being briefed about a school board threat. So surprised post that there hadn't been that many, it hadn't come up to me.

Now, there are times when emerging threats could be existing. And, you know, I could guess -- I was thinking maybe this is an emerging threat, but since this had not been a significant threat vector that had been briefed to me as the Assistant Director, it wasn't surprising that there was not a plethora of these threats happening.

Chairman Jordan. But that even -- that even concerns me more, as the Assistant Director of Counterterrorism, you weren't briefed on it, but you get the letter on the 29th; 3 days later, you get the email from your -- one of your section chiefs; 2 days after that, there's a memorandum from the Attorney general, and we find there's nothing really there. That's kind of amazing, right? That's probably not how it normally operates in -- I hope that's not how it normally operates.

Mr. Langan. Well, you'd have to ask the Attorney General about putting out, you know, the messaging that the Attorney General wanted to.

Chairman Jordan. Why do you think it functioned that way?

Mr. Langan. Again, I refer you to Justice to ask the Attorney General.

Chairman Jordan. No, but we're asking you because you're the Assistant Director of Counterterrorism.

Mr. Langan. Right.

Chairman Jordan. You were on the press release. You were on the document that went out --

Mr. Langan. Right.

Chairman Jordan. -- later in October. We're asking you, why do you think it happened, that -- that sequence over the weekend like it did?

Mr. Langan. I couldn't guess why it happened. I could just tell you, it didn't change a thing of how we did and operated from that day before to the day after. We continued to address threats that were brought to us. If anything, what we -- when we got this information and we were saying, "Well, what are the signs of this, what is the scope," that's part of our job also to collect data, right, to collect data so our government has an idea of what there might be emerging threats. That's why then we said: Well, let's create a threat tag so we can report and we can identify how many of these are happening so the Bureau can have a scope on it.

Chairman Jordan. Yeah. But I guess, I'm wondering, it seemed like when you read the memo that that had already happened, and you're saying it didn't.

Mr. Langan. What had happened?

Chairman Jordan. That they had already scoped this out and figured out, well, we got a real problem here. The tone of the memo is every school board in the country is having this happen. It just wasn't accurate. It wasn't accurate at all. So that's my concern.

Mr. Langan. The Bureau's findings found that there were minimal -- minimal incidents.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So I think the question becomes how frequently -- I mean, this has the veneer of something that's political, a politically inclined outside organization talks to the White House, conjures up this idea, maybe talks to DOJ, maybe doesn't talk to DOJ, but as soon as the letter is written to the President, the White House takes it to DOJ and, boom, 4 days later, this is all rolled out. Does that concern you as a -- as a nonpolitical FBI official that has very serious responsibilities?

A You know, as the Director said that week, it didn't change a thing in what we do. If anything, again, we scoped an issue. It didn't change how the FBI acts. We continue to do the same identification of threat. So -- Chairman Jordan. And we appreciate that professionally.

BY [redacted]

Q It may not have changed for you --

A Right.

Q -- but the issue is there are so many things to investigate throughout the country, and there are so many agents that they are -- they look for leadership.

A Right.

Q And when directives come down from the Attorney General or they get pushed down from, you know, senior executives at the FBI, they reorient themselves to what the leadership has directed them to.

A But we didn't direct them to reorient to anything.

Q But we have heard from whistleblowers that, in fact, they were -- you know, they did reorient themselves and --

A So how would they -- that we -- so, if we received a threat involving some type of threat against a member of a school board, they would've -- they would've worked that whether or not this would've happened. So they wouldn't have changed their work assignments. They would still be agents that were responding to threats that came in to our systems. It -- there was no -- there was no shift in strategies. There was no shift of resources.

And, as far as my knowledge is, there was 25 of these incidents. We handle over 100 incidents a day. The fact that 25 -- so it didn't shift a resource -- I -- you know, if you have a specific issue of someone being reassigned or you think where they said they had to focus purely on this, I don't have any information of that.

Q I mean, we've obtained a memo, and maybe we'll show it later, from the Montana -- of the U.S. attorney in Montana, and it was like a long list of like Federal statutes, and that long list of Federal statutes was put together in response to the Attorney General's memorandum.

A Okay.

Q And, you know, that's an example of how the field, whether it be DOJ or FBI, is being reoriented towards this priority.

A There is definitely a clear distinction. The FBI agents in Montana were not redirected by FBI, nor would they have been redirected. The U.S. attorney has the right to put out what they want and would like -- you know, maybe wanted collaboration. But those agents are beholden to those -- that SAC and the strategies and objectives from FBI, not DOJ.

Q Okay. And so maybe we can get into a little bit more fulsome discussion about how these discussions happened inside of the FBI in reaction to the memo --

A Sure.

Q -- because we've heard things --

A Right.

Q -- on both sides of the coin.

A Yeah.

Q We've heard whistleblowers tell us that they stopped working on their work so they could go to, you know, trail people at school board meetings.

A Okay. Yeah.

Q And we've also heard instances where FBI insiders have told us that the FBI thought this memo was a joke and that there was no basis for it and they weren't going to do anything about it; it's simply a political directive. And so we'll be interested as we go on today to get your reaction to those.

A Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Moving back to the press release that we previously showed you, do you know who was involved in drafting this?

A No.

Q Do you know who came up with the idea for a task force, as mentioned in the press release?

A No.

Q Do you know why it would include the National Security Division?

A Just like the letter that -- the memo that we put out on, I think it was October 20th, there's two divisions that potentially could respond to threats, and this is in general -- general knowledge too, for any type of threats, they really would fall under either the criminal investigative division or the Counterterrorism Division, and given the nature of the type of threats.

So that's -- I mean, that's why -- and then for the DOJ component, those are two different entities. So it's National Security Division for DOJ and then it would be the Criminal Division for DOJ. So that -- that -- your question is why was NSD on there, National Security Division? If a threat would stem from a national security nexus threat.

Q Thank you. And do you know if the task force has officially been created?

A No.

Q And, to your knowledge, has anyone met regarding this task force?

A Not to my knowledge.

Chairman Jordan. Would you likely be on that task force?

Mr. Langan. Probably not. It would probably be -- again, if I had a little bit better idea of what that was. I'm trying to find the proper level. It could be anywhere from a unit chief, which is still a senior position, a GS-15 position. Doubt it would be an executive. Most likely a lot of the task forces are maybe that level, that mid-level of executives, senior leaders.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you personally believe that the Attorney General's memorandum was appropriate?

A I don't have an opinion on it.

Q In your office, did agents and employees discuss their reaction to the memo?

A I assume.

Q To your knowledge, do you know what the tone of those reactions were?

A The tone from our office was let's scope this issue.

You know, oftentimes things come to our office, whether they're from our policymakers or from Congress or from other avenues, and oftentimes, well, what is the scope of this, trying to find that information. So our goal there was, well, let's scope this problem.

Chairman Jordan. What exactly does that mean, "scope"? You've used that several times.

Mr. Langan. Scope, just like the extent of it, how often it's occurring, the depth of it. Is it Federal?

Chairman Jordan. It's an investigation, you're investigating?

Mr. Langan. Yes. Who is possibly doing this? Is it a part of efforts? Is this individual actions?

Chairman Jordan. And, based on when you scoped it, you found not much there?

Mr. Langan. So, with the help of the threat tag, we identified that there was -- there was, I believe -- and, again, I haven't reviewed it the last minute, 25 assessments. And so -- and then I believe one of them was then elevated to a full investigation. I don't know the status of that investigation currently. So that's -- I think that's a fair scoping, which means then that, you know, we may have one full investigation. I think the scoping, from my take then, that's an adequately scoped concern --

Chairman Jordan. Yeah.

Mr. Langan. -- from a Federal nexus. Again, this doesn't mean that, you know, it couldn't be things at a State level involving threats or acts of violence or intimidation, from a Federal level.

BY [redacted]

Q And were you involved in any conversations or correspondence related to how the FBI could help address the alleged threats or violence at school board meetings?

A Again, just conversations on the scoping of it, not -- I think -- if -- you know, if there are individuals that are threatening people, we definitely want to, you know, look at mitigating that. That's our business. We don't -- no one should be, you know -- no one should have to suffer threats or acts of violence, so we're always looking at trying to mitigate that.

Q Now, moving to that threat tag that you just previously mentioned --

Chairman Jordan. Let me just go one other quick question. On this press release, fourth paragraph: Justice Department would also create -- will also create specialized training and guidance for school board and school administrators.

Had that been done?

Mr. Langan. I have no idea, sir.

[redacted] And moving back to the threat tag that you mentioned before, I'd like to mark as exhibit 4 the October 20, 2021, EDUOFFICIALS threat tag email.

[Langan Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And you could take a moment to look at it if you need to.

A I'm good with this one.

Q Okay. The email was sent on your behalf, correct?

A Along with -- my behalf, as the Assistant Director of Counterterrorism Division, along with, I believe it was Carlton Peeples on there, the Assistant Director for Criminal Investigative Division.

Q Did you assist him drafting this email?

A Not drafting.

Q What was your part in the email?

A Final -- final review of it.

Q When did you learn of the creation of the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A Probably -- when reviewing this, when they discussed -- again, so, from the 4th to this goes out on the 20th, discussing guidance of trying to, well, what can we do to scope this issue, and so -- and messaging, what messaging should we put out. So this was the messaging, we agreed on it. This is the scoping that came out. So probably soon after during this time that I said: Oh, we're going to put a threat tag onto this, you know.

So I didn't come up with the idea to threat tag it. It was brought to me in this, like, okay.

Q Do you know who created the threat tag?

A So -- so, when things like this are working, so, again, you've got two massive divisions within the FBI. Is this okay to expound on these things?

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Mr. Langan. Okay. So CID and CTD, and there are dozens of senior employees, analysts, agents working together to discuss how we proceed with anything. So it would've been -- so on -- again, through the CTD side, the angle of threats of acts of violence would've been if those individuals were also acting with an ideology. On the criminal investigative side, it could've been individuals that are conducting threats or acts of violence using an interstate nexus or threats via a wire.

So those two entities are then working together. So it would be the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section from CTD, those would be the ones that were working on this. So that's one section, again, a very large organization. CTD would be the Violent Crimes Section working together, and they often do work together on things, because they collaborate on things and exchange information.

And like, okay, what is the messaging we want to put out? Threats could be either one of us. They came up with this. I couldn't tell you what level. It would work its way up probably from 14s, 15s, program managers, unit chiefs, senior intelligence analysts, up to the section chiefs from -- you know, Jensen is my section chief, their DTAS, whoever the section chief was for Carlton, up to the DADs, up through OGC possibly, and then to me, and like, yes, looks good.

BY [redacted]

Q So it was a collective effort?

A It was a -- yes.

Q And you did not --

A Sorry to explain. I figured it's better to educate you guys on how things happen.

Q No, that's helpful. Thank you.

Were you involved in any official conversations or correspondence about the creation? As you mentioned, I know it worked its way up.

A Yeah.

Q At what point in the process would you have been involved?

A When they're giving me final versions: Here, sir, this is what we're going to be reviewing; this is what we'd like to put out.

BY [redacted]

Q When you referred to messaging, who were you messaging this to?

A This went out to our SACs, our field commanders.

Q So then the SACs would then give it to their agents?

A They would distribute it in their appropriate chain, so with -- again, we didn't tell them what to do, but if I was, you know, the SAC, I can -- so this is speculation, but, yeah, those in the field office that may have concerns, whether it's their violent crime squads or their domestic terrorism squads and their intelligence components.

Q So what would you have done if you received this when you were the SAC of the Kansas City Field Office?

A Probably, so then they have assistant special agents in charge, right. It's bureaucratic. There's a lot of steps in there. And they would've then met with their -- their command staff, said: Hey, here's the message we got from CTD.

They'd been most likely familiar with the Attorney General's memo.

And: Okay, so if we get -- if we do get any of these threats, we will tag them with this. We will work them appropriately as we always do, but now we have a threat tag.

[11:21 a.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Did you have any engagement on this threat tag from FBI employees to identify trends, strategies, and best practices?

A I didn't. My subordinates would have. And, again, that kind of is -- that's what the whole thing is. Let's -- it all follows each other, right? So strategies and mitigation efforts and engagements often will follow scoping, right?

So it's hard to develop what is your strategy to mitigate a threat. What is a threat, right? That first we have to scope the threat. Like, as I said before, we have to identify what this is. Then we can talk about who's doing this, where's this coming from, this target. Then we can start working on mitigation efforts.

Q Are you aware that several parents were investigated by the FBI for protected First Amendment activity from this threat tag?

A No. For just First Amendment activity --

Q Correct.

A -- with this threat tag? It's clearly against what we do, that individuals that are conducting only First Amendment activity would be investigated. That is against -- that is one of our bylines of who we are. So I would -- I don't know which one you're referring to. I would be shocked. And if that's happened, I'd --

Q So you'd say this concerns you, as an individual who signed this email?

A If -- if there was no report of any allegation of a threat involving some individual?

Q Correct.

A Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Can I back up just one second? Just tell me how everyone fits in the organizational chart there. Let's just start with -- we know you, obviously, Mr. Langan, the Counterterrorism Division. Mr. Shivers?

Mr. Langan. Shivers.

Chairman Jordan. Shivers?

Mr. Langan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Langan. So he would --

Chairman Jordan. He has your equivalent position over in the Criminal Division?

Mr. Langan. He did, yes.

Chairman Jordan. Then how does Mr. Peeples fit in?

Mr. Langan. He -- I think he -- I think this might have been right when Mr. Shivers was transitioning out, retiring maybe. Mr. Peeples was then the acting. Those two -- Mr. Shivers retired. And so, if Mr. Peeples was on, he was the Acting AD.

Chairman Jordan. Who reported to -- did Shivers report to Peeples or the other way around?

Mr. Langan. Technically, when Shivers was there, Mr. Peeples would have reported to him. But if Mr. Peeples, who was a DAD, became the acting because Mr. Shivers retired, then he wouldn't have reported to him anymore.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And then the names on the front page, the first page, that were cc'd, Mr. Greenberg.

Mr. Langan. He at the time I believe was a Deputy Assistant Director for CID.

Chairman Jordan. So these are all people who, you know, rather high up in the Criminal or the Counterterrorism?

Mr. Langan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. All of them. Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And when Attorney General Garland issued his October 4, 2021, memorandum, did you perceive threats or violence at school board meetings as a State and local law enforcement issue?

A It depend -- no. It could be State and local, or it could be Federal, depending. Like I've explained to you, it depends on the type of threat.

Q During your career at the FBI, have you ever interacted with local law enforcement personally?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever get the impression that local law enforcement were ill-equipped to handle any disruptions that occurred at local school board meetings?

A I've never had a conversation with a local law enforcement officer about a school board meeting.

Q What did you believe was the Federal nexus that required FBI involvement at local school board meetings, in your opinion?

A I'll restate the previous answer fully? Okay.

Q If you could.

A So, again, we've got two types of threats or two types of divisions that could handle threats. So, if threats occurred via some type of wire from interstate, that is a Federal violation and could be investigated by the FBI. If threats or violence -- or threats of violence are also included in ideology, then that could also be investigated by the FBI.

Q And would it surprise you to learn that when field offices and the United States Attorney's Offices reached out to local law enforcement, as required by the October 4th memorandum, local officials generally opposed Federal intervention at local school board meetings?

A Could you repeat the question?

Q Of course. Would it surprise you to learn that when field offices of the FBI and the U.S. Attorney's Office reached out to local law enforcement, as required by the memo, local officials generally opposed Federal intervention?

A Okay. You put two things together that I don't think are a known quantity two things. Reaching out to local law enforcement, you put the FBI with the --

Q United States Attorney's Offices.

A Right. Those are two separate entities. So the FBI, to my knowledge, did not reach out to local law enforcement regarding this.

Q Even though they were required to by the October 4th memo?

A They're required to coordinate, as far as our opinion, coordinate with the U.S. Attorney's Office. The U.S. Attorney's Office would be hosting that meeting. They can call the meeting, and we would be -- in accordance with us. We would go there.

Q Okay.

A We did not, to my knowledge, call anyone else to tell them to go.

Q So it's your opinion that the United States Attorney's Offices were the ones that were supposed to --

A Yes.

Q -- reach out?

A Yes. And I believe that was stated also from our Director on a videoconference that subsequent -- the 6th, two days lateral.

Chairman Jordan. That's not how it reads, though. It says: To this end, I'm directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation -- so it says you first -- to this end, I am directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation, working with the United States Attorney, to convene meetings.

So, in this, the way the Attorney General wrote it is the FBI is going to go to the United States Attorney, and you're going to convene the meeting. And you're saying it was the other way around.

Mr. Langan. We didn't, sir. Yeah. And so this was discussed most likely at a level above me, because the FBI Director then on that Wednesday put out a statement saying I believe it was the U.S. Attorney's Office may be calling meetings.

We did not direct our people to coordinate, at least from a Counterterrorism Division, didn't call any SAC Division to coordinate the meetings.

BY [redacted]

Q So is it fair to say you didn't lean in on this? The FBI did not lean in on the Attorney General's memo?

A Describe to me lean in.

Q Lean in, take initiative to engage and follow what the Attorney General asked.

A We -- I think scoping the threat I think was an appropriate reaction.

Q But, as the memo -- as Mr. Jordan just mentioned, the memo directed the FBI to lead this effort.

A We referred it to the U.S. Attorney's Office. We looked at it as the U.S. Attorney's Office to lead that effort.

Q So is it fair to say the FBI didn't lean in, that they deferred to the U.S. Attorney's Office?

A I would say we weren't -- it wasn't for us to lean in.

Q Well, the memo asked you to lean in, I think.

A I think that's terminology, sir. I'll tell you what we did.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. And why do you think that approach was taken? Was it based on maybe this underlying concern that, look, this is probably a local matter, we probably shouldn't be doing this?

Mr. Langan. I wouldn't -- I would have to speculate, but, again, the threats -- so oftentimes, we are very involved in threats, no matter what they are, whether they're school shootings, whether they're -- so I'd say the local -- that's never a clear line or not often a clear line. Unfortunately, there's a lot of threats that we are involved with too.

I think this was generated from the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice can host these meetings.

Chairman Jordan. A letter comes out on the 29th. You get an email on Saturday from one of your section chiefs 3 days later saying: We got to get working on this.

Two days after that, the memorandum comes out saying there's a disturbing spike. It creates this perception that this is a huge, huge issue.

You're asked to take the lead, but you don't, but you scope it out. And, when you scope it out, you create this threat tag to do it. Through that scoping and use of that threat tag, you investigate 25 cases around the country, and only one --

Mr. Langan. Assessments, 25 assessments.

Chairman Jordan. Even better, 25 assessments, not real investigations. Then you go to one investigation. We don't know what's happened with that. So it seems like a lot, a lot of effort for really nothing.

Mr. Langan. So I would argue how much effort was spent because, like I said, we handle threats all the time. Now, did any of these 25, would they -- would they have happened before the memo? I don't know. But it's not a lot of threats. We handle --

Chairman Jordan. That's my point.

Mr. Langan. Yeah. We handle probably a hundred a day coming in to us, threats that we investigate, along with our 40,000 cases that we investigate.

Chairman Jordan. God bless you, you're doing your work. But what we're saying is there wasn't a big memo from the Attorney General on all those other hundred a day you handle, but there was this huge production over a 5-day timeframe, things we've never seen. Press releases coming out that we -- I mean it's like all that happens quickly. And what do we get? One followup, one real investigation.

Mr. Langan. I would say there was a lot of maybe effort on DOJ. For us, it was business as usual. It didn't really -- other than preparing some memo, a threat tag, we did not -- like I said, we did not shift any resources. We did not shift any strategies. But --

Chairman Jordan. I'm not saying --

Mr. Langan. I'm just trying to answer the question, sir. But --

[redacted] We'll go off the record for this hour.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 11:36, and we can go back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning again. I'm [redacted] I'm with the House Judiciary Committee Democratic side.

A Good morning.

Q I want to take a step back. We began in the earlier hour talking through your background a little bit. Is it fair to say that you've had experience doing everything, serving from the line agent to supervising line agents to serving in leadership positions? So you've seen all layers of the FBI?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So some of my questions going forward are going to ask about your experience at different levels.

A Yes.

Q So I just wanted to lay that out.

A Yes.

Q And I actually want to turn back to something you said in the earlier hour. You commented on that it would be appropriate for the FBI to engage in something, engage in an investigation when it concerned an individual acting with an ideology.

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q Can you explain what you mean by an ideology?

A The ideology that would be driving the individual to commit violence. So if it -- for example, an ideology of hate crime. So against someone's race, religion, identity.

An ideology of a terroristic nature, which would be, you know, to try to influence or coerce individuals for a -- either a political ideology, a belief ideology, something that is driving the individual to commit that act. Or, if it is targeted against a racially-motivated ideology, if it's a religious-based ideology. So it could be a lot of different ideologies.

When you mix the ideology with the threats or the violence, then you start to get into areas that could be investigated federally and charged federally.

Q So we've heard testimony from individuals who said they were concerned about threats from individuals associated with violent extremists, gangs, or organizations across State lines. Is that the kind of thing that would be appropriate for the FBI to look into?

A Yeah. I mean, really, the threat coming from any individual across State lines. You know, as far as if it was a gang, you know, a criminal enterprise type thing, you know, possibly, you know.

Q And taking away the State lines, if an individual with -- or individuals associated with violent extremist groups making specific threats, would that be something that it would be at least the FBI would want to look into and see if there's a there there?

A So the groups would -- okay, that's a very -- that's an area that we can expound on, okay. So, if those -- those violent extremist groups are from an international origin, then yes.

Q Okay.

A Because they're known identified groups. There are no -- we don't identify violent extremist groups within the United States. There may be groups, but we don't necessarily -- we are not categorizing American groups as far as being a violent extremist group.

Q Okay.

A Individuals could subscribe to types of actions that individuals of a group may then follow, but not a group. So, if you said, "I'm with the Roosters," you know, that doesn't necessarily mean anything. I mean, it could mean some things, but not necessarily for us to investigate something.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the FBI's National Threat Operations Center?

A Yes.

Q And how are you familiar with that?

A It's part of one of the major components of how we receive threat information.

Q Okay. Is it sometimes referred to as the NTOC?

A Yes.

Q So --

A Oftentimes NTOC. We say NTOC.

Q I'm going to refer to it as NTOC going forward.

A Yes.

Q Can you explain broadly what NTOC does?

A So NTOC is basically a clearinghouse. It's our receiving entity for receiving tips, complaints, questions, referrals to the FBI. These individuals then diligently go through, receive the information, do some preliminary checks into the information.

And then, if the information they receive warrants being forwarded further on, whether it's a criminal Federal violation, whether it's information that a field office may need, then those individuals would process it and then forward it on to the appropriate entity.

Q And do you know how many employees are assigned to the NTOC?

A I do not, but I know it's a sizable division.

Q Do you think it's a thousand, more than a thousand or --

A I wouldn't know.

Q Okay. It's probably a matter of public record.

A Probably, yes. I'm sure we can give you that answer.

Q Are you familiar with the phone number or the hotline that citizens call to report tips to the NTOC?

A Yeah. When they call FBI Tips or fbi.gov and FBI Tips.Online and 1-800-CALL FBI, yes. And then there's also an IC3 are the main three reporting mechanisms. IC3 is usually for internet complaints as well.

Q And FBI tries to make those sources pretty -- the 1-800-CALL FBI and tips.fbi.gov, FBI tries to make sure citizens know that information, right?

A Yes. It's a goal. Yes, we want every citizen to know how to reach us if they need us to -- if they have information or want to make complaints, yes.

Q Do you know how many tips the NTOC receives, say, per day?

A We just went over that. It was -- I think it's 4,000. Is it 4,000? Yeah, approximately 4,000 maybe a day.

Q So 4,000 per day. So that's -- I can't do the math in my head. How many would that be per year? Many hundreds of thousands, right?

A Yeah.

Q Is that fair?

A Yeah. I think that's right.

Q And do you have any idea how many tips come in versus on the hotline, the phone number versus the internet?

A I don't have that breakdown. Because the area I work in, though I -- the programs I supervise might stem from the report, I don't oversee that entity nor have I worked in that entity.

Q Okay. Understood. Understood.

Is it your understanding that it's part of NTOC's mission to ensure that every tip that comes in is looked at and addressed in some way?

A Yes.

Q And why is that important?

A It's important because we've got to make -- one, if there is a criminal act that's happened or could happen, we've got to be able to identify that. It helps with mitigation of threats. It helps with remedying individuals that may have been defrauded or wronged.

It's important because information that they may have may help resolve things. So it's crucial that that information is received and appropriately reviewed and accurately then dispersed.

Q And, in your experience, do tips received through NTOC sometimes help, for example, prevent crimes from occurring?

A Definitely.

Q And do they help the FBI to solve crimes?

A Definitely, yes.

Q And what about, for example, lone wolves? Is this an area of concern to the FBI?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain briefly what a lone wolf is?

A Well, a lone -- okay. So a lone wolf is an individual actor that does not conspire or have much communication with other individuals. And, if you're saying a lone wolf that then would like to create -- conduct a violent act, the lone wolf's motivations could be various, various efforts. But a lone wolf, in general, we would refer to -- and, again, we don't usually use the term that much inside. Just it's an individual that is most likely not acting in concert or in coordination, in communication with other entities or another individual.

Q So are tips from the public received through the NTOC tip line, can those be helpful in addressing lone wolves, for example?

A Sure. Yes. Definitely, yes. Because oftentimes we act. It's very difficult -- if an individual is going to commit an act of violence or a threat, it's very difficult to mitigate that threat or try to stop it if a person is set in motion, right?

And so one of the things we ask for is, if you're aware of an individual that might be exhibiting, you know, patterns, behaviors, if individuals have stated these threats, yeah, we need to know to help because, you know, we don't -- we want to try to mitigate those if we can.

Q So you need tips from the public?

A Yes.

Q To your knowledge, how long has the NTOC been in existence?

A I think the current -- the current evolution of it was generated after the Parkland shooting. So that was, you know, I think around 2017. I think 2018 it was.

Q And, before that, it was known as the public access line, right?

A Public access line, yes.

Q But substantially the similar mission?

A Similar. Less robust, but similar.

Q Okay. So the Attorney General sent his memo on threats to educators on October 4, 2021. Both 1-800-CALL FBI and tips.fbi.gov were in existence long before that date, correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you know when tips.fbi.gov was established?

A I don't know, no.

[redacted] So I actually want to introduce a new story. I think it's a new story from FBI. It's dated June 26, 2009. We'll introduce this as exhibit 5.

[Langan Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this is -- sorry. I'll give you a second to read it. I realize it's tiny font.

A That's okay. That's all right.

Q So this is dated 6/26/09.

A Okay.

Q And it says -- in the last paragraph on that first page, there's a bolded section that says: Established immediately after 9/11, the internet tip line has received more than 2 million online tips from the public relating to terrorism, counterintelligence, and criminal matters.

A Uh-huh.

Q So, according to this, the tips.fbi.gov was established in 2001.

A Okay.

Q Is that generally consistent with your understanding?

A It seems so.

Q So it's been a resource for FBI for more than 21 years?

A Yes.

Q Long before the October 4th memo?

A Yes.

Q And what about 1-800-CALL FBI, do you know when that was established?

A I don't. I know, again, probably a significant -- a significant amount of time.

[redacted] So I want to introduce an FBI press release from September 2005. This will be exhibit 6.

[Langan Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A No. If I did, I don't recall.

Q So, in the very first sentence, it says: Today the FBI launched a tip line,

1-800-CALL FBI or 1-800-225-5324, to collect information and complaints of public corruption and government fraud, in connection with the Hurricane Katrina aftermath.

So this press release was dated September 15, 2005. Is that generally consistent with your understanding of when 1-800-CALL FBI was established?

A Yes.

Q So this has been a resource for FBI for more than 17 years, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it had -- it well predated the Attorney General's October 4th memo?

A Yes.

Q Okay. If a person who calls into the NTOC, either calls in or sends an internet tip into NTOC, reports a threat or reports an issue of concern, if they don't specifically say what motivated their call, so if they don't say, for example, "I'm calling because the Attorney General put out a memo" or "I saw this press release," you'd have no way to know if, in fact, it was motivated by that memo or press release?

A No.

Q Okay. There have been allegations that the Attorney General -- Chairman Jordan has made allegations that the Attorney General, quote, highlighted the FBI's National Threat Operations Center to serve as a snitch line for tips about parents at school board meetings.

I want to turn back to the Attorney General's memorandum, which was previously introduced as exhibit 2, I believe.

Would you mind taking a look at that memo and letting me know if it uses the word "parents."

A I don't believe parents are listed in here.

Q And does it say "school board meetings"?

A I don't see it.

Q Okay. And does the memo itself say anything about the FBI's hotline or the internet tip line?

A No.

Q Okay. So does this memo actually say anything about encouraging people to, quote, snitch on parents at school board meetings?

A Not in the statement.

Q And I will note that fourth paragraph directs the FBI and U.S. Attorney's Offices to convene meetings with State and local officials to, quote, facilitate the discussion of strategies for addressing threats and, quote, open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response.

Do you understand this to be a reference to the tip lines or to lines of communication between law enforcement and U.S. Attorney's Offices and FBI? `

A It would be more the coordination of law enforcement, I would assume. But --

Q Your read of it.

A -- I don't think -- yeah. I don't think we had any discussions.

Q It doesn't -- at least doesn't have the tip line information in there.

A Yes.

Q So I also want to look at the press release that we looked at earlier, which was 3, exhibit 3. And I'm going to ask you again if this memorandum uses the word "parents" in it anywhere?

A I don't see it.

Q And it talks about threats targeting school board members, but do you see if it says anything about school board meetings specifically?

A No.

Q There have been reports that school board members and educators and others received threats through, for example, letters sent through the mail.

A Uh-huh.

Q So that would be outside of a school board meeting, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

A Yes. To their house.

Q And would something like that sent through the mail potentially be an area for Federal involvement?

A Yes.

Q Now, the press release does, in fact, reference the tip line.

A Uh-huh.

Q It's down I think that last paragraph.

A Uh-huh.

Q We went through this earlier, but just again for the record, in your experience, does the FBI try to make it widely known that citizens can reach out to both 1-800-CALL FBI and tips.fbi.gov?

A Yes.

Q And so does the Bureau regularly include this information in press releases and other documents for the public?

A Yes.

Q And can you say again why that is?

A We very much need the public's partnership and elicit the information that they may have to help us either mitigate and solve crimes and prevent acts of violence or crimes.

Q So you advertise it broadly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So getting back to the characterization of NTOC as a, quote/unquote, snitch line, do you agree with that characterization?

A No. It's a reporting mechanism to the FBI to help prevent crimes and identify information that could help -- help mitigate threats against people, help solve crimes that may have occurred to them.

If you look at it like -- it would be like saying the 911 system is a snitch line. It's the Federal version of us to -- though we don't have an immediate response always like 911 police officers, but it is like calling your police department. It's giving information on -- on crimes that have happened. So --

Q And what do you think the possible impact of referring to the NTOC lines as a snitch line could be?

A It's probably negative on individuals that might pursue that.

Q Do you think it might deter citizens from reporting threats, for example?

A I would hope not. I -- it's speculative, but it's a negative connotation that's used in prisons so I --

Q Can you say more about that, how it's used in prison?

A Well, usually "snitch," "snitching" usually involves a term that's involved in the criminal enterprises or criminal entities. Prisons, snitching on individuals for telling authorities what's happening. So it has a negative connotation. And, I mean, I would hope people wouldn't associate this with that.

Q If people perceived the NTOC as a snitch line, you know, if they were discouraged from reporting threats, do you think that would make it harder for FBI to do its job?

A If it had a discouraging effect, yes.

Q And would that presumably make America less safe in that case?

A Yes. I would assume, yes.

Q I want to look a little more closely at the steps that FBI takes when it gets a tip through the tip line or through any other source, for that matter.

Are there sometimes tips that come into FBI that it's clear on their face that there's no action can be taken?

A At times. We get so many. Usually we would -- we would want -- if it's completely clear that there's no action at all, there's no information, that's part of NTOC's job to -- sometimes they don't get forwarded on.

Q Okay.

A So usually, for the most part, if they get forwarded on to a field office, there would be some validity to it, something, whether it is just inform -- it may not be the extent of: Hey, this is the -- this is the fraud that's happening. This is who's doing it.

But, you know: I think that there may be some fraudulent activity involving this business.

It could be thin, but --

Q Something?

A -- usually it should have something.

Q So something vague like that would still get forwarded on, but --

A Yeah.

Q -- for example, something, aliens are coming to abduct my dog, would that -- the FBI would not do anything with that?

A No.

Q Okay. So what you're saying is if there's any kind of indicia of credibility, the FBI has to at least assess it. Is that fair?

A Yes. NTOC does the best they can, but they also need to be careful not to -- not to limit something that they may not be viewing right then from their location versus the field office, who may have a better view of something that's happening. So yes.

Q So, in that situation, would the FBI create a Guardian?

A It could. We could create a Guardian if then that information most likely, like, okay, this seems like something we need to do another step to. Let's create a Guardian, which is an assessment, and let's see if we can mitigate this, resolve it, or identify an appropriate nexus to investigate it.

Q And can you briefly define what a Guardian is?

A Again, it's our -- our tool, our system for -- it's really just an intake system. It's an intake system that is an assessment. It is what we call our assessments before they move on to a preliminary inquiry, which is a next investigative step, or a full investigation.

It involves the least intrusive methods of investigating to try -- and least, least actions involving the matter to try to be able to resolve it. The goal is, do we have something here or not?

Q Okay. And I want to get back to that in a second, but I'm trying to -- so there is the Guardian system, and then there's a Guardian. So is the Guardian system like the email server and then a Guardian --

A No, no. It would be all in our internal systems.

Q Okay.

A I mean, yes, there is a Guardian system, but it's all on our internal databases.

A Guardian would be one, would be one of these incidents, yes.

Q So a Guardian is like a little -- like an individual --

A It's an individual assessment.

Q Okay. And is there an actual FBI policy that determines when a Guardian, meaning an individual assessment, is created?

A Yes. In -- yes, there are policies on the various types of threats that it could be.

Q Okay. Does the creation of a Guardian mean that the FBI has opened an investigation into something?

A No.

Q So, before we get to that, once a Guardian is created, what's the -- it's put into the system.

A Yes.

Q What's the next step the FBI takes?

A So, if it is a Guardian involving potential criminal activity, then it would be forwarded on to the appropriate field office. I mean, that's always not easy to identify, because sometimes reporting parties are from one place and the crime that occurred might be in another place, but most likely where the event would have happened, it would get forwarded to that field office.

That field office -- I'll just take the next step. The field office would get that, receive that Guardian complaint, identify what program that that threat may be under.

So, if it -- like I said, is this a financial fraud? It would go to one of our financial fraud squads. If this is a criminal narcotics and gang crime reporting, it would go to one of those squads. If it was a violent threat, it might go to a violent crime squad.

And then it gets forwarded on to the squad. Then that squad would assign it most likely to an agent to then start investigating this assessment.

Q Okay. So how is then an assessment different than an investigation?

A The amount of tools that you're allowed to use.

Q So what type of investigative steps can be taken for an assessment?

A An assessment is usually interviews, some physical surveillance, uses of human sources. And, again, I don't have the policy. Like, there's some details. So to the best of my recollection, but I could -- you could always refer --

Q How long does an assessment take?

A It depends on how quickly they can identify whether or not they want to close the assessment or they want to go on to another step.

Q So the Guardian system is also used to assign tips to State and local, or to forward I guess tips to State and local entities, right?

A Yes. There's also -- we could -- certain tips could also be routed to a Fusion Center, and they might be dual-routed, and it does get kind of complicated. So certain aspects might be sent to us, but then they're also dual-routed to a Fusion Center, where they may be worked locally as well.

Q Okay. I want to take a look at the letter that the FBI's Acting Assistant Director for Congressional Affairs sent to Chairman Jordan on March 1st.

A Okay.

[redacted] We're going to mark this as exhibit 7.

[Langan Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A No.

Q So I'm going to ask you to look at the top of page 3, and this actually starts on the prior page, and it talks about the 25 Guardians that received the EDUOFFICIALS tag.

A Okay.

Q And then, on the top of page 3, it says: The majority of the 25 Guardians were referred to State and local law enforcement, and the vast majority -- all but one -- have been closed at the FBI level.

Is this consistent with your understanding of how these 25 Guardians were handled?

A Again, I don't have a lot of granularity on the 25.

Q Is it fairly common for Guardians to be relayed to State and local law enforcement?

A Yes.

Q And is that part of the reason the Guardian system was created?

A Definitely one part, to handle -- to appropriately handle things, reports, right, reports from the public. So the public doesn't always know what is a Federal violation, what is not a Federal violation, what should be worked, what -- technically sometimes, you know, what is the illegality of the crime.

So oftentimes the things are reported to us. We do some type of initial assessment, realize, okay, maybe there's nothing here. We quickly eliminate it, right? Oh, there's nothing here. There's no Federal violation. There's no crime at all.

Sometimes, again, hey, there is -- I think we have a little more. We need to do some more investigation. We may have a Federal nexus, may have a crime here. Sometimes, okay, we have what looks to be a crime. We're not seeing any Federal nexus. Let's make sure, though, the locals have this, and they can go ahead and investigate this as they see fit.

Q And I think you said earlier that 1-800-CALL FBI, tips.fbi.gov, they're kind of the Nation's 911 system, an equivalent to --

A They're just one -- I never want the public to think, though, that it's immediate.

Q Right.

A But yes, it is the national -- it's probably one of the only national crime reporting entities to where, throughout the whole country, they can report things.

Q So individuals maybe don't know the contact for their local PO or police officer or whatever, or they might happen to have tips.fbi.gov as an easy resource, and so they may go there and just send everything there. Then it's the FBI's job to make sure it gets to local law enforcement, if that's appropriate.

A It could be. Yes. Yes. That happens. As far as the exact motivation for everyone, you know, why they wouldn't call the police versus us. But yes, it is definitely a place where we receive a plethora of things that are not always Federal violations.

Q Across the board, not just in the school board range.

A No, no. No, of course, no.

Q So how long -- looking at these assessments, when something gets sent to a State and local law enforcement entity, how long would it usually take an agent to assess a Guardian and determine, oh, that's actually a State or local issue, we need to send that down?

A I mean, that could take any place -- depending on if it's a threat to life where they have a much limited timeframe, within, you know, a day to 2 days -- again, look at the -- versus a nonthreat to life. A threat to life means we think something is happening now.

Q Yeah.

A Not a previous threat. So the file -- you know, every 90 days, you know, Guardians get reviewed, but that is -- we would, you know, take effect much sooner. Within -- if somebody gets a case, probably in a week or two they would -- depending on what the incident was.

Q And, if there's a threat to life, you said there's a timeframe on it?

A Yes. I believe within -- I think it's -- off the top of my head, it's -- I think it's within 24 or 48 hours. I have to refer -- I have to go back to the policy guidelines, but it's very quickly.

Q So, if somebody called in and said, I have concerns that this individual is a firearm owner, and he said he's coming to get you or he's coming to get this person, that would be something that would be quickly?

A It's an immediate -- it's an immediate threat to life. I mean, we would work it immediately, you know, yes.

Q And why is that?

A Because you might -- we might mitigate this potential act of violence that could be ensuing.

Q And the goal is to preserve --

A Preserve, yes, to protect someone from being hurt.

Q Do you know how many Guardians the FBI created last year in total?

A I don't. I don't. I don't have the number.

Q Do you think it's more than 10,000?

A I would -- yeah, I would be comfortable with that. I can give you that number.

Q Do you think it's more than like 25,000?

A Oh, geez. I mean, we -- it's got to be in the tens of thousands. I mean, you know, I think so. I mean, I think we're doing roughly a hundred a day.

Q Okay.

A So --

Q So a hundred a day would be 365,000, right?

A Yes.

Q Right. Or, sorry, 36 -- my math is not good -- 36,000 a year?

A 36,000. Yeah, you know. It's -- yeah.

Q Okay. So -- and, again, the fact that a Guardian is created does not mean that the FBI has opened an actual investigation?

A No.

Q It just means that there's an assessment going on to figure out if there's any there there?

A Yes.

Q I want to look at page 2 of this March 1st letter from the Acting Assistant Director of FBI's Office of Congressional Affairs to Chairman Jordan. There are two columns. The first one reads "preliminary investigation" and the second one reads "full investigation."

A Uh-huh.

Q Can you explain just very broadly what a preliminary investigation is?

A Again, so a preliminary investigation would be the next step after a Guardian. Though you don't necessarily have to go to a P -- we call it a PI and then to a full, but you don't necessarily have to go to a PI to a full.

If there is -- starts to get to where there is some facts that can be articulated with this complaint and where you can identify some of those facts that, yes, this is -- this is -- we have enough facts to think that there is a Federal violation, you can open up the PI.

Q Can you -- that very first -- the first row here says "predication." Can you define, in layman's terms, what predication means?

A Reason for. The predication of a Federal -- something was there. Something -- enough -- what -- what -- what was the initiation for that.

Q Okay. So, in other words, the justification or the reasons for taking that step. Is that fair?

A Yes, yes.

Q The table says that for a preliminary investigation, there must be information or an allegation indicating the existence of Federal criminal activity or a threat to national security or to protect against such activity or threat.

A Uh-huh.

Q Can you explain what Federal criminal activity means?

A It would be criminal activity that is subject to the Federal Criminal Code.

Q Okay.

A So there would be hundreds, if not thousands, of violations that would fit a criminal violation that Federal -- federally would be investigated.

Q So there has to be a Federal nexus?

A There has to be a Federal nexus.

Q And what about a threat to national security, do you have a very short definition for that?

A A threat to national security would be a threat that would be so grave that it could affect the security or damage the country as a whole.

Q Okay. So, if there's no indication of Federal criminal activity or if there's no indication of a threat to national security --

A Yes.

Q -- the FBI can't open a preliminary investigation, right?

A No, no.

Q And, if that were the case, if, for example, there were indications of criminal activity but it didn't rise to the Federal level, is that a situation where a Guardian would kind of immediately be referred to State and local law enforcement?

A Yes. If we thought that there was still criminal activity.

Q Right. But there's no Federal nexus?

A But there's no Federal nexus, yes.

Q You've been at the FBI a very long time, 25 years maybe?

A Just about 25, yeah.

Q Has this predication standard been the same throughout your time there?

A It has, yeah.

Q So the FBI was always required to investigate Federal criminal activity or threats to national security, and it was always prohibited from investigating matters if there was no Federal nexus or no threat to national security, right?

A Yes, yes.

Q And this applies to everything the FBI does?

A Yes. We have to have Federal authority, concurrence oftentimes with the U.S. Attorney's Office. We have to have our nexus for -- that kind of defines some of our -- our criminal investigations versus State. So you've got to have that Federal nexus.

Q So the Attorney General's memo didn't do anything to impact these predication -- this predication standard?

A No. As I said before, the FBI didn't do anything differently from any of these memos.

Q And then the table says that, for a full investigation, the predication is an articulable factual basis that reasonably indicates the existence of Federal criminal activity or a threat to national security, or to protect against such activity or threat.

Can you just briefly explain what an articulable factual basis means?

A You're able to actually describe then what that nexus is. So we're able to then move along and identify what was that violation, what were those -- the conduct, the actions that took place, and then relate them to a specific threat of Federal crime.

Q So, if there is a full investigation opened, it means that there had to have been an articulable factual basis?

A You can least articulate it. Yes. You might still be investigating, hey, what are the extents of this; what happened? But we can articulate these are the facts that happened, and we strongly think that this did involve a Federal violation.

Q So that, later on, the letter says that one of the 25 Guardians did progress to a full investigation. That would have had to have met this predication standard, correct?

A Yes, yes.

Q And, again, this standard has been in existence for a very long time?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So, just to sum up quickly, we said earlier NTOC receives thousands of calls a day. Hundreds of Guardians are opened a day. Every single one of these calls or submissions is addressed following the same policies or procedures?

A Yes.

Q And the AG, the Attorney General's October 4th memo didn't have any impact on that whatsoever?

A No.

Q So I want to -- so this email -- or this letter, I'm sorry, it references the 25 Guardians that were created. You estimated that the FBI creates maybe --

A I think about a hundred.

Q Yeah. We said maybe if it was a hundred a day, it would be 36,000 a year.

A And, again, it's my recollection again and not in this cited, but pretty comfortable with that.

Q Okay. So just extrapolating here --

A Yes.

Q -- assuming it's like 36,000ish.

A Yes, yes.

Q Twenty-five Guardians are like .068 percent of all the Guardians created in a year. So it's less than seven-hundredths of a percent. Does that sound about right?

A Do the math, yes.

Q We can check the math later, but that's --

A I will concede to your math skills.

Q This letter says that 17 of the 25 Guardians were assigned to the Criminal Investigative Division, presumably for assessment purposes.

A Yes.

Q Six were assigned to the Counterterrorism Division.

A Yes.

Q And the remaining two were assigned to the Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate --

A Okay.

Q -- as they pertained to potential bomb threats.

A Yes.

Q So, of the six assessments that were assigned to criminal -- the Counterterrorism Division, did any of them ever rise to your level? Did you ever become personally aware of them?

A No.

Q Okay. Would you be able to estimate how long the agents actually spent on these six assessments?

A I wouldn't. I don't know.

Q Earlier, there was a reference made to this big production around the memo. The memo is only one page long, right? And the press release is one page long, and your email is a couple paragraphs.

A Yes.

Q Do you agree with the characterization of this as a big production?

A No.

Q If you had --

A From the FBI's standpoint.

Q If you had to estimate from your perspective, how long did you spend personally on these matters, not including the time responding to the chairman's request, but just on the actual preparing your email and I guess any conversations you had with people on your team about it?

A You know, really, probably that weekend, one phone call, a couple emails. Some discussions I imagine on Monday, and then several discussions until we then put out the October 20th. That would be the extent of it --

Q Was it less than --

A -- for me.

Q Less than you spent on your other matters?

A There are matters I spent less time on, and there's matters I spent more time on.

Q If you had to estimate, how long did you spend responding to Mr. Jordan's request on this issue? For example, how long did you spend -- without getting into the substance of your discussions, how long did you spend preparing for your testimony today?

A I spent several hours, yeah.

Q Okay, and did you also spend time assisting on preparing written responses to the chairman?

A No, no.

Q So it was just your testimony and resources?

A Yes, yes.

Q Okay. You were asked a number of questions about the Attorney General's October 4th memo both by me and earlier on. I want to look at these a little more closely --

A Okay.

Q -- as well as your October 20th email. Let's start with the October 4th memo again. We've already walked through the fact that it says nothing about parents. It says nothing about school board meetings.

The title of the memo is actually "Partnerships Among Federal, State, Local, Tribal and Territorial Law Enforcement to Address Threats Against School Administrators, Board Members, Teachers and Staff."

This title says nothing about parents or school board meetings, right?

A Correct.

Q In fact, it's actually focusing on threats that certain individuals are facing, correct?

A Yes, yes.

Q The fourth paragraph discusses the coordinating -- convening meetings with Federal, State, local, Tribal and territorial leaders.

A Uh-huh.

Q From your experience in field offices and in leadership positions now, is it common for the FBI and U.S. Attorney's Offices to coordinate with their local counterparts?

A Yes.

Q And is that beneficial for the local counterparts?

A Yes, and beneficial for us and all parties involved.

Q Can you explain that a little bit?

A So, for example, as I see in Kansas City, right? And so we had countless numbers of coordination meetings with local law enforcement officials. We usually would meet on a routine basis, you know, with the major police chiefs, the other Fed heads they called it, heads of the Federal agencies.

So we would either, on a routine basis, talk about issues, trying -- the threats that are occurring. We would also get together to talk about specific -- some specific actions. For example, like I said, I mentioned before, one of the largest Federal and local coordinations was an operation we called Operation Legend that occurred out in Kansas City.

It was the combination of hundreds of Federal agents along with State agents to try to impact the violent crime rising in Kansas City.

And so, like, we would get together and kind of, you know, talk about the strategies, how we're going to mitigate this, what each agency can bring to help mitigate things. So yes, very common.

Q And so it wouldn't be surprising, for example, for local law enforcement or State and local law enforcement to get to have this kind of outreach from FBI?

A No, from the FBI or U.S. Attorney's Office.

Q Or the U.S. Attorney's Office, right. It wouldn't be like, oh, this is a big thing; they're reaching out to us. It happens all the time.

A They are often called by the U.S. Attorney's Office, and they often meet with the U.S. Attorney's Office on a routine basis.

Q Okay. I want to look at your email, which is dated October 20th. Does your email say anything about school board meetings?

A I don't believe so.

Q I'm also going to ask you if it says anything about parents?

A I know it doesn't say anything about parents.

Q You said? Sorry.

A I know it does not say anything about parents.

Q Okay.

A There it is. Okay, yes. Yeah.

Q And it does not say anything about school board meetings?

A No, no.

Q Is it fair to say that the actual focus of your email is the threats that were faced by school administrators and board members and teachers and staff?

A Yes, the concern is the individuals receiving threats.

Q And, in your experience, are these individuals often parents themselves?

A The ones receiving threats?

Q Uh-huh. School board members, are they often parents? Are teachers often parents?

A Again, I didn't have a lot of engagement with the school board of any kind of variety before this. So I --

Q So just from your personal experience?

A I have almost none. Okay. I'm a parent, but I don't -- I haven't attended school board. I don't -- so -- and I honestly wouldn't -- I know -- I think subsequently I know a little bit, but before I wouldn't know who's on the school board or not, you know.

Q In paragraph 2 of your email, you say: We share an obligation to ensure all individuals are able to do their jobs without threats of violence or fear for their safety.

The language "we share an obligation," can you explain what that means? Is that part of the FBI's mission?

A Of course.

Q And can you explain what that -- why that's part of your -- why you included that?

A That's part of our main objective, to keep people from harm.

Q In the next sentence, you say: This can only be accomplished with effective coordination internally between relevant divisions and through effective coordination and engagement with our law enforcement partners and the United States Attorney Offices.

What does law enforcement partners refer to?

A Local law enforcement partners, and also Federal law enforcement partners.

Q And so your email made it clear that the goal was coordination. You weren't usurping their jurisdiction in any way?

A No.

Q And, in fact, under the predication standards, you couldn't, right? If there's no Federal nexus, you couldn't have done anything.

A No.

[redacted] I want to introduce as exhibit 8 a document entitled "Weekly ADIC/SAC SVTC HQ-led, October 6, 2021." This will be 8.

[Langan Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain what this is?

A This looks like it's a transcription of the weekly secure video teleconference meeting that the Director has with his SACs and field commanders.

Q And what does ADIC/SAC SVTC stand for?

A So the ADIC refers to Assistant Director in Charge, and there are three of those offices. That's Washington, New York, and Los Angeles. The rest are SACs, and that's the rest of our field offices. Those three very large offices have a more senior leader.

Q And does SAC stand for special agent in charge?

A Special agent in charge.

Q And what does SVTC stand for?

A Secure video teleconference.

Q Okay. So this was a teleconference meeting with the assistant directors in charge, the special agents in charge, and headquarters?

A Yes. The Director has this really with just some senior members.

Everyone else can plug in.

Q Okay.

A Yes.

Q And do -- so about how many people would have attended this meeting?

A So maybe in person, especially during this timeframe, it could have been a half dozen to a dozen. I'm not sure there. But would have been on the video link hundreds.

Q Hundreds.

A I mean, all your SACs, and then most likely your Assistant Directors, and then any other very senior personnel.

Q Okay. And did you assist in preparing any of the talking points for this document?

A I don't recall.

Q Do you know if you attended this meeting?

A I did attend it, because this one I did a presentation.

Q I want to look at the talking points that begin on page 2. So these are talking points to the Director, right?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. So there's a section entitled "Threats against school administrators, board members, teachers and staff" and then a bullet point introducing or describing the Attorney General's October 4th memo.

A Uh-huh,

Q And, immediately below that, there's a bullet point that says: The Attorney General's memo is getting politicized in the media and elsewhere in a way that's certainly not helpful to anyone.

Do you agree that the Attorney General's memo was being characterized inaccurately in the media?

A Yes. I think that once -- especially the discussion, when it turned to targeting parents and targeting people for attending meetings, it was -- it was misrepresented.

Q And that's not what the memo said?

A No.

Q And that's not even what the press release said?

A Yes.

Q On the next page, it says -- at the top of page 3, it says: But bottom line, I'm interpreting the memo as really just underscoring the coordination we're already -- and that's boldfaced -- doing in each and every one of our field offices. We already take specific threats of violence seriously and work with our partners to disrupt or mitigate threats whenever possible - that's certainly not new.

A No.

Q So does the phrase "underscoring the coordination we're already doing in each and every one of our field offices" refer to the coordination we discussed earlier between field offices and State and local partners?

A Yes.

Q So is it accurate that the field offices coordinated with these partners regularly even before the October 4th memo?

A Yes. And, as I've said, there really was nothing differently done in that organization, the FBI, from before or after.

Q And do you agree that FBI already took specific threats of violence seriously even before the October 4th memo?

A Yes.

Q And that's actually part of your mission, right?

A Yes.

Q The next paragraph reads: I am not treating this as some wholesale change in the way we operate. We're going to continue to do our jobs. We're going to continue to work with our partners to identify and disrupt threats, and we're going to do our best to stay in our lane and out of the politics.

I know we've been over this but, once again, do you agree that the October 4th memo did not change the way the FBI operates?

A I agree with that.

Q Do you agree that FBI tried to, quote, stay out of the politics with respect to this issue?

A We do what we've always done. We investigate crimes and threats.

Q Because getting pulled into politics actually makes it harder for you to do your jobs?

A Yes. We do not get involved in the politics of issues. We investigate crimes.

Q Okay. So the following bullet point reads: The AG's memo does not change how we assess threats or do business. What's being asked is that we simply work with U.S. Attorney's Offices to conduct the kind of outreach that we would typically be doing even in the absence of the memo.

A Yes.

Q Is it accurate that the FBI and U.S. Attorney's Offices would have done the type of outreach described in the memo, regardless of any particular directive?

A They would have done continued outreach as they normally do. I don't know if they would have had certain meetings on this particular threat or not, but they meet all the -- frequently, like I said. As an SAC, we meet at least monthly.

Q So -- and then it goes on, and it has a couple more bullet points on that. We went through you said hundreds of people, including special agents in charge from probably most of the field offices --

A Yeah.

Q -- attended this meeting.

A Uh-huh.

Q So, at least three times over, the Director has told these people this is not changing the way we do business, right?

A Yes.

Q He tried to make that abundantly -- he repeated it in bullet point after bullet point?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And I just want to clarify it. A little further down, it says: HQ presentation. CTD AD Tim Langan -- communicating on CT threats.

Did that have anything to do with the school board or with the October 40th?

A I don't think it did. I think it was -- yeah, I think it was a planned meeting. I can't -- yeah.

Q So it's just coincidence that it happened on this day?

A Yes. I mean, yes.

Q I want to look back at that October 20th email again just very quickly, the exhibit 4.

Near the end of the email, you ask the recipients to keep three factors in mind when they're evaluating threats. Are all of these factors generally consistent with the factors that apply to every investigation?

A Yes. Every Federal investigation, yeah.

Q So you always have -- so, when you're evaluating something, you always keep in mind if there is a Federal nexus. We went through that earlier.

A Always. It's part of --

Q Okay.

A We can't open a case without a Federal nexus.

Q School officials, any other investigate -- any other assessment, you always keep in mind whether there's a Federal nexus?

A Yes.

Q Nothing special here?

A Yeah.

Q And the same with looking for potential Federal violations, you -- and agents are always to -- are always asked to keep in mind whether there's potential Federal violations, right?

A Yes.

Q And agents are always encouraged to keep in mind the potential motivation behind the criminal activity?

A Yes. But there are also times, if you're talking about some -- some types of crimes, the motivation is not relevant.

Q Okay.

A The fact the sheer act that they -- the sheer act of the crime itself may -- may not --

Q Understood.

A Yeah. We may not need the motivation. Yeah.

Q Understood. But there are certainly crimes where motivation does matter?

A Definitely, yes. And especially with threats of acts of violence for a Federal nexus.

Q I want to turn back to threat tags.

A Okay.

Q And I think you kind of started down this road earlier, but I wanted to give you the opportunity to finish a couple sentences that you started.

So just I'm not sure that this actually was ever made clear on the record. Can you explain for -- just for -- in layman's terms what a threat tag is? Because I think the term "threat tag" can be a little intimidating to people outside of the FBI, for example.

A Yeah. Yeah. No, unfortunately, I think it's been very mischaracterized. It is basically almost like a card catalog system. It's a way we can, without manually, but it's a way that we can retrieve information.

So we work a plethora of investigations. So, if an investigation is a -- whether -- let's say it's a financial fraud. We may not know, though, what the -- we may not be able to tell you exactly, why don't you pull all of the financial frauds that involved statements of loans -- statements of loans from banks in this area or give us individuals that are committing gang activity that involve this specific type of weapon, you know. If we don't -- so at times we -- if we want to try to drill down and identify specific threat occurrences, we need to put a tag on it so we can -- we can scope it more properly or have more information about it.

So, for example, with this threat, so, if these threats occurred and if they were investigated by the FBI, so involving members of the school board or schools, they could be categorized as just a threat over an interstate wire, and we would not know necessarily. We wouldn't be able to pull that information unless we went through every single one to know that this individual was associated -- the threat against them was associated from their position as an educational official.

With this, we'd be able to collect that information together because then we could run the threat tag and be like, okay, all threats of violence, acts of violence, occurrences that affect these individuals, we can now pull them.

[12:27 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And you mentioned the example of a threat over the interstate wires?

A Yes.

Q Is it possible for something to have -- for us -- I don't know if I should call it a case or an assessment --

A Yeah.

Q -- or a Guardian to have more than one tag applied to it?

A Yes, you could, theoretically, yeah.

Q Okay. How many threat tags does the FBI have?

A I don't know. I don't have that information.

Q Do you think it's more than 100?

A I would -- I would say it's more than 100, yeah.

Q Do you think it's more than 1,000?

A I don't think it's more than 1,000.

Q Okay. What's the process by which threat tags are created?

A It's an intelligence-driven process. So it's not something I have total familiarity with with how it's created, but basically a need has to arise and articulated where we need to identify this specific factor involving an incident to help us retrieve it or identify these threats. And then it is -- and then it's created really administratively to where they could link our systems that have this tag, they can link then that case, they could run it and pull it back through. So it's an intelligence driven.

Q Okay. So you have insight into the threat tags that would be impacting the Counterterrorism Division or the Criminal Division or the things under your purview.

A Yes.

Q But they're also applied in other -- other --

A Yes.

Q So it's not just --

A No, no. Every program has the potential to run a threat tag or to create one.

Q Okay. And, actually, looking at the March 1st letter from the FBI's Office of Congressional Affairs, on page 2, at the end of the first paragraph, it says, the FBI often uses tags for special events such as the Super Bowl or Olympics. Is that accurate?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So these are pretty broadly -- there's a lot of them, and they're pretty broadly applied?

A Yes. Yes.

Q Okay. So the name "threat tag," like I said, I think it's a little intimidating potentially to the outside world because it has the word "threat" in it, but it's -- in reality it is just created for all kinds of purposes and applied to all kinds of cases?

A Yes. Yeah.

Q Okay. So there's nothing sinister there?

A No, there's really nothing sinister we do.

Q Fair. To the extent it's been characterized as such, that would be a mischaracterization?

A For those that we characterize a threat tag for one that applies to a certain individual in that it somehow continues to attract people, which --

Q Okay. When that EDUOFFICIALS threat tag was created, was it applied retroactively?

A I don't think so, and I don't think we have the ability to do that.

Q Okay. So actually --

A I think you would have to go into then -- you'd have to go back and look at violations that you think may have affected that and then put that tag on there.

Q Okay. So, to the extent that there were incoming -- incoming concerns, incoming tips that said "I have this area of concern about a threat to an educator" that predated the October 4th letter, it's possible that those weren't captured by the eduthreats tag -- or the EDUOFFICIALS tag?

A Yeah. If they weren't tagged with that, then they wouldn't have been captured in that poll.

Q So it's possible that 25 is not actually the full universe. It is just what exists based on what was actually tagged?

A Yes, 25 occurrences since the threat tag.

Q Okay. Just a couple more questions and then about out of time. The March 1 letter says that the purpose of the tag was to help the FBI understand the scope of reported threats against school officials on a national level and to provide an opportunity for a comprehensive analysis of the threat picture for effective engagement with law enforcement partners at all levels. Do you agree with that statement?

A Yes.

Q And it actually tracks pretty closely with the language of your October 20th email, which says in the middle of the third paragraph: The purpose of the threat tag is to help scope this threat on a national level and provide an opportunity for comprehensive analysis of the threat picture for effective engagement with law enforcement partners at all levels.

Right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So what you were saying earlier is that this is primarily a scoping mechanism?

A Uh-huh, a tool, yes.

Q Is a tool.

A Uh-huh, for scoping for -- for -- yes.

Q So there have been allegations that the FBI was using to -- was using the threat tag to, quote, tag parents as domestic terrorists, and I want to go through that allegation step by step. So we've already discussed that neither the memo nor the press release nor your email uses the word "parents," right?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q Okay. To your knowledge, did any of the 25 Guardians that are referenced in the March letter state whether the tips accused parents of doing anything in particular? Specifically, did they mention the word "parent"?

A I have no idea if they mentioned parents.

Q Okay. Is that ordinarily something that would even be recorded in the Guardian system?

A No. I mean, if a -- if a complaining party could -- if they identified this person and said they could've made it, but it's not -- it's not relevant --

Q Right.

A -- to an invest -- whatever -- parents, no parents, it's not relevant.

Q Because the issue is who is --

A Who is -- the issue is the individual that's being threatened.

Q Right. Are tags applied to people or to assessments or to Guardian case leads or to --

A To incidents.

Q Okay.

A To incidents or -- yeah, incidents.

Q So --

A Special events are not necessarily an incident, but it could be an incident. That's an incident, yeah.

Q So tags are not applied to people?

A No.

Q So there's no case file with somebody's name on it that says this person has been tagged as --

A No.

Q -- such-and-such?

A No.

Q Okay. And did the tag have anything to do with domestic terrorism?

A Not directly, but if one of these Guardians, I think -- Guardians were opened under counterterrorism.

Q But to the extent that the --

A The tag is agnostic.

Q Right.

A No, the tag, no. The tag is just -- no, it's just -- it just attaches to an incident.

Q Right.

A Yeah.

Q So they said that the accusation is that the FBI was tagging parents as domestic terrorists?

A No, there's no connection to parents nor does the tag identify domestic terrorism.

Q Right. So the tag wouldn't say the person in this --

A No.

Q -- folder is a domestic terrorist?

A Absolutely not.

Q Okay. Why do you think this confusion exists?

A I don't know. We did not -- we didn't say that, so I don't know. I think there is a lot of misinformation out there.

[redacted] Okay. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[1:20 p.m.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. It's 1:20.

BY [redacted]

Q I just wanted to ask you a couple questions before I turn it over to my colleague [redacted] Before the October 4th memorandum went out, there's been some discussion that you -- the weekend before you had some emails or some phone calls?

A Yes.

Q Could you just -- to the extent you can remember what they were, could you just walk us through that?

A Yeah. So it started on Saturday and received the first email from Steve Jensen, who was the section chief, forwarding the emails that started from DOJ talking about wanting the FBI engagement in this response to this letter and asking for FBI engagement but not necessarily specific. Forwarded the email to me, probably for an awareness -- actually, he forwarded it to the senior staff of CTD.

I responded back saying: Steve, is this involving a certain threat or a specific -- I really didn't -- I don't even think I opened the attachment. A lot of times -- again, you know, for it to reach me, like: Hey, what's going on here, give me the -- give me the bluff. Responded back.

And then I don't know if he responded back, but then I did a phone call with his boss, who is my deputy, and that's Jim Tarasca, phone call: Jim, do you know what this is?

Again, this is my best recollection of it.

No, not tracking this, or I forgot if -- Steve -- something from Friday maybe, some conversation. But, again, this is new, like what is this involving, a certain threat? We'll dig into it. And then that was pretty much the end of the conversation. Okay, find out what this is, what are the threats, you know, what are they looking for for us -- from us.

And then I think just one final email saying: Please just -- we'll talk about this on Monday. We can coordinate and discuss this in further, stay with me on this.

And then the only others were one or two to Jill, my report, saying: Hey, forwarding on, we'll look into this. Not sure what exactly the scope and what this is. We're -- I'll keep you posted. And that was it.

Q Okay. And then, on Monday, did you reconvene or touch base again with those folks?

A I don't have -- you know, we would've had our normal, usually like morning meetings, and I'm sure we -- to the best of my recollection, we have -- we discussed this. Hey, what's going on with this? Let's -- and get back over and like talk to them. And so, again, those levels that are talking to them, see what -- see what we're talking about, see what the frame of this threat is, and let's go on, would've been probably the extent of it.

Q Okay. And then did you have a chance to look at those emails before you came in today?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And just so you know, they haven't been produced to the committee. I mean, the committee has subpoenaed all relevant documents relating to this, and we haven't received those emails. Are you aware of that?

A I -- I'm not aware of what you receive or don't.

Q I understand that's not your decision what the FBI produces to Congress.

A Yes.

Q But --

A We'll then ask anything that -- again, I don't make those decisions, but we'll take that back with Office of Congressional Affairs.

Q Okay. Just getting back to the weekend email and telephone calls, I mean, anything that comes up on a weekend usually has some significance attached to it, just the temporal --

A No.

Q No?

A My phone, especially, it does not stop ringing, okay --

Q Okay.

A -- still on the weekend. Yes, for it to reach an assistant -- yes, at some level. But the volume that we deal with, it's not unusual then. So it's not -- I don't want to put any kind of: Hey, this is from DOJ. Okay, well, what is this?

Didn't know who it was coming from, so it wasn't -- I don't believe there was anything, this is from the Attorney General, this is coming from somebody at DOJ, okay, what is it? What do they want? I don't even -- you know, I don't know this person.

Q Right.

A So, I mean, it's not unusual though for heavy calls -- the next call could've been like: Hey, we're -- we've got an active CT subject that's in our sight in Philadelphia, you know, in -- you know, what are we going to do?

So it's not unusual for us to be working on highly visible situations, some that don't end up being visual, so it's 24/7.

Q Okay. Going back to exhibit 1, the NSBA letter, I forget whether you said --

A That it's --

Q -- you looked at the letter?

A Yes. I don't recall. I think it was attached to that email that Steve sent me. I don't know if I opened it.

Q Because it, you know, it references the PATRIOT Act. I mean, it gets -- and this is like to get your reaction to this. I mean, isn't that taking things a little too far?

A Again, I don't know if I -- I know I reviewed it at one time. It has been a while though since I read that. This is from a nongovernment agency, right? It's from the --

Q Right.

A -- school board association? You know, honestly, I don't make a lot about what somebody -- they're claiming what the government should do.

Q Right. But it's a little different than that because the Attorney General, lickity split, 5 days later, puts out a memorandum to the whole Department, including the FBI. And then the Attorney General testified about the memo on -- to our committee on October the 20th, I think.

[redacted] 21st.

BY [redacted]

Q 21st, and acknowledged that his one input, his one data point --

A Yeah.

Q -- for this memo --

A Yeah.

Q -- was this, was this letter. So I'm asking you here today, like, at that time, do you remember the Attorney General testifying to that, that this letter was significant for him, perhaps the most significant data point?

A I don't. I don't recall at that point -- whether he testified or not, I wouldn't have been, you know, present for that.

Q So the fact that he testified to that wouldn't cause you to go back and look at the letter --

A I know that after --

Q -- and zero in a little bit more?

A I mean, this definitely became -- yes. Obviously, we knew things became much more engaged with Congress and DOJ, but I can't reflect -- I probably knew there was something, but I wouldn't have been involved in his testimony, and I don't believe I watched it.

Q Okay.

A So --

Q And just, by the way, I just note for the record, the hearing was October 21st. Our first substantive letter on this issue wasn't until the 24th or 25th of October.

A Uh-huh.

Q So, when we go back to Exhibit 8 --

A Yes.

Q -- when the Director is talking about unfortunately, like with so many things these days, the AG's memo is getting politicized. I would just note for the record, we hadn't engaged on this topic.

A Yeah. And, again, I don't know what the Director used for his calculus --

Q Yeah.

A -- on that statement. I don't know if he got some other information --

Q Right.

A -- or where he got it.

Q Right. So, going back to this exhibit, exhibit 8, where the Director's talking to all the special agents in charge around the country --

A Yes.

Q -- it seems to me that the Director is -- I'll give you a chance to find it.

A Got it.

Q I'm looking at, it starts on page 2.

A Uh-huh.

Q It seems to me he's downplaying the FBI's role here. Is that a fair assessment? Am I missing something?

A You know, I wouldn't be able to judge downplaying or -- I think he's just -- he just states the facts.

Q This morning I used the word "leaning in," and you said, well, what does leaning in means?

A Well, I know what leaning in means, but, I mean, in that context of that me leaning in, you know, I think there was some -- leaning in, obviously I know getting involved in something, but --

Q But it's making it a priority. It's --

A But when -- in these matters I think just being more specific would help me with helping you.

On this, I -- you know, he states things very factually, the Director, you know. So I don't -- you know, just in general course of his business, he's not one to, hey, this is -- it's just what it is. I mean, the way you read it is pretty much how it is and how we received it. Okay. This is -- again, we do deal with an area -- you know, we -- a lot of things come across our -- you know, whether they're, you know, threat driven, interest from community, whatever, and so we do address a wide variety of things.

Q Okay. On the -- flipping over -- by the way, do you have any idea what's redacted on page 2?

A Two?

Q The second bullet?

A The second bullet?

Q Yeah.

A No idea.

Q Okay.

A No.

[redacted] I would just ask, you know, counsel if we can have a little bit more information about this particular redaction. We don't like my redactions obviously, but this particular redaction, if you could just like let us know what the reason for that is.

[redacted] Yeah. I don't recall off the top of my head, but we can certainly get back to you.

[redacted] No, I'm not expecting you to recall off the top of your head.

[redacted] Sure.

[redacted] But if you could get back to us, appreciate it.

[redacted] Of course.

BY [redacted]

Q But flipping over to page 3.

A Yep.

Q You know, but bottom line, I'm interpreting the memo as really just underscoring the coordination we're already doing. I mean, isn't that in effect signaling to the field that -- you know, downplaying the memo?

A I wouldn't say downplaying. I wouldn't say up playing. I would just say signaling to the field: Hey, I want you to stay consistent what you're doing.

I think, you know, he's -- and, again, I don't recall exactly the temperature. I'm going to speculate a little bit. But what he may have -- whatever he's referring to and what the information he got what is ever super -- started to charge this issue.

Obviously this issue got charged quickly, right. Whatever calculus he's doing -- and, again, this is a bit of speculation here -- trying to maybe -- I would assume, if there's any speculation on my part, trying to -- this isn't to not supercharge anything. Just keep doing what you're doing. We have a process of doing things. Threats come in. Work threats.

Q Okay. Okay. You know, I'll leave it here. I don't want to belabor the point. But, when the Attorney General puts out a memo to the whole Department, I mean, that is signaling a priority, is it not?

A And, again, I get really specific on "priority." Since we attached -- we have a very significant, deep process for prioritization of our threats, and so that's why -- I don't mean to be --

Q Right.

A -- that I'm trying to be difficult with the answer, but like a priority would actually -- for us to be a priority, like we would designate it through our threat review, this is a priority.

Is this something that now we are -- yes, we addressed this, right. And he mentions it: Hey, this is -- you know, this memo from the Attorney General, making sure you -- maybe some of the SACs hadn't heard of it -- trying -- kept introducing this issue to it, but no adjustment of resources, prioritization on it.

And, you know, exactly what we're trying to do, we want to know the scope of this. What is this? Should this be a priority, or should it not? What's the extent of this --

Q And what do you think was the result? Did this become a priority, or did it not?

A No.

Q It did not become a priority?

A No.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I'm going to flag -- what's our next exhibit 9?

[Langan Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Nine.

BY [redacted]

Q I just wanted to -- I referenced this when I was first speaking with you this morning.

A Okay.

Q So I just wanted to --

A Yes, right. Okay.

Q I just wanted to make it part of the record.

A Gotcha.

Q This is the -- this is dated October 14, 2021, so it's before the Attorney General testified, but it's after the October 4th memo. This is from the acting U.S. attorney in Montana.

A Okay.

Q It's just going through all the Federal crimes --

A Yeah.

Q -- that could be potentially implicated from this school board activity.

A Okay.

Q And I wanted to ask you whether -- I mean, the FBI was directed to convene task forces, to convene meetings. And ultimately you said the U.S. attorneys were going to do the -- were going to take the lead on convening. Is that correct?

A The first part is not. We were not directed to convene task forces.

Q Okay.

A I believe you referred to a DOJ potential task -- we --

Q Participate in task forces, I'm sorry.

A Participate in meetings.

Q Okay.

A I don't -- I don't -- I never recall reading from the Attorney General participate in a task force.

Q Okay. So exhibit 3 --

A Okay.

Q -- the third paragraph --

A Okay. This is the press release?

Q Yeah.

A Okay.

Q So paragraph 3 begins: According to the AG's memorandum, the Department will launch a series of additional efforts in the coming days designed to address the rise in criminal conduct directed towards school personnel.

A Yep.

Q Those efforts are expected to include the creation of a task force --

A Yes.

Q -- consisting of representatives from the Department's Criminal Division, and then it lists a bunch of other components --

A Yep.

Q -- including the FBI. What is your recollection of FBI participation in this?

A None. I never saw anything that went further than -- as far as creating a task force on this matter.

Q Okay. So, to your knowledge, the FBI personnel were not participating in task forces?

A Yes.

Q On this topic.

A On this topic, yes, sir.

Q On this topic, of course.

A Yes. Yes.

Q Okay. So getting back to exhibit 9 --

A Yep. Montana, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A Okay.

Q I just wanted to get your reaction --

A Okay.

Q -- to like all these statutes.

A Yep.

Q I mean, I asked for your reaction on the PATRIOT Act question --

A Right.

Q -- and you didn't really give me much there.

A Yeah.

Q But, you know, it sort of seems to me that the acting U.S. attorney in Montana, I mean, you know, he leaned in here, to use the term we've been using.

A Well, leaned in, he wrote a memo listing a lot of statutes.

Q Right. But this is pretty significant, is it not?

A Listing statutes?

Q Listing statutes that could be used to go after parents at school board meetings?

A You know, what is -- it's a -- well, one, I don't -- the Bureau is not on this.

Q Right. But --

A Right. You referred earlier, this is the one that you -- like the Bureau dictating the Bureau to investigate these or like --

Q No, no, no. This is the U.S. attorney in Montana.

A This is -- yeah.

Q But this is all obviously part of --

A Yeah. I mean --

Q -- the activity --

Reporter. I just need one person to talk at a time.

[redacted] That's my bad.

Mr. Langan. Oh, I'm so sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q But this is all flowing from the Attorney General's memo, correct?

A I could assume that this is what -- I don't know why he would -- does he refer to it in here? The Attorney General's directed -- yeah, so he refers to the memo, yes.

Q So I just wanted to get your reaction that you don't think this is taking things a little too far?

A Honestly, you know, between what a U.S. Attorney's Office -- I'm not going to -- you know, I've seen them do a lot of different things. And so taking it too far by sending a memo out, I would like to see, you know, an action that takes -- you know, some people might feel this way. Listen, it didn't affect -- this didn't affect any type of work that we were doing, so I don't have any more opinion on this acting U.S. attorney in Montana.

Q Okay. Are you aware of any other initiative like this by other U.S. attorneys --

A I'm --

Q -- to put together a list of statutes?

A I'm not.

Q There's been some discussion about, you know, if you look at the -- the Attorney General's memo, we've been advised --

A Yeah.

Q -- a number of times that the word "parents" are not in here.

A Yes. Right.

Q I think -- what's that?

[redacted] Are we wrong? Is it in there somewhere?

BY [redacted]

Q So my point here is, though, who goes to school board meetings? If we're talking about activities that happened at school board meetings, who are we talking about? I've asked another witness that, and they said, um, vendors. I'm like, okay, we've got vendors. Who else goes to school board meetings besides vendors and parents?

A Well, so, for one, if I could give clarification, I think the threat is directed to people who may be associated with.

Q Right.

A So, again, I think we kind of covered whether or not it happened at a meeting or not.

Q Right.

A So it's individuals that work or are associated with school boards that receive threats.

Q Right.

A So I think that opened -- that's a different point of discussion --

Q Right.

A -- whether or not it -- the threats happened at a school board meeting or not, right.

Q Okay. Fair enough. Like who --

A Okay.

Q Then who were making these threats?

A That's a good question. I guess we could drill into the 25 -- I don't have the information on that.

Q I mean, a lot of these threats are coming out of school board meetings. Isn't that fair to say?

A I don't have that data. I didn't look at those threats, and I wouldn't assume they'd come from -- we can never look at -- for example, if something is targeted at a mosque or a temple or, you know, anything like that, I wouldn't assume that I know who's doing this. So I -- I just -- I think it's an area that we don't get into in the Bureau, like assuming this is going to be the people that do that. We just really deal in a lot of fact-based driven methods.

Q Right. I mean, let's go back to the period in question --

A Okay.

Q -- October 2021.

A Yeah.

Q You know, at that time, things had started to boil over with issues relating to, you know, COVID restrictions, correct, at school board meetings and --

A Again, I've heard subsequently since -- brought attention that there is -- yes, I guess, several issues that concerned people.

Q So it's whether schools are conducting classes in person. It's whether those in-person classes -- you know, the mask requirements. At the same time, I believe critical race theory was a big part of a lot of these concerns. Do you remember any others?

A I don't track nor have I read any information or briefs on anything in the FBI about any reasons for school board meetings.

Q Okay. You mean any of the threats coming up at school board meetings?

A Threats to individuals that occurred, I think there was 25 Guardians created.

Q Right.

A I don't -- as far as what you're describing, issues that could be brought up in a school board meeting, am I correct there?

Q Right.

A I have never read, tracked, been given any information about these are items that are discussed on school boards --

Q Okay. Okay. It just seems slightly hard to believe that -- I mean, you're a senior FBI official.

A Yes.

Q This is like an initiative that the Attorney General discussed.

A Right.

Q And, you know, I'm just offering that some of the topics that were of some controversy back then, critical race theory. It was COVID restrictions. It was mask -- you know, mask wear --

A But I'd have to tie that in, what is the Federal nexus for a discussion on that, and what is our engage -- where have we engaged on that?

Q Right. But I think that's the whole point of why we're here today.

A No, I think --

Q Is that why is the Federal law enforcement machinery throughout the country being pointed towards something that is not a Federal nexus?

A And, again, I think it's a perception or opinions versus what the FBI did in facts. And the facts -- all we care about are people from anywhere threatening anybody. Now -- and if they are a part of the school board and for individual, whatever, if there was other discussions that brought to that, I mean, theoretically there could be, if we're talking about, again, you know -- I'm trying to think of a threat that it flowed from something, but those discussions, they didn't. And at least I was never a part of them. I mean, if there is somebody at some level that had a discussion of like what is driving people -- I would only assume. I don't --

Q Okay. So, as I understand what you're saying, before the October 4th memo, you had no idea this was something that the FBI needed to be addressing?

A I don't believe that -- I can't recall ever being part of a meeting regarding threats involving educational aspects.

Q Okay. So, from your point of view, there wasn't an uptick and there wasn't a nationwide trend that needed to be addressed by the FBI on this topic?

A To my recollection, not brought up to me, yes.

Q Okay. But, I mean, you're one of the senior people --

A Yeah. Yeah.

Q -- for the relevant divisions of the FBI?

A Right.

Q So, if not you, okay, who would know about it?

A So --

Q Is that a fair question?

A If you want me to -- that is a fair question. And but -- if you want me to speculate, like discussions could've happened in a certain field office, right. Most of the work, all the work really is generated from field offices. Maybe some city had an incident. I don't know. I mean, do you want me to say -- they could've had a discussion with the SAC level.

There could be discussion at the, you know, a senior level that are like, hey, are you guys tracking -- are you starting -- it just didn't like, oh, let's -- we need to tell the executive level about this, because, just like you said, if it affects me, it means that we're going to have to, a lot of times, you know, do we need to shift the priority, or strategy, or resources, and so nothing at that level did.

Q Right. I understand. If everything in exhibit 1 is true, okay, and the Attorney General, you know, puts the memo out -- exhibit 1, I'm sorry, is the NSBA letter, right?

A Yeah.

Q Talking about a, you know, systemic uptick in these concerning incidents.

A Yeah.

Q And, you know, if you take everything there as true and because the Attorney General put a memo out, you have to -- you have to give that some credence. And then we come over to the FBI and we find out that there isn't any -- you know, there isn't that nationwide systemic uptick. Is that fair to say? Would you agree?

A It depends on who gives this credence. So, again, I think I might have read this once. I don't recall much from this --

Q Well, the Attorney General gives the credence.

A The Attorney General can -- I'm not -- I can't speak for the Attorney General. So -- but as far as giving credence to certain levels of threat, again, what did the FBI see? What is -- so I can only talk about what was brought to us, sir.

Q Fair enough. And I think one of the concerns and many of the concerns our Members have is that before the Attorney General put out his memo, okay, why didn't he ask the FBI first? Is that a fair question?

A I think asking the FBI about threats and what one is seeing, that is -- I think that's appropriate.

Q Before putting out a memo to the whole --

A I don't know about the response there --

Q -- the whole Department.

A -- but as far as, in general, coming to us is always a good opportunity if you're inquiring about threats.

Q Correct. And so, from our Members' perspective, it has a veneer of just a political operation. Somebody gets to the White House. The White House gets to the DOJ. Boom, you get this memo. As it turns out, when we talked to the FBI -- and you're not the first FBI person we've connected with on this topic --

A Right.

Q -- the FBI officials like yourself haven't been able to give us any data to support this original data input to the Attorney General's memo.

A Okay.

Q So I think that's pretty much where, you know, where we want to leave it unless you have anything to add there.

A No, sir.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q All right. Thank you.

I'll go back to your testimony at the House Intelligence Committee's hearing on November 3rd of 2021. I'll represent to you that in a recording of the hearing Congressman Crawford asked you which FBI Headquarters element had the lead on implementing the mandate from the AG's October 4th memo regarding school board threats, and you said that it was a combination of Criminal Investigative Division along with the Counterterrorism Division.

A Yep.

Q Why would both departments be operationalized on this issue and not one or the other? I think you might have answered that earlier.

A Yeah. You know, I'll go through it again.

Q Yes.

A Do you want me to say them?

Q Yes, if you could.

A Again, so almost all occurrences of threats or violent acts really can boil down to those two divisions. Now, there is a chance that some -- just bombings, which you saw in one of those -- some of those threats -- assessments that they had a bombings. Those can also go through another division. But basically threats of violence are going to fall under those two divisions, so that's --

Q That helps.

A That -- yeah.

Q And Congressman Crawford also asked you who from the FBI field offices attend -- attended the meetings led by the local U.S. Attorney's Offices across the country following the AG's October 4th memo, and you said that you would get back to him on that information. Were you ever able to find out that information?

A We didn't seek it, and we didn't track it.

Q Okay.

A So I refer questions, after my testimony, to go back to our OCA and to go to DOJ and forward them on to DOJ.

Q So after you pass on the information --

A I give it to OCA, Office of Congressional Affairs, and then I'm done with it.

Q From there, they move with it, okay.

And then Congressman Crawford asked you if the FBI utilized any national intelligence resources or authorities to act on the Attorney General's October 4th memo, and at the time, you said no. Did that change at all following this hearing?

A And what is it again? What did he ask? He asked --

Q He asked if FBI utilized any national intelligence resources or authorities to act on the AG's memo, and at the time, you said no.

A Okay. Yes, because I don't -- when was the date on that testimony? That was --

Q November 3rd of 2021.

A Okay. Drilling down, theoretically intelligence analysts that help try to scope the threat are part of the national intelligence program. So, at the time, since it was pre -- I mean, it's kind of semantic, but if you were looking, are there any resources and subsequently, yes. Obviously there's been -- there was at least six -- six Guardians that were under the counterterrorism nexus. Those are national security. But if they were investigated by a domestic terrorism squad, they are not. I mean, things are getting really bureaucratic here. So like -- so technically -- so DT investigators are not, but all intelligence analysts are.

Q Okay. Thank you. And so that's what you meant by when they come from the national intelligence program bucket. I just want to make sure I understood that language.

A Yes. That would be -- yes, that's the national intelligence program bucket, and this would be individuals that are either investigating -- it's usually counter -- and if I miss a few, but counterintelligence, counterterrorism, but international terrorism, foreign influence, and cyber, and then all intelligence analysts though, because they plug into that.

Q Okay. And then, lastly, Congressman Crawford asked you whether the FBI had received any updated guidance from the Department of Justice on canceling the mandate for FBI-led meetings, training, and dedicated open lines of threat reporting after the NSBA apologized and recalled their September 29th letter to President Biden's -- President Biden. As of today, has the FBI received such guidance?

A To call back something or --

Q Yeah, to -- or has the FBI received any updated guidance to not, I guess, follow the mandate that was given by the Attorney General?

A We haven't received any further guidance on the issue. I don't know if I'd agree with the, again, the mandate which we took as the U.S. Attorney's Office to lead. But we have not received any further information --

Q Any further instruction?

A -- at all or exchanges, yes, on this. And at least to my knowledge, if something happened at a different level.

Q Okay. And then, finally, Congresswoman Stefanik asked you to provide all emails related to the issuance of the AG's October 4th memo as well as any emails related to any planning for messaging in the memo.

A Yep.

Q You answered that you would provide what you could legally. Did you produce those requested emails following the hearing?

A Again, same answer. I -- it -- as I was telling the Representative, I will pass on the requests to those that work in OCA and OGA, our general counsel, so I don't know. I don't follow up on that.

Q I understand. Thank you.

A No. Yeah, no, that's fair.

[redacted] I would just, to point out for the record, and this might not be something that the witness is aware of, but we did produce this document that's dated October 20, 2021, from Monte Williams (ph). So, to the extent that that's guidance, I just wanted to make sure we provided that. But you might not be aware of that.

Mr. Langan. No.

[redacted] Thank you. Let's see.

BY [redacted]

Q And if I could just go back to one of [redacted] last questions regarding the retraction of the September 29th letter, are you aware that on October 22nd the NSBA apologized for their letter?

A I think I remember hearing maybe open source about that. I think -- it seems familiar.

Q And what do you mean by open source?

A Like either read about it or heard it on the news or something like that. I don't -- I don't remember having any like official work discussion.

Q Were there any conversations that occurred after October 22nd regarding whether or not the Attorney General should retract the October 4th memorandum?

A I don't recall ever hearing anything like that.

Q And it's your understanding that the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum is still in effect?

A I assume. But, again, I think, what it -- you know, as far as the Bureau, we -- again, it may affect the DOJ differently. For us, we, again, did a threat tag, scoped the issue, and then -- and we just continue doing what we always do. So I don't know if it -- you know, so as far as recalling affected us, it hasn't affected us.

Q But you're not aware of any conversations that you were involved with or your subordinates were involved with regarding retracting the memo?

A None that I was or none that I know of, yes.

Q Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And, during the last hour of questioning, you were asked about the FBI National Threats Operations Center, or NTOC is how we termed it.

A Yep. Yep.

Q Who oversees that?

A That's another Assistant Director.

Q Do you know what exactly, which Assistant Director?

A Yeah. His name is -- well, and that's a section, but it's Mike Christman is the Assistant Director over -- it's the Criminal Justice Information Center, CJIC, or I think it's -- it's CJIC. Oh, my god. I'm sorry.

Q Fair enough. And then who is the final decisionmaker to pass along a tip that was reported through NTOC?

A That's a great discussion point. So I think, you know, those individuals would be better, but it is a -- it's a team effort of individuals that take the call. They are trained. They're trained intake specialists. They review it. There are then team leaders and including agent personnel that are involved that review it, but that is definitely not an area that I'm -- I'd be able to explain to you as fully as I think you would like.

Q Understood. No, I appreciate it.

And then going into a little bit about your current role --

A Yes.

Q -- over the Cyber Division, what are the current investigative priorities of the FBI's Cyber Division?

A It is -- that's a secret discussion, but I can talk to you in general, generalized.

Q That's fair.

A Okay. And it's -- that's one of the divisions I oversee.

Q Okay.

A Okay. But for Cyber, there's a lot of national security threats. I won't get into them in this forum. And then there's also significant criminal cyber threats.

Q And what are your areas of responsibility within the Cyber Division generally?

A So I oversee them along with the other five divisions. There is an Assistant Director that is the senior executive over Cyber Division. I oversee the branch that's with -- so what I would say is continue to assess resources, strategies, and engagements, and external components, whether it's public and private sector, involving cyber -- the cyber program.

Q Okay. And then, based on those priorities that we generally spoke about, what are the mandated times to address seized digital media for processing and analysis?

A Okay. Mandated time for seizing --

Q Digital media and for processing and analysis.

A And for -- okay. So how quickly can they process it?

Q Correct.

A Is there a mandate? I don't know if there's a mandate on how quickly -- so if something was seized, a piece of media was seized, how quickly was it processed and -- I don't know if there is a mandate on that.

Q Is there a general guideline?

A It would be evidence -- evidence policy. I mean, we can -- you know, I -- check with -- but I don't -- I don't -- I've not seen that.

Q Okay. And we could maybe assume that those timelines for analysis are ranked by investigative priority. Would that be a correct assumption?

A Yeah. Yeah. I mean, yeah. I think the -- yes. The investigative priority of the -- yeah, the significance of the case, the amount of data, where it was seized, and does that place have the ability to analyze it locally? Do they need to send it to a regional place? Do they need to send it back to the FBI lab? Is there other partners involved? I mean, so it's a -- it's an equation. I don't think there's a policy of this date. There's dates for entering the evidence but not necessarily for the review, to the best of my knowledge.

Q No, that's understandable. And would you be able to assist us after today in obtaining if there is a policy on FBI's current Cyber Division?

A I'll definitely check with OCA, congressional affairs, and pass on your request.

Q Regarding the investigative priorities and the guidance for data analysis?

A I'll definitely pass on your request.

Q Thank you.

[redacted] Connected to the school board memo at all or different topic?

[redacted] I think if there's a general piece, if that includes school boards, but generally.

[redacted] This is connected to his role as Executive Assistant Director.

BY [redacted]

Q During your testimony as the Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division before the House Intel Committee on November 3, 2021, Congressman LaHood asked you about the role social media plays in cases identifying lone actors online. And you responded by saying in part that we very much encourage citizens, individuals to come forward when they have information of extreme rhetoric, violence being discussed online.

How does the FBI interact with social media platforms to identify lone actors?

A Again, if there is individuals that -- when you say "lone actors," again, I'm going to take this as an individual that is exhibiting threatening language or behavior. So we would, again, encourage individuals that come across that information to provide it to us.

Q And would the FBI ever reach out to the platforms on their own?

A Yeah, and we would hope the platform would send that to us though --

Q Okay.

A -- you know, because we wouldn't know. And so -- I mean, unless then we had a subpoena; then maybe we would subpoena the platform. Like, so let's say someone said I was on somewhere and I saw this and this is who did it and they're threatening to kill these five people, then we would maybe open up a preliminary inquiry on this case, then -- because then we'd have the power to then get an order for the provider to get some information, you know. And but so -- so, yes, but it -- or if a social media company saw something that was threatening, we would hope that they would send it to us.

Q Absolutely.

A Yeah.

Q And you then mentioned direct engagement with tech companies in the private sector saying that --

A Yeah.

Q -- we engage with training with them to what to look for, our concerns. There has been several cases that we've worked together to disrupt violent acts before they happen. Can you describe, as best as you can, this direct engagement?

A Yeah. And, without being specific as like, you know, being told, like, hey, on last January we had this, but engagement, so private sector engagement -- and I'll include tech. I just want to give you a broader scope of what we do so you guys have a good understanding. Like, it is embedded throughout what we do as an organization, public and private, because, again, most of our victim entities are going to be private.

Now, some we're thinking very much threat specific on individuals today, but most of the things we work are going to be victims that are either corporations or entities or financial institutions or establishments. And so it's really key that we have really robust private outreach.

So, with that, so training on how to identify threats. Maybe they're insider threats. Maybe they're external threats. Maybe they're threats that are, you know, originating from a foreign actor, so -- maybe it's threats of individuals that are using their -- if they're using, you know, their technology in some way that they come across for them to recognize it, identify it, report it. So it's kind of general.

Q Okay. And would the FBI intake tips or reports of the problematic content through, as we discussed earlier, the tip line --

A Yes.

Q -- online submissions?

A Yes. But they could also, if they reported back to a field office, they may have some type of, you know: Hey, we know this is San Francisco, and we know who to call in San Francisco, or this is Dallas, we've talked to this agent in Dallas that handles threats and where to call them and tell them. Sometimes that could happen.

Q And did the FBI ever receive reports of online content from State and local governments?

A Yes. Okay. Received information regarding criminal activity that have -- that has occurred -- or believe to be criminal activity occurred online but referred from a State and local government?

Q Correct.

A Yes.

Q And could you describe the FBI's internal processes when it receives those reports about content?

A Okay. So from a law enforcement agency?

Q Correct.

A So most likely those relationships are usually at a local level, okay. So they're usually not going to report them to the tips line. So let's say NYPD, right, they come across something that they've seen online, whether it's a fraud, whether it's a potential threat, and so they see that. Well, one, they're most likely -- and they are, they're part of our terrorism task forces or violent crimes task forces, and so, you know, they inject that threat information or lead information to that field office directly. So they -- though they could go to the tips line or something, they most likely would inject it directly with the field office that they know.

Q Okay. And let me see, for example, what sort of internal review when it gets to the field office, what would take place within the FBI if they decided to act on such a report?

A So it would be similar to the tip making -- coming from NTOC, right. It still then gets to the field office. So let's say it comes from a detective at New York, compared to NTOC. It's still -- this information needs to -- you know, let's say it's going to be -- it's: We think Steve Smith is going to blow up this building, okay.

All right. So, initially, that field office, then they get it from the detective: Is this legitimate? You know, okay. Where is this -- oh, it's coming from the NYPD. Where did they get this information? Who is the reporting party? Okay. This sounds -- okay, it sounds at least credible to where they got the source of information.

They want to blow up a facility, okay. Is that something we're going to work? Is that a Federal -- yeah, okay. Somebody is going to blow something up, we're going to work that. All right. Is this in New York? Is this our AOR? Should we work it? Do we need to send a lead on? And they would go through that same process.

Okay. Let's start off with the Guardian. They most likely then -- they would open a Guardian from New York instead of a Guardian being sent to them where they have to open it or -- and -- or they may -- if the facts are so specific and articulable, like we talked about, they might go right to a PI or a full, but they could open their case. But, again, it goes through a process of case review, which is for, you know, a case opening or even a Guardian. You have a supervisor involved to review it. And then depending -- then there's all sorts of off sheets, whether or not it's -- they're sensitive cases or they're certain programs -- different involvement. But basically a supervisor will review it as well, and they'll open up a case, and they'll start working it.

Q Okay. That's helpful. And were there any differences in the FBI's process depending on whether a United States citizen or a non-United States citizen produced the content under review?

A Okay. So, if you're saying a non-U.S. citizen provides us information?

Q Correct.

A If it went -- and so like, what is this, a hypothetical here, it went through the tip line or whatever?

Q Correct. However it was submitted.

A Okay. No. No. I mean, if it's the information, again, I don't think we're looking as much of who's sending it as long as it's not, you know, something that is, you know, someone who's, you know, trying to fraudulently tip information, but sometimes they do, and sometimes we have to rule that out too. But, no, we wouldn't discredit the information because it came from a foreign source.

Q Okay. And then could you describe the FBI's approach to reporting concerns or content to private sector partners like social media companies, kind of what we just discussed before?

A Yeah. The concern -- so --

Q Your approach to reporting the concerns --

A Reporting, same thing. If they -- so, I mean, if they forward us information onto there? We would still then -- then we would go ahead and still do that process. I mean, you know, there is usually -- probably it's a little bit smoother if it's coming from a law enforcement agency, because then a detective may already know a lot of elements of a crime that we may be investigating. But a lot of the private sector companies, especially tech companies, are pretty well informed as well.

So, if it came in -- but we would still need to do our process, like, okay, thank you tech X, what is the violation here, what are you reporting, does this meet our thresholds for a Guardian, what -- you know, let's start taking the steps. So it would still follow the same process.

Q And would specific usernames or other identifying information get reported?

A Potentially. So, if they said, "Hey, we just came across an individual who wants to kill five people, and they're in Memphis, they're using this username on this platform," yes.

Q And would specific posts with problematic content get reported?

A So problematic or threatening?

Q However you want to classify it, if there's a difference.

A Well, there's a big difference.

Q If you could clarify the difference.

A Well, I don't know what problematic is.

Q Okay.

A I don't -- I've never classified anything as problematic.

Q Okay, then, threatening.

A If something threatening is coming, so if individuals are talking about conducting threats, that's concerning, yes, and this could be reported.

Q Is there a lower threshold than threatening that maybe could rise to the level of threatening that you would maybe flag?

A I mean, we're not flagging anything. We either -- if you're opening a case, a Guardian assessment, it has some type of, again, like we talked about, some type of predication for a potential Federal violation. So, again, I think I can help you here if we're talking about some speech issues, okay. Very concerned about constitutional rights and not, you know, their hate speech. I mean, I've worked in civil rights a long time. There is, you know, highly, highly volatile, ugly speech out there, but that's not, you know, that is not going to get you to a predicated opening without that threat of violence.

Q Okay. And then are you aware of any instances where the FBI requested that a social media company take action on an individual user's account personally?

A Not to my knowledge to take -- I'd have to see if it was to close an account. I'd have to get a specific detail. I know like -- like, for example, during the synagogue shooting in Dallas, the synagogue was, I believe, putting -- I believe they were streaming -- I don't know if it was FaceTime or not -- or not Face -- yeah, Face -- yeah, I think it was Face -- I'm not sure what they were streaming on. I think it was a Facebook platform. But like there was then trying to, you know, real time, you know, contact with them, trying to determine -- and I don't know if, you know, again, who the subject is -- or, no, that was -- trying to -- if they were trying to stop it or not. I think we wanted to keep going because we needed some value there. But anyway, there was probably some really specific situations, but I think we'd have to get more detail on that.

Q Of course. And are you aware of FBI employees notifying Twitter or any other social media company of accounts which may potentially violate the company's terms of service?

A I don't know specifically. I don't have any details, but I couldn't say that I've been involved in that.

Q And then kind of summarizing the previous questions I just asked, like how normally would the FBI communicate concerns to social media companies about any of these reported instances?

A I mean, we regularly talk. Again, my area has always been in threats, so previously counterterrorism, here violent crime and threats, so those are the areas that I'm familiar with. And so they're not -- you know, not infrequent to talk about, you know, please report threatening aspects if individuals are, you know, conducting this activity online that reaches this, like let us know, let law enforcement know. So it's not --

Q So was it communicated via email or calls or regularly scheduled conferences?

A I've seen a lot of things, you know, whether it's private sector engagements, personal meetings, I'm sure there's -- there could be emails discussion back and forth, and calls, any of the above.

Q And then, in your experience, when the FBI works with a private sector partner, has it ever sought to educate them generally on what partners should be worried about or what they should be looking for?

A Well, so, in the cyber arena, yes, we often tell them about threats that they're -- that they need to be concerned about. I mean, that's one of the things that we do, educate the private sector, yes, these are certain vectors that you might be vulnerable to some type of attacks. These are -- these -- you know, these are the threats we're seeing. So, yeah, that information on potential threats to them is pretty common.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] We can go off the record for now. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[2:13 p.m.]

[redacted] It is 2:13. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to start out with addressing something that came up in the prior hour. You were asked about the Attorney General's testimony, and it was characterized that the -- or it was said that the AG said that the National School Board Association letter was what prompted the October 4th memo.

You had no involvement in preparing the Attorney General for his testimony?

A No, ma'am.

Q And I want to just introduce pages 45 to 46. It's from the official transcript of the October 21, 2021, House Judiciary Committee hearing.

A Okay.

[redacted] That's going to be exhibit No. 10.

[Langan Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I'm guessing you have not seen this before, so I'll give you a minute to review it quickly.

And we've highlighted the relevant section, and this is obviously not highlighted in the official version. We did that.

A Yes.

Q At the bottom of page 45, the Attorney General was asked: When did you first review the data showing this so-called disturbing uptick?

His response was: So I read the letter, and we have been seeing over time threats.

Right? Is that correct? Did I read that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So he specifically said: We've been seeing it over time.

Right?

A Yes, ma'am. That's what he said.

Q And then on the next page, he was asked: Is there some study, some effort, some investigation someone did that said there's been a disturbing uptick? Or did you just take the words of the National School Boards Association?

And his response was: When the National School Boards Association, which represents thousands of school boards and school board members, says that there are these kind of threats, when we read in the newspapers reports of threats of violence, and when that is in the context of threats of violence against all -- and then he was cut off, right?

A Yes.

Q So I read that correctly?

A Yes, ma'am. Yes, ma'am.

Q So he actually never said that the School Boards Association memo was the sole impetus for the October 4th memo?

A Yeah. I don't -- I don't see that here.

Q In this specific section?

A In this specific, yes, ma'am.

Q And then, actually, I also want to introduce -- are you familiar with the Attorney General's testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee on October 27, 2021?

A No, ma'am.

[redacted] Okay. I'm going to introduce an excerpt from that for the record. This will be exhibit No. 11.

[Langan Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And this -- there's actually not an official hearing transcript out yet, so this is the Proquest version.

A Okay.

Q So, on the last page of this printed excerpt, the -- which is page 21 of the transcript, as formatted by Proquest -- again, it's not an official record, so it is what it is.

But in the third paragraph, the Attorney General was asked: The National School Boards Association, as has been mentioned before, has since withdrawn that memo, and yet you said that was the factual predicate. Given that that was the factual predicate and that it's rescinded the memo, saying there was no justification for some of the language that they used in that letter, will you rescind your memo?

And the Attorney General responded: Senator, I -- best of my recollection, I said that the impetus for the letter -- for my memorandum was that letter and also reports of this kind of activity.

Right?

A Yes.

Q So he pretty clearly said that it was broader than just the letter. And then he continues on: I said, again, at the time that there were news reports that had been published, and I think that some of the other Senators here have described some of those news report. And we've certainly seen, subsequently, more news reports and more statements by board members of threats to kill them.

Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So the Attorney General -- it's not actually an accurate characterization to say that the Attorney General claimed that the School Boards letter, the National School Boards Association letter was the sole impetus because he actually said it was not the sole impetus, correct?

A Yes. He said here that he received information from other sources.

Q I want to take a look at the -- I think it was introduced as exhibit 9, the Montana letter. So there was a comment -- sorry.

A No, that's okay.

Q I'm drowning you in paper. I apologize.

So, in the prior hour, the comment was made that this was listing statutes to go after parents at school board meetings. And I'm sorry to make you go through this exercise again.

A Yeah.

Q But, once again, does the letter itself, not the statutes but the cover letter, does it say anything about parents or school board meetings?

A I don't see it.

Q And it actually says in the first sentence, "against our educational community," right?

A Yes.

Q So, in other words, it could be teachers. It could be staff. It could be -- the educational community is broader than just school board members, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, again, this says nothing about meetings of school boards either?

A No, I did not see anything like that. Yep.

Q And then the very last line of that first paragraph, it says: The Attorney General's directive does not seek to hinder anyone's free speech rights under the First Amendment.

Right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So that's clear on the very first paragraph of this letter?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q And then the last paragraph of this letter, the first and second sentence read: The State of Montana has similar criminal laws against threatening and committing acts of violence against members of our educational community. It may be that an investigation and prosecution under those statutes more appropriately addresses individual cases.

Right?

A Uh-huh.

Q So there was no implication here that -- I'm sorry, could you say it for the record?

A Yes, it's stated here. Yes.

Q And so there's no implication here that the U.S. Attorney's Office was usurping any jurisdiction of the State or locals. In fact, they actually said it may be the case that it's more appropriate for a State or local to take the lead here, correct?

A Yes.

Q There was a comment made earlier, there's a reference to the term "operationalizing." Is that a term that has meaning to you? What does that mean to you?

A Yeah. I guess -- yeah. It has -- operationalizing, putting into effect, I think, to act on.

Q Is it an official FBI term?

A I don't think so.

Q Okay.

A That would be my interpretation of operationalization. Yeah.

Q So it's not like there's a policy that says this is when we operationalize something?

A No. I never -- I don't recall that.

Q Okay. There was some discussion earlier about why didn't the Attorney General ask the FBI before releasing the memo or something like that.

A Uh-huh.

Q The memo, you said that the effect of it on the FBI was to lead you to assess the threat, right?

A Yes, the effect of the memo. If it had -- yes, was for to us then identify and try to scope out the threat.

Q Can you talk a little bit about scoping, why that's important for the FBI, how you do it, kind of just talk broadly about scoping?

A Okay. Okay, sure. So, first off, I guess what is the extent of the threat? One, is this a threat that is current? Is it relevant? Is it a Federal violation, as we talked before? Who are the individuals possibly being threatened? What are the means that they're using to threaten individuals? How often is it happening? Is this part of an ongoing trend? Many things that go into the scoping. Basically getting a good full understanding of the threat.

We need that for then how would we engage in this then. So, if from part of the scoping we deem that a threat is a threat that the Federal Government, the FBI should be engaged in, then -- then we can start -- then we've got to that point. Let's start to -- what is our strategy then going to be to mitigate this?

Can we do this with current resources? Is this isolated? Is this a threat that transcends 56 field offices? How do we need to communicate and message towards engaging with this threat?

There's, you know -- so it is the foundation for us to then go to the next step on how we may come up with a strategy or engage in mitigating it.

Q And it can also be the foundation for determining that there's no need to take the next step, right?

A Yes, yes.

Q So it can be the process by which you determine there's nothing further to do here or there's no -- you know, there's no --

A Yes, yes. Yes, exactly. Yeah.

Q Can the FBI investigate racially motivated extremism?

A Yes.

Q Is that part of your mandate?

A It's -- yes, of course, it's part of the FBI --

Q Under the counterterrorism mission?

A Under the counterterrorism, yes. And also, there's -- racially motivated violent extremism is under a domestic terrorism classification. There's also racially motivated hate crimes that falls under Criminal Investigative Division. So there is kind of a -- it gets specific on a little bit past ideology. Is this individual -- and, again, if you care enough, I'll go into it then.

So, for hate crimes, it may be targeted on this specific individual because of their race, race or ethnicity or religion. And, on the DT side, if it's part of an ideology that's driven that would like -- that could affect trying to impact the race as a whole or an ideology as a whole, that eradication of a certain race or hurting a certain race as part of that drive.

So, again, two kind of circles of areas where they cross.

Q Okay. But if you get a report of a racially motivated violent extremist --

A Yes.

Q -- making a specific threat, that would be something that the FBI could investigate?

A Yeah, most likely. So, again, it would be a racially motivated threat, right. I mean, if the -- an individual making threats that are racially motivated that may be part of an ideology or hatred, yes.

Q Okay. I want to just take another quick look at the National School Boards Association letter. I know you got a lot of questions on it --

A Okay.

Q -- in the last time. And, actually, I want to look at it with the -- in conjunction with the AG's memo.

There's a reference made that I think was maybe a little confusing, so I just want to clarify the record to the fact that the NSBA letter references the Patriot Act.

A Okay.

Q The Patriot Act is not referenced in the Attorney General's memo, right?

A I did not, no. No, it's not there. I did not see that in there.

Q And it wasn't in the October 20th email that you sent, right?

A No.

Q Okay. So NSBA is an outside independent group, not a governmental organization, right?

A To my knowledge, yes.

Q And you said in the earlier hour that a group like this might not actually understand the law, right?

A Yes.

Q Is it common for you to get complaints or tips, things like that called in from members of the public who think that a certain law applies, and they're not lawyers or they're not versed in it --

A Yes.

Q -- and so there's no action -- they're not right. They're not correct on that, but there might still be something of concern in what they've reported. Is that a fair --

A Yes.

Q Does that happen?

A Yes, that's fair.

Q So they don't always know the law?

A No, no.

Q And would you say it's kind of your job and DOJ's job to know the law?

A Yes. And people can provide us information and from whatever mechanism or from whatever, you know, they're experiencing. And then that is for us to determine the most appropriate way to determine whether or not there's a nexus and the process we've talked about at length here, yes.

Q Sorry. Hold on one second, because I have too much paper on my desk.

All right. So we talked about -- the Montana letter specifically referenced protection of the First Amendment. The Attorney General's memo references the First Amendment too, right?

A Yes.

Q Not in so many words, but it says --

A Yes.

Q -- speech is protected?

A Yes.

Q The March 1st letter from the Acting Director of the -- of Congressional Affairs, Acting Assistant Director for Congressional Affairs, which is paragraph -- I'm sorry, which is exhibit 5, maybe.

A Okay.

Q Seven, sorry. The third paragraph on the first page says that: The FBI cannot and does not investigate groups or individuals based solely on the exercise of First Amendment activity. Consistent with our mission, the FBI holds sacred the rights of individuals to peacefully exercise their First Amendment freedoms.

Do you agree with that statement?

A Absolutely.

Q And can you say anything further about that?

A It's part of the initial test on opening an assessment or investigation: Is this activity First Amendment activity?

Q And can you describe any type of training that people are -- that agents are given as to how to recognize First Amendment activity?

A I mean, for one, starting off in basic legal instruction with -- at Quantico when they're being trained to be agents go through hours and hours of discussion about what is constitutionally allowed, which is freedom of speech and actions that -- obviously, that don't hurt others, and how individuals are free to exercise their rights. So it's extensively discussed.

Q Okay.

A It is one of the standards by which we conduct ourselves.

Q And so, if it ever -- if you, in your role now or in any of your earlier leadership roles, you know, if you became aware of an investigation that was proceeding or even, you know, something proceeding past the assessment stage, I guess, that impact that was purely First Amendment, you would have stepped in?

A Yes.

Q You wouldn't have let it get any further?

A No.

Q During the assessment stage, is one of the things that is assessed is whether this -- the described activity is purely First Amendment in nature?

A Always. It's always, in any matter.

Q So it's actually part of the purpose of the assessment?

A It's part of -- even -- it might not even make it to an assessment --

Q Okay.

A -- if someone is conducting First Amendment activity. So let's give an -- somebody is just online -- and we get complaints like this all the time. This person is online saying how much they hate this and how much they're against this. That happens all the time.

And some of it gets -- obviously, some of it gets very, very -- very hateful, especially directed at people. But, if it does not involve threats or acts of violence, no, it's not going to make it to an assessment.

Q And that's a hard line?

A Yes.

Q And I'm sorry; I know I'm jumping around.

A No, that's all right.

Q You mentioned that you saw this letter, that you probably didn't open the attachment if it was attached. You're not sure if it was attached.

A I think it was attached. It was a long time ago. I know there was an attachment on that email. I think it was that letter.

Q But you don't think you opened it and --

A I don't think so. I may have from -- I don't think I did, because, again, when I'm getting information like that, I'm like: Hey, what do we have? I don't need to go through and read a bunch of attachments. You know, basically get to me what -- the BLUF. What do we got?

Q Okay. And my -- but you never actually had any communications with the National School Boards --

A No.

Q -- Association directly?

A No.

Q Do you know an individual named Chip Slaven?

A No.

Q You've never heard of that person in your life?

A No.

Q What about Viola Garcia?

A No.

Q Okay. So you never had any conversations with any of them?

A Not to my knowledge. Again, 25 years is a long time. I don't know if I -- but I don't --

Q About this issue.

A No, no.

Q We talked earlier. You've worked as a line agent, as a supervisor of agents, a direct supervisor, and now you're in leadership.

A Yes.

Q Can you talk a little bit about, from your experience, do line agents have visibility into all the layers of the decisionmaking process?

A Not necessarily. It really depends on the decision that's being made.

Q Okay. So, if, for example, headquarters puts in place a policy regarding, I don't know, how a particular spate of investigations should be handled, line agents might not know all the reasons that that policy was put into place, right?

A They may not know all the reasons, but hopefully if it involves an investigation that they would know the policy, yes.

Q They would know the policy --

A Yes, yes.

Q -- but they might not have insight into all the factors?

A No.

Q Okay.

A That's reasonable.

Q Okay. Do line agents necessarily have visibility into decisions made by headquarters about, for example, resources?

A No.

Q Okay. So that's something that maybe in particular instances could filter down, but in general that's not regularly --

A Very seldom.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with calls to defund the FBI?

A I've heard -- I've heard in I think open-source information.

Q What's your opinion of those assertions?

A I think they're hurtful to the country.

Q Do you think that they could impact the morale of FBI agents and supervisors and leadership even?

A Yes.

Q Do you think they could contribute to potentially undermining the legitimacy of the FBI in the public eye?

A Potentially.

[redacted] I'm sorry, one second. I think we're done.

[redacted] Can I state for the record the witness in a prior answer referred to BLUF, B-L-U-F, which is an FBI term of art.

BY [redacted]

Q Could you explain? I'm sorry. That is something. Could you explain what a BLUF is?

A Yeah, bottom line up front. So just -- I mean, usually I'm getting an executive summary. Tell me exactly what's going on, you know, because, like I said, we're on -- especially counterterrorism, dealing with nonspecific threats.

So I'm usually not necessarily even reading the full chain of an email because it's coming up -- you know, it might be forwarded to multiple people.

Q Right.

A And so, if someone sends me, it's going to be another senior leader, and it's going to, you know, hey, what are we looking at here?

Q Got it.

A You know. So is this something I need to engage in right now? Do you need advice? Are you just giving me this for awareness? What is this?

And so for, like on this example, you know, okay, what do we got here? Is there some specific threat that we're dealing with or something that we need to address now? And that's where we conclude like, okay, it's something coming from DOJ regarding this. All right. Let's talk about this on Monday, and we can start to unpack this.

Q Okay. Thank you for that. That's a helpful clarification. I think -- sorry. This might be a question that you won't be able to answer but take back.

A Okay.

Q There's the reference to the 25 Guardians that have been discussed kind of extensively here.

A Yes.

Q Those are available for committee staff to review in camera, right?

A I would refer to OCA and OGC on that.

Q So, presumably, the staff could go and look at those and see if any of them involve school board meetings, right, if they're available in camera?

A I would -- I will pass the request on to Congressional Affairs.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you. We don't have any further -- sorry. I think we're good. Thank you.

We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 2:34 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION AND LIMITED GOVERNMENT:

[redacted] MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY INTERN

[redacted] MINORITY PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

For REPRESENTATIVE GAETZ:

[redacted] General Counsel

For the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION:

MEGAN L. GREER, ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL, OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

TASHA V. GIBBS, ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL, OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] Good morning.

This is a transcribed interview of Jennifer Leigh Moore with the FBI. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI and particularly the way the Bureau has retaliated against individuals that have had communications with Congress.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Ms. Moore. Jennifer Leigh Moore.

[redacted] And, agency counsel, please state your name for the record.

Ms. Greer. Megan Greer, from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

Ms. Gibbs. Tasha Gibbs, from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

[redacted] And before we get started, you understand, Ms. Moore, the FBI counsel represents the FBI, not you individually?

Ms. Moore. I do.

[redacted] And you understand that?

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir.

[redacted] All right.

On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman appreciates your willingness to appear here voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] I'm with Mr. Jordan's staff on the House Judiciary Committee. I'll now have the staffers in the room identify themselves.

[redacted] [redacted] with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] I am [redacted] House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with the committee's minority staff.

[redacted] I'll go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions for the first hour. Then we'll turn it over to the Democrats.

You can take a break at any time, if you need to confer with counsel, you need a glass of water, for whatever reason. A lot of times, we do these breaks on the hour.

So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we'll do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you, and we'll try not to talk over one another. From time to time, we have to go back and repeat a question or repeat an answer.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible. If you have questions or don't understand what we're asking, just let us know.

The Federal Rules of Evidence don't apply, so if we're asking for something that maybe calls for hearsay, you can just go ahead and answer the question. Just tell us how you learned something, even if it's not directly.

As you know, you're required to answer questions truthfully when you appear before Congress and congressional staff. Do you understand that?

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir.

[redacted] 18 United States Code 1001, you know, covers false statements before Congress, and those that knowingly make false statements can be prosecuted. Do you understand that?

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make a note that our interview here today is confidential, so we'd ask that you not take information back to the Bureau and impart that to potentially future witnesses.

Ms. Moore. Okay.

[redacted] And I'd also say the same thing to FBI counsel. We've made an accommodation to allow witnesses to bring agency counsel, and so we ask agency counsel not to take a list of our questions and, you know, use them and use the content of the interviews to prep future witnesses.

Ms. Greer. We understand the committee's request, and certainly, as we discussed last time, not intending to provide a roadmap to any other witness. But, as agency counsel, I'm certainly involved in other witness preparation. So, with that caveat, just want to put that -- [redacted] Well, with witness preparations, I mean, if you're going to tell witnesses the types of questions that we've asked, I mean, I think we have an issue with that. So can you agree that you're not going to be doing that?

Ms. Greer. Again, I have no intention of providing a roadmap. I'm not aware that there are any other witnesses who are appearing on this same --

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. -- subject matter, unlike other ones.

[redacted] Right.

Ms. Greer. So I don't believe that this is an issue.

[redacted] Okay.

Along the same lines, we'll have some exhibits today and we'll mark them, and we ask that they just remain in the room, even if it's materials that you may have provided.

That's the end of my -- [redacted], do you have any welcoming remarks today?

[redacted] No. Just thank you to the witness for appearing here today.

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

[redacted] All right. We'll go on the clock. It's 10:08, and I'll turn it over to my colleague [redacted]

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning, Ms. Moore. Again, my name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I want to first talk to you about your professional background. When did you join the FBI?

A 1995.

Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

A Service to the country.

Q And can you walk us through the positions that you've held at the Bureau?

A Sure.

I entered on duty in 1995 as what was called at the time a support typist.

In 1996, I became a supervisor in the San Diego Field Office.

In 1998, I went to new agents training out of Quantico, Virginia.

In 1999, I reported to the Dallas Field Office.

In 1995, I was promoted to a supervisory special agent overseeing security and personal conduct within the Dallas Field Office.

In -- I have to get this right. What year did -- 1998. I'm so sorry. I'm trying to do this all here.

Q You take your time.

A Let me start over. So -- golly. I'm so sorry, y'all. I'm a little nervous this morning.

In 1998, I went to the Academy.

In '99, I graduated and went to the Dallas Field Office.

In 2005, I was promoted to a supervisory special agent within the field office.

In 2011, I was promoted to headquarters as a supervisory special agent in our Inspection Division.

In 2012, I went out as a supervisory senior resident agent in the Las Vegas Field Office, overseeing the territories of northern Nevada.

In 2016, I reported to the Louisville Field Office as an assistant special agent in charge over all criminal investigations for the State of Kentucky.

In 2017, I returned to FBI headquarters, where I served as a senior executive within our Security Division.

In 2019, I was promoted to the special agent in charge of the Washington Field Office.

And, in 2021, I returned to FBI headquarters as the assistant director over the Security Division.

And, in 2022, I was promoted to the executive assistant director of our Human Resources Branch, which oversees all of our Training Division, Security Division, and human resources functions, as well as data analytics.

Q And that's your current role at the FBI?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And can you briefly describe your roles and responsibilities in that position?

A As the executive assistant director, I oversee all of our Training Division, so that's cradle-to-grave training for all FBI employees and task force officers, detailees; our Human Resources Division, which is, again, cradle to grave, from hiring to retirements; and then our Security Division, which oversees security personnel, information, and facilities security for the Bureau; and then our data analytics, which is all of our statistical information regarding employees.

Q And who is your direct supervisor?

A My direct supervisor is Associate Deputy Director Brian Turner.

Q And how many people directly report to you?

A Directly report to me?

Q Uh-huh.

A Approximately 14.

Q And within the divisions that are underneath the Human Resources Branch, are there heads of those divisions?

A There are, yes. Each one has one.

Q Who are those?

A The assistant director of security is Douglas Beidler. The assistant director of Training Division is Timothy Dunham. The assistant director of human resources is Michael Schneider. And the section chief over data analytics is Tanya Tucker.

Q And can you kind of briefly describe the organizational chart within the Human Resources Branch?

A So, further than how it's divided out amongst each --

Q Who are your deputies?

A I don't have a deputy. So the deputies would fall under the assistant director. So --

Q Okay.

A -- the first line under the executive assistant director is an assistant director. And then each of them have respectively a number of deputy assistant directors that serve under that respective division.

Q Uh-huh.

A Under that, you would have your senior executive section chiefs. And then, below that, you would have assistant section chiefs, unit chiefs, program managers.

Q And how long have you worked out of headquarters?

A This term?

Q Uh-huh.

A Since I returned in 2021.

Q And you've had stints at headquarters before, correct?

A I've in total served 5-1/2 years at FBI headquarters. The rest of my 28-year career has been in the field office.

Q And how often do you interact with FBI Director Wray?

A Generally, we do an executive briefing every morning.

Q And what role do you play in the executive briefing each morning?

A If we have a significant event that we need to brief, we brief that. Otherwise, we're in intake mode for anything that might affect our respective oversight.

Q And what is an example of a significant event?

A If we had a mass shooting, if we had a breach of a security facility, any type of those things.

Q And how often do you interact with the Deputy Director at the FBI?

A On a daily basis.

Q And what's your formal training and work experience in the human resources arena?

A So the human resources arena -- prior to the Bureau, I was in business management. I worked for an international marketing company. And in that capacity, for human resources, I had training within the State of California on employment law, those type of things.

When I came into the Bureau, I was a support supervisor. I mentioned that early on.

Q Uh-huh.

A Again, we had ultimate trainings that are provided through our Human Resources Division. I can't remember all the names of the trainings, but we do all of that, from performance classification to discipline matters.

I spent 10 years in the Dallas Field Office serving as the chief security officer for that AOR. Again, there's a lot of training -- analytical risk management, security adjudicative guidelines, executive order training -- that we receive while in those capacities.

And then just outside trainings that we've had from different departments, things of that nature.

Q And during your tenure at the FBI, have you participated in reviews of your performance?

A Are you saying, like, do I have annual performance reviews?

Q Correct, ma'am.

A Yes, ma'am, I do. Yes.

Q And generally good markings on your --

A I have, yes, ma'am.

Q I want to go through the adjudicative process for misconduct investigations with you.

Can you briefly kind of give us an overview of the process that the Human Resources Branch uses to investigate and adjudicate misconduct or security risks or other suspensions?

A So the Human Resources Branch strictly investigates regarding to the national security guidelines and misconduct or security risks to national security information. So that's different -- I want to be very clear -- that's very different than just general misconduct of an employee.

Q Uh-huh.

A Like, an insubordination or something would fall under a different branch of our Inspection Division. So we are looking at the adjudicative guidelines in relation to possessing a clearance and handling national security information.

So, if we receive an allegation of misconduct, that goes into our Security Division Intake Unit.

Q Uh-huh.

A They get about 50 of those misconduct reports a week. And I wouldn't say -- "misconduct" isn't actually the right word, but security-type concerns a week. They review those to determine what they'll open.

It then can go into an investigative stage, where they do a full investigation to determine how that conduct relates in regards to handling national security information.

Ultimately, it goes into an adjudication section for a fresh set of eyes to review it. And they'll make a recommendation at some point for a suspension or revocation of a clearance, or it could be a disciplinary action, such as a letter.

Q Okay.

So, going to the very first step, the allegation comes in. How do these allegations come in?

A They can come in in any number of manners. It can come in through, like, an employee self-report. Like, "I had a law enforcement contact over the weekend" -- I didn't personally, but if you have a law enforcement contact, you can report that yourself through our security reporting system online.

Q Uh-huh.

A You can have a colleague report something that they feel is unusual or out of the norm. You can have a supervisor report it.

Or it could come in through -- we do participate in the Office of Director of National Intelligence mandate continuous vetting. That system can pop a security concern that will also come in through our Intake Unit.

Q And the Intake Unit, how many members are on that staff?

A The staff itself is probably, in Intake -- and I apologize, I don't know if this is the exact number. It's probably, in Intake -- we have about 15 in Intake.

Q Uh-huh. And you said you get about 50 allegations per week?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, on average, how many of those go into the investigative stage?

A I don't know that exact number. I can tell you that at any given time over the course of a year we run about 600 active investigations.

Q And who makes the decision on whether an allegation goes into the investigative stage?

A So the initial unit will make that decision if it meets the parameters of concern that rises to a level of an investigation.

Q And the parameters of concern, what are those?

A Those would be in the adjudicative guidelines.

Mr. Gaetz. Excuse me. Just so I understand that, when you say "the initial unit," is that a person? Is that a team of people?

Ms. Moore. It's a team of people. It's that initial 15-ish people.

Mr. Gaetz. So, just so that I understand it, it's not that each of the 15 has a batch of cases where they're able to make individual determinations. The whole team of 15 is evaluating the roughly 50 that show up every week, and then as a group that 15 make a decision?

Ms. Moore. No, that's not --

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Ms. Moore. They're each trained on the intake process. So they can each make a recommendation. The unit chief ultimately will decide if it's opened or not. But it goes through a process of review.

Mr. Gaetz. So describe that process.

Ms. Moore. So it -- I'm not sure I quite understand what you're asking.

So it comes in. So someone reads it and looks and makes an evaluation of if it rises to the level of, like, a security concern.

So let's say you report a law enforcement contact. "I had a law enforcement contact that I was speeding. I was going 15 miles per hour over the speed limit." We may say that's not enough to open.

So that unit has that training to determine like, hey, that really doesn't rise to national security concern as it relates to the 13 adjudicative guidelines. And so they'll make a non-recommendation, and it'll be signed off on.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. And what I'm trying to get a granular understanding of is, let's take that example you just laid out where someone may have been 15 miles an hour over the speed limit. Does one of the 15 people on this team assess that that doesn't rise to the level of needing further investigation, or does some amalgamation of the 15 underneath the unit chief make that decision?

Ms. Moore. It'll go through a series -- so the intake recommender will go through a program manager that will go to the unit chief.

Mr. Gaetz. So it's intake person, program manager, unit chief. And each of the 50 that come in per week follow that process?

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you. That's very helpful.

Chairman Jordan. Just to be clear, of those 15 people, only one makes the initial determination, and then it goes through the next two steps?

Ms. Moore. It'll go through all the steps regardless. So it's a "yes" or a "no." So the "yes" or "no" -- I recommend --

Chairman Jordan. I understand, but one person of the 15 is making a determination to send it to the next step?

Ms. Moore. I may not be explaining this very clearly.

So, of the group that works in the Intake Unit, it may come in to -- you may get one this morning, you may get one this morning, and you may get one. Each of you are trained to make that decision --

Chairman Jordan. Right.

Ms. Moore. -- and to move it forward. And so you'll make a recommendation.

So, yes, you're not making the decision; you're making the recommendation --

Chairman Jordan. Gotcha.

Ms. Moore. -- that will be decided upon.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And you spoke about a unit chief. Is there a unit chief over the Intake Unit?

A There is, yes.

Q And what's that person's name?

A It is an acting right now. So we are in the process of hiring someone to that unit. So I apologize, I don't know the acting's name right now. I can ask counsel.

Ms. Greer. I don't know.

Ms. Moore. Okay. I'm sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q That's okay.

And so, as the Intake Unit is evaluating and investigating the allegations to determine if it needs to go to the next step, what process do they use? Are there guidelines that they look at besides the 13 adjudicative guidelines?

A Well, Executive Order 12968 and the adjudicative guidelines are the roadmap to security clearance determinations. So that is what they use.

Q And then when you move to the investigative stage, what happens at that point?

A So the investigative stage, that's where we've decided to open a case. So -- and this is going to get a little confusing here, so I apologize.

But it can go from intake to where they're saying, hey, like, we think this is of such a concern that it needs to bounce over really quickly to the adjudicative stage to see if we need to do a suspension based on separating the risk from national security. So it can go over there.

At any point also during the investigative stage, if it is determined that there is such a risk to national security that a suspension may be necessary as by Executive Order 12968, they'll bounce it over to Adjudications. Adjudications will take a fresh set of eyes on it and make that recommendation or not.

But while it's in the investigative stage -- so the investigative stage is just that. It is to determine and investigate any and all allegations that are a threat to national security within that incident.

Q And so what are some examples of when it would go from the Intake Unit directly to the adjudicative stage?

A It could do that if you had, again, a threat to national security in a manner that you felt that the individual needed to be separated.

So let's say we get an allegation of someone who has a domestic violence incident over a weekend. They're arrested. They make remarks, a confession or something. That will bounce right over into our adjudicative unit, and they'll make a quick recommendation to separate the individual from national security.

Q And during the investigative stage, what is the office reviewing? What kind of documents or allegations?

A They're reviewing the whole person, so everything -- so we'll go back, if you come into a security investigation, and we'll open back up your initial background investigation to make sure -- and I'll give an example really quickly, if I can.

If you got stopped for a DUI and you were found guilty of an alcohol incident prior to entering on duty, there may have been a whole-person concept that said, "Hey, the time and distance from that incident is such that we feel like, hey, they've moved on, whole person. Otherwise, it's something you can overcome." And so you may be granted initially a security clearance.

You come into the organization. You have another alcohol incident, perhaps a second DUI, in this example. They will go back and reopen that and look at the whole person. So, now, then, I have a pattern of misconduct, and so we're going to investigate all of that again as the whole person.

We're going to review that initial investigation. We're going to review any other reports of misconduct, any other security concerns, any other security violations. We really look at everything that falls within the parameter of that investigation.

Q So, then, when you end the investigative stage and go to the adjudicative stage, what kind of steps are between them? How do they know that they need to go to the adjudicative stage?

A So it gets signed off on by a unit chief that oversees our investigative stage --

Q And do you know who that unit chief is?

A He just retired, so I'm sorry, we have another acting in there. We're rapidly trying to hire for that, though.

Q Uh-huh.

A So we have a unit chief. It will go into our adjudicative stage. And it's just -- it moves through the process.

So this group and this group are separate so that you have a clean set of eyes. We've found sometimes that if you are the same person and you're investigating something and you interview someone, you might become sympathetic to them or angry at them because you didn't like the way they answered your questions, and that's not fair to the person.

And so we always want it to be fair and impartial, so we stood up a separate Adjudications Unit to be fair and impartial. So it's a fresh set of eyes that's just looking at the facts of what the case found.

Q So, during the investigative stage, does the person who's, like, under scrutiny, I guess, do they get interviewed by the investigators?

A They will at some point during the investigative stage. As a general rule, that is yes.

Q And so, during the investigative stage, that's before they get the letter suspending their clearance; is that right?

A It depends.

Q Okay.

A Again, if it's such that we need to separate from the organization -- they may have been suspended before they get interviewed. That can happen.

Q Uh-huh.

A So it just depends upon what the nature -- each misconduct -- and by "misconduct," I'm talking security-type misconduct -- allegation stands on its own. So there is no, like, roadmap, cookie cutter. It just unfortunately doesn't work that way. So it doesn't seem as clean as it really is and when it's actually being actioned in that manner. So they may not get noticed and they may not interview until after they're suspended.

Q Okay.

And so, at the end of the investigative stage, the unit chief then makes a decision to suspend the clearance?

A No, no.

Q Okay. Tell us that process.

A So it goes over to the adjudication. The adjudication team will take a look at it. And there are seven processes, right?

So they're going to have the SSA that looks at it, then the program manager, then the unit chief, then an assistant section chief, then a section chief, then the deputy assistant director, then the assistant director. And, ultimately, the recommendation will come to me for final decision. So any of those come to me.

Q And so, at the end of the investigative stage, what is the unit chief signing off on?

A Moving it to the adjudicative side, saying, "Hey, I believe this investigation is complete. It looks like a complete folder. Good work. Good work" -- or, "Thorough work," I should say. And now it goes into -- that's all they're doing. They're just moving it to the adjudicative side. They make no recommendation.

Q Uh-huh. And so, then, at the end of the adjudicative process is when they're deciding whether or not --

A Correct.

Q -- to suspend the clearance?

A Yes.

Q And are you the ultimate decision-maker there?

A I am.

Q And, during any of the process, does your branch involve the employee's direct supervisor, interview the direct supervisor?

A It depends. It can depend upon what type of investigation that we're looking at.

Q And does the employee have a right to appeal the decision to suspend their clearance?

A Not to suspend the clearance.

Q Okay.

A They have a right after revocation. Then they could.

Q And when does the revocation happen?

A At the end of the investigation.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q When a clearance is suspended, they lose their pay, right?

A They can lose their pay, yes, sir. Depending upon what the suspension could be for, they may be allowed to take leave during that time.

Q But after they consume their leave, their pay is --

A Discontinued.

Q -- gone, right?

A Yes, sir.

BY [redacted]

Q So you have no right to appeal the decision to suspend the clearance until it has been revoked.

A That's correct.

Q And in the interim time period, as [redacted] just said, the employee could be without pay.

A That is correct. And that's the executive order. That's not an FBI policy.

BY [redacted]

Q So, in some cases, it's tantamount to them getting fired.

A It's not the same as being fired, because you still receive --

Q But you --

A -- benefits during that time. You don't lose your health insurance and that type of stuff.

Q -- you lose your paycheck --

A You do lose your --

Q -- right?

A -- paycheck, but you don't lose your benefits, no, sir.

Q Okay. But most people need their paycheck to pay their bills, correct?

A Most people do need their paycheck --

Q Okay. So --

A -- to pay their bills.

Q -- if their security clearance is -- if they lose their security clearance and they lose their paycheck, it's tantamount to getting fired, isn't it?

A It's different than being fired because when you're fired you do not receive benefits such as health and dental.

Q Okay. So they lose their -- they still have their dental insurance. Is that correct?

A And their health insurance --

Q Okay.

A -- yes, sir.

BY [redacted]

Q And during that time period when their clearance is suspended and they may be on indefinite suspension pending the investigation, does the employee that's affected, do they have to seek permission from the FBI to obtain outside employment?

A They do because they're still considered an employee because they're receiving benefits. And so, yes, ma'am, they do still have to file an outside employment form.

Q And can you describe that process to us?

A The outside employment form?

Q Yes, ma'am.

A It comes in through usually their supervisor or their field chief security officer will submit it if they happen to be in a suspended status. Otherwise, an employee, if they want outside employment, they can file that themselves.

And a decision -- usually their SAC has that decision. Office of Integrity and Compliance will weigh in to make sure that it's not in conflict to their normal duties.

BY [redacted]

Q And how helpful is the FBI with facilitating employment for those that find themselves on suspension?

A Do you mind expanding on that? Are you saying, do we help people find employment?

Q Well, how responsive are you if they seek permission for outside employment and they're suspended?

A I can't speak to the whole of the FBI, so I apologize, because I don't oversee each one of those that come through, because they come through a field office. But I would encourage our people to do that with posthaste, because it is --

Q And do you think that's happening?

A I think that --

Q Do you think the FBI is dragging their feet at all?

A Not intentionally.

Q And if a particular individual needs some FBI records to facilitate that employment, how helpful is the FBI with supplying those records?

A I'm guessing that we're gonna talk about an individual --

Q I'm just asking a question.

A As a general rule, they better be darn responsive.

Q Okay.

A I believe there's been a mistake that has been made. That has been remedied.

Q Right.

A Our employees -- and, fortunately, we don't have a great deal of employees that are suspended on a normal basis, and a lot of our employees don't come in contact with employees that have been suspended.

Q Okay.

A And they get nervous, and they start seeking advice or asking, and sometimes they ask the wrong person, and it delays a process.

Q Okay.

A But we've been very clear now on how that should be handled.

Q Okay. So if they needed their firearms training records --

A Oh, they'll get them timely now, I assure you.

Q "Now."

A Yes, sir.

Q So, in the past, that may not have been happening in a timely way?

A I am aware of one time that I was asked for that and it didn't happen timely --

Q Okay.

A -- in what I would consider timely, which would be posthaste, immediately.

Q Okay.

A That has been fixed.

Q And why does it have to be "posthaste, immediately"?

A Because I think it's not appropriate to delay. But I don't believe anybody does anything with malice in that sense.

Q Okay.

A I believe somebody just simply didn't know what to do. That's -- I will own that.

Q But if an --

A I will make sure they are trained and everybody is aware.

Q But, really, if an agent has their clearance suspended and they can't come to work and they can't earn a living, they may be in a position where they, without the FBI's indulgence, can't get a second job.

A I don't believe -- indulgence? I wouldn't say that. We have to review our --

Q But if the FBI is dragging their feet, you're going to have an agent that is out of luck.

A The Bureau should not be dragging their feet.

Q They can't get their money from the FBI and they can't get a second job. And don't you think that's a pretty serious situation?

A The FBI should not be dragging their feet.

Q Okay.

A They should be processing those requests for outside employment timely or records timely, absolutely.

Q And what remedy is there for that agent, other than just quitting?

A They can call someone else to ask for it, if they're not getting timely assistance from the individual.

I get emails from different people from time to time. I respond to every single request that anybody makes of me timely.

Q Okay. But you'd acknowledge it's a pretty big deal if somebody is suspended, they've lost their paycheck, they have a family, they need to pay their mortgage, they need to pay, you know, the other necessities in life, and they can't get the FBI to engage with them on okaying the outside employment? You'd acknowledge that's a pretty serious situation, correct?

A I will acknowledge that the FBI should timely respond to all employees regardless of what status they are in at the time.

Q Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. During your testimony, you said that in the one case you were aware of firearms records not being provided in a timely manner, you found that unacceptable, right?

Ms. Moore. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. And you also testified that you didn't believe that what animated that delay was malice, right?

Ms. Moore. Agreed.

Mr. Gaetz. And what's your basis for the testimony that malice was not a feature of that delay?

Ms. Moore. Because I inquired as to why it happened.

Mr. Gaetz. And to whom did you make that inquiry?

Ms. Moore. All the way down the chain to the person who denied it -- or delayed it, I should say, who didn't know what to do with it initially.

Mr. Gaetz. All right. List the people you inquired to that constituted your basis for the conclusion that malice was not a feature of this delay.

Ms. Moore. The assistant director of Security Division, the assistant director of Training Division, and our counsel.

Mr. Gaetz. Can you provide their names for me?

Ms. Moore. Assistant Director Doug Beidler, Assistant Director Tim Dunham, and then my counsel, Tasha Gibbs --

Mr. Gaetz. And -- and --

Ms. Moore. -- and my executive assistant --

Mr. Gaetz. -- what was the nature of the inquiry to those individuals?

Ms. Moore. And I have an executive assistant, who is Rebecca Vassilakos, and a special assistant, Glenn Booth. All were asked to find out immediately what happened in the situation.

Mr. Gaetz. And help me understand the nature of the inquiry that you made to these people to arrive at the conclusion that malice wasn't a feature of this delay.

Ms. Moore. I said, "Would somebody please help me understand what happened in this situation? And I would like a written timeline of what occurred." And they provided that to me with the reasoning.

Mr. Gaetz. The reasoning was in writing as well?

Ms. Moore. They sent me -- I was briefed on it verbally, and I received a written timeline of it. So I can't tell you exactly what the written timeline had. I don't want to confuse the two, because I know you're trying to nail me down here.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm not trying to --

Ms. Moore. I just -- and I don't want to tell you wrong, by any stretch.

But I can tell you that what I was told was that the unit chief received the request and was unfamiliar on how to deal with a suspended individual. So they reached out to our Records Division, and the Records Division gave them the generic information that, when somebody who's no longer an employee wants their records, they have to file FOIA, which is inappropriate.

The individual was still -- it was a mistake. It was an honest mistake under communication between people not understanding what was happening and what the employee status was, genuinely. It was bad information.

Mr. Gaetz. Shouldn't the unit chief have had training to not have us in this position?

Ms. Moore. I have been in this position now for over a year. I've never had someone ask for their training records in that capacity. It would be ideal if they had known this. Again, we have reached down and I'm trying to make sure that all of our supervisors know how to handle this in the future. I don't want this to happen again.

Mr. Gaetz. So you've updated the training that they receive to mitigate --

Ms. Moore. Their training -- it's not training like you would do records. This would be like, hey, when someone comes on board, make sure they're aware of this.

It's very difficult -- we have very few people suspended. And our employees, when you're talking -- you have 37,000, almost 38,000 employees. They don't often come in contact with suspended employees. And people want to get it right. And so he asked for assistance on how to do it and got wrong advice.

Chairman Jordan. What was the timeframe for when this person asked for the records of this training and was denied and then until you got it and realized there was a problem and are now working to correct that? What was that timeframe?

Ms. Moore. It was resolved before it ever got to me. So -- let me ask my counsel a fast question. I don't --

Mr. Gaetz. Do you want to go off the record?

Ms. Greer. We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Let's go back on the record.

Ms. Moore. So, to the best of my recollection, it came in -- about mid-February was the request to the unit chief, and it took 6 weeks for him to get his records, to the best of my recollection. It was either 4 or 6 weeks. Too long.

BY [redacted]

Q So, after the decision to suspend a clearance is made, I assume that the letter to the employee is drafted. And then who gives that letter to the employee saying that their clearance has been suspended by you?

A Usually it is presented by the field office where the employee was working at the time of the suspension.

That is up to a field office's head, how they want to do that. Sometimes the special agent in charge will present it. Sometimes an assistant special agent in charge will present it. Sometimes the chief security officer will present it. That's up to the individual field office, how they want to execute the letter in delivery.

Q So you give the letter to the SAC of the field office. Is that correct?

A That is correct, yes.

Q And then they decide who delivers the letter to --

A Yes.

Q Okay. Because I'll represent to you that we've heard from multiple individuals that when they have received their letter revoking their security clearance or suspending their security clearance and the proposal for indefinite suspension, the person who is in the room with them has not identified themselves or the field office they are coming from.

Have you heard of that?

A I have never heard of that.

Q So it would be up to the SAC of the field office involved who's delivering those letters, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so, when the employee receives notice that their clearance is suspended, does an interview take place at that time?

A No, it does not.

Q Are they provided any information for why their clearance has been suspended at that point in time?

A They get a letter to the suspension.

Q Uh-huh. And so, when they get the letter, the suspension of -- their indefinite suspension? Is that what you're talking about?

A It's just a suspension. I don't know, by "indefinite" -- it's a suspension until a decision is made regarding the security action.

Q And so the underlying documents, are they attached to that letter? Or how do they get the information with regard --

A At the time of the suspension, they're not entitled to any additional documents. They're entitled to a letter that advises them that they've been suspended.

Q And so when are they entitled to the information?

A After the revocation of the clearance decision.

Q And how long does that take?

A It depends. Each case is independent and can take a limited amount of time or a longer amount of time. It depends upon the complexity of the case.

Q So, during that period of time when the person has been -- their clearance has been suspended, they're on indefinite suspension until you decide whether or not to revoke their clearance, they have no idea why their clearance has been suspended?

A They have generally the guideline, what they were suspended under, but, no, ma'am, they're not entitled to anything additional.

Q And so why are they not entitled? Is that in the executive order? In the guidelines?

A It is. It's Executive Order 12968.

Q So it's your understanding that all other agencies follow that?

A Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Let me ask you a hypothetical. How would you prevent -- let's say there's two agents that don't like one another.

A Okay.

Q And one agent is a Republican and the other is a Democrat. And the Democrat decides that they're gonna get this Republican and they're gonna provide false information through this chain that the Republican is busy talking to Congress as a whistleblower, or maybe talking to the news media. Because that's a basis for suspending a security clearance, correct?

A Not talking to Congress, no, sir.

Q Talking to the news media?

A Can be.

Q It can be. So what happens in this hypothetical if a Democrat, you know, FBI official just wants to get somebody -- just wants to get somebody that he doesn't like, he or she doesn't like, and falsely sends through information that this person that they don't like is talking to the news media?

A So I wouldn't know if they were Democrat or Republican. We refer to that as a poison pen, if you're saying that it's fraudulent information, that they just made it up.

Q Right.

A Unfortunately, we take the information, we would see if there's any validity to it, and depending upon what we can validate, then a decision will be made or a recommendation will be made to suspend/not suspend, and then --

Q But it's possible that person could be suspended if somebody says, "Hey, he gave the Catholic memo out to a reporter."

A Again, each situation would stand on its own. It couldn't just be like --

Q But is it possible that person could, in fact, be suspended?

A For a poison pen? It is possible. But we absolutely do a thorough and complete investigation based off the --

Q Right.

A -- 13 adjudicative guidelines.

Q And the suspended person might come back and say, "I didn't do it. Why am I being suspended?" And that person has no recourse. Is that correct?

A They will have their opportunity to be interviewed during the investigative phase, yes, sir.

Q They'll have an opportunity to be interviewed, but they don't have an opportunity for anything else. They don't get any paperwork. They don't get to determine, like, what evidence was supplied. Correct?

A If a determination is made to revocate the clearance --

Q Yes.

A -- then they'll get all of that.

Q Right. But during the initial time period, before the clearance is revoked, when they're out of money and they're not getting their paycheck, they have no opportunity to get any of that information. Is that correct?

A By Executive Order 12968, you are correct.

Q Okay.

Ms. Greer. Can we take 1 minute?

[redacted] Okay. Let's go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[10:43 a.m.]

[redacted] Ready to go back on the record?

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir.

[redacted] All right.

Ms. Moore. So I want to emphasize that when we get an allegation like that, we do other steps to validate. We don't just take one single word. We will look at systems; we will look at records.

But we take other investigative steps. It's not something that just flies to a suspension of a clearance. We are very thoughtful in the process and judicious in what we do. Again --

BY [redacted]

Q So you have a great process? A great process that has super, great, great integrity?

A We have a very strong process, yes, sir.

Q And you're proud of the process?

A Yes, sir, I am. We are audited by GAO, by the inspector general, by the Office of Director of National Intelligence, and our own Inspection Division, which is a different process than our own. So we take our process very, very seriously.

And right now, like, we have 32 people suspended in the last fiscal year. It's not like we're just willy-nilly out there taking anybody's allegations.

Q All right. All the people talking to us, I guess.

[redacted]?

BY [redacted]

Q I want to talk to you about specific adjudications now. And I know we've kind of been referring to him already, but are you familiar with a special agent Stephen Friend?

A I am, but I'm not able to talk about his suspension because it's ongoing. The adjudication has not occurred.

Q So, even though he's resigned, the adjudication is still ongoing?

A That's correct. Security clearances do not -- the investigation into someone's ability to maintain a security clearance doesn't end just on the day of their employment. We have an obligation to the intelligence community, if we issued a clearance, to make a determination on the eligibility of that.

[redacted] So what's the -- sorry to interrupt here, but what's the basis that you can't talk about his case?

Ms. Moore. His adjudication has not occurred.

[redacted] Okay. I mean, is this a Privacy Act-based --

Ms. Greer. I can speak. We have several individuals whose adjudication is not complete. We have some individuals who have ongoing parallel proceedings, like, with the MSPB later this week.

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. And the last thing the FBI wants to do is to say something that interrupts that process, which those individuals --

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. -- are entitled to have play out in the normal order. She's happy to discuss final decisions that have been made, and, if these other adjudications are finalized --

[redacted] All right.

Ms. Greer. -- happy to revisit and see if there's additional information we can provide.

[redacted] Okay. I mean, that's not going to -- I don't think that's going to work for us.

So we're going to ask you questions. If you refuse to answer, it's very likely the chairman, who's sitting right here, is going to be required to issue a subpoena to bring you back.

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. I would say, we're here and happy to provide as much information as we can today. We've certainly flagged that individual security clearance decisions at all are not something that we typically discuss --

[redacted] Well, yeah --

Ms. Greer. -- and we're here to --

[redacted] -- you told us that you need a chairman's letter, and we got something better than a chairman's letter; we have the chairman.

Ms. Gibbs. I think we all have the same goal, in ensuring that these individuals are afforded a fair and impartial process. And we don't want to say anything today that could impede their ability to get a fair and --

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Gibbs. -- impartial process before other administrative forums.

[redacted] Okay. I mean, Steve Friend has already had such a terrible experience that he's left the FBI. So, you know, I'm quite sure this investigation and determination will be going on for quite some time as a way to circumvent answering our questions.

Mr. Gaetz. Does the FBI ever leave HR matters or security clearance matters pending as a mechanism of punishment?

Ms. Moore. No.

Mr. Gaetz. But you could see why the lack of an adjudication over an extended period of time would hang over someone's life in very significant ways, right?

Ms. Moore. The FBI does not use a suspension as a punitive measure ever.

Mr. Gaetz. What's your basis for that testimony?

Ms. Moore. I'm the executive assistant director that's charged for the organization of signing those. We absolutely do not use a suspension of a security clearance in a punitive manner ever against an employee. It is only utilized in national security matters.

Mr. Gaetz. So your testimony there was really precise, that the suspension itself was never punitive. But what about the delay in the adjudicative and investigative process? Is that a punishment unto itself?

Ms. Moore. It's not a punishment. It's not intended to be punitive. They do a thorough and complete investigation in as timely a manner as possible.

Chairman Jordan. When did you sign the suspension for Mr. Friend?

Ms. Moore. I'm sorry, I don't remember the exact date.

Chairman Jordan. September 2022?

Ms. Moore. Okay. You have it. I'm sorry. Yes, sir, I will concede that it was September of 2022.

Chairman Jordan. So it's been 7 months, and Mr. Friend has terminated his employment, left the FBI, and you still don't have an answer?

Ms. Moore. Not at this time, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Is that normal, a 7-month timeframe?

Ms. Moore. It depends upon -- each case stands on their own, depending upon what has to be investigated.

Chairman Jordan. But you've handled these cases before. Is 7 months normal, and is 7 months normal for someone who's already left the FBI?

Ms. Moore. If they've left the FBI or not is not relevant in --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Ms. Moore. -- that case. It depends upon each case and the specificity of what has to be investigated.

Chairman Jordan. Can you give me some examples? Can you give me cases that went longer than 7 months?

Ms. Moore. We have had cases that have court proceedings that attach to them that have taken longer. It does happen, yes, sir. We are driving to get those dates down --

Chairman Jordan. No, I understand, and I appreciate your commitment to do that. But you say it does happen. Does it happen frequently? Does it happen rarely?

We're just kind of -- we're trying to get an idea of what's the normal, if you can say that, what's the normal process here.

Ms. Moore. It takes months to do a thorough investigation.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember what field office Special Agent Friend worked out of?

A Special Agent Friend worked out of our Jacksonville Field Office.

Q And were you involved in his indefinite suspension?

A I signed the paperwork, yes, ma'am.

Q And are you aware that Mr. Friend had received performance awards throughout his career at the FBI for various tasks as well as for his overall performance?

Ms. Moore. I'm not --

Ms. Greer. We're not going to get into the specifics of information that she learned regarding his security clearance.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you aware that Mr. Friend recently resigned from the FBI so he could earn an income to support his family?

A I'm aware that Mr. Friend recently resigned. Y'all told me that in the course of this room.

Q And do you remember the circumstances surrounding Mr. Friend's suspension of his clearance?

A I won't discuss his suspension at this time until the adjudication is complete, but I'm happy at that time to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q And besides signing the letter that suspended Mr. Friend's clearance, what was your involvement in his suspension?

A I'm the security program manager. I make the final decision in suspension matters for the organization.

Q Of just security clearances?

A Of security clearances.

Q Okay.

I'd like to enter a September 16, 2022, letter from Ms. Moore to Mr. Friend as exhibit No. 1.

[Moore Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And do you remember signing this letter?

A That is my signature.

Q And was this given to Mr. Friend's special agent in charge to deliver to him?

A As course of process, I sign it; it goes back over to Security Division, and they send it out. They would've sent it to the Jacksonville Field Office.

Q And so it would've gone to Special Agent in Charge Sherri Onks?

A It would've gone to the Jacksonville Field Office. Whether it went in through the chief security officer or directly to the special agent in charge, I can't speak to it. But that would generally be the process, either to the SAC or the chief security officer, who would take it to the SAC.

Q Did you get any readout after Mr. Friend was given the letter about who gave him the letter?

A No.

Q And, in the letter, you stated in the first paragraph there: "The suspension of your security clearance is based on security concerns related to Adjudicative Guideline E - Personal Conduct and Adjudicative Guideline K - Handling Protected Information."

What information did you have to support these security concerns?

A I cannot discuss the ongoing investigation into Mr. Friend's suspension. I'm sorry.

Q Has he been given that information?

A I cannot discuss the ongoing investigation into the suspension of Mr. Friend's security clearance. At the time that it is finally adjudicated, I will be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q So you can't even tell us -- it's been 7 months since this letter was given to Mr. Friend. You can't even tell us if he was given the information of the allegations against him that suspended his clearance?

A I cannot discuss the ongoing investigation into Mr. Friend's security clearance. At the time it is finally adjudicated I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q And I'm just going to continue to ask my questions. I have a feeling you're gonna say the same answer.

But what materials did the Human Resources Branch rely upon as the basis for suspending Mr. Friend's clearance?

A At this time, I cannot discuss an ongoing security investigation. I will be happy to come back at the conclusion and answer any and all questions.

Q Were witnesses interviewed?

A I cannot answer any questions in regards to the suspended security clearance of Mr. Friend. At the end of the investigation I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q Was Mr. Friend interviewed?

A At the conclusion of the investigation of Mr. Friend's security clearance I will be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q And how did the allegations against Mr. Friend come into your office?

A At this time, I cannot answer any questions regarding an ongoing security investigation. At the conclusion of the investigation I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q In the second paragraph, you stated: "On August 24, 2022, you advised your supervisors of your objection to participating in the court-authorized search and arrest of a criminal subject. During your communications, you espoused beliefs which demonstrate questionable judgment."

How do you define "questionable judgment"?

A At this time, I'm not going to answer any questions --

[redacted] Well, you can answer that question.

[redacted] Yeah. How do you define "questionable judgment"?

Ms. Greer. Can we go off the record for a second?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Ready to go back on the record? All right.

Ms. Moore. Do you want to ask your question again?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah.

So, in the second paragraph, you stated: "On August 24, 2022, you advised your supervisors of your objection to participating in the court-authorized search and arrest of a criminal subject. During your communications, you espoused beliefs which demonstrate questionable judgment."

How do you define "questionable judgment"?

A The adjudicative guidelines talk about the 13 different areas that can raise to questionable judgment. That's what we would utilize.

Q And so, then, if we go back to the letter here, you cited Adjudicative Guideline E and Adjudicative Guideline K. What information did you have to support that?

A I cannot talk about an ongoing security investigation at this time.

BY [redacted]

Q And how much more time do you need for this investigation? It's been 7 months. Like, is this, like, a 27-month investigation? Or 37 months? Like, how many months do you need before it's going to be done?

A Until it's thorough and complete and the investigators feel --

Q Based on your experience -- and you run the office -- how many more months are you gonna need?

A I don't envision this is going to take very much longer.

Q All right.

Mr. Gaetz?

Mr. Gaetz. Did the FBI --

Chairman Jordan. Sorry.

Earlier, [redacted] asked -- when you got this, she asked, how'd you get this information about Agent Friend, and you said you couldn't get into that.

How do you normally get these complaints? What's the normal process, if there is one, where you would receive these concerns that would require you to look into their clearance?

Ms. Moore. We can receive those concerns any number of ways. The employee can self-report. A member of the public can report. A coworker can report --

Chairman Jordan. What's the most common?

Ms. Moore. I don't know that we have necessarily one area over the other. We get a lot of self-reports, actually, that rise to security concerns. Our continuous vetting, which is also a directive of the National Intelligence Agency -- or, ODNI -- hits a lot of things. Like, financial concerns will pop during those.

So they really come in from a myriad of ways. I can get that information and send it to you, if you want the percentage of where we get the allegations from.

Chairman Jordan. All right.

Mr. Gaetz?

Mr. Gaetz. Did the FBI unlawfully retaliate against Steve Friend?

Ms. Moore. Absolutely not.

Mr. Gaetz. So how did the information come in about him?

Ms. Moore. I'm not allowed to discuss an ongoing security investigation at this time.

Mr. Gaetz. And so you're willing to make a conclusory statement, that it's not unlawful retaliation, but if we inquire as to the basis for that conclusion, your answer is that you're not gonna give us that information today.

Ms. Moore. At this time, I'm not allowed to talk about an ongoing security investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you just did. You said that it wasn't unlawful retaliation, right? You can make that conclusion.

Ms. Moore. The information that I was provided, that I executed the suspension off of, all was lawful.

Mr. Gaetz. And how did you investigate the propriety of that information?

Ms. Moore. I'm not gonna discuss an ongoing security investigation at this time. At the conclusion of the investigation I'll be glad to come back and answer any and all questions.

Mr. Gaetz. Was Steve Friend punished to send a message to chill other potential whistleblowers?

Ms. Moore. I cannot answer any questions regarding an ongoing security investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. Did the FBI encourage anyone to be unhelpful to Steve Friend?

Ms. Greer. Can we go off the record one sec?

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

Ms. Moore. I want to address the question two ago.

There is no chance I would sign anything that was retaliatory or intended to send a chilling message. Absolutely anything that I signed, regardless of the employee, is based off of the security adjudicative guidelines and separating an individual from national security risk.

Mr. Gaetz. So you've answered that question in a general sense. But as I specifically posed that question as it related to Steve Friend, would you assert the same --

Ms. Moore. I would not sign any paperwork, regardless of the employee, to send a chilling effect or in retaliation for anything. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did the FBI encourage anyone to be unhelpful to Steve Friend in any way?

Ms. Moore. Not to my knowledge, no.

Mr. Gaetz. And would your process normally have uncovered any of that type of retaliatory behavior?

Ms. Moore. Our process involves multiple steps, so there's several different steps that come. Mine is independent of the information that is provided to me.

Mr. Gaetz. So your testimony to us today is that you had sufficient predicate to suspend the security clearance of Steve Friend?

Ms. Moore. I won't talk about an ongoing security investigation. For me to sign suspension paperwork, yes, I had to have enough predicate to do it.

Mr. Gaetz. But you won't share with us any of that predicate?

Ms. Moore. Unfortunately, I can't today.

Mr. Gaetz. And you won't share with us any of the basis for the conclusion that this wasn't intended to chill future whistleblowers?

Ms. Moore. Unfortunately, I can't talk about an ongoing security investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. And you won't share any of the basis for your conclusion that this wasn't retaliatory specifically as to Mr. Friend?

Ms. Moore. Unfortunately, I can't talk about the specificity of his investigation. But when this is done I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Chairman Jordan. And you can't share with us when you think this is gonna be done?

Ms. Moore. As soon as possible.

I believe Mr. Franken also signed a waiver that would allow me to do it, and I think we offered that in advance. And if he will do it, I'll be happy to talk about it before it's concluded.

[redacted] We don't need the waiver with the chairman's letter. We don't.

Ms. Moore. My counsel has advised me otherwise.

[redacted] Well, yeah, okay. Well --

Mr. Gaetz. In your role, do you oversee whistleblower training?

Ms. Moore. Do I oversee it? No, sir. It doesn't fall under me.

Oh, I'm sorry. Yes, it does, because I'm -- I'm so sorry. I'm getting so caught in the Security Division. I oversee Training Division, which publishes whistleblower training, yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, so you oversee whistleblower training. Do you also oversee insider threat training?

Ms. Moore. I do, but let me explain how that works.

So our Training Division is responsible for publishing those and ensuring that employees take them. The sponsoring divisions of the trainings are the ones that own it.

Mr. Gaetz. Who makes the decision to conduct whistleblower training and insider threat training on the same day?

Ms. Moore. It would be out of the Training Division.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware that whistleblower training and insider threat training occur on the same day at the FBI?

Ms. Moore. I don't believe it always has. I'm not sure what day it actually publishes. I'm sorry. I don't have that. I can get you that information.

Mr. Gaetz. If I represent to you that folks have testified to the committee that these things occur on the same day, you don't have a basis to disagree with that, right?

Ms. Moore. At this time, I could get you the dates of when it happened and previous years when it occurred.

Mr. Gaetz. Is there a risk that if you conduct whistleblower training and insider threat training on the same day, the message being sent to people throughout the FBI implicitly, or perhaps explicitly, is that whistleblowers are insider threats?

Ms. Moore. I don't believe that.

Mr. Gaetz. You're a senior human resources professional. You don't see any tension on the same day having whistleblower training and insider threat training?

Ms. Moore. No, I don't. I think those are two very different things.

Mr. Gaetz. And your testimony is that you're not concerned that if those two very different things are administered on the same day that someone in the FBI might believe that the message being sent from leadership is that whistleblowers are insider threats?

Ms. Moore. I don't believe that we work to the weakest denominator within the organization, if you don't understand that the two are two separate things.

The FBI takes whistleblowers very seriously. We encourage our employees and actually require them to report waste, fraud, abuse, and misconduct. We absolutely appreciate a whistleblower.

We also have an obligation to national security information and the protection of that information. And those two are not in conflict.

Mr. Gaetz. And you see no problem administering them on the same day?

Ms. Moore. I do not.

Mr. Gaetz. Does the FBI engage in a process by which if someone wants to write a book after their time at the FBI that the FBI reviews it?

Ms. Moore. There is an editorial review that happens through our Information Management Division.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you in any way involved in that process?

Ms. Moore. I am not.

Mr. Gaetz. Where does that sit within the FBI?

Ms. Moore. That falls within our Information Management Division, which falls under the Associate Deputy Director.

Mr. Gaetz. No part of your report?

Ms. Moore. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever observed in your role complaints about the politics of employees at the FBI?

Ms. Moore. Will you expand on that a little bit more?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. Has anyone ever complained that people's partisan politics was creating a hostile work environment?

Ms. Moore. So we have different advisory groups that come in at different times, and they may say like, hey, we want to make sure the Bureau is not partisan in any way, or we want to make sure this action isn't that.

But I don't get, like, directly someone reporting to me that they've had partisan politics that have happened with a specificity. If they did, we would take action on that. That's not allowed within our workspace.

Mr. Gaetz. Oh, I fully understand it's not allowed. I'm just trying to understand to what extent, you know, are these 50 cases that show up every week regarding the conduct of agents, to what extent those ever present to you concerns about politics. Can you recall any that have?

Ms. Moore. So let me expand upon the 50 cases.

The Security Division oversees agents, professional staff, task force officers, contractors, and detailees. That's 78,000 different individuals that have a reporting requirement to Security Division.

So those 50-ish that we get every week could fall under any of those. It's not specifically related to agents, no, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. In the broadest possible way I can ask this question: In your role as a senior HR official at the FBI, has anyone ever complained through these reporting systems that you oversee that there was politicization or partisan politics reflected at the FBI?

Ms. Moore. If they have, we would've looked at those appropriately and taken any action necessary.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm not asking --

Ms. Moore. I can't tell you.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm asking, are you aware of any time when that has occurred?

Ms. Moore. Specifically, myself? Not through our reporting system, no, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. How about otherwise, outside of your reporting system?

Ms. Moore. Again, I talked about, like, the agents -- the groups will come in, and they'll be like, hey, we want to make sure this isn't happening. But I have never received a complaint that has come to me that says, within the parameters of this squad or this field office or this thing, that political rhetoric is being espoused and is creating a hostile work environment.

Mr. Gaetz. I just want -- that was a very couched answer, so pardon --

Ms. Moore. I'm not trying to make it couched.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, I'm sorry if I --

Ms. Moore. I'm sorry. Maybe I'm not understanding the question.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry if this is pedantic, but when you say "come to you" in that last response, you mean throughout the enterprise of the reporting system that you oversee, right?

Ms. Moore. Yes. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever --

Ms. Moore. And if it did come in --

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever heard the phrase, "Comey is my homey"?

Ms. Moore. -- we would investigate it appropriately.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever heard the phrase, "Comey is my homey"?

Ms. Moore. I have.

Mr. Gaetz. And in what context did you hear that?

Ms. Moore. That was usually after Mr. Comey was terminated. There was a whole -- like, "Comey is my homey" was a statement that people would make in relation to they liked him as the Director.

Mr. Gaetz. And I'll represent to you that the committee has received testimony that there was pressure for people in the "Comey is my homey" era of the FBI to reflect that slogan in some way or they might face retaliation from their coworkers.

Are you familiar with that dynamic?

Ms. Moore. I am absolutely not familiar with that dynamic.

Mr. Gaetz. So you --

Ms. Moore. Nor would I have been in this position at the time that Mr. Comey was removed as the Director.

Mr. Gaetz. But you were around, right? You were at headquarters?

Ms. Moore. Well, I was definitely in the Bureau.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah.

Ms. Moore. Mr. Comey was removed in 2017. I was not at headquarters when Mr. Comey was removed.

Mr. Gaetz. Great. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you going to be able to answer any questions about Garret O'Boyle's case today?

A I'm not.

Q So, as to his adjudication or --

A It's ongoing.

Q It's still ongoing?

A Again, it should be -- it should be soon that --

Q It's gonna be soon, right?

A -- that one should be finished.

Q As soon as this interview ends, I bet.

A No.

Q How about Marcus Allen?

A I'll come back. If they finish the adjudication and they come to some --

Q Well, you're gonna -- you know, I --

A You're like, "Are we ever gonna see you again?" I'll come back.

Q Yeah, I think we're gonna --

A As soon as they're done, I am happy -- or if you --

Q I mean, I think -- I think -- let's be clear here. I think the chairman is gonna need to send a subpoena.

A Whatever we have to do that lets my legal counsel do it, I'll come back and talk about him. I just have to -- I'm obligated --

Q Yeah. No, I mean, I would anticipate the chairman is gonna wanna send a subpoena in the short term.

A Again, I'll come back. Whenever my general counsel tells me I can talk about something, I will come back. If it's a subpoena, if it's you get release from the employees, or we finish the adjudication, I will come back.

Q How about Marcus Allen?

A I can't talk about him either.

Q Okay.

All right. We're running out of time with our hour. I think we've got 2 minutes left here?

[redacted] Yeah. We'll go off the record. Thanks.

[Recess.]

[11:18 a.m.]

[redacted] All right. It is 11:19. We can go back on the record.

Good morning again. My name is [redacted] I'm the Democrats' chief oversight counsel. Nice to meet you.

Ms. Moore. Nice to meet you.

[redacted] And I'm joined by my co-counsel, [redacted].

[redacted] How are you?

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q I want to start out just, I think this was referenced earlier, but I want to make sure we have the record clear on it.

How many -- what's the total number of employees that fall under the purview for the review of these clearances? I think you said 78,000.

A It's roughly -- so employees, we have roughly 37-, almost 38,000 FBI employees; that's agent and professional staff and analytical cadre. And then you have your task force officers, your detailees, and your contractors that make up the remainder.

Q And so it's --

A Yeah, about 78,000.

Q And of that -- so it's 78,000 total -- how many individuals are currently suspended, had their clearances suspended?

A Currently on suspension, there's 32.

Q Thirty-two. So 32 --

A In FY '22, there were 32. I'm sorry.

Q Okay. And you don't have the numbers for FY '21 or FY 2020, do you?

A I don't have them, but I can get them for you if you would like.

Q I think that would be helpful for us. Thank you.

A Okay. Sure.

Q And so -- and the -- you said that there are about 50 -- what's the technical term, complaint or --

A About 50 incidents is what we call them, security incidents, that come in a week.

Q And, to your knowledge, has that number been standard for the past several years?

A It pretty much has. We've, at any given time over the last couple years that I've been involved years, there's been roughly about 600 pending investigations at any given time.

Q Okay. And that equals about 50 a week?

A Yes.

Oh, just because it comes in doesn't mean it gets opened, so --

Q Correct. Sorry.

A Yes. I'm sorry.

Q So what I'm looking at is actually the number that come in per week. Has it been roughly 50 per week?

A Yes, it has, yes.

Q Okay. And do you know if that was the same in 2021, for example?

A It has been.

Q And in 2020?

A I don't know 2020. I wasn't in my seat at the time. I'm sorry.

Q So I think it would be helpful for us if we could get those numbers.

A Sure.

Q You talked through the process earlier between the investigative process and the adjudicative process, and I just want to get some clarity around that. At the investigative stage, it comes in to a case agent? Is that the right term?

A Pretty much. A case investigator.

Q Case investigator. And then there's a supervisor level above that individual?

A There's a program manager that runs above that, and then above that would be a unit chief.

Q Okay. So there's three levels there?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And then they pass the case over to the adjudicative side, correct?

A Correct.

Q And how many individuals are involved on the adjudicative side?

A It's similarly the same. There would be the investigator, the adjudicator there, and then there's the program manager that oversees that adjudicator, and then the unit chief.

And then, from the unit chief, though, if they're making a recommendation for a suspension, a revocation, or a security warning letter, or no action, it goes to the assistant section chief, and then to a section chief, then to a deputy assistant director, to the assistant director, and then to myself, the EAD.

Q Okay. So that's --

A Roughly seven.

Q -- three at the investigative stage and seven, so it's 10 individuals total?

A No, it's about 7 total --

Q Seven total?

A -- because I don't consider the investigator or the adjudicator as one of the stages.

Q Right.

A I consider the rest.

Q Okay. So the adjudicative side is about 7?

A Yes.

Q And the investigative side is about 3?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So it's 10 total?

A Oh, yes, ma'am, I'm sorry.

Q And this is just the adjudication of the clearance suspension, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So there's a whole different process for an actual revocation, correct?

A It's the same process.

Q It's the same process.

A Similarly.

Q Does it go through again though?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So it's a full -- so it's different -- a different review for the actual revocation?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. You previously served as the assistant director of the Security Division, correct?

A I did.

Q And this is the division that's responsible for overseeing the adjudication of security clearances?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Can you describe, how many employees does that division have?

A In total? Almost 800.

Q And how many work on the security clearance review?

A Total, there's probably close to 40.

Q Okay. Can you describe the training that those individuals go through?

A They all receive the adjudicative guidelines, the executive order training. They have refresher training to make sure that everything is level set. But I can't tell you, like, if it's -- how many times a year they do it, but they will periodically, if we're making sure everybody is calibrated appropriately, we have our general counsel come in and again teach them all of those steps.

Q Okay. And I think any training materials that you have that could be made available would also be helpful --

A Okay.

Q -- for us to review.

You've referenced a number of times in the earlier session a thorough and complete investigation.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q What does that mean?

A That means that they will run down any information that we possibly can to be -- however it's positive or negative, so that they have a full jacket, so that we're not weighted one way or another. So they run down all leads that are possible.

Q Okay. And is that both to protect the individual involved, to make sure that they get a fair shake, I guess you could say?

A It's to protect the individual and national security. It's a requirement. You wouldn't want -- this is a very serious process, and we take it very seriously, and so you want to make sure you get it right.

Q Okay. Both for the individual who is suspended or potentially revoked and also for the United States?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q We've referenced earlier executive order -- you referenced earlier Executive Order 12968.

A Yeah.

[redacted] And I think we talked about it a lot, but we didn't actually look at the executive order. So I'd like to introduce that into the record.

[Moore Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Moore. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q That will be exhibit No. 2.

A Thank you.

Q And I'll give you a minute to look through this. Let me know when you're ready to continue.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. You're familiar with this executive order?

A I am.

Q And would you describe yourself as very familiar with this order?

A I am very familiar with the order. I don't know if I can quote it to you by parts, but yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And the order is dated August 2, 1995, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So it's been in effect for nearly 28 years, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Could you briefly describe what this order does?

A This order talks about who has the authority to have access to classified information, what you're looking to, what the due process is if there's a risk to the organization, what the standards will be.

And then the implementation guide that came with this is the ODNI standards of the adjudication guide, the 13 different standards, so they kind of go together to make one full complete package.

Q You referenced in the earlier session that a suspension is not eligible for review under the order. Is that right?

A Correct.

Q Can you explain how that -- where that is in this or how it would -- I'll give you a minute to --

A Sure. Let me find that, sure.

It will be under part 5.

Q Okay. And can you actually --

A Review of Access Determinations.

Q Okay.

A And it's section 5.1 through 5.2.

Q Okay. And so this section essentially says a suspension is not eligible for review probably because, at that point, it actually is going through the review, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So what happens is, a suspension goes into effect, and at that stage, that's when the investigation continues?

A It can, yes, ma'am.

Q I want to turn back to actually page 1 of this order. I'm sorry. I'm saying page 1. It's page -- this is published in the Federal Register, so it would be page 40245 as printed in the Register.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q In the second and third paragraphs, this order states: Security policies designed to protect classified information must ensure consistent, cost-effective, and efficient protection of our Nation's classified information, while providing fair and equitable treatment to those Americans upon whom we rely for national security.

So that paragraph essentially says that the goal of the order is to balance both the protection of classified information and the -- and ensuring equitable treatment for those who may be eligible to access it, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And then the following sentence is: This order establishes a uniform Federal personnel security program for employees who will be considered for initial or continued access to classified information.

So would you agree that the purpose of the order is to establish a uniform standard for assessing Federal employee eligibility to classified information?

A Yes, ma'am. This order is for all Federal agencies across all government entities in the intelligence community that have access to classified information. It's everybody.

Q Okay. So it's the same rules for FBI, for ODNI --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- for the CIA?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q For all intelligence agencies?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And I want to turn to part 3, which is Access Eligibility Standards. It begins on page 40249. That's the fifth page of the document itself.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q At the bottom of that page to the top of the next page, the order says: No employee shall be deemed to be eligible for access to classified information merely by reason of Federal service or as a matter of right or privilege.

A That's correct, yes, ma'am.

Q So the award of a clearance is not automatic, right?

A It's not a -- I mean, it's not a right; it's a privilege, yes, ma'am. There's no -- like, you don't get it just because you're employed by anybody, no, ma'am.

Q And the goal of that is to protect classified information?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the national security?

A Yes.

Q Okay. In the following paragraph, which is section 3B -- it's on page 40250 -- I want to go through paragraph B in a bit of detail -- it reads: Eligibility for access to classified information shall be granted only to employees who are United States citizens, for whom an appropriate investigation has been completed, and whose personal and professional history affirmatively indicates loyalty to the United States.

Can you explain your understanding of what "affirmatively indicates loyalty to the United States" means?

A Right. So there's not like a litmus test on allegiance to the United States. So there's not like a test that you can give that says, "Yes, I am allegiant to the United States," or, no, there's not.

But what we utilize there is there's factors that people display or indicate that could be contrary to an allegiance to the United States. And some of those would be things like illegal activities to overthrow the United States Government, activities that would prevent someone else from executing their First Amendment rights or that would prevent, like, a Federal Government, a State, or a local government from executing their official powers.

Q Thank you for that.

The next sentence describing eligibility requirements lists "strength of character." What's your understanding of what "strength of character" means?

A Strength of character comes down to that whole -- and it goes on here, and it says trustworthiness, but it's more than that. It's like who you are. It's how you act. It's how you execute. We talk about, like, the 13 adjudicative guidelines. So part of that character is, you know, like, alcohol use, or how you behave in whatever situation that you're in, that you're using sound judgment, that you're a good model and image of what you're looking for as a clearance holder.

Q And why is that important?

A Because you're representing the United States Government when you have a clearance, and we need to make sure that these people have good judgment because you're going to be faced, at times, by foreign entities or foreign influence that might want that information, or, you're going to be judged off of where you work, and we want to make sure that you are the right person to have that clearance at all times and that you make good decisions and don't put national security information at risk unnecessarily.

Q Okay. Skipping ahead a little bit, a little further down, it describes the willingness and ability to abide by regulations governing the use, handling, and protection of classified information. Is this important to the FBI?

A It is very important to the FBI. Sorry.

Q Could you explain why?

A To protect national security information, it's our obligation. I mean, if you disclose national security information, then you put at risk the country. It's not just yourself or your organization, it's the entire United States that comes at risk.

That's why they lay it out, that it's grave consequences if we mishandle national security information. So it's very, very important to us.

Q Okay. And then I want to look at the last sentence, and this came up a little bit in the first hour. So I want to talk through some of the detail.

It says: Eligibility shall be granted only where facts and circumstances indicate access to classified information is clearly consistent with the national security interests of the United States, and any doubt shall be resolved in favor of the national security.

Can you explain what it means for "any doubt to be resolved in favor of the national security"?

A In simplest terms, tie goes to the government. It's like if a lock fails, it fails safe. It is not going to let somebody out of the room. So we're always going to yield to the side of national security.

Q Okay. And can you explain why that is important?

A Again, it's the risk of national security to the Nation as a whole. You give away our secrets, you're not trustworthy, and you can cause grave damage to the United States.

Q So it's not a beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard?

A No, ma'am.

Q The standard is --

A Always to the national security side. Tie goes to the government. There's no -- no exceptions to it at all.

Q Okay. And, again, this was set in an executive order from 1995?

A That all the intelligence community and anyone issuing a clearance or with anybody that has a clearance holder abides by, yes, ma'am.

Q I want to move on.

[redacted] We've referenced the adjudicative guidelines a couple times, and I also want to introduce those actually. So this will be exhibit No. 3.

[Moore Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And let me know when you've had a minute to look through them.

A Go ahead.

Q So these are the -- this is Security Executive Agent Directive 4, National Security Adjudicative Guidelines, effective 8th of June 2017.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you familiar with these guidelines?

A I am.

Q And is this the current version of them?

A This is the current version, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Could you describe your level of familiarity with these guidelines?

A It's what I utilize at any point to make a security clearance adjudicative action at all. It's what's our -- I hate to use the term, like almost a Holy Grail. It's what you go by. It's what the intelligence community directs us to go by.

Q Okay. And could you describe in a few words what these guidelines do?

A They set the left and right lane limits of what we're looking at. They lay out the parameters. There's 13 in here, and you look into each of those when you're looking at considerations for individuals to be granted a clearance, to maintain a clearance.

Q Okay. Now, throughout these guidelines, there's the use of the term "adjudicative."

A Yes.

Q The term "adjudicative" refers to the process for determining whether an individual is eligible to access classified information or to hold a sensitive position, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the guidelines also use the term "adjudicator" throughout.

A Correct.

Q And the term "adjudicator" means the actual individuals who make the determination of whether a person is eligible for access to classified information, correct?

A In the term of this, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So the adjudicators at the FBI would be the individuals we talked through earlier?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Can you describe, are they trained in these guidelines specifically?

A Absolutely.

Q Can you describe that training?

A That training is conducted by our Office of General Counsel. They come in and they go through all of the SEADs with them because all of the SEADs play a role in different parts of security, but specifically Directive 4, for the security clearances.

They go through a couple-week class. It's all 8 hours a day. There's a testing. But they get this, and they periodically will have refresher training on it as well just to make sure everybody is level set.

Q Thank you.

A And it does include like practices and things of that nature, scenarios.

Q And I know we said this with respect to the executive order, but I'm not sure if we said it with respect to this. What agencies do these adjudicative guidelines apply to?

A All Federal agencies and all intelligence community agencies, anybody that has anybody with a security clearance within them.

Q So is this the same for all intelligence agencies? It is not just for FBI?

A Correct.

Q Okay. The guidelines are issued by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, correct?

A Correct.

Q The version I just introduced went into effect June 8, 2017, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so that was during the prior administration?

A Yeah.

Q I want to turn to appendix A, which contains the actual guidelines, and I want to begin with Section 2, the adjudicative process, paragraph D, which is factors that adjudicators should consider when making an eligibility determination. This begins on the bottom of page 6 of the document.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q There's a list of factors, 1 through 9, ranging from the nature, extent, and seriousness of the conduct to the frequency and recency of the conduct to the motivation for the conduct.

A Correct.

Q Can you explain how FBI's adjudicators weigh these factors when making eligibility decisions?

A We call this the whole-person concept. We go back and we look at, again, their entry on duty, what they were like then, what they are like now, are there patterns, other considerations, what was intent when an issue occurs.

But this is, like, the meat on the bone of what they do. This is essentially, in nine bullets, what whole-person concept comes down to.

Q Okay. And does any one factor tend to be more important than the others?

A No, they're all equally important.

Q Okay. And, based on what you said earlier -- I think you used the example of an individual that had a DUI prior to entering service -- it sounds like the whole-person concept could mean different things for different people, right?

A Absolutely.

Q So it's the whole person for you as an agent or you as a contractor?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Notwithstanding these factors, the next paragraph on the top of page 7, it's paragraph E, makes it clear that a single criterion may be sufficient to make an unfavorable eligibility determination, correct?

A That is true.

Q And can you explain what that means?

A So a single one of the criteria could be enough just alone, but you can also take them in totality. So it could be, like, one or two that are kind of causing concern can make a totality, or it could be one that is so significant that it stands on its own.

Q And what would be an example of something that could be so significant to stand on its own?

A Usually spying for another country would absolutely, a Hanssen would stand on its own, no doubt.

Q Got it. Paragraph F, which is the following paragraph, provides factors adjudicators should consider when a security concern becomes known about an individual who currently holds a security clearance, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, again, can you explain how adjudicators weigh these factors when making eligibility determinations?

A Absolutely. Again, they're part of the whole-person concept, like, did they own it, were they truthful in what they reported, are they forthright, forthcoming, is this a one-time thing. Again, it goes -- everything goes back to that whole person, that you're taking that one solid look at the entire person and the totality of events that are in question.

Q Okay. And so some of these was truthful and complete in responding to questions. So, if an individual declined to appear for an interview, for example, or to discuss alleged misconduct, that could be taken into account.

A It absolutely can, and actually within the security adjudicative guidelines, personal conduct, which is guideline E, states that failure to comply with a security investigation in and of itself is enough to suspend a security clearance because it raises doubts to the individual's willingness to comply with national security rules and regulations. We take that very seriously.

Q And I want to get back to the -- paragraphs G and H provide alternatives to a clearance revocation, correct?

A Correct.

Q So paragraph G says that an individual can continue to hold a clearance if the specific risk to national security can be managed with appropriate mitigation measures, correct?

A Correct.

Q So is it fair to say that if an individual actually has their clearance suspended, the conduct must be so serious that it can't be mitigated in that moment?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And paragraph H says that an adjudicator can recommend a warning, instead of a denial or a revocation, if the adjudicator decides that the information is not serious enough to warrant a suspension or revocation, correct?

A Again, so you have your security letter warning letters. You have your suspensions and then ultimately the revocation if that's necessary.

Q So is it fair to say that, if an individual has their clearance either suspended or revoked, then the conduct at issue must have been so serious that a warning alone was not sufficient to address it?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And then, finally, paragraph I on that page says that the eligibility determination process relies on individuals being truthful and honest when they provide information to those who are investigating their backgrounds and adjudicating their individual eligibility.

It continues: Any incident of intentional material falsification or purposeful noncooperation with security processing is of significant concern.

Can you explain why any falsification or noncooperation with security processing is of significant concern?

A Because to, you to be compliant to security processing so that we understand your allegiance to national security and to that protection of national security information. If you're not willing to be cooperative in a security processing process -- a security processing process -- then I have no ability to make a judgment call off of that willingness, so the only thing I can do is noncompliance, and that's not acceptable for handling national security information.

Q And so, if someone engages in, like, a single incident of noncooperation, so say he or she declines to meet with an investigator, could that be sufficient for FBI to determine that the individual is not eligible to hold or to maintain a security clearance?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. Thank you for that.

I want to go on to the actual guidelines themselves, and we'll start with guideline A, which is allegiance to the United States. It begins on page 8 of the directive.

The first sentence of guideline A states: The willingness to safeguard classified or sensitive information is in doubt if there is any reason to suspect an individual's allegiance to the United States.

Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Could you please explain your understanding of what, quote, "any reason" means?

A Well, it helps a lot because the guidelines, again, go on and kind of explain that. If you have involvement in, support of, training to commit, or the advocacy of any act of sabotage, treason, or sedition against the United States, association or sympathy with any persons who are attempting to commit or who are committing, again, those activities I have just listed out, any association or sympathies with persons or organizations that advocate, threaten, or use force or violence, or any other illegal or unconstitutional means to overthrow or influence the United States Government or seek -- or any State or local government, to prevent Federal, State, or local government personnel from performing their official duties, to gain retribution for a perceived wrong caused by the Federal, State, or local government, and any attempt to prevent others from executing their rights under the Constitution or laws of the United States, of any State.

Q Okay. And any of those --

A Any of those.

Q Okay. The last sentence of No. 3 under guideline A says: An individual who engages in acts against the United States or provides support or encouragement to those who do has already demonstrated willingness to compromise national security.

Correct?

A It's a very clear statement, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So any evidence of that, we said earlier, you know, any doubts would be resolved in the favor of the national --

A Favor of the national security.

Q And so any evidence that this guideline has been violated, it sounds like, would be a pretty strong reason in the FBI's eye in and of itself --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- to withhold -- to either suspend or to deny a clearance, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So you just talked through the reasons or the conditions that could raise a security concern listed. I want to look at these, break them down one by one. So the first one, I think, is a little self-evident. It says: An individual -- sorry -- involvement in, support of, training to commit, or advocacy of any act of sabotage, espionage, treason, terrorism, or sedition against the United States.

Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Would such involvement be disqualifying, in and of itself, for purposes of access to classified information?

A It would.

Q Okay. The second condition is: Association or sympathy with persons who are attempting to commit or who are committing any of the above acts, meaning sabotage, espionage, treason, terrorism, and sedition.

Correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Could you explain what "association or sympathy" means?

A "Association" would be: I support, I'm espousing that, I believe in that, I think that person is right, I concur, I support their train of thought.

Q Okay. Can you explain why that's problematic?

A Because it's contrary to adjudicative guidelines, and it shows a non-allegiance to the United States and the Constitution, which we're sworn to protect and defend.

Q Okay. How would the FBI determine that an individual has such association or sympathy?

A Generally, we would do a thorough investigation, and sometimes those individuals, perhaps would espouse that, like, on the office instant messaging system between two employees, and we have the ability to retrieve those, and so we can take a look at all of that. We can look at text messages that they've sent. We can look at documents that they've created or statements that they have made.

Q And so do you look at public statements they've made?

A We can, yes, ma'am.

Q Do you look at social media posts that an individual may have made?

A We can only look at that in the event that it is public social media. We don't engage in going into closed platforms.

Q Okay. But, if somebody has a public Twitter account, you could look at that?

A We could, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. The third condition is: Association or sympathy with persons or organizations that advocate, threaten, or use force or violence, or use any other illegal or unconstitutional means in an effort to overthrow or influence the U.S. Government or any State or local government.

Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Why is that problematic?

A Well, because the rule of law of the Constitution says that we are going to abide by it, and so, when you start to overthrow or influence U.S. Government, that's a frowny face; you can't do it. It means you're not allegiant to the United States and to the Constitution, again that we're sworn to protect, and that makes you a risk to national security.

I don't want to give somebody that doesn't believe in the United States access to information that could cause harm to our Nation.

Q Okay. And so such association or sympathy, it might be perfectly legal though, right, like it might -- you might have the First Amendment right to say whatever you want or to associate with whoever you want?

A Absolutely. But individuals that are clearance holders are held to a higher standard. And so, while -- when everybody came on board, that's what they understood they were held to, and we're very clear about what that standard is, and they have a continuing obligation.

Q Okay. The third condition states that it is also a concern if an individual with access to highly sensitive or secure material -- or classified materials has an association with or sympathy for persons or organizations that use any illegal or unconstitutional means to, quote, prevent Federal, State, or local government personnel from performing their official duties, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q What is your understanding of what prevent such officials from, quote, "performing their official duties," means?

A That would be someone who was trying to interfere with the official functions, votes, whatever it is, of that Federal, State, or local government in an official capacity that they're required to do by law.

Q Okay. And why is it problematic if an individual with access to highly sensitive information is associated with individuals who -- or has sympathy with people, individuals or organizations, that seek to prevent officials from doing their jobs?

A Because information that would be classified could help a foreign government to overthrow the United States Government in performance of their official duties if necessary, and they release that inappropriately.

It's just -- it's concerning. Again, you wouldn't want to allow someone to see the Nation's most secret secrets if they're not allegiant to the United States and the Constitution.

Q The next condition -- and I'm just going to go through all of these, so light at the end of the tunnel.

A Okay.

Q The next condition states it is also a concern if an individual has an association or sympathy -- association with or sympathy for persons or organizations that use any illegal or unconstitutional means to gain retribution for perceived wrongs caused by Federal, State, or local government.

Could you explain what "gain retribution for perceived wrongs caused by Federal, State, or local government" means?

A This would be where someone in themselves believe that there was a wrong that was caused, and they want to -- in their -- take a revenge-type action against that. And, again, that's contrary to the rule of law, the Constitution, and what the Constitution dictates.

Q Okay. And then that last condition says that it's a concern if an individual has an association with or sympathy for persons or organizations that use any illegal or unconstitutional means to prevent others from exercising their rights under the Constitution or laws of the United States or of any State.

Can you explain what "prevent others from exercising their rights under the Constitution or laws of the United States or any State" means?

A That would be, again, where an example would be if somebody wanted to vote, and they weren't allowing someone to cross the line to be able to go into vote. You can't do that. Again, our Constitution is very clearly on what we're allowed to do, and so, in support of that, as a Federal Government employee who holds a clearance, you're required to support the Constitution of the United States.

Q And I want to be clear with all of these, the concern in these guidelines is that an individual who has such sympathies would also have access to classified information, correct?

A That is correct.

Q So it's not that they support these groups or organizations, it's that they support -- or are associated with these organizations and they also have a clearance --

A Yes.

Q -- they also have access to --

A Correct.

Q -- classified information?

A That is correct.

Q And that's the actual threat to national security?

A That is.

Q Okay. So the guideline also lists a number of mitigating factors, and it says, for example, if the individual's involvement occurred under such unusual circumstances or so much time has elapsed that it is unlikely to recur, and does not cast doubt on the individual's current reliability, trustworthiness, or allegiance.

So, if an individual's clearance has been denied or revoked under guideline A, or suspended under guideline A, then the FBI has determined that none of these mitigating factors are sufficient to overcome the concerns presented under that section 4 above?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. I want to move on to guideline B, which is foreign influence. Could you broadly explain what "foreign influence" means?

A This is -- again, it lays it out, so I can quite honestly read it to you so it will be pretty clear. It's foreign contacts and interests, including, but not limited to, business, financial, and property interests, are a national security if they result in a divided allegiance. And so that means that they're not more allegiant to the United States than they are to a foreign country. And so that is a concern to us, that they may at some point decide that the foreign influence is more pulling than the United States.

Q And so, just to break this down one step further, why would it be concerning for an individual with access to highly sensitive or classified information to have -- to be under foreign influence?

A If you are under foreign influence, specifically it was an adversary foreign influence country, then you would have access within the confines of national security that might provide information to that foreign country that would provide an advantage economically or tactically against the United States.

Q The last sentence of this concern section says that assessments of foreign contacts and interests should consider the country in which the foreign contact or interest is located, including but not limited to considerations such as whether it is known to target U.S. citizens to obtain classified or sensitive information, correct?

A Correct.

Q Russia has been known to target U.S. citizens to obtain classified or sensitive information, correct?

A That is correct.

Q The second sentence of that concern section states that an individual's foreign contacts may be a national security concern if they create circumstances in which the individual may be manipulated or induced to help a foreign government, group, organization, or government in a way inconsistent with U.S. interests.

What does "manipulated" mean in this context?

A "Manipulated" can be that they are almost tricked into, taught to believe, encouraged to act in a manner that is in the interest of the foreign government against the United States.

Q Okay. If an individual provides information to a foreign entity such as -- and maybe not classified or sensitive information but information to a foreign entity such as a Russian state-owned media organization, would that create concerns about the risk of them being potentially manipulated or induced to help Russia?

A Absolutely.

Q And that would be problematic for national security purposes, correct?

A Absolutely.

Q Underneath the paragraph describing the concern related to foreign influence, there's a list of conditions that could raise a security concern and could be disqualifying.

A Correct.

Q The third factor is failure to report or fully disclose, when required, association with a foreign person, group, government, or country, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q When is an FBI employee required to report or fully disclose such associations?

A They're -- always have a continuing obligation to report any foreign contacts at any time.

Q Okay. The seventh condition states: Unauthorized association with a suspected or known agent, associate, or employee of a foreign intelligence entity raises a security concern and may be disqualifying.

Correct?

A Correct.

Q Could you explain what "unauthorized" means here?

A So, again, employees that have security clearances, regardless of the organization, are required to report any foreign contact or any suspicious contact. And so, at times, we may have an individual who works in a LegAt in a threat country that has contact with foreign nationals, they'll report those. But they may be deemed of such innocuous manner that it's approved. But, if they're not an approved association, it would be unauthorized.

Q Okay. And, finally, this guideline lists a number of mitigating factors as well. I think that's on page 10 actually. And I want to look at the fifth one, which is small letter E. It states that a security concern can be mitigated if the individual who has access to highly sensitive information, quote, has promptly complied with existing agency requirements regarding the reporting of contacts, requests, or threats from persons, groups, or organizations from a foreign country, correct?

A That is correct.

Q What is the -- how quickly should an individual report such contacts under this section?

A Immediately. Again, we have individuals that get bumped by foreign countries pretty common, not uncommon at all, and they automatically report those. There's no delay at all.

Q Okay. Is there an actual FBI requirement, like 72 hours?

A I can't tell you the number of hours. It's immediate.

Q Okay.

A Like, there's not a delay that's acceptable in this.

Q So I think we would like to know the actual timeframe --

A Okay.

Q -- what the mandatory time frame for that.

A Okay.

Q How does the FBI ensure that it's employees are aware of this requirement?

A We have training on security requirements every year and what is -- we have an information security and -- we call it InfoSec or OPSEC security training.

Q Okay. And are employees also, in their initial training, so at Quantico, FBI agents --

A Oh, yes. I'm sorry.

Q -- they receive training at that stage as well?

A They do.

Q Okay.

A And we have yearly, again, refresher training on it.

Q Okay.

A All FBI employees -- so let me, I'll go a step back. All of the employees onboard through what we call the One Program, which is to ensure that everybody gets the exact same thing, the exact same training, and they all go to Quantico for it. And we have the same instructors come in, and they teach all of us there the reporting requirements and things during that One training as well.

[11:58 a.m.]

Q Thank you.

I want to turn to page E, which is personal conduct, and I think we referenced this just a little bit ago, but I'm going to go through it in a little more detail. It begins on page 12. Can you explain what "personal conduct" means?

A Again, I'll read it right out of the guideline. It's any conduct involving questionable judgment, lack of candor, dishonesty, or unwillingness to comply with rules and regulations which can raise a question about an individual's reliability, trustworthiness, and ability to protect classified or sensitive information.

And, again, of special interest to us is at any time a failure to cooperate and provide truthful and candid answers during national security investigations or the adjudicative process.

Q Can you explain why this concern matters to the FBI?

A It matters. We need our employees to be truthful. If you're not being truthful, you can't trust someone. You don't trust people that aren't honest and forthright. Specifically, if you won't comply when we do a security investigation, I have no means to gather further information from you, and, therefore, I have to make -- assume that you are not willing to comply the answer that I'm -- in relation to your security clearance. I didn't explain that very well.

Q And what about demonstrating good judgment, why is that important to the FBI?

A Well, good judgment prevents most people from getting in trouble. It's a commonsense, you know: You're not supposed to drive a hundred miles an hour on the freeway. It's that commonsense element of good judgment. You don't go around -- we try to get our agents as well and any employees, like: Hey, don't go out and broadcast who you are because you might inadvertently get bumped by someone and give out information that you shouldn't do.

So we try to teach people to have that good judgment or reinforce that.

Q Okay. Thank you for that.

Going down to the conditions that could raise a security concern and may be disqualifying section here. The third one, which is C, says: Critical adverse information in several adjudicative issue areas that is not sufficient for an adverse determination under any single guideline, but which, when considered as a whole, supports a whole-person assessment of questionable judgment.

And then it goes on.

Can you explain what that section means?

A So, again, that's if we have a lot of little concerns that stop -- popping up, we call those indicators. And so, like, maybe it's not quite enough here, but when you compound it over here, it is the whole-person concept, it is the totality of the actions as it relates to an individual that can raise to this personal conduct that can lead to questions about their ability to maintain national security information.

Q You were asked earlier about how information comes in to the FBI, how. You said some people self-report. There's other -- sometimes it's supervisor; sometimes it's through the continuous monitoring.

In a situation where there's many small things that add up, how does the FBI -- and could those come in from different reporters?

A They absolutely can, and we do maintain a database. And so, while we may get, like, one report here, it may be 6 months that another report comes in. You go back, you kind of compare them up, and you're like: Oh, now we've got a little bit more smoke, not quite there.

And then, you know, lo and behold, something else will come in, and you're like: Okay. Now we've got to look at this; this raises to a level of concern.

It's the whole person; all incidents considered.

Q Okay. So you wait until you have the body of --

A We generally -- we are not going to just take it off of something that doesn't rise independently. We're going to look at the totality.

Q The following condition, which is small letter d, refers to credible adverse information that is not explicitly covered under any other guidelines, and it lists a number of subconsiderations, including the unauthorized release of sensitive corporate or government-protected information.

So it is problematic if an individual with access to classified or highly sensitive information makes an unauthorized release of such information, correct?

A It's indicative. So, even if it's law enforcement-sensitive information, it's still law enforcement-sensitive. It's for official use only. So, if it's FBI information for official use only, and you're not protecting that -- that's our lowest level that you protect, and you can't do that -- why would I give you the Nation's secrets and give you free reign to disclose those.

Q Okay. The second subconsideration is any disruptive, violent, or other inappropriate behavior. What would be included as "other inappropriate behavior"?

A Let me think of an example there. "Other inappropriate" would be that espousing of beliefs that are not in line with the Constitution.

Q Okay. What about, for example, if an individual misuses their service weapon, would that be potentially other inappropriate behavior?

A Oh, yes, absolutely. Definitely. You can -- again, it's the totality of the situation in bringing it together. We might have -- but definitely if you were not trustworthy with your firearm, again, I'm not going to give you national security information. That becomes frightening.

Q Okay. The third subconsideration is a pattern of dishonesty or rule violations. Can you explain what's meant by "a pattern"?

A That's the totality again. It's where, oh, I -- it starts out, you know: I lost my badge. I lost my cred. I lost my shield. I didn't process an arrestee appropriately.

You start getting all these little things that add up to someone who simply doesn't care enough about the organization to do things the right way, the right time, every single time, and it becomes such a point that you're like I just -- the totality is just too much to tolerate for the organization. It's too great a risk when it comes to national security.

Q And then the last one, the fourth subconsideration is evidence of significant misuse of government or other employer's time or resources. Could you provide examples of what that would mean?

A That's where you're using your, sometimes your government employment, to do things that are not related to the interests of the government or that job as it relates to the United States Government. So you might use your position at some point to order illegal silencers for weapons and have them shipped to an FBI field office. That would be conduct that would exceed your government authority as an employee and waste resources and time.

Q I want to move on to guideline -- we have 15 minutes left -- I want to move on to guideline K, which is handling protected information. It begins on page 21.

So the concern section for this guideline reads: Deliberate or negligent failure to comply with rules and regulations for handling protected information, which includes classified and other sensitive government information and proprietary information, raises doubt about an individual's trustworthiness, judgment, reliability, or willingness and ability to safeguard such information, and is a serious security concern.

Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So this concern isn't just limited to classified information but to all sensitive information, correct?

A Correct. It's indicative of how you would handle national security information.

Q And you said FOUO is for --

A Official use only.

Q Okay. And then what other nonclassified, sensitive categories are there?

A So we have unclassified -- you have your official use unclassified but official use only, confidential, secret, and top secret, and then subcompartmented, sensitive compartmented information accesses beyond that.

Q So where would law enforcement-sensitive information fall?

A It would go in -- it's down there at the unclassified and classified law enforcement-sensitive.

Q Okay. So the concern applies to both deliberative and negligent failure, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Why is negligent failure of concern?

A Because it shows that you're not using good judgment. You're careless. You're not thinking through the actions. And, again, if you can't think through the actions, you're not -- we're not going to give you national security information because you're showing that you're careless. You're not using good judgment in the way you handle things.

Q The first -- the very first condition under conditions that could raise a national security concern and may be disqualifying is the disclosure of protected to unauthorized persons including to the media, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Why is it of concern if an individual with access to sensitive or classified information discloses it to unauthorized persons including the media?

A It can cause damage to operations. It can put other law enforcement officers at risk, specifically, if it involves the tactics or arrests that are pending, and it, again, can cause harm to the United States Government if it's classified information.

Q Okay. The second condition that could raise a security concern and may be disqualifying is collecting or storing protected information and any -- excuse me -- in any unauthorized location.

So would this include a situation in which an individual removes sensitive information from an FBI computer system and transmits it to a non-FBI computer?

A Absolutely.

Q Or puts it on a non-FBI device?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And the situation I just described would also implicate concern C, I think, which is loading, drafting, editing, modifying, storing, transmitting, or otherwise handling protected information, including images on any unauthorized equipment or medium, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. The sixth condition that could raise a security concern and may be disqualify is little -- small letter f, includes viewing or downloading information from a secure system when the information is beyond an individual's need to know. What does "need to know" mean in this context?

A In that context, although everyone has a top secret clearance or a secret clearance, or even access to law enforcement-sensitive information, you don't need to know. So you have, like an example would be, you have a big celebrity case or something over here that's super in the news or whatever and you're interested in it; I just want to know the back story to it. You don't have a need to know, so you have no right to go into that case, be it unclassified, classified, law enforcement-sensitive, and how it's marked. You don't have a need to know; you don't get to go look at it.

Q Okay. What's a secure system?

A We use, we call that our Sentinel records, our FBI system. That's our official record, our official system of record. It's where we keep all of our cases, our sources, that type of information.

Q Is the Guardian system part of the Sentinel system?

A It is.

Q Okay. So the Guardian --

A It's a subcomponent of it, yes, ma'am.

Q So the Guardian system would be considered a secure system?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. The seventh condition that could raise a security concern and may be disqualifying is any failure to comply with rules for the protection of classified or sensitive information.

Does the FBI take particular steps to ensure that its employees are aware of the rules for the protection of classified or sensitive information?

A Absolutely. We have a warning banner that comes up on all of our systems, be it unclassified or classified systems. We have warnings there, we have posters throughout. Again, we have OPSEC training. We train our employees throughout the year on it. Yes, ma'am.

Q That warning banner that you described, is that when an employee signs on to their computer? When does that appear?

A Soon as you touch your computer, the screen pops up and it gives you the warnings.

Q Okay. Do you have to click through to --

A You do. You have to acknowledge that you understand your warning every single time.

Q Okay.

[redacted] And I want to introduce as exhibit No. 4 FBI form FD889.

[Moore Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q This is the FBI information technology and information systems rules of behavior for general users agreement form. This is the version 04-01-2019.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you familiar with this?

A I am.

Q Okay. Is this the current version of it?

A It is.

Q Okay. Does the FBI require all employees to sign this agreement?

A We do.

Q Okay. And, at the bottom of page 4 of this agreement, users certify that they will not remove sensitive or classified media from controlled areas without authorization, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay.

[redacted] And I also want to introduce, as exhibit 5, FBI form FD857A, which is the sensitive information nondisclosure agreement.

[Moore Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with this?

A I am.

Q And this has, in the upper left-hand corner, it says 09-09-2016. To your knowledge, is this the most current version of this?

A To my knowledge, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Does the FBI require all employees with access to sensitive information to sign this agreement?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, in paragraph 3 of this agreement, employees verify that they have been informed of the unauthorized access, disclosure, or retention of sensitive information, or negligent handling of such information, could cause irreparable damages to FBI investigations, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, in paragraph 4, employees verify that they have been advised that any breach of this agreement may result in a termination of their relationship with the FBI and access to FBI facilities, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So I want to turn back to the guidelines now, and I actually -- sorry.

Moving on, I'm going to move on to guideline M, which is the use of information technology. It's on page 23. The concern associated with this guideline is that failure to comply with rules, procedures, guidelines, or regulations pertaining to information technology systems may raise security concerns about an individual's reliability and trustworthiness, calling into question the willingness or ability to properly protect sensitive systems, networks, and information, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Can you explain why it raises a security concern if an individual with access to sensitive or classified information fails to comply with applicable information technology rules and regulations?

A Information technology is where we keep all of our cases, our CHSes, our tips; everything is in there. If you cannot appropriately abide by the guidelines that we've laid out for you, then you're a risk to national security because I don't know that I can trust you to do anything within our systems.

Q Okay. And one mitigating factor, which is on page 24, is that, if the misuse was due to improper or inadequate training or unclear instructions, that could mitigate whether an employee would be held -- would potentially lose access to information under this section.

Could you explain the training that employees go through with respect to the rules associated with information technology systems?

A Sure. Everybody, again, upon entry, goes through the One training at Quantico, and they're taught exactly how you can use your systems. When they get to the field offices, you're issued an employee badge, which is part of your access and a token to even obtain access to our classified or unclassified information. You have regular trainings, usually within the office, by -- once a year, we have an all-employee conference. And, additionally, we have InfoSec training that's mandatory once a year as well where you re-execute your acknowledgement to understand -- you have to pass the test and acknowledge that you understand how to continue to use systems. And, again, we have the warnings on all of our systems every day.

Q Okay. And do employees know who they can ask if they have a question about proper use?

A They do. Their chief security officer is the -- we have flyers -- InfoSec flyers up in the office, and additionally, if you try to remove something, you get a warning before it removes. Like, if you're going to plug in a thumb drive and you're downloading information or you're trying to downdraft information, you get a warning.

Q And it's a banner that pops up on the computer screen?

A Yeah. You have to override it and say: I'm going to do this.

Q So you have to affirmatively click "I want to override"?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. We have just like, I think, couple minutes left. So, before I go on to a completely new area, just a couple of wrap-up questions.

You were asked earlier about insider threat training and whistleblower training.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Can you clarify what insider threat training is?

A Insider threat is we consider that to be someone who is a threat to the organization. It could be, like, a hostile employee where it's violence on violence from an employee to an employee that we consider those insider threats.

We consider anybody that's trying to steal information and give it to a foreign country, that type of insider threat. They're very different. It's an entire group upon itself.

Q And I think you said that they were published the same day. Does that mean that employees had to take them the same day?

A I am not sure that they were published on the same day. I'm taking that that must -- somebody has said that they have been, so I should look into that and get the exact dates for you on the last several years of when they were published and how they were published.

No, you don't have to take them on the same day, just because we populate at different quarters how much training you have that quarter that's due.

Q Okay. So, in other words, you, as an employee, have eight trainings that you have to take, and they might pop up on the same day, but that doesn't mean that you're obligated to take them that day?

A Correct. Yeah, each of them have a deadline. It will tell you in your virtual academy when your deadline is, and it will send you reminders to take them.

Q And how long is that deadline usually?

A Usually it's within the quarter. Sometimes it's even with the 6-months period.

Q Okay. So it's like 3 to 6 months essentially?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. So you have these trainings that pop up, but you can take them at any -- at any point?

A At any time, yeah.

Q Okay. And you said earlier, I think your line was "we don't play to the lowest common denominator." Do you think most employees can understand the difference between an insider threat and a whistleblower?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. And then you were asked earlier about a number of individuals that you said you couldn't talk about in specificity, but you did say that individuals could be -- could provide a waiver, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so, to your knowledge, none of these individuals have provided such a waiver to allow you -- that would permit you to talk about it?

A That is correct.

[redacted] Okay. I think we can -- we have about 2 minutes left -- we can go off the record now.

[Recess.]

[12:30 p.m.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. It's 12:30 p.m.

BY [redacted]

Q Ms. Moore, I'm going to talk to you again about some specific adjudications.

A Okay.

Q So are you familiar with a staff operations specialist, Marcus Allen?

A I am familiar with Staff Operations Specialist Marcus Allen.

Q Do you know what field office he worked out of?

A I believe he worked out of the Charlotte Field Office.

Q And what is Mr. Allen's current status with the FBI?

A He's currently suspended.

Q And are you aware that Mr. Allen is a combat military veteran who served deployments in Kuwait and Iraq?

A I am.

Q And, according to representations made by Mr. Allen's attorney to the FBI, Mr. Allen has consistently been rated as exceeding expectations during his tenure at the FBI. Is that accurate?

A And, again, I'm not going to get into the specific investigations surrounding suspended employees.

Q According to Mr. Allen's attorney, he also has received annual step increases on the GS pay scale and several awards, including Employee of the Year in 2019 at the Charlotte Field Office. Is that accurate?

A Again, I cannot talk about ongoing investigations.

Q Do you remember the circumstances surrounding Mr. Allen's suspension?

A I unfortunately am not allowed to talk about any pending security investigative matters. At the conclusion I will be happy to come in and answer any and all questions.

[redacted] So is your refusal to answer questions on these matters related to the Privacy Act? Or what's the basis for the refusal?

Ms. Greer. Well, it's both the Privacy Act but also the deliberative privilege for something that is currently undergoing review.

[redacted] Okay. I mean, the committee doesn't recognize nonconstitutional-based privileges. I mean, we've had a long back-and-forth on -- we don't recognize the deliberative process privilege.

I mean, if it's a decision that is going up to the Director, that's a little different than something that hasn't reached the Director.

Ms. Gibbs. So, at this point, these employees have pending investigations, and they should be allowed a fair and impartial process and allow that to proceed to its logical conclusion, both pending before the FBI Security Division and administrative forums.

After she reaches her decision, these individuals can appeal those decisions to third parties, and we want to ensure that those processes are able to proceed impartially and fairly.

[redacted] Okay. But what's the basis for the objection?

Chairman Jordan. Sounds like the Privacy --

[redacted] Is it the Privacy Act?

Chairman Jordan. Sounds like the Privacy --

Ms. Gibbs. That it is a pending investigation. These matters have not been resolved. Once they reach their logical conclusion we are more than happy to --

[redacted] No, I heard you. I mean, that's your desire, right? But what is the legal basis for not providing that information to Congress?

Ms. Greer. We are here voluntarily today --

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. -- happy to provide what information we can --

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. -- under the constraints that --

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Greer. -- we are under.

[redacted] Yeah. We have a deposition subpoena prepared, and we'll get it to you momentarily, so --

Ms. Greer. To be clear, that's not going to change the position of what we're able to share today, to make sure -- [redacted] The deposition won't be for today. We'll bring you back next week or whenever the date is.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay.

Is there another question?

[redacted] I can keep going.

[redacted] Right. But from the witness's standpoint, what's the reason that you can't answer it? Is it just because your lawyers are telling you not to?

Ms. Moore. Correct.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q What was your involvement with Mr. Allen's suspension?

A I am the security program manager, so I sign the suspension letters.

Q And on January 10, 2022, you signed a letter to Mr. Allen suspending his clearance. Do you remember that?

A I don't remember the specific date. I am aware that I am the individual who executed that signature.

Q And, in the letter, do you remember that you said, "The suspension of your security clearance is based on security concerns related to Adjudicative Guideline A, allegiance to the United States"?

What information did you have to support these security concerns?

A Unfortunately, at this time I cannot discuss ongoing security investigations. At the conclusion of the investigation I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q But it must be pretty big if you're questioning the allegiance of a combat military veteran.

A At this time, I'm not allowed to answer any questions regarding a security investigation that is ongoing.

Q What materials did the Human Resources Branch rely upon as the basis for suspending Mr. Allen's clearance?

A At this time, I'm not allowed to discuss any security investigations that are ongoing. At the conclusion of the investigation I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

[redacted] And earlier -- let me just ask you this again -- did you invite us to get a waiver from these individuals, and if we get a waiver from these individuals, you're able to discuss it?

Ms. Moore. I was advised originally by counsel that that would work, yes, sir.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And, in Mr. Allen's case, you've talked about in the beginning this kind of, like, three-step process. The allegation comes into the Intake Unit, there's an investigative stage, and then there's an adjudicative stage. But you said that sometimes it can go from the Intake Unit straight to the adjudicative stage. Is that correct?

A That can -- that can be correct, yes, ma'am.

Q So, in Mr. Allen's case, did it go through this three-step or did it go directly to the adjudicative stage?

A I am unfortunately not able to discuss that at this time as it's an ongoing security investigation.

Q And what information has Mr. Allen been provided between January 10, 2022, and now, April 24, 2023?

A He would've received a suspension letter.

Q And what was included with that suspension letter?

A I'm not -- I cannot discuss anything that goes along with a security investigation. But he received a letter.

Q So it's been over --

Chairman Jordan. Is there --

[redacted] Oh, go ahead, sir.

Chairman Jordan. In these situations, is there typically other information that gets provided to the individual who has received the suspension letter?

Ms. Moore. Generally, within a suspension letter, it will lay out the guidelines that they were suspended under. But that's all that 12968 requires be provided at that point for due process, and so that's what they get, sir.

Chairman Jordan. That's all they get in any type -- in a broad sense, any type of these investigations?

Ms. Moore. In a broad sense, yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Has Mr. Allen been interviewed?

A At this time, I cannot discuss ongoing security investigations.

Q And so, in the second paragraph of your letter that you've sent Mr. Allen, you said that "the Security Division has learned you have espoused conspiratorial views both orally and in writing and promoted unreliable information which indicates support for the events of January 6th."

How do you define "conspiratorial views"?

A Are you saying in regards to Mr. Allen or in general?

Q Just in general.

A Conspiratorial views would be views opposite the United States Constitution.

Q So would they be views contrary to the FBI's views on an investigation?

A They would be contrary to the United States Constitution and law.

Q And who determines what is a conspiracy view -- a conspiratorial view?

A It would be what is in conflict to the United States Constitution and law.

Q Who makes that decision? Is it you?

A The United States Constitution defines what's conspiratorial. The --

Q And who --

A -- adjudicative guidelines --

Q -- looks at both documents?

Ms. Gibbs. Could you please let her finish speaking?

Are you finished with your answer?

Ms. Moore. No, I wasn't.

The adjudicative guidelines lay out the parameters, the left- and right-lane limits, specifically in Guideline A, which we talked about, which was allegiance to the United States. That gives you your left- and right-lane limits.

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Ms. Moore. And that's how they are applied.

There are seven layers of our process where individuals do the investigation --

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Ms. Moore. -- up to finally the recommendation to the security program manager.

BY [redacted]

Q And I understand that that's your process. But who looks at those documents and looks at what an individual who's under scrutiny -- the allegations against them, who looks at that and makes that determination, whether it's a conspiracy theory or a conspiratorial view?

A All seven layers will review the investigation or the information provided and make a recommendation.

Q And so, in your letter, you stated, "These allegations raise sufficient concerns about your allegiance to the United States and your judgment to warrant suspension of your clearance pending further investigation."

What facts made you question Mr. Allen's allegiance to the United States?

A At this time, I cannot discuss an ongoing security investigation. At the conclusion of the investigation I'll be happy to come back and answer any and all questions.

Q And did you personally review the information against Mr. Allen? You, personally?

A In any case I review all the information.

Chairman Jordan. Why didn't you just say, "You've expressed views that are unconstitutional" or "not consistent with the Constitution"? I mean, that was your answer you just gave to [redacted]. You said that "you've espoused" -- I think the term you used here, allegiance to the United States. "You espoused conspiratorial views both orally and in writing." Why didn't you just say that "you espoused views that were contrary to the Constitution"?

Because that's how you answered it. When she asked you what conspiratorial views are, you said they're contrary to the Constitution. Why didn't you just say that in your letter then?

Ms. Greer. Do we have a copy of the letter that she might be able to see?

[redacted] We can certainly enter it if you'd like, yeah. We'll enter this as exhibit No. 6, I believe.

[Moore Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Here's that.

Ms. Greer. I just wanted to make sure, since we're talking about specific words, she had an opportunity to review.

Ms. Moore. Yes. Will you -- I'm sorry. Will you ask me the question again? It's to the sentence --

Chairman Jordan. I believe -- and we can have the reporter read it back. But I believe when [redacted] asked you about -- the suspension of your security clearance is based on the -- "the Security Division has learned that you've espoused conspiratorial views, both orally and in writing, promoting unreliable information."

And you said -- [redacted] asked you, what are conspiratorial views? And you said, views contrary to the Constitution. So why didn't you just say it that way in the letter?

Ms. Moore. Choice of wording by the individual who wrote the actual letter.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You didn't write it?

A Do I write this actual letter? No, sir. It's prepared for me in the process of the seven steps. And then I review all the information that comes in, with any suspension letter, and then make a determination based off of that.

Q So you just sign the letter; you don't write it? You don't edit it?

A If I find that it needs to be edited, yes, sir, I can edit it. But I actually don't write the letter myself, no, sir.

Q So sometimes the letter will be different even if it's the same issue?

A Each issue is independent on its own. We've kind of talked about that. And wording can be -- some people like the word "that." Some people like the word "which." So it depends upon sometimes who's writing it. But as long as the meat is there --

Q So you don't edit out the "that"s?

A I could, sir, if I chose to.

Q But you don't?

A The --

Q You just sign it?

A I don't "just sign" anything. I read everything that I sign, and I review all the materials that support that signature.

Q Right. But I'm saying, do you edit it to -- do you like -- do you use the word "that" in letters? Yes or no?

A Do I? No, sir.

Q Okay. So, if you get letters that you're supposed to sign and it has too many "that"s, do you edit them out or do you just sign it?

A It depends. It depends upon -- if it's changing "puppies" to "little dogs," no, sir, I may not, because it's someone else's -- it's just -- it's not material to the document.

Q Okay. And you get --

A I try --

Q -- a lot -- you sign a lot of these letters?

A No, sir.

Q So it's not a time thing? It's a --

A I have a very busy day. If you're asking --

Q Right.

A -- if my days are busy, my days don't just consume of these. I am the executive assistant director. I oversee 37,000 employees within the organization.

Q Okay.

A So I have --

Q All right.

A -- lots of things that happen on a --

Q Okay.

A -- given day. But I take as great a deal of time, read each of these, read the information that comes up supporting them.

Q Okay.

A I don't just sign anything.

Q Okay.

How frequently -- when this type of letter comes to your desk, how much personal involvement do you have in verifying the underlying file?

A I review it.

Q And do you ask questions of the people that --

A If I have questions, I absolutely will ask questions. I've sent stuff back where I felt like, "Hey, we might've missed an area. I'd like some further expansion on this."

Q Okay.

A Or, "I'd like a verbal brief because I need to really understand the thought process of where we are." Absolutely. I don't ever just sign something.

Q And did you ask for any of that with any of the individuals we've asked you about today?

A I'm not allowed to discuss any of the ongoing investigations.

Q I'm not asking you to tell specifically whether you did that with Mr. Allen's case or Mr. O'Boyle's case or Mr. Friend's case. I'm just saying, generally, with any of the ones we've talked about today, did you ask for any followup?

A I cannot discuss any ongoing investigations, and all the investigations we have talked about today have been ongoing.

Q Uh-huh.

A The only one I believe that y'all have expressed any interest in writing to me about was Kyle Seraphin, and we can talk endlessly about that one because it's completed.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And so, on January 13, 2022, Katherine Bordeaux (ph) -- am I pronouncing her last name --

A Bordeaux.

Q Bordeaux? She's the unit chief of the Performance Appraisal Unit. She notified Mr. Allen that, based upon your decision to suspend his clearance, the FBI was proposing to indefinitely suspend him.

Did you have awareness of that?

A Yes.

Q And is Ms. Bordeaux one of your direct reports?

A She is not a direct report to me, no, ma'am. She works within our Human Resources Division.

Q Uh-huh.

A She is a unit chief. She falls under a section chief, who falls under our deputy assistant director, who falls under our assistant director.

Q So does she go through a different process than the security clearance process that you're going through?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so what does her process look like? What do you understand it to be?

A The Performance Appraisal Unit --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- process? That is -- it goes, again, through the Human Resources Division up to a deciding for signature for conduct -- you'd have to read me that again. I'm sorry.

Q And does her unit fall within the Human Resources Branch?

A It falls within the branch, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And how often do you interact with Ms. Bordeaux?

A I probably see Ms. Bordeaux about every 2 weeks.

Q And what are her roles and responsibilities as you understand them?

A She's a unit chief over our Performance Appraisal and Performance Unit. They make recommendations based off of employee conduct, personnel rankings, those type of things.

Q And, in her letter to Mr. Allen, she kind of walks through some of his rights that he had -- the right to review all of the materials relied upon as the basis for his proposed suspension.

Would that include information that your office was reviewing?

A That would not include any information within Security.

Q So you're running two separate investigations at the same time. Is that correct?

A Those can happen, yes, ma'am. There can be a third or fourth as well. There could be an inspector general investigation into the conduct of an employee. There can also be an Inspection Division misconduct investigation of the employee. There can be multiple going on at one time.

Q So is it your understanding that -- your investigation is still ongoing into Mr. Allen. Is her investigation into Mr. Allen still ongoing?

A Ms. Bordeaux at this time? I can't discuss pending investigative matters. I'm sorry.

Q So, "pending investigative matter." So it's still ongoing?

A I cannot discuss any investigative matters regarding the individual in question.

Q And then on February 17, 2022, Mr. Allen received notice that he was indefinitely suspended. Did you have any role in that decision?

A I would've been the signer, yes, ma'am.

Q And so that would have been --

Ms. Gibbs. I'm sorry. Can you just clarify, which suspension?

Ms. Moore. Yeah, I'm very sorry. I apologize.

Ms. Gibbs. And there are multiple suspensions. Can you just clarify which one -- [redacted] Allen.

Ms. Gibbs. -- we're talking about? Yeah. Right. But the security clearance suspension or something else? I'm not sure --

[redacted] His indefinite suspension.

Ms. Gibbs. Yeah.

She's not talking about the security clearance suspension.

[redacted] The indefinite suspension. So, on -- what date was it? On February 13, 2022, he received the notice that -- the proposal for indefinite suspension. Then, on February 17, 2022, he received notice that he had been indefinitely suspended.

Ms. Gibbs. Do you have a copy of that letter --

Ms. Moore. Yeah.

Ms. Gibbs. -- so she can take a look at it and just to see?

[redacted] Sure. We can enter it.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay.

[redacted] Yeah.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay.

Why don't you just take a minute and look at it?

Ms. Moore. Can I have a moment to chat to counsel too?

[redacted] Uh-huh.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

I'd like to offer a February 17, 2022, letter from Christine O'Neill, the assistant director of the Human Resources Division, to Mr. Allen as exhibit No. 7.

[Moore Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Moore. So this is not signed by me. This is effected by the associate director of Human Resources Division. This is separate than the security investigation.

BY [redacted]

Q So they used your decision to suspend Mr. Allen's clearance to inform their investigation? Is that accurate?

A You have to have a clearance as a condition of employment.

Q Uh-huh.

A So they would utilize the suspension, yes, ma'am.

Q And so where does that fall under the Human Resources Division? Is this separate than --

A It's a totally separate process.

Q -- Ms. Bordeaux?

A It's Ms. Bordeaux, yes.

Q Okay.

A But this portion does not come to me. This goes to the assistant director. I would be the appellant. If they should choose to make an appeal to it, they would come to me for that decision.

Q But Ms. O'Neill and Ms. Bordeaux -- I don't know if it's the same person, but --

A Well, they're two different people.

Q Two different people? Okay.

And so their process is separate from yours. But then if Mr. Allen wanted to appeal their decision, he would have to come to you?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay.

Ms. Gibbs. I'm sorry. Can we just go off the record for a second?

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Moore. Okay. Let's go back on so I can clarify. I'm sorry.

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

Ms. Moore. All right.

So, to clarify, I have no role in this at all. So this is handled in the Human Resources Division, but I am recused from it because I do serve as the security program manager. So the assistant director of Human Resources is the one that executed on this. So I can't talk to this at all.

BY [redacted]

Q So is the Human Resources Division within the Human Resources Branch?

A It is.

Q So you're the executive assistant director of the Human Resources Branch, correct?

A I am.

Q But you're recused from this process because you are --

A The security programs manager.

Q And then Mr. Allen could appeal the decision about his indefinite suspension to you?

A So, I apologize, I am not involved in this at all.

BY [redacted]

Q Well, you are involved with it, because you suspended the security clearance. And we wouldn't get to this letter without the suspended security clearance.

A But they recused me, and they do only from this one. This is where I was confused --

Q Okay.

A -- on what you were asking initially. I have nothing to do with this part.

Q But saying you have no involvement at all is a little too broad there.

A I think it's -- in any matter that you're recused from, if you say, "I've got a personal interest in the matter, and I'm not going to sign this because I'm recused from it," then there's a wall that's built there.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And what's the status of your investigation regarding Mr. Allen?

A I'm sorry. I can't discuss ongoing investigations.

BY [redacted]

Q How long has the investigation been going on?

A I don't know exactly.

BY [redacted]

Q So you suspended his clearance on January 10, 2022. So, if it's still ongoing as of today, that's over a year?

A That would be over a year then.

Q Is that normal?

A It can be, depending upon the complexities of the investigation.

BY [redacted]

Q Is his investigation complex?

A I would say that it depends upon anybody's complexity of an investigation. I would think, if you were looking at a timeline that was a year, I would say, yes, it could be complex.

Q So you think his is complex.

A I would say that any investigation that takes a year would be complex. Criminal investigations can take up to 5 years at times. Some take 6 months.

Q Well, this is not a criminal investigation.

A But it's the same concept. You take criminal codes and put in the adjudicative guidelines. We take it very seriously. We want to get it right.

BY [redacted]

Q And during this time period, has Mr. Allen -- does he have the opportunity to appeal your decision to suspend his clearance?

A He does not have the opportunity -- they do not have an opportunity to appeal a suspended clearance.

Q So he's just supposed to be waiting for over a year for your investigation to conclude while on indefinite suspension, unpaid?

A Per Executive Order 12968. We follow the executive order.

Q Do you think that's fair? In Mr. Allen's case, that he's been waiting over a year, do you --

A I won't --

Q -- personally think that's fair?

A I won't weigh into it personally. I am executed as a security program manager of the organization to follow the executive guidelines. 12968 does not allow me to deviate.

BY [redacted]

Q Are the guidelines fair?

A I find the guidelines to be fair.

Q Okay. So you think it's fair.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with Special Agent Garret O'Boyle?

A I am familiar with Special Agent Garret O'Boyle.

Q Do you know what field office he worked out of?

A Kansas City, I believe.

Q And what's Mr. O'Boyle's current status with the Bureau?

A Mr. O'Boyle is currently suspended.

Q And are you aware that Mr. O'Boyle is also a combat military veteran?

A I am.

Q Are you aware that on September 23, 2022, you signed a letter that suspended his security clearance?

A I would have to see the letter, but if you're -- I will acquiesce that that was probably the date, since you have it.

Q And what information did you have to support your security concerns against Mr. O'Boyle?

A I'm sorry, but I'm not allowed to discuss any ongoing security investigation. At the time that it is adjudicated, then I will be happy to come back and discuss any and all matters.

Q Did you rely upon witness testimony or emails or documents?

A I'm not allowed to discuss any security investigation that continues to be ongoing. At the conclusion I'll be happy to come back and testify to it.

Q What allegations did you have at the time that raised sufficient concern about Mr. O'Boyle's judgment, trustworthiness, and reliability to suspend his clearance?

A Unfortunately, at this time, I'm not allowed to discuss any ongoing security investigation. At the conclusion of the investigation I'll be happy to come back and discuss all matters.

Q And who made the allegations against Mr. O'Boyle?

A At this time, I'm not allowed to discuss any security ongoing investigations.

Q And did they have any sort of relationship with Mr. O'Boyle? Were they in his chain of command?

A At this time, I cannot discuss any ongoing security violations -- or investigations. Excuse me.

Q What is the status of your investigation into Mr. O'Boyle?

A Mr. O'Boyle's investigation is ongoing at this time.

Q How has the FBI not made a determination as to the veracity of these allegations in 7 months?

A Investigations can take a long amount of time to vet them out. The investigation is ongoing.

Q Is it a complex investigation?

A It can be. Yes, ma'am.

Q And did you or those under your charge do any investigation into whether Mr. O'Boyle was making protected disclosures to Congress?

A No, ma'am.

Q As part of your investigation or evaluation, have you spoken with Mr. O'Boyle's chain of command?

A I cannot discuss ongoing investigations that involve a security clearance.

Q In his testimony to the committee, Mr. O'Boyle testified that he tried to utilize his chain of command to make protected disclosures. Are you aware of this?

A I am not.

Q And are you aware that, under the Federal whistleblower protection statute, a person just must reasonably believe that they have evidence of wrongdoing to avail themselves of those protections?

A I am familiar with the Whistleblower Act, yes, ma'am.

Q And do you have any evidence that shows that what Mr. O'Boyle was reporting to his chain of command, he did not have a reasonable belief that it was evidence of wrongdoing?

A I'm unaware of anything that Mr. O'Boyle was reporting being a security -- or, excuse me, a whistleblower allegation. I've not been briefed on anything regarding that. To my understanding, no one has brought that to my attention. I don't know what his whistleblower disclosure is.

Q Even to his chain of command?

A No, ma'am, I don't.

BY [redacted]

Q What kind of underlying investigation can you do if you don't even know that?

A I'm the security program manager.

Q Yeah.

A I'm not charged with the actual investigation. There's investigators that do that at the line level. So they very well may be aware. I'm not sure of that. But they would --

Q Okay.

A -- not be investigating to find out what a whistleblower allegation was. No, sir. They would be investigating the security concern that was raised around the employee in the situation.

Chairman Jordan. Would they know that the employee in question was functioning under the whistleblower statute?

Ms. Moore. They would not, sir. Not necessarily.

Chairman Jordan. That seems like a pretty important thing to know. If someone's alleging they're bringing forward information that's protected, that Congress has a right to know, and they're functioning as a whistleblower, that seems to me something that should be conveyed to the people investigating and, frankly, should be conveyed to you as the person who signed the letter and doing the suspension.

Ms. Moore. So we aren't told who whistleblowers are. So I'm not aware of who all has even come to you guys and said they're whistleblowers unless they've gone to the media themselves and said, "Hey, I'm a whistleblower." I don't know what their protected disclosures are. Somebody doesn't call me up, as a security program manager, and tell me that or brief me that on any of my employees at all.

Chairman Jordan. But there's an investigation happening of this employee, and then at some point they allege that they're a whistleblower. You don't get that information?

Ms. Moore. No, sir. Not -- no, sir.

But I want to be really clear. Whistleblowers are protected, absolutely, and there is a whistleblower protective act.

There is also the National Security Act that requires protection of national security information --

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

Ms. Moore. -- also based off of a need to know.

Those two do not get to be in conflict. So I am not made aware of who the whistleblowers are, no, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Ms. Moore. You -- I'm not, sir. I'm sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q And so, at the time of Mr. O'Boyle's suspension, he had been making whistleblower disclosures to Congress. And, you know, then he gets suspended based upon a dubious allegation that has gone unproven for over 7 months.

Do you see why Mr. O'Boyle's situation looks a lot like whistleblower retaliation?

A I'm not authorized to discuss any ongoing security investigation.

Q And during his testimony before this committee, Mr. O'Boyle detailed the abject cruelty with which the FBI has treated him and his young family.

Are you aware that Mr. O'Boyle was suspended on his first day reporting for a new unit in Virginia?

A I was not aware it was on his first day reporting to a new unit in Virginia.

Q Are you that, in order to accommodate the transfer to this new unit, he had to move from Kansas to Virginia?

A What I'm aware of is that he applied and wanted that promotion and that transfer --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and then it's up to the employee to execute their transfer upon their timeline within 90 days.

Q And so, during this time period, Mr. O'Boyle and his family sold their house in Kansas. They packed up their belongings in August. The FBI moved these belongings to Virginia to accommodate the transfer and put them in FBI storage. They contracted with a storage agency, so we understand, that was holding these belongings.

And then the FBI gave Mr. O'Boyle the runaround for over a month, and he was unable to access his personal belongings -- his kids' clothing, their furniture. I think each kid had a backpack of clothes and toys.

Does this surprise you? Did you know about this?

A I am unaware of this.

BY [redacted]

Q Does it concern you?

A In what manner? I'm sorry.

Q In the manner that [redacted] just articulated to you, that he packed up his house, all his belongings, moved to Virginia, and the FBI waited -- the FBI waited until he did all of that, and then they suspend him on his very first day, and then he can't even get his personal effects out of storage without paying $10,000 of his own money.

Does that concern you?

A I do not believe that the way you stated that is how it occurred. So I don't think that is accurate. But --

Q Okay. So what is accurate?

A -- what I will tell you is that I care about every single one of our employees. I take their well-being very seriously. I'm a huge wellness proponent within our organization. And I'm adamant for every employee to be treated fairly and accurately. My whole management principle is around "be kind."

Q Okay.

A So, no matter what we're doing, if we're suspending a clearance, if we're bringing on board an employee, or if we're at a retirement, we are always kind.

When I was over criminal investigations, if we were arresting people, we were fricking kind. Because that's how you do it. You do it --

Q You were what kind? What was the --

A You're kind. You're not nasty, and you're --

Q Did you say "fricking kind"?

A No, sir.

[redacted] Can you read that back?

Ms. Moore. If I did, I'm sorry.

[The reporter read back the record as requested.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

A Because that's how you treat people. So I wouldn't deny someone their ability to get their household goods or their children's toys.

Q Okay.

A I'm not aware that that happened. I can assure you, though, that there was no grand conspiracy to wait --

Q Okay.

A -- until he executed a move --

Q So, if that did happen, then what's the remedy? If that did happen, then what would you do about it?

Ms. Gibbs. Can you just clarify? If what happened?

[redacted] What happened to Mr. Boyle.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay. And can you --

[redacted] O'Boyle.

Ms. Gibbs. Like, specifically why? Are you talking about the suspension?

[redacted] I'm talking about the whole series of events.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay. So if the whole series of events happened -- which ones?

[redacted] Well, it's certainly not kind, and it's certainly not fair. And so I'm asking the witness what you would do about it, since this is an area of your responsibility.

Ms. Moore. And I'm going to disagree with your statement. We absolutely execute fairly. So the investigative steps, the suspension were done fairly based off of the information that was provided to us. That I am confident of.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

A It's unfortunate that Mr. O'Boyle was in the process of executing a move that he requested at his own --

Q Right.

A -- tenure. He decided his move date. He decided when he moved. Those were his decisions.

Q Why couldn't you have suspended him before he left Kansas, before he sold his house?

A It depends upon where it was in the process at any given time, sir. I can assure you --

Q Before he packed up all his goods?

A What I can 100 percent assure you of, it wasn't done intentionally.

Q That wasn't done intentionally. What happened to Mr. Friend wasn't done intentionally. These are just all coincidences?

A I'm not sure what you're referring to that happened to Mr. Friend.

Q Mr. Friend, where you denied his firearms training documents. We discussed that in the first hour.

A We did, and I owned that. That was a mistake.

Q Okay.

A Mistakes happen when you have a 37,000-employee organization.

Q Okay.

A Absolutely. And I own that, and I am very sorry that happened to him.

Q Okay.

A And I have taken the measures to ensure it doesn't happen to anyone else.

Q Okay.

Are you sorry, what happened to Mr. O'Boyle?

A In the sense that Mr. O'Boyle was treated fairly in the process of what they have done to the security suspension? I can -- I'm not responsible for the fact that Mr. O'Boyle executed a move. The timing of the suspension occurred when it came through.

BY [redacted]

Q And I'll represent to you that we have heard from a couple of individuals that the Kansas City SAC, Charles Dayoub, knew Mr. O'Boyle was going to be suspended -- his clearance was going to be suspended prior to the O'Boyle family leaving for Virginia.

Is that surprising to you?

A Surprising to me? I would not be able to testify to what Mr. Dayoub knew or did not know. I'm sorry.

Q But you sent the security clearance letter to the field office, correct?

A They should be served when they receive them.

Q And so, if Charles Dayoub knew beforehand that Mr. O'Boyle was going to be suspended, why didn't the FBI suspend him while he was in Kansas, if he was such a big security risk, before he moved to Virginia?

A I would not -- again, we sign the letters when they come through, when it's reviewed. Then I'll execute the letter, and it's served.

Are you saying -- so I may be confused -- that Kansas City intentionally held the letter and didn't serve it to him?

Could we get the date that's on that letter again?

Q The date that's on Mr. O'Boyle's letter? That was -- Chairman Jordan. October 22nd.

Ms. Moore. Yeah. And what day did Mr. O'Boyle execute his actual move?

BY [redacted]

Q His first day was on September 23, 2022.

A And so what was the date of the letter?

Q September 23, 2022.

A Okay. So --

Q So that's just some big coincidence, that it was his first day --

A Absolutely.

Q -- in Virginia?

A It most certainly could be, yes, ma'am.

Q Wow, that's a big coincidence.

A I'm sorry, I didn't hear you?

Q And so what is the current status --

A I'm sorry. I didn't hear what you just said.

Q I said --

[redacted] She said, "Wow, that's a big coincidence."

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Ms. Moore. Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q What is the current status of your investigation regarding Mr. O'Boyle?

A It's ongoing.

Q And when can the committee and Mr. O'Boyle expect answers?

A As soon as the adjudication is complete.

Q Why has the FBI kept Mr. O'Boyle languishing on indefinite suspension? Is the goal to get him to resign?

A Absolutely not. That is not a goal of ours at all. It's to do a thorough and accurate and complete investigation.

Q Have you personally been in contact with Mr. O'Boyle?

A I have not.

Q Have any of your direct reports been in contact with Mr. O'Boyle?

A I do not know that answer.

Q Who is the point of contact for Mr. O'Boyle from your office?

A That would be our investigative unit within Security Division.

Q And do you know which specific person within that unit is responsible for Mr. O'Boyle's case?

A I do not.

Q And so, going back to Mr. Friend, that's exhibit No. 1, his security clearance suspension. I think we kind of started on this before our first hour wrapped. But in --

Chairman Jordan. Can I just jump in for a second, [redacted]?

[redacted] Yep.

Chairman Jordan. So it was a mistake not to give Mr. Friend his training records that he requested.

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. And it was a coincidence that Mr. O'Boyle was suspended on the very day he moved from the Kansas office to Virginia.

Ms. Gibbs. I think you misstated something that she said in there. He did get his training records.

[redacted] After a long delay.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay. But I just want to be clear, because we have a record. Are you saying it was a mistake that --

Chairman Jordan. I'm saying what she said. She said it was a mistake, the way Mr. Friend was treated when he requested outside employment and his training records.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay. Thank you --

Chairman Jordan. And --

Ms. Gibbs. -- for that clarification.

Chairman Jordan. And you said it was a mistake, right?

Ms. Moore. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. And then you said it was a coincidence that Mr. O'Boyle got notice of suspension the very day he moved to Virginia.

Ms. Moore. You asked me -- or, I was asked if he was targeted and if that was intentional, to cause him some sort of pain or punishment, and it absolutely was not. That is when it came through, when the signature was executed, and it was sent down.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Ms. Moore. And I want to say for the record, though, that when people move, they set their move dates way in advance, and then they -- that's between an employee and the move company.

So, again, this was not a targeted thing. This happens when the investigation comes through and I sign it -- or the recommendation for a suspension.

BY [redacted]

Q So, going back to Mr. Friend, the first exhibit that we entered here, in the second paragraph, you stated that "on August 24, 2022, you advised your supervisors of your objection to participating in the court-authorized search and arrest of a criminal subject. During your communications, you espoused beliefs which demonstrate questionable judgment."

And I think during the first hour we kind of had a discussion about what "questionable judgment" was.

But are you aware that Mr. Friend raised his concerns to his chain of command?

A I'm not at liberty to discuss ongoing investigations.

Q And was it individuals within his chain of command that spoke to you about the objections that Mr. Friend raised?

A I'm not allowed to discuss ongoing security investigations.

Q Are you aware that once Mr. Friend spoke with senior leadership at his office he was placed on AWOL status?

A I'm not able to discuss ongoing security investigations.

Q According to Mr. Friend's testimony, he was ordered by his ASAC to go on AWOL status. How often does that happen?

A I'm not able to discuss that. I don't know that answer.

Q If he was ordered not to come into work the next day, how was Mr. Friend to comply with his supervisor's orders?

A I'm not able to discuss that. I'm not Mr. Friend's supervisor.

Q Do you know the special agent in charge of the Jacksonville Field Office, Sherri Onks?

A I am familiar with Sherri Onks.

Q What is your familiarity with Ms. Onks?

A Sherri Onks is a senior executive within the FBI who serves as a special agent in charge. She serves as a mentor to other female executives as well, and I lead that mentorship.

Q So do you know Ms. Onks?

A I do know Sherri.

Q Did she provide any information on Mr. Friend?

A I would not be allowed to -- I am not allowed to discuss any ongoing security investigations.

Q And when did the FBI provide Mr. Friend with the opportunity to review all of the materials relied upon as the basis for his proposed indefinite suspension?

A Individuals are allowed to see documents after an adjudication is complete.

BY [redacted]

Q Some of these adjudications take years, right?

A They can take a long time, yes, sir.

Q So they don't get to see the documents until after the adjudication is over.

A Per Executive Order 12968, yes, sir. I comply with the executive order.

Q And you believe the executive order is fair?

A I believe that I comply with the executive order.

Q Earlier, didn't you say it was fair?

A I believe that the executive order is fair, yes, sir.

Q Okay. So you think it's fair that they don't get access to these documents until their process -- until the process is over.

A I believe that there are reasons for that. Yes, sir.

BY [redacted]

Q And so do you think it was fair for the FBI to keep Mr. Friend suspended for 150 days without a resolution of his case without the approval of outside employment?

A I cannot talk about an ongoing investigation.

Q And Mr. Friend ultimately resigned, correct?

A Mr. Friend did resign.

Q Was that the goal?

A Absolutely not.

Q I want to talk to you about another matter here, as long as any of my colleagues have no other questions on that?

[redacted] Please. Please go on.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with Executive Order 14043 mandating the COVID-19 vaccine?

A I'm relatively familiar with it, yes, ma'am.

Q Did you have any role in the Human Resources Branch of, kind of, effectuating that executive order?

A Not when it came out, no, ma'am. I inherited what was the order when I came into the branch, yes, ma'am.

Q And what did you inherit?

A I inherited execution of the executive order.

Q And was the executive order in existence prior to you taking over as executive assistant director?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And what was the Human Resources Branch's involvement in that?

A We have to effectuate the executive order.

Q And how many reasonable-accommodation requests to Executive Order 14043 mandating the COVID vaccine did you receive?

Did you handle those? Who handled those within the FBI?

A They came in through the Office of EEOA.

Q Uh-huh.

A And HRD had some role in it.

Q What was that role of HRD?

A They review them for signature. So it's a reasonable-accommodation request --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- so they were the ones executing based off of -- I have to think about exactly how they rolled that out, because, I apologize, it's been a little bit ago. I'm just trying to remember.

Q Take your time.

A OEEOA reviewed to make sure that all the documents were present, and then they send it over to HR for the signature.

Q And so does HR do any sort of evaluation?

A They would review the documents, yes, ma'am.

Q And what does the review of the documents look like?

A I can't actually speak to that.

Q Did you oversee that process?

A For a very limited time, because there was an injunction right after I came in. So we didn't actually execute on any of that.

Q Are you aware of how many reasonable-accommodation requests were made?

A I don't know the exact number, but I believe it was around 700.

Q And does the FBI keep a record of the 700 --

A They would --

Q -- accommodation requests?

A -- have them, yes, ma'am. The OEEOA would have them.

Q And do you know how many requests for religious reasonable accommodations were submitted?

A I don't. I'm sorry. And they may have all been -- when I say that 700 number, I'm not even sure that 700 is exactly right. But they would've all been in there together, so I'm not sure.

I can get you those numbers if you would like them.

Q That'd be great. Thank you.

And of the reasonable-accommodation requests that were made, how many were granted or adjudicated?

A I'm sorry, I don't know that number.

Q Do you know if any were?

A I don't know. I thought there was a court order that came in before all that occurred.

Q And how many requests for medical reasonable accommodations were made to Executive Order 14043?

A I'm not sure. But OEEOA doesn't fall under me, so I'll have to get you those numbers. I can get them for you. Again, I'm happy to do that. I just don't know.

Q And at the time that you became the executive assistant director and before the injunction, do you know how many FBI employees initially complied with the President's executive order?

A I don't.

Q Do you know how many did not comply?

A I do not.

Q Did the FBI have a way of tracking who was not in compliance with the executive order?

A Per the executive order, we set up -- and through DOJ -- they set up a portal where people could enter their information.

Q So it was on the employee to enter their information?

A It was, yes, ma'am.

Q Were they mandated to do that?

A They were, by the executive order.

Q So do you know if any of these employees were removed from Federal service because they were not in compliance with the executive order?

A I don't know that answer.

Q Do you know if any employees were suspended for not following COVID-19 protocols?

A Could you define "suspended"?

Q Placed on, like, indefinite suspension.

A There was no one placed on indefinite suspension. Everybody had the opportunity every day to comply with the protocols or whatever the mandate was --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- at that moment. So nobody was placed directly on indefinite suspension for COVID-19.

Q So what happened if they didn't comply?

A If they didn't comply --

Q Correct, ma'am.

A -- the requirement at that time, depending upon when we're talking about -- and you're not, like, specifying that -- was that they would be placed on AWOL until they complied.

Q Okay. And so what does that mean, when they're placed on AWOL?

A "Absent without leave" means that they do not have -- they were not allowed to take leave. It wasn't an approved leave event.

Q And so were there specific protocols that had to be followed, you know, during the pandemic, which would've been March 2020 through the executive order? Were there specific protocols that had to be followed?

A There were.

Q And what were those protocols?

A I don't know them off the top of my head right now. I can talk in generality as to what I recall, was, there was a masking protocol for a while --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and then there was a testing protocol.

Q And did that differ by region in the U.S.?

A Depending upon what phase of the COVID-19 crisis or pandemic that we were in, depending upon the levels. But it all started out differently and then changed.

Q And would it surprise you to know that the vast majority of whistleblowers that we are aware of who have been suspended are also unvaccinated?

A I wouldn't know that directly until you tell me that now, no, ma'am.

Q Okay.

And you said that you were generally aware of the whistleblower statute, correct?

A I am familiar with it, yes, ma'am.

Q And in 2022, during testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, FBI Director Christopher Wray said, "I condemn in the strongest possible terms any prospect of retaliation against whistleblowers."

Do you agree with Mr. Wray's statement?

A I do.

Q And how does the Human Resources Division kind of live out his statement?

A What do you mean?

Q How do they make sure that, in the strongest possible terms, that whistleblowers are not retaliated against?

A If we believe there's any retaliation for whistleblowing, it would be referred to the inspector general and our Inspection Division.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. We just have a few more questions for you right now.

BY [redacted]

Q How many agents are indefinitely suspended without pay related to off-duty activity on January 6th?

A I can't discuss any ongoing investigation in security matters, specifically for numbers, unless -- no. I'm sorry.

Q But there were --

Ms. Gibbs. I'm sorry. Can you just -- can you clarify?

Ms. Moore. Yeah.

Ms. Gibbs. Because there was a lot packed into that question.

[redacted] Not really.

Ms. Gibbs. Can you just clarify?

[redacted] Yeah, I can certainly ask the question again.

BY [redacted]

Q How many agents are indefinitely suspended without pay related to off-duty activity on January 6th?

A Oh, I can answer that question. Hang on.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Moore. Zero.

BY [redacted]

Q Zero are indefinitely suspended?

A Zero.

Ms. Gibbs. Yeah. Based on the fact pattern that you just said, yeah.

Ms. Moore. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q For off-duty activity on January 6th?

A Zero.

Q And how many agents have had their clearances suspended related to activity on January 6th?

A Zero.

Q And did any of -- or, how many agents have requested approval for outside work while suspended related to January 6th activity?

A I don't have a number. I mean, I'm telling you that there's no agents that are suspended due to January 6 activity. Then that would be zero.

BY [redacted]

Q So you're saying there's no agents that were on the Capitol Grounds that have had their security clearance suspended --

A Correct.

Q -- because they were on the Capitol Grounds on January 6th?

A Correct.

I think what you're doing is confusing the question, so I'll help us out here so we don't all go around in a circle here. There's a difference in our organizations between agents and professional staff.

Q Okay.

A So you're asking me about gun-toting 1811 agents. That answer is none.

We have two employees that are non-1811, non-gun-toting, that are suspended based off of entering into -- okay. I can't --

Ms. Gibbs. Okay.

Ms. Moore. I can't answer. I'm sorry. I'm so sorry.

Ms. Gibbs. That's okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. So I'll go ahead and just rephrase the questions --

A Okay.

Q -- then.

So how many employees of the FBI are indefinitely suspended without pay related to off-duty activity on January 6th?

A We have no employees that are suspended based off of executing their legal and lawful First Amendment rights in relation to January 6th.

Q But are they indefinitely suspended?

A I have no employees that are suspended for executing lawful and legal First Amendment rights as it relates to January 6th.

BY [redacted]

Q What are the two people who are suspended -- what were they suspended for?

A In a situation where we would suspend an employee for January 6 activity, it would be that they crossed into restricted areas that were deemed to be unlawful, hypothetically.

Q Okay. What if the individuals in question didn't know that it was unlawful?

A We were --

Q We're not talking about going into the Capitol Building. We're talking about being on the grounds.

A Right. And I think that we all know that even on the grounds there were areas around the Capitol that were clearly marked to stay out, do not trespass, that were very, very plainly marked.

So, in those situations, we would utilize information that we were able to obtain that would determine that they did know where they were.

Q So the two that have been suspended --

A Hypothetically.

Q Not hypothetically. You acknowledge there were two. I mean, let's --

A Then I'm -- then I'm going to -- then I'm going to say that I can't talk about ongoing --

Q Well, I mean, you already --

A -- investigations.

Q -- acknowledged the two. Then they weren't agents, you said. So you're saying they were in clearly marked areas?

A I would say that anybody that would be suspended for any activity that occurred on January 6 would not have been for First Amendment rights and would be for illegally entering restricted areas.

[redacted] Do you have followup on that or --

[redacted] I don't.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[1:28 p.m.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. It's 1:28 in the afternoon.

BY [redacted]

Q Again, I'm [redacted] I'm with the Democratic staff.

I want to correct the record on something that was said earlier in the last hour with reference to Mr. O'Boyle. And I know you can't talk about his case, but we were told by the majority counsel that he received his letter on the 23rd of September, I believe, September 23rd, which we don't actually have a copy of that letter, but taking them at their word.

Mr. O'Boyle reported that he actually reported to work the following Monday, on September 26th. So, in fact, the date of the letter and the date that he first reported was not the same.

He also testified that he spoke with his supervisor, presumably at his old office, on the 23rd and said he still intended to report to his unit on the 26th.

So I understand that we can't get into the details, but I wanted to correct the record on that point.

A Okay.

Q There was a fair amount of discussion about fairness and whether decisions were fair. But we're looking at a suspension, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So the goal of a suspension is to protect national security, right?

A It's to separate the risk from national security, yes, ma'am.

Q And, as we talked earlier, doubts are resolved in favor of the national security, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q We discussed a little bit the whistleblower process.

A Yes.

Q And that's -- I realize that's not your -- that's not under your purview. In fact, the whistleblower process is kept separate from the security clearance review, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Is that intentional, do you think?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A Because what predicates a whistleblower and their absolute right to report waste, fraud, abuse or misconduct is different than what a security investigation will entail regarding safeguarding national security information, and those two can't be in conflict.

Q And, when you say they can't be in conflict, can you explain that any further?

A It means that you always have that priority, right, to protect national security information.

Q Thank you. Quickly, on the questions that you had about the COVID executive order. Is it your understanding that COVID is a highly communicable disease?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay, and FBI agents tend to work in close proximity to each other in a field office, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So, if you're on a joint task force, you may be in breathing distance of each other?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Would it be a risk to national security if, say, an entire field office came down sick with COVID?

A It would be, yes, ma'am.

Q So is that something that the FBI would be concerned about?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q I want to look at the process for -- the adjudicative process a little further. I know we talked through this in depth, and I'm not going to go back to the guidelines, but I do want to look back at the -- I want to talk through the actual process when some of these clearances actually were revoked.

A Okay.

Q So I want to look at Executive Order 12968 again --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- which I don't remember if that was exhibit 2 or 3. Two. And I want to look at Part 5, which is on page 40252, the process and requirements for review proceedings for denials or revocations of eligibility for access.

So this outlines the steps that FBI takes when it actually revokes a clearance, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, again, this is an executive order that was issued in 1995, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And it applies to all intelligence agencies, correct?

A Correct.

Q So I want to walk through the requirements listed here. The first requirement -- I'm sorry.

The section 5.2 provides a list of requirements for the process that an agency must make available when an applicant is denied or an employee's clearance is revoked, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So now I'd like to walk through those requirements one by one.

A Okay.

Q No. 1 states that when an agency determines an applicant or employee does not meet the standard for access to classified information, that individual shall be provided as comprehensive and detailed a written explanation of the basis for that conclusion as the national security interests of the United States and other applicable laws permit, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So, when the FBI determines -- and this is final determination -- that an individual does not meet the standard for access to classified information, does it provide them with a complete and thorough -- sorry, a comprehensive and detailed written explanation for the basis?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Who prepares that explanation?

A The Security Division, along with our Office of General Counsel, will prepare what is sent out. And it will be essentially all the documents that were relied upon to make that Security Division determination, the security clearance determination.

Q Who reviews -- who reviews it before it's final?

A It will go out through the Assistant Director of Security Division. So the Office of General Counsel and multiple layers underneath that will review it.

Q Could you estimate how many people might be involved in that?

A There's -- five? Usually for the appeal -- I'm trying to think. I'm sorry. Because it's -- the review when it comes up does not -- the whole -- like, if they ask for -- they want to do an appeal and they get the whole file, it would go out under the --

Ms. Gibbs. I think you two are talking about two different things.

Ms. Moore. Oh -- oh, when they get suspended. It goes through seven, yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Sorry. Not with -- sorry. I'm actually talking about the final revocation.

A Oh, it's seven. It's seven layers, yes, ma'am.

Q Seven layers, okay.

And the question about comprehensive and detailed, I know all the records. What about the actual -- is there a document, like a written finding that accompanies it?

A It is. It's many pages long, and it will lay out what the findings were under each of the guidelines and what -- this was what was alleged and this is what was determined by the investigation.

Q Okay. The second requirement in the executive order is that agencies must provide within 30 days any documents, records, and reports upon which a denial or revocation is based, to the extent that that's consistent with what would be provided under the Freedom of Information Act or the Privacy Act.

A Correct.

Q So you said all the documents are actually provided?

A The documents that are used for the determination of the security clearance action, yes, ma'am.

Q They're provided at the time that the letter itself is issued?

A Not all of those. Those they'll get within 30 days. So, if they ask for those, they will get all of those. They'll get a very long detailed letter that explains the investigation. If they want any of the actual documents, then they request that with FOIA and they get those.

Q And the third requirement is that, when an agency determines an applicant or employee does not meet the standard for access to classified information, the individual must be informed of their right to be represented by counsel.

Does the FBI provide that notice?

A We do.

Q Okay. And they must be informed of their right to request any relevant documents or records. Does the FBI provide that notice?

A We do. We provide a notice on how to do it.

Q And it says they must be provided with information telling them they can request their entire investigative file. Does FBI follow that requirement?

A They do.

Q Is there a process by which you ensure compliance with that requirement? So is there an audit, for example? Have there been audits done?

A So we have been. We've been audited by GAO, the inspector general, the Office of Director of National Intelligence and our own Inspection Division.

Q And I want to get back to all of that in a minute.

The fourth requirement under the executive order is that the FBI must provide an applicant or employee the ability to reply in writing and request a review of the determination that they do not meet the standard for access to classified information.

So this is essentially a written appeal, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Does FBI provide applicants with the ability to file a written appeal?

A We absolutely do.

Q And how does it notify them of that right?

A Again, in that initial letter -- or the final revocation letter or the determination for revocation, it's not the final, but they get all of that information there.

Q And are applicants permitted to be assisted by counsel when they file that written appeal?

A Absolutely.

Q And are often counsel -- or, sorry, are applicants -- I'm saying applicants because I think the guidelines are -- anyway.

Are individuals who are notified of the denial, do they often have counsel assist them?

A Often, yes, they can.

Q Okay. And there's actually particular attorneys that specialize in this, right?

A There are, yes.

Q The fifth item on this list states that, when an applicant or employee files a written appeal, the FBI must provide a written notice of and reasons for the results of the review, the identity of the deciding authority and written notice of the right to the appeal.

Does FBI comply with this requirement?

A We do.

Q And is there like a form document that you use for this, or is it pretty special for each individual case?

A No, it's standardized language that they get.

Q Okay. And who is the deciding authority? It refers to the identity of the deciding authority. Who is the deciding authority?

A The security program manager.

Q Okay. The sixth requirement states that applicants and employees must be provided an opportunity to appeal in writing to a high-level panel appointed by the agency head, who shall -- which shall be comprised of at least three members, two of whom shall be selected from outside the security field.

Does the FBI comply with this requirement?

A We do. That three-letter -- that three-member panel is called the ARC. It's the Access Review Committee. It's by the Department of Justice, and there are three judges assigned to it.

Q And are those judges the same for each case?

A They are.

Q Can you provide --

A I don't know who they are. I'm sorry.

Q Okay. The -- so just so I have this right. So an employee gets the notice that their revocation decision is final. At that stage, they can file a written appeal, and that written appeal goes to the ARC?

A The original appeal?

Q Uh-huh.

A So they get an initial decision for revocation.

Q Yes.

A The initial appeal is administrative. It comes back in to us with any additional information. By "us," I mean the FBI.

Q Okay.

A And to Security Division.

Q And stop you right there. The additional information is information the individual provides?

A Yes.

Q Potentially with the assistance of counsel?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

A And then that information is reviewed against the investigative findings, and that is provided again in a written document to the security program manager to see if it changes the decision for the revocation.

If it does not, at that point, the employee has the right, and they're advised that they can appeal to the ARC, which is the three panel member at the Department of Justice that's made up of judges, completely independent of the Bureau.

Q And who appoints the members of the ARC?

A The Attorney General? I don't actually know who appoints them. I'm so sorry, I don't know that answer.

Q That's a written appeal. Is there also an opportunity to make an oral appeal?

A To the ARC? Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So, just to have this -- sorry, to have this process down, because it's a little confusing as laid out in the EO, so the individual files a written appeal to the ARC. Does the ARC sometimes issue just a written determination on that, or does an individual always have the opportunity to make an appearance?

A They can always make an appearance.

Q Okay. And they can be represented by counsel during that appearance?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And how long does the ARC proceeding go? I mean the actual appearance in front of the ARC. Is that an all-day thing? Is it a 2-hour thing? Is there a time limit?

A I personally can't answer that. I'd have to refer that to my counsel because I don't -- I don't go to the ARC, in front of the ARC, so I'm not sure how long those take.

Q Okay. No, it's independent of your office, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And that's kind of the point, because it's a whole independent adjudicative body completely outside of you?

A I have no -- I don't know who the judges are. I don't know who appoints them. I have nothing to do with that other than to ensure that our division complies timely with any requests from the ARC for information.

Q So you never speak to the judges on the ARC?

A No, ma'am.

Q They are an independent three judges who make the decision, have no involvement with FBI?

A That is correct.

Q I mean other than you providing them with information upon request.

A Correct.

Q Okay. And then does the ARC issue a written decision or do they issue like an oral decision on the spot, do you know?

A I actually don't know that answer.

Q Okay. If the ARC says, "We overturn, we decide you should have your clearance," what happens then?

A If that were the case, then the employee would be reinitiated to their clearance.

Q Okay.

A To my knowledge. I haven't had that happen. I'm sorry. I don't know. I'm not familiar with that.

Q And, if the ARC determines that the revocation should be upheld, do the individuals then have another opportunity to appeal?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q They can't go to the inspector general?

A Oh, I'm sorry. Yeah, I guess they could. Yes, ma'am. I'm not familiar much beyond that. I'm sorry.

Q If they go to the inspector general, would you discuss that with the inspector general directly, or would that be independent of your office?

A That would be independent of my office as well.

Q So, to get this down, so, after a revocation decision is issued, there's the administrative appeal through your office?

A Correct.

Q Then there's an appeal to the ARC, which is an independent body?

A Correct.

Q Three judges?

A Yes.

Q And then, after that, there's potentially an inspector general appeal as well, correct?

A To my knowledge, yes. I'm not very familiar with that process at all.

Q And then, in some cases, there's also potentially a Merit System Protection Board review, right?

A Yes.

Q For combat veterans, for example?

A Yes.

Q So you don't actually have the last word?

A No, ma'am.

Q And, as we said earlier, the applicable standard here is not beyond a reasonable doubt. The applicable standard is any doubt shall be resolved in favor of national security, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, again, this is consistent across all applicable Federal agencies. There's no special FBI standard?

A Correct.

Q You mentioned earlier audits, GAO audits.

A Correct.

Q Can you describe -- go through, again, the type of audits that your division has undergone?

A So the General Accountability Office can come in and review our determinations. We've had the Inspector General come in and review our determinations. We've had our own Inspection Division come in and review our process. And then the Office of Director of National Intelligence also comes in and does an inspection.

Q And I want to go through those one by one.

So, starting with GAO, when was the last GAO audit, if you know?

A I apologize. I don't know that date. I can get it for you, though.

Q Has there been one conducted since you've been there?

A No, ma'am, not that I know.

Q Do you know if there are any open GAO recommendations?

A I don't believe there are.

Q Okay.

A Because we track those. I don't see any of those. But I'll confirm that.

Q What about the Inspector General, when was the last inspector general audit?

A Oh, my gosh. I don't know the exact date of the last one.

Q Okay.

A It's been in recent years.

Q And do you know if there's any open recommendations from the inspector general?

A There is an open recommendation that's in the process of closing regarding polygraphs.

Q Okay. But not regarding the policy -- the procedure for adjudications specifically?

A No, ma'am.

Q Or -- I mean, polygraph is investigation, right?

A Correct.

Q What about INSD, how often does INSD audit?

A They will do it at their random. So it's whenever they randomly select to audit. I asked for an audit when I was named as the security program director. I wanted them to come in and take a review of our adjudication process. So that was in 2021.

Q And is that complete at this time?

A It is.

Q And does the Inspection Division make recommendations?

A They can, yes.

Q Do you know if there's any outstanding recommendations from the Inspection Division?

A There are not. There are not.

Q Okay. And you affirmatively requested that audit, you said?

A I did.

Ms. Greer. I'm sorry, can we take a break for a second?

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Greer. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you have a clarification?

A No.

Q And the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, what is their auditing process like?

A The same. They'll come in and look at adjudications. They most recently just audited in -- what month are we in now, April?

Q April.

A In the last couple months. So it's probably about 3 months ago they came in and did our adjudication process, but it was specifically as it relates to bringing on board employees.

Q With respect to all of these audits, can you describe what they look for? And if it's different for the different types of audits, you can clarify that.

A They're looking for -- that we are in compliance with Executive Order 12968 and the FIS, the Federal Investigative Standards, and SEAD 4, which is the adjudication guides, all in relation to issuing national security clearances because there's reciprocity between each agency, and we want to make sure constantly that everybody is doing it the same way.

Because if I'm going to give access to someone, they want to make sure that the Bureau did it in accordance with these standards, so that if my employee goes over to NSA or CIA or wherever to work or to share information or to be part of a task force, that everybody was vetted the exact same way.

Q And so will they look at -- will they have the opportunity to interview the individuals who did the investigations, for example?

A They do, yes, ma'am.

Q Do they have access to all of your files?

A They do.

Q Do you know of any instance in which an auditor requested information that you were not able to produce?

A No.

Q How long do these audits usually take?

A They can be anywhere from 2 weeks to like 4 weeks, depending upon how in depth and what all they're looking at. But usually -- usually, it's 14 days.

Q And do they look at the time that it takes to conduct an investigation?

A They do. The inspector general, when they last audited us, that was one of the complaints was that it took us a long time. Again, we have a lot of investigations and not a whole lot of the investigators to do them.

And so, when I came in, what we did was we -- the decision was made to trifurcate the unit. So it was originally one unit. And so they did cradle to grave within the unit. I didn't like the way that looked, and I also thought it was cumbersome and slowed us down because nobody was really great at anything because they were having to do everything.

So we divided it into the three separate houses so that somebody would do intake. Clean eyes. That's their profession. They're really, really good at that. Investigators, that's what they do. And then the adjudicators over here.

So everybody could specialize and train, focus on their one area. And it also gave a fresh eye to each section so that nobody again -- I kind of talked about it earlier. When you're doing the interview and building the case and then you also have to do the adjudication, I didn't want it to be unfair. And so it gave a clean set of eyes, and it was always fair because they were just looking at the facts and no personal emotions involved.

Q And, with respect to the -- you said that the IG had one of the complaints, meaning complaints from -- that the IG had been responding to or that the IG had?

A One of the complaints the IG had was that it was taking us too long to do our investigations. They wanted to see us do them quicker.

Q So have you decreased that time since that IG investigation?

A We had, although I know that that's still a complaint that it takes a while. But an investigation, to be thorough and accurate, you can't rush it. You have to do it right.

Q And so there's only a limit -- there's a limit on the lowest level amount of time, right?

A Correct. Yes, ma'am.

Q And, as you said before, it has to be thorough and accurate because it's important to get these right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And because to protect the national security, right?

A Correct.

Q And also to ensure that the individuals involved get a fair shake, for lack of a better word?

A Exactly.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Moore. Just two points of clarification going backwards a little bit. So the reviews go through the ARC. The inspector general does not review ARC determinations. They only take it if it's a whistleblower retaliation case.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

A And then MSPB only reviews personnel actions in the event of a servicemember, a veteran. So they only review those personnel actions. They don't actually review security investigations.

Q Understood, understood. And so the inspector general does not review the security clearance determinations?

A They don't. They just review in regard to retaliation.

[redacted] I don't think I have anything further. We can go off the record. Thank you.

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Let's go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Just to clarify, on Mr. O'Boyle, you know, it's our understanding that he did not know he was suspended until he reported for work on September 26 in Virginia.

So the letter is dated September 23rd, but he never received it, he never received word of it, it's our understanding, until he arrived for work on the 26th.

And so my question is, how are these letters transmitted?

A So they come into my office. I execute and sign them. Then my secretary prints it out. And it goes back to the Security Division, who then packages it up and transmits it to whoever it's going to be served. I would envision in this case they would have had to determine where he was at that time.

Q So, I mean, he testified that, on September 23rd, the date of the letter, he spoke with his new boss at the new unit, and it was never mentioned.

A I would think they wouldn't have talked about it on the phone with him. They would have wanted him -- if they knew that they had it at that moment -- his boss may not have known he had it.

I would assume -- and, again, that's assuming -- that Mr. O'Boyle's boss would have been probably a program manager. And so a program manager would be several layers below an assistant director. So the letter may have either gone to Kansas City or to the unit where -- or the division that he was going to. And then it would have gone down appropriately for them to call him in probably when he reported.

Q So, when he had this telephone conversation, he testified that he was in Wisconsin, I believe at his in-laws. And his new supervisor was aware, presumably was aware of that.

A I'm sorry. I wouldn't know that.

Q So, if that's the case, don't you think his new supervisor should have let him know that this was coming down the pike?

A For security reasons of personnel, we generally bring people in and debrief them in person.

Q So you make them travel all the way to Virginia for doing the suspension there in person?

A At this time, I don't know that on Friday that his program manager knew that he was -- knew he was getting suspended on Monday. I don't know that answer, sir. I'm sorry.

Q And then the IG investigation that you were mentioning on the last round?

A Yes, sir.

Q What was the date of that?

A I don't know. I'd have to find it.

Q What was the year?

A I don't know. I'd have to find it.

Q What was the decade?

A Well, it would have been in the recent decade. So probably 2017, 2018. I'd have to find it, sir, I'm sorry.

Q 2017 or 2018?

A Uh-huh. I can find it for you.

Q So, obviously, the process hasn't improved at all, right?

A I disagree with that.

Q You think it has improved?

A Absolutely.

Q So what we talked with Mr. O'Boyle and Mr. Friend, you think that's a sufficient amount of time to conduct these investigations?

A I believe we are faster now than we previously were.

Q And is that an acceptable length of time?

A I would like them to be very quick, but, unfortunately, it has to be a thorough and adequate investigation.

[redacted] And, as we mentioned, the chairman has a subpoena for you to return. So I'll just provide this to you.

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

[redacted] I think that's all our questions for today, unless --

[redacted] I have one more.

BY [redacted]

Q I just want to -- I think majority counsel just said that he spoke with the supervisor, and it was never mentioned. I just want to read the paragraph into the record. That's not what it says.

A Okay.

Q It says: And, on September 23rd, I spoke with who was going to be my new boss at the new unit and told them that I still intended to come to the new unit the following Monday to report, which was Monday, September 26th.

And I want to note he said he told them that he said: I told them that I still -- emphasis on the word "still" -- intended to come to the new unit.

Thank you.

And then, quickly, on the thorough process, just to follow up on that, this process may involve interviews with individuals, correct?

A Yes.

Q It may involve gathering documents?

A Yes.

Q It may involve -- sometimes interviews might lead to other interviews?

A Correct.

Q Sometimes documents might lead to other documents?

A Correct.

Q Much like a criminal -- this is not a criminal case, but much the same way a criminal investigation would unfold?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q So, when we say -- when you say a thorough process, that means turning over all of those leaves, correct?

A Absolutely.

[redacted] Thank you. No further questions.

[redacted] Just to be clear here, Mr. O'Boyle, as far as we understand, did not know he was going to be suspended. So I believe, you know, the minority here is reading into the words "still intended" to imply that he knew or that his new supervisor told him on September 23rd that the suspension was coming, and that is not the case.

And I don't know whether "still intended" related to the fact that his wife is pregnant, about to give birth, or some other reason, or whether he was just -- or he was just imprecise here.

But we are aware, with great specificity, the plight of Mr. O'Boyle and when he was suspended and when he learned of his suspension, and he did not learn of it until Monday, September 26th. I'll represent that.

[redacted] And I will just respond that the record does not reflect that directly. Thanks.

We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 1:57 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

[redacted], MINORITY INTERN

[redacted], MINORITY PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

For the U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE:

[redacted] OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS

[redacted]OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL, FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

[redacted]. Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of Joseph Bonavolonta from the FBI field office in Boston. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI.

Would the witness state your name for the record?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Sure. My official Bureau name is Joseph R. Bonavolonta, B-O-N-A-V-O-L-O-N-T-A.

[redacted] And you're here today with agency counsel, that's correct?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Correct.

[redacted] And can you introduce yourself for the record?

[redacted] Of course. [redacted] from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

[redacted] And [redacted] with the Department of Justice, Office of Legislative Affairs.

[redacted] And you understand, sir, that agency counsel, you know, their first duty is to represent the agency, not you personally?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Yes.

[redacted] But, still, you're here with them, and you're comfortable with that arrangement?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Yes.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today voluntarily. The chairman appreciates your willingness to help us with our investigative work.

My name's [redacted] I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff on the House Judiciary Committee. I'm going to have the rest of the staffers here in the room introduce, themselves starting with my colleague [redacted]

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] majority staff.

[redacted] [redacted] majority staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with House Judiciary minority staff.

[redacted] [redacted] chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary and Democrat staff.

[redacted] I am [redacted] House Judiciary Committee minority.

[redacted] [redacted] with House Judiciary.

[redacted] I'll go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in rounds. Majority will ask questions for up to an hour, and then the minority will have a chance to come and ask questions as well for an hour, and we'll alternate back and forth until we're done. We'll try to get this process moving as quickly as we can so you can get back to your official duties and get back to Boston, I presume.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Yes.

[redacted] Typically, we'll take a break at the end of each hour. You can confer with the lawyers, but it's totally up to you. So you let us know when you're comfortable taking breaks. Same goes for lunch. And, also, if you do need to confer with counsel, you just let us know. We can go off the record. You're here voluntarily. So, if we ask you something, you don't want to answer it, it's a voluntary proceeding so.

So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you. We'll try not to talk over your answers. Sometimes we aren't so good at that, and we have to remind ourselves to speak so the court reporter can make the record. We try to make a complete and truthful, you know, record here, so we'll take our time.

If you don't know the answer to any of our questions or don't remember, just let us know. It's best not to guess or speculate. The Federal Rules of Evidence are not in play here. So, if you do know something that you heard from somebody else, you can just tell us that that's how you came to learn a particular fact.

You understand that providing false testimony to Congress could be subject to criminal prosecution. Is that correct?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Correct.

[redacted] 18 United States Code 1001 is the particular statute. And, of course, there's no reason that you can't provide truthful testimony here today, right?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Correct. Yes.

[redacted] Finally, I would like to make a note that the content of what we discuss we like to keep confidential. So, to the extent you can help us honor that request, we'd appreciate it.

As far as reviewing the transcript, when the transcript does come in, you'll have a chance to review and the agency lawyers can come in and check the transcript. And the purpose of checking the transcript is just to make sure that, you know, the court reporter got it right, and they always do. And, also, just if you, on reflection, you know, realize that you left something out of your testimony or you got something wrong by mistake, you can let us know.

Also, the purpose of the transcript review is an opportunity to flag any proposed redactions. You know, you can recommend if there's something that you said that we ought to redact if we're going to release it publicly, and we can take that into consideration. But the transcript review isn't an opportunity to make notes of everything that's in the transcript. So we, in the past, we've had to counsel the lawyers coming not to bring in laptops and that type of thing. The purpose is just to make sure the court reporter got it right and make sure your testimony is correct.

So, with that, I'm going to turn it over to my colleague, [redacted] and we'll get going.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q The time is now 10:05 a.m. Sir, I'm going to start going through your professional background, if that's okay? When did you first join the FBI?

A In 1996.

Q And what was your main motivation for joining the Bureau?

A Really, just to serve my country, as well as my father was an FBI agent as well so I grew up, you know, in that environment.

Q And what position do you currently hold at the FBI?

A I'm the special agent in charge of the FBI Boston Division.

Q When did you start this special agent in charge Boston Division?

A In January 2019.

Q Can you describe, roughly, your roles and responsibilities in that position?

A Sure. So, as the special agent in charge of FBI Boston, which actually encompasses four States in New England; Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, I am, in essence, the chief executive for that entire area of responsibility where I have oversight of all operations and administration of FBI activities in that region.

Q And who's your direct supervisor?

A My direct supervisor would be the Deputy Director of the FBI and the Director of the FBI.

Q And how many people work within the Boston Division?

A So it fluctuates from year to year, but approximately anywhere between 8- and 900 total employees, and that's broken down by full-time FBI professional staff employees, intelligence analysts, special agents, as well as full- and part-time local, State, and Federal task force officers.

Q And do all the 8- to 900 employees, do they report directly to you, or are there never supervisors?

A They report ultimately directly to me, but there are leadership chains within the office.

Q And how many assistant special agents in charge to do you have?

A Five.

Q And do you mind listing their names for us?

A Sure. So --

[redacted] So some of these might be non-SES names. Obviously, to the extent they are public facing, and some of them might be on the website, we wouldn't request those be redacted, but that might be something that we would want to request be redacted if they're not public names.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Bonavolonta. So, just to be clear, all of the assistant special agents in charge, I'm the only Senior Executive service member within the FBI Boston Division. So I have --

[redacted] Sir, just to make sure the record is clear, are you all committed to redact the names of the non-SES individuals?

[redacted] We can talk about this later. Let's ask questions.

[redacted] Just trying to make sure he has clear guidance on how he will answer questions today.

[redacted] The witness can answer the questions he wants to answer. He's here voluntarily so.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Okay. Good. So, just to be clear, there's five special agents in charge, and one SSIA, which is a senior supervisory intelligence analyst, which is the intelligence analyst equivalence of an ASAC, so that's the executive management team in Boston.

The SSIA is Jerry McMahon. Our current Counterterrorism Branch ASAC is Jason Crommarty (ph). Our current Counterintelligence Cyber Branch ASAC is Dave Farrell. Our White Collar Crime, Public Corruption, Civil Rights ASAC is Matt Giacoby (ph). Our Violent Crime and Gangs Branch ASAC is Chris Dimena (ph), and our Administrative Special Operations Branch ASAC is James Green.

BY [redacted]

Q And you have obviously had an extensive career at the FBI. Can you walk us through some of the positions you've held while there?

A Sure. So upon entering the FBI for the first just under 4 years, I entered in an non-agent position as an investigative specialist for the special surveillance group. And then, in May of 2000, I became a special agent. And I was assigned to the New York field office, where I worked Italian organized crime matters, specifically against the Bonanno organized crime family for many years and then became a squad supervisor in the Newark, New Jersey, field office after having gone done to FBI Headquarters for about 18 months where I was in the organized crime section.

And then, upon returning from headquarters, I was promoted to a squad supervisor of the Complex Economic and Financial Crimes Squad in Newark field office. And then, from there, I was promoted to assistant special agent in charge up in the Boston Field Office where I oversaw the Counterintelligence and Cyber Branch. And then, from there, went back down to headquarters to be a section chief. That's where I entered the Senior Executive Service ranks, and I was the section chief in our Human Resources Division over the Employee Development and Selection Program. Then, as a Deputy Assistant Director in the Counterintelligence Branch, and then promoted up to Boston in January of 2019 to serve as the special agent in charge.

Q So, in 2018, right before you became special agent in charge, you were the Deputy Assistant Director in the Counterintelligence Division. Is that correct?

A For one of the operational branches from March of 2018 to December 2018.

Q And what were your roles and responsibilities in that role?

A Really, to oversee -- really, program manage operations throughout the country with respect to various aspects of the China threat, as well as the Russian threat as well, like Russian intelligence officer driven operations.

Q And you were working out of headquarters for that position?

A For that position, yes.

Q And who was your direct supervisor for that position?

A At that time, the assistant director was Bill Priestap

Q Okay. And so, as the special agent in charge of the Boston Division, would you say that you have general awareness of the cases that your office is working on?

A Yes.

Q And how involved in the day-to-day investigating are you?

A I'm not. It's one of the largest field offices in the country. So, at any given time, we have, you know, literally several hundred, if not more, you know, active and ongoing investigations. So the ones that I have more knowledge on are ones that, you know, rise to the level where there would need to be my involvement or knowledge for a number of different reasons.

Q And are you aware of whether agents or analysts within the Boston Field Office were asked to work on investigations related to the events that occurred at the U.S. Capitol on January 6th, 2021?

A Yes.

Q And about how many cases?

A I really can't give you a number in terms of the overall number of cases.

Q And was it your understanding that the agents within the Boston Field Office were running the investigations?

A No. The actual cases relative to January 6th were all program managed and generated out of our Washington Field Office. And so, where our involvement would come into play would be if a -- you know, a package with the requisite evidence in it that may have risen to the level of an individual being charged with a certain crime related to January 6th would be sent up to us and then worked in conjunction with an agent in my office, as well as with a -- AUSA within the district of Massachusetts.

But then once -- whether it was -- if it was for instance, an arrest warrant, that arrest would be executed, and then the case would be -- you know, the subject would go down for an appearance in Washington, and then that's where it would be worked from there, whether there was a guilty plea or a trial, it would all be done down in Washington, D.C., not up in Boston.

Q And, when you say program managed out of the Washington Field Office or the WFO, did that mean the WFO was giving your agents direction on what to do?

A I wouldn't necessarily say "direction." It was just more -- it was more a package that would be sent up with the requisite evidence to execute in most cases an arrest warrant, and that was it. It was pretty -- it was very basic.

Q Okay. At any given time, how many agents do you think within the Boston Division are working on January 6th related cases?

A Overall, commensurate with the number of agents we have, not many.

Q Okay. And are you aware of information coming from Bank of America that was sent to the FBI?

A I am, yes.

Q And can you -- are you aware of the existence of that information on the FBI systems?

A I can't tell you where it is housed on FBI systems or what the current status is, but I am aware of information that was forwarded to us related to a Bank of America lead, yes.

Q And can you describe the content of that information that was given?

A Sure. So the knowledge I have on that is not very intricate simply because it was -- after it was sent up to our office, it was brought to my attention by our Joint Terrorism Task Force squad supervisor, our chief division counsel, and, at the time -- he's no longer with the Bureau -- but, at the time, the assistant special agent in charge over our Counterterrorism Branch.

Q And who was the JTTF individual that gave that information to you?

Mr. Bonavolonta. I just want to make sure it's appropriate for me to give that.

[redacted] Can we go off the record for a second?

[redacted] Yes, we can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Back on the record.

[redacted] Just a quick note, my understanding is that the JTTF that he's described is a non-SES person. So it's our preference if we can proceed with the questions and hopefully you will get the information that you need, and if there's an interest in knowing more about the specifics of somebody's name, we're happy to entertain a followup request.

[redacted] Okay. So I'll just go ahead and ask the question, and if you would like to not answer, just say so.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And who was the JTTF individual who brought this information to your attention?

A So I would prefer not to divulge the name.

Q And the chief division counsel?

A It would be the same for that.

Q And assistant special agent in charge?

A Same for that.

Q And why did they bring this information to your attention?

A So they brought the information to my attention, first and foremost, to make me aware that a lead had been sent to our office from a unit within FBI Headquarters that fell under the Office of Private Sector. And the lead, the lead itself, was for informational purposes only. There was no directive in the lead to do anything, you know, from an investigation standpoint.

However, in the body of the lead, there was an information that was provided by Bank of America following a certain number of criteria that in essence aggregated a list of individuals that were supposedly living up in the New England area who, you know, either had potentially made, you know, certain credit card purchases, you know, for hotel reservations or plane tickets, or potential purchases at certain gun stores in and around, you know, January 6th or planned for the inauguration date, like around January 20th, like in that timeframe.

I'm speaking in generalities just because simply I can't recall the exact nature of the criteria, but it was something to that effect. And so my team brought that to my attention just to make me aware of it and to, you know -- just to see if there was going to be any request to actually, you know, do something from an investigative measure on these individuals. So I reviewed the lead, and it was very clear in the lead that there was not a request to engage with anybody. Or we weren't being directed to do anything.

But what I did on my own was, you know, at the time, I was a co-chair of the SAC Advisory Committee, and I reached out to my colleague who was the SAC out of Springfield, Illinois, who was the chair of the SAC Advisory Committee. So we worked together on that just to see if he had been aware of this.

And then we wound up together proactively communicating with the assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division at headquarters at the time just to make them -- to see if they were aware that this lead had at least been sent to two field offices. And the only knowledge I had at the time, obviously, was that it was sent to Boston, and it had been sent to Springfield. And we just wanted to make Counterterrorism Division aware of that just to let them know that we, based on the information provided in the lead, that you know, we were not planning on doing anything with that information, you know, and just so that Counterterrorism Division could be aware as well if in the event that it had been sent to other field offices, you know, for awareness. And that was really my level of involvement with that particular lead.

Q And why did you feel the need to tell the Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division that you weren't planning on taking any action on that lead?

A Simply just because it was -- the way the lead had come in, it just hadn't come in with much information beforehand in terms to, you know, either be prepared to receive the lead. And it just -- at least the way my team conveyed it to me, it just seemed a little bit odd in terms of the way that information came in and was there going to be an expectation. It was more a question than anything else. And so that's when I took upon myself to reach out to my colleague, you know, and to reach out then to the Assistant Director of Counterterrorism Division just to make them aware of that we were in receipt of this information.

Q And why was it odd? Did the lead come in like during the normal course of business, or did it come in in an unusual manner?

A No. It came in through the standard manner in which a lead would come in. But, once again, it was the way my team had purported it to me was more just, they wanted me to be aware of it if in the event there were to be a request, that we would, let's say, be requested to go and interview some of these individuals, do something beyond just being in receipt of the information in that lead, that there didn't appear to be any surrounding alleged criminal activity.

BY [redacted]

Q Who did the lead come in from?

A The lead came in from our -- I believe, it's the Strategic Engagement Unit. But I can't say for sure if that's the actual name of the unit. But it fell under or falls under the Office of Private Sector, which --

Q Was that in Boston or out of headquarters?

A No. Out of headquarters.

Q Do you know if they solicited the information from Bank of America, or whether Bank of America just offered it up?

A The way it reads in the lead, it was -- they did not solicit the information, that the information was just proactively provided to them.

Q And did anyone in your field office feel that they were supposed to go out and interview Bostonians that had a Bank of America transaction in Washington around the timeframe?

A So I can't say what they felt, but they came to me to make me aware that they were in receipt of this lead.

Q So they hadn't taken investigative --

A No.

Q They came and talked to you?

A Correct.

Q On its face, this sounds somewhat concerning, I mean, if like my sister comes and visits me every year after the New Year, right; so if she came -- she doesn't live in Boston, but if she came and she had a Bank of America transaction on January 6th, 2021, and she got a visit at her house from an FBI agent, I mean, that would be concerning, right?

A Well, I -- once again, I can't speak to that because that's a hypothetical. But what I can speak to is, you know, the way that I run -- I've always run the FBI Boston Division, and you can see by the way the team came to me about this, after having conferred with our legal counsel is, you know, that's what I'm there for, where if anything is brought to me where they have a question about whether or not to do something or whether there may or may not be a concern about something, that's why we have that process set up. And it's really not unique in terms of, you know, just special agents in charge having routine dialogue and engagement with headquarters to talk through a variety of different matters that may come up. That's why we're there running the office.

Q But, presumably, Boston Field Office wasn't the only one that got this information, correct?

A The only other office that I'm aware of, once again because I reached out to my colleague in Springfield, I can't speak to -- I'm just not aware if, in fact, the lead was sent to other offices.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And you described how you were talking with the Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division at headquarters and telling them that you were not planning on taking any action. Who was the Assistant Director at the time?

A At the time, it was Jill Sanborn.

Q And how often did you interact with Ms. Sanborn?

A Not often. You know, every now and then when there would be a matter -- you know, obviously specifically related to the counterterrorism program, but I would not say it was often.

Q And what was the content of your discussion with Ms. Sanborn regarding the Bank of America list?

A So -- well, it was myself and the SAC from Springfield, and we just reached out to her together to advise her that this lead had come in, and she was thankful -- her response, in essence, was, you know, we described the nature of the lead, and she was thankful that we had, you know, provided this information to her, and she advised that she would look into it. And so, at that point, in my mind, you know, the matter was handled for the following reasons, simply just because I had advised Counterterrorism Division that this lead had been sent, and I was advising them simply because it had been sent from a different division that was not the Counterterrorism Division, and it was related to January 6th. So I just wanted to make sure they were aware. And then, secondly, you know, just to convey that, you know, it was an information-only lead and that we would not, you know, be taking any further action on it. And that was it. And then that really -- for that matter, it was closed. There was really nothing else at all that came out from that matter directly to me.

Q And who at the time was the SAC in Springfield?

A Sean Cox.

Q And it has been represented to us that the individuals were included on this list if they used a Bank of America product, either a credit card or a debit card within the D.C. area, including parts of Maryland and Virginia, between January 5th and January 7th. Is that kind of your recollection?

A It's similar to my recollection. I just don't recall exactly what the parameters were.

Q And it was also represented to us that individuals were prioritized on that list if they had a firearms purchase. Does that match your recollection?

A So it -- I don't have any knowledge of anybody being prioritized over a firearm purchase, but in one of the criteria that was in there in terms of Bank of America's data, it was related to purchases that had been made at either gun shops or, you know, stores that would sell firearms, but I can't speak to in terms of if any individual on that list was actually prioritized, or at least that wasn't conveyed to me.

Q And did the gun purchase have to be recent, or could it have been at any time in the past?

A That, I just don't know.

Q And how many individuals were included on that list that were in the jurisdiction of the Boston Division?

A Approximately 6 or 7, or around that number.

Q And your agents didn't take any action on those. Is that correct?

A No. Correct.

Q Were you ever asked by the Washington Field Office to take any investigative action regarding those 6 or 7 individuals?

A No. Once I made that call to the Counterterrorism Division, there was no further calls that were made to me or members of my team to my knowledge from headquarters on that matter.

Q And did you tell others within the Boston Division that you had made the call to the Assistant Director and that you were not going to take any action on the list?

A Yes. I informed the team that had brought that -- the matter to my attention.

Q And the team that brought the matter to your attention, did they have direct reports?

A In -- direct reports in which way?

Q Like the individuals who brought this to your attention, would they have told their direct reports to not take any action on the list?

A I just don't know who they spoke to or what they told. All I know is I advised them what I did, and the matter really was -- at least on our end up in Boston, it was closed.

Q And so no action to date has been taken on that list?

A No.

Q Are you aware an episode involving two individuals from Massachusetts who organized buses to go to the rally for President Trump in D.C. on January 6th, 2021?

A I am, yes.

Q And what can you tell us about that?

A So there are two individuals in particular are, I believe, Mark Sahady and Marianne Ianni. I may be getting that first name wrong. I'm just -- I'm not sure. It's Suzanne or Marianne. I can't recall, but last name Ianni. And so, they -- my Joint Terrorism Task Force squad received, you know, per the normal course the way these kinds of leads and cases were working received a package, you know, from Washington Field Office that, you know, had evidence in it related to conducting an arrest on Sahady and Ianni for their actions on January 6th. And it was actions at the time related to the unlawful entry of the Capitol Building.

And so those arrests were executed on or around, you know, like the January 19th to 20th timeframe of 2021. So after -- those arrests occurred. And then I want to say approximately 3 to 4 weeks, or about a month after that, my Joint Terrorism Task Force supervisor -- once again, the same team, my Joint Terrorism Task Force supervisor, my chief division counsel, and at the time, the assistant special agent in charge of the Counterterrorism Branch up in Boston came to see me about some interactions that were had between primarily at the line supervisory level between my Joint Terrorism Task Force supervisor and headquarters about a request of FBI Boston to interview all of the approximately 150 or so travelers that were on those buses that went down separate and aside from Sahady and Ianni, who had already been arrested.

And there were a couple iterations of phone calls, you know, back and forth between my supervisor and headquarters about him, at least at the time, not believing that we were in receipt of enough information to warrant conducting interviews of those individuals. And so, after a couple of conversations that had occurred, you know, at that line supervisory level, that is when my team came to see me about that matter for a couple reasons. One was just to advise me that there was a possibility that I may receiving a call from somebody more at my level from headquarters, you know, questioning me about it or asking me about it.

And, number two, just to advise me on the reasons why at the time, you know, they just were not in receipt of enough information that they believed warranted conducting interviews of those individuals. And the way that it was presented to me, once again, we have a very stringent, you know, process in terms of the way that we operate through the DIOG, the Domestic Investigations Operations Guide, and all that. And, you know, it's very clear. And at that time, I concurred with the team that we did not have enough information to conduct interviews and that I would be happy to receive any calls in State such if I did receive any calls from headquarters.

So, throughout -- and once again, this entire matter once again was a very short period of time. It was maybe -- it was no more than like a 24-hour period where my level -- I was engaged in this because I had concurred with my team, and I said: I agree; we're not going to be doing any interviews unless we are in receipt of additional information that would warrant that per our normal tenets of the DIOG.

And so I never -- throughout the entire process, I never received any calls from headquarters on it or anything along those lines. And it turns out that I was advised by my team that subsequent to that -- and I just don't know what the exact timeframe was -- but more additional information was provided to my Joint Terrorism Task Force supervisor that did, in fact, warrant going out and conducting interviews on some of the travelers, you know, based on additional information that had been provided, which met the tenets of the DIOG, and then the team went out and conducted those interviews.

I don't know on whom or how many, but it was a finite number. And that was it. It was -- there was no additional -- there was no contact at all from any other individuals at headquarters to me directly or to my knowledge to my supervisor who runs that squad.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember what additional evidence was provided that led your team to believe that they could move forward?

A It had -- I really -- I can't say specifically, but what I do recall was conveyed to me was it was some level of information that was indicative of these individuals potentially being, you know, right in or around the actual Capitol Building, like something along those lines. It was enough of substance to warrant actually just going out and talking to a few individuals.

Q Do you remember if it was pictures or cell phone data?

A I don't. I don't recall.

Q Would it have been enough if it was just cell phone data, like pinpointing the individual to the Capitol Grounds?

A It could have been. It could have been. But I just don't recall which one it was. But what I do recall is the supervisor, and once again the same team that had originally had reservations about the lack of enough information to go out and do the interviews, felt that that additional information that was provided was enough to go out and conduct interviews.

Q What type of information would be enough in that situation?

A Well, it would be -- there's so many different kinds of interviews. I would just hate to speculate on it. But it would be information that would bring it to a level above an individual who was exercising, like, their First Amendment right, you know, the First Amendment rights to protest or do whatever, like any inclination or any type of even reasonable suspicion that an individual could have been involved in criminal activity.

Q So, if you had a witness statement alleging that somebody on this trip had gone inside the Capitol, would that have been enough?

A Potentially, depending on the voracity of that statement, who the witness was, and if there was any other corroborating information independent of that witness' statement, you know, it would all come into play.

Q Certainly, if there was photographs of the person inside the Capitol, that would be sufficient?

A That would have been sufficient to conduct an interview. Yes.

Q But, as we sit here today, you don't remember specifically what the --

A I don't.

Q What the nature of the evidence was?

A I don't.

Q And you don't remember -- I know you said how many folks this encompassed. Was it 3 or 5 or 10 or 20?

A I don't recall a number. But it was not -- what I do recall the team advising me is it was not -- it was well below the 150-some odd individuals that all traveled down. It was a very finite number, not a large number.

Q Okay. So, just to recap here, the 150 individuals was presented, you know, just because they were on this bus trip, was presented in Boston Field Office, and for lack of a better word, there was some pushback from your office saying: Hey, this isn't enough to go out and conduct field interviews.

Correct?

A Correct.

Q And you said or one of your colleagues in the Boston Field Office said that if you have additional evidence, we will take it, and if it meets the DIOG, we'll go out and interview these people. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And subsequent to that, somebody from Washington came back with some additional evidence on a specific finite number of individuals and then you proceeded to do investigative work on that finite group?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And was it your understanding that the January 6th investigations were being run pursuant to the tenets of the DIOG?

A Yes. It was my understanding of that, yes.

Q Do you know if there was any sort of deviation from the DIOG?

A No. I mean, once again, you know, the matters we're speaking about here this morning are the matters that, you know, I had knowledge or involvement in and there was -- as you've heard, we are very stringent in terms of the adherence to the DIOG.

Q And do you know who from the -- from headquarters was talking with your JTTF supervisor?

A I don't. That would have been at his level, and I just don't know who that would have been at the time.

Q I want to kind of go back to your time at headquarters. Are you familiar --

[redacted] Sorry. Can I interrupt? I just want to put something on the record. Mr. Sahady's case, he came up in the prior questioning, is still pending. So we have been careful to try to provide as much information as possible, but just for the record wanted to make sure that you knew that his, in particular, case was still pending before the courts.

[redacted] Let me ask one more follow up.

[redacted] Absolutely.

BY [redacted]

Q Was it Assistant Director Sanborn that you communicated --

A Yes.

Q -- that to? So like the Bank of America information --

A Oh, no. I'm sorry. You're talking about the bus passenger matter?

Q Yeah. Do you remember who?

A No, because I did not -- I actually did not need to make a call down there at all because, when my team brought that matter to my attention, I concurred with them, and I advised them if they -- I would be happy to make a call if needed, but I did not have to intervene on that one, on that matter.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Sticking with the bus matter, did your JTTF supervisor, did he say that he had requested additional information from the Washington Field Office or his headquarters counterpart on the 150 passengers?

A He was -- yeah -- in his dialogue with headquarters, he did say: If there is additional information, then we will act accordingly.

Something -- that's not a quote from him, but just something to that effect was his interaction with headquarters.

Q Did headquarters offer any additional information at that time when he was saying that?

A I don't know of the timing. All I know is, subsequent to that, there was additional information that had been forwarded up.

Q During your time at headquarters as the Deputy Assistant Director for the Counterintelligence Division, did you ever interact with a former FBI agent named Peter Strzok?

A I did not interact with Peter Strzok when I was in the Counterintelligence Division. I had interacted with him very minimally when I was actually a section chief within the Human Resources Division because he had been transferred from his post in the Counterintelligence Division to the Human Resources Division. That's where we had very minimal interaction.

Q And --

BY [redacted]

Q What were his duties in the Human Resources Division?

A I really -- I can't say. I think he was working on certain projects, but that wasn't made clear to me.

Q And he had been relocated to the Human Resources Division as a result of some, you know, news that was reported, correct?

A Well, once again, that would be just speculation on my part because it wasn't spoken about directly to any of us at the time.

Q But, clearly, he was moved to the Human Resources Division after his voluminous text messages with his FBI colleague became public, correct?

A Well, once again, that would just be speculation.

Q No. But temporally, temporally speaking?

A What I can't speak to is the exact reasons behind his transfer.

Q Okay. So he was working with you or for you in the Human Resources Division?

A No. No. Just more -- really neither.

Q Okay. Was he doing anything in the Human Resources Division, or was he just parked there?

A He was working on certain human resources related projects, but I can't really speak to -- because I was in a different -- I was running the Employee Development and Selection Program, which was -- it was just different.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And it's been represented to us that you refer to yourself as Strzok's cleanup man. Is that accurate?

A No -- so -- do you have any context behind that at all?

Q Nope. That's it.

A No. I don't recall using that terminology. What I can only surmise that means is -- and, once again, without knowing the context in which it was brought up, the only thing I can think of would be that, when I was asked to go and be the Deputy Assistant Director in one of the ops branches, at the time, we were, based on my extensive criminal investigative background, there was a real push at the time to really help generate and move forward on initiatives related to the Chinese Communist Government's threat.

And so, you know, coming in to that position, you know, in the aftermath of the Peter Strzok tenure, you know, there was obviously some morale issues and things along those lines where my mentality at the time was just to, as it's always been, was to just go back to basics and focus on the work and the operations, especially when you look at the gravity of the China threat and some of the things that we were looking to do operationally along that realm, which, in the 9 or 10 months that I was there, we worked on some very successful initiatives against that threat.

So that's the only thing I can surmise is just bringing a -- you know, a very back to basics operationally driven mentality there. And then, when I was promoted to Boston as the special agent in charge, when I met with all of the squads initially throughout the entire division -- and it's a very large division, and so that took quite a bit of time -- but -- there's several messages. But one of the messages that I was looking to convey to the workforce up there -- because it was still the Peter Strzok related issues were still very much front and center in the media, and I was surmising that it was something that a lot of members of the workforce were homed in on a little bit.

And so one of the messages I delivered germane to him was just simply that, if we stick to the basics and we stick to what we're charged with doing, which is, you know, a very simple and direct mission statement that the FBI has, then we -- you know, we avoid all of that, you know, the issues that surrounded that one incident. So just do our job. Do it the right way. Good things will happen, and we just disregard any of the other noise that's going on with respect to that. So it was more from a leadership perspective, me utilizing that situation as something to just remind the work force, you know, the way that we go about doing our jobs. That's the only correlation I can really make to that, you know.

Q Okay. And kind of sticking with the China threat, are you familiar with DOJ's former China initiative?

A Yes.

Q And can you briefly describe the initiative?

A Well, really, I mean, I can't recite the exact tenets of it, but it really was just more -- it was more of a way to focus, you know, much more heavily on the myriad of threats emanating and operated by the Chinese Communist Government through a number of different, you know, counterintelligence, criminal, and cyber related means.

Q And, you know, while the China initiative was active in 2020, the Boston Division brought charges against Chinese nationals and a Harvard professor. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And, while announcing those charges, you stated that, quote: No country poses a greater, more severe, and long-term threat to our national security and economic prosperity than China. China's goal simply put is to replace the United States as the world's leading super power, and they're breaking the law to get there, end quote.

Do you still agree with this statement?

A I do. And the only thing -- I recall that press conference. And I would be surprised if I didn't also clarify somewhere else in my remarks, but, you know, when I refer to the threat emanating from China, it's very specifically focused on the Chinese Communist Government.

Q Yeah.

[redacted] To make the record clear, we can introduce your remarks. Real quick, I will do that as exhibit No. 1. These are the January 28, 2020, remarks delivered by SAC Bonavolonta announcing the charges against a Harvard professor and two Chinese nationals.

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] I'll say that there's a little scroll bar on the right-hand side, and the only thing not captured on this page is the thank-you at the end. So we'll make sure we get that included.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And, after looking at your remarks, is there anything additional you would like to add for the record?

A No. It's pretty -- I mean it's --

Q And a couple weeks later, there was an op-ed piece that you co-wrote with the U.S. attorney from Massachusetts. Do you remember that?

A I do, yes, Andy Lelling, the former U.S. Attorney. Yeah.

Q In that op-ed, you said, quote: China's assault on U.S. technological know-how is so pervasive that, in November 2018, the Attorney General formed the China Initiative specifically to combat the problem.

Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q And is that assault still ongoing?

A The threat -- the threat is just as pervasive now as it was then, yes.

Q And is it your understanding that the Biden administration has elected to end the China Initiative?

A I don't have -- that, I don't have knowledge of. What I can tell you is that our -- up in FBI Boston, we have -- the level of aggressiveness in which we -- and the resources that we devote to the China threat is the same now as it was then, if not more.

Q And, given your experience in this area, what are some of the risks associated with failing to counter China's economic and espionage and trade secret theft?

A Well, there's a number of risks behind that. I mean, once again, the theft of trade secrets or proprietary information poses significant risks to businesses, corporations, as well as government institutions, and the military, you know. And it, you know, the Chinese Communist Government's activities in terms of trying to steal these secrets is in -- aligned with their continuous efforts within their 5-year plans to at some point surpass the United States as the world's leading economic and military super power.

Q And kind of going back to the January 6th investigations, during the course of the investigations that were being worked on by the Boston Division, did you ever interact with FBI agent named Timothy Thibault?

A I did not, no.

Q Are you aware whether any of your agents interacted with Mr. Thibault?

A No.

Q Are you familiar with Steve Jensen?

A Very -- really only by name. I have not personally had interactions with him.

Q Do you know if he was involved in January 6th investigations as a unit chief?

A Either as a unit chief or a section chief. I'm not sure which role, but I am aware that he was -- he had a role down in that unit or that section.

Q Okay. And did you ever interact with, I believe he was the Assistant Director in charge at the Washington Field Office, Steven D'Antuono?

A I have interacted with him, but not on anything germane to January 6th.

Q What have you interacted with him on?

A Really more just contemporary colleague type, you know, conversations. In my capacity as originally the co-chair, and then I eventually became the chair of SAC Advisory Committee, obviously in that capacity, I would have interaction with all Assistant Directors in charge and SACs across the country, but not to my recollection, nothing direct with Steve related to January 6th.

Q Okay. And I know we've talked about some private sector engagement or leads that were given from the private sector. Can you describe the interactions between the Boston Division and possibly tech companies such as Twitter or Facebook?

A Well, up in -- I mean, really those companies are primarily headquartered -- I mean, that's more of a Silicon Valley area interaction that I believe would most likely occur from our -- either headquarters or our San Francisco Field Office, so as far as our private sector outreach in Boston, I'm not aware of any significant connectivity or outreach with those companies.

Q Do you ever receive leads from social media companies?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q Are you aware of any interactions between the FBI and social media companies?

A No.

Q I want to talk about a more recent event the FBI, Department of Defense training exercise that occurred in April of this year. Are you familiar with the Boston Field Office's training exercise with the U.S. Army Special Operations Command that took place on April 4th, 2023?

A I am, yes.

Q Can you explain what occurred during that training?

A So I really can't give you much details on that because that has always been and was at that time a Department of Defense generated and run training exercise. But, from time to time, we would assist them in certain components of that exercise.

Q And how often does that normally occur?

A I can't give you a -- you know, an exact timeframe on how often. Although, that wasn't the first exercise of that kind that had been conducted.

Q Can you kind of explain for us why the FBI works with DOD on these training exercises and what the FBI's role is?

A Sure. So, really, the ultimate role of those training exercises on the Department of Defense's side is to try to provide as real-life related training scenarios as possible in certain environments where their individuals may encounter certain -- you know, certain interactions germane to where they may be assigned at some point.

And so where the FBI comes in with these types of training exercises, which really go on in different cities, is simply just to provide like some realism with respect to if an individual was ever confronted, you know, by an adversary or something along those lines.

Q And, as the SAC, what's your involvement with these exercises or your role?

A Really minimal to none. Only a level of awareness when an exercise is occurring, and that's really it.

Q And who from the Boston Division is normally involved in these exercises?

A It would generally be, you know, special agents assigned within our counterintelligence branch because of the nature of that kind of work.

Q And it has been reported that, unfortunately, an individual was detained that was not an intended role player. Is that your understanding?

A It is, yes.

Q And can you tell us a little bit about that?

A You know, I can't simply just because I would be speaking to the specifics of an exercise that we did not put together or run.

Q Do you know if it was someone from the Boston Division who detained this individual, or was it a member of DOD?

A It was members of the Boston Division.

Q And do you know why it took so long to figure out that this individual was not a role player?

A I -- I do believe there's conflicting reports in terms of the amount of time that it took, but I can't speak to exactly what transpired in there.

Q What do you understand is the amount of time that it took to figure this out?

A Several minutes.

Q Several minutes, like five? Ten?

A I can't say.

Q And it has been reported that it was because of inaccurate information. Do you know how that inaccurate information was provided?

A Well, on that, I would have to refer you to the Department of Defense.

Q And, since then, it's been announced that there may be some additional practices that are put in place to ensure that that this doesn't happen again. Have those been put in place?

A Once again, it's a Department of Defense exercise, and I am aware that they are reviewing -- they are in the process of reviewing the entire incident. As to what other measures may or may not be put in place, I just cannot comment on because that would be their decision to make on that.

BY [redacted]

Q You've been briefed on it, though, correct?

A On?

Q On what happened?

A Yes.

Q And what can you tell us about what your FBI people told you?

A It was -- once again, it was an exercise where inaccurate information was provided to us by the Department of Defense in terms of, you know, the exact room in terms of where the trainee was supposedly staying, and then the rest, which has been widely reported, occurred.

BY [redacted]

Q And is the Boston Division implementing any new measures surrounding these trainings on the FBI side?

A Well, first, I would have to see what measures would be implemented by the Department of Defense, and then, you know, it would be my decision as to whether, you know, these training exercises would continue with our assistance. Or, if so, what measures would be put in place to as much as something like that can be guaranteed that an issue like that wouldn't happen again.

Q And can you help us understand why if it is a DOD training exercise, why was the Boston Division agents, why were they the ones detaining the individual?

A Simply just because of their being counterintelligence agents, their level of expertise in terms of various lines of questioning or mock scenarios, you know, in a potentially adverse environment. They would bring that to the table.

Q And have any additional DOD FBI training exercises taken place within the Boston Division's area of responsibility since then?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q I want to talk to you a little bit about the Attorney General's October 4th, 2021, school board memorandum. Are you familiar with that?

A I am.

Q And when did you learn about the Attorney General's October 4th, 2021, memorandum?

A I can't give you an exact timeframe, but it had to have been right in or around when it was released.

Q And were you involved in any conversations or correspondence that related to how the FBI could help address alleged threats or violation at school board meetings?

A I'm sorry. Can you repeat that?

Q Yeah. Were you involved in any conversations or correspondence with the Department of Justice or within the FBI on how could the FBI help out on this?

A So, after that memo was brought to my attention as well as to the United States Attorneys in my area of responsibility -- and because we cover four States, it's four U.S. attorneys -- and so, when that memo came out, we got -- we -- I spoke to each one of the four United States Attorneys directly, and there was a very immediate mutual agreement that, barring, you know, as we would in any case, barring a direct threat or use of force, you know, by someone, you know, who was operating in the environment of a school board, there was nothing beyond us talking about it and just raising a level of awareness that this memo was out there, that we would act upon. So, ultimately, no FBI Boston special agents nor any members of the United States Attorney's Offices engaged in any manner with any school boards in our area of responsibility.

Q And, in the memorandum, the Attorney General mentioned a disturbing spike in harassments, intimidation, and threats of violence against school boards and staff and employees. Were you seeing that within your area of responsibility?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q Did the Boston Field Office do any sort of assessment for threats against school staff or school board officials?

A To my knowledge, I just can't recall if one was done. I don't recall seeing one.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I'd like to offer a November 1st, 2021, letter from U.S. Attorney Nathaniel Mendell, I believe his name is, as exhibit No. 2.

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And, in this letter, it describes how meetings took place between the U.S. Attorney's Office and the Fusion Center, local law enforcement. I presume the FBI was involved. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And the third paragraph of the letter, it says, quote: During these meetings, representatives from the Fusion Center in the two statewide law enforcement associations stated that there are no known incidents of threats to school staff in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. This report is consistent with the FBI's Boston Field Office assessment on school threats to staff in the district. Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q And do you know who would have conducted this assessment out of the Boston Field Office?

A So it -- now, what I'm just unsure of is whether his use of the terminology "the FBI Boston Field Office's assessment on school threats" was more just something that was verbally relayed to him and that we were just not in receipt of any known threats to school boards, or if there was, in fact, a written assessment. I just don't know. But, if there was an assessment that was written or provided, it would have been through our Intelligence Branch.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Time's up.

[redacted] Yea. Thank you. We're at our time. Off the record.

[Recess.]

[11:16 a.m.]

[redacted] It is 11:16 in the morning, and we can go back on the record.

[redacted] Before we get started, I'm sorry, there is one item from the last session that the witness just wanted to clarify in terms of communications with social media companies from the field office perspective.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Yeah, so it wasn't on my mind until we ended our session, but I just want to be completely accurate with my responses in that, we do -- "we" meaning FBI Boston -- we do, on occasion, receive leads from various social media companies and platforms who -- who provide what they deem to be potential threat-to-life information through our National Threat Operations Center. And then it gets forwarded, like, to our division as well as other field offices.

For instance, if there was a -- to give an example of a real-life situation that occurred, is, you know, we could be forwarded a one- or two-line report from a social media company that says, There is this individual who, you know, we can identify who has expressed their desire to go out with a gun and kill a bunch of people.

You know, obviously, those are threats and tips that emanate from social media companies that we then have to follow up on, as far as threats to life or anything along those lines.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Those do come in.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] Thank you for that clarification. And thank you again for taking the time out of your schedule to come down here today.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to go back to something you said earlier, a term you used, and get a little more clarity on it. You made a reference to routine dialogue with headquarters. What does "dialogue" mean?

A Well, it can mean, from somebody in my position, it could mean a number of different things. We would have to get more specific on that, but it just, you know, it would just have to be that, you know, if headquarters was asking something of us or if we were asking something of headquarters, every once in a while, it will elevate to my level where I'm the one that would need to work it out and resolve the issue. But it happens. It's just a routine part of the job across all programs.

Q Right. And so that's standard, right, like that's part of how the process works?

A Correct.

Q And in general, would you say headquarters is receptive to feedback from you?

A Yes. I can't recall a time, you know, when I had articulated the facts on a certain issue the right way where they haven't really supported what I've wanted to do or how I felt something needed to be done.

Q Okay. So this is the process working kind of as it's designed --

A Yes.

Q -- would you agree with that?

I want to turn back to the questions that you had earlier about the Bank of America list if we could. You referenced the Office of Private Sector. What is the Office of Private Sector?

A So it's -- it's an entity that's operated and managed out of our headquarters here in Washington, D.C. that is really responsible for overall, like on an enterprise or a national level, engagement with private sector across a number of different programs, you know, like such as, whether it be cyber, criminal, counterintelligence, things along those lines.

So I mean, the best way I could describe it is just overall proactive outreach to members of the private sector.

Q And it's not unusual for members of the private sector to send information to the Private Sector Office, right?

A To my -- really, that's just not something that I have a high-level awareness in terms of the volume of information that comes in. I just can't speak to that.

Q Okay. But to your knowledge, the Office of Private Sector never requested anything from Bank of America, it was proactively provided by the Bank of America?

A Correct.

Q Okay. But you don't have any personal knowledge of that, it's just based on your understanding of what was told to you?

A Well, no, my understanding of what was actually written in that one lead.

Q Okay. It said in the lead that Bank of America provided this to --

A Yes.

Q -- and that the FBI had not -- and then you inferred from that that the FBI had not requested that?

A Correct.

Q Okay. You referred to it as an information-only lead. What does that mean, what does "information only" mean?

A So "information only" really means just that, that whichever entity is sending that lead up to the field office, is providing the field office information on whatever it may pertain to, but for action deemed appropriate.

Q Okay. And it's to your discretion as the office, and ultimately as the SAC, to decide what's appropriate?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So it's not like, here's this lead, you must do this, you must take an action on it?

A Correct. There are leads like that, but this was not one of them.

Q Those leads that are like that, what are they called?

A Well, those are just action leads.

Q Okay. So there's an action lead and there's an information-only lead?

A Yes.

Q And this was an information only lead?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with warrant requirements generally?

A With?

Q What's required when a warrant is required, to seek to obtain information.

A Yes.

Q Okay. So a third party, like the Bank of America, if they are producing information kind of sua sponte, of their own accord, information from their own files, do they need a warrant to do that?

A I don't believe they do, but once again, I'm not an attorney, so I just --

Q Okay.

A -- I just want to be careful that I'm not espousing something that, you know, I'm not as informed on.

Q Understand. Understand.

You said you brought the information to the assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division, Jill Sanborn, and can you say again what her reaction was?

A Well, she was -- she was thankful that SAC Sean Cox and I had brought that to her attention when we brought that to her attention. She was not aware of that lead and said that she would inquire within. And -- and that was it.

Q Okay. And after you brought it to her attention, there was no -- nobody came back to you and said, you need to take any action on this?

A No.

Q Okay. And to your knowledge, did anybody go to the special agent in charge of Springfield -- I'm sorry, I think you told us his name, I can't remember it --

A Sean Cox.

Q -- did anybody go to Mr. Cox and tell him he had to take any action on that lead?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay. And there was no -- you said you told her, you told Ms. Sanborn that you weren't planning to do anything with the information-only lead, and there was no kind of punitive action taken against you or anyone in Boston when you said that, right?

A No, there was not.

Q Okay. So she was receptive to that?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with the term "domestic violent extremism"?

A I am.

Q And that's sometimes abbreviated as DVE, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So for the duration of this interview, I am going to refer to it as DVE. You understand that?

A Sure, yeah.

Q Are you familiar with how the FBI defines DVE?

A Loosely, yes. I don't know if I can recite for you the exact definition, but I know what it is, yes.

Q Can you describe your understanding of it?

A Sure. So my understanding of it is that, well, in order for us to even predicate or open up a domestic violent extremism case, there needs to be three basic prongs that we can -- that we can articulate. And really, what it is, is that, it's an individual who is alleged to have committed a Federal crime, who has either threatened the use of force or violence, or committed force or violence, pertaining to a certain kind of ideology. So those three tenets are what we need in order to actually predicate a case.

Q So you can't predicate -- the ideology piece standing alone is not enough predication, right?

A No.

Q And you need to have the additional either actually committed a crime or a threat of a crime?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the definition -- are you familiar with the term "domestic terrorism"?

A Yes.

Q And that's sometimes abbreviated as DT, right?

A Right.

Q So for the duration of this interview, I might use the initials DT instead of domestic terrorism --

A Okay.

Q -- you'll understand that?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the statutory definition of DT?

A I am not.

Q Okay.

A Not offhand.

Q Can you -- what's your understanding of when a case would qualify as domestic terrorism?

A Well, just more really the best way that I would delineate it, is more -- compared to -- we have international terrorism and domestic terrorism. And the difference -- they're both, the common denominator with both is that there needs to be some kind of, like, threat or use of force or violence.

On the international terrorism side, it's through the jihadist ideology, something related to that, and on the domestic side, it's somebody who's threatening the use of force or violence related to some kind of, you know, a connection or ideology, you know, within the United States.

Q Okay. And again the threat of violence or use of violence?

A Yes.

Q You're familiar with the events of January 6, 2021?

A I am.

Q Okay. Do you believe the events of January 6th were acts of domestic terrorism?

A Well, you're asking my opinion of -- I can only go by -- I can only go by the nature of the cases that we've had and the arrests that we've made on individuals there that committed crimes.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And I think you went through this earlier, but the FBI's Boston Field Office covers the States of Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, right?

A Right.

Q Okay. Do you know how many individuals from these States in total have been charged in relation to January 6th?

A Approximately, I think we're up to about 24 or so that have been arrested on charges related to January 6th.

Q Okay. And you mentioned earlier the resources involved with that. You said it was really kind of minimal in relation to the overall number of agents in Boston, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. For those 24 or so cases, can you describe the predication level required to open a preliminary investigation into cases like that?

A Well, once again, this was unique in that there were -- there was information in evidence that was being sent up to us, you know, from Washington, D.C., and so, if -- really, it was more just a -- a ready-made package with evidence in it indicative of an individual who had committed a Federal crime down there.

Q Okay.

A On January 6th.

Q But to your knowledge, there was sufficient predication --

A Yes.

Q -- for each one of these?

A Yes.

Q You had no reason to believe there was not?

A No.

Q And how, as a special agent in charge, how would you go about making sure there was sufficient predication?

A Well, it would primarily, it would be the assessment of not only my team that would handle those investigations, but also in coordination with the relevant United States Attorney's Office that would be up in our area of responsibility that would also, they would be working on their parallel track with the United States Attorney's Office from D.C.

Q Okay. And we discussed earlier the situation with the hundred-and-some individuals on the buses. In that instance, I just want to -- I think this was fairly clear earlier, but I just want to have this down to brass tacks -- that, you know, your line supervisor had concerns that there wasn't sufficient evidence to meet the requirements, right?

A Right.

Q And in that case, they said that, and within 24 hours, the Washington Field Office provided additional information. Is that a fair assessment?

A Yes. I can't say whether it was within 24 hours. I'm just not aware of that. I can't recall the timeline, but eventually, yes, they did send up additional information.

Q Do you think it was, like, more than a week that it took, or do you think it was a fairly concise timeline?

A I just don't recall.

Q Okay. But there was no -- and you said it was a limited number of people that ultimately were interviewed based on that?

A Yes.

Q And is an interview, would that be part of a preliminary investigation or a full investigation?

A It could be an assessment or a preliminary investigation.

Q Okay. And -- okay. So the -- sorry, I'm going to move on. Thank you. You waited until you had sufficient predication to take any steps?

A Yes.

Q And there was no push from Washington Field Office to take any steps that you weren't comfortable taking as, you know, you had authority as in your role as head of the Boston Field Office, and your line agents had authority to take the steps that they deemed appropriate?

A Yes.

Q And they weren't pushed to do anything they weren't -- they didn't deem appropriate?

A No.

Q Okay. Going back to the resource question, are you familiar with Operation Varsity Blues?

A Yes.

Q Can you describe your role in this investigation?

A Sure. So once again, I mean, I was obviously the special agent in charge, you know, ultimately overseeing that entire investigation, and that was the college admissions scandal case.

Q And so when you say you oversaw it, did you oversee the case agents working on that matter?

A Technically, yes, but once again the day-to-day case-related investigative activities were not something that I would be involved in.

Q How many individuals were charged in that investigation if you know?

A Approximately in or around 60.

Q Okay. And have most of them been convicted?

A Yes. Convicted by either guilty plea or at trial, yes.

Q Okay. Can you describe the resources that the Boston Field Office devoted to that investigation?

A A significant amount of resources. I mean, very large case, large number of subjects. It was a very large portion of that investigative squad was tasked with investigating that case.

And then, of course, once a case like that reaches the arrest phase, just because of the sheer volume, scope, and number of individuals, it would be a large number of resources at least devoted on that day.

Q Okay. And so, it was a pretty big undertaking, right?

A Yes.

Q So by contrast, you said the FBI Boston Field Office has charged about 24 people from your -- from your territory in connection with January 6th, right?

A Correct.

Q So would you say there were more resources devoted to Operation Varsity Blues than to the January 6th-related investigations?

A I mean, overall, yes.

Q Okay. On the question about resources devoted to the January 6th, were you ever prevented from pursuing other, for example, terrorism-related investigations because of January 6th investigations?

A No.

Q Were you ever prevented from pursuing other violent crime-related matters because of the resources being devoted to January 6th?

A No.

Q Okay. Did anyone at headquarters ever pressure you to redirect resources to the January 6th investigations?

A No.

Q Did anybody at the Washington Field Office ever pressure you to redirect resources to focus on the January 6th investigations?

A No.

Q Okay. And I want to look at trends in domestic terrorism, writ large. Do you consider domestic terrorism to be a serious threat to our national security?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain why?

A Sure. I mean, anytime there's an activity on behalf of an individual or group of individuals that are looking to plan or carry out acts of violence or other Federal crimes is, you know, is a danger to our national security the same way that on the international terrorism side home-grown violent extremists are a danger to our national security as well.

Q And I want to introduce, as exhibit 3, an article from The Providence Journal which was published on July 7, 2019. It's entitled, "It's not a job, it's a career, it's a way of life." And I'll give you a minute to look it over.

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 3.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Go ahead.

A I'm just going to go on record as saying, I felt I was wearing a very appropriate suit and tie. I remember that comment there, but anyways, so.

Q Oh, because of the "unflashy suit and tie"?

A Yes, yeah.

Q That's funny.

Do you remember participating in the interview described in this article?

A I do, yes.

Q Okay. On page 2, in response to the first question on the page, the article quotes you as saying -- you're asked about issues specific to Rhode Island. You say, we have robust work within Rhode Island in both of these threats. Counterterrorism, there's really three main threats under that umbrella -- anybody who could be inspired by and committing acts of violence in the name of ISIS.

It goes on, Beyond the ISIS threats, the two main threats we're really focusing on are home-grown violent extremists and the domestic terrorism threat. We've seen a significant amount of that in the last year or so alone.

Do you remember saying that?

A I do.

Q Okay. So as early as 2019, you were seeing an uptick in domestic terrorism threats, correct?

A Correct.

Q And that was based on your experience in the field?

A Yes.

Q And so I think, you know, there's been some discussion about recent increases in domestic terrorism threats, but that was actually, you saw it happening even as early as 2019?

A Yes.

Q And potentially even before that?

A Yes.

Q A couple of quick questions on the China initiative that came up earlier. I think [redacted] talked you through China -- you still consider China to be a serious threat, right?

A Yes.

Q And has there been any -- and you were at the Boston Field Office during the China initiative, and you've been there throughout since the time it was ended, right?

A Yes.

Q Has there been any change in your focus on China in that time?

A No. It's only -- it's -- I've progressively devoted more resources to it.

Q Okay. Would you say you've devoted more resources since 2021, for example?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And in fact, I think earlier when you were told that the China initiative had ended, you seemed -- did you know that the China initiative had been ended?

A By me, I can only -- it's only what I've seen or read in media reports. But just in terms of the way that I've developed, and my team have developed, the strategies with respect to combating the Chinese Communist Government's activities, no, we've devoted full and ample resources to it.

Q And has FBI Headquarters supported you in that?

A Very much, yes.

Q And can you say any more about that?

A I'm sorry?

Q Can you say anything more about that?

A Well, as was brought up in the previous interview, we've, over the last several years, we've had some very high profile and substantive China-related cases that we've brought up in FBI Boston.

So it's been those kinds of cases require a significant amount of support from program management at headquarters, you know, funding, resources, you know, approvals for various operational activities that we were planning, so things along those lines.

Q Okay. And you said you've been devoting increased resources to dealing with the threat from China. Has anybody at Main Justice, DOJ Main Justice, ever told you to stop devoting those resources?

A No.

Q And nobody at FBI Headquarters has told you that?

A No.

Q Okay. Moving on, we talked a little bit earlier about the definitions of DVE and DT. Have you ever been encouraged or incentivized to reclassify cases as acts of DT?

A I have not.

Q Did you ever encourage or incentivize your subordinates to reclassify cases as DT?

A No.

Q Do you know if Jill Sanborn ever encouraged or incentivized FBI employees to reclassify cases as DT?

A I am not aware that she ever did that with anybody else, but I know she never did that with me.

Q Okay. What about DVE, were you ever encouraged or incentivized to reclassify cases as incidents of DVE?

A No.

Q Did you ever encourage or incentivize your subordinates to reclassify cases as incidents of DVE?

A No.

Q And do you know if Jill Sanborn ever encouraged or incentivized FBI employees to reclassify incidents as -- I'm sorry -- reclassify cases as incidents of DVE?

A No.

Q Okay. As the special agent in charge, are you eligible for a monetary bonus?

A Yes.

Q To your knowledge, is this bonus dependent on the number of DT cases that the Boston Field Office investigates?

A No.

Q Okay. Is the bonus directly tied to metrics like case numbers, to your knowledge?

A No. There's various metrics that go into it, but really, what it boils down to is just overall -- overall performance of the office across the myriad threats that we're charged with mitigating, and that we prioritize each year.

Q Okay. Do you recall ever discussing your bonus structure with your subordinates?

A No.

Q Okay. It's not something that, like office chatter you would talk about? I got to make my bonus this year or something like that?

A No, no.

Q With respect to case numbers, we've heard testimony suggesting that case numbers are actually not a great -- case numbers standing alone are not a great metric of measuring office performance, first, because they're just allegations until they're actually proven, and second, because the number of cases doesn't represent the size of the threat.

So, for example, there might be one case agent working 20 bank robberies, but it might take one case agent -- might have just one international terrorism matter, and that might be all that occupies their time. Do you agree with that assessment?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So the number of cases opened isn't really indicative of the size of the threat that an issue poses. Is that fair?

A No. It's much more geared toward the impact that the office is having against those threats.

Q And on that note, I want to turn to the threat review and prioritization process. Are you familiar with the threat review and prioritization process?

A Yes.

Q And this is sometimes referred to as the TRP process, right?

A Right.

Q Okay. So for the duration of this interview, I'm going to refer to it as the TRP process. You understand that?

A Yes.

Q Okay. As the special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston Field Office, are you involved in the TRP process?

A Yes.

Q And can you describe your role?

A Sure. So we do it on an annual basis, and the way I run it up in Boston, it's very -- you know, I bring in, you know, several stakeholders from both the operational side and the intelligence branch side to work, you know, together to make sure that the assessments are all uniform in terms of which, you know, for that given year, what are we seeing in terms of trends, what are we seeing in terms of the major threats across all programs that we need to devote the most time, attention, and resources to.

And it's a very -- it's a robust, significant process that we usually run around the summertime in preparation for the upcoming fiscal year, you know, in that upcoming October. So overall, I ultimately, you know, make the final decisions in terms of how we're prioritizing the threats each year.

Q And can we talk with just a little more granularity. The TRP process, it relies on intelligence, right?

A Yes. Well, it relies on -- the way I, once again, I run it up in Boston, is, intelligence informing operations, but you can't have one without the other. Both components have to be operating together to develop a substantive strategy.

Q In your opinion, is the TRP process a reliable way to determine how to prioritize threats?

A Yes.

Q And can you say anything more about that?

A Well, it just -- it enables us, once again, to make sure that we're not missing something significant that's happening, in my case, in Boston's area of responsibility. And by having all of the intelligence analysts representatives, as well as the supervisors of all of the operational squads coming in together and having these discussions about all the threats across all programs, it gives me confidence that we're not, you know, taking our eye off the ball on a significant threat.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the Field Office Strategic Plan?

A Yes.

Q And this is sometimes referred to as the FOS plan? Is that right?

A Or the FOSP.

Q The FOSP.

A Yes.

Q The FOSP.

How does the TRP process impact the FOSP?

A Well, the TRP is really the overarching umbrella, if you will, that -- the end product or the final result is the FOSP.

Q Okay. So it starts with the TRP and then it --

A Yes.

Q -- ends with the FOSP?

Okay. Are you familiar with the term "field office health measures"?

A Yes.

Q What does that term refer to?

A So those are -- those are more metrics-related measures that, you know, every field office has, both on the administrative side, as well as on the operational side. It's used in conjunction with qualitative impact information that all comes together, and is used to formulate a field office's end-of-year ratings across all different programs.

Q Okay. But it's separate and distinct from the TRP process and the FOSP, right?

A It's -- well, no, it's actually part of that process in terms of every field office -- every field office needs to come up with certain measures that they feel comfortable that they will be able to attain --

Q Okay.

A -- you know -- you know.

Q Understood.

Are you familiar with the FBI's National Threat Operations Center?

A Yes.

Q It's sometimes referred to as the NTOC, right?

A Yes.

Q Could you broadly explain what the NTOC does?

A Sure. The NTOC is an entity that's operated out of our CJIS facility in Clarksburg, West Virginia, and it's the mechanism with which various kinds of threat-related information, or tips, whether it be from social media companies or just public, you know, citizens, you know, who think there may be -- you know, the ones that get to us quickly are ones where there might be an alleged threat to life, or a threat of violence against somebody or people, along those lines.

Q In your experience, is the NTOC useful for the FBI Boston Field Office?

A Yes.

Q And does it help you, for example, prevent crimes?

A It has before, yes.

Q Can you describe any incidents?

A So there was one in particular up in Maine where a threat that came through NTOC, and it was very ambiguous. It was just a threat directed, you know, that an individual was going to go carry out an act of violence against a member of a specific, you know, religious faith community.

And our team up there acted on it immediately, and it actually turned into the identification and the arrest of an individual.

Q And sorry, I should've clarified this earlier, but the NTOC -- we've been saying NTOC. That's kind of a term of art for FBI, but the public might know it as 1-800-CALL-FBI, right? Like, that's the hotline associated with NTOC?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And the website is tips.FBI.gov, right?

A Correct.

Q And in your experience, does the FBI try to make it pretty widely known that citizens can reach out to both 1-800-CALL-FBI and tips.FBI.gov to relay information to the FBI?

A Yes.

Q So the Bureau, for example, regularly includes that information in press releases about --

A Yes.

Q -- or in its tweets, for example?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Why is it important for the public to know about these resources?

A Well, so they have a mechanism with which to report alleged crimes so we can act upon them.

Q Okay. I want to introduce -- actually, are you familiar with the recent case in Texas in which an individual murdered four adults and a child?

A I'm familiar with it from media reports.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q I just want to introduce for the record, it's going to be exhibit 4, a tweet from the FBI's Houston field office dated May 2, 2023. It's timestamped 3:40 p.m. And I know you might not be personally familiar with this, but --

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 4.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this tweet reads, "digital billboards courtesy of @CCOutdoorNA are now on display across the Houston area reminding drivers there's an $80,000 reward for suspect Francisco Oropesa. Call 1-800-CALL-FBI with any tips big or small. Please retweet."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then the tweet immediately following it says, similar billboards will soon be up across the State.

So this is an example from just 3 days -- 2 days ago, of the FBI encouraging people to call the tip line, right?

A Right.

Q And based on your experience, why do you think that the FBI's Houston office would've put the 1-800-CALL-FBI number out there this way?

A Well, as a significant resource multiplier for a couple of reasons, a public safety issue in that an incredibly, you know, violent individual is still out there on the run at the time; and also to solicit, you know, tips in terms of a way to locate him and conduct an arrest.

Q Thank you.

And I want to introduce, as exhibit 5, a May 3, 2023 CNN article. So this is entitled, "Texas massacre suspect is arrested after a tip to the FBI, ending days' long manhunt, officials say."

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 5.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this article before?

A Not this article.

Q Okay. I can give you a second to look through it if you like.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So this article reports on the arrest of Mr. Oropesa, correct?

A Correct.

Q And in the middle of the second page, we've highlighted two paragraphs. Those paragraphs read, "A tip submitted through the FBI's tip line ultimately led authorities to the suspect's location, Assistant Special Agent in Charge Jimmy Paul said. Paul said the tip came in at 5:15 p.m. local time, and Oropesa was arrested at 6:30 p.m. He said, We just want to thank the person who had the courage and bravery to call in the suspect's location, he said."

So this is an example of the tip line providing information that enabled law enforcement to apprehend a suspect in really under 2 hours, right?

A Yes.

Q So the tweet went up at 3:40 p.m. -- presumably the billboards were up a little bit in advance of that -- but later that day, the tip was called in at 5:15 p.m., and within an hour and a half, they made the arrest, right?

A Right.

Q So this is an example of the value of the FBI tip line, right?

A Yes.

Q Some people have referred to the FBI tip line as a snitch line. Have you heard that reference?

A No, I have not.

Q What's your reaction to that?

A Well, I mean, we're -- that's what we -- we're supposed to investigative alleged crimes, and, you know, citizens, you know, citizens calling in, you know, having been witness to or having had knowledge of alleged crimes, I would view as the -- as a, you know, just simply the right thing to do.

Q Do you think the term "snitch line" has a negative connotation?

A I do.

Q Do you think it could potentially kill citizens and prevent them from calling the FBI?

A If that was something that was put out publicly, possibly.

Q Okay. So -- and presumably that could make it harder for you as the SAC of the Boston Field Office to have your agents apprehend suspects, right?

A It could.

Q And it could make it harder to prevent crimes from happening too, right?

A It could.

Q Okay. I want to move on.

Are you familiar with something referred to as threat tags?

A Yes.

Q What does the term "threat tag" mean?

A Once again, I'm not, you know, I'm not as well versed in the actual definition of them, but generally, what a threat tag was instituted to do was just to -- was to serve as a mechanism to track the way -- to track the way certain cases were opened along the lines of certain programs that we're charged with investigating, so that if at any time there needed to be data run or a data call to aggregate information for a variety of reasons, then we would be able to have access to that data.

Q So it was -- so it's primarily used to gather data? Is that a fair -- or gather statistics? Is that a fair --

A Yes.

Q -- description?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And are threat tags applied to cases? Are they applied to people? In other words, would you apply a -- like, would you say, this person is a threat, or was it, this case is tagged under this threat tag for statistical purposes?

A So to my knowledge, it would really be more program, like threat-based.

Q Okay. So it would be applied to the case?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Who actually applies the threat tags to a matter? Would that be a case agent?

A It could be a combination of a case agent, an operational support technician or like an intelligence analyst, you know, somebody who would have access to the opening -- or have access to the administrative functions of a case.

Q And do threat tags drive any operational decisions in a matter?

A Not -- it has not for me.

Q Okay. So for example, applying a threat tag to a case doesn't impact the level of predication required to open a preliminary investigation?

A No, not in any way.

Q Okay. And it wouldn't then, applying a threat tag to a case wouldn't impact the investigative steps that could be taken in a case, right?

A No.

Q We talked a little bit earlier about Jill Sanborn, and I think you -- she was -- you said you had some interaction with her, not often, but some interaction?

A Yes.

Q What was your opinion of Ms. Sanborn as a manager?

A Well, I mean, always -- always positive in terms of the interactions that I had with her. She was -- I mean, if I ever needed a resource or needed something from her or support from something. And then -- and then, you know, obviously, in my role as the co-chair and the chair of the SAC Advisory Committee, if there was ever any interaction that I needed to have in that capacity, there were never any -- any issues.

Q In your experience with her, was she competent at her job?

A Yes.

Q Did you have any doubts about her abilities?

A No.

Q Okay. In your opinion, was she kind of widely respected at the FBI?

A As far as I knew and from what I had heard from others, yes.

Q Okay. As the SAC of the Boston Field Office, how often do you interact with the Washington Field Office?

A Minimally.

Q Okay. How would you describe the relationship between the Boston Field Office and the Washington Field Office? Is it cordial?

A I'm sorry? Between the Boston and the Washington Field Office?

Q Yes.

A Overall, yes.

Q Okay. Has the Washington Field Office ever pressured or kind of forced the Boston Field Office to take any investigative steps with which the Boston Field Office disagreed?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q Okay. And you said to your knowledge. And if that had happened, it probably would've risen up to your level, right?

A Well, unless -- unless it was resolved below my level, then there's a chance it would not have been raised to me. But if it would've continued, then, yes, it would've been raised to my level.

Q Okay. And to your knowledge, it never -- nothing ever rose to your level?

A No.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with an incident that took place in August 2022 in which a bomb threat was called into Boston Children's Hospital?

A Yes.

Q Could you describe the circumstances around that?

A Well, that is -- that's very much still an active and ongoing investigation, so I'm not sure what I can say in this forum.

[redacted] What's the specific question?

[redacted] I was going to -- you know, we can introduce the indictment and go with the actual -- or go with the affidavit and actually talk about what's been public, if that helps.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to introduce, as exhibit 6, the FBI affidavit accompanying complaint -- criminal complaint in this case. It's -- the case is United States v. Catherine -- I think it's Levy?

A Yes.

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 6.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And you said this is still an ongoing case. So this individual has not yet been -- this has not yet gone to trial? The individual has not yet pled?

A The case is not fully adjudicated yet.

Q Fully adjudicated.

A Correct.

Q Technical term.

A Yeah.

Q Thank you.

So are you familiar with -- there is a special agent's name on here -- are you familiar with this special agent?

A Brian Gutierrez, yes.

Q And he works at the Boston Field Office, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Paragraph 8 of this, it's on the bottom of page 2, on the top of page 3. It reads, "Beginning in August 2022, BCH" -- which I believe refers to Boston Children's Hospital -- "was subjected to a sustained harassment campaign based on the dissemination of information online regarding the services offered by GeMS. Specifically" -- it goes into the allegations, and then it says, "the conduct has included harassing phone calls and emails, including violent and death threats and threats of mass casualty attacks at BCH.

Is that consistent with as much as what is public regarding this case?

A Yes.

Q And is it accurate that there was an online campaign that contributed to the Boston Children's Hospital being targeted with threats of violence?

A Correct, yes.

Q Okay. Again, realizing that this is still an active matter, can you talk broadly about, this refers to a number of violent and death threats and threats of mass casualty attacks. Can you estimate the number of threats that have been targeted towards this hospital?

A Offhand, I can't, but there's been numerous threats.

Q Okay. Do you think it's more than 10?

A I just, I really don't know the number.

Q Okay. Can you speak to the impact that these threats have had on the hospital?

A Yes. Well, whenever threats of this nature come in, especially to an entity like Boston Children's Hospital, there's processes and procedures that they, meaning the hospital, enact just to ensure that there's going to be no harm to any of the patients or the staff there.

So in some cases, you know, they may have to evacuate certain parts of the hospital or relocate individuals from one part to another, or at a minimum, you know, send warnings out within the hospital that, you know, there's a threat and things along those lines. So it's very -- you know, at the least, it's incredibly disruptive to the operation of the hospital.

Q And do you think that could impact the patients' ability to access care at that hospital if it's a locking-down part of the hospital?

A Potentially.

Q And these patients, of course, are children, right --

A Yes.

Q -- because it's Boston Children's Hospital?

Do you know if children have been diverted to other hospitals because of the threats generated by this online harassment campaign?

A So in this particular instance, I don't recall.

Q Okay. When a threat like this -- you said there's been many, there's been multiple violent threats, multiple death threats directly towards the hospital. The Boston Field Office has to investigate each one of those threats, right?

A Yes.

Q So does that divert your law enforcement officers from other matters that they could be working on?

A Well, we have -- remember, we actually have squads that these kinds of threats or these kinds of activities would fall under that squad, so it's really what they do. It falls under the auspice of what those particular squads would investigate or the types of crimes they would conduct investigations on.

[redacted] Okay. I think we -- it's noon. We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.

[redacted] It is 12:07 p.m. We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q I just want to go back to the October 4th Attorney General's memo. I believe you told us earlier that you didn't have any involvement -- the Boston Field Office didn't have any involvement in supplying data points for that memo?

A Yes. You know, but after having reviewed this, it refers in that memo to an assessment. But once again, like I said before, I just can't recall whether there was an assessment that was done on it because of the memo, or simply it was a verbal briefing that was provided. That I just can't recall.

Q But before the memo came out, did the Boston Field Office have any role in providing input for the AG's office?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q And to your knowledge, I believe you told us that there hadn't been an uptick, to your awareness, in threats to individuals at school board meetings?

A Correct.

Q Part of a concern that our members have advanced with the October 4th memo is that it seems like a political operation, right? The National School Boards Association worked at the White House. The School Boards Association official googled a bunch of incidents connected with the White House.

This letter, I believe, went September 29th. You know, 5 days later, if my math's right, is that 5 days -- 5 days later the Attorney General promulgates a memo. And it doesn't seem to us, we haven't been able to find any evidence that before the AG's memo went out, the AG or the Department did outreach on their own to make an assessment of whether what the NSBA was raising in their letter was, in fact, a concern.

And so we ask you about that, if you were aware of any outreach by the Attorney General, by the Justice Department, in advance of the October 4th memo.

A So I was not aware of any prior outreach.

Q Okay. Does it concern you that such a memo was promulgated, and, you know, perhaps it was just a political operation?

A Well, once again, that would be injecting an opinion, and as you can -- hopefully as you can see and tell is, that is just not the way that I operate in the work environment.

And so, the way I would answer that question would be, we can review the way it was handled by me in terms of the interaction I had with the U.S. attorneys and the ultimate resolution to how it was handled.

Q But to the extent you, in fact, may have handled this appropriately, but not every other, you know, FBI office out in the country, you know, not every office acted the way you did. And if they get this memo and they start pointing their law enforcement resources in the various regions to a threat that doesn't really exist, I mean, isn't that a problem?

A Well, once again, I don't -- I really am not aware of what other field offices did or how they acted toward it. All I can really speak to is how we handled it and if -- and just to summarize it again very succinctly is that, if there was -- if we were not going to be in receipt of any kind of a specific threat related to a school-board meeting, then we were not going to be engaged with school boards.

Q Okay. Do you recall any communications with headquarters on the topic of the memo?

A It may have been mentioned during a, you know, like a weekly, we have the directors, civitas. You know, there's like video teleconferences that occur each week where the director and other members of headquarters will just kind of provide updates on that past week, the events of that week, to the SACs across the country.

Q Okay.

A And I -- I recall that the memo itself was mentioned during the civitas, but I just can't recall really much more than that other than that, just making us aware that this memo was out there and that, you know, we would be engaging or handling this as we saw fit, you know, something very generic along those lines.

Q And the terminology "as we see fit," did you take that to mean that the director was de-emphasizing the importance of the memo?

A No. "As we see fit," that was the terminology that I just used here --

Q Okay.

A -- right now. That's not a quote or anything from the civitas. But, no, the indication that I received from that civitas was just simply, the memo was out, to ensure to review the memo and, you know, and engage appropriately with our U.S. attorneys counterparts because it had emanated from DOJ.

Q Okay. But you didn't feel like there was a request from headquarters to make this a priority to go look for school board-related issues?

A No.

Q Did you get a sense from headquarters, maybe on this video teleconference or some other communication, that the FBI was trying to distance themselves from the memo?

A No. I -- I did not -- I did not -- that's not the indication that I received. It was more just, you know, handle it, you know, appropriately, which is what I did.

Q Okay. In your experience, isn't it remarkable how quickly from the September 29th letter that NSBA wrote to the White House, how much time elapsed before the Attorney General put out his memo?

A I'm sorry?

Q About 5 days.

A Remarkable in --

Q How quick -- how quick the AG acted after this letter came from the School Boards Association.

A Well, once again, I'm not privy -- I'm just not privy to the decisions that were made at that level or any information they may or may not have been privy to, to formulate the memo.

Q Okay.

A My engagement with this was simply, the memo was released, and I acted upon it appropriately.

Q In your experience though -- you know, you've been with the FBI for over 20 years -- if the September 29th letter was one of the only inputs the Attorney General considered before releasing the October 4th memo, in your experience, would that be a pretty thin record?

A Well, once again, I -- respectfully that seems to just be a little bit of a leading question that I'm not in a position to answer.

Q Okay. But you do acknowledge 5 days is quick?

A I answered the question.

Q Okay. I want to specifically turn back to something we spoke about in the first hour, and that is the bus trip. And I believe you told us that one of your -- one of the people in your office -- maybe it was an ASAC, and maybe you can refresh my memory -- flagged it for you and indicated that you might be hearing from Washington?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And do you remember who that was that flagged that for you?

A So it was really -- it was a combina- -- it was really in totality that same team that I referenced before, it was the --

Q Okay.

A -- the line, the squad -- the JTTF squad supervisor, the -- my chief division counsel, and at the time, the ASAC of my Counterterrorism Branch.

Q Okay. And so I'm going to -- I'm going to read to you some testimony that we received from Mr. Hill --

A Okay.

Q -- only for the purpose of potentially refreshing your recollection, to see if it, you know, jogs your memory.

Mr. Hill testified -- and this is on page 81 of his transcript -- two individuals in Massachusetts organized buses to go down to the rally, and Boston opened up cases on those two individuals because we were shown definitive evidence from WFO of them entering restricted areas of the Capitol.

On to page 82 of the transcript, But those two individuals organized these buses, and there were 140 people on the buses, on the two buses. And WFO wanted us to open up a case on each and every one of those 140 individuals, to which the SSA in Boston said, They were going to a political rally, which is a First Amendment-protected activity, no, we're not starting cases on these people.

To which they said, meaning WFO, Well, we're going to call your SAC, or your S-A-C, and the SSA said, Go right ahead.

Does that vignette, was that briefed to you?

A So once again, the exact verbiage that came from George Hill there, like, I, that I can't recall if that's exactly how it went down. But, yes, the -- the -- when my team briefed me on that one issue, one of the things they did communicate to me was that because of that initial pushback about not wanting to immediately conduct blanket interviews of all of the 150-some-odd passengers, absent Sahady and Ianni, then, you know, that a comment was made by somebody either out of headquarters or WFO, I don't know which one, that your SAC may be getting a call.

Q Okay.

A But as we spoke about earlier, I never received any such call or outreach.

Q Okay. And do you know who in the WFO would've been making that type of statement?

A So it would have been somebody somewhat commensurate to the line supervisor up in Boston. I just don't know who.

Q Okay. Hill's testimony goes on, on page 82, Because when you're pushing back, you know, you want to make sure that you have your six covered -- I'm not sure what that means, but -- so the SAC and the ASAC were intimately aware of these kinds of exchanges that were going on. And again, to his credit, Joe Bonavolonta said, No, we're not opening up cases on people who went to a rally. And I forgot a key part, the SSA for CT2 said, happy to do it.

So SSA would be supervisory special agent?

A Yes.

Q For CT2, that's counterterrorism?

A Yes. One of the counterterrorism squads, yes.

Q So it would be an SSA for CT2. CT2 is just one of those. How many counterterrorism squads are there?

A So we have four.

Q Okay. So it would be the SSA for --

A So that's the -- so when I refer to the JTTF, or the Joint Terrorism Task Force squad, that's the squad.

Q Okay. I'm not going to ask you for the name on the record --

A Sure.

Q -- but do you know the name of the SSA for CT2 in this instance?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Getting back to what Hill testified to, And I forgot a key part, the SSA for CT2 said, Happy to do it. Show us where they were inside the Capitol, and we'll look into it.

Does that jive with your recollection?

A Not -- once again, just not the -- not the verbiage that's being used or the quotes that are being attributed, but in totality, as I've said before all along, the methodology used by the line supervisor to either headquarters or WFO was simply, if you have additional evidence or information that would -- that would justify us conducting interviews on certain individuals, then provide it to us, and we will do it.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Could I clarify one point? Between the testimony that you've read, which refers to open investigations on individuals -- versus what I believe you testified, is, your understanding of the ask was to conduct interviews?

Mr. Bonavolonta. Yes.

[redacted] Is that correct?

Mr. Bonavolonta. That is correct, yes.

[redacted] There is a difference.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Yeah, so there is a difference. We always start with the -- the lowest level of investigative activity, and so instead of going directly to opening up an investigation or a case, it might start with an assessment --

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Bonavolonta. -- or something along those lines.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So the SSA for CT2 said, happy to do it, show us where they were inside the Capitol, and we'll look into it?

To which WFO said, We can't show you those videos unless you can tell us the exact time and place those individuals were inside the Capitol.

To which the SSA responded back, And I was privy to these conversations firsthand. Why can't you show us, why can't you just send us, give us access to the 11,000 hours of video that's available.

Because -- and this is WFO then responding -- because there may be, there may be UCs, undercover officers, or CHSs, confidential human sources, on those videos, whose identity we need to protect.

Was that particular vignette briefed to you?

[12:22 p.m.]

Mr. Bonavolonta. Not to that level of specificity.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So you were not aware of WFO telling your -- your folks that they can't share a video because there might be confidential human sources or undercovers --

A So I was aware of just the way it was promulgated to me by my team is that there was a back and forth between them and WFO. And we were requesting additional information to see if we could, you know, if we in fact had enough of a predication to either go into an assessment or even to conduct interviews.

As far as the specific things the WFO was saying they had or did not have or could or could not provide us, that was not something that was communicated to me as directly.

Q Okay. So they didn't brief you on the fact that the reason they can't show video is because there was a concern by WFO that there was too many undercovers and too many confidential human sources on the footage?

A Not that I recall, no.

[redacted] And, sir, just so the record is clear, were you reading Mr. Hill's testimony just now, or was that, like, an exhibit or something from his testimony?

[redacted] I was reading his testimony.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] On pages 81 and 82.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Bonavolonta. One thing I would add to that just to be perfectly clear, and I am not sure of the exact timing, but I don't know at that time -- I am not certain whether George Hill was assigned in the National Security Program anymore within Boston.

He -- prior to his retirement, for quite a while prior to his retirement, he had been assigned up to our HIDTA Task Force as an analyst. So, you know, I am just uncertain as to how he would have that -- you know, that kind of direct access to what was going on at the time. I just don't -- that I am not sure of.

[redacted] Yeah, his testimony was that he was -- he heard it firsthand.

Mr. Bonavolonta. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Sticking with going back to the January 6th investigations, were you aware of calls that took place between the WFO and other offices across the country related to January 6th investigations?

A You mean like routine coordination calls?

Q Correct.

A Yes.

Q Do you know how often those occurred?

A No. I don't. I really can't say whether it was weekly or monthly. I just know they were routine enough where they were construed as coordination calls.

Q And are you aware that they may have been weekly at one point but then went to monthly or, you know, every day at some point? Do you think they -- the frequency with which they occurred differed?

A So I was not involved in any of those calls; I just can't say.

Q Were you on any of those calls?

A To my recollection, no.

Q Who from your office would have been on those calls?

A At any given time it would most likely have been the frontline supervisor, you know, the SSA, Supervisory Special Agent. Possibly at times the ASAC, you know, and then maybe other components of our intelligence program, you know, maybe line level investigators could have listened in. But really the main point of contact for those kinds of calls would generally be the line level supervisor and then, on occasion, the ASAC.

Q And when you say the "SSA," would that have been the SSA of CT-2 (ph)?

A Yes.

Q But, as you say, you never took part in any of these calls?

A No.

Q Do you know who from, like, headquarters or WFO was on those calls?

A I don't.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever receive feedback from your team that these calls were taking up a good bit of time?

A No, I mean, nothing -- other than the fact that the calls existed and they were a part of them, nothing really much beyond that.

Q Okay. Did they ever express any frustration to you that they had to track down these cases for WFO where the predication might have been thin?

A Just with respect to the two issues that we have discussed here this morning.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And last hour you discussed with my colleague in the minority field office health measures. Can you kind of just remind us what those are?

A So there is a number of different health measures, and they span across every field office really on the administrative side, as well as the operational or threat side. And, in essence, what they are, are just barometers or metrics, if you will, in terms of goals to -- you know, that the field office is the one that really comes up with those numbers in terms of what the field office believes they can or should attain pertaining to a certain threat. So, you know, one just easy generic example would be if it was -- we were doing the TRP and the FOSP (ph) for our gang program, we would have an idea for that upcoming year potentially how many, you know, undercover operations or how many arrests that we think, you know, we would be able to make there. But those are just guideposts along those lines.

And then there is the other aspect of it, which is must much more qualitative, which is, as the year's going on, notes that we would supply to headquarters' program management that would indicate the actual impact that we are having on the threat. So, for instance, we had an incredibly large robust Latin Kings takedown a couple of years ago up in Boston, a huge takedown. That would obviously be something that we would supply as a qualitative measure for how we are mitigating that threat with respect to that gang.

Q And how are the field office health measures set? Like, who is involved in this process?

A So it is the field office and that relevant headquarters' program, you know, across all programs. And there is an interaction between the two just to settle on what would be an appropriate number, just to make sure in reality that there isn't a field office that is either intentionally, you know, coming up with a number that is lower than what really should be expected against a certain threat or something along those lines.

Q So, to show a healthy field office, if you will, do you have to hit those numbers?

A As far as the actual threat measures go, no. In fact, it is made pretty clear that those actual numerical measures are there just there to serve as a barometer, but there are many other factors that come into play in terms of the actual impact that we've had against a certain threat. So, for instance, there are many occasions where certain numbers are not hit, but significant impact is made against the threat. And that is all taken into consideration when the end-of-year rating is formulated.

Q Are field office health measures, are they discussed among the field office agents, intelligence analysts?

A I am surmising that they are because we go through that process.

Q So they are aware of what the field office health measures are, what the barometer is for each?

A Yes.

Q Are you aware of the Counterterrorism Policy Guide?

A I am aware of its existence. I don't know how much I can really offer in terms of, you know, the granularity within that policy or that guide.

Q And so the Counterterrorism Policy Guide, that is separate from the DIOG. Correct? Is that your understanding or is it part of the DIOG? What is your understanding?

A Minimal really. There is not much I really would have to offer on that guide.

Q Are you familiar with the policy from the Counterterrorism Guide that says one subject per case?

A No.

Q So you have never heard of that policy?

A One -- vaguely, yes. On the counterterrorism side, each subject is supposed to have -- if there was enough predication to open up a case, then yes, yes.

Q And so are your agents aware of when they should follow the DIOG and when they should follow the Counterterrorism Policy Guide?

A Well, really, the DIOG, the DIOG is the overarching entity really more from a legal perspective that we have to make sure we are in accordance with. Remember there is a big difference between a guide and an actual policy or something along the lines of the DIOG.

Q And, during your career at the FBI, how often have you worked domestic violence extremism cases?

A How often have I worked them?

Q Correct.

A So I was never an investigative case agent on any of those case. I have always -- I have managed them from leadership positions.

Q And, you know, being in a leadership position and the SAC of the Boston Division, what is your involvement with classifying cases?

A Minimal, really minimal. Minimal to none in terms of the actual classification.

Q Correct.

And so is the case agent who is in charge of that case or the special agent who is in charge of that case, are they the ones that determine the classification, or how is that process done?

A Yes, they would be in accordance with -- if it rises to the level of whether it is a sensitive investigative matter or, you know, beyond just the secret level case, that is also where our Legal Unit and our chief division counsel would get involved if there was any discussion or ambiguity about how to classify a certain case, but they are generally pretty straightforward in terms of the way those kinds of cases on the national security side are classified.

Q I am sorry to jump around, I have one more question on the school board issue.

So, after the Attorney General's memorandum comes out on October 4th, then, you know, there is an email that is sent out to the SAC listserv regarding the creation of the threat tag "edu officials" (ph) and it was on October 20th, 2021. Do you remember that email?

A I don't remember the email. I vaguely remember it being -- that topic being discussed, but I can't say I remember that specific email.

Q And can you tell us about the context of those discussions?

A You know, more just generally I believe at the time it was something that had made its way through the media, and the media was reporting on it. And that is how I remember that being part of discussion. But, internally, once again, threat tagging is a very basic mechanism, and it is simply for either me or any member of my team or any investigative agents or analysts to aggregate data if they are looking to, you know, developing information across any threats or programs.

Q And so was the "edu officials" threat tag, was it widely discussed within the Boston Division, to your knowledge?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q And, during our first hour, we discussed the letter that the U.S. Attorney had sent, and it referenced the Fusion Center. What was your understanding of the Fusion Center's involvement in the meetings that occurred between the U.S. Attorney's Office and local law enforcement and the FBI?

A So we have five separate fusion centers within the FBI Boston territory because we cover four States; so two in Massachusetts and then one in each of the other States. And really the Fusion Centers are simply just a mechanism where, if there needs to be any kind of a coordination call or dissemination of any kind of information from us or the U.S. Attorney's Office, it is just a -- it is the best mechanism to do that through because the Fusion Centers can bring in, you know, the relevant chiefs or colonels of the local and State law enforcement officers, you know, to hear if there needs to be a briefing or there needs to be a discussion on something.

[redacted] Did the school boards issue after the October 4th memo, did it ever become a real substantive issue where you were getting a lot of threats at the school board meetings that the FBI had to handle in Boston?

Mr. Bonavolonta. No.

[redacted] So it never really materialized?

Mr. Bonavolonta. No.

BY [redacted]

Q And I think, at the beginning of the last hour, we talked about the social media companies and threat to life, that's when you interact with them. Can you kind of discuss those interactions a bit more?

A So I personally don't interact with them because we in fact we -- during the previous hour, we discussed NTOC and how leads and tips come through there. But there are occasions where tips will come in through NTOC from a social media company, you know, simply just to -- if there is a concern that, you know, something that is picked up on on a social media platform may be a threat to life or something related to counterterrorism issue or, you know, or any other significant crime or even fraud along those ends. And then, once it is in the receipt of NTOC, NTOC will review it. And, if it looks like there's a nexus to the Boston Division's AOR, it will be sent to our office, where it will be sent to the appropriate squad or program to work that matter.

Q And so any engagement between the social media company and the FBI, does that occur just within NTOC?

A Yes. I mean, the initial obviously tip would potentially come in from a social media company. And then, of course, if there is any followup investigative activity that has to occur, we would use legal process to do so, like search warrants or subpoenas, you know, things along those lines, if needed.

Q And it has been reported on that the -- Facebook may be supplying some information to the FBI without user consent or without legal process. Are you aware of any of that?

A I am not.

Q We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

BY [redacted]

Q I think we are almost at the end here, so we will get you out of here soon.

We talked in the last hour about the October 4th Attorney General memo. Have you seen that memo?

A Yes.

Q I want to introduce it for the record.

A Okay.

[redacted] And this will be exhibit 7.

[Bonavolonta Exhibit No. 7.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So you've seen this before today. Right?

A I have.

Q Okay. I want to look at the -- generally do you recall how familiar you are with this memo?

A Not very. I reviewed it when it first came out and really not since then.

Q Okay. I will give you a second to read it, if that'd be helpful.

A Okay.

Q So a couple things, in that first paragraph, the second sentence specifically references a spirited debate about policy, members being protected under the Constitution. Right?

A Yes.

Q So it specifically says that without -- unless there is a threat of violence or actual acts of violence, I guess, there is no -- just the spirited debate alone is not enough to trigger any action on behalf of the FBI or the DOJ. Right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And then, in the fourth paragraph down, it references coordination with local law enforcement. As the SAC of the Boston Field Office, do you regularly coordinate with local law enforcement?

A Yes.

Q It is kind of part of job. Right?

A It is.

Q Okay. So that paragraph actually directs the recipients of the memo to convene meetings with Federal, State, local, Tribal, and Territorial leaders in each Federal judicial direct. So are those kinds of meeting, would that be unusual for you to meet with State and local leaders or State and local law enforcement?

A No.

Q In fact, is that part of job?

A Yes.

Q And is that -- actually is that helpful for you as the head of Boston Field Office to have those meetings?

A For me and them and the partners as well.

Q And why is it helpful for the partners?

A Well, as I indicated earlier today, we have more than 250 full- or part-time task force officers that are part of local and State departments that are embedded with us. So, from my level, having consistent engagement with the heads of those agencies and departments is very beneficial just to make sure that they are receiving the proper return on investment of the resources they are devoting to the FBI and that we are all on the same page in terms of the priority threats, you know, that we are working together.

Q Okay. So, in essence, this memo is basically building on the process that is already there. You already have the processes and procedures to have regular meetings with State and local entities. Right?

A Correct.

Q So this is -- and, again, this is part of the job?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with the FBI's zero-tolerance policy towards terrorism?

A Zero-tolerance policy toward terrorism?

Q Uh-huh.

A Not specifically.

Q Is it the job of the FBI to prevent any American from dying at the hands of a terrorist?

A Oh, yes, yes.

Q Do you consider that kind of an essential part of your role?

A Yes.

Q And would it be concerning to you if an FBI employee said that they don't think that a zero-tolerance policy is appropriate?

A Yes.

Q And why would that be concerning to you?

A Well, if we were in receipt of evidence that a Federal crime was committed germane to whether it be a, you know, homegrown violent extremism or domestic violent extremism matter, than that would have to be handled. It should be handled at the highest priority.

Q And, if somebody is saying that, you know, we think zero-tolerance policy towards terrorism is not appropriate, could that potentially impact the FBI's mission?

A It could.

Q You were asked earlier about George Hill, and you said, you commented on his role. What was your understanding of Mr. Hill's role at the FBI's Boston Field Office?

A He had multiple roles over a period of many years. For several years, he was a supervisory intelligence analyst win the National Security Program. And then ultimately -- and I just cannot recall the exact timeframe or the dates, but he wanted to, you know, broaden his horizons and branch off and do something within the criminal program. And so he was assigned as the SIA up in our HIDTA, which is High Intensity Drug Task Force Area, which, you know, there is a lot of gang and counternarcotics type investigations and activity that occur from that entity. And that is where he was up to his retirement.

Q And is the work that he did with HIDTA, was that his full-time job?

A Yes.

Q So he wasn't, like, dual-hatted; he was working at HIDTA?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the circumstances surrounding Mr. Hill's retirement?

A No.

Q Okay. To your knowledge -- going back to January 6th, to your knowledge, did the FBI instigate the events of January 6th using confidential human sources or any other means?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q Okay. And, in fact, some have described claims that FBI somehow was behind January 6th as a conspiracy theory. Would you agree with that description?

A No.

Q You don't think think it's a conspiracy theory -- sorry. So the claim is that FBI that it was kind of a deep state effort that the FBI actually caused January 6th. Do you agree with that?

A No.

Q Okay. And that has been described as a conspiracy theory. Do you agree that that is a conspiracy theory?

A I mean, once again, you know, my level of involvement with that has been strictly from the head of the FBI Boston office. But I have never been in receipt of any information that the FBI in any way caused or generated January 6th.

Q Okay. And would it be concerning to you if FBI employees from the Boston Field Office were saying in public that they believed FBI had caused January 6th?

A Yes, it would.

Q Why would that be concerning to you?

A Well, because it undermines the incredibly important mission that I have dedicated my entire adult life to so that would be very concerning to me.

Q Are you familiar with the term "fedsurrection"?

A No.

Q Are you familiar with the term "deep state"?

A Yes.

Q What is your understanding of the term "deep state"?

A Once again, it goes by what I have read and heard in the, like, sort of the media, you know. But it is more, the way it has been defined is more of an ongoing internal conspiracy within certain governmental organizations to carry out a certain, you know, methodology or mentality in terms of the way certain things should be.

Q Is it concerning to you if a current FBI employee describes the FBI as being part of the deep state?

A Yes, that would be concerning to me.

Q Why is that concerning to you?

A Once again, because that has never remotely been anything that I've ever seen, witnessed or being exposed to. And I, you know, the way I have always conducted myself throughout my career, I would take that as a personal affront to the sacrifices that I have made and that my family has made.

Q If an FBI employee who had been assigned to work on January 6th-related matters described the events of January 6th as part of a deep state conspiracy, is that concerning to you?

A Yes, it is.

Q And the fact that that person worked on January 6th-related matters, is that specifically of concern to you?

A It would be.

Q And can you explain why?

A Well, like I have answered before, you know, I can't speak to specific individuals that have made these statements, but from, once again, you know, I have never witnessed or been exposed to anything that would make me think that there was any type of grand conspiracy or deep state activities going on.

Q And Mr. Hill in fact has described the FBI as the brown shirt enforcers of the DNC, meaning the Democratic National Committee. Are you aware of that statement?

A I am not.

Q Do you have a reaction to that statement?

A I am actually quite surprised.

Q Why is that?

A Because from what I've always known of George is that he was -- once again, I -- just from what I have heard and what I have surmised, and, to my knowledge, he was a decorated Marine. And he had worked with the National Security Agency as an analyst before coming over to the FBI working on significant national security matters. And then he had been in Boston for a number of years as an intelligence analyst, you know, working many national security and then subsequently criminal matters throughout. And I, you know, in my in the actions with him, I never once received any indications from him that he would have that type of mentality or opinion of the Bureau.

Q But do you find that opinion concerning?

A I do.

Q And could you explain -- the fact that he was an FBI employee specifically that had that opinion, what is your feeling about that?

A Well, it is upsetting. Because obviously, once again, that is what I devoted my life to, and, you know, I have always tried to do things the right way for the right reasons, in accordance with the law and the Constitution. So that is why that comment would be, you know, offensive and upsetting to me.

[redacted] We can go off the record. We don't have anything further. Thank you.

JUDICIAL WATCH

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of Mr. Marcus Allen. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Mr. Allen. My name is Marcus Allen.

[redacted] Would counsel please state your names for the record?

Mr. Foster. Jason Foster from Empower Oversight.

Mr. Peterson. James Peterson, Judicial Watch.

[redacted] Thank you. On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear here voluntarily. My name is [redacted] and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] also with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules guidelines that we will follow during today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in rounds.

We normally question for an hour, and then take a short break. Since the minority is not participating in today's interview, we can go by our schedule. If you need a break apart from at the end of each hour, just let us know. We are happy to accommodate that. Please feel free to confer with your counsel here today as well.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record. So we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions, do you understand?

Mr. Allen. I understand.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour. Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand, and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so. If you honestly do not know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it is okay to tell us you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information. If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question. You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully, do you understand that?

Mr. Allen. I understand.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview, do you understand this?

Mr. Allen. I understand.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury, or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. Section 1001. Do you understand this?

Mr. Allen. I understand.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Mr. Allen. No.

[redacted] Finally, I would like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential, and we ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation. For that same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter, so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That's the end of my opening remarks. Mr. Allen, I understand that you have a short opening statement that you would like to make. Please, go ahead.

Mr. Allen. While I have agreed to this voluntary transcribed interview to help the committee fulfill its constitutional oversight function, I have concerns about the ability of the committee to protect me from further retaliation and protect confidential information I share during the interview.

I have seen news coverage where excerpts of other FBI whistleblower testimony to this committee has been selectively leaked to fuel deceptive political attacks on those who have cooperated and provided voluntary testimony. That naturally makes me reluctant to subject myself to the same abuse, and that is why I was not comfortable agreeing to testify in a private setting with the same staff who are responsible for the previous leak and smear campaign against other whistleblowers.

I am comfortable testifying to the chairman's staff based on assurances that confidential information provided during this interview will not be released without my consent and authorization by the chairman. Therefore, I respectfully request that prior to any release, any of the portions of the transcripts that my attorneys and I be allowed to propose redactions of confidential information.

For example, private health and financial information that I might share in this setting would not be appropriate for public release. It has been more than a year since the FBI took my paycheck from me. My family and I have been surviving on early withdrawals from our retirement accounts while the FBI has ignored my request for approval to obtain outside employment during the review of my security clearance. We have lost our Federal health insurance coverage, and there is no end in sight and no due process to challenge the security clearance suspension.

However, I hope that independent scrutiny from Congress and from the Inspector General can help deter the FBI from abusing the security clearance process to retaliate against others the way it has retaliated against me. That is why I filed a whistleblower retaliation complaint with the IG, and why I'm here today to answer your questions. Thank you.

[redacted] Thank you. We have one of the members of the committee here as well.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm Matt Gaetz, a majority Member of the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Allen. Nice to meet you, sir.

[redacted] We'll go ahead and start the first round of questioning. The clock now reads 10:04 a.m. I'll turn it over to my colleague, [redacted]

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning, Mr. Allen. Thank you for being with us today. And thank you for your statement. Are you currently employed?

A I am currently suspended by the FBI indefinitely without pay. I'm not employed.

Q And what date did that suspension take effect?

A The suspension took effect on January 10th based on a suspension letter from the security division, as well as a letter from HRD dated January 13th.

Q Okay. When did you join the FBI?

A I joined the FBI in -- as an official employee in December of 2015, but my initial experience with the FBI was as a contractor, and I started with them in July of 2008, and worked for a couple of years at that point.

Q Okay. And what was the name of that contractor?

A The name of that contractor was SM Consulting, and then they were bought out by SAIC.

Q And what type of work did you do with SM Consulting?

A I worked as essentially a watchlisting analyst for them on the FBI contract, and so I worked in a unit called the terrorism review and examination unit in that role.

Q And what did your work detail in that role?

A In that role, we reviewed opening-, closing-, and annotation-type electronic communications, which are documents that the Bureau utilizes to communicate information in reference to terrorism watchlisting subjects. They would submit opening ECs to our unit, and we would review the documents to see if they met the watchlisting criteria or not. And we would also process administratively any removals that were submitted to us. So we kind of functioned as like an audit and quality control unit.

Q Okay. So what drew you to work with SM Consulting?

A I applied to SM Consulting after leaving a contract with BAE Systems, and I got on board with them initially working for TSA's office of intelligence. That was the initial contract I worked with SM Consulting on.

Q Okay.

A Yup.

Q So moving forward from that employment to your employment with the FBI, what was your key motivation for joining the Bureau?

A Key motivation was our project manager reached out. A bunch of us were leaving the contract with TSA OI because they were transitioning the contractor positions to full-time government employee positions that was going to entail having a pretty substantial pay cut, which I did not want to take. And so SM Consulting essentially looked at some of their other contracts they had, and they had a Bureau contract available, and they offered that to me, and I accepted the offer.

Q Can you walk us through the positions that you've held at the FBI?

A So the initial position I held with the FBI as a contract as a watchlisting analyst, and I operated in that role as a contractor. And the next position I have held with the FBI is called a staff operations specialist, and also have an ancillary role called a critical incident operations specialist.

Q And what does the critical incident operations specialist do?

A The critical incident operations specialists functions in command posts for the FBI. So if there is any kind of significant events like, for example, like a bombing attack, or like a national security special event, those type of events, the FBI will stand up command posts and CIOSs are trained to function in those type of command post environments and to help facilitate the flow of the command post and help people with their assigned roles and whatnot.

Q Okay. So did you hold that type of title while also holding the SOS title?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And what office were you based out of?

A I'm based out of the FBI Charlotte field office.

Q Okay. And have you worked in any other field offices?

A No. The TREX is the headquarters unit, and so I was assigned under counterterrorism division, and that post was out at NCTC, the Liberty Crossing location in Tysons Corner.

Q Okay. So you were a watchlisting analyst as a contractor. Then you were an SOS and a CIOS. Did you hold any other official positions with the FBI?

A Yes. The initial position I held with the Bureau was in a unit called PACU. It's the Public Access Control Unit, and that, over time, that morphed into the PAL line, the Public Access Line. So I held that position for a short amount of time before the contract position out at LX opened up.

And at the time, between the program manager and the unit chief at PACU, they offered me and another employee there, Hey, do you guys maybe want a shot at going out to NCTC and working in this terrorism review unit, and I jumped at the opportunity to go and do that.

Q Okay. And when was that?

A That would have been in the summer of 2008.

Q Okay. Have you held any other positions with the Bureau?

A Not that I can currently recall at the time. I worked for PACU, Public Access Line. Then, I was a watchlisting analyst out at NCTC. And the other role I've held as staff operations specialist with the FBI Charlotte field office with the ancillary role as a CIOS. That's what I can recall.

Q Okay. So let's talk about your position as SOS. What were your roles and responsibilities doing that?

A Okay. So the staff operations specialist, for all intents and purposes, is essentially like a tactical intelligence analyst. So the FBI program they have within the intelligence program, they have staff operations specialists, and then they have intelligence analysts. The intelligence analyst are called IAs, and then the staff operations specialists are called SOSs. Essentially, there's a lot of overlap between both of the positions. The SOS typically functions at the tactical operational level, and IAs function at the operational strategic level.

So what that entails is typically an SOS, there's multiple units who could be assigned to as an SOS, but in my role there attached with JTTF in Charlotte, I'm attached to an operational squad, but I also respond to the intelligence program. So it's kind of a -- we have multiple bosses. So we have like an operational squad that we're attached to, and there's a supervisory special agent there, but we also fall under the intel program, and I have a supervisory intelligence analyst.

So we're helping operationally, but there's also intelligence program requirements that have to be met. So we do like all-source analysis. We'll research databases. We'll research publicly available information, could be social media, could like looking at academic papers, think tank papers, you know, anything on the open web, you know, that's publicly available. It could be blogs, forums, whatnot. We're essentially combing through all this information to help out with our assessments and cases that the FBI has.

BY [redacted]

Q And so, you do these open-source searches in your role as being attached to the JTTF. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q What kind of cases does the JTTF handle?

A The JTTF handles international terrorism cases as well as domestic terrorism cases.

Q So you would have been doing open-source research with regards to domestic terrorism cases that the JTTF was handling, correct?

A Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you have any other subject matters that you worked on?

A I worked on international terrorism and domestic terrorism. And then occasionally with the DT threat and sometimes with the IT threat, because there is the foreign adversarial intelligence services, sometimes that would bleed over into the terrorism realm. So there's a little bit of crossover there. Same with like the IRGC from Iran and that sort of thing. So there's a little bit of delving over into the CI realm slightly just because of that. But that would be the most natural realm where we would have some kind of bleedover.

And then sometimes with the DT cases, they have sovereign citizens. And so, sometimes a white-collar crime squad would handle some of the sovereign citizens because they call them paper sovereigns. So they would, you know, go after sheriffs and deputies and stuff like that and just filing these frivolous liens and suits and that sort of thing. And so, a lot of times with the paper sovereigns the white-collar crime squad would handle that more, even though sometimes sovereign citizens would be handled by DT. So it's kind of a wide range what you can handle, depending upon what field office you're at and what they assess your capabilities are, as well as the size of the field office.

So between medium, small, and large field offices, you can be more specialized or more, like, wide open with what you're handling depending on the size of your field office.

Q Okay. And how big was the Charlotte field office?

A It's rated as a medium-sized field office.

Q Okay. What would some other medium-sized field offices be just for comparison?

A I think Jacksonville is considered a medium-size field office. I'm not 100 percent on that, but I'm pretty sure they are. And then I think I'm not sure about Tampa. Tampa might be considered a large field office now, but off the top of my head within the region, the closest one I can think is Jacksonville.

Q Okay. And how many agents or specialists would be at the Charlotte office?

A In like for just the squad, or are you talking about the entire field office?

Q Let's go the entire field office, and then the squad.

A I don't know the exact number of what that number would be, no.

Q Okay. So can you kind of describe the organizational chart of the Charlotte field office for us? I'm just trying to figure out where the SOS fits in?

A Okay. So the SOS falls within the intelligence program. But how the intelligence program typically works is you'll have intelligence squads. So you'll have, like, a national security squad. You'll have a criminal squad, and then there's what's called, like, a domain-level squad. And that squad is typically producing strategic papers, and they're looking at the data from across the entire field office and generating, you know, could be -- essentially like statistical charts on like our cases and stuff of that nature or any kind of research papers that they might get tasked with from the intel program, the supervisory intelligence analyst.

So it's called a field intelligence group. And so with the field intelligence group, you might have anywhere three to four or more supervisory intelligence analysts, and under each of those supervisory intelligence analysts, you might have anywhere from six to 12 intelligence personnel under each supervisory intelligence analyst. And it will consist of both staff operations specialists and intelligence analysts.

So that is the structure of, you know, how those squads are made up, but we don't ever really sit together as a squad. We're usually farmed out to the operational squads with the investigators, the agents, and the task force officers. So we would get together maybe once a month, just to talk about what we were working on, like on our assigned squads and whatnot, and then talk about meeting the numbers as far as the intelligence programs required. There's a certain amount of products and whatnot that we have to generate, like, reports and assessments and briefings, that sort of thing. There's, like, a threat review process that we have to go through, and then we have to fill out those charts.

So we would get together once a month, but for the most part, we're more with our operational squads than we are with the actual intelligence squads. So I would say just from an identity standpoint, like people probably more so identify with their operational squads than with the overall intelligence program. And then for each operational squad, there's typically one intelligence analyst, and one SOS per threat program.

So for instance, the JTTF works both international terrorism and domestic terrorism, but within the Bureau, those are considered like different threat programs. So they're program managed differently at headquarters. So you could be on a squad, and, like you're, dealing with two different program managers on the squad if you're working both international terrorism and domestic terrorism matters.

And then there's white-collar crime, street gangs, organized crime, public corruption, bank robberies, crimes against children, human trafficking. Those are the different threat programs that the Bureau has, and then there's assigned operational squads typically for each of those threats.

Q Okay. So as a staff operations specialist, did you have any direct reports under you?

A No.

Q Okay. So thinking back and looking at your entire tenure with the Bureau, did you ever participate in a review of your performance?

A Yes.

Q Did you generally receive good markings?

A Yes.

Q Did you have ever have any marks on your record with the FBI?

A No.

Q You were consistently rated as "exceeds fully successful" on your FBI performance evaluations, right?

A Correct. Either that or "fully successful." I can't remember exactly the chart, but I was always rated highly.

Q And how often did you get these ratings?

A They're annual ratings, but there would be, like, quarterly reviews throughout the year where you would just have a quick -- sometimes it was a quick sit down with your supervisor, and sometimes it was almost like a, Hey, you're doing great, you know, and that would be the end of it, you know.

Q And who would you have these meetings with?

A SIA Costanzo.

Q And were they with SIA Costanzo the entire time you were with the FBI?

A No. So I mean, I could go through -- do you want me to?

Q Sure. Yeah. That would be great. Yeah.

A Okay. So as contractor, I reported to my program manager from my contract company, and he consistently told me that the customer was well-pleased with my performance on the contract. And this is in reference to the watchlisting analyst role. And I would occasionally have sit downs with the supervisory special agents there. Steve Hayes. He's retired. Another supervisory special agent named Jennifer May. She's still in the organization. I think she's an SES now. I'm not sure. But I think she's pretty high-ranking now.

And then I would have sit downs with them. They would always say I was doing a good job. There was a unit chief who would occasionally -- who as in charge of TREX -- and he would occasionally talk to me. His name was Stephen Dirito. He's retired. He was very appreciative of my effort there, and appreciated my impact that I had on the unit and the morale and whatnot. And then after that role, at PACU prior to the watchlisting analyst role, the unit chief was Bret Bruchok. And I didn't have any negative remarks from Bret while I was there, and he appreciated the work and the time that I spent there, though it was short. It was only maybe two or three months I was there before I switched over to the watchlisting analyst role.

And then as a staff operations specialist, the first supervisor I reported to was an acting supervisor named Dan Mrak (ph). And I also had another supervisor who was acting. So when I initially got on, there were two acting supervisors. One was Ryan Rode (ph), and then the other one was Dan Mrak. I didn't get any negative feedback from either one of them. And then the permanent SIA who took over was Joseph Szczerba (ph), and I had a good relationship with him, and always got good reviews.

And then SIA Costanzo was the final supervisor.

Q Okay. And throughout, you know, meeting with that list of supervisors, were you ever disciplined at all during your tenure with the FBI?

A No.

Q In fact, you won several awards during your tenure with the FBI, right?

A Yes, I won a couple.

Q You received the Charlotte field office employee of the year award in 2019, right?

A Correct.

Q And you also received a time-off award in 2019, right?

A Correct.

Q Now, what is a time off award?

A A time off award, I guess you could casually say it's almost kind of like an atta-boy type award, where it's like you're doing like a really good job and we appreciate the effort that you're putting into the work. And so, it might be -- depending on how many hours they put on there, it could be like a day or two or more, however many days designate for the time-off award.

Q Do you remember how many days off you got in 2019?

A I don't know exactly. I know at least six.

Q Okay. So we talked a little bit about your employment prior to joining the FBI. I understand you served in the military as a Marine, correct?

A I did.

Q What was your key motivation for joining the Marines?

A Key motivation for me to join the Marine Corps out of high school was I didn't feel like at that time I was ready to go to college right away, but I also didn't want to be a bum, you know, and just mooch off of my parents and not really do anything, or be a slug in general. So I figured I could join the Marine Corps. There's a buddy of mine in high school who was going into the Marines, and he was talking to me our senior year, and he was like, Man, what are you planning on doing after high school? I was like, I haven't really thought it through too much. He's like, well is it okay if, you know, I send my recruiter to talk to you. And I said sure.

So I talked to his recruiter, and I was impressed enough and I knew I wasn't going to go to college right away, so I figured well this is a good way kind to do some kind of service back to the country, and pay for college at the same time. So I spoke to the recruiter and went through the process and tested into intelligence, which was really cool. No one in the recruiting office had done it, so they couldn't even really give me a full description. So, yeah. I signed up and joined the Marine Corps just for service to the country and to contribute, and also get money for college, you know.

Q Sure. What year did you join the Marine Corps?

A 2000.

Q Okay. And during your time in the Marines, you received several accolades, right?

A Correct.

Q In fact, you were awarded the Navy and Marine Corps commendation medal, and the Navy and Marine Corps' achievement medal, right?

A Correct.

Q And when did you receive those awards?

A That would have been circa 2003 and 2004 timeframe.

Q Okay. And in 2004, you were designated Marine Corps Intelligence Academy runner up for intelligence noncommissioned officer of the year, right?

A Yes. So that's the Marine Corps intelligence activity, and they do a rating for officers and staff NCOs and NCOs in the intelligence field each year. And my staff sergeant and one of the gunnery sergeants told me that I had finished as the runner up, and it was pretty close, but I had finished as the runner up.

Q What was the highest rank you achieved in the Marines?

A Sergeant E5.

Q And during your tenure in the Marine Corps, did you ever participate in performance reviews?

A Yes.

Q Did you receive good markings?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever receive any bad markings?

A No.

Q And you were never disciplined during your time with the Marines, correct?

A No. No.

Q Did you receive an honorable discharge?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So you said you worked with the intelligence arm in the Marines. Did you have ever have any issues acquiring or maintaining your security clearance in the Marine Corps?

A No.

Q So do most Marines -- make sure I have this right -- do most Marines hold a top secret clearance, or just a secret clearance?

A Some Marines -- I don't know exactly -- but I do know that some Marines outside of the intelligence occupational code do hold a secret clearance. I know Marines with the intelligence occupational codes, which are the O200 series typically will hold a top secret SCI clearance in order to do their jobs.

Q And as a Marine, were you trusted with top secret clearance or just a secret clearance?

A Top secret, SCI.

Q So from your time in the Marines through your time with the FBI, is it fair to say that at the time of your suspension from the FBI, you had maintained a security clearance without issue for more than 20 years?

A I would say approximately 20 years, yes.

Q Okay. Before your suspension from the FBI, did any government official or agency ever question your allegiance to the United States?

A No.

Q So I want to talk more about the actual day of your suspension. I know that might be tough. So can you walk us through what happened that day?

A Yes. So on the actual day of my suspension, I met with the chief security officer, Suzanne Pemelton (ph), as well as assistant special agent in charge, Michael Shirk (ph). The assistant special agents in charge are like the top three or four agents in the office right underneath the special agent in charge who's the chief essentially. And I met with them in a parking lot at a Cracker Barrel off of Carowinds Boulevard in Charlotte.

They met me, and they read off a letter in the parking lot that I was being suspended for conspiratorial views in regards to the events of January 6th, and that my suspension -- the date of the start was January 10th. The day of the meeting was January 19th, and it would be without pay as well.

[redacted] Did they provide any sort of reasoning for why it was effective January 10th, but they were telling on January 19th?

Mr. Allen. No.

BY [redacted]

Q Why did that meeting take place at a Cracker Barrel?

A That was the agreed-upon meeting site that was agreed upon with my supervisor, Mike Costanzo. He had texted me at home, and basically intimated to me that they needed to have a meeting with me at the Cracker Barrel -- or I picked the Cracker Barrel for the meeting site, and then we went, you know, and had a meeting there. Yeah.

Q So that was standard to kind of pick like an off-site meeting location?

A In that scenario, yes, because I was already out of the office because of the Federal mandate. And so, we were having a discussion there in regards to the Federal mandate for COVID-19.

[redacted] So the record's clear, let's enter for the record the January 10th, 2022 letter to Mr. Allen from Jennifer Moore as the acting executive assistant director of the human resources branch. We'll mark that as exhibit No. 1.

[Allen Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And then, we'll mark as exhibit No. 2, the January 13th, 2022, letter to Mr. Allen from Katherine Brideau, the unit chief performance appraisal unit of the human resources division. That will be exhibit No. 2.

[Allen Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, I want you to take a second and review both of these documents.

Do you recall receiving these documents?

A Yes. I recall receiving the documents.

Q Okay. And exhibit 1, the letter dated January 10th, that's the letter we were just discussing, correct?

A Correct.

Q And you said that this was issued on January 10th, but you didn't find out until January 19th?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Let's walk through some of the statements in the letter, the January 10th, 2022, Mr. Allen.

In that first paragraph, the second sentence reads, the suspension of your security clearance was based on security concerns related to adjudicative guideline A, allegiance to the United States of the national security adjudicative guidelines for determining eligibility for access to classified information or eligibility to hold a sensitive position.

So is this first time that your allegiance to the United States had ever been questioned?

A Yes.

Q Were you given any sort of information as to why they were questioning your allegiance to the United States?

A No, other than the letter. This was it.

Q And what did you understand was necessary in order to fall under adjudicative guideline A to question your allegiance?

A I don't understand the question.

Q Did they give you any sort of information at that time for why they were questioning your allegiance?

A No.

Q Okay. And then the second paragraph says, "The security division has learned you have espoused conspiratorial views both orally and in writing, and promoted unreliable information, which indicates support for the events of January 6th. These allegations raise sufficient concerns about your allegiance to the United States and your judgment to warrant a suspension of your clearance pending further investigation."

And a little bit earlier, Mr. Allen, you had testified that the individuals who gave you this letter also said that you were being suspended due to conspiratorial views. Did they ever define what a conspiratorial view was?

A No.

Q Did they ever indicate how the FBI was viewing what you had said, both orally and in writing, that promoted unreliable information?

A No.

Q Did they ever define what was unreliable information to their standards?

A No.

Mr. Foster. Did they cite any document that showed that you had expressed support for the events of January 6th?

Mr. Allen. No, not at the scene.

BY [redacted]

Q And then, on that same day you received the January 13th letter from Ms. Brideau. Had you ever had any contact with Jennifer Moore who signed the January 10th, letter or Katherine Brideau who signed the January 13th letter?

A I've never had any contact with either one of them.

Q Was that all of the information that you were provided on January 19th?

A These two documents were the only information I was provided.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you refute the claims made by the FBI that allegedly warranted your suspension?

A Yes.

Q So when you had this meeting on January 19th, did you ever ask any questions about why this was happening?

A I mean, I was kind of shocked, to be honest with you. I didn't really, you know, know what to say. Yeah. I was really just shocked at the whole process. I didn't really say much, you know. They took my credentials, and you know, my access badges and my cell phone. So it was more of a like hi-and-bye type situation, you know.

[redacted] And speaking of the process concerns, the January 13th letter lays out certain rights that you are to be afforded. It says on the bottom of the first page, you have the right to the following: Review all of the materials relied upon as the basis for this proposed suspension action.

Were you ever provided with those materials?

Mr. Allen. No. I mean, unless these two letters are the materials, no.

[redacted] But the FBI has never provided you additional materials to support their basis for your suspension?

Mr. Allen. No.

BY [redacted]

Q What was the reaction of your colleagues when you were suspended?

A I think shock. I got a couple of text messages from Amanda Shuford, who I worked with on the squad. The text messages from her were earlier in reference to the mandate, and then it went kind of radio silent. But I mean, after the issuance of the letters, I had contact with a couple of retired, like now retired, agents who just checked in on me periodically, but everyone else kind of ghosted me.

Q So is it fair to say that you've been ostracized?

A Yes.

Q So my colleague a while ago asked if you had had a chance to review the materials relied upon as the basis for your proposed suspension. Were you ever told specifically that you could not go review any documents related to this action?

A No.

[redacted] And then you were formally suspended on February 17th. Is that correct? You received another letter?

Mr. Allen. Yes. I believe -- so because there was something to the effect of because I was a veteran, they were going to have to pay me for 30 days, but at the end of that 30 days, I would not get paid again.

[redacted] So we'll mark as exhibit No. 3, the February 17th, 2022 letter to Mr. Allen from Ms. Christine O'Neill, the assistant director for the human resources division advising you that -- of her decision to indefinitely suspend you from duty and pay effective upon receipt of the letter. That will exhibit No. 3.

[Allen Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember when about you received this letter? Was it on February 17th?

A I don't recall the specific date.

Q Do you remember who gave you the letter?

A I do not.

Q Was it given to you via email or in person?

A It may have been via email. There was a point of contact established by the name of Ryan Turner who ended up sending a lot of documents in regards to the situation.

Q And you said this started the clock for your preference eligible veterans pay. Is that correct?

A Right. It was the month of February that I was paid for. Yeah.

Q And then you have been without pay ever since?

A Correct.

[redacted] We'll mark this as Exhibit 4.

[Allen Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification].

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, do you recall sending this email dated July 16th, 2021?

A Yes.

Q And why did you send this email?

A I sent the email for situational awareness in order to facilitate, you know, decisionmaking for the investigators so that they had awareness that, you know, there are some things they need to take into consideration as they proceeded forth on their investigations in regards to, you know, January 6th.

Q And what was located at this link?

A At the link was an article about a case involving an individual out of, I believe, California, who was suing the Bureau.

Q So in deciding whether to send this email, did you ever consider, or think that this email promulgated some sort of conspiracy theory?

A No.

Q In this email, did you, in any way, endorse any statements or actions or opinions?

A No.

Q Did you direct any of your colleagues to take any certain actions?

A No.

Q Did you ever think this email would prompt the Bureau to question your allegiance to the United States?

A No.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Allen, I want to ask you about a specific phrase that you seemed to have taken care to use in your email, and that's where you say "without probable cause." Do you see that in your email?

Mr. Allen. Yes, I see that. It's actually -- so that blurb there, I believe, is a description that I copied from the cite in reference to it. So I --

Mr. Gaetz. You know what probable cause is, right?

Mr. Allen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And you know that probable cause is required to take law enforcement action, right?

Mr. Allen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And so it seems to me -- I guess I should say, was there a reason you ensured that this was included in the message you sent, this reference to probable cause that you copied?

Mr. Allen. No. I just put that into the message so that it would be there for them to see. It was just random.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you copy that from the Yahoo News story?

Mr. Allen. I believe so. Yes, sir.

Mr. Foster. So is it fair to say you included that so that they wouldn't necessarily have to click on the link to get a basic understanding of what was at the link?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q And Mr. Allen, as of July 16th, 2021, was it your understanding that the FBI was handling January 6th cases as domestic terrorism cases?

A Yes.

Q And was the Charlotte JTTF tasked with handling any January 6th related investigations?

A Yes.

Q And earlier, you testified that you would do open-source searching for your role being attached to the JTTF. is that correct?

A Right.

Q Did you see this as part of your duties?

A Yes.

Q So you saw sending emails for situational awareness with links regarding cases or investigations that the JTTF was handling as part of your duties?

A Yes.

[redacted] I'm going to enter this as exhibit 5.

[Allen Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, do you recall sending this email?

A Yes.

Q And why did you send this email?

A I sent it to my colleague, Alexis Cort (ph), who works on the JTTF, with me just for situational awareness in regards to Mr. Rhodes' situation, just for her to peruse it for her own, just situational awareness and just to look through the document.

Q Why did you question why the leader of the Oath Keepers had not been indicted by the DOJ as of the date of this email?

A I questioned it because it looked like perhaps he may have been, you know, playing a primary role within the group, and it just seemed odd that, you know, we weren't looking into the individual. And so, I just wanted to share that with Alexis just as a, like, you know, What's going on with this particular guy who's affiliated with the Oath Keepers. And we were working a lot of leads pertaining to the events at the Capitol on January 6th.

Q And at the time you sent this email, Mr. Rhodes had not even been arrested, correct?

A I don't recall.

Q So some similar questions to the previous article, when you sent this email on July 28, 2021, did you ever consider that it would promulgate some conspiracy theory?

A No.

Q Did you endorse any statements or actions in this article?

A No.

Q Did you direct any of your colleagues to take any action pursuant to this article?

A No.

Q And did you think that this email would prompt the FBI to question your allegiance to the United States?

A No.

BY [redacted]

Q And in your email, did you ever align yourself with the Oath Keepers?

A No.

Q Did you ever align yourself with the thinking of Mr. Rhodes?

A No.

Q And if I represent to you that it wasn't until at least November of 2022 that Mr. Rhodes was arrested, does that kind of match with your recollection of the events?

A I would say that he was definitely arrested a lot later than there was publicly available information coming out in regards to him. So, I don't recall -- I mean, obviously what you're saying is a fact, but to me it was like -- it was obviously a lot later than publicly available information I'd seen in regards to Mr. Rhodes. The arrest came significantly later.

Q So, in your role being attached to the JTTF, who was working on January 6th-related investigations you were conducting open-source searches, and through this you found information related to Mr. Rhodes that concerned you. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And so, you know, as you did per your duties with the JTTF, you sent that to a colleague. Is that correct?

A Correct.

[redacted] I'm going to mark this as exhibit 6.

[Allen Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, do you recall sending this email?

A Yes.

Q And what exactly is this email?

A This email is a link to a video featuring a discussion between a reporter by the name of Darren Beattie. And in the video as well is Stephen Bannon, it's his show on Rumble called War Room. And then there's also another reporter by the name of Jack Posobiec, and they're having a discussion about the uniquely poor security that was there on January 6th.

Q And in this email, did you indicate any support or affirmation of any of the contents of this video?

A No.

Q And why exactly did you send this email?

A I sent it just for awareness because the video, to me, indicated potential problems with the investigation as far as informants were concerned, and our organization's potential forthrightness about the utilization of informants there on that day. That might have some impact on our cases and the subjects that we're looking up, and just a general awareness overall for the investigation as a whole, that there might have been some kind of potential Federal involvement with the activities on January 6th, and I thought it was important enough that it like warranted our attention, you know.

Q Is it safe to say that you sending this email was part of your job at the time?

A Yes.

Q Did you direct any of your colleagues to take any action regarding this video?

A No.

Q Are you aware that on June 8th, 2021, the United States Senate Rules

Committee released a 127-page report detailing security failures at the Capitol leading up to and on January 6th, 2021?

A I don't recall.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Allen, I want to ask you about the quotes under your signature box. What's the nature of those?

Mr. Allen. They're Bible Scripture verses. I put them in there for inspiration for people. I would see people put stuff in their signature blocks, and so, I intentionally just started putting Scriptural verses into the signature blocks. Because I used to kind of be, like, I would just put my name and something to that effect, but I saw a lot of people starting all kinds of stuff on their, you know, signature lines and whatnot. So I figured, okay, I'll just start putting Scripture in there.

Mr. Gaetz. You've also got a quote from C.S. Lewis, right?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you -- is there some sort of message in the signature block quotes that you provide that's relative to the substance of the email, or is it just general motivation?

Mr. Allen. It's general motivation, just for, like, you know, purity of heart, purity of spirit, that sort of thing.

Mr. Gaetz. No subtext?

Mr. Allen. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Thanks.

[redacted] I'm going to enter this email as exhibit 7.

[Allen Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, do you recall sending this email?

A Yes.

Q And what exactly is this email?

A This email is just an email I sent out that morning for awareness for the squad because I'd seen publicly available information that was kind of painting a very different picture of the kind of the push and the fervor within the organization for pursuing the cases, which we did, but it seemed like there was not a whole lot of fervor for looking at, you know, potentially exonerating information, which I thought was valuable and viable for us in our decisionmaking processes for the cases.

So I just wanted to call out that, you know, it looked like there might be a lack of forthrightness in regards to the events of the day, and what necessarily happened that day, which would necessarily have an impact on American citizens, you know, and the rights of the citizens, you know, their First Amendment rights, their right to protest. It just -- that's what I was trying to call out, that there was a potential that there may have been some government involvement with the day that was not being brought to light that we should very much take into consideration.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Allen, in your testimony, you used the word "potential".

And in your writing, you used the phrase "good possibility." Is the committee to take that you haven't made any hard-and-fast certain legal conclusions about any of these matters?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. That the purpose of this letter was to ascertain the need for investigation?

Mr. Allen. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. You referenced in the letter the D.C. elements of our organization.

Do you include within the D.C. elements the Washington field office?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you include within those D.C. elements the leadership at FBI headquarters?

Mr. Allen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Including the Director?

Mr. Allen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And your basis for those concerns about the D.C. elements of the organization, I want to get into that beyond just the video. Describe the interactions you've ever had with the Washington field office regarding the January 6th matter.

Mr. Allen. Regarding the January 6th matter, the interactions from the Washington field office were primarily like secondhand. So on our squad, we were getting all kinds of leads in regards to January 6th. But I was getting, you know, stories from other squad members about they weren't getting the evidence they needed to pursue some of the leads coming out of the Washington field office, but there was a fervor for them to start working on the leads and our personnel were not getting the documents that Washington field office said they were going to send them to fulfill some of the leads.

One example I have is kind of -- it's secondhand, but an agent on our squad, they found out about another agent -- I believe it was the Cincinnati field office, who was I believe swore out on a document, and Washington field had not sent them the documents to back that up. And that ended up, like, turning into a bad situation.

That's the secondhand information that I got from one of the agents on our squad, but they were sufficiently concerned about it that any time they were getting leads, they were very much pressing, Hey, can you give us the supporting documents for this, rather than us just, like, you know, going hey diddle down the middle on these things, like, well, give us documentary evidence.

Mr. Foster. Just so the transcript is clear, when you say swore out on the documents, you mean the Cincinnati agent swore an affidavit that was submitted in court?

Mr. Allen. An official document that a judge had to sign off on, that was how it was relayed to me, that --

Mr. Foster. He was making representations based on WFO's claim --

Mr. Allen. Based off a claim, and then those documents did not materialize, and that's what I got secondhand.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll represent to you that the committee has received evidence that in other cases, agents were asked to put their names on law enforcement documents around January 6th in the absence of the type of predication that would have made that agent comfortable with utilization of their name. Was that the type of dynamic that you observed from this colleague that had that Cincinnati interaction?

Mr. Allen. Yes. Yes. And then with our personnel as well, there was some apprehension with anything coming out of Washington field. They were pressing back on the leads and, like, sometimes the leads would disappear, and then a week or two later, the leads would get pushed back out again to be worked again.

Mr. Gaetz. Was this a usual part of developing cases?

Mr. Allen. No. This was abnormal. I mean, it seemed -- they were -- essentially, somebody would push back on our squad, and then they were recycling the leads. And it would come back to somebody else, sometimes a couple of days later, sometimes a week or two later, but it was like they were sending the leads out. It had the appearance of they were sending the leads out again to be worked, because they wanted something more.

Mr. Gaetz. And at times, you were aware of certain circumstances where people sought, you said, additional documents --

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. -- to advance that investigative work, and as you testified, you were aware of frustration where you worked that those documents were not always --

Mr. Allen. Were not always provided.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever observe any of your colleagues opine as to why we might find ourselves in this unusual situation where the Washington field office was not providing requisite predication?

Mr. Allen. I mean, it's a work space, so I mean people, I guess, had all kinds of opinions. It was, like, you know, they really want to get these people, or that sort of a, you know, thought was evident. But our stance was, like, if you give us the evidence, like, we're gonna do our job, you know. But if you don't give us the evidence, we're not going to do the job. So I think there was a sense of frustration with leads being shutdown, but then they would show up again several days later.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll represent to you that the committee has received evidence that at another field office, when people weren't receiving the predicate information that they felt they needed to pursue investigations that the Washington field office was pushing, that those agents were told that one of the reasons that the predicate evidence wasn't provided is that it might reveal confidential HUMINT sources and undercovers.

Does that surprise you?

Mr. Allen. No. Based on the publicly available information, I wouldn't be surprised.

Mr. Foster. You mentioned that there were documents that were withheld that were sought to support leads in investigative activity. Is it true that there was also video, that the video was not being shared with your unit for analysis, or with others in your office for analysis?

Mr. Allen. I would say yes. It was kind of a close hold situation around who had access to the video at the Capitol. And it was essentially like very close hold at Washington field. One of our colleagues got access, but it seemed like the access was very limited as to what you could get. People were concerned, like, Well, how come they can't just give us all the video evidence so that we can pull through the information ourselves?

Mr. Gaetz. I think where counsel is helping me with my inartful question is that the committee is to assume that when you say documents, that doesn't just mean paper, that also might include video records and other things that might predicate the investigations that they wanted to see pursued?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you for that. I want to just get to this practice of emailing around open-source news articles. Someone from the outside might look at this and say, Why are Federal agents emailing around the news to one another? Is that something that happens frequently?

Mr. Allen. Yes. Publicly available information, news, a lot of times is like that's like a basic inject point sometimes for investigations and whatnot. We've had, like, cases where it's, like, social media, there's a bomb threat at a high school or something like that. So I mean, the raw data that we get to initially operate off of sometimes is publicly available information.

[10:59 a.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. And so has anyone during your employ at the FBI ever emailed you a news article?

Mr. Allen. Yes. I would say it's a frequent practice.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you receive news articles, did you automatically believe that the sender of the news article believed everything in the article to be true?

Mr. Allen. No. I would -- they're passing it along for information and like a heads-up, like an FYI.

Mr. Gaetz. So any news article that you might have received during your employ in the FBI, you might ascertain, upon looking at it, things that were true and things that were false, right?

Mr. Allen. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. And Yahoo News, as a matter of fact, I mean, they were used for FISA warrants, weren't they?

Mr. Allen. I --

Mr. Gaetz. You don't have to answer that if you don't have personal knowledge.

Mr. Allen. I don't have --

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Thank you. Appreciate it.

[redacted] I'm going to mark this email as exhibit 8.

[Allen Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Let's go off the record. Let's take a short break before we go to this exhibit.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, so you sent two emails on September 29, 2021. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q So the first one had the subject line "6 January Awareness Vid Link." Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And in that, the link to the video, the reporter, who you identified as Darren Beattie, discussed a New York Times article that was published 4 days earlier alleging that a member of the Proud Boys was an FBI informant who texted real-time updates on the Capitol march to his FBI handler. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And then, later that morning, you sent another email, and that one with the subject line "6 January Awareness." Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And in that, you said, "There's a significant counter-story to the events of 6 January 2021 at the U.S. Capitol. There is a good possibility the D.C. elements of our organization are not being forthright about the events of the day or the influence of government assets."

Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And you linked to a few different articles. Why did you include those specific articles?

A You're talking about the articles highlighted in blue?

Q Yes, sir.

A Yeah. So I highlighted those specific articles just because of the ambiguity around -- the first one, because of the ambiguity about Mr. Rhodes and how the rest of the individuals associated with that group were being pursued, but it appeared as if Mr. Rhodes was dodging scrutiny, which I thought warranted some type of investigative interest that we should pay attention to. So I linked that for awareness.

And then I linked the other two articles just because it seemed like there was a potential discrepancy in how the January 6th investigations were being pursued versus how the summer-of-2020 investigations were being pursued, and I was just concerned about -- we had equal-application-of-the-law concerns on the squad. That was my concern there. And there were conversations that we also had on the squad where we were concerned about equal application of the law and how we took more of a hands-off approach in 2020, you know, kind of give people space to act, you know, however they wanted to behave. And then, in this case, it was more of a, like, "Hey, down the middle, let's go get them." And so I just -- I thought that was a good publicly available comparison chart for people to take into account.

And then it's interesting that sometimes -- the last link from The Gateway Pundit -- it's interesting that sometimes publicly available information will sometimes be faster than what we get internally, and sometimes we may find out stuff going on, you know, in reference to cases within the Bureau that we may have, you know, some kind of interest in or that sort of thing, we'll find out about it via the press before we find out about it, like, via internal.

And so that was -- essentially, that link was, like, a collection of the folks who were getting rounded up, and they had, like, bio data and that sort of, like, information hooked on to the link. So I linked it there for awareness, because, like, with some of the cases, the people were popping up in publicly available information, like, in the news, and there were images and information that you would probably want to be interested in if you were the investigator looking at, you know, particular cases. So that's why I put that link in there.

Q And do you remember that, earlier in 2021, March of 2021, the Director testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee?

A Yes, I remember that.

Q And so, at that time, you were finding public reporting later on in September regarding potential informants that were at the Capitol. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And I'll represent to you that, during his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator Klobuchar asked him a question and said, you know, if we would have known, if we could have infiltrated this group or found out what they were doing, do you have any of those moments? And she was asking Director Wray to reflect upon, you know, whether or not there could've been better sourcing or better information that was provided.

And Director Wray responded, quote, "So any time there's an attack, especially one that's this horrific, that strikes right at the heart of our system of government, right at the time the transfer of power is being discussed, you can be darn tootin' that we are focused very, very hard on how can we get better sources, better information, better analysis so that we can make sure something like that happened on January 6th never happens again," end quote.

Were you concerned about his testimony?

A I was, in light of the publicly available information that had been released, especially the phrase where it said The New York Times had retained records indicating that there was a back-and-forth relationship between an FBI source and an FBI handler real-time.

So I thought that was an indicator of, okay, what's going on here? It's a lack of -- you know, a potential lack of forthrightness here in regards to these cases. Like, this is something that's very concerning, that we should take into account, as far as the events of the day are concerned, especially when it comes to First Amendment-protected activities.

Q Uh-huh.

A And, you know, allegedly, it looked like there may have been a source in the Proud Boys who would've been reporting to his handler real-time. And that just seemed like information that, at that point in time, that the Director should have been aware of.

So it concerned me, the perceived lack of forthrightness there in regards to how deeply the Bureau had potentially gotten within the Proud Boys.

Q And so you were conducting these open-source searches pursuant to your role being attached to the JTTF at the Charlotte Field Office. Is that correct?

A Correct. Correct.

Q And did you ever raise this incongruence between the open-source research that you were conducting and what you were finding and the Director's testimony? Did you ever raise that to any of your supervisors?

A I mean, I thought the email, you know, would've been illuminative enough for them to discern that, okay, there's something that needs to be looked at here.

But maybe I'm not understanding the question.

BY MR. FOSTER:

Q To be clear, when you wrote in this email on September 29th, "There is a good possibility the D.C. elements of our organization are not being forthright about the events of the day," et cetera, that was a specific reference to the Director's testimony, correct?

A Correct.

Q And your supervisors interpreted that as a direct reference to the Director's testimony, correct?

A Yes, correct.

Q So, by you sending this email, you were raising that concern. Your supervisors interpreted it that way. And then what happened after you sent the email?

A After I sent the email, I was speaking to a colleague in our squad area, because we were there early. We were usually the guys that got there kind of early before the rest of the squad was. So we were just kind of over by the break room with, you know, coffee, chitchatting.

And my supervisor, SIA, Supervisor Intelligence Analyst Costanzo -- that's what "SIA" stands for -- he came over, and he just kind of looked, and he said, "Hey, man, you know, when you get a chance, can you come down to my office and talk to me? Like, no rush. Just keep on with your conversation, and when you're done, just come down and talk to me in the office." So I was like, all right. So I talked to my colleague for a few more minutes, and then I went down to the office.

When I walked into the office, my direct supervisor, SIA Costanzo, was in there, but our ASAC, assistant special agent in charge, Jason Kaplan, was also in the room, and he's part of the leadership team for the entire field office. And so it seemed like I was walking into kind of an ominous-type meeting.

And he intimated to me that, you know, we need to talk about this email that you sent out. And he intimated to me -- he was like, "Well, the Director didn't necessarily lie. You know, maybe he misstated" -- something to that effect.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Allen, I'm going to pause you right there. Was only the email marked as exhibit 7 referenced in this discussion?

Mr. Allen. Are you referring to this document?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes.

Mr. Allen. Yes, that was the only email --

Mr. Gaetz. You'd sent other emails, right?

Mr. Allen. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. And in this discussion that you're about to go into good detail for us on, at no point are the other emails referenced, right? It's just this email?

Mr. Allen. This email, yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Sorry to interrupt you. Go ahead.

Mr. Allen. No -- yes, sir.

So he confronted me about the email. And he said that Chief Division Counsel John Ireland (ph) had called him, and they were concerned about the email, and they thought the email might be problematic.

And, you know, I just explained to him my position, that, you know, we work for the Department of Justice. I wanted to make sure that all the information that we had in regards to a particular situation we had for our decision-making process, and, you know, that was the intent of my email.

And he indicated to me that it was problematic. And he went into something like, "The Director didn't necessarily lie. He may have misspoke," or something to that effect. And then I just highlighted to him that I'd utilized, you know, analytical language. I was like, you know, "That's why I used the word, you know, 'possibility.'"

And then it seemed like that kind of calmed him down when I pointed out -- I was like, "Well, I utilized the word, you know, 'possibility,' which is an analytical-type word." And when I said that, that kind of calmed him down. He intimated something to the effect of, "Okay. I understand this now. This is analytical-type language."

Mr. Gaetz. So, Mr. Allen, just so I understand it, initially, in this meeting, Mr. Kaplan felt the need to defend the truthfulness of Director Wray's testimony, in his mind, right?

Mr. Allen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And did he try to convince you that Director Wray wasn't being anything other than fully truthful?

Let me ask that question again. Did Mr. Kaplan try to convince you to view Director Wray's testimony in a particular light?

Mr. Allen. I would say he was saying that, you know, Mr. Wray didn't necessarily lie, or he may have misspoken. And, I mean, it seemed --

Mr. Gaetz. In your entire career at the FBI, had anyone ever called you into a meeting to parse the truthfulness of someone's testimony before the United States Congress before?

Mr. Allen. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did that strike you as odd?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you feel like you had to be on defense in this position?

Mr. Allen. I felt like I had to be on defense and explain, like, my position, which was an interest in justice, you know, and that I'd used the word "possibility," you know. And that seemed to quell where he was, you know, I guess, emotionally. And then --

Mr. Gaetz. Was he animated emotionally, Mr. Kaplan?

Mr. Allen. He seemed more aggressive in -- you know, he was kind of leaning forward and that sort of thing. I took it as him being a little bit more leaning in, like, "You shouldn't have sent this email. This is problematic for us," is the message that I got out of --

Mr. Gaetz. Did he provide any basis for it being problematic other than it didn't comport with his view of Director Wray's testimony?

Mr. Allen. No.

Mr. Gaetz. So the whole reason it was problematic, in this meeting, as expressed to you, is they thought you were being critical of the Director and they were there to defend the Director?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q At the time that you're having this meeting with Mr. Kaplan and Costanzo, did you -- when you were disclosing your concerns and that there was a possibility that the Director's testimony wasn't matching up to what you were finding in the public realm, did you reasonably believe that there was a concern or a possibility that the Director wasn't being completely forthcoming?

A I thought it was a pretty good possibility, based on all of the publicly available information that I had seen from the day and then just our organization's seeming-tepid response to it and then -- yeah, it just seemed like I was getting -- it was a tepid response to any of the information that may have painted a different picture of what transpired on that day.

Q And during this meeting with Mr. Costanzo and Mr. Kaplan, did you ever express any sort of alignment with the individuals who were at the Capitol on January 6th?

A No.

Q Did you ever express that the FBI shouldn't be pursuing individuals who attacked law enforcement on that day?

A No.

Mr. Gaetz. And did anyone tell you that your specific recommendation in this email was problematic?

Mr. Allen. They didn't say anything that the recommendation was problematic.

Mr. Gaetz. I read the recommendation to say, "Exercise extreme caution and discretion in pursuit of any investigative inquiries or leads pertaining to the events of the day."

It strikes me as a pretty good recommendation on any case.

Mr. Allen. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. I mean, is there any case you can think of where caution and discretion wouldn't be appropriate?

Mr. Allen. I mean, it's the appropriate -- you know, I can be pretty, like, meticulous on, you know, the cases and whatnot, but it's just like, "Like, hey, like, pay attention," you know?

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY MR. FOSTER:

Q You said you were told that the reason for this meeting was that it was initiated by a concern expressed by Chief Division Counsel Ireland, correct?

A Yes.

Q And Chief Division Counsel Ireland was the recipient of your -- original recipient of your email.

A Yes.

Q And he was a frequent recipient of all your previous emails?

A Correct.

Q But he had never expressed any concern about the previous emails being problematic --

A No.

Q -- to your knowledge?

A To my knowledge, no.

Q And he wasn't in this meeting with your ASAC and your supervisor?

A No.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever talk to Mr. Ireland about this email?

A I do not recall talking to him about this email.

Q So when you were in this meeting with Mr. Kaplan and Mr. Costanzo, did you feel pressured to not do your job?

A It definitely -- after that, I would say it definitely had a chilling effect. I kind of just -- you know, I just kind of, like, let it go, you know, after that. It was just like, okay, there was a pretty, you know, bad response to this, so I just kind of, you know -- I just -- I mean, I kept doing my job, but it was like it wasn't welcome to, you know, put any information out there that may have been potentially exonerating or at least informative towards what happened on January 6th that was available in the public domain.

Q And so, when you sent this email, again, you, in your mind, you were doing your job?

A Yes.

Q I marked an email with the subject line "Devolution" as exhibit 8 -- and I believe you have it in front of you -- dated October 29, 2021.

What exactly was this link?

A So this link is to a blog that's run by a guy named Jon Herold. And, essentially, he examines, like, publicly available documents but specifically a lot of government documents, like executive orders and documents of that nature.

And he has this line of thought, like, you know, potentially, our country came under some kind of a catastrophic attack, and there were extraordinary measures that were put into place to try to ensure a continuity of government in, like, a catastrophic security situation.

And so that's essentially, like, what the link was to, was to this guy's blog, where he's talking about continuity of -- potential enactment of continuity-of-government emergency situation in response to a catastrophic attack against our country.

And I work with Felix, and so we talk -- he's the primary DT agent, and so we'll talk about -- it's shop talk, you know, like, what's going on, what do you think about this line of thought, you know, that sort of thing.

Q So, in the previous email we were discussing, exhibit 7, you said the term "possibility" was analytical-type language, right?

A Right. I just -- yep. I mean, the "possibility" -- it's an analytical word, you know.

Q So would you consider this email, exhibit 7, to be an analytical product?

A I wouldn't consider it to be, like -- not, like, a formal product or anything like that. It's more of, like, a "Hey, what do you think of this"-type exchange, you know, between me and Felix.

Like, we have analytical products, which are, like, formal documents and that sort of thing. But this, I just kind of wanted to get Felix's take on what this guy's line of thought was, because we work for a national security organization.

Q So let's move back to exhibit 8. The text of this email says, "Came across this guy's line of thought, and it's an interesting read. He's got several parts to it. Who knows?"

Is this an analytical product?

A You're referencing --

Q Exhibit 8, yeah, the "Devolution." Do you consider this email an analytical product?

A I wouldn't consider it an analytical product. I would consider it more of maybe, like, an exchange, you know, "What do you think's going on here"-type situation. So more like an analytical exchange, because we would bounce ideas and whatnot off of one another.

Q So the emails that we discussed today, including exhibits 7 and 8, were these emails the world of evidence that the FBI gave you that warranted your suspension?

A They've given me no evidence. Like, we've literally received no evidence.

I mean, I met with them in May of last year, after Congressman Jordan's letter facilitated a meeting with them. Within 24 hours of that going public, the Bureau called my counsel at the time, Sean Bigley, and said they want to meet with you, like, within a week, which we complied with. And I met with two investigators from Security Division.

And then we haven't gotten anything from the Bureau, like, since, like, no official document, no "this is why you've been suspended, and this is what we're presenting," like, nothing. And it's been 16 months, so --

Mr. Foster. Right. So, to be clear, we're talking about these emails because this is the only time you were ever called on the carpet contemporaneously to having sent the emails and asked about them or questioned about them?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q And in the article that you linked to it, this email from October 29, 2021, with the subject line "Devolution," did you ever align yourself with any sort of conspiratorial views --

A No.

Q -- in this email?

A No.

Q To your knowledge, did the linked article espouse any conspiratorial views?

A I mean, no. I mean, it was this guy's line of thought that -- he thought it could potentially be an emergency continuity-of-government situation based on his analysis of executive orders. But, I mean, I just consumed it and took it in as like, okay, you know, potential. But we hadn't heard anything internally from any official channels internal, you know.

Q Uh-huh.

And I want to get back to your May interview that you had with the FBI. So, on February 17, 2022, you received the official notice of your indefinite suspension, correct?

A Yep.

Q And so then you did not hear from the FBI until May of 2022, correct?

A Correct.

Q And you had referenced a letter that then-Ranking Member Jordan had sent to the FBI. Is that correct?

A Yes. I spoke with my counsel, and we both believed that we got the meeting with the FBI because of Congressman Jordan's letter and that it went public, it was in the public sphere, you know. And, literally, within 24 hours Sean got a call and they wanted to talk to me. So --

Q So we'll enter this as exhibit No. 9. It's a May 6, 2022, letter to Director Wray from Ranking Member Jordan at the time.

[Allen Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And the letter does have some redactions because it involves information that we received from whistleblowers, and so it includes a whistleblower's name.

And, Mr. Allen, this letter was not about your specific case, correct?

A No.

Q But you say around this timeframe was when the FBI reached out to you to have a security interview. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And so what occurred at the security interview?

A At the security interview, I spoke with two investigators. They both relayed to me that they were retired but then called back in to do the interview. I don't know if they -- I don't recall if they were with BICS or another service, but they were called back in. They had some kind of part-time arrangement where they would come back in and do, I guess, investigative interviews.

And so, at the interview, we sat down, and they had, like -- they had a huge, like, file folder, and it looked like a bunch of printouts of, like, emails or messenger exchanges. And I don't know what the other documents in the folder was, but they talked to me about the nature of the interview and then proceeded to go through, like, some of the documents in the folder during the interview.

And one of the documents that they pulled out was this September 29th email, and they just asked me to go through it with them. And they had pulled out another Skype messenger exchange that I had had with an analyst in the field office who used to work DT matters as well. Her name was Morgan Taylor. So they pulled these documents out and went through them with me.

And there was also another document visible, which had, like, Revolver News called out and highlighted as, like, an alt-right, extremist-type website. I noticed that on the paper. But they didn't -- it was pulled out, but they didn't talk about the document at all. But it was, like, visible in my sight.

Q And in this Skype messenger exchange, did you ever receive a copy of that messenger exchange?

A I mean, they showed it to me at the interview, but we were not provided with a copy of it to take for ourselves.

Q And in this exchange with Ms. Taylor -- who you said was an intel analyst? Is that correct?

A Intelligence analyst, yes.

Q And what was the content of that discussion? What was it in relation to?

A It was a back-and-forth analytical exchange about, like, what was going on. She used to work DT matters and was, like, pretty passionate about it. And she was reassigned to the HUMINT squad. So she had a natural -- she would still interact with all the squads in that role.

And so we were just talking about, like, the unrest around January 6th and what we thought might be going on in the country security-wise. I would also work command post and that sort of thing. So we generally tried to stay on top of anything that might turn into, like, a conflagration or some kind of, you know, unrest-type event.

So. In the exchange that we had, what the investigators, like, circled in on and kept -- they, like, wanted me to explain it, was, like, Cloward-Piven strategy. They seemed to be focused on that quite a lot.

Q Uh-huh.

A And so I spoke with them, like, about what Cloward-Piven strategy was -- like, essentially, generation of a political crisis to then collapse a society, and then you usher in, essentially, like, a socialist or communistic-type government regime in the wake of the crisis and the chaos.

And so we were just talking about that back and forth because of the events of January 6th and how hot the political climate was at that time.

And I had mentioned -- I'd mentioned, like -- they focused in on, like, "2 percent" and "3 percent" in there. And I was just talking about how, like, in Nazi Germany, the Nazis only constituted roughly about 2 percent of the overall -- that's the popular percentage that's thrown around for the amount of Nazi Party members that were a part of Germany during that period from 1933 to '45.

And I mentioned, like, Three Percenters. And in the conversation, I was basically trying to call out about how, like, a small percentage of people can actually, like, politically move the dial in a country if they want to destabilize it or try to usher in some kind of political unrest or takeover or something to that nature.

So it was an analytical exchange of that nature because of how, you know, unstable things were around the whole January 6th event and just the amount of leads that we were getting and just the political climate in the country at the time. It was just a conversation that we often would have, you know, face to face, but I get a lot of requests, and so, like, sometimes we'll just have Skype messenger analytical exchanges.

Q So you would describe this analytical exchange that you had with Ms. Taylor, who was another colleague, as just a normal part of your job?

A Yes.

Q And in this analytical exchange over Skype messenger, did you ever align yourself with the Three Percenters?

A No.

Q Did you ever align yourself with the individuals who were at the Capitol on January 6th?

A No.

Q Did you ever say that the FBI shouldn't be prosecuting individuals who attacked law enforcement on January 6th?

A No.

Q And, then, there was also another letter that Mr. Jordan sent --

Mr. Foster. Sorry. Before you go on --

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Foster. -- just another clarifying question.

So do you know whether Ms. Taylor has been questioned about that same exchange or has had any problems with her security clearance?

Mr. Allen. I do not know.

Mr. Foster. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And, then, about a month after the May 6, 2022, letter that you said prompted your security clearance review interview, Mr. Jordan sent another letter, on June 7, 2022, to Director Wray specifically about your case.

Do you remember that?

A I can't recall off the top of my head.

Q We'll mark it as exhibit No. 10.

[Allen Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And it was redacted in the public realm, but we didn't print the redacted copy for purposes here.

Mr. Allen, I want to turn your attention to the third paragraph of this letter. It says, "In a letter sent to the FBI, Allen's lawyers explained that the FBI's accusations are a 'monumental leap from objective fact' and a 'distortion' of Allen's actions. They argue the security clearance suspension is a 'gross injustice and clear constitutional violation' because the FBI is 'punish[ing]' Allen for 'run[ning] afoul of prevailing agency orthodoxy' while 'exercising his First Amendment right of free speech.'"

Is that accurate?

A Yes.

Q And is that how you feel about this security clearance suspension and your suspension from the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And in the first paragraph, the last sentence says, "Multiple whistleblowers have called it a 'purge' of FBI employees holding conservative views."

Do you agree with that statement? Do you have any sort of knowledge to inform that?

A I don't have any knowledge to inform that specifically.

Q And would it surprise you to learn that multiple whistleblowers to the committee are unvaccinated with the COVID vaccine? Would that surprise you, to learn that?

A I would -- yeah, I would -- I don't think -- that's weird.

Q Uh-huh.

A Yeah.

Q And why is that weird?

A Just, as an intel guy, it's like you look for patterns.

Q Uh-huh.

A And that's an interesting data point, that the majority of whistleblowers, as you say, are unvaccinated.

Q And, to your knowledge, did the FBI track who was unvaccinated?

A To my direct knowledge, no. I have secondhand, like, hearsay that there may have been a compliance list. But that's secondhand hearsay from colleagues in the office, that there may have been a list of those who were compliant versus noncompliant.

Q And, to your knowledge, did FBI employees have to report whether or not they were vaccinated?

A Yes. There was an internal database system in the organization to update your vaccination status.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, you testified earlier that you feel that your suspension from the FBI is essentially retaliation for engaging in what the FBI leadership deems, you know, disfavored political speech, right?

A Yes.

Q You filed a lawsuit in the United States District Court for the District of South Carolina against FBI Director Wray in his official capacity in December of 2022, correct?

A Correct.

Q So, without going into any specifics regarding your conversations with your counsel, why did you file this lawsuit?

A The lawsuit was filed to provoke some action in my case, because no action had been conducted to date, and we wanted the case to be adjudicated so we can see the evidence of what they had levied against me.

Q And, instead, the FBI moved to dismiss that suit, correct?

A Yes.

Can I take a quick break?

Q Sure. Absolutely. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, we were talking about your lawsuit very briefly. Along with the motion to dismiss, the FBI also moved the court to stay those proceedings pending resolution of that motion, right?

A Yes.

Q And the court granted that motion to stay, right?

It's okay if you don't -- it's fine if you don't know.

A I can't recall immediately.

Q So I want to move on to ask you about your perspective on certain items that the FBI has undertaken.

Are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum regarding alleged threats and violence at local school board meetings?

A Can you say that again?

Q Yeah. Are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum regarding alleged threats and violence at local school board meetings?

A I am aware of it from the public forum, but I don't recall reading it on our internal system.

Q Do you recall receiving it internally?

A I don't recall receiving it internally. I -- I don't recall.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you ever recall in your work as a staff operations specialist or your work with the JTTF, do you ever remember prior to October 4, 2021, receiving any sort of open-search sources or any sort of reporting that would indicate that there was a disturbing spike in harassment and intimidation at school board meetings?

A I don't recall. Publicly available information that I would've seen in regard to it would've been as a private citizen. But I don't recall any -- it does not come to mind, anything like a spike.

Q But prior to the October 4th memo or immediately after the memo, were you ever asked to do any sort of work around a spike of harassment or intimidation at school board meetings and what the FBI could take action on?

A I don't remember any taskings in regard to that.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall, subject to this memorandum, an email sent by Carlton Peeples, who was the Deputy Assistant Director of the Criminal Investigative Division, also in October of 2021, to announce the creation of an "EDUOFFICIALS" threat tag?

A I do remember seeing an email about a threat tag having to do with schools. I can't recall if that was the specific threat tag that I saw on the email, but I do remember there being a creation of a threat tag and some people having ire about it in the squad area.

Q When you say some people had ire about it, what do you mean?

A I mean, like, verbal responses like, "What, are we going after, like, people at school -- like, parents at school board meetings now?" Statements to that effect.

Q So, as a staff operations specialist, how did you utilize threat tags such as the one that was set up for these school boards?

A I personally didn't really use the threat tags in my analytical work. There were some things that I just -- I do my own searches within the system. I know some people like to utilize the threat tags and that sort of thing.

The only experience I have professionally within the organization having to do with threat tags is when we generate intelligence products. If we generate a document, there is, like, an automated system that has a menu of options, where we'll go in and we essentially will pick whatever, like, tags are in existence in the system that fit that document.

But I do know, like, some people use those threat tags to just do quick query searches within the assessment system, which is Guardian. And, that way, the -- if you want to find everything having to do with that threat, you can do those type of searches with those threat tags.

But I personally never utilize threat tags like that. My experience is with the production of documents, and if I wrote something having to do with a threat tag, then, you know, by program requirement, they wanted you to do that for, like, collating and, like, data analysis purposes.

BY [redacted]

Q And when you talked about, you know, individuals expressing ire within the JTTF squad area --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- were those individuals special agents? Were they --

A Yes.

Q -- task force members? What were --

A It was a combination of both. People were like, "Like, what is this? Like, this is ridiculous."

Q Did they think it was a waste of FBI resources?

A Yes.

Q Was it your understanding and the understanding that you could tell from the individuals of the JTTF squad -- were they under the impression that this was a local law enforcement issue?

A I don't know what their official, you know, motivation was. I just know that they had ire with the threat tag and comments of the nature of, "What are we doing, going after parents now?" You know, almost like a ridiculousness, you know?

Q Would you say that the reaction among the JTTF squad to the "EDUOFFICIALS" threat tag, was it negative?

A I would say yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you share that ire that your colleagues expressed?

A I thought it was concerning. You know, I thought it was very concerning.

Q And did you believe that the FBI should be using counterterrorism resources on this issue?

A No.

Q So, in November of 2022, Republicans on this committee released a report that details the problems that undermine the FBI's fundamental law enforcement mission.

Particularly, whistleblowers have told committee Republicans that the FBI's Washington hierarchy is, quote/unquote, "rotted at its core," maintains a, quote/unquote, "systemic culture of unaccountability," and full of, quote/unquote, "rampant corruption, manipulation, and abuse."

As a former -- or FBI staff operations specialist, what's been your firsthand observation?

A Firsthand observation in regard to?

Q Do you agree with those sentiments from other whistleblowers?

A I don't have any, like, direct knowledge of any conduct of any specific Senior Executive Service officials and their conduct.

I have seen, like, our OPRs that have been released internally and some of the conduct on the -- I mean, it's the OPR list, so it's misconduct that's listed on the OPRs. And some of the misconduct is highly alarming for a law enforcement agency.

But as far as any direct knowledge of -- you know, firsthand knowledge of misconduct of Senior Executive Service personnel or, you know, even GS-15 personnel, I don't have any direct knowledge in that regard.

Q What particularly did you find alarming in the OPR reports?

A The amount of -- some of -- the outrageousness of some of the reports. Like, one report that came to mind was -- and I think this one was even in the public forum -- where an FBI agent did, like, a back flip on a dance floor and lost his sidearm and it discharged and shot someone in the shin, and then he wasn't forthright about the situation when local law enforcement responded. That's one case that comes to mind. I don't recall the specific rank of that investigator, but that one was shocking.

And there was another incident on an airplane where an FBI agent supervisor -- I don't know what rank -- was unruly on a passenger aircraft and kicked the drink cart and his gun fell out.

So those are just two examples that I know for certain I saw on OPR lists over the years.

Q Do you have any information or firsthand knowledge that the Bureau has abused its law enforcement authorities for political purposes?

A I don't have any direct firsthand knowledge.

Q Okay.

So this committee has learned that the Biden administration's narrative about the FBI's work on domestic violent extremist, DVE, cases might be misleading. We've received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of DVE cases to satisfy their superiors.

For example, one whistleblower explained that, because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify other cases as DVE even though there's minimal circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification.

Do you have any information about that type of reclassification?

A Not in specific to DVE.

But I do know -- so I don't recall what the acronym stands for, but when we fill out our timesheets, we do this process called TURK. And on TURK, there are specific designators that are assigned based on how many hours you work on these different investigative classification codes. And there's all kinds of different classification codes based on what threat program and whatnot you work.

And what you're supposed to do, to the best of your ability, is to assign the appropriate amount of hours on TURK to what threats you work. So, for example, someone who works domestic terrorism, the designator is typically 266. If you work -- well, I won't say that. But, like, international terrorism cases have a specific code as well. So you're supposed to fill it out to the best of your ability.

I have witnessed in the past where, for our midyear reviews and when we're getting to the end of the year, there are certain numbers that management relays aren't where they need to be. And so they have come down and they have told people working -- and this applies to investigators. I've never done it. I thought it was not straight-up, like, forthright. I'm like, that's not honest. You need to reflect -- my take of it, you know, justice, what's the real number? So I didn't think it was on the up and up. But they would come down -- and this happened on more than 1 year, where it'd be like, "Everybody, TURK this now."

I didn't do that. I was on the intel program. We just TURKed what we worked, you know. So it was like, if this 2-week cycle I ended up working a specific type of international terrorism, you know, case or threat more than a domestic terrorism threat, well, guess what? I tried, to the best of my ability, to match the hours I worked on that threat with that specific code.

But I do know -- and it was not an uncommon practice towards the end of the fiscal year, oftentimes around -- a lot of times, this centered around the threat review process, because we'd sit down and -- essentially, for the threat review year, what happens is, everybody makes an estimate of how many, like, cases they're going to have on a particular threat. And then it breaks down the chart, like, all the way down to, like, how many arrests, you know, what type of arrests. Like, another category might be raids. There's all kinds of categories, and there are certain numbers they have to hit.

So I've observed in the workplace, like, on more than one year where it's like, someone from management will come down and they'll say, "Everybody, TURK this." And so all the investigators will be like, no matter what case it is, it's like, "Well, I guess we're TURKing this now," and they'll just literally all TURK that number, like, regardless of what they may have really worked on.

It seems to me they're trying to meet whatever the number that's desired is, you know, and if they're short of that, then it's like, "Everybody, from this point forward, TURK this," you know.

BY [redacted]

Q And the desired number that you've mentioned, is that field-office-specific or is that enterprise-wide at the FBI?

A There are enterprise-wide numbers, and there are also field-office-specific numbers.

So, like, as part of the process, there's things that headquarters designates that every field office has to abide by, to a certain extent. And then the field office also has its own plan where they can assess their threats locally.

But they only have so much leeway in that process. Like, if headquarters deems something a higher priority level, then the local field office can only lower that threat so far. They can't, you know, remove it totally from the list or knock it down as far as they would like to if headquarters sets that threat level high.

So there's two, but headquarters very much impacts how the field operates.

Q Uh-huh.

And when you say that management would come down and say you need to TURK a certain category, is that -- would you describe that as pressure, or are you being told to do this?

A It's like a command. It's like an order. And the agents accept it like an order, and they just obey.

Q And that was all in an effort to hit certain numbers. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And do you know if -- was management hearing that from headquarters?

A I'm under the impression that they're having constant conversations with the program desks at headquarters, and then the program desks are telling them, this is what it needs to be and this is where y'all are short.

And then the ASACs and the local program managers at our level -- which are oftentimes times the supervisory special agents on each of the assigned squads. The ASACs will work in conjunction with them to hit whatever the numbers are.

Q And in regards to what we have learned with inflating numbers in relation to DVE investigations, we've also heard that the FBI may be manipulating its case filing system for working January 6th-related investigations, whereby leads are sent throughout the country, the WFO sends the leads out, and then they tell the field office to open cases so that it looks like domestic terrorism cases are populating throughout the country rather than just stemming from one event that took place in Washington.

Earlier in your testimony, you talked about how the Charlotte Field Office was working January 6th-related cases and how the JTTF had received leads. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you had talked about how WFO was pressing agents to open the leads. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And then the JTTF agents had pushed back on the Washington Field Office. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And then the leads were recycled back to the JTTF squad. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Had you ever seen that in any other sort of cases or investigations, where the WFO was telling the Charlotte Field Office to do something and then, when it wasn't being done, recycling the leads to other individuals?

A No.

Q Did that concern you?

A Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Why did it concern you?

A It had the appearance of: There was an outcome sought after that was not being generated.

Q Mr. Allen, are FBI employees and agents required to have a security clearance?

A Yes.

Q And can you continue to work at the Bureau if your clearance is revoked or suspended?

A No.

Q So, in your experience at the FBI, has revoking a security clearance ever been used as a way to get rid of an employee?

A Not in my experience.

BY [redacted]

Q And while you are on indefinite suspension, are you required to petition the FBI for outside employment?

A Yes.

Q And so, in order to -- while you're suspended without pay, you have to seek approval from the FBI to get outside employment?

A Yes.

Q Have you ever sought their approval for outside employment?

A Yes.

Q Can you expand upon that and tell us when you sought outside employment?

A Yes. I sought outside employment within the past month. I went through the process. Because of the nature of the employer, I needed to correspond with an ethics attorney, which I did. I explained to him the announcement and the type of job, and we had a correspondence back and forth.

And he relayed to me to go ahead and submit the outside employment form, the 331B, to the chief security officer at the Charlotte Field Office, Suzanne Pemleton, which I did. I reached out to her. I submitted it, and she said she put it within the EPAS.

That employment approval -- there's a 15-business-day response time, and that 15-day response time has been expired for several days, and I've received no correspondence back from the Bureau in its regard.

[12:04 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so you have received no answer as of today about your outside employment request?

A No.

Q And before that, did you submit to the FBI a prayer journal for prepublication review?

A Yes.

Q And when, about, was that?

A Let's see. That would've been October of 2022.

Q And why did you submit it to the FBI for prepublication review?

A I just wanted to make sure that it was okay; that, you know, I had their okay to go ahead and do it.

Because of the nature of the situation, I conveyed, you know, there is nothing in here referencing my time as an employee for the FBI. You know, there's nothing in reference to the FBI -- like, basically conveying to them that there's nothing there that I'm trying to profit off of my association with the FBI.

And I just want to make sure that I've got the, "Hey, we're good to go. You can go ahead and do whatever you want with your prayer journal."

There was a correspondence back and forth, and then the correspondence dropped off, and I got no response after that.

Q So your goal was to publish the prayer journal. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And maybe gain some income, since you weren't earning any income at that point in time?

A Yes.

Q So you're suspended from the FBI February of 2022. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And then you get a month of pay due to your service to the country. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And then you are without pay from February until today, correct?

A Correct.

Q So you sought prepublication of your prayer journal in October of 2022 to earn some income, and then you never heard back from the FBI as to whether or not you could go ahead and publish it?

A Correct.

Q And then, just this month, you requested outside employment approval. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And you have never heard back from the FBI?

A No.

Q So you've been languishing now for over a year on unpaid suspension. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And, during that time, you have earned no income. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And you've been pulling from retirement prior to being retired, correct?

A Correct. It's my wife's retirement account. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Allen, do you feel that you've been treated fairly?

A No.

Q Do you believe that the FBI has become political?

A Yes.

Q Given your experience, do you see any other recent actions that we haven't discussed today by the Biden administration, DOJ, and the FBI as problematic?

A Problematic? I would say, by appearance, some of the information that's been made available in the public domain about public corruption that on the surface appears to not be being pursued seems problematic, especially in regards of public corruption when it comes from the highest offices in the land.

Q Is it fair to say that you've lost confidence in the FBI's leadership?

A Yes.

Q So the FBI told this committee that it does not target or take adverse action against employees for exercising First Amendment rights or for their political views. So, given your experience, is this accurate?

A Could you restate that?

Q Sure. It says, "The FBI does not target or take adverse actions against employees for exercising First Amendment rights or for their political views." Do you think that's accurate?

A I don't agree with that statement.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Do you have anything else?

[redacted] We'll go off the record for right now.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Okay. We're good.

Mr. Allen. Yes, ma'am.

[Whereupon, at 12:08 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

For JOHN BRENNAN:

ROBERT LITT, ESQ.

HAYDN FORREST, ESQ.

Morrison & Foerster LLP

2100 L Street NW, Suite 900

Washington, D.C. 20037

[redacted] Good morning.

This is a transcribed interview of former CIA Director John Brennan. Chairman Jordan and Chairman Turner have requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of Federal law enforcement and intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Mr. Brennan. John Owen Brennan.

[redacted] And you're here with your lawyers. Could your lawyers also identify themselves for the record.

Mr. Litt. Robert Litt from Morrison & Foerster.

Mr. Forrest. Haydn Forrest, also from Morrison & Foerster.

[redacted] Thank you.

This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within the jurisdictions of our committees.

For example, the committees may consider reforms such as revolving-door legislation for Federal employees with security clearances. These reforms might include allowing Federal employees with security clearances to retain clearances after employment with the government, but limiting their ability to receive access to classified information for some duration after their government tenure.

The committees may also consider legislative proposals that would ban or restrict intelligence agencies from engaging in, coordinating, or promoting any political activity related to Federal elections, including candidates for Federal office.

On behalf of the committees, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions voluntarily. My name is [redacted] I'm a lawyer with the House Judiciary Committee, majority side.

I'd like to have the staffers in the room introduce themselves. The only staffers are staffers with either of the committees. There's no personal office staff. So we'll go around the room, starting with my colleague [redacted]

[redacted] Hi. I'm [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] House Intelligence, minority general counsel.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Committee intern.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary, Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Democrats.

[redacted] [redacted] with the House Intelligence Committee.

[redacted] [redacted] the HPSCI general counsel.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] counsel for Chairman Jordan's staff on House Judiciary.

[redacted] [redacted] oversight and investigations counsel for HPSCI majority.

[redacted] [redacted] senior special counsel, Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] And we are privileged to be joined here to by some of our members. We'll have them introduce themselves.

Chairman Jordan. Jim Jordan.

Mr. Stewart. Chris Stewart.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Mike Johnson of Louisiana.

Mr. Armstrong. Kelly Armstrong.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz.

Mr. Biggs. Andy Biggs.

[redacted] I'll go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for an hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time. We'll alternate back and forth until we are complete.

Typically, we'll take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, just let us know. If you need to confer with your counsel or otherwise break, please, we'd like to extend that courtesy.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say. So we'll do our best to not talk over one another. From time to time, we might have to back up and restate a question and so forth.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we will take our time.

If you have questions or don't understand one of the questions we've asked you, let us know. Our questions may cover a range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or don't remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you learned information from a third party. The Rules of Evidence aren't in play here. Just tell us how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to that question.

You should understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that by law -- and we go through this with all witnesses -- you're required to answer questions before Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

Mr. Brennan. Yes, I do.

[redacted] And there's Federal statutes, such as 18 United States Code, 1001, that deal with those situations. Do you understand that?

Mr. Brennan. Yes, I do.

[redacted] We may have some exhibits here today, and we'll keep them with us and with the court reporter, even if it's a document that you may have provided to the committee.

Do you have any questions before --

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Litt. I do have a short statement I'd like to put on the record.

[redacted] Absolutely.

Mr. Litt. Yeah.

[redacted] Let me just ask my Democrat --

Mr. Litt. Sure.

[redacted] -- counterpart to see if she has any welcoming remarks.

[redacted] No. We thank the witness for joining us, and we believe we will have Democratic members in here as well. We'll let them introduce themselves. I think there's a handful of other committee hearings going on right now.

[redacted] Okay.

And, please, sir.

Mr. Litt. Okay. Thank you.

John Brennan, as you know, has decades of distinguished service to our Nation. He's served under both Republican and Democratic administrations in a variety of national security positions.

He's here today voluntarily in response to a letter dated February 26, 2023, from the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, which requested that he produce documents and give an interview on the subject of the public statement that he and others signed in October 2020 concerning the New York Post's reporting about Hunter Biden.

By responding to this letter and agreeing to be interviewed, Director Brennan does not in any way concede that this inquiry has any legitimate legislative purpose. Congress has no right of oversight over statements by private citizens on matters of public interest, even if Members disagree with those statements.

As Chairman Jordan said, "the most important right we have as American citizens under the First Amendment is our right to speak, our right to communicate in a political fashion, and not be attacked or harassed for doing so."

So long as they do not disclose classified information, former national security officials have the same First Amendment rights as anyone else.

Thus, as I explained in my letter of March 13, 2023, even under the most expansive view of Congress's authority, there's no basis for this transparent attempt to police political speech and intimidate private citizens into not exercising their constitutional rights.

Nonetheless, and without waiving any rights he has, Director Brennan is prepared to answer your questions about the statement in question.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

And to the extent -- you know, you're here voluntarily, so, you know, from time to time, if we ask a question and you're not willing to answer it, you know, we'll just have to move on.

I will note that, a lot of times, it's easier to just answer, if you can, even if you believe it's outside the scope. We don't normally, and we haven't here, engaged in any scope negotiations.

Mr. Litt. Yes.

[redacted] But it's voluntary. So we're free to ask questions we want, and you're free to tell us to, you know, come back later. Obviously, the coming-back-later questions, you know, gets into bringing you back and using a subpoena and that type of thing, so hopefully we can just -- you can just answer the questions we have.

Mr. Litt. Yeah, but there shouldn't be any problem if we are talking about the Hunter Biden laptop.

[redacted] Okay. Yeah, I mean, it's possible that we may have questions that we consider to be related that might stray from the statement.

And my colleague [redacted] is going to get our questions started here. The time is 10:17.

[redacted] Good morning, Director Brennan.

Mr. Brennan. Good morning.

[redacted] Again, my name is [redacted] I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q I want to start by kind of going through a little bit of your professional background. Would you mind detailing for us some of the senior government positions you've held?

A I joined the CIA in 1980. Senior positions? I was the Director of the National Counterterrorism Center. Before that, I was the Director of the Terrorist Threat Integration Center. I also was the Deputy Executive Director of CIA. I was the chief of staff to Director Tenet. And I was Director of CIA.

In addition, I was President Clinton's daily intelligence briefer. I was chief of station in the Middle East for 3 years. So there was a variety of positions I held during my 33-plus years in government service.

Q And, sir, when did you retire from the CIA?

A I retired the first time in 2005, went into the private sector for 3 years, and then returned during the Obama administration.

During President Obama's first term, I was Assistant to the President for Homeland Security and Counterterrorism and Deputy National Security Advisor. I served in that capacity from January of 2008 until March of 2013, at which time then I was appointed to be Director of CIA.

Q And was the last position you held at the CIA Director?

A Yes, it was.

Q And how long did you hold that position?

A From March the 13th, I believe -- March 8th of 2013 to January 20th of 2017.

Q And what do you do now?

A I am a husband, father, grandfather.

I am a lecturer at my alma maters, Fordham University in New York as well as University of Texas at Austin.

I serve on a number of foundation boards: the Third Option Foundation, which takes care of former CIA officers who either fell in the line of duty or have been maimed or paralyzed.

I also serve on the Board of Trustees of the International Institute of Strategic Studies, which is London-based.

I serve on the Board of Advisors to FAMIL USA, which tries to take care of Afghan citizens who served in support of CIA and U.S. Government objectives in Afghanistan.

I am a consultant with MSNBC and NBC.

I serve on one public board; that's ImmunityBio, Incorporated.

I serve on the Board of Directors for Treliant, which is a private company.

And there are, you know, other things -- I do consultancy on an infrequent basis. I am a principal in the WestExec Advisors here in Washington, D.C. And I speak at universities regularly.

Q Thank you for that.

And today we're going to speak a lot about the October 19, 2020, public statement that was signed by 51 former intel officials. So I'll go ahead and enter that as exhibit No. 1 today.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 1.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Director Brennan, you were one of the 51 former intelligence officials that signed this public statement, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And how would you characterize the public statement?

A It was raising public awareness about the potential for Russia to once again engage in information operations to influence a U.S. Presidential election.

Q And what was the intent of the statement?

A To raise public awareness about how the Russians use our open and free society here with information operations.

Q And I'll get into more of the content a little bit later on but kind of wanted to go through the timeline.

Did you have any role in the creation of the statement?

A No, I did not.

Q Did you draft the statement in any way?

A No, I didn't.

Q Do you know who drafted the statement?

A I have seen press reports saying that it was drafted by Michael Morell and Marc Polymeropoulos, but I don't know that for a fact. I didn't hear that directly from them.

Q And do you currently interact with Mr. Michael Morell?

A Michael has been a friend and a colleague for 40 years, and, yes, I have had interactions with him over the past several years.

Q And how often would you interact with Mr. Marc Polymeropoulos?

A Not often.

Q Did you overlap in any of your roles?

A He, in fact, served at the CIA for a fair amount of time when I was Director of the CIA, as well as previously, so I had interactions with Marc. And he worked in the same Office of Near Eastern and South Asian Analysis many years ago when I was there. I think it was in the 1980s, before he shifted his discipline within the agency.

Q And when did you first learn of the interest of getting former intelligence officials to sign on to a public statement regarding Hunter Biden's emails?

A I believe there was an email that came to me and others a day or two before I agreed to sign that I discarded.

Q Okay.

A I frequently will get requests to sign on to different types of letters, and I didn't take up the opportunity at that time.

It was when Michael, who had served as my deputy of CIA in addition to being a very close colleague over the years, made a request of me, on the 19th of October I think it was, if he could add my name to the list, and I said yes.

Q And do you know, who did the first request come from?

A I don't recall.

Q Do you know if you had worked with them at the CIA?

A I don't recall who it was, so I can't say whether I worked with them at the CIA.

Q And do you know any other individuals who received that same request?

A Well, subsequently, I know a number of the individuals who were on the list of signatories, so I presume that they were recipients of that request, but I don't know.

Q And was it your same understanding that this would be the same public statement that Mr. Morell reached out to you about, or was it a different public statement?

A Repeat that question.

Q So the first request that you received from the individual that you don't remember who it was, was that the same public statement that Mr. Morell reached out to you about signing on to?

A I don't know. I just know that I read the statement that Michael sent me when he was asking me to sign on to it. So I only recall one statement, the one that was published.

Q Okay.

I'm going to offer as exhibit No. 2, an October 19, 2020, email from Mr. Morell with the subject line "Request to Sign Statement."

[Brennan Exhibit No. 2.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And please take a moment to review it, sir.

A Okay.

Mr. Litt. Take a look at the attachment as well.

Mr. Brennan. Oh.

Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q In the first line of the email, Mr. Morell states, "To all," and then in parentheses says, "Everyone is on the bcc line to protect folks' privacy." So we're not entirely sure who all received this email.

Do you remember if you received this specific email from Mr. Morell?

A I don't.

Q In the first paragraph, Mr. Morell stated, "Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response."

Do you remember reading that paragraph at the time?

A I don't remember this email at all, so I can't remember that sentence.

Q Does it concern you, looking at the email now, that the intent behind the public statement was to give the VP a talking point to use at the debate?

A That may have been the intent of the drafters of that email, even the drafters of the statement itself. But my intent, as I mentioned, I wanted to bring attention to the potential for Russian interference in the Presidential election once again, because I had firsthand knowledge of their interference in the 2016 Presidential election.

Q Did you have any role in recruiting other signatories to the statement?

A No.

Q Do you know who all conducted outreach as part of the effort to get signatories?

A Well, based on what you just shared with me, I presume it was this email that did that.

Q And we know from testimony and documents that have been produced to the committees that Mr. Morell kind of shopped the statement around to a number of former intelligence officials -- for instance, Lisa Monaco, David Kris, Jeh Johnson, Dan Coats, and Mike Chertoff -- who did not sign on to the statement.

Have you spoken to any of those individuals regarding the public statement?

A No. I don't recall speaking to any of them about it.

Q Do you know what role Ms. Kristin Wood played in the creation and promotion of the statement?

A I don't.

Q Do you interact with Ms. Wood at all?

A Not since she was at the Agency. I haven't had -- I don't recall any interaction with her.

Q Do you know what role Nick Shapiro played in the creation and promotion of the statement?

A My understanding is that Nick brought the statement to the attention of the media.

Q And is it correct that Mr. Shapiro used to work for you?

A Yes. He was deputy press spokesperson in the White House when I was Homeland Security Advisor. And then he came with me to CIA. He was my deputy chief of staff at CIA.

Q And how often do you interact with Mr. Shapiro?

A Nick is a close friend, and so I have, you know, periodic interaction with him now. The last time I saw him was when he came to CIA headquarters for the unveiling of my official portrait a couple months ago. But I have not had a lot of interaction with him recently.

When my memoir was being published, both the initial publication in early October of 2020 as well as the paperback version, Nick helped to arrange interviews with various elements for the publication of that book.

Q Did you speak to Mr. Shapiro at all regarding the public statement?

A You know, back in October of 2020, I had a fair amount of interaction with Nick because I was involved in the publication of my memoir. And so I presume at that time that I did.

Q Do you remember any discussions that you had with Mr. Shapiro regarding the public statement?

A I think I acknowledged that I signed it.

Q Uh-huh.

A And, again, I don't know what I was told at the time about his role in actually helping to send it to the press.

Q So you don't remember any conversations you may have had with him regarding what he was doing to get the public statement out to the media?

A Again, this is over 2 years ago, and so I -- I was focused on my memoir at the time.

Q Okay.

Do you know what role, if any, Director James Clapper played in the creation or promotion of the statement?

A I do not believe he played any role. I know he is a signatory to it.

Q Do you know if he offered any edits to the statement?

A It's my understanding that there was an edit that Jim had offered.

Q And --

A I don't know what the edit was.

Q So you don't have any understanding of what edit he might've suggested?

A No.

Q Okay. Do you know if it was incorporated into the final letter?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know what role former Director of the National Counterterrorism Center Nick Rasmussen played in the creation of the statement?

A I just know that he is a signatory.

Q Do you interact with Mr. Rasmussen often?

A In his various capacities since he left government, I have had interactions with Nick. He was working at the McCain Institute here in Washington, and I spoke to his students a couple of times. And I had, I think, breakfast with him maybe a year and a half ago or so. So very intermittent contact with Nick.

Q And the version of the statement that's attached to the email that is now exhibit No. 2 has some language that was cut from the final version of the letter. And I'll just go ahead and read that right now.

It says, "For those who argue that it is important for the truth to come out -- even if it comes at the cost of foreign interference -- let us share our understanding of the what transpired between Vice President Biden and the Ukrainians. It is not what Biden's opponents want Americans to think."

"When the Vice President took a private and public stand against the then Prosecutor General of Ukraine Victor Shokin, he did so as a matter of Obama Administration policy, because Shokin was corrupt, because he was not investigating corruption in Ukraine, and because the Obama Administration wanted a prosecutor who would. This included any corruption at Burisma. Shokin was not investigating Burisma. Biden was not protecting Burisma. Indeed, by arguing that Ukraine needed an aggressive prosecutor, Biden was arguing for just the opposite. The Russians want you to think otherwise."

Do you know why it was removed.

A I don't.

Q Do you know who suggested taking those paragraphs out?

A I don't.

Q Mr. Morell mentioned in some emails that some folks thought the paragraphs were too political. Do you agree that those paragraphs were too political?

A I prefer the letter in its final form, certainly.

Q So you were okay with those paragraphs being removed?

A That's not what I said -- oh, being removed? Yes --

Q Correct.

A -- I was -- yeah. And, as I recall, when I agreed to sign the letter, I don't recall reading that language.

Q And so, had these paragraphs been in the final version of the letter, would you have signed on?

A I do not believe I would have, but that's a hypothetical. And it's hard for me to say what I would've done in October 2020.

Q And can you kind of walk us through your understanding of why you wouldn't have signed on if those paragraphs were still included?

A Because I'm more comfortable without them.

Q You're more comfortable -- why are you --

A I'm not disputing the accuracy of those sentences there. I think it is accurate. But, again, my intent with signing this was to make sure I drew attention -- or, supported the effort to try to draw public attention to Russian information operations. This went beyond -- the language that you just read went beyond the use of information operations by the Russians to interfere in the election. And that was my intent here.

Q So you were not comfortable with these paragraphs. Is that correct?

A Again, I don't recall reading them, so I can't talk to my comfort or discomfort at the time. I am very comfortable with the final version. And, as I said, the language there at the end of that strayed from the Russian-information-operations message that I wanted to make sure the American public was aware of.

Q At any time following the publication of the statement, did you become aware that these paragraphs were removed?

A No. This is the first time that I recall reading them. I don't recall reading them before.

Q And at the time you were asked to sign on by Mr. Morell, did he indicate to you what the purpose -- his purpose for the statement was and why he was seeking other signatories for the letter?

A I think you are in possession of the email exchange that I had with Michael -- I think my counsel provided it to you -- where he asked that I sign on to it. And he said, I'd like to give the -- I forget what the language is exactly.

Mr. Litt. It's okay.

[redacted] We can enter it as exhibit No. 3, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Before we go to No. 3, just to conclude exhibit 2, there is a part of the email correspondence from Michael and Marc that says, "If you want to agree to sign but make that 'conditional' on seeing who else is going to sign, I'm happy to send you the final list, probably tomorrow, before obtaining your final approval."

So, Director Brennan, were you in the group of people who were willing to sign without seeing the other signatories, or did you want to see the other signatories before signing.

Mr. Brennan. I didn't respond to that email. I only responded to Michael's followup email that went specifically to me.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you at any point desire to see who else was signing the letter before providing your own agreement to sign it?

Mr. Brennan. In the email that Michael sent me, he included the names of some individuals, who I have subsequently learned did not sign that letter.

But I was comfortable, again, with the content of it. My interest was not so much in who else was signing; it was in the content itself that would convey the message about Russian interference in the election.

Mr. Gaetz. So you never asked who else was signing, correct?

Mr. Brennan. I didn't respond to that first email. The email that Michael sent me included the names of other individuals that he said were going to sign.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. That's my question --

Mr. Brennan. And that's when I agreed to sign.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. My question is, at any point, before or after that, did you ever ask to see who else was signing before you agreed to sign?

Mr. Brennan. No, I did not.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

[redacted] This will be exhibit No. 3. It's an email exchange between Mr. Morell and Director Brennan.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 3.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Feel free to take a moment to review, if you need to, sir.

A Oh, I've seen this.

Q Okay.

So, in the email, you were told that Mr. Morell was, quote, trying to give the campaign, particularly during the debate on Thursday, a "talking point" to push back on Trump on this issue.

Is that correct?

A That's what's included in the email.

Q And you have testified already that that was not your intent, correct?

A My intent was to make sure that the public warning was out about Russian information operations. Yes.

Q Were you worried at all with Mr. Morell's intent for it to be used at the debate?

A My impression was that Michael wanted to make sure that there was going to be language, substance, that was going to accurately portray the concerns about

Russian information operations so that then-candidate Biden would have accurate content to use if the subject came up.

Q So did it ever concern you that this was going to be too political, if it was going to be used at a Presidential debate?

A I think the more factual a debate can be, which is not always the case, I think it makes for a much better debate. And it's better to inform the American public with accurate information, which is what this letter tried to do.

Q And you responded to Mr. Morell by saying, "Ok, Michael, add my name to the list. Good initiative. Thanks for asking me to sign on."

Why did you call this a good initiative?

A Because I think it's important for there to be broader public awareness about these Russian attempts to interfere in the election -- in Presidential elections.

As I said, I was intimately involved and know of Russian information operations in the 2016 election. And, at the time, I think I would've appreciated more professionals in the public domain ringing that bell.

And so, therefore, in the 2020 election, I believed it was worthwhile and important for national security professionals, many of whom had intimate knowledge of Russian intelligence operations, to be able to provide information to the American public about it.

Q And at the time that Mr. Morell emailed you, what information did you have that suggested that the New York Post's reporting on the Hunter Biden laptop and emails was Russian information?

A Didn't say it was. We said that it raised our concerns and our suspicions that this could be -- I think it referenced the emails, Hunter Biden's emails there.

As we said in the letter itself, Russian information operations takes a wide range of dimensions, to include the amplification of accurate information.

Q Uh-huh. What specifically raised your suspicions?

A Well, several things.

One is that the Counterintelligence Executive, Bill Evanina, in both July and August of 2020 raised publicly the concerns about Russian attempts to interfere in the election as a way to denigrate then-candidate Biden and to help Donald Trump.

My background, again, and knowing what they did in 2016 raised it; the fact that this came on the eve of the Presidential election; the fact that Rudy Giuliani was somehow involved in the obtaining of this -- it had a number of those hallmarks that indicated to me that there is, in fact, a potential that this is part of a broader effort on the part of the Russians to once again interfere in our election.

Q Did you review any type of information regarding the laptop or the emails that rose your suspicions, or was it just based upon your experience?

A I remember seeing the New York Post article at the time, and it was in the press. And so, again, what I saw, which included, you know, salacious photos and those types of things, this is the type of thing that the Russians have excelled at over the years, in terms of pushing out something in order to advance their own objectives and interests.

Q Were you privy to any information outside of the public realm?

A No, I was not.

Q Did you --

A Outside of my previous experience in intelligence -- professional experience working against the Russians --

Chairman Jordan. Director, were you --

Mr. Brennan. -- not in the public domain.

Chairman Jordan. Director, were you aware of what Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe said on the morning of October 19th regarding this Biden laptop story, where he said that it wasn't a Russian disinformation operation?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know if I was aware of it at the time, but I would have dismissed it anyway.

Chairman Jordan. Why would you have dismissed it?

Mr. Brennan. Because I don't think John Ratcliffe was an independent, objective leader of the intelligence community at the time.

Chairman Jordan. So you would dismiss the statement from the Director of National Intelligence -- the Acting -- the Director of National Intelligence at the time, in the administration, getting intelligence in real-time, you would just dismiss that out of hand?

Mr. Brennan. Not out of hand, but I think it was -- a week or two prior to that, there was a selective release of information that included my briefing notes to President Obama in the White House Situation Room that was misrepresenting, in fact, the facts, where it was pushed out in redacted version. And I did think that was a very, very unfortunate, unprofessional, unethical engagement on the part of the Director of National Intelligence in a Presidential election.

Mr. Gaetz. So your dismissing Mr. Ratcliffe was somehow payback for the fact that you thought that your briefing to President Obama had been mischaracterized?

Mr. Brennan. No, that's not what I said.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Well, I'm trying to understand how this event that seems to have aggrieved you regarding the briefing to President Obama impacted your view of the Ratcliffe assessment.

Mr. Brennan. It didn't aggrieve me. It just indicated to me that John Ratcliffe was not going to be an independent, nonpartisan, apolitical actor.

And I did take the words of Bill Evanina in the Counterintelligence and Security Center, the Executive, about the determination of the Russians, as well as others, to interfere in the election.

Mr. Gaetz. And what did Mr. Evanina ever say about Hunter Biden's laptop?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know what he said about it or not. I just know that he said very publicly, repeatedly, that the Russians were interfering in the election.

Mr. Gaetz. But he never said there was a laptop that was a feature of that interference, right?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know what he said about the laptop.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

So I'm just trying to get the full universe of your basis for signing this letter. One, you say the Evanina analysis. Second, you say the election timing. Third, you say the involvement of Rudy Giuliani. And, fourth, you say the inclusion of salacious photos.

Have I missed anything?

Mr. Brennan. My many years of experience in the intelligence community, my intimate knowledge of Russian information operations in previous elections.

Mr. Gaetz. And what about that experience told you that the laptop was a feature of Russian misinformation?

Mr. Brennan. Again, the language in the letter says that our suspicions are raised that this, in fact, could be a part of a Russian information operation effort.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. And I'm trying to understand your full and complete basis for saying that that was a probability.

Mr. Brennan. And I think I've explained that to you.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Mr. Brennan, just quickly, do you regard yourself as an independent, nonpartisan actor? You said the Director was not. Are you?

Mr. Brennan. Yes, I believe I am.

Mr. Biggs. So --

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. And -- go ahead.

Mr. Biggs. Yeah.

So I wanted to get back to a couple things you said.

You said that you wanted to ring the bell of Russian interference or potential Russian interference in U.S. elections. Is that a fair characterization of --

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Biggs. -- your testimony?

And so I'm looking at the letter, and it substantially talks about Russian interference in the -- potential Russian interference in the election of 2020, okay? But it also hangs its hat, in a large way, on the post of Hunter Biden's laptop, to the extent that it says here, "A 'laptop op' fits the bill, as the publication of the emails are clearly designed to discredit Biden."

And I guess the first question I want to ask you is: If they had not mentioned the Hunter Biden laptop at all but they were ringing the bell about potential Russian interference, would that have been a letter you would've signed?

Mr. Brennan. Well, I agreed to sign this letter with the inclusion of that reference, so I think, by definition, I would've been willing to sign that letter without it.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

So I guess the followup, then, is: With regard to this specific language that says that the laptop itself -- or, "the emails are clearly designed to discredit Biden," with the laptop having been verified and the emails now having been verified as accurate and real, do you still agree that those emails effectively discredit Joe Biden?

Mr. Brennan. I am unaware of any official determination that the emails on that laptop are all real, all unredacted, whatever. I don't know -- I know there are various press reports about it. The press has reviewed it. I'm -- I don't know.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. So the fact that --

Mr. Brennan. And I'd -- and even if they are all real, it doesn't mean that the Russians were not involved somehow in the obtaining of the laptop, the dissemination of it, and the exploitation of it, which is part of Russian information operations --

Mr. Biggs. That gets around the question I asked, though. The question I asked you -- and let's frame it with the answer that you just gave. If these are real, if these are verified emails, if they're not Russian disinformation, those emails do discredit Joe Biden and cast him in a very negative way, right?

Mr. Brennan. They are certainly unhelpful, because they can be exploited by partisan actors.

Mr. Biggs. But is that why you think that line was in this, was because they could be exploited by partisan --

Mr. Brennan. I wasn't involved in the drafting of it, so, therefore, I don't know what was the motivation of putting in particular words and particular sentences.

Mr. Biggs. And you weren't interested enough to make queries about those --

Mr. Brennan. I was interested enough to read the contents of it, which I felt were an accurate depiction of the potential of Russian information operations in it.

Mr. Biggs. Thank you.

[redacted] Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart. Director, thank you for coming in. It's good to see you.

I'd like to reference a couple comments that you and your counsel made just for clarity and then ask you a couple other things.

In your opening statement, Counsel, you said -- and there's no doubt we agree -- that you have the ability to engage as a private citizen in making public statements. No one contends that at all.

But I hope that you would also not deny our responsibility to determine if those statements are true --

Mr. Litt. I would --

Mr. Stewart. -- especially of -- especially of someone as distinguished as you are and the previous positions which you have held, as you've elaborated on today.

And I would ask you, do you think the CIA Director should be a political or a partisan position?

Mr. Litt. Can I -- I would just like to say that, indeed, I do dispute Congress's right to determine whether political statements are true or false in general.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. We can agree to disagree on that.

Mr. Litt. Okay.

Mr. Stewart. I think it's a fundamental --

Mr. Litt. I don't think freedom of speech was conditioned on that.

Mr. Stewart. Okay.

Do you believe that the CIA Director should be a nonpartisan and nonpolitical position?

Mr. Brennan. It's a Senate-confirmed political appointee --

Mr. Stewart. I understand.

Mr. Brennan. -- at this point.

Mr. Stewart. Yeah.

Mr. Brennan. And I do think it's important that the Congress, the Senate, have the ability to confirm the appointments of the senior-most members of the national security --

Mr. Stewart. That's really not what I'm asking you. I'm talking about the individual itself, should that individual be known or reveal themselves as a very partisan, political person? Or would the CIA Director, hopefully, be someone who stood outside of politics and didn't involve themselves in political --

Mr. Brennan. Are you talking about CIA Directors while they're in office?

Mr. Stewart. I'm talking about a current CIA Director while in office.

Mr. Brennan. As a current CIA Director, absolutely.

Mr. Stewart. Would you believe that someone who is a former CIA Director or Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, someone who is in a position that most Americans consider nonpolitical, again, an organization that should hopefully stand outside of the political debate, that someone who is a former CIA Director would therefore have a responsibility to be professional and nonpartisan in their own conversations or their public statements after they've --

Mr. Brennan. Yes. And I believe that after my departure from the CIA I have maintained that nonpartisan and professional demeanor.

Mr. Stewart. Well -- and I'll read you some of your comments and ask you to respond to that, if you would. And I think we can agree that, given the enormous power and authority that the CIA has to influence events around the world, I think the American people do expect -- and I'm glad you agree with me -- that that Director would stay above politics.

You've indicated so yourself. In an editorial you wrote in Politico, you said, "Many have condemned my public criticism of Trump, arguing that as a former CIA Director I should bite my tongue. My criticism, however, has not been political. I have never been and never will be a partisan."

Do you remember writing that?

Mr. Brennan. It sounds familiar. It sounds like something I would write or say.

Mr. Stewart. Let me read you one of several of your public statements.

March 17, 2018, speaking of President Trump: "When the full extent of your venality, moral turpitude, and political corruption becomes known, you will take your rightful place as a displaced demagogue in the dustbin of history."

Mr. Brennan. I remember writing that, yes.

Mr. Stewart. Does that sound like a nonpolitical statement?

Mr. Brennan. It sounds like somebody who is very concerned and very angry at how Donald Trump abused his office.

Mr. Stewart. Does it sound like a nonpolitical statement?

Mr. Brennan. If -- well, I don't know how you define "nonpolitical."

Mr. Stewart. You've indicated that you have not been political. I am asking you --

Mr. Brennan. That does not mean that I cannot speak about politics and what's going on in the political --

Mr. Stewart. All right.

Mr. Brennan. -- environment here in Washington.

Mr. Stewart. I understand that. I'm just asking, does that sound like a nonpolitical, nonpartisan statement?

Mr. Brennan. That sounds like a very honest judgment on the part of a former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. Stewart. Does it sound nonpartisan to you? Does it sound like something that someone who wasn't partisan would say?

Mr. Brennan. If they felt outraged over the behavior and the actions of an individual, irrespective of their party affiliation, yes, it is nonpartisan.

Mr. Stewart. You think that to call someone a disgraced demagogue, talk about their political corruption, their moral turpitude, you believe that is a nonpartisan statement?

Mr. Brennan. It's a statement directed against an individual, Donald Trump.

Mr. Stewart. Right, that you believe is nonpartisan?

Mr. Brennan. It's a personal judgment on my part about a specific individual.

Mr. Stewart. That's not what I'm asking. I'm asking, yes or no --

Mr. Brennan. That is nonpartisan.

Mr. Stewart. You believe that's nonpartisan?

Mr. Brennan. I do believe it's nonpartisan.

Mr. Stewart. Do you think most Americans would accept that?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know what most Americans will think.

Mr. Stewart. Yeah.

Let me ask you about some others.

As you say, you are nonpartisan. You don't involve yourself in politics. You don't care.

"Donald Trump's press conference performance in Helsinki" -- this is your statement, July 16th -- "rises to & exceeds the threshold of 'high crimes & misdemeanors.' It was nothing short of treasonous."

Mr. Brennan. Uh-huh.

Mr. Stewart. "Not only were President Trump's comments imbecilic, he is wholly in the pocket of Putin."

We've since had -- since that statement, we've had the Russian investigation and Mueller report, two impeachments. Was there ever any charges of treason towards Mr. Trump.

Mr. Brennan. Not that I recall.

Mr. Stewart. Do you believe there should have been?

Mr. Brennan. I believe that what Mr. Trump did while he was in office and at that press conference in Helsinki was disgraceful. Taking the --

Mr. Stewart. Do you think he was treasonous?

Mr. Brennan. Taking the side of Vladimir Putin against the considered view of the intelligence community that was supported by the Mueller investigation, the Senate Intelligence Committee, and others about the Russian interference in the election, I thought that was outrageous.

Mr. Stewart. Do you think it rose to the level of high crimes and misdemeanors for a President to take a view that's opposite of yours?

Mr. Brennan. It wasn't just opposite of mine. It was counter to the considered view --

Mr. Stewart. There were --

Mr. Brennan. -- and judgment of the intelligence community --

Mr. Stewart. There are other --

Mr. Litt. Would you let him finish his answer, please.

Mr. Stewart. Sorry.

Mr. Brennan. I didn't say he committed treason. I said it was treasonous. It's, like, poisonous. It's treacherous. It's all of those features.

Mr. Stewart. You said they are "nothing short of treasonous."

Mr. Brennan. Sir, read that again.

Mr. Stewart. You said, "It was nothing short of treasonous." But you just said right now that it wasn't treason.

Mr. Brennan. "Treasonous" and "treason," I think, are two different things.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. All right. I'd love for you --

Mr. Brennan. But besides --

Mr. Stewart. -- to explain the difference.

Mr. Brennan. -- that, I said it publicly.

Mr. Stewart. That's right. As a nonpartisan --

Mr. Brennan. Jim Jordan likes freedom of speech, right?

Mr. Stewart. As a nonpartisan, by the way, right?

Mr. Brennan. You shouldn't be harassed for speaking out publicly on these issues.

Mr. Stewart. Well, do you feel harassed by this?

Mr. Brennan. Well, I question what this grouping, this committee, whatever it's called, is doing.

Mr. Stewart. Do you feel harassed by this?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Stewart. We're reading your comments and asking you to respond to them.

Mr. Brennan. Okay, and I'm responding.

Mr. Stewart. You said there's a difference between "treason" and "treasonous." Can you explain that difference?

Mr. Brennan. I used the term "treasonous."

Mr. Stewart. Would you explain the difference?

Mr. Brennan. Well, it's a difference of several letters.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. Other than the spelling, which I think we all understand, is there a difference between "treason" and "treasonous"? You just said there was.

Mr. Brennan. When I was saying "treasonous," I felt that this was a betrayal of his oath of office, a betrayal of the American people, a betrayal of this country, of our history, and of our laws.

Mr. Stewart. So you believe he committed high crime and misdemeanors?

Mr. Brennan. I believe he betrayed this country.

Mr. Stewart. You believe he committed treason.

Mr. Brennan. I believe he betrayed this country.

Mr. Stewart. You said you believe he committed treason.

Mr. Brennan. I don't know how many times we'll go back and forth.

Mr. Stewart. All right.

If I could, was the Hunter Biden laptop a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Brennan. We never said it was a disinformation campaign. In the letter, I believe it cites a USA Today story that makes reference to it possibly being a part of a smoke bomb of disinformation.

Mr. Stewart. So you never believed it was a disinformation campaign?

Mr. Brennan. I was concerned that it was part of a Russian information operation to influence the outcome of the election, as I stated previously.

Mr. Stewart. But from what we now know, I'm asking you, was the Hunter Biden laptop a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know, because I don't have access to intelligence and investigative efforts on this front. I just don't know.

Mr. Stewart. Have you ever seen any information -- because there's been a multitude of reporting on this, as I'm sure you know, from a multitude of sources. Have you seen any information subsequent to your statement that would indicate or prove that it was a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Brennan. I have not been reading closely the reports about this --

Mr. Stewart. Surely you've seen some of them.

Mr. Brennan. Sorry?

Mr. Stewart. Surely you've seen some of them.

Mr. Brennan. I've seen some, yes, but they run the gamut from probably the most specious to the most accurate, and I'm not in a position at this point to determine their accuracy.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. I'm not asking you to determine their accuracy or not. I'm just asking, have you seen any information that would indicate the Hunter Biden laptop was a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Brennan. I may have. I don't know. I don't recall.

Mr. Stewart. You don't recall whether you've seen information that the Hunter Biden laptop was a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Brennan. That's not what we said, and so I'm not in a position to determine that.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. I'm going to ask one more time for clarity. You cannot say now that you have seen any information that would indicate the Russian -- or, the Hunter Biden laptop was Russian disinformation? You have not seen any information that would indicate this?

Mr. Brennan. I do not recall --

Mr. Stewart. I'll take that as a "no."

Mr. Brennan. -- what I have seen on this issue.

Mr. Stewart. One other thing I'd like to come back to that you said. In your previous statement a little while ago, you said you wanted the -- you were hoping that this would provide so that the debate was more factual and that the more facts that are provided in the public debate, the better that is.

I'm just paraphrasing your comment from --

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Stewart. -- a few moments ago.

In fact, this letter made the debate less factual, didn't it? Because President Biden was able to say, "That's garbage," and we know that's not true.

So this letter made the debate less factual. It made less information, less accurate information available to the American people, did it not?

Mr. Brennan. This letter never said it was garbage.

Mr. Stewart. Well, that's the President quoting from your letter.

Mr. Brennan. Well, I cannot control what others might do with this letter, like I can't control what this committee does --

Mr. Stewart. I understand --

Mr. Brennan. -- with this letter.

Mr. Stewart. -- that, but the outcome was --

Mr. Litt. Could you -- I don't think he finished his thought.

Mr. Brennan. And so I can't control how it's going to be characterized or mischaracterized by individuals, by press, whatever else. Having worked in the intelligence profession for many, many years, I know that our words are frequently misrepresented and mischaracterized for a variety of purposes --

Mr. Stewart. So for the --

Mr. Brennan. -- including political purposes.

Mr. Stewart. -- President to call the claims that this was an accurate laptop -- that the information is accurate, for him to claim that was garbage, that was inaccurate for the President to say that then?

Mr. Brennan. Again, I'm not going to comment on what --

Mr. Stewart. So let me ask one more time.

Mr. Brennan. -- then-candidate Biden said.

Mr. Stewart. Did the letter and the 51 signatures make the debate more or less accurate?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know.

Mr. Stewart. Well, it clearly made it less accurate, because the President called it garbage. He said that you all had said it was inaccurate, and we know that's not true.

Mr. Brennan. That's not what we said, though.

Mr. Stewart. Well, we can certainly debate that and you can make that claim, but the letter speaks for itself and the intent of the letter speaks for itself.

And I just think it's ironic that you say, well, we wanted the debate to be accurate, and let's provide them something that's inaccurate so he can say something inaccurate.

Mr. Brennan. It wasn't inaccurate. The letter is not inaccurate.

Mr. Stewart. Well, it certainly is.

Mr. Brennan. And how so?

Mr. Stewart. Do you not understand why it's inaccurate? Are you proud you signed that letter? Do you stand --

Mr. Brennan. I am glad I signed the letter, yes.

Mr. Stewart. You stand by the letter?

Mr. Brennan. I do.

Mr. Stewart. If you were to be presented with that letter today, you would sign it again?

Mr. Brennan. I think I probably would make one adjustment to it.

Mr. Stewart. What would that be?

Mr. Brennan. In the letter, on the second page, I believe, this paragraph begins, "Our view that the Russians are involved in the Hunter Biden email issue is consistent with" -- I would say, "Our view that the Russians might be involved." So I would change that one word, "are," to "might be."

Mr. Stewart. Once again, do you have any information that indicates the Russian were involved?

Mr. Brennan. I don't have any information that they weren't.

Mr. Stewart. Well, that's not my question. We can hypothesize all sorts of thing. Maybe Chile is involved. We have no information that they weren't. Maybe my mom was involved. I have no information that she wasn't.

Mr. Litt. You could ask.

Mr. Stewart. I'm asking, do you have any information that indicates that Russia was involved in this laptop?

Mr. Brennan. No. But, again, I will take the opposite position, which is, I don't -- I cannot say that they weren't.

Mr. Stewart. Well, again, I don't think my mom was either.

Mr. Brennan. We're proud of your mom. That's good.

Mr. Stewart. Yeah. Unfortunately, she's passed, so it would be really remarkable if she was involved.

I have more, but I will yield my time. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Just a couple followups.

Has anyone from the Hunter Biden camp disputed the content of the laptop that you're aware of?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

And the USA Today article you mentioned, I mean, wasn't that a story planted by the Biden campaign?

A I have no idea.

Q Okay. But if it was planted by the Biden campaign, would that have changed any of your calculus?

A Again, that's a hypothetical. Had I known that at the time, I -- I am unaware of any involvement of the Biden campaign in the USA Today story.

Q Okay.

And one last question, and I'll turn it back to my colleague [redacted] unless other members have questions.

At this time, was Mr. Morell, who you indicated was a close friend and former colleague, was he trying to position himself to be the Director of the CIA under a Biden administration?

A I know he had aspirations to return to the government. I will leave it to Michael to characterize his interest in such a position.

Q But do you think his involvement with sort of executive-producing this initiative was an effort to gain favor and maybe be appointed --

A I will leave it to Michael to describe exactly his intent.

Q Okay. But, at the time, you said that you had frequent communications with him. I mean, were you working with him to help him position himself as the CIA Director potentially?

A No.

Q Okay. And did you have any conversations with him about his potentially being the CIA Director under a --

A I may have. I don't recall them.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Morell said, when he was sitting where you are, Director, that his motivation was he believed Russia was involved; he wanted President Biden, then-candidate Biden, to have something to push back on President Trump when it came up in the October 22nd debate; and he wanted Joe Biden to be the next President.

Do you share those same three objectives -- did you share those same three objectives when you signed the letter?

Mr. Brennan. State them again.

Chairman Jordan. He believed Russia was involved. You said that was your motivation.

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Morell said he wanted Biden to have something to push back on against President Trump in the debate, and he wanted Joe Biden to be the next President.

Mr. Brennan. I certainly did not want Donald Trump to be the next President -- to be the President again, be reelected. I wanted Joe Biden to be. But that was not what was motivating me to sign this letter.

Chairman Jordan. So your only motivation was that you thought Russia was somehow involved.

Mr. Brennan. There were basically two motivations.

One, Michael asked me. He's my former deputy, and I have --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Brennan. -- a tremendous amount of respect for his professionalism. I wouldn't have signed it if he didn't ask me directly.

And, two, I did think it's very important to be able to ring the public bell about Russian interference in our political system and especially a Presidential election.

Chairman Jordan. When you signed it, did you believe that Joe Biden would bring it up during the debate?

Mr. Brennan. I didn't know.

Chairman Jordan. You didn't know.

Mr. Brennan. No.

Chairman Jordan. I mean, you're a smart, sophisticated guy. You went to Fordham, you went to Texas, you ran the CIA. You knew how this was gonna be used, didn't you.

Mr. Brennan. I think Michael's letter said he wanted to push back on Trump, so -- and, as I recall, it was Donald Trump who raised it first and then Joe Biden responded. I don't know whether or not Joe Biden would've raised it on his own. I probably doubt that he would have.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. You made mention that Mr. Morell asking you to sign the letter was a critical feature of your acquiescence to signing it. If any other person on the planet Earth had asked you to sign the very same letter, would you have?

Mr. Brennan. There are many other people who I have an equal amount of respect for that if they made a plea and if I believed that something was a worthwhile effort and was accurate I would have signed it.

Mr. Gaetz. If every other person had signed this letter other than Mr. Morell and one of the others had asked you to sign it, would you have signed it?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, as you sit here today reviewing the contents of it, you can't answer that question?

Mr. Brennan. I probably would have in response to some of the others. But I only was asked by Michael, so I could only answer about my willingness to sign for Michael.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

[redacted] We've got about 12 minutes left in our round. I want to make sure that any of the members here have an opportunity to use that time.

Mr. Biggs. Can I ask a quick question?

In light of your recent responses, I want to ask, specifically with regard to the last paragraph from page 1 of exhibit 1, the letter -- and you and I have -- I've talked to you about the last sentence before.

But in response to Mr. Jordan, you said that you signed for two reasons: Mr. Morell specifically and directly asked you to sign it, number one; and, number two, you were concerned about Russian interference.

This particular paragraph, though, seems to take a pretty decided political turn, because it's talking about Russia potentially undermining Vice President Biden's campaign and also helping the candidacy of President Trump.

That seems like a pretty direct political statement, especially when you take it in connection with the statements in the last three paragraphs of page 2, which were actually included in the letter as opposed to the two paragraphs that [redacted] mentioned that were cut.

So what I'm suggesting to you -- and I wanted to get your opinion on this. I mean, this paragraph looks like it's designed specifically to foment fear in the public, demonize Trump, aggrandize Vice President Biden. And I'm wondering, what was the necessity of this paragraph?

I know you keep saying, "Well, I didn't write it." But you read it, and you didn't offer any suggestions. What was the purpose of this paragraph if you were really signing this solely because you wanted to raise concerns about the Russian interference?

Mr. Brennan. That paragraph is pivoting directly off of the explicit language that Bill Evanina published in the July and August timeframes. I think there were two statements that came from the Counterintelligence Executive that said that the Russians were trying to hurt Biden and help Trump.

That came out from a sitting intelligence professional in charge of counterintelligence for the U.S. Government. And so this language is, again, a reflection of that language.

Mr. Biggs. So, two points to that I would ask you about.

Throughout this letter, you refer to references. You cite The Washington Post, USA Today, a number of other media outlets as giving you buttress, giving you foundation, giving you the evidence for including that language.

There is no language in here that provides that, nothing in the public record. So are you relying on some kind of additional intelligence somewhere? You just are relying on something other than public record. Is that fair to say?

Mr. Brennan. No. As I explained to you, Bill Evanina pushed out a press release in July and August where he made explicit reference to Russian efforts to interfere in the election which he said were designed to hurt Biden and help Trump.

RPTR KERR

EDTR ZAMORA

[11:09 a.m.]

Mr. Biggs. But you didn't reference that in here.

Mr. Brennan. No, it's not referenced there, but it is anchored in information in the public domain.

Mr. Biggs. And yet, at the same time, you're citing other references in here. But this one, where you take and you, yourself, use the word "pivot," you're pivoting to -- trying to basically demonize Trump and aggrandize Biden in this, and you didn't provide any citation for that.

And you also, apparently, didn't do your homework with regard to -- and you had no information with regard -- the Biden campaign's influence and how Mr. Morell even came to consider writing the letter. None of that was there. You didn't say, why are we writing this letter? We're just doing this, right?

Mr. Brennan. I didn't hear the question.

Mr. Biggs. You didn't ask Mr. Morell why we're writing this letter. You didn't ask for the objective. You just -- he asked you --

Mr. Brennan. I responded to his email and what he said in the email, and I was, again, motivated by pushing out in public a statement about Russian interference in a Presidential election with information operations.

Mr. Biggs. He also said pushback on Trump, which you mentioned earlier that was a key point for you, was it not?

Mr. Brennan. No, that's something that he wrote. I did not write that.

Mr. Biggs. That's my point. You just are relying -- now, you want to -- you can't have it both ways. You can't say, well, Mr. Morell said this and that and that's why I did that; but then when he says pushback on Trump, oh, that's what Morell said.

Which is it? Did you buy into what Mr. Morell was selling you or did you not?

Mr. Brennan. I agreed to sign the letter at Michael's request as it was drafted.

Mr. Biggs. As it was redacted. As it was edited. You didn't bother to read the first draft.

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall reading the first draft. I recall reading this one without those paragraphs.

Mr. Biggs. But the point is, you were comfortable with Mr. Morell's approach saying we're going to push back on Trump. You were comfortable with that.

Mr. Brennan. Again, I believed that the statement was an accurate portrayal of Russian information operations and the potential, the possibility that, in fact, what was coming out in the press about this Hunter Biden laptop was, in fact, a part of Russian information operations.

Mr. Biggs. So you were comfortable with Morell's purpose of pushing back on Trump?

Mr. Brennan. I was comfortable with the statement going out publicly.

Mr. Biggs. You were comfortable with Morell's statement that this was done to push back on Trump. You were comfortable with that position.

Mr. Brennan. Again, I can only say what I was comfortable with, which was pushing out the statement publicly.

Ms. Hageman. I just have a quick question, Mr. Brennan. Why did you and the others believe that the contents of the Hunter Biden laptop would pose problems for Mr. Biden?

Mr. Brennan. The way it was being portrayed in the press was in a very negative light, because I knew that partisans, those who were getting involved in the election, were going to use any opportunity to try to criticize --

Ms. Hageman. Let's talk about the contents --

Mr. Brennan. -- condemn, divide the Biden family --

Mr. Litt. Could you let him finish his answer?

Mr. Brennan. And I know this is typical in the political realm.

Ms. Hageman. Let's talk about the contents. Why did you believe that the contents of the Hunter Biden laptop would pose problems for Mr. Biden?

Mr. Brennan. I didn't know all of the contents in a that laptop. I know that they were starting to come out. Who knows what else would have been coming out.

Ms. Hageman. They were problematic for Mr. Biden. That's why you signed the letter, correct?

Mr. Brennan. No. What I'm saying is that they could have been problematic if, in fact, and, indeed, if the Russians were trying to push this information out in order to further their interest and objectives.

Ms. Hageman. And they could be problematic if they were true, correct?

Mr. Brennan. Again, that's a very hypothetical, because I don't -- didn't know the contents of the laptop that were going to be coming out.

Ms. Hageman. But we know it now, and the contents of that laptop --

Mr. Brennan. Well, you're talking about October --

Ms. Hageman. -- are a problem for Mr. Biden --

Mr. Litt. Let her finish.

Ms. Hageman. -- correct?

Mr. Brennan. Say that again.

Ms. Hageman. The contents of the Hunter Biden laptop are a problem for Mr. Biden, correct?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know the contents of the laptop.

Ms. Hageman. But you signed the letter not knowing the contents of the laptop?

Mr. Brennan. I signed the letter because I was concerned that this was part of a Russian information operation designed to influence the outcome of the 2020 election, just the way they did in 2016, to enhance the prospects of Donald Trump's election.

Ms. Hageman. And why would it be a Russian information campaign? Why would it be negative if the contents of that laptop were not a problem for Mr. Biden?

Mr. Brennan. It's traditional that the Russians will take any opportunity to amplify either accurate information or to try to embarrass candidates that they're trying to defeat in elections.

Ms. Hageman. The contents of the laptop were a problem for the Biden family. I believe that that's what you're saying.

Mr. Brennan. No, that's not what I said. I said I don't know the accuracy of the contents of that laptop. I haven't seen any type of formal government determination about the full contents of that laptop, what was accurate, what wasn't.

BY [redacted]

Q I mean, presumably, if the contents of the laptop were not authentic, the Hunter Biden camp would come out and say this is all fake; this isn't my laptop, right?

A I don't know. Presumably.

Q And you did mention that the contents of the laptop at least weren't helpful for the Biden campaign, correct?

A The way that some of these photos and other things that were plastered across different publications certainly were with the intention to try to discredit the Biden family as a whole and, therefore, undermine the candidacy of Joseph Biden.

Q But there's also emails about his business arrangements and some pretty staggering business deals he was allowed to be a part of because he's related to the Vice President.

A Hunter Biden was not running for office. It was Joe Biden.

Q But if he's trading on his dad's name, I mean, that is something that is worthwhile for the American people to consider when they're casting their vote for President. Isn't that right?

A Trading on names is something that a lot of people have done in recent administrations as well.

Q But isn't that something the American people ought to consider and ought to have a chance to consider?

A I think they can do that.

Q And don't you think this letter served as an opportunity for Facebook and Twitter and some of the social media platforms to just ban coverage of the story entirely?

A I think that took place prior to the letter, the ban and then the reposting of --

Q But this letter gave it some real authority.

A It was a letter signed by private U.S. citizens.

Q Not just private U.S. citizens, former director of the CIA.

A Private U.S. citizens.

Q But private U.S. citizens with --

A With tremendous background experience on Russian information operations that, again, includes the gamut of activities.

Q But you would agree that there's a coefficient of credibility there on a letter like this, as opposed to a letter that was just put out by a bunch of --

Mr. Stewart. Counsel, should I ask?

BY MR. STEWART:

Q When you signed the letter, did you attach your previous positions to your name?

A I believe they were --

Q Does it say John Brennan --

A I believe they were included in that, yes.

Q -- previous CIA director?

A Yes.

Q And all the other signatures did as well.

You didn't sign it John Brennan nothing or John Brennan private citizen. You signed it John Brennan previous CIA director.

A They added my title, yes, to the letter.

[redacted] It looks like our time is pretty much up.

[redacted] We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] All right. It is 11:30 in the morning. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Mr. Brennan, good morning again. I'm [redacted] I'm the Democrat chief oversight counsel for the Judiciary Committee, and I'm joined by the general counsel for House Intelligence Committee.

And I also want to note for the record that we do have Mr. Goldman from New York has joined. He was not here at the beginning to introduce himself. He is in the room now.

I want to start out, in the last hour, you were asked about your statements with respect to the Helsinki Summit. Do you recall that?

A Yes, I do.

Q I want to introduce -- actually, could you summarize in your own words what happened at that summit in Helsinki?

A There was a joint press conference with Donald Trump and Vladimir Putin, and there was a question, I believe, that was raised about the intelligence community's assessment about Russian interference in the 2016 Presidential election that was directed to Donald Trump.

And at the time, he said that he -- I don't remember the exact words, but, basically, he believed Vladimir Putin rather than the U.S. intelligence community, that Russia did not interfere in the election.

Q Thank you.

A He said he saw no reason why they would, or something along those lines.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 4.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you.

I want to introduce as exhibit 4 a July 16th, 2018, BBC article entitled, Trump sides with Russia against FBI at Helsinki summit.

Do you know if you've seen this article before?

A I might have read it at the time.

Q And I can give you a minute to look it over.

A Okay.

Q Okay. On the second page of this printout, there's a quote from Mr. Trump. About halfway down the page it says: At a news conference after the summit, President Trump was asked if he believed his own intelligence agencies or the Russian President when it came to the allegations of meddling in the elections.

The quote is: "President Putin says it's not Russia. I don't see any reason why it would be," he replied, correct?

A Correct.

Q And then further on in the article there's criticism. It quotes U.S. House Speaker Paul Ryan. It quotes John McCain, Senator Lindsey Graham, Senator Chuck Schumer, DNI Dan Coats as well, correct, and others, I believe, down there further?

A Yes.

Q So it's fair that -- to say that those statements came under pretty broad bipartisan criticism, correct?

A Correct.

Q Mr. Brennan, also, in the earlier hour, the comment was made that Congress has a role to determine if public statements are true. Do you recall that being said?

A I do recall that being said.

Q Do you have an opinion on that statement?

A Yeah, I believe that I don't know anything in the Constitution that gives the Congress such a responsibility.

Q So you believe it's outside the scope of Congress' duty to --

A Yes. And, clearly, Congress has taken up that crusade over the years, although only selectively on the part of some partisans.

Q Also in the first hour, we discussed fairly extensively the timing of the October 19th, 2020, letter in relation to the Presidential debate. Do you recall that?

A Yes.

Q At the time that the letter was released, to your knowledge, was Mr. Morell a private citizen?

A He was.

Q Were you a private citizen?

A Yes, I was.

Q To your knowledge, were all of the other signatories also private citizens?

A To my knowledge, they were.

Q Would you agree that as a private citizen, you have a right to engage in the political process?

A An absolute right that is anchored in the First Amendment.

Q And do you agree that the First Amendment protected then and continues to protect your right to make statements like those contained in the letter?

A That's my firm belief and hope that it always will protect that right.

Q And do you believe that the other signatories also had a First Amendment right to make the statements that they made in that letter?

A Yes.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 5.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to introduce as exhibit 5 a February 7th, 2023, email thread between you and Michael Hayden.

Do you recall sending or participating in this email thread?

A Yes, I do.

Q In your initial response to Mr. Hayden, which is at the top of the second page, you said: I find Mr. Jordan's request for a transcribed interview and documentation related to my decision to sign a public statement, as a private citizen -- and that's boldfaced, italicized, and underlined -- a gross infringement on my First Amendment right to freedom of speech.

Do you recall writing that?

A Yes, I do.

Q Could you explain what you meant by that?

A I just long believe that's one of the reasons why I served the government for nearly three and a half decades was to protect those freedoms and liberties of American citizens. And after my government tenure, I felt that as a private citizen, I had every right to express my views and to sign on to that letter.

Q You also expressed concern about creating a precedent that he, meaning Mr. Jordan, and others could seek to leverage when making frivolous requests of other former intelligence officials in the future. Could you explain what you meant by that?

A I felt that this was a clear effort to try to intimidate former professionals, either from the intelligence community or law enforcement or somewhere else, from putting forth any type of public commentary or statements that were contrary to the political interest of those individuals who were organizing this inquiry.

Q Do you think the fact that you're sitting here today, that you're being investigated for having participated in the political process by signing this letter as a private citizen could chill your willingness to sign similar letters in the future?

A Yes. And I finished up this email to Mike Hayden by saying: This issue involves a very important principle that potentially affects all former intelligence officials, and, accordingly, I want to proceed thoughtfully.

Because it's not just the former officials who signed this letter; it's all those other former officials, as well as future former officials, whether or not they're going to be intimidated by any efforts on the part of Members of Congress of any political background or stripe to try to get them to not express their personal views and their First Amendment rights.

Q I want to move on. In the earlier -- in the first hour, there was some discussion of disinformation operations, and you also consistently used the term information operations or influence campaign. Could you explain your understanding of the difference between those two terms?

A Well, disinformation is considered to be the intentional dissemination of knowingly false information; disinformation. So you're trying to convince people of things that are -- that you know not to be true.

Misinformation, which is different than disinformation, is the dissemination of information that one might believe is accurate but, in fact, it is inaccurate.

Information operations on the part of intelligence services, such as the Russians, covers the broad gamut of the types of activities that they could be engaged in. Information operations might involve the propagation of disinformation. It might involve the propagation of information that could be embarrassing to a party that they're trying to discredit. It could involve the intentional efforts to disseminate some information more broadly and raise its profile.

The Russians are expert and adept at doing all of those things. And so sometimes it is -- when they hack into computer systems' networks and they steal emails and they push it out, like we've seen before, they can do that, and it might be, in fact, accurate; it might be inaccurate. They could redact it. They could modify it. They could change it.

So the Russians have engaged over the years, and my personal knowledge of that based on my intelligence background, that they have engaged in all aspects of information operations from amplifying true information, from disseminating information that they want to get out, to pushing out disinformation, fabricating information, in fact, that they push out, again, to advance their interest.

Q And with respect to the amplification of true information, is that actually what we saw happen in 2016?

A Yes. There was -- when we say true information, they might want to amplify opinion pieces from some individuals who are casting aspersions on one candidate and lauding the credentials and capabilities of another. So it's not as though the content itself is accurate. It's though they're taking information that might have been developed or written on its own, or they might have asked for a piece to be written that was very one-sided and misrepresenting the facts. And what the Russians would do then is actually help the dissemination of propagation of that information.

Q And what's the Russians goal in disseminating or helping the propagation of that information?

A Well, in the U.S. Presidential election in 2016, it certainly was to discredit Hillary Clinton. The Russians believed, in fact, that Hillary Clinton was going to win the election, but then they realized that Donald Trump was going to have a better chance of winning if they helped with their information operations.

And so they were pushing out information that was seemingly to discredit Hillary Clinton and to advocate for Donald Trump. They did that in 2016, and, clearly, they were doing it again, according to Bill Evanina and other counterintelligence professionals, in the 2020 election as well.

Q In the earlier hour, you were asked about your responsibility to remain, I guess, nonpartisan as a former CIA director. Do you believe that in your role as the former director of the CIA, you also have a responsibility to warn the public of potential Russian influence operations?

A I participated in discussions in 2016 about how there could be a public statement coming out from the executive branch that highlighted the Russian activities to interfere in the election. And so the CIA, as CIA director, I participated in those discussions. There was a statement that came out in October of 2016, that was signed by Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson, as well as Director of National Intelligence Jim Clapper, that was a reflection of that concern. We pushed that out.

I also was the first U.S. official to brace the Russians when I confronted the head of the Russian FSB, the Federal Security Bureau, Alexander Bortnikov in early August of 2016, telling him that we knew what they were up to and they'd better cut it out because all Americans would be outraged by any type of Russian interference in the election.

Clearly, it was not the case because not all Americans were outraged by it. Those that were supportive of, I think, these Russian aims were willing to let it go by.

Q And I think you just referenced the October 2016 warning. I want to introduce that into the record as exhibit 6.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 6.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And let me know when you're ready to continue.

A Okay.

Q Is this the warning that you just referenced?

A Yes, it is.

Q Do you believe that this provided a detailed warning to American people about Russian interference in the 2016 election?

A It certainly raised the alarm about it. And this language was very carefully crafted so that it would be as accurate as possible about Russian efforts to interfere. It did -- it stopped short, though, of saying what the Russian basic intentions were.

Q And do you think it was covered by the media enough to disrupt the Russian operations prior to the 2016 election?

A As I recall, this was released on the same day as the, was it Entertainment Tonight release of the videotape of Donald Trump acknowledging that he groped women. So it was, unfortunately, almost overtaken by that.

Q So is it fair to say that this had a warning about Russian operations, but it didn't actually -- was not sufficient enough to stop those operations from impacting the election?

A I don't know to the extent to which they did impact the election, but I know that the information operations were quite intense and determined, and they were directed by Vladimir Putin and, again, designed to help Trump and hurt Clinton. And this statement didn't say they were designed to help Trump and hurt Clinton.

I think there was a real concern on the part of the Obama administration that President Obama, as being the sort of the titular head of the Democratic Party, not be seen as weighing in in any way in a Presidential election in favor of his preferred candidate.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 7.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I want to turn to the 2017 Intelligence Community Assessment that came out in January after the election. I'll introduce this as Exhibit No. 7.

Are you familiar with this assessment?

A I'm quite familiar with it, yes.

Q Would you agree that this assessment has a clearer description of the Russian interference efforts than the October 7th warning did?

A It's a very comprehensive, thoughtful description and analysis of what the Russians were doing in that 2016 Presidential election, yes.

Q And it's certainly much more detailed than the October statement, correct?

A By a great extent, yes.

Q Do you think that that -- if this type of detailed information had been available prior to the 2016 election, that might have had an impact on the election?

A I think it certainly would have gained quite a bit more attention prior to the election. I'm sure the media and the press would have seized upon it and pushed it out, and so I believe the American people would have been much more aware of the full extent of those activities.

Q And why is it important for the American people to be aware of the extent of activities?

A Because I would like to think that Americans do not want any type of foreign entity government party to try to manipulate our system here in order to have a preferred candidate of a foreign power, particularly of an adversary, to be able to be elected President of the United States.

Q And is it fair to say that if the intelligence community doesn't inform them of those efforts, Americans can't have -- can't be aware of what's happening, right?

A I think there needs to be a very professional, legitimate, accurate description of this so that the average American is not confused by the different portrayals of it in the press that run the gamut from the far right to the far left. There needs to be objective, independent, apolitical, nonpartisan representation of the facts. And that's where the CIA, the FBI, the NSA, and the Office of Director of National Intelligence collaborated on this effort.

Q I want to turn to the letter itself and the text of the letter as well. You were asked fairly extensively in the prior hour about the last paragraph on the first page, the --

A Yes.

Q -- such an operation would be consistent with Russian objectives. And I believe you referred to the Bill Evanina statement, and I want to introduce that for the record.

A Yes.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 8.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q That's Exhibit No. 8, and I'm going to ask you to look through it. And we've highlighted a paragraph on the second page in particular.

Again, this came out on August 7th, 2020, and I'll read the highlighted paragraph into the record. It says: We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it sees as an anti-Russia establishment. This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him when he was Vice President for his role in the Obama administration's policies on Ukraine and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia. For example, pro-Russia Ukrainian parliamentarian Andrii Derkach is spreading claims about corruption, including through publicizing leaked phone calls, to undermine former Vice President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party. Some Kremlin-linked actors are also seeking to boost President Trump's candidacy on social media and Russian television.

Is that the paragraph you were referring to when you said that the Evanina assessment informed your decision to sign the letter?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain why that paragraph impacted your decision to sign the letter?

A Well, when Michael asked me to sign this in October, I was just recently aware of the New York Post reports, but I had been following what the intelligence community, what the government was saying about Russian interference in the election because I had a personal interest to see whether or not the Russians were going to repeat what they did 4 years prior. And so, therefore, I was well aware of Evanina's comments and the concerns that he expressed on behalf of the counterintelligence executive security side.

Q And I think the comment was made in the earlier hour that there is no evidence to support that this was true. Do you recall that being said?

A I recall it and said that that's when I think I pointed out Mr. Evanina's statement.

Q Right. And I also want to introduce, for the record, the January 2021 assessment that supports this as well.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 9.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Goldman. Excuse me, [redacted] can I just follow up real quick?

Mr. Evanina held what position?

Mr. Brennan. He was the intelligence community's senior counterintelligence executive, and I think his title was director of the Counterintelligence and Security Center, which reports to the Director of National Intelligence.

Mr. Goldman. And under which administration was he working when he released this statement?

Mr. Brennan. This was during the Trump administration.

Mr. Goldman. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q So turning to what's been marked as Exhibit 9, which is the 2021 -- sorry. It's dated March 10, 2021. This is the unclassified version. I believe the classified version was released in January of that year.

On the Roman numeral II, it's the fourth page of the printout. Again, getting to the accuracy of this statement, the paragraph in the October 19, 2020, letter regarding the goal of the Russian operation to discredit President Biden and promote President Trump --

Mr. Litt. Just to be clear, you're talking about Key Judgment 2 here?

[redacted] Key Judgment 2, correct.

Key Judgment 2 says pretty clearly that: We assess that Russian President Putin authorized, and a range of Russian government organizations conducted, influence operations aimed at denigrating President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party, supporting former President Trump, undermining public confidence in the electoral process, and exacerbating sociopolitical divisions in the U.S.

Correct?

A Yes.

Q So, in fact, this came out in March of '21. This supports Mr. Evanina's statement, correct?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Are you aware of any intelligence community assessments or others that support Mr. Ratcliffe's assessment?

A About the laptop?

Q About the laptop, the assessment we were discussing earlier.

A I am unaware of any.

Q Okay. But the U.S. intelligence community has concluded that President Putin did order operations to interfere with the election to undermine former President Biden, now President Biden, and, thereby, help the candidacy of President Trump, correct?

A Yes. This is a formal U.S. Intelligence Community Assessment.

Q And so this paragraph in the letter was fully accurate, right?

A Yes, I believe so. It was certainly consistent with our concern.

Q The October 19th letter says: There are a number of factors that make us suspicious of Russian involvement.

It says suspicious of Russian involvement, right?

A Uh-huh.

Q And further down, it says: We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails are true.

Correct?

A Correct.

Q And then, actually, on the very last page, it says: We don't know whether these press reports are accurate.

Right?

A Right.

Q So you were asked earlier about, you know, whether this letter was true and accurate or not, but you caveated it, and you said it actually -- you know, this is based on your assessment as an intelligence professional, but you don't have any nonpublic knowledge, right?

A I made that explicitly clear.

Q Okay.

A It's not just an inference in it. We said we didn't have evidence.

Q Okay. I want to go through a couple more paragraphs in this letter and assess their accuracy, in hindsight. It says at the top of the second page: Such an operation would be consistent with some of the key methods Russia has used in its now multiyear operation to interfere in our democracy.

And then it references hacking and dumping operations.

To your knowledge, is that an accurate statement?

A That is an accurate statement, yes.

Q And can you explain what that was in reference to?

A Over the course of a number of years, the Russians have attempted to interfere in our various elections, not just Presidential elections but others, and as it points out, it reflects a broad array of activities; hacking into systems' networks, databases, and then pushing out emails. So that's the part of the dumping of accurate information or the distribution of inaccurate or misinformation.

So, again, the Russians are quite adept at that type of activity, and I think, again, that was borne out by the Mueller investigation, as well as the assessments that were done by the intelligence community and the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Q Thank you.

And the Senate Intelligence report that you referenced, that was a bipartisan report, correct?

A It was unanimous bipartisan, yes.

Q Okay. And as you said, it did find that the Russians had engaged in a hacking and dumping operation in 2016, correct?

A Yes.

Mr. Goldman. Could I just add one thing?

BY MR. GOLDMAN:

Q Did you read the indictments by the -- the two indictments of -- by Special Counsel Mueller related to both the hacking and dumping operation?

A At the time, I did.

Q And the social media operation?

A Yes.

Q Obviously, indictments are merely allegations, but do you recall that those were several dozen pages each?

A I do recall that they were lengthy.

Q And are you aware that the special counsel's office would have, through law enforcement, unique abilities to investigate cyber operations that are not necessarily available to either Congress or any private citizens?

A Yes.

Q And did you find those indictments to be especially detailed and persuasive?

A I learned a lot more about Russian influence operations as a result of the Mueller report than I even knew during my time at the CIA because of, as you point out, the investigative authorities and procedures that were undertaken that exposed the range and extent and scope of those activities and those actions that warranted law enforcement and judicial investigation.

Q Is there any doubt in your mind that Russia attempted to interfere and influence the 2016 election?

A No doubt whatsoever.

Mr. Goldman. Thanks, Counsel.

[redacted] We are actually going to introduce, just so the record is complete, the indictment that Mr. Goldman was just referring to. This is case number 1:18-cr-32-DLF,

District of Columbia District Court. It's a 2018 case. We're introducing the indictment, which is Document No. 1 from that docket. And that will be Exhibit No. 10.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 10.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I actually don't know that we have questions about this now, but I wanted to introduce it to complete the record in light of Mr. Goldman's questioning.

A As long as I don't have to read it now.

Q We'll let you take it home if you'd like.

Going on, again, looking at the accuracy of the letter as drafted, the second paragraph on the second page says: Such an operation is also consistent with several data points. The Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts, targeted Burisma late last year for cyber collection and gained access to its emails.

Are you familiar with what Burisma is or was?

A Yes, I am.

Q Can you explain that for the record?

A Well, it's a Ukrainian entity that involved in energy.

Q And are you familiar with allegations that Burisma was hacked?

A Yes, I am aware, that it was an effort on the part of the Russians to hack into it to be able to expose information that they felt would be discrediting of their opponents.

Q And why was that a relevant data point to be referenced in this letter?

A At least according to the press reports at the time, there was an effort to discredit candidate Joe Biden by discrediting Hunter Biden and discrediting his role and involvement in Burisma, as well as the role of Joe Biden in the efforts to try to clean up corruption inside of Ukraine and the ultimate dismissal of the prosecutor over there who was engaged in that corruption.

So, again, I think what the Russians were trying to do was to expose things that were going to support its allegations of wrongdoing.

Q So is it fair to say that by hacking Burisma, the Russians would have been trying to gather information that they could use against now President Biden?

A Yes. It's one of their tried and true methods, which is to go in and see what they can hack into, see what they can find. As I said, they will release information that they believe is discrediting that information, even if it's an inaccurate representation of what email they found. Sometimes they will redact; sometimes they will modify. They will selectively choose things, but they believe by going into people's systems, they can find things that are going to further their ends.

Q The next sentence in this paragraph continues: And Ukrainian politician and businessman Andrii Derkach, identified and sanctioned by the U.S. Treasury Department for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election, passed purported materials on Burisma and Hunter Biden to Giuliani.

I want to introduce -- I'm sorry. Are you familiar with who Andrii Derkach is?

A Yes.

Q What's your understanding of who Mr. Derkach is?

A As it says here, a 10-year Russian agent who was doing things on behalf of the Russians and had a variety of contacts in the West that he was able to exploit for Russian purposes.

Q Are you aware of the fact that Mr. Derkach was sanctioned by the U.S. Government?

A Yes.

Q And are you aware of when he was sanctioned?

A I don't recall off the top of my head.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 11.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q We'll introduce as exhibit 11 the Treasury -- the September 10, 2020, release from the U.S. Department of the Treasury entitled, Treasury Sanctions Russia-Linked Election Interference Actors.

We've highlighted a statement in the middle of this paragraph. It says: Treasury designated Andrii Derkach, pursuant to Executive Order, E.O., 13848, for his efforts to influence the 2020 U.S. Presidential election. Derkach, a member of the Ukrainian Parliament, has been an active Russian agent for over a decade, maintaining close connections with the Russian Intelligence Service. Derkach has directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. Presidential election.

Right?

A Uh-huh.

Q So Mr. Derkach was actually sanctioned in September 2020, over a month before the laptop was in the news, correct?

A Correct.

Q And the sanction in the document actually specifically said that he was sanctioned for trying to influence the 2020 U.S. Presidential election, right?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain -- and the sentence in the October 19th letter says that Mr. Derkach passed purported materials on Burisma and Hunter Biden to Giuliani. Is it your understanding here that Giuliani is reference to Rudy Giuliani?

A Yes.

Q And who was Mr. Giuliani?

A Former mayor of New York who was an advisor, legal counsel, consigliere to Donald Trump.

Q Why would it have been concerning that Mr. Derkach who had been sanctioned for interfering in the 2020 election had passed information on to Mr. Giuliani?

A Well, obviously, since there was already a determination made that Mr. Derkach was a pawn of the Russians and he was working on their behalf within the Ukrainian Parliament system, that his relationship and passing information to Rudy Giuliani raised concerns. And as we said later in the letter, that there was concern that Rudy Giuliani himself was being targeted by Russia for the various influence operations. And so, therefore, again, this happened a month before this letter, so it stands to reason that the involvement of Mr. Derkach raised some serious, serious red flags about this material.

Q And in your opinion, the American public needed to know about this relationship between Mr. Derkach, who's a sanctioned actor, and Mr. Giuliani?

A That's what this statement tried to do, and that's one of the reasons why I signed onto this letter.

Q Okay. By making that information public, was it your hope that you could, you know, blunt any influence of the Russian efforts to pass information along?

A Yes, because by exposing it, you hope that you're going to help to thwart not only its continued propagation but also any belief in the accuracy of the information.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 12.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I want to turn to a Daily Beast article published October 17th, 2020, which is two days before your October 19th letter. It's a -- it relates a 1-hour long interview with Rudy Giuliani. It's entitled, Rudy: Only '50/50' Chance I Worked With a 'Russian Spy' to Dig Dirt on Bidens and Ukraine.

This is Exhibit No. 12. And let me know when you're ready to continue.

A Okay.

Q So we've highlighted a page -- I think it's on the last -- page number -- the last page -- that says: Giuliani viewed his latest leak to the New York Post -- referring to the Biden laptop leak -- as an extension of his years-long efforts to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens.

Right?

A Yep.

Q So Mr. Giuliani, two days before your letter was made public, actually claimed credit for working with the Ukrainians, presumably Derkach, to leak this information to the Post, correct?

A Correct.

Q Would this information have supported the evidence -- your comments in the letter here about Andrii Derkach passing information along to Giuliani?

A It certainly would have, and did.

Q And would it have been concerning to you if Giuliani viewed the leak of the laptop as part of his ongoing work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens?

A It was, given that there was, even by his own acknowledgment, the 50/50 chance that it was a Russian spy that he was receiving information and material from. And so, again, it was clear that Mr. Giuliani was determined to do whatever he could to try to dig up dirt on the Bidens as a way to help Mr. Trump, and he didn't care who he worked with, as he said.

Q And as an intelligence professional, is it concerning to you that a close advisor to President Trump was working with a sanctioned individual to dig up dirt in this way?

A Yes. And it has been my experience in the past, whenever the U.S. Government becomes aware of this and they think that a U.S. citizen is being unwittingly exploited or manipulated, that they would provide those citizens with a warning briefing. But it's clear that Mr. Giuliani was determined to, again, work with whomever in Ukraine, as well as, by extension, Russia, to find whatever material he could.

Q And are you aware that the White House actually was warned that Giuliani was a target of a Russian intelligence operation?

A It's my understanding that they were.

Q And do you know if the White House took any action in response to that warning?

A I don't know. I don't know.

Q Would it be concerning to you if the White House knew that and didn't take any action?

A I would like to think that responsible officials in the White House would fulfill their obligations to take some action and to make sure that individuals are warned about that so that they would not just, again, unwittingly be used as a pawn.

Q Are you familiar with an individual named Andriy Telizhenko?

A It's ringing a vague bell.

Q But you don't have -- sitting here today, you don't have any recollection of who he was?

A If you hum a few bars, I might know the song, but other than that, I just don't know.

BY MR. GOLDMAN:

Q Director Brennan, when you wrote -- when you signed onto this letter, you were aware that Rudy Giuliani had been publicly associating himself with Andrii Derkach for the prior year?

A That is my recollection, yes, that I was aware of it since it was no secret at the time.

Q Were you also aware that Andrii Derkach sent information to Republican members of the House Intelligence Committee?

A I don't know if I was aware of that or not.

Q And were you aware that he sent information to Senators Graham, Grassley, and Johnson as well?

A I don't recall being aware of that or when I was.

Q Do you have any knowledge about a similar warning that intelligence officials gave to Rudy Giuliani that was also provided to Senator Johnson?

A I remember reports of this in the press because I wasn't privy to any government information at the time.

Q Based on your understanding of Russian information operations, is it possible or does Russia and their intelligence services have the capability of altering a hard drive of a computer?

A Yes. I know that the Russians are able to navigate into networks and go into infrastructure and do some modifications.

Q So is it possible that they are capable of altering documents that are on a hard drive or creating a different hard drive with altered documents?

A Without getting into classified areas, it is my understanding that, yes, they do have that capability.

Q And they can also add documents to a hard drive?

A Yes, they can do that.

Q So it's quite possible for a hard drive to contain accurate and authentic materials as well as altered or additional materials?

A Yes. It all depends on the circumstances of the providence and the possession of the laptop as well as the laptop's access to WiFi systems and other things. And if it's connected, that connectivity gives Russian intelligence services tremendous capability to do things on that laptop.

Q And so, for example, you could take a hard drive of a laptop, download it, alter the materials, and put it either back on that hard drive or a different hard drive. Is that your understanding of one capability that Russian intelligence has?

A I'm not a technical expert, but, again, it is my appreciation, having worked on some of these issues with the technical experts who understand, in depth, the Russian capabilities, that they can get into computer systems and hard drives and do things to them that will alter, modify, delete the contents on those hard drives.

Q And so when you signed this letter -- let me just summarize what you understand -- understood.

You understood that Andrii Derkach was a longtime Russian agent working for Russian intelligence services, that he had been collaborating with Rudy Giuliani, that Rudy Giuliani was the sole source of the materials that were provided to the New York Post, and -- is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Were you aware at that time that Rudy Giuliani did not want to provide the hard drive to any other media outlets than the New York Post?

A I don't know if I was aware of it at that time. I just know that it was provided to the Washington Post -- or to the New York Post.

Q And did you subsequently learn that Giuliani said on the record to The New York Times that he did not want anyone to do an analysis of the hard drive prior to its publication in the New York Post?

A I am aware of those reports.

Q So when you say that these emails have all the hallmarks of a Russian information operation, the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation, those were all factors that influenced your -- that -- your conclusion of that. Is that correct?

A Yes. I was very concerned about what might have happened when that laptop was out of the possession of Hunter Biden and who might have had access to it and what they might have done.

Q And just so the record is clear, you're talking about once Hunter Biden -- once the laptop was out of his control. But you are aware that there can be multiple copies of the contents of that laptop that are made. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q And is it your understanding, then, what Mr. Giuliani possessed was a hard drive copy of the laptop, that he didn't actually possess the laptop itself, which was in the possession of the FBI?

A Again, I don't know what I was aware of at the time when I signed the letter and when the FBI took possession of the actual laptop itself.

Q Are you aware that the source of the laptop has stated that he believes that the hard drive that he provided to Mr. Giuliani may have been altered?

A Yes, I'm aware of that.

Q Are you aware of The Washington Post analysis that was done that indicates that the hard drive has been altered?

A Yes, I'm aware of that.

Q Okay. You had mentioned your familiarity with the hacking of Burisma. That was the subject of an impeachment investigation, or Burisma was, and I'm curious whether you understood, either from the impeachment investigation or anything that happened during your tenure or after, that the effort to -- the effort by President Trump to convince Ukrainian President Zelensky to investigate Burisma was consistent with Russian propaganda and/or intelligence efforts.

A I think they were reinforcing of one another in terms of looking for information that the Trump campaign could use in his reelection, yes, absolutely.

Q And you do recall that President Trump withheld military assistance from Ukraine in an effort to extort President Zelensky and force him to open these investigations. Is that right?

A Yes, I am.

Q Okay. Were you aware of how important that military assistance was to Ukraine in their war at the time against Russia?

A Absolutely. I've worked very closely with the Ukrainians during my tenure, and I knew that it was vital for the Ukrainians to be able to maintain its defenses against Russia.

Q And we have now seen that play out in spades. Is that right?

A Yes.

Mr. Goldman. Okay. I have no more questions. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q I just want to go back to the questions about Giuliani quickly. We talked through the evidence prior to the election suggesting that Giuliani and Derkach were working to interfere in the election. I just want to turn back to the January -- the 2021 Intelligence Community Assessment real quick to close that out.

We talked through the first sentence or the first couple sentences of Key Judgment 1. But the last --

Mr. Litt. Can you hang on for one second?

[redacted] Sorry. I'm sorry. That's Exhibit No. 9.

BY [redacted]

Q The last sentence of that Key Judgment 2 reads: A key element of Moscow's strategy this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives, including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden, to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration.

We talked through the sanctions against Mr. Derkach. Do you think it's fair to classify Mr. Derkach as a Russian intelligence proxy pushing influence narratives?

[12:20 p.m.]

Mr. Brennan. Yes. "Proxy" is one term, I guess.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you have another that you --

A A "fully recruited asset" is another.

Q And, to your knowledge, was Rudy Giuliani an individual close to former President Trump and his administration?

A That is my understanding.

Q So this last sentence of the assessment actually would fit that fact pattern, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

We only have a couple minutes left.

Director Brennan, did you send this letter or decide to join this letter at the direction of anyone in the intelligence community, meaning in the intelligence community in 2020?

A Absolutely not.

Q Did you have any conversations with anybody then in the intelligence community?

A No.

Q Did you access any classified information?

A No. I was not in good odor with the Trump administration at the time, and they had prohibited me from accessing classified information. So I really had no interaction with the intelligence community.

Q So, to the extent that there have been allegations that you or, I guess, others who signed the letter somehow colluded with the intelligence community to send this letter, that's not true?

A I certainly had no engagement with them at all.

Q Okay.

And the text of the letter itself doesn't actually endorse any Presidential candidate, correct?

A That's correct.

Q In fact, the closing line says that it's "high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy," right?

A Yes.

Q And you said earlier that your goal in joining the letter was to make these Russian interference efforts known, correct?

A Expose them, yes.

Q So that line actually directly matches up with your explanation of your reasons for signing the letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

I think I have time for about a handful of more questions before our time is up.

You were asked in the earlier hour about social media companies' decision to limit the spread of the New York Post article. Do you recall that?

A Yes.

Q And I think you referenced that happening before you signed the letter?

A That's my recollection.

Q I want to talk through that timeline just in a little bit more detail.

Again, the letter that you joined was published on October 19, 2020, correct?

A Okay.

Q Are you familiar with the date that Twitter -- with the date that Twitter limited the sharing of links to the New York Post story about the laptop?

A It's my understanding that it happened prior to, but I don't know the exact date.

Q Okay.

I'm going to introduce as -- we're out of exhibit stickers -- as exhibit 13 a New York Times story published on October 16, 2020, entitled "In Reversal, Twitter Is No Longer Blocking New York Post Article."

[Brennan Exhibit No. 13.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you seen this before?

A I'm a subscriber and a reader of The New York Times, so I probably saw it at the time.

Q Okay.

So, according to this article, by October 16th, following pressure from Republicans, Twitter permitted its users to freely share the New York Post story, correct?

A Okay. Yeah, uh-huh.

Q And so that was actually 3 full days before you did anything with the letter, correct?

A Right. Uh-huh.

Q So, to the extent that there was a suggestion made earlier that you joining this letter could've added some gravitas that would've led a social media company to take some steps in regard to it, that actually had happened, come and gone, well before you signed the letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Mr. Goldman. Director Brennan, I just want to go back to this Daily Beast article, the "50/50"-Rudy article.

Mr. Litt. Can you give him a chance to get it?

Mr. Goldman. Yeah.

So, in the first highlighted piece, it says: Asked whether he was concerned if the materials he obtained might in some way be linked to the hacking of Burisma that was an act attributed to Russian intelligence, Rudy Giuliani said, "Wouldn't matter. What's the difference?"

What's your reaction to seeing that?

Mr. Brennan. I'm not surprised that that was Rudy Giuliani's view, because it was my impression that he was willing to resort to any source or material that would, again, advance his and Donald Trump's interests. I find it outrageous and disgraceful but, again, not surprising.

Mr. Goldman. All right.

And, above, it says that the -- in the first long paragraph -- I will just read it. It says -- well, it -- sorry. At the top, it says: "'The president knows all about this," Giuliani said, adding that he had briefed Trump on the 'general' parameters of the files.

"But the Hunter Biden material, Giuliani also revealed, wasn't just pre-screened with Trump. He also said that top Republicans on Capitol Hill had been looped into the matter. The president's lawyer said the computer store repairman who claims to have received Hunter Biden's laptop in 2019 alerted several lawmakers on Capitol Hill, including Sen. Ron Johnson and others. 'Jim Jordan. People like that,' Giuliani said, adding that he 'believed' Rep. Devin Nunes had also received the materials."

What's your reaction to the fact that materials that Giuliani had obtained and had been working with a Russian agent also made their way to Members of Congress and the Senate?

Mr. Brennan. It shows the political effort to, again, do whatever they could to get their candidate elected. And, again, I find it unsurprising that things like this are shared among like-minded individuals, including in Congress.

Mr. Goldman. Director Brennan, are you aware of an ongoing investigation by the House majority that is attacking law enforcement and the intelligence community for what they claim to be a violation of the First Amendment by, quote/unquote, "censoring" social media companies?

Mr. Brennan. I seem to be vaguely aware of something along those lines, but I'm not --

Mr. Goldman. Right.

Mr. Brennan. -- tracking it.

Mr. Goldman. Well, just to give you a background -- and I don't think any of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will dispute it -- there is an ongoing investigation among several committees that asserts that Americans' First Amendment rights are being violated because law enforcement agencies and the intelligence community are trying to prevent the further interference in our elections by foreign actors through social media, just as we have talked about they did in 2016.

And I wonder if, hearing that, you find it ironic that you are here, being hauled before Congress, to testify about a letter that you wrote as a private citizen under your First Amendment rights?

Mr. Brennan. Well, as my counsel said at the opening, he and I have questions about the legitimate legislative interest in terms of this inquiry. I do believe that there are more worthwhile things for Congress to be doing right now and addressing. And calling me and other former intelligence professionals before this inquiry, I think, does a disservice to the Congress, does a disservice to the intelligence community, and is unnecessary while other matters can and need to be addressed.

Mr. Goldman. Does it do a disservice to the First Amendment?

Mr. Brennan. I believe it does. And as we referenced before, Chairman Jordan made a very impassioned and public defense of the importance of the First Amendment and people being able to express their views. And so that I find a bit ironic.

And so, again, I am doing this voluntarily because I respect the institution of Congress. I think it's critically, critically important for the functioning of our government. But I do take issue with the effort to, again, have this inquiry directed against private citizens who signed on to a letter in their private capacity.

Mr. Goldman. Thank you.

[redacted] And we can go off the record. It's 12:29.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Do you want to go first?

[redacted] Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Let's go back to the Daily Beast article, No. 12, exhibit No. 12.

There was a question raised last round that referred to Mr. Jordan.

A Uh-huh.

Q Top of page 3: "But the Hunter Biden material, Giuliani also revealed, wasn't just pre-screened with President Trump. He also said that top Republicans on Capitol Hill had been looped into the matter. The president's lawyer said the computer store repairman who claims to have received Hunter Biden's laptop in 2019 alerted several lawmakers on Capitol Hill, including Sen. Johnson and others. 'Jim Jordan. People like that.'"

Do you have any awareness of whether that's true?

A No, I do not.

Q Okay. And I'll just represent for the record that, you know, the Jordan office didn't get the laptop. But the fact that the Daily Beast would report this isn't surprising.

BY [redacted]

Q Director Brennan, I want to talk to you about the CIA's Prepublication Classification Review Board.

Are you familiar with the CIA's, we'll call it PCRB, if you're okay with that?

A Yes, I am.

Q And what does the CIA's PCRB do?

A It reviews material to be published for classification review to ensure that no classified information is released into public domain if it has not already been declassified.

Q So, if you release anything publicly, do you personally have to submit items to the PCRB?

A Yes, I have numerous times.

Q How many items do you think you've submitted to the PCRB?

A After my first retirement, I submitted maybe, in 2005, 2008, maybe a half-dozen pieces. Since then, I submitted my manuscript for my memoir as well as the additional chapter for my paperback. And I've had maybe a half-dozen or so op-eds that I have submitted too.

Q And what is the process like for, like, an op-ed review by the PCRB?

A You submit it to the PCRB, and you will frequently say that, you know, I'm planning to submit to this to a publication -- maybe it's a journal or something -- and, you know, I'd like to get it back by next week. Or, if something is particularly timely and topical and you're trying to get it released quickly, you can say, I really would appreciate if it can be reviewed as quickly as possible.

Q And what has been your experience with, for instance, an op-ed -- what's the normal timeframe for that approval?

A I've had reviews done within hours. A lot depends on the contents of it and if there's any reference to classified information in it. But I have submitted op-eds in the morning and gotten it back by the end of the day.

Q Uh-huh. And in all of your experiences with the PCRB, how do you normally communicate and correspond with the PCRB?

A Well, for short pieces, like an op-ed or something, you will submit it via email, and they'll get back to you, saying, "We are in receipt of it, and we'll get back to you as soon as possible."

Q Uh-huh.

A And then you'll hear back from them either with full approval or some type of conditional approval if something is changed or something is taken out.

For a longer piece, like for my memoir, I had several sit-down sessions with the PCRB staff as we reviewed material, and they were raising questions about why did I say this was unclassified, and I was able to bring open-source information about it. And so sometimes there's a negotiation, a debate back and forth.

But, again, it depends on the contents, it depends on the length, in terms of how quickly they turn things around.

Chairman Jordan. How long did it take for your book, for your manuscript, when you first submitted it and then when you got the okay?

Mr. Brennan. Oh, I'd have to get back to you on that, but it was probably --

Chairman Jordan. Months?

Mr. Brennan. It was over a month.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Brennan. Yeah. So I submitted --

Chairman Jordan. How many interim -- so, over a month, how many of those interim discussions during that timeframe did you have with --

Mr. Brennan. I think I had maybe two sit-down sessions and a series of telephone conversations and email exchanges. But, again, my memoir is, you know, 350 pages or so.

Chairman Jordan. Yeah.

Mr. Brennan. It was lengthy.

Chairman Jordan. But -- so a number -- multiple interactions with them as they're approving it or gonna give it the thumbs-up?

Mr. Brennan. Right. But most of my op-eds -- I don't think any of my op-eds that I wrote since my last retirement I had any type of objection to.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Brennan. It was --

Chairman Jordan. What's customary for an op-ed? You said --

Mr. Brennan. It can be the same day. It can be the following day. Or -- Chairman Jordan. What's typical?

Mr. Brennan. Well, again, sometimes you ask for it quickly. Sometimes --

Chairman Jordan. Have you done that? Have you asked for it -- said, this needs to happen quickly?

Mr. Brennan. Yeah, you can do that.

Chairman Jordan. Have you? I'm asking, have you in some of the op-eds you put together?

Mr. Brennan. I did one, I know, on Saudi Arabia, Mohammed Salman and his -- I think it was the Khashoggi killing or something, that I wanted it to be turned around pretty quickly. So I think that might've been the only one.

Chairman Jordan. And what was the motivation for asking for a quick turnaround?

Mr. Brennan. Because there was interest on the part of the press. I think it was either The Washington Post or The New York Times that, in fact, they asked whether I'd be interested in writing an op-ed on it.

Chairman Jordan. And they had a deadline?

Mr. Brennan. As I recall, there was an interest in getting it done that day or the following day.

Chairman Jordan. Any others that you've requested, that you asked be approved quickly?

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall.

Chairman Jordan. So it's fair to say, one time you asked on an op-ed for it to be done quickly, and the reason you asked for it was because the media outlet that was gonna publish it wanted it done quickly.

Mr. Brennan. Was interested in having it done to go with the news reporting that was --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q And are you aware that Mr. Morell sent the public statement to the CIA's PCRB?

A I saw in one of the emails that you provided earlier that you said it was going to be submitted. I've had a conversation with Michael in the past about the PCRB and his experience, because he did a memoir as well.

Q Uh-huh.

A And Michael knowing well the CIA rules and regulations, I was confident that he was going to do it the right way.

Q And so you were confident that the public statement in some form would be sent to the PCRB for prepublication review before it was published?

A Yes.

Q And in his email to the PCRB, Mr. Morell described the statement as a "rush job." Were you aware of that?

A If it was in the email that you showed me earlier, I am now aware of it. I wasn't aware of it at the time.

Q And do you think this was an attempt to get the statement approved quickly?

A Well, I think if he was trying to get it out quickly, that's what he was suggesting there.

Q Uh-huh.

Do you know if the CIA's PCRB made any edits or said something was classified and should be removed?

A I have no idea.

Q Are you aware that CIA staff at the PCRB reportedly promoted the letter by asking former CIA officials to sign on?

A No. I have heard rumors to that effect. I was certainly unaware of it at the time.

Q So you didn't have any conversations with anyone at the CIA or any former officials who said that they were asked to sign on by the PCRB?

A I was not talking to the CIA at that time. They were not talking to me, I should say.

Q Uh-huh.

And it has been represented to us, the committees, by Mr. David Cariens -- do you know who Mr. Cariens is?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q He told the committee of his interactions with the PCRB in regards to the book that he was seeking to publish. He had sent it to the PCRB for review. And he told us that when the person in charge of reviewing the book from the PCRB called to say it was approved with no changes, he was told about the draft letter, and the person asked him if he would be willing to sign on.

Were you aware of that before --

A No.

Q -- this interview today?

A No.

Q What's your reaction to that?

A I don't know about the context of that conversation, what actually was said on one side or the other. I just have heard what you're saying now.

Q Uh-huh.

A Usually the PCRB will review something purely for classification purposes for the document or manuscript that was submitted and get back to you.

So I don't know whether or not -- this individual's name is "Carens" or --

Q David Cariens, yes.

A Cariens. Okay. If he knew the person in the PCRB, a former colleague, whatever, of his, a separate conversation, I don't know. So I don't want to speculate as to what actually might have been the context for that.

Q Do you think it's appropriate for an active CIA employee to be asking former employees to sign on to a statement that was pretty political to be used in a political debate?

A I don't believe that an active CIA officer should be soliciting support for a public statement that is being signed by former officials.

Q And I believe we discussed during the first hour kind of the process for disseminating the public statement to the media and that Mr. Shapiro was kind of spearheading that effort. Did you play any role in that effort?

A No.

Q Once the statement was released, did you do any press or media interviews regarding the public statement?

A I did not at my initiative at all. I think there were a couple of interviews when I was asked about it. I think there was a Washington Post podcast where David Ignatius asked me about it. But I did nothing as far as tweeting, I did nothing as far as promoting it or raising it in any of the many media interviews that I did.

Q Do you remember any of the context surrounding what you may have said at the podcast with Mr. Ignatius?

A I remember --

Mr. Litt. What kind of context do you mean?

BY [redacted]

Q The context of the content of the discussion on the podcast or what he may have asked you about the statement.

A I have a vague memory of it. And if you want to show me it, I will look at it and respond to it. But I'm not going to guess at what it is that either I said or that he said.

Q And so Politico ultimately ran the story regarding the public statement on October 19th and published an article and the statement. Did you read the Politico article when it came out?

A I might have.

Q Yeah. We'll enter that as exhibit No. 14, I believe.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 14.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you had sufficient time to review?

A I remember now this article. But, again, your question was whether I read it at the time. I don't know. I was busy with the publication of my memoir.

Q But up to this point you've had a chance to read it. Is that correct?

A Yes. Yes.

Q And so the title of the article -- and this was, just for the record, published on October 19, 2020, at 10:30 p.m. Eastern Time. The title of the article says, "Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say."

What was your reaction to that title?

A I don't know. My reaction now is that that's not what the letter said.

Q Uh-huh.

A It didn't say it was disinformation.

Q Because I know that you've testified here today that the letter does not say that it's Russian disinfo, did it give you any pause that this was the title of the article and this was what was being said and conveyed to the American public?

A Again, this is 2-1/2 years ago. I don't know what my reaction was at the time. I was consumed with other things that were going on. If I read this, I'm certain that I would have thought to myself, that's not what the letter said, because that's not what the letter said.

Q So is it accurate to say that you didn't reach out to Politico to correct the record and say that the letter did not say that it was Russian disinfo?

A That is accurate.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Brennan, at this time, were you working for any media outlets?

Mr. Brennan. In 2020? Yes, I believe I was a consultant with NBC and MSNBC. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And were those the only networks you appeared on pursuant to your consulting agreement with them?

Mr. Brennan. It's an exclusive consulting agreement with them, but I do have a proviso in the contract that for publications I'm able to appear on other networks as well. And that's why I think at this time I think I appeared on several others -- CNN --

Mr. Gaetz. So you were promoting your memoir?

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And so, in the promotion of your memoir, did you ever get questions about your participation in this letter?

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall getting questions about it. Again, I -- and I didn't --

Mr. Gaetz. So you were working for NBC News. This letter comes out. It's one of the biggest stories in the world. Politico is writing about it. And NBC News never asked you to come on their network and discuss it?

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall ever being invited by them to do this. And I guess it's a matter of record in terms of my public appearances there, but --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, if we asked you to produce any documents with any correspondence with anybody at NBC News discussing the contents of this, would that be something you'd be in possession, custody, or control of?

Mr. Brennan. I may or may not be, because I will delete emails after, you know, some period of time.

Mr. Gaetz. Are your emails set to an auto-delete feature?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Some are. That's why I ask.

So any emails that are deleted in your system are emails you've manually deleted; they're not emails that just atrophy over some term of days?

Mr. Brennan. Generally. I --

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your email provider?

Mr. Brennan. Gmail.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you have any other email providers other than Google?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And would you ever receive communications from NBC News via text message?

Mr. Brennan. There have been occasions for a fast appearance on a program, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you recall if you were ever texted regarding NBC News's desire to have you provide commentary on this letter?

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall ever being asked about it.

Mr. Gaetz. And who is your cell phone provider?

Mr. Brennan. My -- AT&T.

Mr. Gaetz. And you have only one cell phone?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes, I do.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

Thank you, [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q And I know we've spoken about this before, but days later, after the statement comes out, on October 22nd, is the final Presidential debate between President Trump and then-candidate Biden. And then Biden did, in fact, use the statement as a talking point during the debate.

Do you remember that?

A Yes, I do.

Q Did you watch the debate or read any reporting surrounding the debate?

A I presume I watched the debate as well as read the reporting around it.

Q And, during the debate, Vice President Biden stated, "Look, there are 50 former national intelligence folks who said that what this, he's accusing me of, is a Russian plan. They have said this has all the characteristics -- four -- five former heads of the CIA, both parties, say what he's saying is a bunch of garbage. Nobody believes it except him and his good friend Rudy Giuliani."

Do you kind of remember that that's what Biden said at the debate?

A I do remember reading about that.

Q What did you think of his statement?

A I don't know what I thought of it at the time.

Q What do you think of it now?

A I think it did not fully, accurately represent what we said in the statement.

Q And what was inaccurate about candidate Biden's statement?

A Read it again.

Q It says, "Look, there are 50 former national intelligence folks who said that what this, he's accusing me of, is a Russian plan. They have said that this has all the characteristics -- four -- five former heads of the CIA, both parties, say what he's saying is a bunch of garbage. Nobody believes it except him and his good friend Rudy Giuliani."

A When he says that it has all the characteristics, that was, I think, an accurate reflection of it. But when he said that it is a Russian plan or whatever -- garbage. That's not what we said in there.

Q Did you make any statements at the time to distance yourself from the remarks of candidate Biden?

A No.

Chairman Jordan. Do you feel like you got played?

Mr. Brennan. Chairman Jordan, I have been in Washington for 40-some-odd years. I am used to intelligence and intelligence professionals being used by both sides of the aisle for political, partisan purposes. I have been condemned by both sides of the aisle.

And so, therefore, I am not surprised at all that anything that an intelligence professional does or says is going to be used by one side or the other to advance its political interests.

Mr. Gaetz. But did candidate Biden misuse this letter in the debate?

Mr. Brennan. I'm not going to characterize his use or misuse of it. I'm just saying that what he said was not an accurate reflection of what the statement said.

Mr. Gaetz. And earlier today you testified that one of the very reasons that you signed this letter was to ensure that the information in the debate would be accurate. Do you recall that testimony?

Mr. Brennan. I recall saying I wanted to make sure that the American public was aware of Russian efforts to interfere in the election with influence operations.

Mr. Gaetz. No, I -- that was a separate basis you had. But in listing out, earlier today, your respective bases for signing this letter, one of the bases was that you wanted the debate to be an environment with the most accurate information, and you thought this letter would advance the accuracy of that discussion.

Do you recall that testimony?

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And so, since the manifestation of the letter in the debate, we all now acknowledge, was inaccurate as to the point you just referenced -- then-candidate Biden's claim that the laptop was disinformation -- why did the same motivations that drove you to sign the letter for the sake of accuracy in the debate not similarly motivate you to correct the inaccurate use of this product you had signed?

Mr. Brennan. Because I was not going to get into a proactive effort to try to clarify publicly what it was that candidate Biden and other people said about it. It was out in the public domain; people can do what they want with it. But I was not interested in actually carrying out actions that were going to lead to further discussion, debate on it.

I agreed to sign the letter. That was the extent of my involvement. And I didn't want to follow up with it with any type of, you know, corrective action that I thought was my responsibility, because I didn't think it was my responsibility.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you think it undermines your position that you care so deeply about accuracy in debates, that you then subsequently withdrew from the discussion for the reasons you just mentioned?

Mr. Brennan. No, I don't think so. I'm sure, Congressman, there have been many times that your words have been misrepresented one way or another. I'm sure that you haven't taken every opportunity to correct it, because that would be a full-time job, I'm sure.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, if anybody ever misrepresented something I said in a Presidential debate, I would probably take that opportunity. It seems like a pretty high-profile moment in our national politics.

Mr. Brennan. And if I was the sitting CIA Director, I certainly would have. I was a private citizen, one of 51, who signed on to this statement.

And, in the past, members of the Cabinet and others have corrected things that have been said by Presidents. But as, again, a private citizen, I just didn't feel that that was my responsibility.

Mr. Gaetz. Isn't the reason you didn't correct it because you wanted Joe Biden to win the election and you didn't want to say anything that was contrary to his commentary in the debate?

Mr. Brennan. Is that a question?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah.

Mr. Brennan. That's your interpretation.

Mr. Gaetz. No, it's a question. My question is, isn't the reason you chose not to --

Mr. Brennan. I made no conscious decision not to engage in it. It was something -- I was -- I had other things going on at the time, and so I was not going to pursue this.

Mr. Gaetz. You had other things going on when you agreed to sign the letter, didn't you?

Mr. Brennan. Yes. And I agreed to sign it. That was the extent of my involvement.

Mr. Gaetz. But you are now testifying that it was misused and you felt no obligation because you were retired.

Do you still hold a security clearance?

Mr. Brennan. I have held a security clearance, Top Secret/SCI, ever since August of 1980.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you think that holding that security clearance imposes an obligation on you to not have your statement mischaracterized --

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. -- for political purposes?

Mr. Brennan. No, there's no obligation that goes along with your classification, your security clearances.

Mr. Gaetz. No obligation?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Should -- do you -- strike that.

Mr. Brennan. As a private citizen? No, there's no obligation whatsoever.

And my security clearances are held by the government for the government's benefit, not for mine. I don't use my security clearances for anything.

Mr. Gaetz. You don't think that your media contracts are more valuable to the people paying you because you have a security clearance?

Mr. Brennan. No. I don't access classified information. The only time I do that is when the CIA or the government calls me in to engage in a classified discussion, just the way, when I was the CIA Director, I would call some of my predecessors to say,

"Hey, you dealt with this Russian official. How did you deal with him?" or, "Review this."

There's no benefit to me of my security clearances. It's to the benefit of the government.

Mr. Gaetz. When somebody holds a security clearance and they make a public statement about intelligence and foreign disinformation, interference in elections, do you think the imprimatur of that security clearance imposes a greater duty to the truth than someone who doesn't hold such a clearance?

Mr. Brennan. Yes. And that's why, when I signed this letter, I was a firm believer in the contents of this letter raising the prospect that what we saw related to the Hunter Biden laptop was part of a Russian information operation designed to influence the election.

Mr. Gaetz. Director, we've already plowed that ground. Now we're talking about the misuse of that letter in a Presidential debate.

I'll represent to you that your friend, Mr. Morell, testified or provided information to the committee that he knew that in the debate there would not be nuance. He knew precisely how it would be used.

Did he ever share that with you?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. If he had shared with you that he understood that this would be used in a debate for the very reason Joe Biden used it, would that have deterred you from signing it?

Mr. Brennan. He didn't, and, therefore, it's a hypothetical.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. We ask hypotheticals all the time, Director.

Mr. Brennan. Yeah, I know.

Mr. Gaetz. We're in the process of doing an investigation about --

Mr. Brennan. And I know why you're asking a leading question like that, so I would give you an answer that you want or that you could use.

Mr. Gaetz. I just want you to answer truthfully, Mr. Director.

Mr. Brennan. I am.

Mr. Gaetz. If you'll turn to exhibit 7 --

Chairman Jordan. Can I just ask one question --

Mr. Gaetz. Certainly.

Chairman Jordan. -- along the same line as Mr. Gaetz?

So, Director, you said you didn't want to take the proactive step of -- after Mr. Biden used it in a false way in the debate, you didn't want to take the proactive step to correct it.

But you obviously took the proactive step in initiating the letter and getting that into the public debate. I think that's --

Mr. Brennan. I didn't initiate the letter.

Chairman Jordan. No, but you signed the letter. Excuse me. Fair enough.

But you took that proactive step in signing on to the letter. I think that's the contradiction we're concerned about as well.

Mr. Brennan. I was responding to a request to sign it. Again, I didn't initiate it. It wasn't proactive on my part.

Michael showed me the letter. I read it. I believed it was an accurate representation of the concerns about Russian interference in the election with influence operations. That was the extent of my engagement with it.

Mr. Gaetz. In exhibit 7 -- you testified that this document's one of the bases that you had to sign the letter, right?

Mr. Brennan. Which one is this?

Mr. Litt. The ICA.

Mr. Brennan. The ICA. Exhibit 7.

[redacted] Yeah, it's 7, the 2017 one.

Mr. Brennan. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. All right. If you'll turn to page 2, there's a subsection with the heading "Determining Attribution in Cyber Incidents."

Mr. Brennan. On page 2? Not Roman numeral ii, regular page 2.

Mr. Litt. It's the second page.

Mr. Gaetz. What's marked as page 2. It's the third page of the exhibit, but --

Mr. Brennan. Oh, yeah. Okay. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So there's a section with the subheading "Determining Attribution of Cyber Incidents."

Mr. Brennan. Got it.

Mr. Gaetz. And the second sentence in that subsection reads, "Every kind of cyber operation, malicious or not, leaves a trail."

What trail did the Russians leave regarding the Hunter Biden laptop?

Mr. Brennan. Again, we didn't say definitively that it was.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of any trail that the Hunter Biden --

Mr. Brennan. And this is talking about a cyber operation here, as opposed to an influence information operation.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, sure, but an operation can be both a cyber operation and an influence operation.

Mr. Brennan. Right, but not all information operations are cyber operations.

Mr. Gaetz. Right, but some are.

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So my question here is, since the laptop is a laptop -- or, do you have personal knowledge of any trail left by Russians regarding the Hunter Biden laptop?

Mr. Brennan. I don't have access to either intelligence or law enforcement information that might, in fact, reveal that. I've been a private citizen since 2017.

Mr. Gaetz. So am I to take your answer to mean you don't have any personal knowledge of that?

Mr. Brennan. I don't have any specific personal knowledge of that.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. And you didn't when you signed the letter, right?

Mr. Brennan. That's right.

Mr. Gaetz. In the prior hour, my colleague, Mr. Goldman, talked to you about the possibility that the laptop might have been hacked or that materials might have been altered or changed on the laptop.

Do you have any personal knowledge of that having happened?

Mr. Brennan. I don't have any personal knowledge of what the review of that laptop might have revealed. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. So just as Mr. Goldman -- I'm trying to make the record clear here that just as Mr. Goldman solicited from you that it's a possibility that it could've been altered, you have no evidence of that?

Mr. Brennan. That's correct.

Mr. Gaetz. And no personal knowledge?

Mr. Brennan. I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And you're not aware of any statement by the Biden camp that something on the laptop was altered or is fake?

A I don't know if they have any such a statement or not. I don't recollect seeing something.

Q Well, certainly, if something was, they would, in a full-throated manner, identify that, wouldn't they?

A I don't know. I don't know the circumstances of it, whatever.

Q I mean, if something was altered and the Russians planted something on a laptop that wasn't there, don't you think that somebody from Hunter Biden's camp would alert the world to the fact --

Mr. Litt. I think that's a question you ought to ask the Hunter Biden campaign.

Mr. Brennan. I think you should ask the FBI about that, because I don't know whether the Hunter Biden campaign would be aware of any type of altered or modified information.

BY [redacted]

Q Well, most of the laptop's been strewn about the internet.

A Again, I don't know. I'll leave that --

Q Okay. I'm only asking just -- in the last hour, you know, our colleagues on the other side were, you know, asking you questions about whether the laptop was altered and so forth.

A Yeah. Well, again, when you look at the provenance of this laptop, rather curious. And you had people like Derkach, you had Giuliani, and you had this computer shop in Delaware right before the election -- whatever. There were a lot of things that raised concerns and suspicions about the provenance of it and whether or not any of the material that was coming out at that time was part of this Russian information operation.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry. What basis do you have to believe that the computer shop in Delaware was connected to a Russian disinformation operation?

Mr. Brennan. Well, it was -- and I think, as it was stated, the owner of that shop wasn't clear about whether or not some material on that laptop could've been altered. I don't know when it came into that person's possession.

There are a lot of things that are still gaps in my knowledge, certainly -- maybe not in the investigators' knowledge -- about who controlled and who had access to that laptop over the time that it was deposited in that computer repair shop and when it got into the hands of others.

Mr. Gaetz. And what investigation did you do to fill those gaps?

Mr. Brennan. I was not in the government at the time. I wasn't even doing an investigation. That would've been inappropriate, for me to do an investigation, as a former intelligence official, particularly against U.S. citizens.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I guess I'm using "investigation" with a little "I," not a big "I."

So, as you assess these gaps in your knowledge, did you take any steps as a private citizen to try to understand or fill those gaps through research, through discussions with colleagues, or any other way prior to signing the letter?

Mr. Brennan. No. I tapped into my understanding and my knowledge of Russian counterintelligence activities and influence operations and made a determination, at the time when I was asked to sign this letter, whether or not I would agree to sign on to it, which I did.

Mr. Gaetz. You have extensive knowledge regarding Russia that you've mentioned as one of your bases for this.

Do you know what I'm referring to when I mention the Steele dossier?

Mr. Brennan. Yes, I do.

Mr. Gaetz. And what's your understanding of the Steele dossier?

Mr. Brennan. It was a dossier of information that was collected by a former British intelligence officer, who collected information about Donald Trump, first on behalf of a rival Republican candidate and then in support of the Clinton campaign, that was made available to a variety of media outlets as well as to government officials, the FBI.

The first time I put eyes on the Steele dossier was in December of 2016.

Mr. Gaetz. And the Steele dossier emerged in pretty close proximity to the election in 2016, didn't it?

Mr. Brennan. My understanding is it was available to some folks before the election. I didn't see it.

Mr. Litt. I think we're going well-afield from the Hunter Biden laptop.

If you don't want to answer questions on this, I would say I think you're well within your limits --

Mr. Gaetz. Counselor --

Mr. Litt. -- in not answering those questions.

He came here in response to a specific request, and he testified about a statement about the Hunter Biden laptop. The Steele dossier I don't believe has anything to do with that. If you want to bring him back to ask him about the Steele dossier, that's another matter.

But, again, if he's willing to answer the questions, it's on him. I'm just making my point for the record.

Mr. Gaetz. For the record, Counselor, Director Brennan indicated that there were five bases that he had to sign this letter: the Bill Evanina report, the proximity to the election, the involvement of Rudy Giuliani, the salaciousness of the content, and his extensive history as a Russian spy-hunter or as a person in the intelligence community with great familiarity over Russia.

When he provides those five bases, certainly the inclusion of the fifth allows the committee to explore what interaction he had with any Russia analysis that informed this opinion.

So the scope into the Steele dossier, Fusion GPS, anyone else that touched Russia, was a door opened by the Director when he said that his experience with Russia was one of the very things that informed his participation in the letter.

So, if he'd like to not answer questions about that, that will be the record and we'll proceed accordingly.

So I return to my question. You testified earlier that one of the indicia of Russian disinformation was the proximity and timing to the election in the emergence of these materials from the Hunter Biden laptop.

My question is, did you similarly view the Steele dossier the same way, since it similarly emerged in close proximity to a Presidential election?

Mr. Brennan. As I said, the first time I put eyes on the dossier was in December, was after the election.

Mr. Gaetz. So you were totally unaware of the Steele dossier prior to the election.

Mr. Brennan. I had heard reports about something that was circulating that included salacious information about Donald Trump.

Mr. Gaetz. There's another commonality, isn't there? Salaciousness in the Hunter Biden laptop, salaciousness in the Steele dossier.

Mr. Brennan. Yeah, right. Yeah. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. And, you know, you mentioned in your discussions with my colleague, Mr. Goldman, that Rudy Giuliani's contact with foreign nationals was one of the reasons why you believed his involvement was an indicia of Russian disinformation, right?

Mr. Brennan. With a known pawn of Russian intelligence, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And Christopher Steele and Glenn Simpson, they had contacts with Russian intelligence too, didn't they?

Mr. Brennan. They had contacts with them, yes, but they would never [inaudible] either a recruited asset or a pawn of them.

Mr. Gaetz. Did Steele not speak to individuals as sub-sources who were, in fact, part of the Russian intelligence network?

Mr. Brennan. I'm sure he did.

Mr. Gaetz. So I guess what we're splicing then is the difference between a pawn and a -- and a --

Mr. Brennan. And a contact.

Mr. Gaetz. -- and a contact.

Mr. Brennan. Yeah, there's a big, big difference between them --

Mr. Gaetz. Well --

Mr. Brennan. -- certainly for intelligence professionals.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah.

And then you mentioned, in your discussion with Mr. Giuliani, that he wanted dirt and he didn't care who he worked with, and that was one of the concerns you had about his involvement.

So are we to then assume that people like Christopher Steele are more discerning in who they retrieve dirt from?

Mr. Litt. Again, John, you don't need to go here if you don't want to.

Mr. Brennan. I will refer to Rudy Giuliani, who made it very clear who he was trying to get elected -- reelected as President of the United States. He was working on behalf of one of those candidates.

Christopher Steele was somebody, my understanding, who was working on behalf of individuals who were promoting someone, but he was not a partisan. Rudy Giuliani certainly is a partisan.

Mr. Gaetz. All right. So the fact that the DNC was providing the financing for the Steele dossier's development doesn't give you concern that it might be partisan?

Mr. Brennan. Again, that was happening back in 2016. Again -- I understand how you were able to tie this to my reference to my expertise, but I don't see any relevance to the Hunter Biden laptop issue now.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you said that you signed this letter that we now acknowledge Joe Biden misused in a debate to fool the American public because you're this great Russia expert, so I'm trying to understand your Russia expertise. And you were involved in analyzing this information.

Mr. Brennan. No, I was not involved in analyzing the dossier at all. I said the first time I actually saw it, it was after the election. And the CIA was not involved at all with the dossier. You can direct that to the FBI and to others.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you aware of the FBI's involvement with the dossier?

Mr. Brennan. Yes, because there's an annex in the ICA, the Intelligence Community Assessment, that the Bureau asked to be included in there. It was their purview, their area, not ours at all.

Mr. Gaetz. You testified earlier that the emails on the laptop were unhelpful to the Biden campaign. Do you recall that?

Mr. Brennan. No, I don't recall that exactly. Maybe I said it could've been unhelpful or something along those lines. I don't know the context of my comments.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. Sure. Was that your greatest concern about the contents of the laptop?

Mr. Brennan. The greatest concern about the contents of the laptop, which were fully unknown at the time, was that this, in fact, could be something that the Russians were using as a way to discredit Joe Biden and help Donald Trump.

There was still time before the election, and I knew from my previous experience that the Russians would use whatever opportunity they had to be able to promote their interests and objectives in the Presidential election.

And so raising the concern at that time, given that there was still, I think, a fair amount of things that were unknown about it, what we were trying to do was just to raise the suspicions that we had that it could, in fact, be a Russian influence operation.

Mr. Gaetz. Raising suspicions is important. Did you ever have the suspicion that the First Family might be compromised?

Mr. Brennan. I don't remember thinking that at all at that time.

Mr. Gaetz. And as the contents of the laptop have become more known, have you become concerned about that?

Mr. Brennan. I have the greatest confidence in Joe Biden's integrity and his honesty.

And you can go after Hunter Biden, and, clearly, he had some chapters of his life that I think he regrets.

But from the standpoint of Joe Biden and how he carries out his responsibilities as President of the United States and as previously Senator and then Vice President, there's no question in my mind that his integrity is uncompromisable.

Mr. Gaetz. And the 14 contacts that Joe Biden had with Hunter Biden's business associates, does that in any way undermine your --

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. -- belief in his integrity?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. You think that's an appropriate thing for a --

Mr. Brennan. I don't know what the nature of those was. But, again, I have confidence that he was doing things appropriately.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, is that confidence based in knowing what the things are and believing they're appropriate, or is that --

Mr. Brennan. It's working -- it's based on my experience working closely with Joe Biden during his Vice Presidency and hearing him and seeing him acting with the greatest integrity and on behalf of the American people, that I do not believe that he would do anything at all that was inappropriate in terms of his office.

Again, I'm not going to speak to Hunter Biden. I don't think I've ever met Hunter Biden.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of meetings that then-Vice President Biden had with Hunter Biden's business associates?

Mr. Brennan. I recall hearing reports about them. Their accuracy and the content of any type of discussion that might've been had I am unaware of.

Mr. Gaetz. And are you aware that Hunter Biden brought business associates on Air Force Two to meet with Joe Biden?

Mr. Brennan. I have seen reports about it. Again, I don't know the accuracy of those things.

Mr. Gaetz. So, if I represent to you that it's indeed true that on at least 14 occasions Joe Biden met with Hunter Biden's business associates, does that erode your belief in Joe Biden's integrity?

Mr. Brennan. I have the utmost confidence in Joe Biden's integrity.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. If any -- well, it seems as though you have great affection for the man. If any Vice President were to be meeting with business associates of their son who is influence-peddling around the world, would that be an appropriate thing to do?

Mr. Brennan. It all depends on the context and the circumstances and whether or not it was just an interaction that happened as a result of being in the same place at the same time -- but so much depends on what was done or said and the circumstances.

Mr. Gaetz. And if what was done or said was the development of a Vice President's son's business portfolio, would that be inappropriate?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know the content of those discussions, so I'm not going to speculate on any of them.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Well, I'm going to have some of the specific emails so that we'll have a chance to review that a little bit later in the day, and maybe that'll bring us out of the hypothetical.

Do you know who Tony Bobulinski is?

Mr. Brennan. No, I don't. I may have heard the name, but I don't recall who he might be.

Mr. Gaetz. You mentioned in the earlier hour that Burisma was a Ukrainian energy company. Is it a corrupt company?

Mr. Brennan. I understand that there were concerns about some of the business practices of Burisma, but I'm not a Burisma expert at all, and I don't recall all that I might have read about them.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, during your time -- strike that.

Have you ever made an individual assessment as to whether or not the company is aboveboard?

Mr. Brennan. No, I didn't -- have not.

Mr. Gaetz. And if a company wasn't aboveboard and the son of a Vice President was introducing its principals to the Vice President, would that be appropriate?

Mr. Brennan. I'm not going to speculate on that. I'm --

Mr. Gaetz. Why not?

Mr. Brennan. Because, again --

Mr. Gaetz. You speculated in the letter that got us all here today.

Mr. Brennan. That's not speculation. Those were judgments about the potential for Russian interference in the election.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm wondering about the potential for this other interference.

Mr. Brennan. Again, I don't know the circumstances, I don't know the facts there, so I'm not going to --

Mr. Gaetz. But, Mr. Director, you didn't know the facts in the other matter either. You've spent most of the day telling us that it's Mr. Morell's -- your trust in your former deputy that caused you to sign this thing.

So I guess I'm trying to understand -- in understanding why you signed this letter, I have to understand your thought process on how you assessed these claims of foreign disinformation. And it seems pretty disparate, that when it's necessary to help the Bidens, you do it, and if it's critical of the Bidens, you throw your hands up and say, I'm not assessing that.

Mr. Brennan. As a private citizen, I believe it is fully within my rights to decide when I'm going to provide my views on some issue.

Mr. Gaetz. And you don't think it's irresponsible to provide those when it's politically helpful and to withhold them when you know inaccurate information is being provided in a Presidential debate pursuant to a tool that you signed and provided the credibility of your former government service.

Mr. Litt. You don't need to accept his characterizations.

Mr. Brennan. I've given you my response.

BY [redacted]

Q You said you first learned about the Steele dossier in December 2016?

A I saw it for the first time, put eyes on it. I was made aware before that there was some report that was circulating among the media as well as Washington.

Q Had you known who Christopher Steele was at that point?

Mr. Litt. Be careful here about how you answer this question.

Mr. Brennan. I don't know what I knew at the time. I don't remember what I knew at the time.

Chairman Jordan. Who'd you learn it from? How'd you learn about the dossier in December?

Mr. Brennan. I received a copy of it from the FBI when they were wanting to have a summary of that document put into the -- or, attached to the Intelligence Community Assessment that was done.

This was before Jim Comey -- when we went to Trump Tower and briefed Donald Trump, when Jim Comey was going to talk to Donald Trump about the contents of that dossier.

And the CIA was very much opposed to having any reference or inclusion of the Steele dossier in the Intelligence Community Assessment. And so they sent over a copy of the dossier to say that this was going to be separate from the rest of that assessment. And that's when the CIA was given formal access to it.

Chairman Jordan. Refresh my memory, Director. Did you attend the meeting at Trump Tower in early January --

Mr. Brennan. Yes, I did.

Chairman Jordan. -- of 2017 with Director Comey when he briefed

President-elect Trump on the dossier?

Mr. Brennan. There was myself; Jim Clapper, Director of National Intelligence; Jim Comey; as well as Mike Rogers, Director of NSA, who provided a briefing on the Russian interference in the election.

At the conclusion of that briefing, then we left, everybody left, including Trump's advisors. And Jim Comey stayed behind --

Chairman Jordan. Right.

Mr. Brennan. -- with Donald Trump to give him a briefing on that.

BY [redacted]

Q You know, there was some speculation about whether the Steele dossier was alleging that then-candidate Trump was a Russian agent. Do you recall that?

A I recall references to something along those lines. I don't know the exact language that was used in it.

Q Okay. Did any government entity, like the FBI, check with the CIA to see what their information was?

Mr. Litt. Don't reveal anything classified, John.

Mr. Brennan. The FBI and the CIA were working very closely together during this whole episode. Whenever we would get information that involved a U.S. citizen, we would immediately pass it to the FBI, because the CIA has no authority to be following up on that information.

BY [redacted]

Q But you said that the information in the Steele dossier didn't -- you didn't read it until after the election.

A That's right.

Q Okay. So the allegation that he was some sort of Russian asset was never brought to your attention until --

Mr. Litt. Again, I'd make my two points here, which is, number one, we're far afield from the Hunter Biden laptop.

Number two, I think you need to be cautious about what you talk about, about what was brought to your attention in your capacity as DCIA.

Mr. Brennan. My views are contained in the Intelligence Community Assessments that were issued in January of 2017.

BY [redacted]

Q In the early summer of 2016, it's been reported that the GCHQ chief, Robert Hannigan, flew to the United States to meet with you in person to deliver information.

Did that information that he delivered to you have anything to do with the Steele dossier allegations?

Mr. Litt. John, I don't know that you should be talking about conversations you may have had with Hannigan.

Mr. Brennan. Well, that never took place, so --

Mr. Litt. That makes it easy.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So that meeting did not take place?

A I met with Robert Hannigan, but he never passed me any information along those lines.

Q Okay.

A I know it's been reported publicly, like so many other things that are inaccurate.

Q Okay. Fair enough. We talked about some inaccuracies in the Daily Beast article, so --

A Yep.

Q -- understood.

Did you participate in any of the Crossfire Hurricane meetings with Peter Strzok and the FBI in advance of --

A I don't know why we're getting into this right now. I had extensive interaction with the Bureau during 2016 about Russian interference in the election. And so there were a series of meetings that were held at that time with FBI officials.

Q Did that include Mr. Strzok?

A I don't recall.

Q Have you ever met Mr. Strzok before?

A I don't --

Mr. Litt. Can you explain the relevance of Peter Strzok to the Hunter Biden laptop statement in 2020?

[redacted] Well, you know, on one hand --

Mr. Litt. I mean, really, he's here at the request of the committee to talk about a specific area. If you want to --

[redacted] He doesn't have to answer the question.

Mr. Litt. If you want to bring him up --

[redacted] He doesn't have to answer the question.

Mr. Litt. You don't have to ask the question.

[redacted] I asked the question. He doesn't have to answer it.

Mr. Brennan. What was the question?

BY [redacted]

Q I asked you about your interaction with Peter Strzok. Did you know him --

A I don't recall. I really don't.

Mr. Litt. You really don't need to be going into this, John.

Mr. Brennan. I know. I'm trying to be accommodating --

Chairman Jordan. We appreciate that.

Mr. Brennan. -- voluntarily.

Chairman Jordan. Thank you, Director.

[redacted] [redacted] do you want to --

BY [redacted]

Q I want to go back to the statement. And, specifically, Mr. Morell told the committee about how, back in October of 2020, on October 17th, now-Secretary Antony Blinken -- but then he was working for the Biden campaign -- reached out to him via phone prior to his drafting of the public statement.

Are you aware of that interaction at all?

A Only because of press reports that have come out about Michael's interview.

Q Are you aware that the phone call between Secretary Blinken and Mr. Morell was the impetus for Morell to read the New York Post story and start drafting the public statement?

A I know only what is in the media. I haven't talked to Michael or Tony about it.

Q And in addition to a phone call from Secretary Blinken, Mr. Morell also received an email from Blinken forwarding a USA Today article titled "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign." And that USA Today article made its way into the public statement.

Are you aware of that?

A I'm aware of the USA Today article.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that the article was originally sent to Secretary Blinken by Andrew Bates, the Biden campaign's director of rapid response?

A I have no comment on that.

Q Did you have any communications with Andrew Bates? Have you ever spoken with him?

A I don't recall ever having a conversation with him.

Q Did you ever have any conversation with Secretary Blinken when he was working for the Biden campaign?

A I do not recall. I may have seen him in -- this was in 2020, right?

Q Yes, sir.

A There might have been some interaction at some point, but it would've been very, very brief and very superficial.

Q Around the time of the public statement? Or do you not recollect when that interaction was?

A I don't recall having any interaction with Tony at that time for the lead-up -- or during the campaign.

Q Are you --

Chairman Jordan. Director, would it have changed your calculus on whether you decide to sign it or not if you'd have known that what prompted Mr. Morell to begin to put this letter together was the contact by the Biden campaign, specifically Tony Blinken, and the article that was emailed to Mr. Morell from Tony Blinken that was emailed to Mr. Blinken by Mr. Bates with the campaign?

If you'd known that there was that much campaign involvement as the catalyst for this, would you have still signed on?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know. I really don't know.

As I said before, I try to be apolitical and nonpartisan, and I have tried to steer clear of getting involved in partisan politics.

So, at that time, I just knew what Michael had told me. I know that he had in his email saying he was going to be pushed back against. But if I had known it was more directly tied to the campaign, I don't know if I would've signed it.

Chairman Jordan. And then -- I don't know if we've -- but when it was done, when the debate was over, and then-candidate Biden had used it in the debate and used it, at least in part, in an inaccurate fashion, as you testified to earlier, Mr. Morell gets a call from Mr. Ricchetti, the chairman of the Biden campaign, thanking him for the whole deal.

If you'd have known that kind of -- that kind of focus and involvement, would that have changed your calculus as well?

Mr. Brennan. Well, it was after the fact of my signing it.

Chairman Jordan. I understand. I understand. But it kind of played out I think the way the folks all intended it to play out. At least like the way I think Mr. Morell intended it to play out.

Mr. Brennan. Yeah. I mean, it clearly has given individuals such as yourself and others the opportunity to question the basis for our signing it, given that there were contacts with individuals within the campaign.

Again, I can't speak to what motivated others, either in the campaign or other signatories. I can tell you what motivated me to sign it.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Can I just ask -- because it's related to this -- do you think that the statement that you signed and these other intel officials signed has in any way diminished the faith that the American people have in our intel community? Do you think it's done damage now?

Mr. Brennan. I think there are so many things out there in the public domain that have done damage. The repeated references to the "deep state," the disparagement of the intelligence professionals that Donald Trump and others have engaged in -- I think those have had far, far more impact, and negative impact, on the impression that Americans have about those intelligence, law enforcement, other professionals who work night and day around the globe at great risk and sacrifice.

So I do not believe -- unfortunately, this has been given, now, such enhanced profile. And, again, I understand why you're doing this. But I do not believe that it -- I believe it pales in comparison to the damage that is being done by those who continue to question the integrity of the overwhelming number of intelligence professionals.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. I appreciate your response. And I will tell you, honestly, we all lament that this --

Mr. Brennan. Uh-huh.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. -- faith in the intel community has been diminished.

We're not doing this for partisan, political purposes. I know you think that's true. We're doing this because, listen, we have to restore the people's faith in the intel community. It's essential to us. And I know field agents. I have family members who are field agents who are great patriots.

But I don't know -- sure, you can say and you believe that Donald Trump has diminished -- you know, increased the belief in the deep state and diminished the faith in the intel community. But would you dispute that the controversy surrounding this statement has also contributed to that? And do you regret it?

Mr. Brennan. I regret that it's given fuel to those who want to create this furor over it.

I don't believe -- I certainly did not hype this and highlight it afterward and really keep ringing the bell. I don't believe other signatories did either. What the press or what individuals might have done to leverage it for their own purposes or leadership or whatever, that's up to them.

But, again, I did this as a private citizen. I --

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Sure.

Mr. Brennan. -- didn't do it when I was a sitting government official. And, again, the concern about Russian interference in not just our elections but in our daily lives and how they are using the openness of our society and the social media environment and the digital domain. They are exploiting that in order to advance their interests.

And so I felt an obligation on the part, given my background, to sign on to this when Michael asked me to do it.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. I take you at your word, and I respect you. And I used to be a First Amendment lawyer, so I understand the right that you have, the fundamental right you have, to speak your mind. You're not in office anymore.

But I wonder how you reconcile in your mind the fact that you're not actually Joe Q citizen, right? You're the former Director of the CIA. So, whether you like it or not, you walk around with sort of an imprimatur, that, you know, when you say something, it's different than when my neighbor next-door says it, right? Because people put faith in you because they know the level of intel that you have, and the credibility you have is just -- should be unimpeachable, right?

And so, when you put your name on a letter, it's different than if my neighbor does. Do you agree with me?

Mr. Brennan. I agree with you. And if we said the Hunter laptop issue is disinformation and we were categorical about it and we came in very soundly and roundly saying that this was a Russian op, I completely agree with you. And if it said that, I would not have signed it. It is caveated. It is conditioned. It is characterized as a concern that we have that this, in fact, may be.

There can be misreading it. There can be sloppy reading of it. There can be sloppy representations of it that happened afterward. But, again, the intention here was to bring attention to the Russian influence operations that seem to be pervasive in our country.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Well, actually, the intention of it was, as stated in the email, October 19, 2020, was that, quote, we want to give the Vice President a talking point to use in his response.

That was the intent, right?

Mr. Brennan. That was Michael's intent. My intent was to raise the profile and the concern about Russian influence operations. That's what I did in 2016 -- in 2017. That's what I did when I signed this letter.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. And then, a little while later that same day, another email, I guess the one between you and he, he said, we're trying to -- quote, we're trying to give the campaign, particularly during the debate on Thursday, a talking point to push back on Trump on this issue. You said this was a "good initiative." "Thanks for asking me to sign on."

I mean, were there other ways, potentially, to highlight what you were concerned about, Russian disinformation, than providing a talking point to one of the Presidential candidates?

Mr. Brennan. There probably would have been or was. This was the one that was presented to me, and so I agreed to sign on to it.

Again, I was not a government official at the time. And so, therefore, this was the opportunity, the only -- the sole opportunity I had to be able to lend my voice to those who were concerned about Russian interference in the election, as we had seen in the previous Presidential election.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. I will yield back, but I just want to say that I think you know -- and I understand why you can't admit on the record and won't say it here, but I think you must believe in your heart of hearts -- because I do believe you're a man of integrity -- that some damage has been done by this and that you do have, I believe, a greater responsibility than most citizens, because when your name goes on something, it means a lot.

And I think you must know that. And I understand why you're not -- I understand why you're explaining things the way they are. But I just think the whole sordid tale is so fortunate, because we have done permanent damage to the intel community's credibility with all this.

Mr. Brennan. When you said "we have," I agree with you. When you say "we have," you're referencing you.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Well, I'll say the whole of government, and you're no bit player in that. You have a huge, huge, outsized influence in all this. And that's what is so deeply concerning to us, and that's why you're here today.

Mr. Brennan. Because of the misreading of the letter? Because of the misrepresentations of the letter by others? Is that what you're saying we have done?

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Because you provided a talking point to one of the candidates on the stage in a Presidential election. That's the problem. And you want to be apolitical and nonpartisan, but that's not -- that's not what your actions showed. And that's how the people see it.

Mr. Brennan. Well, I think my actions did show it, that I have been apolitical, nonpartisan.

RPTR SINKFIELD

EDTR ZAMORA

[1:35 p.m.]

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Sorry, [redacted] I interrupted you. Go ahead.

[redacted] I think we're at the end of our hour. So we will at this point take a pause.

Mr. Brennan. Okay.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It's 1:45. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Director Brennan, thank you for your patience today. In the --

Mr. Litt. Just to be clear, he will stay here until -- without a break until we're done.

[redacted] We appreciate that.

BY [redacted]

Q In the prior hour, you were asked about interactions that Tony Blinken may have had with Mr. Morell. You personally were not privy to any of those interactions, correct?

A I haven't been privy to any of them.

Q Okay. And I will represent to you that the transcript in the -- when Mr. Morell testified before this committee earlier this -- or last month, he was specifically asked if Mr. Blinken directed, suggested, or insinuated in any way that Mr. Morell should write a letter or statement on this topic. And Mr. Morell responded: My memory is that he did not, right. My memory is that he asked me, meaning when he called me, he asked me what I thought.

So I want to correct the record on that piece.

Mr. Blinken was a private citizen at the time, correct?

A Yes.

Q As was Mr. Morell?

A Yes.

Q And so, essentially, they were two private citizens engaged in the political process, correct?

A Correct. As was I.

Q And as every other one of the signatories was, correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q You were asked a fair amount about the Politico article -- this is Exhibit No. 14 -- and whether you had -- you know, whether the headline of that article was accurate or not. You were also asked if you contacted Politico to try to correct the record on the article. Do you remember being asked that?

A I do.

Q And you had actually said that you don't recall if you saw this when it was released, right?

A I don't recall.

Q And so if you hadn't seen it when it's released, you wouldn't have been able to call to correct? You wouldn't have been able to contact anybody to try correct the record because you didn't know it existed, potentially?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And, actually, if you look at this article on the -- I think it's on page 1, 2, 3 -- on the fourth page.

Mr. Litt. What's at the top of the page?

BY [redacted]

Q It says: But the release of the material. There's a Politico dispatch in the middle. That very next paragraph underneath the little Politico dispatch box says -- it actually quotes directly from the letter, and it says: We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani are genuine or not, and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement.

So it actually quoted directly from the letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q And it made it clear in the body of the email that none of you --

Mr. Litt. Of the article?

BY [redacted]

Q I'm sorry. The body of the article that none of the individuals who signed that letter actually had any information about whether the emails were authentic or not, correct?

A Correct.

Q So putting aside the headline that it said here, you know, in the body of the article, it was abundantly clear what the purpose of the letter was?

A Uh-huh.

Q And this -- and, actually, in the very first paragraph of this article, in the very first sentence of this article, there's a hyperlink. It says: More than 50 former senior intelligence officials have signed onto a letter.

And you see how that's in blue?

A Uh-huh.

Q Is it your understanding that that's a hyperlink?

A Yes, it is.

Q And that's a hyperlink to the text of the letter itself?

A Yes.

Q And so anybody reading this article could easily click on that link and view the letter exactly as you signed it, correct?

A Correct.

Q You were asked earlier about the Publication Review Board. I'm sorry, I lost my page. Thank you.

There was a suggestion made that somebody at the Publications Review Board had potentially promoted the letter. And that was in reference to an email produced by -- sent from David Cariens to majority committee staff.

Do you know David Cariens?

A I might, but the name is not springing to my mind, his face and who he is.

Q Okay. And are you aware that the -- and so you didn't have any interactions with him about this letter?

A No.

Q Okay. And are you aware that the representations the majority made to you is solely based on an email that he sent to majority staff?

A I was unaware of what it was based on.

Q And that in that email he said he couldn't remember who he spoke with or what date he spoke with that person?

A I'm hearing this for the first time.

Q Okay. So it's possible that what the majority has cited to you is based on somebody who actually might have a faulty memory, correct?

A Presumably.

Q And I want to look at some of the evidence that actually doesn't rely on what the majority represented to you.

So earlier, the actual email that Mr. Morell sent to the review board was introduced, I believe. And if not, we can introduce it again. It was not introduced. I'm sorry, we'll introduce it as exhibit 15.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 15.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this is an email from Michael Morell to the PCRB, correct?

A That's what it appears to be.

Q And the PCRB staff?

And this was sent at 6:34 in the morning on October 19th, correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q And the PCRB staff responded at 7:11 in the morning, and they provided a tracking number, saying his request had been received, right?

A Right.

Q And is this tracking number that's provided here, is that consistent with your experience with when you submit something to the PCRB, that's the kind of response you get?

A Yes.

Q And the sole content here, the sole response from the PCRB says: This submission has been received.

Correct?

A And the tracking number is -- correct.

Q And the tracking number. Correct.

And I want to turn next to the PCRB's clearance of this, which we'll introduce as Exhibit No. 16.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 16.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So this is dated October 19th, 2020, time stamped 12:44 p.m., correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q And the subject is PCRB submission, then the tracking number, determination-approved, correct?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q And the body of the email says it's from PCRB staff, and it says: The Prepublication Classification Review Board has completed its review of your article.

And it clears it, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So this was, what is that, maybe 6 hours approximately after the --

A Yes.

Q -- after the email is sent. Is that inconsistent with how quickly, in your experience, the PCRB can clear something of this nature?

A I know that it can clear things within hours. I've had things cleared, in fact, even maybe faster than this.

Q Okay. And there's nothing in here about David Cariens, correct?

A I don't see anything in here about it.

Q In fact, there's nothing in here about any signatories, correct?

A No. This seems like the standard response when approval is given.

Q Okay. And I want to turn to what we actually do have from Mr. -- contemporaneous email from Mr. Cariens which is where he agreed to sign on to the statement. This is an email from Mr. Cariens to Kristin W, who I'll represent is Kristin Wood, dated October 19th, time stamped 10:36 a.m. We'll introduce this as exhibit 17.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 17.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I know you've probably not reviewed this before, so I'll give you a few minutes to review it.

So in this document in front of you, Kristin W emailed David Cariens and presumably others at 10:27 a.m., correct?

A Yes.

Q And she wrote that all the recipients were bcc'ed to protect privacy?

A Uh-huh.

Q And that means that their email addresses aren't displayed, correct?

A That's usually what it means, yes.

Q And Mr. Cariens replied at 10:35 a.m., which is about 8 minutes later, correct?

A Yes.

Q So assuming these time stamps are accurate for Mr. Cariens to have learned about the letter because the PCRB promoted it, he would have had to learn about it in like the 3 hours between the PCRB's receipt of Mr. Morell's submission and Ms. Wood's email, correct? So like between 7:11 in the morning and 10:27 a.m. on October 19th?

A David Cariens was working in the PCRB at the time?

Q No, no, no. He was not. He was an external.

A He was an external.

Q And as far as we can tell, he learned about this email from Kristin Wood just like everybody else, or about the letter just from Kristin Wood just like everybody else.

A Okay.

Q So this actually tends to show that David Cariens learned about the letter and elected to sign on to the letter solely from Kristin Wood's email, correct? There's no reference to the PCRB here?

A There's no reference to knowing about it from anywhere else.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 18.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And just to round out the story here, we'll actually introduce the email that David Cariens sent to Republican committee staff. This is exhibit 18. And we don't have extra copies of this, I'm sorry. I think you have it, since it was sent to your --

[redacted] That's fine.

BY [redacted]

Q So, again, the second paragraph here says: We have no documents because all of the above was done on a phone call.

But, in fact, we have evidence that he should have documents because he sent an email to Ms. Wood, correct?

A I haven't read this yet.

Q I'm sorry.

A The second part: We have no documents because all of the above was done in a phone call. Neither my wife nor I have discussed the letter with any of the other signatories or any members of the U.S. policy or intelligence agencies.

Okay.

Q So we just introduced as exhibit 18 -- 17, the email from David Cariens to Kristin Wood, which shows that he actually communicated via email to Ms. Wood, correct?

A Before, yes.

Q So at least one paragraph here, that paragraph number two here saying everything was done in a phone call is not accurate, correct, just based on the record we have in front of us?

A It doesn't appear to be accurate. He may have been, you know, not having remembered it or whatever, but at least the way it's stated here.

Q Correct.

A Although he says we have no documents. I don't know if at the time he didn't have this document.

Q My point being that we don't know what he was thinking when he wrote this email, but at least some of it is plainly contradicted by the evidence that we actually do have, correct?

A There is documentation about his engagements prior to this.

Q Okay. And, again, you don't have any personal acknowledge of this?

A No, I don't.

Q You were asked extensively about this earlier, so -- there was a discussion earlier about the timing of the letter in relation to the second debate. Do you recall that discussion?

A Yes.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 19.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I want to introduce into the record as exhibit 19 a FOX News article, which is dated September 14th, 2020. It's entitled, 235 former military leaders support Trump, warn 'our historic way of life is at stake.' I'll give you a minute to review this.

A Okay.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 20.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And the second document I am going to introduce we'll mark as exhibit 20, and it's the actual letter from those 235 military leaders which is referenced in the article.

Have you seen this letter before today?

A I might have. I remember that it occurred at the time.

Q Okay. And briefly, this letter says that the 2020 election could be the most important election since our country was founded. And it argues that the Democrats opposition to border security and their pledge to return to the disastrous Iran nuclear deal, their antagonism toward the police and planned cuts to military spending will leave the United States more vulnerable to foreign enemies. And then it goes on, and it urges Americans to support the reelection of President Trump.

Is that a fair summary of what this letter says?

A Yes, I believe so.

Q Okay. So regardless of what you -- of whether you -- and I should say, this letter is not dated, but the FOX News article says that it was released on -- the FOX News article indicates that it was released on or about September 14th, 2020.

And regardless of whether you agree or disagree with the statements that are made in this letter, do you agree that these retired generals and Air Force lieutenants or Air Force --

A Navy admirals.

Q -- admirals -- Navy admirals, do you agree that they had a First Amendment right to say what they said here?

A Absolutely.

Q And that's kind of similar to the letter that you actually submitted, correct?

A Yes.

Q It's fairly common for people to sign public letters in advance during a Presidential election or during any election, correct?

A Yes.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 21.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And closing this out, I want to introduce as exhibit 21 an excerpt from the transcript from the first Presidential debate, which took place on September 29th, 2020. And I should say this is the full transcript of this. It is several hundred pages long, so we're only introducing excerpts here today.

On the -- as printed off, it's page 56 of the full document, but it's the bottom of the second page of what we printed off. We've highlighted some language. This is then President Trump saying: As far as the church is concerned and as far as the generals are concerned, we just got the support of 250 military leaders and generals, total support. Law enforcement, almost every law enforcement group in the United States. I have Florida. I have Texas. I have Ohio.

And it goes on.

Based on what I just read to you, is it accurate to say that the senior military leaders' letter in support of President Trump was released prior to the first Presidential debate?

A Yes.

Q And is it fair to say that that letter played a role at this debate?

A It allowed Donald Trump to reference that letter. Absolutely.

Q And, again, you know, regardless of whether you agree with the statements that are made, do you agree that the senior military leaders, who I should -- can represent were all retired at the time that they signed this letter, had a right to participate in a political process as private citizens?

A Yes.

Q You were asked earlier, again, about allegations that President Biden, the Politico article, and others had mischaracterized the letter. Do you believe that there are Republicans who are mischaracterizing your letter as well?

A There are politicians on a daily basis mischaracterizing the facts and truth, yes.

Q And to your knowledge, have any of them made efforts to correct what they're saying?

A Very rarely.

Q What's the impact on this letter, on the investigation into this letter been on you?

A Well, I've had to procure counsel.

Mr. Litt. Only a benefit.

Mr. Brennan. And I don't like the fact that, again, this is being raised in a, I think, a partisan manner. And I think it's losing the focus of what Congress should be doing. And so I regret that this furor, this firestorm has been created. But, again, I think the firestorm, the furor has been created responding to the letter as opposed to the letter itself, as I responded to one of the Congressmen earlier. So it's unfortunate that this is taking up all your time, it's taking up my time, and it is, again, further dividing the country.

Clearly, my name is one that has been identified as being rather outspoken against Mr. Trump. It has led to a lot of very vile and hateful commentary, including death threats, just within the past 10 days that I've received from official quarters. And so my concern is that there is, I think, unintended consequences that really could contribute to very untoward and very potentially tragic consequences here, as people are being villainized for, again, exercising their freedom of speech.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you fear for your safety?

A I have concerns about it. I've had concerns about it for quite a while. And to the extent that it has -- this is all in closed doors here, but I know that things are pushed out during this inquiry. But I've had to take some extraordinary measures in the past several years because of the efforts by some to -- I don't mind being discredited or being criticized or condemned, but when it comes to the safety and security of family, that's something that I never thought that over 33 years of government service, working to try to protect the national security of this country, would result in this type of activity and actions that make me very concerned about what we might see in the future.

Q And can you say anything further about your concerns about what we might see in the future, where might this lead?

A Well, we already see that there is this very unfortunate polarization in our country where the fringes are trying to take matters into their own hands and how some elements resort to violence. And, again, I am aware of the very hateful vitriol and nasty commentary. It's not just directed against me. I get a fair amount of it. And it's not just in the social media realm too. Because for whatever reason, I have been portrayed as this individual who is undermining this country's security when, I thought, after 33 years of government service, I was trying to do the exact opposite.

So it really is quite disheartening, dispiriting that, just like in previous congressional investigations I've been involved in, including where I felt that the other side, the Democratic side of the aisle was not upholding what I thought were the necessary responsibilities. I really feel that this is an effort to get certain people and, again, losing sight of what we should be doing as a society, as a country, and as a government. It's very unfortunate.

Q Thank you.

And you said a couple minutes ago that you've had to take additional efforts to protect your safety. Can you tell us anything more about that?

Mr. Litt. I wouldn't, John.

Mr. Brennan. I don't want to because I'm concerned about what I say here and how it may find its way outside the doors. I'm very, very concerned. And so I have considerations on that front.

[redacted] Okay. I understand. Thank you. We don't have any further questions. We can go off the record. It's 2:09.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. It's 2:11.

BY [redacted]

Q You know, we had some discussion about what the relevance is of the Crossfire Hurricane and the Peter Strzok matter in relative comparison. And I just would like to, you know, articulate that the letter that was signed and used in the debate has been, you know, demonstrated, I think, fairly that it was nothing but a political operation at the end by some of the individuals that hatched the idea -- maybe not all the signers, but the people that started the letter and tried to get signatories for the letter, it was just a political operation. Can you agree with that?

A No. Might have had some political objectives on it. But if there was real concern on the part of individuals, including those that's familiar with the campaign, that this, in fact, could be part of a Russian effort to discredit President Biden. It was not, as you point out, just a political operation. It was an effort, just like in 2016, to try to highlight the possible Russian involvement in the election.

Q And how do you compare that to some of the, you know, inaccurate information that was loaded into the Carter Page FISA application, which by now everybody appreciates is --

A I had nothing to do with that. FISA didn't come through me.

Q But you did have meetings with the FBI around the timeframe about --

Mr. Litt. Can I suggest, Director Brennan has been here since 10:15.

[redacted] He doesn't have to answer the question.

Mr. Litt. It's 4 hours -- I said I was going to sit.

If you have other questions relating to the Biden laptop, let's get those done so that you can get all of those answers. And then if you want to go into the other stuff, then we can walk out at that point.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Brennan. Again, just to reiterate, I had no involvement whatsoever in the FISA process. That's not what the CIA director does.

BY [redacted]

Q So are you aware of Carter Page?

A Yes.

Q Like, did you have any, like, official meetings to discuss the content of the --

Mr. Litt. You don't have to discuss the investigation.

Mr. Brennan. First of all, it's a U.S. person. As I said before, the CIA has no authority over any type of U.S. personal investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. What exhibit number are we on?

[redacted] Twenty-two.

Mr. Gaetz. I would like to introduce an exhibit.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 22.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Gaetz. Director Brennan, this is an email from the Hunter Biden laptop. I'll represent to you it's sent by Mark O'Malley to Hunter Biden, copies to Devon Archer and Anne Marie Person. And it reads: Hunt, I'm trying to get the Moscow agreement executed by the end of this week. In an effort to be proactive, I think we should send bank wiring instructions so we're not waiting on a check from Moscow. If you agree, please have someone forward the appropriate banking instructions. Thank you. MSO.

What role did you have in the government when this email was sent?

Mr. Brennan. In December 2010, I was assistant to President Obama for Homeland Security and Counterterrorism at the White House.

Mr. Gaetz. And were you aware of the relationship between Hunter Biden and Moscow at that time?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. You ever seen this email before?

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall ever seeing this before.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it concerning to you that the son of a sitting Vice President was trying to make a financial arrangement with Moscow at this time?

Mr. Brennan. Well, it doesn't say that. So we're not waiting on a check from Moscow, but it could be an American entity within Moscow. It could be anyone. I don't know the entire context. I don't know what this refers to.

Mr. Gaetz. So would someone in a senior national security role typically be concerned if the son of the sitting Vice President is waiting on a check from Moscow when referring to something as the Moscow agreement?

Mr. Brennan. No, because U.S. businesses have had, prior to the invasion of Ukraine, extensive business activities inside of Russia and in Moscow, the Moscow offices, and could be referred to as the Moscow agreement, that a business might have agreed to. So it doesn't mean that there was any type of Russian Government activity involved in this. So, no. And, again, this is Mark O'Malley, a U.S. person; Hunter Biden, a U.S. person; the other ones. So certainly, on the national security side, we wouldn't have any interest in this.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you seen the name Devon Archer before.

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall.

Mr. Gaetz. If I represent to you that Devon Archer is now a convicted felon, does that ring a bell?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And if this was indeed a measure that had the semblance of sanction from the Russian Government, would that be concerning to a senior national security official?

Mr. Brennan. It all depends, again, on the context. In 2010, there were things that were going on in Russia and some, including that were agreed to by the Russian Government, involving businesses and other things. So, again, I have no understanding of what this might refer to.

Mr. Gaetz. What would be the questions that you would ask as a senior intelligence official if you had observed the communication like this while you were in government?

Mr. Brennan. Why am I getting this? Why didn't it go to the FBI? I shouldn't be seeing this either as a White House official or the CIA.

It's a personal correspondence from a U.S. citizen who happens to be the son of a sitting Vice President. But there's no earthly reason why this should be brought to my attention. Be the counterintelligence folks inside the FBI. If there's any concern about some type of business activity that was inappropriate, illicit, illegal, or whatever, I certainly would not have had any exposure to it.

Mr. Gaetz. And the subject of the email says patriarch. And it's from a Mark O'Malley to Hunter Biden.

If you were assessing this, would you draw any conclusions from the use of that word?

Mr. Brennan. Again, I don't know if that could have been the code name of some type of business operation that was underway. It could have been any number of things. It could have been the name of a company. I have no idea.

Mr. Gaetz. It also could have been a reference to Joe Biden, the patriarch, the Biden family, right?

Mr. Brennan. You can interpret it that way.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe that's a reasonable interpretation?

Mr. Brennan. When you're saying reasonable, then you're narrowing it down. It's an interpretation certainly. But I wouldn't want to go there even with any type of speculation because of what it implies.

Mr. Gaetz. Hunter Biden engaging in business deals with people who became felons, with this reference to a Moscow agreement, does that in any way flavor the context of the Hunter Biden laptop and your signing of this letter?

Mr. Brennan. There are a lot of American politicians who had business activities with convicted felons, including family members of various senior U.S. Government officials. So, again, I wouldn't want to make any comment on something like this that would be speculative at best.

Mr. Gaetz. What about the Moscow connection? A similar answer?

Mr. Brennan. Again, Moscow is a city. It's a location. It doesn't say anything about what that could be referencing to, whether it be the Russian Government, Russians, who knows. I have no idea what the reference to Moscow refers to.

Mr. Gaetz. When you signed -- or strike that.

Was it before or after you signed the letter that you learned that there were communications on the Hunter Biden laptop between Hunter Biden and folks connected to China?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know when I read about that. I have no recollection at all.

Mr. Gaetz. So you are aware that the laptop contains communications between Hunter Biden and China, right?

Mr. Brennan. I recall reading press reports on that issue, yes. I don't know when I first learned of it or first read those reports.

Mr. Gaetz. And there's no way to refresh your recollection as to whether or not this is before or after you signed?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know. You're taking two and a half years ago.

Mr. Gaetz. Does that concern you, the connections to China?

Mr. Brennan. This is a globalized world, and individuals of all different stripes, business, political, and so on have connections around the globe with Russians, Chinese, some government officials, business enterprises, interests, parastatals, and others. So just because somebody has a contact with something in China does not by any definition mean that it is inappropriate.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it appropriate for the son of the sitting Vice President to hold investment meetings at the Chinese Embassy?

Mr. Brennan. Again, not knowing -- first of all, I don't know about such meetings, if they were held, but again, it would be a -- the context, what was said, what was done, what it was about, I have no knowledge of what it was. But I can -- I could spit out a scenario where having such a conversation in that location was legitimate.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 23.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Gaetz. Another exhibit.

[redacted] Is this all one exhibit?

Mr. Gaetz. That's all one exhibit. So I'm just going to reference some features of it, but I want it to be complete for the record.

So if you go to the third page of the exhibit.

Mr. Forrest. Just for the record, this is Exhibit No. 23.

Mr. Litt. Okay. It's the page that has Marvin R. Lang at the top?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes, Marvin R. Lang email. 4:36 p.m., February 28, 2011. And in the email, there's the discussion of this dinner for the annual and -- or funds dinner of Hunter Biden's fund.

Is it appropriate for the son of a sitting Vice President to be raising money for their investment fund at a dinner at the Chinese Embassy?

Mr. Litt. Do you see it?

Mr. Forrest. Just to break in real quick. Can you say -- again, I'm assuming this is also from the Hunter Biden laptop?

Mr. Gaetz. Correct. I'll represent to you it's from the laptop.

Mr. Brennan. Appropriate? The term has -- it's very expansive in terms of what falls under that -- the roof of appropriate.

When U.S. businesspersons and private citizens do things, they have to make sure they're doing it consistent with U.S. law, including the Foreign Agents Registration Act and other types of requirements. And, again, I don't know the nature of the discussion here, the content of it, and whether or not anything was done or said that might have, in fact, been inconsistent with any of those obligations.

Mr. Gaetz. Does it concern you that the son of a sitting Vice President was having a meeting at the Chinese Embassy raising money for his investment fund at their annual dinner? If you don't want to speak to its propriety, perhaps you can speak to whether or not it concerns you.

Mr. Brennan. Not knowing the context, not knowing the nature of the discussion, what was discussed, I am not going to comment on its appropriateness or not.

Mr. Gaetz. So it could be appropriate under some context?

Mr. Brennan. I think, again, appropriate is in the eye of the beholder. I think if, you know, you're looking at it just purely through a political prism, just like you might look at some of the activities of the Trump children and son-in-law through a prism of appropriateness, people might have issues with that. The questions that --

Mr. Gaetz. I'm not asking about them. I'm asking about --

Mr. Brennan. I know. And I am just drawing a comparison that you can have conversations, including in various locations with foreign entities and persons that may be wholly consistent with U.S. law, U.S. regulations, obligations, that a U.S. citizen can carry out from a business perspective.

Again, I don't know what was discussed. Certainly, there could be things that were inappropriate and things that were appropriate. I have no idea about what was said or done during such meeting.

Mr. Gaetz. Would the CIA ever be concerned about an embassy being used in this way?

Mr. Brennan. If the CIA became aware of a foreign embassy that was being used either for meetings or for communication systems or something else that a U.S. person was involved in, we would immediately refer that information to the FBI for follow-up investigation. But the CIA needs to believe that there is some type of possible criminal activity taking place before they would make that reference.

Mr. Gaetz. And violations of FARA are criminal, right?

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So if the son of a sitting Vice President was taking money from the Chinese and then doing their bidding in our country, that would be a violation of FARA, wouldn't it?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know, again, what was done or what was said at these meetings.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, that's what I want to know if it's just concerning to you. I mean, I think most Americans would look at the son of a sitting Vice President raising funds from investors at the Chinese Embassy a concerning event. And it's surprising to me you don't see it that way.

Mr. Brennan. The Chinese Embassy can be a large place. It can be just a venue for a meeting of representatives from different countries, different businesses, from personal interests across the globe. Again, there's so many different possible scenarios involving this.

Mr. Gaetz. But you didn't know about this meeting and this content of the laptop when you signed the letter?

Mr. Brennan. I don't -- I don't remember being aware of this at all.

Mr. Gaetz. Does this email correspondence have the indicia of Russian disinformation?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know. I haven't looked at it.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. The email I showed you previously, the prior exhibit, regarding the Moscow deal from Mr. O'Malley to Hunter Biden, subject line patriarch, talking about a Moscow agreement, does that have the indicia of Russian disinformation?

Mr. Brennan. I don't know, and I -- I --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you knew the laptop did.

Mr. Brennan. No, I said that there was concern about how the laptop might be part of a Russian information operation. I wasn't commenting at all with my signature on any of the individual pieces of information, whether it be emails or others on that laptop.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever heard of a company SinoHawk.

Mr. Brennan. It doesn't ring a bell to me.

Mr. Gaetz. If I represent to you that there were communications regarding a SinoHawk business deal on the Hunter Biden laptop, does that ring a bell?

Mr. Brennan. No, no.

[Brennan Exhibit No. 24.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Gaetz. I will go to my next exhibit, 24, I believe. I'll represent to you that these are screenshots from Hunter Biden's contacts from the laptop.

Do you know who Mike Harrington is?

Mr. Brennan. I might know of him, but I don't -- I can't put a face with that. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know any reason why he would be in Hunter Biden's contacts?

Mr. Brennan. Depending on what his responsibilities were within the Bureau, he could have been somebody that a private U.S. citizen was in touch with about a matter.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll skip to the next page of the exhibit, and I'll -- there's the name Bryan Vorndran. Do you know who Bryan Vorndran is?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Any idea why he would be in Hunter Biden's contacts list?

Mr. Litt. Are you asking him whether somebody he doesn't know -- if he knows why that person would be involved?

Mr. Gaetz. You may know of them and may know some correlation or relation.

Mr. Brennan. I don't know of any these individuals referenced to the FBI. But, again, a lot of U.S. persons who have concerns about maybe what's happening from a counterintelligence perspective or terrorism perspective, whatever, reach out to the FBI to report such things. So that it could have been that these individuals that Hunter Biden for some reason or another had the occasion to reach out to, for what reason, I don't know. But it's not all that unheard of that U.S. businesspersons would have FBI contacts, because a lot of them do.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm not suggesting it's unheard of, Mr. Director. I'm just trying to ascertain whether or not you acknowledge these people or have knowledge as to why they're in here.

Mr. Brennan. No, I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. If you turn to the next page of the exhibit, Louis J.J. Freeh. Do you know who Louis Freeh is?

Mr. Brennan. I do know very well.

Mr. Gaetz. Who's Louis Freeh?

Mr. Brennan. Louis Freeh is a fellow graduate of my high school in New Jersey. Lived down this block from me when we were younger, but he's older than me. He was a FBI director. He was appointed back by George H.W. Bush and was director during Clinton's administration as well.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever talked to Louis Freeh about Hunter Biden?

Mr. Brennan. No. I haven't been in touch with Louis in several years.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you have any contact with Louis Freeh about the letter that we've been discussing?

Mr. Brennan. No, I haven't been in touch with Louis Freeh since I left government, I don't think.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you have any knowledge as to why Louis Freeh might be in Hunter Biden's contacts?

Mr. Brennan. Louis Freeh has been involved in quite extensive business activities over the past 20-some odd years. He is very well known in the business community, has a lot of contacts, both domestically and internationally. So it's not surprising that Louis Freeh's contact information shows up in U.S. businessmen's contact list.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of any business that Hunter Biden and Louis Freeh had together?

Mr. Brennan. I'm unaware of it. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Great. I think I'll yield back to my colleagues.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Some of the items that Mr. Gaetz presented to you, do you think that that may have been relevant in the runup to the election for the American people to have access to it and consider it as they were making their decision for President?

A I don't know if it was available or not.

Q Well, it was on the laptop.

A Okay.

Q So --

A So the letter didn't say disregard everything there or don't look at it or don't read the reports that are out there.

Q But it had that effect.

A No, it was saying that take everything that you see out there, it was with a grain of salt, because the Russians may, in fact, have some role in this.

Q I mean, that may have been the way you saw it and the way you decided to sign on to the letter thinking that, but that's not the way Politico reported it. That's not the way candidate Biden at the time portrayed it in the course of a debate.

A Okay.

Q Okay. And so signing onto the letter, you know, acted as a major force at keeping all the contents of the laptop out of the public discord. Do you agree with that?

A I don't know how people reacted to this letter at the time. I don't. It was put out there in the public domain. People -- I'm sure a lot of Americans, most Americans never read that letter then or since then. And the letter was picked up by press. That didn't mean that the laptop, though, and Twitter and others did not, would have information on it. So people -- it was up to them to decide what they wanted to access and how they wanted to think about it.

Q But the letter certainly served the function of chilling the news coverage. I mean, the --

Mr. Litt. Did the Post stop publishing articles about this as a result of this letter?

[redacted] The New York Post?

Mr. Litt. Yeah.

[redacted] Okay. Did you hear -- no. No, they did not.

BY [redacted]

Q So the question is, isn't it fair to say that the letter chilled the press on this topic? Maybe not the New York Post, maybe not certain outlets, but it certainly did The New York Times. It certainly did The Washington Post.

A I don't know how the press reacted to it. I wouldn't say that it chilled them. It, I think, made them look at this issue and wonder whether or not this was a part of a Russian influence operation. And it's up to the press to decide whether or not they were going to take that warning from former intelligence officials or not. But that certainly didn't prevent them from doing what they needed to do in the runup to the election.

Q Don't you think the letter gave news organizations a reason to shut down news coverage on this?

A No, I don't think so.

Q You don't think so?

A No, not to shut down news coverage on it. In fact, if anything, I think maybe that letter sort of raised this a bit, because it was, in fact, pointing out that the laptop --

Chairman Jordan. It certainly didn't raise it with social media companies. In fact, the New York Post was locked out of their account. And it was, I think, part of this concept of social media companies, Silicon Valley companies limiting people's ability to see the story and get access to the story, which is our -- one of our big concerns when it comes to First Amendment -- First Amendment issues.

Mr. Brennan. It's up to the media companies themselves to determine what type of propagation access they want to give to such stories. And I would like to think that responsible outlets would have taken our letter, read it, and read it carefully and clearly and found that we weren't saying it was Russian disinformation or -- there's concern there. So think about it carefully before believing that this, in fact, is whole truth.

Chairman Jordan. And that's all well and good, Director, but that's not what happened. Our government was meeting weekly with social media companies, telling them to be on the lookout for this kind of thing, and then along comes your letter, which is -- I mean, that's the concern, is our government, FBI, Mr. Chan himself was meeting weekly with big tech companies, social media companies in Silicon Valley saying, you got to -- and then along comes your letter used to suppress speech, again, just a couple of weeks before the most important election we had. That is our concern and --

Mr. Brennan. I don't think --

Mr. Litt. Were there any social media companies that took action against the statement after this letter?

Chairman Jordan. We ask the questions and you answer.

Mr. Litt. I understand. I think the answer to that is no.

Chairman Jordan. I think I ask the questions.

Mr. Litt. Yeah. Okay. I'm just putting that on the record.

Mr. Brennan. The intention here was not to suppress speech at all. It was to provide some warning and concerns about what was out there immediately prior to the election.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Well, in fact, that was not the intention, as stated from the email that's in the record here. The intention was to give the Vice President a talking point.

Mr. Brennan. That was the intention of Michael Morell, as stated in his email. As I said before, my intention here was to raise concerns about Russian interference in the 2020 election, just the way they interfered with influence information operations in the 2016 election. That was my purpose in signing onto this letter.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. And I apologize for having bumped in and out here today. But it is your position today, you do believe today that, in fact, the laptop was not Russian disinformation? I mean, you know that that's a --

Mr. Brennan. Again, I don't know all the things that were contained on that laptop. I don't know what type of exploitation that has been done, whether the U.S. Government has done a thorough review of all of the contents there, and whether any of this was, in fact, altered, modified, deleted, or whatever, I have no idea.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. So as you sit here today, you stand by the veracity of the statement. So you think exactly the same thing today that you -- with regard to that statement as you did when you signed on. Is that right?

Mr. Brennan. The statement we said raising the concerns. And I stand by the statement that said we had no evidence, but we are raising our concerns and the suspicions that, in fact, it might be part of Russian information operations, either in the amplification of accurate information, the propagation or dissemination or whatever. Russian information operations is not limited only to disinformation. There's a lot of other things that the Russians have done in the U.S. elections.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Have you seen the polls that show that if -- that the 2020 election outcome would have been different if people had believed the Hunter laptop was legitimate and not a Russian disinformation conspiracy.

Mr. Brennan. No, I have not seen those polls.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Well, they exist. If you haven't seen the polls, what impact do you think this had on the election.

Mr. Brennan. I'm sorry. I didn't hear you.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. What impact do you think that this statement and the timing of its release before the debate, what impact do you think this had on the election?

Mr. Brennan. I have no idea. I don't know how widely read it was, how much of any influence it had whatsoever. I don't know. I believe that the Russian interference in the 2016 election probably swayed a lot more views and votes in 2016 than that letter ever did in 2020.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Well, I think we have entered into the record today a series of emails showing the signatories celebrating the use of the statement during the Presidential debate. That was pretty big, in fact, wasn't it?

Mr. Brennan. I'm unaware of that email.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Well, we have some emails. I don't know if they're entered in the record yet, but -- I mean, the signatories to the statement were obviously pleased that the President used it as intended, correct?

Mr. Brennan. I can't speak for the others. There are 51 people. I'm sure they have all different views, including political views.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. Were you pleased that he used it in the debate.

Mr. Brennan. I don't recall what I felt at the time.

Mr. Johnson of Louisiana. How do you feel now?

Mr. Brennan. I feel that the statement, again, raised consciousness about the Russian influence operations in the States and that candidate Biden at the time pushed back against it. I would not have characterized the statement the way he did in that debate. But, again, I am content with that letter. Again, I regret the furor and the firestorm that it's created since then.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Director, what role did you have in the January 2017 post-election Intelligence Community Assessment on Russian activities and intentions in recent elections, the IC?

Mr. Brennan. I was director of the CIA at the time, and so I reviewed it, and participated in the briefings of it to the Obama administration, to both Houses of Congress, and to Donald Trump.

Mr. Gaetz. Who was the primary drafter of that document?

Mr. Litt. You don't need to answer that question.

Mr. Brennan. I forget his name.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Did you personally edit the document?

Mr. Brennan. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you aware of dissenting opinions regarding the conclusions?

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And was one of those dissenting opinions that Moscow preferred Hillary Clinton because it judged that she would work with its leaders, whereas Trump would be too unpredictable?

Mr. Brennan. There were individuals who had read the document within CIA who were not involved in the drafting or the analysis. And so I listened to some of their concerns, but I deferred to the experts: the Russian, the counterintelligence, the cyber experts, and the analysts who actually drafted this. And so I did not overturn or change any of the judgments and language in that document.

Mr. Gaetz. Who is Andrea Kendall-Taylor?

Mr. Brennan. She is a former CIA analyst who is retired from the government. I don't know if retired or resigned. And she is a current member in WestExec Advisors, of which I'm affiliated with as well.

Mr. Gaetz. So you're currently in business with her in the private sector?

Mr. Brennan. In business. And she's an analyst. She's a part of WestExec. And so I have been in some virtual meetings with her.

Mr. Gaetz. So you both get paid by the same business entity today?

Mr. Brennan. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And what role did she have in drafting or approving the ICA?

Mr. Litt. Give me a second here.

[redacted] Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Back on the record.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I was wondering what the role was in drafting or approving the ICA we've been discussing.

Mr. Brennan. I do not recall, and I would not identify individuals involved in the drafting of an Intelligence Community Assessment.

Mr. Gaetz. Which is it, is it that you don't recall or that you --

Mr. Brennan. Both.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. And if I represent to you that there are individuals who claim that you did personally edit a crucial section of the intelligence report to try to diminish the dissenting views and to try to overcharacterize the extent to which Russia favored President Trump, what would be your reaction to that?

Mr. Brennan. That's wrong. They are mistaken. The assessment was reviewed thoroughly by the Senate Intelligence Committee who had kudos for the integrity of that assessment.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

[redacted] I think we're all done.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Hold on one second. I think we're good, but -- we are good.

[Whereupon, at 2:45 p.m., the interview was adjourned.]

Mr. [redacted] We'll go on the record now.

Good morning. This is a deposition of Mr. Mark Pomerantz, formerly of the District Attorney's Office of New York County.

Chairman Jordan has requested this as part of the committee's oversight of the unprecedented indictment of a former President of the United States and a current declared candidate for that office.

The committee's oversight of the New York County District Attorney's unprecedented prosecutorial conduct will inform the consideration of potential legislative reforms that would, if enacted, insulate current and former Presidents from politically motivated State and local prosecutions.

These potential reforms may include, among other things, legislation to enhance reporting requirements concerning the use of Federal forfeiture funds or to prohibit the use of Federal funds to investigate a current or former President or current Presidential candidate and broadening the existing statutory right of removal of certain criminal cases from State to Federal court.

Because of Mr. Pomerantz's former role as a Special Assistant District Attorney that led the investigation into President Trump's finances, he is uniquely situated to provide information that is relevant and necessary to inform the committee's oversight and potential legislative reforms.

On April 6th of this year, Chairman Jordan issued a subpoena for Mr. Pomerantz to testify at a deposition. I'd like to mark that as exhibit 1.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted] Would the witness please state your name for the record, sir?

The Witness. Yes. My name is Mark F. Pomerantz.

Mr. [redacted] And you're joined here today by personal counsel.

Mr. Wells, I'll have you introduce yourself and your colleagues.

Mr. Wells. Yes. My name is Ted Wells. I'm with the Paul, Weiss law firm. I'm here today with my partner, Roberto Finzi, and my associate, Jacob Rosen.

Mr. [redacted]. And we're also joined here today by Ms. Dubeck from the New York County District Attorney's Office. We'll have Ms. Dubeck introduce herself.

Ms. Dubeck. I'm Leslie Dubeck. I'm the general counsel of the New York County District Attorney's Office.

Mr. [redacted] And I understand you're also joined by one of your colleagues?

Ms. Dubeck. Oh, yes. Mylan Denerstein from the Gibson Dunn firm.

Mr. [redacted] My name is [redacted] I'm with Chairman Jordan's House Judiciary Committee staff.

I'm going to have the staffers introduce themselves first, and then we'll allow the members to introduce themselves, starting with my colleague, Ms. [redacted]

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's committee staff.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Democratic staff.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Democrat staff.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] with the House Judiciary Democrats.

Mr. [redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Democrats.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] with the House Judiciary Committee Democrats.

Mr. [redacted] We're also joined by some of our members. I'll have them introduce themselves as well.

Chairman Jordan. Jim Jordan, Fourth District of Ohio.

Ms. Stefanik. Elise Stefanik, 21st District of New York, House Republican Conference chair.

Mr. Armstrong. Kelly Armstrong, North Dakota.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, First District of Florida.

Mr. Bishop. Dan Bishop, North Carolina.

Mr. [redacted] And some members may come in after the proceedings begin, and depending on where we are, we may or may not have them introduces themselves. But certainly if they're going to ask any questions of you, we'll be sure to have introductions.

I'd like to go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's deposition.

The committee will conduct the deposition in accordance with Rule XI of the Committee on the Judiciary's Rules of Procedure of the 118th Congress as well as the House rules.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

We ordinarily take a short break at the end of each hour, and the provision of breaks is totally up to you, sir. You let us know if you need a break, more breaks or less breaks. And you may also ask us to go off the record so you can confer with your counsel.

As you can see, we have an official reporter here taking down everything to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all the questions.

Do you understand that?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. [redacted] Sometimes the court reporters need us to go back because we're talking over one another. Usually it's our fault. So we may have to go back and repeat a question.

We will only have one staffer asking you a question per round. However, the members can jump in. And ordinarily on our side we like to make sure we have at least 15 or 20 minutes of every hour that we turn it to our members.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or don't understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point just say so.

If you don't know the answer to a question or do not remember -- of course, it's best not to guess -- please give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. The Federal Rules of Evidence aren't applicable here. Just indicate how you came to know the information. And if there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so.

By law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

The Witness. I understand that.

Mr. [redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury. Do you understand that?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. [redacted] And, of course, as I indicated before we went on the record, I mean no disrespect by mentioning that. You are a veteran lawyer and somebody who obviously has great understanding of how this process works.

Finally, I'd like to make a note that under the deposition rules, the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. And until the chairman and ranking member sort out what portions of the testimony or all the testimony is going to be released, under the House rules it's confidential. Obviously, you're not a party to the House rules, but I mention that for our members and staff.

At this time the court reporter will swear the witness in.

The Reporter. Please raise your right hand.

Do you solemnly declare and affirm, under the penalty of perjury, that the testimony you're about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. [redacted] do you have any welcoming remarks?

Ms. [redacted] We don't have any.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. And before we start our questions, Mr. Wells or Mr. Pomerantz, do you have any remarks you'd like to make to kick things off?

The Witness. I do have a statement.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. Take your time.

The Witness. I am here because I respect the rule of law. I've spent my working life in service to the rule of law. And the rule of law requires a witness to appear for testimony in response to a subpoena. So I am present as required.

What I do not respect is the use of the committee's subpoena power to compel me to participate in an act of political theater.

This deposition is for show. I do not believe for a moment that I am here to assist a genuine effort to enact legislation or to conduct legislative oversight.

We are gathered here because Donald Trump's supporters would like to use these proceedings to attempt to obstruct and undermine the criminal case pending against him and to harass, intimidate, and discredit anyone who investigates or charges him.

Fortunately, I do not have to cooperate with the cynical histrionics that this deposition represents. Although the rule of law compels me to be here, it does not require that I play a substantive role in a theatrical production. Under the law, I can decline to answer your questions for several reasons.

First, I have been instructed by the Manhattan District Attorney's Office that I should maintain that office's claims of privilege and confidentiality in order to protect the integrity of the pending prosecution and continuing investigation of Donald Trump. I intend to honor the District Attorney's request, and I will not answer questions to which the District Attorney objects.

Although I have written and spoken publicly about the Trump investigation, I did so before any criminal charges were brought against Mr. Trump.

Now that a grand jury has indicted him, the circumstances have changed. With formal charges now pending, the rule of law is best served if the merits of the case against Mr. Trump are litigated before the court that is hearing that case.

This is neither the time nor the place for me to answer questions about the investigation or the pending indictment over the objection of the prosecutors. The charges against Mr. Trump should be heard and decided by a judge and a jury before politicians second-guess their merits or the decision to bring them.

That's how our system works. Those who claim that they respect the rule of law should wait for the courts to do their work.

Second, the rule of law also affords me a personal privilege not to answer your questions. Under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, no person may be compelled to be a witness against himself or herself in a possible criminal case.

Shortly before the publication of my book, the District Attorney's Office warned me that I could face criminal liability if, among other things, I disclosed grand jury material or violated a provision of the New York City Charter dealing with the misuse of confidential information.

When we were before the United States District Court on April 19th of this year, a lawyer for the Manhattan District Attorney's Office said that my book, quote, "exposed me to criminal liability," close quote.

While I am certain that I broke no laws, I am not required to answer questions if my answers might be used against me in a criminal prosecution. The Fifth Amendment is a protection for all citizens, including those who have done nothing wrong.

Therefore, and on the advice of counsel, I will invoke my rights under the Fifth Amendment and I will not answer any questions that could conceivably be used against me in a criminal case.

Finally, the rule of law permits me to refuse to answer questions that are not pertinent to a legitimate legislative function or that seek information that is protected by the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of speech. Under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, I cannot be punished for refusing to answer such questions.

There may be other privileges, such as the attorney-client privilege or the work product privilege, that are available to me with respect to certain questions.

For all these reasons, I will not be answering questions that relate to my work in the District Attorney's Office, my book, or public statements I have made in the past.

It gives me no joy to invoke my legal rights, but I am glad that the law allows me not to cooperate with this performance of political theater.

As an American, I am privileged to have the legal rights that I assert today, and I am hopeful that I live in a country that will continue to respect them.

Mr. [redacted] On that note, I would just remark for the record that we, the Congress, recognizes constitutional-based privileges but not common law based-privileges. And as we represented to the Second Circuit, the committee will consider any invocation of privilege and accompanying explanation on an individualized question-by-question basis.

So even though it might get repetitive, we are going to ask for an explanation for each objection and then consider your explanation.

The chairman may rule -- he may overrule the objection, and in that instance we would instruct you to answer the question. At the end of the process, we'll maybe tally up the questions that haven't been answered and offer you a chance to change your mind. And if we do need to bring you back or pursue additional proceedings, we will -- we'll write you a letter, and we'll proceed on that basis.

Mr. Wells. Can I reply?

Mr. [redacted] Certainly, sir.

Mr. Wells. Today is not the day to debate the merits of explanations for asserting privileges. He will assert the privilege, the committee members may rule on the privilege, the record will be made, but we are not going to debate the merits. That is for a court if we ever get in front of a court.

So I have no problem if you're making a ruling. The record will be made and we'll move on to the next question. But we are not going to debate the legitimacy of any particular privilege so the record will be clear with respect to his assertions.

Mr. [redacted] Fair enough sir. I hope I didn't indicate to you that I wanted to have a debate with you on the record.

Mr. Wells. No. I'm responding to the phrase "explanations."

Mr. [redacted] Well, explanation --

Mr. Wells. If I misunderstood what you meant, we can --

Mr. [redacted] I think by explanation, it's the nature of the -- is it based on the Fifth Amendment or is it based on what the District Attorney's Office has told you.

Mr. Wells. That's very common.

Mr. [redacted] That's what we're looking for.

Mr. Wells. Yes, that's very common.

Mr. [redacted] We're not looking for the case citations and so forth.

With that, I'll begin my hour. Hopefully this will be a productive hour and find some questions that you want to answer.

I'll note it's 10:21. I'll be referring, sir, to your book. If you need a copy, we can provide you one.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. [redacted]

Q On page 1 of your book, you state that when you joined the Trump investigation you got countless emails and telephone calls from friends and colleagues urging me to go get him.

Was that statement accurate?

A Mr. [redacted] I acknowledge writing the book, but I'm not going to expand beyond what is contained in the book for the reasons reflected in my opening statement.

Q But surely you can concur that the statement was accurate?

A I think I can concur that you have read accurately from the book, which speaks for itself.

Q Okay.

A I'm not disputing your --

Q But your book's accurate, right?

A I'm not going to expand beyond acknowledging that I wrote this book.

Q But you didn't put anything intentionally false in the book, correct?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q Okay. What did you --

A One way or the other.

Q Okay. What did you understand your friends and colleagues to mean when they were urging you to go get him?

A Again, I'm not going to go beyond what is stated in the book, and I assert my rights as reflected in the statement that I made at the outset.

Q And how did you respond to your friends and colleagues when they urged you to go get him?

A I'm not going to answer your questions for the reasons stated.

Chairman Jordan. Did they really say "go get him"?

The Witness. Again, Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to respond beyond what is printed in the book.

Chairman Jordan. Did they not say "go get him"?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer your question.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q What was your opinion of President Trump at the time that you joined the District Attorney's Office?

A I refuse to answer your question on the basis of the rights that are outlined in the statement that I made.

Q What was your opinion of President Trump's actions as President and the policies of the Trump administration at the time you joined the District Attorney's Office?

A For the reasons indicated in my statement, I'm not going to answer your question.

Q On page 129 of your book it states: "Nor was there any conversation about politics, about the 2020 election, the Stop the Steal shenanigans, or whether Trump needed to be prosecuted because his behavior as President was repugnant to us or others."

Sir, was the behavior of the President repugnant to you?

A Mr. [redacted] I respect your right to ask the question, and I hope you'll respect my right not to answer it for the reasons stated. And I refuse to answer it.

Mr. [redacted] We're marking as exhibit 2 some remarks of Justice Jackson.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with this speech that the Attorney General at the time and subsequently Supreme Court Justice Jackson made at the Second Annual Conference of U.S. Attorneys in April of 1940?

A I'm confident I wasn't present. But I'm not going to answer your question whether I'm familiar with the speech from having later become aware of it.

Q Okay. Are you aware that it says in the second sentence: "The prosecutor has more control over life, liberty, and reputation than any other person in America. His discretion is tremendous. He can have citizens investigated and, if he is that kind of person, he can have this done to the tune of public statements and veiled or unveiled intimations."

Are you familiar with that?

A I see it in the exhibit that you've handed me.

Q And do you agree with that statement of Justice Jackson?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q Justice Jackson -- Attorney General Jackson at the time -- further stated: "While the prosecutor at his best is one of the most beneficial forces in our society, when he acts from malice or other base motives, he is one of the worst."

Do you agree with that statement, sir?

A I'm not going to answer your question, Mr. [redacted] for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Q "There is a most important reason why the prosecutor should have, as nearly as possible, a detached and impartial view of all the groups in his community. Law enforcement is not automatic. It isn't blind. One of the greatest difficulties of the position is that he must pick his cases, because no prosecutor can even investigate all of the cases in which he receives complaints.

"What every prosecutor is practically required to do is to select the cases for prosecution and to select those in which the offense is the most flagrant, the public harm the greatest, and the proof the most certain.

"If the prosecutor is obliged to choose his cases, it follows that he can choose his defendants. Therein is the most dangerous power of the prosecutor: that he will pick people that he thinks he should get, rather than pick cases that need to be prosecuted."

Are you familiar with that statement from the former Attorney General?

A I see it in the statement, yes.

Q And do you agree with that?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q "With the law books filled with a great assortment of crimes, a prosecutor stands a fair chance of finding at least a technical violation of some act on the part of almost anyone. In such a case, it is not a question of discovering the commission of a crime and then looking for the man who has committed it, it's a question of picking the man and then searching the law books, or putting the investigators to work, to pin some offense on him."

Do you agree that's a concern?

A I agree that it is reflected in the statement. Beyond that, I'm not prepared to answer your question.

Q "It is in this realm in which the prosecutor picks some person whom he dislikes or desires to embarrass, or selects some group of unpopular persons and then looks for an offense, that the greatest danger of abuse of prosecuting power lies."

Do you agree with that?

A Again, Mr. [redacted] I see that in the statement, and I'm not prepared to respond to the question whether I agree or disagree with it.

Q Are you familiar with the American Bar Association's Criminal Justice Standards, specifically standard 3-1.6?

A For the reasons indicated in my statement, I'm not going to respond to your question.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. I'd like to mark this for the record.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Finzi. 3?

Mr. [redacted] The standard --

Mr. Finzi. Sorry. Is it exhibit 3?

Mr. [redacted] Exhibit 3, yes. And we're looking at standard 3-1.6, improper bias prohibited.

Section (a): "The prosecutor should not manifest or exercise, by words or conduct, bias or prejudice based upon the race, sex, religion, national origin, disability, age, sexual orientation, gender identity, or socioeconomic status. A prosecutor should not use other improper considerations, such as partisan or political or personal considerations, in exercising prosecutorial discretion. A prosecutor should strive to eliminate implicit biases, and act to mitigate any improper bias or prejudice when credibly informed that it exists within the scope of the prosecutor's authority."

Is this type of ABA standard something that the New York County District Attorney's Office follows?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to respond to your question for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Mr. [redacted] "A prosecutor's office" -- this is section (b) -- "A prosecutor's office should be proactive in efforts to detect, investigate, and eliminate improper biases."

Do you think during your time at the New York County District Attorney's Office you were proactive in your efforts to detect, investigate, and eliminate bias?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to respond to your question.

Mr. [redacted] Are you familiar with the Department of Justice's --

Chairman Jordan. What is the specific objection here? Is it -- you cited, I think, three in your opening statement. Which one are you asserting?

The Witness. As to this question, I am asserting all of the bases, both the objection of the District Attorney's Office, the rights indicated in the fifth paragraph of my statement, which refer to the Fifth Amendment guarantee against --

Chairman Jordan. You're asserting -- in your opening statement, you referenced the District Attorney's Office and you may have to assert your Fifth Amendment rights. Are you asserting those now?

The Witness. I am asserting those now.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Issa. Could we have that in the future? Because the record is not clear when you just lump them all together. I think we'd like to know whether it's the Fifth Amendment or specific each one, because if it goes to a judge later, the judge is going to say: Which one? We should have that clear on the record if it's one, two, three, or four different ones. I think the record should be clear.

Mr. Wells. That is a fair comment.

Paragraph 4 of the statement refers to the D.A.'s objections. Paragraph 5 refers to the Fifth Amendment. And paragraph 6 refers to his First Amendment and due process objections.

Mr. Issa. So if you could just --

Mr. Wells. So We will identify.

Mr. Issa. -- state the paragraph each time --

Mr. Wells. We will.

Mr. Issa. -- that would be great.

Mr. Wells. Right.

Mr. Issa. Thank you. The number will be sufficient.

Chairman Jordan. And could we get a copy of the statement?

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. [redacted] And I'll stop briefly. I just want to welcome some of the new members have that have joined us, starting with Mr. Issa.

Do you want to introduce yourself for the record?

Mr. Issa. I'm Congressman Darrell Issa. I have been in a few of these before. I'm from California.

Mr. [redacted] And, Chairman Schiff, down at the end of the table?

Mr. Schiff. I don't have any questions.

Mr. [redacted] No. I'm just introducing you.

Mr. Schiff. Oh, I'm sorry. Adam Schiff from California.

Mr. [redacted] And Ms. Plaskett?

Ms. Plaskett. Good morning. Stacey Plaskett from the Virgin Islands.

Mr. [redacted] And, Mr. Goldman, I'm sorry, sir. How are you?

Mr. Goldman. Dan Goldman, New York.

The Witness. Good morning or afternoon.

Mr. Goldman. Well, it's still morning.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. I'm going to mark as exhibit 4 the Department of Justice -- part of the Justice Department manual -- prosecutor's manual, "Principles of Federal Prosecution."

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Maybe I can get you to answer this question.

You served as a Federal prosecutor, correct?

A I did.

Q And on two separate stints?

A That's correct.

Q Would you be willing to identify for the record when that was?

A Yes. I served as an Assistant United States Attorney from 1978 until 1982, and then I returned to the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York in 1997 where I served as chief of the Criminal Division until mid-1999.

Q And after your time -- in between your time, you also have served as a partner at the Paul, Weiss law firm. Is that fair?

A It was after my time as chief of the Criminal Division that I was a partner at the Paul, Weiss law firm, from March of 2000 until I withdrew from the partnership at the end of 2012.

Q Okay. And have you been a partner at any other law firm?

A Yes.

Q And would you be able to answer that question?

A I can do my best with that.

I was a partner at a small criminal defense boutique known variously as Fischetti & Pomerantz, Fischetti, Pomerantz & Russo. There was one iteration, I think, Fischetti, Feigus & Pomerantz. I was a partner in that firm from 1984 to 1990.

From 1990 to 1997, I was a partner at a law firm then known as Rogers & Wells in New York City.

And for a period of a few months at the beginning of 2000, I was a partner in what had been the Rogers & Wells firm but was from that point forward, beginning January 1st, known as Clifford Chance -- I think it was known as Clifford, Chance, Rogers & Wells for a short period of time.

And I am now a founding principal of a law firm known as the Free and Fair Litigation Group.

Q And as I understand it, you graduated law school from Harvard? Is that correct?

A No. I graduated --

Q Your undergrad was Harvard?

A I graduated undergrad from Harvard. Then I went to law school at the University of Michigan.

Q Okay. Turning back to exhibit 4. During your time at the Justice Department or since you've been with the District Attorney's Office for New York County, are the "Principles of Federal Prosecution," the U.S. Attorneys' Manual, something that you consult or consider guidelines?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection to the extent you're asking him about his office at the D.A.'s Office.

The Witness. Could I have a moment?

Mr. [redacted] Of course.

We'll go off the record while the witness is conferring with his counsel.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] Back on the record.

The Witness. Yes. Thank you.

On the advice of counsel, I will continue to assert my privilege, in particular the privilege referenced in the fifth paragraph of my opening statement, which is the privilege against self-incrimination.

Also, I believe there was an objection from Ms. Dubeck with respect to the position of the Manhattan District Attorney's Office. And as I indicated in the statement, I will honor that objection and refuse to answer.

So there are several bases for refusing to answer that question.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. So one of the bases is your Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination about whether the District Attorney's Office follows or relies on the U.S. Attorneys' Manual as a guideline?

A Yes.

Q Did I get that right?

A You did get that right, yes.

Q Okay.

A Thank you.

Mr. [redacted] And as I understand it, the District Attorney's office has objected to that question, whether the D.A.'s Office considers some of these standards?

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent you're asking about the D.A. Office's considerations, yes.

Mr. [redacted] Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q What was the address of the District Attorney's Office in New York County?

A One Hogan Place, New York, New York.

Q And how frequently did you go to the office when you were a special district attorney? Did you have an office physically at that address?

A The office is located in several buildings around One Hogan Place. It's not all in one contiguous space of offices. There were several office premises.

Having clarified that, I'm not going to answer your question about how often I was physically at the offices of the Manhattan District Attorney.

Q Did you have your own desk there?

A Again, I'm not going to respond to your question.

Q On the basis of what?

A On the basis of the fifth paragraph of my statement. Conveniently, Mr. [redacted] the fifth paragraph relates to the Fifth Amendment.

Q Okay. So really -- so I'm just being clear, and I don't mean to --

A I understand.

Q -- mean any disrespect, but asking the question whether you had a desk at the D.A.'s Office, you're asserting the Fifth Amendment?

Mr. Wells. I think that's what he said.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. Fair enough. Again, I mean no disrespect, sir.

The Witness. Now I'm sure that that's what I said.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q In the book on page 1, you write: "He was responsible for a grave failure of justice."

Who is the "he" in that sentence?

A Well, the book speaks for itself. I don't think there's any ambiguity of the reference.

Q The reference is to the District Attorney Bragg?

A That's how the book reads.

Q Okay. In your book you go through a rather long list of investigative avenues the New York County District Attorney's Office pursued with respect to President Trump, and you refer to the Stormy Daniels matter as the "Zombie" case? Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] What's the basis of that objection?

Ms. Dubeck. To me?

Chairman Jordan. You're the one that objected.

Ms. Dubeck. That you are asking about confidential work of the D.A.'s Office.

Mr. [redacted] Well, I'm asking about the book. There's a whole chapter called "The 'Zombie' Case."

The witness can answer the question. I guess you're not going to answer it, but --

A Well, I'm perfectly happy to acknowledge that the book references the Zombie case, and I think you are correct that one of the chapters refers explicitly to the Zombie case. Yeah, chapter 5 and chapter 3. Chapter 3 refers to the Zombie case, and chapter 5 is entitled "The 'Zombie' Case Returns to the Grave."

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay.

A I'm not sure if I've answered your question, but the book certainly contains those references.

Q And was that a case, the Stormy Daniels payment, was that something that Robert Mueller looked into, to your knowledge, and considered investigating and prosecuting?

A I'm not going to answer that question.

Q On what basis? That's more of a history question, I think.

A Yes. Let me confer for a moment with counsel.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. Yes. On the advice of counsel, I will assert my rights under the Fifth Amendment.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. And the facts of the Zombie case, in your words, were examined by the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York. Is that correct?

A To the extent the book references the facts embodied in your question, I refer you to the book. But I'm not going to elaborate beyond what's stated in the book.

Q Okay.

A I'm not denying what is written in the book obviously. But I'm not going to expand beyond what's written for the reasons indicated in my opening statement.

Q Okay. And do you know why the Southern District of New York's U.S. Attorney's Office decided not to prosecute President Trump on the facts of the Zombie case?

A I'm not going to answer that question on the basis of each of the paragraphs in my statement.

Q And you stated in your book that it was during the time frame of the spring and summer of 2019, is that correct, that the U.S. Attorney's office was examining the facts of the Zombie case?

A I'm not going to respond to your statement beyond referencing what's in the book.

Q Okay. Are you invoking the Fifth Amendment for that particular one or --

A Yes.

Q And as I understand it, the next --

A I think also the fourth paragraph of my statement.

Q The fourth paragraph. Okay.

A Which references to --

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent you're asking for knowledge he obtained at the D.A.'s Office, I object.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q When did you join the D.A.'s Office? You can tell us that?

A I was sworn in as a special assistant district attorney on February 2nd, 2021.

Q Okay. So the facts I'm asking you about, you know, occurred before you became affiliated with the office?

A I think we can all acknowledge that 2019 occurred before 2021.

Q Right. But did --

A So I'm not taking issue with your statement.

Q Right. But did you learn about the fact that the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York decided -- looked at the Zombie case, the Stormy Daniels payments, and decided not to prosecute? Did you know that information before you came to the New York County District Attorney's Office?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q Based on?

A The Fifth Amendment.

Q Okay.

A And the fifth paragraph of my statement.

Q Before your tenure at the District Attorney's Office, in the fall of 2019, you write in your book the office examined the facts of the Zombie case, the Stormy Daniels payment, and commissioned an outside law firm to help the office analyze these questions.

Do you know what law firm that was?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Yeah. I refuse to answer on the basis of the fourth paragraph of my statement and the fifth paragraph of my statement.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

The Witness. I'm assuming that that's clear and you don't need me to elaborate further since you have the statement.

Mr. [redacted] The fourth iteration of the Zombie case, the Stormy Daniels payment, you were a key player in, am I correct, as I understand your book?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, I will invoke my rights not to answer the question for the reasons referenced in my statement.

Mr. [redacted] And so the fourth iteration of the Zombie case you studied whether there was a money laundering theory to pursue?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. [redacted] Which one is that? Sorry.

The Witness. I was referencing the answer I gave to the just previous question where I think I referenced both the fourth and fifth paragraph of my opening statement.

Mr. [redacted] And as I understand your book -- and hopefully you can correct me if I get this wrong -- but the legal theory there was President Trump -- I guess he was candidate Trump at this time -- was a victim of extortion. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer as to the last question, if that's acceptable.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. No, but I'm just asking -- I'm just trying to understand this legal theory as you write in your book.

A I understand your question.

Q Okay.

A But for the reasons indicated, I'm not going to go beyond what's stated in the book.

Q Okay. So President Trump, under the fourth iteration of the Zombie case, President Trump as a victim of extortion could be prosecuted for money laundering. Is that -- do I have that understanding right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] Or is that the theory you were pursuing?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to answer the question.

Chairman Jordan. Well, you say right here in the second paragraph on page 60: "In the Trump case, this meant that Clifford had not committed larceny by extortion until she or her lawyer received the hush money payment that Michael Cohen agreed to pay on Trump's behalf."

So you write it right here in the book, but you won't answer the question when

Mr. [redacted] describes exactly what you wrote in the book?

The Witness. Actually, I don't think [redacted] question embodied what was written in the book. But in any case, I'm asserting my privileges with respect to this question.

Chairman Jordan. Did you really write the book, Mr. Pomerantz?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [redacted] And then towards the end of your tenure at the District Attorney's Office, there was a -- as I understand it from your book, and you talk about this on page 61, then page 209 -- another attempt to prosecute the Stormy Daniels Zombie matter at the end of the investigation.

Can you tell us anything about that?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't answer that question, and I'm relying with respect to this question on all of the rights reflected in the statement.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q So, if I may, I'll just read on page 209. "Because we were now contemplating an indictment that featured false business records, Carey and I" -- and who's Carey, by the way?

A I think the book references Carey as Carey Dunn.

Q Okay. "--- spoke about reviving the hush money allegations, which would bring the 'Zombie' theory back from the dead once again. The thought was to charge as false business records not only the documents relating to the SOFCs" -- which stands for statements of financial condition, is that correct, SOFC?

A I think the book defines SOFC as you've indicated. It's an abbreviation for statement of financial condition.

Q Okay. " -- relating to the SOFCs but also the phony invoices for 'legal services' that had been used to reimburse Michael Cohen for the money he had paid to Stephanie Clifford."

Do you remember that incident or that part of the case during your time at the New York County District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question for the reasons indicated.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. During your time at the District Attorney's Office, you also examined a number of other potential avenues to prosecute President Trump. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer, if that's acceptable to you.

Mr. [redacted] You looked at several of President Trump's golf properties, the Briarcliff Golf Club, the Trump National Golf Club, the Jupiter golf course. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, I will rely on the rights articulated in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of my statement.

Mr. [redacted] You examined whether President Trump could be indicted for defrauding Deutsche Bank. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. [redacted] Did Deutsche Bank ever indicate to you that they felt like they were a victim of fraud?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response. Again, I'm relying on the rights referenced in, I believe, paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of my statement.

Mr. [redacted] You examined whether President Trump could be indicted in New York for papers he submitted to GSA as part of the Old Post Office Hotel that he was attempting to acquire and redevelop. Is that correct?

The Witness. Same answer. I guess same response.

Mr. [redacted] You examined during your time in the New York District Attorney's Office whether President Trump could be prosecuted in New York over the Trump International Hotel and Tower in Chicago?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response. Again, I'm trying to just save time and energy. If you want me to elaborate, I will do so.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, did you violate any person's constitutional rights while you worked at the Manhattan D.A.'s Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, did you violate any person's constitutional rights when you worked on the Trump investigation?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have the same response to your question.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever violate any canons of legal ethics while you worked at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you violate any canons of legal ethics when you were investigating President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you violate any New York State Bar rules while you were working in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you violate any New York State Bar rules while you were investigating President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you misuse any Federal funds while you were working in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you misuse any Federal funds while investigating President Trump?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you break any laws when you worked at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you knowingly break any laws when investigating President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Yield back.

Chairman Jordan. When did you sign the book deal?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer your question, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons indicated.

Chairman Jordan. I'm not asking about what's in it. We already know you're not going to talk about what you said you wrote. I just want to know when you signed the agreement on the book.

The Witness. Yes. And I'm not going to answer that question in reliance on paragraphs 5 and 6 of my statement.

Chairman Jordan. When did you tell the D.A.'s Office you were thinking about writing the book?

The Witness. Likewise, not going to answer that question.

Chairman Jordan. Who's the publisher of the book?

The Witness. Simon & Schuster.

Chairman Jordan. Did they come to you or did you go to them?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question sir.

Chairman Jordan. Did you get an advance for the book?

The Witness. I'm also not going to answer that question.

Chairman Jordan. When did you start writing the book?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question either, for the reasons indicated, although I'm not referencing paragraph 4 of my statement in that regard. That's paragraphs 5 and 6.

Chairman Jordan. How did you select the title?

The Witness. The same answers.

Mr. Armstrong. In your opening statement, you said the Manhattan D.A.'s Office warned you, you could face criminal liability.

You're asserting your -- asserting Fifth Amendment privilege.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Armstrong. Who in the D.A.'s Office told you that?

The Witness. The reference in my statement to -- the comment that was made in open court on April 19th, I believe, was a reference to statements made by Ms. Dubeck, if I'm not mistaken.

Mr. Armstrong. So when was that? I'm sorry.

The Witness. The statement in paragraph --

Mr. Armstrong. 5?

The Witness. 4. Oh, yes, you're right, paragraph 5, says: "When we were before the United States District Court on April 19th, a lawyer from the Manhattan District Attorney's Office said that my book, quote, 'exposed me to criminal liability.'" I think the "me" should be in brackets, by the way.

That was Ms. Dubeck.

Mr. Armstrong. Has there been any follow-up since then with you directly?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question, sir.

Mr. Armstrong. Are you aware of an active investigation?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question.

Mr. Armstrong. Are you aware of any similar investigation?

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. Armstrong. Any convictions?

The Witness. Conviction?

Mr. Armstrong. It's public record. Are you aware of any other similar convictions?

The Witness. Not of me. I can answer that.

Mr. Armstrong. Okay.

The Witness. The reference -- never mind. I'll wait for the next question.

Mr. Armstrong. All right.

Mr. [redacted] You also, while you were at the New York County District Attorney's Office, pursued matters at Mar-a-Lago in Florida for investigation?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] Is that correct?

The Witness. I won't answer based on the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

Mr. [redacted] The Seven Springs property and the easement, conservation easement, you pursued that as an avenue to investigate or indict President Trump? Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. [redacted] You pursued the Trump property at 40 Wall Street, which is in Manhattan, correct?

The Witness. 40 Wall Street is in Manhattan.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection to the balance of the question.

Mr. [redacted] So the objection is to whether you pursued the 40 Wall Street as an avenue to investigate or prosecute President Trump?

The Witness. Yes. And I'm not going to answer that question.

Mr. [redacted] You also looked at his -- something you referred to as the triplex apartment in Trump Tower as an avenue to potentially indict or prosecute him for overstating the square footage or value of the property. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you know any of the Members of Congress on this committee?

The Witness. Sorry?

Ms. Stefanik. Do you know any of the Members of Congress on this committee?

The Witness. I do not.

Ms. Stefanik. So you've never had any conversations with Dan Goldman, Adam Schiff, Darrell Issa, Jim Jordan, myself, Kelly Armstrong ever?

The Witness. I believe that's correct.

Ms. Stefanik. How long have you known Cy Vance?

The Witness. Bear with me for one moment, if you would.

Mr. [redacted] Go off the record?

The Witness. Yes. Thank you.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. On the advice of counsel, I'll invoke my right not to answer the question under the fifth paragraph.

Ms. Stefanik. Under the Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [redacted] Of how well you know Cy Vance? Is that right?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted] could you wait until the noise in the hallway is gone?

Mr. [redacted] Absolutely. We're off the record here as we're dealing with the sound.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Stefanik. Do you respect Cy Vance?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question. Intending no disrespect to either you or Mr. Vance --

Ms. Stefanik. So you do respect Cy Vance?

The Witness. -- I'm refusing to answer.

Ms. Stefanik. You respect Cy Vance, your public comments, your extensive respect for his tenure at the District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. Yes, I won't answer that question.

Ms. Stefanik. Yes, you won't answer it or, yes, you respect Cy Vance?

The Witness. I won't answer the question.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you view Cy Vance as political?

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question.

Ms. Stefanik. Under what basis?

The Witness. On the basis of my privilege against self-incrimination.

Ms. Stefanik. So you're asserting the Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you -- how long have you known Alvin Bragg?

The Witness. Same answer.

Ms. Stefanik. Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes, ma'am.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you respect Alvin Bragg?

The Witness. Same answer.

Ms. Stefanik. Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. Stefanik. Are you keeping track of how many times he has asserted his Fifth?

Do you view Alvin Bragg as political?

The Witness. I have the same response to your question.

Ms. Stefanik. And you are aware in your book you wrote very specifically on page 204 that Alvin Bragg is a political actor? I'm sorry, 264.

The Witness. Yes. The book states: "Like all elected prosecutors, Alvin Bragg is a political actor."

Ms. Stefanik. And the book also states: "He cares deeply about his progressive agenda."

The Witness. I believe you're quoting accurately from the book.

Ms. Stefanik. Quoting accurately from the book that you yourself wrote, as you just said in this deposition.

The Witness. I've acknowledged writing the book.

Ms. Stefanik. Yes.

Do you recall Alvin Bragg's 2021 campaign for District Attorney.

The Witness. Yes, I won't answer that question in reliance upon my constitutional rights as reflected in my statement.

Ms. Stefanik. The fifth paragraph, Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. And the sixth.

Ms. Stefanik. Alvin Bragg --

The Witness. Paragraph, not amendment.

Ms. Stefanik. I understand.

Alvin Bragg's campaign communicated to voters of his involvement in lawsuits targeting President Trump. Is that your recollection as a native New Yorker?

The Witness. Oh. Yeah, I won't answer that question in reliance on my Fifth Amendment rights.

Ms. Stefanik. Did you tell anyone to vote for Alvin Bragg in either the primary or general election?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question.

Ms. Stefanik. Your book says you did. And the book is true, correct?

The Witness. The book speaks for itself.

Ms. Stefanik. And it's true?

The Witness. I'm not going to go beyond the book.

Ms. Stefanik. So there are no lies in the book? You stand fully behind this publication under your name?

The Witness. That's correct.

Ms. Stefanik. Did you know Alvin Bragg before he became D.A.? Had you ever met him before or worked with him before?

[11:06 a.m.]

The Witness. No.

Ms. Stefanik. What was your assessment of Alvin Bragg as an attorney?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question.

Ms. Stefanik. Have you always been compensated for your legal services prior to your work for the New York District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. No.

Ms. Stefanik. What example were you not compensated? Just give us a few examples.

The Witness. I did particular matters on a pro bono basis.

Ms. Stefanik. And why did you decide not to be compensated, or not to pursue compensation in the case for the New York District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. No, I won't answer that question on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights, insofar as it relates to my work at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

Ms. Stefanik. How would you describe the culture in the District Attorney's Office under Alvin Bragg.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer on the basis of the District Attorney's Office objection and my rights under the Fifth Amendment.

Ms. Stefanik. How would you describe the culture in the District Attorney's Office under Cy Vance.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Ms. Stefanik. On page 58 in your book -- which you have said your book is accurate and factual, "My creative theorizing smacked into District Attorney New York's cautious and conservative culture, as it would several times during my tenure."

So you had challenges working through the culture of the District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't go beyond what is written in the book in responding to your question. I believe you --

Ms. Stefanik. Accurately quoted it?

The Witness. Accurately quoted it, yes.

Chairman Jordan. What about the day one memo? What are your thoughts on that?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. Goldman. Sorry. Which rights?

The Witness. My Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. Goldman. Are you invoking the paragraph six with respect to legislative purpose as well?

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. I think it's our hour.

[redacted]

BY MR. [redacted]

Q On page 22 of your book, you referred to President Trump as an "unscrupulous wheeler-dealer. Is that correct?

A Bear with me one moment, if you would.

Did you say page 26?

Q 22.

A 22.

The book indicates, I'm quoting, "I had heard stories 35 years earlier from lawyers who had represented Trump in his business dealings, and I took from those stories that he was an unscrupulous wheeler-dealer."

Q On page 23, you state, "I was not a fan."

A That's a correct -- that line would appear in the book, and you've accurately quoted.

Q On page 98, you refer to the President's "narcissistic personality."

A Correct.

Q On page 99, you state, "Trump was incredibly cheap and completely dishonest."

A That's not correct. The language you are quoting omits the introduction to that --

Q Okay. Fair enough.

A -- verbiage. That is what -- the book indicates that Cohen -- the reference there is to Michael Cohen.

Q Okay.

A Cohen -- again, I'm quoting here, "Cohen also told us that Trump was incredibly cheap and completely dishonest in many of his business dealings."

So in this respect, the book is reciting what information had been relayed by Michael Cohen.

Q On page 103, your book states, "Trump, though, was not just a pathological liar, but a hapless, arrogant, and horrible liar." Is that correct?

A It's correct that that is -- yes, the book -- you've accurately quoted from the book.

Q On page 109, there's a reference to President Trump being a "bully."

A The book contains that reference, yes, sir.

Q I believe you state -- the sentence says, "He was also a bully who cultivated a reputation as a tough guy."

A You've accurately quoted from the book.

Q On the same page, you go on to compare President Trump to John Gotti, the head of the Gambino organized crime family. Is that correct?

A There is a reference to Mr. Gotti, and the book speaks for itself in that regard.

Q Okay.

Mr. Issa. May I ask a quick question?

Mr. [redacted] Okay.

Mr. Issa. A few minutes ago, the congresswoman asked you, and you answered that you stand fully behind the book. The book is correct. Do you remember saying that?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. Issa. So you didn't take your -- you waived your Fifth Amendment, and answered the question that the book in its entirety is correct.

My only question to you is, will you answer individual questions since you answered that the entire book is correct? You didn't say it speaks for itself. You said it's correct.

So having answered once that the book is correct, could you please answer for the counsel specifics of if something is correct or not correct? I don't understand where the nuance is.

The Witness. Can we have a moment?

Mr. Issa. Yeah.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] Back on the record?

Mr. Finzi. Is there a question pending?

Mr. [redacted] Mr. Issa asked whether he would -- you said -- you know, you testified today that the book is accurate in response to Ms. Stefanik.

And Mr. Issa just asked -- Mr. Issa can jump in if I --

Mr. Issa. If the book is accurate in its totality, then why are you not answering individual questions about accuracy? Or can we take that the answer in every case is yes, yes, and yes?

Mr. Finzi. With all respect, we indicated at the beginning that we were not going to debate assertions of privilege. We are asserting the privilege. We are not going to debate whether it's appropriate or not.

Mr. Issa. I'm sorry. The Fifth Amendment and it being waived or not waived is fairly clear. If you answer a question related to something, and you've answered it, then a follow-up is based on the waive as to that.

Now, if your client wants to reengage and simply say, I now am in peril having said that the book is correct, and you now want to take the Fifth every other time, we'll understand.

But I just wanted to clarify, because he had answered that every single nuance of this book effectively by saying the book is correct. He's been very careful with his words. I simply wanted to point that out and ask, would he answer questions that the counsel is asking that are a breakdown of Ms. Stefanik's question?

Mr. Wells. So the record is clear, I will direct him not to answer any questions.

There is no intent to waive the Fifth Amendment in any respect. The book speaks for himself. But I understand your -- I understand your argument.

And as we said at the beginning, the time and place to debate the merits of any of these arguments will be if and when we get in front of a court.

Ms. Dubeck. And I think you have restated the question differently than it was asked. But to the extent --

Mr. Issa. Could we have it read back? I think that's worth our time.

Mr. [redacted] Can we go off the record?

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] Okay. Back on the record.

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent that was the import of the question, I object.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, do you know --

Mr. Issa. He answered.

Ms. Dubeck. Yes. It's on record.

Mr. Issa. The cat is out of the bag.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, do you know what a subject matter waiver is relative to the Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. I'm not going to debate my understanding of the Fifth Amendment with you, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. But you've heard of a subject matter waiver before, right?

The Witness. I'm not going to indicate my knowledge of the Fifth Amendment and its application.

Mr. Gaetz. I yield back.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Getting back to the John Gotti statement on page 109, you write in your book -- which you've indicated to Ms. Stefanik as true -- "In my career as a lawyer, I had encountered only one other person who touched all of these bases: John Gotti, the head of the Gambino organized crime family and the so-called Teflon Don."

Is that a fair reading of your book?

A Yes, you read it accurately.

Q On page 112, you refer to the President as "a master of breaking the law." Did I get that correct?

A The full sentence is, "Trump had become a master of breaking the law in ways that were difficult to reach."

Q On page 176 and 177, you write, "I saw him as a malignant narcissist, and perhaps even a megalomaniac who posed a real danger to the country and to the ideals that matter to me. His behavior made me angry, sad, and even disgusted."

Did I read that correctly? Is that what you wrote about President Trump?

A You read it correctly. You omitted the following sentence, which reads that "On a professional level, I could not allow my emotional reaction to Trump to affect my activities. It was completely irrelevant."

Q And is that true? Did your feelings about President Trump affect your work at the New York County District Attorney's Office where you were working for free?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't go beyond the statement in the book.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q On page 186, you posit the question of whether Former President Trump was suffering from some sort of mental condition that made it impossible for him to distinguish between fact and fiction.

Is there a mental condition that you're aware of that makes it difficult for individuals that are afflicted with such a mental condition to distinguish between fact and fiction?

A I refuse to answer your question, Mr. [redacted] on the bases indicated in my statement.

Q On page 220 --

Mr. Issa. Are we back to paragraph five again?

The Witness. Paragraph five and paragraph six.

Mr. Issa. Okay.

Mr. Wells. So the record is clear -- and I respect the Congressman's concern -- every objection or refusal to answer today has included paragraph five, the Fifth Amendment. There are some objections where, in addition to the Fifth Amendment, paragraph four, which is the prosecutor's objection, or paragraph six, proper legislative purpose.

But every objection today -- so there's no confusion, so we're all on the same page -- involves paragraph five, an assertion of the Fifth.

Mr. Issa. The only reason I'm asking --

Mr. Wells. Oh, I understand. I actually agree with you.

I would urge my client --

Mr. Issa. If we could assert four, five, six, or five, six, so that we know what we're --

Mr. Wells. You and I are on the same page.

Mr. Issa. I love the shortcut, though.

Mr. Wells. Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q On page 225, you, in your book, write, "I was worried I'd become a Johnny

One Note, always arguing the reasons for prosecuting Trump until I was blue in the face and nobody wanted to hear from me anymore."

Or I'm sorry. I read that incorrectly. "And nobody wanted to hear me anymore."

Did I read that correctly, at least the second time?

A Yes. Yes, sir.

Q And was that true?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Ms. Stefanik. The book is true. He has already answered that the book is true.

The Witness. The book speaks for itself.

Mr. [redacted] Mr. Jordan?

Chairman Jordan. On page 170 of the book, you say, "I thought there might be an argument that Trump" -- and you're referring to President Trump there -- "having assumed an office that required him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and having urged the country to trust him to uphold the law, should be held to a higher standard." And the word "higher" is in a different font.

Do you really believe that? Because in the very next paragraph, you say -- you quote our second President, and you say, "We're a Nation of laws and not men," and then "No one is above the law, to the equal treatment of the law."

And I'm trying to figure out which statement do you believe.

The Witness. I am not understanding why you believe there is a tension between those statements.

Mr. [redacted] Let me refer you --

Ms. Stefanik. Why do you believe there's no tension between those statements?

Chairman Jordan. Is it equal treatment under the law, or it Donald Trump held to a higher standard than everyone else in the county -- every other citizen in the country?

The Witness. I'm not going to go beyond my book. I think the intent of the language is plain.

Mr. Issa. What reason are you not going beyond the statement that you made?

The Witness. Because I'm not required to do so.

Mr. Issa. Under what?

The Witness. Under either the Fifth Amendment or, in my view, the First Amendment and the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment as well, which indicates, as I understand it, that I cannot be punished for refusing to answer questions that are -- that relate to activities and views that are protected by the First Amendment.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Just to put a final point on what Mr. Jordan was getting at, on page 260, you write, "In my mind, the same evidentiary standard should apply to Presidents and paupers alike."

And I think Mr. Jordan was trying to make the point that, on 170, you wrote, "I thought there might be an argument that Trump, having assumed an office that required him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, should be held to a higher standard of personal conduct."

Isn't that --

Chairman Jordan. Yep.

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent you're asking about his thinking while he was at the District Attorney's Office, I object.

Chairman Jordan. We're asking about the thinking he articulated in his book.

Mr. Issa. If you don't mind, if you're going to object, will you also instruct the witness not to answer?

Ms. Dubeck. I was told I am not allowed to instruct the witness --

Mr. [redacted] Yeah, we have an agreement where she is not going to do that.

Mr. Issa. Oh, I apologize. Thank you.

Mr. Finzi. Is there a question pending?

Mr. [redacted] Yes.

Mr. Finzi. What is it?

Mr. [redacted] I was referring, on page 260, he states, "In my mind, the same evidentiary standard should apply to Presidents and paupers alike." But on page 170, he writes that there might be a higher standard of personal conduct for President Trump.

I'm asking the witness to reconcile those two statements.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question on the basis of the fifth paragraph of my statement and the sixth paragraph.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. I believe our hour is up.

Mr. Finzi. Okay. Is this a good time for a break?

Mr. [redacted] Yes, sir. We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

Ms. [redacted] Good morning. We can go back on the record. It's 11:46.

Mr. Pomerantz, thank you, again, for joining us.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q In the first hour, you talked through your length of service as a prosecutor prior to joining the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

Can you remind me again how many years you served as a prosecutor?

A I served 6 years en toto as a Federal prosecutor, one stint for 4 years, and then for just shy of 2 years as criminal division chief.

Q And during that time period, did you ever face discipline for committing any type of prosecutorial misconduct?

A No.

Q Okay. And then after you left public service -- or, I guess, between your public service stints, you were in private practice, right?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever face discipline for violating any provision of the New York State Bar code of ethics?

A No.

Q What about any other bar rules?

A No.

Q For any other jurisdiction?

A I did not.

Q Okay. What day did you resign from the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

A February 23rd, 2022.

May I have one moment?

Q Sure.

Ms. [redacted] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted] We can go back on.

The Witness. I understood your question to relate to the period prior to my service at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Correct. Correct. Prior to your service at the Manhattan District

Attorney's Office.

A Yes. Thank you.

Q And also with respect to the violation of have you violated any provision of the bar code of ethics or any other legal ethics requirements prior to your service with the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

A Yes, that's how I understood your question.

Q Okay. And I'm sorry. You resigned from the District Attorney's Office on what day?

A February 23rd, 2022.

Q Okay. And before you resigned on February 4th, 2022, you made a presentation to the District Attorney's Office, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Yes. I'll refuse to answer on the same basis that I indicated previously.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. And during that presentation -- this is from page 221 of your book -- you said that you made this presentation to all of the prosecutors involved in this matter, and you, quote, "began by pointing out the fabrication of values in the SOFCs had been pervasive, substantial, and continuous over many years," right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have the same response --

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Understood.

A Although I acknowledge the statement you read from the book, which reads, "En toto, I began by pointing out that the fabrication of values in the SOFCs had been pervasive, substantial, and continuous over many years."

Q And we talked through earlier in the first hour and it's clarified in your book that SOFC stands for statements of financial condition, correct?

A That is correct.

Q I want to talk through some examples briefly of the statements of financial condition and the references to -- I'm sorry -- the references of values assigned to Mr. Trump's golf courses.

On page 150 of your book, you say that "Trump had bought the Jupiter golf course" -- which is, I believe, a reference to the Jupiter Florida golf course -- "in December 2012 for 5 million, but it was reflected on the backup materials to the 2013 SOFC as being worth $62 million as of June 30th, 2013," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question on the basis of the rights referenced in my statement. In this instance, with respect to all of the rights referenced in the statement.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Understood. You continue on on pages 150 to 151 to describe an accounting scheme, potentially, that Mr. Trump engaged in.

And then on page 151, you say that, through this scheme, Trump was able to claim, quote, "a low value when dealing with the tax assessor, but a vastly higher value in the financial statement that was given to his bankers," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. On the following --

Mr. Goldman. Same answer, meaning it was accurately read from the book, but you're not going to expand on it?

The Witness. That's true, although I note the book makes a reference to, as Michael Cohen had testified, Trump was claiming a low value in dealing with the tax assessor, and then it goes on from there.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And it says up above that, "The bottom line was that the numbers on Trump's 2013 financial statement included a purported value for the Jupiter golf course of 62 million. Trump had paid only 5 million to buy it just a few months earlier, and he later sued the Palm Beach County tax authorities, arguing that they should have respected the fact that he bought the property in an arm's-length transaction for only $5 million," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. And I'm refusing to answer that question for the reasons indicated.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. On the following page, you discuss Trump's triplex apartment.

You say that "Trump's statements of financial condition" -- SOFCs -- "for 2015 and 2016 reported the value of the apartment at $327 million, an amount much higher than the price anyone has ever paid for a private residence in the United States from the beginning of the country through 2021," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. And you continue on and say, "The accounting backup for the valuation of Trump's triplex reflected that its value over $300 million was based largely on its reported size of 30,000 square feet," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. And then you go on and you say that there was an article published in Forbes that reported that the Trump triplex was actually just shy of 11,000 square feet," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And you say that on the basis of expert valuations, your experts later pegged the actual reasonable value of the triplex at roughly $16 million, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q So in these paragraphs, you lay out a scheme where Mr. Trump initially valued his apartment at $327 million and said it was 30,000 square feet, but in fact, you have evidence or you obtained evidence showing that the apartment was actually 10,996 square feet and was valued at roughly $60 million, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. I should make clear, in respect of these questions where the district attorney has objected, I am asserting rights referenced in both the fourth and the fifth paragraph of my opening statement?

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Understood. You --

A And the sixth paragraph as well.

Q On page 186 of your book, you describe Trump's valuations from Mar-a-Lago, and you say, "Trump's valuations from Mar-a-Lago in the 7 years reviewed in detail by our experts had exceeded the actual reasonable value of the property by an average of more than 1,000 percent per year," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. I want to turn back to the discussion about the February 4th meeting, which is on page 221.

You say that "Our experts" -- meaning the experts with the Manhattan District Attorney's Office -- "had put together some charts with yearly statistics on the purchase and sale of golf properties," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q It says, the charts apparently showed that, quote, Trump's valuations with his golf courses were literally off the chart, correct?

The Witness. Same response.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm sorry. I should have waited for Ms. Dubeck to object. But no harm done.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You say, "I argued that he had to have known this because he was a real estate entrepreneur in the business of building, owning, and running golf courses, just as he surely knew that the apartment he built and in which he lived had not contained 30,000 square feet," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for the reasons previous stated.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And you continue on, "The brazen, pervasive, and outlandish nature of the overvaluations, I argued, was important proof of Trump's intent," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And you say that -- in the February 4th presentation, you continued on, "I then spoke about the evidence tying Trump to the preparation of the financial statements," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. You say that "I noted that the SOFCs on their face were directed to Trump, contained language saying that he was responsible for their preparation and presentation, and repeated over and over that the valuations had been, quote, "prepared by Mr. Trump," end quote, working in conjunction with others, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q "The assets described in the SOFCs were the assets that Trump had spent his business life to build and acquire. Trump, as a person obsessed with his wealth and net worth, surely had familiarized himself with the SOFCs and how they had been prepared," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q "And he had certified time and again that the SOFCs had accurately presented his financial condition."

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for the reasons stated.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You continue on, "I next displayed some documents reflecting Trump's review of the financial statements and addressed some witness testimony that we had gathered from the Attorney General or civil case files."

You said, "The testimony established that Weisselberg and Trump had reviewed the SOFCs before they were finalized, and at least some of the valuations had come directly from Trump, though Weisselberg and Jeff McConney, the Trump organization comptroller, had been key players," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You then describe some of the admissions that came out in a defamation case brought against Mr. Trump by an individual named Tim O'Brien. You say, During that defamation case, quote, "Trump did not distance himself from the asset values in the financial statements. On the contrary, he complained that they were too low," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You say, "I emphasized Trump's extraordinary control over the Trump organization, financial workings, including his personal signing of checks, close review of expenses, and approval of the financial terms on which every new member joined one of his golf clubs," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You continue on, "During the presentation, you next turned to Trump's history of making up facts regarding his wealth. I spoke about the evidence we had received from Jonathan Greenberg, including the John Barron tapes, and Trump's correspondence with the Forbes staff regarding his wealth," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And the John Barron tapes is a reference to language earlier in your book reporting on an interaction that Trump had had with Jonathan Greenberg, a reporter who worked at Forbes Magazine, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't answer that question.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. And the description given in your book is that "Mr. Greenberg had taped a conversation in which Trump had falsely passed himself off as John Barron, a vice president and finance officer working for the Trump family. In fact, there was no John Barron. Only Trump posing as Mr. Barron," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Back to page 223, you say in your presentation, "I also alluded to the information that Forbes had made public regarding Trump's net worth obsession, his admission that he had tried to mislead Forbes about his wealth, and his statement that a high net worth, was quote, "good for financing," end quote, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You continue on, "I argued that the back-and-forth that Trump had with Forbes over the years on which the magazine had reported had put Trump on notice that his asset values were unreasonable," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And you say, "Yet the pattern continued, and Trump had not taken any of the steps he could have taken if he wanted to ensure their accuracy," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for the reasons indicated.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You say, "I then turned to Trump's many public statements and tweets about his wealth, noting that those statements helped prove that the size of his net worth was of central importance to Trump's public persona," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. So getting back to your February 23rd, 2022 resignation, you wrote a letter before you resigned, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Goldman. It's a simple fact. It's public.

The Witness. May I have a moment?

Ms. [redacted] Sure.

Ms. Dubeck. Our position was that the letter should not be published. Objection.

The Witness. May I have a moment with counsel?

Ms. [redacted] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. Goldman. Can we go back on the record?

Your position is also that the book shouldn't have been published, but we've acknowledged the existence of the book, and we've discussed the contents of the book as being the same thing for his letter of resignation. The fact of his letter of resignation can't undo the fact of his letter of resignation.

Ms. Dubeck. Submit it to the fact and reask the question.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. Prior to your resignation, you wrote a resignation letter, correct?

A I wrote a resignation letter.

Q Okay. And that resignation letter is included in your book at pages 248 to 251, correct?

A The book speaks for itself.

Q I want to turn to page 248.

The resignation letter reads, "I write to tender my resignation as a special assistant district attorney and to explain my reasons for resigning. As you know from our recent conversations and presentations, I believe that Donald Trump is guilty of numerous felony violations of the penal law in connection with the preparation and use of his annual statements of financial condition," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not sure what the question is. If the question is whether that language was included in the resignation letter which appears in the book, the book speaks for itself, and that language does appear.

As you understand, I hope, I'm not going to go beyond the language reflected in the letter or ask -- answer questions about it. But the letter is set forth in the book, and I acknowledge having written the letter.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q So to clarify for the record, do you believe that Donald Trump is guilty of numerous felony violations of the penal law in connection with the preparation and use of his annual financial statements -- I'm sorry -- his annual statements of financial condition?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to comment about the letter beyond acknowledging that it was written and it appears in the book.

Mr. Goldman. Can you review the letter and tell us if there's any reference in the letter to a case against Donald Trump related to a charge of falsifying books and records?

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Dubeck. I object to the question.

Mr. Goldman. Based on what?

Ms. Dubeck. Asking for words beyond what is in the letter -- the intent behind the letter.

Mr. Goldman. We're just asking whether those words are in the letter or not as he sits here and reads the letter.

The Witness. Are the words "falsifying business records" in the letter?

Mr. Goldman. Yes. Books and records, specifically.

The Witness. The letter referred to financial statements as false. It does not use the language "false books and records."

Mr. Goldman. Does it reference Stormy Daniels or Stephanie Clifford?

The Witness. The letter does not reference Stormy Daniels or Stephanie Clifford.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And to clarify, your February 4th, 2023 presentation -- nowhere in your book does it say that that presentation referenced Stephanie Clifford or Stormy Daniels, correct?

A Again, I think the book speaks for itself in that regard, and I'm not going to provide editorial comment to it.

Mr. Goldman. It's just a factual question, not an editorial question.

The Witness. As a factual matter, you are correct, sir.

Ma'am. Sorry. Ma'am and sir.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q In your letter, you say that "In fact, Mr. Vance concluded that the facts warranted prosecution, and he directed the team to present evidence to a grand jury and to seek an indictment of Mr. Trump and other defendants as soon as reasonably possible," correct?

A The letter contains that language, and you've read it accurately.

Q Okay. And the reference to presenting evidence to a grand jury and seeking an indictment of Mr. Trump, that's a reference to the evidence involving inflated property values, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A Well, I won't enlarge on the meaning of what is written in the letter.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay.

A I'm not taking issue with your reading of it, but I'm not going to comment further.

Q Okay. You say that after Mr. Bragg took office, he decided not to pursue that financial -- that inflation of properties case. And you say, "I do not question your authority to make it" -- meaning this decision -- "and I accept that you have made it sincerely. However, a decision made in good faith may nevertheless be wrong," correct?

A That language appears in the letter, and the letter appears in the book.

Q And you continue on, "In my view, the public interest warrants the criminal prosecution of Mr. Trump, and such a prosecution should be brought without any further delay," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Object to anything beyond what is in the letter, what is printed in the book.

The Witness. And I won't go beyond what is printed in the book and in the letter.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And then in the second-to-last paragraph on page 250, you say, "To the extent you have raised issues as to the legal and factual sufficiency of our case and the likelihood that a prosecution would succeed, I and others have advised you that we have evidence sufficient to establish Mr. Trump's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and we believe that the prosecution would prevail if charges were brought and the matter were tried to an impartial jury," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. That, again, was a reference to a criminal -- potential criminal charges based on Mr. Trump's alleged inflation of property values, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't go -- I won't elaborate beyond the language of the letter as it appears in the book.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. Mr. Pomerantz, is it accurate that you resigned because District Attorney Bragg would not pursue the case that you believe you had made out?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. Goldman. What was the objection?

Ms. Dubeck. That his decision-making and thinking at the time he resigned was based on confidential and privileged information.

The Witness. I think I already responded to that question.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. We're going to move on from your book, sir.

Are you familiar with Bragg v. Jordan, which is Southern District of New York case number 123-CV-3032-MKV?

A May I have a moment?

Ms. [redacted]. We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted]. We can go back on the record.

The Witness. I am familiar with the lawsuit you referenced in your question.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. You submitted a declaration in that lawsuit, correct?

A That is correct.

Ms. [redacted] Okay. I want to introduce this as Exhibit No. 5.

Mr. Finzi. Number five?

Ms. [redacted] Number five.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q In paragraph three of this declaration, you state that you were sworn in as a special district attorney in New York County on February 2nd, 2021, correct?

A Yes.

Q And I think you testified earlier that that is the date that you were sworn in, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. And in that same paragraph, you state that you resigned from this position on February 23rd, 2022, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you testified earlier that that is accurate? You did, in fact, resign on February 23rd, 2022?

A I did, in fact, resign on February 23rd, 2022.

Q District Attorney Bragg took office on January 1st, 2022, correct?

A Yes.

Q So doing the math, this means that your tenure at the District Attorney's Office overlapped with his time there for only about maybe 8 weeks, correct?

A Yes. Our tenures overlapped from January 1st to February 23rd, 2022.

Q And the grand jury indicted Mr. Trump in the case brought by the Manhattan District Attorney's Office on March 30th, 2023, correct?

A I believe that's correct.

Q So that was more than 13 months after you had left the District Attorney's Office, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Paragraph four of your statement in your declaration, reads, "I have had no conversations about prosecuting Mr. Trump with the district attorney or any member of the prosecution team following my resignation," correct?

A You've accurately read from my declaration.

Q And is that an accurate statement?

A I'm not going to go beyond the words of the declaration. As you see from the declaration, it was submitted under penalty of perjury.

I'm not suggesting by my answer to you that there's anything in the declaration that was false, but I'm not going to enlarge upon the declaration in answering questions today for the reasons reflected in my statement.

Q Okay.

Mr. Goldman. Mr. Pomerantz, can I just clarify?

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Goldman. Because this is obviously long after your tenure in the District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. Right.

Mr. Goldman. So you don't -- you can't opine about whether you've had any conversations with any member of the District Attorney's Office, the prosecutors, after you left the District Attorney's Office?

The Witness. My counsel wants to say something, and I have learned not to disrespect his desire to speak.

Mr. Wells. We are not going to get into discussions about explanations about what he can do and can't do or should do and doesn't do.

You can respond to the question.

The Witness. I no longer have the question in mind. My apologies.

Mr. Goldman. What objection are you asserting?

The Witness. It's been suggested to me that I'm asserting my rights under the Fifth Amendment, and that's what I'll do.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q According to public press reports, the decision to pursue the hush-money case in particular was made in July, 2022, which is approximately 5 months after you left, correct?

A I'm not familiar with that.

Ms. [redacted] Okay. We want to introduce for the record a New York Times article. It's published March 31st, 2023, updated April 4th, 2023. It's entitled, "How Alvin Bragg resurrected the case against Donald Trump."

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I'll give you a minute to review. Let me know when you're --

A I got distracted by my photograph. Apologies. I'll keep going.

Yes. What's your question?

Q So the fifth paragraph on the first page, fifth paragraph of the article overall, says that, "But by July" -- referring to July 2022 -- "Mr. Bragg had decided to assign several additional prosecutors to pursue one particular strand that struck him as promising, a hush-money payment made on Mr. Trump's behalf to a porn star during the final days of the 2016 Presidential campaign."

That's what the article says, right?

A Where are you referencing?

Q That is the fifth paragraph on the first page. It begins, "for a time."

A I see it. Yes. Yeah, I see that.

Q So according to this public reporting, Mr. Bragg elected to pursue the hush-money case in July 2022, which was, again, several months after you left the District Attorney's Office, correct?

A I see that referenced in the article, certainly.

Q Okay. So assuming the dates here are correct, that was at least 4 months after you left the District Attorney's Office, right?

A I left in February. This references July of the same year.

Q Okay. You have no nonpublic information about Mr. Bragg's decision to pursue this case after you left the District Attorney's Office, correct?

A I refuse to answer that question.

Mr. Goldman. Based on?

The Witness. Based on my lawyer telling me not to answer the question, which I assume was based on the Fifth Amendment.

Mr. Wells. Correct.

Mr. Goldman. Based on the Fifth Amendment?

Mr. Wells. That's what he said.

Mr. Goldman. No, it's what you said. What is the rationale?

Mr. Finzi. We're not arguing.

Mr. Wells. Same rules for both sides. Today's not the day for explanations. If we ever get to court, we'll explain.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Mr. Pomerantz, you said you have no public -- no nonpublic -- you declined to answer our question regarding whether you have any nonpublic information about Mr. Bragg's decision to pursue the case.

You have no nonpublic information about what evidence the district attorney may have developed in that investigation in the time since you left his office, correct?

A Same answer.

Q You're objecting to answer?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you also would have no personal knowledge of the district attorney's use of Federal forfeiture funds, correct?

A Bear with me for one moment.

Ms. [redacted] We can go off the record for a minute.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q The question is, you have no personal knowledge of the district attorney's use of any Federal forfeiture funds, correct?

A I have no knowledge one way or the other about the use of Federal forfeiture funds. I know nothing about that.

Q Okay.

Mr. Goldman. Do you have -- do you know the entire universe of evidence in possession of the district attorney that is related to the case that was charged on March 30th?

The Witness. Respectfully, I won't answer that question, Mr. Goldman, on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. Goldman. Do you have any reason -- are you aware that Mr. Bragg has made public statements that his office developed additional evidence related to the case that he charged after you left the office? Are you aware of public reporting to that effect? Public statements that Mr. Bragg made?

The Witness. Respectfully, I refuse to answer your question.

Mr. Goldman. Do you have any reason to disagree with any public reports and public statements by Mr. Bragg that his office developed additional evidence related to the case that had been charged after you left the office?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Goldman. The charge that was brought on March 30th is not the charge that you recommended Mr. Bragg bring in February of 2022. Is that right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response. Relying on paragraphs four and five of my statement.

Mr. Goldman. You talk about your investigation in the book extensively. And as we discussed, that investigation, you stated in your book, relates to the misevaluation of properties in possession of Donald Trump. Is that correct? Is that an accurate statement of what you say in your book?

The Witness. I'm not taking issue with your statement. But respectfully, the book speaks for itself at some length, and I'm not going to characterize or comment on your reading of it.

Mr. Goldman. Sure.

I'll note for the record that the book solely talks about a misevaluation case, not the false books and records case that was charged.

Mr. Pomerantz, you aren't a big fan of Mr. Bragg, are you?

The Witness. I will decline to answer your question.

Mr. Goldman. Which one?

The Witness. Whether I'm a big fan of --

Mr. Goldman. No, which reason?

The Witness. Paragraph five of my response and six.

[12:25 p.m.]

Mr. Goldman. You thought that he should have charged the case that you investigated, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Goldman. He didn't charge the case you investigated, did he?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I think what he charged is a matter of public record, about which I'm not going to comment further.

Mr. Goldman. But that wasn't the case that you investigated, was it?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Goldman. That wasn't the case you recommended he charge, was it?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't answer that question.

Ms. [redacted] Turning back to your April 17th declaration. Paragraph 5 of that declaration concludes with this sentence: "Also, answering questions from the Judiciary Committee about my tenure as a prosecutor poses the risk that my testimony could be used to jeopardize or interfere with either the charged criminal case against Trump or other ongoing investigations." Correct?

The Witness. Yes, the declaration contains that language.

Ms. [redacted] Mr. Pomerantz, you were a prosecutor and a defense attorney for many, many years. Can you explain why the risk of interfering in an ongoing investigation is of concern to you?

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent that calls for information based on his tenure at the D.A.'s Office, I object.

Ms. [redacted] Can you speak based on your experience prior to your tenure with the D.A.'s Office?

The Witness. What's the question again? I'm sorry?

Ms. [redacted] Why is the risk of interfering in an ongoing criminal prosecution something that concerns you as a longtime prosecutor and defense attorney?

Mr. Finzi. Do you want to discuss?

Ms. [redacted] We can go off the record for a minute.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q We can go back on the record.

A Thank you. Respectfully, I will follow my attorneys' instructions and not go beyond the language that appears in the declaration.

Q I want to move on. I'm going to turn to the April 6th, 2023 letter that you received from Mr. Jordan. That's exhibit 1 in this matter.

A Yes. I have it.

Q We have another copy too, if you need it.

On page 4 of this letter -- and again, this is the letter that was accompanying the service of subpoena on you -- Mr. Jordan claims that you hold a, quote, "personal animosity" towards former President Trump. And then he quotes a paragraph from your book. We've also heard other quotes that you have purportedly made about Mr. Trump here today.

Would you describe the excerpt quoted here and the other statements that have been raised as expressions of your First Amendment right to free speech?

Mr. Finzi. Would you repeat that question?

Ms. [redacted] He was asked fairly extensively about prior statements he's made about President Trump and about some others as well.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Would you describe those statements as expressions of your right to free speech? In other words, when you said something, that was exercising your free speech rights, right?

A I intended to exercise my free speech rights at various points, including the statement referenced in Mr. Jordan's letter, which is an excerpt from the book?

Q There was also a letter from Chairman Jordan that you received on March 22nd, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And that letter also accuses you of, quote, "unfairly disparaging" President Trump, correct?

We can introduce that for the record if you don't recall.

A I don't know that it's an accusation. But I recall the letter generally.

Q You don't remember -- you don't recall that particular language?

A I do recall --

Q Yeah, we'll go ahead and introduce it for the record.

A No, I --

Q It's exhibit No. 7.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And the reference to unfairly disparaging President Trump is on page 3.

A Yes, I see it.

Q Okay. So that was an accusation that was put against you in the March 22nd letter, correct?

A I read it as expressing Representative Jordan's view of my book. I don't know that it's an accusation.

Q Mr. Pomerantz, do you believe that you have a First Amendment right to criticize people?

A I do.

Q Would you agree that to the extent you've been brought here today because you've criticized people, that that's an attack on your exercise of that right?

A I believe what is referenced in my statement, which is that I have the right to refuse to answer questions that would compel me to express opinions that I believe are protected by the First Amendment.

To the extent I have been brought here because I wrote a book that expressed opinions with which people may disagree, I do believe that that implicates First Amendment rights.

Q Do you think if others view you being brought here because you wrote a book that expresses opinions with others -- that others might disagree with -- do you think that could chill other people's willingness to make statements that criticize people in the future?

A I really don't want to get into how people might view the proceedings here today, whether others would be chilled or should be chilled, whether I should have written the book. I am just of the view that being called here, to the extent it is because I wrote a book and the impact of being asked to testify is to discourage that activity, that's unfortunate.

But this is not the place for me to get into a long exegesis about First Amendment rights or whether they've been chilled. I have my views on the matter. But how they relate to the committee's legislative purpose is a mystery to me.

Mr. Goldman. Let me follow up on that legislative purpose.

We've talked a little bit about the litigation in this case and that you were nominally a defendant in it.

When you make the reference to legitimate legislative purpose, what are you -- why are you making -- why are you referring to that term? What is the relevance of that term?

The Witness. I'm not going to debate the statement in -- I'm not going to debate that portion of my statement which indicates that a person subpoenaed before a congressional committee has the right to refuse to answer questions that are not pertinent to a legitimate legislative purpose, although I believe that to be the law. Nor am I going to debate with you here as a witness the legitimacy of the committee's legislative purpose.

I have my views about it, as expressed in the statement. Whether you agree or disagree is not a matter about which I'm going to have a conversation with you under oath. I just don't think that's the purpose of this proceeding.

Mr. Goldman. Are you familiar with the Mazars case in the Supreme Court?

The Witness. I know whereof you speak?

Mr. Goldman. Have you read it?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. And in the Mazars case I will just note that the Supreme Court lays out the most recent explanation of Congress' investigative jurisdiction, which must be related to a legitimate legislative purpose.

Mr. Pomerantz, are you aware of reports that Mr. Trump or his lawyers communicated a desire for Chairman Jordan and other House Republicans to initiate this investigation shortly after Mr. Trump came to understand that he would be charged by District Attorney Bragg?

It's a question of whether you've read public reporting.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. I am aware of the press reports that you referenced in your question, sir.

Mr. Goldman. And is the information included in those press reports relevant to your assertion that there is no legitimate legislative purpose for this investigation?

The Witness. I won't expand on the thinking that led me to make the statement I made in my opening statement to you.

Mr. Goldman. Why? You testified in your opening statement about your conclusion that you don't think there's a legitimate legislative purpose. I'm just trying to understand why you don't think that.

Ms. [redacted] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted] We're back on the record.

The Witness. My belief that there is no legitimate legislative purpose that motivates this deposition is informed by the press reports that you mentioned, but a wide variety of facts and information and circumstances accumulated over an indeterminate period of time. And I'm not going to attempt to psychoanalyze my own belief and provide you with a catalogue of the reasons for reaching the conclusion that I referenced in the statement.

Mr. Goldman. Well, you've been a lawyer for a long time, a very experienced, very accomplished lawyer. Based on your reading of the Mazars case, if Congress initiated an investigation into a specific criminal prosecution against a private citizen, would that be a legitimate -- in a local District Attorney's Office -- would that be a legitimate legislative purpose, based on your understanding of the Mazars case?

The Witness. I'm not sure I follow that. If you can -- my apologies.

Mr. Goldman. No, that's fine.

If these reports are accurate and this investigation was initiated based on the request of a private citizen to intervene in a prosecution of that private citizen in a local District Attorney's Office, is that a legitimate Federal legislative purpose, based on your reading of the Mazars case?

The Witness. I wish not to get into a lawyers discussion with you about what is or is not a legitimate legislative purpose. While I might agree with your views, I certainly don't wish to get into a debate about this topic when the committee majority has its turn to resume questions. My strong preference would be to simply answer your questions or not answer them based on my legal rights with regard to the facts that led you to ask me to be here today.

Mr. Goldman. Are you -- let's move on.

Are you aware of any other investigation into specific cases in a -- any other congressional investigations into specific cases in a local district attorney's office?

The Witness. That are still pending?

Mr. Goldman. Ever.

The Witness. I'm not.

Mr. Goldman. Do you believe that this investigation is designed to harass and intimidate Mr. Bragg?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. Goldman. Do you think that this investigation would exist if Donald Trump were not the defendant in the People v. Donald Trump in the Manhattan District

Attorney's Office?

The Witness. I don't think it's fair, given that I've come here to assert my rights, among other things, about my political views, I don't want to start holding forth about what is or isn't appropriate as a political matter.

Mr. Goldman. Fair enough.

The Witness. I'll keep my own counsel in that regard.

Mr. Goldman. I just -- I want to switch gears and I'm going to give it back to our counsel.

First, I just want to clarify for the record, because you were asked this in the majority's hour, you and I have never met, correct, until today?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Goldman. We've never spoken?

The Witness. Not that I recall.

Mr. Goldman. We both worked at the Southern District of New York but at different times.

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Goldman. When you take an oath as a Federal prosecutor -- and we're not going to talk about your time as a -- well, I'll say, when you take an oath as a Federal prosecutor, do you take an oath to proceed without fear or favor?

The Witness. You know, I'm not sure that's in the oath, but that's certainly in the spirit of what the job requires?

Mr. Goldman. And what does that mean to you?

The Witness. What it meant to me when I was sworn in as a Federal prosecutor, both times I was sworn in as a Federal prosecutor, is that you make decisions in cases without regard to the concern you may have about taking action. You can't be afraid about the consequences of your actions if you believe that they're well informed and that they are based on the law and the facts and the evidence.

You don't act with favor means that you don't take official action or decline to take official action based on your relationship with a potential subject or because of your personal interests one way or the other. You make decisions that are based on the facts and the law and in the best interests of your client.

In the case you're referencing, my client was the Government of the United States, and I attempted to make decisions that were in the best interest of the government without regard to how they impacted my own circumstances or politics or career or anything else. You make decisions consistent with your obligations to serve the public interest.

Mr. Goldman. And did you use that same approach when you joined the New York County District Attorney's Office?

The Witness. I'm not going to talk about my activities as a Special Assistant District Attorney, respectfully.

Mr. Goldman. Based on your experience as a prosecutor -- well, let me start over.

You're aware of the criminal prosecution against The Trump Organization in the summer of 2022, correct?

The Witness. Am I aware of the prosecution?

Mr. Goldman. Yes.

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. Okay. And that was a trial. Is that right?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. And The Trump Organization was convicted --

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. -- of 17 crimes?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. Now, in your experience as a prosecutor, do prosecutors and investigators redouble their investigative efforts in advance of trial and in preparation for trial?

The Witness. Can I limit my response to my experience as a Federal prosecutor?

Mr. Goldman. Please.

The Witness. Yes, preparing for trial is always a period when prosecutors and law enforcement agents feverishly go about making sure they have gathered all the facts and are in position to present them.

Mr. Goldman. And is it common during that trial preparation to discover new evidence?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. [redacted] We're actually out of time.

Do you have any?

We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

Mr. Schiff. Thank you for allowing me to ask questions before you begin your time.

Mr. Pomerantz, I am Adam Schiff from California.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Schiff. I appreciate your being here today.

In your opening statement you said that "I do not for a moment believe" -- "I do not believe for a moment that I am here to assist a genuine effort to enact legislation or to conduct legislative oversight. We are gathered here because Donald Trump's supporters would like to use these proceedings to attempt to obstruct and undermine the criminal case pending against him and to harass, intimidate, and discredit anyone who investigates or charges him."

I quite agree with the sentiments you've expressed. I can discern no legitimate legislative purpose either.

You have a lot of experience, though, as a prosecutor. And I'd like to ask you, in your experience, have you ever seen another situation where a committee of Congress sought to interfere with a specific criminal case in a specific jurisdiction? And what would be the impact if this were to become precedent for the Congress to intervene in other criminal cases in other parts of the country?

The Witness. I have not seen similar proceedings. But, respectfully, I don't want to hold forth and give you personal views on the wisdom or the impact of proceedings like this one.

My hope is to get out of this room as quickly as I can without inviting more debate and colloquy about matters of public policy. I'm not a policy expert. I'm just a lawyer. And we can all have our respective views about the impact of these proceedings, whether that impact is positive or negative.

So, respectfully, I'm going to decline your invitation to express my personal views.

Mr. Schiff. I appreciate that. Let me try one more time.

In your opening statement you also said, "This is neither the time nor the place for me to answer questions about the investigation or the pending indictment over the objection of the prosecutors. The charges against Mr. Trump should be heard and decided by a judge and a jury before politicians second-guess their merits or the decision to bring them. That's how our system works. Those who claim that they respect the rule of law should wait for the courts to do their work."

If Congress had the power or authority to subpoena witnesses or materials in cases where there's a pending indictment and approaching trial, how might that interfere with a prosecution?

The Witness. I think historically it has been the view of the Department of Justice certainly that pending cases ought to be litigated and that responding to congressional inquiries creates a potential to jeopardize prosecutions, witness security, and so on.

I think that there has not been a deep and rich history of congressional investigations that touch on pending State prosecutions. But I don't see why the circumstances would be different with respect to State prosecutors fearing for the integrity of their prosecutions and investigations.

But, again, I hope you'll understand I'm not here to provide expert testimony or expert views. I don't consider myself an expert on the impact of congressional investigations on pending prosecutions.

I just know, having been a prosecutor, that you want to go about your business and prosecute your cases and have them litigated before the court that has jurisdiction and that responding to outside requests and demands is never something one looks forward to doing.

Mr. Schiff. Last question before I hand it back. Again, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your indulgence.

It's been publicly reported that Mr. Trump's attorneys reached out to this committee to ask for the committee's help in impacting or through discovery in the Manhattan prosecution against Mr. Trump.

Is there a process in which a defendant in a criminal trial in New York City or anywhere else can obtain discovery from prosecutors without having to seek Congress to do it for them? Isn't there a process in which defendants are entitled to Brady material where they get it directly from the prosecutor's office and don't require the intercession of Congress to do that?

The Witness. Well, New York has a very liberal criminal discovery regime. And in New York or outside of New York obviously defendants have the ability by way of motion practice to litigate the integrity of the decision to prosecute and to test whether a prosecution was brought for inappropriate reasons.

That opportunity certainly exists under Federal law. It exists under New York law. I'm not going to speak to other jurisdictions.

Mr. Schiff. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I yield back.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Pomerantz, do you know who disagrees with Mr. Schiff and your characterization of legislative purpose?

The Witness. Pardon me?

Chairman Jordan. Do you know who disagrees with Mr. Schiff and your characterization of legislative purpose?

The Witness. I don't know, but I can indulge in some guesses.

Chairman Jordan. Who would you guess?

Well, we'll save time. We'll go -- the people who disagree is the court and that's why you're here. Let me just read for the record what the court said.

"The committee is considering legislation to prohibit the use of Federal forfeiture funds to investigate a current or former President. This purpose standing alone is clearly sufficient to justify the subpoena and thereby to end this court's inquiry."

Do you know who else agrees with the court? The lady who's been objecting all morning, Ms. Dubeck. Bragg's counsel conceded that the investigation of the District Attorney of New York's use of Federal funds is a valid legislative purpose.

But they go on.

"Defendants identify the possibility of legislative reforms to insulate current and former Presidents from State prosecutions such as by removing criminal actions filed against them from State to Federal court. In fact, there's been legislation introduced to do that."

This idea that it's not a legitimate legislative purpose is ridiculous. In fact, I understand it's unusual, but the court spoke to that as well.

Page 14, footnote 7. "Bragg notes that there is 'no prior case in which Congress has attempted to subpoena a State prosecutor for purpose of extracting information about an ongoing State prosecution.'"

Mr. Pomerantz, do you know of any situation where there's a case of a former President of the United States being criminally charged in a State trial court? Do you know of any situation like that?

The Witness. Other than the present one? I do not.

Chairman Jordan. And that's what the court said. "However, there is no prior case in which a former President of the United States has been criminally charged in State trial court, suggesting both parties swim in untested waters."

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Mr. Pomerantz, are you aware of any Federal funds used by the District Attorney's Office in the prosecution of President Trump?

A I have no knowledge whatsoever on that topic.

Q Are you aware of any positions, some Assistant District Attorney positions, that are funded by the Federal Government in the D.A.'s Office?

A I'm not aware one way or the other.

Q In a March 31st, 2023, letter we received from the District Attorney's Office, the general counsel wrote: "Our review of the office's records reflect that of the Federal forfeiture money that the office helped collect approximately $5,000 was spent on expenses incurred relating to the investigation of President Trump."

Are you aware of that?

A I only was -- I became aware of it when I read the letter to which you refer. I have no other knowledge beyond what is contained --

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted] We're marking this as exhibit 9.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. [redacted] Exhibit 8 was Judge Vyskocil's opinion Mr. Jordan referenced.

Were you aware before Ms. Dubeck's letter that the D.A.'s Office had used Federal funds in the prosecution of President Trump?

The Witness. I was not.

Mr. [redacted] Did you ever have any discussions while you were at the D.A.'s Office with anyone about the use of Federal funds?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I will refuse to answer on the basis of the objection from the District Attorney's Office.

Having said that, I will reaffirm my previous answer to you that I knew absolutely nothing about the use of Federal funds in connection with the Trump investigation.

Mr. [redacted] Did you ever discuss with anyone in the D.A.'s Office the issue of President Trump's security were he to be indicted or convicted?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question on the basis of the rights referenced in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my opening statement.

Mr. [redacted] Refresh my recollection about what paragraphs 4 and 5 --

Mr. Wells. In the spirit of efficiency, 4 relates to the objections of the D.A., 5 relates to the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment, and 6 relates to the legislative purpose and First Amendment due process.

Mr. [redacted] Thank you.

So as I understand it, the question was whether you ever had any discussions with anyone in the D.A.'s Office about the issue of President Trump's security were he to be indicted or convicted. And you're invoking the Fifth Amendment on that particular question?

The Witness. Yes. If you'd give me one moment.

Mr. [redacted] Of course.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. I do refuse to answer your question on the basis of my rights as reflected in the statement.

Mr. Wells. He said paragraphs 4 and 6 -- 4 and 5.

The Witness. 4 and 5, yes.

Mr. [redacted] Did you ever discuss with anyone in the D.A.'s Office how the former President's entitlement to lifetime Secret Service protection under Federal law would be accommodated were he to be convicted of a crime or sentenced to prison?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response, sir.

Mr. [redacted] And that response is?

The Witness. Is not to answer your question on the basis of the District Attorney's position that the information is privileged or confidential and my personal privilege not to be compelled to be a witness against myself.

Mr. [redacted] Mr. Gaetz, did you want to go or did you want me to continue?

Mr. Gaetz. I do have some questions.

Mr. [redacted] Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, did the Manhattan D.A. ever issue you a cell phone?

Mr. [redacted] Do you want to go off the record?

Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. On the advice of counsel, I'm not going to answer that question, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Asserting what privilege?

The Witness. Privilege against self-incrimination.

Mr. Gaetz. And did the Manhattan's D.A.'s Office ever issue you a laptop?

The Witness. Same answer to that question, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. That you're asserting your Fifth Amendment right not to answer?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And did they issue you any other hardware?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And were you given a Manhattan D.A. email address during your time there?

Mr. [redacted] Go off the record?

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. Gaetz. We're back on the record.

The Witness. Yes, I refuse to answer your question on the same basis as I've previously indicated.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you use email now?

The Witness. Pardon me?

Mr. Gaetz. Since you've left the employ of the Manhattan D.A., do you use email as a method of communication?

The Witness. I decline to answer your question.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your current email provider?

The Witness. I decline to answer that question.

Mr. Gaetz. On Fifth Amendment grounds?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And I'm not trying to be pedantic, I'm just trying to make the record clear.

The Witness. No, I understand that. And I appreciate that.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your current cell phone provider?

The Witness. Likewise, I refuse to answer that question on the basis of my rights under the Fifth Amendment.

Mr. Gaetz. How much money did you make on the book?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question as well.

Mr. Gaetz. On what basis?

The Witness. That one is on the basis of both my Fifth Amendment rights and the rights articulated and referenced in paragraph 6 in my opening statement.

Mr. Gaetz. I yield back.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q This morning I asked you about the speech that Attorney General Jackson had provided.

A Yes, sir.

Q I also asked you about the ABA standards.

A Yes.

Q And I asked you about the U.S. Attorneys' Manual.

A Yes, sir.

Q And you had declined to answer those questions.

Now, if I rephrase my questions and say, are you familiar from your time as a Federal prosecutor with any of those three authorities about the principles of prosecution, does your answer -- are you able to answer the question?

A I'm able to answer the question, but I refuse to answer the question.

Q Okay.

A Not to parse the language too fine. I don't mean to be cute.

Q And I understand, sir.

During the last hour Mr. Goldman was asking you about there is fear and favor, and you walked through with Mr. Goldman the meaning behind fear and favor and how I believe you represented you were familiar with it from your time as a Federal prosecutor.

How does that differ from my questions?

A I don't want to get into a debate with you about my position with respect to particular questions. I respect your right to challenge my invocation of rights. I hope you don't, but if you do, we will have that discussion, I suppose.

But I believe that I have a fair basis on which to invoke my rights with respect to familiarity with the "Principles of Federal Prosecution," the U.S. Attorneys' Manual, and Justice Jackson's speech.

Mr. Bishop. Mr. Pomerantz, my name is Dan Bishop.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Just quickly for the sake of the record, I want to make available to you and your counsel that in Mitchell v. United States, a 1999 case in the United States Supreme Court, 526 U.S. 314, Justice Kennedy, writing for the Court, said: "It is well established that a witness, in a single proceeding, may not testify voluntarily about a subject and then invoke the privilege against self-incrimination when questioned about the details. The privilege is waived for the matters to which the witness testifies, and the scope of the 'waiver is determined by the scope of relevant cross-examination.'"

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Bishop. Also, on the same point, in the case of Morgan Art Foundation Limited v. McKenzie from the Southern District of New York, on December 15th, 2021, the Court said: "However, the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination is not self-executing and may be waived if not invoked. As relevant here, where a witness testifies voluntarily and therefore controls the extent of the disclosure, the privilege is waived for the matters to which the witness testified and the scope of the waiver is determined by the scope of relevant cross-examination."

Now, of course. Your counsel has appropriately said -- and I will be glad to hand a copy to you, if you would like.

The Witness. Yes, please.

Mr. Bishop. And I have got copies for other counsel as well.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted] I'm sorry, Mr. Bishop. Morgan is the second case you mentioned?

Mr. Bishop. It is.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. So that would be 11.

Mr. Finzi. So there's Mitchell and Morgan?

Mr. [redacted] So Mitchell's No. 10 and Morgan's No. 11. And I apologize, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Good. Thank you, Mr. [redacted] to keep the record clear. That's very helpful.

Mr. Finzi. Mitchell 10, Morgan 11?

Mr. [redacted] Correct.

Mr. Bishop. And of course counsel made the point they didn't want to debate privilege. I'm not. I'm just seeking to lay a record because the assertion of a privilege, of course, needs to have a reasonable basis. You just spoke to that, Mr. Pomerantz.

Earlier in your examination today, Ms. Stefanik of New York said, "So there are no lies in the book? You stand fully behind this publication under your name?" And your answer was, "That's correct."

Mr. Pomerantz, on page 170 of your book you say that -- let me make sure I get the context so that it's complete -- "No one could know exactly what the security dangers might be if we indicted Trump. I assumed that the MAGA crowd would make its presence felt. But we had to trust that our institutions and personnel could be secured no matter how events might unfold."

Sir, what you do mean by the MAGA crowd? What is that?

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question, sir, on the basis of the rights I asserted in the fifth and sixth paragraphs of my statement.

Mr. Bishop. And you continue to assert the right -- those rights, the right of the Fifth Amendment in particular, but notwithstanding of the information I've furnished. Is that correct?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Bishop. On page 192 of the book you wrote: "I explained that I had made a deliberate effort not to think about the damage Trump had done to politics, the rule of law, respect for the truth, or the fabric of our democracy."

What is meant by the damage Trump had done to politics?

The Witness. I don't believe I am required to go beyond the language reflected in my book. And, accordingly, I refuse to answer your question.

Mr. Bishop. On the grounds that you've previously asserted. Is that correct?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Bishop. What did you mean by the damage Trump had done to the rule of law?

The Witness. I take the same position with respect to that question, sir.

Mr. Bishop. What do you mean by the damage Trump had done to respect for the truth?

The Witness. I take the same position with respect to that language and likewise with respect to the fabric of democracy.

Mr. Bishop. What do you mean about the damage Trump had done to the fabric of our democracy?

The Witness. I take the same position and refuse to answer your question for the reason stated.

Mr. Bishop. On page 192 also you wrote: "Indeed I thought there might be an argument that Trump had assumed an office that required him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed and having urged the country to trust him to uphold the law should be held to a higher standard of personal conduct than the average citizen."

What do you mean by that?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to go beyond the language that appears in the book and provide you with a further explanation of what I meant.

Mr. Bishop. [Inaudible] did you not, sir, that for purposes of the prosecutorial action you sought from the office, that Trump should be treated differently than average citizens? Isn't that right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have nothing to add beyond my prior response.

Mr. Bishop. On page 198 of your book you say: "While it could be argued that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions." What do you mean by that?

The Witness. I'm sorry, I missed your question.

Mr. Bishop. I'll repeat it. On page 198 of the book you write: "While it could be argued that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions." What do you mean by that?

Ms. Dubeck. If you can pause. I'm not finding the language.

Mr. Bishop. All right. Let me help and I'll read the full sentence. At the bottom of -- the next to last paragraph on 198 it says: "While it could be argued that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions, we were speaking about a victim in the legal sense, a person or entity that had received the SOFCs, relied on them to give money to Trump, and then suffered a financial loss." That's the whole sentence.

My question, though, is about the first clause of the sentence. What do you mean that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Yes, for the reasons stated in the fourth and fifth paragraph of my letter, I will decline to answer that question.

Mr. Bishop. To what deceptions to you refer?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question for the reasons stated.

Mr. Bishop. In what way do you mean the American people generally have been hurt?

The Witness. Same answer, sir.

Mr. Bishop. At another point in the book, and I didn't note the page reference, perhaps you'll recall it, but you say: "I was haunted by the thought that there were many people everywhere who had been counting on us to hold Trump accountable for crimes that we would never get a chance to prove in court."

My question to you there is, what people?

Ms. Dubeck. Object.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question and believe I am not required to do so for the reasons reflected in my statement.

Mr. Bishop. Would the people include political enemies of Mr. Trump?

The Witness. I won't --

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Excuse me, sorry.

I won't elaborate on the language that appears in the book and accordingly assert my rights under the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

Chairman Jordan. Were they the same people who said "go get him" on page 1 of the book?

The Witness. The same answer.

Mr. Bishop. On page -- withdrawn.

At another point you wrote: "Has the target generally been involved in antisocial behavior such that the community needs to be protected from further misbehavior or the target held to account for misdeeds that extend well beyond the particular crime at issue?"

How did that apply to Mr. Trump?

The Witness. I refuse to answer your questions for the reasons reflected in the fifth paragraph of my letter. I'm not certain, I may have answered too quickly before Ms. Dubeck had a chance to object, for which I apologize.

Ms. Dubeck. I lost track of whether he was asking something based on your time at the D.A.'s Office. To the extent he was, I object.

Mr. Bishop. I yield back.

Mr. [redacted] To your knowledge, when was the first time the District Attorney's Office interviewed Michael Cohen?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for reasons previously stated --

Mr. [redacted] Given your experience --

The Witness. -- in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my statement for the record.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Given your experience, how can you possibly believe Michael Cohen is a reliable witness?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons reflected in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 of my statement.

Mr. [redacted] So you're taking the Fifth Amendment on given your experience how can you possibly believe Michael Cohen is a reliable witness?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. Are you aware of the shifting information Mr. Cohen has put forward about the Stormy Daniels payments?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons indicated in the answer to your previous question.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q I believe in your book you say that you were following the Michael Cohen testimony when he appeared before Congress. It was the first big hearing of Chairman Cummings' tenure. Mr. Cohen testified back in 2019. I believe in your book that you said you watched that and you were following along. Is that correct?

A I believe that appears in the book, yes.

Q And as you sit here today, do you remember that testimony?

A I decline to answer that question based on my right not to be a witness against myself in a possible criminal proceeding.

Q I'd like to mark as exhibit 12 a letter from Steve Ryan to the Federal Election Commission.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted] Mr. Ryan is a -- Mr. Ryan was one of Michael Cohen's lawyers at the time.

Mr. Ryan writes: "In a private" -- he's writing on behalf of Michael Cohen to the Federal Election Commission here. "In a private transaction" -- this is the second paragraph" -- "in 2016, before the U.S. presidential election, Mr. Cohen used his own personal funds to facilitate a payment of $130,000 to Ms. Stephanie Clifford. Neither the Trump Organization nor the Trump campaign was a party to the transaction with Ms. Clifford, and neither was reimbursed by Mr. Cohen" -- or "neither reimbursed Mr. Cohen for the payment directly or indirectly."

Are you familiar with this letter? Have you ever seen this before?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer.

Mr. [redacted] And as you know, in 2018 Michael Cohen says, through his lawyer, that nobody ever reimbursed him. And then when he showed up before Congress, it was Chairman Cummings' first big hearing in January 2019, he changed his tune and he said he was reimbursed.

Were you aware of that sort of a changing story of Mr. Cohen on that front?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted] I'd like to mark as exhibit 13 a letter from Mr. Jordan and Mr. Meadows to the Attorney General referring Michael Cohen for perjury for his appearance in February -- I'm sorry, it was February 2019. I think in my last question to you I said it was January 2019, but it was February 27th, 2019, that he appeared, first big hearing of the Democrats' new majority at the time.

And this letter sets forth numerous undeniable facts about Mr. Cohen perjuring himself during his appearance before the committee.

Have you ever seen this letter before?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question, one way or the other, on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. The bottom of page 1 it says:

"Several times during his testimony, Mr. Cohen denied committing various fraudulent acts that he pleaded guilty to in federal court. Specifically, Mr. Cohen said, 'I never defrauded any bank.'

"These denials are intentionally false. Mr. Cohen pleaded guilty to five counts of income tax evasion, one count of making false statements to a banking institution, one count of causing an unlawful corporate contribution, one count of excessive campaign contribution, and one count of making false statements to Congress."

In your experience, is there any way that Mr. Cohen could not have committed perjury when he testified one way and he pleaded guilty in an exact opposite fashion to the same set of facts?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer the question for the reasons previously stated.

Mr. [redacted] When you were at the D.A.'s Office, did you consider this type of unreliability when considering Mr. Cohen as the narrator for the case against President Trump?

[1:43 p.m.]

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response, sir.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q And in your book you did describe Mr. Cohen as a potential narrator for the prosecution against President Trump. Is that correct?

Well, I think this is in the book.

A The book says what it says. I'm not disputing your characterization.

Q Okay. So it's fair to say that in your book you talk about in a prosecution of this type you need a good narrator?

A I think there is a reference to the need for a narrator that appears in the book.

Q And Michael Cohen was considered as that possible narrator?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I rest on what's set forth in the book. I'm not taking issue with your characterization.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Going back to the letter, Mr. Cohen repeatedly testified that he did not seek employment in the White House following President Trump's election. And this is demonstrably material and intentionally false, too.

The testimony is -- that testimony is in indirect conflict with court filings made by the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York which stated: During and after the campaign, Cohen privately told friends and colleagues, including in text messages, that he expected to be given a prominent role and title in the new administration. When that did not materialize, Cohen found a way to monetize his relationship with and access to the President.

Was that a fact that you were aware of?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The same response, sir.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q At the hearing Mr. Jordan asked Mr. Cohen: You wanted to work in the White House?

And Mr. Cohen said: No, sir.

And that answer, when Mr. Cohen said "no, sir," is expressly contradicted by the text messages that the Southern District of New York used in the case against Mr. Cohen.

With that said, I mean, how is that not perjury before Congress?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer the question for the reasons reflected in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my statement.

Mr. Bishop. Mr. Pomerantz, on page 178 your book you have this paragraph. It says: "Carey drafted a lengthy outline of defense arguments. The defense outline claimed that a prosecution would be politically motivated and would violate Trump's constitutional rights. It noted that the district attorney and the Attorney General were Democrat politicians who supposedly were trying to prevent Trump from becoming president again. It detailed some of New York State Attorney General Letitia James's public statements about Trump in reference to Alvin Bragg's campaign statements about having repeatedly sued the Trump administration. It suggested that Trump would move to disqualify the prosecution and seek a transfer of venue out of New York City. It characterized the case as a political vendetta that had wasted vast resources in the hunt for a viable theory of criminal liability after Trump, all at a time when murders and violent crime were increasing."

I'll stop there. Did I read it accurately?

The Witness. Pardon me? Yes, you read it accurately, of course.

Mr. Bishop. Do you know what the defense of selective or vindictive prosecution is?

The Witness. I decline to answer your questions.

Mr. Bishop. Are you aware that prosecuting someone criminally in retaliation for First Amendment expressive activity or associational activity is unconstitutional?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question. I'll resist the temptation to elaborate on it.

Mr. Bishop. Were any of the factual bases that Carey laid out in his lengthy outline of defense arguments inaccurate?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your questions for the reasons reflected in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of my statement.

Mr. Bishop. Did you undertake to or did anyone else working with you on the investigation of Mr. Trump undertake to rebut any of the factual bases underlying the outline of this defense argument furnished by Carey?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I would like to make the same response to that question as to your previous one, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Which is declining to answer --

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. -- on the basis of your asserted privileges?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Thank you.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with Bob Costello?

A Yes.

Q And how do you know him?

A We served together in the Office of the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York during the time I was line assistant between 1978 and 1982. I don't recall for exactly what portion of that period of time Mr. Costello was a prosecutor, but that is one of the ways in which I was familiar with Mr. Costello.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Costello was called to the grand jury -- this most recent grand jury that indicted President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Mr. Costello has made a number of TV appearances talking about these types of things. I'm just asking if you're aware of the public reporting on this.

A I saw public reporting.

Chairman Jordan. You said you worked with him in the Southern District of New York, and you said that's one of the ways you were aware of Mr. Costello.

What were the other ways. Was he a friend?

The Witness. I need a moment with counsel.

Mr. [redacted] Of course.

[Discussion off the record.]

Chairman Jordan. I can withdraw the question. I was -- I just was curious. I can withdraw it.

The Witness. Thank you. That's very helpful.

Chairman Jordan. No, I get it. I get it.

You said that the one way -- well, that's fine. I get it.

The Witness. I appreciate that.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Are you aware that Mr. Costello was representing Mr. Cohen at any point in time?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm aware of public reports of that type.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Now, are you aware of reports of what Cohen told Costello was different from what Cohen evidently told Ryan right around the same time period about the Stormy Daniels payments? Are you aware of that public reporting?

A I believe I did see that in public reporting as well.

Q Are you aware that Cohen alleged that somebody dangled a pardon over him, you know, if he cooperates and doesn't say negative things about President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm limiting my response to publicly reported materials in the last several months, I guess, and so limited, I don't recall.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. So Cohen alleged that Costello referenced that, you know, some pardon might be available to him.

Are you aware of that?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, limiting my response to recent press reports, that sounds familiar, but I don't recall it with any acuity.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay.

A Yes, but I'm not basing my response on anything having to do with my employment in the D.A.'s Office.

Q And are you aware that the Southern District of New York U.S. Attorney's Office looked at potentially prosecuting President Trump based on the pardon allegation?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] Go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. All right. Respectfully, I decline to answer the question.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. And did you know the Southern District of New York decided not to prosecute because they decided Cohen was completely unreliable and could not be considered as a legitimate witness at any prosecution?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question as well for the reasons previously given.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. And do you expect that Michael Cohen will be called as a witness before the New York District Attorney's case that's just been filed?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Returning back to your opening statement --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- what's the basis for your conclusion that you are certain you broke no laws?

A I would be very surprised if a court ruled that I had no privilege to answer that question, and I'm asserting my Fifth Amendment rights with respect to that.

Q Has anyone from the District Attorney's Office explicitly or implicitly threatened to prosecute you if you answer the committee's questions?

A I decline respectfully to answer your question.

Q When did you first hear that the District Attorney's Office was pursuing some potential criminal investigation of you?

A I will take my counsel's advice and refuse to answer that question, sir.

Q When we were with Judge Vyskocil on the 19th --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- the District Attorney's Office, you know, represented that they sent you this letter raising the prospect of a criminal prosecution.

Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q Was that the first time you heard of that?

A The first time I heard of a letter?

Q Right. Like had you -- was that the first time you heard that you were under criminal investigation?

Did it surprise you?

A I'm not going to answer your question with regard to whether I was surprised.

Q On the basis of the Fifth Amendment?

A Fifth Amendment, and also the rights summarized in the sixth paragraph of my statement.

Q What's the sixth paragraph again?

A My position being there the question whether I was surprised by what I heard in open court in January is not, I believe, a matter that's pertinent to your legislative purpose.

Q Don't you think this investigation of you, this purported investigation of you is simply a pretext, simply a pretext to block your testimony here today?

It's not a real investigation, is it?

A I respectfully decline to answer your question.

Q Have you been interviewed by the D.A.'s Office on this topic?

A I respectfully decline to answer your question.

Q Have they asked for any documents from you?

A I respectfully decline to answer your question.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Pomerantz --

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. -- you resigned in February of 2022.

The Witness. 2022, that's correct.

Chairman Jordan. And did the District Attorney's Office know you were working on a book anytime between February 2022 and February of 2023?

The Witness. I decline to answer your question.

Chairman Jordan. But they didn't put you under notice that you were potentially under criminal investigation until, according to your statement, shortly before the publication of your book?

The Witness. I'm not sure what you're referencing.

Chairman Jordan. I'm referencing your statement, page 2 of your statement. "Shortly before the publication of my book, the District Attorney's office warned me that I could face criminal liability if, among other things, I disclosed grand jury material or violated a provision of the New York City Charter dealing with the misuse of confidential information."

The Witness. Yes, sir, that's accurate.

Chairman Jordan. So the first time you were put on notice?

Mr. [redacted] Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] Back on the record.

The Witness. The question again was whether I was on notice of a possible criminal investigation?

Mr. [redacted]. Mr. Jordan asked you the first time you were on notice, and he referenced your statement.

The Witness. The statement references a letter that I received in January of 2023, which I believe you have.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. [redacted] Did you need to lodge an objection?

Ms. Dubeck. It didn't sound like quite exactly the same question, so --

Mr. [redacted] Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q But the letter that you received in January 2023, it's just a pretext, isn't it? I mean, is there a real investigation going on?

A You're asking me?

Q Yes. They're not really going to prosecute you? They're not really investigating you, are they?

A I hope you're right. But I'm not speaking for the District Attorney's Office --

Q That's fair.

A -- in respect of how tangible is the fear of criminal prosecution.

Q Okay. You got the letter in January. Was that the first time the D.A.'s Office communicated with you that they were disappointed you were writing a book or trying to stop the publication of the book?

Mr. Finzi. Could we have a second?

Mr. [redacted] Sure. Go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] We'll go back on the record.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Your answer, sir?

A I decline to answer your question with respect -- for the reasons indicated.

Q Okay. Can you tell us about all of the communications you've had with the D.A.'s Office since January of this year, other than the ones we've discussed, which was this receiving of the letter?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted]. Well, I mean, he's no longer with the Office.

Ms. Dubeck. January of this year?

Mr. [redacted] January of this year.

Ms. Dubeck. Withdrawn.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q What I'm getting at, okay, if I may?

A Yes, sir.

Q What I'm getting at is they didn't try very hard. They didn't try very hard to get you to not publish the book. I mean, they may have written this letter, paper in the file. And if I'm mistaken, if I'm mistaken, please help me understand that I'm wrong.

You got the letter from them. What other -- did they call you on the phone and urge you? Did you have any meetings with them in person?

A Mr. [redacted], I don't believe that I'm required in this context to articulate for you all of the reasons which lead me to invoke my privilege.

Q Fair enough.

And let me just, if I may, articulate why we're asking, okay, just as a courtesy.

We believe that it's possible and worth investigating that this whole, you know, New York District Attorney's Office, you know, so-called investigation is a sham, and it's simply a pretext to prevent you from coming here and talking about your book. And so, because of that, I mean, that could invoke some serious implications. I mean, that could be obstruction of Congress. And so it's worthwhile for us. And so we don't, you know, mean to be pedantic or, you know, any -- don't mean any disrespect by it. But we are trying to understand the volume of communications, the type of effort that the District Attorney's Office, you know, put forth to try to get you to stop the book. And if they did put forth an effort that we don't know about, I mean, that would be great, a great fact to have on the record.

A I would be delighted to hear, Mr. [redacted], that my fear of criminal prosecution is completely baseless and unfounded. I don't believe that to be the case and, therefore, I am invoking my rights as reflected.

Q Okay. And let me just say, I'm not disputing that you believe -- I'm not disputing your belief that you think that they might be actually conducting a criminal investigation. Because when somebody is faced with a letter saying that there's an investigation, a human being, a normal conclusion is to be concerned about that. Okay. So fair enough. I'm not trying to be disrespectful of that.

A I appreciate that.

Q But from our point of view, okay, from the point of view of the Congress, the record looks pretty thin. And it looks like a pretext to us -- not to you, but to us, and so, consequently, just trying to ask you if you can catalog the efforts that the D.A.'s Office made to get you to stop writing the book.

A I don't think I am or can be required to respond to a question that seeks to probe my good faith invocation of the Fifth. I believe -- I know that I have a good faith basis to invoke my privilege. If your investigation should result in a declaration by the District Attorney's Office that they have no such intent, that criminal prosecution of me is never going to happen, then we will have a different exchange.

Q So if they write you a letter and they say they're declining to take any further action, you might be willing to come back and answer some of our questions?

A I would have a very different conversation with my attorneys.

Q When Mr. Jordan initially --

A It was hard enough for them on the record that we do have.

Q When we initially wrote to you in the earlier part of this year, the first letter --

A Yes.

Q Mr. Jordan sent you two letters, right?

A Yes.

Q He sent you the first letter asking for voluntary cooperation, and then it was followed up with the subpoena.

A Yes, sir.

Q You replied to our first letter -- thank you for that -- and basically said that the D.A.'s Office is telling you not to cooperate.

Can you tell us about the conversation you had with the D.A.'s Office before you wrote us back?

A I referenced and attached, I believe, a letter I received from Ms. Dubeck at the District Attorney's Office.

Q And did you have a telephone conversation with her?

Mr. [redacted] We can go off the record. Sorry.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] We can go back on the record.

The Witness. Respectfully, I decline to answer your question about communications with the District Attorney's Office.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Okay. And then when we sent the subpoena to you --

A And I understand your -- withdrawn. Never mind. I already talked --

Q You can finish. I'm sorry.

A No, it's okay.

Q On our -- the second time we wrote you the letter --

A Yes.

Q -- and we included the subpoena, I emailed you, and you replied back very graciously and very professionally, you indicated that you didn't have a lawyer at that time. Is that correct?

A I think I said that I would be in touch with you after finalizing the arrangements for counsel.

Q And so, is it fair to say that in your conversations that you had with the D.A.'s Office, you weren't represented by counsel?

A I don't think that is fair to say. I don't know what time period you're referring to.

Q So we wrote -- our first letter was dated March 20th, and then the subpoena was April 6th, so -- and when I emailed the subpoena to you, at that time you hadn't engaged Mr. Wells?

Did you have different counsel, or was Mr. --

A I'm not going to get into who represented me when throughout the months preceding this appearance.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. I don't think the question was who. I think the question was, was there anyone representing you in that time frame.

The Witness. I respectfully assert my Fifth Amendment rights in that regard.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q I mean, is it a fair investigative data point that if you didn't have counsel until Mr. Wells, which, you know, Mr. Wells was engaged after the subpoena was sent, and isn't that a fair piece -- good data point or piece of evidence that maybe shows that the interactions that you had had with the D.A.'s Office up until the time that you engaged Mr. Wells -- did you have an attorney is what we're getting to. And if you didn't, isn't it fair for us to conclude that that's a good piece of evidence showing that this might not be a real investigation that they're pursuing?

A I decline to answer your question.

Mr. [redacted] I would like to mark the indictment as exhibit 14, and then the statement of facts as exhibit 15.

[Pomerantz Exhibit Nos. 14 and 15

Were marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]

Q You've read the indictment. Correct?

A The indictment of Donald Trump?

Q Yes.

A Yes.

Q Have you read the statement of facts?

A Yes.

Q Now, the indictment was returned by the grand jury, correct?

A I assume so.

Q But the statement of facts was not?

A I don't know.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. Well, let's -- this is number 14, the indictment.

Do we have the statement of facts one too?

Ms. [redacted] They are both marked.

Mr. [redacted] What's that?

Ms. [redacted] Yes.

Mr. [redacted] So you've got both the statement of facts and the indictment?

Mr. Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. [redacted] Okay.

Ms. [redacted] Are these separate exhibits?

Mr. [redacted] They are 14 and 15.

Ms. [redacted] And 14 is the indictment?

Mr. [redacted] 14 is the indictment. 15 is the statement of facts.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Let me just ask you, what's the difference between utilizing -- based on your experience, utilizing a statement of facts to supplement an indictment versus a speaking indictment?

A I couldn't answer your question. I don't know the answer.

Q Okay. I mean, you were a prosecutor in the Office. Did you -- during your time with the D.A.'s Office, did you -- were you responsible for indicting anyone? Any cases that you worked on land in an indictment?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection to the extent it calls for nonpublic information.

The Witness. You referring to my tenure in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Correct.

A I respectfully decline to answer.

Q Okay. Could you just help us understand, how does a statement of facts ordinarily get released? What's the process?

A I can't help you understand that. I don't know the answer to that question.

Q Okay. In reading the indictment --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- can you tell us whether the D.A.'s Office found new evidence that you weren't aware of, you know, from your time in the Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. Is that based on the Fifth Amendment?

A I think tilting toward the fourth paragraph of my statement, without excluding the fifth.

Q The fourth paragraph, is that --

Mr. Finzi. It's the District Attorney's objections.

Mr. [redacted] Okay.

The Witness. My discipline slips as the day wears on, but I hope you'll make sure that I adequately state on the record the basis for my nonresponse.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. So there are 34 counts in the indictment that are bootstrapped to an unstated crime to prosecute.

Do you know what that unstated crime is?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] Well, I'm just asking if he knows, and he's read the indictment. I think he can answer that question.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question on the basis of the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. And can you help us understand why, in your experience, a prosecutor in this instance might -- like, what's the strategy behind not naming the crime in the indictment?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] Well, I'm just asking, you know, his experience, and I'm just trying to better understand why the crime is not in the indictment, just his experience as a lawyer.

I mean, you're a decorated, long-serving lawyer.

The Witness. I don't know how many decorations I got, but I have a long career as a defense attorney and a prosecutor.

BY MR.[redacted]:

Q So you're in a good position, I think, to help us understand what's the strategy behind not naming the underlying crime.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I can't answer, and I decline to answer. Even if I could answer, I wouldn't know the answer.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay.

A And I can't answer, so the state of my knowledge is basically irrelevant.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Pomerantz, you gave the District Attorney's Office a year of your life. You worked for free. And before Congress ever got in this picture, they told you they might -- that you might face criminal liability for a book that you wrote.

Does that tick you off?

The Witness. I decline to answer.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q And you didn't just work for free. You gave up your weekends. You gave up your -- you had -- according to your book, you had a month's long -- correct me if I'm wrong. But you had a month's long visit planned in Sonoma so you could be with one of your new grandchildren.

A 2 months.

Q 2 months. I mean, you gave quite a lot to this Office, the District Attorney's Office. Is that not, obviously, correct?

A I decline to answer.

Q I think we're --

A Regretfully.

Mr. [redacted] I think we're at our time.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted], do you have a lot left?

Mr. [redacted] Go off the record, please.

[Discussion off the record.]

[Recess.]

Ms. [redacted] It is 2:44. We can go back on the record.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Mr. Pomerantz, in the prior hour you were asked about the Southern District of New York's determination about the reliability of Mr. Cohen as a witness.

Do you recall being asked about that?

A Yes.

Q And I believe that you said you couldn't answer -- you declined to answer the question?

A That's correct.

Q In your experience as a prosecutor and defense attorney, though, there are circumstances in which a witness may not be sufficient in one proceeding, but in an unrelated proceeding or a different proceeding there could be, for example, corroborating evidence or other material that might change the circumstances for that, on the witness's reliability, right?

A You're asking me in general terms?

Q In general, in general terms.

Mr. Finzi. Could we go off the record for 1 second?

Ms. [redacted] Sure. Yes, we can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted] We can go back on the record.

The Witness. I think the only thing I can say is that, as my own testimony probably indicates, there's no such thing as a perfect witness. Witnesses have flaws and strengths that run the gamut of human behavior.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q You were asked earlier about the -- you know, when you had an attorney --

A Yes.

Q -- in relation to this year. And you recall that?

A Yes.

Q Without getting into who represented you and when, you know, you've now been brought before this committee for a deposition that's run, I don't know, 5 hours and change. Before that, there was a fair amount of letters and motions practice in court even.

Would you agree that anybody who was facing a congressional investigation may want to hire counsel?

A Yes.

Q I want to turn to the January 18th letter, and it was not introduced in the last round, so I am going to introduce it as exhibit 16 now.

Mr. [redacted]. Sorry, what number are we up to?

Ms. [redacted] I think it's 16.

Mr. [redacted]. Yes.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Do you recall receiving this letter?

A I received this letter.

Q And this was the letter I think that was referenced earlier when reference was made to the January 18, 2023, letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q This letter was sent from Ms. Dubeck, who is sitting at the table today, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it was addressed to you, but also to the general counsel of Simon & Schuster and the executive vice president and general counsel and secretary of Paramount Global, correct?

A Yes.

Q So this was sent to you, but also to attorneys. Correct?

A Yes.

Q And in the first line, the very first sentence of this letter, it says: "This letter is in response to Simon & Schuster's public announcement, on January 11, 2023, of the forthcoming publication of your book," correct?

A Yes.

Q So the announcement of your book -- according to just on the terms of this letter, the announcement of your book happened on January 11, 2023. It was publicized on that date, right?

A That's what the letter says.

Q And within a week of learning of that publication, the District Attorney's Office had written to you, correct?

A The letter reflects on its face having been sent a week after the public announcement of the publication of the book that I wrote.

Q On the second page of the letter, the second full paragraph says that "Prior to commencing his work with the D.A.'s Office, Mr. Pomerantz acknowledged in writing his understanding that most or all of the information he would have access to regarding the investigation is protected by" -- and it goes on and refers to the grand jury secrecy provisions, correct?

A That's what the letter says.

Q Did you -- is it accurate that you signed a nondisclosure form or some other document prohibiting you from disclosing information that you learned?

A I'm not going to answer that question and assert my constitutional rights as reflected in the fifth paragraph of my statement.

Q In the following paragraph, it says: "In addition, because Mr. Pomerantz has been separated from the D.A.'s Office for nearly a year, he is not capable of making any assessment of whether the disclosures he intends to disseminate in this publication have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding," correct?

A That's what the letter says.

Q So the District Attorney's Office actually put you on notice that with publication of your book, you know, you unilaterally were not capable of determining whether that might prejudice an adjudicative proceeding, correct?

A Well, I'm not going to expand beyond what the letter says on its face. I'm not taking issue with your characterization.

Q Okay. It goes on: "Based on the pre-publication descriptions of the book and the benefit of current knowledge of the matter, but without access to the manuscript, this Office believes there is a meaningful risk that the publication will materially prejudice ongoing criminal investigations and related adjudicative proceedings," right?

A Yes, that's what's stated in the letter.

Q So it says without access to the manuscript. So the District Attorney's Office, based on the face of this letter, did not have access to your manuscript prior to its publication, correct?

A I'm not going to respond to that question.

Q And then in the following paragraph, it cites to New York City Charter chapter 68, section 2604(d)(5)?

A Yes.

Q And are you familiar with that statute?

A As we sit here today?

Q Yes. We can withdraw it. That's fine.

A Thank you.

Q So the paragraph says that, in relevant part, chapter 68, section 2604(d)(5) provides that no public servant shall, after leaving city service, disclose or use for private advantage any confidential information gained from public service which is not otherwise made available to the public, correct?

A You've accurately stated what the letter contains.

Q And you don't have any reason to believe that this is not an accurate recitation of that code section, correct?

A I have no reason to believe that the letter misstates the language of that chapter of the city charter.

Q And then in the final --

A It doesn't state all of the language of that section of the city charter, but what is here is contained in the city charter.

Q Thank you.

And then the final sentence of that paragraph reads: "To the extent this book discloses information, Mr. Pomerantz obtained as a public service without this office's approval, Mr. Pomerantz is unlawfully converting confidential government information for his personal advantage," right?

A That's what the letter says.

Q And so, as early as January 18, 2023, which was a week after the announcement that your book would be published, the District Attorney's Office had written to you to say that you were potentially acting unlawfully, correct?

A The letter says -- contains the language that you have referenced and speaks of the unlawful conversion of confidential government information.

Q And then the final sentence, the final paragraph of this letter, which is on page 3, it says: "The Office," referring to the District Attorney's Office, "urges Mr. Pomerantz not to take any further steps that would damage an ongoing criminal investigation," right?

A Yes. That's contained in the letter.

Q So, again, as early as January 18th, the District Attorney's Office had written to you and said, you know, Do not take any further steps that would damage an ongoing criminal investigation, correct?

A The letter says what it says.

Ms. [redacted] All right. Thank you. We don't have any further questions.

The Witness. Thank you.

We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted] Back on the record.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q This morning we were going through some of the investigative matters you were pursuing against former President Trump. I think we left off at the Trump Tower triplex apartment.

The angle there was that he overstated the value of the apartment, or was it that he overstated the square footage? I know Mr. Cohen said that the square footage was exaggerated. But were both subject to the -- were you pursuing both angles as a potential investigative avenue?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Once again, I decline to answer your questions for the reasons stated in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q The vignette, the John Baron vignette where he was having communications with the Forbes reporter, was that an avenue of independent investigation, or was that fact pattern going to be used to support a different charge?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons stated. I'm not sure I understand your question, but I'm sure however you meant it, I won't be answering it.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay.

A With apologies. I don't mean to make light, and I intend no disrespect whatsoever.

Q I'm sorry. I'll restate it.

Do you remember the name of the Forbes reporter? I believe his first name was Jonathan.

A I believe you're referring to Jonathan Greenberg.

Q Yes, sir, yes, sir.

So my question was the allegations that Mr. Greenberg brought forth from his reporting with Forbes was that, if I'm not mistaken, that Mr. Trump was overstating his overall net worth. And my question was whether that was an independent avenue of investigation, or whether that was you considered using the Forbes reporter to support the financial statement -- the statements of financial condition investigation that you were pursuing?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A I decline to answer both because it calls for confidential or privileged information in view of the District Attorney's Office, and for the other reasons referenced in paragraphs 5 and 6 of my statement.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q In your book you talk about investigating the Trump Foundation, aspects of Trump University. And my question is, was there an independent investigation into Trump University that potentially could have been the source of an indictment, or were those facts -- that fact pattern simply going to be used in the enterprise corruption theory case that you were working on?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The same response as to the previous question. Same nonresponse, I guess.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q There were various insurance fraud matters that you write about in your book, such as there was tornado damage at one of the Florida golf courses, I believe.

There was some insurance fraud allegations relating to an elevator fire at the --

A I actually think you are incorrect to the extent you're referring to what's written in the book. The book references tornado damage to a golf course in Westchester.

Q Oh, I'm sorry. It was in New York. Okay.

Was there not also a potential insurance matter at one of the golf properties in Florida, or was that just simply the Westchester property?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer to the extent that it calls for information that goes beyond what's referenced in the book.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. Do you remember if that was included in the book? Was there an insurance matter relating to a Florida golf course?

Ms. Dubeck. It's only calling for the book, so --

The Witness. I don't believe that appears in the book.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. On page --

A Perhaps I should have written a shorter book.

Q On page 205, you write regarding the District Attorney, that he was missing the urgency of the situation and underestimating the special needs of the Trump investigation and potential prosecution.

Was that something you ever confronted Mr. Bragg about personally?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q It's right in the middle of page 205.

A Yes, I see it. I decline to answer for the reasons previously stated. I do see the reference in the book.

Q Okay. On page 213, you had an in-person meeting with the District Attorney. Was that your first in-person meeting with him?

I understand because of the pandemic a lot of the work that you did was remote and meetings happened over Zoom. But at some point, you did have some meetings in person with Mr. Bragg. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q You're reporting in your book you did.

A The book references meetings and conversations, a variety of them.

Q Okay. And do you know how many in-person meetings?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Decline to answer beyond what's contained in the book.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. Which number objection would that one be?

A Oh, the fourth paragraph and the fifth paragraph and the sixth paragraph of my statement.

Q The sixth paragraph, legislative purpose?

A No. The sixth paragraph references the First Amendment.

Q Oh, okay.

A And to the extent you're asking me to elaborate on the facts --

Q Oh, no, I'm sorry, sir. I'm not asking you to elaborate. I'm just wondering how many in-person meetings you had with the District Attorney, because you wrote about them all in the book and I --

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have nothing to add beyond the book. In fact. Well, I'll leave it there.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Anyway, on page 213 towards the bottom, you write: "The discussion degenerated into chaos and confusion. On top of it, Alvin came into the meeting late, spent much of his time looking at his phone, and then left early, saying he just wanted to see the important documents, as though the whole sprawling case could be reduced to a collection of just a few" -- or sorry -- "collection of a few crucial documents, which made no sense."

Did you ever have a chance to communicate that to Mr. Bragg, your frustration?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question for the reasons previously articulated.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Later on in the book I think you wrote an email to Mr. Bragg. And did you mention your frustration with him coming in late, looking at the phone, and so forth?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A What is the question, whether I wrote an email to --

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Whether you expressed your frustrations to Mr. Bragg. I mean, if you just remember whether you did or didn't.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Well, the issue was not the state of my recollection. It's the application of the privilege that I asserted, which I will rely on?

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Did you spend -- do you think Mr. Bragg was as willing as Mr. Vance to dig into the facts of this case?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question, Mr. [redacted] respectfully.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. For the most part in your book, and I think without exception, you refer to Mr. Vance in a very favorable light. Is that a fair assessment?

A I'm not taking issue with your perception, but I have nothing to add to what appears in the book.

Q Okay. On page 264 --

A Yes.

Q -- there's a part of the book that says: "Most plane crashes" -- I'm sorry. "All I know for sure is that the investigation turned into the legal equivalent of a plane crash. Most plane crashes have more than a single cause, and this one also may have had multiple causes. The biggest one, in my opinion, was 'pilot error.' Alvin made the wrong decision about whether to charge the case."

When you wrote the biggest cause of the metaphorical plane crash was pilot error, were you referring to Mr. Bragg as the pilot in that instance?

A I won't go beyond the language that appears in the book. Again, I'm not taking issue with the inference that you draw, but the book speaks for itself. And I object to being compelled to make statements that go beyond what appears in the book.

[3:08 p.m.]

Mr. [redacted] Okay. On page 265, the penultimate paragraph, last sentence.

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [redacted] "He jumped into very deep water and immediately was in over his head."

Is that a reference to Mr. Bragg?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, the book speaks for itself.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Page 218.

A Yes.

Q You write: "As I tossed and turned, I asked myself whether we had done everything we could do to convince Alvin to let us bring our case against Trump. I kept thinking that maybe we were being rash.

"I also thought about Alvin's relative youth and wondered if he was in over his head. From what I knew, he had never run an organization anywhere close to the size of the District Attorney's Office, and he had scant experience in leading or defending high-profile prosecutions."

That view that you expressed about Mr. Bragg, have you since come to a decision to revise that conclusion?

A I decline to answer on the basis of my privilege against self-incrimination.

Q Okay. You know, in several -- you know, you mentioned on page 208 that when you were getting out of law school, Mr. Bragg was a toddler.

A Yes, I recall that sentence.

Q And you, by all accounts, are experienced, but you're not that old.

A At times --

Q And Mr. Bragg is not that young. I mean, he's almost 50.

A At times, I feel very old, Mr. [redacted] and this is one of those times.

Q Fair enough. But at the time, Mr. Bragg -- I mean, he's almost 50 years of age, as far as I understand. I mean, he's not that young.

A He seems younger and younger to me as I get older and older. I notice that with a lot of people.

Q Okay.

A I'm 72 as we speak.

Q Right. So do you think his relative youth played a part in -- like, do you think he's not capable of running the office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I did not say that in the book, and I'm not going to comment on that. And I'm asserting my rights, as my lawyer reminds me.

Mr. [redacted] Were you surprised -- in light of the first day memo and in light of the progressive agenda the District Attorney has advanced -- were you surprised at the resources devoted to the Trump matter as compared to some of the basic crime that most district attorney's offices make a priority?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons indicated.

Mr. [redacted] In 2022, Mr. Bragg's first year as the D.A., crime in New York City rose significantly when compared to the previous year. According to NYPD data, New York City saw a 23 percent surge in major crimes.

Do you think there's different things the office can do to address that crime surge, given your experience with the office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection, to the extent it calls for information about his experience with the office.

The Witness. What was your question again? Do I think there are different things the office can be doing?

Mr. [redacted]. Yeah. What can the office do differently to deal with this crime epidemic? I mean, they're devoting a lot of resources -- a tremendous amount of resources to the Trump prosecution. And they're doing this, and at the same time, there's just a raging crime epidemic.

The Witness. I'm not necessarily acquiescing in your characterization. Having said that, I have no ability to hold forth on what a district attorney's office can or should do with regard to the problem of street crime and violent crime and thefts and so on.

If I had a view, my lawyer would probably tell me not to share it. And in fact, I don't have the expertise to express a view on that.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Chairman Jordan. You related in your book, Mr. Pomerantz, that -- I believe your son is an officer in the NYPD?

The Witness. My son is a lieutenant in the NYPD.

Chairman Jordan. I appreciate his service.

You related in there an exchange of, I think, text messages and conversations you had with him regarding the day one memo, which seemed to indicate that he did not have a very high regard for what was contained in that memorandum.

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer your question and do so, in particular, with regard to paragraph 6 of my statement. I really have to object to the notion that my son's views as a New York City police officer, whatever they may be, are germane to your legislative purpose.

Chairman Jordan. With all due respect, Mr. Pomerantz -- and, again, we appreciate your son's service. We appreciate your service.

We have a crime subcommittee on the Judiciary Committee. We are concerned about crime. We are concerned about Federal funds being used in the District Attorney's Office and they're not prosecuting bad guys who do bad things to people. And we know that it's happening in the city of New York. That's why we did a hearing there just a few weeks ago.

So that was the motivation for the question.

The Witness. I understand.

Chairman Jordan. Thank you.

Mr. [redacted] You referenced various outside law firms. Two firms assisted with the so-called Zombie theory?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [redacted] Was that the same firm or a different firm? Not asking you -- I mean, I'd like to know the name of the firm. Will you tell me the names of the firms?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. No.

Mr. Wells. It's getting late, guys.

The Witness. I respectfully decline -- well, I did answer your question, I guess, literally speaking. The question was whether I would tell you, and I answered no.

BY MR. [redacted]

Q Okay. Was it the same firm?

The Zombie case, there's a legal theory that -- various legal theories -- that needed to be run to ground. In your book, you talk about how there is an outside law firm helping the D.A.'s Office. And I asked you for the name of that law firm. It's mentioned at two different points.

In the fall of 2019, before you joined the District Attorney's Office, they commissioned -- and this is on page 40 -- they commissioned an outside firm. And then, when you joined the District Attorney's Office and you were looking at whether the money laundering -- the money laundering idea could be used, you went back, as I understand it, and had the help of on outside law firm.

So my question is, what was the name of those firms, and were they different?

A First, I think your question misstates the facts --

Q Okay.

A -- in the sense that the book does not reference getting an outside counsel's opinion with respect to potential money laundering charges.

Q Okay.

A The book does reference outside opinions with regard to false statement and the predicate acts necessary to elevate a false filing charge from a misdemeanor to a felony.

And you correctly point out that the book references a law firm at one point and also references a law firm at a separate point. And now your question is whether those were the same law firms.

Q Correct.

A And having clarified your question, I refuse to answer it for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Q When you were working on your -- on the SOFC matter in late March, you wrote in your book that, "The District Attorney's Office began ramping up work that our outside consultant, FTI, was doing to parse Trump's tax returns and financial statements."

What was FTI doing for the District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The question was what was FTI doing for the District Attorney's Office?

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Right.

A Yeah, I decline to answer that question for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Q And why is it that on one hand you're willing to name FTI in the book but not the law firms?

A I decline to answer your question on the advice of my counsel. Well, I should say, generally, I'm trying to follow the advice of my counsel each and every time I assert my rights.

Q You mention in the book the assistance of lawyers from the Paul, Weiss firm as well as the Davis Polk firm?

A You're referring, I believe, to lawyers described in the book as having been seconded to the District Attorney's Office?

Q Correct. The work that those lawyers were performing, was that the same work as the outside law firms were consulted on, or were they two different subject matters?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons previously stated.

Mr. [redacted] Is there any prohibition from the District Attorney's Office to get free help from outside law firms that you're aware of?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer the question. I'll leave it there.

Mr.[redacted]. In the congressional context, for example, if a government agency was using the services of a law firm for free, there would be issues because that money is not authorized or appropriated and so forth.

And I'm wondering if there's any companion idea in the District Attorney's Office or is there just no restrictions on how much free help they can get.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer the question for the reasons stated.

Mr.[redacted] Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Can I?

Mr. Pomerantz, in the letter that Ms. Dubeck sent you as general counsel for the D.A.'s Office -- Ms. Dubeck, who's been here with us this entire time representing the D.A.'s Office -- that she sent to the lawyer for Paramount, I think the parent company for Simon & Schuster, she sent the letter to the general counsel for Simon & Schuster and to you on the 18th. And they make clear in the letter they discovered that you were going to publish a book based on an announcement from your publisher, Simon & Schuster, and then they send you the letter on the 18th.

Did you talk with them, did you try to work it out, when they tell you on the 18th? Because my understanding is the book -- you get this letter on the 18th, and the book is published the next month. Did you have communications with them trying to work this out?

The Witness. The book was published on February 7th, 2023. And I decline to answer whether there were any conversations between the date of the letter and February 7th.

Mr. Wells. Just so the record is clear, that's January? It that the January letter?

Chairman Jordan. January 18th, 2023. It's exhibit 16, the letter from

Ms. Dubeck to Mr. Pomerantz and Simon & Schuster and the parent company.

Did you think about, when you got the letter, did you think about, "Wait a minute, let's put the brakes on this"?

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer on the grounds of -- on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Chairman Jordan. Is it fair to say if you would have -- if you'd have held back on publishing the book, that there would have been no need for this letter?

If you told them, "You know what?" -- let's say it this way. If you held back on publishing the book, didn't publish the book, that you wouldn't be facing possible criminal liability?

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. [redacted] But I guess what Mr. Jordan is getting to is, were there any conversations before the letter came that could have resolved the situation?

The Witness. Prior to the letter?

Mr. [redacted] Right.

Chairman Jordan. Between the 11th -- when Simon & Schuster announces "People v. Donald Trump, An Inside Account" by Mark Pomerantz is going to be available at some date -- between the 11th and the 18th, when they send you the letter, did you talk to them?

The Witness. Yes, I decline to answer that question.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. [redacted] And am I also correct that you're declining to answer whether you had any communications with them outside of the letter?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. I think we're done. We'll go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 3:24 p.m., the deposition was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

ROBERT LITT, ESQ.

HAYDN FORREST, ESQ.

Morrison & Foerster LLP

2100 L Street NW, Suite 900

Washington, D.C. 20037

Mr. [redacted]. Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of Mr. Nick Rasmussen, former director of the National Counterterrorism Center. Chairman Jordan and Chairman Turner have requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of oversight of Federal law enforcement and intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions.

Could the witness please state your name for the record?

Mr. Rasmussen. Sure. Nicholas "Nick" Rasmussen.

Mr. [redacted]. And you're joined here by counsel. I'll have them introduce themselves as well.

Mr. Litt. Robert Litt from Morrison & Foerster.

Mr. Forrest. Haydn Forrest, also from Morrison Foerster.

Mr. [redacted]. And I'll have the staffers introduce themselves. My name is [redacted]. I'm with Mr. Jordan's staff on the majority of the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], senior special counsel with Mr. Jordan on the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], House majority, Judiciary.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], counsel with Chairman Jordan's office.

Mr. [redacted]. And minority staff.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, Democratic staff.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted] with the House Intelligence Committee, Mr. Himes, in the minority.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], House Judiciary Committee.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler.

Mr. [redacted]. We're also joined by one of our members.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, House majority, Judiciary.

Mr. Rasmussen. Good to see you, sir.

Mr. [redacted]. This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within our various jurisdictions.

On behalf of the committees, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates, of course, your willingness to appear here voluntarily.

I'd like to go over the ground rules that we will follow during today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for up to an hour, and then the minority will have a chance to ask questions for an hour as well. We'll alternate back and forth until we're done, and we certainly will do our very best to make this go as quickly as possible.

Mr. Rasmussen. Thank you.

Mr. [redacted]. We do not want to belabor anything.

Typically, we'll take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, just let us know, we're happy to facilitate that.

As you can see, a court reporter is here, taking down everything we say. Sometimes we'll end up talking over one another. Usually that's our bad. And if that's the case, we might have to back up and restate a question, so forth.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we'll take our time. If you have any questions or don't understand what we're asking, just let us know, we'll try to rephrase.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or don't remember, it's, of course, best not to guess. Just tell us what you do remember. Federal Rules of Evidence aren't in play here, so there's no hearsay objections or foundation or any of that kind of material from the Federal Rules of Evidence. So if you learned something from a third party or you overheard a conversation, you can just tell us how you came to learn something.

And you understand that although this interview is not under oath, by law you're required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that.

Mr. Rasmussen. Yes, sir.

Mr. [redacted] And 18 United States Code 1001 deals with those issues. You understand that?

Mr. Rasmussen. Yes.

Mr. [redacted]. We try to keep the information we cover confidential, so to the extent you can help us with that, we would appreciate that.

And to the extent we have exhibits that we mark, even if it's material that you've produced, at the end of the interview, we will actually collect the exhibits.

The exhibits we use do serve as somewhat of a roadmap of the types of things we're interested in. So the fact that we're using it becomes -- you know, we believe it's confidential, and we've got to collect that.

Ms. [redacted], do you have anything you want to --

Ms. [redacted]. No. Just thank you to the witness for taking time out of your schedule to come here today.

Mr. Litt. Can I just briefly note that Mr. Rasmussen is currently an official at the Department of Homeland Security.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Mr. Litt. He didn't join DHS until considerably after the events that are the subject of this interview, and his current position has nothing to do with that. I will ask that you not ask him questions about his current duties.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Mr. Litt. And if you want to cover that, just go through the normal oversight processes with the Department.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. And then one last thing before I turn it over to my colleague, Mr. [redacted].

We do appreciate the letter that was signed, every person that signed it has, you know, First Amendment freedom, and they're free to engage in politics, and they're free to engage in anything, you know, anything they want under the First Amendment, and we do appreciate that.

The concerns that our members have is that when you attach your former titles to a letter of that type, it gives the perception, rightly or wrongly, that the signers are speaking from, you know, a set of information that is unavailable to the public because of the history and the former duties that you've had. So just wanted to put that on the record right away.

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

Mr. [redacted]. We appreciate your First Amendment rights, and we're not trying to say that you're, you know, not free to sign these types of letters or engage in politics for any candidate you want.

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

Mr. [redacted]. And with that, I'll turn it over to my colleague.

Mr. [redacted]. Thank you, [redacted].

Mr. [redacted]. It's 10:06.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Mr. Rasmussen, you have a pretty extensive background in counterterrorism. If you would, please give the committee a brief background of your professional experience.

A I entered government in 1991 and worked the first decade-plus of my career at the State Department on a range of national security issues, to include North Korea nuclear matters, the Arab-Israeli peace process, political military issues in the Persian Gulf region in the aftermath of the first Gulf war.

The time of the 9/11 attacks, my career took kind of a hard right turn into the counterterrorism space more specifically. I accepted a position to work on President Bush's National Security Council staff in the counterterrorism -- what was then the Office of Transnational Threats, in the days immediately after 9/11, working for President Bush's NSC staff. Then, had a period at the National Counterterrorism Center in its early startup days, and then returned to the National Security Council staff under President Bush towards the end of his second term and finished the President Bush's term on the National Security Council staff and focused on counterterrorism.

I was held over into President Obama's National Security Council staff as the senior director for counterterrorism. Remained in that role for a number of years before transitioning to the National Counterterrorism Center, where I was then the deputy director for a period of time and then nominated by President Obama to be the director of the National Counterterrorism Center in 20,000 -- in 20,000 -- 2014, confirmed by the Senate and held the role from 2014 until the end of 2017, at which point I resigned and retired from government service.

Q Why did you resign from government service?

A It was kind of a completion of a 3-year term. There was nothing specified about a 3-year term, but that seemed to me to be a logical and good break point for service in a role like the director of NCTC.

When the Obama administration transitioned to the Trump administration, the Director of National Intelligence -- the incoming Director of National Intelligence, Senator Dan Coats, with whom I had a good, positive working relationship during his service on SSCI, along with one or two other officials in the new administration, urged me to consider staying, and President Trump's team did ask me to stay for a period of time, and I stayed until, as I said, the end of the -- pretty much the end of that first year and then just resigned and retired.

Q Okay. So are you retired, or do you do anything else now?

A I retired as kind of -- I retired from Federal Government service. I held a couple of positions post-government service, but then in November of last year, returned to government service at the Department of Homeland Security where I serve as the coordinator for counterterrorism for Secretary Mayorkas and the Department.

Q Between the time you resigned from the National Counterterrorism Center and your return from government, what, if anything, were you doing?

A I had --

Q Professionally.

A For the first 2-plus years of that period -- it's covering basically about a 4- to 5-year period outside government service. For the first 2-plus years of that, I was a senior director for counterterrorism programs at the McCain Institute, which is affiliated with Arizona State University, located here in Washington but linked to Arizona State University and Phoenix/Tempe.

I subsequently departed that role in the summer of 2020 and took a role with -- as the first executive director of the GIFCT, the Global Internet Forum to Counter Terrorism, which works with technology companies in the effort to prevent terrorists and violent extremists from using online platforms to engage in their work. And I resigned that position to return to government service.

Q Why did you return to government service?

A The opportunity to continue to resume serving on a set of issues I care deeply about -- counterterrorism, keeping the American people safe from terrorist attack. There were also at least one or two senior officials at DHS with whom I'd had strong previous working relationships, to include Ken Wainstein, the Under Secretary for Intelligence, who was my boss in President Bush's National Security Council staff. Ken was among those who encouraged me to come back to government service.

Q Okay. Now, you were one of the 51 former intelligence officials who signed the public statement regarding Hunter Biden's laptop and emails, correct?

A That's correct.

Q I'd like now to enter a document dated October 19, 2020, titled, Public Statement on Hunter Biden's Emails.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 1.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Mr. Rasmussen, are you familiar with this document?

A Yes, I am.

Q Have you reviewed the document before you came in to testify today?

A Yes, I have.

Q When did you review that document?

A When I was in receipt of the chairman's letter requesting that I cooperate with the committee and then subsequent encounters preparing for this session.

Q How would you describe this document?

A I would describe it as a statement by a collection of former national security and intelligence officials expressing an opinion at a key moment leading into an election season when a -- expressing an opinion on a matter of emerging public policy at a moment leading into an election season.

Q What do you understand the intent of this public statement to be?

A From my perspective, the intent of the statement was to alert the public to the possibility, potentially even the likelihood, that the emergence of information tied to the Hunter Biden laptop was worthy of further scrutiny, that it might be -- could well be a injection by an outside actor, specifically the Russian Government or Russian actors, into an act of election interference.

And so I saw the letter as an opportunity to alert and to urge further scrutiny so that people take it -- not take at face value that which they may read, but may lead them to look more deeply into it.

Q Now, prior to receiving the draft of the public statement, were you aware of the Hunter Biden laptop email story?

A To the best of my recollection, just broad news -- broad news exposure.

Q Did you have any concerns about that information prior to receiving the public statement draft, to your knowledge?

A I cannot recall.

Q When you received the first draft of this statement, did you review it in full?

A I reviewed it, yes.

Q And what were your thoughts, if you can recall?

A I read it. I felt like it was -- the most important thing from my perspective was to focus on the caveating language, because I knew -- at least based on what I knew, that there was not certainty about the providence of the laptop issue. And so I focused in on the paragraph in particular that stated quite clearly that we did not know if the emails are genuine or not and that we did not have evidence of Russian Government involvement, just that this confluence of events makes us deeply suspicious.

So I wanted to make sure, in my own mind, that I was comfortable with that caveating language because to me that was the critical language.

Q So you were more concerned with the caveat language than the actual thrust of the public statement itself that this could be a Russian information operation?

A I wouldn't say I was more concerned. It's just that's the part I focused in on, because if I was going to attach my name to it, I wanted to be sure that it accurately reflected what was known and what was unknown.

Q What was known prior to your reviewing this public statement draft?

A I can't recall exactly with precision what was known or unknown.

Q Doesn't have to be precise. Best of your recollection.

Mr. Litt. Do you mean about the statement in particular or about -- sorry -- about the laptop in particular or about what's covered by the statement?

Mr. [redacted]. About the laptop in particular, which is ultimately the thrust of the statement.

Mr. Rasmussen. I was broadly aware that the laptop had been found or unearthed and that it contained information on it that was purported to be reflective of various business activities and personal activities that Hunter Biden may have been involved in. A broad -- broad -- that is my recollection of my state of awareness at the time.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q That's all we're asking.

A Yeah.

Q And included in that, also the potential business dealings or knowledge of then Vice President Biden, correct?

A Again, that was not where my mind was focused, but --

Q Did you draft this statement in any way?

A I did not.

Q And when did you first become aware of this statement?

A I became aware of it when Michael Morell emailed me, along with -- I was bcc'd on an email that I don't know went to how many other individuals. That was when I became aware of it.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 2.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q All right. At this time I'd like to enter a draft of the statement that Mr. Morell and Marc Polymeropoulos sent to the potential signatories to the draft statement as exhibit 2. Just take a look at that, Mr. Rasmussen.

A Uh-huh.

Q Are you familiar with this email?

A Broadly speaking, yes.

Q I want to direct your attention to the first paragraph on the first page. The email is from Mr. Morell, and it says: Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response.

Do you remember -- do you recall reading that email?

A I recall broadly reading that email, but I kind of skipped right to the document, as I recall.

Q But you recall reading that it was for vice -- in part for Vice President Biden to have talking points?

A Yes.

Q How do you know Mr. Morell?

A Through quite a number of years of shared government service, during his period of time in senior CIA roles, my period of time at the White House and at the National Counterterrorism Center.

Q Are you friendly outside of professional interactions?

A Friendly, slash, courteous but not close friends.

Q Okay. How do you know Mr. Marc Polymeropoulos?

A I have much less of a relationship with Marc Polymeropoulos. I was aware, broadly speaking, of who he was from his professional reputation but did not know him quite -- did not know him personally.

Q Why do you think these men reached out to you?

A I don't know with certainty, but I suspect that Michael would've included me in a group of individuals he had known and worked with over an extended period of time in the national security and intelligence communities.

Q Have you spoke to him since this public statement?

A I've spoken to Michael in a couple of different settings but not about this at any point.

Q Have you spoken to him recently?

A Not -- I don't believe I've spoken to him this year or recently at all.

Q As far as you know, what role did Mr. Morell play in the creation of the public statement?

A Because I received the email from Mr. Morell, I assumed or made an assumption that he was the principal drafter of the letter.

Q And forgive me if I asked this, did you have any role whatsoever in creating this document?

A No.

Q Did you advance any edits to the document?

A I did not.

Q Did you convey any concerns about the language of the public statement?

A I did not.

Q So you were satisfied with it as written?

A I didn't have any concerns that I -- that I felt necessary to raise. I recall asking -- assuming that it would go through an editing process, I asked to see a final draft so that I would see it on the back end of whatever editing process others engaged in before agreeing officially to affix my name to it.

Q Okay. And did you speak with Mr. Morell or Mr. Polymeropoulos at any time on the phone around the time of the creation of the public statement?

A No, I did not.

Q Okay. Were you aware of Mr. Morell's outreach efforts to other former officials -- intel officials?

A Only broadly speaking in that I knew I was bcc'd on an email that went to a larger number of individuals. And then in my response, one of the things I requested was to know who the signatories were before -- before officially agreeing.

Mr. [redacted]. Yeah, that's the one.

Mr. Gaetz. Why was that important to you?

Mr. Rasmussen. I simply wanted to see if my career, background, and experience fit broadly within the experience and range -- and career experience and expertise of others who were participating in the -- in the effort.

Mr. Gaetz. And how would you describe that band or group of people who ultimately chose to participate, how would you characterize the group?

Mr. Rasmussen. Individuals with significant national security and intelligence experience, including related to -- that related to matters involving Russia, experience gained over a long period of time across multiple decades.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you a Russia expert?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't consider myself a Russia expert per se.

Mr. Gaetz. Was it important to you that people who were Russia experts were part of the group?

Mr. Rasmussen. I certainly gave credence to the fact that there were individuals in that group who understood the Russia target, the Russia problem set, from a much closer place of professional association.

Mr. Gaetz. And who were those people?

Mr. Rasmussen. I can't recall, you know, exactly who I was thinking of in that regard. But certainly an official like -- like Michael, who had organized the effort, fit into that category, from my perspective.

Mr. Gaetz. Did John Brennan fit into that category?

Mr. Rasmussen. It did, in my judgment, given his time as director of CIA and career background at CIA, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And did James Clapper fit that category?

Mr. Rasmussen. Yes. For similar reasons.

Mr. Gaetz. And so is it safe to say if Mr. Clapper, Mr. Brennan, and Mr. Morell had not signed the letter, you would not have seen the Russia expertise that you were looking for when you sought to review the names of the signatories?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't know that.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Is there anyone else you can recall that fit -- you know, because the purpose of our exercise today is to go through all the bases you had to sign this letter. So you've testified now that one of the bases is that with this group of people you felt comfortable that there was sufficient Russia expertise, and so I want to probe that with you and understand it thoroughly and completely.

Mr. Rasmussen. I can't recall specific individuals on whose names I keyed in when going through that list. I did take note of individuals who'd had direct responsibility for Russia-related matters, and their inclusion contributed to my sense of confidence.

Mr. Gaetz. Other than assuring that this group of people contained sufficient Russia expertise since Russia was so central to the letter, was there any other criteria that you were looking for from this group of people before you would agree to join them and sign?

Mr. Rasmussen. Not that I recall specifically.

Mr. Gaetz. So the -- I mean, one of the things we're investigating is, upon receiving this message that is exhibit 2, one group of people immediately said they were gung ho to sign the letter. Another group of people said they would like to see what group they were going to be included in.

You've now testified you're in that second group, but the sole reason you sought that review was subject matter expertise over the contents of the letter.

Mr. Rasmussen. That's what I recall.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you very much. Appreciate that.

Mr. [redacted]. At this point I'd like to enter into the record an email sent from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro, dated October 19, 2020, at 6:36 a.m., into the record as exhibit 3.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 3.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Mr. Rasmussen, if you'd take a look at that.

Have you had a chance to review that email?

A Yes.

Q Now, do you know Mr. Shapiro?

A I do.

Q How?

A He and I first met when he was a staff member in President Obama's White House National Security Council staff where I was as well, and then he served under John Brennan when John Brennan was director of CIA. I don't know exactly what role he was in, but I know he was part of Director Brennan's team.

Q Were you aware of his role in the propagation of the public statement?

A I don't think I was at the time. I don't recall that I was at the time. Again, the emails -- the email that I received was specifically from Michael.

Q Directing your attention to this email from Mr. Morell to Mr. Shapiro, he indicates on the second paragraph: I've sent a daft to David Kris, Lisa Monaco but have not yet heard back. They should sign.

And then he says: I'm looking for two things, pairs of senior who served in the same position from different administrations -- Hayden and Panetta, Jeh Johnson and Mike Chertoff, Lisa and Ken Wainstein, Clapper and Coats, et cetera -- and then a slew of former IC and national security who worked Russia. Should have something to give to the media through you tomorrow afternoon.

Sitting here today, what is your view having reviewed this email? I presume it's for the first time.

Mr. Litt. What do you mean by what is his view?

Mr. [redacted]. What is his opinion on this email?

Mr. Litt. Do you have an opinion on this email?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't have an opinion on this email. I haven't spent any time thinking about it, and I don't really have a reason to have an opinion about it at this point.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Well, do you have an opinion -- okay, withdrawn.

Were you aware of these outreach efforts as outlined in Mr. Morell's email to Mr. Shapiro?

A No, I was not.

Q But now you are, right?

A In a general way. Again, this is the first I've seen this email, so I don't know what was intended by way of specific next steps with the letter. I was not involved in any of that conversation at the time.

Q Well, let me ask you this. Just given your vast experience, does Mr. Morell's articulation of what he's looking for make sense to you in the context of the promotion of the public statement?

A I think he was seeking to have a broadly representative group of national security officials join the letter-writing effort. That's how I interpret it. How I interpret it now.

Q Okay. Have you spoken with any of the individuals named in this email since the public statement?

Mr. Litt. About the statement or about anything?

Mr. [redacted]. We'll clarify.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q About the public statement.

A Only with Mr. Wainstein, because I made him aware when I became the subject of this committee's inquiry. He was a colleague of mine at the Department of Homeland Security and, as I said, had played a role in bringing me back into government service. So I wanted him to be aware of this in case there was media attention to it.

But I haven't spoken about the contact -- content of the letter or the process around which the letter happened. Didn't occur to me to do that with Mr. Wainstein.

Q Did you speak verbally or did you email him or text?

A It would've been all verbal.

Q And when was this?

A I see him on a -- I see him on a daily basis.

I don't have a specific recollection. I just informed him earlier this year when I was in receipt of the committee's request for cooperation.

Q Did you have a role in promoting the public statement upon signing it?

A I did not.

Q Did you do any media or press in connection with the public statement?

A I did not.

Q And I think you testified to this, but let me ask again. Did you have any edits or suggestions as to the language of the public statement?

A I did not. I did not offer Michael any edits.

Q Now, I'll represent to you that we know the statement as published is different from the draft that was originally circulated. In particular, the last two paragraphs -- well, withdrawn.

Let me introduce an exhibit.

Thank you.

At this time I'd like to enter an email sent from Michael Morell to Nick Rasmussen, dated October 19, 2020, at 8:41 a.m., into the record as exhibit 4.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 4.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Please review that, Mr. Rasmussen.

A Okay.

Q In particular, I direct your attention to the, I guess the third email on page 1 of exhibit 4. On October 19, 2020, at 8:41 -- we just introduced it -- Mr. Morell says: Nick, attached is the current version letter with the signatories so far. FYI: The last two paras are gone, as some folks thought them too political. Just Russia and intel now. Better.

What do you understand Mr. Morell to be talking about there?

A Only that the letter had been tightened up and narrowed in scope and focus during the editing process.

Q Well, that isn't what he says. He says it was too political, right?

Mr. Litt. You asked him what his understanding was. He gave you his understanding.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Well, let me ask it again with the direct focus on him calling it too political. Would you in any way view that beyond just tightening it up?

A I didn't -- I don't recall focusing on that element of it at the time.

Q Directing your attention to exhibit 2, which you should have in front of you --

A Is that the actual letter?

Q Yep.

Mr. Litt. That's the first draft of the letter?

Mr. [redacted]. First draft of the letter.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Exhibit 2 has an email, and it has the first draft. It should be the third page.

A Uh-huh.

Q Directing your attention to the last two paragraphs of the first draft of the public statement.

For those who argue that it is important for the truth to come out, even if it comes at the cost of foreign interference, let us share our understanding of what transpired between Vice President Biden and the Ukrainians. It is not what Biden's opponents want Americans to think.

Then they go into very particular details of Vice President Biden's interactions or statements with the Prosecutor General of Ukraine, Viktor Shokin.

Is it your view that those last two paragraphs are, in fact, too political to include in this public statement?

A I don't have a view on that. I didn't at the time.

Q You were content to sign this first draft, correct?

A I was content to associate myself with the letter-writing effort. I asked to see an additional draft, and when the draft came, that is what I focused on in reviewing. After the editing process had been completed -- or after the editing process had taken place with others providing edits.

Q Okay. Do you know --

Mr. Gaetz. Just to be clear for the record, you were not one of the people who sought the removal of these paragraphs, right?

Mr. Rasmussen. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And the condition that you had seemed to have placed on signing the letter wasn't a condition for edits, right?

Mr. Rasmussen. I -- in responding to Michael, I wanted to preserve my flexibility so that I could review the letter again after the editing process --

Mr. Gaetz. Totally understand.

Mr. Rasmussen. -- and then make a judgment and a decision as to whether I was comfortable joining the letter.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. But before these paragraphs that my colleague just identified to you were removed, the only condition you placed upon your willingness to sign it was to see the final edits and to see the final list of people, but you did not condition your signing it on the removal of those paragraphs.

Mr. Rasmussen. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. And you had indicated, prior to those paragraphs being removed, a willingness to sign it so long as you preserved the flexibility to review the final edits and the final list of signatories?

Mr. Rasmussen. Yes, because I was aware that often in a letter-writing exercise, particularly a group-writing exercise, there can be considerable insertion and deletion of material before something is ready for final review. So that is what I sought to preserve, was my flexibility to make a decision after I had seen that final product.

Mr. Gaetz. Why did these paragraphs not concern you?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't recall that I had a concern or lack of concern about them at the time. It was a procedural step in my mind to await the next phase of the letter-writing effort before I would render a judgment as to whether I was comfortable signing or not.

Mr. Gaetz. I thought you'd rendered a judgment that you were okay to sign so long as you saw the final edits and the signatories?

Mr. Rasmussen. Right. And that caveating language that I sent to Michael, you know, in my mind, preserved my flexibility. If the letter were to look very, very different in a way that I was not comfortable with, I could then say, Michael, no, that's not --

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I guess I'm trying to understand why you weren't among those pushing for the removal of these references to Shokin.

Mr. Rasmussen. I have no specific recollection of focusing on those paragraphs.

Mr. Gaetz. So those paragraphs didn't strike -- I apologize for speaking over you. I will endeavor --

Mr. Rasmussen. No, I have no specific recollection of focusing on those paragraphs during my initial reading of Michael's initial draft, and then they were absent in the draft that I subsequently reviewed before agreeing, you know, finally to sign the letter.

Mr. Gaetz. So before you saw the final draft, the draft that included these Ukraine references, that didn't seem out of place to you in this letter about Russia?

Mr. Rasmussen. I think I've answered the question. I did not focus on those two paragraphs as standing out in that regard.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

Mr. [redacted]. Alluding to Congressman Gaetz' inquiry, I want to direct your attention to an email -- we're still on exhibit 4 -- email from you, October 19, 2020, at 8:27 a.m. And it looks a little cut off, but I'll -- given the recipient is Michael and Marc, I'll represent --

Mr. Litt. It's actually -- the top half of the cutoff line is on the prior page.

Mr. [redacted]. Yes, page -- just the first page, yeah, it's the header.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q So an email from you to Michael and Marc, and it states: I'd be happy to sign, but I'd like to take advantage of your offer to have you share a final list before final approval. As you know, I'm not a Russia expert, per se, so I would just like to see where my name/profile fits in with others who are, in fact, signing it, if that makes sense. I'd appreciate your efforts in taking this on.

Is that an email from you?

A It is.

Q Okay. Now, you state you want to ultimately wait and see who was, in fact, signing on. Why?

A Again, I think I answered this earlier. I wanted to ensure that my experience and the nature of my national security and intelligence experience and professional profile fit reasonably well within the list of other signatories.

Q So let me ask you this. It sounds like what you're saying -- correct me if I'm wrong -- you waited to see if there was a sufficient number of Russia experts who ratified this letter before you signed on?

A I wouldn't put it that specifically. This was a feel thing for me. I wanted to see if individuals with whom I had a comfort level with their expertise, their professionalism, their career experience, were also present in this exercise. And before rendering a final judgment to Michael, I wanted to see if I fit within that grouping.

Q Well, were you comfortable with Michael Morell's experience in this regard?

A Yes, I was.

Q Were you comfortable with Marc Polymeropoulos' experience in this regard?

A Less -- less comprehensively because I knew Marc by reputation, not personally.

Q So I'm going to assume that it was just Mike and Marc, Mr. Morell, Mr. Polymeropoulos, signing this letter. Would you have signed on?

A I don't know.

Q Do you -- are you familiar with the other 50 signatories to this letter?

A Not every single one. Certainly a number of them fall into the category of people with whom I had worked or been associated with during the course of my career.

Q But at some point, did you look at all their names?

A Yes. When Michael shared the list.

Q Were there people, as far as you know, who were not Russia experts who signed on to that letter as well?

A There were people who had specific Russia expertise as reflected in their title or responsibilities. There were other individuals who had broad national security and intelligence experience.

Q Is Russ Travers a Russia expert, as far as you know?

A I don't know the full extent of Mr. Travers' expertise and experience.

Q Would you agree that the American people reading this letter, they would assume that everyone who signed is an expert on the content of what's being put forward in the public statement?

A Ask the question again. I'm sorry. I want to be careful in answering your question.

Mr. [redacted] Can I have it read back?

Mr. [redacted]. Can we go off the record here for a second?

Mr. Rasmussen. Yeah.

Mr. [redacted]. Yeah.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted]. Back on the record.

Mr. [redacted]. Back on the record.

No, no, you're fine. Let me ask -- I know the gist of the question.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Would you agree that if the American people are reading this letter, they would assume all the people who signed it were Russia experts or had an expertise that validates the thrust of this letter?

A I would assume that anyone reading the letter would look at the list and assume that the signatories had relevant expertise of one form or another.

Q Sufficient to make a judgment about whether or not Hunter Biden's laptop and emails were potentially Russian disinformation?

A Sufficient to offer a recommendation or a plea or -- that scrutiny be attached to this and that there were reasons to -- to be skeptical of the providence of the email.

And again, as I pointed out in other -- in response to other questions, I directed my focus principally to the caveating language for that purpose, where we were clear about what was known and not known at that stage.

Q We'll come back to the caveating.

Are you aware that the Hunter Biden laptop and emails have since been authenticated?

A I'm broadly familiar with public reporting on, you know, the Biden laptop issue.

Q In light of that public reporting, do you still believe that the Russians were somehow involved in disseminating the emails from the laptop?

A I don't know with certainty.

Q Well, given your familiarity with the authentication, do you believe the statement that you and others signed should be retracted?

A I don't have a view on whether it should be retracted or not.

Q Do you have any regrets about signing that statement?

A I don't have regrets about signing the statement, given what was known at the time. I regret that the statement has been drawn into a political controversy and regret that that is so.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, wasn't the whole purpose of the statement political, based on that email that you were bcc'd on?

Mr. Rasmussen. Again, that was part of Michael Morell's stated purpose in preparing the letter.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you've testified to us that you signed the letter because you believed that Mr. Morell was this enlightened Russia expert. He sent you a letter saying that they were doing this to be used in a political debate, and now you're testifying to us that you regret that it was political?

Mr. Rasmussen. My primary purpose in signing the letter was to bring to the public's attention the possibility that this was an act of Russian interference and to urge that this information be viewed critically.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Did you have any other purpose than that which you just expressed?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't recall having any other purpose other than that.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. And now I want you to list the things that provided your basis for the belief that this may have been Russian interference.

Mr. Rasmussen. I reached that conclusion in my own mind drawing on three kind of specific, contextual, you know, pieces of information. One is just the long experience that I'd had in the -- as a consumer in the intelligence community, reading intelligence community analysis of Russian activity aimed at influencing politics in adversary nations, to include the United States.

Also kind of front and center in my mind at this particular period was the recently issued report by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the bipartisan report that had just been issued, I think, in mid, late August of that period, which had concluded, on a bipartisan basis, that there had been Russian efforts to engage in election meddling in the previous election, 2016.

And then I also recall at the time, you know, statements from our intelligence community serving at the time, Bill Evanina, our -- at that time who was the head of the counterintelligence organization in the Office of the Director of National Intelligence -- NCSC, I believe, is the acronym -- who, I can't remember the exact form of words, but came forward with a fairly clear and unequivocal statement that the intelligence community judged the Russians continued to try to engage in meddling.

So that was the backdrop to which -- or the lens through which I looked at the information that was emerging about this and caused me to reach a judgment that this was worthy of scrutiny and deserved to be scrutinized.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you for laying out those three bases. I want to ask about them individually now.

The Bill Evanina statement, that didn't mention the Hunter Biden at all, did it?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't recall that it did.

Mr. Gaetz. No. And is there anything about that statement that mentioned anyone in the Biden family at all?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't recall that it did, no.

Mr. Gaetz. So why did the Evanina statement serve as a basis for your signing this letter?

Mr. Rasmussen. Again, it, in my mind, provided -- it showed to me that our intelligence community still held the view -- held the view that the Russians, in some form or fashion, were continuing to try to engage in election interference in the United States.

Mr. Gaetz. But --

Mr. Rasmussen. That's how I read what he said or interpreted what he said, and, again, that conditioned how I thought about this issue.

Mr. Gaetz. And similarly, the Senate Select Committee report didn't mention anything about the use of --

Mr. Rasmussen. It did not. It did not.

Mr. Gaetz. -- of Hunter Biden's laptop?

Mr. Rasmussen. It did not.

Mr. Litt. You should let him finish the question before you answer.

Mr. Rasmussen. I apologize.

Mr. Gaetz. It's okay. I made the mistake earlier.

Mr. Litt. You're even now.

Mr. Gaetz. And in your long experience as a consumer of intelligence information, did you ever encounter any intelligence regarding the Bidens?

Mr. Litt. You don't have to answer about anything that you learned in a classified context. Not that there necessarily is, but I just want to caution you.

Mr. Rasmussen. Right.

Not that I recall. I have no specific recollection.

Mr. Gaetz. So you never came across anything that you can talk about in this setting where Hunter Biden's foreign activities were scrutinized?

Mr. Rasmussen. Not that I recall, no.

Mr. Gaetz. When you say not that you recall, is it --

Mr. Rasmussen. Again, I'm giving you an honest answer.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Mr. Rasmussen. I have no recollection that I've ever read such a piece of material, ever been exposed to such a piece of material.

Mr. Gaetz. And if -- have you -- are you aware of any materials from the Hunter Biden laptop that have made their way into the public square?

Mr. Rasmussen. Only in the broadest sense, not specifically.

Mr. Gaetz. So have you ever been aware of an entity called SinoHawk?

Mr. Rasmussen. I have no knowledge of -- no -- that name doesn't register with me.

Mr. Gaetz. And are you aware of information from Hunter Biden's laptop becoming public that talked about Hunter Biden engaging in business in Russia?

Mr. Rasmussen. Again, I can remember being broadly familiar with press reporting about this but not with any specificity.

Mr. Gaetz. I mean, if I represent to you that the committee is aware that Hunter Biden was engaged in business deals with Russians, with Ukrainians, does that provide important context for this public statement you signed?

Mr. Rasmussen. At the time I did not have information of that sort available to me.

Mr. Gaetz. If you were aware that Hunter Biden was engaged in business deals with Ukrainians, would you have signed this letter?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't know because it's a hypothetical, and I don't know what contextual information -- what additional context that information would've provided. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. So same question as to Russia. If you knew that Hunter Biden was involved in business in Russia, would that have given you pause before signing this letter?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't know. Same answer, because I don't know what the nature of that information might've been.

Mr. Gaetz. You would certainly agree that if Hunter Biden is engaged in influence peddling, whether it's legal or illegal, that would inform on the context of the statement, don't you?

Mr. Rasmussen. I didn't have information to that effect available to me at that time, whether it's accurate or inaccurate. So I can't say as to how that would've informed my decision about signing the letter.

Mr. Gaetz. And Mr. [redacted] was right in his preamble, we don't seek to belabor this point, but that really is the essence of why we're asking you these questions, because we're trying to ascertain what laws may need to be changed so that security clearances aren't deployed politically in order to shape how a Presidential debate occurs.

I mean, as you look -- I believe that you are being honest when you say you did not have access to all the information when you signed this statement that you do as you sit here and respond to questions from me. But do you think that Mr. Morell might've known about the Bidens' foreign activities?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't know what Mr. Morell would know or not know.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, you testified earlier that you based your signature on this statement on your reliance on the experience and credibility of people like Mr. Morell, Mr. Brennan, and Mr. Clapper. So I'm trying to understand what about that experience you really relied upon to know that this was on the up and up.

Mr. Rasmussen. I stated that because I believe it. I believe them to be credible interlocutors who have longer and deeper experience with Russia matters than my own.

Mr. Gaetz. And you put that in writing, that you were not a Russia expert and so you wanted to see who was there. And so the question is, like, were you used, were you used as a person with very extensive credentials to make a political point?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't feel that way.

Mr. Gaetz. Why not?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't feel that way because, as I've said on a couple of occasions this morning, the focus I had in participating in the letter was to ensure that the information that was emerging be viewed critically, skeptically, and with a close, careful eye as to its providence.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, do you think --

Mr. Litt. Can he finish?

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry.

Mr. Rasmussen. I'm finished.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you think that the substance of the laptop's contents should similarly be reviewed critically with concern for our country?

Mr. Rasmussen. I believe that any information that bears on our national security should be reviewed and looked at critically.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe your participation in this letter harmed the country's ability to assess the information that emerged off this laptop?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't have any reason to believe that.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, are you aware that this letter was one of the things that tech companies used to suppress their publication?

Mr. Litt. If you're aware of that as a fact, which I don't believe is the case.

Mr. Rasmussen. I'm aware of allegations to that effect, broadly speaking, and I have no specific knowledge about the way tech companies did or did not.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you have knowledge -- are you aware that media companies used the statement you signed to shape their coverage of the contents of the laptop?

Mr. Rasmussen. Again, I don't have any specific knowledge about decisions made by specific media companies about how that managed a report on this issue.

Mr. Gaetz. If this statement you signed was used by media companies and tech companies to suppress the contents of this laptop, would that concern you?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't share your factual predicate, so I can't say if that would concern me or not if I don't have the information that grants your premise.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, now that you are aware of the information that is in the public square regarding the contents of the laptop, what efforts have you undertaken to mitigate the perception -- the false perception that this letter gave?

Mr. Rasmussen. I've not been involved in any efforts in the aftermath of this letter that would bear on that question.

Mr. Gaetz. And you feel no obligation to mitigate the effect of this letter?

Mr. Gaetz. In my view, the media has done significant exploration of this set of issues, and I don't know that I could've added significantly to that with anything that I might contribute to that.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you a disinformation expert?

Mr. Rasmussen. I would not describe myself that way, no.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you done any intelligence work in the disinformation space?

Mr. Rasmussen. Other than being broadly exposed to disinformation -- analysis related to the disinformation efforts of our adversaries, no.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you sought review of the other signatories of this letter before participating in it, was it important to you to assess whether any of them were disinformation specialists?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't recall that being part of my thought process at the time.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you believe the laptop was Russian disinformation as you sit here today?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't fully know.

Mr. [redacted]. Let me ask one.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q It was fairly well known well before the laptop news came out that Hunter Biden had some business dealings in Ukraine, in China, with Russia. Isn't that correct?

A I believe so.

Q I mean, do you remember the --

A Again, I remember the broad public reporting in newspaper -- or media outlets about that.

Q That he was getting paid a whole lot of money by this Ukrainian consortium of companies, Burisma?

A I recall they were reporting about that, yes.

Q And so when the contents of the laptop came out and started revealing a little bit more about that, did you think that possibly the laptop was authentic, the contents of the laptop?

A Again, as was stated in the draft of the letter, the accuracy or inaccuracy of the contents of the laptop was part of the equation, but in my mind, equally important was the context of injecting information about this at a timely moment in the electoral process.

An information operation, for example, can use -- can use accurate information, but if placed and revealed in such a way as to create, you know, harm or political effect, it can do that. So, again, I had the broad awareness of the Burisma set of issues but not of the laptop's contents.

Q But if somebody's running for President and one of their family members is trading on their name for big money -- big money -- with, you know, at least three of our countries that a lot of national security professionals would describe as adversaries --

Mr. Litt. Are you including Ukraine as an adversary?

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Well, China, Russia certainly. But there are some elements of the Ukrainian -- you know, there's Russia-aligned elements in Ukraine. And so those Russia-aligned elements in the Ukrainian Government certainly could be described as adversarial.

Don't you think that information is really important for the American people to have in the runup to an election?

A I agree information is relevant for the American people to have. My focus in reviewing the contents of the letter was on the caveating information -- or the caveating statements --

Q Right.

A -- making clear that we did not have all the facts and just urging that careful scrutiny and attention be paid to this with an eye towards the possibility that it may involve Russian interference. That was kind of my core conclusion.

Q The nuance, though, that you offer has a hard time, don't you agree, being, you know, fully understood? Like the Politico article, for example, the headline included disinformation, it's a Russian disinformation operation. The way it was described in the debate was not nuanced.

A I can't account for how others portray or frame --

Q But wasn't it reasonably foreseeable that this type of letter would get portrayed and not in a nuanced way in today's political environment?

A I don't know what was foreseeable or not foreseeable in that environment.

Q So when Mr. Morell mentioned that it was going to be used for the debate, did it you an indication that this is a political -- just a political operation that you're participating in?

A I certainly understood that there was a political dimension to the letter-writing effort. But, again, as I've stated a number of times, my particular area of focus was on trying to ensure that the information be lifted up, scrutinized, and evaluated critically for the reasons I've described a couple of different occasions.

Q Okay. And I think Mr. Morell has testified, and Mr. Gaetz or my colleagues can correct me if I'm wrong, but he wanted Joe Biden to win, and he thought this was a good tool to use to help Joe Biden, you know, win the election.

If you knew that was Mr. Morell's, you know, main thrust here, would you have signed the letter?

[11:00 a.m.]

Mr. Rasmussen. I certainly understood that Michael was a supporter of President Biden. I don't know how I would characterize -- I don't know how I would answer your question. It's a hypothetical. I don't know.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Okay.

Building on this point that my colleagues have drilled down on, you focused on the caveat. Nevertheless, the email soliciting your signature said "want to give VP a talking point for use in response."

You understood this document would ultimately help the Biden campaign, correct?

A I understood that ultimately, if this effort resulted in scrutiny being applied and that premature conclusions not be reached about the provenance of the laptop, that that would be a worthwhile objective.

Q Let's look at the converse. You are testifying as to: People should be aware, be critical of what they're seeing. But the way in which the public statement was weaponized as in Politico, for instance, saying Russian disinformation, the exact opposite happened, right? It was written off as Russian disinformation, nothing to see there, correct?

A I don't necessarily agree with that characterization, but -- I don't know what you're -- I'm sorry, what are you asking me? You're asking me to agree with that characterization?

Q I'm saying the result of the public statement and how it was promulgated to the American people is in opposite to what you're saying your intent was, that the American people should be aware and scrutinize everything that they're seeing.

A I think there certainly continued to be continued scrutiny on the Hunter Biden laptop issue. So I don't think it removed it from public debate or scrutiny.

Q Well, there was plenty of reporting at the time that there's no "there" there. The intelligence community people said: It's Russian disinformation, there's nothing to see here.

Mr. Litt. Is that a question?

Mr. [redacted]. It is.

Mr. Litt. What's the question?

Mr. [redacted]. Let's put a question mark on it.

Mr. Litt. Well --

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q In response to what I just said, how do you account for that?

A I can't account for how investigative journalists or other journalists characterize the information that they have available to them.

Q But as someone focused on the caveats, you must have been in some ways disheartened at the fact that none of those caveats were really being put into the public square.

A I don't recall having a view -- I don't recall actually even tracking carefully the reporting on this in the immediate aftermath.

Q One moment, please.

Were you aware that Tony Blinken was employed by the Biden campaign at the time the public statement was released?

A I knew he was associated with the campaign. I don't know about employment. I just have no specific knowledge.

Q At this time, I'd like to enter a statement from Michael Morell, provided to the committees by his counsel, dated March 28, 2023, into the record as exhibit 5.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 5.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Now, this is a lengthy document, Mr. Rasmussen, so I'm just going to direct your attention to the relevant passage. The "Statement on behalf of Michael Morell" is about two pages after the first statement from counsel.

A Uh-huh.

Q Do you see that?

A I do.

Q I'd direct your attention to the fourth paragraph of the first page of Mr. Morell's statement.

A Yep.

Q "Sometime on or about October 17, 2020, Mr. Morell received a phone call from Antony Blinken -- a friend and former colleague -- inquiring as to whether Mr. Morell believed Russia might have been involved in the Hunter Biden email story in some way."

Were you aware of that at the time that you signed the public statement?

A I was not.

You're asking if I was aware that a phone call had taken place?

Q Yes.

A I was not aware.

Q Were you aware that Mr. Morell was communicating with Mr. Blinken in connection with the public statement?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q At this time, I'd like to enter into the record an email from Antony Blinken to Mr. Morell that contained a USA Today article titled "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign," dated October 17, 2020, 10:53 p.m., as exhibit 6.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 6.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q For your review, Mr. Rasmussen.

So this is the first page of the email, if you will, and then the final page.

If you look at page 2 of this exhibit, it says, "Andrew Bates, Director of Rapid Response." Do you know who Andrew Bates is?

A I do not.

Q He was the director of rapid response for the Biden campaign.

And Mr. Blinken forwarded that email to Mr. Morell, which, as Mr. Morell testified, ultimately was the impetus for the entire public statement.

Were you aware of these facts?

A No, I was not.

Q Is this the first time you're seeing these documents?

A That's correct.

Q Is this the first time you're learning that Mr. Blinken and Mr. Morell were coordinating to release this public statement?

A Yes, it is.

Mr. Gaetz. Does that surprise you?

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't really have a reaction to that. I would say I would've expected Tony and Michael to have been in contact with each other through this electoral period, but, beyond that, I don't know what the nature of their contacts would contain.

Mr. Gaetz. What we're trying to understand is, you were using the imprimatur of your security clearance to --

Mr. Litt. I'm sorry. Can you point to where he's using the imprimatur of his security clearance?

Mr. Gaetz. Sure.

Mr. Litt. This is a statement that's repeatedly made, and I don't believe there's any basis for it.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you have a security clearance?

Mr. Rasmussen. I currently hold a security clearance.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you hold a security clearance at the time of when you signed the letter?

Mr. Rasmussen. I did.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you signed the letter, under your name, it was the former position you held, right?

Mr. Rasmussen. Correct.

Mr. Gaetz. And every person who's held that position has had a security clearance, haven't they?

Mr. Rasmussen. That is correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

Mr. Litt. Do you eat potatoes for breakfast occasionally?

Mr. Rasmussen. Yes.

Mr. Litt. Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. I wouldn't. They're carby.

Mr. Rasmussen. Yeah. "More than I should" I guess I should've answered.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah.

So what we're trying to understand is, as you were using the imprimatur of your security clearance to get this letter into the public space, to what extent were you aware of -- or, to what extent would involvement between the organizer of this letter and a Presidential campaign have precluded or invited your involvement?

Mr. Litt. You don't need to accept his characterizations in the first part of the statement if you don't.

Mr. Rasmussen. I don't know how I would've reacted or evaluated the letter effort had I known now that there was engagement between Mr. Morell and the campaign.

Mr. Gaetz. But as you sit here today, the knowledge of this letter would not have been a red flag that would've driven you off this letter?

Mr. Rasmussen. I just said I don't know how it would've affected my decision-making at that time.

Mr. Gaetz. Time's up, so --

Ms. [redacted]. We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

Ms. [redacted]. It is 11:16. We can go back on the record. Thank you.

Mr. Rasmussen, good morning again.

Mr. Rasmussen. Good morning.

Ms. [redacted]. And thank you again for coming in and taking time out of your busy schedule today.

EXAMINATION

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q In the first hour, there was some suggestion about the role your security clearance may have played in your decision to draft the letter.

I know you said you had a security clearance at the time that the letter was drafted, but did you review any classified information in deciding whether to sign the letter?

A I did not.

Q Did you review any non-public information at all?

A I did not.

Q Okay.

And, in fact, I want to turn to the letter itself, which is exhibit No. 1.

A Uh-huh.

Q This says over and over again, right, that there was no access to non-public information. It says, "We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails...are genuine or not," in the -- one, two, three, four -- fifth paragraph, right?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q And it says on page -- I'm sorry. Two paragraphs down, it says, "There are a number of factors that make us suspicious of Russian involvement." It doesn't say that we have evidence of Russian involvement, correct?

A Correct.

Q On the following page, it says in the third paragraph, "Our view that the Russians are involved...." It says "our view," suggesting an opinion, correct?

A Correct.

Q The following paragraph says, "... media reports say...", right?

A Correct.

Q And that's a reference to media reports that are in the public eye, correct?

A Correct.

Q And then in the final paragraph, it says, "We do not know whether these press reports are accurate...", correct?

A Correct.

Q And, presumably, if there had been access to classified information one way or another or non-public information that could've shed light on this, that statement would have been accurate, right?

A That's right.

Q And so the statement, from your perspective, was accurate and you did not know.

A That is correct.

Q Okay.

In the earlier hour, we talked through disinformation versus information or an influence campaign. And I know you said that you're not an expert in disinformation, but would you say that you're familiar with disinformation as opposed to an influence or an information-based campaign?

A I'm aware of the distinction.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of that distinction?

A To my understanding, in a very basic sense, disinformation is the use of inaccurate or erroneous information, the deployment of which is designed to achieve political effect and to harm an adversary.

Influence or information operations is similarly intended, in that it's the deployment of information to achieve political effect on an adversary, but it can involve information of all kinds -- erroneous information, inaccurate information, or even truthful, accurate information.

Q And the Russian Government, to your knowledge, has, in fact, used both methods to interfere in elections both here at home and around the world, correct?

A That's my understanding.

Q Okay.

In the case of an information operation, would you agree that Russia tries to hide its hand entirely or hide behind plausible deniability?

A Yes.

Q Do you have any examples of that?

A I don't have any specific examples in my mind that I can think of, but I can remember reading accounts of Russian activity aimed at affecting political developments in nations in their near abroad -- the Baltic states, states of Eastern Europe -- in which the Russian hand was hidden, though ultimately Russian fingerprints were ultimately found to have existed.

Q Are you familiar with a court case which is called -- captioned "United States v. Internet Research Agency et al."?

A Not based on that identifying information.

Q So the court case, it's the United States against Yevgeny Prigozhin, who was the founder of the Wagner Group, regarding his recruitment of Russian troll factories --

A Yes.

Q -- and others to attack the election in 2016.

Are you familiar with it now?

A Broadly familiar with the Justice Department attempt to prosecute.

Q Okay. I'm going to introduce the indictment from that case into the record.

A Okay.

Q That will be exhibit No. 7.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 7.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I'll give you a minute to look it over. We're going to look at paragraph 4 in here.

A Okay. Paragraph 4 on page 3?

Q Correct, paragraph 4 on page 3. And let me know when you've had a minute to review.

A I've had the opportunity to review.

Q Okay.

So paragraph 4 on page 3 of this indictment says that the Russian defendants in this case posed as U.S. persons and created false U.S. personas, operated social media pages and groups designed to attract U.S. audiences.

"These groups and pages, which addressed divisive U.S. political and social issues, falsely claimed to be controlled by U.S. activists when, in fact, they were controlled by Defendants. Defendants also used the stolen identities of real U.S. persons to post on ORGANIZATION-controlled social media accounts. Over time, these social media accounts became Defendants' means to reach significant numbers of Americans for purposes of interfering with the U.S. political system, including the presidential election of 2016."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes, you did.

Q So this is an example of Russians using true information to interfere in the 2016 election, correct?

A That's correct. That's my understanding.

Q And just based on your experience in this world broadly, is this type of activity consistent with how and why Russia works to amplify information online?

A Yes, this, in my experience, is characteristic of Russian information operations.

Q Okay.

Again, based on your long experience in intelligence and national security, do you believe that Russian information, as opposed to disinformation, operations pose a threat to American democracy?

A Yes, I do.

Q Would you agree that making sure that Americans know about Russian efforts to interfere in our elections can play an important role in countering that interference?

A Yes, I believe that.

Q And why is that?

A I think that's important because if one of our principal nation-state adversaries is seeking to affect outcomes, political outcomes or social outcomes, inside the United States at a time of significant political divisiveness in our country, the American people should be aware of that so that they can factor that prospect into how they evaluate the information they consume.

Q So, in other words, by putting more information out to the American public, it helps them make better decisions. Is that a fair way to say it?

A Yes, it is.

Q Okay.

There are some people who say that it doesn't matter where information, whether it's true or false, comes from. So, for example, in October 2020, when Rudy Giuliani was told that information on the laptop might in some way be linked to Russian intelligence hacking, Giuliani replied, "It wouldn't matter. What's the difference?"

Backing up a step, what's your understanding of who Rudy Giuliani is?

A He was -- I understand him to be the former Mayor of New York City, a prominent public figure, who's been associated with various legal efforts to support former President Trump.

Q Okay. Do you agree with the view that he expressed, that "it wouldn't matter, what's the difference" if the information came from Russia?

A I do not agree with that statement.

Q And why do you say that?

A I say that because, again, I think the idea that one of our principal nation-state adversaries could, at the time of their choosing, inject into our political processes information that would have the impact of affecting or impacting those political processes and outcomes is something that every American should be uncomfortable with and look to avoid.

Q Okay.

Do you agree that Russia interfered in the 2016 election?

A That is my belief based on the material -- or, the information that's been provided to me or that I made access to.

Q Okay.

You said just a minute or two ago that it is helpful in the case of Russian information operations, for example, for the American public to have more information so they can make a better assessment, correct?

A That is correct.

Q In your opinion, before the 2016 election, did the United States Government do a sufficient job of warning the American people about Russian election interference?

A I don't know if I could make a judgment on whether we did enough -- the government did enough in this regard, because I was not privy to the discussions over what information to share or not share.

Q But you agree that, ultimately, Russian interference impacted the American election in 2016?

A I believe that it did.

Q Okay.

In the first hour, you mentioned the three bases that you relied on in deciding, you know, whether to sign the letter, whether there was sufficient evidence of Russian involvement to justify signing it. I want to talk through those bases in a little more detail.

A Sure.

Q And I actually want to -- I'm going to do that by going through the letter, kind of, paragraph by paragraph.

A Okay.

Q So, turning back to exhibit 1. And I'm going to talk through these paragraphs and ask you, you know, if you agree that the information is accurate as contained in the letter.

A Uh-huh.

Q So the very first sentence of the second paragraph of the letter says, "We are also all individuals who see Russia as one of our nation's primary adversaries."

Was that an accurate statement at the time the letter was written?

A I believe so.

Q And do you think it's an accurate statement still today?

A Yes.

Q Do you think there's widespread agreement among United States national security and intelligence experts that Russia was and is still an adversary of the United States?

A I believe there's a consensus in that regard.

Q Okay.

The final sentence of the letter says, "It is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy."

And is it fair to say that, from your perspective, the letter's primary focus or purpose was on stopping Russian interference in our elections?

A Yes. Yes.

Q Okay.

I'm sorry to be jumping around, but back on the first page, the last paragraph of the first page, so it's the eighth paragraph of the letter overall, it says, "Such an operation," meaning a Russia cyber hacking operation, "would be consistent with Russian objectives, as outlined publicly and recently by the Intelligence Community, to create political chaos in the United States and to deepen political divisions here but also to undermine the candidacy of former Vice President Biden and thereby help the candidacy of President Trump."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes, you did.

Q You referenced earlier the statement from Bill Evanina.

A Yes.

Q Is that statement what this is a reference to?

A I believe so. I can't remember with specificity what was in Bill's statement. I just remember the public reporting of it that made -- in which he rendered the judgment that there was an ongoing effort to meddle or interfere in the ongoing election.

Q And I want to go ahead and introduce Mr. Evanina's statement as exhibit No. 8 now.

A Okay.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 8.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I'll give you a minute to review this.

A Okay.

Okay.

Q What's your understanding of who Bill Evanina is or was?

A At the time, I believe he was the senior intelligence community official responsible for issues related to counterintelligence and headed up the NCSC, as I understand it.

Q What's the NCSC? Or, is it correct that the NCSC stands for the National Counterintelligence and Security Center?

A And Security Center, right.

Q And do you consider -- in that role, would Mr. Evanina have had view into the type of intelligence that would permit him to put out a statement of this sort?

A I believe he definitely would've had that access.

Q Okay. Do you believe that -- do you find this statement from him credible?

A I do.

Q Okay.

I want to look at the paragraph that says "RUSSIA." It's on the -- this is printed out from online, but on the printout it's the second page, partway down.

It says, "We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it sees as an anti-Russia 'establishment.' This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him when he was Vice President for his role in the Obama Administration's policies on Ukraine and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia."

Just that first half of that paragraph, that tends to pretty much directly support the statement in the eighth paragraph of the October 19th letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q The letter says that Russia is potentially interfering to create political chaos in the United States to support President Trump and denigrate Biden, correct?

A That is correct.

Q And Evanina's statement says basically exactly that, correct?

A It does.

Q Okay.

Moving on, the ninth paragraph of the October 19th letter -- it's on the top of the next page -- says, "Such an operation," again referring to a Russian information operation, "would be consistent with some of the key methods Russia has used in its now multi-year operation to interfere in our democracy -- the hacking (via cyber operations) and the dumping of accurate information or the distribution of inaccurate or misinformation. Russia did both of these during the 2016 presidential election -- judgments shared by the US Intelligence Community, the investigation into Russian activities by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, and the entirety (all Republicans and Democrats) on the current Senate Intelligence Committee."

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q In the first hour, you referred to the Senate Intelligence Committee assessment as being one of the bases on which you made your judgment to join the letter. What do you recall about that report?

A I recall that the report reached a clear and unequivocal conclusion that there had been Russian activity aimed at impacting the 2016 election.

And I tended to credit that particular report because I had a tremendous amount of personal experience with and direct connection to the members of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence during my period of government service and their highly professional staff. And so the emergence of a bipartisan report that all members -- as I recall, all members participated in the findings -- was a compelling consensus statement about something, and so I tended to credit it as being highly reliable.

Q And the fact that the Senate Intelligence Committee had reached the conclusion that Russia had interfered using these methods in 2016, why was that important for your assessment of the events of 2020?

A I thought it was important because there was no reason to expect that our Russian adversaries would not continue to use these tactics and techniques in future elections, including the one we were involved with in 2020. Nothing had occurred since 2016 to deter the Russians from engaging in that behavior, and so it was my belief that the Russians were continuing to engage in such behavior.

Q And I think in the first hour you were -- the comment was made, but the Senate intelligence report does not mention the Bidens. And putting aside whether that's accurate -- I think the Senate report is 900-and-some pages long, so I don't want you to commit to anything without reviewing it in its entirety -- the real takeaway from that report for you was that the Russians had interfered before and that they would try to do it again.

Is that fair to say?

A It's fair to say my recollection is that it pointed -- that it was -- that they had interfered before. I cannot remember in my reading of the summary conclusions of the report if it pointed to the 2020 election with specificity.

Q Understood. But your understanding, based on your experience, is that this is evidence that Russians had done this in 2016 and --

A Yes. I just want to be precise about what the report said --

Q Understood.

A -- versus my -- the conclusion I drew from the report's conclusions.

Q Understood. And your conclusion was that the Russians would potentially try to do this again?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

The tenth paragraph, which begins -- it's the second paragraph. It continues, "The Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts, targeted Burisma late last year for cyber collection and gained access to its emails."

Do you know if that's an accurate sentence?

A I don't have any specific recollection -- or, I don't have specific information that would tell me whether it was accurate or -- because it's citing media reports, I'm not sure.

Q So I want to introduce as exhibit 9 one of those media reports.

A Uh-huh.

Q This is a January 13, 2020, New York Times article entitled "Russians hacked Ukrainian gas company at the center of impeachment."

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 9.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And I should say, this article was published on January 13, 2020, but it was then updated on October 19, 2020. I just want to be clear for the record.

And let me know when you've had a minute to look it over.

A Okay.

Q So, having reviewed this, do you agree that this article says that the GRU, which is the Russian intelligence directorate, used phishing emails to target Burisma and gain access to their computer systems?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So this is a media report that directly supports that statement in the letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So this letter is accurate with respect to that?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

The next sentence in that paragraph references Andrii Derkach. Are you familiar with who Andrii Derkach is?

A Only broadly.

Q And what's your understanding of who he is?

A He's a longtime Ukrainian politician who is under sanction.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with his relationship with Rudy Giuliani?

A Not specifically, no.

Q Okay. But you understand that he was sanctioned?

A Yes.

Q And what's your understanding of the reason that he was sanctioned?

A I actually don't recall the specific reasons why he was under sanction.

Q We're going to introduce as exhibit 10 the Treasury Department's press release announcing the fact that he was sanctioned.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 10.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q This is dated September 20, 2020.

A Okay.

Q So this press release says, in relevant part, that "Treasury designated Andrii Derkach pursuant to Executive Order (E.O.) 13848 for his efforts to influence the 2020 U.S. presidential election. Derkach, a Member of the Ukrainian Parliament, has been an active Russian agent for over a decade, maintaining close connections with the Russian Intelligence Services. Derkach has directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. presidential election."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes, you did.

Q So this sanction notification directly supports the statement in the October 19th letter that says Derkach was sanctioned "for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election," correct?

A That is correct.

Q And you said that you are -- are you -- I'm sorry, I don't remember if you said. Are you familiar with Rudy Giuliani's connections with Andrii Derkach?

A Only that there was public reporting that they had had a relationship with each other.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce as exhibit 11 a Daily Beast article published on October 17, 2020. It's entitled "Rudy: Only 50/50 Chance I Worked With a 'Russian Spy' to Dig Dirt on Bidens and Ukraine."

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 11.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay. So this article reports on Giuliani's interactions with Andrii Derkach, right?

A Uh-huh.

Q And it says that he worked with Andrii Derkach to try and push out material damaging to the Bidens, correct?

A Yes, it does.

Q Okay. And it says, in fact, he'd been working on this for many, many months, correct?

A It does.

Q Okay.

On the last page, page 5, Giuliani -- and, I should say, this article is a Daily Beast article but it's taken from a 1-hour interview that the Daily Beast had with Mr. Giuliani directly.

On page 5: "[Mr.] Giuliani said he viewed his latest leak to the New York Post," which is a reference to the Hunter Biden laptop story, "as an extension of his years-long efforts to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens," correct?

A Correct.

Q Do you think it's concerning that Giuliani seemingly viewed the leak of the laptop as part of his ongoing work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens?

A It certainly contributes to the narrative that the emergence of the Hunter Biden laptop at that particular point in time, in the runup to the election, needed to be scrutinized and understood better.

Q And, in fact, this article came out on October 17, 2020, which is 2 days before the October 19 letter that you signed, correct?

A It was certainly part of that context.

Q So this narrative was out there from Rudy Giuliani himself, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay.

Are you aware that the White House was warned that Rudy Giuliani was a target of a Russian intelligence operation to feed misinformation to Trump?

A I'm only vaguely aware of that through public reporting.

Q Okay. To the extent you are aware of that, is that something that would've added to your concern about the Hunter Biden emails potentially being part of a broader Russian effort to interfere in the 2020 election?

A The idea that any Americans would be used -- any Americans with positions of influence would be used by Russian intelligence organizations or Russian operatives to try to advance their work would be a source of concern to me.

Q Okay.

So we've talked through the factors in the letter that led you to decide to sign it that suggest that, in fact, based on what was known at the time, this very well could have been a Russian misinformation operation.

I want to move on to some factors that suggest that Russia actually did, in fact, interfere in the 2020 election.

And, in particular, I want to turn to the January 2021 Intelligence Community Assessment. Do you know offhand if you're familiar with this?

A I don't have specific familiarity with it right now.

Q Okay. We'll go ahead and --

A I would've read it at the time, or certainly the summary at the time.

Q Yep. We're going to introduce it as exhibit 12.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 12.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I can tell you, we're going to focus on Key Judgment 2, which is on the fourth page. But take as long as you need to review the whole thing.

A Okay.

Q Key Judgment 2 reads, "We assess that Russian President Putin authorized, and a range of Russian government organizations conducted, influence operations aimed at denigrating President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party, supporting former President Trump, undermining public confidence in the electoral process, and exacerbating sociopolitical divisions in the US. Unlike in 2016, we did not see persistent Russian cyber efforts to gain access to election infrastructure. We have high confidence in our assessment; Russian state and proxy actors who all serve the Kremlin's interests worked to affect US public perceptions in a consistent manner. A key element of Moscow's strategy this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives -- including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden -- to US media organizations, US officials, and prominent US individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration."

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q What's your understanding of what "high confidence" means?

A "High confidence" is a term of art used in the intelligence community to signify that there is a significant amount of underlying intelligence information that would support the conclusion being drawn.

And so the consumer -- or, the reader, the consumer of the intelligence analysis should have high confidence that the picture being portrayed is an accurate one because of the body of underlying intelligence that supports that conclusion.

Q Okay.

This report comes from the National Intelligence Council, and on the front page it says, "It was drafted by the National Intelligence Council and CIA, DHS, FBI, INR, and NSA, and coordinated with CIA, DHS, FBI, INR, Treasury and NSA."

What's the National Intelligence Council?

A The National Intelligence Council serves under the auspices of the DNI, the Director of National Intelligence, for the purpose of bringing together all of the analytic judgments and conclusions of all of the intelligence agencies spread across our government and coordinating a community-wide judgment or assessment to support decision-makers.

Q And "CIA" here is a reference to the Central Intelligence Agency?

A That's correct.

Q "DHS" is the Department of Homeland Security?

A Yes.

Q "FBI" is the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

A Yes.

Q What's "INR" a reference to?

A The Bureau of Intelligence and Research that sits within the State Department.

Q And "NSA" is the National Security Agency?

A Correct.

Q And "Treasury" here is a reference to the Department of Treasury, correct?

A Correct.

Q So, when this report says that these entities have high confidence in our assessment, that means all of these agencies have high confidence, right?

A Yes. Typically, if any of the agencies did not share the analytic view as drafted, there would be a separate bit of language describing the dissenting view or the contrasting view of one of the other agencies.

Q Understood.

So, going back to the language of Key Judgment 2, the reference to Moscow's strategy being the use of misleading or unsubstantiated allegations and producing those to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals, is that consistent with the concerns that you expressed in the October 19th letter?

A Yes, it was -- yes, it is.

Q We just talked through the Treasury Department sanctions. This references the use of sanctioned individuals. Was Andrii Derkach an individual who was sanctioned by the United States?

A Yes. Based on the Treasury Department announcement that you shared with me, yes.

Q And the key judgment, made with high confidence, says that some people close to former President Trump and his administration were involved in the efforts to push out this information.

Is it fair to describe Rudy Giuliani as an individual close to former President Trump and his administration?

A I believe that's a fair description.

Q Okay. Thank you.

We're going to move on a little bit, unless -- did you have further comments?

A No.

Q You made a statement in the first hour that -- you were asked if you regret the letter, and you said that you regret that the statement has been drawn into political controversy. Do you remember saying that?

A I do.

Q Okay.

When the letter was made public on October 19, 2020, you were a private citizen, correct?

A I was.

Q Was Mr. Morell a private citizen?

A He was.

Q Was former CIA Director Brennan a private citizen at that time?

A Yes, he was.

Q What about Mr. Clapper?

A He was, yes, a private citizen.

Q Tony Blinken?

A A private citizen.

Q To your knowledge, were all of the signatories of the letter private citizens at the time that it was signed?

A Yes, to my knowledge.

Q Okay. Would you agree that, as a private citizen, you have the right to engage in the political process?

A Yes.

Q Would you agree that the First Amendment protected and continues to protect your right to make statements such as those contained in the public letter?

A Yes, I believe that.

Q And do you think all the other signatories also have that First Amendment right?

A I believe that as well.

Q Okay.

To the extent that there's been some suggestion made today that you should have censored your statements or should have, you know, not included your title in signing, do you agree that that's not consistent with your understanding of the First Amendment?

A No, I don't believe it is.

Q It's not consistent with your understanding?

A Right.

Q Okay.

I'm going to briefly introduce two documents that I think you probably have not seen before.

A Okay.

Q Or maybe you have. The first we'll mark as exhibit 13, and the second will be exhibit 14.

The second one is a letter from 235 former military leaders. It's entitled "Open Letter from Senior Military Leaders." It's not dated.

But I'm also going to introduce a FOX News article that dates it as September 14, 2020. So that's why we're introducing the two of them together.

A Okay.

Q We'll introduce the letter as exhibit 13, and we'll introduce the FOX News article as exhibit 14.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 13.

Was marked for identification.]

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 14.

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], so you said that the letter was 13, article was 14?

Ms. [redacted]. Yes. I'm making sure everybody stays awake. Sorry. I said it the opposite way the first time around.

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay.

So the letter from the 235 signatories, it's titled "Open Letter from Senior Military Leaders." This says that the 2020 election could be, quote, "the most important election since our country was founded."

And it argues that, quote, "The Democrats' opposition to border security, their pledge to return to the disastrous Iran nuclear deal, their antagonism towards the police and planned cuts to military spending will leave the United States more vulnerable to foreign enemies."

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q And according to the FOX News article that we introduced alongside it, this letter was published on or around September 14, 2020, correct?

A That's what the news report indicates.

Q Okay.

So who are the signatories of this letter?

A They appear to be a group of retired U.S. military officers at the flag or general officer rank or level.

Q Okay. So, to the extent that they're commenting on potential policy actions under a Democratic administration, do you agree that a reader could view that as thinking, "These individuals have experience in national security, they have experience in defense, they must understand what it means if such cuts were to happen"?

A I would infer that, yes.

Q Okay.

Regardless of whether you agree with what the letter says, do you agree that these signatories, who, again, signed using their titles and using their positions, had a First Amendment right to express their opinions?

A Yes, I believe that.

Q Okay.

There was a comment made earlier that the October 19th letter that you joined was used as a talking point at the second Presidential debate. Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce as exhibit 15 the transcript from the first Presidential debate. And I think the full transcript was, like, 90 pages long, so we're just going to introduce the excerpted parts that we're going to reference.

A Okay.

Q This will be exhibit 15.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 15.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Litt. Can we go off the record for half a second?

Ms. [redacted]. Uh-huh.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Sorry. Before we -- you -- sorry. Quickly, back to the letter from the senior military leaders that we talked through, do you know -- you said a number of them were flag officers. Do flag officers generally have a security clearance when they're working as flag officers, to your knowledge?

A Yes, they do.

Q They do. And do they sometimes maintain that after leaving service?

A Depending on the nature of their post-military activities, yes.

Q Okay.

And back to the transcript from the second debate -- the first debate, I'm sorry. From the bottom of the second page, there's a sentence, "As far as the church is concerned and as far as the generals are concerned, we just got the support of 250 military leaders and generals, total support. Law enforcement, almost every law enforcement group in the United States. I have Florida. I have Texas. I have Ohio. I have every...Excuse me, Portland, the sheriff just came out today and he said, 'I support President Trump.'"

Based on what I just read to you, is it accurate to say that the letter from the senior military leaders was not just released prior to the first Presidential debate but actually played a role at that debate?

A It appears the President used it as a talking point, yes.

Q Okay. And, again, you agree that the senior military leaders had the right to participate in the political process as private citizens?

A Yes.

Q To your knowledge, are these committees investigating the bases on which these 250 military leaders signed and sent this letter?

A Not that I am aware of, no.

Q Okay.

Turning back to the letter that you did sign, the letter doesn't actually endorse a Presidential candidate, right?

A No, it doesn't.

Q Okay. In your opinion, was the letter true and accurate?

A Yes, based on the information we had available to us at the time.

Q Okay.

Has the aftermath of signing the letter, such as the fact that you're subject to a public investigation by this committee, negatively impacted you in any way?

A It's negatively impacted me in that I'm drawn into an investigation when I wish that wasn't so. So I guess that'd be my answer.

Q And I think your name's been in the New York Post, right?

A Yes.

Q Has that had an impact on you?

A It certainly has drawn attention to my name in a way that I would prefer not happen.

Q And why is that?

A I worry about the way that individuals who consume certain news sources might act on or draw conclusions about me or -- draw conclusions about me based on things they may read in media and, therefore, have that play into certain either conspiracy theories that they might have or narratives that might lead them to want to engage in violence.

Q And do you have concerns for your safety?

A I don't have any specific threat information that has, you know, emerged that has given me concern, but I worry about that as an ultimate, you know, possibility --

Q Okay -- go ahead.

A -- if you're cast in a certain light by media activity.

Q Do you think the fact that you're being investigated for having participated in the political process as a private citizen could chill your willingness to sign a letter like this in the future?

A Yes. It would certainly cause me to think carefully about how any expression of political view that I might choose to make would be seen by others or characterized by -- mischaracterized by others.

Q And do you think it's fair to say that somebody watching this investigation from the outside might also think about this when deciding whether or not to sign a letter like this and it could chill their participation as well?

A I believe that, yes.

Q Okay.

We have about 10 minutes left. I want to move on to a line that -- there was a comment made in the first hour about the impact of the letter on social media companies --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- and their decision on how to deal with the letter.

A Okay.

Q The letter was published on October 19, 2020, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And are you familiar with the date of the New York Post story about the Hunter Biden laptop?

A Not specifically unless reminded.

Q Okay. It was October 14, 2020, and we'll go ahead and introduce that.

A Okay.

Q So we'll go ahead and introduce this as exhibit 16, just to establish the fact that it was published on October 14th.

A Uh-huh.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 16.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And this is just the first page of the article. It kind of printed off weird, so rather than having half of it be spam, we just printed the first page.

A Yep.

Q So you agree that this article was published on -- the New York Post article was published on October 14th?

A Yes.

Q Okay. That was 5 days before your October 19th letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Are you aware of the date that Twitter limited the sharing of links to the laptop story?

A I don't have specific recollection or knowledge of that.

Q Okay.

I'm going to introduce as exhibit 17 a New York Times story, published on October 16, 2020, entitled "In Reversal, Twitter is No Longer Blocking New York Post Article."

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 17.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this before?

A Yes.

Q Okay. According to this article, by October 16th, which was 3 days before your letter was published, following pressure from Republicans, Twitter permitted its users to freely share the New York Post story, correct?

A That's what the article states.

Q So, if that took place 3 days before your letter was even published, your letter couldn't have had any impact on Twitter's decision, correct?

A No.

Q Sorry, is it correct?

A It's correct that it could not have had that impact.

Q Okay.

And I also want to introduce as exhibit 18 an October 15, 2020, article from Business Insider entitled "The New York Post's dubious Hunter Biden article was shared 300,000 times on Facebook even after the company said it limited its reach."

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 18.

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this before?

A Not until now.

Q Okay. Do you agree that this article says that Facebook first addressed whether to limit the distribution of the article on October 14, 2020?

A Yes.

Q So, again, that was 5 days before your October 19th letter was made public, right?

A Correct.

Q And in the last paragraph on page 4, the Business Insider article also says that Facebook's approach was consistent with the policy it actually implemented in 2019, correct?

A Correct.

Q And, overall, the article says that, even despite Facebook's attempt to limit the article, it actually still continued to be shared, correct?

A That's correct.

Q So, putting aside whether Facebook's efforts were effective, if Facebook made its decision on October 14th, 5 days before your letter was signed, your letter couldn't have had any impact on Facebook's decision, right?

A That seems right.

Q Okay.

Sorry, just one second.

We can go off the record.

A Okay.

[Recess.]

[12:16 p.m.]

Mr. [redacted]. On the record. It's 12:16.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Mr. Rasmussen, I want to sort of pick up where my questioning left off on the previous hour.

A Okay.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Morrell had not even read the New York Post story regarding Hunter Biden's laptop and emails?

A I'm not aware of that.

Q Does that surprise you given how involved he was in the public statement?

A I don't -- I'm not surprised or -- I don't know -- I don't know how to answer that question.

Q Since we last -- since we last spoke, have you had time to think about the fact that Secretary Blinken or Tony Blinken, campaign adviser to the Biden campaign, was involved with Mr. Morrell and ultimately this public statement being drafted and promulgated?

A Again, I was not aware of that at the time the email exchanges that I had with Michael were carried out, something I've only learned subsequently in the context of this investigation.

Q Do you think that's something Mr. Morrell should have informed you of before he solicited your signature on the public statement?

A I don't have a view on that.

Q Well, you don't have a personal opinion one way or the other if he should have informed you of all the facts?

A I always welcome additional context.

Q And you did not get it in this case?

A Not on that matter, no.

Q You'd agree that's a pretty significant matter?

A I don't have a view.

Q Did you ever speak to Mr. Blinken about the public statement?

A I have not.

Q Have you had any communications with Andrew Bates from the Biden campaign?

A No, never.

Q It is a fair characterization, in your view, given that Mr. Blinken sent -- forwarded an email from Andrew Bates to Mr. Morrell, that Mr. Morrell was writing this public statement on behalf of the Biden campaign?

A Again, I don't have the full context around which to reach conclusions about the interact -- you know, interactions between third and fourth parties, so --

Q But just given what you know, what is your sense of it?

A I don't have a sense to share. I don't have a -- I haven't given it any thought. I don't have an opinion to offer.

Q And you indicated you did not speak with any journalists in connection with this public statement?

A Not to my recollection.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 19.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm going to enter into the record as exhibit 19 an email from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro on October 19, 2020, at 8:21 p.m.

Take a look at that, Mr. Rasmussen.

Mr. [redacted]. What number is this?

Mr. [redacted]. Nineteen.

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q You've had a chance to review this?

A Yes.

Q So this email from Mike Morell to Nick Shapiro, directing your attention to the first paragraph -- no. Well, paragraph 1 --

A Yeah.

Q -- as it's marked.

Between us, the campaign would like Shane Harris to go first. Please share with the campaign when you share with Shane. But, by all means, get it to other reporters as well.

What is your understanding of the between us language, between Morell and Shapiro, having reviewed this document?

A I read -- I take between us at face value that Michael is saying to Nick, Don't share this information forward -- any further.

Q Okay.

A Just mechanically.

Q Do you have any idea if the Biden campaign requested that Shane Harris go first?

A I have no knowledge about that.

Q Given that Mr. Morell had not been candid with you about the origins of the public statement, do you review this paragraph "between us" as further keeping you in the dark about it?

Mr. Litt. You don't need to accept his characterizations.

Mr. Rasmussen. I didn't have any conversations or exchanges related to dissemination of the letter. And I don't share your characterization.

Mr. [redacted]. Are you aware that Nick Shapiro did, in fact, share a copy of the email he was sending to journalists with the Biden campaign?

Mr. Rasmussen. I was not aware of that, or I'm not aware of that.

Mr. [redacted]. I'm going to enter into the record an email --

Mr. Litt. Before you do, I'm just wondering, is there a reason you're not reading the third paragraph of -- paragraph No. 3 into the record here?

Mr. [redacted]. Well, it's in the record. The exhibit's in the record.

Mr. Litt. Okay.

Mr. [redacted]. I've -- I'll decide what I read and do not read.

Mr. Litt. Okay.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 20.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Here we are.

A Okay.

Q Mr. Rasmussen, this is an email from Nick Shapiro to Andrew Bates, who was the director of rapid response for the Biden campaign. And it's an indication of what Mr. Shapiro sent to the reporters covering the public statement.

Have you reviewed this?

A I have just now.

Q And Nick Shapiro tells Bates, This is what I gave them.

Mr. Litt. Sorry. Oh, got it. Thank you.

Mr. [redacted]. Yeah.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I understand you're hearing about all of this for the first time today.

A Correct.

Q That's part of why we're doing this, right? That's part of why we're asking questions, what do people know and when.

Given what you've seen today, this is -- you would agree this is pretty extensive coordination between Morell, Shapiro, and the Biden campaign?

A It's clearly communication between Morell and the Biden campaign.

Q You wouldn't describe this as coordination?

A I described it as I just did. Obviously you can use the word "coordination" as well.

Q Well, then that wouldn't be an unfair reading of this, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And just for the record, you had no coordination with the media in connection with this statement?

A That's correct.

Q Do you have an obligation as a former National Counterterrorism Center director to have things that you write preapproved by the Director of National Intelligence?

A Yes.

Q Did you have that obligation at the time you signed onto the public statement?

A Yes.

Q Did you submit the public statement to the DNI for prepublication review?

A I did not, as I -- my interpretation or my understanding of my obligations and responsibilities is to do so if I am the drafter of said material, and that wasn't the case in this instance.

Q Do you know if Russ Travers submitted the public statement for review to the DNI?

A I don't have any information about that.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 21.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm going to enter into the record an email from Russ Travers to Mike Morell dated October 19, 2020, at 7:52 a.m., as exhibit 21.

If you would review that, Mr. Rasmussen.

A Okay.

Q Mr. Travers writes to Mr. Morell: Hi Michael. Great initiative. Happy to sign -- is anyone submitting to ODNY prepub. I can, tho the bureaucracy slow rolled me on my last piece.

Did Russ Travers have an obligation to submit the statement to ODNI for prepublication clearance?

A I don't know. Again, I -- I described what I understood my obligations to be.

Q In the event you are required to submit the public statement for prepublication review, what, if any, consequences would befall you for not doing so?

A As I understand it, if I failed to comply with requirements associated with prepublication review, continued holding of my security clearance could be placed in jeopardy.

Q But it's your testimony you had no obligation to submit this for review to them, correct?

A It's my testimony that I -- my understanding of my obligations was that I had no obligation to do so.

Q As you sit here today, are you aware in the -- are you aware if the ODNY approved this statement --

Mr. Litt. ODNI.

Mr. [redacted]. ODNI approved this statement for publication?

Mr. Rasmussen. I'm not aware.

Mr. [redacted]. One moment.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted]. Ready?

Mr. Litt. Yeah.

Mr. Rasmussen. Yes.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Mr. Rasmussen, direct your attention to the public statement. It should be exhibit 1.

A Uh-huh.

Q Paragraph 6, page 1: If we are right, this is Russia trying to influence how Americans vote in this election, and we believe strongly that Americans need to be aware of this.

Is it fair to say, given all we know, that the only people trying to influence the election with respect to this public statement are the people who signed onto it?

A I wouldn't share your characterization. I think, based on other source material we've discussed today, it's clear to me that Russia was, in fact, trying to influence how Americans voted in the 2016 and 2020 elections. And I continue to believe that Americans need to be made aware of this.

Q But you've mentioned the word "context" before. It's a good word. Let's look at the context of the public statement.

The principal drafter, Mike Morell, said he did this to help Vice President Biden win the Presidency, correct?

A I don't know what Michael said.

Q Well, I'll represent to you he said that.

A Okay. I wasn't present for his --

Q Fair enough.

A -- testimony or -- testimony is not the right word -- conversation.

Q Okay. So isn't, by nature, him disseminating this public statement designed, from his intent, to influence the 2020 Presidential election?

Mr. Litt. You're asking him what Michael's intent was?

Mr. [redacted]. Based on Michael Morell's testimony, yes.

Mr. Rasmussen. I -- I can't speak fully and completely to Michael's intent, having only snippets of his words played back to me. I can tell you what my intent was, and my intent was very much to ensure that this information be surfaced and evaluated and scrutinized because of the significant likelihood or possibility that it might be connected to a Russian influence operation. That was my intent.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Well, let me ask you this. And I won't belabor this. Just looking at the public statement and looking at the -- the content of the public statement -- that is, Hunter Biden's laptop and emails -- is it more likely than not to help the Biden campaign than to hurt it if people think it's part of a Russian information operation?

A That may be the ultimate impact, but that's not what motivated my participation in the letter. I was, as I mentioned, pretty squarely focused on the need to surface the idea that the Russians might be again attempting to influence a U.S. Presidential election.

Q Speaking of the Presidential election, did you watch the October 22, 2020, debate between Vice President Joe Biden and then-President Trump?

A I did not.

Q Did you read about it at any point?

A I have no specific recollection, but I almost certainly read about media accounts in the aftermath or watched broadcast media commentary about it.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 22.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q At this time I'm going to enter into the record as exhibit 22 the first page of the transcript of the Presidential debate between Joe Biden and Donald Trump, and the second page will have the relevant portion that we'll be discussing.

A Okay.

Q Please take a look at that.

I'm not going to ask you to read the entire thing, Mr. Rasmussen. I'm going to direct you to the second page.

A Uh-huh.

Q I'd say if you go down to Welker in bold, about halfway down the page where it says: President Trump, I want to stay on the issue of race. We're talking about the issue --

Do you see that?

A Yes.

Q And then President Trump says: It's the laptop from hell.

And the moderator says: President Trump, we're talking about race right now and I don't -- I do want to stay on the issue of race. President Trump --

Vice President Biden says: Nobody -- Kristen, I have to respond to that.

The moderator says: Please, very quickly.

And then Vice President Biden says: Look, there are 50 former national intelligence folks who said that what this, he's accusing me of is a Russian plan. They have said that this has all the characteristics -- four -- five former heads of the CIA, both parties, say what he's saying is a bunch of garbage. Nobody believes it except him and his good friend Rudy Giuliani.

To which Mr. Trump responds: You mean the laptop is now another Russia, Russia, Russia hoax? You gotta be --

And then Vice President Biden says: That's exactly what -- that's exactly what --

Vice President Biden was, in fact, talking about Hunter Biden's laptop and emails, correct?

A I believe so.

Q Okay. Would you agree with his characterization of your public statement?

A No, I wouldn't agree -- I mean, certainly not a complete explanation of our public statement. Presented in this form in the context of a political debate, it does not provide the full context of the statement.

Q Is this the first you're hearing of that?

A The first I'm hearing of --

Q The first you're hearing that Vice President Biden relied on the public statement in the Presidential debate -- the final Presidential debate?

A No. I can't remember when I became aware of that, but it's in my -- I was aware of it before today. I don't know exactly when I became aware.

Q And you became aware of how he framed the public statement that you signed onto at some point?

A You know, I don't know that I've ever looked at the words, but, yes, I was aware that he referenced this in the debate.

Q Okay. And you -- and your reaction to this today?

A I don't have a specific reaction.

Q You're not surprised?

A I answered the question. I don't have a specific reaction.

Q Were you aware of some of the other signators to the statement, their desire to help Vice President Biden become President?

A I can't recall any specific knowledge, as I look down the roster of individuals, knowing who was particularly involved in politics at the moment or not. I'm sorry. I don't have specific --

Q Have you spoken with any of those former intel officials since the public statement was released?

Mr. Litt. About the public statement?

Mr. [redacted]. About the public statement.

Mr. Rasmussen. Not about the public statement. It just never came up.

Mr. [redacted]. Have you spoken with them about the election -- about Vice President Biden being elected President?

Mr. Rasmussen. Certainly talked about broad national political developments.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. I'm entering into the record as exhibit No. 16 an email --

Mr. Litt. Sorry. Which --

Mr. [redacted]. Excuse me. Withdrawn. Twenty-three. Thank you for correcting.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 23.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm entering into the record exhibit No. 23. This is an email from Kristin Wood on October 23rd, 2020, at 3:02 a.m., to Gregory Tarbell and others cc'd.

Mr. Rasmussen, in particular, I direct your attention to the email prior to her response from Gregory Tarbell.

A Okay.

Q Mr. Tarbell writes, October 22nd, 2020, at 10:25 p.m.: TP worked well during the debate. Great idea guys.

And Kristin Wood responds: That was really cool. I hope you are well, Mr. Tarbell.

Do you have any reaction to the fact that some of your fellow signators to the public statement were celebrating how Vice President Biden used the public statement at the debate?

A I don't have any reaction.

Q Are you surprised?

A I don't have any reaction. I don't know Mr. Tarbell or Ms. Wood, so I don't have a reaction.

Q There was some discussion prior about your security clearance, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And you held a security clearance at the time you drafted the -- excuse me -- withdrawn.

You held a security clearance at the time you signed onto the public statement, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And I'd like -- I think you alluded to this, but in the interest of having a complete record, have you ever had any access to classified information regarding the contents of Hunter Biden's laptop?

A I don't believe so, no.

Q Are you aware if any of your fellow signatories had access to classified information at the time they signed on --

A I'm not aware --

Q -- to the public statement?

A -- of any.

Q Given you and your fellow signatories' prior access as intelligence officials with security clearance, is it fair to say the American people reading the public might have assumed you had access to that information in respect to your public statement?

A I don't think it's fair to assume that because, again, we were clearly listed as former officials. So this was a current issue. And so I think most discerning readers would have assumed these people are out of office now and don't have access to that kind of information.

Q So, then, why sign it as a former intelligence official since you were all out of office?

A Because we would -- we cited our background because our background gave us a basis on which to make analytic judgments about the nature of Russian behavior when it came to Russian involvement in the election. You'll recall, though, that I've said a number of times that the caveating language was important to me, and so that's the part of it -- the letter that I zeroed in on the most directly, because I wanted to make sure it was clear what we -- that we are, you know, upfront about what was known and not known at that time. But with respect to the question of our clearances, I don't think that was front and center.

Q But you'd agree, by virtue of 51 former, many high-ranking, intelligence officials putting this statement out there prior to the Presidential election, the American people are going to give deference to that -- those judgments and even with the caveats, of course?

A Some segment of the American population may well give deference and may credit the expertise and background of those signing the letter and have that shape their reaction to the information.

Q Let me just ask this. As indicated, the Hunter Biden laptop and email have since been authenticated. Do you have any concerns about whether or not Hunter Biden, given his access to the President, is a national security threat today?

A I don't have any -- any such concerns. I have no basis for having such concerns at this point, and it's not relevant to my -- it's not something I'm thinking about or considering.

Q So given everything you know, you don't have an opinion on this --

A No.

Q -- given your deep experience?

A I don't.

[Rasmussen Exhibit No. 24.

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q At this time I'm entering into the record a email from Mike Morell to Mike Hayden and a number of others, including yourself, Mr. Rasmussen, dated February 7, 2023, at 1:39 p.m. And it is an email chain, and I will --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- direct your attention to specific emails, but please review it now in its entirety.

A Yes, I'm familiar with it.

Q I'm directing your attention to the third page of this exhibit, email from John Brennan at -- on February 7, 2023, at 14:18.

A Uh-huh.

Q Mike, thanks for your query. Like you, I'm weighing my options.

And then Mr. Brennan writes: Although I have not yet received any of Mr. Jordan's letters, I find his requests for a transcribed interview and documentation related to my decision to sign a public statement as a private citizen -- italicized in bold -- a gross infringement of my First Amendment right to freedom of speech.

Did John Brennan sign the public statement and write, John Brennan, private citizen, if you know?

A I don't -- I don't believe so.

Q Okay. Did you sign the public statement as Nick Rasmussen, comma, private citizen?

A No, I did not.

Q In fact, you affixed your title to it, Nick Rasmussen, former director, National Counterterrorism Center, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And the theory behind that is, given your deep experience in counterterrorism, national security, you're somebody the American people should listen to on this topic?

A I'm not saying who they should listen to. I'm -- I believe I have relevant experience and expertise that allowed me to make an informed judgment, and that was offered in the letter.

Q And, in part, you affixed your title to the public statement for the same reasons you waited to see who was going to sign it, right? You wanted to see what level of expertise with respect to Russian information was going to inform -- was going to inform the content of the letter and how it'd be perceived by the American people, correct?

A Again, as I've mentioned earlier, it was important to me in asking to review the list of ultimate finalists of signatories that I -- that my experience and expertise be appropriately placed within that cohort, I guess is the best way to put it.

Q Previously, the minority staff asked you about a number of former military officials who endorsed President Trump for President.

A That's correct.

Q Was that the 2016 or 2020?

A I believe 2020.

Q Okay. As far as their endorsement and what they had to say or write about it, there was, as far as you know, nothing said about potential Russian interference in the election or any other interference?

A I don't believe so, no.

Q And if I understood the line of questioning, the idea was sort of an equivalence, right, between former military people endorsing Trump and the 51 signers saying, Hey, this could be Russian disin -- this could be a Russian information operation, right before the election?

Mr. Litt. Are you asking him why minority counsel asked him a question?

Mr. [redacted]. I'm asking him if it's his view that there is an equivalence between former military people endorsing a Presidential candidate, upfront and open, and what the signers of the -- 51 signers of the public statement did when they released their document before the Presidential election.

Mr. Rasmussen. I believe those are -- that the two letter efforts -- letter-writing efforts are comparable expressions of free speech drawing on the experience and background of the individuals who engaged in that free speech. So they're comparable in that regard.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Mr. Rasmussen, given everything we know, why not just indicate in that letter that this is to help -- that this is to help the Biden for President campaign?

A I don't have an answer to that question. I don't --

Q Well, in retrospect, do you think that would have been advisable?

A I haven't spent a great deal of time in retrospect parsing through decisions I made with the information presented to me at the time, so I -- I don't have an answer to the question. I just don't.

Mr. [redacted]. Nothing further.

Mr. Rasmussen. Thank you.

Ms. [redacted]. Are we going to go off the record?

Mr. [redacted]. Off the record.

[Recess.]

Ms. [redacted]. All right. It's 12:48. We can go back on the record.

Mr. Rasmussen. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q In the prior hour, at the very end of that, you were asked about why wouldn't you just write in the letter that it was an endorsement of President Biden.

Do you think anybody reading the letter would have had any question as to which candidate the letter writers likely supported?

A I suspect not, but it's hard to really know what people read into letters.

Q Right. Right. It would just be an assumption --

A Right.

Q -- but, at the end of the day, it certainly was not an endorsement of Trump, right?

A That's correct.

Q And it would have been more likely to be favoring Biden, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. The -- and, in fact, when it was -- it was brought up by Biden, as we just talked through, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I want to clarify one statement that was made earlier. You were asked about Mr. Blinken's interactions with Mr. Morell.

A Uh-huh.

Q You had no firsthand knowledge of that, right?

A I had none.

Q So we actually have Mr. Morell's testimony here, and I think the reference was made that Blinken was the cause of the letter or something like that.

Mr. Morell said pretty clearly: He -- meaning Tony Blinken -- asked me if I thought the Russians could be involved in this. As far as I remember, he did not ask me to put out a statement. So, yes, he triggered the statement. He did not ask for it, as far as my memory goes.

I want to make that memory -- that --

A Okay. I have no knowledge --

Q -- clear.

A -- as I said, of the --

Q Right.

A -- engagement between the two, so --

Q Right. But that wasn't -- that wasn't --

A Right.

Q -- explained in the earlier hour, right, that context?

A Okay.

Q You were also asked about Mr. Shapiro's interactions with Andrew Bates. Do you recall that?

A I recall.

Q And you said you have no knowledge of that, right?

A That's correct.

Q So Mr. Shapiro actually said on the record that he sent the email to Mr. Bates, may have had one phone call, he couldn't remember, and that was the extent of their interactions.

Were you aware of that?

A I was not.

Q Okay. So when it was described as extensive interactions between Mr. Bates and Mr. Shapiro, does one email and possibly a phone call sound like extensive interactions to you?

A Probably not, but, again, I have no --

Q Okay.

A -- awareness of or knowledge of Nick Shapiro's engagements with any of the actors in this --

Q Right. No, but that wasn't made clear --

A Right.

Q -- in the earlier hour, right?

A Okay.

Q And then, finally, you were asked about the question of on the record versus off the record in the email exchange between Mr. Morell and Mr. Shapiro.

A Right.

Q And, again, you weren't privy to that email, right?

A I was not.

Q You're not a custodian of the email. You're not cc'd on it?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So during his testimony before the committee, Mr. Shapiro said: Michael has a history of doing this. I've often -- I worked with Michael for many years, and he often sends me things like, quote, "OTR," end quote, and I often have to say to him, that could mean, quote, "on the record," or, quote, "off the record."

And then he continues on: And so that's a known Michael-Nick problem that I've dealt with for a long time.

Again, you weren't present for this, but I wanted to make the record clear.

A That's correct. And I myself sometimes stumble over whether OTR means on the record or off the record.

Q Understood. Understood.

Mr. Litt. I try to get people I work with to avoid the use of acronyms so I have --

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q I want to turn to the comment about the -- the quotes from the first President -- the second Presidential debate.

A Right.

Q And that's exhibit No. 22, I think, unless I marked it down wrong.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So majority counsel read through this section at the bottom of the second page here.

A Uh-huh.

Q And you said that Biden's remarks didn't capture directly -- it could have -- it didn't capture the nuance of what your letter said.

Do you recall saying that?

A Capture fully the -- the nature --

Q Right.

A -- of the statement. That's what I believe.

Q But he did say, They have said this has all the characteristics, which is something that your letter said, right?

A Yes.

Q Right. So he didn't capture the nuance, but he didn't get it completely wrong?

A Right. He paraphrased the one sentence from the letter that speaks to all the hallmarks. He used the word --

Q Right.

A -- "characteristics," but he -- he did use that.

Q Right. And then, in the following sentence, President Trump said: The laptop is now another Russia, Russia, Russia hoax.

What's your understanding of the phrase "Russia, Russia, Russia hoax"?

A Again, I did not watch the debate, so this is my first reading of this statement by former President Trump, but I take this to mean that he's characterizing the Vice President's Biden view of the Hunter -- of the Hunter Biden laptop issue as akin to other so-called Russia, Russia, Russia hoaxes that the President -- that former President Trump believes are unwarranted.

Q And do you think the reference to Russia, Russia, Russia hoax could be a reference to his belief that the Russians did not interfere in the 2016 election?

A It could, but I find it hard to infer --

Q Okay.

A -- what President Trump might have meant there.

Q But to the extent that President Trump has used the phrase "Russia hoax" to refer to allegations of Russian interference in the 2016 election, that's not an accurate statement about what happened in 2016, right? The Russians -- in other words, the Russians did interfere in the 2016 election?

A Yes. Our intelligence community has concluded that the Russians did interfere in that election, and it's also true that the President repeatedly refers to this as a hoax.

Ms. [redacted]. Okay. Just one second. I think we're almost done.

Okay. We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 12:54 p.m., the interview was adjourned.]

The majority will ask questions for 1 hour, and then the Democratic staff will have a chance to come around and ask questions for an hour as well. We'll rotate until we're done. And we will do our best to get you out of here as quickly as possible. We don't want to have you here any longer. We understand you have important duties that you're missing.

Typically, we'll take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, let us know.

As you can see, there's a court reporter taking down everything we say. We'll do our best not to talk over one another. Occasionally we'll have to go back and repeat a question or repeat an answer, so if you'll bear with us for that.

We're going to do our best to limit the number of people asking you questions during each hour just so you're not taking fire from too many different points of view.

Please try to speak clearly so the court reporter can hear you and everyone in the room.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible. We'll take our time. If you don't understand a question, let us know. If you don't know the answer to a question, that's okay to tell us you don't know or your don't remember. If you do remember, just tell us, or if you learn something from a third party, it's okay to tell us about that conversation even though that might be hearsay in a court proceeding. Just tell us how you came to learn that information.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law you're required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. You understand that. 18 United States Code 1001 covers those that intentionally provide false statements to Congress. You understand that as well?

Mr. Vorndran. I do.

[redacted] Thank you.

We like to make the -- the content of what we discuss we like to keep it confidential just -- as we bring in other witnesses. We would like to avoid having the contents of your testimony out there as a roadmap for other witnesses, so we ask you to keep that in mind. And for the same reason, any exhibits we provide today, even if it's something that you have provided, we'll collect them at the end of the day. Just the fact that we presented materials to you could present a roadmap for future witnesses.

Mr. Vorndran. Understood.

[redacted] And, [redacted] do you have anything you'd like to say?

[redacted] No. Just thanks to the witness for taking time out of your busy calendar to be here today.

Mr. Vorndran. You're welcome.

[redacted] That's all I have. It's 10:07. I'll turn it over to my colleague, [redacted]

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning, Mr. Vorndran.

A Good morning.

Q Again, I'm [redacted] and we'll get started.

Starting first with your professional background, when did you first join the FBI?

A I joined as a new agent in April of 2004.

Q And what position do you currently hold?

A I currently hold the position of special agent in charge at the Washington Field Office of the Mission Services Division.

Q And when did you start this position?

A Approximately mid-January 2023.

Q Do you currently ever work out of headquarters aside from the Washington Field Office?

A I do not.

Q Can you describe your roles and responsibilities in this position?

A Sure. So in the position of special agent in charge at the Washington Field Office, there's an assistant director in charge, and then there are five additional executives: four special agents in charge and one intelligence analyst in charge. So I hold one of the SAC jobs.

The Mission Services Division covers a majority of the functions of the Washington Field Office, including some crisis response. And I'll go into a little bit of detail if it's helpful.

Q Yes.

A So it's broken up into four branches that report to me. There's a total of seven direct reports. The four main branches have a GS-15 over them.

The first branch is primarily focused on personal and physical security, along with background investigations for clearances, applicant matters. The second branch is primarily focused on information technology, some law enforcement sensitive technical work and finance. The third branch is primarily the human resources functions of the Washington Field Office. And the fourth branch is the crisis response and critical incident branch for the Washington Field Office with all the specialty teams.

Three other direct reports: a GS-13 who handles internal audit matters, a GS-14 who handles professional responsibility, and a GS-14 who handles strategic engagement.

Q Okay. So you mentioned you have three people that directly report to you, like, just three?

A I have seven.

Q Seven. Okay. And who's your direct supervisor?

A The assistant director in charge of the Washington Field Office.

Q Okay. And during your tenure at the FBI, what positions have you held up to this point?

A Sure. Would it be beneficial to go from the beginning?

Q Yeah, that'd be great.

A Okay. So in April 2004, I started with the FBI Baltimore Field Office, worked there for approximately 5 years, working violent crime and public corruption matters, along with some white collar work. Then I transferred to the Philadelphia Field Office, where I continued public corruption work. Took a year and deployed to Bagdad, Iraq, on behalf of the FBI, and lived in Bagdad for most of 2010, as an assistant legal attache. Returned to the Philadelphia Field Office for a period of slightly less than 2 years to continue public corruption work.

At that point, I transferred to headquarters in the Counterterrorism Division, mostly focused on the Continent of Africa in international terrorism. From there I went back to the Baltimore Field Office and worked on the counterintelligence program with a focus mostly on China and our national security. From there I took the legal attache job in Ottawa, Canada, for approximately 2.5 years, where I had the responsibility for all the FBI equities in Canada with our Canadian partners.

After that I returned to Washington for my first go through WFO as an assistant special agent in charge, where I had some of the criminal white collar work, and then went back to the Counterterrorism Division as an executive, as a section chief executive, doing some -- probably not appropriate for an unclassified environment, but some sensitive work that did to benefit the field. And then became a deputy assistant director in the Counterterrorism Division in approximately May of 2021.

Q And when you went back to headquarters, as you mentioned, as a section chief --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- that was in 2020, roughly?

A June of 2020.

Q Okay. And when did you move on to the job after that, the role you mentioned after that?

A May of 2021.

Q Okay. Now, as chief of the human intelligence section, what were your roles and responsibilities?

A So in that section I had, I believe, seven direct units who were managed by two assistant section chiefs. So that's a level of leadership between the executive and the units. And those units primarily focused on different work. Some of it I can't -- I'll give you a broader review, but a lot of it is pretty sensitive in terms of some of the work that was done.

There was a group focused on how we utilized online sources in international terrorism, a similar group that focused on how we used online sources in domestic terrorism. We had a group that focused on completely classified matters with certain field offices on international terrorism. We had a group who worked on international terrorism with a focus on training human sources.

Let me see. I feel like I may be missing one on you. It just skips my memory right now. But, broadly speaking, that's the core work of that section.

Q Perfect. And if anything comes to you --

A Sure.

Q -- throughout the questioning, feel free to go back.

A Yeah.

Q And who was your direct supervisor in that role?

A He is now retired. So it was Pat Reddan. He was my deputy assistant director at that time.

Q And you had mentioned you had two assistant section chiefs. Were those your only two direct reports?

A They were.

Q And in addition to those two managing the seven units, is there any other way you can describe the organizational chart in your office while you were in this role?

A Yeah. Predominantly, one of those assistant section chiefs focused on online matters and one focused on in-person matters, if that distinction helps.

Q How many individuals would you say reported to you when you were in this role, if you were -- not just your direct?

A In the overall field section?

Q Correct.

A If I could give you a rough number, approximately 110.

Q Now, as deputy assistant director of the support branch of the Counterterrorism Division, what were your roles and responsibilities in that position?

A Sure. So in that assignment I had three main sections, and so I had three FBI executives reporting to me. Each one ran a particular section. And I'll kind of walk through the sections for you.

The first section was called strategic partnership and engagement. A couple core functions there. One, all of the FBI's interagency detailees to other Federal agencies. So our detailees to Langley, DHS, they all reported through that section. We had a unit in there that did strategic engagement, so they handled core private sector relationships that the Counterterrorism Division maintained to benefit the FBI's mission around counterterrorism. The National Joint Terrorism Task Force was in that section, and then the Counterterrorism Watch Center, which is the CTD's 24/7, you know, operations center. That was the strategic partnership and engagement section.

The second section was technology and data innovation. They have predominantly now relocated to Huntsville at our new campus there. So the executive for that sat in Alabama, reported up to me in Washington, D.C. They handled technology and data projects that were important to the Counterterrorism Division. Some of them were projects we worked on unilaterally. Some of them were projects we worked jointly with other divisions in the FBI.

And then the third section was the resource management section; predominantly, the human resources functions of the Counterterrorism Division. Four main units: financial management, security, training, and -- there's a fourth. It'll come to me.

Q I understand.

A Yeah.

Q Other than those sections you described, can you explain the organizational chart in your office when you were in this role with the folks that worked under you?

A Can you give me -- go back on the question and make sure I understand.

Q Absolutely. Like, how many people were resourced to maybe each section? What did that look like?

A Oh. Yeah, I would say, in total, the -- we called that -- the deputy assistant director called that branch 2 of the Counterterrorism Division, and it was known as the support branch for the obvious reasons of kind of what went on there. I would say around 250 to 300 people total. That doesn't include contractors, which was always a number that moved around a little bit, but that's a rough number.

The smallest of the sections was probably strategic partnership engagement, and middle size was resource management, and the largest was technology and data innovation.

Q Now, during your time in this role, did you ever interact with former executive assistant director of the National Security Branch, Jill Sanborn?

A I did.

Q Did you have meetings with her often?

A So at the time I was the deputy assistant director, Jill Sanborn was no longer the assistant director. She was, at that time, the executive assistant director. If my timeline is correct, she would have left the Counterterrorism Division in late March or April of 2021, and I got there -- but in my former section chief role, I did have interactions with her. And if you want me to talk about that, I'm happy to.

Q Yes, while she was assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division.

A Yes.

Q Yes.

A Just not as -- I want to be clear, like, the interactions I had with her I was not a direct subordinate with her. There was a layer in between her as the assistant director and me as the section chief.

So I came into CTD in June of 2020, and AD Sanborn was -- I think she had reported by that point from her former job in Minneapolis.

Listen, my impressions of AD Sanborn were positive. She had a reputation of a counterterrorism expert, based on her long career in the FBI, many tours in the Counterterrorism Division, her work in Los Angeles. She was a subject matter expert for the agency.

Q Did you perceive that she had a handle on her area of jurisdiction in counterterrorism during those couple of months, roughly?

A When you say area of jurisdiction, do you mean like -- can you just tell me what those words means?

Q The counterterrorism section as a whole --

A Am I confident that she knew what was going on in the Counterterrorism Division?

Q Yes.

A Yes.

Q Okay. Did she generally know about the issue or areas of major cases that were going on during the time that you interacted with her?

A Yes.

Q Now, switching gears a little bit, have you ever received any honors or awards from the FBI during your time there?

A I'm sure back in my new agent time I got some time-off awards or cash awards. Nothing then up until my executive time in the bonus structure. Those would be the most recent ones.

Q Okay. And during your tenure with the FBI, have you ever participated in a review of your performance?

A Sure.

Q Do you generally receive good markings on your performance reviews?

A I do.

Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

A That's a long story. Are you ready for it?

Q Sure.

A Okay. So before I joined the Bureau, I have -- I have an engineering degree by trade. I worked with a large probably Fortune 100 company, had a tremendous experience, great company to work for, excellent opportunities, and I knew where my next assignments were going to be. They were going to be international. And then after that I would probably go back through corporate headquarters.

And at that time it was about not quite a year after 9/11, and I kind of knew what my path looked like in the private sector and started thinking about what would a different path look like.

And through a lot of just personal reflection on what I liked about my corporate assignment and what I didn't, I made a decision to apply to the Bureau. As you're probably aware, it takes quite a bit of time. And it was a journey kind of through that process to really get to know the people that were doing the intake at the FBI, from applicants to the polygraph program. And it's been an excellent experience, over 19 years now. Don't ever look back with any regrets on that decision.

Q That's great. Now we're going to focus in and switch gears on part of the reason that we wanted to call you in and discuss some topics with you today.

Are you familiar with the National School Board Association's September 29, 2021, letter to President Biden? I'll refer to that as the NSBA probably moving forward.

A So I've actually never read that letter, but I'm familiar with it through the memo that came in from DOJ.

Q I am going to enter that letter in as an exhibit. And I'll give you a copy to take a look at.

A Sure. Thank you.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Now, when did you learn generally of the NSBA's September 29th letter?

A I would have learned generally of that letter sometime in early October of 2021.

Q When did you learn that the Justice Department was going to take action related to school board related threats?

A I believe the first indication I had of any communication or messaging from DOJ would have been on or around October 2nd, 2021.

Q And do you know why the Justice Department believed it needed to take any action?

A I do not. I'd refer that question to DOJ.

Q I will represent to you that in a November 3rd, 2021, hearing before the House Intelligence Committee and during this transcribed interview, that Executive Assistant Director Timothy Langan testified that the DOJ and FBI conducted a discussion the weekend before the issuance of the memorandum, which is probably that October 2nd, 2021, date you referred to.

A Okay.

Q Did you take part in these conversations?

A I did not.

Q If so, what were the contents of these discussions? You said you did not. Do you know who took part in any of these discussions?

A I do not.

Q Do you know whose idea it was to issue a memorandum?

A I do not.

Q What due diligence occurred at the Justice Department, to your knowledge, between September 29th and the October 4th memo?

A Again, I would refer that to DOJ. I have no knowledge.

Q Do you know if the Justice Department looked at any of the incidents cited in the NSBA letter? And if you'd like to take a peak at it, you can.

A I would have no way of knowing what they deliberated on.

Q Did you personally look into any of the incidents that were referred to in the NSBA's letter?

A I did not.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that the vast majority of the incidents cited in the NSBA's letter calling for Federal intervention at the school board meetings and equating parents as domestic terrorists were nonviolent?

A Say that again.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that the vast majority of the incidents referred to in the NSBA's letter calling for Federal intervention at school board meetings and equating parents to domestic terrorists were nonviolent?

A I haven't read the memo, so it's impossible for me to comment on it.

Q According to a May 2022 report commissioned by the NSBA on September 21 of 2021, 8 days before the NSBA sent its letter, the NSBA sent a detailed summary of the content of its letter and lists of incidents at school board meetings to the White House at its request.

Are you aware of this?

A I am not.

Q I'm going to show you an email chain between former executive director Chip Slaven and a White House advisor. I'm going to enter this as an exhibit. Sorry. If you want to take a peak at that.

[redacted] I'm going to mark this as exhibit 2. If you would like to take a moment to check it out.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q While I know you mentioned you were generally unaware of these discussions prior to the memo coming out, as you can see in this email thread, in an email to the NSBA, White House official Mary Wall stated: Is there any way we can take a look at the letter in advance of its release? In specific, I'm meeting with colleagues from other White House offices and DOJ tomorrow morning to see if there might be any options we can pursue here, so if you have any concrete recommendations in your letter, e.g. the threat assessment you mentioned, would be good to know so I can include in discussions.

Have you ever interacted with Mary Wall?

A I have not.

Q Did you take part in a discussion, according to the email, that occurred on the morning of September 22 between the White House and DOJ?

A I did not.

Q Do you know if anyone at the FBI raised any concerns about the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act language in this letter?

A I didn't hear of any references to that because I didn't see the memo.

[redacted] But did you have any communications with your colleagues about it?

Mr. Vorndran. No, did not.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know if any other FBI officials took part in those discussions?

A I don't know.

Q And are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memo regarding alleged threats and violence at local school board meetings?

A I am.

[redacted] I am going to enter into the record the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memo. I will mark this as exhibit 3.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Now, at the time, you were deputy assistant director of the support branch of the Counterterrorism Division, correct?

A Yes.

Q And when did you learn of the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memorandum?

A I think the final memo, I would have learned about it on October 4th. Like I previously testified, I think that my first indication that there was a memo coming was probably on or about October 2nd.

Q Okay. Did you have any involvement in drafting the memo?

A I did not.

Q Were you provided the opportunity to weigh in on the substance of the memo prior to October 4?

A I was not.

Q Now, in the memo, the Attorney General required each U.S. attorney's office, in conjunction with the FBI, to hold meetings with local law enforcement partners in each judicial district.

Do you know why these two entities were involved?

A So the U.S. attorney's offices are the coordinating element of all Federal law enforcement in the respective jurisdictions, and I think that's why they were led to kind of centralize the effort. But then on all issues and threats, we work with our partners. And so the Bureau, DEA, ATF, State, local partners, we would normally come together on any of these larger centralized and coordinated requests.

Q Do you think it was appropriate for the FBI to be involved in this local law enforcement matter?

A I think the memo came with very clear guidance and expectations of what we were supposed to do, and that was, you know, my job at the time as a DAD. I didn't even have any leads in the jurisdictions. I'm in Washington, D.C., trying to manage a big within the Counterterrorism Division and a lot of responsibility. So it was just another item that we had to execute and work on at the request of the Department.

Q I think you said clear instruction and expectations. What in the memo did you feel was the clear instruction and expectation?

A To sit down and have a meeting with our partners.

Q Did you ever attend any of the meetings?

A I did not.

Q To your knowledge, did any of these meetings occur in the judicial district in which the FBI headquarters sits?

A I don't know that.

Q Did anyone who worked for you in the Counterterrorism Division attend these meetings?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Are you aware that after these meetings occurred, the U.S. attorney's office reported to Main Justice on what they had found?

A No.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that reports back to Main Justice of school board related violence or threats were almost nonexistent?

A I don't have that information in front of me, so whatever the reporting that went back to the Department from the districts, I haven't seen that.

Q In fact, the reports back to Main Justice showed that there were no legitimate nationwide law enforcement justification for the Attorney General's directive.

Are you aware of that?

A No.

Q In the press release accompanying the memo, it announced the creation of a task force consisting of representatives from the Department's Criminal Division, National Security Division, Civil Rights Division, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, the FBI, the Community Relations Service, and the Office of Justice Programs.

Did you have any involvement in drafting the press release?

A I did not.

BY [redacted] I'm going to enter that DOJ press release into the record. I will mark this as exhibit 4.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q You can take a moment and look at this if you need to.

And now, you mentioned you weren't involved in drafting the press release, but do you know who was involved?

A I don't.

Q Do you know who came up with the idea for the task force?

A I do not.

Q Would that normally be something that would be under your branch, as you mentioned you have partnerships as part of your -- or you did have partnerships as part of your role in --

A So the partnership piece is kind of broken down into two layers. One is private sector, so that wouldn't be relevant to this. The other is interagency detailees. We don't have an interagency detailee in the Counterterrorism Division. Detail to DOJ, it's really DHS, CIA, those kind of places that we work closely with our internal partners.

Q Do you know why this would include the National Security Division?

A I don't.

Q Do you know if the task force has actually been created?

A I do not.

Q Do you believe that the Attorney General's memorandum was appropriate?

A Like I testified, the memo came in. It was clear on what the Counterterrorism Division needed to work on with our field offices, and that was in partnership with the Criminal Investigative Division, and that's what we did.

In the fall of 2021, there was and there continues to be a lot going on in the counterterrorism mission. If you look back at that time, we were on the back end of the Afghanistan evacuation in the summer of 2021. We had an elevated HVE threat in international terrorism. The RMVE threat in domestic terrorism continued to trend with lethality. And I think, as everyone's aware, we now have a complaint on an IRGC Quds Force member trying to plot lethal operations on U.S. soil.

So in context, there was a lot going on in the fall of 2021 with an elevated threat picture across everything CTD worked on.

Q So in this instance with the school boards, though, did that play into the "a lot" that was going on in your mind? Do you think that was appropriate, in your personal opinion?

A Again, it was just another piece of CTD's work that was required to be done. That's how we looked at it.

And it wasn't -- you know, it wasn't uncommon where we would have engagements with DOJ on these, like all kinds of operational matters on a routine basis. I mean, the pace of operations in that division is pretty high, nights and weekends, and to my point, it just -- it was one more piece of something we were going to work on.

Q So in your office, did agents and employees discuss their reaction to this memo?

A Not to my knowledge. I had some -- I had an exchange with the DTOS section chief at the time, so the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section, about what charges DOJ might contemplate should there be an investigation or other charges. That was really the extent of my recollection of the conversation.

Q What were the contents of that conversation?

A Yeah. It was, you know, typically on threat cases where we're focused on investigating violence and threats of violence. It's quite common that we would see a charge of 18 U.S.C. 875, which is interstate communication of a threat. That doesn't deal with in-person threats. They have to cross State lines, so whether it's via wire, via email, telephone, voicemail. That would have been the context of that conversation, because it was a charge that we've seen the districts use previously in threat and threats of violence cases.

Q And do you know when this conversation took place?

A It would have been right around this time, like early October.

Q And what was the name of that DTOS section chief?

A Steve Jensen.

Q And what was his reaction to the memo, that you recall?

A Similar to mine, just it was guidance that came in from DOJ that was work we were going to work on. And Steve was very well versed in 875 from his experience in the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section, and we had talked about that statute historically on other matters.

Q Now, were you involved in any conversations or correspondence related to how the FBI could help address alleged threats or violence at school board meetings?

A Can you restate that, please?

Q In addition to that conversation that you had with Mr. Jensen, were you involved in any other communications and conversations related to how the FBI could help address alleged threats or violence at school board meetings?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Are you aware -- are you familiar with an email sent by Carlton Peeples, the deputy assistant director of the Criminal Investigative Division, on October 20th of 2021, that announced the creation of an EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A Yes.

[redacted] I'm going to enter that threat tag email into the record, and I will mark it as exhibit 5.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And you can take a moment and check this out if you need to.

A I'm familiar with it.

Q Oh, okay. So you were copied on this email, correct?

A Yes.

Q And do you know why Deputy Assistant Director Peeples copied you on it?

A So as memory serves, now SAC Peeples was the acting assistant director over the Criminal Investigative Division at the time, and this was a joint message from CID and CTD to SACs. And it was commonplace that the other executives in those respective divisions would be copied on those emails.

Q Did you assist in drafting this memo?

A I did not.

Q When did you learn of the creation of the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A I think by title "EDUOFFICIALS", probably on or about this time, but I was aware that a tag was in process because there was a procedure that has to be followed to set it up. Whether that's in this case or, you know, for working an NSSE event and we need a threat tag for the NSSE, we have to work with our National Threat Operations Center to get that tag set up.

So probably somewhere shortly before that was I aware that a threat tag was being created, but it would have been on or about this date that I learned that was the title of the actual tag.

Q So did you create the threat tag?

A No.

Q How long does that process take to create a threat tag?

A It's short. A day or two.

Q Were you involved in any official correspondence or conversations about the creation of it before it was officially created by title?

A Again, like, I would have been aware that Domestic Terrorism Operations section was moving forward with the creation of it. But, like, I wasn't involved in the negotiations of creating it or the mechanics. I just would have been aware, if that helps.

Q And did you have any engagement on this threat tag with FBI employees to identify trends, strategies, and best practices?

A No.

Q As the deputy assistant director of the support branch of the Counterterrorism Division, did you have any knowledge or participate in any investigations that were labeled with the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A No.

Q Are you generally aware of cases in which the FBI used the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A I'm aware that it was applied to assessments, yes.

Q They generally -- the FBI opened at least 25 cases using the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag. Are you aware of this?

A I think the FBI opened at least 25 assessments, not cases. There's a difference between an assessment and a case.

Q And what's your understanding of that difference?

A An assessment really falls under the parlance of what we call a Guardian, and it's the least intrusive set of checks the FBI can conduct to determine if information warrants further investigation.

Q Are you aware that several parents were investigated by the FBI for protected First Amendment activity from this threat tag?

A I am not.

Q But if I represent to you that there were, as an individual who signed this email, does this concern you?

A Well, I would disagree with signing the email. I don't think -- I was copied on the email. And without the information in front of me to look at the assessments you're referencing, it's impossible for me to answer that question based on fact.

The reality is, when we open assessments, we look at them to make an assessment if it warrants further investigation, at which point it would be predicated to a preliminary or a full investigation.

We take very seriously our obligation to protect and safeguard First Amendment protected activity and speech, and that didn't change with anything on this memo and the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag. That tag was applied to the assessments for tracking purposes so we could understand the scope and nature of the threat if it existed.

Q In your personal opinion, does knowing that you could be investigated by the FBI for speaking up at your child's school board meeting chill parents from exercising their First Amendment rights?

A The FBI didn't investigate people for exercising their First Amendment rights.

Q But as an assessment -- you said that's the least intrusive means, but is that technically investigating?

A We can look at an investiga -- look at an assessment and make a determination based on checks to see if it gets referred to State and locals. Many of them get closed as information only with no additional investigation after that is done.

And so I think the Attorney General's memo talks specifically about the importance of safeguarding First Amendment protected activity, but recognizing that those protections don't extend when people are threatening violence or threatening someone's life based on their job, regardless of what that job is. So I think the memo speaks for itself in the way those words were written.

Q Do you personally know of any instances where that needed to be applied, though? It sounds like your understanding of the memo itself, you think that there was an issue that this needed to be applied to. Do you personally know of any instances where parents needed to be investigated by the FBI for potential threats?

A I'm not aware of any.

Q Does the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag have any law enforcement utility?

A What do you mean by law enforcement utility?

Q If it serves any law enforcement purposes.

A It's a tracking mechanism internal to our databases.

Q Now, when the Attorney General issued his October 4, 2021, memorandum, did you perceive threats or violence at school board meetings as a State and local law enforcement issue primarily?

A The guidance was clear about asking field offices to assess if there was a Federal nexus and what Federal crimes might be investigated. And that is not at all uncommon with the intake process for tips, whether they're email tips, phone tips that come into our National Threat Operations Center. You have a cadre of FBI employees who sit there, intake that information, provide it to the relevant field offices, and the field offices are making the decision whether it warrants additional checks or investigation, or if it's something passed to State and local partners, or if it's closed as no further action required. That's just how the process works. It didn't differ because of this EDUOFFICIALS tag.

Q What did you believe was the Federal nexus that required the FBI to get involved in local school board meetings?

A Let me go back to my prior testimony. If there was an investigation that was required to be conducted to look at interstate communication of threats, that was the most common statute we have seen used for threats of violence, communication of threats.

Q Did you get the impression that local law enforcement were ill equipped to handle any disruptions that occurred at local school board meetings in person?

A I didn't have that impression.

BY [redacted]

Q What type of information did the Attorney General's office collect from the FBI prior to promulgating this memo?

A I'm not aware of any information the Attorney General's office collected from the FBI.

Q Okay. Were you aware of any series of threats to school board members or people attending school board meetings that had a Federal nexus prior to the memo?

A I was aware of media reporting of threats and -- well, I was aware of media reporting of school board meetings that were being reflected in the media as threatening. That's what I was aware of at the time.

Q And do you know if those reports had any Federal nexus, or was it mostly State and local?

A I don't know.

BY [redacted]

Q I will then move on a little bit further.

Moving into DVE investigations, how familiar are you with how the FBI classifies or categorizes investigations?

A I'm familiar with how we classify domestic terrorism investigations.

Q Now, on October 2lst of 2022, the FBI had responded to a letter to Chairman Jordan. And I will represent to you in the response: While investigative case classifications, or categories, help the FBI better understand the criminal actors we pursue, we recognize actors' motivations vary, are nuanced, and sometimes are derived from a blend of sociopolitical goals or personal grievances. Regardless of case classification, the FBI follows the individualized facts and evidence of each case to carry out our investigations.

Do you believe that necessarily to be true with the school board issue and investigations that were getting referred to the FBI?

A That was a long passage. Can you -- I'm not familiar with it. Would you mind reading it back to me?

Q Of course. I will enter it into the record.

A Okay.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Vorndran. Which paragraph were you on?

BY [redacted]

Q I was referring to in -- I don't have it marked.

A Might be paragraph 2 on the front page.

Q Yes, that's correct.

A Okay. What was your question?

Q Oh, sorry. At what stage in the investigation are cases given an investigative case classification?

A So for sure when they go to a preliminary or full investigation they are given a case classification. It's been a long time since I was in case management. There may -- it may attach, once an assessment is moved to a full Guardian, that a threat tag is selected, but I would have to check that information.

Q And to your knowledge, did this happen properly in the process with the school board investigations?

A If it's part of the process in our case management system, then yes.

Q And can a case fall under more than one classification?

A It can.

Q Who is responsible for determining and applying an investigative case classification or category?

A In general, the agent who opens the investigation would make that decision, and then it goes through a -- depending on what kind of case it is, it goes through different levels of approval to verify and authenticate.

Q Is that a field agent?

A Yes.

Q Is there any input provided by that agent's supervisors?

A I think that -- so the reason I hesitate, there's certainly -- within the field offices, there are different priorities that are worked. So, for example, if -- if I go back to my white collar public corruption days, if I could open something as a wire fraud case or it was wire fraud involving an elected official and I could open it as a public corruption case, I would open it as a public corruption case. And that would be a conversation with a supervisor because that would have been a higher priority investigation to work for the FBI.

So it's a bit of a nuance of an answer, but hopefully that provides a little context of how that field agent-supervisor discussion would look.

Q Would any input be provided by division heads or headquarters officials?

A No, not to my knowledge.

Q Would an agent go through more than one supervisor, or would it just be one person that they would ask?

A So back to your earlier question if a case could be classified as two things, in that scenario, it could go through two supervisors for approval, because you might have -- we can just stick with the example I used. You might have a wire fraud case that involves an elected official, so you might have a white collar case opened on financial institution fraud and an elected official case. They in many field offices would be different supervisors, and so would be -- in terms of everybody being synced up and aware of what was going on, there would be two supervisors involved in those conversations.

Q Now, during your tenure as the deputy assistant director, what role did you have in classifying cases?

A I had no role.

Q How often are cases reclassified from one category to another?

A That's a very difficult question to answer. I mean, how often? I don't know to give you what we know. If we have thousands of cases, I don't know how to answer that question productively. It does happen that they're reclassified, but to give you perspective on volume is really difficult.

Q Do certain criteria have to be met for a case to be reclassified?

A Sure.

Q Can you briefly talk about what that criteria could be?

A Yeah. So we'll just stay with the example I brought up. If you have a wire fraud, financial institution fraud case being worked by the white collar squad and there's a, what we would call dual caption -- that's the word we use -- case, a public corruption of an elected official who's engaged in that wire fraud or financial institution fraud, there could become a time where it makes more sense, from the efficient use of resources, that that case would transfer to one squad over another.

So, for example, if the elected officials -- if there's exculpatory information and there's no longer a belief that elected official engaged, that case would float back to a traditional white collar case and be reviewed by that squad. At that point it would be reclassified to remove the elected official public corruption component, and it would just be white collar.

We also see it at times in hate crimes where we don't know what it is up front, and so you would get reclassification within the hate crime context of -- you know, whether color of law or traditional hate crime, so you'll see it there at times too.

Q So I know you said that it'll switch from one classification to another.

A Uh-huh.

Q Is there still somewhere in that case's history that it was classified as the other thing first?

A I'm not an expert on the logging within our case management system, but my recollection is it does require a -- like a change case request. Without verifying it, I have to -- you know, we have to take that back and get you an answer, but -- so I don't know, but I do think it's probably logged.

Q And the FBI contends that case classifications can only change if supported by the facts and circumstances of the investigation. Is that true in practice, to your knowledge?

A Yes.

Q And who makes the determination to reclassify?

A That would be a field office decision between the field agent and the supervisor.

Q Are you familiar with domestic violent extremism investigations at the FBI?

A I am.

Q Are you familiar with how the FBI defines domestic violent extremists?

A Yes.

Q What's your definition of how that term is applied?

A Well, so the way we look at domestic terrorism in aggregate -- and domestic violent extremism cuts across different threat categories. So you have racially and ethnically motivated violent extremism, anti-government, anti-authority, anarchist violent extremism. So DVE is an umbrella term that cuts across those.

But when we look at those investigations, there's three key prongs that we look for before we predicate investigation, and those are violation -- alleged allegation of criminal activity in violation of a Federal law in furtherance of ideology.

And the ideologies kind of fall into some of those categories. I talked about anti-government, racial and ethnically motivated violent extremism, anarchist violent extremism. So there's ideologies enumerated and explained, and you have to have each of those three addressed in a communication to predicate a domestic terrorism investigation.

Q And have you worked on any DVE cases while at the FBI?

A Like as a field agent?

Q At any time while you've been at the FBI.

A No.

Q What criteria must be met in order for an investigation to be reclassified as such?

A Those three things.

Q Those three things?

A Yes.

[redacted] We'll go off the record for a moment.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] All right. We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Now, according to the FBI, the opening of a full investigation must be approved by a supervisory special agent and notice must be given to the headquarters unit within 15 days.

As the deputy assistant director of the Counterterrorism Division, would you receive notice for every full DVE investigation that was opened?

A No.

Q Did you have to sign off on opening full investigations in any respect?

A I did not.

Q Okay. Was there ever any opportunity for you to provide input or object to the opening of an investigation?

A No.

Q Are you familiar with the letter Representative Jordan sent to the FBI Director, Director Wray, on July 27th of 2022, regarding protected whistleblower disclosures related to the FBI's handling of DVE cases classifications?

A I have not read the letter.

Q Well, I will show it to you. I will mark it as exhibit 7.

[redacted] [redacted], while we're doing that, let me jump in for a quick question.

[redacted] Of course.

[redacted] Kevin, thanks for coming in. I know you have a big job, and, obviously, you know I understand the Bureau pretty well after 23 years. I do appreciate your taking the time.

My only question regarding the threat tag -- and it's a fairly simple one -- in your role as DAD of CTD's branch 2, did you recall any specific operational guidance that went out to the field through traditional mechanisms, you know, as to how to process or operationalize the AG's memo?

Mr. Vorndran. The only guidance I'm aware of is the exhibit you showed me, the memo from now SAC Peeples. That's the only guidance I'm aware of [inaudible] on how to apply that tag and the questions considered.

[redacted] Being a former Joint Terrorism Task Force supervisor myself, I understand that mechanism well. So I wasn't sure if the National Joint Terrorism Task Force would have been, you know, a logical mechanism to kind of --

Mr. Vorndran. They would not. I mean, the JTTF predominantly focuses on the training of the TFOs sitting on the JTTF. They provide funding to the airport liaison officers. They didn't have any role, to my knowledge, in this.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Vorndran. Yeah, sure thing.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Now I'm going to go back to exhibit 7 here for a few minutes.

Can you please read the first sentence on page 2 of the letter? If you would mind reading that out loud.

A "New whistleblower disclosures made by multiple FBI employees from different field offices indicate that the Biden administration's narrative may be misleading."

Q And can you please read the next two sentences as well?

A "We have received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases of DVEs to satisfy their superiors. For example, one whistleblower explained that because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they're encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases even though there is minimal, circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification."

Q Are you aware that, according to the FBI's counterterrorism policy guide, agents are required to open one case per subject?

A If you have that passage, I'll be happy to look at it. That is my understanding, but it is generally one case per subject.

Q Do you know when the policy was enacted?

A I do not.

Q Do you know how this policy compares to the DIOG?

[redacted] DIOG.

A Oh, no.

[11:01 a.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And for non-counterterrorism investigations, is the policy still one case per subject, or can you have one case with multiple subjects?

A So general practice is one case per subject. There are, much like we would have across different threats, cases of conspiracies that will have multiple subjects into one investigation. So, for example, if we -- taking a different, like, side of this, if you have a Hobbs Act case, like an armed car robbery, and there's three individuals involved and we don't know who they are, we would open that investigation on the armored car robbery with three unknown subjects, and as we identify them, there would be three people involved in that investigation.

Depending on what the investigation shows, those subjects could be written into their own case or not. It's a little bit fact-dependent on what we have.

Q And in your experience as the SAC of the Washington field office, how do agents know when to follow the DIOG for an investigation or the counterterrorism policy guide?

A Okay. I got there in January of 2023. I don't know.

Q To your knowledge, is this how the Bureau handled domestic terrorism investigations during the 2020 riots?

A The one -- is the question did the Bureau handle one case, one subject for the 2020 riots? To my knowledge, yes.

Q Are you aware of any instances where a case was reclassified even if there was insufficient facts and circumstances to support the new classification?

A I am not.

Q Are you aware of any instances during your tenure at the FBI where an agent was pressured to bolster the number of case classifications by reclassifying a case?

A No.

Q And following the events that occurred at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, are you aware of weekly emails that were sent out by Director Wray and Assistant Director Sanborn?

A What was the timing?

Q Following January 6th of 2021, are you aware of weekly emails that were sent out by Director Wray and Assistant Director Sanborn?

A I am not.

Q Did you ever have any opportunity to identify or open domestic terrorism investigations following the January 6, 2021 --

A I did not.

Q -- event?

We have been told about a practice at the FBI that several agents have referred to -- that several agents have referred to as papering the file to keep a case open. Are you aware of this practice?

A No.

Q Agents have said that even when they have taken all logical investigative steps and there is no indication that there is a Federal crime occurring, they cannot justify keeping a case open, they sometimes get pushback from a headquarters or their chain of command to keep the case open, so they paper the file.

Are you aware that agents feel pressured by headquarters to keep certain types of cases open, and in order to do that, they have to paper the file every 90 days?

A I'm not aware of those.

Q And it was described to us as a common practice.

As a senior leader in the FBI, can you describe for us the law enforcement utility of keeping a case file open by providing initial documents and papering the file?

A So, in general, the times we'll keep a case file open with limited activity are specific to evidence that remains not closed out. So we have requirements to dispose of all evidence before investigations are closed.

You could have a period of inactivity while the district is making decisions on charging. I think you're aware that we'll conduct our investigations. We will develop the evidence wherever that evidence comes from, and then we'll present that evidence to the prosecuting district. And sometimes those charging decisions, whether there's going to be charges brought or not, can take a period of time, and so, there can be latency in the file.

So there are times that cases are kept open with limited activity, but I'm not aware of the concept used of paper the file on DVE cases.

Q You've never heard any agents ever use that term?

A I've heard agents use paper the file, sure, but not in the context of DVE cases.

Q And during your tenure at the FBI, you have held several supervisory positions, correct?

A Yes.

Q And do you generally have insight into the cases your direct reports were working on?

A As a field supervisor, which is the frontline supervisor, absolutely. The requirements on a field supervisor are file reviews every 90 days. You have obligations on human intelligence to go through files. That is the closest in terms of a supervisory role to complete knowledge.

As an assistant special agent in charge, which is kind of like a senior leader but not an executive, you will -- ASACs will see case files, but the level of rigor that they are gone through is less than a frontline supervisor would make.

[redacted] We're going to go off the record. That will conclude our first hour.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 11:16, and we're going on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Good afternoon, Mr. Vorndran. How are you doing today?

A I'm good. Thank you.

Q Thank you so much for being here.

My name is [redacted] I am counsel for the Democratic House Judiciary Committee. I'm going to be asking you some questions with respect to some issues that the majority has brought up, in addition to some other areas that I want to explore. Does that sound good?

A Sure.

Q So you're familiar with the domestic investigations and operations guide, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it's referred to as the DIOG, correct?

A Yes.

Q And the DIOG has been in effect since 2008?

A Sounds about right.

Q So that's about 15 years?

A Uh-huh.

Q Who does the DIOG apply to?

A Everyone in the FBI.

Q Okay. So every single employee in the FBI has to follow the DIOG?

A Yes.

Q And does the DIOG apply to all domestic investigative activities conducted by the FBI?

A Yes, it does.

Q Does it also apply to all domestic intelligence collection activities conducted by the FBI?

A To my knowledge, yes.

Q So what is the purpose of the DIOG?

A To provide standard operating procedures to how FBI employees go about conducting their intelligence and investigative operations.

Q And so, it's to ensure consistency across the board when people are conducting investigations?

A That's correct.

Q And so according to the DIOG, the FBI has four broad general authorities. I want to walk through each of those with you, and to make that helpful, I want to introduce an excerpt of section 2.2 of the DIOG, which discusses each of the four authorities, and I'll be marking that as exhibit 8.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So in section 2.2.1, the title says, Conduct Investigations and Collect Intelligence and Evidence. And the first sentence reads: The FBI is authorized to collect intelligence and to conduct investigations to detect, obtain information about, and prevent and protect against Federal crimes and threats to the national security and to collect foreign intelligence, as provided in the DIOG.

Did I read that sentence correctly?

A Yes.

Q What do you understand that sentence to mean?

A It outlines our authorities to conduct our investigations and how we're supposed to do it, and what we're permitted to do under our investigative authority. So it kind of outlines the scope of capability.

Q And what do you understand collect intelligence to mean?

A The collect intelligence could refer -- it cuts across a swath of activity. So that could be human intelligence. It could be other mechanisms in the classified world that would be considered intelligence, but it is to collect intelligence and information to inform our investigations.

Q And so, would you say it's correct to state that conducting investigations and collecting intelligence is how the FBI scopes an issue?

A I would say it's how we look at our investigations and intelligence operations. I'm not sure about how we scope, but, like, to collect intelligence and conduct investigations is the core work of the FBI.

Q And so, I want to take a look at section 2.2.2, and this is titled Provide Investigative Assistance. This sentence states that the FBI is authorized to provide investigative assistance to other Federal, State, local, or Tribal agencies, and foreign agencies as provided in section 12 of the DIOG.

So to make this helpful, I'll be introducing an excerpt of section 12 of the DIOG, which I'll be marking as exhibit 9.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so, the first sentence of the second paragraph of section 12.1 states the following: Section 12 specifically addresses those situations in which the FBI has been requested, or is seeking to provide assistance to other agencies and does not have an open substantive assessment or predicated investigation.

What do you understand this sentence to mean?

A So I'll give you an example. That applies to investigative matters of criminal conduct that do not rise to the Federal level. So, we see this quite frequently in active shooters. So if you have an active shooter who murders five or six people, and there is no Federal statute that's been violated in terms of how the weapon was acquired, it is simply a State and local homicide matter, the Bureau will frequently be pulled into those investigations to provide assistance. It could be shooter reconstruction, evidence recovery, victim assistance.

So that is where we see that broadly used.

Q That's helpful, thank you.

And I'd also like to look at section 12.2.1(f). And this is a subpart (f) that appears at the top of page 12-2.

And so this section states that the FBI personnel can provide investigative assistance to State, local, or Tribal agencies in the investigation of matters that may involve Federal crimes or threats to national security, or for such other purposes as may be legally authorized.

So the sentence explicitly states that the FBI can provide investigative assistance to State, local, or Tribal agencies in the investigation of matters that may potentially involve Federal crimes or threats to national security. Does this mean that the FBI does not need to be certain that a Federal nexus exists before providing assistance to State and local partners?

A If I understand the question correctly, we can be involved in investigations with State and local partners to assess if there is Federal crimes that are committed. We don't need to know that there was a Federal crime committed to be involved.

Q Thank you for that.

Okay. So the third general category concerns the FBI's authority to conduct intelligence analysis and planning, and this will be exhibit 10.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so section 2.2.3 states: The FBI is authorized to conduct intelligence analysis and planning as provided in section 15 of the DIOG.

And to make this easier, I would also like to introduce an excerpt of section 15 of the DIOG, and this will be marked as exhibit 11 -- oh, 10 is 15.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Can you take a moment to review section 15.2.1 entitled Functions Authorized?

A Uh-huh. Okay.

Q And so, what do you understand this portion to mean?

A This outlines what intelligence analysis is authorized for FBI threats that the FBI is focused on. It broadly breaks it down there into some more particular categories of the development of overviews and analysis, research and analysis, and facilitate and support analysis through investigations. So it just outlines how intelligence analysis can be utilized.

Q Perfect. Thank you for that.

I now want to look at section 2.2.4, which is the fourth general authority. And so, this relates to information sharing, and I will introduce this as exhibit number -- oh, excuse me. Okay, exhibit 8. So can you please take a moment to review section 2.2.4, and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A I'm ready.

Q Okay. So what do you understand this section to mean?

A So it refers back to sections 12 and 14 and the -- kind of the provisions and guidelines of how we can retain and share information under the DIOG.

Q Okay. And so this would also -- section 12 discusses assistance of State, local, and Tribal agencies.

A Uh-huh.

Q And so this would be talking about information sharing with those State and local partners?

A That's right.

Q So I now want to shift our discussion to discuss some of the FBI's core values, and so I'm going to be handing you what's been marked as exhibit 11, and so, this will be an excerpt of section 3.1 of the DIOG.

And so you'll see here in section 3.1, the FBI's core values are listed in A through H. Do you mind reading aloud each of the core values that are listed under A through H.

A Uh-huh.

Rigorous obedience to the Constitution of the United States; respect for the dignity of all those we protect; compassion; fairness; uncompromising personal integrity and institutional integrity; accountability by accepting responsibility for our actions and decisions and their consequences; leadership, by example, both personal and professional, diversity.

Q And do you agree with these core values?

A Yes.

Q And so, as someone with 19 years of experience in the FBI, do you believe that these core values, as quoted in section 3.1, are "fully understood, practiced, shared, vigorously defended, and preserved," closed quotation mark?

A I do.

Q Can you read the second sentence of the next paragraph that starts with the word, our individual and institutional rigorous obedience. This is in the second paragraph, that second --

A Our individual and institutional rigorous obedience to constitutional principles and guarantees is more important than the outcome of any single interview, search for evidence, or investigation.

Q So what do you understand that to mean?

A The fact that the importance to the agency is our commitment to the American people to uphold the Constitution and not one investigation or collection of evidence usurps that overarching principle and the oath we take on day one of the Bureau.

Q And do you agree with this sentence?

A Yeah.

Q And so I want to look at the last paragraph of section 3.1, and it reads: We who enforce the law must not merely obey it. We have an obligation to set a moral example that those whom we protect can follow. Because the FBI's success in accomplishing its mission is directly related to the support and cooperation of those we protect, these core values are the fiber that holds together the vitality of our institution.

Do you agree that these core values that we just went through in A through H are the fiber that holds the FBI together?

A I do.

Q So I also briefly want to touch on compliance, and so this appears in section 3.1.1. Can you take a moment to just review that one paragraph, and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Okay. Okay.

Q So the third to last sentence of this paragraph states: Under no circumstance will expediency justify disregard for the law.

And I think this is something similar that we just discussed with the above section, but given your 19 years of experience at the FBI, is it accurate to say that under no circumstance does expediency justify disregard for the law?

A I agree with that.

Q Thank you.

And so this paragraph also states that the FBI must provide sufficient training to affected personnel and ensure that appropriate oversight monitoring mechanisms are in place.

What type of oversight monitoring mechanisms are in place at the FBI?

A So as it relates to investigation, I'll go back to my earlier testimony of the requirements of frontline supervisors to look at case files, and there's differences depending on how long an employee has been with the FBI. So there is more strict and more -- let me say this, more frequent meetings with people who are under 2 years as case agents, and then that extends to 90 days when you're past your 2-year mark to look at the file reviews.

And that is the compliance component of what is going on in the field. And then there is a secondary review conducted by the second-level manager on a 90-day basis.

Q And so I now want to talk a bit about the First Amendment, and so to that extent, I want to take a look at a letter that the FBI's acting assistant director for congressional affairs sent to Chairman Jordan on March 1st, 2023, and I would like to enter that as an exhibit, No. 12.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And you can just take a moment to review this letter, and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A I haven't read this before. So let me just take a moment if I could.

Q Take your time.

A Okay. I've scanned it.

Q Okay. Thank you.

So the third paragraph on page 1 states that, quotation mark, "the FBI cannot and does not investigate groups or individuals based solely on the exercise of First Amendment activity. Consistent with our mission, the FBI holds sacred the rights of individuals to peacefully exercise their First Amendment freedoms."

Do you agree with this statement?

A Yes.

Q And is it correct to say that the FBI takes First Amendment protections very seriously?

A Absolutely.

Q Yeah, and I counted and there are at least 80 instances in the DIOG that reference the need to protect the First Amendment, and one such example is in section 4.2 of the DIOG entitled Protection of First Amendment Rights, which I would like to introduce an excerpt of as exhibit 13.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so if you can take a moment to review on the second page -- I don't think there is highlighted language, but if you look on the second page, there is some italicized text. If you can read that portion and a little bit below.

A Okay.

Q So you'll see on the second page that the First Amendment is directly quoted, and that's in the italics, and then the following paragraph goes on to state: Although the amendment appears literally to apply only to Congress, the Supreme Court made it clear long ago that it also applies to activities of the executive branch, including law enforcement agencies, closed quote, like the FBI.

Why do you think this clarifying information was included?

A So that it's clear to FBI employees that the language extends to all law enforcement activity we conduct.

Q And so, this is just further demonstration of how seriously the FBI takes First Amendment protected activities?

A Yes.

Q Thank you.

So I now want to switch gears a bit and discuss the October 4th, 2021, memorandum, which was introduced as exhibit No. 3. So if you can pull that out for me.

And can you read the title of the memorandum out loud under the subject?

A Under the subject? Is that what you said?

Q Yeah.

A It says: Partnership among Federal, State, local, Tribal, and territorial law enforcement to address threats against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff.

Q Thank you.

Does the title say anything about parents?

A It does not.

Q Does the title say anything about school board meetings?

A It does not.

Q Does the title say anything about preventing forms of speech?

A It does not.

Q Does the title say anything about preventing parents from going to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the title say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Thank you.

So I want to move on to the first paragraph. So can you please take a moment to review the first paragraph, and let me know when you're finished.

A I've read it before.

Q Okay. Thank you.

And so the first sentence of this paragraph underscores the issue of harassment, intimidation, and threats of violence against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff, correct?

A Yes.

Q And the last sentence of this paragraph highlights that the Constitution protects spirited policy debates, correct?

A It specifically says: While spirited debate about policy matter is protected under our Constitution.

Q Thank you.

And do you understand this to be in reference to First Amendment protections?

A I do.

Q And is it reasonable to assert that FBI employees reading this statement will interpret that to be a reference to First Amendment protections?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And so the last sentence of this paragraph notes that the Constitution -- constitutional protections do not extend to threats of violence or efforts to intimidate individuals based on their views, correct?

A Yes.

Q What do you understand this to mean?

A Well, similar to what I talked about earlier. Like, when we have investigations or assessments that cross into violence and threats of violence, we're past the point of protected First Amendment activity, and law enforcement will be involved at that point.

Q Does the first paragraph of this memorandum make any reference to parents?

A No.

Q Does it make any reference to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the first paragraph of this memorandum say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does this paragraph say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q So I want to move on to the second paragraph. And so this paragraph states that threats against public servants are illegal, and emphasizes that school board administrators, board members, teachers, and staff should be able to do their work without fear for their safety.

Does the second paragraph say anything about parents?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about censoring First Amendment-protected speech?

A No.

Q Are threats against public servants something that should be taken seriously?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A Everybody should be free to do their job in a safe environment, regardless of elected officials, teachers, law enforcement. Whatever your job is, you should be able to do your job free of threats of violence.

Q And so I want to now turn to the third paragraph. And so the first sentence of the third paragraph states that the Department takes these incidents seriously and is committed to using its authority and resources to discourage these threats, identity them when they occur, and prosecute them when appropriate.

Do you understand the phrase "when appropriate" to mean under proper circumstances?

A Yes.

Q So the sentence is not saying that the Justice Department will prosecute every case relating to this matter, only those that are appropriate for prosecution, correct?

A Yeah, that's consistent with my experience and my FBI time. All those engagements of evidence being provided and prosecutors making prosecutorial decisions, not every case gets charged. It's when it's deemed appropriate.

Q And so the last sentence of this paragraph says that the Department will announce a series of measures designed to address the threat and criminal conduct directed toward school personnel.

Do you know whether the DOJ announced any of these measures?

A I do not.

Q As a former deputy assistant director of the counterterrorism division, would you have been made aware if they did make any of these measures?

A Potentially, yeah.

Q Okay.

So I now want to move on to the fourth paragraph. And so here AG Garland is directing the FBI, working together with each U.S. Attorney's Office, to meet with Federal,

State, local, Tribal, and territorial leaders in each Federal jurisdiction. And the stated purpose of these meetings is to, quote, "facilitate the discussion of strategies for addressing threats against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff, and to open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response."

Does the word "prosecute" appear anywhere in this paragraph?

A No.

Q What do you understand the phrase open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response to mean as it relates to State, local, Tribal, and territorial leaders?

A To me, that simply means that we are coming together as a law enforcement community to talk about threats.

Q And it's common for the FBI to work together with State and local partners?

A Every day.

Q And so during your career, have you engaged in discussions with State and local partners to address threats?

A Sure. I mean, as a case agent, in my time in Baltimore and Philadelphia, I sat on what we would consider task forces, which are colocated State and local deputized officers. And so, yeah, throughout my career, I've had those conversations and sat with those folks.

Q And is it unusual for the FBI to discuss strategies with State and local partners concerning matters that may not result in Federal prosecution?

A Unusual is a hard word to answer to. We have plenty of conversations at the State, local, Federal level of work we're going to do. Some of them end up in prosecution; some of them do not. You know, it's just the course of business.

Q And so why is it important for the FBI to work together with State and local partners?

A There's too much work, number one, for the FBI to do alone. There are authorities that our State and local partners bring us under our provisions of sharing information that we can rely on to carry out effective law enforcement activity.

Q And so the memorandum finishes off with the following sentence: The Department is steadfast in its commitment to protect all people in the United States from violence, threats of violence, and other forms of intimidation and harassment.

Does this sentence use the word "parents"?

A No.

Q Does this sentence mention anything about censoring the speech of parents?

A No.

Q Does this sentence say anything about school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does this sentence say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does this sentence say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q So based on our review of this memorandum, is it correct to say that nowhere in the text is the word "parent" mentioned?

A I believe that is correct.

Q And is it correct to say that nowhere in the text are school board meetings mentioned?

A Yes.

Q Is it correct to say that nowhere in the text does it discuss censoring the constitutionally protected speech of individuals?

A That's correct.

Q Is it correct to say that nowhere in the text does it mention preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A That's correct.

Q Is it correct to say that nowhere in the text does it mention preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A That's correct.

Q And so, the memorandum notes that the Justice Department protects all people in the United States from violence, threats of violence, and other forms of intimidation and harassment. And you mentioned briefly, but why do you feel it's important to protect people from these type of situations?

A Everyone deserves the privilege to do their job free of violence and threats of violence. I mean, it's pretty simple.

Q And so, is it accurate to state that this memorandum deals with threats targeting school board members, teachers, and workers?

A Can you please ask that again?

Q Yeah.

So at this point, we've reviewed every paragraph of the memorandum, and so, is it accurate to say that the purpose of this memorandum was to deal with threats targeting school board members, teachers, and workers?

A Yes.

Q Thank you.

And another quick question. I know earlier counsel from the majority had mentioned that the Patriot Act was referenced in this October 4th memorandum. Is the Patriot Act referenced anywhere in this memorandum?

A No.

Q Thank you.

Okay. So I now would like to look at the DOJ press release, which was previously introduced as exhibit 4. And so, we'll go through a similar review of this letter, and so can you just read the title out loud, please?

A Justice department addresses violent threats against school officials and teachers.

Q Does the title say anything about parents?

A No.

Q Does the title say anything about school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the title say anything about preventing parents from going to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the title say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the title say anything about censoring speech?

A No.

Q So I now want to turn to the first paragraph, and if you want to take a moment to review it, please let me know when you're ready.

A Okay.

Q So does the first paragraph make any reference to parents?

A No.

Q Does the first paragraph say anything about school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the first paragraph say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the first paragraph say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the first paragraph say anything about censoring speech?

A No.

Q Let's move on to the second paragraph. You can take a moment to review, and let me know when you're ready.

A Okay.

Q Does the second paragraph make any reference to parents?

A No.

Q Does the second paragraph say anything about school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the second paragraph say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the second paragraph say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the second paragraph say anything about censoring the constitutionally protected speech?

A No.

Q I realize I talk very quickly, so I will slow down a bit.

So I do want to take a look at the third paragraph now, and so let me know when you are ready to proceed.

A Okay.

Q Does the third paragraph make any reference to parents?

A No.

Q Does the third paragraph make any reference to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the third paragraph say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the third paragraph say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the third paragraph say anything about censoring constitutionally protected speech?

A No.

Q Okay. So the second sentence of the third paragraph states that the Justice Department's efforts to address the rise in criminal conduct directed toward school personnel is, quotation mark, "expected to include the creation of a task force," closed quote; open quote, "to determine how Federal enforcement tools can be used prosecute these crimes, and ways to assist State, Tribal, territorial and local law enforcement where threats of violence may not constitute Federal crimes.

And I believe you said earlier that you weren't aware of what this task force was created, correct?

A I am not.

Q And you also mentioned earlier that the FBI often works with U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the prosecution of crimes?

A We do.

Q And so is it unusual for the FBI to be involved in discussions involving how Federal enforcement tools can be used?

A No.

Q Okay.

And we previously discussed that the FBI often works in partnership with State and local partners, and so, is it unusual for the FBI to assist State and local partners where threats of violence may not constitute Federal crimes? We talked about this before.

A It is not unusual.

Q Okay. Can you please take a moment to review the fourth paragraph, and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Okay.

Q Does the fourth paragraph make any reference to parents?

A No.

Q Does it make any reference to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from going to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about censoring constitutionally protected speech?

A No.

Q And so the second sentence of this paragraph states that specialized training and guidance, quotation mark, will help school board members and other potential victims understand the type of behavior that constitutes threats, how to report threatening conduct to the appropriate law enforcement agencies, and how to capture and preserve evidence of threatening conduct to aid in the investigation and prosecution of these crimes.

Do you think it's important for individuals to understand the type of behavior that constitutes threats?

A Yes.

Q Why is that so?

A So I'll take it in the hate-crime context. We have a lot of experience where hate crimes are underreported, because people don't understand, when they are the victims, what constitutes a hate crime, and the mechanism to report those. And so it is important when -- for victims to understand what constitutes the criminal activity and how to report it.

Q And so providing individuals with this type of information to help them understand the types of behavior that constitutes threats, how to report that type of threatening conduct to the appropriate law enforcement officials, and how to capture and preserve evidence, do you think that that aids in the investigation and prosecution of these crimes?

A Sure, because if we don't know about it, we can't work it.

Q And so can you please take a moment to read the fifth paragraph, which is the last one. Let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Okay.

Q So does the fifth paragraph make any reference to parents?

A No.

Q Does it make any reference to school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about censoring constitutionally protected speech?

A No.

Q And so, this paragraph provides the public with information about reporting tips, quotation mark -- or tips through, quotation marks, "the FBI's National Threat Operations Center, parentheses (NTOC) closed parentheses, via its national tip line, parentheses 1-800-CALL-FBI, closed parentheses, and online through the FBI's website, which lists the FBI website as www.fbi.gov/tips."

In your experience, has the FBI tried to make it widely known that these two resources are available to the public?

A Yes.

Q And why is that?

A Well, similar to my earlier statement. If we don't know about allegations of criminal activity, we have no way to assess if there is a role for the FBI, and in many cases, where there's no role for the FBI, those tips are not reported to State and locals. So it's another avenue for society to provide tips of criminal activity. And even if we can't deal with it at the Federal level, we certainly have the relationships with State and locals to make sure they receive the same information.

Q Thank you.

And so, the last sentence of this paragraph states that reporting threats of violence through NTOC will help the Federal Government identify increased threats in specific jurisdictions, as well as coordinated widespread efforts to intimidate educators and education workers.

And just as a general matter, and you spoke a little bit about this, do you agree that through -- that NTOC helps the Federal Government identify increased threats in specific jurisdictions?

A What we would call NTOC is the place to report information so the FBI has access to see if there is actual criminal activity going on. So we do report it widely for that reason, and they have relationships with the field offices, once they make decisions to intake tips, and then send them on to the field.

Q And so at this point, we've exhaustively reviewed the press release, and so, we've gone through each paragraph. Is it accurate to State that this press release deals with targeting -- deals with threats targeting school board members, teachers, and workers?

A Yes.

Q And based on our exhaustive review of this press release, is it accurate to

State that this press release does not say anything about parents, school board meetings, or censoring constitutionally protected speech?

A Yes.

Q And so I now want to switch gears and talk a bit about NTOC, which is the National Threat Operations Center, correct?

A Yes.

Q And so we can call it NTOC for short today.

And so is it your understanding that NTOC works 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year?

A They do.

Q So I'd like to introduce an excerpt of a 2020 report released by the DOJ office of privacy and civil liberties, and this report is titled "Federal Bureau of Investigation Privacy Impact Assessment for the Threat Intake Processing System." And this will be marked as exhibit 14.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

So on page 2, the first sentence of section 1(a) defines the purpose of NTOC, stating that it, quotation marks, "serves as a central intake point in the FBI for the general public and other government agencies to provide information about potential or ongoing crimes, threats to life, parentheses (TLL), closed parentheses, and national security threats," closed quote.

Is this an accurate description of NTOC's purpose?

A Yes.

Q And you went over this briefly, but how do you feel NTOC serves as a central intake point for the FBI?

A Can you reframe that question a little bit?

Q Yeah.

So in this sentence that I just read, it states that NTOC serves as a central intake point in the FBI for the general public and other government agencies to provide information about potential or ongoing crimes.

A Uh-huh.

Q And so I'm just asking: In your opinion, do you think that NTOC serves as a central intake point for the FBI of threats of crimes or crimes that are being reported?

A I do. Yeah, they do serve as the central point of intake, and that's enabled the FBI to standardize process, as opposed to doing it in 56 separate field offices, which is how many field offices we have; and so it is a much more consistent SOP and application of that.

Q And just for the record, SOP is standard operating procedure?

A Correct.

Q Thank you.

A Sorry.

Q No, that's fine.

Do you know how long NTOC has been in existence?

A I don't.

Q And so on page 2, the third sentence in the Executive Summary states that, quotation mark, "NTOC receives information verbally over the phone and also receives electronic information, parentheses (E-Tips), closed parentheses, that is submitted by the public to the FBI through a web form, interactions with the FBI's official social media website, or via email," closed quote.

Is this an accurate description of how individuals can report tips through NTOC?

A Yes.

Q And we've established previously that 1-800-CALL-FBI is the NTOC phone number that individuals can call to provide information verbally?

A Yes.

Q And the website is tips.fbi.gov, correct?

A That sounds right.

Q Do you have a sense of how many tips NTOC receives per day?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. So I just, to refresh your recollection, want to introduce a tweet by FBI Chicago, and this will be exhibit No. 15. And so in this tweet, it says: The National Threat Operations Center receives 3,100 tips from the public every day.

Does this sound like, roughly, an accurate number?

A I have no way of knowing, but if it's on an official FBI Twitter account, my assumption would be yes.

Q Okay.

And is it correct that individuals who work to collect information at NTOC are referred to as threat intake examiners?

A They are.

Q And so if you can just turn back to the private impact assessment.

A Okay.

Q And so on page 2, the first sentence of the second paragraph, it says that NTOC is a key component in the FBI's initiative to provide timely and direct notification of every TLL received by NTOC to the appropriate FBI field office operation center.

And I will submit for the record that TLL is defined in footnote one as threat to life tips containing information about a threat to human life, serious bodily injury, or significant violent actions.

So do you agree that NTOC is a key component in the FBI's initiative to provide timely and direct notification of every threat to life received by NTOC?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you've talked a bit about this, but in your view, how does it function as a key component?

A So for threat-to-life investigations, time is of the essence, and when we have a threat to someone's health and welfare, the FBI is under an obligation to take immediate action on that, whether that is us directly or through our partners, to make sure we're dealing with those potential victims and the subjects of those investigations with haste.

[redacted] So is it fair to say that NTOC and the existence of NTOC, the threat -- the 1-800-FBI and, as you said, fbi.gov, help FBI to ensure that threats to life are addressed as quickly as possible?

Mr. Vorndran. Yeah, they're the key intake point, and they appropriately tag something as a threat to life, which, as a frontline supervisor, they see that tag. The call it a tag of a threat to life, which indicates immediate action is necessary.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And so on page 2, the third sentence of the third paragraph states that threat intake examiners, quotation mark, "receive, analyze, and disseminate information pertaining to potential and actual emergencies and national security situations through the use of probing questions to determine the existence of a threat or crime," closed quote.

Does this sound like an accurate description of what threat intake examiners do?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And so the paragraph continues on stating that threat intake examiners are, quotation mark, "supervised by supervisory special agents, office services supervisors, and lead TIES, which is short for threat intake examiners, who are trained to triage threats to national security and emergency situations, such as cyber threats, bomb threats, active shooter incidents, and hostage situations; take appropriate actions, and follow guidelines and policies to ensure timely communication of actionable leads."

And so according to this sentence, threat intake examiners receive specialized training and also have various levels of oversight to ensure threats are properly analyzed and appropriate action is taken.

Do you have any reason to believe that this is an incorrect description of the threat intake examiner process?

A I do not.

Q Okay.

And so the second to last sentence of the second paragraph on page 2 states the following: Quotation mark, "Prior to dissemination, TIEs, which is threat intake examiners, build subject profiles and then refer the information to the appropriate FBI entity or other appropriate Federal, State, local, and/or Tribal partners," closed quote.

And so, based on this sentence, NTOC also refers tips, as appropriate, to State, local, and Tribal partners. Is that consistent with your understanding?

A It is.

Q Okay.

Mr. Vorndran. Can we take a quick bathroom break?

[redacted] Sure. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 12:08, and we are back on the record.

[redacted] And we have about 12 minutes left.

[redacted] We have about 12 minutes left.

BY [redacted]

Q So I'd like to introduce a transcript of a video from the FBI's website that details some information about NTOC, and the title of this video is called Inside the FBI's National Threat Operations Center, and this will be marked as exhibit No. 16.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And I apologize for the very small print. We'll manage.

A I should have brought my reading glasses.

Q So I was actually going to have you read the fifth paragraph, but given the size of the print, I will do the honors.

So the fifth paragraph is a quote from Greg Nelsen, who was then section chief of NTOC. He states, quotation mark, "NTOC is extremely important in protecting the American people. They cover all of our threats. They touch on counterterrorism, criminal counterintelligence, domestic terrorism-type threats. They touch all of our program priorities and they're responsible for making the decisions from the start and getting that information where it needs to go quickly so the field offices can action that information," closed quote.

Do you agree with Mr. Nelsen that NTOC is extremely important in protecting the American people?

A I do.

Q And how so?

A Back to my earlier comments, when information comes into NTOC, it's the first effort to understand the nature of the threat, who the potential victim of the threat is, who the potential subject is. And if that is done correctly, the field office where that information gets passed on to conduct an investigation is leveraged in a positive way to have a complete investigation.

If that process breaks down, the quality of the information going is less, and so it's absolutely integral to the quality of our investigations and our work with our partners.

Q So do you believe that tips received through NTOC help prevent crimes from occurring?

A It's hard for me to say if they help prevent crimes from occurring. They certainly help us understand if there is potential criminal activity.

Q Do tips received through NTOC help to resolve crimes?

A Yes.

Q And do tips received through NTOC help to save lives?

A Yes.

Q How so?

A If you go back to the threat-to-life matters, I mean, if that is appropriately handled upon receipt of information, and we have reason to believe there is a threat to someone's life and we can mitigate or disrupt that threat, it saves lives.

Q And do tips received through NTOC help prevent national security threats from being actualized?

A Yes.

Q So during your 19-year career with the FBI, have you relied on NTOC for information about potential crimes?

A Nineteen years ago we didn't have NTOC. We had complaint duty in field offices, which all of us did, and so that was our mechanism to speak with the public. We have, of course, evolved quite a bit, and NTOC provides an enormous and valuable service to the FBI to intake threat reporting and potential criminal activity.

Q And so, in the second sentence of the 10th paragraph, and I'll read this sentence aloud, given the size of the font. This is Greg Nelsen who, as I mentioned, was the former section chief of NTOC. In here he states, quotation mark, "If the general public knew how we handled incoming tips, they'd be very proud of our employees. They'd be proud of the process, and they would have a lot of confidence in what we do here," closed quote.

Do you agree with this statement?

A I do.

Q So you have confidence in the work of NTOC employees?

A I do.

Q And are you proud of NTOC's process?

A I have never worked in NTOC. So I can't speak particularly to their standard operating procedures, but the consistency of which they do their job I'm aware of, and they do good work.

Q So I want to continue discussing a bit more about NTOC, and so this March, Chairman Jordan's staff put out a report, which said, in part, that the attorney general, quotation mark, "highlighted the FBI's National Threat Operations Center to serve as a snitch line for tips about parents at school board meetings," closed quote. So I just want to unpack this sentence a bit.

So we went over the AG's memorandum, the October 4th memorandum, quite extensively, and as we went over very extensively, that memorandum does not say anything about parents, correct?

A Correct.

Q And it didn't mention anything about school board meetings, correct?

A Correct.

Q Did the memorandum say anything about, quotation mark, "snitching," quotation mark, on parents at school board meetings?

A No.

Q And so we also went over the DOJ's press release very exhaustively, and so, as we discussed, the press release doesn't mention anything about parents, correct?

A No.

Q Okay. It also doesn't say anything about school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

And the press release did mention the FBI's National Threat Operations Center in the last paragraph, but in referencing NTOC, did the press release encourage people to, quote, "snitch," closed quote, on parents at school board meetings?

A It did not.

Q Okay.

Do you know when 1-800-CALL-FBI was established?

A I don't know.

Q Just to refresh your recollection, I would like to introduce an FBI press release from September 2005, and this will be marked as exhibit No. 17.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so in this press release, it announced that the FBI had launched 1-800-CALL-FBI, "to collect information and complaints of public corruption and government fraud in connection with the Hurricane Katrina aftermath," closed quote.

And so this would imply that 1-800 FBI was established in September of 2005, correct?

A Based on what I'm seeing here, yes.

Q Okay. So that would mean this phone number has been a resource for the FBI for more than 17 years, correct?

A Yeah, if the date of this is accurate when it started, that's right.

Q Okay.

Do you know when tips.fbi.gov was established?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. To help refresh your recollection, I'd like to introduce as exhibit 18 a news story from the FBI that's dated June 26, 2009.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And in the last paragraph on the first page, the bolded sentence explains that tips.fbi.gov was established immediately after 9/11, and at that time, it had received more than 2 million online tips.

Do you have any reason to doubt the date of the website being created in 2009?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

[12:15 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q So the website has been a resource for the FBI for more than 21 years, correct?

A You said 2009?

Q Yeah.

A So 14 years.

Q Oh, excuse me. It was created after 9/11. My apologies.

So the news story was dated 2009.

A Okay.

Q The actual website was created after 9/11.

A Okay.

Q So that would be 21 years?

A That's right.

Q Okay. Thank you.

So the Attorney General sent his memorandum on October 4th. The press release was issued that same day. And as we've just discussed, both the 1-800-CALLFBI and tips.fbi.gov were in existence long before that date, correct?

A Correct.

Q So neither 1-800-CALLFBI or tips.gov were established in response to the Attorney General's memorandum or the DOJ press release?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So according to the FBI privacy impact assessment that we went over -- it's exhibit 14. And so this report states that all information provided to NTOC is voluntary.

Is that consistent with your understanding?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so because all of the information provided in a tip to NTOC is voluntary, unless the person reporting the tip specifically stated that he or she was doing so because of the AG's memorandum, it would be fairly difficult to know if that was the case, right?

A That's right.

Q Okay. So you have exhibit 14 in front of you. If you don't mind turning to page 14.

So the second sentence of section 3.2 states the following: Information from the public is essential for the FBI to successfully deter and investigate crime. NTOC supports the FBI's mission by providing consistent and accessible means for the public to provide information that, in turn, permits FBI agents and analysts to follow up on legitimate leads.

Do you agree that information from the public is essential for the FBI to successfully deter and investigate crime?

A Yeah. Let me give you a quick example, the Boston bombing. Without the public submitting photographs and tips, the identification of Tsarnaev would have been much more difficult, not to say it wouldn't happen, but that's an immediate example that comes to mind of the importance of the relationship with the public.

Q And I just have one more question, and then we'll wrap it up.

In your opinion, is it harmful to refer to NTOC as a snitch line?

A I don't want to comment on what other people have said. National Threat Operations Center serves as a keynote to the FBI intake threat reporting, and they do a good job at it.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you so much.

That would conclude our hour.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It's 12:28. Back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to go back to exhibit 1, the NSBA letter, page 2.

And I would just note, we've talked to some folks on the NSBA side of things, and, you know, they represented that they came up with the vignettes or the incidents of threats to school board folks, they came up with them for their letter by googling them. Okay. So the NSBA in putting this letter together, working with the White House, just googled a bunch of stuff. And it also occurred -- and I want to ask you if you were aware that this went down against the backdrop of the Virginia gubernatorial election?

A I was not aware.

Q Okay. So the Virginia gubernatorial election in 2021 -- they have off-year elections -- Terry McAuliffe was running against -- was running for that office.

Were you aware of that?

A I'm aware that he was a candidate, yes.

Q Right. And against now Governor Youngkin.

And do you recall that, during that timeframe, some of these school board related issues were at the heart of that political campaign?

A I do not.

Q Okay. For example, critical race theory --

A Okay.

Q -- do you remember that being a hot button topic --

A I do not.

Q -- in that timeframe?

Mask mandates for individuals at schools?

A That I do.

Q And remote learning?

A Yes.

Q And so a lot of the heated discussions that were occurring nationwide at school board meetings, is it fair to say, related to those types of topics?

A Certainly I'm aware from the media report on the mask mandates and virtual learning given COVID, yes, they were key topics.

Q And former Governor McAuliffe, during one of the debates, had a major blunder where he said something along the lines of, you know, parents don't have the right to interact for, you know, their kids' education.

Were you aware of that news story?

A I'm not aware of that quote.

Q So let me turn to the exhibit 1, the September 29th letter from NSBA to the White House.

On page 2, the last paragraph, I'm going to just read the second sentence: As such, NSBA requests joint expedited review by the U.S. Departments of Justice, Education, and Homeland Security, along with the appropriate training, coordination, investigations, and enforcement mechanisms from the FBI, including any technical assistance necessary from, State and local coordination with, its National Security Branch and Counterterrorism Division, as well as any other Federal agency with relevant jurisdictional authority and oversight. Additionally, NSBA request that such review examine appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the Gun-Free School Zones Act, the PATRIOT Act in regard to domestic terrorism --

And then it goes on.

Was this the first time you'd heard the PATRIOT Act being mentioned in the context of a school board's -- you know, the violence at school boards?

A Well, as I testified earlier, I hadn't read this letter until right now.

Q And since this letter, until now, have there been any, you know, incidents where you think the PATRIOT Act was applicable as an investigative tool for school boards?

A I'm not aware of the PATRIOT Act or any of its, you know, stipulations being nuanced.

Q And when the Attorney General's October 4th memo was promulgated, what types of conversations were going on inside the FBI about this, that you remember?

A I'm not aware of any conversations related to this paragraph you just read.

Q Uh-huh.

A I do, as I reflected earlier in my testimony, some of the conversations I heard with the DTOS section chief regarding potential Federal statutes that would apply if there were ever charges to be brought that met those elements of that crime, that was really the nature of the conversation within the Counterterrorism Division.

Q And I think I asked you during our first round, but we're trying to understand what type of information the FBI had that may have supported the Attorney General's October 4th memo.

Are you aware of any information the FBI had, you know, indicating that this was a -- there was an uptick in incidents at school board meetings that needed to be addressed with an Attorney General's memo?

A The only thing I testified about was my knowledge from the media reporting of that information, but nothing that I'm aware of inside the FBI.

Q And at the time you were a counterterrorism official, correct?

A Yes.

Q And is that also fair to say about Mr. Peeples? He --

A It is not.

Q Okay. He was the -- I'm sorry. He was in the Criminal Investigative Division?

A That's right.

Q But Mr. Langan was the assistant director at the time of the Counterterrorism Division?

A Assistant Director Langan was my boss.

Q And Assistant Director Shivers was Mr. Peeples' boss. Is that your understanding?

A Assistant Director Shivers was the long-term assistant director of the Criminal Investigative Division. He was out at that period.

Q Okay.

A So Acting Assistant Director Peeples was, to my knowledge, the one who sent that email.

Q It's exhibit 5.

A Uh-huh.

Q Prior to sending this email, was there any type of of off -- I mean, was there any type of communication that occurred before this email went out between Mr. Langan, Shivers, Peeples, that you're aware of?

A I don't know.

Q So you're cc'd on it.

A Uh-huh.

Q You're not an author of it, I recognize that. But did you have any awareness this was coming down the pike before it was sent?

A I would have known there was joint messaging coming out to the SACs in the field, but I was not, you know, the author, as you appropriately pointed out.

Q Okay. And just getting back to the McAuliffe statement, just because I didn't have it memorized, but I've called it up. He said, "I don't think parents should be telling schools what they should teach." And then that sort of turned into a little bit of a flash point in that debate or in the runup to the election.

Do you happen to remember that?

A I do not.

Q Okay. So turning to the Attorney General's memo, I think it's exhibit 3. How frequently does the Attorney General promulgate memos of this type indicating, you know, a new priority shift like this?

A I can't answer your question on frequency. I can answer the question in terms of my time in the Counterterrorism Division where I would have known something came in.

Q Uh-huh.

A This was the one instance I'm aware of during my time as deputy assistant director, but I would not be aware of other memos that came into the Counterintelligence Division or Cyber Division, just because this one affected the Counterterrorism Division.

Q Okay. So somewhat of a rare occurrence. Is that right?

A Can't say rare. I'm just telling you, in my time there, this was the only one.

Q Well, how long were you there, again?

A I was there from May of 2021 until January of 2023.

Q Okay. So just short of 2 years or a year and a half. Is that --

A A year and 7 months.

Q Okay. So in a year and 7 months, is this the only Attorney General's memo that you remember?

A In the Counterterrorism Division, yes.

Q Okay. So it's fair to say these don't come out weekly, they don't come out monthly?

A They do not.

Q Okay. Are you aware of any data inputs the Attorney General had before publishing this memo?

A I am not.

Q Okay. He testified in October of 2021, October 20th of 2021, before our committee, and we asked him about that. And for the most part, he could not identify any inputs that he reviewed and he thought about before promulgating the October 4th memo, other than this September 29th letter from NSBA.

Does that strike you as unusual?

A I can't comment on the Attorney General's mindset or how that decision was made.

Q Okay.

A Like I testified to earlier, sir, this memo came in, and I've been very clear about the role that both the Counterterrorism Division and the Criminal Investigative Division took, and that is the work we did. In a threat picture, that was busy at the time in the fall of 2021.

Q Fair enough. But in the course of your time in the Counterterrorism Division almost a year and a half, you can remember one memo. And we had a chance to ask the Attorney General about it, and he told us largely it was, you know, his data point was this letter from NSBA, which is largely at the time a political, you know, organization. And the letter came 4 days before his memo, 4 or 5 -- 5 days before his memo.

Doesn't that seem to you to be a quick turnaround?

A Again, that's a question for DOJ, right? This memo is what I saw at the time, and that's the work we did.

Q Okay. Looking at the memo, exhibit 3, the first paragraph: In recent months, there's been a disturbing spike in harassment, intimidation, and threats of violence against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff who participate in the vital work of running our Nation's public schools.

I'm just going to ask you again, was there discussion among your colleagues in the Counterterrorism Division about a spike in incidents against school administrators and so forth?

A None that I was involved in.

Q Okay. Do you know if the folks in the Counterterrorism Division had communications with the folks in the Criminal Division about these disturbance spikes?

A I'm not aware of any.

Q In the fourth paragraph that begins with "Coordination and partnership," I'm going to read the second sentence: To this end, I'm directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation -- and again, I'll say that again. "To this end, I am directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation, working with each United States Attorney, to convene meetings with Federal, State, local, Tribal, and territorial leaders in each Federal judicial district within 30 days of the issuance of this memorandum."

So the Attorney General -- and correct me if I have this wrong or I don't understand DOJ speak -- but the Attorney General is directing the FBI to take the lead on this initiative. Is that a fair reading?

A That is clearly how it reads. There's -- I'm aware of separate guidance, I believe, from EOUSA that further clarifies that statement --

Q Okay.

A -- to direct the U.S. Attorney's office in coordination with the FBI --

Q Okay.

A -- to conduct these meetings. But as you said, as written on October 4th, you read it correctly.

Q And were you aware of any inside chatter at the FBI where this memo may have been downplayed by the director?

A I'm not.

Q Or, you know, any FBI officials that said, Ah, look, this is just a DOJ thing. We'll just continue doing our job?

A I'm not, but I think I would be surprised to find that being the case, given the relationship we have with DOJ as an agency --

Q Okay.

A -- and the work we do together.

Q Okay. I'm going to turn to exhibit 4, which is the press release.

The third paragraph talking about the series of additional efforts, second sentence: Those efforts are expected to include the creation of a task force, consisting of representatives from the Department's Criminal, National Security Division, Civil Rights Division, and the Executive Office for the U.S. Attorneys, the FBI -- and so forth.

Were you aware of any task forces that were created pursuant to this?

A I am not.

Q And are you -- I guess, then, you're not aware of any involvement of the folks from the National Security Division in this initiative?

A I am not.

Q Okay. To your knowledge, what initiatives were taken pursuant to the Attorney General's memorandum?

A The only initiative I'm directly aware of was the threat tag that CID and CTD pushed out to SACs to appropriately tag any investigative matters that came in to scope the threat to see what existed. I'm not aware of anything else that went on in the field office regarding particular meetings or engagements.

Q Okay. And once the threat tag was assigned and you're able to track these types of threats, how many threats came in, to your knowledge?

A I think it was shared with me in a question before, approximately 25.

Q Okay. And did that ratify, do you think, the fact that this was a nationwide -- a surge of nationwide incidents that needed to be corralled by the FBI?

A I don't think we looked at it that way. I think the facts are what they are and the numbers are what they represent based on the intake we have through NTOC. And if the number, as represented, was 25, that was 25 pieces of information that came in that we had to make assessments on and determine if it warranted onward investigative activity.

Q Okay. You know, you said that there was maybe one Attorney General's memo evincing new priority during your time in the Counterterrorism Division, and that led to, as far as you know, a threat tag was the only thing that you're aware of that flowed out of this memo. And what flowed out of that threat tag was, did you say 25?

A That's what someone said to me.

Q Okay. Does that, do you think, ratify the fact that this is something that needed to be addressed?

A I think like I testified earlier, sir, the work in CTD at the time was a host of threat information across ITDT nation-state sponsored. This was another component of the work we were asked to do.

Q Okay.

A And that's what we did.

Q If it turns out that the NSBA memo and maybe considerations that no one's going to testify to on the record about the Virginia Governor's election, if they were the only considerations going into the memo, would that give you a concern, just as a career FBI person?

A Again, I didn't have that information. What I had in front of me was the memo to do the work from.

Q Okay. But if it turns out that this was simply a political operation --

A The CTD has never focused on political operations. CTD is focused on violence and threats of violence, and that's how we predicate our domestic terrorism cases, along with a host of other violations.

Q Right. Yeah, I'm not -- you know, in my questioning here, I'm not suggesting CTD was responding to anything political. What I'm suggesting is that the leadership of the Justice Department, perhaps the White House, was pursuing a political operation using the FBI, using the officials in CTD, to pursue things simply for political purposes. If that were the case, you certainly would agree that would be inappropriate, correct?

A But I have no information to suggest that is or is not the case. What I have is the information in front of me that came into the Counterterrorism Division. You're asking me for my opinion on things I wasn't a part of. I'm here, I get the Attorney General's memo, and that's the work we do.

Q Okay. And so other than the creation of the threat tag and -- I think that was the only thing that you said you were aware that flowed from this initiative?

A And I also described having conversations regarding potential statutory considerations under Title 18, U.S.C., Section 875, but those are the main discussions I recall.

[redacted] Okay. [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Going back directly to that conversation you referenced with Mr. Jensen, can you elaborate a little bit more? You said you discussed statutory repercussions as to what would be related or what could stem out of the Attorney General's memo that could be used in implementing the threat tag. Or can you clarify a little bit more what your conversation was with Mr. Jensen?

A Yeah. I think those are completely separate issues, the threat tag and statutory matters, right.

Q Okay.

A The conversation I would have had with then Section Chief Jensen would have been, in the event we have a threat of violence or violence carried out at one of these meetings, what is the most likely Federal statute to be applied should the Department decide to press charges. And the answer to that question is likely Title 18, U.S.C., 875, the interstate communication of threats or threats of violence.

That would have been the conversation with Section Chief Jensen, because he and I had been through CTD around the same time, but we had that conversation in a similar vein on other cases. And so it was a very familiar conversation for us to have.

Q Other than the interstate communication that you had just mentioned, was there any other defined Federal nexus that you could find for the FBI to be helping investigate incidents at school boards?

A That's the only one I recall speaking about.

Q To your knowledge, was there a request for local, county, or State officials for assistance for these school board incidents?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q And short of that, would any other law enforcement agency be better suited to handle these incidents with school board meetings?

A I think that's -- we had this conversation earlier today about the importance of whoever receives the information and the potential allegation of criminal activity, we would sit among law enforcement partners and make that appropriate assessment if it is better worked by State and local authorities.

Q Okay. Now switching gears a little bit, finishing up my line of questioning from earlier. As the deputy assistant director for the Counterterrorism Division, did you perceive that you had a handle on what was going on in the Counterterrorism Division in the cases that the division was handling?

A So, yeah, I was aware of the threat picture across the different threat accounts CTD was responsible, what we call program manage. I want to be careful. CTD is not running investigations. Investigations are run in the field offices. But on topics of particular importance, CTD was aware of cases being worked in the field, and that's how I would become aware of what that looks like.

Q And during your time in that role, did any agents ever come to you and express that they were overwhelmed by their caseload? I know that you said that primarily happened at the field office level --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- but did anybody ever approach you or make you aware of that?

A They did not.

Q Has any agent ever expressed to you, while you're in that role, that they were under pressure?

A They did not.

Q And as the special agent in charge of the Mission Services Division at the Washington Field Office, do you perceive that you have a handle on what the branch is doing and the cases that the branch is handling?

A My particular division doesn't have any involvement in casework.

[redacted] Okay. I'm going to kick it over to my colleague, [redacted] --

[redacted] Let me --

[redacted] Go ahead.

BY [redacted]

Q There was some discussion earlier about do you see the word "parents" in this sentence, and so forth. And I just wanted to ask you, as far as you know, who's going to school board meetings?

A Parents, administrators, teachers.

Q And these alleged acts of violence, who is allegedly involved?

A I think that's the point of the assessment, is to figure out who is involved.

Q But certainly not the school administrators, right?

A I would agree with that.

Q Not the teachers, right?

A Right.

Q I think we had a witness answer one of these questions as vendors. Vendors go to school board meetings, okay. Contractors. I don't think vendors are committing acts of violence or alleged to have committed acts of violence at school board meetings, correct?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Is there anyone else in the universe, other than parents, that are alleged to be involved with these acts of violence?

A I'm not aware of the actual assessments that were opened.

Q Uh-huh.

A But of the 25, certainly it would seem the parents were the nature of the information that came into the FBI.

Q So the parents were the ones tagged with a threat tag?

A The parents weren't tagged.

Q Okay. The threats relating to the EDUOFFICIALS?

A Threats are tagged.

Q Yeah, threats are tagged. And that related to parents?

A Well, it's the same thing as saying a tag -- like, I could say when we work the inauguration for the FBI with all of our partners, there's a threat tag for the inauguration.

Q Right.

A The inauguration isn't tagged. The assessment's being worked --

Q Right.

A -- regarding threats to the inauguration are tagged. We're not tagging parents.

Q Okay. But are you aware of any of the 25 threats that didn't involve parents?

A I'm not aware of the mechanics of any of the 25 threats, period --

Q Okay.

A -- and who they involved or didn't involve.

Q Okay. And are you aware of anyone other than parents that are speaking at school board meetings that would, you know, be saying things of concern?

A I didn't follow the school board meetings and who said what, when, and where. So it's a very difficult question for me to provide you a good answer on. I'm not personally aware of who said what at what meeting. And so you're asking me to identify who those individuals are. I'm not aware of that context.

Q Fair enough. You aware of any FBI agents going to school board meetings?

A I am not.

Q Are you aware of any FBI agents going and sitting in parking lots at school board meetings?

A I am not.

Q Are you aware of any FBI agents following particular people to see if they're going to school board meetings?

A I am not.

[redacted] Okay. [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. We're going to take a slight twist here. We're going to go back in a way back time as seen to your time as ASAC in the Washington Field Office.

A Okay.

Q That was 2019 and 2020, I believe, timeframe, roughly.

A Yes.

Q Does that sound about right?

A That's right.

Q At that time did you have oversight over the public corruption program?

A I did.

Q That would include Squad CR-15, correct?

A It does.

Q During that timeframe, was Tim Thibault the supervisory special agent of Squad CR-15?

A He was not.

Q Who was the supervisory special agent of squad CR-15?

A That's a line-level employee. I'm not sure I'm authorized to provide a nonexecutive name at this point.

Q Okay. While in that role as the ASAC of squad CR-15, was Tim Thibault a special agent on Squad CR-15?

A He was not.

Q He was not. Did you know that he was posting politically charged posts on LinkedIn and Twitter?

A I did not.

Q Did he ever make any politically partisan comments to you?

A I had no interactions with Mr. Thibault.

Q Would it be reasonable to assume the FBI investigates a comparable percentage of cases targeting both Democrats as it does Republicans, with justice being blind and all? I mean, would that have any way, shape, or form or color the predicate what was being decided to be opened by Washington Field Squad CR-15, during your tenure as ASAC?

A During my tenure as ASAC, the policy guidance on predicated public corruption cases is very clear.

Q There's definitely information that has been provided to this committee that, in fact, there has been a gross disparity between the percentages of certain cases being opened and not opened. If officially requested from my attorney friends here, could the Bureau provide a breakdown of cases by party only, not subject information, for both SAC Vorndran and Tim Thibault's time as ASAC?

[redacted] We'll get back to you with that.

[redacted] And we will provide that in an official request of course.

BY [redacted]

Q Back to SAC Vorndran. When did you first become aware that the law firm of Perkins & Coie and the Hillary Clinton campaign were behind the Russia collusion, Alpha Bank, and Steele dossier allegations?

A I had no involvement in anything related to that, so I can't give you a timeline.

Q But did you become aware of what I just mentioned in the question? The timeline wasn't important. I understand your role may have been different, but I'm asking if, in fact, during your time as ASAC you became aware of what I just stated?

A So the question is during my time as ASAC --

Q -- did you become aware that Perkins & Coie and the Hillary Clinton campaign were, in fact, behind the Russia collusion, Alpha Bank, and Steele dossier allegations? That's the question.

A I don't recall.

Q Did you review the Alpha Bank investigation?

A I'm familiar with the term "Alpha Bank." Whether or not I reviewed an investigation, I don't remember.

Q Okay. So John Durham, who will be speaking to the committee very shortly, revealed the case opening for the Alpha Bank investigation was based on allegations from the Department of Justice, as we all know, and an anonymous source. Neither of these were true as James Baker received the Alpha Bank allegations from Hillary Clinton attorney, Michael Sussmann.

Do you know if James Baker and other FBI executives who knew the source of the Alpha Bank allegations signed off on the false opening of this case targeting President Trump?

A I don't know.

Q In order to open an investigation on the President of the United States, I would assume -- and you know that I know -- the case opening required signature of the FBI Director and the Attorney General.

Did the FBI Director and/or the Attorney General sign off on the Alpha Bank case opening?

A I don't know.

Q Did they know that James Baker had received the Alpha Bank allegations from Hillary Clinton's attorney?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know if James Baker and other FBI executives, including Peter Strzok -- whom I also know -- signed the case opening knowing fully well that Alpha Bank allegations were from the Clinton campaign and not, in fact, from the DOJ?

A I don't know.

Q I understand that to open an FBI Federal public corruption case, the FBI seeks concurrence with our DOJ partners.

Have you ever taken part in the discussion with prosecutors from either the DOJ Public Integrity Section or from the U.S. Attorney's office, District of Columbia, about a case opening, case support, prosecution, or sentencing decision that were made in a partisan manner?

A No.

Q During your time as WFO ASAC, who was in the leadership team of the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force, the FITF? Or do you know, in fairness?

A I don't know. I know who it is now. But, again, that's a line-level employee and would have come in shortly before my departure from my ASAC role.

Q And I'm very familiar with Ms. Dehmlow.

Are you aware of any FBI or DOJ employee having ever engaged in an attempt to intimidate or otherwise prevent a witness or investigator from bringing forth derogatory information about a political figure?

A No.

Q Have you spoken with Tim Thibault about the whistleblower statements about him?

A No.

Q Have you engaged in any discussions that involved conversations relating to outing, doxing, or otherwise intimidating an FBI whistleblower?

A No.

Q Do you know if Tim Thibault has a relationship with any reporter from The New York Times or The Washington Post?

A I don't know.

Q Are you aware of any instances where an FBI or DOJ employee engaged in a media leak related to an ongoing investigation?

A I'm not.

[redacted] All right. I'll turn it back over.

BY [redacted]

Q Now, going back to your time as section chief of the Human Intelligence Section in the Counterterrorism Division at headquarters, were you in this position in November of 2020 when the FBI Detroit Field Office, in conjunction with the Department of Justice, filed a criminal complaint against six men for an alleged plot to kidnap Michigan Governor Gretchen Whitmer?

A I was in that job in November of 2020.

Q According to evidence presented at trial, the FBI's unsuccessful case involved at least 12 confidential human sources, or CHSs, as well as undercover employees, the UCEs.

Is that an accurate assessment?

A Without documentation from you, I don't know.

Q In your position as section chief over the Counterterrorism Division's Human Intelligence Section, would you have had ultimate FBI headquarters oversight and accountability for those CHSs? Is that correct?

A That's incorrect.

Q That's not correct. Can you provide me with the correct information?

A Yes. So the work that went on in terms of my section chief assignment was on the confidential human sources and the focus on personal interaction. So I want to differentiate here between engaged online through Facebook Messenger vice you and I are meeting in person somewhere.

The overwhelming majority of that work in 2020 was international terrorism focused. The taskings on domestic terrorism, which is your reference to the case in Detroit, would have been managed at the field office level.

Q According to defense attorneys in this case, the FBI agents actively planned and coordinated their efforts to induce the defendants to engage in incriminating behavior and statements, even going as far as designing the objective and structural components of the conspiracy alleged in the indictment, and court documents detailed text message communications between the sources and their FBI handlers that showed the FBI pushed for the defendants' alleged criminal behavior.

Is the use of FBI informants to encourage criminal behavior a hallmark of the FBI's domestic terrorism program?

A The FBI is very focused on mitigating threats, especially we're very aware of the concept of entrapment and how that crosses over on confidential human sources and undercover operations. And so that is our focus. We do not want to entrap someone because then there's taxpayer dollars going into investigations, and that's a logical defense. And so we work very hard to make sure that does not happen.

Q And were you in the same position during the events that occurred at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021?

A I was.

Q How aware was FBI headquarters about the planned protests in and around the Capitol on January 6, 2021?

A So while I was in my role, I had no role in any lead-up to the planned protest on January 6th.

Q Did the FBI open any investigations prior to January 6th of 2021?

A Regarding January 6th?

Q Yes.

A I don't -- I have no way of knowing that.

Q If there was intelligence received prior to January 6th, 2021, did FBI headquarters or any FBI field offices initiate investigative activities to cover this event, to your knowledge?

A Not to my knowledge. But if there was any threat reporting or information that warranted investigation, we would do that. I mean, that's what I think people would expect the FBI to do. If there's threat information, whether it's related to activities in Washington, D.C., or elsewhere, we're going to conduct investigations.

Q And I know you mentioned that you didn't necessarily have direct oversight and accountability for the CHSs, but in this particular instance with January 6th, 2021, did you know of any investigative activities that were initiated with CHSs?

A I did not.

Q Were FBI CHSs proactively deployed to the Capitol on January 6th of 2021?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Do you know how many field offices responded to what was going on at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, and how many CHSs were sent to the event after the reporting of the event took place?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know if there was any discussion in the FBI about the January 6, 2021, event being a sensitive investigative matter, or SIM, since it involved investigative activity in and around the First Amendment protected activity?

A I'm not aware of any investigative activity that occurred at January 6th during the planned protest, as you framed your earlier question.

Q Do you know if there was any discussion in the FBI about limiting the scope of the investigative activities to ensure First Amendment rights were protected?

A Again, back to what I just said, right, leading up to January 6th, I was not aware of any investigative activity that was happening at the planned protest on January 6th.

Q Do you know if the FBI coordinated with any other Federal agencies about the January 6th protest before, during, or after January 6th?

A Not in my role in CTD.

[redacted] I'm going to kick it back over to my colleague, [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q I imagine this will be fairly quick here, Kevin. This is going back to your FBI headquarters counterterrorism DAD role.

A Uh-huh.

Q With respect to that, were you familiar with a Federal Air Marshals, FAMs, program called Quiet Skies in that capacity?

A No.

Q So you didn't have any direct familiarity with that program or the use of that program?

A I mean, if you give me more context, [redacted] regarding what the program was, perhaps I can give you a better answer. I'm not familiar with that term.

Q Sure. I think that -- in essence, the way I understand it, Federal Air Marshals have sort of repackaged and rebranded in order to show a little more resilience and return on investment for their mission, and so they were flying what they called special missions, you know, and they were -- as we know from our past, when we put somebody on the terrorist watch list or, you know U.S. TSC, whatever, to have that subject, they would then fly a special mission on that particular subject. So the overarching umbrella program that they called it happened to be Quiet Skies. Hence, the question.

A Okay.

Q I didn't know if you had perhaps heard that or had any familiarity with how the Bureau may have utilized that program following the events on the Capitol on January 6th.

A No.

[redacted] Okay. I won't bore you with the rest of these questions then. I'll spare you.

Mr. Vorndran. Okay.

[redacted] All right. All set?

[redacted] Yeah. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] It is 11:11, and we're going back on the record. Oh, 1:11. Excuse me.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 19

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Thanks again so much for being here.

There have been a lot of statements today about how there really were no threats against school officials, and so I want to go through some examples that occurred prior to the issuance of AG Garland's October 4, 2021, memorandum. And so I want to hand you what's been marked as Exhibit No. 19. And this is a Reuters news article, and it's titled, "School boards get death threats amid rage over race, gender, mask policies."

And so if you can just take a moment to look over that. Let me know when you're ready to discuss it.

A Yes.

Q Okay. So this article documents threats of violence against educators and school officials from 2020 and 2021. And so I'd like to direct your attention to the first two paragraphs of the news article. And I'll just directly read from there. And it states the following, quotation marks: The letter came to the home of Brenda Sheridan, a Loudoun County, Virginia, school board member, addressed to one of her adult children. It threatened to kill them both unless she left the board.

"It is too bad that your mother is an ugly communist whore," said the hand-scrawled note, which the family read just after Christmas. "If she doesn't quit or resign before the end of the year, we will kill her, but first, we will kill you!"

Do you think this message could be interpreted as containing threatening language?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you think this message could be interpreted as containing violent language?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you find this message to be concerning?

A This is something that would meet our thresholds in the FBI to conduct further investigation of based on the threat of violence or violence.

Q And just really quickly, just to refresh everyone's recollection, you've mentioned 18 U.S.C. 1875, correct?

A That's right -- no. I'm sorry. 875 not 1875.

Q Yes, U.S.C. 875. Can you just briefly state again what that provision is?

A Without the statute in front of me, I don't want to misquote, but effectively it's the interstate communication of threats or threats of violence.

Q Okay. So essentially if a threat, let's say an email, is sent from New York to a school board member in Virginia, would that be something that would fall within the realm of 18 U.S.C. 875?

A It would warrant more understanding of the internet protocols and where they bounce off of across State lines, but generally, yes, that would be a wire transmission.

Q And so I just want to read the next two paragraphs. And so it says: School board members across the United States have endured a rash of terroristic threats and hostile messages ignited by rolling controversies over policies on curtailing the coronavirus, bathroom access for transgender students, and the teaching of America's racial history.

Reuters documented the intimidation through contacts and interviews with 33 board members across 15 States and a review of threatening and harassing messages obtained from the officials or through public records requests. The news organization found more than 220 such examples in this sampling of districts. School officials or parents in 15 different counties received or witnessed threats they considered serious enough to report to the police.

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q And so I also want to look at the next sentence in that next paragraph, just the first sentence. It says: While school controversies are traditionally local, these threats often come from people out of State with no connection to the districts involved.

So with this sentence talking about how sometimes the threats come from people with no connection to the districts involved, would that be a potential area that might implicate 18 U.S.C. 875?

A Only if the nature of the threat crossed State lines and met the elements of the crime.

Q And so on the second page, in the second full paragraph that starts with "In June," it says: In June, she received a threat saying: "Brenda, I'm going to gut you like the fat f---ing" -- which is a swear word -- "pig you are when I find you."

Do you believe this message contains threatening language?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you believe this message contains violent language?

A Yes.

Q Okay. If a tip of this type of threat was reported to NTOC, would this be something that the FBI might look into a bit more?

A If it came in just as stated here, yes. There's all kinds of context that could be missing from this quote. But as written here, yes, the FBI would pass that on to the appropriate field office.

Q And I also want to go to the fourth full paragraph on the second page that starts with, "Board members in Pennsylvania's."

A Uh-huh.

Q So this one states: Board members in Pennsylvania's Pennsbury School District received racist and anti-Semitic emails from around the country from people angry over the district's diversity efforts. One said: This is why Hitler threw you C--TS -- which is a reference to the c-word -- in a gas chamber, close quote.

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q What do you understand this sentence to mean?

A It's a reference to the Holocaust, and it would be considered threatening language.

Q Okay. Thank you for that.

Okay. I also want to describe an incident that occurred September 2021, and this was in Arizona. And this was where a principal received an email that threatened:

The next time it will be a barrel pointed at your Nazi face. Following the guidance you say? The Nazis were just following orders too. Guess we will have to see what side you choose: The Americans or the Nazis. Remember Tucson is a small community, and you have a target on your back for enforcing unlawful orders.

Do you believe this message could be interpreted as containing threatening language?

[1:19 p.m.]

Mr. Vorndran. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Do you believe it could be interpreted as containing violent language?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And let's say if this information, just what I just read, was provided to NTOC, will this be something potentially that the FBI would look a bit more into?

A Yes.

Q So I do want to talk a bit about some of the situations that actually escalated to violence, and so I want to introduce another news article, and this will be marked as tab 22 -- exhibit 20, excuse me.

[Vorndran Exhibit No. 20

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q And so this is an August 2021 news article, and it describes a situation where an individual in California struck a teacher in the face when the teacher attempted to intervene in a confrontation between that individual and the school principal over COVID policies.

And so, if you want to take a moment just to quickly review this article, and you can let me know when you're done.

A Okay.

Q So as highlighted in the article, the teacher was left bleeding with, quotation marks, "lacerations on his face, some bruising on his neck, and a pretty good knot on the back of his head," closed quote. And the article also mentions that the teacher went to the hospital to seek treatment.

Do you believe that striking someone in the face constitutes violent behavior?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And in this situation, do you believe that the first -- that First Amendment protections allow this individual to strike the teacher because he or she disagreed with COVID policies?

A First Amendment protections, simply stated, don't extend to violence.

Q Okay.

So I want to switch gears and talk a little bit about assessments, preliminary investigations, and full investigations. And you've talked briefly about all three of those, and so I just want to go a little bit more into detail.

So what is the purpose of an assessment?

A I don't have the definition in front of me as written in the DIOG, but it's the least intrusive mechanism for the FBI to gather information to make an assessment if it warrants further investigation.

Q Are you aware of how assessments are supposed to be documented?

A I think I need more from the question to give you a good answer.

Q So is there any type of system that's put in place that documents when assessments are open, when assessments are closed?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you speak a little bit about that?

A Yeah, it's called the guardian system, and that is the case management system that handles assessments.

Q Okay. So do all assessments need to have a guardian?

A Yeah, that's the way we track them and understand what needs to be worked.

Q And so, if an FBI employee opens up an assessment, is there any type of process that they have to go through with respect to explaining to their supervisor why it is the case in making an assessment should be open or provided some type of reasoning behind why they took that step?

A There is. There's a section that requires a detailed summary of the allegation of information, and I think we need to discriminate it a little bit here. In the channel of information flow from NTOC, NTOC would largely be writing up that detailed information about the tip or the allegation. That would be forwarded to a supervisor in the field. That supervisor then has a period of time to do baseline checks in databases to make a decision if there will be an onboard investigation and when it will be assigned.

That's a little bit different than if I'm a case agent in the field and someone walks into the field office and gives me information, then I would be the one entering that information on my own and having that dialogue with my supervisor. So the intake can be different depending on the channel.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You just referenced intake -- or NTOC receiving information from the public and sending it along to a field office. NTOC can also get information from the public, create a guardian, and send it to State or local entities, right?

A They can.

Q So it can go through the guardian system and no assessment is ever opened in that case, right?

A I don't know about the mechanics of open or not, but they can refer --

Q But it can go straight to State and local without touching the field office?

A Yes.

Q Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Is there any type of -- and I think you might have answered this already with respect to the mechanisms of oversight when a case agent wants to move forward with an assessment and they want to explain themselves. Is there any process for ensuring that assessments are not pursued for frivolous or improper reasons?

A Sure. I mean, supervisors are going to look at that information to assess if we're within our authorities to conduct that assessment, and so, that is the approval level that is required to move forward.

Q Okay. And that approval level would likely also look into whether any First Amendment protections are implicated?

A For sure.

Q Is the FBI able to conduct assessments in order to detect and prevent criminal activities in the early stages?

A I'm not sure I understand.

Q So is the FBI able to conduct an assessment for a potential crime?

A If the FBI receives information alleging a crime or alleging a plot to commit a crime, then, yes, we can conduct that investigation.

Q Okay. So, essentially, proactive steps can be taken?

A Yeah, I reflect back on early in my career, working bank robberies. I had a person walk in off the street and say -- it was in December. I remember because it was close to Christmas -- I'm aware of an individual who is plotting to kill a State attorney because she is prosecuting him on gun charges. I don't want to see anybody get hurt.

So nothing has happened. There has been no act of violence that has been carried out, but, like, that becomes an FBI investigation appropriately to make sure no one gets hurt.

Q Did the AG's October 4th memorandum change anything about how the FBI processes assessments?

A It did not.

Q So I now want to move on to preliminary investigations. So what is a preliminary investigation?

A Preliminary investigation carries approvals for review that is not a full investigation to determine -- and I don't have the policy in front of me, but you can only be in a preliminary investigation for so long to gather intelligence and evidence before you have to either convert to a full or a closed. So it's a step in between.

Q Is it correct that 90 days -- that preliminary investigations are reviewed every 90 days?

A I think they would be reviewed consistent with the rule of final review, which is every 90 days. I don't know what the policy says about specifics on PIs.

Q And so going back to what we were just discussing with the FBI being able to take proactive measures, let's say, if there's a threat to life, with preliminary investigations, can those be undertaken to -- can those be undertaken proactively if you get information that a potential crime will occur, like in the bank-robber situation you were describing?

A Yes. But in that situation, that would go right to a full investigation.

Q Okay.

Do you know what type of investigative steps are permitted when one is conducting a preliminary investigation?

A I don't have it in front of me, but within DIOG, it enumerates what is permitted under a guardian assessment, a PI, and an FI, but without that in front of me, I can't tell you.

Q In your opinion, did the AG's October 4th memorandum change anything about the process for preliminary investigations?

A It did not.

[redacted] Did the AG's October 4th memo change anything about the type of investigative steps that can be taken under an assessment, a preliminary investigation, or full investigation?

Mr. Vorndran. No, because those are enumerated policy agnostic of the threat.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And so we can now go on to full investigations, and you've spoken a little bit about this. So what is a full investigation?

A A full investigation is every authority we've been granted can be deployed in that investigation, and it cuts across a swath of sensitive techniques and nonsensitive techniques.

Q And is there an internal review process to ensure that full investigations are being conducted in accordance with the Constitution and FBI policies and procedures?

A Yeah, certainly I think -- it's been a while since I looked at the file review, but I believe there's a component in there that forces a supervisor to look at compliance matters with the policy.

Q And are you aware of the types of investigative steps that can be undertaken when going through a full investigation?

A I am.

Q Can you speak a little bit about that?

A Again, like, it cuts everything from Title III to undercover operations on the sophisticated end, grand jury subpoenas on the legal process. Anything that the FBI can deploy on national security or criminal investigations is available. The only carve out here, I would say, is when we get into sensitive investigative matters. There's much more oversight on what techniques will be utilized.

Q And what are -- what is considered a sensitive investigative matter?

A Those are simply the most sensitive investigations the FBI would work on. So elected officials, members of the media, academics, clergy.

Q Okay.

And did the AG's memo change the way that full investigations are conducted at the FBI?

A It did not.

Q So now I want to discuss a bit more about threat tags. I know you've talked a bit about that in the last hour. Just for clarification purposes, what is a threat tag?

A A threat tag is a set of characters that are applied to assessments associated with a particular threat. So we would have one for when we work the Super Bowl. We would have one when we work the inauguration. And it's a statistical component to aggregate those assessments into how many assessments have been opened, how many tips have been received.

Q So a threat tag can be applied to all sorts of situations?

A They can.

Q Okay. And so, it kind of serves as like a cataloging system of the cases that the FBI is working on?

A I would say it's a way for us to organize, yeah.

Q Okay.

And so, what type of information is typically included in a threat tag?

A I've never set one up on my own. So I've only seen the characters that come out of those tags. So I don't know what information goes into actually create them.

Q Okay. So I was going to ask if you know the process by which threat tags are created --

A I don't.

Q -- but I assume that's a no.

A I believe there's engagement with the National Threat Operations Center, but the mechanics of what details have to be provided and who approves it, I don't know.

Q Okay.

And so who would be responsible for applying a threat tag to a particular matter? Would it be the special agent working on the case, or would it be the supervisor who is the one that would identify the tag?

A Typically, for threats that come in through NTOC, they would apply them at the intake, and then -- so not so much on the supervisors, especially for tips, whether from email or that flow through NTOC.

Q Okay.

A Certainly, if I can just build out a little more context, there certainly could be a scenario that a tipper comes into NTOC. It is not tagged. And then it gets to a field office, and through engagement and further investigation, they understand it is related to, like, a Super Bowl threat, and they can go back and retroactively do it. But my assessment is a lot of it happens at intake and NTOC.

Q And so applying a threat tag to a case, that would not impact the investigative steps that the FBI takes, correct?

A It has no impact.

Q Okay. And just for clarification, so it wouldn't impact the predication that's required for a preliminary investigation or full investigation?

A It does not.

Q Do you know a rough estimate of how many threat tags were created during your time as a deputy assistant director of the counterterrorism --

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

So I want to look at the March 1 letter, which I believe is identified as exhibit 12, I believe. So let me know when you have it.

A I have it.

Q Okay. So the March 1 letter states on page 2 that any internal tagging of threats, harassment, or violence against school officials for review and reporting does not change the longstanding requirements for opening an investigation, whether by the criminal counterterrorism or any other FBI division, nor does it represent a shift in how the FBI prioritizes threats.

Do you agree with this sentence with respect to the AG's October 4th memorandum?

A Yeah. There was no change, to my knowledge, of how we predicated investigations based on the memo.

Q Okay. So according to the March 1 letter, it states that the EDUOFFICIALS tag was created on October 14, 2021. Is that consistent with your knowledge, if any, of when that threat tag was created?

A It is. I would have thought, based on recollection, it was a little closer to the 20th, but certainly the 14th is reasonable.

Q And so, according to footnote two at the bottom of page 2, the letter states: Four Guardians that were open in advance of the Attorney General's memorandum subsequently received the EDUOFFICIALS tag. And so you talked a bit earlier about how tags can be applied retroactively. Does this represent an example of a tag that was applied retroactively to a case?

A On its surface, it would seem so. Without the details in front of me, it's hard to say. But yes, that's an example of Guardians that came in that predated the EDUOFFICIALS tag that were subsequently applied with that tag.

Q Okay.

Do you know how exhaustive of a search the FBI did to identify other potential Guardians prior to the October 4th memorandum that should have received the threat tag?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

So the March 1 letter states in the last sentence of the second paragraph, and this is on page 2, the purpose of the tag was to help the FBI understand the scope of reported threats against school officials on a national level and to provide an opportunity for comprehensive analysis of the threat picture for effective engagement with law enforcement partners at all levels.

Do you agree with this statement?

A I do.

Q Okay. So is there anything unusual about using threat tags in this way?

A There is not.

Q Okay. And does the reference to law enforcement partners at all levels, does that just mean State, local, or Tribal agencies?

A That would be inclusive of Federal, State, local, Tribal, territorial partners.

Q Okay. So we talked about Guardians. We talked about assessments. We talked about preliminary and full investigations, as well as threat tags. And so I just want to take a look at the particular 25 assessments in this situation that we're in today.

And so I want to turn to the paragraph on the bottom of page 2 of the March 1 letter, and this is exhibit 12. And so this paragraph states that the FBI assigned the EDUOFFICIALS tag to 25 Guardians. So if this was -- the EDUOFFICIALS tag was assigned to 25 Guardians, does that mean that investigations were open into these 25 Guardians?

A I think it's a reference to the fact that the Guardian is the process for the Bureau to understand whether there is a nexus to criminal activity --

Q Okay.

A -- is how I would frame that.

Q Okay. So it doesn't mean that these were 25 investigations?

A As written, that's right.

Q Okay.

And at the top of page 3, it reads: The majority of the 25 Guardians refer to State and local law enforcement.

To the extent you are aware, is this consistent with your understanding of how the 25 Guardians were handled?

A I'm not aware. So I can't comment.

Q Okay. Just as a general matter, is it fairly common for Guardians to be referred to local and State authorities?

A Based on my experience working on violent crime task force and JTTF, yes.

Q Okay.

And based on your experience, how long does it typically take for an agent to assess a Guardian and then refer it to the appropriate State or local entity?

A That's a really difficult question to answer because all of these -- if we talk more corporately about Guardians, they are not all created equal, and so, there could be, you know, emergency disclosure requests that are pending to identify IP logs so we know where to start looking. It really cuts across the swath.

The ones we can be more clear about are the TTLs, because there's a policy obligation of how quickly they are assessed and worked, and that's a matter of, like, days.

Q Okay.

A That's very short. I believe -- I don't have the policy in front of me. There's almost a 24-hour obligation to have eyes on it and make an assessment of what needs to be done.

Q Okay. And just for the record, TTL is threat to life, right?

A That's right.

Q Okay.

So on page 3, the second to last sentence at the top of the paragraph reads: 17 of the 25 Guardians were assigned to the criminal investigative division, six were assigned to the counterterrorism division, and the remaining two were assigned to the weapons of mass destruction directorate, as it pertains to potential bomb threats.

And I believe you answered this question previously, but just for the record, were you ever personally aware of the six assessments that were assigned to the counterterrorism division?

A I was not.

Q Do you have any insight into how long agents worked on those six assessments?

A I have no way of knowing.

Q Does the fact that a Guardian was assigned to the counterterrorism division mean that the counterterrorism division then opened a preliminary investigation based on that Guardian?

A It does not.

Q And is that the same for a full investigation? It doesn't mean that the full investigation was opened?

A Can you reframe that?

Q Yeah.

So does the fact that a Guardian was assigned to the counterterrorism division mean that the counterterrorism division opened a full investigation into that Guardian?

A So the counterterrorism division doesn't open investigations. They're opened by the field.

Q Okay.

A They would be program managed by the counterterrorism division. But no, the fact that there is a Guardian opened, there's no direct correlation to how many full investigations were opened at the field level.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q All right. We're going to switch gears and quickly go back.

You were asked in the earlier hour about -- I'm sorry -- actually, the very first hour about what's been marked as exhibit 7.

A Okay.

Q And it's the July 27, 2022, letter from Chairman Jordan, then Ranking Member Jordan to Director Wray.

A Okay.

Q And you were asked about this in the context of allegations about kind of padding DVE statistics or changing case classifications to build up case numbers.

A Uh-huh.

Q I want to look at the top paragraph on page 2.

A Okay.

Q At the end of that paragraph, it says that a field office counterterrorism special agent in charge and the FBI's Director of the counterterrorism division have pressured agents to move cases into the DVE category to hit self-created performance metrics.

Are you familiar with that allegation, or are you familiar with any of the actions that are described there?

A I'm not familiar with any of the actions described.

Q To the extent there's a reference to self-created performance metrics, are there performance metrics based on case numbers?

A No.

Q And then the next sentence says: According to whistleblowers, the FBI uses these metrics to dispense awards and promotions.

To your knowledge, are awards and promotions dispensed based on case numbers?

A Not to my knowledge. I mean, listen, if you look at cases, they're not all created equal, and so if you look at overall impact of a three- or four-time rule of Title III, the work that goes into that by a group of individuals far outpaces an embezzlement case of a bank teller. So looking at case numbers is an ineffective metric to assess performance.

Q Okay. And so -- and thank you for that.

And so, I think you just referenced Title III?

A Uh-huh.

Q What is that?

A Title III is just the wiretap statute, to permit, you know, through court authorized orders, listening to phone calls and reading content of email.

Q Okay, thank you.

And so just to sum up, there could be one matter that is one case that takes a lot of work and a lot of effort, and that could be a pretty big situation, and there could be five bank robbery cases that would be -- you know, one person could potentially work five bank robbery cases and it wouldn't -- the fact that one person has one case that's a lot of work and one person has five cases that are less work, like, that means that's not a good -- case numbers alone are not a good metric?

A Right. That's right. As a field supervisor, when I was assigning cases, I didn't look at how many cases somebody had. I knew the cases well enough to know, from a content and work perspective, how much work it took, and that's how I made those decisions.

Q Thank you.

[redacted] We're good. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Sorry. We can go back on the record.

[redacted] So you're all done?

[redacted] Unless I have to follow up on yours.

BY [redacted]

Q Just one quick question, sir. Sorry, I didn't get it when I was around here the last time.

Did you have any involvement with the Hunter Biden investigation?

A I did not.

Q Were you aware that the laptop, the Hunter Biden laptop has a telephone entry for a Vorndran?

A I am not.

Q Bryan Vorndran?

A I am not.

Q And do you know who Bryan Vorndran is?

A I do.

Q And who is that?

A My brother.

Q Okay. And so you have no awareness of why your brother would be in Hunter Biden's laptop contacts?

A I have no knowledge.

[redacted] That's it. Thank you.

[redacted] Thanks. We can go off the record now.

[Whereupon, at 1:48 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Kirkland & Ellis

1301 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20004

[redacted] We'll go on the record.

This is a transcribed interview of [redacted]. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state his name for the record.

[redacted] [redacted].

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I will now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted] counsel for Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chair Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Mr. Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler.

[redacted] [redacted] Jim Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] majority.

[redacted]. I'm [redacted] with Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] [redacted]. [redacted] -- [redacted] for Kirkland & Ellis for the witness and Meta.

As discussed with the staff previously, [redacted] worked in the intelligence community in a variety of roles before joining Meta, including in a nonpublic capacity. His last government job was as a director for intelligence with the National Security Council during the Trump administration.

While we do not object to a comprehensive transcript of his interview by a qualified stenographer, we are concerned that the decision to videotape a member of the intelligence community at his level could restrict [redacted]'s ability to assume certain professional intelligence-related roles in the future.

Accordingly, we will respectfully request that the interview not be videotaped or that, at a minimum, we be provided a notice and an opportunity to be heard in the event the committee decides to make any portion of the video from [redacted]'s interview public.

We are not aware of any legislative purpose that would be served by publicizing via video the appearance of a former career level employee of the intelligence community and believe that sticking with a transcription would be a reasonable accommodation.

So I just wanted to make sure we noted that for the record. And I also noticed a couple of additional people came in the room.

[redacted] Yeah. If the folks who came in would state their name for the record.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, majority member of the House Judiciary Committee.

[redacted] [redacted] majority.

[redacted] Thank you. I'd like to --

[redacted] If I can ask for you all to speak up a little bit. I'm having a little bit of trouble hearing you.

[redacted] Sure.

I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there are official court reporters taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] So the court reporters can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is. Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you.

It's important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. It is my understanding that you are appearing today with counsel. Is that correct?

[redacted] That is correct.

[redacted] Could counsel please state your name for the record.

[redacted] We have already done that. [redacted] Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] [redacted] Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know.

Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so. If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, by law, you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview.

Do you understand that as well?

[redacted] I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C., section 1001.

Do you understand this?

[redacted] I do.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

[redacted] No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporters so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That's the end of my preamble. Is there anything that my colleagues --

[redacted] [redacted] someone else came into the room. I just want to make sure we get names.

[redacted] Hi. I'm [redacted] I'm with the House Judiciary minority.

[redacted] I'm sorry?

[redacted] [redacted]

[redacted] [redacted]

[redacted] Is there anything my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] No, thank you.

[redacted] Okay. The clock now reads 10:06. We'll start the first hour of questioning.

[redacted] Great.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you, [redacted]

Could you state your full name, please.

A Yes. My full name is [redacted]

Q And where's your current place of employment?

A I currently work at Meta.

Q Okay. What's your current title?

A I'm Meta's director for global threat disruption.

Q All right. And, beginning with college, can you state your education history briefly, please.

[redacted] I'm sorry. We can't hear you.

[redacted] We can't hear you.

BY [redacted]

Q Beginning with college, could you please state your education history.

A Yes. So I went and did my undergraduate education at the Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio. I studied political science, international security studies, Russian, and Spanish. That is the extent of my education history.

Q Okay. Great. Your counsel started to provide some of this. At a high level, could you provide your employment history?

A Yes. So I currently work at Meta as Meta's director for global threat disruption. And I joined the company as Meta's global threat disruption lead.

Prior to joining Meta, I was a director at the National Security Council on the intelligence program staff from 2017 until mid- to late 2018 during the Trump administration.

Prior to joining the NSC staff, I was employed in a variety of roles at the Department of Defense.

And then, prior to joining the Department of Defense, I worked as a researcher at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars conducting research on illicit finance in Russia.

Q Was that your first position after graduation of college?

A It was.

Q Can you explain at a high level some of your responsibilities when working for the government?

A In my role at the National Security Council, I was responsible for oversight and management of the U.S. Government's technical intelligence programs as well as coordinating President Trump's national security strategy, specifically on foreign and malign influence. So kind of coordinating amongst the various departments and agencies to try and create a cohesive government strategy around how to handle Chinese, Iranian, and, like, foreign influence targeting the United States.

Prior to that, I primarily worked on issues around Russia.

Q And when approximately did you leave the government for Facebook?

A I left the government in -- at the end of August 2018.

Q Your first title, you said, at Facebook was global threat disruption lead. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q What does that title mean, and what were your responsibilities?

A So, as global threat disruption lead, I joined the company to work on countering what we call coordinated inauthentic behavior.

Q Okay. And what was your day-to-day responsibilities?

A So the work around countering coordinated inauthentic behavior, which is our policy around coordinated networks and fake accounts, functionally, that trying to mislead people on the platform. My job was to evaluate cases against that policy to try and determine whether, for example, there was in fact a network of coordinated inauthentic accounts deceiving people and to ensure that we were applying that policy in an appropriate way.

Q Okay. Who did you report to at that time?

A I reported to Meta's head of security policy.

Q And who was that?

A [redacted].

Q Okay. Did you have people that reported to you?

A I did not.

Q Did you have an assistant or deputy or anybody?

A No.

Q No?

So how big was your team overall? Was it just you and your supervisor?

A That's correct.

Q Which office were you in?

A Which office physically?

Q Yeah.

A Like, where was I located?

I worked out of the Menlo Park office.

Q And then your next position is the one you hold now?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And that is director of global threat disruption?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And is that a promotion? What is the difference between the roles and responsibilities?

A It was a promotion. And, in addition to working on coordinated inauthentic behavior issues, I also work now on cyber espionage. So that would be efforts by hacking groups to target users on our platforms, steal their credentials, for example, or deploy malware to try and hack their devices, their mobile devices, that kind of thing, as well as kind of spam- and scam-type activity on the platform and how to identify and counter that type of activity.

Q And who do you report to now?

A I still report to Meta's head of security policy.

Q And who is that?

A [redacted].

Q And do you have team members now? Is there anyone that reports to you?

A I do have team members now.

Q And who are they?

A So I have -- let's see. I'd be happy to provide a list to the committee after this conversation, if that would be useful.

Q Okay. How many team members approximately?

A Four.

Q Four. And are they your peers in the hierarchy? Do they report to you?

A They report to me.

BY [redacted]

Q And what are their roles and responsibilities?

A Those folks work on kind of the areas I mentioned. So coordinated inauthentic behavior, influence operations activity, countering cyber espionage activity, and then spam and scams and fraud activity.

Q Do they each work on one of those categories?

A That's correct.

BY [redacted]

Q Which other teams or divisions at Meta do you work most closely with?

A Let's see. So I work most closely with our legal teams, our comms teams, and investigative teams.

Q Do you work at all with personnel who are involved with public policy or government relations?

A On some occasions, yes.

Q And who from those teams do you work with?

A So we work with public policy teams kind of around the world whenever we have a case -- for example, an influence operations case that we're going to be releasing a report about --

[redacted] I'm sorry, [redacted] I can't hear you.

[redacted] Sorry about that.

[redacted] I know it's frustrating.

[redacted] So we'll work with public policy teams at the company, for example, if we're releasing a report on an influence operations network or a hacking network that might affect their country.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And when did your team become -- like, you mentioned -- when folks were hired?

A That's a good question. Let me think about that one.

Just a couple of years ago.

Q Okay. And was it all at once, or did it expand slowly?

A Slowly over time as we started to work on other security-related issues.

Q Okay. And what necessitated the need for a bigger team?

A I think we had seen the success of trying to counter adversarial threat actors in the influence operations base. For example, there were a number of Iranian networks that targeted the U.S. in 2018. There were Chinese operations, for example, targeting the U.S.

And the model that we had used to counter those operations -- so investigating their activity on the platform, sharing information about those operations with other platforms that might be active on sharing information publicly, threat reporting -- seemed to be having an effect on the effectiveness of those campaigns, in that they seemed to be avoiding using our platform as much. And we felt it would be useful to apply that model to other threat areas.

So cyber espionage and hacking is something that we saw the platform not necessarily being used to directly try and hack someone's account, but we might see a threat actor -- for example, an advanced persistent threat group from Iran -- using the platform to try and trick someone into clicking a link to go to a website containing malware active from their laptop.

And so we started trying to use that model on those types of threats, and we saw some success there as well. In particular -- I'm using Iran in particular because we've seen both a number of Iranian operations, and we've seen those operations be very responsive to particularly our public reporting on their activity in that they seem to avoid our platform quite a bit.

And then that model we also wanted to apply to other problem areas. So spam, scams, and fraud, which directly affect our users. It seemed like an area that we could apply a similar approach.

Q You mentioned you work for [redacted]. Am I saying his last name correctly?

A Yes.

Q Who else reports to him in addition to you, and what teams are they a part of?

A So security policy organization works on -- so the threat disruption area that I manage as well as more traditional kind of account security issues. So two-factor authentication, making sure that people have a means to recover hacked accounts, as well as what we call threat ideation.

So that's thinking through ways that -- for example, when we do takedowns of these influ-ops networks, how might they change their tactics to try to get around our enforcement. So that's generally the area that [redacted]'s organization covers.

Q You mentioned that you work with the legal team. At a high level, can you discuss what sort of issues cause you to have to consult with the legal department?

[redacted] I instruct the witness not to answer questions about the legal department.

[redacted] My colleague [redacted] may ask some questions, and if you can just restate your objection to the questions.

[redacted] Sure. Calls for privileged information.

[redacted] Thanks.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know which teams at Meta deal with misinformation?

A I'm aware that there is a misinformation team at Meta that works on the misinformation problem set.

Q And do you know who heads that team?

A I'm not actually sure who heads the team at the moment.

Q And you don't have interactions in your current role with them?

A I don't. We somewhat deliberately -- the head of my team works specifically on the disinformation problem set, which just definitionally for us would be deceptive behaviors, right? So fake accounts, posting what might be true or might be false, but the fact that they're lying about their identity. And we separate that out kind of with a pretty clear bright line for misinformation work, which could be posted by any number of users on the platform.

Q Am I understanding you correctly that disinformation you view as intentional and misinformation is not? Can you clarify the difference?

A Happy to.

So disinformation in our world -- and we kind of -- the way we operationalize the word "disinformation" is our coordinated inauthentic behavior policy, which I wouldn't say is about intention, but rather is about the user that is actually posting on the platform.

So our coordinated inauthentic behavior policy is content-agnostic. We don't evaluate truth, the falsity, or the appropriateness of the content that a network is posting. What we care about is whether the accounts that are part of that network are who they say they are. Are they fake accounts pretending to be from country X when they're actually from country Y, or are they actually authentically the person they're saying that they are?

And, if they are lying about who they are or where they're coming from, then that would be kind of our policy course for action because we want people on the platform to be able to trust who they're talking to.

Q Are you familiar with the term "malinformation"?

A I've heard the term "malinformation" in the past. It's not one that we use on our teams.

Q Okay. You've spoken a couple times about coordinated inauthentic behavior. There are also terms in the space such as "foreign malign influence campaign."

Is that a type of coordinated inauthentic behavior? Do you understand those to be related?

A So we avoid using the term "foreign malign influence," although it's a term I'm familiar with from my time in government. Generally, our coordinated inauthentic behavior campaigns can be foreign influence operations, although I understand the term "foreign malign influence" as a bit broader in that it can also cover, for example, overt activity by state actors or off-internet activity by state actors.

Q For issues related to hack-and-leak operation, would that fall under your team's responsibility?

A So portions of hack-and-leak activity would. My team works specifically on a policy we call the hack-and-leak policy. And so I'd be happy to answer any questions you have about that.

Q We'll in just a moment get into that.

At a high level, Facebook has community standards. Is that appropriately understood as Facebook's content moderation policy? Is there --

A That's my understanding of the community standards, yes.

Q And is there a different policy for Instagram as opposed to Facebook?

A My understanding is that Instagram does have terms of service that are complementary to and incorporate aspects of the community standards, but it's not an area I work directly on.

Q And your responsibility, is it only for Facebook?

A No. So the policies that my team works on -- coordinated inauthentic behavior and the cybersecurity policy, which is what we do our cyber espionage work under -- apply to both Facebook and Instagram.

Q Okay. Are there any other platforms that fall under Meta space that you are responsible for? I'm thinking WhatsApp, for instance. If there's --

A So we do share information about our investigations with the WhatsApp team, but we don't work directly on WhatsApp as a platform.

Q Okay. So Facebook and Instagram is the scope of your responsibility.

As part of your job responsibility, do you have familiarity with Facebook's community standards?

A Passing familiarity, but I wouldn't call myself an expert on the vast majority of the policies in the community standards.

Q And what about those that relate to coordinated inauthentic behavior?

A Yes. So the coordinated inauthentic behavior policy; the inauthentic behavior policy, which it sits under in the community standards; as well as the cybersecurity policy, which addresses kind of theft of credentials and hacking of accounts. Those three are all in the community standards, the publicly-facing community standards, and are policies that we work on.

Q Okay. Did you play a role in developing those policies?

A Yes.

Q You mentioned earlier that, when it comes to coordinated inauthentic behavior, I believe your phrase was that you're "content-agnostic."

Can you describe a little bit more what that means, and has that always been the case?

A Yeah, I'd be happy to.

It has always been the case. And what I mean by that is, what we have found is that, as a platform company, evaluating the content posted by a coordinated inauthentic behavior operation is both a very low-fidelity signal about whether that operation is or isn't deceptive and also not the most efficient way for us to investigate those networks. I can talk a bit about what both of those things mean.

When I say it's a low-fidelity signal, what I mean is that if you look at the more than 200 coordinated inauthentic behavior operations that Meta has taken down in the 4 and a half years or so I've been there, a huge number of those operations posted what people would consider to be pretty benign content. And by "benign," I mean pictures of puppies, pictures of kittens, the type of thing people might want to click on or follow a page about to build an audience. We generally see that as the first phase of an influence operation. It's an audience-building phase.

So, if we were looking for an influence operation by using content signals, we would have a very high false positive rate. We'd keep finding actual people who like puppies and kittens.

And then, secondly, what we generally find is that influence operations also reuse content from other parts of the internet or other parts of our platforms consistently. Why? Because if you are functionally operating as a clandestine digital marketer, it is a lot cheaper and easier to find content that is already popular, ideally in the language that you might not speak very well, than trying to create it yourself.

But what that means from an investigative perspective is that, if we're simply trying to match content to find an Iranian influence operation, for example, we're also going to find a bunch of other people that aren't involved. And so, instead, our policy is predicated on deceptive behaviors and deceptive identity in particular because that is the core of kind of the harm we're trying to protect people on the platform from.

We don't want to police what people can say under that policy. We just want to make sure that, if you're a user on Facebook, that you can trust the person that's talking to you to be who they say they are and not to be, for example, a foreign actor trying to manipulate what you're seeing.

And so that's why the policy is written the way that it is and why we apply it in the way that we do around kind of signal or deceptive behavior and identity rather than content-related signals.

Q And I'm sorry. If you could, again, go over the difference between an influence operation and coordinated inauthentic behavior.

A Yes. So an influence operation can be overt or clandestine and also can be much -- often is much broader than a single social media platform or internet website, whereas coordinated inauthentic behavior -- as a platform company, we have to take the big definition of influence operation and turn it into something repeatable and appliable. And so the coordinated inauthentic behavior policy was created to kind of identify what are the tests that we can apply to what could be a clandestine influence operation to determine whether we can take enforcement action against it.

And so the policy is more specific, right? It says a network, if it is coordinated -- so multiple users from multiple accounts working together -- if it is inauthentic in that it is essentially manipulative about its identity or where it's coming from, using fake accounts, then that network is something we can take action under, whereas -- if we simply -- just kind of the definition of an influence operation, it would be too expansive.

Q And so, if an influence operation is overt, does that mean the company can't take action, or is it just no longer under your team's scope?

A A subset of overt influence operations -- so, for example, state-controlled media entities -- Press TV from Iran is a good example, or CGTN, a Chinese state-controlled media entity. For those entities, we -- there is a policy that my team had worked on around state-controlled media labels.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Could you repeat that?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] There's a policy that my team had worked on to develop around labeling state-controlled media entities. And so we do label state-controlled media entities on the platform from a number of countries, and -- but it is a separate policy from our coordinated inauthentic behavior policy.

I'd also note there are -- the "influence operations" definition more broadly. Just drawing from my time in government, these operations do tend to have kind of off-platform aspects to them, whether that is illicit finance or traditional intelligence activity. And so those are naturally areas that we wouldn't work on. It is just outside the purview of the company.

BY [redacted]

Q And who first identifies whether accounts are inauthentic? How do you determine if an account is inauthentic?

A So we would determine whether an account is inauthentic based on a combination of behavioral and technical signals. So whether they are, for example, misleading people about where they're located, claiming to be in one country but actually being in another country, and whether they might be, for example, using a profile photo that was generated by an AI system, for example, to try and look like someone else.

Those types of signals taken together would be a good indicator of inauthenticity.

Q And so is this information that Meta can find internally?

A Yes.

Q Has anyone outside of Meta identified inauthentic accounts for you?

A So people do frequently, I think, generally flag things that they find suspicious on the platform. But something that we're very careful to do is -- people are welcome to send us leads about potential suspicious activity.

We'll never take an enforcement action against whatever is being sent to us purely because someone sends us information about it. We'll always conduct kind of our own independent internal investigation into that activity. And if it meets our evidentiary threshold for enforcement, we might take the appropriate enforcement action, but that would be the process by which something like that would be evaluated.

Q Who are some of the people that will provide these leads? Are they users? Are they researchers?

A Both of those are good examples. Users, members of the public. People might report things in products, right, through our own reporting flows. And so there's any number of kind of people that could potentially report things to us.

Q Does the U.S. Government?

A The U.S. Government has, on occasion, flagged suspicious activity to us, yes.

Q Which agencies?

A Let me think. So the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force and the State Department's Global Engagement Center.

Q We'll engage in those in a moment.

A Sure.

Q Taking one step back, you mentioned you get a lead. If it meets an evidentiary threshold, you might take action. Can you say a little bit more? What is the evidentiary threshold?

A So, in a coordinated inauthentic behavior space, for example, what we would need to see are indications of coordination that the accounts in question, for example, are in fact connected to each other working together to do something, and that the something that they're doing is misleading users about who they are or what they're doing so they're inauthentic accounts and specifically that there is a core network of fake accounts at the heart of whatever that activity is, right? These aren't just a bunch of real people working together to do something that's just political work.

And so those would be kind of the core signals that we would rely on to determine if something was a CIB network.

Q And when you say "we" would do this, is this referring to you? Who else is involved with this determination?

A This would be the investigative team.

Q Okay. And who's on the investigative team?

A A number of folks on the investigative team. I don't know who all of them are.

Q Okay. How many?

A I'm actually not sure how many folks total there are on the investigative team either.

Q Can you provide a ballpark figure?

A I wouldn't want to speculate.

Q Are we talking over 50?

A Again, I wouldn't want to speculate. I just don't know the actual number.

Q So your team is only four people. So we're talking about a number of people who are not part of your team. Is that --

A That's correct, yes.

Q But you are one of the people that would partake in this investigation?

A That's right. We would work with the investigative team to make that final determination on whether something met our policy standards.

Q Okay. And who makes the final determination?

A So we evaluate -- so, for example, I would evaluate the outcome of a case against our policy standards and then make a recommendation as to whether it meets our standards.

Q And who are you making the recommendation to?

A Generally, I'll make that recommendation to my manager.

Q [redacted]?

A That's correct.

Q And does he make the final decision, then?

A Yes. Yes.

Q Okay. Can you say a little bit more? Where -- so the other folks who are on this investigative team, where do they fit within the company structure?

A So our investigative organization is kind of its own organization, and they work on kind of the same issues I had mentioned as well as a number of others that my team doesn't work on directly.

Q Okay. Are they contractors? Are they full-time employees?

A They are full-time employees.

Q Once you determine that an account is inauthentic, what remedies -- what are the options available to Meta besides a takedown?

A So, if we find that a network meets our coordinated inauthentic behavior policy threshold, that's a pretty severe violation of our community standards, right? That's not someone accidentally changing their name. It's a number of fake accounts that we've determined through, you know, a manual investigation are working together to mislead people.

And so the action that we take is removal of that entire network, the fake account network, any assets that that network controlled on the platform, for example, pages or groups, as well as accounts of the people who are running the fake account networks that might include authentic accounts.

If an account is suspected to be, for example, a fake account because they have a name that looks suspicious, for example, there's what we would call checkpoints and product checkpoints that we can use to allow someone to functionally either change their name or provide additional information to ensure that their account isn't incorrectly taken down.

Q Okay. Do you notify the account in advance, then?

A In advance of what?

Q Before any action is taken. Or is it only for -- sorry to cut you off -- you said there were two buckets. One is just an individual account, and one is what's believed to be a network of accounts. Am I correct in understanding?

A In cases --

[redacted] Sorry. Go ahead.

[redacted] Sorry. I was trying to let him finish the question.

[redacted] In cases where we find a coordinated inauthentic behavior network, we do not notify the accounts in advance. These are adversarial operations. So, if we were to notify them, they would likely just change their behavior to avoid our detection. And so we'll take those accounts down. The users who control those accounts do receive a notification after the account has been taken down.

Mr. Gaetz. Before we go deeper into enforcement, I want to ask a few questions about how the investigative team reports to you.

As I understand your testimony, users, groups, the government, can flag what they believe to be coordinated inauthentic activity. There's then this investigation period. The investigative team works with you to develop those facts based on the criteria you've laid out, and then you make a recommendation based on what you get from the investigative team. Have I understood that to be correct?

[redacted] Partly. One thing I want to clarify is -- so users, for example, could flag things to us. The majority of our investigations and takedowns are from what we call proactive leads. So our own investigative team is looking for operations from any number of foreign government actors.

Mr. Gaetz. And, for the sake of these questions, I'm going to ask -- I'm particularly interested in the government entities that are the genesis of these investigations.

And, as I understand your testimony, there's only two government entities that have ever flagged or initiated an investigation you've been a part of or you've given a recommendation on regarding coordinated inauthentic activity, and those are the Global Engagement Center at the Department of State and the Foreign Influence Task Force at the FBI.

Is there anyone else that we need to have on that list?

[redacted] That is -- so, to the best of my recollection, those are the U.S. Government agencies that I remember flagging things to us about coordinated inauthentic behavior operations.

Mr. Gaetz. And it seems as though, based on where you are in this decision pyramid, if there were any other government entities that were involved -- would be involved, you would probably know that, right?

[redacted] Meta is a large company. So I wouldn't want to presume that I would know for sure.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, for the sake of the committee's investigation, around coordinated inauthentic activity, if you aren't the one ultimately making the decision with the investigative team for a recommendation, who is?

[redacted] Ah, I see. I don't think there would be anyone else who is. But I also wouldn't want to assume that I -- that I know everything that's happening at the entire company.

Mr. Gaetz. No, I'm specifically asking about your portfolio --

[redacted] Understood.

Mr. Gaetz. -- of coordinated inauthentic activity.

And so, as I understand it, there would have to be -- there's this three-part test on the evidentiary threshold. It's coordination, one.

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Two, about something around the concealing of identity. And then, three, that it involves a core network of fake accounts.

Are there any other features of that test? I want to fully understand it.

[redacted] So those are the three parts of the test. So it's coordination, is there a network there, inauthenticity, and specifically, are the accounts misleading about who they are and what they're doing, and is there a core network of fake accounts as part of that network? That's correct.

Mr. Gaetz. So, when the investigative team concludes their -- are they briefing you on these things during the pendency of their investigation, or does the investigation conclude, and then they bring their findings to you?

[redacted] The investigation concludes, and then they'll present those findings to me.

Mr. Gaetz. And walk me through how that presentation occurs.

[redacted] Happy to.

So the presentation is structured, as you can imagine, around kind of those three tests, as well as a fourth question, which is, can we attribute the activity that we're seeing to a particular threat actor? Why? Because we release public reports on our coordinated inauthentic behavior takedowns, and so we want to understand whether we understand who is actually behind it; and if so, what our level of specificity and confidence in that attribution might be.

And so we'll essentially go through those questions. You know, what is the evidence of coordination, and what -- how would we -- how do we understand that coordination to have taken place? What is the evidence of inauthenticity? Where is the core deceptiveness here? And, you know, what does the fake account activity look like within this network? And then, finally, who do we think is behind it, and how confident are we in that attribution?

Oftentimes, that attribution might just be geographic. So we think that the operation originated in Iran. We have a number of takedowns that are just geographically attributed in that way.

Mr. Gaetz. And does this presentation occur in writing? In an oral briefing? With a deck?

[redacted] It depends. Generally, these are kind of an oral briefing to myself and the folks on my team who we talked about earlier where they'll walk through those findings that they have.

Mr. Gaetz. Is there any paper that a company has had a briefing?

[redacted] Not in the sense of, you know, signing a preread or something like that. That's not as common.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, I was wondering -- you know, oftentimes in large companies, there are forms that constitute the infrastructure for these types of reports.

Were there ever any forms that the investigative team would typically use to address these criteria?

[redacted] Yes. There's a -- so we had given them a template, functionally, of the core questions that we care about.

Mr. Gaetz. And, if the committee sought those templates, is that something that you could provide?

[redacted] Can we take a break?

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Are we back on the record?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, we're back on the record.

[redacted] Thank you. Sorry.

So, to your question, I'm happy to look into those documents and see what we can provide.

Mr. Gaetz. And I'm just trying to get a sense, like, of the frequent -- so, if there are these forms and these templates, and then there's this oral briefing, in more or less than half the cases, does that -- does a written response in that template accompany that oral briefing?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. More or less than half is my question.

[redacted] More than half, I would say.

Mr. Gaetz. So that would be more or less than three out of every four times?

[redacted] I'd say the majority of the time, we would have some sort of template that accompanies the oral briefing.

Mr. Gaetz. And Meta maintains those records?

[redacted] I'm not sure to what extent.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you maintain those records?

[redacted] I would imagine so, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. And who gives the oral briefing? Is it the same person, or do different people give the briefings?

[redacted] Different folks would give the briefings.

Mr. Gaetz. And when they would give those briefings, would it typically be one person giving the briefing to you on behalf of the entire investigative team, or would multiple members of the team participate in that briefing?

[redacted] Generally, it's one person presenting the investigative case.

Mr. Gaetz. So it would be one person meeting with you?

[redacted] Sorry. No. It would be one person presenting that case to myself and the members of my team who work on a particular issue. It's kind of the group that works on these issues.

Mr. Gaetz. And so you testified in response to my colleague's question that the four people who work for you are stovepiped in the particular areas that are in your portfolio.

So would you typically just have the one person with you from your team to receive that briefing, or would the five of you sit as a group to receive that briefing?

[redacted] It depends, I think, on the topic of the briefing.

Mr. Gaetz. And, when you receive those briefings, give me a sense of the frequency of volume. Is it something you are involved in daily? Weekly? Monthly?

[redacted] These briefings generally were weekly, unless there was nothing to talk about, and then they wouldn't happen.

Mr. Gaetz. Was it a, like, a set time for a stand-up to receive these briefings, or did it oscillate?

[redacted] It would often kind of move around.

Mr. Gaetz. But it was a weekly meeting? Every week, you expected it if there was material? So you would receive -- would you receive briefings on all the matters that had accrued during that time period during that one briefing?

[redacted] That's correct. So, if there were -- however many cases were ready and complete enough to be briefed at that week, then that would be what we would cover that week.

Mr. Gaetz. And then how should I understand the process -- after you've received that briefing usually with a written form provided to you, an oral component, and then you've got an obligation to make a recommendation to your supervisor, walk me through the things that you would do during that process other than, obviously, reflect on the briefing you received.

[redacted] Happy to.

So, generally, the briefing itself, right, was the core component of the decisionmaking process. So evaluating the information contained in the briefing against the tests that we had discussed earlier. Determining whether the information from the briefing met the bar for evidentiary standards that we talked about.

And then, at that point, I think, determine whether -- first off, the exigency of enforcement on that particular network, right? For example, if an operation -- a foreign government operation was targeting an election, and that election was coming up in the future, then there would be -- there's obviously a lot of exigency around enforcing on that type of an operation.

And then making a recommendation on enforcement to, as I mentioned, my manager.

Mr. Gaetz. Would the investigative team recommend a specific enforcement tool or action, or would they simply recommend that this was the type of matter that would require some enforcement?

[redacted] Because the enforcement under our CIB policies is relatively straightforward -- if it's CIB, we'd remove it from the platform -- the investigative team is really just recommending this case to meet that standard for enforcement or not.

Mr. Gaetz. So the investigative team's function is a binary one, as I understand it, right? It's either they're recommending for you to take an enforcement action or not, and then, in the process of you making your recommendation to your supervisor, you and your team members are not only making some judgment on that binary decision, but then you're also making recommendations as to the nature of the enforcement action?

[redacted] Maybe the way I would describe it is maybe a little bit different.

So the investigative team's responsibility was to aggregate their evidence and their assessment as to whether an operation should or should not meet the bar for coming to this review; ergo, the assumption was if it came to that review, the investigators at least felt that it met the bar for enforcement.

Our role was to ensure that that case actually met the bar for enforcement, so it fit the policy definition; that the evidence was sufficient in our estimation to apply the policy; and then to make the recommendation that, yes, no, this is a case that we should enforce against; and to flag any of those exigent circumstances as well.

Mr. Gaetz. But what I'm trying to understand is whether or not the job of the investigative team is to inform on the different enforcement tools that you would have at your disposal or if that's your part of the process.

[redacted] Understood. And I guess the reason I was answering the way I was is, in CIB, the coordinated inauthentic behavior, space, there's really one tool, which is removal of the network. And so I don't think we do as much of the informing on the best tool for enforcement just because --

Mr. Gaetz. There is but one enforcement action?

[redacted] Functionally, in the CIB space, that's correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you ever disagree with the recommendation from the investigative team during your time at Meta?

[redacted] I'm sure I have, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. What would you say the batting average was with you?

[redacted] The investigative teams, I think, were very good at their jobs. And so for a case to reach kind of the review phase, it was generally a very strong case. There weren't a ton of cases that didn't meet that standard.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it fair for the committee to understand that 90 percent of the cases that you reviewed or more met that standard?

[redacted] I wouldn't want to guess. Off the top of my head, I don't know what the proportion would be.

Mr. Gaetz. During the process -- well, were there ever any reports at Meta regarding frequency with which the investigative team's recommendations were taken or not taken by you?

[redacted] Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. You never participated in the assembly of any central points?

[redacted] That's correct.

Mr. Gaetz. In determining whether or not to take the recommendation of the investigative team, did you ever consult with anyone at Meta outside of your direct reports?

[redacted] I believe I occasionally would consult with our legal team.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm not going to ask you any questions about the substance of that.

[redacted] Appreciate that.

Mr. Gaetz. I can see your counsel fired up. He's doing his job. I understand.

Did you ever consult with anyone in the government as you were making a decision regarding whether to take action?

[redacted] Not that I recall.

Mr. Gaetz. Any of your former colleagues -- I mean, you worked a pretty high-level role at the National Security Council. I'm sure you interacted with a lot of folks who were pretty smart on a lot of these things.

Ever, while you were at Meta, did you seek any advice or counsel from any of your former government colleagues?

[redacted] So I spoke with some of my former government colleagues about a broad policy, kind of how to approach different aspects of the problem area around influence operations, but never, to my recollection, on any specific cases.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. And on those policy matters, who were those folks whose counsel you sought for advice?

[redacted] So let me see if I can remember who these people were. So the -- let's see.

I think most of the folks that I'm thinking of are former government officials at this point. Folks like [redacted] at Stanford, who used to work on cybersecurity issues in, I think, both the last two administrations.

I'm trying to think if there is anyone else that immediately jumps to mind. I think that's the only government folks that I have spoken with.

Mr. Gaetz. And [redacted], is he affiliated with any entity at Stanford that has a portfolio around -- [redacted] I believe he's a professor at Stanford on cybersecurity issues, at least to the best of my understanding.

Mr. Gaetz. And did he have that role when you reached out to him?

[redacted] I'm not sure what he was teaching at that point. That was relatively early in my time at the company.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you have any idea when that communication may have occurred?

[redacted] Not precisely, no. Again, probably early at my time in the company.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. And what was the policy matter you reached out to him to discuss?

[redacted] I'm digging way back. I believe that I reached out to him to discuss kind of the broad sense of how to narrow from the big influence operation definition we talked about earlier to something more operational and specific, particularly because in that early -- you know, late 2018 but early for me at Meta period -- there wasn't any clear consensus. I mean, I wouldn't argue there's consensus now, but there wasn't clear consensus around what permissible inauthentic behavior, for example, would look like, right, and how you draw a line between acceptable and unacceptable activity.

And so part of the coordinated inauthentic behavior policy, right -- the goal was to be really narrow, right, to fake account activity specifically, right? There's other ways people can accept it, but we wanted to make sure that we were biasing ourselves towards kind of the worst-of-the-worst activity.

Mr. Gaetz. Is it fair for the committee to understand that to be defined in the doctrine around the enforcement of some of these coordinated inauthentic activity endeavors?

[redacted] I might even -- I might even put it a bit more gently as understanding kind of the context. So how other people were thinking about this problem. You know, recognizing I was coming from government, so I had a perspective on the problem. But, you know, I was coming into a relatively new field for me, which was tech.

Mr. Gaetz. Thanks for answering my questions about the investigative process. I think my colleague has more questions about the enforcement --

[redacted] Can we take a break real quick? On one of your questions, I want to make sure we're giving you a fulsome answer.

Mr. Gaetz. We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record. Thanks.

[redacted] Thank you for the reminder.

So, on your question about consulting the government, I think there are other instances where I might have asked, for example, the government -- we mentioned FBI and GEC before -- for context on, for example, insights they might have into foreign activity or, you know, things that are happening out there in the world that might have a bearing on coordinated inauthentic behavior activity but not on specific cases that we are investigating.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, I want to make sure I understand that clarification.

[redacted] Sure.

Mr. Gaetz. So what entities of the government did you consult with for that purpose?

[redacted] So what I -- the entities that I can recollect interacting with, again, the Foreign Influence Task Force with the FBI, the Global Engagement Center at State, and then DHS' CISA agency, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. Those four entities were the ones that I, you know, recollect interacting with directly.

Mr. Gaetz. Great. I think that my colleague is going to ask you about each of those four with a little more particularity as we move forward.

BY [redacted]

Q If we could stay a little bit longer on the investigations subject.

You mentioned that you would receive leads from a number of people, researchers, people outside of Meta. What happens when you receive a lead? Do you send it to the investigations team? Is that something that you handle directly?

A It's not really something I handle directly.

Q Do people contact you directly, though?

A Some folks do, certainly. People manage to guess my email address every once in a while.

Q And, when that occurs, do you forward it to the investigation -- what happens outside of you handling the request?

A Gotcha. So, generally, I'll forward it to the investigative folks to review.

Q Do you have a sense of how -- to use the Congressman's term -- what batting average the folks outside of Meta have when they forward either a network or account that they suspect to be inauthentic?

A I don't know off the top of my head kind of a sense of how accurate or inaccurate outside leads are.

Q Presumably less than your internal team?

A I think that's a fair estimate, yeah.

Q Do they follow up with you when they make that request?

A Some folks do, certainly, follow up.

Q And, in terms of the interactions you've had with different government agencies, you identified the Foreign Influence Task Force and the GEC as two that would send you leads.

Did CISA or ODNI also send you leads?

A Not to my recollection, no.

Q Okay. How frequently would either the Foreign Influence Task Force or GEC send you a lead?

A I don't know if there was a terribly regular cadence to that. It would kind of be ad hoc flagging if there was -- my sense is if there was a specific issue that either of those organizations was aware of or tracking.

Q Do you have a sense of how frequently, though, they might occur ad hoc?

A A couple months, maybe.

Q One every couple months? Is that correct?

A Yeah, something to that effect. But, again, it's hard to estimate exactly.

Q And, when it's the government providing this lead as opposed to a researcher or someone outside of Meta, is that paid -- is that treated any differently? Do you follow up on that request?

A My team will handle that kind of the same way we would handle a lead from an external researcher. So forward it along for review, and if our own kind of independent investigation were to find that the activity violated our policies, enforce against that activity.

[10:59 a.m.]

[redacted] And do you know approximately how successful the government's leads were?

[redacted] I don't know off the top of my head, no.

[redacted] Did it strike you as more or less than your internal team?

[redacted] I think our internal teams have reasonably high fidelity in their own investigations, naturally, because they have visibility into the platform. So I would imagine less.

Mr. Gaetz. Can you recall any circumstance in which a government lead did not meet the criteria you've laid out for an enforcement action?

[redacted] I can't recall a specific case.

Mr. Gaetz. So in every case you can recall, what the government sought, the government got.

[redacted] No. I know that not every case met the bar. It's just I can't remember, like, a specific case where that would have been.

Mr. Gaetz. So if we ask for all of these reports and records of these meetings that occurred where you were briefed from the investigative team and from the government, I'm not -- we're not particular -- we're not as interested as when nongovernment entities are involved.

But when the government is presenting a lead, we would like to know how those turned out from Meta's standpoint. Is that something Meta can provide the committee?

[redacted] Again, happy to look into that and see.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you maintain records that would evidence in each circumstance in which there was a government-generated lead that that lead resulted in an enforcement action?

[redacted] I'm not sure. But, again, happy to look into that to see if it's something --

Mr. Gaetz. You're not sure that you maintain records that would show the trajectory of these government leads?

[redacted] Again, I'm not sure the extent of what records we maintain. But I'm happy to look into it and get back to the committee on it.

BY [redacted]

Q When there is false positives, if that's the proper term, what is the most common reason why that an outsider thinks this is inauthentic behavior but Meta internally determines that it's not?

A Most commonly outside entities tend to make two mistakes. Addressing -- identifying content that matches with other previously identified influence operations and then using that content to say that something else is part of that operation.

We discussed a bit earlier how that can cause problems, particularly as operations tend to reuse content from other places.

And the second one would just be kind of identifying accounts as fake because they exhibit signals that may look externally suspicious but in reality the accounts are not fake. It's very common with, for example, activists in less democratic countries tend to want to obscure their activity by some degree.

Q You mentioned earlier that you consulted with former government officials and folks from the government regarding Meta's policy at a high level.

A Uh-huh.

Q And that had to do with looking at influence operations and kind of condensing that down to coordinated inauthentic behavior.

A Uh-huh.

Q Were there other policies that you consulted with the government on?

A Not that I can recall. Yeah, not that I can recall.

Q You said that hack-and-leak concerns, hack-and-leak operations, that would fall under your team's purview.

A The hack-and-leak policy specifically would fall under our team's purview.

Q Is that a policy you worked on directly?

A Yes.

Q How has it changed since you first joined Meta?

A The hack-and-leak, as you can imagine, hack-and-leak has been an issue that security teams, not just ours but across industry and government, have been focused on for several years now.

There were hack-and-leak operations that were identified going back to 2016, linked to Russian military intelligence services. There were hack-and-leak operations targeting the Macron election in France after that. And then there have been a number of hack-and-leak operations linked to a number of different foreign intelligence actors in countries all over the world since then.

So, naturally, hack-and-leak was one of the various threat factors that we were focused on and wanted to make sure that we were both keeping abreast of and being cautious to make sure we weren't allowing the platform to be manipulated in any way.

And so the hack-and-leak policy which we had developed functionally focused on three main areas.

So, first, determining whether the material that we were evaluating was obtained by a hacked, from a hacked source; i.e., was it obtained by someone with authorization to access that material?

Second was the material being disseminated with an intent to deceive? And that functionally on our platform, what that would mean is, is there indicia of deception, is there fake account usage or fake accounts being used to disseminate the material?

And then, third, was the material being disseminated on behalf of or at the direction of a foreign government influence operation?

And so that's the three-part test of the hack-and-leak policy, and that's functionally what the policy was in my time at Meta.

Q And was that -- so that was the case when you first started back in 2018 to today? When did this three-part test come into being?

A To the best of my recollection, the policy was developed in early to mid-2020.

Q And what was --

[redacted] I'm sorry? When?

[redacted] In early to mid-2020?

BY [redacted]

Q And what was the policy before then?

A I understand there are other policies at the company that can apply to hacked materials. They're not policies that I work on, but I know that those existed prior to the hack-and-leak policy being developed.

Q And did you ever consult with the government regarding your -- or regarding Meta's hack-and-leak policy?

A I recollect that we discussed the fact of us working on hack-and-leak issues in meetings with the government, but I don't believe we consulted with the government on the policy itself.

Q Okay. Did the government ever contact you to comment on your hack-and-leak policy?

A Not to my recollection.

[redacted] Do you know where we are on time?

[redacted] You have about a minute.

[redacted] You have about a minute and 37 seconds left.

BY [redacted]

Q When did those meetings occur?

A Which meetings?

Q The meetings you just referenced where there was a discussion of Meta's hack-and-leak policy with the government?

A I believe the summer of 2020.

Q And which entities were those discussions happening with?

A That would be the Foreign Influence Task Force, DHS, CISA, and ODNI.

[redacted] Were these one-on-one meetings or were other companies invited as well?

[redacted] These meetings, these were multiple companies, and then the government agencies I mentioned.

[redacted] Do you remember who instigated these meetings? Was it on the government end, or was it from industry's end?

[redacted] I don't know who instigated the meetings.

[redacted] We're at time. I was wondering if we could take a break off the record. Thanks.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We're ready to go back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q And, [redacted], my name's [redacted] I'm counsel for the minority. And on behalf of the minority, we want to thank you for appearing here voluntarily today.

I want to ask you some follow-up questions about your background, and I will preface that by saying that everything I'm asking you is based on what's on your LinkedIn. So I'm not going to be asking you anything -- for you to reveal any confidential or classified information.

A Uh-huh.

Q So your first job with the government was at the Department of Defense?

A That's correct.

Q And you worked there as an analyst?

A That's correct.

Q And you focused on Russian counterintelligence?

A In the course of my work at the Department of Defense, that was one of the areas that I focused on, yes.

Q Okay. And the other areas were cybersecurity?

A That's correct. And briefly counternarcotics.

Q Counternarcotics. Okay. Thank you.

And you started working there in 2012?

A That's correct.

Q And when did you leave the Department of Defense?

A I left the Department of Defense in August of 2018.

Q Okay. So you worked at the Department of Defense through two Presidential administrations, correct?

A That's correct.

Q You worked there under former President Obama.

A That's right.

Q And former President Trump.

A Uh-huh.

Q And in addition to working as an analyst, you served on former President Trump's transition team, correct?

A So I served on the Department's transition team, supporting the campaigns during the election.

Q And I'm sorry, his transition team, supporting the Department's transition team.

A Correct. Yes. I was still a government Federal employee, supporting kind of questions that would come to us from the campaigns.

Q And you were the National Security Council's engagement lead for that transition team.

A That's correct.

Q And you began that work in 2016.

A That's correct.

Q And in 2017 -- or was it 2017 or 2018 that you went to work at the White House?

A 2017.

Q Okay. 2017.

And specifically you were the Director for Intelligence at the National Security Council.

A That's correct.

Q And, again, that was under President Trump.

A That's correct.

Q And there you oversaw the White House's efforts to improve the U.S. Government cybersecurity?

A Yes. That was one of the areas of my portfolio.

Q Okay. And remind me what the other areas of your portfolio were, please.

A So the U.S. Government's technical collection programs and the administration's foreign malign influence strategy, which was a part of the National Security Strategy process.

Q Okay. And when you say foreign malign influence, can you explain what you mean by that?

A Yes. At the time we were concerned about foreign governments attempting to influence people in the United States, clandestinely and overtly, as well as attempting to kind of challenge American national interests around the world. And so we were working to kind of create a holistic U.S. Government strategy to essentially counter that type of activity.

Q Okay. Can you explain why that type of activity, why foreign influence, we'll start with in the United States, is harmful?

A Happy to.

So we were working on the issue, one, to continue to preserve kind of America's ability to operate commercially and to maintain our diplomatic relationships around the world, many of those relationships which were being targeted by some of these countries that wanted to, for example, undermine our relationship with our partners in Europe.

Inside of the United States we also wanted to ensure that foreign government intelligence services, for example, couldn't operate with impunity or couldn't target

Americans, particularly on our soil. And so we wanted to ensure that departments and agencies were working together appropriately to enable that kind of countering mission.

Q Based on your extensive experience with those issues and the national security, can you explain how foreign governments, particularly the ones you dealt with, Russia, Iran, and I assume China as well --

A That's correct.

Q -- used social media platforms like Facebook and Instagram to exert influence in the United States?

A So we will see -- influence operations, let's start with clandestine influence activity, from the countries you mentioned, as well as a number of others around the world, will often leverage a number of different, say, services.

So one of those might be social media platforms. Another would be internet properties like websites, file sharing services, chat capabilities like Telegram, for example, as well as off-platform activity.

So you could see that as, for example, covert or illicit finance, so economic activity targeting a particular country or region of the world, and traditional intelligence tradecraft, so recruiting sources to act as agents of influence in countries around the world.

Specifically on the social media piece, there are a couple of ways that a foreign government might attempt to take action on a social media platform.

One would be through the use of fake accounts designed to enable intelligence activity. And so that could look like what we call this kind cyber espionage cycle. So identifying potential targets for hacking based on their publicly facing personas or socially engineering a target to visit a malicious link, download a malicious chat application, compromise their devices in one way or another.

The second way that we could see a foreign government try to use a social media platform would be through clandestine influence activity. And that can look like one of two things.

It could look like a network of fake accounts engaged in coordinated inauthentic behavior where the goal is to try and target people on that platform with some sort of narrative that they're trying to push.

It can also look like using one platform to enable activity on another platform. As, for example, my team at Meta has been aggressively going after these types of influence operations. What we've seen is a migration to target other platforms on the internet where they might try to create fake accounts on Facebook, for example.

They don't really do much but serve as a backstop to functionally provide a little more credibility to an identity that might be active somewhere else on the internet.

Q And is it fair to say that foreign governments also use social media platforms like Facebook and Instagram to interfere in elections in this country and around the world?

A I think it's fair to say we've seen foreign governments engage in clandestine influence activity around elections, both in the U.S. and around the world.

I think something interesting from many of these investigations is that the influence activity often both predates the election itself and may intensify around an election. An election may be a particular time of interest. But operations were rarely just an election-specific, for example.

Q Okay. Fair enough.

And this happens not just in the United States but in other democratic countries as well, that hold elections.

A That's correct.

Q And engaging in or claiming to engage in foreign or government interference violates Meta's community standards, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And the community standards might be known as terms of service at other companies.

A That's fair to say, yes.

Q Okay. And based on your experience, if your team did not work to combat foreign influence through combating CIB, what type of content would you expect to appear on your platform? How would the platform look different if you weren't shutting down these networks?

A So --

Q I should say platforms. Sorry.

A I think at its core, one of the -- we do this work for a number of reasons. So we want to protect people on the platform. We want to protect kind of the authenticity of debate on the platform.

It's also an important part of our business. People want to join communities that they feel comfortable being themselves in. They want to interact with people that they feel -- they can feel a degree of confidence are who they say they are.

And so one of the important reasons we do this work is because we need to ensure that operations like these aren't undermining the trust of users in our platforms.

And I do think the work is very important in particular because these operations -- the threat actors behind these operations are often inherently adversarial.

Q Can I ask, adversarial in what way? What do you mean by that?

A What I mean by that is when we take an enforcement action, publish a blog post, for example, detailing our findings in an investigation, we see the threat actors aggressively try to reconstitute their activity on our platforms and change their tactics, techniques, procedures, TTPs, to try and avoid our detection.

And so, though our enforcement kind of encompasses the on-platform investigations we do and the takedowns that we do, attempts to improve our products, the investigative work is really important because it's how we try to stay ahead of the way that these adversarial actors evolve.

Q And when -- I want to go back a little bit to your -- the definition of coordinated inauthentic behavior. We talked about how it is three-prong attack. The first is coordination, as the name would imply.

A Right.

Q The second is some sort of inauthentic behavior, correct? It's not necessarily limited to concealing identity. Is that correct?

A I would describe it as attempts to mislead users about who they are and what they're doing, is I think the way we've described it, as well, in some of our clarifying blog posts.

Q So it could include misleading users about what country they're operating from.

A Yes.

Q Okay. So somebody poses as a news organization in the United States but they're really Russian operatives, working on behalf of the Russian Government.

A That would be a hypothetical example, but yes.

Q Exactly. Okay.

And as you just explained, Meta has its own, fair to say, business interest in fighting this type of behavior so that users can trust the content that they find on your platforms.

A That's right.

Q Now, I want to talk a little bit about some of the government agencies and groups that you discussed earlier.

You talked about the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force.

A Uh-huh.

Q Is Meta's participation in the task force voluntary?

A So just to clarify, so the task force, my understanding, is an organization within the FBI. Our interactions with the task force are voluntary to my knowledge.

Q Okay. Thank you. And I appreciate that clarification.

A You're welcome.

Q Did anyone from the FBI or any other government agency ever tell Meta that it was required to meet with the task force or engage with them in any way?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Why does Meta interact with the task force?

A As I mentioned, we have a core business interest in countering this type of activity.

And I think something you'd also referenced earlier is these operations are often inherently cross-platform and inherently off-platform, and our visibility as a technology platform company is, I think reasonably should be, cabins to activity on our platforms.

And so other entities -- the FBI is a good example of that -- may have more insight into aspects of these operations as they occur off of our platform or on other parts of the internet.

And so it is in our interest to have that line of communication to find out more about an operation that might -- maybe it didn't attack Facebook but is trying to target Facebook where we just wouldn't have that visibility ourselves.

Q Okay. So it helps Meta and Facebook to ensure the security of your platforms to participate in these relationships.

A That's correct.

[redacted] Okay. And if we could have just a minute.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]

Q So you stated earlier that when Meta receives information about accounts that potentially violate its CIB policy, it never takes action without conducting its own investigation, correct?

A To my knowledge, in the areas I work on, that's our process, yes.

Q Okay. And if you receive a tip from a government agency, such as the FBI or the State Department, it's Meta that determines whether or not an enforcement action is going to be taken, not the government, correct?

A That's correct, yes, pursuant to our own internal investigative findings.

Q And sometimes, as you discussed, Meta does conclude that the account that was flagged for them by the FBI or the State Department is in violation of its CIB policy and it will remove that network.

A That's correct.

Q And when that happens, again, that's Meta's decision, not the government's.

A That's correct, based on our own internal investigative findings.

Q Okay. And you were asked if you can remember specific examples of instances where you, Meta, received a tip from a government agency that Meta determined did not rise to the level of CIB.

And if I recall correctly, you were not able to remember specifics but you do know that that did happen, that there were instances when it happened. You just can't remember the specifics of the investigation.

A That is correct, yes.

Q Okay. And, again, in those instances, it would be Meta making its own determination that the tip did not produce evidence sufficient to conclude that a network or a group of accounts were engaged in CIB.

A That's correct, yes.

Q And if there's no violation, then Meta takes no action against the account, even if it's been flagged for you, if there's no violation of your terms of service or your community standards.

A That would be correct, yes.

Q To your knowledge, has anyone in the FBI or the State Department or any other government agency ordered Meta to take down an account, page, or other content?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q And to your knowledge, has anyone in the FBI or any other government agency tried to coerce or pressure Meta into taking an account down or other content?

A Again, not to my knowledge.

Q And there are limits to Meta's willingness to cooperate with the government, correct?

So, for example, if the government requests information from Meta or from your team that requires legal process to provide, Meta will not provide that information unless it receives the correct legal process, correct?

A That would be my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And Meta will not share the methods and the algorithms it uses to detect CIB in its internal investigations with the government, correct?

A Yes, that's my understanding, yes.

Q That's proprietary information that Meta is unwilling to share.

A I wouldn't know the specific reason why, but my understanding is we wouldn't share that information.

Q Fair enough.

And you spoke earlier about how Meta's CIB policy is -- I believe the phrase you used was "content agnostic." Is that another way of saying it's content neutral?

A The reason I say "content agnostic" is because contents isn't a factor in our investigation.

Q Okay.

A It's not something we spend time reviewing or assessing to make the policy determination.

Q And I believe you made this clear, but CIB networks can be engaged in this coordinated inauthentic behavior even if the content that their accounts are posting is accurate.

A That -- well, that's correct, right. The content can be benign, right, something completely unrelated.

Q Like puppies or kittens.

A Correct. But if the network itself is engaged in deceptive behavior then yeah.

Q Okay. And, again, you target -- so you target the deceptive behavior of hiding the identity or the location of who's running that account.

A That's correct.

Q Regardless of what they're posting.

A That's correct.

Q And Meta's CIB policy was developed in around 2019? Is that right?

A I think the policy was developed before then. I believe the policy actually predates my time at the company.

Q Okay. And so it was developed during the Trump administration.

A That's correct.

Q Now, you talked about how when Meta determines or when you determine that a group of accounts constitutes a CIB network, there's only one enforcement action, right? And that enforcement action is removing all the networks associated with that account, correct?

A That's correct, all the assets.

Q All the assets. Okay.

And there are some deceptive behaviors on your platforms that don't rise to the level of CIB. Is that correct?

A So we have a policy we call inauthentic behavior, which CIB is part of. That includes some other behaviors. That is correct.

Q Okay. And can you explain what some of them are?

A Sure. The inauthentic behavior policy is designed to get at a number of other behaviors. Many of these are behaviors that you see commonly from spam operations or scam operations and generally revolve around attempting to artificially increase the distribution of content or evade our spam detection systems.

Naturally, like most platforms, Meta has limits on how often a single account can do certain things like share a link, post content, what have you, to try to limit spam activity. And we'll frequently see spam actors, for example, creating multiple accounts to try and evade those limitations.

That would be, I think, maybe the most salient example of one of the types of inauthentic behavior.

Q And for those types of inauthentic behavior that are less sophisticated than your typical CIB network, there are more scaled enforcement measures than just removal. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And that includes warnings?

A It does.

Q In an attempt to remediate the behavior?

A Correct, yes, to essentially make sure that the user in question understands that the behavior they're engaged in violates our policies and give them an opportunity to remediate that behavior.

Q And it also includes down rankings or making sure the content doesn't appear on people's feeds as often?

A That is one of the levers, as well, so that if a spam network is attempting to essentially get more distribution, to ensure that that spam content isn't getting pushed to too many people.

Q So for some forms of inauthentic behavior, removal is not automatic.

A That's correct.

Q But for CIB, it is.

A Correct.

Q And can you explain again why, why that's the case, why such an extreme measure for CIB?

A Happy to.

So the reason why our approach to CIB is functionally binary, right, remove or don't remove, is because coordinated inauthentic behavior operations are not just adversarial. They're a very serious violation of our platform in terms of community standards and the trust of our users and the degree of deception.

So the core use of a network of fake accounts to try and mislead users is something we take extremely seriously. We don't want people on the platform to be subjected to a network of fake accounts trying to mislead them. And so we kind of take a definitive action to remove that entire network.

In the inauthentic behavior space, it is possible for an overzealous or particularly active user to come up against some of our spam thresholds. And we wouldn't want to take a -- for example, remove someone's account who did not know that their activity was approaching one of those thresholds, if it was truly kind of an honest mistake.

So giving them an opportunity to remediate by giving them a warning and then giving them an opportunity to remediate by, for example, limiting their ability to post links as frequently for a period of time gives people an off-ramp to avoid removal, losing their account over activity they may not have known violated our policies.

Q And one of the reasons why CIB is just removal of all assets is because the very nature of CIB is that it's not something you can engage in by mistake.

A That's correct, yes.

Q Right? Okay.

Now, CIB is not just a problem in the United States, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Meta has encountered CIB networks that originate in other countries?

A Yes.

Q And you've encountered CIB networks that target other countries.

A Yes.

Q And you coauthored a report about CIB on your platforms between 2017 and 2020, correct?

A Yes.

Q And in that report you found that of the top five sources -- source countries of CIB networks, Russia had the most CIB networks during that time period?

A Yes.

Q Followed by Iran.

A Yes.

Q And then Myanmar?

A That's correct.

Q And then the U.S. was fourth.

A Yes.

Q And China is also a major source of CIB networks?

A We have had -- we haven't seen a ton of operations from China. I believe we've seen three. And those -- part of the reason why -- we talked about this a bit in that paper -- is that our platforms are not accessible to users in China.

And we generally have seen Chinese operations targeting either the domestic population in China or countries immediately neighboring China. And given the inaccessibility of our platforms, our assessment at least is that it seems like a less viable vector to reach their target audiences.

Q That makes sense. And it brings up a point I was just about to ask.

So some CIB networks target audiences in the country in which they're based, correct?

A Yes.

Q So Russian CIB networks would target Russia audiences.

A That's correct.

Q And some CIB networks target audiences in other countries.

A That's correct.

Q So Russian CIB networks might target audiences here in the United States.

A Yes.

Q As well as in other countries.

A Yes.

Q So this isn't a particularly American phenomenon.

A Yes. I think that's a fair characterization.

Q So just as some examples. In December of 2020, back when the company was called Facebook, it removed three separate CIB networks in France and Russia for violating its policy against foreign interference.

A Yes.

Q And those campaigns targeted countries in North Africa and the Middle East.

A I believe you if you say so. It was a little bit ago.

Q Fair enough. Fair enough. The point being that there are many examples of networks you've taken down that don't involve activity in the United States at all.

A That's correct. I think something else in the white paper from 2020 was that the majority of the operations that we saw were from outside the United States.

Q In effect, during that period from 2017 to 2020 Facebook removed only nine CIB networks in the United States.

Does that sound right?

A I don't remember the exact number, but yeah.

Q Now, Meta does not try to hide its CIB enforcement actions from the public, does it?

A That's correct. We're public about our enforcements.

Q And you're public by publishing regular reports about CIB takedowns, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And do you publish them monthly?

A We publish them quarterly now.

Q Quarterly now. Was it monthly at some point?

A It was monthly at some point and then ad hoc prior to that point.

Q And there are some circumstances where Meta will publish reports of CIB enforcement actions -- and, by that, I mean removal of a CIB network -- at the time of the action, correct?

A That's correct, yes.

Q And that happens when the activity is related to a civic event?

A Generally, yes.

Q Or if it poses -- if the activity, the CIB activity, poses imminent harm?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q Or if it involves a new technique or a new significant bad actor.

A That's right.

Q And those are all circumstances under which at the time you take down the network you will publish a report letting the public all over the world know, hey, look, we took down this network.

A That's correct.

Q And in those reports you describe where the network was based?

A Uh-huh.

Q If you've been able to attribute it to a particular either government entity or private entity, you will describe that.

A That's correct.

Q And you'll describe the tactics that they use.

A That's correct, yes.

Q And you will at least in a broad level describe how Meta was able to identify the network as a CIB network.

A That's correct.

Q The connections between --

A Essentially the tactic, the TTPs that they use that also generally meet our policy thresholds. That's right.

Q And Meta reports these takedowns publicly because transparency helps build trust in your enforcement strategy, correct?

A That's part of the reason. We also report them publicly because clandestine operations generally want to remain clandestine.

And by publicizing their activity, we also are hoping to inform users on our platform of what to look out for, to inform other folks in the industry whose platforms might be targeted by this activity what to look out for.

And also I think increasingly importantly to ensure that there is kind of authoritative analysis of these operations to counterbalance the claims that we'll even see some of the operations make about their own effectiveness. Frequently, info ops will claim to be much more effective than they were. So by uncovering that helps.

Q Is that what you refer to in some of your papers as perception hacking?

A That's correct.

Q So that's when an influence operation claims, oh, we've been able to target this many people or we're going to be able to sway such-and-such election when, in fact, they don't have --

A That's right.

Q -- nearly that type of reach.

A Yes. Or claims to have -- to exist, right, claims to have a bunch of fake account or assets somewhere on the internet when in reality they don't.

Q Okay. And because Meta reports its CIB takedowns publicly and includes all the information that you just discussed, others, like members of this committee, can review all of your enforcement actions.

A That's correct.

Q Now, you spoke briefly about Meta's hack-and-leak policy, and I wanted to clarify a couple of things about that briefly.

First, you stated, I believe, that the policy was developed in early to mid-2020, to the best of your recollection?

A To the best of my recollection, yes.

Q And was there a hack-and-leak policy specifically at Meta before then?

A Not that I recall.

Q And I believe you stated that the policy was developed, at least in part, in response to hack-and-leak activities that were observed during the 2016 election.

A Yes. And I think in responses to the broader context around hack-and-leak that hack-and-leak had been an issue that had come up in several elections at that point and an issue that was, I think, particularly in the public space, being discussed as a potential threat ahead of the 2020 elections.

Q And it was an issue that I believe you stated you discussed in some of your meetings with government agencies.

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And to be clear, you discussed the hack-and-leak context generally and the need to guard against hack-and-leak.

A That's my recollection, in particular the need for the broader society, industry, government to be aware of the risk of hack-and-leak operations.

Q Okay. And to be clear, you did not discuss with the government what Meta's hack-and-leak policy should be.

A That's correct.

[redacted] Okay. If I can take just a moment.

All right. That's it for me for now. I might have, depending on what happens in the next round, might have some more for you.

But we can go ahead -- I don't know if you folks want to take another break.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[12:32 p.m.]

[redacted] On the record, please.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall who hired you at Meta? Was [redacted] [redacted] involved?

A Yes. It was [redacted].

Q And was he familiar with your background, your experience with DOD and at the White House?

A Yes, I imagine he was.

Q And would that include your experience working with Russian counterintelligence-related issues?

A That's correct.

Q And would you consider yourself to be an expert on those sorts of issues?

A I would.

Q How many people at Meta have your level of expertise?

A I wouldn't want to guess.

Q Can you provide a ballpark figure?

A I can't. Quite a number of employees.

Q Do you think it's many?

A Again, I don't know.

Q Would you describe your boss as having that level of expertise?

A On what particular issues?

Q Issues related to Russian counterintelligence.

A I would.

Q What about the four members of your team? Is that an issue that you -- an experience that you looked for when determining whether to hire them or not?

A Experience with Russian counterintelligence issues, no, it wasn't a particular issue I was looking for.

[redacted] I'm sorry. I'm going have to ask again.

[redacted] I'm sorry. I'll speak up a bit.

[redacted] If there were an issue related to Russian counterintelligence or coordinated inauthentic behavior believed to be originating from Russia, who is someone at Meta that you would contact to discuss that issue?

[redacted] Generally, I would involve our investigative teams and whoever on my team works on that particular issue.

[redacted] Do any of your former colleagues from DOD or the NSC work with you at Meta now?

[redacted] I don't believe so.

[redacted] Are you familiar with Mark Zuckerberg's interview with Joe Rogan from August of 2022?

[redacted] I know that he did an interview with Joe Rogan. I haven't watched the entire interview.

[redacted] During that interview, Mark Zuckerberg stated that the -- well, let me take a step back.

Are you familiar with the Hunter Biden laptop story from October of 2020?

[redacted] Can we just note the Congressman has joined the room? So we've got an additional person here.

[redacted] Sorry. Can you restate it one more time?

[redacted] Are you familiar with the October 2020 New York Post story regarding Hunter Biden's laptop?

[redacted] Yes, I am familiar with the story.

[redacted] Are you familiar with the -- during the August 2022 interview with Mr. Zuckerberg, he says that Meta, then Facebook, reduced how many people could see the story for a period of roughly five to seven days?

[redacted] Before you answer, another individual's entered the room, I think on the minority staff.

[redacted] [redacted]

[redacted] Thanks a lot.

[redacted] I'm sorry. If you could repeat the question. I didn't hear it.

[redacted] Sure.

Are you familiar that during the August 2022 interview, Mr. Zuckerberg discusses the steps that Meta, now Facebook -- excuse me -- Meta, then Facebook, took regarding the October 2020 New York Post story involving Hunter Biden's laptop?

[redacted] I'm not. I didn't listen to the entire interview.

[redacted] During the interview, Mr. Zuckerberg stated that it was about a period for seven -- quote, "five to seven days."

[redacted] Are you quoting from something? Could you give it to us?

[redacted] Yeah, we can introduce the transcript as an exhibit.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] This is -- who transcribed -- is this your representation that this is a full transcript of the audio?

[redacted] It is.

[redacted] Because it's not -- it looks like something that you-all might have typed up. And it's excerpted, not the entire transcript.

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] So it's not actually a transcript. It's an excerpted transcript.

[redacted] This is an excerpted transcript.

Mr. [redacted] Okay. Great.

[redacted] So if I can call your attention to the 6:08 mark. Mr. Zuckerberg states: "For the I think it was five or seven days when it was basically being, being determined whether it was false, the distribution on Facebook was decreased but people were still allowed to share it, so you could still share it; you could still consume it."

Joe Rogan states: "When you say the distribution has decreased --"

Mark Zuckerberg states: "It got shared --"

Joe Rogan says: "How does that work?"

Mark Zuckerberg: "Basically, the ranking in news feed was a little bit less. So, fewer people saw it than would have otherwise, so it definitely --"

Joe Rogan states: "By what percentage?"

Mark Zuckerberg: "I don't know off the top of my head, but it's, it's, it's meaningful."

To the extent of your knowledge, is Mr. Zuckerberg's characterization of the response Facebook took true?

[redacted] And I want to just object to the introduction, since I don't know that this is actually what the real transcript says. But we're going to take your word for it.

And you can answer the question if you know.

[redacted] So the issues that Mr. Zuckerberg is describing here are not issues that I work on directly at the company. So I wouldn't want to speculate on what other actions were or weren't taken.

[redacted] Okay. What is the term at Meta to describe the type of action taken? Would it be throttling the story? De-amplification? What terminology within Meta would that be referring to?

[redacted] So, again, I, because I didn't work on this particular aspect of our content policies, I am not sure what the term would be.

[redacted] Okay. If, stepping outside from this particular example, if someone wanted to reduce a story on the news feed, the terminology within Meta, understanding that this is outside your team's scope, but you don't know the term that would be used by Meta to describe what's occurring?

[redacted] I don't know the precise term that would be used to describe this type of, I guess -- what was the wording he used -- decrease in distribution, again, because it's a different set of policies and enforcements than what I cover.

[redacted] Who would be in charge of those policies and enforcement?

[redacted] So that would generally fall within our misinformation work, but I don't know who would be in charge of that specific program.

[redacted] Is there a specific team at Facebook that's involved with misinformation?

[redacted] We have a misinformation policy team.

BY [redacted]

Q When did you first learn that Facebook took action with respect to the story?

A So I first -- we first learned about the story when it came out the morning of the 14th of October.

And, I mean, so my reaction was we had been aware of the potential risks around, for example, hack-and-leak going all the way back to the 2016 election, the 2018 election, the Macron elections, and the broader public discussion around hack-and-leak as a risk.

And so my primary concern was, one, make sure that we're being cautious, evaluating the information that we had before we could make a determination under the hack-and-leak policy, which was within my remit, and that we were acting responsibly to ensure that our platform wasn't being misused in some way.

So I think that's kind of when at least my awareness of the story began.

Q Okay. So the story, as you said, came out early in the morning on October 14th.

A Right.

Q Walk me through. You go to work. Who first puts the story on your radar? Are you instructed to take a look into it, or is this something that you did on your own initiative?

A My recollection was -- so this was still during the COVID period, so I was working from home at that time.

My recollection is that I saw the story in the press, like most people did, and that, again, my initial reaction was make sure we're being cautious here but we're also being responsible, making sure the platform isn't being misused in some way.

And so I don't recall whether I independently started -- decided to look into this or not. But I knew that it was something that we needed to make sure we were trying to get right.

Q And how many people did you have on your team at this time? You mentioned that your team was growing.

A I believe I had five direct reports at that point.

Q And who did you -- when you say you've taken a look, are you doing this independently? Are you working with your team members?

[redacted] Can we ask him one question at a time? Because that way it's easier for him to answer.

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q In the morning, who else were you working with on this issue?

A When the story first appeared, I was working with our legal team, our investigators, and our comms partner.

Q And what were the initial steps that you took?

A So my work relevant to the story was really cabined to that hack-and-leak policy. And so the goal was to try to understand what we knew relative to those three kind of prongs of the hack-and-leak policy. Was the material obtained from a hacked source? Was it being disseminated on the platform through deceptive means? Was it being disseminated on behalf of or at the direction of a foreign government influence operation?

Naturally, right when the story first came out, there wasn't a lot of information accessible to answer those three questions.

As far as whether this story met any of the -- whether this story was the result of a hack, for example, the information accessible at the time was what was in the story itself, which wasn't clear whether or not the information was obtained in an unauthorized manner or not.

And we began looking into whether there was deceptive dissemination on the platform and tried to ascertain whether anything that we could uncover in our investigation would help answer whether there was a foreign government influence operation linked to the dissemination of the story.

Q If I could take one step back.

A Sure.

Q You mentioned earlier, with coordinated inauthentic behavior, there had to be an evidentiary threshold before Meta would take action.

A Uh-huh.

Q Did a simpler -- did a similar process apply with respect to your hack-and-leak policy where action would only be taken if an evidentiary threshold was met?

A Yes, in that those three factors would have to be present for us to take an enforcement action.

Q If there were -- let me ask. What is the evidentiary standard? So I'm sure it's not 100 percent proof.

A We would need to have evidence for those three factors that we could kind of validate ourselves. Our on-platform evidence is obviously the strongest evidence we would have that we could be highly confident in, which is an analytic estimate of language. And there's always going to be some difficulty in defining analytic estimate of language.

Q If we could walk through each of those elements.

A Sure.

Q First, whether it was hacked. On the morning of the 14th, what information did you have available and what determination was made with respect to that first element?

A On the first element, from what I recall, the information that was available was what was in the New York Post story itself. So the claims that the laptop was obtained from a third party who had access to it from a computer repair store, I think.

And the determination, I think, was your second question. The determination at the time was that we did not have sufficient evidence to make an assessment one way or another about whether the information was obtained in an unauthorized manner.

Q Once you've made a determination, do you still examine the other elements?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

A But, again, we weren't able to make a determination one way or another.

Q Okay. With respect to the first element?

A Correct.

Q Same question with the second element. What information did you have available the morning of the 14th?

A The morning of the 14th. So the second element, was the information being disseminated in a deceptive, you know, with deceptive means? What that generally means on platform is whether we see, for example, fake accounts being used to disseminate the story.

When the story first appeared, naturally we didn't have a lot of -- I mean, we had to commence an investigation to answer the question about whether we saw fake accounts, for example, being used to push the story. And, again, on that first day the story came out we weren't able to make a determination that there was indicia of deception in the way the story was being shared on Facebook.

Q And with respect to the third element, what information did you have available the morning of the 14th?

A So the third element being whether there's -- the information was disseminated on behalf of or at the direction of a foreign government influence operation.

Again, when the story first came out we didn't have much to go on beyond the story itself and had commenced an investigation into whether there was additional evidence we could uncover on the platform. But we weren't able to make a determination under that third prong either with respect to the hack-and-leak policy.

Q And you mentioned that you consulted with other teams, communications, others. Those teams don't have the investigative experience of your investigative team or perhaps you. When you're saying, "We were looking into this information," who is doing the actual analysis?

A So these would be my team and our investigative team, trying to understand how that policy would apply.

Q And how quickly were you able to make these three determinations?

A So at no point did we determine that we had met the standard to apply the policy, the hack-and-leak policy, to the New York Post story, which is why we didn't remove the New York Post story from the platform. The enforcement under the hack-and-leak policy would be removing the content that derived from the hack-and-leak activity.

Q Okay. And so what was your recommendation?

A My recommendation was that the hack-and-leak policy would not apply to the story, ergo we should not enforce under the hack-and-leak policy against the story.

Q Did any of your team members disagree?

A Not that I recall.

Q What other teams were looking at the story?

A I don't know the extent of what other teams at the company were looking at a story. I know there were other folks looking at it.

What I do know is that folks were particularly concerned about being kind of cautious and responsible in how they were approaching the story and were trying to get it right.

Q Do you recall the recommendations from the other teams that were looking at it under their policies?

A I do not.

Q When did you know that some action would be taken?

A I don't recall when I was aware that some action was going to be taken.

Q Were you aware that other platforms were taking action?

A In a general sense I know some other platforms took enforcement actions related to the story.

[12:51 p.m.]

[redacted] When did you become aware that Twitter was taking an action against the story?

[redacted] I don't recall exactly when I --

[redacted] Just for the record, the handsome gentleman with the beard has come into the room, also known as our chairman. Oh, he didn't have a beard. It just looks like it from a distance.

Chairman Jordan. Good to see you, sir.

[redacted] Sorry. Can you repeat that question?

BY [redacted]

Q When did you first learn that Twitter was taking an action against the story?

A I don't recall exactly when I learned that Twitter was taking an enforcement action on the story.

Q Was it your understanding once you did learn that Twitter was taking an action based off the belief that it was hacked material?

A I don't recall the exact -- the justification that was given for Twitter's enforcement action.

Q Did anyone from Twitter contact you?

A I don't recall outreach from the Twitter folks to me about the story.

Q What about from other companies?

A I don't recall being in contact with other companies about the story either.

Q Do you know who made the ultimate decision at Facebook to take action against the story?

A I don't.

Q Who would be -- who is the boss of [redacted]?

A [redacted] reports to our vice president for trust and safety.

Q And who is that?

A That's [redacted].

Q Do you know if [redacted] was involved in the decisionmaking?

A I don't know if he was involved in the decision-making.

Q Do you know when the restrictions were removed from the story?

A On our platforms?

Q Yeah.

A I don't know when they were removed on our platforms.

Q Okay. And do you know what the ultimate basis was for taking action against the story?

A I don't. Again, I know that analysis and the policies that any action was taken under were outside of my purview.

Q Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. The decisionmaking process to not enforce under the hack-and-leak policy, was that decision ever reduced to any writing to your knowledge?

[redacted] I don't know if the decision was memorialized in writing.

Mr. Gaetz. But you made that decision, right?

[redacted] Uh-huh. A recommendation.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. So, when you made that recommendation, who did you make it to?

[redacted] I made that recommendation to my manager.

Mr. Gaetz. And you made it orally?

[redacted] I don't recall exactly how I made that recommendation.

Mr. Gaetz. It's real important to the committee to understand, you know -- I mean, you've been very fulsome in describing these elements that you apply these facts to. We appreciate that. But it comes to a decision point at some level.

And so what can you share with us about the duration, manner, and format that your recommendation took to not utilize the hack-and-leak policy of Facebook against this Hunter Biden laptop story?

[redacted] Can we go off the record for a minute?

Mr. Gaetz. Sure.

[redacted] Yeah, we can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. Gaetz. Back on the record.

[redacted] Would you mind repeating that last question?

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, sure.

I mean, I'm asking you to provide the most fulsome description of the manner and duration of the recommendation you made to not apply Facebook's hack-and-leak policy to the Hunter Biden laptop story.

[redacted] Gotcha. Right.

So maybe just to pull back a bit to what we were discussing a bit earlier. So we had the three prongs to the policy, right? And in the course of -- you know, from the point that story was published throughout the period where we were investigating it, at no point did I make a recommendation that we should enforce under the hack-and-leak policy. At no point did we meet that bar for those three principles in the policy to apply. And to my knowledge, at no point did we enforce under the hack-and-leak policy, right? The story wasn't removed for being part of a hack-and-leak operation.

And in the interest -- in the interest of providing the most fulsome recollection -- so we conducted our internal investigation. We weren't able to substantiate those three prongs enough where we would take an enforcement action. And to my knowledge, I believe someone did reach out at one point to the FBI to inquire about whether there was more information available about the story, and there wasn't. And no one was able to give us additional context on the story itself.

And so that was our recommendation consistently throughout the time that we were evaluating the story, and as far as I know, that held throughout as well.

Mr. Gaetz. I apologize if these questions seem pedantic.

[redacted] It's all right.

Mr. Gaetz. But there is a difference between not recommending enforcement under the policy and recommending to not enforce under the policy. And so I just wanted to make sure I understand which of those it was.

This recommendation that you made, do you -- is the committee to understand that you affirmatively said this policy should not be applied?

[redacted] Affirmatively said that we -- that the policy would not apply to this story. We did not have sufficient evidence to apply the policy; ergo, we should not enforce under this policy.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Great. So that meeting -- and you testified you don't recall if there was a writing that appends to that meeting?

[redacted] That's right.

Mr. Gaetz. In the normal course of the keeping of your notes, is there a way you would have maintained any type of writing that would accompany that meeting in your normal course of business?

[redacted] I don't believe I would have memorialized that conversation.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. It wouldn't have been your normal practice to create a writing to append to that recommendation?

[redacted] I would have normally memorialized our findings, but not the recommendation itself.

Mr. Gaetz. How am I to understand the difference between the findings and the recommendations? It would seem as though the findings is this -- what you have just gone through with my colleague, the application of the facts, these criteria. Is that what the findings are?

[redacted] Yes. Right. So the findings would be those three prongs and what is functionally our assessment of whether the policy would apply or not apply.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm having a hard time divorcing the findings from the recommendation.

[redacted] Understood. And I guess what I mean is I don't know whether I would have memorialized communicating that recommendation. The assessment, though, of whether the policy would apply would have been memorialized.

Mr. Gaetz. This is very helpful.

And, in your normal course of business, do you maintain those assessments on a computer or a shared drive or a paper form?

[redacted] Those are normally maintained as an electronic document.

Mr. Gaetz. And, again, I apologize for how tedious these questions are.

But is it maintained electronically on a computer hardware system that is in your possession, custody, and control?

[redacted] No. Shared drive.

Mr. Gaetz. Shared drive. Great.

You mentioned that -- or I'm sorry. Let's go back to that.

That oral meeting where you shared the recommendations, do you recall the duration of that meeting?

[redacted] I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. Is that the type of meeting that -- I'm trying to understand.

Is this a 5-minute-type standup, or is this a 90-minute discussion about your application of these facts to these standards? Is there anything you can tell me about how the committee ought to think about that?

[redacted] I just don't recall the details of that conversation.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you recall any feedback that you were given when you presented these recommendations?

[redacted] No. No -- yeah, no feedback on the recommendations.

[redacted] Who else was on the call?

[redacted] Just to be clear, he didn't say there was a call.

[redacted] Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Who else was in the discussion?

A I don't recall exactly who all would have been part of that conversation. I know I communicated that recommendation to my manager, though.

Q Do you recall if [redacted] was part of that discussion?

A I don't --

Mr. Gaetz. And did the meeting occur in person?

[redacted] No, because we were all working from home at that point.

Mr. Gaetz. So was it a Zoom call?

[redacted] Possibly. It's possible. I'm just not sure.

Mr. Gaetz. Does your company use a particular interface system for these discussions?

[redacted] I think -- I believe Meta uses a number of different videocalling providers.

Mr. Gaetz. Sometimes video calls I have with my colleagues where I work are recorded. Are these recorded?

[redacted] Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. And is the committee to understand that, when you presented these findings and recommendations, that there was agreement with the audience that had received them?

[redacted] That was my understanding, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And, as you testified here before us today, you don't recall any pushback you got to that?

[redacted] I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. You said someone did reach out to the FBI to understand better context. Who was that?

[redacted] I don't recall exactly who reached out to the FBI, but I know that a colleague had reached out to them, functionally just to ask if there was more to share about the story.

Mr. Gaetz. And how did you come to learn that?

[redacted] I don't recall exactly what -- like, how I was made aware of it. I know that I was aware, though, that outreach had happened and that there wasn't any additional information that they shared with us about the story or its prominence.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you recall when that outreach occurred?

[redacted] In the days following the story initially appearing in the press.

Mr. Gaetz. And is that when you became aware of the outreach as well?

[redacted] Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Gaetz. And there's nothing you can share with the committee about how you came to be aware of that outreach?

[redacted] I just can't recall precisely how I was informed of it. But I knew that we had -- that that outreach had occurred and that there wasn't anything, you know, that was shared, in part because, again, our assessment was predicated on what we knew at the time.

Mr. Gaetz. And, when you say the FBI, is the committee to understand that you knew that to be the Foreign Influence Task Force at the FBI?

[redacted] That was my understanding.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you very much.

[redacted] You mentioned that no one from Twitter reached out to you during this time. Did I understand that correct?

[redacted] He said he didn't recall.

[redacted] Yeah, I don't recall outreach from anyone at Twitter about the story.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you reach out to anyone at Twitter to share your findings?

A I don't recall reaching out to anyone at Twitter either about the story.

Q Okay. Any other company?

A I don't recall reaching out to any other companies either about the story.

Q Okay. Did you reach out to any researchers?

A I don't recall reaching out to researchers either about the story.

Q Did any researchers reach out to you?

A I don't recall outreach from researchers to me about the story either.

Q At any point -- or I should say, when did you learn the basis for why Meta restricted the story?

A To my best recollection, it was when Meta made public statements about what actions the company was taking around the story.

Q Are you familiar with the statement from 51 former intelligence officers that was issued about 5 days after the story came out?

A I'm aware of it, yes.

Q Okay. At the time that statement was released, did you agree with it?

A I don't recall exactly when the statement was released, but I was not involved in it being put out and learned of it in the press. Again, we were conducting our own assessment of the story and its prominence. And, at the time and as we continued to, we didn't find that our policy applied.

Q Okay. So, when you made an initial determination that there was not enough for the hack-and-leak policy to apply, that was on the 14th?

A Our initial determination was on the 14th, and we continued to update our assessment, but at no time did we find that the policy applied.

Q And so that would have been 5 days later as well. How long did you continue to assess?

A I don't recall exactly when we stopped updating that assessment. Yeah.

Q Did you know any of the signers of the 51 former intelligence officers?

A I don't actually know who all the signers were. So I don't know if I did or didn't know any of them.

Q And you said none of them reached out to you?

A That's correct. I hadn't received any outreach from them.

Q Okay. Do you know if they reached out to anyone at your company?

A I don't know if they did or didn't.

Q Okay. The statement said that it bore, quote, all the classic earmarks of a Russian information --

[redacted] You're quoting from something we don't have. Do you want to give us the document?

[redacted] Yeah. We can introduce it.

We'll mark that as exhibit 2.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Is this a reproduction of a document that you all made, or is this the document itself?

[redacted] This is the document itself that was included with the article.

[redacted] Okay. Thanks.

BY [redacted]

Q So you took a moment to review?

A Yes, thanks.

Q Were there any names in the signature that were colleagues of yours during your time in government?

A The only individual that I see listed here who I had worked with was Rick Ledgett, who was the Deputy Director of the National Security Agency when I was working at the DOD and at the White House.

Q And did he reach out to you?

A No.

Q Did you reach out to him?

A No.

Q Okay. Within Meta, if someone wanted to make a determination about whether something was a Russian disinformation operation, would you be the best person at Meta to handle that inquiry?

A I think we would have to rely on both the investigative team, myself, and my team to make that determination.

Q Okay. Sorry to ask one more time.

A No worries.

Q Did anyone from the government reach out to you -- let me rephrase this.

Did you receive any information regarding the authenticity of the laptop in the days following the New York Post story?

A Any information? Not that I recall.

[redacted] Do you want a break?

[redacted] Yeah. Can we take a break?

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q In the days following the New York Post story's publication, did you receive any information regarding the authenticity of the laptop?

A So the only information I recall receiving, as I noted to Representative Gaetz, is that the U.S. Government didn't have anything more to share about the story than what was already publicly available.

[redacted] Do you have any further questions?

BY [redacted]

Q So you mentioned that you were in contact with a few government agencies through the course of your job.

When those communications took place, were they over meetings? In person? Over Zoom?

A These were generally meetings. And it would depend, I think, on the time period if in person or Zoom.

Q When communicating with the government, was this over email?

A Some communications over email, yes.

Q What about signal?

A No. One -- there was, I think, one signal channel that existed for kind of government to broadcast to a number of companies.

Q And which government agency was on that channel?

A So DHS and FBI, to my knowledge.

Q And who from industry?

A A number of companies. I don't know the exhaustive list of which companies were involved.

Q Okay. Over Slack?

A No. We didn't use Slack.

Q Telegram?

A Don't use Telegram.

Q Did you receive Teleporter messages?

A Not to my knowledge. I'm not familiar with Teleporter.

Q Following a meeting with the government, what was your typical process? Did you take notes during the meetings?

A I did not, no.

Q Did anyone else attending from Meta typically take notes?

A I'm not sure if anyone else had taken notes or not.

Q Would you send out a debrief or a summary to --

A I wouldn't, no.

Q Were meeting minutes ever circulated among those on the call within the government from someone else?

A Not that I recall.

[redacted] [redacted] if it's helpful, we did provide the committee with agendas for those meetings, where we had them, as well as the invites. And I'm happy to go through that if that's useful.

[redacted] Yeah. We can start with that.

Can we pull document Meta 2758?

This is exhibit 3.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] So this is exhibit 3?

[redacted] Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Do you recognize this invite?

A I recognize the format of this as a calendar invite, yeah.

Q Okay. This is an invite for -- it says "hold for FITF." Would that be the Foreign Influence Task Force?

A That would make sense, yeah.

Q Okay. And who is [redacted]?

A I believe [redacted] is a member of our law enforcement outreach team.

Q Okay. Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is one of our attorneys.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is also an attorney.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is a member of our investigative team.

Q Okay. Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is also a member of the investigative team.

Q Okay. Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is an attorney.

Q Okay. Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted], she is a member of our policy team. My team.

Q I'm sorry?

A She's a member of my team.

Q Okay. And the policy team?

A Correct. My team lives within our policy organization.

Q Gotcha. Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is a member of the investigative team.

Q Okay. Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is a member of the investigative team as well.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] is also a member of the investigative team.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted], also a member of the investigative team.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A [redacted], also a member of the investigative team.

Q Okay. And do you recognize this FBI email address? The [redacted]?

A I believe that's Special Agent Elvis Chan.

Q Okay. You mentioned several members from your investigative team. Earlier, you said it sounded like a very large team.

How were these individuals selected to participate?

A I don't know precisely why these investigators were included on this invite.

Q Did it change from meeting to meeting?

A I'm not sure if or how that selection of people would have changed meeting to meeting.

Q Okay. When did you first meet with the Foreign Influence Task Force?

A I don't remember when the first meeting was with the FITF.

Q Was it before 2021?

A I know that those meetings began at least in early 2020, but I don't know when the first one actually was.

Q Okay. Do you remember who first invited you to join these meetings?

A I don't.

Q Do you know if it was the government or if it was Meta that first organized these meetings?

A I don't.

Q How frequently did they occur?

A My recollection is that the meetings with the FITF occurred on kind of a roughly monthly cadence.

Q Did that frequency change?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. Are these meetings ongoing?

A Yes, they are.

Q Okay. And is it still at a monthly cadence?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q Is Special Agent Elvis Chan still the point of contact for the Foreign Influence Task Force?

A I don't know. I'm not sure who are the folks we talk to directly on the FITF.

Q When was the last FITF meeting that you attended?

A I don't recall when the last one I actually attended was.

Q Was it before your most recent leave?

A It would have been prior to my parental leave.

Q Or excuse me. Has there been any time since after your --

A I have not attended one since my parental leave.

Q Okay. When did you begin your leave?

A Beginning of January this year.

Q Okay. Great.

What was the purpose of these meetings?

A So these meetings were for the Foreign Influence Task Force to flag specific actionable information about foreign influence threats, mainly from our Russia, China, Iran-type of threat actors, and for us to flag enforcement actions that we were taking around the same foreign influence threats, often from the same types of threat actors.

Q Okay. So, after a meeting concludes and if they provided -- if they flag something, what are the next steps at the end of the meeting?

A So, if something was flagged in that meeting by the FITF to our teams, we would generally pass that along to the investigative team, or if they were on that team, then their responsibility was to, you know, again, conduct our own internal independent investigation, understand whether there was any threat actor activity on our platform, evaluate it against our policies, and then take action as appropriate.

Q Okay. Do you recall instances where you didn't take action?

A I'm certain there were instances where we didn't take action.

Q Did you tell the government whether you took action?

A In cases where we were enforcing against, for example, a CIB operation or a cyber espionage activity by an APT group, we would generally inform folks at the FITF if they had provided that lead initially once we had completed our assessment and conducted our enforcement. That's correct, yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Were there times when you took action that wasn't prompted by the government that you then told the government you took that action?

[redacted] Yes. In fact, when we would do these enforcement actions on CIB or on cyber espionage activity, we would generally do a couple of things. So we would inform folks at the FITF. We would also share information about those enforcements with congressional committees. So House Intelligence and Senate Intelligence committees. And we would generally share information about those -- that activity as well with the public via our public reporting.

Chairman Jordan. I just want to understand.

So if -- you weren't prompted by the government to take some type of action, but if you did, you would share it with the Foreign Influence Task Force, you would share it with Senate Intel, and House Intel?

[redacted] That's correct. And sometimes other agencies within the U.S. Government.

Chairman Jordan. DHS?

[redacted] Sometimes DHS, CISA.

Chairman Jordan. CIA?

[redacted] Not to my knowledge.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And when did that -- maybe you can comb this through.

But when did that start? When would be the first time you can recall when what you just described took place?

[redacted] Sharing that information with U.S. Government entities, including congressional committees, was something that I recall us doing even when I had first started at the company and we were doing these kind of public enforcements on CIB networks.

Chairman Jordan. Can you give me a timeframe? Give me a date.

[redacted] Sorry. So I joined the company in September of 2018. There were a number of CIB foreign influence networks that we had enforced against in the months after I joined the company.

Chairman Jordan. So, from 2018 to present, that is still the pattern?

[redacted] That is still our standard practice with these enforcements. And the reason, right, is oftentimes these operations might be active on Facebook, but they will have aspects of the operation that might be active on other platforms. There might be activity that occurs off platform, like traditional intelligence recruitment, spotting, and assessment activity.

And we felt that it was valuable, particularly for Members of Congress or their staff, to understand what we were seeing in the broader threat space and what the trends from Iranian, Chinese, Russian actors and the like.

Chairman Jordan. Maybe we're going to get there.

So let's say that you get prompted by CISA, FBI, some entity from the government that -- we need you to look at this, and you look at it, and it's not something that should be -- some action should be taken on.

Do you get back with them and tell them that you didn't take action?

[redacted] So generally the way that they would flag these things to us -- it was maybe a little less directional, right? They would say: Here's some threat actor activity that we are aware of in the ecosystem; we felt you should be aware of.

We would then conduct our investigation. Sometimes it would violate our policies. Sometimes we wouldn't substantiate that activity on our platform. In some cases, we would provide that feedback as well, just that we didn't see any activity on the platform.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Thanks.

[redacted] We have about 10 minutes left. So are there any questions?

Congressman?

Mr. Gaetz. I had a question.

When describing the misinformation team, you described it as a misinformation policy team. And I took from the tone of your voice you emphasized the word "policy."

Is there a misinformation enforcement team that is separate and distinct from the misinformation policy team?

[redacted] I understand there is a product team that works with the policy team that implements enforcements and such. I don't know the details of how those teams are structured very well, though.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, I guess I'm trying to understand their duties.

Is the policy team's objective to establish the doctrine, or is their job to hunt misinformation?

[redacted] So, again, I don't work on the team. So I don't know the extent of their responsibilities. As a policy team, they would write the policies, though.

Mr. Gaetz. I guess I'm trying to understand, then, who does the enforcement work around misinformation if it's not you.

[redacted] So it wouldn't be me, not because we're a policy team but because our team doesn't work on the misinformation problem set. We're pretty exclusively focused on, I guess, disinformation or the kind of deceptive networks, regardless of whether they're posting misinformation or not. They could be posting something else entirely.

Mr. Gaetz. It's astonishing that you're the disinformation team, and then there's a misinformation team, and you act as though these are ships passing in the night.

[redacted] I think to some degree, we have deliberately done that because the disinformation problem area -- we're often dealing with foreign intelligence actors or proxies of foreign governments who may be posting content that ranges from benign to politically-charged but where the content is pretty much immaterial to our policy assessment.

So we wouldn't -- we try hard not to conflate the two to avoid, quite frankly, the folks thinking that we're taking down, for example, an Iranian operation posing as American political activists because of what they're saying, when we're really taking them down because they're Iranian Government proxies pretending to be those Americans.

[redacted] Not to go against your time, but [redacted] and [redacted] at the company lead these functions. And we'd be happy to have them come in and spend as long as you want talking to you to explain exactly how all the pieces fit. They would have a holistic view of the operations. And [redacted] is sort of a top person, and [redacted] is her principal deputy.

So, in addition to the other people you've asked for, if you would like a briefing, we'd be happy to arrange that, and they'll stay as long as you want.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I thoroughly appreciate that. As I think you can get the sense from today, we're largely trying to map out the decision-making structure here.

[redacted] I understand. Happy to help.

Mr. Gaetz. How the decisions -- orally in writing and under what paradigm, doctrine, and then enforcement regime. So thank you for that offer. I'm sure the chairman will consider it thoroughly.

Are you still meeting with the Foreign Influence Task Force?

[redacted] Yes. My understanding is those meetings are ongoing.

Mr. Gaetz. And you're still participating in them?

[redacted] So I haven't participated since my parental leave back in January.

Mr. Gaetz. But you expect to resume those meetings?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Has anything changed about them following the Hunter Biden laptop episode?

[redacted] Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. Same people?

[redacted] Again, as best as I know, yes. But I'm not -- I generally don't examine the invite list quite as closely.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you, [redacted]

[redacted] How are we doing on time?

[redacted] We have 7 more minutes.

[redacted] I'd like to introduce this as exhibit 4.

[redacted] Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And these are two screenshots from a conference you gave. This was posted back in October of 2020. The conference name is EU DisinfoLab 2020 Virtual Conference.

Do you recall speaking at this conference?

[redacted] Can we have a minute to look at the document?

This is something you all pulled down from the internet? Not an exhibit that was provided to you by the company, right?

[redacted] That's correct.

[redacted] Okay.

And there's no date on the document. Can you tell us what the date of this was?

[redacted] Yes. It was October 12th, 2020. That's the date it was posted on YouTube.

[redacted] YouTube. Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q If I could call your attention to the second page.

A Sure.

Q So there's a slide up. Is that you in the upper right-hand corner?

A Yes. I didn't have much of a wall decoration in my house during COVID.

Q The first bullet point says: Removal of COVID-related misinformation. Was that part of your responsibility at the time?

A It was not.

Q Who did you speak with at Meta prior to presenting at this conference?

A Prior to presenting at the conference? Our comms team would have approved my presentation. That's the extent of who I remember speaking with.

[redacted] I'm sorry. I'm going to ask you to repeat that. I couldn't hear it.

[redacted] Sorry. So our comms team would have reviewed my presentation, but that's the extent of who I remember speaking with prior to this conference.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And how did you end up speaking about something that's outside of your job responsibility?

A So this was -- do you happen to know the date of when this conference occurred? I know it was in 2020 from the --

Q The video is posted October 12th.

A Okay. So sometime in 2020. The height of the pandemic. And this first bullet point, from my recollection, was pulled from a public blog post that Facebook put out about our work around COVID-19. So, knowing that that would be a question at the conference, it was something that we included in the presentation.

Q And when you were preparing for this conference, you spoke to the comms team?

A Correct.

Q Did you speak to anyone who works on removing COVID misinformation?

A Not that I recall.

Q So you essentially were adjusting whatever the comms team was telling you?

A And our public statements. At this point, the company had put out a public blog post on our COVID-19 response.

Q At any point, has removing misinformation been a part of your job responsibility?

A No, aside from when we take down a network that might have posted misinformation, but that wasn't the reason we took it down.

Chairman Jordan. Excuse me. Is this the name of the conference, the EU DisinfoLab? I'm wondering if that was the name of the conference.

[redacted] Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q Who invited you to attend that conference?

A I don't recall specifically who. EU DisinfoLab is an organization, as I understand, in Europe.

Q Do you plan to attend the next Foreign Influence Task Force meeting?

A I'm not aware of when the next one is or if I've been invited to it. So I don't know.

Q Do you know who attended in your place while you were on leave?

A I don't.

Q Does [redacted] attend these meetings ever?

A I don't know if he's ever attended them.

Q How many government representatives typically are on these meetings?

A I don't know an exact number.

Q Have they always taken place over Zoom?

A As I recall, they've been -- they were virtual for the vast majority of the time I was at the company. I don't know if there have been in-person meetings.

Q There were a number of invites to personnel at Meta.

Did most of the invites typically attend? How many representatives from Meta would be on an average call?

A Again, I don't know the exact number of how many people would generally attend. It was made somewhat more complicated by Zoom calls. You can't always tell who's there.

Q How long do they last typically?

A 30 minutes to an hour.

Q And, when the government was flagging information for you -- you said these happen at a regular cadence -- would they -- if there was nothing to report, would the meeting get canceled?

A That's my recollection, that if there was nothing to discuss, the meetings was generally canceled.

Q Did that cadence ever increase?

A The cadence of these FITF meetings?

Q Yeah.

A I'm not sure.

[redacted] I think we are at time.

But, before we go off the record, we've provided you with all of the invites for all the FITF meetings that we are aware of, and so you could reconstruct the cadence from that. Also note that, on the invites, [redacted] is listed as an optional attendee.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Can we go back on the record, please.

BY [redacted]

Q So you mentioned earlier that the Global Engagement Center was one of the government agencies that you were in contact with.

Can you first provide us at a high level your understanding of what the Global Engagement Center was and is?

A Yes. So the Global Engagement Center -- its existence predates my time at Meta and [inaudible] also worked on at the White House. My understanding is the Global Engagement Center was initially founded to work on countering violent extremism issues, kind of messaging around terrorism around the world.

Over time, their mandate changed to include countering the influence operations issues around the world, specifically from kind of foreign messaging targeting the U.S., and then the U.S.'s messaging abroad.

Q And who at the Global Engagement Center were you in contact with?

A I was in contact with their kind of liaison with the private sector.

Q Do you remember his or her name?

A [redacted], I believe, is who is currently in that role.

Q Do you recall being in contact with [redacted]?

A Yes. I do remember a [redacted]. I think he goes by [redacted].

Q Okay. And what were your interactions with [redacted]?

A What I recall my interactions with [redacted] was -- initially, I think he was mostly -- we were corresponding about trying to set up an initial conversation with the Global Engagement Center for a little while there. And then primarily logistical conversations about getting those meetings set up.

Q You mentioned that both the Foreign Influence Task Force and the GEC would provide leads from time to time.

Do you recall if one provided leads more frequently than the other?

A Foreign Influence Task Force conversations, I think, by nature of those conversations, were more focused on providing kind of actionable and useful information about threat actors.

[redacted] I'm sorry. I'm having trouble hearing.

[redacted] Sorry. So the Foreign Influence Task Force conversations, because of the nature of what the Foreign Influence Task Force does, were more focused on providing actionable specific information about threat actors.

BY [redacted]

Q Regarding whether Meta ultimately took action based off these leads, do you remember if either agency was better or worse than the other with respect to accurately identifying either coordinated inauthentic behavior, inauthentic accounts, or other influence operations?

A I wouldn't want to speculate on the accuracy between the two. I can't remember quite exactly.

Q Did you have any contacts or any communications with the White House, specifically the National Security Council?

A Yes.

Q And what was the nature of those interactions?

A Interactions with the National Security Council on coordinated inauthentic behavior networks targeting the United States as well as some of our cyber espionage work, particularly around what we would call surveillance for hired companies. These are private companies that sell surveillance capabilities. An example would be NSO Group.

The investigations we were doing into companies like that targeting our users as well as actions that we were taking around those companies and recommendations we had for how the government could effectively work to counter abusive spyware activity and the CIB program more broadly.

Q Were there any other offices in the White House that you were in contact with?

A Outside of the NSC, you mean?

Q Outside, yes.

A Not to my knowledge.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]

Q So you mentioned DHS.

A I keep kicking your table. I'm so sorry.

Q You mentioned that DHS was another agency that you were in contact with and specifically -- is it CISA or CISA? We've heard both.

A I'm honestly not sure what the right pronunciation is, but I say CISA. It was CISA.

Q Okay. And could you state what that acronym stands for?

A My recollection is it stands for the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency.

Q Okay. Did you have contacts with DHS outside of CISA?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. What was the nature of your interactions with CISA?

A Interactions with CISA were generally on issues that CISA covers. So critical infrastructure and election infrastructure, the process by which elections and voting are conducted, that type of thing. So what we would, you know, discuss with them would be situations where we might see targeting of the U.S. or critical infrastructure in the U.S.

Q Okay. CISA has a self-described MDM team. MDM refers to misinformation, disinformation, and malinformation.

Are you familiar with that office within CISA?

A I'm familiar that the office exists. I don't know much else about their work beyond that.

Q Do you recall interacting with that office?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Do you recall the purpose of that knowledge -- or purpose of that team?

A I don't, no.

Q Did you ever interact with someone named Brian Scully who was at CISA?

A Yes, I believe so.

Q Do you recall the nature of those interactions?

A Brian Scully joined some of the meetings between the U.S. Government -- the U.S. Government meetings I had mentioned already. The CISA, FITF, ODNI meetings, and Meta.

Q You mentioned this earlier that the U.S. Government would meet with industry.

A Yes.

Q Do you recall what the purpose of those meetings were?

A Those meetings were more general, for example, than the FITF meetings. They focused more on the U.S. Government departments and agencies in question, kind of updating on issues that were relevant to their mandate. For example, CISA providing updates on key election dates, any concerns about infrastructure around polling locations, for example, updates on foreign influence threats from FITF, and then an opportunity for companies to provide updates on kind of work that they were doing in that space. For example, if the company was going to be announcing a new product around voting, there would be a venue where they might do something like -- provide an update on something like that.

Q Do you recall who most frequently attended those meetings from Meta?

A I generally attended those meetings, and I know there were a number of other Meta employees. I don't recall exactly who, though.

Q Okay. Following these meetings, were there similar due-outs with respect to the FITF meetings where the government might flag something? Was there a similar process following these sets of meetings?

A My recollection is that these meetings generally didn't focus on kind of specific threat indicator-type information. So I'm not aware of a similar type of process given that the topics were somewhat different.

Q Okay. Do you recall how frequently these meetings occurred?

A I don't recall the exact cadence. I think it changed over time as well.

[redacted] Okay. If we can introduce 25248 from Meta just as exhibit 5.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

[2:00 p.m.]

[redacted] Exhibit 5.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this meeting invite?

A Yes.

Q And what is it?

A It's an invite to the USG Industry Calls that we were just discussing.

Q Looking at the "to" line, [redacted], is that your boss that we were discussing earlier?

A [redacted] is my manager, yes.

Q And did he frequently attend these meetings, as well?

A Yes, he generally attended these meetings.

Q Was there anyone else at Meta who would regularly attend these meetings?

A So I would regularly attend these meetings. And -- sorry. Just reviewing the document one more time.

My recollection is the rest of the folks on these invites would occasionally attend these meetings. I just don't know the cadence that they would or wouldn't attend.

Q And were there members from your investigative team that would attend?

A The only member of our investigative team -- yes, I believe so.

Q Okay. During the course of your work, you mentioned that you would sometimes communicate with government officials via Signal?

A Uh-huh.

[redacted] It's not what he said. He said that he received broadcasts from the government. He did not say he communicated.

[redacted] Correct.

BY [redacted]

Q You received communications from the government via Signal channel. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall how many of these channels there were?

A I only recall one channel.

Q Which channel was that?

A It was a channel related to the USG Industry syncs with the same kind of U.S. Government agency representation.

Q Do you still have these Signal chats?

A I'm not sure if I do.

Q Okay. Do you know what the company's policy is with respect to communications with the government?

A I personally don't know the policies around record retention and the like.

Q Okay. Do you know what the government's policy was with respect to retaining records?

A I don't know.

[redacted] If we could introduce Yahoo15308. This will be exhibit 6.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this group chat?

A I recognize the title of the group chat. It's the channel that we were discussing previously.

Q And it has individuals from industry and from government on it.

A That's correct.

Q What was the purpose of this channel?

A So the purpose of this channel was as a broadcast channel for the U.S. Government departments and agencies I mentioned previously to share information, specifically kind of actionable and timely threat-related information related to the election.

Q And do you remember who first instigated, created the group?

A I do not, no.

Q And was this a byproduct of the USG Industry meetings we were discussing previously?

A Yes, my recollection is that it was.

Q Did you need a clearance or anything similar to join this group?

A No, you did not.

Q As far as you know, anyone within the group could add someone?

A That was my understanding.

Q Okay. Besides the Facebook personnel in this group chat, who else at Facebook knew about the existence of this channel?

A I don't know the extent to which other folks at Facebook knew about the existence of the channel.

Q If we could turn to page 2, the Bates number is 15039.

A Okay.

Q There's someone with the name [redacted].

A Uh-huh.

Q Do you know who that might be?

A That would be [redacted] from Google.

Q There's reference to a [redacted] Do you know who that might be?

A I don't.

Q Okay. There was an [redacted] from Twitter. Does that sound -- is that consistent with your recollection who participated?

A This far, yes, it is.

Q Then under [redacted]: "Hey, y'all, [redacted] from The Facebook."

A That would be me.

Q Do you recall joining this channel?

A I do.

Q Okay. Do you recall who played the central role in facilitating these interactions between the government and industry?

A No, I don't.

Q Do you know if one company took the lead or if it was one government agency?

A My recollection was that it kind of rotated between different companies. I'm not sure how the government agencies handled it on their side.

Q If we turn to page 5, the Bates number is 15402.

A 402?

Q Yes.

A Okay.

Q There's a message from the FBI San Francisco Command Post. Do you recall the FBI joining this channel?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you remember how you verified whether the phone number, in fact, belonged to the FBI?

A I don't recall how we verified it was the FBI's phone number.

Q Do you recall who operated the FBI's account?

A I don't recall who operated their account.

Q Okay. Do you recall who from the FBI attended most frequently the USG Industry monthly meetings?

A I don't remember the names of who from FBI attended.

Q Okay. So in this channel the FBI San Francisco Command Post would share information about particular foreign threats? Is that right?

A That's correct.

Q If we can turn to page 10, which is Bates number 15047. There's a message near the top from Yoel Roth -- that would be Yoel Roth from Twitter -- saying: "Hi all. I'll shortly be adding a number of contacts from DHS-CISA to this group."

Is that in reference to the agency, the Cybersecurity Infrastructure and Security Agency?

A Yes.

Q If we look at the same page, just a little bit lower, he adds three contacts, [redacted] from CISA, [redacted], and [redacted].

Is [redacted] [redacted], [redacted]?

A I don't know, to be honest.

Q Do you recognize the name [redacted] or [redacted]?

A I don't recognize either of those names.

Q Okay. If we could turn to the next page, at the bottom, this would be page 11, Bates number 15048. Yoel Roth adds [redacted].

Do you know who [redacted] is?

A I do not.

Q If we could turn the page to page 12, Bates number 15049, there's a message from [redacted] from CISA.

Is this message consistent with information that would be delivered to you in the USG Industry monthly meetings?

A This message strikes me as more tactical than the type of information discussed at the USG Industry meetings, which are generally more higher level, for example.

[redacted] Sorry. What are you referring to on this page? There's a link, but you can't click through here. And then there's something underneath. Is that -- which part are you referring to?

[redacted] The first message with the picture, a link, and then a statement.

[redacted] The statement below the -- is the statement here from the Twitter link or not? We can't click through on it. So I'm trying to ask you whether this is -- are you representing that this is what the Twitter link says or is this something different?

[redacted] We are representing this is what is in the Signal channel.

[redacted] So it's in the Signal channel, not -- okay. Got it.

BY [redacted]

Q These types of messages you said is more tactical. Would that be consistent with messages that were conveyed in your meetings with the Foreign Influence Task Force?

A Sorry. Could you maybe rephrase what you mean by that question?

Q Sure. So you mentioned that the USG Industry meetings was kind of higher level --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- more so than the meetings with the Foreign Influence Task Force. This appears to be a reference to a specific post, in this case on Twitter.

When you were receiving information from the FBI and the Foreign Influence Task Force meetings, was it this level of specificity or was it a degree higher? Just trying to get a sense of the nature of the information that was conveyed during those meetings.

A I would describe it as fundamentally different. So this is a single post about at least what they claim to be misinformation. The information shared with us by the Foreign Influence Task Force was generally focused on specific threat actors and their activity on the platform and not an individual post.

Q Okay. You mentioned that your team is content agnostic. And would a specific reference to a post such as this, there's a reference -- this is quoting in the Signal channel: "This is incorrect."

Would this type of information, would you expect it to be shared with the misinformation team at Meta?

A I wouldn't -- I'm not -- I don't recall what would have happened from information in this channel with respect to misinformation-related evaluation.

Q So if you receive information regarding a foreign threat actor, potential coordinated inauthentic behavior, you have your team. You know what the right steps are.

If there was a -- if the government or some third party were to provide you information that falls within the misinformation space, who would you direct that information to?

A If we were to receive information from one of these government organizations that fell within misinformation space, we would generally kind of flag that to the misinformation team rather than doing anything with it ourselves.

Q And who would be your point of contact on the misinformation team?

A From what I recall, we would generally just kind of forward that along to the, like, the entire group on the misinfo team.

Q Okay. Is there an email listserv? Is that the --

A My recollection is that we could just kind of email them collectively.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And what's the -- I supposed the follow-up question would be, okay, but, like, when you are -- are you sending this, let's say, via email?

A Uh-huh.

Q To which address are sending this?

A Some sort of a misinfo team kind of collective address.

Q All right. If we could turn to page -- it will start on page 13, which is Bates number 15050, going on to page 14, which is Bates number 15051. There's another communication from [redacted] of CISA. There is a -- if you go down maybe a half dozen lines, there's an email address that says misinformation@cisecurity.org.

Are you familiar with the Center for Internet Security?

A Heard the name. Don't know anything about them.

Q Do you recall having any other interactions with the Center for Internet Security?

A I don't.

Q Do you know who at Meta would have interactions?

A I don't.

Q If we could turn to page 27, which is Bates number 15064. There is a post from Yoel Roth dated January 9th, 2021, about the middle of the page, then a series of posts from Mr. Roth on to page 29, which is Bates number 15066.

At the top of page 15 -- or excuse me -- at the top of page 29, Mr. Roth says: "My error. Wrong channel."

Do you know which channel he would have intended to share these posts on?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. Were there other channels with the government?

A Not that I was aware of.

Q Were there channels without the government?

A Again, not that I was aware of.

Q In addition to the meetings over Zoom, the email communications, and the Signal chats, what other forms did you have communications with the government?

[redacted]. Did he receive?

BY [redacted]

Q Or did you receive information from the government?

A Can you repeat the list of that, the forms again.

Q Sure. So in addition to emails, meetings over video or Zoom or phone, and this Signal channel, how else did you receive information from the government?

A Yeah, the only other form I could think of is regular old telephone calls. That's probably the extent of options. I guess maybe some limited in-person interactions after COVID.

Q Okay. If we could introduce exhibit 16072. That's exhibit 7.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] The last document you gave us was not a Meta document. It was a Yahoo document. Is this also a Yahoo document?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this Signal channel?

A Honestly, I don't recall this Signal channel. So, no, I'm not sure.

Q Okay. Do you know who [redacted] is?

A [redacted] is Google's head of Threat Analysis Group.

Q Do you recall having industry-only communications while -- let me -- let me -- strike that.

Do you recall having industry-only communications in relation to industry's meeting with the government?

A Yes.

Q And what form did those communications take place?

A Logistical coordination ahead of the industry government syncs about when, timing for the meeting, that kind of thing.

Q Did this take place over email? Over Signal?

A Over email.

Q Okay. Reviewing the document, did it refresh you at all participating in this channel?

A I can't remember participating in this channel.

[redacted] If we could introduce exhibit 16073.

Oh. Excuse me. This is this exhibit. Sorry.

[redacted] Oh, is it?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah, turn to page 2. This is Bates number 16073.

Yoel Roth writes "Assuming" -- this is on -- halfway down the bottom: "Assuming you all got the same info from the Bureau that we did regarding Iran. Wanted to flag that we have identified a number (small so far) of accounts engaged in this activity."

Is "the Bureau" referring to the FBI?

A I don't know. Again, I'm not -- I don't recall if I was part of this group or not. I wouldn't want to speculate on what the Twitter folks you're talking about here.

Q Would the FBI send information like this to you directly?

A Like what type of information?

Q Messages similar to what Mr. Roth flagged, saying there are, you know, "accounts engaged in this activity."

Would the FBI flag particular accounts and send that to you directly?

A So it sounds like there's two questions there.

[redacted] Well, wait. Which question?

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] This note says something about information re: Iran. So are you asking him whether or not the FBI sent him information about Iran or something else?

BY [redacted]

Q Did the FBI send you information regarding specific accounts?

A The FBI would sometimes send us information about specific accounts.

Q Okay. And how was that communicated to you?

A So that was generally not communicated to me. I believe they shared that information with our legal teams.

Q Was it ever communicated to you?

A I can't recall if it was ever communicated to me.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you remember being in some sort of group called the Industry Election Integrity WG?

A I don't remember being in this group.

Q So if you're looking at the participants in this group up at the top here on page 16072, do any of those individuals look familiar?

A Some of these names are familiar.

Q From interacting or working with them?

A From other companies that also worked in the security space and were part of the USG Industry meetings.

[redacted] Which names are familiar to you?

[redacted] So you'd asked me about [redacted] and [redacted] earlier. Yoel Roth is at Twitter. I think those are the names that are familiar to me.

[redacted] If we could introduce exhibit -- well, hold on before I say it too soon. I'm sorry.

If we could introduce the next exhibit. This is Bates number 16076. This is will be exhibit 8.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] I'm sorry. What is this? It's one page of a 136-page document. And if you're going ask him to comment on it, can you tell him what it is?

[redacted] Yeah. This is the excerpt of the same Signal channel, the Industry Election Integrity WG.

[redacted] Can we see the prior exhibit? Thanks.

[redacted] About a third of the way down, there's a message from [redacted], saying: "Anyone else want to jump in after ?"

Do you know if this would be ?

I don't speculate on it since there's just a first name. So I don't know.

You mentioned that you recognized some of the names at the -- starting in the previous exhibit and that they participated in the USG Industry call. participated in those calls as well. Is that right?

He did.

Okay. If we could introduce the next exhibit, 16079.

Are we done with this Signal chat so we can give you these back, or are you going to keep going through the Signal chats?

We'll keep going through them.

Okay. We'll hold on to these.

Yeah.

Thank you.

This will be exhibit 9.

Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

So this is the same chat?

Yes.

Page 8? So you skip pages 6 and 7? Is that correct?

We have provided different excerpts. That's correct.

Okay. Thank you.

All right. If I could call your attention to Mr. Roth's statement about two thirds of the way down. He says: "Yep. We can touch a bit on the QAnon stuff we've enforced on and foot stomp the lack of foreign interference aspect."

Do you know what Mr. Roth meant by saying to "foot stomp the lack of a foreign interference aspect"?

[redacted] I don't know. I'm not sure specifically what he's talking about there.

[redacted] And in your communications with the government, when they would identify something, would they identify where it originated from?

[redacted] Can I just pause? You're talking about the entire government or a particular government agency?

[redacted] Sure. In your communications with the Foreign Influence Task Force or with the Global Engagement Center or with CISA.

[redacted] All three at once?

[redacted] We can work through this tediously then.

BY [redacted]

Q In your experience with the Foreign Influence Task Force, when they identified inauthentic accounts or otherwise shared information with you, did they identify where they believed the activity originated from?

A In some cases they would.

Q Was it always foreign?

A To my best recollection, yes.

Q You've got no recollection of it ever being domestic.

A That's correct.

Q Okay. Do you recall from your team, when they would conduct their analysis -- this is in reference to your investigative team --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- that that would turn out to be incorrect, that it originated from the U.S. as opposed to somewhere outside?

A I can't recall any specific cases that meet that description.

[redacted] Could we have just a second to chat?

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on.

[redacted] We're on the record.

[redacted] Could you repeat that last question again?

BY [redacted]

Q Yes. So when the Foreign Influence Task Force has identified inauthentic accounts or other information that they're communicating to you --

A Yeah.

Q -- you said that you have your investigative team take that information, go through the process, as they would otherwise. Was it ever the case that your team determined that those accounts were U.S.-based?

A So I can only recall one instance where the FBI flagged information to -- accounts to us for review that turned out to be U.S.-based, yeah.

Q Do you recall when that was?

A That would have been -- I don't recall specifically when that was. It would have been -- yeah, I don't recall exactly when.

Q Do you recall who from the FBI shared that information?

A I don't.

Q Do you recall how many accounts it was?

A I don't recall a specific number of accounts.

Q Did you share these findings with the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And was that in the context of a Foreign Influence Task Force meeting?

A No.

Q Was it -- how was it communicated?

A I'm not sure specifically how it was communicated back to them.

Q There will be a similar set of questions but this is with respect to the Global Engagement Center.

[redacted] Can we go off the record?

[redacted] If we can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] On the record, please.

If we could turn to exhibit 16121.

[redacted] That's a new exhibit that you're going to be reading?

[redacted] Yes.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So just to clarify, this is exhibit 10. The Bates number is 16121.

There's a [redacted] who posts a few messages. This is another excerpt of the same Signal channel.

A Uh-huh.

Q Is [redacted] you?

A I believe so.

Q Do you recall sending these messages?

A I recall sending these messages.

Q Okay. About three posts down there's a post from [redacted]. In this context, do you believe that to be [redacted], your manager?

A Again, I don't want to guess if that's my manager [redacted] or any other folks in the chat.

Q [redacted] writes: "If we end up having to use MDM, I may just quit. I'm not sure I can take it."

In the context of your work, did [redacted], your supervisor, your manager, ever discuss MDM? Which I will say, did he ever discuss misinformation, disinformation, and malinformation in the context of interactions with the government?

A As topics or as a term?

Q Both. We'll say first as topics.

A As topics, disinformation was a core part of our work, so yes.

Q Okay. And what about the term MDM?

A Also yes.

Q Okay. And what was the context for those conversations?

A A quintessential challenge in the disinformation space is blending of definitions and terms. MDM I think was one of several new iterations of trying to describe the problem that often injected more confusion than it did clarity.

Q And who was trying to inject the term MDM?

A I'm not sure exactly where MDM originated. It was just something that kind of started bubbling up as people were discussing the disinformation space.

Q Okay. But in this context between industry and government, was it the government that was pushing the term MDM? Is it outside the context?

A So lacking the context of the messages that preceded these messages, I'm not sure what the context it's being used in here is or with what it's referring to.

Q Did you ever have conversations with your manager regarding the government's use of the term MDM?

A I recall that I was critical of it.

Q You recall? Sorry?

A I recall that I was critical of use of the term MDM.

Q And why was that?

A There were already a lot of different words that people used just to try and define the problem area.

Q Do you recall if it was a preferred term by the government?

A I don't know if it was their preferred term or not.

Q Okay. What sort of problems does that terminology introduce?

A I think that the disinformation space is one where clarity about, for example, platform policies and the reason for enforcement actions is really important.

In the course of our conversation today, you probably noticed I've been careful to try and draw a very clear distinction between disinformation, work, the policies that underlie it, our investigations, misinformation.

And terms like MDM inherently blend those different and I think quite distinct areas of work.

Q Do you think your industry colleagues followed that distinction as carefully?

A I can't really speak for them. I imagine they have their own policies and procedures.

Q Did the government actors that you interface with, did they follow that same distinction?

A Again, I can't speak for them. I imagine they also have their own policies about how they handle these problems.

Q When you were receiving communications from the government, did you ever receive communications that fell more, to use your dividing line, on the misinformation side?

A Yes.

Q How frequently did that occur?

A I can't really put a number on it. Occasionally.

Q Do you recall which government agencies provided communications that fell as what you would describe as misinformation?

A The two that I can recall would be the Global Engagement Center at times flagging issues that would be more in the misinformation area and CISA around election misinformation.

Q What context did the GEC communications arise in?

A What context? In the course of our meetings with the GEC.

Q Do you remember the content that was identified as misinformation?

A I don't remember the specific content.

Q For CISA, you mentioned that it was election misinformation. Do you remember any other subject areas?

A Just so specifically on election information, the general topics of where to vote, how to vote, and things like safety, security, threats to polling places. Those types of things would be the general gist.

Q And how did CISA communicate this information to you?

A From my recollection, that would be one of the topics that could come up in those USG Industry meetings.

Q Do you remember what Meta did next following that meeting?

A So to be clear, I'm not referring to any specific USG Industry meeting. This is more generally the type of thing that CISA might talk to in those meetings.

Q Sure. But do you recall in one of those meetings that election -- at least one of those meetings -- election misinformation was raised --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- by a CISA official? Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. Do you recall, maybe not after one specific meeting, but regarding that issue, did someone from Meta take action?

A I don't know if someone from Meta took action. Again, that would have fallen outside of my area of responsibility.

Q Was there someone from the misinformation team on these meetings?

A Not to my recollection.

Q How was it communicated to the misinformation team?

A I don't know how or if it was communicated to the misinformation team.

Q Okay. When misinformation was communicated either by the Global Engagement Center or by CISA, did they identify where the misinformation originated from?

A Not to my recollection.

Q Did they make a distinction about whether it was foreign or domestic?

A Not that I recall.

Q Did your manager work at all in the misinformation space?

A [redacted]?

Q Yes.

A I don't believe so.

Q Do you recall [redacted] ever raising the issue of the distinction between misinformation originating from a domestic source as opposed to a foreign source?

A Can you maybe clarify what you mean by raise the issue of?

Q Did he ever discuss it with you?

A Not to my -- not -- I don't recall any conversation about that.

Q Do you recall that issue ever being discussed in these industry U.S. Government meetings?

A Which issue again?

Q Where misinformation originated from.

A I don't recall that being a topic of discussion in these meetings.

Q And is that true for your interactions with the Global Engagement Center?

A I don't recall that topic specifically coming up with the Global Engagement Center.

[redacted] We've been at it for about an hour. I think we'd like to take a break.

[redacted] Sure. This is a good stopping point.

[redacted] We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We're back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], we've spent about the last hour going through Signal chats about misinformation. Just to clarify, you work on disinformation with a "d," correct?

A That's correct.

Q And as you explained earlier, disinformation, as that term -- as you're using that term and as it's used at Meta, refers to activities conducted by people who are being deceptive about their identities or their location or what it is they're doing, correct?

A That is correct.

Q And it's not concerned with the factual accuracy of content they might post or anything like that. It's purely deception about who the actor is and why they're doing what they're doing.

A That is correct.

Q As opposed to misinformation which, as I understand that that term is used, to refer to information itself that is false or is alleged to be false.

A That is my understanding, as well.

Q And you don't deal with the misinformation space.

A That is correct.

Q And you don't -- as you've said before, you're not even -- you can't even answer how many people at Meta do deal with that space.

A That's correct.

Q Or who's in charge of that.

A That's right.

Q Okay. And so that's why you're having trouble answering some of the questions about these chats, correct?

A That's correct.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

[redacted] Wait.

[redacted] One more? Okay.

Give me one second.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] And just to clarify, [redacted], when you receive a lead that's about misinformation and it doesn't have a disinformation or a CIB component to it, you pass it on to the group email for the misinformation team.

[redacted] That's right, to the best of my recollection. Again, I want to be as helpful as I can here. But a lot of these events happened several years ago.

[redacted] Thank you.

And that's it for me -- for now.

Chairman Jordan. [redacted], was the letter -- you're familiar with the letter from the 51 former intel officials that [redacted] referenced earlier today?

[redacted] Yes, sir, I am.

Chairman Jordan. Was that disinformation?

[redacted] So my team hasn't evaluated that letter. It wasn't, to my knowledge, posted on our platform. So I wouldn't want to speculate.

Chairman Jordan. I'm just getting your thoughts as an expert. Was it disinformation? I mean, it was presented as if it was organic. It came from -- these 51 former intelligence officials just got together and said we're going to put this letter together and put it out there in the public 2 weeks before the Presidential election.

We now know, after our deposition or our transcribed interview of former Acting Director Mike Morell, that what prompted him to put it together was the Biden campaign, and that they worked with the Biden campaign, so much so that the Biden campaign told them where -- what media outlets to give the letter to first, what sequence to do.

I'm just asking, is that a disinformation effort?

[redacted] So what I can speak to, in our actions on the platform, our policies, we focus on deceptive identity, whether someone is [inaudible]. And without evaluating if there was activity on our platform here, I wouldn't want to speak for where it would fall.

Chairman Jordan. But wasn't it deceptive?

[redacted] The way that we define deceptive identity is whether there are fake accounts involved, fake identities involved in disseminating something on our platform.

I'm not aware of the letter being disseminated on our platform by real or fake accounts. So best of my knowledge, I don't.

Chairman Jordan. You don't think your letter was ever shared on Facebook with anyone?

[redacted] Just not to my knowledge if it was shared and by whom it was shared, if it was.

Chairman Jordan. Whether it was shared or not, I guess I'm just asking a more general question. Is it disinformation when the letter is presented as if it was organic when, in fact, it wasn't?

[redacted] I think the -- one of the reasons we're so careful about our coordinated inauthentic behavior policies is that there are a bunch of different ways that people might represent themselves and different ways that may be or may not be acceptable ways of representing themselves in public. I'm concerned with what they're doing on our platform.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Great.

If we can circle back. And, again, appreciate the time you're taking to be here with us today.

A Of course.

Q We've discussed several sets of meetings with the government. That includes with the Foreign Influence Task Force, the Global Engagement Center, CISA.

We also discussed your hack-and-leak policy and that the policy -- you shared the aspects of your policy with the government in the course of communications.

Did that occur in the meetings with the Foreign Influence Task Force?

A To the best of my recollection, those occurred in the meetings, the USG Industry meetings, the broader meetings.

Q Okay. Was there -- in the course of these meetings, you mentioned that sometimes it was -- I think "tactical" is one word you used. There were specific posts that were raised in the Signal chats we looked at earlier. You mentioned in the USG Industry meetings there was high-level information that was conveyed.

At any point was there information provided by the government regarding efforts from a foreign actor to use a hack-and-leak operation to try to influence an American election?

A It's my recollection, again, right, there was this both history of hack-and-leak operations, right, that occurred from 2016 through the French elections. There's also the public statements that I remember the U.S. Government had made I believe earlier in 2020, sometime in the summer, around the risk of hack-and-leak operations targeting the election.

I recall that in these USG Industry syncs, in the USG Industry syncs, the risk of hack-and-leak operations as a potential threat vector was also raised earlier in the summer of 2020. And I believe that the U.S. Treasury Department also publicly released information about the activities of a Ukrainian member -- former member of Parliament, Andrii Derkach, and potential targeting of I think both the U.S. and the Ukrainian Government.

[redacted] I think we produced a document, if you have it -- it may take us a while to find it -- where hack-and-leak is on the agenda from the sync meeting. So just -- and there may have been others as well. So just want to flag that.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall how frequently hack-and-leak was raised during these USG Industry sync meetings?

A How frequently? I know it came up once or twice.

Q Do you recall who from the government raised the issue?

A I believe in the summer, that summer USG Industry sync meeting I had mentioned, it was raised by the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force. I don't recall who else had raised it.

Q Were there ever industry-only meetings to discuss either hack-and-leak policy or information that was being communicated by the government?

A I recall that there were industry-only conversations kind of in advance of those USG Industry syncs. Generally those were focused on timing of the meeting, who was going to attend, that kind of thing.

Q To circle back to one of the things we touched on earlier in the day, your investigative team looked at the Hunter Biden laptop story on October 14th, continuing to look at it in the days that followed.

Based off the information we have today, your team's determination that it was not the product of a hack-and-leak was ultimately proven correct. Is that right?

A I might be a little more precise and say, based on the evidence that we have access to, our assessment is that the hack-and-leak policy, in those specific three tests, we didn't meet the threshold to apply that policy to the Hunter Biden laptop story.

[3:09 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q During these USG industry sync meetings, when you're discussing your hack-and-leak policy, did other companies also share what their analogous policy was?

A I can't recall if other companies did or didn't share that information.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the Aspen Institute?

A I'm familiar -- I know they exist.

Q Okay. Are you familiar that they hosted a hack-and-leak tabletop exercise?

A I'm aware that the exercise occurred, yes.

Q Okay. And do you know if anyone from Meta attended?

A I believe Meta folks did attend, yes.

Q And who do you believe from Meta was there?

A I believe my manager attended.

Q Okay.

A And someone on my team.

Q Did they discuss the tabletop exercise with you?

A I can't recall discussing it with them in any degree of detail.

Q Okay. At a high level?

A At a high level, I knew it was happening. Naturally, I had to approve travel for my teammates.

Q But you didn't attend?

A That's correct. I did not attend.

Q Are you familiar with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A Yes, I'm familiar with it. I know it exists.

Q Okay. Have you ever worked with them?

A I've never worked with them. They correspond with us.

Q Okay. And what are the -- what's the subject matter of the correspondence?

A I can't recall specific topics that we corresponded on.

Q Who was your point of contact at the EIP?

A I didn't have a point of contact with EIP.

Q Okay. Who from Meta was interacting with --

A I'm not sure what our primary -- like, I don't know who our point of contact was with EIP on either end of that relationship.

Q Do you know who Alex Stamos is?

A Yes, I know who Alex Stamos is.

Q Do you work with Alex Stamos?

A I've never worked with Alex. He left Meta or Facebook before I joined the company.

Q Okay. Have you worked with -- let me rephrase that.

Have you been in contact with Alex Stamos regarding your work?

A At Facebook?

Q Excuse me. At Facebook, yes.

A Yes.

Q Okay. And what was the nature of those conversations?

A Generally trying to understand -- so I was in contact with Alex shortly after I joined the company to try and understand the context around the work that I was going to be doing. As I noted, some of the policies predated my joining the company.

Q And he's at Stanford now --

A That's my understanding.

Q -- in the Stanford Internet Observatory?

A I'm familiar with the Stanford Internet Observatory.

Q Have you been in contact with Alex Stamos with respect to his work at the Stanford Internet Observatory?

A Yes.

Q And what was the nature of those communications?

A The nature of those communications were around establishing an information-sharing agreement with the Stanford Internet Observatory around coordinated inauthentic behavior networks and then coordinated inauthentic behavior takedowns we had already conducted.

Q Okay. And you discussed previously that Meta will publicize when it takes down a coordinated inauthentic behavior network of accounts.

What information is being -- are you sharing with the Stanford Internet Observatory?

A So the information we share around coordinated inauthentic behavior takedowns. So the -- functionally, the content that the networks were posting for independent analysis.

Q Okay. Who else do you share that information with?

A We share that information with a number of kind of academic and open-source research organizations.

Q Are you familiar with whether Meta shares information outside of coordinated inauthentic behavior or foreign influence operations with Alex Stamos?

A I've shared some information with Alex Stamos.

[redacted] Was your question about him, or was it about Meta?

BY [redacted]

Q I'll ask first of you.

A Okay. On cyber espionage-related issues. So advanced persistent threat groups and hacking activity.

Q And what about Meta?

A I don't know the extent to which anyone else at Meta might be in contact with Alex.

Q Do you know if the misinformation team has shared information either with Alex Stamos or the Stanford Internet Observatory?

A I don't know if they have or haven't.

Q Okay. You said there were a number.

Is Graphika a company that you share information with?

A Yes.

Q And how long have you had a point of contact with them?

A I don't know precisely when we started sharing information with Graphika.

Q Okay. And what is the subject matter of the information being shared?

A So the information we share with Graphika is content related to CIB takedowns as well as information about the CIB takedowns once we've conducted them.

BY [redacted]

Q And anything else other than those two categories?

A That's the extent of my knowledge of what we share, but I can't speak to if anyone else shares things with them.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with a Dr. Warren or Dr. Linvill from Clemson University?

A Familiar with their names, yes.

[redacted] If we could introduce 11012.

[redacted] After that, could we take a break and go off the record?

[redacted] Yeah. Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Back on the record please.

This will be exhibit 11.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Can you tell us the source of this?

[redacted] This is an email between professors at Clemson and personnel at Meta.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this email exchange?

A I don't recall the specific email exchange. Yeah, I don't recall. I think it was about a year ago, it looks like.

Q Okay. You mentioned earlier that your team would be provided leads from researchers, third-party groups.

Is this email exchange consistent with what you had in mind?

A This would be an example of the type of information outside researchers might send to us.

[redacted] Okay. If we could introduce 322 as an exhibit.

[redacted] Do we give this one back, or is it related?

[redacted] Yeah, you can give it back.

This will be exhibit 12.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this email exchange?

A I don't recognize this specific email, no.

Q If I could call your attention to three paragraphs down.

Dr. Linvill writes: [redacted] shared several accounts with your team two weeks which seem very clearly connected with this ongoing campaign and continue to engage in pro-Russian disinformation related to Ukraine. I understand your team thoroughly examined this accounts and found them to be authentic.

Is this -- well, first, let me back up.

Do you recall the accounts that Dr. Linvill sent to you to examine?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

A And, to be clear, I think what he's saying is that someone else had sent them 2 weeks prior. That [redacted] had sent them 2 weeks prior.

Q Okay. That's correct. Thank you.

And you don't recall why you found the accounts to be --

A I don't recall the specific case or the investigations around it.

Q Okay. You mentioned there were two reasons that sometimes outside groups or the government will misidentify authentic accounts as inauthentic.

Do you recall why the researchers were more likely to make one error or the other?

A I think the error that researchers were most likely to make was actually around attribution. It was when there were efforts to identify an operation as linked to a particular country or a threat actor. Outside research groups often struggled to make that attribution with a high degree of fidelity because they lacked visibility into the underlying technical data they would need to make that attribution.

[redacted] If we could have exhibit 421.

We can take those back.

[redacted] Okay. Cool.

[redacted] This will be exhibit 13.

[redacted] Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] And this is exhibit 13, just to clarify?

[redacted] Yes. 13.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with this email exchange?

A I don't recall this specific email.

Q Okay. He references reporting, including reporting from The New York Times.

Does your team -- is your team aware of reporting from mainstream media outlets, such as New York Times, regarding coordinated inauthentic behavior or networks of these inauthentic accounts?

A Generally, we'll remain abreast to the news.

Q Has there been instances where a manager has ever mentioned the news reports?

A A manager at --

Q At Meta. Excuse me.

A A manager. News reports have certainly been flagged for review to see whether they comport with the activity on the platform.

Q Okay. So, if there's reporting on something, that might be sufficient to trigger your investigative team to take a look. Is that what you're saying?

A In some cases, external reporting might be the genesis of an internal investigation to try and understand whether that activity is in fact occurring on the platform.

[redacted] If we can do exhibit 923.

And we can take these back. Thank you.

This will be exhibit 14.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this email exchange?

A I don't remember this specific email exchange, no.

Q If I could call your attention -- this will be the third sentence in the first paragraph: At the time, the network, which shared specific persona across networks, had been suspended by both TikTok and Twitter. Since March, I've also worked with Google to have a number of very large YouTube accounts suspended, which were also clearly part of the same network. Next week, the Kyiv Post will be doing a piece on these accounts, so I wanted to reach out to you one final time to try to understand why these accounts have been suspended by TikTok, Twitter, and YouTube, but remain active on Instagram.

Do you recall this complaint being raised to your team?

A I don't. And I'm not certain if I ever replied to these emails either.

Q Do you know how frequently Dr. Linvill reached out to you?

A I don't know off the top of my head how often he emailed me.

Q Did you receive a number of communications like this from other researchers?

A This is generally consistent with the type of inbound we might receive from external researchers.

Q If you receive a message from a researcher that mentions a number of other networks that have taken down a post, is that factored into your team's analysis?

A It's not. So our content policies around coordinated inauthentic behavior are specific to behavior on Facebook. And so we would need to see policy-violating activity on Facebook that met our evidentiary threshold.

Q Are there -- is it your understanding whether other platforms have a higher or lower threshold than Meta?

A I don't know. I wouldn't want to speculate on their policy adjudication process as I don't have visibility into it.

Q Have you had a contact with Dr. Kate Starbird with the Center for an Informed Public? Is she one of the researchers that you share information on?

A So she -- two questions. Which one do you want me to start with?

Q I'll start with, do you know who Dr. Kate Starbird is?

A I do know who she is, yes.

Q And have you had communications with her?

A I have met her, I think, once or twice.

Q And do you share information with her or her organization with the University of Washington?

A I don't recall sharing information with her or the University of Washington about CIB work.

Q You did not?

A I don't recall.

Q Oh, sorry.

[redacted] He said he didn't recall.

[redacted] Yeah.

Do you have any further questions?

[redacted] No. I think we're good.

[redacted] No further questions.

We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 3:28 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

HAYDN FORREST

ROBERT S. LITT

MORRISON FOERSTER

2100 L STREET NW

SUITE 900

WASHINGTON, DC 20037

Mr. [redacted]. Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper. Chairman Jordan and Chairman Turner have requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of Federal law enforcement and intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Mr. Clapper. James Clapper.

Mr. [redacted]. I understand you're here with two of your lawyers. Could they please introduce themselves for the record?

Mr. Litt. Robert Litt from Morrison and Foerster.

Mr. Forrest. Haydn Forrest, also Morrison Foerster.

Mr. [redacted]. This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within the jurisdictions of our respective committees.

On behalf of both chairmen, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions, especially that you're here voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] with Mr. Jordan's House Judiciary Committee staff. I'm now going to have the staffers in the room introduce themselves, starting with my colleague, Ms. [redacted].

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], counsel with House Intelligence.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], senior special counsel, House Judiciary Committee, Mr. Jordan.

Ms. [redacted] [redacted], counsel for the majority staff, House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. [redacted] [redacted], special counsel for the House Judiciary majority, Chairman Jordan.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], staff for the Judiciary majority.

Mr. [redacted]. Ms. [redacted]?

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], House Intel minority general counsel.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], counsel for the Judiciary Committee Democrats.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], House Judiciary minority.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], House Judiciary minority.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], with the majority on House Intelligence.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], subcommittee staff director, CIA Subcommittee, House Intelligence Committee.

Mr. [redacted]. We have some of our members here today. I'll have them introduce themselves as well.

Chairman Jordan. Jim Jordan.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz.

Mr. Biggs. Andy Biggs.

Mrs. Spartz. Victoria Spartz.

Mr. [redacted]. I'll go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority staff and members will ask questions first for one hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity, both their staff and their members, to ask questions for an hour as well.

We'll alternate back and forth. The staff will physically move around, so we're close to the court reporter. And we can take a short break at the end of each hour. If you'd like to take additional breaks, that's fine too. Please let us know.

Certainly, if you need to confer with your counsel, we'll go off the record and you can do that whenever you want. You can also go to the other parts of the room if that's interesting or necessary.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter here taking down everything we say to make a written record. We ask that you give verbal responses to our questions. Do you understand that?

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Mr. [redacted]. So the court reporter can capture a complete record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you at any given point. From time to time, we will inevitably talk over one another, so we may have to go back and restate a question for you, and we'll try to avoid that.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need a clarification, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

The Federal Rules of Evidence aren't applicable here. So if you have some hearsay information, you can tell us, and just tell us how you came to understand that.

You understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law you're required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Understand that?

Mr. Clapper. Yes, I do.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. And along those lines, 18 United States Code 1001, the false statements statute, relates to that. Do you understand that as well?

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Mr. [redacted]. And, sir, we mean no disrespect by mentioning that. It's part of our standard welcoming remarks. So thank you.

We'll probably have exhibits here today, and at the end of the process we will collect them, even if they happen to be an exhibit that is a document that you've provided. We would just like to keep the proceedings as confidential as we can.

Ms. [redacted], do you have any opening remarks on your end?

Ms. [redacted]. No. Just thank you to the witness for joining us today and taking time out of your schedule.

Mr. [redacted]. And, Mr. Litt, do you have a --

Mr. Litt. Yes, I do have a short statement. Thank you.

Mr. [redacted] Please.

Mr. Litt. I do want to make clear that we continue to believe that this inquiry has no legitimate legislative purpose. Congress has no right of oversight over statements by private citizens on matters of public interest, even if the members may disagree with those statements.

As Chairman Jordan has said, and I have said this before, but I'll repeat it, the most important right we have as American citizens under the First Amendment is our right to speak, our right to communicate in a political fashion, and not be attacked, harassed for doing so.

So long as they do not disclose classified information, former national security officials or individuals with security clearances have the same First Amendment rights as the rest of us. Indeed, the public is entitled to have the benefit of their decades of expertise on matters touching on our national security.

Nonetheless, and without waiving any rights he has, General Clapper is prepared to answer your questions about the statement he signed in October 2020 concerning the New York Post's reporting about Hunter Biden as requested in the committee's letter of February 26th, 2020 -- sorry, February 6th, 2023.

I do want to mention that General Clapper is a bit hard of hearing because of numerous reconnaissance flights he took in planes without soundproofing. So I would ask that you speak clearly and loudly and understand that he may ask you to repeat questions.

Mr. [redacted]. Fair enough.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Director, what was the tenure that you served as the Director of National Intelligence?

A From August of 2010 to January 20th of 2017, six and a half years.

Q And what have you been doing since then?

A Well, I'm retired. I've done speeches. CNN. I have a contract with them. It's about to run out. Appearances at colleges and universities. Consulting. Typical things that retired geezers do.

Q Okay. Going to mark as exhibit 1 the public statement on the Hunter Biden laptop.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Did you have any role in creating this statement?

A No. I suggested one minor edit, but I didn't draft it.

Q Okay. Do you know who did draft the statement?

A Michael Morell, I believe, led the effort. I think there were others involved, but principally Michael.

Q And how often do you interact with Mr. Morell?

A Aperiodically. Not frequently.

Q Do you know what --

A We are longstanding colleagues, when we both served in the intelligence community.

Q Okay. Do you know what role Marc Polymeropoulos played in the creation of the statement?

A I do not.

Q What was your reason for agreeing to sign on to the letter?

A For my part, it was simply to sound a warning that the Russians could possibly be involved, and that's all.

Q Okay. Did you have any knowledge that the Russians were involved?

A No, and I believe the letter said that. The statement said that. It just said the characteristics of this episode certainly lend themselves to the potential for the Russians to have been involved. And I say that after living up close and personal in their interference in the election in 2016.

Q But you had no knowledge that the Russians were involved?

A No.

Q Did you have any knowledge of whether the contents of the laptop were authentic?

A No.

Q Since you signed the statement, have you come to learn that the contents of the laptop are authentic?

A Well, some of them are, yes.

Q And some of them are not?

A And I say that -- I've not seen any official pronouncement on -- from the government, DOJ, FBI, or anyone else of an investigatory body about what the content of the -- the laptop's contents are.

Q And have you heard any official pronouncement from the Hunter Biden camp that anything on the laptop is not authentic?

A No, I don't believe I have.

Q If there were inauthentic materials on the laptop and the Biden camp -- Hunter Biden camp -- knew that, don't you think they would point that out publicly?

A I suppose so.

Q I'm going to refer you to the fourth paragraph of the statement.

A Uh-huh.

Q "It is for all these reasons that we write to say that the arrival on the U.S. political scene of emails purportedly belonging to Vice President Biden's son Hunter, much of it related to his time serving on the Board of the Ukrainian gas company Burisma, has all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation."

Why do you think it had the classic earmarks of a Russia information operation?

A Well, the thing you think about is the capability, intent, the timing, the involvement of Rudy Giuliani, and this Ukrainian businessman who had connections with Russian intelligence services. Certainly the timing just before the election is certainly reminiscent of what I saw the Russians do in the run-up to the election in 2016.

And it was for that reason I signed on to the letter as -- which for me was a warning that the dark hand of the Russians could be involved here.

Q Did you have any communications with any of the signatories of the letter about signing the letter?

A Other than Michael Morell, no.

Q And you just had one email with him? Or how many emails do you recall having?

A Half a dozen or so back and forth.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted]. This is exhibit No. 2.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I want to call your attention to your email, it's the second one down in this document, from Sunday, October 18th.

"Michael, I'll gladly sign on. I said as much on CNN Friday evening. I have one editorial suggestion for the letter: I think it would strengthen the verbiage if you say this has all the classic earmarks of a Soviet/Russian information operation rather than the 'feel' of a Russian operation."

Can you help us understand why you suggested that edit?

A I just thought it was better wording.

Q Okay. And did you -- were you -- could you tell us your understanding of the difference between an information operation and a disinformation operation?

A Well, I think that's kind of an arcane definition, for me at least. I think it's any time the Russians or any other adversary nation-state attempt to manipulate data, obtain it, slant it, in the interest of their own -- pursuing their own national interest, that is a form of Russian information operations.

Q And how about disinformation? What would that be?

A Well, to me it's somewhat of a distinction without a difference. I think it's the same general business of manipulating or of tainting, slanting information with a view towards changing opinion.

Q Okay. Going back to the statement, the next paragraph down.

"We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not, and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement. Just that our experience makes us deeply suspicious that the Russian Government played a significant role in this case."

I want to ask you about the use of the word 'significant.' Why did you think the Russian Government played a significant role?

A Again, I don't ascribe a whole lot of gradation to that term. If the Russians were involved at all, that's significant. If a foreign government is involved in our election process or attempting to be involved in the election process, that in itself, in my mind, is significant.

Q Sitting here today, though, we don't have any evidence that the Russians were involved in this, do we?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. The use of "President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani," in this paragraph, do you know if that was used in a pejorative way?

Mr. Litt. What do you mean by pejorative?

Mr. Clapper. Yeah. What do you mean by --

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Were they trying to draw attention that because this is a Trump ally that --

A Well, who had been involved with the Ukrainians, et cetera, yeah. I think that probably raised concerns on the part of many in the group that signed the statement.

Q And what's your awareness of Mr. Giuliani's involvement with Ukrainians?

A Well, he was in and out of Ukraine. And as I understand it, what I took away from what I read after I left the government, was looking for dirt on political opponents.

Q Were you aware of Hunter Biden's Burisma involvement before this letter was presented to you?

A Not really.

Q Do you recall back in the fall of 2019 news came to light during the impeachment proceedings that Hunter Biden had been placed on the board of Burisma and was paid quite a hefty amount of money to serve on the board? Were you aware of that?

A I think I recall that, yeah.

Q And during that time period it came to light that the duties he was performing on the board weren't specified, and it didn't seem that he was doing anything for that money. Do you remember that?

A No, I don't. And if that's -- I don't know if that --

Mr. Litt. "No, I don't" is enough.

Mr. Clapper. -- is necessarily illegal. But I don't know the specifics of what he did.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q So if the son of a Presidential candidate is being paid a boatload of money for doing nothing, is that something that ought to be fair game for discussing during a Presidential election?

A Well, I guess it depends. I don't know.

Q If a son of a -- or daughter of a Presidential candidate is trading on their parent's name, taking in boatloads of money, I mean, isn't that a problem?

A Well, it could be.

Q It's certainly something worth examining, correct, by the voters?

A I suppose.

Q When the New York Post story first came out identifying the laptop, did you read the story?

A I think I did, yes.

Q And were you -- did you have any other awareness of the story other than the New York Post telling of it?

A I don't think so. Well, other than other media that echoed it.

Q Did you have any communications with anyone outside of the emails that you produced about the Hunter Biden laptop, not specifically about the statement, but about the authenticity of the contents on the laptop?

A I don't recall any such dialogue.

Q Did you do any Google searches, or did you try to educate yourself, research on the issue before deciding to sign on?

A Not other than what I had read in -- I do read a lot of media each day. But I didn't do a Google search, no.

Chairman Jordan. What did you base your -- you said that the Friday before this Sunday email where you agree to sign the letter, you said, you said as much as what was in the letter in an interview on CNN. What did you base that on, just the fact that you read this story?

Mr. Clapper. Well, what I'd -- yes, what I'd read of the story. And I was on Erin Burnett, I think, on CNN the previous Friday for a pretty short interview.

Chairman Jordan. And you said in that interview you thought this was a Russian information operation?

Mr. Clapper. Yes, I did.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Did you have any role in collecting signatories for the letter?

A No.

Q Did you have any communications with Mr. Morell about who would be signing and who ought to be signing?

A Not that I remember specifically. I don't recall pulsing him, asking him about that.

Q Were you aware before Mr. Morell put this plan into place he had received a communication from Tony Blinken?

A Not contemporaneously. I learned that many months later.

Q And at the time, Mr. Blinken was associated with the Biden campaign?

A That's right.

Chairman Jordan. "Many months later," meaning when, Director?

Mr. Clapper. Huh?

Chairman Jordan. "Many months later," meaning when?

Mr. Clapper. Oh, I don't remember, Mr. Jordan, but it was at least a year after.

Chairman Jordan. But prior to the investigation we've been doing where it's become public that Mr. Morell had communicated with Secretary Blinken?

Mr. Clapper. Yeah, I had learned before it became public, yes.

Chairman Jordan. And how did you learn that?

Mr. Clapper. John Brennan told me.

Chairman Jordan. So more than a year ago, Mr. Brennan told you that --

Mr. Clapper. No, I don't -- I'd say it was more than a year after the letter. I don't remember the exact date when he told me that.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Clapper. It was a matter of months ago, I guess. But I don't remember the date, but it was well after.

Chairman Jordan. And what did Mr. Brennan tell you at the time?

Mr. Clapper. He just told me that Tony Bliken had reached out to Michael about putting together a public statement.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I want to go to exhibit 2 and flip to the second page. And this is the email from Morell and Polymeropoulous. I'll read it.

"Mark and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response."

Do you remember that as being one of the reasons you decided to sign on?

A It wasn't one of the reasons. My reason was purely a warning about Russian involvement. And that, I guess, goes to my long experience as a Cold War warrior and again witnessing what they did in 2016. It had nothing to do with talking points.

Q Okay. But you certainly are not a -- are not or were not a supporter of President Trump. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And you were a supporter of then Vice President or the candidate Biden?

A Yes, I was.

Q Okay. So it certainly was a positive thing in your mind, was it not, to give the Vice President a talking point in the debate?

A I didn't seize on that point. I just didn't dwell on it.

Q Were you aware that after the article was published and after the Vice President had that talking point for the debate, a senior campaign official, Mr. Ricchetti, reached out to Morell to thank him?

A Was I aware of that?

Q Yes.

A No.

Q So what we've come to learn is that what Mr. Morell put in place had all the classic earmarks of a classic political operation. Is that a fair characterization, looking back on things?

A Well, it depends on your definition of political, I guess. Was there something wrong with that?

Q Not saying there is. I'm just asking your views on that, whether you think, looking back, this was a political operation.

A I don't have a view on that.

Q Going back to exhibit 1, the statement. The first paragraph sort of establishes the credentials of the signatories. It says, "We are all individuals who devoted significant portions of our lives to national security. Some of us served in senior positions in policy departments and agencies, and some of us served in senior positions in the Intelligence Community. Some of us were political appointees, and some were career officials. Many of us worked for presidents of both parties."

This introduction clearly -- and correct me if I'm wrong -- is trying to make the case that the signatories have spent significant portions of their careers in national security and have an expertise in identifying things like Russian information operations. Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q And is it also fair to say that the list of signatories certainly contains some big names. I mean, yourself, obviously, very well-known individual, former Director of National Intelligence. Former Director of the CIA Mr. Hayden, also very well known. Same with former Director Panetta, former Director Brennan, and Mr. Morell. There's sort of a long list of people here that have well-known and well-understood credentials. Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q So when they sign their name to a statement, isn't it also fair to say that readers of this ought to trust them?

A Well, I guess that's the implicit hope.

Q That what they're saying in the statement isn't just likely true, but it's very likely to be true and accurate given their experience?

A All we said, in my mind, was watch out, the Russians could be involved here.

Q The third to last paragraph on the first page of the exhibit 1, "If we are right," it states, "this is Russia trying to influence how Americans vote in this election. And we believe strongly that Americans need to be aware of this."

But as it turns out, you were not right. Is that fair to say?

A Well, from the evidence I have now, that's a fair statement. But again, I have not seen or heard the official outcome of a forensic -- a legitimate forensic analysis of the laptop.

Q Flipping over to the second page, again this is the third to last paragraph before your signature -- and you're listed first on the letter, aren't you?

A Yes.

Q Third to last paragraph states, "Our view that the Russians are involved in the Hunter Biden email issue is consistent with two other significant data points. According to the Washington Post, citing four sources, 'Intelligence agencies were warned the White House last year that Giuliani was a target of influence operations by Russian intelligence.'"

Mr. Litt. Just to be clear, it says intelligence agencies warned the White House, not were warned.

Mr. [redacted]. My apologies.

Mr. Litt. It makes a difference.

Mr. [redacted]. That was unintentional.

Mr. Litt. I know.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Did you share that view, when it said "our view"?

A Yeah, I did.

Q And why did you share that view?

A Well, again, just the general appearance here and the fact that Giuliani was alleged to be a target of influence operations by the Russians. That would be very consistent with what the Russians try to do.

Q Did you have any awareness of how the press operation was going to work from -- I understand that Mr. Shapiro had a role in taking the statement and shopping it to various news outlets?

A No, I did not.

Q Did you have any -- you have no information on that?

A I did not.

Q So you didn't know that he was instructed or suggested by Mr. Morell to go to a particular reporter --

A No.

Q -- at The Washington Post?

Mr. Litt. Let him finish the question.

Mr. Clapper. No, I didn't.

Mr. [redacted]. And, ultimately, that reporter at The Washington Post that was referred by Mr. Morell through the campaign decided not to report on it. Did you know that?

Mr. Clapper. No, I did not.

Mr. [redacted]. Ultimately, Politico did run the story.

Do we have that?

Mr. Biggs. While you're getting it, can I ask a question --

Mr. [redacted]. Of course.

Mr. Biggs. -- of Mr. Clapper about that, the quote that [redacted] just read to you?

"According to The Washington Post, citing four sources, quote, 'U.S. intelligence agencies warned the White House last year.'"

Did you have any independent knowledge that U.S. intelligence agencies had warned the White House?

Mr. Clapper. No, sir, I didn't.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Here's the Politico story. And this is only -- among the reporters that Mr. Shapiro is trying to shop the letter to, this is the outlet that he had success with. And the headline is interesting, and a lot of the witnesses that we've spoken to have said -- have disputed the headline. So I wanted to get your reaction to the headline.

The headline reads, "Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say." I wanted to get your reaction on that.

A Well, that was -- the headline was precisely my problem with this article. The article itself -- the content of the article is pretty good. But the definitive statement, "is Russian disinformation," was not -- does not comport with what I thought the intent of the letter was, which was to say they could be. Big difference.

Q And there was also -- and correct me if I'm wrong -- it was could be a Russian information operation as opposed to disinformation?

A Well, whatever floats your boat on the definition, yeah.

Q Well, you certainly are a respected enough person in this terrain to have a view on the difference between disinformation and information. What some witnesses have represented to us is that disinformation is false or bad or manipulated information that's pushed out, where information may be accurate information that is pushed out by maybe a bad actor.

Mr. Litt. I think he gave you his understanding of the difference before.

Mr. [redacted]. Do you have anything to add?

Mr. Clapper. No, I don't.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. Mr. Stewart, I wanted to give you an opportunity to ask.

Mr. Stewart. Just very briefly along these lines of questioning. After -- well, within the last month or so, you said -- and I'm quoting here, I believe -- "Politico deliberately distorted what we said." Is that your belief?

Mr. Clapper. No. That's the headline. That's what I was referring to.

Mr. Stewart. Did that bother you?

Mr. Clapper. Well, sure.

Mr. Stewart. So you felt it misrepresented the intent of the letter?

Mr. Clapper. The headline did, yeah. Not the article itself.

Mr. Stewart. Did you ever make any public comment to try to correct that?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Stewart. You knew it was picked up by dozens, perhaps hundreds of other media outlets. Again, did you ever try to correct the record on the Politico headline?

Mr. Clapper. No, I did not.

Mr. Stewart. Did you watch the Presidential debate that took place a few days after the release of your letter?

Mr. Clapper. I did not actually see that debate. No, sir.

Mr. Stewart. You've surely seen reference to it or clips of it, I would imagine, when President Biden --

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Mr. Stewart. He said, referring to your letter, your letter gave him the credibility to say that the Hunter Biden laptop story was, quote, "a bunch of garage, a Russian plan, a smear campaign."

Did you ever try to correct the record that that wasn't accurate either?

Mr. Clapper. No, I did not.

Mr. Stewart. How come?

Mr. Clapper. I just -- well, if I were to spend my time correcting headlines in the news, I'd be spending a lot of time doing that.

Mr. Stewart. But this is a headline directly attributable to your and your efforts.

It reflected your view on things, and you didn't feel it was accurate. And it clearly had a political intent or purpose or an outcome to it. Why would you not correct in that case?

Mr. Clapper. I just didn't, Mr. Stewart. I just didn't.

Mr. Stewart. But I'm asking why.

Mr. Clapper. I don't have an explanation. I just didn't bother.

Mr. Stewart. Did you feel -- were you pleased that the President could call the Hunter Biden laptop story a bunch of garbage and a Russian plan? Was that, did you feel, a benefit?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I think the Politico article misrepresented -- I think there was some misrepresentation in there too. Again, the definitive statement is quite different from the import -- the intent that I had, at least, which was they could be involved.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. Just a couple of things I'd like to follow up on.

Earlier in your comments here, you said you believe there were some things on the laptop that were actually authentic. Do you have examples of that?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Stewart. Unless I misheard you, I think you said that you believe there were some things on the laptop that were actually authentic, some information was actually authentic.

Mr. Clapper. I don't have any way of assessing what's on the laptop and whether it's valid or not. I never had access to the laptop. Never seen a case report or statement about it.

Mr. Stewart. I just want to make sure I understand what you're saying. Maybe I misheard, or maybe you misspoke.

So you don't believe you have any evidence or examples of anything on the laptop that's actually proven to be authentic?

Mr. Clapper. No, I don't, one way or the other, either valid or invalid.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. You've spoken at great length and referenced here a couple times about your experience, which is, I have no question or doubt about, in Russian interference and their malicious intent.

In particular in 2016, in the U.S. election, give us an example of something Russia did to interfere with the U.S. election in 2016.

Mr. Clapper. Well, they had a very aggressive and in-depth campaign to influence opinion to sow doubt, discord, and distrust among the American people. And I believe they clearly favored one candidate, Mr. Trump, and wanted to do all they could to help him win, and they disfavored the other candidate, Hillary Clinton, and wanted to do all they could to hurt her.

And the intelligence information, as you know, from our intelligence community assessment, I thought laid it out fairly well, particularly the highly classified version?

Mr. Stewart. Okay. So one thing. The ICA has been cast into doubt. I'm sure you know that. But putting that aside, because we can't discuss that here, I'm asking if you have examples, specific things that Russia did to interfere in our 2016 election?

Mr. Clapper. Well, they had -- the efforts they made to influence opinion and to cast doubt on the efficacy of the election to discourage people from voting, and they focused on three key States where the margin was, like, 80 votes. And they did a very good job of analyzing and assessing our political landscape and tried to exploit it.

Mr. Stewart. What did they do in those three key States?

Mr. Clapper. Well, they tried to discourage minority voting.

Mr. Stewart. How?

Mr. Clapper. By casting doubt on the sanctity of the election process and discouraging people from voting.

Mr. Stewart. But how?

Mr. Clapper. By putting out social media. They're very good at it.

Mr. Stewart. Do you know how much Russia spent on social media, the IC's assessment on how much Russia spent on social media?

Mr. Clapper. I don't recall. I don't know if we had a number --

Mr. Stewart. Would it surprise you if I told you that out of a campaign that spent more than a billion dollars, the entire Russian budget on social media across the entire country, across the entire campaign, was less than $180,000?

Mr. Clapper. Well, they were very effective.

Mr. Stewart. So in a billion-dollar budget, you would argue that $180,000 persuaded 80,000 people to change their vote?

Mr. Litt. I don't think he said that.

Mr. Clapper. I don't believe I said that.

Mr. Stewart. That's a question. I'm not saying you said that. It's a question.

Mr. Clapper. Well, there's no way to know that, the answer to that, unless we go back and query, interrogate the 80,000 voters --

Mr. Stewart. There is no way to know that.

Mr. Clapper. -- [crosstalk] affected your vote? And there's no way to do that.

Mr. Stewart. You're right. I agree with you. There is no way to know that. But you said in a statement, again, about the time, "I would call my informed opinion that, given the massive effort the Russians made, and the number of citizens that they touched, and the variety of multidimensional aspects," of which we've only been able to name one and that's a social media campaign, of which they spent some tiny fraction of 1 percent.

Mr. Clapper. Well, they --

Mr. Stewart. If I could just complete your statement.

"And given the fact that it turned on less than 80,000 votes in three States, to me it just exceeds logic and credulity that they didn't affect the outcome. And it's my belief they actually turned" the outcome.

But you just said a minute ago that you didn't believe we could know that.

Mr. Clapper. That's my opinion, but I can't prove it empirically.

Mr. Stewart. All right. Last question.

Do you believe to this day that the Russian -- it was a Russian disinformation campaign to affect the election, that they tried to do that through the Hunter Biden laptop and release the information on it?

Mr. Clapper. I believe they could have.

Mr. Stewart. But do you believe they did?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't know. I'd just say -- all I was suggesting and the reason I signed on the letter is just to introduce the possibility.

Mr. Stewart. But again, I'm not asking a reference to the time you signed the letter. We can understand there was confusion at times. I'm asking, with what you know now and the information you've surely read and been exposed to in the last 2 years, do you believe that this was a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know, Congressman. I honestly don't.

Mr. Stewart. You can't make a conclusion about that?

Mr. Clapper. No, I can't.

Mr. Stewart. So you have -- and I want to say this gently and respectfully -- but you have cited your background and your experience in Russian disinformation, you've had 2 years to evaluate the evidence, and you still have no conclusion as to whether this was a Russian disinformation campaign?

Mr. Clapper. I have not had access to the laptop, myself, and I don't know any results of a legitimate forensic analysis of it. Again, all I was suggesting of the possibility that Russians could be involved. I didn't say they were.

Mr. Stewart. So at this point, you would think it would be valid for us to continue to investigate the Hunter Biden laptop as possible Russian disinformation?

Mr. Clapper. Certainly.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. And do you regret signing the letter?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Stewart. Still not. With all the information available to you now, you still don't regret it?

Mr. Clapper. No. This is two and a half years ago.

Mr. Stewart. But with the information available to you now, do you wish you could go back and say, you know, I wish I wouldn't --.

Mr. Clapper. No, I don't. I do wish we added a statement in the letter that said something along the lines of, "We will of course abide by the results of a legitimate forensic analysis of the laptop." I think that would have strengthened the letter.

Mr. Stewart. Okay. I'll conclude.

You were the Director of National Intelligence, DIA, and others. You had to make decisions about the authenticity of information and intelligence every single day. And I got to tell you, it stuns me that you won't make an analysis or a conclusion on two years of being able to evaluate this information --

Mr. Clapper. I don't have any way of making an analysis, Congressman. I don't have any inside baseball access to that.

Mr. Stewart. I yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. [redacted]. Mr. Biggs, sir.

Mr. Biggs. Before we leave the Politico article, if I understand you right, the problem that you had with the article was that the Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, and you thought that was too direct and emphatic.

Mr. Clapper. That's right.

Mr. Biggs. And did that make you comfortable with the rest of the article?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I thought it was pretty good.

Mr. Biggs. And so I'm just asking for clarification, I'm not trying to put you on the spot, except for the second to the last paragraph of this article, which talks about Biden advisers during his vice presidency who said that basically they've rejected the suggestion that Biden ever met with a representative of Burisma in 2015 or has otherwise been involved in Hunter Biden's business interests.

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry, sir, which --

Mr. Biggs. The second to last paragraph.

Mr. Clapper. Okay.

Mr. Litt. Take a second to read it.

Mr. Biggs. I'll let you read it.

Mr. Litt. Just read that paragraph to yourself.

Mr. Clapper. Okay.

Mr. Biggs. Yeah. So I guess my question is, you didn't have any direct evidence as a former intelligence official about Biden going to Burisma at all in the -- I mean, going to Ukraine at all in 2015 and meeting with Burisma? You had no intel information about that at all? You had nothing corroborating or --

Mr. Clapper. In 2015 you're talking about?

Mr. Biggs. Yeah, at all, ever.

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. And you were comfortable with this paragraph?

Mr. Clapper. No information one way or the other.

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

Mrs. Spartz. So the Hunter and Burisma situation never was brought up to you as the Director of National Intelligence, never brought up internally --

Mr. Clapper. I can't hear her.

Mr. Litt. She's asking you whether the Hunter Biden Burisma situation was never brought to your attention when you were Director of National Intelligence.

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mrs. Spartz. Have you ever actually noticed that Natasha Bertrand, were you aware, was actually the same person who planted the Steele Dossier, which happened to be a hoax? Were you aware of that, the same reporter?

Mr. Clapper. The same?

Mrs. Spartz. Natasha Bertrand.

Mr. Clapper. I apologize for the hearing.

Mr. Litt. She's asking you whether you knew that Natasha Bertrand of Politico, who wrote this story here, was the same reporter who broke the story about the Steele Dossier.

Is that what you were asking?

Mrs. Spartz. Yes.

Mr. Clapper. No, I didn't know that.

Mrs. Spartz. So you wanted to strengthen the verbiage, use the credibility of your office. What kind of due diligence did you do?

Mr. Litt. On what?

Mr. Clapper. On what?

Mrs. Spartz. Signing this letter. What due diligence did you do at all?

Mr. Clapper. Well, the only due diligence I could do was what I was aware of in the media and my concerns that the Russians could be involved.

Mrs. Spartz. So you never checked anything? What you did? Did you google something? Did you do anything?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry.

Mrs. Spartz. What type of diligence? You put your name on the letter.

Mr. Litt. She's asking what kind of due diligence you did before signing the letter. Fair?

Mrs. Spartz. Yeah.

Mr. Clapper. Well, I thought that the letter was a fair warning of potential Russian involvement. That's all it was.

Mrs. Spartz. So you did none?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I didn't present it, nor did I think it was a fact that the Russians were involved. I was just concerned that they might have been. I don't know how much due diligence you need to do for that. It certainly rang familiar bells for me from what I saw them do in 2016.

So I simply wanted to join in the warning that, watch out, this could be the dark hand of the Russians. That's all it was for me.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Director, you specifically drafted the language that the Hunter Biden laptop endeavor had all the classic earmarks of Soviet Russian information operations. Would you list those earmarks for the committee?

Mr. Clapper. Would I what?

Mr. Gaetz. Will you list those earmarks?

Mr. Clapper. Well, again, starting with Russian capability, intent, experience, what they did in 2020 to influence the outcome of our election.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry, sir. Did you mean 2020 or 2016?

Mr. Clapper. 2016, excuse me.

Mr. Gaetz. There's what they did in 2016. What's the next one?

Mr. Clapper. The timing.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Mr. Clapper. The involvement of -- what's the Ukrainian businessman's name, slips my mind right now, with Rudy Giuliani, who was the subject of Russian information operations influence.

So I thought there was enough there. And based on the long history of the Russians' involvement -- attempts to involve themselves in our elections, I thought it was fair to warn people about it.

Mr. Gaetz. Just so the committee fully understands how you think about the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation, would you consider the Steele Dossier a Russian information operation?

Mr. Clapper. Could have been, yes. That's why we didn't use it in our intelligence community assessment.

Mr. Gaetz. So, I mean, the Steele Dossier had similar timing to the Hunter Biden laptop with proximity to an election.

Mr. Clapper. Well, again, some thought that the Steele Dossier was a valid source. So there's always a debate about the fidelity and history of such documents.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Director, I appreciate your eagerness to answer my questions, but it makes it hard for the court reporter if we talk over each other. So I'm going to give you a chance to respond, and I just want a chance to get my questions out.

But I want to take these three criteria that you've laid out -- prior activity of the Russians, timing of the information, and involvement of shady characters who are the target of Russian intelligence operations -- I'm going to take those three criteria that you've applied to this letter in thinking about classic Russian information operations, and I'm going to apply each of those to the Steele Dossier and test whether or not your criteria are applied equally to everything or whether maybe you applied them differently based on the intent of the operation.

So as to timing, is it safe to say that the Steele Dossier merges with a similar proximity to a Presidential election as the Hunter Biden laptop?

Mr. Clapper. I think the difference, Mr. Gaetz, is I was in a responsible position at the time and had access to classified information and other information that helped us judge the credibility of the Steele Dossier.

I'm a private citizen now. I didn't have any access to classified information, which I did have at the time of the Steele Dossier when that was an issue as to whether we should draw on it or not as a valid intelligence source, and the judgment was not to. But that was a different context than this.

Mr. Gaetz. But that's an answer --

Mr. Clapper. I was out of the government for 6 years when -- or 4 years, I guess -- when this came up.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Director, that was an answer to a question, just not mine. My question is for you to help me delineate the distinction between the timing of the emergence of the Steele Dossier and the Hunter Biden laptop.

Mr. Clapper. Well, they're very similar.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Very similar.

Mr. Clapper. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. I appreciate that.

You made mention of also the involvement of entities that are the targets of Russian intelligence. You're aware that the subsources for the Steele Dossier were, in fact, targets of Russian intelligence, right?

Mr. Clapper. Yes, I did know that.

Mr. Gaetz. So another similarity.

Mr. Clapper. Yeah. I didn't know that in this case. I didn't know any inside baseball, any classified information whatsoever with respect to this matter.

Mr. Gaetz. You hold a --

Mr. Clapper. I did in the case of the Steele Dossier.

Mr. Gaetz. You hold a security clearance now, correct?

Mr. Clapper. I do.

Mr. Gaetz. And you held a security clearance when you signed the Hunter Biden letter, right?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Gaetz. And you held a security clearance when you signed the Hunter Biden letter, right?

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. So how is the public -- I mean, I appreciate here, as you're sharing information to the committee, well, you signed the Hunter Biden laptop when you were just a private citizen holding a security clearance, but when the Steele Dossier, the basis of the Russia hoax, you were on the inside, so you had this whole different suite of information available to you.

Don't you think it's misleading to the public that 51 people who hold or have held security clearances sign a document in the throes of a Presidential contest with the imprimatur of those clearances, isn't that confusing to the public?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I think the fact that people had extensive backgrounds in national security and some had clearances, some didn't, that sure, that would carry weight with the American public.

The fact that I or other formers have clearances doesn't mean we have access, day-to-day access, which we don't. It's used as -- if currently serving officials care to draw on our experience, which has happened to me occasionally, not very often, since I left government.

Mr. Gaetz. You work for CNN now?

Mr. Clapper. I do.

Mr. Gaetz. How long have you worked for CNN?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Gaetz. How long have you worked for CNN?

Mr. Clapper. Since 2017.

Mr. Gaetz. So you understand the media, it's safe to say?

Mr. Clapper. Yeah. Yeah. I do now.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, would a reasonable person understand that this letter would be used in the media to try to get the public to believe that this was a Russian disinformation campaign regarding the Hunter laptop?

Mr. Clapper. My purpose was to warn the public that the Russians could be involved, a big difference. I didn't say they were. I said they could be.

Mr. Gaetz. And several of my colleagues have asked you whether or not, as you sit here today, you believe the Russians were involved, and you testified that you don't know because you have not seen an official pronouncement. Is that a correct understanding of your testimony?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't know that.

Mr. Gaetz. What type of official pronouncement --

Mr. Clapper. Well, if the --

Mr. Litt. Let him finish his question.

Mr. Gaetz. What is an official pronouncement?

Mr. Clapper. Well, if the Department of Justice or the FBI or some other legitimate credible source of -- who had done a credible forensic analysis -- certainly I would accept that. That's why I suggested that would be a good -- would have been a good fix -- a good addition to the letter had we said that.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of Director Ratcliffe, the DNI at the time, contradicting the thrust of this letter you signed?

Mr. Clapper. Well, okay. He said that statement before, I think, an investigation had begun of the laptop. So I don't know where he's coming from making a statement like that.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, wait a second. Does there -- you defined an official pronouncement as a statement coming from the government. So why --

Mr. Litt. I think he said --

Mr. Clapper. Credible source.

Mr. Litt. I think he said more than that.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Let me ask the question this way.

Why was the statement from DNI Ratcliffe, someone who held the position that you previously held, insufficient to be an official pronouncement?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't consider him a credible source, a credible authority on intelligence matters.

Mr. Gaetz. Even though he was the Director of National Intelligence?

Mr. Clapper. That right.

Mr. Gaetz. Even though he held the same position you did?

Mr. Clapper. That's right.

Mr. Gaetz. And so an official pronouncement, according to James Clapper, is a statement from a government official who you put credibility in, not just a statement from a government official who held the position you held? Is that how we are to understand it?

Mr. Litt. You're mischaracterizing what he said before because he also talked about after a credible investigation as part of what he meant by an authoritative statement.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm trying to understand, Director Clapper, how you go about formulating what is sufficiently official. And so what is the test you use to determine whether or not something is official?

Mr. Clapper. Well, the credibility of the source. And I would consider an actual investigatory body, such as the FBI, who can do forensic analysis of computers and laptops, which the DNI cannot, I can attest. I would consider that credible.

Mr. Gaetz. So the credibility of the source is how you view it? Don't you think it's confusing when 51 presumably credible sources sign a letter saying something that we now have no evidence to --

Mr. Clapper. All we said was, in my view, that the Russians could -- again, in October of 2020 -- beware, the Russians could be involved here. That's all the letter was to me.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, wasn't the assembly of these 51 people the attempt to try to present a credible source to try to give Joe Biden a talking point in a debate?

Mr. Clapper. Well, that wasn't my intent. My intent was simply to warn of potential Russian involvement.

Mr. Gaetz. You made mention --

Mr. Clapper. It wasn't to give anybody a talking point.

Mr. Gaetz. I'm sorry. You made mention earlier of a discussion you had with Secretary Blinken regarding the assembly of this letter?

Mr. Clapper. No, I didn't have any discussion with --

Mr. Gaetz. With John Brennan.

Mr. Clapper. Well, he -- John told me much later of the contact between Tony Bliken and Michael Morell.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. And was that a phone conversation?

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your cell phone provider?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Gaetz. Who's your cell phone provider?

Mr. Clapper. What?

Mr. Litt. Who is your cell phone provider, he wants to know.

Mr. Clapper. AT&T.

Mr. Gaetz. And how was the duration of that call?

Mr. Litt. If you recall.

Mr. Clapper. I don't remember. It wasn't very long.

Chairman Jordan. Do you know what prompted Mr. Brennan to tell you a year after this letter, to tell you the involvement of Tony Blinken and the Biden campaign with the assembling of the letter?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry, sir?

Chairman Jordan. What prompted Mr. Brennan to call you up and tell you that:

Hey, you know that letter we signed a year ago? Tony Blinken and the Biden campaign were involved in putting that together.

Mr. Clapper. Well, your interest and the letters you sent out, I think is what prompted.

Chairman Jordan. Oh, so that wasn't -- that wasn't -- that first happened here a couple months back.

Mr. Clapper. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Biggs. Sir, can I ask a question? I want to link what Mr. Stewart asked you about and also what Mr. Gaetz asked you about.

Mr. Stewart was asking you about what happened in 2016, what were the experiences that led you to understand Russian interference. And what you specifically iterated was that there was 185,000, something like that, dollars in social media, and you really emphasized social media. Is that fair to say?

Mr. Clapper. Yeah. I don't remember that number, a dollar number being ascribed to the magnitude of the Russian effort in social media.

They also had a very aggressive campaign in RT, the radio/television network they run, which has a wide following in the United States.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. So -- but when you answered Mr. Stewart, you didn't mention RT. You mentioned social media.

Mr. Litt. I think Mr. Stewart asked him for an example and he gave an example. I don't think he was asked to exhaustively go over every fact that he relied upon. If you want him to do that, he can do the best he can several years later.

Mr. Biggs. I think he did ask that, and what he came up with was social media. So you and I can differ, and we'll go back on that.

But I'm curious about the social media vis-a-vis a laptop that has come into the hands of the Federal Government. How are those even remotely --

Mr. Clapper. Well --

Mr. Biggs. -- the same to your indicia of Russian interference?

Mr. Clapper. What I had in mind was potential manipulation of data, either infiltrating or exfiltrating data onto the laptop if the Russians had either direct or indirect access to it. It wasn't necessarily a social media thing.

Mr. Biggs. Okay. So you then undertook no action whatsoever, you didn't use any of the authorities that you have to do research, you didn't do any background research, and you've said that.

Mr. Clapper. Other than what I normally read day to day, and I try to stay up on current events. But I didn't specifically do a Google search, if that's what you mean.

Mr. Biggs. Or beyond, you didn't do anything more than a Google search.

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Stewart. Can I follow up on that?

You have your classification, your security clearance still.

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Stewart. You still have your security clearance, you've already said.

Mr. Clapper. I believe so.

Mr. Stewart. If you had, previous to signing this letter, called any official who had access to classified information and said, "I'm considering signing a letter which says this is Russian disinformation, will you brief me on whether that is true or not?" do you think they would have briefed you?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know.

Mr. Stewart. Did you ever think about asking them?

Mr. Clapper. No, I did not.

Mr. Stewart. Why not?

Mr. Clapper. Because I didn't -- I wanted to do this strictly based on what I had seen in open -- open source, open media, and I didn't think it was appropriate, frankly, to do that.

[11:02 a.m.]

Mr. Stewart. Well, you're the former Director of National Intelligence, who's about to make a very public statement about a very specific thing that you were claiming is likely Russian disinformation, you had the clearance.

You could have requested a briefing on it. Why did you not even consider doing that?

Mr. Clapper. I didn't do it because I didn't think it was appropriate.

Mr. Stewart. Why?

Mr. Clapper. Because I didn't want to be tainted by or -- this, in any way, involved access to classified information.

Mr. Stewart. But why would it be tainted to try to find the truth before you signed --

Mr. Clapper. Bad choice of words. I didn't want -- I wanted only to go on what I had seen publicly. That's all. I didn't want any connection with classified information in any -- in any way.

Mr. Stewart. Well, it confuses me why you would be willing to sign a letter like this, and you had access to agencies who could have clarified it, and you didn't consider even nor make an effort to find out if what you were about to say was true or not.

Mr. Clapper. I thought it was proper and appropriate to sound a warning that the Russians could be involved. That's all.

Ms. Hageman. Can I ask a few questions?

Mr. [redacted]. Ms. Hageman.

Ms. Hageman. Yes. Mr. Clapper, you're aware that Hunter has conceded that the laptop is his, aren't you?

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Ms. Hageman. And you're also aware that he's never denied that the information included on that laptop is his.

Mr. Clapper. Well, some of it, yeah, is his.

Ms. Hageman. What isn't his?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know. I don't know that I've seen the statement that says everything on the laptop is his.

Ms. Hageman. So in terms of this statement about you would need to see a report, say, from the FBI to conclude that it wasn't Russian misinformation --

Mr. Clapper. Well, if --

Ms. Hageman. -- we have -- we have the information from Hunter Biden pretty much confirms that, don't we?

Mr. Clapper. Okay.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. Why did you believe that the Hunter Biden laptop would pose a problem for Joe Biden in his quest to become President?

Mr. Clapper. I, frankly, didn't consider that.

Ms. Hageman. You didn't consider the contents of the laptop?

Mr. Clapper. No, I didn't, not in the content -- in connection with the campaign.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. There's a lot of information on that laptop that's very damaging to the Bidens, isn't it?

Mr. Clapper. I gather.

Ms. Hageman. Yeah. So if they there were heart emojis and photographs of tulips and skies and ponies and things like that, you probably wouldn't have bothered signing the letter with these other 50 folks who signed that letter, would you?

Mr. Clapper. Well, unless the possibility, I suppose, that Russians could have inserted some of this.

Ms. Hageman. So what you were concerned about, and the other 50 folks who signed that letter, you were concerned about the contents of the laptop and how that would affect Joe Biden as he was running for President.

Mr. Clapper. No.

Ms. Hageman. Isn't that right?

Mr. Clapper. No, that's not right.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. So if it just did heart emojis and a few things like that, you would -- you still would have signed the letter, claiming it was Russian misinformation?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Ms. Hageman. If it had heart emojis and photographs of ponies and a few things like that, you still would have signed the letter, claiming that it was Russian misinformation?

Mr. Clapper. Well, it could have been.

Ms. Hageman. But would you have signed the letter? That's the question that I have.

Mr. Clapper. Yes, I would have.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. Interesting.

You now know and you've had an opportunity to review some of the materials that were included on that laptop, haven't you?

Mr. Clapper. Well, not in depth.

Ms. Hageman. I didn't ask in depth. I asked if you were aware of some of the information that's included on that laptop.

Mr. Clapper. I'm aware of what has been reported in the media about it, yes.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. And that information that has been reported in the media is pretty damaging to the Biden family, isn't it?

Mr. Clapper. I would guess.

Ms. Hageman. You're not guessing. It, in fact, is a problem for the Biden family, isn't it?

Mr. Clapper. I suppose.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. Do you -- you have indicated you know Rick Grenell.

Or do you know Rick Grenell, who he is, Rick Grenell?

Mr. Clapper. No, I don't.

Ms. Hageman. Do you know who he is?

Mr. Clapper. Well, he served briefly as the Director of National Intelligence, former Ambassador to Germany.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. And you know who John Ratcliffe is.

Mr. Clapper. I do.

Ms. Hageman. Do you think that either one of them should have engaged in any activities that could have interfered with the 2020 election?

Mr. Litt. Do you mean when they were in office?

Ms. Hageman. In office or out of office, either one.

Do you believe that either one of them should have engaged in any activities that would be considered to be interference in the 2020 election? Do you think they should have done something like that?

Mr. Litt. I'm sorry. I have to ask again. What do you mean by interference?

Mr. Clapper. I don't understand the question.

Ms. Hageman. If they took any position, if they issued any letters, if they made any public statements that could have been considered interference in the 2020 election? Do you think they should have engaged in any behavior that could be considered interference in the 2020 election?

Mr. Clapper. I don't understand the question. I'm sorry.

Ms. Hageman. Okay.

Mr. Litt. Well, you have to explain what you mean by interference. Are you asking about whether they could make any political statement relating to the election?

Ms. Hageman. Sure.

Mr. Litt. Do you think it's --

Mr. Clapper. Well, they probably shouldn't.

Ms. Hageman. They probably shouldn't.

They shouldn't have engaged in activities that could be considered interference in the 2020 election, right?

Mr. Clapper. Right.

Ms. Hageman. So then why did you do it 1234.

Mr. Clapper. Because I wasn't active.

Ms. Hageman. So it was okay --

Mr. Clapper. I was -- I was a former.

Ms. Hageman. So --

Mr. Clapper. They were in a position. Big difference.

Ms. Hageman. Okay. So it was okay for you to interfere in the 2020 election because you were a former head of the NDI. Is that your answer?

Mr. Clapper. No. What's your definition of "interference"?

Ms. Hageman. Exactly what you, did signing the letter with 50 other --

Mr. Clapper. That's not interference.

Ms. Hageman. Okay.

Mr. Clapper. I was exercising my First Amendment rights.

Ms. Hageman. So it was okay for you to interfere in the 2020 election.

Mr. Clapper. I don't subscribe to interfering.

Ms. Hageman. You did no independent investigation into the laptop.

Mr. Clapper. No, nor could I.

Ms. Hageman. You did no independent investigation to determine whether the laptop was accurate, whether it was Hunter Biden's, or the information contained on there.

Mr. Clapper. No, I did not.

Ms. Hageman. Okay.

Mr. Clapper. I simply was concerned about the Russian potential for Russian involvement. That's all.

Mr. Jordan. Director, did you know that you were going to be the very first signature on the letter before you signed it?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

Mrs. Spartz. Was the timing of this letter pretty strange to you, right before the debate? Did you ever consider that it's strange to you, the timing? Talk about timing, right before the debate.

Mr. Litt. She's asking whether you thought it was strange that the timing of the letter was right before the debate?

By the letter, you mean the statement?

Mrs. Spartz. Yeah, the letter that you signed.

Mr. Clapper. The revelation about the laptop, that same timing.

Mrs. Spartz. So it didn't appear to you as strange?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mrs. Spartz. No?

Mr. Litt. So, it -- I'm sorry. What didn't appear strange?

Mrs. Spartz. To release your letter and statement right before the Presidential debate --

Mr. Clapper. Well --

Mrs. Spartz. -- so close.

Mr. Clapper. I --

Mr. Litt. She wants to know whether you thought it was strange to release this letter --

Mr. Clapper. No, it wasn't strange.

Mr. Litt. -- just before the debate.

Mrs. Spartz. It wasn't strange at all?

You're now working for CNN and Natasha Bertrand, too. Did you have any conversation with her about this letter and her --

Mr. Clapper. Not that I recall.

Mrs. Spartz. Not that you recall. Okay.

Did you have any discussions with anyone to be potential nominee for CIA director?

Mr. Clapper. Can you --

Mr. Litt. Did you --

Mrs. Spartz. During the time of what was happening, did you have any discussion on that and be a potential nominee as the CIA director?

Mr. Litt. I'm sorry. I don't understand the question. Are you saying did he have any discussion about --

Mrs. Spartz. Yeah, the campaign, that you could maybe be potential nominee for CIA Director?

Mr. Litt. Did you have any discussion --

Mrs. Spartz. By Biden.

Mr. Litt. -- that you could be a potential nominee for CIA Director by Biden?

Mr. Clapper. Who? Me?

Mrs. Spartz. Yes.

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mrs. Spartz. For Presidential nominee.

Did you have any communications, private, with active FBI or CIA agents at that time?

Mr. Litt. About this?

Mrs. Spartz. Yes, about --

Mr. Litt. Did have you any conversations with active CIA or FBI agents around this time about this?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. [redacted]. All right. Thank you. Our hour's up.

Say we can take a little break.

We'll go off the record, please.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted]. It is 11:22 a.m., and we can go back on the record.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q General Clapper, thank you again for appearing before the committee today.

I want to take a few steps back and walk through some points about your background and walk through how we got here today.

So way back, you've spent most of your career in government service. Isn't that right?

A Yeah, about 50 years.

Q Okay. And you actually started by serving in the U.S. Armed Forces, starting in 1961, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Can you talk us through broadly your service in the Armed Services?

A I enlisted in the Marine Corps in February in 1961, in the Marine Corps Reserve, and ended up in the Air Force ROTC. I graduated from University of Maryland, 1963, and went immediately into intelligence. Spent 32 years in the Air Force, all intelligence jobs.

I was a J-2 Director of Intelligence for three combatant commands and served as intel -- I was Chief of Air Force Intelligence during Desert Storm. My last job was Director of DIA, Defense Intelligence Agency, for 4 years. I retired in September of '95.

Was out of the government for 6 years but working for the intelligence community as a contractor and serving on various boards. And I was on the NSA Advisory Board for 4 years, for example. Served on commissions.

Came back to the government 2 days after 9/11 and became director of what was NIMA, the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, which became National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency. Did that for about 5 years. Was out for a couple months.

I was asked to come back to the government by Secretary of Defense Gates to be the Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence, which I did for 3-1/2 years and, then following that, 6-1/2 years as the Director of National Intelligence.

Q Thank you for that.

And when you were in the military, you received a couple of awards, didn't you?

A A couple.

Mr. [redacted]. Can you talk to us about the Air Medal you earned with an oak leaf cluster?

Mr. Clapper. I flew -- I was commander of 100-man Signal Intelligence detachment that flew on the back end of EC-47s. The basic mission was to fly reconnaissance missions over Laos and Cambodia and try to locate Viet Cong or North Vietnamese army formations, and I flew 73 missions, doing that, while I was the commander of the detachment for a year.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Thank you for that.

Looking at your career holistically, you've spent most of your time in intelligence work. Is that fair to say?

A Virtually all of it.

Q Okay. Is it fair to say that you are an expert in national security matters?

A Well, some might say that.

Q Is it fair to say --

A The previous group didn't think so, but --

Q Is it fair to say that you're an expert in intelligence?

A Well, I guess you could say that. I've lived through a lot of it, yeah.

Q Thank you for that.

We walked through the October 19th letter a little bit in the last hour. And I want to, again, walk through it with a little different eye this time.

The very first sentence of the second paragraph of that letter -- and that's exhibit No. 1, I believe. It says: We are also individuals who see Russia as one of our Nation's primary adversaries.

Was this an accurate statement at the time that the letter was written?

A Oh, yeah.

Q And --

A Still is.

Q That was my next question. And you believe that's still an accurate statement today?

A Yes.

Q And so, again, based on your long career in intelligence, can you explain why you believe Russia is a primary adversary of the United States?

A Well, Russia and, before it, the Soviet Union is bent on instruction by one form or another of the United States and everything for which it stands.

And that was the nature of the Cold War, the ideological struggle that I lived through for about 30 years. And from an intelligence perspective, you know, learned a lot about the Russians. Dealt with Russians a good bit during the course of my career.

And I'm extremely suspicious of anything the Russians do. They are out to get us. They're out to destroy the United States and our system.

Q Would you agree that there is widespread agreement among intelligence and national security professionals that Russia is, as you say, an adversary of the United States, it's out to get us?

A Absolutely. And they are a mortal enemy of the United States. They can wreak more havoc and destruction and kill more people than any other Nation.

Q Okay. In 2017, you appeared on -- for an interview on Meet the Press.

Do you recall that?

A I do.

Q And during that interview, you were asked about Russian interference in the 2016 election.

A Right.

Q And you said, quote: "If you put that in context with everything else we knew the Russians were doing to interfere with the election and just the historical practices of Russians" -- "of the Russians, who typically are almost genetically driven to co-opt, penetrate, gain favor, whatever, which is a typical Russian technique, so we were concerned, meaning we, the intelligence community, was concerned in 2016."

Do you recall saying that?

A I think I said something like that, yeah.

Q Okay. If you recall, what did you mean when you used the terms co-opt, penetrate, gain favor?

A Well, if they can influence -- if they can recruit someone whom they can influence either to be sympathetic or to provide them information, they will. And they look for every opportunity to do that.

Q The final sentence of the October 19th, 2020, letter reads, quote: It is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy.

Is it fair to say that the primary focus or purpose of the letter was on stopping Russian interference in our elections?

A Absolutely.

Q And just for the record, again, could you explain why, based on your long career, you believed it was so important that people know that the Russians were attempting to interfere in the 2020 elections?

A Let me put it this way: In the 50-plus years I spent in the government in one intelligence capacity or another, I saw a lot of bad stuff. Nothing that bothered me viscerally as much as what I saw the Russians do in 2016, what they did to our political system, and how they influenced public opinion in this country.

And I vowed then that I would do my little part after I left the government, whatever bully pulpit I could occupy, to try to educate people, the public about the threat posed by the Russians.

Q And you --

A If you want to say I'm consumed with it, yeah.

Q Thank you for that.

You referenced what happened in 2016. Is that a reference to Russia hacking the emails of the Clinton campaign and Democratic political organizations and then leaking them?

A Yes, thanks for the question, as I used to say on the Hill.

I forgot to mention that in the earlier session about some of the other things they did, which, you know, the hacks, the WikiLeaks, and the Russians are extremely clever and they very -- have a very sophisticated understanding of our political landscape in order to exploit it.

And that's what -- that concern is what prompted me to sign onto the letter which I considered simply a warning to people that watch out. You know, the Russians don't give up. And they could -- they could be involved here, as well.

Q And you just said a minute ago that nothing has bothered you as viscerally as what happened in 2016.

Why was that so troublesome to you?

A Because of what the Russians were doing to attempt to destroy our very political system. Institutionally, they were attacking us. And the reason is because all the other manifold weaknesses they have, this is a way they can compensate for their weaknesses, by exploiting our weaknesses.

And, unfortunately, the United States is a ripe target for exploiting the distrust and doubt about the institutions of this country. And I was very concerned they were going continue to try to do that in 2020.

Q And speaking of 2020, Russians, the Russians, sometimes they do manipulate information. And sometimes they also take information that's authentic, which is has happened in 2016 with the hacked emails, right, and they amplify it and try to put a spin on it, correct?

A That's right, amplify it, distort it, slant it, whatever they can to gain their ends, yes.

Q And is that referred to as a Russian information operation?

A I guess so, yeah.

Q Okay. Do you think that making sure that Americans know that the Russians are attempting to do this is a key way to help counteract Russians' effectiveness in doing so?

A Yes. In fact, I think it's crucial that the public be as well-versed and well-educated about what the Russians will attempt to do, what their tactics, techniques are, and what their goals and objectives are. I think it's very important that people be educated about that.

Q There are some people who have said that it doesn't really matter where information comes from, whether it's true or it's false. It's that, for example, in October 2020, Rudy Giuliani was told that information on the laptop might be linked to Russian intelligence hacking.

And his response was, quote: It wouldn't matter. What's the difference?

A It does matter. It makes all the difference if the Russians are involved and are trying to manipulate data and information. So it's hugely important.

Q And why is that?

A Well, it's the Russians are generating information or -- either generating it or taking information and manipulating it that's already published or already out there, and trying to put a different spin on it and, again, to sow doubt, discord in this country, which these days is pretty easy.

And so I think that's extremely important, because that's an insidious threat to this country. It's, you know, bad for our democracy.

Q Thank you.

The October 19th letter says, quote: There are a number of factors that make us suspicious of Russian involvement.

And I want to go through the factors as they're laid out in the letter and understand why each was concerning and also talk about the evidence that supports the facts as laid out in the letter.

Does that sound okay?

The eighth paragraph of the letter, which is the last paragraph on the bottom of this letter --

Mr. Litt. On the bottom of the first page?

Ms. [redacted]. On the first page. Sorry.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q It says: Such an operation, meaning a Russia cyber hacking operation, would be consistent with Russian objectives, as outlined publicly and recently by the intelligence community, to create political chaos in the United States, and to deepen divisions here, but also to undermine the candidacy of former Vice President Biden and thereby help the candidacy of President Trump.

Did I read that correctly?

A Uh-huh.

Q Could you explain why based on your experience it would have been consistent with Russian objectives to, quote: "Create political chaos in the United States and deepen divisions here"?

A Well, it's exactly what they did in 2016 and, again, I -- which I saw pretty intensely, watched what they did over the course -- well, '15 and '16, leading up to the election. And they were trying to undermine in that, in the '16 election, undermine Hillary Clinton. They did all they could to hurt her candidacy.

And they wanted -- they made a conscious judgment, once Mr. Trump became the nominee of the Republican Party, wanted to do all they could to help him because they saw him as a better choice.

Q And --

A And my concern was a reprise of that in 2020.

Q Why do you -- why do you say that the Russians saw Donald Trump as the better choice?

A Well, I think they thought he was business guy, wouldn't beat them up for human rights abuses, easier to deal with. And there was a very strong animus, starting with Putin himself, about the Clintons, and particularly Hillary Clinton, whom he held responsible for fomenting a Cold War revolution in 2011.

Q Are you familiar with who Bill Evanina is?

A I am.

Q Okay.

A He's an appointee of mine.

Q Could you explain for the record who he is?

A He was the Director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center, which is a subordinate organization of the Office of Director of National Intelligence. Bill was the director of it. He's an FBI employee but on rotation to the DNI.

Ms. [redacted]. Thank you.

I want to introduce for the record as exhibit 4 -- sorry. I want to introduce into the record as exhibit 4, a statement from Mr. Evanina. It's dated August 7th, 2020. And it's entitled: Election Threat Update for the American Public.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I'm going ask you about -- there's a paragraph in the middle of the second page that starts "Russia" in boldface, all caps.

A Just see it here?

Q Yeah. And let me know when you're ready to continue.

A I read it.

Q Okay. So the paragraph that's in the middle of the second page, begins all caps, boldfaced, Russia, it reads:

We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it sees as an anti-Russia establishment. This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him, when he was Vice President, for his role in the Obama administration's policies on Ukraine, and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia.

For example, pro-Russia Ukrainian parliament taken Andrii Derkach is spreading claims about corruption, including through publicizing leaked phone calls to undermine former Vice President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party. Some Kremlin-linked actors are also seeking to boost President Trump's candidacy on social media and on Russian television.

Did I read that correctly?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q Is this statement from Bill Evanina consistent with the concerns that are expressed in the October 19th letter?

A Yes.

Q And do you -- do you find the statement to be reliable?

A I do.

Q And do you believe that Mr. Evanina is a reliable source for this type of statement?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And this was released in August 2020, which was actually 2 months before the October 19th, 2020, letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So moving on, the ninth paragraph, which is -- sorry -- the ninth paragraph of the October 19th letter, yeah, it's exhibit No. 1, the ninth paragraph is at the top page of -- the top paragraph on the second page.

This paragraph says that a Russian cyber operation would be consistent with some of the key methods Russia has used in its now multiyear operation to interfere in our democracy, the hacking via cyber operations, and the dumping of accurate information or the distribution of inaccurate or misinformation.

So that sentence refers to what we were talking about a couple minutes ago, right --

A Yes.

Q -- the 2016 efforts. So this sentence is a fully accurate sentence in this letter, correct?

A I believe it is.

Q Okay. And then it continues on:

Russia did both of these during the 2016 Presidential election -- judgments shared by the U.S. intelligence community, the investigation into Russian activities by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, and the entirety, all (Republicans and Democrats) on the current Senate Intelligence Committee, right?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q So to your knowledge, does the report by Special Counsel Robert Mueller support the idea that the Russians did interfere in the 2016 election?

A Yes, absolutely. In fact, I was taken aback by the degree of technical detail that was included in the Mueller report, which we did not include in the Intelligence Community Assessment in 2016. But it certainly buttressed in a big way what the Russians did.

Q And what about the Senate Intelligence Committee report? Are you familiar with that?

A I am.

Q And what's your opinion of that report?

A Well, I -- actually I liked it. It validated the findings of the Intelligence Community Assessment. I think it took them 16 months for something we did in 2 weeks. But they validated the Intelligence Community Assessment findings, as well as the tradecraft underlying those findings. And that was on a bipartisan basis, unlike the House Permanent Select Committee for Intelligence.

Q So to the extent there were comments raised in the earlier hour, suggesting that the Russians maybe did not interfere in 2016, do you think there's actually broad consensus among the intelligence community that the Russians did interfere in 2016?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. The next paragraph in the October 19th letter, it says: Such an operation is consistent with several data points.

And it says: The Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts, targeted Burisma late last year for cyber collection and gained access to its emails.

Do you recall hearing about reports that the Russians had hacked Burisma and gained access to its emails?

A I did, only through the media, yeah.

Ms. [redacted]. I'm going go ahead and introduce a media article to that effect. We'll introduce it as exhibit 5.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q This is a January 13th, 2020, New York Times article. It was updated on October 19th, 2020. And it's entitled, "Russians Hacked Ukrainian Gas Company At Center of Impeachment."

And I'll give you a minute to look it over.

A You want me to read the whole thing?

Q No. If -- do you recall seeing this before? Is this the type of --

A I don't specifically recall this article.

Q If you want to skim it, go ahead.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So this article does tend to support the statement in the letter that the Russians did hack Burisma and gained access to its emails, correct?

A Yes.

Q So that's another statement in the letter that's fully accurate. Fair to say?

A Well, it's accurate based on --

Q Right.

A -- other media reports, yes.

Q And I think the statement actually says the Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts.

So and then that paragraph continues on and it references Ukrainian politician and businessman Andrii Derkach, who's been identified and sanctioned by the U.S. Treasury department for being a 10-year Russian agent, interfering in the 2020 election, passed purported materials on Burisma and Hunter Biden to Giuliani.

I think you referenced in the prior hour a Ukrainian businessman. Is that -- was that a reference to Andrii Derkach?

A Yes.

Q What's your understanding of who he is?

A Well, pretty much as you described him. That's about, you know, based on what I'm told, my knowledge of him, other than a longtime contact with Russian intelligence services.

Q And I want to -- are you familiar with the fact that he was sanctioned by the Treasury Department?

A By virtue of the media reporting, yes.

Q And I want to introduce into the record the actual document sanctioning him.

A Okay.

Ms. [redacted]. Or -- sorry. I shouldn't say the -- it's the Treasury Department press release, reporting on the sanctions.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Clapper. Yeah, I have not seen this previously.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay. This is dated September 10th, 2020. And I said -- I know you said you've not seen this document previously. But you're familiar with the fact that Derkach had been sanctioned. Right?

A Uh-huh.

Q And according this document, he was actually sanctioned specifically for attempting to -- I'm sorry. He was directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. Presidential election.

Why would it have been concerning that Mr. Giuliani was working with Andrii Derkach at this time?

A Well, I think it's fairly obvious that this guy's a known Russian agent. And trying to engage Rudy Giuliani, the personal attorney for Donald Trump, I think that -- that would raise a concern.

Q And why would it be concerning specifically --

A Well --

Q -- that he targeted the personal attorney?

A Again, to try to influence -- either indirectly influence Trump or try to plant information or feed it -- feed Giuliani bad information, that would, you know, make the Bidens look bad, for example.

Q And the fact that Derkach was sanctioned and that the sanctioning document says that he has had close connections with the Russian intelligence services, would that suggest that, in fact, Derkach's efforts could be part of a Russian intelligence plot?

A Oh, I think so. I think clearly trying to influence, trying to gain influence with Giuliani, use him either wittingly or unwittingly as a tool.

Q Are you familiar with the fact that Rudy Giuliani claimed that the leak of the laptop was, quote, "an extent of his years' long efforts to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens?

A I heard that, or read it, but I don't remember when. I can't -- I don't remember a date connected with that.

Ms. [redacted]. I want to introduce the article that reports on that. It will be exhibit No. 7.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q This is a October 17th, 2020, Daily Beast article. It's reporting on an hour-long interview the Daily Beast had with Mr. Giuliani. It's entitled, "Rudy, only 50/50 Chance I Worked With a Russian Spy to Dig Dirt on Bidens and Ukraine."

A Okay.

Q And the language that we're going to be looking at is highlighted on the last two pages of the article.

A Only a 50/50 chance, huh? I guess that makes it better.

Q And in this article, it does say directly that Giuliani said he viewed his latest leak on The New York Post as an extension of his years' long effort to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens.

Mr. Litt. Last page. On the last page.

Ms. [redacted]. Next page.

Mr. Litt. Very last page.

Mr. Clapper. Am I supposed to read this whole thing?

Ms. [redacted]. No.

Mr. Litt. She's reading you just the top sentence there.

Mr. Clapper. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So this came out on October 17th, 2020. The New York Post article was published on October 14th, 2020. So within 3 days of the publication of that -- of that article, Rudy Giuliani said that he was responsible for it and it was part of his efforts to dig up dirt on the Bidens, correct?

A Yeah.

Q Would that have been something of concern to you as --

A It sure would have.

Q And why was it concerning that Giuliani specifically viewed this leak as part of his ongoing efforts to dig up dirt?

A The appearance, if not the substance, is that he was either wittingly or unwittingly a participant in a Russian information operation because clearly the Russians would see this as in their best interests and in their favor.

Q And the October 19th letter refers to a Washington Post article that says: U.S. intelligence agencies warned the White House last year that Giuliani was the target of an influence operation by Russian intelligence.

Is it also concerning to you that the White House was apparently warned about Giuliani being used in this way and apparently took no action?

A Well, yeah. I mean, intelligence agencies, again, based on the immediate, did the right thing by conveying their concern to the White House. If the White House chose not to do it -- do anything about it, that's -- policymakers always have the prerogative of ignoring what they're told by intelligence.

Q But in this situation the policymakers were told by intelligence that Rudy Giuliani had this connection to Russian intelligence and did nothing about it?

A Well, that's -- from an intelligence perspective, speaking as an intelligence, a career-long intelligence officer, that's bad. Should -- you know, to ignore information like that is potentially quite dangerous.

Q And dangerous to our national security?

A Yes.

Q Why is that?

A Well, you have Giuliani, essentially, acting as a foreign agent, apparently attempting to influence the outcome of the U.S. election on behalf of the Russians.

Mr. Goldman. You said unwittingly or wittingly.

If you learned that Giuliani was provided with a defensive briefing about Andrii Derkach and his association with him, and continued to engage with Mr. Derkach, would that inform your view about whether it was witting or unwitting?

Mr. Clapper. It was -- it would appear it was wittingly in that case. If he were given a defensive briefing specifically about this character and chose to engage with him, because of his apparent intent or desire to obtain dirt on the Bidens, that would make it witting clearly.

Mr. Goldman. And so, just to summarize, if Mr. Giuliani was, for over a year, coordinating and working with a known Russian agent, who he knew to be a Russian agent, to try to influence the election in 2020, would that, in your view, make Mr. Giuliani the equivalent of a Russian agent?

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Ms. [redacted]. So we just walked through a number of the factors that led to the concerns that led to the October 19th letter.

I want to move on to evidence that suggests that Russia, in fact, did interfere in the 2020 election.

And I think in the earlier hour the comment was made that there's been no official pronouncement on that.

I want to introduce into the record a January 7th Intelligence Community Assessment -- sorry -- 2021 Intelligence Community Assessment entitled, "Foreign Threats to the 2020 U.S. Federal Elections."

And I should say the classified version was released in January 2021. We're introducing the unclassified version which was unclassified on March 15th, 2021.

This will be exhibit 8.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I'm going to ask you to turn to the fourth page of the document. It's Roman Numeral, small Roman Numeral I. And we're going to look at Key Judgement 2 on that page.

Mr. Litt. This is the right page.

Mr. Clapper. What?

Mr. Litt. This is the page right here.

Mr. Clapper. She said the last page.

Mr. Litt. No, she didn't.

Mr. Clapper. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Are you ready to continue?

Key Judgement 2 reads: We assess that Russian President Putin authorized, and a range of Russian Government organizations conducted, influence operations aimed at denigrating President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party, supporting former President Trump, undermining public confidence in the electoral process, and exacerbating sociopolitical divisions in the U.S.

Unlike in 2016, we did not see persistent Russian cyber efforts to gain access to election infrastructure.

We have high confidence in our assessment. Russian state and proxy actors, who all serve the Kremlin's interests, worked to affect U.S. public perceptions in a consistent manner. A key element of Moscow's strategy, this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives, including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration.

Did I read that correctly?

A It's almost a reprise of the Intelligence Community Assessment from 2016.

Q Interesting.

In the middle of this paragraph, it says: We have high confidence in our assessment.

What does "high confidence" mean in this context?

A High confidence means that the -- the analysts who prepared this, as well as in this instance, since this is a NIC document that would have been approved, IC-wide, that if you're ascribing numerical ascription, it would be, like, 90 percent sure that what they're saying is accurate and correct.

Q Does the --

A So that's -- that's -- that's pretty -- you could, you know, you can trust that, I think --

Q Okay.

A -- with an expression of high confidence.

Q The intelligence community doesn't use the level "high confidence" lightly. Is that fair to say?

A No, it doesn't. And it's typically because of multiple sources that they're drawing on to reach that conclusion that are pretty much internally corroborative.

Q This report, just looking at the very front page of it, the cover page of it, it says: The -- this Intelligence Community Assessment was prepared by the National Intelligence Council under the auspices of the National Intelligence Officer (NIO) for Cyber. It was drafted by the National Intelligence Council and the CIA, which is the Central Intelligence Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q The DHS, which is the Department of Homeland Security, correct?

A Correct.

Q FBI, which is the Federal Bureau of Investigation, correct?

A Yep.

Q INR which can you remind me what INR is?

A That the Bureau of Intelligence and Research in the Department of State.

Q And NSA which is the National Security Agency, correct?

A Correct.

Q And coordinated with CIA, again, the Central Intelligence Agency, DHS, Department of Homeland Security, FBI, the Federal Bureau of Investigations, INR, the Intelligence and Research Agency.

A As well as the Department of Treasury apparently, apparently according to the logo.

Q Yeah, Treasury Department and the National Security Agency.

So if this report was prepared in coordination with all of those entities and it says that they have high confidence in that assessment, that means every agency listed that I just read off had high confidence in this assessment, right?

A Yes.

Q And there's nothing in here --

A In the --

Q Yeah.

A -- absence of any dissent and I don't see any.

Q Right. Right. There's no -- no dissent is listed here, right?

A Right.

Q So the Key Judgment 2, this is pretty consistent with the concerns that were the outlined in the October 19th letter, isn't it?

A Yes.

Q And the last sentence of the --

A These are the concerns, as all of this doesn't obviously specifically address the laptop.

Q Right.

A It's just that, because of these factors, that's why I believe such a high number of national security officials signed onto that letter, for exactly those factors, that the Russian dark hand could be involved here in the case of the laptop, ergo, a warning.

Q And the warning to make the American public aware, correct?

A Of the potential for Russian involvement, given their history and their practice.

Q And again, the goal of making Americans aware was to help counteract the Russians efforts, correct?

A Exactly.

Q Okay. The intelligence -- the Key Judgement 2 specifically references proxies linked to Russian intelligence. We just talked through Andrii Derkach having been sanctioned. Would you agree that he is a Russian intelligence proxy who was pushing an influence narrative?

A I would.

Q And then the sentence says that: These Russian intelligence proxies pushed these unsubstantiated allegations with the help of -- I'm sorry -- to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals including some close to former President Trump and his administration.

Would you agree that Rudy Giuliani is an individual who was close to former President Trump and to his administration?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So this actually does fit the narrative of Rudy Giuliani working with Derkach to push out misinformation.

A It does.

Q Okay. So to the extent that you were asked earlier about there being no official pronouncement about Russian interference, this is pretty close to an official pronouncement.

A Well, yeah, it is. And I, frankly, wasn't aware of this but it certainly substantiates the letter.

Q Thank you.

A The public statement.

Q Okay. Move on a little bit.

You were asked earlier about the -- your maintaining a security clearance and what kind of access you had. The letter makes it abundantly clear that you didn't have access to any nonpublic information, right?

A That's correct.

Q And you didn't access any classified information.

A I did not.

Q And just going through the letter briefly, at the -- the very last paragraph says, pretty straightforwardly -- I'm sorry. It's not the last paragraph. It's the -- the fifth paragraph on the front page says that:

We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails are genuine or not.

Right?

A Right.

Q So you didn't try to hide the fact that you didn't have any inside information.

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. And then the very last paragraph says: We do not know whether these press reports are accurate.

Right? So, again, you said -- I'm sorry. You have to say "yes" for this court reporter.

A Yes. We didn't know.

Q And the very last paragraph of the letter itself says: We do not know whether these press reports are accurate.

Right?

A Correct.

Q And so, again, you didn't suggest that you had any inside information or nonpublic information.

A That's correct.

Q And you certainly didn't suggest that you had access to any classified information.

A That's correct.

Q And it says actually under your signature line -- it was pointed out that you were the first signatory here. It says former Director of National Intelligence.

A Correct.

Q And former Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence, right?

A Yes.

Q And former Director of the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency and former Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, correct?

A Correct.

Q So you didn't hold yourself out as having any -- you had obviously qualifications but you didn't have any access to anything that any -- to any material that anybody --

A No, I did not.

Q -- else didn't have. Okay.

A I didn't have a need-to-know, which is why I wouldn't have sought access to classified information. They wouldn't give it to me. The Agency wouldn't.

Q We discussed the timing of the letter earlier, the having it come out before the first debate, or the second debate, rather. And we just talked through it again.

You were a private citizen when the letter was made public on October 19th, 2020, correct?

A Correct.

Q And Tony Blinken was a private citizen at that time, correct?

A Correct.

Q Mr. Morell was also a private citizen?

A Correct.

Q To your knowledge, was every other signatory of this letter a private citizen?

A Yes, at the time.

Q Okay. Would you agree that as a private citizen, you have the right to engage in the political process?

A I certainly do.

Q And do you agree that the First Amendment protected back then and continues to protect your right to make statements?

A It's supposed to, yes.

Q And it also protects the right of every other signatory to make those statements.

A Exactly.

Q So I think the comment was made earlier that your decision to sign this letter was an act of election interference.

Do you think that was a fair assessment of your actions?

A No.

Q Do you want to say anything further about that?

A I think it's exactly as your question characterized it. It was an exercise of my First Amendment rights for me as a former, several times in the intelligence community, to wave a red flag here that the dark hand of the Russians could be involved in this.

And I felt that was not only appropriate but it is my duty to do that.

Q And when you say it was your duty, why do you say you feel it was your duty?

A Well, I invested a lot of my life in the intelligence community, you know, defending this country. I served two combat tours in Southeast Asia for the same reason.

And in accordance with that, I guess, almost instinct, I felt the need to join in a warning, particularly based on my experience in the 2016 election, when I was serving as the Director of National Intelligence --

Q Thank you.

A -- and did have access to classified, a lot of classified information about it, which I did not have in this case.

Q Has the aftermath of signing the letter, in particular, the fact you're involved in this investigation, that your name has been in the New York Post, things like that, have that -- has that negatively impacted you in anyway?

A Well, I could -- I could do without it. Put it that way.

Q Do you think the fact that you're a subject of this public investigation could chill your willingness to sign a letter like this in the future?

A Well, possibly, but I think it's more important for future formers. I think it -- this investigation has the potential to chill future formers from expressing concerns about adversaries of the United States.

Mr. Goldman. Could we let the record reflect he put air quotes around "investigation."

Mr. Clapper. This is an assault on my First Amendment rights. I'll be blunt.

Ms. [redacted]. Thank you.

Mr. Goldman. Using the authority of Congress to call you in for questioning about your First Amendment rights as a private citizen to express concerns related to your prior work and an election?

Mr. Clapper. Yeah, exactly. Particularly given my own personal experience. As I said, I saw a lot of bad stuff in 50 years in intelligence. But nothing had bothered me as much as what I understood fully what the Russians did in 2016 in that election.

Mr. Goldman. Are you aware of any efforts by the majority of this committee to call in for questioning Rudy Giuliani, who you said was acting as a Russian agent in an effort to interfere in the 2020 election?

Mr. Clapper. No, I'm not. And nor am I aware of any effort on the part of this committee to call in any of the 215 flag officers who signed the letter in support of President Trump. They don't seen to be investigated.

Mr. Litt. He's front-running you.

Mr. Clapper. I did what?

Ms. [redacted]. You referenced the letter from the flag officers. I want to introduce that into the record. That will be exhibit No. 9.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Clapper. I say that, respecting their rights to exercise their First Amendment rights.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So this is an open letter from senior military leaders. It's not dated. I'll represent to you that Fox -- we have a Fox News article that dates it as being published on September 14th, 2020.

A Uh-huh.

Q You've seen this before?

A I have, and I know many of these officers.

Q And this letter says: The Democrats' opposition to border security, their pledge to return to the disastrous Iran nuclear deal, their antagonism towards the police, and planned cuts to military spending will leave the United States more vulnerable to foreign enemies.

Correct? And this is signed -- I'm sorry. You have to say "yes" for the court reporter. You have to say "yes" for the court reporter.

A Yes.

What was the question? I'm sorry.

[12:12 p.m.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q The letter says that -- reading directly from the letter -- "The Democrats' opposition to border security, their pledge to return to the disastrous Iran nuclear deal, their antagonism towards the police and planned cuts to military spending will leave the United States more vulnerable to foreign enemies," correct? Did I read that correctly?

A And your question is?

Q Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q That's what it says?

A Yes.

Q That language, from 235 flag officers, that could suggest to the American public that, based on their experience, long experience in the military, that they believe that if President Biden is elected, that could have impacts on our national security, correct?

A Yes.

Q And do flag officers typically hold security clearances?

A Some may.

Q So it's entirely possible that somebody reading this, seeing these individuals who signed it, could think these people have inside information that --

A Yes.

Q -- led them to reach this conclusion?

A They could, yes.

Q And as you said, you believe they had the First Amendment right to make these statements, right?

A Yes. Absolutely.

Q And they had the First Amendment right -- they had the right to participate in the political process?

A Yes.

Q And this committee is not investigating them, is it?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. In the earlier hour, you --

Mr. Goldman. Are you done with this letter?

Ms. [redacted]. Yeah, go ahead.

Mr. Goldman. I just want to ask a question, because this letter from senior military leaders directly attacks Democrats.

Does the letter that you signed attack either Democrats, Republicans, or either candidate for President?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Goldman. It is focused on, as you say, waving the red flag about Russia's efforts to interfere in our election.

Mr. Clapper. That's correct.

Mr. Goldman. So between the two, in your reading of it, which letter is more overtly political?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I'd have to say the open letter from senior military leaders is probably the more "overtly political" -- I'll put that in air quotes -- than is our letter, the public statement.

Mr. Goldman. And while we're on this topic, are you aware of whether or not Hunter Biden has ever held public office?

Mr. Clapper. I don't believe he has.

Mr. Goldman. And was he running for President in 2020?

Mr. Clapper. No, he was not.

Mr. Goldman. Okay. I yield back.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q There was a discussion earlier suggesting that your letter may have been the reason that the laptop story didn't get traction publicly.

I want to look a little more at the environment or the atmosphere around the New York Post story.

So the New York Post story was published on October 14th, correct?

A I think so.

Q Okay. Are you aware that before the New York Post published the story, Rudy Giuliani actually first approached FOX News and asked them to report on the laptop?

A No, I'm not.

Ms. [redacted]. Okay. I want to introduce as exhibit 10 an October 19th, 2020, story. This was published at 11:42 in the morning, so it would have been published before your letter. It's entitled "Exclusive: Fox News passed on Hunter Biden laptop story over credibility concerns."

Mr. Clapper. This is FOX News saying that?

Ms. [redacted]. FOX News.

Mr. Clapper. Okay.

Ms. [redacted]. I'll withdraw that. We'll do that in the next hour.

How much time do we have? We have -- let's see -- we have about 5 minutes. Couple quick questions about John Ratcliffe, and then I think we can wrap our hour.

You were asked about the DNI Ratcliffe statements. Do you recall that?

A Uh-huh.

Q And Mr. Ratcliffe said that there was no intelligence to support allegations of Russian involvement, correct?

A Yes.

Q Ratcliffe made those remarks on Monday, October 19th, correct? Does that sound right?

A I don't know the date when. I'll accept that, if that's when it was, but I don't know.

Q We can introduce -- we'll introduce this as exhibit -- this will be exhibit 10.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q It's an article reporting on Ratcliffe's remarks, and it's dated October 19th, 2020, 1:49 p.m. And we're just introducing it for the fact of the date.

The New York Post story in question was released on October 14th, correct?

A Yes.

Q So that would have been 5 days before Ratcliffe made his remarks?

A Right.

Q And I think you said earlier he couldn't have even begun an investigation in that time period. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And can you explain what you mean by that?

A Well, I don't know how -- what his basis for making that statement is when the laptop itself hasn't been investigated.

The DNI, Office of the Director National Intelligence, has no organic forensic analysis capability at all. So they're dependent on other components of the intelligence community, in this case the FBI, to render such a judgment, which hadn't been rendered. So I don't know how he could make that statement.

Q Okay. And even assuming that Ratcliffe -- sorry. Withdraw that.

And he made these remarks on October 19th, which was the day before the second debate, correct? The second Presidential debate was the 20th.

A Uh-huh.

Q So isn't it possible that Ratcliffe also made his remarks in the hope that they would impact the debate?

A Well, one could conclude that, yes.

Q Okay. And are you aware that on -- the comment was made -- question was -- I don't know if it was a question or a comment made earlier, but would it have been wrong for Ratcliffe to attempt to interfere in the election. Do you recall that coming up?

A Well, yes. Hard to judge, in fairness here, what the motivation was, but certainly from a timing standpoint, it raises the question as to whether this is aiding a political effort.

Q And are you aware that on September 29th, 2020 -- so 2 weeks before the events in question -- Mr. Ratcliffe also released information about Hillary Clinton that had been widely acknowledged to be Russian disinformation? It's acknowledged to be Russian disinformation by both the Special Counsel Mueller and the --

A No, I don't recall that.

Q Okay. I want to introduce as exhibit 11 a New York Times article entitled "Top Intelligence Official Releases Unverified, Previously Rejected Russia Information."

[Clapper Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this article before?

A I don't recall it.

Q Okay. I'm just going to read the first sentence. It says, "President's Trump's top intelligence official on Tuesday released unverified information about the 2016 campaign that appeared to be a bid to help Mr. Trump politically and was said to be disclosed over the objections of career intelligence officials who were concerned that the material could be Russian disinformation."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes, you did. And I do recall this now, about the "Russian intelligence acquired information that Mrs. Clinton had approved a plan for her 2016 campaign to 'stir up a scandal.'" I remember that now.

Q So Mr. Ratcliffe actually had released damaging information that could help Trump --

A Yes.

Q -- and presumably damage Vice President Biden just 35 days before the November 3rd election, correct?

A Yes.

Q And are you aware that September 29th, which is the day he released the information, was also the day of the first Presidential debate?

A I don't recall the dates of the Presidential debates, no.

Q And I'll represent to you that Mr. Ratcliffe actually released this information just a couple hours before that debate.

To your knowledge, is this committee investigating whether -- Mr. Ratcliffe's decision to release that information in advance of the debate?

A Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Goldman. If could just ask one question on that?

Is there a difference if a sitting intelligence official is using his position of authority to influence a political election as opposed to former intelligence committee -- intelligence community officials who are exercising their First Amendment rights?

Mr. Clapper. Well, sir, I think there's a big difference. When he's doing that as a sitting active official in performing the duties of that position as the Director of National Intelligence, I mean this has the -- can't prove it, I guess -- but certainly has the earmarks of engaging in the political process, which from my standpoint as the former incumbent is inappropriate.

Ms. [redacted]. Thank you.

We're about out of time. So I think we can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

Mr. [redacted]. We'll go back on the record. It's 12:33.

Mrs. Spartz.

Mrs. Spartz. Thank you.

Mr. Clapper, you mentioned earlier that you have a strong mission to fight Russian disinformation and what Russia is doing. And it sounds to me also you have very strong feelings about President Trump, is that correct, based on your statements, which as any American you have a right to do.

Mr. Clapper. Yes.

Mrs. Spartz. So my question is for you, when you signed on to the letter, do you believe you using your former office brought more credibility to this unverified information?

Mr. Clapper. I suppose, yes.

Mrs. Spartz. So why did you do that?

Mr. Clapper. I think that's why all the titles were included.

Mrs. Spartz. There were titles to endorse something --

Mr. Clapper. The title includes the word "former."

Mr. Litt. Let her finish.

Mrs. Spartz. Right. I get it. But there are a lot of officers that did endorsement for President Trump but also for President Biden. But this is a different situation where you actually tried to discredit something and, as you mentioned, on unverified information because you didn't know that. You had no access to intelligence, you have no access to anything to make the statement except your feeling, but want to make sure that there are strong statements. So why did you use your former title, not just as private citizen?

Mr. Clapper. Because I felt, as did all the others who listed their titles as former this or former that, that that would ascribe some credibility to what we were saying.

Mrs. Spartz. So generally you wanted to bring credibility to this issue without doing due diligence to verify the legitimacy of that.

Mr. Clapper. We were simply expressing our concern about the possibility of Russian involvement. That's all.

Mrs. Spartz. Right. But using the former title with unverified information.

Mr. Clapper. Well, based on our experience with the Russians, as the letter said.

Mrs. Spartz. So based on your experience [inaudible] to anything that was happening there and not understanding, you put credibility of your former titles to bring this unverified information more credibility to use, correct?

Mr. Clapper. Well, yes.

Mrs. Spartz. Why did you do that?

Mr. Clapper. Because I felt that was -- there was an important message here to be conveyed to the American public, warning them of the potential for Russian involvement. And based on -- I didn't think it inappropriate that my association in the intelligence community, I didn't think that was inappropriate.

Mrs. Spartz. Do you think situations like that really could be at issue when we have the involvement of people with prior positions, connections with the media, printing this article could really undermine democratic institutions and our election processes, use of such situations in our country really weakens our democracy?

Mr. Clapper. To the contrary. I think it helps protect the democracy when people like us speak up.

Mrs. Spartz. But when you use the titles of your former positions, not like as an individual, but do you think using the titles, position of something that is not verified, you're just feeling and think what you might be, but putting the title, it actually does cause this -- you bring credibility and you become intervention in elections in the way how it is can be perceived?

Mr. Clapper. It wasn't intervening in the election. It was sounding a warning about the potential for Russian involvement in our election. That's all it was.

Mrs. Spartz. Without knowing that, correct? You didn't know that, you just had feelings, correct?

Mr. Clapper. No. I had experience with -- hard experience with the Russians over many years.

Mrs. Spartz. Right. But in this specific situation, it was just your feelings and assumptions?

Mr. Clapper. Because of what I observed and what I read in the media. In the absence of any classified information, I felt that a warning was merited.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q The New York Post story was published on October 14th, and subsequently Facebook's founder, Mark Zuckerberg, has acknowledged that they throttled that story, meaning that they took affirmative measures to limit the dissemination of that story. Are you aware of that?

A No, I'm not. I don't do social media, so I'm not -- I don't know that. I don't -- and I don't -- I'm not sure there's a cause-and-effect relationship between the statement and whatever actions that he or other media -- social media companies took.

Q And Twitter banned the story too. If somebody on Twitter tried to forward the story, Twitter took that post down. Are you aware of that?

A No.

Q In fact, some congressional offices posted the text of the New York Post story on their websites, and then Twitter had a -- had tried to take those down too.

Were you aware of that?

A No.

Q And that lasted from October 14th to October 19th. And then the letter from -- that we're talking about here today with the 51 former intel officials -- went October 20th.

Do you think your letter further added so-called credibility that this was a nonstory or a false story, the Biden laptop?

A I'm not sure I understand your question in relation to social media.

Q Well, the New York Post publishes their story detailing what's on the laptop, which arguably, and I think we discussed earlier today, is fair game to discuss in an election, right?

A Sure.

Q Whether the son or daughter of a President is getting paid for doing nothing is certainly something that the electorate ought to have a chance to analyze on their own and make a decision.

A Sure.

Q But that story was shut down by the social media companies, Facebook and Twitter, for a period of time. And then, when it was opened up, the letter from the 51 intel officials rolls out, adding further difficulties to getting that story out. Do you see the problem with that?

Mr. Litt. Do you --

Mr. Clapper. No, I can't -- I think you're relating two events that are not necessarily connected.

Mr. [redacted]. So at no point prior to the 2020 election was the story fairly shared and portrayed as true when, in fact, it was true. Doesn't that present a problem?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know.

Mr. Litt. When you say you don't know, do you mean you don't know whether it's a problem or you don't know whether what he said is accurate?

Mr. Clapper. Both.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q We've established --

A I guess you're trying to suggest that the public statement we made somehow suppressed the media coverage? Is that what you're suggesting?

Q Well, it added a coefficient of negative credibility to the story.

A Okay. That's your formulation.

Q What Biden, Vice President Biden, said at the debate is: "Look, there are 50 former national former intelligence folks who said that what this, he's accusing me of, is a Russian plan." Is that accurate or not?

A Not exactly. It's somewhat akin to the Politico headline. If he had said "could have" or "may have," that would comport with what the intent as I felt it was of the public statement, not a definitive statement, this was Russian interference.

Q The Vice President at the time continued -- or candidate Biden: "They have said that this has all the characteristics -- four -- five former heads of the CIA -- both parties -- say what he's saying is a bunch of garbage. Nobody believes it except him and his good friend, Rudy Giuliani."

Now, that's not true, is it?

A I think that's somewhat of an overstatement, yes.

Q In the Politico article, there's a paragraph on -- relating to Director Ratcliffe?

Mr. Litt. Give me a second, and I'll get it for him.

Mr. [redacted]. Of course. Of course.

Mr. Clapper. Which paragraph?

Mr. [redacted]. It's on the third page, and it's the penultimate paragraph.

"Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe said on Monday that the information on Biden's laptop 'is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign.'"

Mr. Litt. Could you read the rest of the sentence?

Mr. [redacted]. "Though the FBI is reportedly conducting an ongoing investigation into whether Russia was involved."

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q You've cast some doubt today on the DNI's statement that it's not Russian disinformation. Is that true?

A Yes.

Q But we've since learned that, in fact, it wasn't Russian disinformation.

A We didn't know it then. And he makes the statement when an investigation by the FBI is still ongoing.

Q But you know better than any of us, when you're the Director of National Intelligence, you have at your fingertips a lot of resources to make determinations.

A Well, there's a very fine line between the access that the Office of the Director of National Intelligence has to investigatory and prosecutorial matters by the FBI or DOJ. So he, from my own experience, may not have had, probably didn't have direct access to that kind of data.

Q Were you aware that subsequently Attorney General Barr followed up and said he agreed with Director Ratcliffe?

A No, I don't recall that.

Q Okay.

A I'm sure he did, but I don't remember.

Q Okay. Does that change the situation?

A Not really.

Q Why not?

A It just doesn't change it.

Q A minute ago, you said that --

A I'm talking about this statement at the time it was given, and I have serious credibility issues with Ratcliffe as DNI, had all of 5 months experience in intelligence.

Q Okay. But a moment ago you said the reason the Ratcliffe statement was a problem is because the FBI and DOJ hadn't weighed in yet, correct?

A Right.

Q But then the Attorney General did weigh in right in the same timeframe?

A When was that?

Mr. [redacted]. Go off the record for a second.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q We've had some discussion about Russia's involvement in the 2016 election, and you've stated that it was your belief that they did interfere in the 2016 election. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Now, that is different from whether you had evidence that the Trump campaign or some associate of President Trump, then candidate Trump, was working with Russians. Isn't that correct?

A Well, I've testified to that effect, that contemporaneously we didn't see any -- I didn't see any intelligence information about that.

Q That indicated that the campaign was colluding with Russia.

A Well, if you think -- if you don't think Paul Manafort sharing election analysis data is not collusion, okay.

Q But you testified before the House Intelligence Committee --

A Yeah.

Q -- that you didn't have any.

A That's right, we didn't have any intelligence information. This was information that came to light later, in the course of the Mueller investigation, which we didn't have access to obviously at the time.

Q Okay. So now it's your position that, based on the Paul Manafort information, that the Trump campaign was colluding with --

Mr. Litt. I really think we're not talking about the Hunter Biden laptop here. You don't need to answer the question.

Mr. [redacted]. I'm just trying to clarify what he said.

Mr. Litt. You don't need to answer that question.

I should have jumped in on the last question.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Mr. Litt. We're not here to talk about the Mueller investigation or the --

Mr. [redacted]. I'm just trying to understand, like, what he said.

Mr. Litt. I understand.

Mr. [redacted]. So I don't know how you want to move forward with that.

Mr. Litt. We can just go on to the next question.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Mrs. Spartz. Can I ask a question?

Mr. [redacted]. Of course.

Mrs. Spartz. Do you believe situations like yours and others really significantly undermine the credibility of our intelligence community with the American people?

Mr. Clapper. Do what?

Mrs. Spartz. Do situations like yours and some other situations maybe you cited does not now really significantly undermine the credibility of the intelligence community and FBI with the American people?

Mr. Clapper. No, not necessarily.

Mrs. Spartz. So you believe it's okay to have all of this different mingling of CIA and FBI and former and this writing letters, do different things, and you don't think the American people would not lose trust from all -- looking at these letters and looking at dossiers that turn out not to be true, do you think it's not undermining it?

Mr. Clapper. No more than the 215 or so flag officers who signed a letter in support of President Trump whom you're not investigating. That doesn't undermine -- I respect their First Amendment rights. I don't think that undermines confidence in the Flag Officer Corps of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Mrs. Spartz. Well, but that's a different --

Mr. Clapper. No, it isn't different.

Mrs. Spartz. We're talking about a situation where you endorse someone and have someone say someone is supporting of that.

Mr. Clapper. I beg to differ.

Mrs. Spartz. Which is different when you try to look into ongoing investigations and try to make opinion to cause doubt and undermine credibility. It's very different involvement of this title of that versus just say, I like someone even if you use some title. Don't you think there is a difference?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mrs. Spartz. There is no difference?

Mr. Clapper. No. You have your opinion. I have mine.

Mrs. Spartz. I think as an American we see a lot of credibility that is lost in this community when see it on the ground. But that's --

Mr. Clapper. That's your opinion?

Mrs. Spartz. That's my opinion. That's right.

Mr. Clapper. That's right. And you're free to have it in this country.

Mrs. Spartz. Of course. You are too. But I think -- I'm not using my titles too.

There's a difference to use your former titles to put your personal opinions and undermine information versus just express it. I think it's a difference.

Mr. Litt. I don't think there is a question there.

Mrs. Spartz. The gentleman believes there is not. I believe it is.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q You do see a difference between the open letter from the senior military leaders and the letter that you signed, though?

A Yes, I do see a difference.

Q I mean, the difference is that at the time there was a question and controversy whether this laptop story was legitimate and authentic. Your letter basically weighed in and said it was not, when in fact it was.

A That isn't -- we said watch out. It's a warning. The Russians could be involved. Don't read into it something it isn't.

Q But it certainly had a different effect. I mean, the Politico story mischaracterized it.

A That's correct.

Q The Vice President mischaracterized it in the debate.

A That's correct.

Q And we have testimony from Mr. Morell that he knew that would happen. And so in light of that, isn't there -- isn't the distinction pretty stark?

A The distinction with what?

Q Between the two letters. I mean, this was a letter that was used to discredit a story --

A Well --

Mr. Litt. Let him finish.

Mr. [redacted]. -- used to discredit a story that, in fact, was true, whereas the open letter from senior military leaders is just a, you know, it's just a -- essentially an endorsement.

Mr. Clapper. It's a political statement. That's right. That's right. And it cast doubt on the Democrats.

Mr. Litt. Just to be clear, when you say it's a political statement, you're talking about the military leader statement?

Mr. Clapper. Yes. Exactly.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q As we sit here today, does it give you any concern that there was a subset of the signers of the letter that were surely pursuing a political operation by using this letter?

A Well, I don't know, and nor did I seek to understand what the motivations were of the various other signatories, of whom I was not aware anyway who the other signatories were.

Q So before you agreed to sign on, you didn't -- or before the letter was published, you didn't get a list of the folks that were joining the letter?

A No, I don't think I did. I think it was afterwards.

Q Do you believe Mr. Morell was trying to help the campaign here so he could become the Director of the CIA?

A I don't know that.

Q At the time, did you have discussions with Mr. Morell about whether he was interested in being the CIA Director?

A No.

Q Do you believe the Biden campaign and Mr. Morell were trying to capitalize on your credentials -- you know, you're the first person listed on the letter -- to quash this negative reporting?

A Well, I don't think -- I wouldn't agree with the characterization that the intent was to quash negative reporting. I think the intent on my part, at least, I can't speak for the other 50, my part was simply to sign to signal a warning of the potential Russian involvement.

Q But you can acknowledge the Biden campaign was eager to have you sign on because of the credentials that you bring to the letter?

A I suppose, yeah.

Q And so in hindsight, does it give you pause that the Biden campaign may have been using you and using your credentials to quash this negative story?

A Well, I did not know contemporaneously of the campaign connection with Michael Morell. I did not know that. So I don't know whether that would have affected the decision to sign it or not.

Q I mean, one of the classic earmarks of former intel officials, I think, in many respects, and you can disagree with this or agree with it, is that for the most part you are viewed as a nonpartisan career official.

A During my time of service, yes.

Q And so when you're a former official, your name and the other former heads of the CIA bring to bear the fact that they're not a partisan political operative. Don't you think that was valuable for the Biden campaign?

A I suppose.

Q And --

A I don't know.

Q And if you had to do it again, would you opt out of the letter, or would you agree to participate in it, if you knew it was a political campaign?

A Well, given the fact I'm being investigated for signing it, I'd probably think twice, yeah, in the exercise of my First Amendment rights.

Q In fact, we have some emails -- and I wanted to ask whether you are aware that following the debate there were some email exchanges between some of the people that signed the letter saying such things as, "TP worked well at the debate. Great idea guys." Were you aware of that?

A No.

Q And that was from Gregory Tarbell. Do you know who that is?

A No.

Q To Kristin Wood. Do you know who Kristin Wood is?

A I know of her. I don't know her.

Q And Ms. Wood responded to Mr. Tarbell, "That was really cool."

Does it give you any concern that some of the signatories of the letter were celebrating sort of the political aspects of it?

A No.

Mr. [redacted]. What number are we up to?

Mr. [redacted]. 12.

Mr. [redacted]. 12?

[Clapper Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted]. Just introducing the exhibit that I referenced between Ms. Wood and Mr. Tarbell.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Earlier today we had a little bit of a discussion about the Steele Dossier.

When did you first learn of the Steele Dossier?

A I think it was in mid-December -- around December 15th of 2016.

Q And do you remember how you learned about it?

A I had a call from John Brennan to inform me -- asking me was I aware of it, and I was not.

Q And at that point, did you -- were you able to make an assessment of whether the Steele Dossier was authentic information -- contained authentic information?

A Not at that very instant, no.

Q At any point in time, did you come to make an assessment of the content of the Steele Dossier?

A Well, the community assessment was -- the team that put together the intelligence community assessment was not to draw on it as a source for the intelligence community assessment. So you won't find a footnote using the dossier as a source.

Q What do you recall of that communication you had with Director Brennan at the time?

A He just called me up and said, "Are you aware of this dossier that has some damming information about candidate Trump?" and I said no.

Q Did he send it to you?

A No. I got it from the FBI.

Q Do you remember who at the FBI sent it to you?

Mr. Litt. Are we going to tie this back to the Hunter Biden laptop in some respect? I really don't think this is the forum to be litigating the Steele Dossier.

Mr. [redacted]. Just asking some questions. You're here voluntarily. If he doesn't want to answer them --

Mr. Litt. I understand you're asking questions. If you have a question about the Biden laptop statement, we can deal with that.

But I don't think you should be answering these questions about --

Mr. [redacted]. Well, part of the problem with the Steele Dossier is that it was classic disinformation, where the Hunter Biden laptop was not.

Mr. Clapper. Well --

Mr. Litt. That's not a question to you.

Mr. [redacted]. Don't you agree?

Mr. [redacted]. Don't I agree with what?

Mr. [redacted]. That on one hand, the Hunter Biden laptop information was not disinformation, but the Steele Dossier was. It was false --

Mr. Clapper. Not in its entirety. Some of what was in the 35 separate memos that compose the Steele Dossier was corroborated from separate sources. Much of it was not.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. But didn't the Steele Dossier have all the features of a Russian disinformation operation? Didn't you testify to that earlier?

Mr. Clapper. Well, it had some, I suppose, but bear in mind that at least the FBI considered that the initial sourcing, which was Robert Steele, was credible. He'd been a credible -- what they regard as a credible source for about 3 years. The issue was with the second and third order assets which Steele drew on which we could not corroborate.

Mr. Gaetz. And by Robert Steele, do you mean Christopher Steele?

Mr. Clapper. So I don't see a direct parallel.

Mr. Gaetz. We went through this earlier. For the record, I'm going to assert that the basis for these questions about the Steele Dossier emerged from Director

Clapper claiming that his extensive experience analyzing Russia informed on his basis to sign the Hunter Biden letter.

So one cannot simultaneously say my basis is all this experience I have analyzing that which is or isn't a Russian information operation, and then say you're not going to talk about that analysis through the lens of the Hunter Biden letter.

So I understand you take exception to that. We have done this with a number of witnesses. But if we proceed with a contempt proceeding, I at least wanted the basis to be reflected.

Mr. Litt. Just to be clear, I have not interposed any objections to questions such as you were just talking about, comparing the Steele Dossier to the Biden laptop.

What I did start to object to was discussions about how he learned about the dossier, what his communications with John Brennan were, who he obtained the dossier from, which I don't think is within the scope.

I have no problem with your asking the kinds of questions you were talking about, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. And as to Mr. Castor's question, the committee's position, I believe, will be that when Director Clapper references the full suite of his experience, then the full suite of his Russia experience becomes probative to this inquiry.

But as Mr. [redacted] has said, you could choose to answer or not answer any questions you want because you're here voluntarily.

Mrs. Spartz. But which earmarks? You said that this Biden laptop had all earmarks of Russian disinformation, but the Steele Dossier didn't have all. Which one it didn't have from your perspective?

Mr. Clapper. Well, the difference was the primary source of the Steele document was Robert Steele, who --

Mr. Litt. Christopher.

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Litt. Christopher Steele.

Mr. Clapper. Oh, Christopher Steele, excuse me, was a career-long professional British intelligence officer who was an expert on Russia. So he was considered credible.

The issue was the second and third order assets that he drew on to compile the Steele -- this dossier, which most of which we could not corroborate.

Mrs. Spartz. So what do you believe --

Mr. Clapper. And of course, difference, the big difference here is I was in a position to have access to classified information to make inquiries about it, which I was not in the case of the laptop.

Mrs. Spartz. So do you believe you were used by the Biden campaign for their political reasons?

Mr. Clapper. No, I don't feel used.

Mrs. Spartz. So how would you -- since you didn't know, but they used your credential to use in the elections and write this letter, how would you --

Mr. Clapper. Well, I can't --

Mrs. Spartz. -- classify that?

Mr. Clapper. I can't comment on that. My purpose was simply to sound a warning, as I've said many times before this morning, that there is the potential for Russian involvement. That's all.

Mrs. Spartz. Did you cite it in any other situation before?

Mr. Clapper. What?

Mrs. Spartz. In any other situation, do you have circumstances where you cited the warning in any other -- during your career after that it could be potentially Russian involvement? Have you had any other situation when you made the same warning, or this is the only time that you made that statement?

Mr. Clapper. I mean, since the I left the government?

Mrs. Spartz. Since you left or during that, have you made statements, have you issued that warning ever before, or this is the first time?

Mr. Litt. I'm sorry. Are you asking about while he was in the government or just after?

Mrs. Spartz. While or after. Did you ever --

Mr. Clapper. I sounded a warning immediately -- in fact, that's why I wanted to go public, to express my concern about the Russians after the 2016 election.

Mrs. Spartz. But a specific case, that was the first time you publicly issued the warning?

Mr. Clapper. No, it was not. I issued it on "Meet the Press" in 2017.

Mrs. Spartz. And what was that warning?

Mr. Clapper. About the Russian involvement. I talked about the Russian interference in our election in 2016. And I'm sure there are other appearances I made on CNN where I spoke to it.

Mrs. Spartz. But why would you think that anything like that, why would the Russian involvement and that would be discredited, why would you think Russians wouldn't want to have Hunter and Mr. Biden? Why do you think they would not actually try to do something on purpose to have Biden? Why do you think they would not want to support him?

Mr. Clapper. I don't understand the question.

Mrs. Spartz. Why would you think that when you look at this disinformation and why do you think that potentially maybe the Russians had a different idea when they interfere and maybe they had no problems with President Biden?

Mr. Clapper. Well, that didn't occur to me. I just again thought that the public should know of the potential for Russian involvement.

Mrs. Spartz. So in your mind, you always had this in your mind, Trump and Russian connection, even though a lot of things never were proved to be true, that there was no specific connection, but you still made these assessments --

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't know that yet for sure. I think at the time that the potential for Russian involvement was real and that I thought it was appropriate that the American public be warned of it. That was the whole purpose.

Mrs. Spartz. So you thought there could be connection between Trump campaign and Russian Government?

Mr. Clapper. What?

Mrs. Spartz. You thought in your mind there could be connection between Trump campaign and Russian Government?

Mr. Clapper. What's the question?

Mr. Litt. She's asking whether what you're saying is you thought there could be a connection between the Trump campaign and the Russian Government.

Mr. Clapper. Yes, I did. When President Trump publicly solicited Russian assistance in finding the Russian emails, or the missing Hillary Clinton emails, 5 hours later the Russian Intelligence Service, specifically the GRU, went to work to just -- to do just that.

Mrs. Spartz. How did he solicit when you say that?

Mr. Clapper. How did I what?

Mrs. Spartz. How did he solicit that?

Mr. Clapper. Solicit?

Mr. Litt. How did he solicit the Russian assistance?

Mrs. Spartz. Yeah, how did he do that?

Mr. Clapper. He made it in a rally speech.

Mrs. Spartz. You can do rally speeches. We do a lot of different things. He didn't spend any --

Mr. Clapper. Well, the point is, the intelligence showed that the Russians reacted.

Mrs. Spartz. What about what intelligence did on the information that Clinton campaign and Jake Sullivan, current National Security Advisor, gave to intelligence services, you think that's a problem, how it was more credible when Clinton campaign give information?

Mr. Clapper. What are we talking about here?

Mr. Litt. I'm not sure what she -- she's talking about something about Jake Sullivan.

Mrs. Spartz. And Hillary Clinton campaign giving information to intelligence services, which became more credible.

Mr. Clapper. I don't know what you're talking about with Jake Sullivan.

Mrs. Spartz. As part of Clinton -- when Clinton campaign provided information also to intelligence services, is that credibility, was that a question?

Mr. Clapper. Well, there's some doubt about that.

Mr. [redacted]. I'm going to return to the information I was talking about, Attorney General Barr. We have an exhibit that will be No. 13.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [redacted]. Look over that.

First of all, the title of this story from Blaze Media is, "Bill Barr says suppressing Hunter Biden laptop story 'definitely made an impact on the election.'"

"Barr recalled when a letter signed by more than 50 former senior U.S. intelligence officials -- including former DNI James Clapper -- claimed the allegations regarding a laptop purportedly owned by President Joe Biden's son 'had all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation' was released in October 2020."

And then here's a quote: "As soon as this letter came out from the so-called intelligence specialists, the DNI, John Ratcliffe at the time, and the FBI -- which worked for me -- both came out and said this was not the result of Russian disinformation,' Barr said during a Thursday appearance on 'Jesse Watters Primetime.' 'The media ignored that completely and just kept going on with the disinformation lie.'"

So my question is, did you not know that Barr had come out and ratified what Director Ratcliffe had said?

Mr. Litt. What's the date of this article?

Mr. [redacted]. March 18th, 2022.

Mr. Litt. Okay.

Mr. Clapper. Well, this is a little bit after the letter, the public statement.

Mr. [redacted]. No, but the Attorney General's talking about what he did at the time.

Mr. Litt. I'm sorry. Where does he say anything about what he did at the time?

Mr. [redacted]. He said the FBI, which works for me.

Mr. Forrest. Do you have the FBI statement?

Mr. [redacted]. We do. We have that ready for you.

Mr. Litt. Okay. Why don't we deal with that then.

Mr. Clapper. This is in 2022.

Mr. Litt. Yeah.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q The concluding sentence, the penultimate paragraph, "Therefore, the FBI cannot provide any additional information in response to the enumerated questions to your letter. We have nothing to add at this time to the October 19th public statement by the Director of National Intelligence about the available actionable intelligence on Hunter Biden's laptops and emails."

And I'm just wondering whether you were aware of that?

A This?

Q Yes.

A No, I've never seen this letter before.

Q Okay. And the date on this is October 20th, 2020.

A How would I have seen this letter?

Q I don't know how you would or how you wouldn't. I'm sure it was published in the news, discussed in the news.

A Oh, was it? Okay.

Q Okay. You mentioned the Steele Dossier had 35 chapters or 35 components?

A 35, as I recall, or so documents, separate documents that comprised what was called the dossier.

Q And did you ever have access to all 35?

A Yes.

Q And did you ever disseminate them?

Mr. Litt. What do you mean by disseminate?

Mr. [redacted]. Give to anybody.

Mr. Litt. He gave it to me.

Mr. Clapper. I gave him a copy and gave my deputy a copy.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q And did you give it to any news organizations?

A No.

Q At any point did you use the Steele Dossier to -- did you talk about the Steele Dossier in a positive way on any of your television appearances?

A No, other than -- well --

Q Giving it credibility?

A No. I always made the point that we didn't use it for the intelligence community assessment, we didn't draw on it.

Mr. [redacted]. We have about 20 minutes left in our hour.

Mr. Litt. Don't feel compelled to use it.

Mr. [redacted]. I'm not. I'm seeing if anybody has -- Mrs. Spartz or Mr. Gaetz?

Mr. Gaetz. Director, were you aware of any of the contents on the Hunter Biden laptop when you signed this letter?

Mr. Clapper. No. No, I was not.

Mr. Gaetz. And have you subsequently become aware of any of the contents of the laptop?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I've read media reports, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. Do any of the contents of the laptop concern you as you sit here today?

Mr. Clapper. Well, sure. I mean, yes, it would be of concern.

Mr. [redacted]. Can we go off the record for a second?

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted]. Back on the record.

Mr. Gaetz. You indicated that the contents of the laptop, as you now understand them, concern you, and I'd like to know why.

Mr. Clapper. Well, again, I'm going based on only what I've read in the media, but there certainly is the potential for compromise, I suppose. But, again, I'm not authoritative on the actual content, how much of it -- do we know was any of that inserted by somebody else? I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. You don't have any basis to believe any information is inauthentic today, do you?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't have any basis for saying it's authentic or unauthentic, other than what I read in the media.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. Well, Mr. Clapper, one basis for presuming it might be authentic is that Hunter Biden's authenticated it, right?

Mr. Clapper. He's apparently said it is his laptop and that at least some of what's on it is his --

Mr. Gaetz. Has he said any of it is not --

Mr. Clapper. -- as I understand what's been in the media.

Mr. Gaetz. These are really predicate questions. I don't mean to go back and belabor them. But you've testified earlier to us that you're unaware of any effort by Hunter Biden to say that this isn't authentic, that you suppose --

Mr. Clapper. That's why I was saying I don't have a basis for saying --

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Director, you've got to let me finish the question.

Mr. Clapper. Yeah. I apologize. Sorry.

Mr. Gaetz. You've testified earlier today that you have no basis to believe it's not authentic, that you're aware that Hunter Biden has authenticated some of it, and that you suppose -- your words -- that if there was anything inauthentic, that someone from Hunter Biden's team would say so.

Have I misunderstood any part of what we've discussed?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I think that's right.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Back to the predication. And now we're talking about the contents of the laptop. I'm trying to understand from you why the contents don't concern you more.

Mr. Litt. More than what?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't know what the contents actually are.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Are you aware of --

Mr. Clapper. I didn't know that much about it certainly in October 2020.

Mr. Gaetz. Moments ago -- and that's actually what I'm trying to probe here, is how your understanding of the context have changed from when you signed the letter to now, because that might inform on the committee's legislative work --

Mr. Clapper. Well, again, all I know --

Mr. Litt. Let him finish.

Mr. Gaetz. That may inform on the committee's legislative work regarding how to constrain some security clearances for former folks. So that is our basis for asking the question.

So in 2020, when you signed the letter, you were unaware of any contents, correct?

Mr. Clapper. Other than what the New York Post reported.

Mr. Gaetz. And today you're aware of more contents of the laptop?

Mr. Clapper. Well, there's been more publicity about it, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. And that understanding has now developed within you a concern over potential compromise. Isn't that right?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I suppose, yeah. You can -- I guess you could spin a web to say that there's potential for compromise, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. These aren't trick questions. I'm citing your testimony back to you.

And had you known when you signed the letter what you know now, would you similarly have been concerned about comprise of the First Family.

Mr. Clapper. Well, probably. But my greater concern, my overriding concern was the potential for Russian involvement. That's why I signed the letter, the release.

Mr. Gaetz. Why were you more concerned about Russian involvement than compromise of the First Family?

Mr. Litt. You mean why would he have been more concerned if he had known at the time?

Mr. Gaetz. Well, that's not my question.

As you sit here today, why are you more concerned about the Russian interference features of this operation and not as much the compromise?

Mr. Clapper. I can't quantify how much I'm concerned about compromise of the First Family versus -- I can't quantify that to say one is more or less. I'm concerned -- the issue for me was what did I think in 2020, October 2020, two and a half years ago.

Mr. Gaetz. And if you would have known in 2020 what you know now about the potential for compromise, would that have stopped you from signing the letter?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know. I will say, I'll repeat what I said earlier, the letter would have been better had we added a sentence something to the effect that we will abide by the results of a competent, legitimate forensic analysis of the laptop and its content. I think that would have strengthened the statement when we made it in October of 2020.

Mr. Gaetz. And there are other ways to authentic contents other than a forensic analysis, right?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I suppose. But that's what I would ascribe the most credibility to.

Mr. Gaetz. If Hunter Biden stood up and said, "That is my laptop and those contents are authentic," would that have been sufficient for you?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. How could that have been insufficient?

Mr. Clapper. If the content of the laptop had been manipulated in such a way that he wasn't aware of it, you have to -- there's that possibility. The Russians are pretty skillful at this stuff.

Mr. Gaetz. And as we sit here today, you have no basis to believe that that alteration has, in fact, occurred, right?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know that, no.

Mr. Gaetz. If you were aware of contents of the laptop wherein Hunter Biden was engaged in business deals in Russia, would that have factored into your decision to sign or not sign the letter?

Mr. Clapper. Well, it's not illegal for people to have -- at least it wasn't then -- business deals in Russia or China.

[1:22 p.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. I'm not suggesting it's illegal. I'm trying to --

Mr. Clapper. Well, there's the potential for a national security implication there, yes. But I don't know enough about that to say definitively one way or the other whether there was.

Mr. Gaetz. And I'm not trying to assert that you have a definitive understanding of everything on the laptop.

What I'm trying to understand, had you had more visibility into the contents, which of these various things from the laptop may have caused you pause, or may have been forthright in the consideration of your decision to sign or not sign?

Mr. Clapper. Had someone said in a position of authority, not just the Biden family, or Hunter Biden himself, but if a competent investigatory body had done a forensic analysis, could definitively say there's no evidence of Russian interference here, clearly that would have affected my decision whether or not to sign the letter or not, had I known that contemporaneously. I didn't know that.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, you've been very clear about that.

But a separate and distinct question from whether or not an independent analysis would have authenticated the laptop is whether or not the contents themselves would have motivated you in any particular way. So let me ask you another -- about another vertical there. Are -- as you sit here today, are you aware of SinoHawk as business entity?

Mr. Clapper. As what?

Mr. Gaetz. SinoHawk.

Mr. Clapper. I don't know what you're referring to.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Have you ever heard of Tony Bobulinski?

Mr. Clapper. I've heard the name. I don't know -- can't -- I can't go much beyond that.
