Mr. Gaetz. And as you sit here today, are you aware of contents the laptop had evidence a number of connections with the Chinese and Hunter Biden?

Mr. Clapper. I'll accept that. I don't -- I don't -- I didn't know that for sure.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, I'm not asking you to accept my premise. I'm asking -- I'm trying to probe your awareness of these things.

Mr. Clapper. I was not aware of any Chinese connection in October of 2020 on the laptop, no.

Mr. Gaetz. And are you aware of such a connection today?

Mr. Clapper. That's what I've read.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you believe what you've read on that?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I -- I -- I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Director, the reason I'm asking this, some things that John Ratcliffe writes -- John Ratcliffe writes, you don't believe. Some things that others write, you do believe. So I'm trying to understand what goes into your decision calculus here.

So the things you read today about Chinese connections between the Biden family that have emerged off of this laptop, do you have -- do you have any basis with your wealth of specific to assess the veracity of those claims?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I accept the claims. I -- but I don't know what the specifics of the claims are.

Mr. Gaetz. Um --

Mr. Clapper. So, yes, you're always concerned if there are interactions with entities in an adversary's nation-state like China or Russia.

Mr. Gaetz. China does --

Mr. Clapper. That's always a concern, but it may not be anything nefarious or certainly illegal.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, and I --

Mr. Clapper. I mean, all kinds of people have business dealings with China.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. And I'm not suggesting every one of them is illegal. I'm wondering to what extent knowledge of those interactions would inform on signing a letter such as the subject of our discussion today in the course of a Presidential campaign. So --

Mr. Clapper. Well, these are all --

Mr. Gaetz. -- as it relates to China -- excuse me, Director.

As it relates to China, China does try to compromise powerful Americans, don't they?

Mr. Clapper. China what?

Mr. Gaetz. Does try to compromise powerful Americans, don't they?

Mr. Clapper. Well, they have, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And they try to compromise American politicians, right?

Mr. Clapper. They have attempted, yes.

Mr. Gaetz. They've succeeded in some cases.

Mr. Clapper. Well, I can't speak to that. Well, I was privy to certain investigations when I was DNI, but I don't think I should speak to --

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. That's an important -- so I'm to understand your objection to the question to be that it calls upon to you discuss classified information, not that you're just unwilling to speak about it generally.

Mr. Clapper. Yeah, okay.

Mr. Gaetz. The -- are you aware of content on Hunter Biden's laptop wherein Hunter Biden organizes the annual meeting of his investment fund at the Chinese Embassy?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Had you been aware of that, would that have concerned you?

Mr. Clapper. Perhaps. There could be -- there could be security implication or not. I don't know enough about it.

Mr. Gaetz. And if that meeting of Hunter Biden investment fund, if the opportunity to have that at the Chinese Embassy was predicated on Hunter Biden's willingness to have a one-on-one meeting with the Chinese Ambassador, while his father was Vice President, would that increase or decrease your concern about such an interaction?

Mr. Clapper. It would depend on the nature of the conversation.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you think it's proper for the son of a sitting Vice President to be holding investment meetings at the Chinese Embassy and having one-on-one meetings with the ambassador?

Mr. Clapper. I can't say.

Mr. Gaetz. Does anything about that concern you?

Mr. Clapper. Were there national security implications there? I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Had you known that there were arrangements to have such a meeting for Hunter Biden at the Chinese Embassy predicated on Hunter Biden before that meeting, having a one-on-one discussion with the ambassador, would that have impacted your decision to sign the letter?

Mr. Clapper. I don't know. I mean, you're -- this is hypothetical questions you're asking. But 2-1/2 years ago and whether that would have impacted the decision I might have made to sign one or not, I don't know.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, shouldn't it have?

Mr. Clapper. Possibly, had I -- if I knew more detail about the nature of the conversations. Was there a national security implication here, or was this just a business dealing?

Mr. Gaetz. Prior to signing the letter, can you list for me the steps you took to understand the contents of the laptop?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry?

Mr. Gaetz. Prior to signing the letter, can you list for me the steps you took to understand what the contents the laptop were?

Mr. Clapper. I wasn't in a position to garner information or insight about the contents of the laptop. All I had to go on was what was in the media at the time.

Mr. Gaetz. Why did you assess that the contents of the laptop weren't relevant to assessing these indicia of Russian disinformation?

Mr. Clapper. Because I was concerned about potential Russian involvement in inserting content.

Mr. Gaetz. Wouldn't your concern about any potential inserted content necessitate some investigation or discovery or inquiry on your part as to those contents?

Mr. Clapper. No --

Mr. Gaetz. Why not?

Mr. Clapper. -- Congressman. I simply was concerned about potential Russian involvement. I don't know how many times I have to say that.

Mr. Gaetz. We hear you loud and clear that that was a concern. But we have to decide how to legislate around the fact that 51 former intelligence officials went and said something that the media portrayed as a falsity, and then it was used in a Presidential debate and it harms the credibility of our intelligence entity.

So that legislative endeavor necessitates understanding when a person in your position with your active security clearance puts their name on such a letter: What things do you investigate? What things do you review? What things do you research? What experiences do you draw on?

And so you can -- you can come and say in each one, in response to all of our questions, that you just thought the public ought to be warned. But that's not fulsome when we're trying to ascertain the process you went through.

And so -- so I'll go into some more granular detail.

Did you speak to anybody currently in the government before you signed the Hunter Biden letter?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you speak to anyone other than the signatories to the letter who had left government but had previously held positions in the government before signing the letter?

Mr. Clapper. Other than the ones that were in the email exchange.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, I -- I understand those -- for a moment, I'm going to carve out signatories to the letter. But is there any human being who is not a signatory to the letter that you discussed the letter with prior to signing?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Which of the signatories to the letter did you have a discussion with about the letter?

Mr. Clapper. Other than my email exchanges with Michael Morell, none.

Mr. Gaetz. So you didn't speak to Mr. Morell on the phone?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Polymeropoulos?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Brennan?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you review any files or materials in your possession, custody, or control, prior to signing the letter?

Mr. Clapper. No, other than the media reporting which is publicly available.

Mr. Gaetz. But no other notes you've taken, briefs you've written?

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And the public, do you recall --

Mr. Clapper. On the specific subject of the laptop?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes, sir.

Mr. Clapper. No.

Mr. Gaetz. And when you say that you reviewed media reports, can you list for me which reports those were?

Mr. Clapper. Well, The New York Post.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Any others?

Mr. Clapper. Not that I remember contemporaneously, no. I don't remember any others.

Mr. Gaetz. So upon reading one media report, you agreed to sign this letter.

Mr. Clapper. Well, I suppose there was other -- other media outlets that spoke about the reporting originally generated by The New York Post. I can't tell you, recite for that for you who that was in October of 2020.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you review The New York Post story on a digital device?

Mr. Clapper. On what?

Mr. Gaetz. On a digital device?

Mr. Clapper. I don't remember where I -- I suppose on -- I would have read it on my computer, yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. And --

Mr. Clapper. It wasn't the original article. It was others, you know, reporting on The New York Post article.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your internet service provider?

Mr. Litt. Really?

Go ahead. You can answer the question.

Mr. Clapper. What?

Mr. Gaetz. Who's your internet service provider?

Mr. Clapper. Verizon.

What's that for?

Mr. Litt. He doesn't have to tell you that. He can ask any question he wants.

Mr. Gaetz. That's correct. I believe I've asked them.

Mrs. Spartz. I have a quick question for you.

Just, you know, you mentioned about the potential compromise of the First Family and concern.

Do you believe -- you know, from your professional opinion which, you know, you've been in this for a long time, you know, seeing what's happened with Hunter Biden and the corruption prosecutor, with Burisma, with information that right now current Amos Hochstein, who's actually current advisor, energy advisor to President Biden and there is, you know, ex-CEO of Naftogaz oil gas under investigation with the corruption prosecutor, is this something, this issue could be potentially, you know, a problem because he had his family and his current employee involved in some anticorruption investigation in Ukraine?

And I think this is really -- I think that we should be looking very carefully because that potential could compromise our First Family.

So ex-CEO of Naftogaz right now, anticorruption prosecutor of Ukraine opened a case for him and the current advisor to President, Amos Hochstein, who is the one who advised the ones that now is under investigation, you know, by this anticorruption prosecutor. So we have the same situation where his family, his employees involved in some advisory dealings with money in Ukraine, which is pretty corrupt country, as you know, and there is a lot of work to do there.

Do you think this is pause -- causes you pause, you know, to start thinking about what is really happening in, you know, in our intelligence community? Are we doing our job?

Mr. Clapper. I'm not sure I understand what you're getting at here.

Mrs. Spartz. You know, do you believe all of the situation involvements of President Biden's son, President Biden's current employees when a lot of oil business in Ukraine --

Mr. Clapper. Uh-huh.

Mrs. Spartz. -- could potentially compromise the First Family?

Mr. Clapper. In the absence of information, more information than is available to me, I don't know. I suppose it could be but I -- I don't know enough to answer that.

Mrs. Spartz. So if you -- but if you would see similar concern, you'd be willing to make the same strong statements that you just made about some concerns that you had in the letter that you sent related to the laptop situation. Would you -- you still would be --

Mr. Clapper. I'm not --

Mrs. Spartz. -- impartial --

Mr. Clapper. I'm --

Mrs. Spartz. -- to do that.

Mr. Clapper. I'm afraid I'm not following you here.

Mrs. Spartz. But you would be impartial to do, this your statements, you know, if you in that -- in the similar situation with -- that you just did about Hunter Biden laptop. Would you -- using your professional knowledge or you only feel like you need to do it only if it's related to anti-Trump?

Mr. Clapper. I'm sorry. I'm missing the point here.

Can you help me, Bob?

Mr. Litt. No.

Mrs. Spartz. But you believe the potential, from what you know, that First Family could be compromised. Is that correct?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I suppose that's possible. But I don't know that. I don't know enough facts to make a judgement.

Mrs. Spartz. But it's concerning, what you've seen in your professional opinion, what you've heard and seen about laptop and other things. Is it concerning?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I don't know enough about it to say whether -- it could be, you know. Anything's possible, but I don't know enough to answer that question.

Mrs. Spartz. But you did know enough or you just made an assumption last time when you did put your signature on that letter. What did you know?

Mr. Clapper. What I know -- what I knew of is about 30-plus years of experience with the Russians and the experience I had in the election of 2016. That yes, I was very concerned about that.

Mrs. Spartz. But you're not concerned about what's happening now?

Mr. Clapper. Well, I'd have to know more facts.

Mrs. Spartz. Okay.

Mr. [redacted]. Thank you.

Mr. Clapper. This is history I haven't lived. I lived a lot of history with the Russians.

Mr. [redacted]. Thank you.

Ms. [redacted]. We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [redacted]. We can go back on the record. It is 1:45 in the afternoon.

EXAMINATION

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q General Clapper, I want to turn back to I think it's exhibit 14, but I'm not sure if I marked it down right. It's the letter from the FBI that's dated October 20th, 2020.

Is that exhibit 14? Is that what you have it as?

Mr. [redacted]. Yes.

Ms. [redacted]. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q The FBI cannot provide any additional information in response to the enumerated questions in your letter. I want to just state for the record what that full paragraph reads. The full paragraph reads that:

Finally, as the FBI advised the committee in its letter dated October 5th, 2020, consistent with longstanding Department of Justice department policy and practice, the FBI can neither confirm nor deny the existence of any ongoing investigation or persons or entities under investigation, including to Members of Congress.

It explains that the IG has laid out the rationale for that decision. And then it says:

Therefore, the FBI cannot provide any additional information in response to the enumerated questions in your letter?

So, and I know you said you've never seen this letter before, right?

A Right.

Q But it's pretty clear there that to the extent the FBI cannot provide any further information, it's because they cannot provide information about potential or ongoing investigations, correct?

A Right, that's typical.

Q Okay. And that's standard.

A That's what?

Q Thank you. I want -- that's standard. That's standard.

A Yes.

Q The FBI can't provide --

A Yes.

Q -- that type of information.

A Yes.

Q Okay. Thank you. I just wanted to clarify the record on that, and we can move on from that exhibit.

There's also been a fair amount of discussion about the -- whether the laptop has been authenticated or not. And I think you said that you don't know, right, that there's no official statement to that effect?

A Yeah, I don't know.

Q Are you familiar with the type of investigation that the government would do to authenticate something like that?

A Well, generally. I would say the government would be, at least for me, the FBI would do that sort of thing.

Q Okay. And they would -- it would take them some time to do that, correct?

A Yeah, it would depend on the complexity of the --

Q Okay.

A -- what they're looking at.

Q And, to date, the FBI has not released any official analysis?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. And sometimes, the FBI might have done something, but for various reasons it might not release it, perhaps because there's indictments under seal or for any variety of reasons.

A Right.

Q Right? Okay.

Ms. [redacted]. I do want to introduce into the record as -- I have no idea what exhibit number we're on --

Mr. Litt. 15.

Ms. [redacted]. -- as exhibit 15, a Washington Post article. It's entitled, "Here's how The Post analyzed Hunter Biden's laptop," and I'm just going to read briefly from it?

[Clapper Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I'll give you a minute to review it. We're not going to go through the whole thing. We're actually just going to look at the first page of it.

A Yeah, I recall.

Q Okay.

A I recall --

Q Okay.

A I recall this article.

Q Okay. So according to this article, it states that, while some of the emails from the laptop, quote -- and this is in the Washington Post analysis, I should say. This is not a government analysis. But according to The Washington Post analysis: While some the emails from the laptop, quote, "are authentic communications that can be verified through cryptographic signatures," end quote, those emails, quote, "are a small fraction of 217 gigabytes of data provided to The Post on a portable hard drive by Republican activist Jack Maxey," end quote.

Then it goes on, and it says: And, in fact, quote, the vast majority of the data and most of the nearly 129,000 emails it contained could not be verified by either of the two security experts who reviewed the data for The Post, end quote.

And then it says: quote, "The security experts who examined the data for The Post struggled to reach definitive conclusions about the laptop as a whole, including whether all of it originated from a single computer or could have been assembled from files from multiple computers and put on a portable drive," end quote.

So this article at least suggests that based on The Washington Post analysis, there are legitimate questions about the authenticity the laptop, correct?

A Yes, there are.

Q Okay. So to the extent that it was stated earlier that the emails are authentic or the laptop is authentic, that's actually not been proven, correct?

A Right.

Q Okay.

A Which is why I couldn't say one way or the other about the con -- anything about the content.

Q Thank you. And just one final line, final set of questions here.

You were asked earlier about the social media companies' activities with respect to the laptop. Do you remember that? Or --

A Yes.

Q -- with respect to The New York Post story, I should say.

Are you aware of the date that the social media companies took action?

A No.

Q Okay. I'll represent to you that The New York Times article was -- I'm sorry -- the New York Post article was published on the 14th.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I want to introduce as exhibit 16, a New York Times story published on October 16th that says, "In Reversal Twitter Noise Longer Blocking the New York Post Article."

A And that was on what date?

Q October 16th.

A Oh, okay.

Q And I'll give you a minute to review the article.

But the point is that if the emails were -- if the story was being freely shared by October 16th, your letter on the 19th couldn't have had an impact on it, right?

A Correct.

Q So do you agree that this article says that by October 16th, Twitter was permitting the articles to be freely shared?

A Yes.

Q So your email or your letter couldn't have had an impact on it.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. And now I also want to introduce as exhibit 17th -- 17, an October 15th, 2020, article from Business Insider. It's entitled, "The New York Post's dubious Hunter Biden article was shared 300,000 times on Facebook, even after the company said it limited its reach."

This is exhibit No. 17, and the date of this article is October 15th, 2020.

Mr. Clapper. Before the statement, yes.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So according to this article, Facebook first began to limit the -- attempted to limit the distribution of the article on Wednesday, October 14th.

Your letter was dated October 19th, correct?

A Correct.

Q So your letter could not have impacted the Facebook decision --

A Correct.

Q -- correct? And actually, the letter says that Facebook attempted to limit the distribution but it was not -- whatever attempt it made was not successful, for the record.

Mr. Litt. You mean the article.

Ms. [redacted]. The article, sorry.

And it still was shared many hundreds of thousands of times, for the record.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay. Now with respect to media coverage more broadly, as we said in the earlier hour, Rudy Giuliani actually first approached Fox News, and asked them to report on the Hunter Biden laptop. And you said you weren't aware of that.

Do you recall that?

A Correct.

Ms. [redacted]. So I want to introduce as exhibit 18 the article reporting on the New York -- the Fox News decision.

[Clapper Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So according to this article, Rudy Giuliani approached Fox News with the story even before he approached Fox News, but Fox News's -- news division of Fox News declined to run the story, correct?

A Correct.

Q And it said it's because they couldn't properly -- they refused to run the story unless or until the sourcing and veracity of the emails could be properly vetted --

A Correct.

Q -- correct?

A Yes.

Q So, again, this article was published the 19th. But if The New York Post article was published on the 14th of October, Rudy Giuliani would have had to approach Fox News before the 14th of October, right?

A Right.

Q So once again, the public letter you signed could not have impacted the Fox News decision.

A Correct.

Ms. [redacted]. All right. And one more article and then I think we're done.

I want to introduce as exhibit 19 an October 15th, 2020, article entitled, "Bret Baier Calls Out Dubious Sourcing of Alleged Hunter Biden Emails: Let's Not Sugarcoat It, This Whole Thing is Sketchy."

[Clapper Exhibit No. 19

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Are you familiar with Mr. Baier's comments?

A No.

Q Are you familiar with who Mr. Baier is?

A Yes.

Q Who is he?

A He's an anchor, commentator on Fox News.

Q Okay. And according to the article, this is what Bret Baier said about the laptop story on October 15th, 2020. He said: Let's say, just not sugarcoat it. This whole thing is sketchy. You couldn't write this script in 19 days from an election.

I believe that's on the second page. Do you see where it says that?

A I'm sorry?

Q Do you see where it says that on the second page?

A Yes, I -- yes.

Q So a Fox News anchor described -- a Fox News anchor described this story as sketchy on October 15th, which was 4 days before your letter was published --

A Right.

Q -- correct? And to your knowledge, are your committees -- are these committees investigating Bret Baier's reasons for making the statement that the laptop story was sketchy?

A Not to my knowledge.

Ms. [redacted]. Okay. Thank you. We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 1:59 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Clapper Errata

p. 8, next to last paragraph, the reference to Chairman Jordan's statement should be in quotation marks, i.e. As Chairman Jordan said, "the most . . . doing so."

p. 25, fifth line from bottom, should be "80,000 votes" not "80 votes." I don't know whether Clapper misspoke or it was misstranscribed but the context is clear.

p. 52, 4th answer, should be "destruction" not "instruction."

p. 64, first full question, should be "extension" not "extent."

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: CARLTON PEEPLES

Thursday, May 18, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 164, Cannon House Office Building, commencing at 10:01 a.m.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted], DEPUTY GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted], COUNSEL

[redacted], SENIOR ADVISOR

[redacted], SENIOR PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

[redacted], MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY INTERN

[redacted], MINORITY STAFF ASSISTANT

[redacted], MINORITY OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION

AND LIMITED GOVERNMENT:

[redacted], MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY COUNSEL

For the U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE:

[redacted], OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS

For the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION:

[redacted], OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] We'll go on the record.

This is a transcribed interview of Special Agent in Charge Carlton Peeples. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI.

Would the witness please state his name for the record.

Mr. Peeples. Carlton Peeples.

[redacted]. And could the agency counsel please state their names for the record.

[redacted]. [redacted], FBI, Office of the General Counsel.

[redacted]. [redacted], Department of Justice, Office of Legislative Affairs.

[redacted]. On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing voluntarily here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted], and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else in the committee who is here in the room introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] I'm [redacted]. I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] [redacted], chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

[redacted]. [redacted], House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted], House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted]. And, Mr. Peeples, we have agency counsel with us today, and we just want to make you aware that agency counsel's first duty is to represent the agency and not you personally. Do you understand that?

Mr. Peeples. Yes.

[redacted]. Now, I'd like to go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

We typically take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like a break apart from that, just let us know. We're happy to accommodate. If you want a lunch break, like I said, just let us know. We're happy to do what you'd like.

And as you can see, there's an official court reporter here taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give a verbal response to all questions asked. Do you understand that?

Mr. Peeples. Yes.

[redacted]. And so the court reporter can take down a clear record, we'll do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you during a given hour just to the people on staff.

So please try to speak clearly so the court reporter can understand you and so folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It's also important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it. So that goes for everyone present at today's interview.

We also want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we'll take our time. If you have any questions or you don't understand one of our questions, just let us know. We're going to cover a wide range of topics here today, so if you need clarification at any point, just let us know.

And, if you honestly don't know the answer to a question or you don't remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to tell us if you learned the information from someone else. Just please indicate how you came to know the information.

And, if there are things that you don't know or you can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the committee.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

Mr. Peeples. Yes.

[redacted]. This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand that?

Mr. Peeples. Yes.

[redacted]. Witnesses also that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C 1001. Do you understand this?

Mr. Peeples. Yes.

[redacted]. And, finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential, so we ask that you not speak about the contents of this interview to any outside individuals so we can preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, we might mark some exhibits here today that we'll use, and those will remain with the court reporter so they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits we are going to take back after the interview wraps up.

That is the end of our intro and our preamble.

[redacted]

[redacted] Just thank you to the witness for taking time out of your busy schedule to come in today.

[redacted]. So the clock reads 10:05, and we'll start the first round of questions.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Good morning, Mr. Peeples. As I said before, my name is [redacted] and I am counsel with the committee. We'll get started.

My first question is, when did you first join the FBI?

A February 1998.

Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

A I knew I wanted to be a part of law enforcement, so this was one of the areas that I took a look into.

Q And what did you do before joining the FBI?

A Prior to joining the FBI, I was in the military for 3 years. And, between the military time and the FBI, I worked for a package company as a manager for 8 years.

Q Thank you for your service.

Did you ever deploy while you were in the military?

A What do you mean "deploy"?

Q Deploy -- like, served time out of the country going to serve in another country?

A No.

Q Did you receive any service awards?

A I did, but I can't recall what they were.

Q Can you walk us through all of the positions you've held at the FBI?

A Yeah. Yes. I started in 1998 at Washington Field Office working counterintelligence from 1998 to 2000- -- sometime in 2001. Later in 2001 through 2003, I was working civil rights investigations. From 2003 to 2005, I was on the Safe Streets Gang Task Force as well as the FBI's WFO SWAT team.

From 2005 to 2007, I got transferred over to Washington Headquarters, and I was the program manager for civil rights in the southeast region from 2005 to 2007. Then I later became the chief of the Civil Rights Unit from 2007 to 2008. I took a supervisory desk in Atlanta for the Macon and Athens resident agencies from 2008 to 2014.

Then I took a temporary duty as an Inspection Division team leader from 2014 to 2016 for 18 months. Then ASAC Jacksonville from 2016 to 2019, and I had Crim/Cyber administrative financial security in the SWAT team in Jacksonville. An inspector back in D.C. from 2019 to 2023.

During that time, from June -- from February to May of 2021, I was acting special agent in charge of Pittsburgh. And then, from September to December of 2021, I was Acting DAD in the Criminal Division. And then, from June to November of 2022, I was acting chief inspector in the Inspection Division, and I was promoted to SAC Birmingham in November and reported in January of 2023.

Q You said, after being Acting SAC in Pittsburgh, what was your next role?

A I was Acting Deputy Assistant Director in the Criminal Division from September to December of 2021.

Q Okay. And you were in headquarters or the Washington Field Office? Sorry. I missed that.

A For which position?

Q For Acting Deputy Assistant Director.

A At the FBI Headquarters.

Q Okay. And your current position currently is special agent in charge in Birmingham. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q Can you describe your roles and responsibilities in this position?

A Basically lead people, manage work, lead change, and I'm responsible for the Birmingham Field Office and four resident agencies out of Tuscaloosa, Huntsville, Gadsden, and Florence.

Q Can you describe the organizational chart for your office?

A I have a special agent in charge, which is me. Then I have two assistant special agents in charge and an administrative officer and a chief division counsel, which makes up my executive management team. Then I have several criminal squads, national security squads, and administrative squads that make up the rest of the team, including supervisors in Gadsden Resident Agency, Huntsville, Florence, and Tuscaloosa.

Q And does the Birmingham division have a standalone domestic terrorism squad?

A It's a combination of domestic terrorism and international terrorism.

Q And does your office have any January 6 investigations?

A I don't know.

Q Who is your direct supervisor?

A Deputy Director Paul Abbate.

Q What was their name? Sorry.

A Deputy Director Paul Abbate.

Q And how many people would you say directly report to you? You can estimate, or if you know the number.

A Just a little over 200.

Q How often do you interact with the FBI Director in this role?

A Very infrequently.

Q In what manner do you interact with him?

A If he ever comes to Huntsville or anywhere in my AOR, I will engage with him. Or if we're here at a SAC conference like we were at the beginning of May, I may see him. But there's no certainty that I will engage with him.

Q How often do you interact with the FBI Deputy Director?

A Very infrequently. I assume it would be -- since I've only been in this position for 3 months, I assume it would be doing performance evals or if he wants to call and talk about anything else.

Q How often do you interact with headquarters generally?

A Again, for me, very infrequently. But I'm sure my staff interacts with them more than I do.

Q And who would you interact with at headquarters when and if you'd need to in the future?

A It depends on the scenario and the situation.

Q Do you interact with Main Justice?

A No.

Q What about the Attorney General's Office?

A No.

Q And, during your tenure at the FBI, have you participated in a review of your performance?

A Yes.

Q I'm going to shift gears a little.

Are you familiar with the National School Board Association's September 29th, 2021, letter to President Biden?

A Not directly.

Q Not directly.

[redacted] I'm going to mark the NSBA September 29th, 2021, letter to President Biden as exhibit 1.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q I'll give you a copy too, sir. You can take a moment to look at it, if you'd like.

When did you learn of the NSBA's September 29th letter?

A I don't recall learning of the letter directly or what time or date I became aware of the background of the letter, so.

Q Could you say roughly, like, you know, time of year? Was it -- when it happened, roughly?

A Sometime between my time in the Criminal Investigative Division as the Acting DAD between October and December of 2021.

Q And when did you learn that the Justice Department was going to take action related to school board-related threats?

A Again, I don't recall a specific date and time.

Q Do you know why the Justice Department believed it needed to take action?

A That's a question for the Justice Department.

Q Former Executive Assistant Director Jill Sanborn testified during her transcribed interview that you had more knowledge on the school board issue than she did. Specifically, she said that you and Timothy Langan definitely have more knowledge than me because they were more involved in it than I. That's her quote.

Do you agree with that?

A I don't know her knowledge to assess if I had more knowledge or less knowledge than she does.

Q Do you know why she would say that, then?

A I don't know.

Q Did you ever work directly with Ms. Sanborn on this or any other issue?

A Directly with Ms. Sanborn on this particular matter?

Q Yes.

A No.

Q During that timeframe, did you work with her on any other issue --

A No.

Q -- around the end of 2021?

What due diligence occurred at the Justice Department between the September 29th letter and the October 4th memo, to your knowledge?

A You would have to ask the Justice Department.

Q Do you know if the Justice Department looked at any incidents cited in the NSBA letter?

A That would be a better question for the Justice Department.

Q Did you personally look into any of the incidents cited in the NSBA letter --

A No.

Q -- after the fact?

Would it surprise you to learn that the vast majority of incidents cited in the NSBA letter calling for Federal intervention at school board meetings and equating parents to domestic terrorists were nonviolent?

A I have no opinion either way.

Q Well, according to a May 2022 report commissioned by the NSBA, on September 21 of 2021, 8 days before the NSBA sent its letter, the NSBA sent a detailed summary of the contents of its letter and a list of incidents at school board meetings to the White House at its request.

Are you aware of this?

A No.

[redacted]. I'm going to mark a document here as exhibit 2. It is the September 21st, 2021, email chain between Mr. Chip Slaven and Mary Wall.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q If you'd like to take a peek at this email chain here. More specifically, the second email in the chain.

You'll see in an email to the NSBA, White House official Mary Wall stated: Is there any way we can take a look at the letter in advance of release? In specific, I'm meeting with colleagues from other White House offices and DOJ tomorrow morning to see if there might be any options we can pursue here, so if you have concrete recommendations in your letter -- e.g., the threat assessment you mentioned -- would be good to know so I can include in discussions.

Have you ever interacted with Mary Wall before?

A No. I don't know who Mary Wall is.

Q Did you take part in a discussion that, according to the email, occurred on the morning of September 22nd between the White House and DOJ?

A I don't recall.

BY [redacted]:

[redacted]. Do you know anyone that might have taken part in that conversation?

Mr. Peeples. No, I don't recall.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you take part in any discussions regarding threats and violence related to school boards before September 29th?

A No, I don't recall.

Q Are you familiar with the Attorney General's October 4th, 2021, memorandum regarding alleged threats and violence at local school board meetings?

A Yes.

[redacted]. I am now going to mark that memorandum as exhibit 3.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Now, what was your role in the FBI at this time?

A Assistant -- Deputy Assistant Director for the Criminal Division. I'm sorry. Acting Deputy Assistant Director for the Criminal Division.

Q And when did you learn of the AG's memo?

A I don't recall the exact date and time.

Q The committee has learned the discussions took place between DOJ and FBI the weekend prior to the release of the memo.

Did you take part in those discussions?

A No.

Q Are you aware of Timothy Langan's involvement?

A No.

Q Are you aware of Steve Jensen's involvement?

A No.

[redacted]. Do you know anyone who might have taken part in those discussions?

Mr. Peeples. No.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you have any involvement with drafting the memo?

A Which memo?

Q The Attorney General's memo.

A No.

Q Were you provided the opportunity to weigh in on the substance of it?

A No.

Q In the memo, the Attorney General required each U.S. Attorney's Office in conjunction with the FBI to hold meetings with local law enforcement partners in each judicial district.

What was the impetus behind involving these two entities, to your knowledge?

A Better question suited for the Attorney General.

Q Did you personally think it was appropriate for the FBI to be involved in a local law enforcement matter?

A I have no opinion either way.

Q Was there threat information to support the FBI getting involved in what is normally a local law enforcement matter?

A Again, I don't have an answer to that.

Q Did the FBI receive a request from local county or State law enforcement asking for assistance with this issue?

A I don't know.

Q Is that normally the case how this would work?

A I don't know.

Q To your knowledge, did any of these meetings that were set forth in this memo occur in the judicial district in which the FBI Headquarters is located?

A I don't know the answer to that.

Q Did anyone who worked for you attend these meetings?

A I don't know.

Q Are you aware that, after these meetings occurred, the U.S. Attorney's Office reported to Main Justice what they found?

A Again, I'm not aware of the meetings, so I'm not aware of any findings.

Q Would it surprise you to learn, though, that the reports back to Main Justice of school board-related violence or threats were almost nonexistent? In fact, the reports back to Main Justice showed that there were no legitimate nationwide law enforcement justification for the Attorney General's directive?

A I have no opinion either way.

Q In the press release accompanying the memo, it announced the creation of a task force consisting of representatives from the Department's Criminal Division, National Security Division, Civil Rights Division, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, the FBI, the Community Relations Service, and the Office of Justice Programs.

Did you have any involvement in drafting the press release?

A No.

[redacted]. I am going to mark that press release as exhibit 4.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know who was involved in drafting the press release?

A No.

Q Do you know who came up with the idea for a task force?

A No.

Q Do you know if the task force has actually ever been created?

A I do think there is a task force created because we assigned someone from the Criminal Investigative Division to it.

Q Would that person have been from headquarters or from a specific field office?

A It would have been from headquarters, the Violent Crimes Section.

Q Do you know if it has met yet?

A I do know they met once, and that's per following up with the individual that I assigned to attend.

Q And who was that individual?

A He was a unit chief over in the Violent Crimes Section.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know when the task force was created or met?

A I don't know the exact date, but it was sometime between October and December during my tenure as the Acting DAD.

Q Do you know if it's still in existence today, the task force?

A No, I don't know if it's still in existence.

Q Do you know how many times it met between October and December of 2021?

A No.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know generally who attends the meetings?

A No.

Q Do you know if the task force has made any recommendations, formal or informal?

A No.

Q So, to your knowledge, you know that it's met once, but it could be more?

A To my knowledge, through second party, I know that they met once.

Q Okay. Thank you.

Did you personally believe that the Attorney General's memo was appropriate?

A I have no opinion.

Q To your knowledge, did agents and/or employees in your office discuss their reaction to the memo?

A I don't recall.

Q Do you know if there was any general tone in reaction to the memo?

A Again, I have no opinion. I don't recall.

Q Were you involved in any conversations or correspondence related to how the FBI could help address alleged threats or violence at school board meetings?

A Yes.

Q Could you tell us a little bit about those discussions?

A Well, part of my job as the Acting Deputy Assistant Director is to provide guidance and direction to the field to address the criminal threats that we face as a whole, and that was what led to the memo that we drafted and I forwarded to all SACs with the approval of, at the time, AD Langan out of the Counterterrorism Division, and Acting Assistant Director Jay Greenberg, and later, Acting Assistant Director Calvin Shivers.

Q How many conversations did you have about this?

A I don't recall.

Q Were they in person or over the phone or in email?

A I don't recall.

Q Do you know when those conversations started?

A Not specifically.

BY [redacted]:

Q Is it fair to say they probably started after October 4th but prior to the email that you sent on the 20th of October, correct?

A Yes.

Q So it's probably, like, a 2-week timeframe.

Can you approximate how many conversations you had in that 2-week timeframe?

A No.

BY [redacted]:

Q Now, you mentioned before -- and I just want to make sure I've got it clear for the record and in my line of questions -- that you were the Acting Deputy Assistant Director for the Criminal Investigative Division.

How long? And what was that window, again, that you were in that role?

A From September to December of 2021.

Q And why were you selected for this position on an acting basis and not permanently? Just out of curiosity.

A Because I didn't apply for the job permanently.

Q Why were you awarded this job on an acting basis, then?

A That's something you'd have to ask the Acting Director who asked me to fill the position.

Q Who was that Director?

A Calvin Shivers was the Director.

Q Who preceded you in this role?

A I think they promoted Chad Yarbrough as the prior position for the Deputy Assistant Director of the Criminal Division.

Q Is he still in that role, to your knowledge?

A No. He's SAC of Dallas at this point.

Q Who was your supervisor while you were Acting DAD? Just refresh my memory.

A Acting AD Jay Greenberg.

[redacted]. As [redacted] indicated briefly a little bit ago that there was an email you had sent on Wednesday, October 20th, 2021, with the subject: Guidance: Threat to violence against school administrators, unclassified.

I'm going to mark that as exhibit 5 at this time.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you draft this email yourself?

A No. It was in coordination with Section Chief Steve Jensen and DAD Kevin Vorndran.

Q So it was the three of you that drafted this email?

A It was the three of us that came up with the language for the email, yes.

Q What was your involvement in the decisionmaking behind the threat tag EDUOFFICIALS mentioned in this email?

A In what aspect?

Q Was the tag your idea?

A No.

Q Whose was it?

A I think it was recommended to me by Steve Jensen.

BY [redacted]:

Q Was it Steve Jensen's idea for the email, or did that direction come from someone else?

A It was all of our direction -- all of our responsibility to provide guidance and direction from the field. So I can't recall specifically who suggested that we send out an email, but I'm sure I supported it since that's our responsibility.

Q So you don't know if it was, like, your direct supervisor or --

A I don't recall specifically.

Q It didn't come from Main Justice at all, the direction?

A No.

Q So it came from within the FBI?

A Yes.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you feel that this tag was necessary, personally?

A I have no opinion on it.

Q What information was used to justify the creation of this tag, to your knowledge?

A The whole idea of the tag is to scope the threat and the situation, where after we scope the threat, we can do a comprehensive analysis to determine the veracity of the threat if there is one.

Q Do you still feel like this tag is necessary?

A I don't have an opinion on that either. I'm not the Acting DAD in Criminal Division anymore.

Q Do your agents in Birmingham currently use this tag?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know if they ever used this tag before you started there?

A I've been there 3 months. I don't know.

Q Do you currently have open investigations into parents for incidents that would fall under the purview of the Attorney General's October 4th memo in the Birmingham area?

A I don't know.

Q When sending out this email, your email was listed as "INSD" and not "CID." Why is that, from a technical standpoint?

A Because I was temporarily assigned to the Criminal Investigative Division as the Acting DAD, but I'm still an INSD body, an inspector body. So until you accept a new position permanently, they're still utilizing the -- where your assigned email tag right now. Mine would say Birmingham --

Q Thank you for explaining that.

This email was cosigned by Assistant Director Timothy Langan of the Counterterrorism Division and Assistant Director Calvin A. Shivers of the Criminal Division.

You had mentioned he was the Acting Assistant Director of CID. Is that correct?

A No. Calvin is the actual --

Q Oh, he's the actual.

A -- Associate Director of the Criminal Division. Jay Greenberg was the Acting Associate Director of the Criminal Division. Calvin was out of country for a lot of that time period but returned shortly before I left.

Q Do you know what Mr. Shivers' role was in the decisionmaking process in creating the threat tag while he was out of the country?

A No.

Q What was Mr. Langan's role in the decisionmaking process in creating the threat tag?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know why they had you, as an Acting Deputy Assistant Director, send the email versus Mr. Langan or Mr. Shivers or Mr. Greenberg?

A Because it was in the responsibility as the Acting DAD to provide guidance and direction to the field.

Q So it was the norm for the Deputy Assistant Director to send these emails to the field with those others either signed off or copied?

A It's the norm for the Deputy Assistant Director for the Criminal Division to provide guidance and direction regarding criminal threats to the field. And, as you can see, this was a joint memo with both the Criminal Investigative Division and the Counterterrorism Division; hence both the signatures of and approval of Timothy Langan and Calvin Shivers, who lead both of those divisions.

Q So you mentioned Assistant Director Shivers was out of the office, out of the country.

Why -- what knowledge would he have had at the time to sign off on the email?

A That's something that you would have to cover with Acting AD Jay Greenberg. They were in constant communication. He was out for a medical issue. So they were discussing. So I don't know what his knowledge was.

Q So he would have been kept apprised of this information, though?

A I can't confirm or deny that.

Q Okay.

[redacted]. But he would have been kept apprised by Jay Greenberg?

Mr. Peeples. I can't confirm or deny that.

[redacted]. Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q And the email is also copying a Mr. Brian Cohen of CID.

Who is he?

A Brian works in our -- one of our units on CID. Oh, Brian is the DAD -- at the time, he was the DAD over our Intelligence Section.

Q Do you know what his involvement was in the creation of the threat tag EDUOFFICIALS?

A No.

Q And do you know if Mr. Greenberg had any involvement in the creation of the threat tag EDUOFFICIALS?

A Anything that I did was approved by Acting AD Greenberg.

Q Do you know if Mr. Greenberg had any involvement in that creation of the tag, though?

A I don't know.

Q Did you have any engagement on this threat tag from FBI employees to identify trends, strategies, and best practices?

A Did I have any engagement with --

Q FBI employees to identify trends, strategies, and best practices using this tag?

A I don't know what you mean by "engagement." Outside of sending the letter?

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you have any followup conversations after you sent this email with anyone on the FBI staff? You know, how to implement the email?

A Yes. As the Acting DAD, they hold quarterly meetings with assistant special agents in charge. That's over criminal threats out in the field. And this email came up just to provide guidance and direction to answer any questions that they may have.

Q So did one of those quarterly meetings follow the issuance of this email?

A It did.

Q Okay. And what did you discuss at the quarterly meeting regarding the email?

A The email.

Q Just the contents of the email?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever provide any specific guidance?

A No. The guidance and direction is already located in the email.

Q So whatever you talked about was within the confines of this email?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

[redacted] And you had mentioned you had a meeting.

Did you have multiple meetings regarding this topic?

Mr. Peeples. I only recall one. So, again, they occur monthly. I think I was gone sometime in December. So I don't recall having one in December.

[redacted]. Do you remember the date of that quarterly meeting or approximately?

Mr. Peeples. No. It would just be sometime in November.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you have any knowledge of or participate in any of the investigations that were labeled with the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag --

A No.

Q -- during your time as -- in CID?

A No.

Q Are you generally aware of cases in which the FBI used the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A No.

Q So then are you generally aware or unaware that the FBI opened at least 25 Guardian assessments using the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag?

A I'm not aware of the number.

Q Are you aware that several parents were investigated by the FBI for protected First Amendment activity from this threat tag?

A I have no opinion on that. I don't think we would have done that in terms of -- the purpose of this is to address the threat of violence or actual use of violence.

Q But knowing that that did happen for protected First Amendment activity, as an individual who signed this email, does this concern you?

A I have no opinion. The purpose of the email was for the threats or the actual use of violence.

Q But if you don't have an opinion on it now, would it concern you, as someone who was formerly the chief of the Civil Rights Unit of the FBI, that First Amendment-protected activity was violated for parents?

A The purpose of the email was to address the threat or the actual use of violence.

Q Given your civil rights background, does knowing that you could be investigated by the FBI for speaking up at your child's school board meeting chill parents from exercising their First Amendment rights?

A I have no opinion because I don't know the totality of the circumstances that you are speaking about.

Q Does the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag have any useful law enforcement purpose?

A The useful law enforcement purpose is outlined in the email to scope the threat and to assess it.

Q When Attorney General Garland issued his October 4th, 2021, memorandum, did you perceive threats or violence at school board meetings as a State and local law enforcement issue?

A I have no opinion.

Q Did you have one then?

A No.

Q During your career at the FBI, have you ever interacted with local law enforcement?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever get the impression that local law enforcement were ill-equipped to handle any disruptions that occurred at local school board meetings?

A I don't have an opinion of local law enforcement or State law enforcement's capabilities.

Q What did you believe was the Federal nexus that required the FBI to get involved at local school board meetings?

A That was the purpose of the -- of the email, to scope the threat. And I think it says it directly in the email: Is there a Federal nexus? And are there potential Federal violations that would be investigated and charged?

Q So you would investigate where you would open using the threat tag but not be sure whether there was a Federal nexus at the beginning of opening that assessment?

A That's the purpose of a Guardian. There's an FBI case management system for handling initial information for subjects or incidents related to all our programs, which this falls into the criminal and the counterterrorism program.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that, when field offices and U.S. attorney's offices reached out to local law enforcement, as required by the October 4th memorandum, that local officials generally opposed Federal intervention at local school board meetings?

A I have no opinion on that.

Q Given your civil rights background, do you believe that the FBI should be using counterterrorism resources to investigate parents for voicing their concerns at local school board meetings?

A I have no opinion on that.

Q Do you have reason to believe that the FBI is using and creating threat tags in a politicized way?

A No.

Q At the time, did you consider parents speaking out and advocating for their children at their local school board meetings to be First Amendment-protected activity?

A Not if it involves a threat and/or use of violence.

Q Were you aware of any circumstances where that actually happened, where there was threats and use of violence?

A I don't recall.

Q Do you consider that be First Amendment-protected activity now?

A Not if there's a threat or use of violence.

BY [redacted]:

Q But, if a parent is at a school board meeting expressing concerns about the mask mandate or, you know, the COVID policies -- if you recall, at the time that the email was sent around, it was a very volatile time regarding COVID-19 policies and things like that.

So, I mean, parents, I think, were just at school board meetings expressing concerns about their children's education. It also came at the heels of a hotly contested gubernatorial election here in Virginia.

So can you see how the use of this threat tag in the contents of school board meetings where parents are merely expressing First Amendment concerns about how their children are receiving education in schools might give people pause that this is targeting protected First Amendment activity?

A Not if it involves a threat or use of violence.

Q Sure. But sometimes these parents -- they're literally just stating their opinion, right? Trying to direct the curriculum that their children are receiving at these schools.

A Are you asking me to speak as a parent that was in that meeting?

Q No.

A Okay. So my question -- the answer to your question is not if it involves a threat or use of violence.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Can you explain the FBI's process in determining whether something is First Amendment-protected activity or not when deciding to open an investigation?

A We have DIOG requirements in terms of opening a Guardian or a preliminary or full investigation, and all those things are taken into consideration before approval of opening any type of investigation.

Q And how long would that process take?

A It depends on the -- when the information is received and assessed.

Q To your knowledge, did the FBI ever consider any parents who advocated for their children at school board meetings to be lone actors or small cells that the FBI needed to focus on for potential acts of terrorism?

A Not that I'm aware.

Q In your opinion, were a lot of resources, like agents or time, shifted towards local school board meetings after the Attorney General's October 4th memo was published?

A I can't speak to how resources were moved in the field.

Q Not within the Criminal Division?

A No. No one moved in the Criminal Division during September through December of 2021.

BY [redacted]:

Q Before we move on, I just have a few more questions about the email.

So you mentioned that it was Mr. Jensen and Mr. Vorndran and yourself that created the contents of this email, correct?

A Correct.

Q Who took the first pen in drafting the email?

A Do you mean in terms of sending it out?

Q Who took the first draft in drafting the contents of the email?

A I don't recall who took the first draft.

Q Okay. Was it a collaborative process amongst the three drafting the email?

A Yes.

Q Prior to this email being sent out, did it have to go up a chain for approval? A supervisor?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And, again, who was your supervisor at the time? Mr. Greenberg?

A Yes.

Q Okay. What was that approval process like for this email?

A What do you mean, what was it like?

Q Prior to sending out the email, you said that it went to Mr. Greenberg for his approval?

A It goes out to Acting AD Greenberg, and he assesses it, reviews it, and decides and approves of the language, yes or no.

Q Okay. And did he have any suggestions to the contents of the email prior to it being sent out?

A I don't recall.

Q Okay. Did anyone else besides Mr. Greenberg review the email?

A I'm assuming the counterterrorism supervisory, whether it's Steve Jensen, Kevin Vorndran, or AD Langan, would also review the email.

Q Do you know if they had any specific suggestions to the content of the email?

A No.

[redacted]. Did anybody else at DOJ review this email before it went out?

Mr. Peeples. I don't know.

BY [redacted]:

Q Just to go over the timeline, Attorney General Garland issued his memorandum on October 4th, and then this email was sent on October 20th.

And you previously -- my colleague -- in exhibit 1, I'm turning to, is a letter from the NSBA, and that's dated September 29th, 2021. So there was about a 5-day period prior to the NSBA sending this letter to the President and then the issuance of the Attorney General's memorandum.

Were you involved in any conversations between September 29th and October 4th regarding the Attorney General's memorandum?

A No.

Q And then, after the memorandum was issued on October 4th, in between that and the issuance of the email October 20th, do you recall when you became aware of this letter from the NSBA?

A No.

Q Okay. And I believe you testified about this earlier, but I just want to seek clarification.

Did you review this letter prior to writing the email that was sent on October 20th?

A I don't recall.

Q Okay. So you don't recall the contents of the letter or what was in it?

A No.

Q Okay. Do you know if the Attorney General -- what he reviewed or what, you know, data inputs he considered prior to issuing that October 4th, 2021, memorandum?

A That's a question for the Attorney General.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q What material and contents did you use and go off of in drafting the email on October 20th? If you think you may or may not have reviewed the NSBA's letter.

A I guess this would be exhibit 3 that you forwarded me, the letter from the Attorney General's Office.

Q That's what you reviewed before drafting the email in exhibit 5?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall if there is anything else you reviewed?

A No.

BY [redacted]:

Q Were you aware of any information that the FBI had regarding whether there had been an uptick in school board related-incidences?

A I don't recall.

Q You've been in the FBI for a long time.

How often does the Attorney General issue a memorandum like the October 4th one?

A Although I've been at the FBI for a long time, I haven't been in the position to the determine or assess how often the Attorney General issues memorandums.

Q Okay. So you don't recall the last time he issued a memorandum like this?

A I don't recall where I've been in the chain of command where I've received a memorandum prior to this one.

Q Or that you've been aware of?

A Yep.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. Switching gears.

Are you familiar with how the FBI classifies or categorizes investigations?

A Yes.

Q Can you explain to me your understanding and knowledge of how they classify or categorize investigations?

A In what aspect?

Q Within a case, whether it's criminal or counterterrorism, domestic violence, extremism cases.

A You look at the facts that are brought in by a complaint or that we receive, and you assess which threat that it addresses, and then it's assigned to that particular threat.

Q At what stage in the investigation are cases given an investigative case classification?

A At the very beginning where they get a Guardian or a preliminary or full investigation, which has a potential classification number associated with it.

Q Can a case fall under more than one classification?

A Initially, yes.

Q And who is responsible for determining and applying an investigative case classification or category?

A The management personnel in the field.

Q What would that title be?

A It can be anywhere from the supervisory special agent to the assistant special agent in charge.

Q Does the field agent working that case assist in making that determination?

A Yes.

Q Is there any input provided by division heads or headquarters officials?

A It's a field case.

Q So headquarters has no involvement in classifying?

A I'm not aware of headquarters having direct involvement, but it's a -- primarily a field responsibility. So, if they do, I'm not aware of it.

Q During your tenure as Acting DAD of the Criminal Investigative Division, what role did you have in classifying cases? You said that you might not have had any role in that, or did you?

A It's a field responsibility.

Q Did you have any role in classifying cases as an inspector in the Inspection Division at headquarters?

A No.

Q How often are cases reclassified from one category to another?

A That's a question -- I can't answer how often cases are classified.

Q Best guess or estimate?

A I don't have one.

Q Do certain criteria have to be met for a case to be reclassified?

A I would assume so. We have a domestic operations guide. So I would assume there are policies and procedures that would address the reclassification of cases.

Q Now, as you mentioned -- and also the FBI contends -- that case classifications can only change if supported by the facts and circumstances of the investigation.

Is that true in practice, from your experience?

A I don't know what you're referencing.

Q That a case classification can only change if facts support that certain change or the circumstances of the investigation evolve.

Would that be true in practice?

A Are you telling me this, or are you asking me?

Q I'm asking you.

A And I don't know what you're referencing.

Q The FBI has contended to us that the case classification can only change if supported by the facts and circumstances of the investigation.

A So whoever represented that to you would probably be the best person to answer that question.

Q But would it be true in practice, from your background?

A Whoever represented it to you would probably be the best person to answer that question.

Q Who makes the determination to reclassify in the field?

A I don't know. I'd have to assess and read the DIOG to make that determination.

Q In your current role as Birmingham special agent in charge, would you have a role in determining the reclassification of a case?

A No. That's for my assistant special agents in charge and supervisors to make that determination.

Q Are you familiar with domestic violent extremism investigations at the FBI?

A Yes.

Q Have you worked on DVE cases while at the FBI?

A Directly, no.

Q But indirectly you have?

A I've been a supervisor over cases that involve a threat.

Q How long were you in that role?

A For 6 years as a supervisor in the Atlanta division.

Q What criteria must be met in order for an investigation to be classified as such, to your knowledge?

A I don't have that specific guidance in front of me right now to answer that question directly or correctly.

Q According to the FBI, the opening of a full investigation must be approved by a supervisory special agent and notice must be given to the headquarters unit within 15 days.

As the Acting DAD of the Criminal Investigative Division, would you receive notice for every full DVE investigation that was open?

A No, because a DVE is not a criminal investigation.

Q Is it counterterrorism?

A It's a counterterrorism investigation.

Q And you never had any experience in that division?

A Not directly.

Q Are you familiar with the letter that Representative Jordan sent to the FBI Director Wray on July 27th of 2022 regarding protected whistleblower disclosures related to the FBI's handling of DVE case classifications?

A No.

[redacted]. I am going to mark that letter as exhibit 6.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q We can take a moment and look at this exhibit.

Specifically, at the top of page 2, the letter states: New whistle-blower disclosures made by multiple FBI employees from different field offices indicate that the Biden administration's narrative may be misleading. We have received accusations that FBI agents are bolstering the number of cases to DVEs to satisfy their superiors. For example, one whistleblower explained that, because agents are not finding enough DVE cases, they are encouraged and incentivized to reclassify cases as DVE cases even though there is minimal circumstantial evidence to support the reclassification.

Are you aware of these allegations?

A No.

Q Are you aware that, according to the FBI's counterterrorism policy guide, agents are required to open one case per subject?

A No.

Q Do you know how the counterterrorism policy guide would compare to the DIOG?

A No.

Q For noncounterterrorism investigations, is the policy still one case for subject, or can you have one case with multiple subjects?

A I didn't know there was a policy for either.

[redacted]. What do you typically do in your practice?

Mr. Peeples. What's your question?

[redacted]. Do you have one case, one subject?

Mr. Peeples. There could be one case with multiple subjects.

BY [redacted]:

Q In your experience as the special agent in charge of the Birmingham Field Office, do agents know when to follow the DIOG for an investigation or the counterterrorism policy guide?

A Are you asking me to speak for agents? I can't speak for agents. I know I know how to follow the DIOG and the policy guide.

Q Do you know if your agents receive that training to know the difference?

A I don't know.

Q To your knowledge, do you know if this is how the Bureau handled domestic terrorism investigations during the 2020 riots?

A I can't speak for the FBI in its entirety regarding the 2020 riots.

Q Are you aware of any instances where a case was reclassified even if there was insufficient facts and circumstances to support the new reclassification?

A No.

Q Are you aware of any instances during your tenure at the FBI where an agent was pressured to bolster the number of case classifications by reclassifying a case?

A No.

Q We have been told about a practice at the FBI that several agents have referred to as "papering the file" to keep a case open.

Are you aware of this practice?

A No.

Q Agents have said that, even when they have taken all logical investigative steps and there is no indication that there is a Federal crime occurring and they cannot justify keeping the case open, they sometimes get pushback from headquarters or their chain of chain of command to keep the case open, so they paper the file.

Are you aware that agents feel pressured by headquarters to keep certain types of cases open, and in order to do so, they paper the file every 90 days to keep the case open?

A No.

Q It was described to us as a common practice.

As a senior leader in the FBI, can you describe for us the law enforcement utility of keeping a file open by papering it every 90 days?

A I'm not aware of the practice, so I can't describe the -- what you're asking.

Q Can you describe how the FBI knows to keep the case file open? How often do they check on it or provide additional documents to it?

A Supervisors have to do file reviews for each case every 90 days. But, in terms of what you're asking, I'm not aware of the practice, so I can't elaborate on your question any further.

Q Have you been someone in that supervisory position to go and review the case files?

A Yes.

BY [redacted]:

Q What does a case file review usually entail?

A What specifically are you asking?

Q When you do a 90-day file review.

A You're referring to all aspects of a case from opening into any procedures that is taking place?

Q Is there paperwork associated with it?

A Yes.

[redacted]. Other than paperwork, does that also include meetings with the agents assigned to the case?

Mr. Peeples. It does at some point in time during the midyear and end-of-the-year reviews.

[redacted]. Would that be review of the cases or of the agents?

Mr. Peeples. Both.

[redacted]. During that review, do you ever make a decision to close a file?

Mr. Peeples. If we assess that all the investigative activity has been completed, then, yes, we will recommend the case be closed.

[redacted]. And when you've been in this supervisory position to review these files, roughly how many agents have you met with?

Mr. Peeples. I don't know that number.

[redacted]. But you would meet with them in the mid- and end-of-year review? Is that right? Or is that during the 90-day time period when you would do the file review?

Mr. Peeples. You do the file reviews every 90 days, and you can assess if a case needs to be closed. And that means you have an individual conversation with that particular agent to ask them what steps are necessary to move forward, and you can have those conversations.

But we have midyear and end-of-year evaluations, and part of that is taking a look at their cases and providing guidance and direction on how to move forward on them.

[11:01 a.m.]

[redacted]. Counsel, just for Mr. Peeples' clarity, can you specify who or what division from the FBI made these representations for you? Is this whistleblower testimony? Because it's hard for Mr. Peeples to respond to these allegations related to policy in a vacuum without the excerpts of the DIOG in front of him.

[redacted]. I can say based on just information that we've got from letters we've sent to the FBI as well as from whistleblower sources.

[redacted]. Just for purpose of the record, I would like to flag that Mr. Peeples has not reviewed those letters from Mr. Jordan.

[redacted]. One is in front of him.

[redacted]. Yes, one of them is in front of Mr. Peeples.

If you'd like to take a moment, we can take a break if you'd like to review it.

Mr. Peeples. I'm fine. Go ahead.

BY [redacted]:

Q Now, other than the 90-day file review that you would do on each of these cases, did you generally feel like you had insight into the cases your direct reports were working on at any given moment in time?

A Depending on what role I was in.

Q As the special agent in charge of the Birmingham Field Office, do you perceive that you have a handle on what the field office is doing in the cases in Birmingham?

A I have a handle on my primary job responsibilities.

Q Has any agent in your field office expressed to you that they're under pressure?

A No.

[redacted]. We'll go off the record. We can switch now.

[Recess.]

[redacted]. It is 11:18, and we are now on the record.

Good afternoon, Mr. Peeples. How are you doing today?

Mr. Peeples. Good afternoon.

[redacted]. So thank you so much for being here today, first. And, second, thank you for your 25 years of service in the FBI.

So, as I mentioned earlier, my name is [redacted], and I am Democratic counsel for the House Judiciary Committee. I'm going to be asking you some questions with respect to some of the issues that the majority has brought up, in addition to some other topics that I want to go over with you.

Does that sound good?

Mr. Peeples. Okay.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q So, before we start off, I do want to correct the record with respect to some things that [redacted] said earlier.

And so, earlier, counsel said that the FBI conducted investigations of parents based solely on First Amendment activities. I'd like to clarify for the record that no evidence supports that assertion and it's mere speculation.

Second, earlier, [redacted] asked if your division in Birmingham is investigating parents. I want to clarify that the FBI doesn't target people, right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So, if an individual is of interest to the FBI, it's because they've either committed a potential Federal crime or they are a threat to national security, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Thank you.

And so, Mr. Peeples, are you familiar with the DIOG?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And it also goes by "Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide."

So is it correct that the DIOG applies to all FBI employees?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And the DIOG applies to all domestic investigative activities, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And it also applies to all domestic intelligence collection activities?

A I mean, I would have to confirm that. I'm really not an intelligence person. But I do know that it applies to our investigative activities.

Q Okay. And so is the purpose of the DIOG meant to ensure that there is consistency across the FBI with respect to the different divisions and sections that are conducting work at the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And so I want to introduce an excerpt of Section 2.2 of the DIOG, and I will be marking this as exhibit 7.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And this goes through each of the four investigative authorities of the FBI. And so I just want to briefly touch on some of those.

Okay. So, in Section 2.2.1, it's titled "Conduct Investigations and Collect Intelligence and Evidence." If you can just review the highlighted language and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Okay.

Q And so what's your understanding of this section?

A In what aspect?

Q Just how it relates to the FBI's ability to conduct investigations and collect intelligence.

A I mean, I don't understand your question when you say what's my understanding.

Q Yeah. So this section talks about the authority of the FBI to conduct investigations and collect intelligence. And so my question is, what is your understanding of the FBI's ability? Are they able to collect intelligence in order to detect or obtain information about and prevent crime? What is the FBI essentially doing when they're conducting this sort of collection?

A I mean, it states it in the document that you provided me. The FBI is authorized to collect intelligence and to conduct investigations to detect, obtain information about.

Q Okay, perfect. So you have no reason to disagree with this as written?

A No.

Q Okay.

And so I want to now look at Section 2.2.2, which is "Provide Investigative Assistance."

And so this section discusses that the FBI is authorized to provide investigative assistance to other Federal, State, local, or Tribal agencies and foreign agencies as provided in Section 12 of the DIOG.

And I will submit for the record that Section 12 of the DIOG goes over the ability of the FBI to work in conjunction with State and local partners and also provide them with investigative assistance.

And so, based on your reading of this highlighted language, is it correct that the FBI can provide investigative assistance to State and local partners?

A I haven't reviewed Section 12 to corroborate that that's accurate. But based off of what you've told me, the FBI is authorized to provide investigative assistance to other Federal, State, and local or Tribal agencies. And if Section 12 refers to that, then yes.

Q And so, based on your experience in the FBI, is it important that State and local partners, in addition to the FBI, can work together?

A Yes.

Q And why is that important?

A We may share threats of commonality across boundaries or lines. So, yes, if there's an opportunity for us to work and address the threats together, it's important to do so.

Q Thank you.

And so, in Section 2.2.3, which is the next section, it's called "Conduct Intelligence Analysis and Planning." And so this section discusses the ability of the FBI to conduct intelligence analysis and planning, and it refers to Section 15 of the DIOG.

And I will submit that Section 15 of the DIOG, in quotation marks, "authorizes the FBI to engage in intelligence analysis and planning to facilitate and support investigative activities and other authorized activities." And this also applies to State and local partners.

Do you have any reason to disagree with what I just read about this section?

A No.

Q Okay.

And then the last portion is Section 2.2.4, and this is the fourth general authority of the FBI, which relates to information-sharing. And this section discusses the ability of the FBI to retain and share information obtained as provided in Sections 12 and 14 of the DIOG.

I will submit for the record that Section 12 of the DIOG goes over the ability of the FBI to work together with State and local partners.

And so is it important for the FBI to be able to retain and share information with State and local partners?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And is that because of some of the reasons you listed earlier about the importance of being able to kind of collaborate on threats?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Thank you.

And so I now want to touch on the FBI's core values. And so I want to hand you what's going to be marked as exhibit 8. And this is an excerpt from Section 3.1 of the DIOG which goes over the core values of the FBI.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. So, in Sections A through H, it states that the core values of the FBI are: rigorous obedience to the Constitution of the United States; respect for the dignity of all those we protect; compassion; fairness; uncompromising personal integrity and institutional integrity; accountability by accepting responsibility for our actions and decisions and their consequences; leadership by example, both personal and professional; and diversity.

Do you agree with these core values?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so, as someone with 25 years of experience in the FBI, do you believe that these core values are, as quoted, "fully understood, practiced, shared, vigorously defended, and preserved" at the FBI?

A I can't speak to the FBI as a whole. I can only speak to my belief in the core values.

Q Okay.

And so you'll see that the second sentence of the next paragraph states the following: "Our individual and institutional rigorous obedience to constitutional principles and guarantees is more important than the outcome of any single interview, search for evidence, or investigation."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And what do you understand this sentence to mean?

A Exactly what it states. I mean, it's more important that we abide by the Constitution than any single investigation or search for evidence may provide.

Q Thank you.

And so I want to look at the next highlighted language, which says that -- this is the last paragraph.

It says, "We who enforce the law must not merely obey it. We have an obligation to set a moral example that those whom we protect can follow. Because the FBI's success in accomplishing its mission is directly related to the support and cooperation of those we protect, these core values are the fiber that holds together the vitality of our institution."

Do you agree that these core values that we just went over in list A through H are, quotation marks, "the fiber that holds," quotation mark, the FBI together?

A You're asking me to speak to an institution. I can't speak to an institution. I can speak to the oath that I took.

Q Uh-huh.

A And these core values are part of that for me. So I can speak to my core values.

Q Okay.

A I can't speak for an entire institution.

Q Yeah. No, that's fair. So, in your opinion, it is the fiber that holds together the FBI, based on your experience in the FBI itself, but you're not speaking on behalf of the FBI; you're just speaking to your own experience.

A I don't have an opinion either way.

Q Okay.

So I now want to switch gears a little bit and talk about the FBI's commitment to First Amendment protections.

And so, in a letter that the FBI's Acting Assistant Director for Congressional Affairs sent to Jim Jordan on March 1, 2023 -- and I will enter that as an exhibit. This will be exhibit 9.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. And if you can just take a moment to look over this letter and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A I'm ready.

Q So I want to look, in particular, at the third paragraph on page 1. And, in particular, it states in the first sentence, "The FBI cannot and does not investigate groups or individuals based solely on the exercise of First Amendment activity. Consistent with our mission, the FBI holds sacred the rights of individuals to peacefully exercise their First Amendment freedoms."

Do you agree with that statement?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so, in your opinion, do you think the FBI takes First Amendment protection seriously?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And so, earlier, the majority counsel brought up Attorney General Garland's October 4th memorandum, which was identified as exhibit 3. If you can just pull that up, if you have that handy.

So, in the first hour, you had mentioned that this was one of the documents that you consulted with when you and some of the other individuals at the FBI drafted the October 20, 2021, email. And so, for our purposes, I just want to go a little bit through this October 4th memorandum.

And so you'll see the title of the memorandum, which is to the right of "Subject." Do you mind reading that title out loud?

A The title in this letter dated October the 4th states, "Partnership Among Federal, State, Local, Tribal, and Territorial Law Enforcement to Address Threats Against School Administrators, Board Members, Teachers, and Staff."

Q Thank you very much. Does this title say anything about parents at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay. Does it say anything about preventing forms of speech?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from going to school board meetings or attending or speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay. Thank you.

So I now want to move on to the first paragraph of this October 4th memorandum. Can you just take a moment to review it and let me know when you're ready to proceed?

A All right.

Q Okay. So you'll see that the first sentence of this paragraph underscores the issue of "harassment, intimidation, and threats of violence against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff," correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

And in the last sentence of this paragraph, it notes that, "While spirited debate about policy matters is protected under our Constitution, that protection does not extend to threats of violence or efforts to intimidate individuals based on their views."

Do you understand AG Garland to be referencing the First Amendment protections here?

A I don't want to pretend to speak or try to understand what AG Garland meant. So, if it's not specifically mentioned here, then it's hard for me to say that.

Q Okay. But, based on the reading that it says "spirited debate about policy matters is protected under our Constitution," you understand that to be a right that is protected under the Constitution that he's discussing?

A I understand free speech is a right that's protected.

Q Thank you.

And so, in this first paragraph, is there any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay. And does the first paragraph say anything about preventing parents from attending or speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

And so I want to look at the second paragraph. You can take a quick moment to review that, and let me know when you're finished.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So this paragraph states that threats against public servants are illegal and emphasizes that school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff should be able to do their work without fear for their safety.

In your opinion, are threats against public servants something that should be taken seriously?

A Yes.

Q And why is that?

A Because it's a threat.

Q And it could potentially endanger someone's life or put them in harm's way. Is that correct?

A Because it's a threat, yes.

Q Thank you.

And so does the second paragraph make any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from attending or speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

So I want to look at the third paragraph here. Can you take a moment to review that and let me know when you're finished?

A Okay.

Q Okay. And so the first sentence of this paragraph states, "The Department takes these incidents seriously and is committed to using its authority and resources to discourage these threats, identify them when they occur, and prosecute them when appropriate."

Do you understand the phrase "when appropriate" to mean in the proper circumstance?

A When it crosses the threshold for prosecution. Yes, in the proper circumstance.

Q Yeah. So this sentence is not saying that the Justice Department will prosecute every case relating to this matter; rather, only those that cross the threshold and reach that level of being worthy of being prosecuted.

A Is there a question?

Q Is that correct?

A Can you repeat the question again?

Q Yeah. So this sentence is not saying that the Justice Department is going to prosecute every single case that relates to this matter; rather, it will be only those cases that cross the threshold to be federally prosecuted.

A This letter states that it takes the incidents seriously and is committed to using its authority and resources to discourage these threats, identify them when they occur, and prosecute them when they're appropriate -- when appropriate.

Q So does the third paragraph make any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from speaking at or attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

Now I'd like to move on to the fourth paragraph, if you can review that and let me know when you're ready.

A Okay.

Q So, here, AG Garland is directing the FBI, working together with each U.S. attorney's office, to meet with Federal, State, local, Tribal, and territorial leaders in each Federal jurisdiction.

The stated purpose of these meetings is to facilitate the discussion of strategies for addressing threats against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff and to open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response.

What do you understand the phrase "open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response" to mean as it relates to State, local, Tribal, and territorial leaders?

A It's to open lines of communication to address any threats or the use of violence.

Q And so is that a way in which State and local partners, as well as Federal partners, can work together in order to kind of assess what is going on with respect to threats against school officials?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And so, as we previously talked, it is common for the FBI to work together with State and local partners, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Does the fourth paragraph make any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from speaking at or attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

And so the memorandum finishes off with the following sentence: "The Department is steadfast in its commitment to protect all people in the United States from violence, threats of violence, and other forms of intimidation and harassment."

Why is it important to protect people from violence, threats of violence, and other forms of intimidation and harassment?

A It's our responsibility.

Q Does this sentence use the word "parents" or "school boards"?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

So I'd also like to go over the press release that was discussed earlier, and it was identified as exhibit 4, if you can pull that out and let me know when it's in front of you.

You can just let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A I'm ready.

Q Okay. So the title of this press release is "Justice Department Addresses Violent Threats Against School Officials and Teachers."

Does this title say anything about parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay. Does it say anything about preventing parents from going to or speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

Can you take a look at the first paragraph and let me know when you're done?

A Okay.

Q Does the first paragraph make any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does it say anything about preventing parents from speaking at or attending school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

Now, can you look at the second and third paragraph and let me know when you're finished?

A Okay.

Q Does the second or third paragraph make any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the second or third paragraph say anything about preventing parents from attending or speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

Can you review the fourth and fifth paragraph and let me know when you're ready to proceed?

A Okay.

Q Does the fourth or fifth paragraph make any reference to parents or school board meetings?

A No.

Q Does the fourth or fifth paragraph say anything about preventing parents from attending or speaking at school board meetings?

A No.

Q Okay.

So the fifth paragraph does provide the public with information about reporting tips through the FBI's National Threat Operations Center via its national tip line, which is 1-800-CALL-FBI, and online through the website, the FBI website, which is fbi.gov/tips.

In your experience, does the FBI try to make it widely known that citizens can reach out to both 1-800-CALL-FBI and fbi.gov/tips in order to provide information to the FBI?

A I think both of these avenues are widely publicized on our internet sites.

Q And, in your opinion, why is it the case that you think both of these, the website and the number, are widely publicized?

A To report any crimes of violence.

Q And so is it important for the FBI to be able to get information from the public with respect to incidents that occur?

A Yes. Not only from the public, but from law enforcement, private sector.

Q And so I want to switch gears a little bit and talk about what was referenced in that fifth paragraph, which is the FBI's National Threat Operations Center.

Are you familiar with NTOC, which is what it's sometimes referred to as?

A Yeah. Yes, I'm familiar with it.

Q Okay. And is it accurate that individuals that work at NTOC, they work 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year?

A I mean, I would have to look at their -- I'm not familiar with their --

Q That's fine.

A -- setup in terms of work hours.

Q So, in a 2020 report released by the DOJ Office of Privacy and Civil Liberties that's titled "Federal Bureau of Investigation Privacy Impact Assessment for Threat Intake Processing System," it discusses NTOC and some of the procedures behind the employees' workflow.

And so, in a section of the report, it defines the purpose of NTOC, stating that it serves as a central intake point in the FBI for the general public and other government agencies to provide information about potential or ongoing crimes, threats to life, and national security threats.

Is this an accurate description of your understanding of NTOC's purpose?

A Yes.

Q Can you describe, in your opinion, how NTOC serves as a central intake point for the FBI?

A I don't want to -- I'm not in a position to speak about NTOC and their responsibilities --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and roles. I understand the general purpose of NTOC, which we just covered. So to go any more in depth than that, I don't think it's appropriate for me to answer that question.

Q That's fine.

In your experience, whether it was when you were in the field as a special agent -- have you ever used tips that came in through NTOC to open an assessment or a Guardian or look further into a matter?

A Me personally?

Q Uh-huh.

A No.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q As a supervisor of case agents, for example, in your role as special agent in charge or in your earlier roles, you know, did you see tips come in through NTOC that were useful for your case agents' cases?

A As the SAC of Birmingham, I am on a line addressed if we get any NTOC assessments that come through. So I am on that receiving line.

Q And would you say that tips from the public received through NTOC, for example, or through other means are helpful for your agents in pursuing investigations?

A I think they're the starting point to pursuing investigations.

Q Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q So I know we briefly talked about assessment and Guardians in the first hour, and so I want to dig a little bit more into that process, in addition to the other investigative processes at the FBI, which I understand to be preliminary investigations and full investigations.

But before we dig into that, Section 4.4 of the DIOG requires FBI employees to use the least intrusive means or methods possible to obtain intelligence or evidence.

Are you familiar with the "least intrusive means or methods"?

A Yes.

Q And can you describe what that means?

A Exactly what it states. We would use the least intrusive investigative method to address the threat.

Q Okay. And so does this apply to assessments, preliminary investigations, and full investigations?

A It applies to all investigations.

Q Okay.

And so I want to introduce an excerpt of Section 5 of the DIOG titled "Assessments," which I will be marking as exhibit 10.

[Peeples Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And if you can just take a moment to review this section and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Yeah, I'm ready.

Q Okay. And so, according to Section 5.1 of the DIOG, "Assessments may be carried out to detect, obtain information about, or prevent or protect against Federal crimes or threats to the national security or to collect foreign intelligence."

Is this consistent with your understanding of the purpose of assessments?

A Yes.

Q And you spoke about this briefly in the first hour: Who has authority to carry out assessments?

A In what capacity? In what role?

Q Yeah. So let's say a tip comes in through NTOC and the information contained within it is something that needs to be looked further into, so an agent wants to open an assessment or a supervisor wants to open an assessment.

So my question is, who has the authority to go forward and open that assessment? Is it the field agent? Is it the supervisor? Is it someone else at the FBI?

A An agent can present the assessment to the supervisor. The supervisor is the --

Q Okay. So the --

A -- approving authority for it.

Q Okay. So the supervisor would act as an approving authority for the assessment to then be taken.

A Correct.

Q Okay. So it's not the case that an individual can just decide on their own that they want to go forward with an assessment; it has to go through an approval process.

A An approval process, yes.

Q Okay.

And is it correct that assessments cannot be based solely on First Amendment activity?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Are you aware of how long assessments can stay open?

A Not without reviewing the current -- it's not something that's in my purview right now.

Q Do you know how assessments are closed?

A Again, it would be closed through supervisor approval.

Q Okay. And if an assessment is closed, do you know what happens to the information that's contained within that assessment?

A No, not directly.

Q Okay.

And based on your experience when you were the former Acting Assistant Director of the Criminal Investigative Division, did anything about the AG's October 4, 2021, memorandum change anything about the way in which assessments are conducted?

A No.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did anything about the Attorney General's October 4, 2021, memo change anything about the predication needed to open an assessment?

A No.

Q Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. So I now want to go into preliminary investigations. And so I want to hand you what's going to be marked as exhibit No. 11, and this will be an excerpt from Section 6 of the DIOG, titled "Preliminary Investigations."

[Peeples Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And if you can just take a moment to look this over and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So, if you can turn to Section 6.5, which is just on the third page, it states -- this is predication for an assessment. It states that, "A Preliminary" -- or, a preliminary investigation. Excuse me.

"A Preliminary Investigation may be opened on the basis of 'information or an allegation' indicating the existence of circumstances" as described in subparts A and B.

And so subpart A states the following: "An activity constituting a federal crime or a threat to the national security has or may have occurred, is or may be occurring, or will or may occur and the investigation may obtain information or intelligence relating to the activity or the involvement or role of an individual, group, or organization in such activity."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And then I want to also read subpart B. And so this is another circumstance in which a preliminary investigation may be opened.

"An individual, group, organization, entity, information, property, or activity is or may be a target of attack, victimization, acquisition, infiltration, or recruitment in connection with criminal activity in violation of federal law or a threat to the national security and the investigation may obtain information or intelligence that would help to protect against such activity or threat."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So my understanding of these prongs is that a preliminary investigation can be opened based on potential Federal crimes or potential national security threats. Is that correct?

A I mean, that's your understanding. I mean, to me, I will just go by what's here on the DIOG sheet of why and the basis of opening a preliminary investigation.

Q Okay. So you have no reason to disagree with subparts A or B as to when a preliminary investigation can be opened?

A No.

Q Okay.

And so you talked briefly about this in the first hour when you were talking about case file review. So is it correct that a preliminary investigation has to be reviewed every 90 calendar days?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And why is that the case?

A To ensure we're providing appropriate guidance and direction in the case.

Q And are you aware of the process for closing a preliminary investigation?

A In what aspect?

Q So, if a preliminary investigation has been opened, it's been looked into, and decided to not proceed forward, and so now the preliminary investigation needs to be closed out, is there a particular process that's in place to close the preliminary investigation? Does it have to go through levels of supervisor approval? Does it have to be, like, overviewed by someone else?

A It has to go through levels of supervisor approval.

Q Okay. Do you know how many levels of approval?

A Not specifically. I think it may depend on the type of investigation that may have been opened.

Q Okay. And when a preliminary investigation is closed, do you know what happens to the information that was contained within that preliminary investigation file?

A No, not specifically.

Q Okay.

And based on your time as the Acting Assistant Deputy Director of the Criminal Investigation Division, did the AG's October 4, 2021, memorandum change anything about the way in which preliminary investigations are conducted?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay. Did it change anything about the level of predication that's required for opening a preliminary investigation?

A No, not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay.

And so I now want to go on to full investigations. And so I'm handing you what's going to be marked as exhibit 12, and this is an excerpt from Section 7 of the DIOG, titled "Full Investigations."

[Peeples Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And if you can just take a moment to look it over and let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A Okay.

Q Do you know when a full investigation can be opened?

A According to Section 7.2 of this DIOG, "A Full Investigation may be opened to detect, obtain information about, or prevent or protect against federal crimes or threats to the national security or to collect foreign intelligence."

Q Thank you.

In Section 7.5, which is on the third page, it says under "Predication," "A Full Investigation may be opened if there is an 'articulable factual basis' that reasonably indicates one of the following circumstances." Then it goes on to describe parts A, B, and C.

Do you know what an articulable factual basis is?

A Yes, I understand what articulable factual basis is.

Q Okay. And can you just briefly describe what it is?

A It's the ability to be able to assess the fact pattern and determine if it meets the threshold to open a full investigation.

Q Okay. And so is there an approval process for opening a full investigation?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And can you describe what that is?

A Again, it will start at a supervisory level, and it may have multiple approval levels, depending on the type of investigation.

Q Okay. And is it similar to the preliminary investigation, that it has to be reviewed every 90 calendar days?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And are you aware of the process for closing a full investigation?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And can you describe that?

A Similar. Will require a supervisory level. May be multilevel approvals required to close an investigation.

Q And if a full investigation is closed, do you know what happens to the information that's collected as part of that investigation?

A I think you've asked me that question three times about records. And I think the appropriate people to address the records and where they go would be from our records personnel. So how they are stored --

Q Okay.

A -- at the completion of investigations would be probably appropriate for them to answer.

Q Okay.

And in your experience as the Acting Assistant Deputy Director of the Criminal Investigative Division, did the AG's October 4, 2021, memorandum change anything about the way in which full investigations are conducted?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay. Did it change anything about the level of predication required for opening a full investigation?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Real quick, on the -- we discussed threat tags earlier. Do you recall that?

A Uh-huh.

Q The threat tags are primarily for internal FBI use only, correct?

A I can't speak to their full usage. So --

Q In your experience, does the FBI publicize when it's created a threat tag?

A I'm not aware --

Q Your email --

A -- if they --

Q Oh, go ahead.

A I'm not aware if they've done that.

Q The email that you referenced -- what was it? Exhibit 5. This email was sent -- it's exhibit 5. This email was directed only to internal FBI employees, correct?

A Correct.

Q So the comment was made that -- the question was asked -- I don't know if it was a question or comment, I'm sorry. But the point was made earlier that the threat tags could have a chilling effect on parents.

In fact, if threat tags are not publicly known outside of the FBI, it'd be impossible for them to have a chilling impact, right?

A I have no comment on that question.

Q Okay. But you certainly -- you didn't do anything to make the "EDUOFFICIALS" threat tag -- to share that with the outside world beyond internal FBI employees, correct?

A That memo was sent to internal FBI employees only.

Q And you never forwarded it to anybody in the outside world, correct?

A Correct.

Q And, to your knowledge, it wasn't shared with anybody in the outside world?

A Correct.

[redacted]. You can go ahead.

[redacted]. Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Mr. Peeples, would you agree that the FBI has historically used task forces on a variety of subjects for the purpose of addressing or assessing issues of concern that may be to both Federal law enforcement and also local and State?

A Yes.

Q And the activities of these task forces, would you agree, they include things like sharing resources among the various agencies, sharing manpower, intelligence, and other information in order to assist local law enforcement or State law enforcement?

A I think it's used to assist all law enforcement entities that are participating in that task force.

Q And I guess the emphasis of that question is that the purpose there is information-sharing, or at least that's one of the main purposes of a task force, is to share information among the various law enforcement agencies.

A Yes.

Q And also one purpose might be to promote public awareness in communities of issues of concern to the various law enforcement agencies. Is that right?

A That could be a role of the task force.

Q Now, the task force creation that we've discussed here today or any task force creation, that doesn't change the predication requirements for any kind of assessment, preliminary investigation, or full investigation. Is that correct?

A Not that I'm aware.

Q The creation itself really is about communication. Is that fair to say?

A I think the creation had more than one role. Communication could be one of those roles.

Q But I guess the point is, it doesn't change anything about what the FBI can investigate and how they would proceed in their investigations. The fact that the task force is created isn't going to make something more likely to be prosecuted than not, for example, because it's not going to change your predication requirements. Is that right?

A The creation of the task force doesn't change --

Q That was --

A -- the predication.

Q -- my question. That's it. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q We're almost done.

I want to turn back to the July 27, 2022, letter from then-Ranking Member Jordan to Director Wray that's marked as exhibit No. 6. And I want to look at the top paragraph on page 2.

A Okay.

Q The last couple of sentences in this paragraph, I'm just going to read them out loud.

It says: A whistleblower "stated that a field office Counterterrorism Assistant Special Agent in Charge and the FBI's Director of the Counterterrorism Division have pressured agents to move cases into the DVE category to hit self-created performance metrics."

Do you have any knowledge of this taking place?

A No.

Q To your knowledge, are there performance metrics based on case numbers in the DVE category?

A No.

Q Okay.

The next sentence says that, "According to whistleblowers, the FBI uses these metrics to dispense awards and promotions."

Then it goes on that, "Every whistleblower has called it an environment of 'pressure.'" I think we've talked about that aspect.

But on the specific sentence, "According to whistleblowers, the FBI uses these metrics to dispense awards and promotions," to your knowledge, does the FBI dispense awards and promotions on the basis of DVE case numbers?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Okay. And you said earlier that you personally have not handled any DVE cases, right?

A Correct.

Q Because that's not under your purview?

A Correct.

Q How many times have you been promoted since 2020?

A Once.

Q Okay. And you were also at one point the Acting Director -- Deputy -- sorry, what were -- Acting Deputy Assistant Director of the Criminal Division, correct?

A If you're counting the acting positions, I've been promoted four times: one as an Acting SAC in Pittsburgh, one as an Acting Deputy Assistant Director of the Criminal Division, and one as an Acting Chief Inspector, and then the official promotion to Special Agent in Charge of Birmingham.

Q Thank you. And throughout that time, you didn't handle any DVE matters, correct, directly?

A Correct.

Q Thank you.

We don't have any further questions.

[Recess.]

[redacted]. We'll go on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q Mr. Peeples, I wanted to follow up on a couple questions I have related to our exhibits.

Looking back at exhibit 1, page 2, the NSBA letter, the last paragraph down at the bottom, the second sentence starts with: "As such, NSBA requests a joint expedited review by the U.S. Departments of Justice, Education, and Homeland Security, along with the appropriate training, coordination, investigations, and enforcement mechanisms from the FBI, including any technical assistance necessary from, and state and local coordination with, its National Security Branch and Counterterrorism Division, as well as any other federal agency with relevant jurisdictional authority and oversight. Additionally, NSBA requests that such review examine appropriate enforceable actions against these crimes and acts of violence under the Gun-Free School Zones Act, the PATRIOT Act in regards to domestic terrorism," and some others.

Was this the first time you heard of the PATRIOT Act being mentioned in regard to incidents that occurred at school board meetings?

A This is the first time that I'm seeing this, period.

Q And maybe not regarding the NSBA letter but then subsequently with the DOJ memo that came out 4 days later, was this the first time you had ever heard of some of these Federal statutes being applied to school board meetings?

A This is the first time that I'm hearing of it, period.

Q And since this letter, have there been any incidents where you think the PATRIOT Act was applicable as an investigative tool for school boards?

A Again, I -- you keep referencing the PATRIOT Act. I'm telling you this is the first time I'm hearing that the PATRIOT Act referenced school boards.

Q Are you aware of any information the FBI had indicating that there was an uptick in incidents at school board meetings that needed to be addressed with the Attorney General's memo?

A Can you say that question again, please?

Q Are you aware of any information that the FBI had indicating that there was an uptick in incidents at school board meetings that needed to be addressed by the Attorney General's memo?

A Not that I'm aware of.

Q Now, going back to -- I know we discussed this earlier -- former Executive Assistant Director Sanborn and her statement that she made about you and Mr. Langan definitely having more knowledge than her because "they were more involved in it than I," what is your interpretation as to what she meant by that?

A You would have to ask her.

Q But your personal interpretation. Why would she --

A I don't have one.

Q Do you -- what was your involvement in the school board issue at this time?

A Providing guidance and direction to the field to address it through that memo.

Q And is that -- you're referencing your October 20th email. Is that correct?

A If that's the date on it.

[redacted]. I think that's exhibit No. 5.

Mr. Peeples. Yes.

BY [redacted]:

Q So, outside of that email, you're saying that you had no other knowledge on the school boards issue around this time.

A Correct.

BY [redacted]:

Q Other than the October 4th memorandum from the Attorney General.

A Which is the practices of drafting this --

Q Okay. Did you consider anything else before drafting the email other than the October 4th memorandum from the Attorney General?

A As I mentioned, it was a coordinated effort between the three of us. So my consideration was primarily the --

Q Through, was it Mr. Langan, Mr. Jensen, or Mr. Vorndran?

A Mr. Vorndran, Mr. Jensen, and myself.

Q In those discussions, did you discuss anything other than the October 4, 2021, memorandum from the Attorney General?

A I don't recall discussing anything else.

BY [redacted]:

Q What was the input that they provided when you drafted that email?

A I don't recall specific input.

Q But you did it in coordination with those two specifically, Mr. Jensen and Mr. Vorndran?

A Yes.

Q Would their input have been provided by email or by in-person discussion or by telephone?

A I don't recall the method of participation.

Q Do you recall if one of them was more involved than the other?

A No.

BY [redacted]:

Q Prior to sending the email like the one you sent on October 20th, would it be common practice to email your colleagues about the draft of the email, you know, going back and forth about what the substance of the email should be?

A What was the question in that?

Q Would it be common practice for you to, like, email your colleagues prior to the issuance of an email like this, going back and forth about the contents of the email, what to include in it?

A It would be common practice to have that conversation. And it could've been verbal, it could've been via Skype, or it could've been via email, and I can't recall which or any of all that we participated in.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q And because the memo came out on October 4th and this email guidance came out October 20th, why was there that long of a period between when the memo came out and that email guidance came out? Can you explain that timeframe?

A That's the time for coordination and approval that it took to get it out.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you recall how far in advance you drafted, like, an initial draft of the October 20th email prior to it being sent out on the 20th?

A No.

[12:22 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q You don't recall how long the approval process took?

A No.

Q Do you recall speaking with Mr. Vorndran or Mr. Simpson about any spike in incidences related to school board meetings prior to sending this email?

A I don't recall.

Q What about after you sent the email, did anyone respond to you after you sent this email for guidance or instruction?

A I don't recall specific responses, but I do recall providing guidance and direction during the meeting with the assistant special agents in charge.

Q When was that meeting?

A Sometime after this email went out.

Q And where was that meeting held?

A It was held -- I was in my office, and they were around the country.

Q So a phone call?

A Skype.

Q Skype?

A Yeah.

Q What did you discuss on that Skype call?

A This email.

[redacted]. And you said "they" were around the country. Was it multiple folks, or was it one person?

Mr. Peeples. It's for assistants -- we have 56 field offices, and we have special -- assistant special agents in charge in all 56 who attended. I didn't keep an attendance record of who all attended.

BY [redacted]:

Q And people asked questions during that call?

A Yes.

Q What sort of guidance were you giving?

A The memo.

Q Within the parameters of this email?

A Yes.

Q Besides that call, did anyone else follow up with you regarding any questions?

A I don't recall specifically.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know if any of the other co-signers or individuals copied on that email received any questions?

A No.

Q And, other than coordinating to draft that email with Mr. Jensen and Mr. Vorndran, did you have any followup discussions with either of them regarding this issue?

A No.

Q So that was the last time the three of you had worked together to provide guidance on the school board issue?

A Yes. I wasn't there too much longer after that time frame.

[redacted]. Did you have any followup discussions about this email with Mr. Langan or Mr. Shivers?

Mr. Peeples. Outside of getting the signature, no.

BY [redacted]:

Q What about any follow-up discussions with Acting Assistant Director Jay Greenberg?

A Again, approval and signature authority. That was it.

Q And you had mentioned earlier, I believe, that it was Mr. Jensen's idea to implement the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag. Is that correct?

A I believe I mentioned that he was the one that suggested the threat tag. I don't know if the name -- where the name came, but I think he suggested the threat tag.

Q Now, switching gears a tiny bit to the memo itself, going back to exhibit 3.

A Exhibit 3.

Q Going to the fourth paragraph down, it begins with "coordination and partnership." The second sentence says: To this end, I am directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation, working with each United States attorney, to convene meetings with Federal, State, local, Tribal, and Territorial leaders in each Federal judicial district within 30 days of the issuance of this memorandum.

Now, based on that reading, is it your interpretation that the Attorney General is directing the FBI to take the lead on this initiative?

A My interpretation is logged into my memorandum where it says: The memorandum directed each United States attorney, in coordination with the FBI, to convene meetings with Federal, State, local, Tribal, and Territorial leaders.

So my understanding is this is to be led by United States attorney's office.

Q And then who gave the final say on that interpretation?

A AD Tim Langan and AD Calvin Shivers.

Q Were you given any additional guidance or separate guidance on what the Attorney General meant by that instruction?

A No.

Q So, when you drafted that email, in addition to Assistant Director Langan and Assistant Director Shivers, there was no additional guidance provided as to the interpretation of what the agent meant. Is that correct?

A I didn't receive any additional guidance.

Q Were you aware of any inside discussions at the FBI where this memo may have been downplayed?

A No.

Q And other than the threat tag, are you aware of any other initiatives taken by the FBI pursuant to the Attorney General's memo?

A To this memo?

Q Yes.

A No.

Q And I know [redacted] walked you through the Attorney General's memo and not seeing the word "parents" mentioned in it, but to your knowledge, who attends school board meetings?

A I don't know.

Q Your best guess?

A I don't have a guess.

Q Would you agree with me that generally it's parents that attend school board meetings?

A I agree that's your interpretation of who attends.

[redacted]. So you don't have any opinion on who may or may not attend a school board meeting?

Mr. Peeples. I don't.

BY [redacted]:

Q What about the alleged threats of violence, do you know, based on the incidents and the reason that the October 4th memorandum went out, who those incidents involved?

A No.

Q Did you provide any additional guidance to the field agents regarding this memorandum?

A The only additional guidance was during the meeting with the assistant special agents in charge sometime after this memo was sent.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you have any involvement with the EDUOFFICIALS threat tag after you left in December 2021?

A No.

Q You also mentioned in our first hour that the purpose of this email was to scope the threat. Can you just explain what you mean by that?

A Well, it's kind of mentioned in the memo itself: To scope the threat to determine if there's a Federal nexus, are there potential Federal violations that can be investigated and charged, and what's the motivation behind the criminal activity.

Q So, after you issued this email on the 20th, did you have the opportunity to assess, you know, what the scope of the threat was?

A No. I left shortly afterwards.

[redacted] You mentioned before too that you had met once with the task force that was created -- or individuals who were included in the task force. There was one followup with the unit chief over the violent crime unit. Do you remember who that is?

[redacted]. I'm going to just object. We're not going to talk about non-SCS personnel names in this setting.

[redacted]. What's the basis of the objection?

[redacted]. Longstanding Department of Justice and FBI policy regarding personnel safety.

[redacted]. Okay. You can -- he's here voluntarily. You can respond if you like.

Mr. Peeples. No response.

[redacted] Are you able to indicate if that person is still in this role?

Mr. Peeples. I don't know.

[redacted]. And also earlier you were asked last hour by [redacted] about the FBI's core values. I believe that was -- it was one of their earlier exhibits.

[redacted]. Exhibit 8.

[redacted] Exhibit 8, thank you. Do you personally agree with these values?

Mr. Peeples. Do we have exhibit 8?

Yes. I think I mentioned earlier that I agree with them.

BY [redacted]:

Q Sorry. It was a little difficult to hear down there. But do you personally think that the FBI follows these values?

A And, as I mentioned earlier, I'm not going to speak on behalf of the FBI.

Q Do you have an opinion on it?

A No.

Q Switching gears a little bit again, what was your official title with the FBI on January 6th of 2021?

A Inspector, Inspection Division.

Q And can you explain to us a little bit what your roles and responsibilities were in that position?

A Basically the FBI, we're responsible for holding the FBI accountable in a consistent and transparent manner, through the evaluation of our investigative, intelligence, and administrative programs.

Q So is that all-encompassing, not one specific division but all of them?

A Yes. I mean, we go out and we look at the 56 field offices, a certain amount of them each year, and we assess their investigative, intelligence, and administrative programs.

Q And how often would you do that?

A They were -- they're probably scheduled anywhere from 8 to 12 a year. COVID played a role where we shut down for 6 months and didn't travel.

Q Was that in 2020 or in any time in 2021?

A It was a combination of both.

Q Do you remember roughly that 6-month timeframe?

A It may have been January through July in '20, and then we started back up in January of -- again, in January of '22. Yes, January of '22, so.

Q So were you out investigating the field offices again in January of 2021?

A I think we -- I can't recall the dates, if we were out there investigating or not. I have to look at the dates of when we were out there.

Q But you said there was a 6-month timeframe somewhere between 2020 and possibly 2022, where there weren't in-person investigations in the field offices. Is that correct?

A Somewhere between March -- January of 2020 and 2021, there was a 6-month time where we didn't go out and investigate or evaluate the field offices.

Q Was there any substitute to that?

A No.

Q And, going back to the January 6, 2021, question, were you interviewed by anyone on the select committee for the January 6, 2021, events?

A No.

Q Do you remember what you were doing on January 6, 2021? Were you at a field office, or were you still at headquarters?

A I was still at headquarters.

Q What was your awareness of threat levels before or on January 6th of 2021?

A It wouldn't have been in my purview. I was in Inspection Division.

Q When had you switched back over to Inspection, do you recall?

A I started off in Inspection in September of 2019, and I was there at Inspection until May of '21 -- somewhere in May -- April or May of '21, when I went to be acting special agent in charge of Pittsburgh.

Q Did you attend any in-person or SVT staff meetings on or after January 6th regarding the events of that day?

A No.

Q Following the events that occurred at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, are you aware of the weekly emails that were sent out by Director Wray and Assistant Director Sanborn?

A No. It wouldn't have been in my purview.

Q Do you know if there was any initiative to identify opportunities to open domestic terrorism investigations?

A Again, it wouldn't have been -- it wouldn't have been in my purview.

Q As part of your purview, would it be to inspect those particular investigations at that time?

A If we went out and did a field office inspection, we will look at every single case regardless of the classification.

Q What does an inspection entail, if you could describe generally what is involved?

A The assessment and evaluation of investigative, intelligence, and administrative programs.

Q So is it fair to say that it's almost like checking the special agent in charge's work over their review of a case, or is that a completely separate interpretation?

A A special agent in charge is not over a specific case that's assigned to him. A case agent who is over a particular case, what we do is we go out and assess, are the cases that were open -- are within policy, are they closed within policy, are they addressed appropriately, have the appropriate guidance and direction been applied from an investigative and administrative and intelligence standpoint.

Q And I think you mentioned earlier that part of the role in having a 90-day review, which I think you'd mentioned a 90-day review of a file is done by the special agent in charge, or is that an assistant special agent in charge? Who is the person that would be --

A It's done by the first line supervisor.

Q The first line supervisor.

So, as an inspector, you would inspect their work of their 90-day file review? Is that right?

A We would look at every file review.

Q And when there's a file review, does that include assessments --

A Yes.

Q -- or is that just an open investigation?

A We look at every Guardian, every preliminary, and every full investigation.

Q And upon which you would decide if a case needs to stay open or closed or if it's been properly maintained to be open or properly closed?

A We assess if they follow the proper procedures to address the threat.

Q And how often would you go back to one particular field office for an inspection?

A We do anywhere from 8 to 12 a year. So, depending on the rotation, it could be anywhere from 4 to 5 years before you're back at the field office again, unless there's a reason to move them up.

Q What would a reason be to move them up?

A That's up to the seventh floor to make that decision.

Q And, during 2021, do you recall which field offices you went to visit to do your inspections until you were transferred in May of 2021?

A I -- during my total time there, I did four field offices -- Tampa, Las Vegas, Louisville -- one more. Those are the three that I can recall right now, Tampa, Las Vegas, and Louisville.

Q And then, after you had your assignment to Pittsburgh and then you were back from there to headquarters to be the Acting Deputy Assistant Director of CID, you subsequently -- I think you mentioned you either had one more role or you went back to being an inspector with the Inspection Division. What was that timeframe again?

A After I left being the assistant -- Acting Deputy Assistant Director for CID in December, I did an inspection of Tampa Division in January. I returned from that inspection, then I was named Acting Chief Inspector.

Q And, as we noted earlier, some whistleblowers have reported that they were encouraged -- or they were told to reclassify cases to the DVE classification to increase the domestic terrorism program. We also indicated, you know, we learned, from Bureau-wide, just that most domestic terrorism programs struggle to find some meaningful or legitimate casework, and this can be an issue when an Inspection Division arrives every few years to a field office inspection.

Have you seen domestic terrorism squads or assistant -- or ASACs covering those programs and engaging in reclassifying cases to domestic terrorism classifications to increase the number of cases in preparation for an FBI Headquarters visit?

A No.

Q Can you describe the domestic terrorism work in the Birmingham Division?

A No. I'm still assessing it. I think I've been there about 3 months. Half of that has been back and forth up here, so, no.

Q Do you know if the Birmingham division has reclassified cases to domestic terrorism classifications before or after you've arrived?

A No.

Q Going back once more briefly to January 6th, do you know a Mr. Tim Thibault?

A Yes.

Q What work did you do with him?

A Tim and I were assigned on the same squad probably back in 2001 or 2002.

Q And that's the only time you worked with him?

A Yes.

Q What program did he work in, that you worked with him in?

A I worked civil rights, I know, and we were on a civil rights and public corruption squad, but what he worked on I don't know.

Q Did he ever engage in a discussion of his political views with you?

A No.

Q Do you personally think that in some cases there were people overcharged for their January 6th participation?

A I have no opinion.

[redacted]. Have you had any interaction with Mr. Thibault since 2001 and 2002 in the work capacity?

Mr. Peeples. No.

[redacted]. Have you engaged any further, after this email -- I think I briefly touched on this -- that you had sent out to the field offices, with Mr. Jensen at all outside of the school board issue? Have you worked with Mr. Jensen anymore?

Mr. Peeples. Have I seen him or worked with him?

[redacted] Worked with him.

Mr. Peeples. No, I haven't worked with him.

[redacted]. Can we go off the record for just a moment.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted]. We can go back on the record.

And, prior to sending out your email on October 20, 2021, did you have any conversations with anyone at DOJ prior to sending out that email?

Mr. Peeples. No.

[redacted]. Do you know if anyone at DOJ reviewed that email before it got sent out?

Mr. Peeples. I don't.

[redacted]. Have you and Mr. Vorndran had any conversations with anyone at DOJ?

Mr. Peeples. No. I don't know if he had. You'd have to ask Mr. Vorndran.

[redacted]. Do you know if Mr. Jensen had any conversations with anyone at DOJ?

Mr. Peeples. You'd have to ask Mr. Jensen.

[redacted]. And do you know if beyond Mr. Greenberg and Mr. Langan, there was anyone else in senior leadership at FBI that reviewed that email?

Mr. Peeples. Not that I'm aware.

[redacted]. Okay. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted]. It is 12:47. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q I want to just get clarity, Mr. Peeples, on something I think you said just now, and I couldn't hear it down at the end of the table.

Did you say that you conducted an inspection of Tampa in, would it be early 2021?

A It would be early 2022.

Q Early 2022.

A January of 2022.

Q Do you recall if, when you did that inspection, if there were any concerns raised about Tampa's handling of January 6th-related cases?

A No.

Q There were no concerns raised, or you don't recall?

A I don't recall if there were any concerns raised.

Q Okay. Do you recall if there were any concerns with -- major concerns with Tampa overall that came out of your inspection?

A No. Tampa was accomplishing the mission in all aspects.

Q I'm sorry; could you say that again?

A Tampa was accomplishing the mission in all aspects of the investigative, intelligence, and administrative programs.

Q Thank you. Another thing I couldn't quite catch down at the end of the table. You started at Birmingham 3 months ago, you said?

A End of January, yeah.

Q End of January. And you were asked about certain cases in Birmingham and whatnot, and I think you said you had spent half of the time in that 3 months coming up here. Is that -- or preparing for this. Is that fair?

A No. Just in terms of traveling --

Q Yeah.

A -- for multiple reasons to come up here --

Q Okay.

A -- as well as other parts of the country for work-related --

Q Okay.

A -- entities.

Q Okay. Understood. Just wanted to clarify the record, and then one last question. Do you know who Terry McAuliffe is?

A No.

Q Okay. And the name Terry McAuliffe was never mentioned at FBI with regard to any of the school boards -- or the October 4th memo?

A I never heard of Terry McAuliffe, so I don't know if he was mentioned by anybody else throughout the Bureau.

Q Okay. But to your knowledge, he was never mentioned?

A I've never heard of Terry McAuliffe.

Q And, actually, sorry, couple more questions.

You mentioned Tim Thibault. You were on the same squad as him in the early 2000s. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall, did you have any concerns about Mr. Thibault's competency?

A No. But we were also located in two different locations. I was at headquarters, and he was located in Virginia.

Q Okay.

A So, although we were on the same squad, we investigated two different programs, and the civil rights program was in D.C. He was working out of Virginia, so -- and we were both on the squad team.

Q Understood. But, from the limited interaction you had, did you have any concerns about his fitness or his competency?

A No.

Q Did you have any concerns about his temperament?

A I wasn't around him enough to know.

Q Understood. Okay. No further questions.

A Okay.

[redacted]. We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 12:49 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: STEVE JENSEN

Friday, May 19, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:02 a.m.

Present: Representatives Jordan, Gaetz, and Biggs.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted], GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], DEPUTY GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], COUNSEL

[redacted], COUNSEL

[redacted], CHIEF COUNSEL FOR OVERSIGHT

[redacted], MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY INTERN

[redacted], MINORITY OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

For the U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE:

[redacted], SPECIAL COUNSEL,

OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS

For the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION:

[redacted], ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL,

OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted]. Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of Steve Jensen with the FBI. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI.

Would the witness please state your name for the record and your current FBI title?

Mr. Jensen. Absolutely. My name is Steven John Jensen, and my current position is Special Agent in Charge of the Columbia Field Office, FBI.

[redacted]. And you're here today with lawyers from DOJ and the FBI; is that correct?

Mr. Jensen. That's correct.

[redacted]. And you understand that agency counsel, their first obligation is to represent the Bureau and the Department, not you individually.

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

[redacted]. We'll have the agency lawyers introduce themselves for the record.

[redacted]. [redacted] from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

[redacted]. [redacted] from the Department of Justice, office of legal affairs.

[redacted]. My name is [redacted]. I'm with Mr. Jordan's House Judiciary Committee staff. I'll have the rest of the staffers introduce themselves.

[redacted]. [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted]. [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted]. [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted]. [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted]. [redacted], chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted], counsel for the House Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted], with House Judiciary Democrats.

[redacted] [redacted], House Judiciary Democrats.

[redacted]. We're also joined by three of our Members, Mr. Biggs --

Mr. Jordan. Jim Jordan, Ohio.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, Florida.

Mr. Biggs. Andy Biggs, Arizona.

[redacted]. I'll go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow in today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for one hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to also ask you questions for one hour. And we'll rotate back and forth until we're done.

Ordinarily, we'll take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break a part of that, please let us know. As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say. Sometimes, that requires us to repeat a question because we're talking over one another, and so we'll do our best not to foul up the record on that front. We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we'll take our time.

If you have questions and don't understand one of our questions, please let us know. If you honestly don't remember the answer to a question, it's of course best not to guess. Give us what recollections you do have, and it's okay to tell us if you learned information from somebody else. The Federal Rules of Evidence and the hearsay rules aren't applicable. So, if you have some secondhand information, you can just tell us as long as you just tell us how you came to possess that information.

You should also understand that, although this interview not under oath, that by law, you're required to answer questions from Congress truthfully, you understand that, correct?

Mr. Jensen. I do.

[redacted]. 18 United States Code, 1001, the false statements statute, is applicable for those that intentionally provide false information to Congress, you understand that as well?

Mr. Jensen. I do.

[redacted]. We like to keep the information that we cover here today confidential to the extent we can. Accordingly, if we have some exhibits, and they may be an exhibit that the FBI provided or you provided through official channels, we will -- even though you provided it, we'll keep it here in the room because the exhibits we show the witnesses, as I'm sure you can appreciate, form a roadmap of our questions and things we're interested in. So we will collect any exhibits that we used on the record.

[redacted], do you have any welcoming remarks?

[redacted]. No. Just thank you for the witness taking time out of your schedule to come up here today.

Mr. Jensen. Yes, ma'am.

[redacted]. And do you have any welcoming remarks of your own or introductory?

Mr. Jensen. No. I want to thank the committee. I appreciate the opportunity to represent the FBI and my time of service in the FBI and answer your questions to the best of my ability.

[redacted]. We do appreciate your service. I'm going to turn it over to [redacted], and she'll do most of your questions here. It's 10:07 for the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Good morning, sir. I want to begin with your professional background. When did you join the FBI?

A In 2006.

Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

A The mission of the FBI. And, if I could for background, I was a police officer in Colorado Springs prior to joining the FBI. I come from a legacy -- a family legacy of law enforcement in New York, and so it's kind of the family profession. And I had the opportunity to work with Federal agencies on task forces in Colorado Springs, and the mission of the FBI in my particular background I thought I served best in that broad-based mission of the FBI. And so it drew me, and I was very proud to be selected.

Q And can you walk us through some of the positions you held at the Bureau?

A Absolutely. So, in 2006, I entered on duty April 30th, 2006, at Quantico, Virginia, as a new agent trainee. My first office of assignment was the New York field office. I was assigned there first on applicant matters, and then I was assigned to healthcare fraud, domestic terrorism, and then Asian organized crime, three subsequent squads that I served with.

I was also a SWAT team member. I served as a firearms instructor, and a defensive tactics instructor. That parlayed into an assignment as an instructor at Quantico, Virginia, teaching new agent trainees in firearms. I did that approximately since 2012 through 2014. At which time, I was promoted to supervisory senior resident agent of a resident agency in Chicago, Illinois.

I served in that capacity for approximately 3 years, from 2014 until 2017, when I was promoted as assistant special agent in charge of the Jackson Field Office where I served both as the criminal and administrative ASAC and, subsequently to that, as the national security ASAC. In 2020, I was promoted to section chief under Counterterrorism Division at FBI Headquarters as the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section chief.

I served in that capacity from April of 2020 through October of 2021, where I was again promoted as Deputy Assistant Director of the Training Division at Quantico. I served in that capacity from October of 2021 until my promotion as special agent in charge in March of 2023.

Q Okay. So I just want to make sure we have the dates right here. So, April 2020 through October 2021, you were the section chief within the Counterterrorism Division for the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section; is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And then you were at the Training Division from October of 2021 until when was your promotion?

A It was March, officially transferred March of 2023. And, in that time period, 17-plus years with the FBI, there were several TDYs to different details, right, different temporary duty assignments, notable but not permanent.

Q And, when you were at the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section, were you stationed at headquarters? Did you work out of headquarters?

A I was. I was in the J. Edgar Hoover building.

Q And how many other times have you worked out of headquarters?

A So the first time was the -- as an instructor at Quantico. That is technically a headquarters billet. But it's down at Quantico, Virginia, outside of headquarters property.

Q And you are now currently the special agent in charge of the Columbia Field

Office, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And who's your direct supervisor now?

A That would be the Deputy Director, Mr. Abbate.

Q And how many people directly report to you?

A It's more than 200.

Q And how would you characterize the size of the field office? Is it like a medium size or large size field office?

A It's considered a small field office.

Q Small. Okay. Great. And how often do you interact with the FBI Director?

A Currently?

Q Correct.

A Infrequently.

Q Okay. When you were at the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section, did you interact with the FBI Director?

A Yes.

Q And how frequently did you interact with the FBI Director in that position?

A At times, it was daily. Generally, weekly.

Q And when were your daily interactions with the Director? Like what time period was that?

A It could have been in the general meetings that started about 8 o'clock in the morning. Those are the briefings from all the assistant directors and executive assistant directors to the deputy. I was often in those meetings, giving updates on domestic terrorism operations. And the Director was present for those. There were also times that we were helping him prep for briefings to Congress or conversations with the Attorney General or meetings over at the White House. And I was key on those conversations as well.

Q And, when you were helping the Director prep for briefings for Congress, what were those briefings normally? What was the subject matter of those briefings?

A They varied. They could have been -- you said to the Attorney General, right?

Q To the Director, excuse me.

A Right. Director in preparation for the Attorney General?

Q Correct.

A Yes. So those were often specific about domestic terrorism operation cases. They could have been specific cases that were underway and posed operational risk; in other words, we were about to do multi-jurisdictional takedown using SWAT teams or HRT, our hostage rescue team, so higher risk operations. And it also included status updates of various activities in field offices, opening cases related to civil unrest from the summer of 2020, the status of some of those investigations or updates related to travel and support of riot activities and things of that nature, as well as intelligence briefings -- what are we seeing related to the pending election, are we seeing threats coming in against elected officials -- and then, obviously, with January 6th occurring, numerous briefings about status updates, investigative strategy and updates on arrests as they were occurring.

Q And, when you were section chief, can you kind describe for us the organizational chart? Did you have people who reported to you?

A I did. So Domestic Operations Section consisted of three units when I first arrived -- correction four units when I first arrived. And those units were led by a unit chief. That's a GS-15 employee. Has oversight over supervisory special agents, imbedded intel analysts, and other personnel. They primarily are responsible for oversight of any domestic terrorism investigations that are opened in the field offices.

They provide policy guidance to the field. They provide support to the field for operations, whether it's funding for sources, travel expenses for operational expenses, and then across field offices, because many of these cases bleed over across multiple jurisdictions, operational awareness of what one field office is doing so there's no unilateral action that negatively impacts other field offices' investigations, right? And so there is a coordination piece that we provided from Domestic Terrorism Operations Section.

Those units were comprised of about 26 or so special agents that are supervisory special agents, about 12 intel analysts, and a handful of other professional staff. During my tenure there, based on the environment that we faced and the surge of cases being opened, there was a flow of temporary duty agents from other branches of the FBI to support our work in supporting field offices.

And that ebbed and flowed over time. And that was to either fill vacant positions that I was unable to fill from the field offices because they were tasked with working investigations in the field offices or to help on special cases, critical incidents, or cases that required specific attention, and we didn't have the personnel on hand to dedicate to it. So they would surge temporary resources to me.

Q About how many temporary duty employees were in the section at any given time?

A It truly ebbed and flowed. This was also during COVID, and I'm remiss to say, during my tenure there, I never met my full staff. There just wasn't opportunity to meet my entire staff. So I had many people working for me that I never met in person or never had conversations with. In total, at one point, I think I had about 60 total FBI personnel temporarily assigned to my section. I think that was maximum. I think it was sustained for about 30 days.

Q And what time period was that for the 60?

A Well, that probably would have been the summer of 2020, just with the number of field offices that required additional support; not only were they temporarily assigned to me, but we were also deploying personnel out to those field offices to support them in their command posts in responding to the various crimes that were being committed, which cases could we reasonably open with the Federal nexus, and which cases do we need to support State and local partners. So the bulk of that would have been 2020.

We also had surge across multiple divisions to develop a strategy and implement a strategy for January 6th investigations. They weren't necessarily TDY'd to me, but they fell under my purview as my role as the -- for lack of a better term -- the headquarters on scene commander for a unified response to January 6th. So multiple divisions had personnel contributing to that mission.

Q And so you spoke about four units, and those were each headed by a unit chief; is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And did each unit have a subject matter area that they worked on, or was it just everyone worked on everything?

A No, ma'am. So, in the section, we all were responsible for the primary threats of domestic terrorism as the FBI defines them, as well as some of the additional investigative matters that we were responsible for, program managing all of those cases. The way our -- that we broke up those units was by region. So we had an Eastern Region, field offices that fell in the eastern region in the United States, a Central Region, and a Western Region. And then the fourth unit when I arrived was the Hate Crimes Fusion Cell that had been stood up prior to my tenure, and that was to look at the corollary or the overlap of domestic terrorism investigations and hate crimes. And are we dual-captioning, are we coordinating, and are we leveraging hate crimes charges where appropriate on DT subjects.

Q Okay. I want to kind of focus in on your time as the section chief, specifically surrounding the time of the October 4th memorandum that the Attorney General issued. Are you familiar with the National School Boards Association letter to President Biden?

A I became aware of it. Yes, ma'am.

Q And when did your first learn of that letter?

A I learned of that letter based on communications I had with the Department of Justice. That would have been around October 1st. I had a conversation with a counterpart in Counterterrorism Section, National Security Division of DOJ. And there was a request for him and I to collaborate together: What is the Federal response on three particular measures? And I could generalize those measures or requests from DOJ.

Q That would be great.

A The first was, where, if there were threats received or made against school boards or elected officials, does it rise to a Federal nexus, specifically regarding domestic terrorism? Two, can the FBI assist in serving as a clearinghouse for any threats that were received? And, three, how would we best coordinate with State and local partners to use enforcement action where appropriate so whether it was a State or local authorities or Federal authorities?

Chairman Jordan. -- that request October 1st. Who did the request come from?

Mr. Jensen. That came from ODAG office, an email to myself, and I believe it was Tom Brzozowski of the Department of Justice, CTS.

Chairman Jordan. So the email came from Tom, say the last name.

Mr. Jensen. Brzozowski. Common spelling. I wish I could spell it for you, but I can't, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Brzozowski emailed you on October 1st?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir. It was, oh, Kevin Chambers would have sent the initial email.

Chairman Jordan. And what's Mr. Chambers' title?

Mr. Jensen. I don't know his title, but he is from ODAG's office.

Chairman Jordan. Thank you.

Mr. Jensen. Yes. And I'm sorry; just for clarification, that email that he sent was to myself and Mr. Brzozowski to coordinate, and it was not uncommon for Mr. Brzozowski and I or other members of CTS to coordinate on issues. I had a standing meeting with CTS regarding domestic terrorism operations and cases and potential prosecutions.

BY [redacted]:

Q Was that the only outreach you received from DOJ regarding the September 29th letter?

A That was the initial outreach.

Q The initial outreach?

A Yes, ma'am. That was the initial request for coordination, and how would we respond to this? And that was a telephone call that I received from Mr. Brzozowski because I was working in a secure facility. I didn't have my phone, my cell phone, and it happened after normal business hours, which was also not uncommon because of the pace that we were maintaining. We would often do post business hours meet-ups.

Q And when was the phone call from Mr. Brzozowski?

A It was after five o'clock, but the specific time I don't no.

Q Was it on October 1st?

A I believe so. That was Friday, October 1st, I believe, if my memory serves.

Q Yes. That would be right. So October 1st -- did you receive the phone call Mr. Brzozowski first, or did you receive the email from Mr. Chambers first?

A So the email hit my inbox first, and I believe I forwarded it to my immediate supervisor, Deputy Assistant Director Jim Tarasca, but I didn't have any comments on my email to him. It was just kind of like: Hey, I received this. I don't have time for this right now.

But it's for his awareness.

Chairman Jordan. Can you describe that email? What did Mr. Chambers say? Was there urgency in the email? What -- give me the tone.

Mr. Jensen. It's hard to describe tone from an email. I didn't sense, like, we need a response right now. It was a request for Mr. Brzozowski and I to review those three requests, right, and how would we best respond to that. Based on my conversation with Mr. Brzozowski, my request of him was we need more time, right? I don't know at this time, does the FBI have any threats relative to this letter that was sent or responsive to ODAG's question. I would need to get in touch with the National Threat Operations Center at CJIS and ask for them to pull information, do we have anything relative to this, and then coordinate with my counter -- Criminal Investigative Division.

Chairman Jordan. Did Mr. Chambers say what prompted him? Did he reference the letter from the National School Board Association?

Mr. Jensen. The National School Board Association letter was attached for reference. And so it was part of the email for me to review.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did Mr. Chambers mention anything else in the email besides the letter that was kind of prompting this discussion?

A Without the particular email in front of me, it would be a hard for me to say. I think there was -- there were two or three separate paragraphs in the email, very short, kind of saying: This is the request that's attached. This is how it came in. This is what we're looking to do, right. Can you guys coordinate on these three things?

It was very simple. And really the summary was: Based on this letter that alleges threats against their members, other public officials at schools, can we do these three things, and how would we best do these three things?

Q And when were you and Mr. Brzozowski able to start working on the three things that Mr. Chambers had asked to collaborate on?

A So, on that phone call, we talked about those three things and pretty much went through them in order. I unfortunately didn't have that email in front of me then. He called me, cold-called me, referenced the email and the SBA letter, and so I was able to pull it up on my computer, and we talked through it. It wasn't a lengthy conversation. It was essentially: I understand what's being asked. There are other parts of the FBI that should be involved in this, NTOC for one, to determine do we have anything currently in our holdings relative to these types of threats?

And I wasn't aware of any, but I didn't want to give bad information back to DOJ.

Two, it's not simply a domestic terrorism matter, and most of these, from my awareness of what was occurring and being broadcast in the media at the time, specifically Loudoun County, they appeared to be State and local matters. And I believe that was also highlighted in Mr. Chambers' email to us, saying: While I recognize many of this -- much of this would be a state or local matter, how could we engage on these? Right. Using Federal authorities, could we engage on these?

That was one of the questions, right?

And so my response to Tom was: First, we would need to talk to NTOC and pull some data. We would also need to bring in my partners over in Criminal Investigation Division because many of these would come in as generic threats, threats against public officials would largely be worked out of the Violent Crime Section in CID, and there should coordination with them as well. And they need to be brought in, but it's after 5 o'clock, and I'm not sure they're in right now. Right. So we would have to reconvene on Monday to answer these questions a little bit better. And he agreed more time was necessary, and we would reconvene on Monday.

Mr. Biggs. Can I just ask for clarification?

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Biggs. Because you said Chambers asked, how could we or could we?

Mr. Jensen. So those are my words, right? His email was very definitive, and I don't have that email in front of me.

Mr. Biggs. The reason I say is "how could we" sounds like "how do we shoehorn ourselves into it," and "could we" sounds more like, you know, "is it permissible, do we have authorities?"

Mr. Jensen. Yes.

Mr. Biggs. That's what I'm trying to get at. Which one is he saying?

Mr. Jensen. So I don't want to put words on the email because they are in black and white. My interpretation of it is "could we," right? I had concerns about the initial SBA letter, right, that came from a private organization and some of the things that they wrote in their letter. I think they had concerns about threats against their members. And we're claiming certain authorities that they believed we could use that, not appropriate for us to use on U.S. citizens, okay?

But then a blanket statement of "if it rises to counterterrorism, domestic terrorism," that was concerning to me too, and I was adamant during my entire tenure, still adamant today, and even when I was an agent working investigations in domestic terrorism, that we focus on individuals for violent conduct, not on groups or associations of people. And it's often misconstrued, and it's something that I constantly had to remind people of, even our own agent personnel. Mere association does not warrant predication. We also don't assign labels, right, broadly that you're a domestic terrorist because you are an associate of this. It's specific based on conduct that meets the statutory definition. And that was very, very important to me to clarify on that call.

Mr. Biggs. So, when you talked about authorities just in your answer, what were the authorities that you thought the FBI might have to investigate what seemed to many to be local and State issues?

Mr. Jensen. Right. So my concern about in-person meetings in particular and asking "are there -- or how could the Federal Government, FBI in particular, engage in those" is they're happening in person. There's no indication that a Federal facility was used in the commission of a crime, threat by wire, threat my communication device. These -- if there were threats, it appeared based on media, right -- I don't have personal knowledge of it, but just what I was seeing in the news, it appeared that they were happening in person and would be a local harassment or threatening communication in person if somebody filed a complaint. And that would be handled at the local level.

Mr. Biggs. So but you mentioned that maybe there were Federal authorities. What would those Federal authorities have been to investigate to determine whether it's credible or not?

Mr. Jensen. If we received a credible tip -- and that was the part I wasn't aware of, right? That's why I wanted to talk to NTOC. If we received from the public, from a member of a school board, from anybody really a tip that alleged a potential Federal violation, that would give us authority to look into that and determine, was this a true threat, and do we need to investigate further or pass it along to our State and local partners? And that's consistent with how we triage all threats that we receive. And then, once we determine if there is a Federal violation and it warrants the opening of an investigation, then additional lawful authorities would connect.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you for being here. Good morning. I want to draw a fine point on this testimony you've just given about predication functioning as a feature of conduct rather than a feature of association.

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Is that a proper understanding of your testimony?

Mr. Jensen. Conduct, criminal conduct.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. There are those who believe that predication occurs based on one's conduct, and there are those who believe that predication can occur based on one's association, and your testimony today is that you found that to be often misconstrued?

Mr. Jensen. So I should clarify. I did mention that, even with some of our own agents as they're opening cases, they would misconstrue like this person is also associated with, and we would correct that, right? It's their violent conduct, and they had predication for that. This person was alleged to have been engaged in violent conduct, or was willing to engage in violent conduct, but that is our predicating statement for domestic terrorism investigations.

Where I found the confusion was often when I talked to people outside of the FBI about how we conduct domestic terrorism operations versus their understanding of international terrorism operations. Mere association, affiliation with a foreign terrorist organization, whether it's material support or otherwise, does give us authorities to investigate.

Mr. Gaetz. I thought your testimony was that, even among FBI personnel, that this distinction between association and conduct was misconstrued as a feature of predication. Did I understand that correctly?

Mr. Jensen. So, at times, yes. And that is often with somebody who has never worked domestic terrorism before, a new agent trainee, somebody who has not opened a case before. And where the predication exists, it's making sure that predicating statement is at the front side, that the association is not the predicating statement.

Mr. Gaetz. And this confusion regarding associations versus conduct on predication, did you ever see that arise as it related to school board meetings and people associated with those who attend them?

Mr. Jensen. So I did not, but the timing of this is important too. So I noted in my brief resume, that in October of 2021 is when I left Counterterrorism Division and went down to Training Division. And so I stepped out of my role as Domestic Terrorism section chief around the time that that joint message from CID and CTD went out to the workforce about how to triage those investigative leads that come in and what our response was, right? So I was part of the conversations leading up to that, but I was not there for any resulting tips or guardians that might have been developed in response to that.

Mr. Gaetz. But it seems to be that, based on this communication from Chambers, that you were part of -- you were tasked to come up with the doctrine on how these school board threats or associations would be analyzed. And you seem to have laid out this three-part test in developing that doctrine: the existence of a Federal nexus, the FBI having -- being a clearinghouse for the threats, and then coordination where appropriate with State and local. Is that --

Mr. Jensen. Those three were outlined. And, again, those are my -- it's my summary of what was in the email, right, my recollection of what those three taskers were. As far as a doctrine for the memo, I don't believe I was a part of creating a doctrine, but what are our authorities inside the FBI to respond to, if at all?

Mr. Gaetz. Well, that may just be our difference in semantics. But drawing a finer point on what my colleague Mr. Biggs was asking you about: When you say, like, when analyzing the Federal nexus to these matters, did you observe any FBI personnel wanting the exercise of jurisdiction to be the outcome of that nexus?

Mr. Jensen. So, again, the timing is important. I didn't -- to the first part of your question, I didn't do any analysis on tips that might have come in during that time because I had left after the threat tag had been created. I'm sorry. I left before that threat tag had been created and implemented. I didn't have any purview or oversight of any of those tips or Guardians that would have come in. And I am not aware, based on my experience working with the agents and the analysts, that there was any impetus other than, do we have a lawful authority to investigate?

Mr. Gaetz. Was it a quest to acquire that lawful authority during your time there?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Was the request of October 1st, was that typical?

Mr. Jensen. So it was unique. It was not atypical to get direct communications from ODAG's office.

Chairman Jordan. No, but -- I understand that. I assume they reach out to you. But was this specific one -- you said unique. Was it unique?

Mr. Jensen. It was unique in that it came -- the method in which it came and the specific letter from the SBA. I had not received --

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So that was unique. An attachment from some outside organization, that was unique.

Mr. Jensen. During my tenure, that was unique.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And was the time unique? So the letter is dated September 29th; 2 days later, you get it attached to something from the offices of the -- Attorney General's Office, Deputy Attorney General's Office. Was that unique?

Mr. Jensen. The timing didn't stand out to me, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. You said you went to Quantico sometime between when the memo was released on the 4th and the 20th when the FBI sent out the guidelines on how they were going to put this all together with the threat tag and everything else. Is that right?

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. What date did you go to Quantico.

Mr. Jensen. It was mid-October. I'd have to get back to you on the specific date. I know I had --

Chairman Jordan. Before the 20th?

Mr. Jensen. It was. I had a procedure -- a stress-related procedure, unfortunately, an angiogram, which came back clear, but it was on the 16th.

Chairman Jordan. -- okay -- what did you do between when you got the request on the 1st and the 4th when the memorandum was issued from the Attorney General?

Mr. Jensen. I'm sorry. Can you repeat that, sir?

Chairman Jordan. So you get the request on the 1st, and then the memorandum goes out on the 4th. What type of communication and what happened between the 1st and the 4th between your office and the Attorney General's Office?

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir. So there was a series of email exchanges that I was copied on. DOJ, various officials in DOJ updating their comments towards what was described as a media release, which, in my initial conversation with Mr. Brzozowski, I was not aware of potential media release, just that this request had come in for us to coordinate. And we, myself and Mr. Brzozowski -- I don't want to speak for him, but he summarized our conversation back up to Mr. Chambers in ODAG's office, and it was thorough. He missed the one part that I had chimed in about a clearinghouse could exist in NTOC if it needed to be used because it's already set up to receive tips and distribute those tips to State and local partners. That was an important part for me so we didn't duplicate efforts or resources or recreate the wheel, but that was a minor part.

The communication that I was copied on referenced 18 U.S.C. 2331, which clearly defines international terrorism and domestic terrorism. That was referenced in one email communication, and I was copied on that. And it also referenced that there would be a media release. When I received that email, started a separate chain of email's internal to the FBI.

Chairman Jordan. Is the that unusual to be referencing talking about a media release?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Jensen. No, sir. My concern was broadly applying a statutory definition, specifically of domestic terrorism, to a broad-based population. Like I said before, we predicate on individuals for their individual conduct. And a broad application of a statutory definition can be very misleading, and that's what I flagged internally to FBI chain of command inside of CTD. And my request in flagging that was that they engage with DOJ because I felt, with a pending media release, we needed higher level of engagement. And so I had a conversation on Saturday -- and I do remember this very well, because Saturday we had a large group of kids coming over my house for a -- like a fall party. And I was trying to finish the construction of a fire pit because we promised them s'mores.

So I was in the middle of working on that project, trying to get it done before everybody was arriving, and I was getting email traffic and phone calls, right? And it was taking away -- which was not atypical either, right. I worked around the clock and often answering on weekends. But the timing of this one was rough. So I remember the conversations, and I remember the emails.

I had a conversation with the DADs, forwarded the email traffic internal to FBI only, just for their awareness, briefed my DAD, Deputy Assistant Director, on my conversation with Tom the night prior, what my concern was in a media statement that might use the term "domestic terrorism," and that we still didn't know are we even looking at -- do we have any tips, do we have anything in our current holdings Guardian-wise that references threats against school boards, or is this strictly a state and local matter?

Mr. Biggs. Can I just get on that because that's really what I want to get at is, from this October 1st to October 4th, is it fair to say -- because you mentioned the Federal nexus, you and I have talked about the authorities, you didn't actually even know whether there was anything coming in that had a Federal nexus, which I think --

Mr. Jensen. I didn't.

Mr. Biggs. Yeah.

Mr. Jensen. And that was a key point for me is I wanted to know; do we have something --

Chairman Jordan. You expressed that concern multiple times in the correspondence back and forth with folks who work in the FBI and folks who work in the Justice Department?

Mr. Jensen. So I know Tom and I spoke, Mr. Brzozowski and I spoke about that directly, right? We needed to see specifically is there even something to scope here.

Chairman Jordan. And did you -- but what I want to know is, did you communicate that to the Attorney General's Office via email?

Mr. Jensen. I did not. I did not.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Jensen. I communicated that internal to the FBI, that my concern was a broad application of the term "domestic terrorism," where we're not clear if there is a Federal nexus for us to even be attached to it. There was internal communication back stating, you know, without a Federal violation, a clear Federal violation, it would be hard for us to engage on the criminal side, let alone on the counterterrorism side.

Chairman Jordan. And that was an email back to you guys?

Mr. Jensen. That was back to me from my Deputy Assistant Director, one of the Deputy Assistant Directors.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Jensen. So there was shared concern. But, again, this is -- it's not uncommon in communications with DOJ of what intent is and what we're capable of and making sure there's enough time to coordinate to make sure we're married up in what our abilities are, our lawful authorities are, and what the intent is, and trying to marry those up. With the pending media release, it seemed we were getting ahead of ourselves on the coordination piece, and that was my bigger concern.

Chairman Jordan. Are you confident that your concerns were made clear to the Department of Justice about no Federal nexus here?

Mr. Jensen. I was.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted]. You said -- you had a -- go ahead.

Mr. Jensen. I'm sorry. Uncertainty about a Federal nexus, right, because I didn't even know if we had anything at this point.

Chairman Jordan. Fair enough.

BY :

Q And prior to that time, had you been aware or any of your FBI colleagues been aware that domestic terrorism at school board meetings was something coming down the pike?

A No, sir.

Q And did you provide any feedback to the Justice Department or the ODAG officials that the FBI wasn't aware that there was a domestic terrorism issue at school board meetings?

A No. It would have been that early conversation with Mr. Brzozowski about assuming it's domestic terrorism, right, that it needs to be scoped properly. Much of it, again, would have been State or local. Where it potential implicates a Federal violation, it might still best be handled at State or local because it's happening there, but that, if those threats did come in, it probably implied Criminal Investigative more so than DT, and we needed to bring them in.

Q As far as the potential incidents happening at school board meetings? Who goes to school board meetings? Like what was the concern? What types of people?

A I don't believe that came up. Are you asking me who goes to school board meetings, or are you --

Q Right. What types of people go to school board meetings?

A Generally parents and people who are concerned about what's being taught in the schools, or what's about to be implemented by the school board.

Q Right. And the incidents you are aware of that have happened at school board meetings that the FBI either looked at and decided to investigate or looked at and decided not to investigate, did most of those involve parents?

A So, again, I'm not aware directly. I know more than 20 Guardians came in, but that's just from a briefing that I received. I didn't have direct oversight, and so I don't know the details of any of the investigative efforts.

Q So you don't know if any of those 20 or so Guardians involved anyone other than parents?

A I couldn't tell you. I would assume, but I've also been told that assumption is one of the mothers of all mistakes, right? And so I don't have direct knowledge.

Q Right. Did you have any awareness that the National School Boards Association was working with the White House on this initiative before their letter was published?

A No, I didn't know.

Q And were you aware at the time there was a Governor's election in Virginia going on?

A I was aware of the Governor's election. I was a resident of Virginia at the time.

Q And some of these school board related topics were very politically sensitive at the time?

A So they received a lot of media attention around the Governor's election and for the school board meetings themselves.

Q Right. Was there ever any discussion that this letter from the National School Boards Association to the White House might have just been a political move to get more attention on those political issues to advantage Governor --

A No discussion that I was a part of.

Q Did that raise any concerns that maybe this letter was, you know, introduced, you know, September 29th -- the Attorney General's memo was October 4th. Did anyone on your end express concerns that, you know, maybe this was getting a little too political?

A Not on my end. The speed at which the memo came out was concerning because we didn't have an opportunity to fully coordinate internal to the FBI. I never drew connections between elections, external politics, and a complaint by a private organization that we ultimately received alleging violent threats against some of their members, right? And so, that's what I was focused on, is: Are there credible threats? Do we have a duty to look into this, and if we did receive any of those threats, are we dealing with them appropriately, either passing them off to State and local partners for action, or if it was done through a Federal facility, are we investigating it appropriately?

Q The officials at NSBA that we've spoken to have represented to us that they googled things. They googled things when writing their letter, okay? So, if you had known that, would that have given you any pause? This wasn't a set of incidents that had been brought to NSBA's attention from their constituency, okay? This was NSBA officials googling things to create the predicate for their letter to the White House. If you had known that, would that have given you any concerns?

A No more concern than I had of what was contained in that document. It appeared to be written by somebody who didn't fully understand the implications of what they were asking us to do versus what we're capable of doing. And that's just ill-informed. But we receive a lot of that in the FBI. We receive complaints from ill-informed people, well-intended but ill-formed, and some of the allegations require us to look deeper into it.

Chairman Jordan. If it was so ill-informed, why was it attached to a request from the Justice Department to you guys?

Mr. Jensen. So I can't say they were fully ill-formed, but it appeared to be ill-informed on what authorities we actually have, right? "Misinformed" is a better word.

Chairman Jordan. Which is the key component.

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Why would the Justice Department attach that and send it to you guys and say: How do we set this up?

Mr. Jensen. So I can't speak to why other than the potential allegations of the threat of violence or the actual use of violence against officials, school board, or otherwise or people attending large gatherings in those school board meetings, and the concern being, do we have a duty to look into these? Do we have an authority to look into these if they are occurring broader than what we see in media on Loudoun County, and that's how I interpreted it.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY :

Q And nobody disputes that, if somebody goes to a school board meeting, a parent or a vendor -- somebody suggested vendors go to school board meetings. I'm not sure they have been involved in any of these incidents, but if somebody is at a school board meeting, nobody is suggesting on our end that, if they do a bad thing and they threaten someone, they shouldn't be handled. But that I think you would agree is a local matter, correct, the local sheriff or the local police would deal with an assault or a verbal threat, correct?

A So, broadly, right, I try to be very specific, but broadly, if a threat occurs in person, it would be a State or local matter generally speaking.

Q Now, if it were an interstate conspiracy to disrupt, you know, a school board member or a school board meeting, then perhaps the FBI has a bigger role, correct?

A So a big jump. An individual who uses a telecommunication device, who uses the internet, social media account, or otherwise who makes a threat against a U.S. citizen or an elected official, regardless of their position, rank, or authority, they've used the facility to engage in interstate commerce, and it could imply 18 U.S.C. 875, which is threat over wire communications.

Regardless of conspiracy or otherwise, individual threats that are a true threat, versus just speaking broadly about "somebody should do this," or "I'm going to do this against this person," that requires us to look into it. And that doesn't mean we are going to specifically going to investigate. It might mean we pass it off to the State and local authority that has jurisdiction where that individual lives. Maybe we'll partner with that State or local jurisdiction, but we need to determine, is that a credible threat, does it pose injury or harm to that individual or others, and can we mitigate that threat?

Q Did you believe, during the October 1st to October 4th timeframe, that there was a necessary predicate to involve the domestic terrorism resources of the FBI into this issue?

A I still didn't know. My concern in the way it was being discussed was a broad statement that it's domestic terrorism or could be domestic terrorism if it meets the statute, and my language was "dangerous to broadly apply a statement like that." It's because of the implications it carries of broadly assigning a label when that's not how we operate. That was my bigger concern. I still needed to look at or the Bureau largely needed to look at: Do we have tips coming in? Is this truly a big problem, or is this a letter that is highlighting a potential problem? And we just didn't know that at the time. So I couldn't speak to our scoping or authority at that point.

Q In hindsight, do you think it was a stretch that the NSBA folks cited the PATRIOT Act? I mean, I think that's how the whole domestic terrorism angle was introduced to this conversation? Do you think that was a bit of a stretch?

A That's where I go back to the misinformed. I know I said "ill-informed," but "misinformed" is probably -- they are aware that there are certain authorities the FBI can use but not fully aware of how those can be implemented.

Q But using the PATRIOT Act for cranky parents at school board meetings is probably a little bit of an overreaction, correct?

A So, again, without seeing the letter specifically, I don't think they used the term "cranky parents." I think they used the term "people making threats," right. Broadly speaking, people making threats against officials, my statement back to the DOJ and internal to the FBI is that's not a broad statement of domestic terrorism, right? They might view it as terroristic threats on the receiving end, but we have to make an independent assessment of how we're going to conduct our operations.

Q Did you find it remarkable that the entire might of DOJ was operationalized to deal with this so quickly?

A Can you describe "might"?

Q Well, the Attorney General promulgated a memo. The Office of the Deputy Attorney General had her staff communicating with the FBI. It was instructed that U.S. attorneys nationwide and FBI nationwide, you know, examine this issue. Was that -- do you think that's remarkable in hindsight that it happened so quickly?

A So the speed without what I viewed as better coordination, better information from the FBI to scope it, how the FBI could respond in the coordination piece, I would have preferred more time. That's my preference at a much lower level than the Attorney General, but I can't speak to what was his rationale or the motivation. He's in charge of the Department of Justice, and he picked his timing.

Q Fair enough. The speed with which the letter, you know, came to fruition -- and I think you represented and other witnesses have told us that there were maybe 25 Guardians that resulted from this. Is that a good number?

A Again, I didn't have oversight over this, but from a briefing that I was privy to, I believe more than 20 Guardians actually came into the system and were generated with that specific tag.

Q Right. As you sit here today, is that more or less than you would have expected given the high level priority that was placed on it?

A So I don't know that I had a quantitative analysis going into this. I didn't know, right? That's a very fair statement for me. I just didn't know were we already dealing with this, and how big of a problem nationally was this? And I think as a result of the limited number, my understanding is that it's, from October of 2021 until January of 2023, that number is a valid number, is only about 20 or more than 20 Guardians came in. That's relatively good job of scoping. This wasn't as endemic of a problem as was suspected. And so it didn't take a lot of effort or resources to do that. It took time.

And I think, in retrospect, the way that it was implemented internal to the FBI once that memo was released gave us the ability to scope it appropriately.

Q Okay.

BY :

Q And so you get the communication from Mr. Chambers October 1st. You said you had some more email traffic on October 2nd, and then Monday --

A I'm sorry. So October 1st evening, and then October 2nd as well.

Q And then you said that you went into reconvene with Mr. Brzozowski on Monday, which would have been October 4th. Were you able to reconvene with him?

A No.

Q And were you able to do any of the, kind of, the due diligence on the three things that you were asked to do by Mr. Chambers before the memo came out on October 4th?

A Aside from coordinating with Mr. Brzozowski, no.

Q And so the only coordination you had with Mr. Brzozowski would have been on the 1st, or did you have some sort of coordination on 4th?

A No. The only one I recall, and I recall most of them because of the circumstances, was on the 1st.

Q So, in the memorandum the Attorney General released, he described the threats and harassment that were going on at school board meetings or against teachers and staff as a disturbing spike. Were you able to determine if there had been a disturbing spike before the memo was released?

A No.

Q Do you know where the Attorney General got that information --

A I don't.

Q -- that there had been disturbing spike? It wasn't from the FBI, you don't think?

A I can't speak to that. I don't know where it originated.

Q And so, after the memorandum came out, there was an email that created a threat tag. Did you have any involvement in the discussions surrounding the creation of the threat tag?

A I did.

Q Can you describe those communications?

A So, generally, it was my position early on that this request coming in from DOJ, we would need to coordinate with CID. I can tell you the memo being released on Monday the 4th, immediately after that, so, on Wednesday the 6th, the Director and the Deputy Director held a video teleconference with all SACs. And often, in those conferences, the ASACs of the various field offices attend as well. And they responded internally to that AG memo.

And, specifically, I'm present in that room when that happened, but specifically addressed the response of the FBI: What are the expectations of our response? And it's to be a good partner to the U.S. attorneys who were directed to lead in their various districts, more than 70 districts, with State and local partners, any response from law enforcement necessary to address threats against school boards, threats against the elected officials, or anybody else participating, that we were going to partner with the U.S. Attorney's Office, but we were not directing it, and any leads or tips that came in would be assessed as we normally do.

This was not a change in behavior for the FBI, and it would not be a change in how we operate. That was very, very clear. And then, on the heels of that, the Deputy Director, I believe, said that both Criminal Investigative Division and Counterterrorism Division would send out a unified message about how we were going to capture information or report information relative to the Attorney General's memo.

Shortly thereafter, I believe I talked to Acting Deputy Assistant Director Mr. Peoples from Criminal Investigative Division, what is our best way to gather information for tips that might come in responsive to the Attorney General's media statement. If we ask the media or if we ask the public to provide information, they're, post-911, very good at providing information. And not all of it is actionable information, and we have to weed through that. But, when we have campaigned for the better part of 20 years "if you see something, say something," generally the public has gotten very good about providing information.

And so we needed a way to capture that data across all the various field offices to provide credible information to those districts if those meetings occurred about in this particular area how much of a problem is represented. And so that tag was created to attach to any complaints that came in, specific to threats against school board officials, school officials or anybody else that would have participated in those school board meetings. So the EDU official tag was created for that purpose.

Q You said, on the FBI side, those that were involved in that discussion of the creation of the tag was you and Mr. Peoples. Is that correct?

A So, to the best of my recollection, right, we oversaw the two branches or sections that were most responsive to it. I think we ultimately coordinated on it. We might have gotten input on it from our intel sections. That's generally how I operate. I seek information, what is the best way so it doesn't confuse people? The tag has to be very clear. We don't want miscellaneous information going in there. So I would have gone through my normal process. I can't speak to his process, but ultimately he's the one who pushed out the final email about coordination across the two divisions, the threat tag usage, and the expectations.

Q Was there any approval required for the creation of the threat tag?

A I've been part of creation of numerous threat tags. Usually, it's at the division level, that: Yes, we concur this a threat tag.

I believe, in this case, it was briefed up to the Deputy Director, I believe.

Q Okay. So, before the tag was created, you believe that it was briefed up to the Deputy Director?

A I do believe that. I know the email that went out with that tag had the two Assistant Directors from Criminal Investigation and CTD, ultimately, as the authorities for that joint message. Although, pushed out by Mr. Peoples as the Acting Deputy Assistant Director, it was representative of both their reviews and approval for that threat tag. Because it implied multiple equities, it wasn't just one division of the FBI; it would have gone up higher than just the ADs.

Q And so, after you and Mr. Peoples discussed the creation of the threat tag, you then were transferred to the Training Division. Is that correct?

A So I was already under orders. I was cleaning up what my responsibilities were inside our Counterterrorism Division, and then, shortly thereafter, yes, I left and went down to Quantico.

Q So you left before the email was sent out. Is that correct?

A I believe so, yes.

Q And, when the Attorney General released the memorandum, there was also a press release that accompanied the memorandum that created a task force. Did you have any knowledge of the task force?

A Only what was in the press release.

Q No involvement with the task force. Do you know if it was stood up?

A I don't.

Chairman Jordan. I want to go back for a second. Back to the beginning here. October 1st, you get this email communication from ODAG's office, Mr. Chambers, sent to you. And did you get -- between the 1st and the 4th when the memo comes out, did you communicate anything back to -- directly to the Attorney General's Office?

[11:02 a.m.]

Mr. Jensen. I don't believe so.

Chairman Jordan. So -- and the email, again, on October 1st asked you for your thoughts on how we would do this.

Mr. Jensen. So that's a good correction. It asked for me to coordinate with Mr. Brzozowski on how we could implement these three things, right? Mr. Brzozowski summarized our telephone conversation the night of October 1st and copied me --

Chairman Jordan. To who?

Mr. Jensen. To his boss and chain of command inside of DOJ, Mr. Chambers in particular.

I responded to Mr. Brzozowski's email, and I had a point of clarification. Yes, you summarized our communication very well, but this is a key point that I want to highlight that we talked about and was not included in that email. So I did have one email, to my knowledge, directly back to DOJ.

Mr. Biggs. What was the key point?

Mr. Jensen. It was that NTOC CJIS already exists, would be collecting information and tips from the public, and that we should tap into them to determine, is this already being reported? And if we are going to use FBI resources as a clearinghouse, they already exist for that purpose of receiving information and disseminating it broadly, related to threats or actionable intelligence.

Mr. Biggs. And did Mr. Brzozowski's -- I don't even know if I'm saying that right, but did he -- did his communication back to his superior indicate your concerns that you expressed with regard to the Federal nexus?

Mr. Jensen. I would have to double-check the content of that. I don't want to speak for Mr. Brzozowski. He did emphasis that we agreed we needed more time to coordinate internal to the FBI and across the Department to better address those three items.

My recollection of our conversation is, we both agreed we didn't have enough information at our fingertips on that evening of Friday to answer those questions sufficiently and we needed to regroup on Monday. And that's what he communicated.

Mr. Biggs. Previously, in our discussions, you talked specifically about a concern you had with the authorities and nexus. And I just want to make sure that -- did you feel that Mr. Brzozowski -- the gentleman had adequately communicated it to his supervisor?

Mr. Jensen. If I recall the email from Mr. Chambers correctly, I think he highlighted in one of those paragraphs that, while most of these would be occurring at their State or local level -- and I think that was fronted in his email, recognizing that --

Mr. Biggs. Okay.

Mr. Jensen. -- these events were already happening at the State or local level -- are there authorities, right? Those three lines that I've already talked about.

So I think it was put in up front from DOJ.

Mr. Biggs. So you didn't feel that you needed to further emphasize that in your communication via Mr. Brzozowski?

Mr. Jensen. I didn't, because on the front of it, it was already emphasized, right? We recognize this, but, given that, is there a way we can do these things?

BY :

Q And I know you had said that you weren't able to get back with Mr. Brzozowski before the memo came out on October 4th. But were you and Mr. Brzozowski ever able to reconvene on the three things that were asked of you by Mr. Chambers at any point in time?

A Not to my knowledge.

And I should note, it's not that I couldn't get back in touch with him. I probably could've called him at any point and he would've taken my call.

Q Uh-huh.

A It's that I elevated this inside my own chain of command, because I felt a higher level of engagement, especially with a pending media release and the implications of additional FBI equities or concerns -- I don't like talking like a bureaucrat too much, but -- you understand what I'm saying. It implied more on the FBI side than I felt we were able to answer on my limited conversation. And so I wanted higher-level engagement.

And once I did that, I didn't feel it was my role to have lower-level conversations without engaging my bosses who were already talking about this.

Q And do you know if your bosses were engaging with the DOJ on this?

A So I was told by my DAD that both he and the AD were engaging on this, and it wasn't my job to question him further, and if they wanted to share something with me, they would have. I didn't get anything from them.

Q And was the AD Timothy Langan?

A It was.

Q And the DAD you've been referring to was?

A So there were three.

Q Uh-huh.

A And I included all of them.

Q Okay.

A But the primary one was Jim Tarasca.

Q Okay.

A And he was my principal DAD.

Q Okay.

I think we're out of time, so we'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

. All right. It is 11:15 -- 11:16. I'm sorry. We can go back on the record.

. Before you jump in, just --

. Yeah?

. -- real quick, on the record, I just want to make sure that we get an opportunity to review and propose errata on this and the other transcripts. I know we've had several of these TIs this week and this month, and so I just want to make sure we get a chance to review and provide errata before any other transcript is used publicly or, you know, used in any way.

. Right. And the transcript review procedure, the witness and the two individuals in the interview, okay -- so that would be Megan and you, Matt, or Ms. Greer and Mr. Hanson -- can come review the transcript, and you can check the transcript for accuracy. If the witness believes that one of our court reporters -- and this never happens -- got something wrong, flag that, or if the witness decides that he, upon reflection, wants to correct something. That's the purpose for the review.

At that time, you can also suggest proposed redactions in the event the committee wants to release the transcript.

. Okay. Yep. Appreciate that. I know that's a little different than the process has been in the past, because there hasn't been a limitation around who is able to go and look at the transcript. So I'm happy to discuss the mechanics of the process offline.

[redacted]. Yeah. I mean, we never contemplated that we would have people from the Department who weren't in the interview come to review the transcript and just bring their laptops and start, like, typing up notes. So that's why we went back to, you know, our old rules about guidelines for reviewing transcripts.

[redacted]. Okay. Again, happy to discuss the mechanics of transcript review offline, but the requirements we've discussed here are a little different than the process that has already been underway for other transcripts for TIs that have been done in the last couple months.

[redacted]. Shouldn't have been, but --

[redacted]. So I'm happy to discuss that offline.

[redacted]. -- that's the process. It's not really open to negotiation or debate. That's the process, so --

[redacted]. I'm happy to talk further offline.

[redacted] And, sorry, before we start our question time, you were referring -- did you say we went back to the rules the way they were before as you knew them?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted]. I'm kind of new here. What rules were those? What was the era, or what was the --

[redacted]. The rules we've always had with transcripts when we've been in the majority.

[redacted]. Okay. So it's from when you were in the majority in '17? '18?

[redacted]. We were in the majority in 2018.

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted]. I mean, we've been in the majority during this -- you know, we've been -- at least since I've been here, I've been in the majority for some -- at least 10 years where we've had transcript interviews, and that's always been the process.

[redacted]. That's been the process.

[redacted]. The witness and the witness's lawyer. I don't think that was different with the limited number of transcribed interviews the previous majority conducted.

[redacted]. Okay. Like I said, I wasn't here, so I'm just trying to get clarity on which --

[redacted]. Yeah.

[redacted]. -- set of policies or procedures we're following. Okay.

[redacted]. Would you like it a different way? I mean --

[redacted]. No. I just -- I feel like I'm trying to get a sense on -- because I do think that there were situations where some witnesses that have appeared before us this year, their attorneys did get copies of the transcripts --

[redacted]. That never happened.

[redacted]. -- external. And so I think -- we can talk offline about it. But I think, to the extent that there's changing practices, I just want to be clear on what the policies are. I don't know if they're written down. I assume they are probably not. But if they are, that'd be great.

[redacted]. Yeah, that would be interesting. I mean, the Department and I don't believe the Bureau have been given access -- like, been given copies of these transcripts. So that --

[redacted]. Yeah, we never give -- we never give the -- we never give the transcripts to the executive branch.

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted]. Oh. But they are given to private counsel. Is that what -- [redacted] What's that?

[redacted] -- you're saying? But they've been given to private counsel? Is that the difference?

[redacted]. Well, I mean -- you know, when you're conducting an investigation, it's not, I don't think, appropriate for the integrity of the investigation to ship transcripts out to a party that's going to have future witnesses coming in. So --

[redacted]. To counsel for the parties that have testified as witnesses? It's not appropriate for them to have the transcripts?

[redacted]. When they're represented by agency counsel, that's correct.

But let's just go forward --

[redacted]. Okay. Because I think --

[redacted]. -- with the questioning.

[redacted]. -- like, Jill Sanborn, I think her attorney got the transcript, right?

[redacted]. He did not.

[redacted] He didn't? Did George Hill? Or Steven Friend?

[redacted]. George Hill has not been sent the transcript. Steven Friend has not been sent the transcript.

But let's just go on the record here, and we can deal with this --

[redacted]. Okay. Yeah, I think we want to --

[redacted]. -- after we --

[redacted]. I think we just want to get clarity on what the rules are; that is all. Because I don't know that I know the policies. I don't know if they've ever been expressed to me. So that's all.

It's 11:21, and we can start our questioning now.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Mr. Jensen, thank you again for taking the time out of your schedule to join us today.

A Of course.

Q At the very beginning of the last hour, we were talking about DTOS and the structure and the organization. Do you recall that?

A Uh-huh.

Q And you made the point that there had been up to a max of 60 individuals under your command. Is that fair?

A So, influx of 60 additional to what my normal FSL would be.

Q Okay. And that max was in the summer of 2020?

A To the best of my recollection, directly reporting in my section, yes.

Q Okay. So that was in response to the civil unrest in the summer of 2020?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you talk a little bit about why you needed increased resources during that time?

A The -- it's multiple parts, because the increase of resources that we received wasn't just program managers, supervisory special agents, but it was intel analysts and other tactical analysts.

The reason we needed that additional help is the volume of additional work that my section was undertaking in response to cities like Portland and Kenosha, Louisville; even New York and elsewhere where they didn't experience large riots consecutive nights in a row but they had some spillover or bleed-over of directed threats against government facilities or projected acts of violence that were about to occur.

And not only were we program-managing a direct increase of domestic terrorism investigations, traditionally investigated by us, but also an increase in other categories of investigations managed by Domestic Terrorism Operations Section. And those are our anti-riot statute cases and civil unrest or civil disturbance cases, which, in the history, you know, last 30 years, not often utilized, and there wasn't really good memory in the Bureau for how to conduct those investigations.

And so we needed routine guidance to the field on what our authorities were, given the circumstances. In some cases, it required very specific authority from the Attorney General to collect intelligence because it was viewed as a -- although a civil disturbance, in the guise of a First Amendment-protected activity. And that's a very, very fine line, and we don't want to surveil solely on First Amendment activity.

On the other hand, you have statutes that clearly outline that it's a Federal violation to engage or travel in interstate commerce or use a facility engaged in interstate commerce in furtherance of a riot. And that's a very specific statute that gives us authority, if violated or alleged to have been violated, that we could conduct those investigations broadly.

And the number of cases that we saw increasing required more direct program management.

Q Okay.

A And so it was a direct correlation.

Q And I think you said you also assisted or supported State and locals in the summer of 2020. Is that right?

A We did. So, through the local field offices, we would if they were experiencing -- and Portland is a prime example of that; Seattle also -- multiple consecutive nights and weeks of direct violent activity against Federal facilities, against

State and local facilities, often overwhelming State and local police departments.

And so, providing assistance to conduct investigations, collect evidence where appropriate, try and identify subjects who were either instigating, providing resources for rioting, or directly assaulting Federal police officers, and trying to bring them to justice.

And that was whole of FBI. So there were criminal investigative bodies, there were WMD bodies for SABTs -- special agent bomb technicians -- and domestic terrorism, counterterrorism bodies going out and helping that overall effort.

Q And so wouldn't that have been the case that there might not have been a Federal nexus to prosecute in those cases but the State and locals needed extra assistance on the ground?

A So, oftentimes, in routine investigations, State and locals need additional assistance. And while there is a Federal nexus, right -- it could potentially be a violation of a Federal law -- the better prosecution lies with the State, and so we will support them. And in the summer of 2020, that was often the case.

Q Okay. Thank you.

There was a comment made earlier, some discussion, about how agents sometimes, I wrote down, "misconstrued" domestic terrorism, that there was concern about charging domestic terrorism based on an individual's association with a group as opposed to a criminal act.

Do you recall that?

A So, I think, a point of clarification.

Q Yep.

A The word "charging" domestic terrorism, right? There is no charge for domestic terrorism. It's a --

Q Good point.

A -- statutory definition. And I was referring to the predication or predicate offenses inside of a case opening.

Q Understood.

A And just a little further clarification.

Q Uh-huh?

A Upon receipt of an allegation, we use the information we have at the time, right? It's not probable cause. It is an allegation of a potential Federal violation, which might lend itself towards opening of a domestic terrorism investigation.

But, oftentimes, as we conduct that lawful investigation, we find there are other statutes at play or other motivations that might cause us to change that initial classification away from domestic terrorism, or from criminal investigation to domestic terrorism.

We often see that with somebody who is manufacturing explosive devices. Their simply placing a pipe bomb somewhere doesn't imply ideology. It's a device intended to harm people, and until we identify who the subject is, we don't know what the ideology was, unless it's clearly littered around the area, right?

But, often, that's opened as a manufacturing-of-an-explosive-device case, and once the subject or subjects are identified and they have ideology, it would be converted back over to a domestic terrorism case.

So proper predication is important on this.

Q Understood.

On the specific question of ensuring that agents understand proper predication -- and I think you referred to training agents, for example, sometimes listing, as part of the predication, association with a group -- it's your job, as a supervisor, right, to ensure that no investigations are opened on the basis of improper predication, right?

A So, as a direct supervisor responsible for approving the opening of an investigation, it is the primary responsibility.

Q Okay. So there's a check and balance to make sure that that does not happen?

A There is.

Q Is it fair to say that in your time as the section chief of DTOS that you are confident that no cases -- or no investigations, I should say, were opened based on improper predication?

A Yeah, it's -- there's -- yes, but there's a nuance there, right? Because often the predicating statement wasn't what we would expect it to be. The nuances of domestic terrorism is such that we often start with legal caveats, right? We don't investigate solely based on First Amendment-protected activity. We don't investigate based on mere association to a group. Or -- and there's, like, three caveats that almost every single DTOS document starts with.

Q Right.

A And that's to prevent some of that from happening.

But, oftentimes, we will see that first paragraph of a predicating EC talk about group affiliation -- a militia violent extremist group that this person is associated with who is now espousing violent conduct. The group association is not the leading statement, right?

Q Right.

A It shouldn't be, and we would have to reverse that.

Q Okay.

A Put the specific instances of the subject. So the predication existed; it was just out of order.

Q Understood. So it was more how the agent was documenting it.

A Correct.

Q Not the concern with the actual predication. Is that fair to say?

A It is fair to say.

Q And is it fair to say that that concern existed in the summer of 2020, for example, when you were looking at potential investigations or cases there?

A So I think it always exists, but yes from the DT perspective, no from the full Bureau perspective, because we had so many cases being opened in the summer of 2020, across all of our divisions, trying to help our State and locals and bring to justice people who were engaged in violent acts.

Q Thank you.

We had some discussion earlier about the 20-plus Guardians related to the October 4th memo. Do you recall that?

A I'm sorry. Can you repeat the first part?

Q There was some discussion earlier about the 20 or more than 20 Guardians that were opened --

A Yes.

Q -- based on the memo. Do you recall that?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. The comment was made that, I think -- I didn't write it down precisely, but -- that the Guardians related to disruptions at school board meetings. Do you recall that?

A So I believe a question was asked, and I said I'm not aware of the particular details --

Q Right.

A -- or the outcomes because it was no longer in domestic terrorism.

Q And that's what I was going to ask.

A Okay.

Q So we actually, based on -- there were representations made here today, but, actually, we don't know if it's accurate or not, because they don't have the documents in front of us, whether the Guardians referenced anything about school boards at all.

A I don't have that information.

Q And it's entirely possible that the Guardians, in fact, referenced threats transmitted through email or through the mail, correct?

A Again, I don't know.

Q Right. Or it's possible the Guardians involved threats transmitted over the phone, correct?

A Yeah, I don't know.

Q We don't know. We don't have --

A Right.

Q -- that information here.

A The only thing I can say, based on the briefing I received, is that those Guardians' tips and complaints had that tag.

Q Right. That's all we know --

A That's what I know.

Q -- is that they had the tag --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- but we don't know -- and the tag was just "EDUOFFICIALS," correct?

A Correct.

Q It wasn't "SCHOOLBOARDOFFICIALS"?

A It was "EDUOFFICIALS."

Q And it wasn't "SCHOOLBOARDMEETINGS"?

A No, ma'am.

Q Okay.

There was a discussion earlier about who attends school board meetings. And putting aside the question of whether the Guardians actually involved anything about school boards, the comment was made that mostly it's parents who attend school board meetings. Do you recall that?

A I do.

Q And that's based on your own experience?

A So I've never been to a school board meeting, and we homeschool.

Q Okay. So you don't know?

A I don't know.

Q It's just your assumption.

A There's an assumption. And I'm cautious about making assumptions.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce as exhibit No. 1 -- that's really -- you guys didn't do any exhibits? You didn't, did you?

Okay, exhibit No. 1. That's unusual.

I'm going to introduce this as exhibit No. 1. This is a -- we don't have the date on this, do we?

Sorry. Can we go off the record for just a second?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted]. We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q I want to introduce an article, and I'll represent to you that this is dated October 12, 2021. We don't have a copy with the date on it right now. We're going to fix that before the next round of questioning --

A Okay.

Q -- but I don't want to hold up our questioning now.

This is entitled "Proud Boys' Presence Leads to Metal Detectors, Deputies at School Board Meetings."

[Jensen Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And I want to put aside -- so I want to look at the third paragraph down.

It says, "'There were two men in Proud Boys shirts and hats,' said chair of the Orange County Schools Board of Education Hillary MacKenzie. 'One wore a stocking over his face which completely obscured his entire face for the whole meeting. The other one told our board during public comment that someone should tie rocks around our necks and we should throw ourselves in a river.'"

Do you see where I read that?

A Uh-huh.

Q Just based on the face of this article, we don't know -- I guess these men in Proud Boys shirts and hats could very well have been parents. We don't know that. But is it fair to say that these individuals don't appear to have been there because they were concerned about their children's education?

A I honestly couldn't opine why they were there.

Q Yeah. And if somebody is wearing a stocking over their face, it might actually be even harder to tell if they're a parent or not, correct?

A I think somebody claiming to be a parent would be dispositive of them being a parent --

Q Right.

A -- not what they're wearing.

Q Right. But my point is just that, if somebody is showing up at a meeting with a stocking over their face, you know, that's not traditionally what you think of when you think of a parent at a school board meeting, correct? Parents don't usually put stockings over their face to go to a school board meeting to talk about their kid's educations?

A Is there a question?

Q Is that -- do you agree with that statement?

A So it's hard for me to agree wholly with that statement, because in recent events we've seen all kinds of people showing up wearing various garb --

Q Yeah.

A -- right? And I think, generally, school board meetings are open to the public --

Q Uh-huh. Right.

A -- because taxpayers are feeding into the school board and what's being taught at those -- so I don't believe it's restricted to just parents.

And I would be very, very cautious about making any assumptions about what somebody wears demonstrating who they are as a parent and what they're representing at a school board without direct knowledge.

Q Understood. Understood. But my point is just that it's not just parents who attend school board meetings, correct?

A I would assume, as an open hearing, it's open to anybody who has standing to be there.

Q Okay.

I want to introduce as exhibit No. 2 an article from Oregon Public Broadcasting entitled "3 Vancouver schools placed on lockdown after Proud Boys try to enter during masks protest." And this is dated October 3, 2021 -- I'm sorry, September 3, 2021.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q So on the -- I'm going to refer to the first paragraph. The article describes an incident in Vancouver, Washington, which is a suburb of Portland, Oregon. And the very first paragraph says that "Vancouver Public Schools confirmed on Friday that the Skyview High School, Alki Middle School and Chinook Elementary were put in lockdown after members of the far-right Proud Boys tried to gain access to school grounds, according to witnesses."

Did I read that correctly?

A Uh-huh.

Q Can you understand why a school would have concerns if the Proud Boys were trying to gain access to its grounds?

A Broadly speaking about the Proud Boys, no. And that's based on my understanding of the organization. They're not a criminal organization, to my knowledge. They're not designated -- because we don't designate domestic groups as terrorist organizations.

Q Okay.

A But the notoriety around the Proud Boys, I could see why somebody would affiliate concern, right -- have concerns about members of the Proud Boys showing up. But that is a determination made by a school official based on whatever they observed at the time.

Q Uh-huh.

A And I would hope it would be more than just what somebody was wearing.

Q Fair. Fair.

All right. There was some comment or discussion -- did you have that statute written out?

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]:

Q We had some --

A And -- I'm sorry.

Q Uh-huh?

A If I could, like, with the Proud Boys, I understand there's media attention around them. They wear certain colors and identify themselves pretty proudly as Proud Boy members. But there is a lot of swirl around them about mere association to the group. And that's why I'm trying to be very clear --

Q Understood.

A -- about my understanding of the Proud Boys and membership of the Proud Boys --

Q Yeah.

A -- versus my knowledge of specific acts of violence or threats of violence by members of a group who would attach an official response from me --

Q Understood. But --

A -- right? So broadly speaking about them is difficult because I'm here representing the FBI -- in particular, the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section.

Q I appreciate where you're coming from.

We discussed earlier the National School Boards Association letter that was sent.

A Yes.

Q Do you recall -- and you said you recalled receiving it?

A Yes.

Q And we actually didn't introduce it into the record, so I want to introduce it as exhibit No. 3.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Before we get there, are you familiar with 18 U.S.C. 875?

A Yes.

Q What does that say?

A In summary, it is a statute that has a criminal penalty for making threats via wire or other communication devices.

Q So it's interstate threats?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

On page 5 of this letter -- and have you -- I'm sorry. Have you reviewed this letter before, do you recall? Has it been a while?

A It's been a while.

Q So I'm going to ask you to read the first couple sentences of the second -- the giant para- -- yes, that paragraph.

A In the middle, starting, "In Ohio"?

Q "In Ohio," correct.

A And starting at the beginning?

Q And not read it aloud. I just want you to read it and familiarize yourself with it.

A Oh. Sure. I was going to put on my best reading voice.

Q Are you ready to continue?

A Sure.

Q So the very first two sentences describe a letter mailed to a school board member. And it says, "We are coming after you and all the members on the Board of Education." It continues, "You are forcing them to wear masks for no reason in this world other than control, and for that you will pay dearly."

Now, if that threat was mailed across State lines -- and I know we don't have that information here, but if that threat was actually sent across State lines, could that potentially meet the statutory definition of 18 U.S.C. 875?

A So a little more particular than that. If it used the U.S. postal system, there is potential for Federal violations there, to include 875.

There is still the Brandenburg test that has to be applied. It's a Supreme Court case, Brandenburg v. Ohio. And that's where we have to assess whether it's a true threat or a mere advocacy of violence. And so, while somebody might've felt threatened by this, it does not automatically imply that it's a true threat. And that's a determination that has to be made.

Q And you would make that -- you would look into it further, correct, to look into that?

A If we received this, there would be an obligation to look into it either at our level or with State and local partners.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with 18 U.S.C. 245?

A Yes, but I would need to be reminded of what it is.

Q It's violent interference with federally protected rights.

A Okay.

Q And I think -- so subsection (e) says -- sorry. Whoever, whether or not -- sorry. 18 U.S.C. 245, small section (b): Whoever, whether or not acting under color of law, by force, or threat of force, willfully injures, intimidates, or interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate, or interfere with any person because he is or has been, in order to intimidate such person or any other person or any class of persons from" -- and then this is subsection large letter (E) -- "participating in or enjoying the benefits of any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Does that generally track with your understanding?

A Yes. I believe, in summary, it's our color-of-law --

Q Correct.

A -- statute. Somebody acting in their official capacity who violates somebody else's rights.

[redacted]. Or not under color of law.

BY [redacted]:

Q Or not -- not in official capacity. It just says anyone --

A Under color of law.

Q Right. Anyone acting -- yeah.

So, on page 3 of this letter, the bottom paragraph says, "An individual was arrested in Illinois for aggravated battery and disorderly conduct during a school board meeting."

Would you agree that that's a violent action, just based on the face of it, realizing you don't -- it could be a violent action?

A It has potential to be, yes.

Q Okay. And if that interfered with the exercise of individuals' rights at a school board meeting, could that, in fact, implicate 18 U.S.C. 245?

A I'd -- I'd be hesitant.

Q Okay.

A Because color-of-law violations require higher level, we usually engage with civil rights attorneys at DOJ --

Q Okay.

A -- to ensure that the application of that statute in particular, as well as hate crime statutes, are appropriately applied.

Q So you'd need to look into it further?

A I would need to look into it further.

Q But it could warrant further investigation --

A It would be a conversation, without a doubt.

Q Okay. I'm sorry, could you say that again?

A It would be a conversation with DOJ attorneys of what statutes would apply.

Q Okay.

And then, on the next page, on page 4, it says, "In Virginia, an individual was arrested and another man ticketed for trespassing and a third person was hurt during a school board meeting discussion distinguishing current curricula from critical race theory and regarding equity issues."

If an individual was hurt -- realizing there's not a lot of information here, but if an individual was hurt, you know, due to the fault of another, that potentially could be an act of violence, correct?

A It could be.

Q And, again, that could be something that implicated section 245? We don't have enough information here, but it could be?

A It's possible. I mean, one of the issues I see here is it references arrests, which are allegations from the incident that occurred, right? I mean, without the specific details, to your point, it's hard to determine what assessment would be made beyond that.

Typically, if it's handled at the State and local level, there wouldn't be a need for further review by us --

Q Understood.

A -- because the situation was remedied, appropriately charged, and then ultimately charges from a district or State's attorney would be levied.

And so it's hard to review this and say anything beyond what the black-and-white is.

Q Okay.

If you look at footnote 19 on that page, on page 4 -- and, again, there's not a ton of information here, but the subject of the -- it cites to an article, and the article is entitled "If you give one more shot," which I believe refers to a COVID shot, "you yourself will be executed."

Would that potentially qualify as a true threat?

A So the words that are used -- and this is where it gets really difficult, and we often have contentious discussions with people about this, right?

Mere advocacy for violence -- "you yourself will be executed," it's a threat, right? But is it somebody who's saying, "It's going to happen," versus them saying, "I'm going to do this"? Right? That would be more of the action verbs, "I'm going to do this," true threat, versus, "It's going to happen at some point" --

Q Right.

A -- right? "People are talking about it. I'm in favor of it, but I'm not willing to do it myself."

We get these a lot inside the FBI, and determining what is a true threat versus what is people --

Q Right.

A -- for lack of a better term, blowing off steam. And I don't, by any means, condone this behavior.

Q Uh-huh.

A But this statement, if it was received by the FBI, would warrant further, but it would probably be handled by the Criminal Investigative Division for potential threats.

Q Right. But it would get -- it would get a -- it would get a second look, correct?

A It would be reviewed -- if we received it in our system, it would be reviewed and then probably handed off to the appropriate State or local agency. After that, I couldn't tell you whether agents would go out and participate.

Q Right.

A It depends on the threat matrix and what they're looking at.

Q Okay. But it wouldn't be improper for you to look into it and see if it was, you know, an actual true threat, to see if there was a "there" there?

A In fact, if we received it, we have an obligation to look at it and --

Q And why is that?

A -- to action it.

Because once we receive the information and it implies potential threatening communications or it implies a potential violation of State or Federal law, we have to make sure we get it in the hands of the people who can action that. Even if it means it's closed because it doesn't represent a threat --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- at least it was handled appropriately and we're not sitting on potential threatening communications.

Q Thank you.

I want to turn to the discussion of threat tags that we had earlier. I think we started it near the end of the last hour.

Can you generally explain what a threat tag is?

A The term "threat tag" I think is often misconstrued. It's a tag in a system of record when we receive information in order to track that information.

And, in this case, the threat tag implies complaints, tips, allegations from the general public, the private sector, about, in particular, threats directed at public officials, school board meetings in general, or any officials involved in the business operations of school boards, of education.

And it's attached to the threat, the various types of threats that could come into the FBI. It doesn't attach to a specific group or a specific individual. The key there is, we're not tracking one group or one association or a general group of people, targeting a subset of society.

We're responsible for the threat information that we receive as an agency and, in this case, how much have we received. And a tag in a system that we can do a quick grab from, a quick keyword search or, through an algorithm, pull that information very quickly and see a snapshot in time across all 56 field offices --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- how much information did we actually receive relative to this particular event.

And it's a very common tool used around special events where -- we know the Super Bowl is going to happen every year. It's a multiagency event. It usually receives a high threat rating from the Secret Service and others, DHS, and requires a unified presence. And we are, domestically, one of the agencies that will receive domestic threats, and we want to make sure we're sharing that as early as possible so that the security posture can be appropriate.

Creating a tag in advance of that event allows us to take information and say, these are the types of threats that we're seeing across the United States related to that specific event, even though the event hasn't occurred yet. It's preparatory.

Q Okay. So is it fair to say that the purpose of a tag is to help scope something?

A In some cases, yes.

Q And, in this case, the purpose was to scope the threat of -- scope the size of the threat against education officials. Is that fair to say?

A That was definitely the intent.

Q Okay. And the purpose of scoping -- just to break this down, the purpose of scoping is to assess whether there is something for FBI to do, correct?

A In part, yes.

Q Okay. So, in this case, Kevin Chambers, DOJ, contacted you. He said that most of these incidents appear to be State and local, correct?

A It's a summary, but yes.

Q And then -- but can you scope this, effectively, and see if there is something for Federal engagement?

A Yes, in summary.

Q Okay.

When the "EDUOFFICIALS" threat tag was created, do you know if it was applied retroactively?

A It wouldn't surprise me if it was. I think, given the nature of our organization and the diligence of our intelligence cadre, if there was a pre-created Guardian, a threat that came in, that would apply to that tag.

And in the system, when a new tag is created, there will be a banner in our system of record that will say: This tag exists. If you see this, it should apply.

And so, as there's a periodic review, I could see our intel cadre applying it retroactively. But it would probably be very limited, given that only a little more than 20 total Guardians existed.

Q Uh-huh.

I want to introduce a March 1st letter from FBI's Office of Congressional Affairs to Mr. Jordan. We'll mark this as exhibit 4.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And I'll give you a minute to look this over if you've not seen it before.

A I see they used the Super Bowl example also.

Q Ready to continue?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay.

So footnote 2, which is on the bottom of page 2, so the lead-in to that, the sentence in the actual body of the text says that, between October 14, 2021, and January 2023, approximately 25 Guardians received the "EDUOFFICIALS" tag, based on the information reported to the FBI.

And then the footnote number 2 says: In addition, four Guardians that were open in advance of the Attorney General's memorandum subsequently received the "EDUOFFICIALS" tag.

So, looking at the four Guardians that were open in advance of the Attorney General's memorandum, if they were open before the memorandum ever got issued, the memorandum couldn't have been the impetus for people reporting those threats to NTOC, correct?

A That would stand to reason.

Q Okay.

Do you know the extent of FBI's look-back to determine how many prior Guardians or how many prior threats had been called in that might need to be applied -- that the "EDUOFFICIALS" tag would be appropriate for?

A I don't.

Q Okay. So there actually might have been even more than four, because we don't know how far back the look-back was, correct?

A I honestly couldn't answer that.

Q Okay. And so it's entirely possible that there were more tips; we just don't know that. Is that fair?

A It is possible, but, again, I don't know. We didn't, while I was there, conduct a retroactive review, and the threat tag hadn't been created while --

Q Right.

A -- in my remaining days there.

Q Right. And so you left before -- you left mid-October, you said?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. So you wouldn't know.

A That's correct.

Q We don't have that information, yeah.

A I just --

Q Okay.

The March 1st letter from the Office of Congressional Affairs says, in the last paragraph -- I'm sorry, the last sentence of the second paragraph on page 2, it says, "The purpose of the tag was to help the FBI understand the scope of reported threats against school officials on a national level and to provide an opportunity for a comprehensive analysis of the threat picture for effective engagement of law enforcement partners at all levels."

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you agree with that statement?

A I do.

Q And is that an accurate explanation of the threat tag's purpose?

A Yes.

Q And so why is it important for the FBI to understand the scope of the threat?

A Well, I think there's multiple reasons that's important.

One, and not the primary, but it's in response to the request from DOJ to help put in context this issue; I think it was referred to as a "spate of threats" against school boards. Can we put in context, from our holdings and in coordination with State and local officials, how much are we actually seeing across the Nation. And I think, with that tag, we were uniquely positioned to do that in a system and in a structure that already existed.

Also, in the summer of 2020, our own eyes could tell us that there was a need to surge resources towards a growing threat of civil unrest, civil disturbances, riot activities, and directed violence against police officers, Federal agents, and Federal facilities. Without that specific information, collecting information to help us scope the problem would help us determine, do we need additional resources in specific areas? And in the whole of the country this might not be a problem, but in a particular area of the country we might see a need to surge some resources to support State and locals or to support a local field office.

So that's a secondary part of scoping. Where does the problem exist, and how do we address it?

And then, third, grabbing that information from our system as the complaints are coming in and being able to ascertain very quickly, are these threats that are reported to us, one, credible; two, implicating a potential Federal violation, giving us a nexus to either engage on our own authorities or participate with State and locals.

And I think later in the letter it describes the number. Seventeen of them were Criminal Investigative. The majority of them were sent to State and local partners. And only one resulted in an FBI investigation. So it did help accomplish those objectives.

Q Okay.

And, actually, the language of that sentence that I read earlier, in that second paragraph on the second page, I want to look at that language, "law enforcement partners at all levels."

Is that "at all levels" a reference to State and local law enforcement, do you believe?

A It would include it.

Q Uh-huh.

A And I think it's an easier way of saying what we typically say in the Bureau, which is "State, local, Federal, and Tribal partners."

Q Okay. So it's just a shorter way to --

A A shorter way.

Q Okay. So part of the goal here was to ensure that you could effectively aid State and locals in their work. Is that fair to say?

A Can you restate that?

Q Was part of the goal of the threat tag and of scoping to ensure that if State and local authorities needed more resources or needed assistance from you, you knew that, and you could direct the resources appropriately?

A Yes. I think it's a good distinction of, we can't fully provide resources to State and local partners; we can provide assistance, and usually of a technical nature or an investigative nature, where we can apply a Federal nexus, right? That does help us scope that.

Q Okay.

There have been allegations that the FBI was using the threat tag to, quote, "tag" parents as domestic terrorists. Have you heard these allegations?

A I've heard it in the media.

Q Okay. So, to your knowledge -- sorry.

Are tags applied to people, or to investigations and to cases?

A So, in this case in particular, these tags are applied before investigations are opened up, oftentimes irrespective of a known subject.

Q Right.

A It's applied to a threat.

Q Okay.

A And it doesn't attach to the tipster, and it doesn't attach if a named subject or a potential suspect is listed. It attaches to the type of threat that came in.

Q Okay. And you said sometimes you might not even know the subject, because you're trying to figure that out through your investigation.

A There are many ways that a subject could be anonymous. Social media platforms often provide a screen-handle but not the actual identity of the subject.

Q Right.

I want to look at the October 4th memo itself, because I think we've talked a lot about it but we've not gone -- we haven't introduced it, we haven't set eyes on it yet. So I want to turn to that.

And we'll introduce that as exhibit 5.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And let me know when you've had a minute to look it over.

A All set.

Q Okay.

So we discussed earlier an exchange of emails and some conversations that took place before this memo was issued. Do you recall if, in those emails, there was ever a reference to parents?

A I don't recall that.

Q Okay. Do you know if disruptions at school board meetings were mentioned in the emails?

A Not -- not specifically, but without the emails, I don't want to understate or overstate what I recall.

Q Understand. And I'm hopeful that we'll get those emails. But, right now, you don't recall that language being in there?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

Looking at the text of this memo itself, is there any reference to parents in here?

A In my quick review of it, having just read it, I don't see specific verbiage about parents.

Q And can you take a look and let me know if you see anything at all in here about school board meetings?

A I don't see that.

Q Okay. And so there's actually no reference in here to disruptions at school board meetings either, correct?

A I don't see that either.

Q Okay. Now, the memo does use the word "threats," correct?

A It does.

Q And it says -- it also uses reference to actual violence, right?

A It references threats of violence --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- two times that I see in the first paragraph, the second sentence and last sentence.

Q And it also references the Department being steadfast in protecting the people of the United States from actual violence. It says "violence," not "actual violence," but --

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So is it fair to say that the focus of this memo is actually on threats? It's not on who's making the threats; it's on the actual existence of the threats, correct?

A So it is on threats directed against certain officials.

Q Uh-huh.

A But it is specific about violent threats that run counter, according to the verbiage here, and are illegal.

Q Yep. And it specifically says those threats that are made against not just -- it says school board members, but it also says school administrators and teachers and staff as well, correct?

A It does.

Q Okay. So it's not even just limited to school board members; it's education officials writ large?

A That's how it reads.

Q Okay.

I want to look at the very first paragraph here. The very first sentence of this paragraph references harassment, intimidation, and threats of violence against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff, correct?

A Yes.

Q And, again, this paragraph doesn't say anything about school board meetings at all, right?

A It does not.

Q The last sentence of this paragraph notes that, "while spirited debate about policy matters is protected under our Constitution, that protection does not extend to threats of violence or efforts to intimidate individuals based on their views."

Do you understand the phrase "spirited debate about policy matters is protected under our Constitution" to be a reference to the First Amendment protections?

A That is how I read it also.

Q Okay. In your experience, does the FBI take First Amendment protections fairly seriously?

A Very seriously.

Q Do you want to say anything more about that?

A I've already stated that, especially in domestic terrorism investigations, we start with legal caveats that specifically address: We do not open investigations based solely on First Amendment-protected activity.

We often go further in our threat assessment and make an assumption that U.S. citizens are exercising First Amendment rights and apply that Brandenburg test to determine, is it violating the law in that speech? And that's a requirement based on Supreme Court case law.

Q Okay.

That sentence continues, though, "That protection does not extend to threats of violence or efforts to intimidate individuals based on their views," right?

A That's what it says.

Q And is it accurate that the First Amendment does not protect true threats of violence or actual violence?

A It does not.

Q Okay. So if somebody says, "I am going to kill you tomorrow," that's a true threat, right?

A It could be a true threat.

Q And that would not be protected by the First Amendment?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

And, actually, if these threats are being issued against people, such as teachers or educators, because they are expressing their views, wouldn't those threats actually be infringing on --

A Could we go back?

Q Sure.

A I apologize. So the hypothetical, "I'm going to kill you tomorrow," it's not an uncommon one, right, especially in the workplace. And coworkers get angry at each other and will often say, "I could kill you," right, or, "I'm so angry, I could do X to you," right?

Q Right.

A That person who received that perceives a threat.

One of the determinations of local law enforcement -- I can speak to that because I was one -- is the ability to carry out that threat. Were they truly angry with intent to carry out that threat? Action verbs.

Q Uh-huh.

A Versus a statement uttered -- I don't want to say "under duress," but -- in the heat of the moment that there was no intention behind.

Q Uh-huh.

A And that is part of the analysis of a true threat. And it's very tricky, right?

So I don't want to simplify too much by answering your question directly --

Q I understand.

A -- but I want to put it in context of, yes, on its face, but there is -- there's the human element to this --

Q Right.

A -- right? And I just want to make sure that, in all of these instances, our agents and local law enforcement are making those determinations.

Q Right. But it's not improper for them, if those words were issued or something along those lines, to at least look into it to see if there is the ability to carry out that threat, correct?

A I think, once we receive from the offended party, the harassed person, the victim who felt like they were threatened, we have an obligation to look into it to ensure that it is not a true threat, right? And where it is, to take action appropriately to mitigate that threat.

Q Because you're obligated to investigate all threats to life, correct?

A We serve U.S. citizens and, in particular, victims, trying to prevent victims of crimes.

And I'm sorry, I threw you off your question, but I felt that was important.

Q No, you're fine.

I want to move on to the fourth paragraph of this memo. It says, "Coordination and partnership with local law enforcement is critical to implementing these measures for the benefit of our nation's nearly 14,000 public school districts. To this end, I am directing the Federal Bureau of Investigation, working with each United States Attorney, to convene meetings with federal, state, local, tribal, and territorial leaders in each federal judicial district within 30 days of the issuance of this memorandum. These meetings will facilitate the discussion of strategies for addressing threats against school administrators, board members, teachers, and staff, and will open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response."

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q Okay. So this paragraph directs the FBI, working with the United States Attorney's Office, to meet with various State and local leaders, correct?

A It does.

Q Okay. And the stated purpose is to facilitate discussion with them and to open lines of communication?

A Yes.

Q Is it common for the FBI to work together with State, local, Tribal, and territorial partners on matters?

A It is integral to how we operate.

Q Okay. Can you explain what you mean by "integral to how you operate"?

A So, not only do we operate numerous -- I think it's over 400 -- joint terrorism task forces on the threat against terrorism, both domestic and international, we operate counterintelligence task forces and cyber task forces and violent crime task forces, organized crime task forces. I mean, if we're working a violation, there's probably a task force that includes State and local law enforcement participation.

There's a quote on one of our walls at the Hoover Building that says, "The greatest tool in combating crime is cooperation." Right? And that is a principle of how the FBI operates. Our greatest partners are our State and local law enforcement partners.

Q And you referenced task forces. Does the FBI also engage with State and locals outside of task forces?

A We do.

Q And can you say anything about that?

A Routinely.

We hold coordination meetings with our State and local partners. In my capacity as a special agent in charge, I attend sheriff's meetings and I attend meetings of all of the, like, Federal agency heads or State and local law enforcement heads where they're talking about crime problems, they're talking about community engagement issues, and how can law enforcement engage together to better serve their community. And so those are forward-looking or responsive to a growing crime trend, in addition to the engagement on task forces.

Q Okay.

How often do you think -- in your role as special agent in charge, how often do you think you meet with State and local entities?

A They would say not enough. But most sheriffs run a monthly meeting.

Q Okay.

A And then various other entities have also monthly meetings.

And being able to engage, that's where delegation comes in. So, at all levels of -- my field office, in particular, we will assign people to attend different meetings so we're represented, so they know the FBI is engaged, we're part of that community.

Q Uh-huh.

A We're engaged not to overstep our authority and do what the State and local cops should be doing, but to engage with them when it should rise to a Federal investigation.

Q Okay.

A And then also just being good partners with them, addressing crimes that have already occurred, and communicating to the community in a unified response that their local law enforcement is together on this.

Q Okay.

A And very important to do that.

[12:11 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. So if there's nothing unusual -- and, in fact, it's pretty common for you to meet with State and local entities?

A It is.

Q And it's beneficial to them, it sounds like?

A It's beneficial to us as well.

Q Okay. The memorandum finishes off with the line, the Department is steadfast in its commitment to protect all people in the United States from violence, threats of violence, and other forms of intimidation and harassment. Do you see that?

A I do.

Q Do you agree that it's part of the FBI's mission to protect all people in the United States from violence and threats of violence and other forms of intimidation and harassment?

A I do. And we often say our mission is dual and simultaneous to uphold the Constitution and protect the American people.

Q And what does that mean to you?

A It means we have a no-fail mission on both fronts, always uphold the Constitution, without exception, and proactively protect the United States citizenry. And you can't sacrifice one for the other.

Q Okay. There was some discussion earlier that you said you had expressed -- in your conversations prior to October 4th, so October 1st, the email and maybe a couple phone calls after that, you had expressed concern about the use of the term, "domestic terrorism" with respect to the discussion about threats to school officials. Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q Does this memorandum reference domestic terrorism at all?

A It does not.

Q Okay. So to the extent you expressed concerns, I don't know what the memorandum looked like before, but those -- it appears that that was either taken into account or maybe it was never -- they never intended to -- you -- reference domestic terrorism at all, correct?

A My conversation about the use of the term "domestic terrorism" was with one line assistant over --

Q Right.

A -- I shouldn't say line assistant, a DOJ attorney NCTS.

Q Understood.

A I couldn't speak to what broader intention was versus what was pushed out. I can only speak to what was actually pushed out.

Q And what was pushed out does not use the --

A A memo -- I'm sorry. I thought that was a question.

Q And what was pushed out does not use the term "domestic terrorism," right?

A It does not.

Q And it actually doesn't say anything about all about operations. It just says, We're directing meetings?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I want to turn to the press release that accompanied this. Have you seen that before?

A I think I saw it when it came out.

Q Okay. We'll introduce that as exhibit No. 6. And I'll give you a minute to review it as well, and let me know when you're good to continue.

[Pause.]

[Jensen Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. Are you good to continue?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So I want to look at -- so, sorry, before we look at specific paragraphs, there's nothing in this memo that says anything about parents, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And it doesn't reference either school board meetings or disruptions at school board meetings, correct?

A It talks about school board members, but it does not use those terms you referenced.

Q Okay. So it doesn't -- it's not about school board -- disruptions at school boards, it's about threats. Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q And those threats could be conveyed through the mail. They could be conveyed in person. It's not specified here.

A It doesn't opine on the types of threats, just threats of violence.

Q Okay. And the first paragraph here discusses -- it references the direction for the FBI and U.S. Attorneys' Offices to meet with Federal and State and -- sorry, State, Tribal, territorial, and local law enforcement, right?

A It does.

Q And it says to open dedicated lines of communication for threat reporting, assessment, and response, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then that's echoed again in the third paragraph, right? That also talks about holding meetings?

A I believe it does.

Q So -- and it says that part of the purpose is to discuss ways to assist State and local -- State, Tribal, territorial, and local law enforcement, correct?

A It says that.

Q And it says, ways to assist State, Tribal, territorial, and local law enforcement where threats of violence may not constitute Federal crimes, correct?

A Yes.

Q So, again, one of the primary purposes of these meetings was to contact State and local law enforcement and ensure that they had what they needed from the Federal government, correct?

A Yes.

Q Again, there's -- there's no reference in here at all to domestic terrorism, correct?

A No, there's not.

Q Okay. So whatever discussion there was about domestic terrorism shouldn't be mentioned in here, there's no reference to domestic terrorism in here?

A There is not.

Q Okay. At the bottom paragraph, the -- the press release references the National Threat Operations Center via its national tip line and online through the FBI website. Are you familiar with the National Threat Operations Center?

A I am.

Q What does it do?

A It does exactly what's described here. It's -- it's established a 24/7 tip line for the public and others to provide information to the FBI about potential crimes, and then it serves as a -- it serves as a center to dispatch credible threats or threats that require additional review. And I use that term "threats" very, very broadly right now. Tips and complaints are probably a better way of describing.

When NTOC receives a tip or a complaint, they'll gather as much information as they possibly can, and then they'll ship that tip or complaint out to the responsive field office, either based on where the complainant is located, or if they can resolve where a potential subject might be located. And then there's additional review that's required at the field office level.

Q And do tips that come into NTOC sometimes also get sent straight to State and local law enforcement?

A They do.

Q And can you say anything about that?

A That that was a recent addition to NTOC's capabilities in the last 5 years or so, to engage State and local law enforcement through a portal to provide real-time tips, so there was no delay of getting the information to the person best to actuate those threats.

Q And I think you used the term earlier of NTOC acting as a "clearinghouse." Do you recall that?

A It was a term used initially by DOJ, can the FBI serve as a clearinghouse for these tips.

Q Okay. And in your opinion, NTOC would've been the proper entity to potentially do that?

A It's already -- yes, it's already established to intake large volumes of tips and complaints and provide it out or disseminate it out to the responsible parties.

Q Okay. And so this press release actually references NTOC, correct?

A It does.

Q And it directs people to go to NTOC?

A It does, with any information it might have, responsive to this.

Q Okay. Do you agree that NTOC provides the FBI with an essential service?

A I do agree.

Q And why is that?

A It serves as a conduit between either concerned citizens, aggrieved parties, potential victims of providing information on a day-to-day basis of potential actionable information. And we do that through the 1-800-CALL-FBI, and also through the tip line that's set up for email communications or online tips.

Q Okay.

A But more specifically, where I found tremendous value in them is the ability to cull through during specific critical incident responses, volumes and volumes of tips from the public, whether it's social media grabs or video taken from bystanders or others who had information, providing that to the FBI in a condensed way that can be used to further an investigation.

Q Okay. In your experience, do tips received through NTOC sometimes help to prevent crimes from occurring?

A They do.

Q Do you have any examples of that?

A Preventing crimes, off the top of my head, not prepared for that. They're numerous, but a specific example I couldn't. A more recent example, I think because it was public, NTOC received a tip about the location of the alleged shooter from Houston, who allegedly killed five people in the neighbor's house. He was on the run. Law enforcement was largely looking for him, big man hunt. And a tip that came through the NTOC line helped identify the location and resulted in his successful arrest.

I think that's an example of a win, potentially preventing future violence by that subject, definitely eliminating a threat to society while he's on the run, but helping us further an investigation.

[redacted]. Okay. We're out of time so we can go off the record. Thank you.

[redacted]. It's 12:29. We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q So throughout the interview you've discussed some of the civil unrest and the rise in threats against police officers during the summer of 2020 that kind of required a surge in resources. And you were section chief at that time of domestic terrorism?

A I was.

Q And so, in that position as section chief, what kind of rise in threats against law enforcement were you seeing?

A So there's general threats online reported, you know, through some of our partner agencies, seeing it on social media accounts. And then there were specific in-person threats against law enforcement, what some described as standoffs, although not necessarily a traditional standoff.

There was a time when we saw protest activity in State capitals of being ascribing to a Second Amendment philosophy, right, in favor of Second Amendment rights, and showing up to State capitals armed. It was concerning to some of our State and local partners. In most cases, it was well within State laws, you know, no violations were observed in those protests, but increased rhetoric about enforcement activities from State and local law enforcement, and then in certain cases, threats in online platforms directed against law enforcement.

In specific instances during civil unrest where riots occurred after police protected activities, right, so maybe protests during the day, but at night in Portland, almost every night, we saw riots. A lot of the animosity and direct violent activity was first against the police department in Portland, their headquarters, and then against other government facilities to include the Federal courthouse in Portland.

Direct attacks on law enforcement officers, regardless of who they were with, with launchable commercial grade fireworks directed at law enforcement personnel, the use of green lasers into the eyes of law enforcement personnel, in addition to Molotov cocktails being thrown, not only at law enforcement vehicles, but at law enforcement buildings where it was occupied by law enforcement personnel, both sworn law enforcement and civilian law enforcement. It was indiscriminate.

We also saw, in Minneapolis, directed action against the Third Precinct of the Minneapolis Police Department where it was subject to arson, and the police department was, in one description, almost overwhelmed. Thirty rounds from an AK-47 were fired at that building while it was occupied, and while police officers were trying to help rescue a rioter who succumbed to injuries because of the riot.

So lots of activity directed not only against law enforcement, against private sector companies, rampant crime occurring on the streets of multiple cities, which necessitated both a surge of personnel inside of headquarters under my section, but also to field offices to support ongoing investigations related to that activity. Where we could get Federal prosecution, we sought Federal prosecution; where we could collect evidence in furtherance of investigation and get it to our laboratory for processing we did; and where we could just provide assistance to the State and locals to maintain order to the best of their abilities, we did that as well.

Q And you've discussed Minneapolis and Portland as areas where you needed to surge resources. Were there other areas?

A There were. Louisville stands out to me. I had numerous conversations with the then-SAC at the time. That was not only in response to riot activities anticipating outcomes from a high-profile investigation that was occurring at the State level, but also in Rochester, New York, in Kenosha, Wisconsin, and then in various other cities.

And then that's not to negate direct activity that was occurring in places like Phoenix where we proactively identified a small group of individuals who were targeting electric grid infrastructure and intended to blow it up. And so we still had our proactive investigations and a responsibility to be diligent on those to prevent actions, and in some cases, terrorist actions, plots from occurring while responding to unprecedented -- and I know that term is used often to describe 2020, but violence in the streets of our city.

Q And in your role as section chief of the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section, what was the Federal nexus there for some of the unrest in like Portland, in Minneapolis?

A So there's a statute, that -- it's an antiriot statute. I believe it's 18 USC 2101. It was contested in one of the districts. There was a charge at one time and it was before the court, and so it wasn't an often-charged statute at that time pending the decision of that court, of whether the language in that statute was constitutional or not. But it still allowed us, because it's a statute on the books, lawful authority to investigate individuals who crossed State lines in furtherance of riot activities, or used a facility in interstate commerce to engage in riot activities.

So that was one way. Molotov cocktails by nature are against Federal law, possession of them, creating them, or using them to cause arson. I should note, other agencies have primary jurisdiction over certain crimes to include arson, and that was partnering with the Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, and Explosives Agency. I believe they actually had the lead on the Minneapolis Third Precinct arson.

It was a unified approach across DOJ components as well as some of our other partners in other branches of the Federal government to provide support in response to those riots. And in cases where we didn't have Federal authority, it was providing support either through our laboratory or, in some cases, providing our -- like in Kenosha, I know for a fact we used our SWAT vehicle to use -- to move into a hostile area and recover some of the local police officers to protect them during those riot activities. Their own agency couldn't get to them so we did.

We used every lawful authority that we had to support our State and locals and investigate crimes that rose to a Federal level.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know how many crimes were investigated?

A I'm sorry?

Q Do you know how many -- what the number of crimes investigated in the summer of 2020?

A No. And there was an effort -- a request, and I can't remember who gave it, to try and -- and codify that. And the sheer volume from NYPD alone, we couldn't codify it on a nightly basis.

Q Right.

A We didn't keep track of State and local records. We did keep track of the surge of open investigations internal to the FBI. And I can tell you, I think from public testimony of the director at the time, it was more than 500 domestic terrorism-related cases were opened, in addition to --

Q Do you know how many prosecutions?

A I don't. I mean, the last time I looked at those numbers, I think it was more than 60, but a lot of those cases were ongoing pending evidence review and waiting for judicial process.

Q Right. And why do you think -- and these incidents were happening all over the country --

A They were.

Q -- especially out west at some of the Federal courthouses and other Federal properties.

A Uh-huh.

Q Why do you think the events of January 6th received so much more attention? And you know, there's obviously more than 60 prosecutions for January 6th.

A It's a great question. And there's a number, if I can walk through it. A lot of the -- the issues we faced, Portland as a prime example, a lot of the later riot activity was directed against the Federal courthouse in Portland. But what we saw in the nights during those riots was large-scale, what used to be called black-block protest activity. That's individuals dressed in black gear from head to toe, obfuscating their face.

We saw them starting to use umbrella shields. Individuals behind those umbrella shields, or umbrella walls, would launch these fireworks into the Federal facility, and they were occluded from either the surveillance cameras that had already been damaged, or the ones that were replaced were damaged in the process, but under cover of darkness, cover of black, full, head-to-toe gear, obfuscating their identities, and so making it very difficult to attribute a particular subject to the crime that was committed.

So a case opened up, trying to resolve it, and really good police work with our State and locals in many areas to identify subjects responsible for those activities, but very complicated work.

Mr. Gaetz. Is geofencing one mechanism to resolve who was in a particular area?

Mr. Jensen. It could be. Geofence, through lawful means, getting a warrant to establish a geofence with particular parameters of why we would do that.

Mr. Gaetz. That happened --

Mr. Jensen. It could be used --

Mr. Gaetz. That happened on January 6th, correct?

Mr. Jensen. It did.

Mr. Gaetz. So if you could geofence the D.C. area on -- as a consequence of the January 6th investigations, why couldn't one geofence the area around the Portland courthouse?

Mr. Jensen. It's a good question, and it could be done. I don't know if it was done.

Mr. Gaetz. If it wasn't done, doesn't that seem to indicate disparate utilization of tools for a riot event?

Mr. Jensen. It's one conclusion that could be drawn. There could be a number of other reasons why a tool was or wasn't used, and I -- I can't speak to it because I don't know if it was used. I wasn't briefed on it. And I don't know, of the vast array of tools and number of investigations that were conducted, whether that tool was implemented or not.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Well, I'm sorry, I didn't know if in response to Mr. Castor's question you wanted to give other basis other than the black block protest feature as to why the riots in summer of 2020 were treated differently than the riot on January 6th.

Mr. Jensen. So I want to be careful about adding any credence to -- from my perspective, that we treated them differently. There was a --

Mr. Gaetz. We just went over one way you treated them differently. You used a geofence in one and not the other.

Mr. Jensen. Well, it's a tool that's available based on an affidavit submitted before a judge to establish probable cause that that tool can be used. It doesn't mean in all cases it should be used, and I can't speak to whether or not they did use it.

Mr. Gaetz. What are the reasons why geofencing should not have been used in Portland or in Minneapolis surrounding the riots events there close to the Federal property? List those reasons.

Mr. Jensen. I don't know that I could at this juncture.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. So back to Mr. Castor's question, what, other than the black block protest dynamic of the 2020 riots, would serve as a basis for disparate treatment?

Mr. Jensen. So, again, I don't know that there was disparate treatment in how we conducted or opened investigations. We pursued --

Mr. Gaetz. Well, we just went over it. Don't --

Mr. Jensen. -- logical investigations where we had a Federal nexus, where tools or implements rose to the level of Federal investigative activity. There were a lot of crimes committed, and I wish there was a broad brush that could've been used to arrest people that were committing those crimes, specifically against local law enforcement that didn't have the tools to do that and suffered grievous injuries during many of those nights.

BY [redacted]:

Q But you'd agree that 60 prosecutions over the course of the entire, you know, summer of 2020 --

A At the Federal level.

Q At the Federal level.

A Yes.

Q I mean, there were incidents in Portland all over the country, in Philadelphia, in New York, in Washington, D.C., and 60 Federal cases compared to what happened on, you know, January 6th.

A So --

Q It's just a remarkable discrepancies.

A So one major difference is everything that occurred on January 6th happened on Federal property in a Federal-protected area. Typically, crimes committed there would be investigated by the U.S. Capitol Police, whether it's against Members of Congress, or on the property itself. U.S. Capitol Police was largely overwhelmed and, in some cases, the victim of that very event, and so the FBI came in to conduct those investigations.

But everything that occurred in this building was, in fact, a Federal crime. It happened during daylight, which is one difference, but it also happened with people who didn't obfuscate their identities. Many of them posted on social media their presence inside the Capitol and were captured on internal surveillance cameras of the U.S. Capitol Building. But we started with the premise that everybody who entered the Capitol was trespassing and is in violation of Federal law.

Q Do you think the incidents that happened --

A I'm sorry, could I make one --

Q Of course.

A -- clarification? My recollection of 60 prosecutions is a moment in time, right. That was from one of the briefings I had conducted shortly after the new fiscal year, October 1 of 2021, right. And so, that's a number that stands out to me. I hope that number has grown since then. But overwhelmingly, the number of cases that we opened were also jointly worked with State and locals and led to State prosecutions.

And I don't have those numbers in front of me, but State venue often served as a viable venue to prosecute these cases. Although using Federal investigative tools or laboratory resources to identify these subjects, we did get them prosecuted through the State system.

Q Right. A lot of the riots that happened happened on television --

A It did.

Q -- in the summer of 2020. And so it just seems that with the use of video technology, you'd come up with more than 60 cases if --

A So we did have more than 60 cases.

Q No, 60 prosecutions, I'm sorry.

A Right. And I wish I had the number of our investigative activities that led to State and local prosecutions --

Q Right.

A -- but I don't have that number.

Q Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. I want to better understand how Washington communicated with field offices around the country during these riots in the summer of 2020. Can you give us an understanding of just how that communication occurred? Was it through emailed bulletins, regular conference calls? Help us understand.

Mr. Jensen. So it was both. And in some cases, there were joint communications secure teleconferences that were conducted with myself, weapons of mass destruction directorate. Because of the implications of the use of Molotov cocktails and the fireworks, they had an investigative equity there and then criminal investigative division.

There were -- in those coordination calls, or SVTC, as we describe them, we would provide guidance of this is what we're seeing as field offices are reporting to us. We typically had a running command post at the Strategic Information and Operations Center, or NCCC as it's called now, National Communication and Coordination Center. It's a headquarters command post to funnel all information from the field for a standard operating picture.

And field offices that had their own command post would feed into that for what threats are they seeing, and then there were a couple means or mechanisms by providing information back to the field, one was the SVTC. This is what we're seeing, specific direction from counterterrorism, specific direction for WMD and CID cases, addressing any issues that might have been brought to our attention.

And the rapidity of those, or repeatability of those was probably a biweekly call, so it was more as-needed to address specific changes in strategy, or nuances of a new city facing issues.

Mr. Gaetz. When you say biweekly, you mean every other week?

Mr. Jensen. Every other week, sir. That's to the best of my recollection. We had daily coordination with SACs and ASACs that knew they were going to have more riots that night, and what did we learn from this field office who just had it last night, how can they better prepare, and we would share best practices prepositioning agents at detention facilities, when State and locals were arresting people, will they voluntarily submit to interviews and provide us information about coordination activities or why they were there, where did they travel from, answering some of those investigative questions.

And so as we learned from one city, we would share that across the multiple cities and field offices so that they could be better prepared and then inform their State and local partners of how to better prepare and hopefully prevent some of the actions that we saw early on in Portland from manifesting in these other districts.

Mr. Gaetz. Other than the tactical features that you just described, was there a feature of these teleconferences that outlined the doctrine for determining a Federal nexus to charge someone, for example, whether that be harm to a Federal law enforcement officer, damage to a Federal building? I mean, was that part of the directive, the charging doctrine?

Mr. Jensen. So not a directive but guidance.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

Mr. Jensen. And I know it's nuance, but --

Mr. Gaetz. No, I appreciate that distinction.

Mr. Jensen. Right. Like I learned and appreciate very much so now in my current capacity, but very preeminently as a section chief, that I can't direct an SAC to do anything, right. I can give guidance based on my overall awareness of what's going on, and that's what I tried to do. I also know that the deputy director provided specific guidance on how to establish command post posture with our State and locals. I was not privy to that because I was managing other matters, and he talked directly with the SACs.

But in my capacity, to answer your question, we did provide statutes in coordination with DOJ that might be viable for Federal prosecution, that if we see these, these are statutes that could apply and would aid in the opening of an investigation. We also gave them additional tools for predicating cases, that it doesn't have to be traditional domestic terrorism. You can open a WMD case if you find a Molotov cocktail somewhere, or pipe bombs or other devices. We're not looking for program specificity. We're trying to address the problems that are happening.

So this wasn't about programs, this was about conducting investigations with lawful purpose, and then figure out who did it. And part of that was providing the statutes that would apply, part of it was applying DIOG, so our Domestic Investigations Operations Guide, and policy determinations from our lawyers about where our lawful authorities attach, when and where can we collect intelligence, because we know oftentimes, projected in 2020, peaceful protest activity often led to violent activity at night. They weren't always connected, but they were definitely capitalized on, and how can we use forecasting from our State and local partners or DHS or other entities that are also looking in this space to better inform not only us, but a security apparatus with our State and local partners. So we were very much in preventative, and if something happened, how do we investigate, and what are our lawful authorities, based on statute and based on policy.

Mr. Gaetz. And --

Mr. Jensen. And I'm sorry, one other.

Mr. Gaetz. Sure. Please.

Mr. Jensen. I apologize. We did follow up with email communications, that this is what we said on the call, here it is in black and white, so that CDC's chief division counsels and field offices could look at it, make sure they're comfortable with it, that we're not directing you must but you can. These are permissible by policy and by law, and it gives you authority to attach.

Mr. Gaetz. I suspect the committee will have some interest in those emails. Are they stored on a shared drive? Are they part of a Microsoft Outlook system? How are they maintained?

Mr. Jensen. Those would've been probably both, Microsoft Outlook. I can't remember which system of record we sent it out through, but I do know we have previously provided them to Congress, maybe not this board itself but -- or committee itself, but they have been the subject of other interest, and it's largely internal communication given, rules of the road, if you will.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q And so kind of shifting to the events of January 6th, at what point as section chief did you get involved?

A That's a very good question. So, obviously, January 6th didn't happen until January 6th, but we knew leading up to the certification hearing that was happening in Congress, that on that same day, there was going to be a rally, and that it would be a widely attended gathering of multiple people, both to hear the speakers that were projected to be there as well as to potentially protest, and that was telegraphed by certain online platforms that there would likely be a protest over at the Capitol.

My team -- so the timing of this is unique. My wife was pregnant and delivered baby number eight, December 21st, and so I was off on leave for that baby, and then obviously Nashville bombing happened on December 25th. We had lots of resources dedicated to that, and the rhetoric around known predicated domestic terrorism subjects who would be traveling to D.C. on January 6th was starting to increase.

And so, I ended my leave early and came back to work on January 4th. Immediately, on January 4th, we had a meeting of section chiefs across WMD, CID, and myself, and the commander for NCCC, our Strategic Information and Operations Center. It was determined at that point, based on reporting that we already had, and the known predicated subjects, previously existing predicated subjects in Domestic Terrorism

Operations Section, who intended to travel to D.C. that day, that I would take the lead role in coordinating events in SIOC across the multiple field offices. And --

Mr. Gaetz. How many of those previously predicated subjects were there?

Mr. Jensen. So, sir, that's a -- that's a question that I was asked multiple times, and it changed almost hourly, as we were able to either mitigate the travel of some -- so on January 4th I believe it was twelve. By January 6th, it had fluctuated upwards of 21, but we had mitigated the travel of a number of them, and those please take as round numbers, my best recollection.

Mr. Gaetz. How do you mitigate the travel of someone?

Mr. Jensen. So it's tricky, because all of our subjects in domestic terrorism are U.S. citizens, and they're free to travel unless they've been restricted because they committed a crime and we arrested them. And up to this point, there had been no crime committed. They're under investigation for potential crimes or threats of force or violence, which is a requirement of any domestic terrorism case.

So all of our subjects have that threat of force of violence or intended use at some point for force or violence in furtherance of their ideology. So it's concerning that they would want to attend this, and what's their purpose behind it, but they're not prohibited from doing that. And we can't blanket put a stop in front of them and prevent their travel, because now we're infringing on other rights that they have.

And so various means that we're able to do that is through CTD policy, when we have a subject, we're required to get either sources or undercovers to connect with these subjects. Can we have sources monitor either their online accounts, what are they posting online? Can we have conversations about what they intend to do? Or undercovers that are already in place, convince people to agree not to travel, like, Hey, this isn't a good idea, there's going to be a lot.

I know of one case where we were able to do a probation violation. So the probation officer found out that the subject had traveled out of State, and issued a warrant for them, and they were able to be picked up on a probation violation. And so mitigating the travel through lawful means, and that's what we had to do. Many subjects could not be mitigated.

And so, we were informing Washington Field Office that we do know from various field offices there would be travel of subjects into your AOR likely to attend this rally. We don't have any specific threat reporting that they intend to do something, but for awareness, they will be here. And in some cases, the local field office where they originated either had a surveillance platform up to the border of Washington Field Office and Washington Field Office would take over from there, or we had communication devices that would tell us where that subject was.

Mr. Gaetz. So the tool of mitigating travel written a UC would convince someone to not engage in travel, do you know of any circumstances where that mitigation tool was successful?

Mr. Jensen. I know of -- I know of one, and you'll have to forgive me, but I believe these two subjects who were engaged with this UC are still under active investigation. I don't recall their names, nor would I be able to give them to you, but it's -- it's conversational of, Hey, look, I don't think I'm going to travel. I think it's going to be too hot down there. There's going to be too many law enforcement actions, they're going to be looking for this, I think it's a better idea if I stay back, what do you guys think?

It's not -- not ever intended to be direct influence of don't travel, right, threatening or intimidating. It is convincing somebody of their own mind --

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, what you're describing is coercion. You just said "you guys," so am I to assume that in that matter it was a group of people?

Mr. Jensen. There was a group of people intending to travel. Two of them were predicated subjects, and I believe one of them said, I'm not going to travel, and I think one of them still came.

[redacted]. Can you remind me, you're talking about situations where there's still an ongoing investigation?

Mr. Jensen. That's correct.

[redacted]. Okay. So can you answer two questions that you would avoid discussing matters that are still ongoing?

Mr. Jensen. Yes.

[redacted]. Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Jensen. Yes. Yes. And this was generally, right, but this case, in particular, is, I believe, still under active investigation. But it's a tool that was used to try and help prevent DT subjects who were known to us from traveling to event and potentially causing harm at that event.

Mr. Gaetz. You mentioned moments ago the digital monitoring of these subjects that had entered into the Washington AOR. Was that by virtue of their cell phone?

Mr. Jensen. It could've been. And, again, if that -- if that was a tool that was being used, it would've been through lawful process, and it would've been like ping orders or something like that.

Mr. Gaetz. Not suggesting it was unlawful. I'm just trying to get an understanding of how Federal law enforcement was working to mitigate a January 6th threat in the days leading up to January 6th, and I'm trying to understand if one of those tools was to monitor cell phones specifically as they were moving about the country and into the AOR.

Mr. Jensen. So I'd be hard pressed to tell you of one specific instance where it was, but it was a tool that was available -- actually, I do remember one. Ping authorization was available on that subject, but that was not a tool to mitigate his travel. It was where is the subject.

Mr. Gaetz. It was a monitoring tool?

Mr. Jensen. It was.

Mr. Gaetz. Great. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q And you said as of January 4th you came back and you took the lead role in the SIOC. Is that right?

A That's correct. So --

Q Can you -- what's the SIOC?

A It's Strategic Information and Operations Center.

Q Okay.

A It's where we run or conduct national command posts. It's now more commonly known as NCCC, National Command Coordination Center, I believe is what it's termed. That's where during 2020, summer of 2020, we ran multiple command posts in support of field offices and provided resources to them, either from an intel perspective or a legal perspective when we stand up a command post at headquarters. And it was determined that on Monday, the 4th, in the afternoon, we would stand up the command post and communicate to the field offices, but Washington Field Office in particular, that we would have a support footprint at headquarters. And we invited partners from DOJ as well as other agency partners to participate and be present so they had an operating awareness of what was happening across the country, but in particular what was happening in D.C.

It was a mirror of what Washington Field Office stood up at their field office. And every 2 hours -- if I recall correctly, it was every 2 hours, upon initiation of the command post we did joint briefings between Washington Field Office and headquarters. Any threat intelligence reporting that was coming in, either about the rally, about specific individuals, or arrests that had been made by State and locals, and any intelligence gathered from those and then vice versa, from a national perspective, any updates to known or suspected DT travelers, and then new tips that were coming into field offices about people making direct threats against politicians, and saying they were going to travel to D.C. to get -- the one I remember is heads on a pike, right, and what actions are being taken by that field office as those guardians are coming in.

Q And when did the every 2-hour joint briefing start? Did that start on January 4th?

A So I believe the construct was put in place on January 4th. I think the first 2-hour briefing would've been the 8:00 on January 5th.

Q 8:00 a.m.?

A I believe so.

Q Okay. And then did those continue January 5th and January 6th?

A They did, up until -- up until we realized that there was a breach of the Capitol. When the first barrier was down and the crowd was surging in and officers were being assaulted, and then ultimately when the doors and the windows of the Capitol were physically breached, the shift changed from coordination to mobilization.

And there were entities at headquarters led by the deputy director at the time for a response to the Capitol, and then my team oft on another side working with DOJ, what is an investigative response? What's the strategy and what's the scope based on the size of the crowd? Is this a Metropolitan Police issue? Is this a Federal Bureau of Investigation investigation -- investigative matter upon entry into the Capitol? What are the statutes? What are the things that we can potentially do? And how do we go about with this large volume of people, who once it was over and done with, very quickly realizing nobody was really arrested in the moment. So now we have to identify and hold accountable those who were responsible.

And numerous investigative questions hung in the air: Was this a pre-planned event? Was it coordinated? If so, how was it coordinated? Was this a mob mentality? All of those questions are -- were viable at the time, and how do we form a strategy around that and get that out to the multiple field offices?

Because very quickly, knowing that people were coming in from multiple field offices, we realized these field offices are going to be integral in the investigation of these subjects, and how do we message this in a unified manner of not only commanders' intent, but what occurred that day to limit confusion or unilateral investigative efforts so that it's a coordinated effort around that one event.

Complicating that, we also learned that there were two pipe bombs placed in proximity to the Capitol but over at the RNC and DNC, if memory serves. That took resources away from the Capitol and had a separate law enforcement response. It was fortunate that those didn't explode, they didn't detonate and hurt anybody, but that was a live and viable investigation based on components and who could've placed it complicated by the large group of people that were there that day.

And so that's when it shifted from a coordination center to we're now leading an investigation as soon as we have fidelity back over at the Capitol, and then it was starting to message that.

Q And so knowing that there were going to be multiple DT subjects that were coming to the area for the rally, what resources did you kind of delve out for that?

A So it's not unusual. It's actually more commonplace when there's a projected rally across the United States. Gettysburg comes to mind, right. Every year at Gettysburg there's a rally that's projected, and we become aware of known DT subjects that are going to travel. We make notification to Philadelphia AOR, but typically, it's a peaceful rally. Some groups will do a banner drop and say we were here, and whatever they're supporting they support.

We typically will set up surveillance, because they're known DT subjects. But it's not uncommon. And so to hear that DT subjects would be traveling for this rally was also not uncommon, but it was a larger number than we would typically see. And given what occurred in the summer of 2020 puts in context a large frame of mind for what we were preparing for, and what the intel was preparing us for, which was conflicts across competing ideologies.

Small groups of individuals in as recent of December before -- December of 2020, we had small-scale rallies that resulted in violence on the street between opposing ideologues resulting in some members getting stabbed, a State or local matter but something that still rose to our attention once people were arrested for it.

There was a large anticipation based on the size of the crowd that there would be larger-scale fights. And the concern there was, in 2020, we saw one of the first lethal attacks from an antigovernment violent extremist in more than 20 years, and so the mindset of these traditional threat actors had shifted, and they were using more violent tactics against opposing ideologues, which made this a very volatile situation.

And so that's what many of our State and local partners were preparing for, and the concern of our known DT subjects, even though they didn't know each other or weren't part of the same affiliations, presented a threat that we needed to be aware of, right. And so that was our concern is what in the mix do these represent as opportunists in a big rally like this.

Q And so, you spoke about setting up surveillance. Did you set up surveillance for the January 6th event?

A No. On individuals, right. So the January 6th event that we were aware of was a rally, and then a potential protest. The people who established the rally, to my knowledge, had permits and did everything according to law for National Park Service Police, Metropolitan Police. They were well aware of those rallies, and they didn't have concerns about the organization of the rally. They had concerns about the aftermath.

And then for the protest we also believe that was First Amendment protected, and so we cannot establish surveillance on First-Amendment-protected activity. But where we have known subjects, predicated subjects coming into the territory who are infiltrating otherwise peaceful activity, we can set up, in limited circumstances, where it's feasible for the safety of our agents to do so to establish surveillance on them.

And what we found in many of those instances, as soon as subjects arrived, it wasn't really feasible to maintain surveillance on them because of the size and scope of the crowd. And once they were in the AOR it was a known thing that they were there. In some cases, I do believe we had surveillance, but I don't know to what depth of surveillance we were able to maintain.

[redacted]. When you say known that they were there, known to whom, to WFO?

Mr. Jensen. Known -- right. So we knew based on the travel status that the subject arrived and that had been from the case agents that were responsible for the investigation of that subject passing that information off to WFO. And in some cases, Washington Field Office was aware the subject had arrived before headquarters was because of the coordination they had with the local field office agents.

BY [redacted]:

Q And so immediately after the events that occurred at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, what was your impression that you got from headquarters about pursuing investigations into these events?

A So I didn't -- I didn't get an impression from headquarters. I -- I was a leading member of headquarters, and we knew that there was a clear violation of Federal law. We knew that there was a responsibility to hold those individuals accountable, and that it would be a massive effort to start identifying and getting these subjects in custody.

We did briefings in the aftermath of January 6th, because we also had the inauguration coming up. And now that this occurred on January 6th, what -- what are the concerns, the implications of individuals involved in January 6th who might go unidentified, or if we can't identify and disrupt them, what -- and this is in the moment thinking ahead to inauguration, is there a persistent threat posed to the inauguration, right.

And so wrapping our minds around that; how do we prioritize and start identifying, triaging, and arresting subjects who illegally entered the Capitol; assaulted Federal officers; damaged property; stole material from inside the Capitol; assaults on media members; like lots of different crimes were committed that day under one overarching umbrella from the FBI with unified guidance on how we would pursue this.

Q And so did you give any direction on how to pursue cases?

A We did.

Q And what direction did you give?

A So it was determined very early on, because I was the lead section chief for the lead-up to January 6th that I would maintain that lead over our response and coordination efforts, not only with WFO, Washington Field Office, but with the numerous other field offices that would be engaged on this.

We gave guidance through daily secure telephone conferences, or computer calls, establishing the parameters of what occurred that day, what is our lawful authority for conducting investigations, what is the clear line that gives us that lawful authority, what we are doing and what we're not doing, especially in those early days.

And those calls were established with initially the national security branches of the 56 field offices and their intel components. In the very early days, it quickly grew to include the chief division counsels, their associate division counsels, and other leadership members, especially in resident agencies who were not connected to the headquarter city office, to ensure that everybody had the same information at the same time on a unified coordination call as those investigative strategies developed, matured or changed based on prosecutorial efforts.

So this was -- this was something we had never in the FBI tackled before, the size and scope, a very, very small amount of evidence, right, usually digital, large number of people implicated in criminal conduct. And typically, in a critical incident, it's a very small number of subjects, large volume of evidence, and a small digital footprint, right, and it was the reverse.

And so this took a whole-of-FBI approach from our operational technology branch to establish a mechanism for reviewing video surveillance, for identifying subjects or comparative analysis, to positively identify subjects where they were in the Capitol and what movements they had, to increasing bandwidth of our systems, so information technology, getting people certified to review digital evidence, numerous, numerous parts of the FBI mobilized to facilitate this type of investigation.

All of that was centralized, or I should say, focused around a strategy that I was trying to implement and needed correction from time to time, right, like we didn't get it right the first time, it was iterative, but a centralized communication strategy with decentralized execution. Fifty-six field offices had equities in conducting these investigations, but on a centralized communication plan, and those were those daily coordination calls.

With that came the guidance from DOJ. CTS attorneys, counterterrorism section attorneys from national security division sat next to me on those calls. They provided their review of what potential violations DOJ would consider for January 6th, and what the clear factors were to submit prosecution packets through the U.S. Attorney's Office in the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia was early designated as the prosecuting office, and everything would flow through them for prosecution determinations.

Clear lines were very early established. FBI would investigate. All referrals from those investigations would go through a team of attorneys over at the district, in D.C., for review for prosecutorial merit. In no case were we in a position to say this person should or should not be prosecuted. It was these are the facts of the investigation. We found this tip that came from January 6th; prosecutor, what say you; and they would be in charge of prioritizing which cases would be prosecuted and in what matter those cases would be prosecuted, ultimately which charges would go.

That was established very early on. And then the strategy of Washington Field Office owning the incident. The incident occurred here at the Capitol. It happened in their AOR. Working with the Capitol Police on evidence review, triaging the tips that were coming in through the National Threat Operations Center, and evaluating them based on merit to send out to the field offices for further investigation, and if warranted, predication into a full investigation of that subject, not only for their involvement in the crimes committed on January 6th, but for any future threats posed, if any, by that subject.

Q And on the coordination calls, did those ever change in frequency?

A It did.

Q And what was that frequency?

A So I believe up until the Inauguration Day, they were daily.

Q Okay.

A Post inauguration, we were able to scale it back. And I can't remember if we went to twice a week and then very quickly to once a week. And then with time, distance, and cover from the actual event and people getting more into a routine of how to process these things, the need for daily updates diminished and we went to monthly.

Q And you said you were maintaining the lead in the response in coordination with the WFO. Who was lead for the WFO?

A My main counterpart -- excuse me -- my main counterpart at Washington Field Office was an assistant special agent in charge who was designated to lead a couple different teams established directly for the January 6th investigation, which included -- excuse me, again -- the pipe bomb investigation.

Q Okay. And who was that ASAC?

A That was assistant special agent in charge -- good Lord, I have talked to him every day. Give me a second.

[redacted]. You can go back to it.

Mr. Jensen. Yeah, can I come back to that?

BY [redacted]:

Q Yeah. Would it have been assistant special agent in charge Timothy Tebow?

A No.

Q No?

A No.

Q Okay. And a little bit earlier you said you needed to get individuals certified to review digital evidence. What kind of -- what's involved with that?

A There's a certification process of getting access to the system that's owned and operated by operational technology division. Typically in a field office, you have a limited number based on a need to access the system. It's to limit overloading the bandwidth or capability of the system itself. But in this case, with every field office having to conduct routine and almost iterative reviews of the same information, we needed batches of people from every field office as well as supporting elements at headquarters to have access to the system.

So OTD put on special almost link-and-learn sessions that certified these individuals, gave them access in volume where normally they would limit the access. But here, because of the size and scope, we needed lots of people to have access on a 24-hour basis. They just increased what they would normally certify.

Q And going to the pipe bomb investigation, when did you become aware of the pipe bombs that were placed by the RNC and DNC?

A It was shortly after the first police officers responded. It's a little bit of a blur as to whether it occurred around the same time the first barriers were removed, but around -- around the same time I heard that Washington Field Office was responding with Metropolitan Police and I believe some elements of Capitol Police to the area for one pipe bomb and then two. And then shortly on the heels of that, that not only were the barriers down, but there were assaults occurring and then ultimately what we saw happened on TV was the breach of the Capitol.

Q And to your knowledge, when did the Bureau become involved with the pipe bomb investigation?

A So my understanding, one of the special agents in charge at the time responded immediately with his team, and I believe he was on site at one of the pipe bombs from the very beginning.

[1:17 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Was that with the WFO?

A Yes.

Q And do you know what divisions or sections of the FBI were involved with the pipe bomb investigation?

A So I know Washington Field Office and that SAC led the Counterterrorism Division in Washington Field Office. I would imagine -- I don't know for a fact -- that their SABTs, special agent bomb technicians, responded as well. That's a normal response. That would also imply from engagement from Weapons of Mass Destruction. But Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate was sitting in SIOC with me at the time. So we were all aware of these events at the same time.

[redacted] How quickly was the FBI able to determine the pipe bombs were inoperable?

[redacted]. I want to be careful on this, given that this is an open and ongoing investigation. There's certainly some information that's been publicly released, but I want to be careful not to go beyond that at this point.

Mr. Jensen. So I was actually going to ask the same thing. I do know they're open investigations, and certain details, like she said, we shouldn't get into.

BY [redacted]:

Q Is it fair to say, though, that the FBI had agents examine the bombs as soon as they were recovered?

A So, again, I assumed our SABTs arrived. I don't know who did the examination. I know that information was shared up through headquarters about the status of the device and then components of the device as the investigation unfolded.

And we were involved in it from the beginning. The times and details about the specific analysis of that, I couldn't tell you.

Q There's been reporting that they tracked an individual to a metro spot out in northern Virginia. Are you aware of that reporting?

A So, again, I want to be cautious because it's part of an active investigation, and I don't know that a subject has been identified or eliminated as a potential subject.

Q Okay. Are you aware of that reporting, though, that they had an individual, and they tracked him out, and they knew the metro card he was using and so forth?

A So I am aware that there was specific details about an individual who used a metro card, that there were other leads that they investigated similarly. But, again, it's part of A continuing investigation.

Q There was a whistleblower that came to our office in 2022 that reported to us that a year after the January 6th incident, on February 7th, 2022, the FBI issued a nationwide search for information throughout all their field offices for all confidential HUMINT sources that might have information relating to that. Are you aware of that?

A So I'm not aware of that specifically, but it doesn't surprise me.

Q Okay. What surprised us and what surprised the whistleblower who came to us, was that it happened a year after. Is that unusual in your experience?

A No.

Q And why would something like that take a year before being sent to all the field offices?

A So, in context, I've worked a number of explosive device investigations. Not all of them immediately have an apparent subject. Some of them take time, and I'm aware of some from New York City that are still open that happened over a decade ago. Case agents will periodically review the information, like a cold case homicide, and determine: We should refresh this. Let's send out a new request for information. Somebody might know something now.

So it doesn't surprise me that that, if it did go out, it's a normal practice to try and refresh new leads into a case.

Q Okay.

[redacted] [redacted]?

[redacted] We have 9 minutes, sir, if you have any questions?

Mr. Gaetz. I want to go to your testimony where you said that Washington Field Office owns the incident on January 6th.

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. What does that mean?

Mr. Jensen. It means the incident occurred in their area of responsibility. They had responsibility not only to respond in the capacity that they could but to essentially process evidence, identify subjects, and action that for either leads or investigations to other field offices.

Mr. Gaetz. I'll represent to you that whistleblowers shared with us that they felt pressure to open investigations into subjects with insufficient predication. Did you ever observe that type of pressure from the Washington Field Office?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. What would be your reaction to those who believed that pressure emanated out of the Washington Field Office?

Mr. Jensen. So I've heard this circulating around, and I can tell you, in my capacity as section chief, I addressed concerns from field offices, ASACs and SACs, when they're talking to their partners, similar to questions that you asked me before, the difference between 2020 and January 6th. Why is there a push to open all of these cases where it didn't happen? And some of it's educational. Some of it is starting with the fundamental principle that all these subjects who entered the Capitol that day at a baseline were in violation of trespass. It doesn't mean they're going to be charged with that, but we have a duty to further investigate.

Leads that went out through our Sentinel Crisis System for that incident were sent to the field office for further action. Where they met certain standards and criteria, they were directed by myself and others to open an investigation, that it met the predication authorities to open investigations. They were not directed on which type of case to open up. Based on the individual investigations in the field offices, they could determine this person is a DT subject qualifying under the statute and our policies, an 89 bravo as we call it, which is an assault on a Federal police officer, or a general rioter, which would fall under that 176 classification. But, if they met that standard of having trespassed unlawfully inside the Capitol, it met a basic element of our predication of a Federal law was violated, and there's reason to believe that this person committed that crime?

Mr. Gaetz. How many cases did you direct to be opened?

Mr. Jensen. I couldn't tell you because it was voluminous, right? It was a general operating picture of: Here's how we're going to conduct the investigation. Washington Field Office is responsible not only for the triage of the evidence and pushing their leads out based on what they're receiving from NTOC but also from internal surveillance footage, other tips that are coming in, but to be actioned and owned from the independent field offices based on their own review or tip of that allegation.

Mr. Gaetz. I thought you said just moments ago the Washington Field Office owns the incident?

Mr. Jensen. They own the incident.

Mr. Gaetz. Not the investigation?

Mr. Jensen. So the independent investigations of each subjects follows counterterrorism policy, where there's one subject, one investigation, and that's applicable regardless of what critical incident occurred. If it falls under counterterrorism program management responsibilities, every subject receives its own case file. Now, there were certain --

Mr. Gaetz. Why do those case files emanate out of the Washington Field Office rather than out of their field offices around the country?

Mr. Jensen. It's a great question. It goes towards where the subject resides versus where the incident occurred. So, while Washington Field Office owns the critical incident and the response to that incident to include the victim responsibilities and the evidence processing responsibilities, the field offices who identify the subjects -- or, in coordination Washington Field Office, identified subjects in their AOR have a duty and responsibility not only to verify inculpatory or exculpatory information related to that subject but the ongoing or persistent threat that subject may pose to society.

And, in some cases, it was very quickly determined that there is no persistent threat, it's a trespasser, or this person actually has an ideology and poses a threat, and there are additional tools that we would need to use in the normal course of a counterterrorism investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. Was it hundreds of cases you directed to be opened?

Mr. Jensen. There were hundreds of subjects initially identified in the aftermath of January 6th, which warranted further review and investigation.

Mr. Gaetz. That's not my question. My question is, was it hundreds of cases that you directed to be opened?

Mr. Jensen. Yes, in that general guidance, absolutely.

Mr. Gaetz. And that direction was to special agents in charge in field offices?

Mr. Jensen. That direction was -- I want to be careful because, while we directed the ability to open the cases, I never directed a field office to open a particular case because they still have to conduct an independent review based on the predicating factors around each subject.

Mr. Gaetz. I guess, I know I'm drawing near the end of my time, but on the summer of 2020, you said: We don't direct; we give guidance.

Mr. Jensen. We provided guidance.

Mr. Gaetz. And then you testified that these folks following January 6th were directed. You didn't use the word "guidance." You used the word "directed." So I guess I'm trying to understand why in one case it's guidance, do what you will; and then, in the January 6th case, it seems to be a bit more compulsory.

Mr. Jensen. So it could be my misuse of the term "directive." It was --

Mr. Gaetz. You were real precise in that term earlier.

Mr. Jensen. And I try to be very precise in my term. I'm not trying to split hairs with you or couch my intention here. It was directive in nature. We have a violation of Federal law that was committed, but it doesn't take away the independent review of each field office to find predication authorities to determine what crime was committed.

Mr. Gaetz. It's the opposite, sir. It's that field offices are telling us that they felt there was insufficient predicate, and then they felt pressure from WFO to take action in the absence of predicate. So it's not like: Here are the tools to go find a predicate.

It's: Hey, we don't believe there's predicate, and we feel pressure from Washington Field Office.

You see how those are different?

Mr. Jensen. So I do understand that. In my conversations with the management teams and field offices, they never expressed there was insufficient predication. It was, what additional resources do we have that show the details of what the subject --

Mr. Gaetz. -- no one ever told you there was insufficient predication? You never heard that once from any field office ever?

Mr. Jensen. I did not. What I had was concerns that the only thing we're given is that this person's cell phone and now the name associated with that cell phone because the geofence you referenced before was inside the Capitol. Sometimes that's all we had. If it referenced --

Mr. Gaetz. The geofence can get that tight to the Capitol Grounds as opposed to if somebody was walking down Independence Avenue?

Mr. Jensen. There was tight geofences inside the Capitol.

Mr. Gaetz. All the more reason to wonder why those tight geofences weren't used other times. I have many more questions on this line, but it seems we're out of time.

[redacted]. We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[1:36 p.m.]

[redacted]. It is 1:36. We can go back on the record.

I want to start out correcting the record on something. You were asked about geofencing in the summer of 2020. Do you recall that?

Mr. Jensen. I do.

[redacted]. I'm going to introduce as exhibit 7 an article, dated August 31st, 2021, says -- the title is "Google dragnets harvested phone data across 13 Kenosha protests, acts of arson," and it says that the -- there were -- geofencing was in fact used during the summer of 2020 in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. Is that accurate?

Mr. Jensen. I wouldn't dispute it.

[redacted]. Yeah. And then I want to introduce as Exhibit No. 8 another article. It's dated February 6th, 2021, "Minneapolis Police tapped Google to identify George Floyd protestors."

[Jensen Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q This comments on Minneapolis' Police use of geofencing during the summer of 2020. So this -- go ahead.

A I was going to say I wouldn't dispute what the article says, but I don't have direct knowledge of it.

Q Right. So, at least in two cases, we do have evidence of geofencing being used in the summer of 2020. You just don't have personal knowledge of it. Is that fair to say?

A It is. And I think was, to my broader point, is it's a tool available, but I was not aware of it being used. Doesn't mean it wasn't. I just can't speak to it.

Q Okay. You just can't speak to it, but --

Mr. Gaetz. [redacted], what exhibit numbers are these?

[redacted]. These are Nos. 7 and 8. I think 7 is the Kenosha article, and 8 is the Minneapolis article.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you familiar with the FBI's Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide?

A Yes.

Q And that's also referred to as the DIOG, right?

A It is.

Q Okay. So I'm going to call it the DIOG -- I'm going to refer to it as the DIOG for the rest of today, okay?

A Absolutely.

Q So the DIOG has been in effect since about 2008, correct?

A I believe so.

Q And it applies to all FBI employees and task force officers and all other individuals operating under FBI authority. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. It also applies to all domestic investigative activities conducted by the FBI, correct?

A It does.

Q And what's your -- and it applies to all domestic intelligence collection as well, correct?

A It does.

Q What's your understanding of the purpose of the DIOG?

A It's to give guidance and establish policy on the conduct of various types of investigative activities and intelligence collection requirements that the FBI has.

[redacted]. I'm going to hand you what we're going to mark as exhibit 9.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q So this is an excerpt from section 3.1 of the DIOG, and it's lists the FBI's core values. Could you please read the core values A through H aloud?

A Yes. This is under 3.1 FBI core values: A is rigorous obedience to the Constitution of United States. B is respect for the dignity of all those protect. C is compassion. D is fairness. E is uncompromising personal integrity and institutional integrity. F is accountability by accepting responsibility for our actions and decisions and their consequences. G is leadership by example, both personal and professional. And H is diversity.

Q Were you familiar with these before you read these?

A Yes.

Q Throughout your career, have you worked to ensure that all of your actions as an FBI employee have adhered to these core values?

A I've tried to exemplify these to the best of my ability.

Q Do you work to ensure that your subordinates also embody these?

A Yes.

Q In your 17 -- is that right -- years of experience at the FBI, have you witnessed a similar commitment from FBI management?

A I have.

Q Is it fair to say that you, as someone with 17 years of experience in the FBI, believe that these FBI core values as we just went through them are fully understood, practiced, shared, rigorously defended, and preserved throughout the FBI?

A I do.

Q The second sentence that we have highlighted in the following paragraph says that: Our individual and institutional rigorous obedience to constitutional principles and guarantees is more important than the outcome of any single interview, search for evidence, or investigation.

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q What does that sentence mean to you?

A It means what I referenced earlier about our mission, dual and simultaneous, upholding the Constitution, and protecting the United States citizens, neither can be sacrificed for the other. I mean, in this case, the goals and objectives in any one particular case can't come above our rigorous obedience to the Constitution and the protections of the United States citizens by extension.

Q Okay. In your practice as an FBI employee, how do you put that into practice in your work as an FBI employee?

A I mean, we always weigh our steps, investigative strategies against the Constitution first and foremost. And every single progress in an investigation, the strategy of the case if you will, is -- it's codified in the DIOG, but it's also in practice of least intrusive means possible to obtain an objective, and always through lawful means if we go into higher level authorities or higher levels of intrusiveness to obtain an objective on a case. There's no side skirting the requirements under the law or the requirements limiting the government against U.S. citizens by the Constitution.

Q And then that last paragraph right above compliance, it says: We who enforce the law must not merely obey it. We have an obligation to set a moral example that those whom we protect can follow. Because the FBI's success in accomplishing its mission is directly related to the support and cooperation of those we protect, these core values are the fiber that holds together the vitality of our institution.

What do you understand this paragraph to mean?

A It's: We don't just follow it; we set an example of it, how to live it. In our professional lives, we exemplify adherence to the rule of law.

Q And, in your experience, again, the 17 years at the FBI, is that something that you've witnessed on a regular basis in your work?

A It's not only something that I've ascribed to accomplish but been motivated by the people around me to do it to a higher degree because of the example they set.

Q Thank you. Are you familiar with the term "domestic violent extremism"?

A I am.

Q It's sometimes abbreviated as DVE, correct?

A Correct.

Q I'm going to refer to it mostly as DVE going forward. How does FBI define DVE?

A Broadly speaking, a domestic violent extremist is an individual who meets the statutory definition of 18 U.S.C. 231, clearly defines what a domestic terrorist or a terrorist incident is, is motivated by a particular ideology, social or political in nature, intends to coerce or change the actions of the U.S. Government or local governments or the social body in particular, the citizenry, and does so through force or threats of force or violence, and primarily lives with or resides in the jurisdiction of the United States' boundaries.

Q Okay. Is there a difference between a domestic terrorism case and a domestic terrorism event?

A There can be. You can open up a domestic terrorism case, traditionally a 266, on an incident, but it's not typical to do that.

Q Okay. I guess what I'm getting at is, you know, is it possible for an event such as January 6th to be seen as a domestic terrorism event, but then individual cases resulting from that might not have been domestic terrorism cases?

A Yes.

Q And can you explain how that works?

A Yes, I can. There's limited examples of it where, because of the nature of DVEs, they don't -- they typically radicalize in isolated environments and carry out an attack on their own, very low influence or support from any larger group, right? Unlike in international terrorism where you see material support either by or from a foreign terrorist organization, or they're motivated or inspired by that same terrorist organization. In DVEs, it's usually radicalized in isolation through their own personal belief system, encouraged by others, but the actions they take are of their own volition.

In some cases, you will see groups coalesce around an ideology, and they would still be investigated individually, but in the case of January 6th, where we had this large-scale incident labeled as a domestic terrorism event directed against the U.S. Government, the legislative body of the U.S. Government in session, the event itself was categorized and run by Domestic Terrorism Operations Section.

The numerous investigations that responded from that could be captured individual conduct of every subject that was identified, and that's how we predicate all of our cases, especially in domestic terrorism. Individuals identified for allegation of Federal violations and then their specific individual conduct or ideologies where they used force or violence in furtherance of that.

Q Okay. And so you just said that the FBI does consider the events of January 6th to be a domestic terrorism event, correct?

A Yes, and I believe that was stated publicly also.

Q Who made that determination?

A I believe the Director of the FBI stated that.

Q What's your understanding of why he classified it in that way?

A So I think it was based -- again, I can't state the specific reasons why he said it other than the event that day of a large group of individuals directing numerous crimes, both violent and somewhat passive crimes of trespassing directly against the legislative body of the U.S. Government.

Q You keep saying the "legislative body of the U.S. Government." Is that important here?

A It's the United States Capitol, but in particular, a portion of that body was in session that day to certify the election results. And so they were conducting the business of the people that day. It was a hearing to certify the election, and the disruptive nature of what occurred that day stalled, at a minimum, definitely caused the disruption in the execution of their duties as that legislative branch.

Q And so, it's -- so you would agree that the fact that Congress was in session, that Congress was certifying the vote, was a specific factor in the reason that this was a domestic terrorism event?

A I think it plays a role in that because actions of individuals who participated in criminal conduct that day, to be determined through individual investigations, motivated to stop the certification process, and in fact, large groups of individuals were actually chanting to that effect "stop the steal" or specifically targeting individuals of Members of Congress that day, in some cases the Vice President that day, to prevent them from carrying out their specific duties under the Constitution.

[redacted]. I want to introduce as exhibit No. 10 a statement that the FBI Director released on January 7th, 2021.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this before?

A I can't say that I have.

Q I'll give you a minute to look through it.

The very first sentence of this reads: The violence and destruction of property at the U.S. Capitol Building yesterday showed a blatant and appalling disregard for our institutions of government and the orderly administration of the democratic process.

Correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you agree that the attack on the Capitol on January 6th showed a blatant and appalling disregard for institutions of government and the orderly administration of the democratic process?

A I do.

Q Do you think that it was appropriate for the FBI to be very concerned about that?

A Yes.

Q The next sentence reads: As we've said consistently, we do not tolerate violent agitators and extremists who use the guise of First Amendment protected activity to incite violence and wreak havoc. Such behavior betrays the value of our democracy.

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q In my prior hour of questioning, we talked through the First Amendment protections, and you confirmed that the FBI cannot and will not open cases based solely on first amendment activity, correct?

A That's correct.

Q But, again, the First Amendment does not apply to acts of violence, correct?

A Correct.

Q And it doesn't apply to criminal conduct, correct?

A Correct.

Q So somebody trespassing, for example, you know, we've heard allegations that people that were just walking around in the Capitol were just exercising their First Amendment rights. Do you have a response to that?

A I do have a response. Known or unknown to individuals that day, depending on when they entered the Capitol, it was a restricted area, originally protected by Capitol Police and other law enforcement agents. I'm not aware of any time in recent history where general citizens can just walk into the Capitol unescorted and not be charged with trespass. And, on that day in particular, the large number of people who entered through broken facilities to gain access into the Capitol demonstrates criminal conduct occurred at least leading up to that event and then, by mere presence in the Capitol, was, in fact, trespassing by nature. And that's where we started, was anybody who entered the Capitol that day at a minimum had been in violation of trespass on the U.S. Capitol.

Q The second paragraph of the FBI Director's January 7th statement reads: Let me assure the American people the FBI has deployed our full investigative resources and is working closely with our Federal, State, and local partners to aggressively pursue those involved in criminal activity during the events of January 6th.

Correct?

A Yes.

Q In your opinion, did FBI leadership take the events of January 6th pretty seriously?

A Very seriously.

Q Why do you think that was?

A At the time, it was viewed as a direct attack against a branch of our Federal Government, particularly disrupting a hearing that was in session certifying the election results of the most recent Presidential election, and the potential implications it had for the pending inauguration and other unrest that might result if it went unaddressed.

Q In your opinion, was the response proportional to what happened on January 6th?

A It was proportional and scalable to what occurred.

Q What do you mean by scalable?

A Meaning, based on the large number of individuals that entered the Capitol at least at a minimum in violation of trespass but implicated in other potential crimes, the need to surge resources not only at headquarters but at Washington Field Office to triage the volume of evidence to identify any one individual responsible but also scalable in our personnel in particular to identify those individuals responsible for any coordination, preplanning, or instigating that particular act against the U.S. Capitol that day, and in more egregious conduct the assaults on the Federal police officers that day.

[redacted]. I want to introduce as exhibit 11 a March 3rd, 2023, letter from the FBI's Office of Congressional Affairs to Mr. Jordan, and I'll give you a minute to review it.

[Jensen Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q You're ready to continue?

A Uh-huh.

Q The letter references the Counterterrorism Program Guide. Are you familiar with the Counterterrorism Program Guide?

A I am.

Q It's sometimes abbreviated as the CTPG, correct?

A Yes.

Q Does the CTPG provide guidance for how domestic terrorism investigations should be managed?

A It does.

Q Okay. Does the DIOG also apply to those investigations?

A It does. The DIOG is an umbrella. The Counterterrorism Guide is a subset of the DIOG.

Q Okay. So, for example, the DIOG lays out predication levels for an assessment, a preliminary investigation, or a full investigation, correct?

A Yes.

Q So the predication levels, when an agent in the field is determining whether to open an assessment or whether to pursue a higher preliminary investigation or full investigation, they follow the predication levels laid out in the DIOG, right?

A They do.

Q Okay. And the DIOG also provides guidance on what investigative methods are permissible at different stages of an investigation, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. So is it fair to say that both the DIOG and the CTPG are in play for investigations such as those related to January 6th?

A Yes. And, in particular, the DIOG gives general rules of operating when you have a full investigation or when you have a preliminary assessment, type one and two, or other matter. CTD program guide gets more specific, and in particular for domestic terrorism investigations, what constitutes a DT case classification and then how to conduct investigations from there inside of the CT program guide.

Q So I think we've talked through that not all the cases coming out of January 6th were CT cases, right; some of them were just criminal cases?

A Some of them were initially just criminal cases. What we encouraged field offices to do, in cases where Washington Field Office identified a subject for, say, assault on a Federal officer, and that subject was positively identified, in certain instances the Washington Field Office sent a lead for the arrest of that subject. We still encouraged field offices, even though that instant was investigated and the arrest was effected, the field office conduct additional investigative actions on what else that subject did that day because we knew they committed a crime against a police officer; we didn't know what else they were involved in: Were there known associates that needed to be investigated? What role and responsibility did this individual play in the overall attack on the Capitol, let alone just the significant incident against that one police officer?

Q And why was it important to do that for that broader investigation?

A The broader investigation paints the overall picture of what happened that day. Clearly, determines for us from an intel perspective of what were we dealing with leading up to January 6th. If we treated each subject as a separate criminal incident identified by Washington Field Office, positively identified, getting an indictment or a complaint, and then sent out for an arrest, we would miss certain connectiveness across certain subjects.

The large group of people that entered the Capitol that day were singular offenders that entered the Capitol and were charged with trespass and, through thorough investigation, determined they didn't have connections in conspiracies. But there were those who were positively identified, both outside the Capitol who assaulted police officers and those inside the Capitol who benefited each other through precoordination, communication, and planning, and were ultimately charged with conspiracy. And, if not for the method of identifying each subject, fully investigating them for complete roles related to January 6th, and then communicating that back to Washington Field Office, we may have missed certain connectiveness across subjects.

Q Thank you.

The paragraph at the bottom of page 2 of this letter says that: The broad geographic spread of January 6th subjects in corresponding cases has necessitated substantial coordination and information sharing among the FBI's 56 field offices.

Based on your experience, is this an accurate statement?

A Yes. I'm sorry. Can you direct me to the paragraph?

Q It's the bottom of page 2.

A I got it. Yes. That is accurate.

Q Okay. So what was the geographical spread of January 6th subjects?

A I mean, one of the first subjects positively identified and arrested was taken at the airport by FBI personnel and a local police department in Hawaii. And that was within a day or two after January 6th. So very quickly we realized all 56 field offices are going to have a role in this, not only in conducting arrests but the thorough investigations that were required.

Q Given that broad geographic spread, why was coordination among the field offices so -- for example, through these regular calls -- why was coordination so important?

A From my perspective, coordination was important because I've been part of critical incident responses before where I've only received a lead, and I've answered the lead, but I didn't have full context of what was occurring, and I can accomplish the objective, but I can probably accomplish much more with my fellow FBI agents if I knew more about the incident.

Being in charge of our response to this incident, that centralized communication strategy, ensuring that all field office management at a minimum and chief division counsel's offices were aware of the most recent updates that we had as this investigation unfolded and as our strategy progressed, evolved, that they knew the most recent updates so they could respond accordingly with their personnel. That centralized communication plan was the only way I saw conducting thorough and effective investigations on every subject that was implicated in January 6th to give that common operating picture of what actually occurred that day: Was this truly a mob mentality? Was this a combination of various things that contributed to it that day? And were there broader conspiracies at play? A lot of that in those early moments were unknown.

Q And so it was your job to try and disentangle it, correct?

A I think it was my job to help create a platform for that disentanglement. The thorough investigations provide that that. And that's why that common operating picture was so important.

Q So the paragraph at the bottom of page 2 of this letter continues that the FBI received more than 200,000 digital media tips from the public after January 6th, constituting some of the highest daily tip volume in the FBI's history. Is this consistent with your knowledge of the tips received after January 6th?

A It is.

Q Okay. And that refers just to digital media clips. Did FBI also receive a substantial amount of tips via phone?

A We did. We received tips via phone. Field offices received separate that didn't go to NTOC. And these are just digital media clips that came in, video clips or screen grabs from internet sleuths and concerned citizens that were trying to help identify people that conducted crime on that day.

Q Would you describe this as a substantial volume of tips?

A I mean, to this report, it is the highest daily tip volumes in FBI's history.

Q Did this volume of incoming tips and presumably other evidence that you were collecting also make it important for FBI to ensure that the field offices were coordinating effectively?

A It necessitated it. We recognized very early on that the digital media evidence was paramount to identifying subjects responsible for certain criminal activity. Having processes in place, not only for identifying the subjects, collecting that evidence that was pertinent to that subject, but the inevitable discovery implications across multiple defendants, needed to be thought about and actioned at the onset, and that was important for that common operating picture as well, thinking long term about the inevitable prosecutions.

Q When you say it had to be -- I'm sorry. You said at the onset, it has to be addressed at the onset. Is that what you just said?

A Right. So the digital media evidence where one individual was seen in certain corridors of the Capitol positively identified, there could be any number of other defendants that are ultimately in that same area, and we needed an ability to provide discovery through the U.S. Attorney's Office to potentially multiple defense attorneys. And the implications of that environment of digital media was tremendous. So how can we narrow it down to make sure that it is specific to that subject but also implicating -- I shouldn't say "implicating" -- if it had any additional information, whether inculpatory or exculpatory for other defendants, that it was available to them as well. And the reason is early defendants identified, arrested, and prosecuted, whether they pled out or went to trial, had access to certain information. By the time we get all the way down the road in, let's say, the last defendants identified, arrested, and prosecuted, they had the benefit of the total volume, and we needed that total volume for everybody.

Q Okay. So part of this is actually to ensure that defendants had access to evidence that was appropriate for their case?

A And we knew everything that was reasonably available to us at the time the defendant was identified was taken into account.

Q We talked a little bit about the coordination calls earlier. Mr. Jensen, do you recall ever saying anything along the lines of, you know, "I don't give a blank, these people are goddamn terrorists, we're going to round them up"?

A No.

Q Is that something you ever would have said?

A No.

Q Do you swear?

A I don't.

Q There have been allegations that January 6th was, quote, an inside job conducted by the FBI. Do you have a reaction to that?

A I have numerous reactions to that. The one that I will stand by is the test of time when all of the cases are fully adjudicated, in the light of day of all the evidence, the American public will know that we did the right thing for the right reason in the right manner, not only to uphold our system of government but to protect the institutions that were put in place for the United States citizens. The FBI wouldn't be part of criminal conduct. We don't support it. We investigate it.

Q Over the course of your career, have you been in personal danger through your work ever?

A I have.

Q Do you find it insulting at all that people would suggest that January 6th might be an inside job?

A Personally, I have opinions. Professionally, I have thick skin, and no matter what insults are thrown at us, we do the job that we were tasked with.

Q I want to turn briefly to the conversation at the end of the last hour about field offices being directed to open cases or providing guidance on opening cases. You would agree that, if the FBI has knowledge that an individual has committed an actual crime, has strong evidence that an individual has committed a crime, the FBI is obligated to open a case on that individual?

A It's a little tricky.

Q Okay.

A We have an obligation to conduct an analysis of that, right?

Q Yup.

A There are times when we know or suspect an individual, there's a strong allegation that an individual conducted a crime, but we would defer to a State or local partner. In the case of January 6th, all of those crimes were Federal in nature. They were solely the responsibility of FBI. We were the ones tasked with investigating and presenting them for prosecution through the U.S. Attorney's Office. So we did have an obligation as the Federal Bureau of Investigation across all 56 offices to respond in a uniformed manner.

Q Why was it important to respond in a uniformed manner?

A Consistency in how each subject was treated, consistency of process that there weren't a difference -- excuse me, there wasn't a different in actioning certain leads in one field office versus another, that everybody, every lead, every piece of information was treated the same so that it would stand the test of time, not only in front of a court but ultimately for what we do in support of the American people.

Q Did you ever pressure any field office to take any investigative steps that they weren't comfortable taking?

A No.

Q Did you ever threaten any kind of retaliation against a field office if they didn't take investigative steps they weren't comfortable taking?

A No, and I'm not sure what kind of retaliation would have been available to me.

Q Okay. You didn't, for example -- well, I won't give a hypothetical. Did you ever witness FBI management, so any of your superiors, pressuring any field office to take any investigative steps they weren't comfortable with?

A No.

Q Did you ever witness anybody at the Washington Field Office pressuring another field office take investigative steps they weren't comfortable taking?

A No.

Q Okay. To your knowledge, did any FBI management -- anyone in FBI management ever threaten to, for example, demote a special agent in charge if they didn't -- if their field office didn't take a particular investigative step?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q We'll move on.

A I can add this, if you have a minute?

Q Sure.

A Any time there's a multiple jurisdictional investigation, meaning there's investigators from multiple field offices, there's going to be, just by nature, disagreements on strategy on an investigation. The FBI I grew up in and the one that I currently see encourages discourse about strategy. The old adage that as iron sharpens iron, so one sharpens another, right? We encourage that kind of discourse in our agency where time allows.

Outside of critical incident response and having to take lifesaving measures, we often have the luxury of challenging assumptions inside of our organization to make sure we have the best investigative strategy possible. That's why CDCs and ADCs are often engaged on the onset of an investigative strategy. So it's not uncommon in these coordination -- I don't want to say these coordination calls for January 6th because those were different -- in coordination across multiple jurisdictional investigations, for field offices to have disagreements over timing of arrests, the next investigative strategy because they have interest in the subject that they're responsible for, and there are still steps that they want to take and might not be ready for a takedown. Our role in headquarters is to help level that across those field offices and ensure no unilateral action is taken that unnecessarily jeopardizes one investigation over the other or potentially puts any of our people or partners in harm's way, right?

And so we handle those coordinations across field offices. It's usually at the special agent, analyst, and supervisor level. Occasionally, it will rise up to the assistant special agent in charge level for a better understanding of what the overall picture and intent is designed to be, and then how do we get that objective. But these are not -- they're not contentious, in my opinion. They're normal standard operating business for clarification purposes and for next steps purposes.

Q So it would be the case, right, that part of your role at FBI Headquarters, you have visibility across all 56 field offices and I guess across different headquarters components as well, right?

A I did.

Q When you were in the position as DTOC section chief, and it may be the case that an individual who is maybe a line agent or a case agent in a field office wouldn't have that visibility, correct?

A It is safe to say a line agent wouldn't have the same perspective that I had overseeing numerous cases versus the one case they're working on.

Q So you're able to look at a variety of cases and ensure consistency and ensure that standards are being met in a way that somebody who is focused solely on one case in a field office might not be able to, correct?

A It is correct by extension of my team managing those cases, right, and informing me --

Q Right.

A But, yes, ultimately, that is correct.

Q And this is the kind of dialogue, is that a fair way to describe it, that you just explained, conversations?

A Uh-huh.

Q That dialogue is standard operating procedure in all cases, right?

A In most cases, especially where you have subjects in multiple field offices striving towards a common objective of a disruption, an arrest, or search warrants and timing of search warrants so that the subject doesn't get tipped off. Those investigative steps and strategies need to be coordinated, and not everybody agrees, but ultimately we find a way to press forward and come up with a reasonable compromise in those cases.

Q I want to switch gears a little bit and talk about the Threat Review and Prioritization Process. Are you familiar be that?

A I am.

Q It's sometimes referred to as the TRP Process, correct?

A Yes.

Q In your roll as DTOC section chief, were you involved in the Threat Review and Prioritization Process?

A At headquarters and in giving review to field offices.

Q Okay. The TRP Process relies on intelligence, right?

A It does.

Q Can you talk through how the TRP Process works?

A So it's multifaceted, but typically, at a field office level, the intel components will conduct a review of various factors to include open cases, outcomes of cases, raw intelligence, and refined intelligence that paint a threat picture, and how present, persistent is that threat in the AOR.

The report that's drafted by intel will give a domain assessment; so, in that area of responsibility, what are the implications of that threat to that field office and then ultimately a recommendation of how the field office should respond to that threat. So, in an emerging threat situation, does the field office need to maintain a persistent status because we're already addressing the threat but keep it consistent so we don't lose effort on that threat, or do we need to surge resources on a known persistent threat, but an uptick of the threat reporting, do we need to have any response to that? And, vice versa, if the threat is diminishing, are we having the right impact on that threat, and should we continue to pursue it until it's gone?

Q In your opinion, is the TRP Process a reliable way to assess the size of a threat?

A I think it is reliable. It's a valuable tool in informing me as a manager of the field office, also in the role of Domestic Terrorism section chief, broadly how increased of a threat picture we're dealing with.

[redacted]. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[2:21 p.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. We're back on the record. I want to go back to some of the geofence capabilities we talked about during the majority's last hour, and I think what you said is that the technology is so precise that one can determine whether or not a digital device was literally on the Capitol Grounds. Am I understanding your testimony correctly?

Mr. Jensen. Yes. It was precise within a couple -- I don't want to say meters or feet, but it was close.

Mr. Gaetz. That's what I'm trying to figure out. If someone was walking up Independence Avenue, that's only a few feet from Federal property. So how would one know whether or not they had committed a violation of Federal law based on geofencing alone?

Mr. Jensen. So it's an indicator; it's not a predicator by itself. So it warrants additional review, but there were certain cases, many cases, where it's very much inside the restricted area of the Capitol, internal to the Capitol Building itself, very clear in those cases. But still I think it's important to note, and I don't mean to eat up your time, but it's important to note the presence of the device doesn't automatically imply the person who owns the device was there. We still need to put an end user to that device that was hitting inside the geofence.

Mr. Gaetz. You testified in the last hour of the majority's time that sometimes that digital information was the only predication sent to a field office, right?

Mr. Jensen. The initial tip. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So, if you're saying now it's not predication by itself, but sometimes it was the only evidence that existed, why would that be the basis of you directing someone in a field office to open an investigation?

Mr. Jensen. Yeah. And so it's a great point of clarification. I appreciate the opportunity. The direction provided is not: On that alone, open an investigation.

Where there's sufficient evidence to support the fact that an individual person -- that's why I wanted to clarify the device itself does not imply the person was there until we can definitively say so. So it's individual conduct for the crime that was committed. And, once we have that, then we should predicate a full investigation and use broader resources to fully investigate that individual.

Mr. Gaetz. Just so I understand it completely then, in the hundreds of cases that you directed to be opened, were any of those cases directed to be opened solely based on digital geofenced information?

Mr. Jensen. Yeah. And, again, I'm married to that term "directed." It's the term that I used, and I'll stick to it. The reality of the situation from the evidence gathered was tips and leads were going out to the field offices for action to evaluate: Did this device or individual identified participate in criminal conduct? And, if so, then open these types of cases. These are the options you have, but a case should be opened and provided to the U.S. Attorney's Office.

That's the directive part. We are doing this.

But not directing specific "you must on this limited piece of information," and that's still discretionary to the individual field office who receives that tip or lead to fully evaluate that information against the other knowns and determine what individual, if any, entered the Capitol and under what circumstances.

Mr. Gaetz. Is intent an element of criminal trespassing?

Mr. Jensen. I would have to check the actual statute and review it.

Mr. Gaetz. That's some kind of mens rea, right?

Mr. Jensen. There are certain crimes that are prima facia, and I would have to check the statute to give you a direct answer on that one.

Mr. Gaetz. Well, it seems like -- I mean, if you were -- if you were indicating that every person that was in the Capitol had committed a violation of Federal criminal law, it seems as though you made that determination in the absence of an evaluation of intent. Is that fair?

Mr. Jensen. It's not fully fair. Yes, the assumption being made that the Federal violation that we would investigate at a minimum was trespass for entering a federally protected facility. Whether or not that would ultimately be charged, but that gives us the Federal violation that is alleged to have occurred to open an investigations.

Mr. Gaetz. Right. But to evaluate whether or not that violation has occurred, don't you have to know the elements of the violation?

Mr. Jensen. You do.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you know them?

Mr. Jensen. I'm sure that I did in providing guidance out to the field, but right now I haven't reviewed that statute in support of this testimony, and I wouldn't want to speak incorrectly without reviewing that statute.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever give direction to any field offices to evaluate the intent of people who might have been on the Capitol Grounds?

Mr. Jensen. Well, it's normal course -- I did not, to answer your question, but it's a normal course of investigative activity to determine what role they had there, and that was guidance that I provided to the field. And every case that we opened to evaluate those individuals for additional conduct, where they were working in coordination or conspiratorially with others.

Mr. Gaetz. Were you ever involved in any discussions with the FBI where the nature of people's intent to commit a violation of Federal law was discussed?

Mr. Jensen. Related to January 6th?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes.

Mr. Jensen. None that come to mind directly, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware that, on January 6th, before some people had arrived on Capitol Grounds, barriers that were previously erected had been removed?

Mr. Jensen. I'm not aware.

Mr. Gaetz. So you haven't seen the videos of --

Mr. Jensen. I'm sorry. You mean, before the crowd moved up, the barriers were removed, or before they entered the Capitol?

Mr. Gaetz. I'll represent to you that, as the group of people were walking from the Ellipse to the Capitol, that some of the initial people who arrived removed barriers. I'll further represent to you that barriers were moved at times by Capitol Police. Is that news to you?

Mr. Jensen. It is not. I am aware of that, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. So how did you evaluate the removal of those barriers in the determination as to whether or not a particular individual intended to break the law?

Mr. Jensen. That was a clear point of discussion between myself and DOJ, especially as we were providing that early guidance to the field about what potential statutes would apply. And, for me, there needed to be a bright line. And that bright line for me was the walls of the Capitol, the doors of the Capitol, the windows of the Capitol that were clearly breached and not open to the general public.

Anybody who entered the Grounds of the Capitol in that restricted area might not have known that it was restricted by the time they got there, and I fully understood that and recognized the backside of the crowd might not have had any idea. But that backside of the crowd, if they entered the Capitol that day, still should have known it's off limits to the general public. But is not evidence of a crime in and of itself. It needs to be further evaluated if they entered the Capitol that day and investigated by that local field office. That's the direction that was provided, and where criminal culpability was established, a full investigation to evaluate in totality the circumstances.

[2:28 p.m.]

Mr. Gaetz. Were any Americans charged for violations of Federal criminal law on January 6th who did not enter the Capitol?

Mr. Jensen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. And were any of those people who were charged not engaged in violence?

Mr. Jensen. That I'm not sure about. To my knowledge, the ones that specifically were charged outside of the Capitol were engaged in assaults on police officers or damage to property of the Capitol grounds. And so, by that, it might not be considered violent, but it was criminal in nature.

[redacted]. Do you have a specific understanding of all the January 6th cases that have been charged since the time you left --

Mr. Jensen. I don't.

[redacted]. -- DTOS?

Mr. Jensen. I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. But if someone were on the Capitol grounds, committed no other criminal act other than technically being on grounds that might have been previously barricaded, you wouldn't give direction in those matters to pursue criminal process to field offices, would you?

Mr. Jensen. So, like I said, the clear, bright line agreed upon between myself, the FBI, and DOJ was individuals or their devices identified inside of the Capitol was action to field offices for further investigation.

Outside of the Capitol, barring what was considered plus-up factors by the Department of Justice -- assaults on Federal officers, assault on media members, damage to specific property on Capitol grounds -- if they didn't have any of those additional factors, we weren't investigating those people.

Mr. Gaetz. Who developed that bright line? Who were the people involved in the discussion to set that as the bright line?

Mr. Jensen. So that would've been myself, in consultation with Assistant Director Jill Sanborn and DOJ CTS attorneys. And at the time, sir, I believe it was Matt Blue who was my direct counterpart, but there could've been other attorneys that were present.

Mr. Gaetz. How did the FBI work with Bank of America in this investigation?

Mr. Jensen. We maintain partnerships with the private sector, to include Bank of America, and I'm aware that they provided information to the FBI. Outside of that, I didn't have any direct knowledge or interaction with Bank of America.

Mr. Gaetz. How did you become aware that they had provided information to the FBI?

Mr. Jensen. I became aware through one of my unit chiefs, who advised that a number of leads had gone out regarding Bank of America information of subjects -- I shouldn't say "subjects" -- of individuals identified in those leads who had certain purchase histories flagged by Bank of America to the FBI.

Mr. Gaetz. And who was that unit chief?

[redacted]. You can give the unit but not the name.

Mr. Jensen. Okay.

There was no unit at the time, because he was in charge of our headquarters' presence over Strategic Information and Operations Center.

Mr. Gaetz. Wait a second. Why can't the committee learn who gave the witness information in its Bank of America relationship?

[redacted]. As is standard practice, we're not putting names of non-SES individuals on the record. But happy to, if the committee has additional questions of this individual, take that back and see if we can get additional information.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

Did the FBI ask for this information from Bank of America?

Mr. Jensen. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you have knowledge as to how Bank of America provided that information, the medium that they used?

Mr. Jensen. No, I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you evaluate any of the Bank of America information in sending leads out to field offices?

Mr. Jensen. No.

Mr. Gaetz. What was the Bank of America information that was provided?

Mr. Jensen. My understanding -- and, again, I didn't see the information directly. I was made aware of certain leads that were sent out to field offices. I don't recall how many.

My understanding of that information was, it was certain purchaser transaction records of individuals that Bank of America provided over to the FBI that wasn't requested by the FBI. It was of their own volition.

Mr. Gaetz. So you have personal knowledge that there wasn't an FBI request?

Mr. Jensen. To my knowledge, there was not.

Mr. Gaetz. Did the FBI engage in this type of partnership with any other financial institutions as part of the January 6th investigation?

Mr. Jensen. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. Did Capital One provide any records to the FBI?

Mr. Jensen. That sounds very specific, but not to my knowledge.

Mr. Gaetz. So both the lead -- you do have knowledge of these Bank of America leads that went out to the field office but not any other institution.

Mr. Jensen. That's correct.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay.

What about telecommunication companies?

Mr. Jensen. We do have relationships with telecommunication companies. There's law enforcement liaisons at most telecommunication companies that deal with legal process or subpoenas issued by FBI or other law enforcement agencies.

Mr. Gaetz. And was information from telecommunication companies part of the January 6th investigation?

Mr. Jensen. I'm sure that it was. On a granular level, each individual investigation? Probably. But these are assumptions on my part, and I don't want to be misleading.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. I want to know as to what you have personal knowledge about.

Mr. Jensen. Yeah.

Mr. Gaetz. And so do you have personal knowledge of any telecommunications companies, of their own volition, providing data to the FBI as part of this investigation?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And do you have any personal knowledge of the FBI requesting data from telecommunication companies as a part of this investigation?

Mr. Jensen. Yes. I mean, we had the geofence data set up. Google is a telecommunications company.

[redacted]. Are you asking outside of legal process?

Mr. Gaetz. I'm asking it in the broadest sense possible.

Mr. Jensen. I mean, I took it, in our lawful authorities for legal process. Those are the ones I'm aware of.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of any field offices providing pushback to some of the Bank of America-generated leads?

Mr. Jensen. I've become aware of it, but at the time I was not.

Mr. Gaetz. And what have you become aware of?

Mr. Jensen. I've become aware of some public statements from a former FBI employee who categorized interactions between a field office and headquarters about certain leads.

Mr. Gaetz. And is that former employee George Hill?

Mr. Jensen. Yes.

Mr. Gaetz. At the time of the investigation, were you aware of the Boston Field Office's concern about the inclusion of the Bank of America records in this investigation?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Is that normally something you would've been aware of?

Mr. Jensen. I think it would've come to my attention through the normal course of business. If Boston was truly concerned and they didn't get resolution at a lower level, it would've been flagged for my attention.

But, as I noted, one of my employees made me aware of it, and we took -- I didn't get to this part, but we took immediate action to pull those leads out of our system.

Mr. Gaetz. When was that?

Mr. Jensen. It was immediate upon finding out that those leads existed. I don't know the date. It was a verbal briefing that I received.

Mr. Gaetz. From who?

Mr. Jensen. From one of my unit chiefs.

And my concern being, conflating information of leads going out through the normal process that we established for January 6th investigations and then a separate stream of information provided separately, right, but going out to a field office purporting to be January 6th and taking action on those as though they were part of the overarching investigation.

I didn't know how we had obtained the data at the time. I didn't --

Mr. Gaetz. Bank of America data?

Mr. Jensen. Correct. And I was concerned where it originated. So there were unknown --

Mr. Gaetz. And why did that concern you?

Mr. Jensen. Just because it wasn't coming from the normal case that we were operating under. So I wanted to know, where did it originate, how did we get our hands on it, the process that was issued to get that information.

I came to find out it was provided by Bank of America directly to us without any process being issued. It was them providing it to a law enforcement agency. And those leads were cut by another unit that were not directly involved in the oversight and management of January 6th.

Mr. Gaetz. And which unit was that?

Mr. Jensen. There's a -- it's a unit in a section. The section was the Strategic Partner Engagement Section of Counterterrorism Division.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever seen anything like that before, where a large financial institution provided huge swaths of data without being asked?

Mr. Jensen. I couldn't categorize the amount of data because I didn't see it, didn't analyze it.

I have not been a part of that where it's been voluntarily provided, but I don't know if it's happened before or not.

Mr. Gaetz. Have you ever had to pull back leads in the way that you did regarding the Bank of America data before?

Mr. Jensen. No, not in that nature.

Mr. Gaetz. How many leads did you pull back?

Mr. Jensen. I don't know. I just asked that all the leads relative to the Bank of America get pulled back and be further evaluated and that, additionally, any unit that thought they had information relative to January 6th coordinate with Washington Field Office and the headquarters entities responsible for it.

We couldn't be requesting field offices be unified in the strategy and then ourselves at headquarters not be unified.

Mr. Gaetz. The committee is interested in the volume and scope of these Bank of America leads.

Mr. Jensen. Uh-huh.

Mr. Gaetz. So, if we sought from the FBI how many went out, how many were pulled back, is that data somewhere in the FBI's possession, custody, and control?

Mr. Jensen. I would imagine it is. When a lead is sent through our system of record, there's a permanent record of it.

Mr. Gaetz. Thank you.

[redacted]?

[redacted]. Can I just --

[redacted]. Sure.

BY [redacted]:

Q You would agree that if someone was exercising their First Amendment rights and they were on the Ellipse, they maybe walked down to the Capitol but didn't approach the Capitol grounds, there's no predication for an FBI visit? Is that correct?

A I mean, as a general rule, anybody engaged in First Amendment activity is protected.

Q Right.

A Yes.

Q And if somebody engaged purely in First Amendment activity and you got a visit from an FBI agent, that would be chilling, wouldn't it?

A Not necessarily. The manner in which the engagement occurs -- and it wouldn't be out of the realm of possibility -- we're speaking hypothetically, but based on my knowledge and experience, if somebody is a bystander engaged in First Amendment activity of a broader construct and potentially was in a position to see something, it wouldn't be chilling for me to go ask them what they saw, because I'm trying to conduct an investigation of other criminal conduct. It doesn't mean they have to engage with me, but it's not focused on them; it's focused on conduct observed.

Q If an individual was identified because they used their Bank of America debit card in Washington, D.C, on January 6th, but that's all you have, you would agree that that's not enough information to go speak with that person about their role in illegal activities on January 6th?

A My concern in those instances where Bank of America data was used to initiate leads is that the leads lacked allegations of Federal criminal conduct. Contact by an FBI agent can be consensual at any time, right, but sending leads out based solely on information of purchase history that have no attachment of potential crimes or criminal conduct is what was concerning to me.

Q Are you aware of the allegation that the Boston Field Office pushed back on the Washington Field Office's request that they open up at least a preliminary investigation on a number of Bostonians that had traveled by bus from Boston to Washington?

A Yes, sir.

Q And what can you tell us about that?

A So it surrounds a number of individuals that are affiliated with a group, and I know the name of the group has been out there, but that's not the focal point of anything I was interested in. There were known predicated subjects that traveled on that bus, and there were other known and unknown subjects that were believed to have participated in criminal conduct on January 6th at the U.S. Capitol.

There were a couple requests that went to Boston Field Office -- first and foremost, on the predicated subjects, further investigation into their activities and coordination with Washington Field Office on those activities; the known or unknown subjects, based on either cell phone data from the geofence or other means of identifying -- social media and other means -- of passengers on that bus, to conduct additional investigative efforts to identify them and determine whether it warranted a full investigation. So those were tips and leads.

And, then, as for the other passengers on the bus, assess them for their conduct on that day. Did they witness something that would be beneficial to our overall investigation -- in other words, they were witnesses and could be interviewed? Or was there other indications that more people on those bus rides participated in criminal conduct?

Q So you think it would be perfectly appropriate to go interview some of the bus passengers that you had no other information on other than they simply took the bus trip?

A Potentially. Proximity to the known subjects; proximity to some of the other subjects that might've been identified for participation in criminal conduct. Whether they overheard conversations or they had information relative to our ongoing investigations, those are viable interviews.

Q What's your reaction, then, to the Boston Field Office pushing back and said, no, we're not going to go interview everyone on that bus unless there is a valid predicate?

A Again, the communications between field offices is normal on large-scale investigations. And for one office to say, for whatever reason -- resource allocation or time and intensity for people that are not involved -- it's not an investigative step worthwhile, that's wholly up to the investigating field office and appropriate, unless there's additional context that can be provided from other perspectives that they're not aware of.

Q Uh-huh.

A And, in this case, I don't believe there was. And so it was proper communication at the right levels to say, this is what we can and will do --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and this is too far, based on our personnel or other reasons.

Q Okay. So you're fine with Bonavolonta, or whoever the special agent in charge was in Boston, agreeing with his personnel that we're not going to go and talk to everybody on the bus?

A I think that's an investigative call and determined, if it was by Bonavolonta, appropriately based on his assessment.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q During your tenure working at headquarters and interacting with the WFO, did you ever have occasion to interact with Assistant Special Agent in Charge Timothy Thibault?

A I did.

Q And how often would you interact?

A Mr. Thibault was an assistant section chief in Counterterrorism Division at the time, though not one of mine. He was in a different section. And I had occasional interaction with him.

Q Uh-huh.

A I believe he was in charge of International Terrorism Operations Section II, which handled most extraterritorial investigations for International Terrorism.

There were certain instances where we had case overlap between domestic terrorism operations and travelers going overseas. And those were my interactions with him -- just coordination of our efforts in foreign countries.

Q And did you ever interact with him when he was an assistant special agent in charge at the WFO?

A Not to my recollection.

Q And are you aware of allegations that ASAC Thibault used his official title on social media to make some political posts?

A I am.

Q And what is your reaction to that?

A I don't know that I have a reaction to that. He made some choices -- and, in my opinion, made choices that I wouldn't make -- blending personal life and professional life.

Q And are you aware of allegations that ASAC Thibault let his political leanings seep into how he conducted public corruption investigations?

A I'm aware of the allegations.

Q And when you had occasion to interact with him, did you view him as unbiased?

A I viewed him as a consummate professional, very well tenured in the FBI, knowledgeable over the programs that he was responsible for.

Q Uh-huh.

A And I say "professional" in the sense that he was always measured in his responses when working with me on joint matters. And that was the extent of my communications with him.

Q And during your tenure at headquarters and interaction with the WFO, did you ever have occasion to interact with Assistant Director Steven D'Antuono?

A Yes.

Q And how often did you interact with him?

A So I believe his first day was also around January 4th, maybe just before that. Shortly after January 6th, we had daily link-up calls between myself, him, some of his executive staff, and the U.S. Attorney's Office criminal chief.

Q What did you understand his role in the January 6th investigations to be?

A Well, he was the division head over Washington Field Office and oversaw the personnel allocation towards the main effort; some of the additional investigations, like the pipe bomb investigations, of staffing; and continuing to operate Washington Field Office on a day-to-day basis.

Q Uh-huh. And how closely would you say that he interacted with headquarters and your -- the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section as well?

A In my observations, I measured it as daily. Many of my interactions with executive management on the seventh floor of headquarters, the Deputy Director or Director, were often in coordination with Mr. D'Antuono.

Q Okay.

Mr. Gaetz, any more questions?

Mr. Gaetz. Yes.

You testified about Mr. Thibault's blending of personal life and political life. What did you mean by that?

Mr. Jensen. I think the allegation she asked if I was aware of, where certain -- using his title on social media posts that implied certain political opinions.

Mr. Gaetz. Other than using his title in social media posts, did you ever observe any other way in which Mr. Thibault blended political life with professional life?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. That was the only one?

Mr. Jensen. That's the only one, and because it was made public.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you follow Mr. Thibault on Twitter?

Mr. Jensen. I don't have Twitter.

Mr. Gaetz. But you're aware of these tweets, based on media reports?

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of any other Twitter accounts that Mr. Thibault uses?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And are you aware of Mr. Thibault utilizing the Twitter accounts of friends and others to get information into the public?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Would that surprise you?

Mr. Jensen. I'd like to say it would surprise me, but not much surprises me these days.

Mr. Gaetz. What a lovely place for me to end.

BY [redacted]:

Q Mr. Thibault's -- you know, there have been allegations that he was instructing his personnel to limit activity on certain politically charged cases. Do you have any awareness of that?

A I don't.

Q Have you ever heard that allegation?

A Only, I believe, what was made public to me.

Q How well did you know Mr. Thibault?

A Not well.

Q So you just had occasional interaction with him?

A Professional contact.

Q Right. Okay.

Going back to the Boston --

A And, I'm sorry, I think also physical locations. I was at headquarters; he was at an offsite in McLean, Virginia --

Q Okay.

A -- right? So proximity is also a limiting factor in our interactions.

Q Okay.

Going back to the Boston Field Office --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- topic, we had a witness tell us when they were discussing the bus trip -- it was related to us that the Boston Field Office related to the Washington Field Office, "Hey, if you've got photos, if you've got video of any of these bus passengers in the Capitol, send them to us, and we will open up an investigation."

Were you aware of that level of detail?

A I've become aware of that. I was not at the time.

It is also a common request that we got from field offices. "I've got this limited lead. Do you have more?" And the system that we put in place, if they followed the instructions, allowed them to access that information.

Q Okay. And you came to learn that just from press reports?

A I believe so, yes, sir.

Q And it was related to us that Washington Field Office told the Boston Field Office personnel that, we can't do that, we can't give you photos or video, because there could be undercovers captured in the footage.

Are you familiar with that?

A I'm not, outside of what was made known to me recently.

Q And the implication was that there were enough undercovers in the Capitol that any amount of footage that you shared, you know, could compromise an undercover, that there's a high volume of undercovers in the Capitol.

Are you aware of the volume of undercovers or confidential human sources that were in the Capitol?

A No, sir.

Q Is it a big number?

A Well, I'm not aware.

Q So you're not -- you don't know if it's 1 or 100?

A It's not something that I was ever made aware of in setting up the video system. And I didn't set it up, but I was part of making it available.

One of the limiting factors of that video system, based on the internal workings of the surveillance system of the Capitol, is the number of angles on any given corridor or doorway. Without a known specific point of entry of a subject or a potential location inside the Capitol, an individual investigator might have to look through several thousand hours of video without a direct timestamp.

And so, if we could narrow that down --

Q Right.

A -- working with the Capitol Police, Washington Field Office could direct them to the specific locations of the video feeds to look for their subject and then go backwards and forwards and determine all the movements of their subject in the Capitol.

That's my understanding of limitations on that system that was put in place, but not for other reasons.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the Ray Epps saga?

A I am familiar based on media reporting, sir.

Q So the only thing you know about Ray Epps is what you've heard from media reports?

A That's correct. And then, I believe, a statement publicly made by the FBI officially about Ray Epps. But I don't have any additional outside of that.

Q Do you know what the FBI public pronouncement was?

A I didn't see it, and I don't have a copy of it, sir.

Q Do you know if Mr. Epps was a confidential human source for the FBI?

A I don't know, and if I did, I wouldn't be in a position to make a comment outside of what was already provided.

Q And so you also don't know or won't tell us whether Mr. Epps was an undercover FBI asset?

A Again, I'm fortunately in a position where I don't know.

Q Okay.

A But, again, not in a position to talk about sources, undercovers, or techniques --

Q Okay.

A -- for security reasons.

Q Well, if you don't know, that covers it.

Mr. Gaetz. How did the FBI use FISA in the January 6th investigation?

Mr. Jensen. I'm not aware that FISA was used in January 6th.

Mr. Gaetz. So raw foreign intelligence wasn't searched by the FBI?

Mr. Jensen. So I'm aware of a couple isolated incidents where an individual was searching records and searched FISA information, but I don't believe it was an intentional search for information of FISA material against January 6th subjects.

Mr. Gaetz. Tell me what you know about that incident.

Mr. Jensen. Outside of what I just described, I don't -- I don't recall the details. I couldn't tell you which field office it was. But it was flagged for my awareness.

Mr. Gaetz. So you only know of one case in the entire January 6th investigation where someone searched information that had been collected pursuant to 702 FISA, correct?

Mr. Jensen. So I should be clear: I'm not sure if it was a case or if it was a subject that they were looking for additional information on -- database queries that are authorized under our various policies. But I'm aware of one instance where a search was conducted and it implied FISA information, but I don't believe, based on the circumstances, that it was an intentional search of FISA records for that record.

Mr. Gaetz. In the scope of your January 6th investigation, did you investigate whether or not foreign entities had inspired or coordinated features of the riot?

Mr. Jensen. That's where I would direct you to the Foreign Influence Task Force.

They were run out of Counterterrorism Division. They were established for that purpose. And we had an imbedded analyst on the task force.

There were meetings and coordinations with the FITF, as we call it. But they were primarily responsible for any foreign influence related to subjects or threat streams related to January 6th.

Mr. Gaetz. How often did you meet with the FITF in the January 6th investigation?

Mr. Jensen. It was infrequent, and I would say probably a monthly briefing. But we typically met on a monthly basis in normal course of business.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you ever come to believe that the FITF may have been searching information collected pursuant to 702 FISA authorities?

Mr. Jensen. That I wouldn't know, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Are you aware of the searching of information collected pursuant to 702 FISA authorities in the investigations of the violence surrounding the summer of 2020?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. So if I represent to you that, while we've been sitting here today, a court has been quite critical of the FBI's searching of information collected to 702 FISA authorities as to the January 6th investigation and the summer-of-2020 investigations, that would come as news to you?

Mr. Jensen. Outside of the incident that I already described to you. That's one that I'm aware of.

Mr. Gaetz. Would it be concerning if there were searches of information collected pursuant to 702 FISA authority on Americans that became a part of the January 6th investigation?

Mr. Jensen. So it is concerning, because we don't collect using FISA or 702 specifically, which is foreign-facing, on U.S. citizens. And knowing the processes that we have in place, I would be surprised to learn that it was intentional, versus an inadvertent search. But I don't know to the extent of what searches were conducted outside of the one that I referenced. I also don't know how voluminous that search was, whether it was one individual or multiple. But it's a precaution that we have in place on our systems now where it's an overt check in order to search -- positively search FISA systems.

[redacted]. But you can still -- if an agent or other employee is checking this database, they can still check "yes" and get the information, right?

Mr. Jensen. If you have access to the system, you can run searches on it.

Mr. Gaetz. And how many FBI employees have access to that system?

Mr. Jensen. I'm not in a position to have that number.

Mr. Gaetz. It wouldn't surprise you, though, if it was more than 10,000, would it?

Mr. Jensen. I couldn't tell you.

Mr. Gaetz. What guardrails were put into place to ensure that 702 material wasn't improperly searched, as it related to the January 6th investigation?

Mr. Jensen. That's a question I'm just not prepared for in totality. I would definitely have to get back to you on that.

Mr. Gaetz. You didn't put any guardrails in place?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And are you aware of any of the information gathered from the searches you are aware of being used to develop any leads?

Mr. Jensen. No, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Do --

Mr. Jensen. But I also don't know details of it. So, while I'm not aware of it, I don't know how it was used or if it was used.

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah, I'm not -- this isn't a trick question. I'm just trying to understand if you know. And --

Mr. Jensen. No, I don't.

Mr. Gaetz. -- if the answer is you don't know if it was used or not, you just know that it happened, that would suffice.

Mr. Jensen. Yes, sir.

[redacted]. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted]. All right. We can go back on the record. It is 3:01 p.m.

Thank you again. I know it's been a long day and you have a flight to catch.

Mr. Jensen. It's okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Mr. Jensen, what's a voluntary interview?

A It's a consensual encounter between a law enforcement agent or officer and a citizen. And it implies that the citizen can walk away at any time and not engage in that encounter.

Q And those are sometimes conducted potentially because somebody is of interest, but also because they might have been a witness to something, correct?

A They are. And sometimes they're conducted because we're approached to conduct an interview. Somebody has information, they want to provide it, and it leads to an interview.

Q Okay. What's the level of predication that you need to conduct a voluntary interview?

A None.

Q Okay. So it's voluntary, it's the lowest level, basically?

A Yeah. It's completely at the discretion of the individual that's approached.

Q Okay.

We talked about these buses of individuals. Is it fair to say that it would've been within the FBI's authority to conduct voluntary interviews, because you conduct voluntary interviews of anybody?

A It is.

Q Okay. And some of the purpose of interviewing some of those suspects may have been just, "You might have witnessed something; tell us if you saw anything," right?

A That's absolutely true. One of the key things that I reminded the field offices about on those coordination calls is, we're still looking for a subject related to the placement of those pipe bombs. And anybody who had information and anybody that we contact who was there that day could potentially have information relative to that, outside of the actual siege on the Capitol that day.

Q So it doesn't mean that the people on those buses were necessarily predicated subjects; they might've just been witnesses to crimes.

A Very possible.

Q Okay.

There was a question about additional information and the request for additional information. Additional information actually was provided to the Boston Field Office, right?

A In regards to?

Q In regards to the individuals on the buses.

A I think additional information was provided on some of the passengers, not all the passengers.

Q Right. So Boston asked for additional information, and where you had it, you provided it to them. Is that correct?

A I believe so, yes.

Q Okay.

With respect to the Bank of America list, do you have any knowledge of any field offices actually taking any action based on that list?

A I don't.

Q Okay. So you don't know if any field office actually went out and interviewed anybody based on that list?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

How quickly -- I want to get a better sense of the timeframe here. So you learned about the list from a unit chief, you said?

A Correct.

Q And did you immediately act to pull it back?

A As soon as I was briefed on it, my request was that the unit who sent it out pull all the leads back --

Q Okay.

A -- relative to Bank of America, and I was informed that that was already in process.

Q Oh, okay.

A My team anticipated my response and had already started to pull those back.

Q Okay. So you don't know how long the list was circulating, but as soon as your team learned about it, they immediately took action to pull it back?

A Correct.

Q And that was in accordance with what you would've wanted?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the difference between an assessment, a preliminary investigation, and a full investigation?

A I am. I often consult the DIOG for clarification, but, yes, I am.

Q Okay. What's your understanding of the level of predication required for an assessment?

A It's a factual basis indicating somebody may have been involved in criminal activity.

Q Okay. What investigative steps can be taken?

A They're limited. And we have a flowchart --

Q Yep.

A -- that goes through what process is. To be specific, I would want to consult the DIOG and give that to you, but it is very limited, what you can do.

Typically, in those three categories, outside of a full investigation, you can conduct a consensual interview; you can potentially do limited surveillance to develop a pattern of life or other means. But unless there is additional levels of predication, you can't engage in more intrusive investigative techniques.

Q Okay.

In the case of January 6th, was the DIOG guidance regarding predication for an assessment followed in all cases, to the best of your knowledge?

A Yes.

Q Was the DIOG guidance regarding the investigative steps that are permissible for an assessment followed in all cases, to the best of your knowledge?

A To the best of my knowledge.

Q Okay.

What's the level of predication for a preliminary investigation?

A I would have to consult the DIOG, if you have it --

Q We have it. We can refresh --

A -- to differentiate.

Q And, actually, turning back real quick to assessments, to the best of your knowledge, did the Attorney General's October 4th memorandum change anything about the level of predication required for an assessment?

A The October 4th memo?

Q Uh-huh.

A Regarding the threats?

Q Regarding violence against educators.

A No, it did not.

Q Okay. That's set by the DIOG, right?

A Yes.

Q And it's not -- no individual memo from the AG would change that?

A Correct.

Q Okay.

All right. Preliminary investigations. You know, I'm actually just going to use this to refresh your recollection. I don't need to introduce it into the record.

A Okay.

Q I think predication is actually on this. It's 6.5.

A For the PI?

Q Yeah, for preliminary investigation.

A So, reviewing this, predication for a preliminary investigation includes activity constituting a Federal crime or a threat to national security which has or may have occurred, may be occurring, or will or may occur, and the investigation may obtain information or intelligence relating to the activity or involvement or role of an individual, group, or organization in such activity.

A subsection of that: An individual, group, organization, entity, information, property, or activity is or may be a target of attack, victimization, acquisition, infiltration, or recruitment in connection with criminal activity in violation of Federal law or a threat to national security, and the investigation may obtain information or intelligence that would help to protect against such activity or threat.

Q So that's the level of predication that's laid out in the DIOG for a preliminary investigation, correct?

A That's correct.

Q To the best of your knowledge, did the FBI adhere to this requirement before opening any preliminary investigation with respect to the January 6th investigations?

A To the best of my knowledge, yes.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the level of predication required for a full investigation?

A I am. Again, if you have --

Q Would you like to --

A -- a copy --

Q Yes.

A -- I'd like to read it.

Q And we're not going to enter this into the record. It's solely to refresh your recollection. And I believe predication is section 7.5.

A It is.

So predication for formal investigations, this is where the articulable factual basis that reasonably indicates one of the following circumstances exists: activity constituting a Federal crime or threat to national security, similar to what I already read, and then an individual, group, organization, entity, information, property, or activity is or may be a target of an attack.

Q So the key phrase here is "articulable factual basis," correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. To the best of your knowledge, did the FBI adhere to the predication standards prior to opening any full investigation related to the January 6th suspects?

A Yes. And I think it's an important note, just looking at the predication differences, like, information or allegation would be commensurable to a tip that an individual may have participated in criminal conduct.

Q Right.

A The articulable factual basis is, based on that initial tip, other information and then specific identification of that subject, that he was or she was, in fact, present inside the Capitol and did X, Y, or Z.

Q Right.

So, essentially, FBI had to build these cases. They didn't just open preliminary investigations or full investigations on a single tip. Is that fair to say?

A That is generally fair to say, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And, to the best of your knowledge, that was the structure that you adhered to with respect to January 6th investigations?

A It is.

Q Okay.

A Even in tips where, on its face, it lended itself to articulable factual basis.

Q Uh-huh.

A We received numerous tips that this is the individual identified; he was here on this location. That's that 200,000 --

Q Yeah.

A What do they call it? Social media grabs or --

Q Digital media?

A Digital media tips.

Like, even where it lent itself to the articulable factual basis, we still need to corroborate it.

Q Uh-huh.

A Separately corroborated information that lends us to make that assertion. Not just what somebody else told us.

Q Does the FBI have oversight mechanisms in place to make sure that all case agents are following that requirement?

A We have a couple layers, yes.

Q Can you describe those?

A So, first and foremost, an agent would receive a tip, information, or allegation; determine what, if any, steps needed to be taken -- an assessment, a PI, or a full investigation. They would submit paperwork to their supervisor, who would review it.

In the case of a domestic terrorism investigation, there's an additional layer, which is the CDC has to review all case openings or assessments.

And then there's a secondary layer at headquarters, where program managers would review case openings. So the field already initiated the case; now the PM is going to review it and ensure that it meets all the policy requirements for reporting to DOJ, meeting the Counterterrorism Policy Guide, in our case, or other policy guides that would have been in effect.

Q And all of those steps are documented in the case file, correct?

A There are either notes in the case file or there's an indication that it was reviewed.

Q And if there was ever a situation where certain standards were not met or where a certain supervisor is not clear on something and somehow a case got through and made it to actual trial, that information would be provided to a defense attorney, right, because it would be exculpatory, potentially?

A I mean, anything in our case file is potentially discoverable.

Q Right.

A I'm not aware of a specific instance like that, but if it's in our case file and it's deemed discoverable, it would be provided.

Q Okay.

You were asked earlier about Timothy Thibault --

A I was.

Q -- and you were asked about some allegations. I want to be abundantly clear: You don't have any personal knowledge of these allegations, correct?

A I do not.

Q So this is solely based on media reporting?

A It's on media reporting that I was made aware of.

Q Okay. And so, to the extent that you were asked, you know, "Does this surprise you?" and you said, "Not much surprises me" -- but that was solely a reaction to what you were told in this room, right?

A Correct, and the things that I've experienced in my career.

Q Right. Right. But --

A Expect the unexpected.

Q But you didn't have any knowledge of that allegation before it was told to you today?

A I did not.

Q Okay. So we don't have any knowledge now if it's true or not, correct?

A I don't.

Q Okay.

A And I'm aware that there are allegations.

Q Okay.

And one last question. You were asked about the FISA 702 opinion that apparently came out when we were sitting here. You were asked if there were any guardrails in place on the searching of FISA information related to January 6th, and you said you had not put in any place, but you didn't know if there were others in place by somebody else.

I just want to ask, did you put any guardrails in place with respect to the ability to search FISA information regarding the summer 2020 incidents?

A I did not.

And I might've misunderstood Mr. Gaetz's question about the guardrails in place. I thought, in my understanding of the question, what guardrails were put in place, versus did I put specific guardrails in place, right? And I don't have authority to put guardrails in place.

In our systems, there are automatic guardrails, checking boxes of which systems you're going to search. And I did not specifically anticipate or put any additional layers of guardrails, as you described it, in place, whether we were conducting searches from 2020 or any time after that.

Q Okay.

Thank you. We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 3:14 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: [redacted]

Monday, May 22, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in Room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

Present: Representative Gaetz.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ANTITRUST,

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR OVERSIGHT

[redacted] RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted] DIGITAL DIRECTOR

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY INTERN

[redacted] MINORITY STAFF ASSISTANT

[redacted] MINORITY OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted] MINORITY DETAILEE

[redacted] MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE ADMINISTRATIVE STATE,

REGULATORY REFORM, AND ANTITRUST:

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For [redacted]:

[redacted], ESQ.

[redacted], ESQ.

Kirkland & Ellis LLP

1301 Pennsylvania Avenue NW

Washington, D.C. 20004

[redacted] Let's go on the record. Thanks.

This is a transcribed interview of [redacted]. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state her name for the record?

[redacted]. [redacted].

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for your appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone else from the committee who's here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Mr. Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Democratic chief counsel for oversight.

[redacted] [redacted] Jerry Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] counsel for Democrats, Judiciary Committee.

[redacted] [redacted] minority on the Judiciary Committee.

[redacted] [redacted] Ranking Member Nadler.

[redacted] [redacted] committee staffer, Jerry Nadler.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Thank you.

I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there are official court reporters taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

[redacted]. I do.

[redacted] So the court reporters can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It's important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. And it's my understanding that you are appearing here today with counsel. Is that right?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] Could counsel please state their names for the record?

[redacted]. [redacted], Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted]. [redacted], Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we will take our time.

If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just so say.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or don't remember, it's best not to guess; please just give us your best recollection. And it is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to give a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

[redacted]. I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand this?

[redacted] I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

[redacted]. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today will be confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of the investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporters so that they can go in the official transcript. Any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That's the end to my preamble here.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] Just thank you to the witness for taking time out of your day to come here today.

[redacted]. Can we take one break off the record?

[redacted] Yeah. Off the record.

[redacted]. Thanks.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

Mr. Gaetz, would you introduce yourself for the record?

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, majority member, House Judiciary.

[redacted] Very good.

The clock now reads 10:05. We'll start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you again for appearing voluntarily.

Could you state your full name again for the record, please?

A [redacted].

Q And where is your current place of employment?

A Meta.

Q And what's your current title?

A Head of regional policy partnerships.

Q Okay. And beginning with college, can you provide your educational background, please?

A Yes. I have an undergraduate degree.

Q And where'd you graduate from?

A Harvard.

Q And when was that?

A 2015.

Q Starting with college, what's your employment history?

A I had several internships in college. The first was at The Winston Group here in D.C. And then I was -- I worked on Harvard's Summer in Washington Program. And then I worked on Rick Snyder's reelect campaign.

Q And after college?

A After college, my first job was as the assistant to the chief operating officer on Carly Fiorina's Presidential campaign.

Q And what were your responsibilities in that role?

A Primarily booking cars for Carly Fiorina's Presidential campaign and other, sort of, travel booking.

Q What were the dates for that employment?

A I was in that role for a couple of months, not long. It started the summer of 2015.

Q And when, approximately, did it end?

A I don't remember the exact point I transitioned to being her policy -- like, a policy coordinator on the team. And then that role ended when she dropped out of the race.

Q Okay. And when was that, approximately?

A That was spring of '16.

Q Okay. And what were your responsibilities as policy coordinator?

A It was primarily research on events and engagements she was going to and background research for debate prep.

Q And what was your next position after that?

A I returned to The Winston Group for a couple of months.

Q And what was your role there?

A Primarily polling data analysis.

Q And what was your position after The Winston Group?

A I was a contractor for PRO Unlimited, working for Meta.

Q Okay.

A Or, Facebook at the time.

Q And when did that begin?

A That began in May of 2016.

Q Okay. And what were your responsibilities in that role?

A I was providing platform support to House Republicans and House Republican candidates.

Q And how long were you in this position for?

A About a year.

Q And what was your next position after that?

A After that, I got a full-time job with Meta, so moved from PRO Unlimited to working for Meta officially.

Q So this would've been about May 2017?

A Correct, yes.

Q And what was your first full-time position with Meta?

A It was a little bit of the former role, but then I started to pick up State and local government portfolios. Still the platform support, but providing it for State and local government.

Q Okay. And how long were you in this position for?

A Over the next 5 years, I transitioned sort of more fully to covering just State and local government and building out that team.

Q Okay. What were your day-to-day responsibilities for the State and local team?

A They changed a lot over time, but at the beginning it was -- I was sort of the front line of defense of platform support. So if the Governor got locked out of his Instagram account, I'd be the person they would call to get back in. If a statehouse caucus wanted a best-practices training on how to use Instagram to reach constituents with update letters or things like that, I'd be the one who would fly out to the statehouse and provide that sort of thing.

Q Okay. Who did you report to?

A [redacted].

Q And was it [redacted] the entire time?

A I've always reported to [redacted].

Q How big was your team?

A When I started at the company, I was the only person on [redacted]'s team.

Q Okay. So it was just the two of you.

A Yeah.

Q And did it grow over time?

A It did.

Q And when, approximately, did it begin to expand?

A I think just slowly over time we just added people. There was no, like, point of explosive growth.

Q Okay. And how big is that team now?

A The team has morphed and changed a lot, but I believe that [redacted] has around 20 reports at this point -- or, 20 reports I worked with.

Q And do you still report to [redacted] today?

A I do.

Q And what's [redacted]'s title?

A [redacted] is the director of external affairs at Meta.

Q Okay. Are there other teams that fall underneath [redacted]'s responsibility?

A Yes.

Q And what are those other teams?

A So I run sort of our regional team. There's also a team that focuses on Federal-level work and a team that focuses on, sort of, central programming.

Q What does the central programming team do?

A It's still a fairly new team, but they do things like manage our contract with our events vendor, help put on certain events for the team, things like that.

Q Okay. Who leads the Federal team?

A [redacted].

Q And how big is that team?

A Four or five people.

Q And do you work with them closely?

A I work with them -- yeah, some. We report to the same manager. But we're dealing -- we deal with similar topics but different partner sets.

Q Gotcha. And is your focus -- so you were with State and local; now you're with the regional team. Is this all U.S.-focused?

A Yes. Well, when I first started in the role, I also did some work in Canada, but now I'm just U.S.-focused.

Q Okay. And which team was involved with work in Canada?

A The Politics and Government Outreach team.

Q Okay. Does any of [redacted]'s teams deal with anyone outside of the U.S.?

A I believe some of the Federal team still does some work in Canada.

Q Okay.

Who reports to you now, if anyone?

A Yeah. I have a handful of -- so I have -- in terms of -- I have a direct reporting team that covers California, and then I have two other people who run a regional team for the rest of the country.

Q Okay. And who are these people?

A [redacted] runs my team on the eastern half of the U.S. [redacted] runs my team on the western half of the U.S. And then I directly manage our California team.

Q And when did you begin working with -- I believe it says [redacted] and [redacted]?

A Yes. I hired [redacted], I believe, in 2018 and [redacted] in 2020.

Q Okay. And what do your day-to-day responsibilities look like in your current role?

A So, in my current role, I do a lot of support and backfill for my team as they need me. So my team is a regionally divided team; they each own a section of the country. Still in charge of the same platform support -- training, education, sort of relationship-building components at the State and local level. So I help them where they need help with that and then support and backfill them when they're out of the office or need other things.

Q Okay. And is your role in your team, is this just for Facebook? Is this also for Meta's other platforms?

A It's for all platforms -- all Meta platforms.

Q So that includes Instagram?

A It does.

Q Does that include WhatsApp?

A It does.

Q How does your position work with respect to WhatsApp?

A Exactly the same as it does with the other platforms. If a State or local government official is having a problem using WhatsApp, we will, you know, provide platform support just like we would with Facebook or Instagram or answer a question or do a training.

Q Okay. And for all the teams underneath [redacted]'s purview, are they all for all Meta platforms -- Instagram, WhatsApp, Facebook?

A Yes.

Q Do issues -- let me ask this first. Are you familiar with the terms

"misinformation," "disinformation," and "malinformation"?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you define those terms the way they're used by Meta personnel?

A We've got, sort of, in-depth definitions of how we reference those terms in our community standards, which are available on the website.

Q To your understanding, what's the difference between misinformation and disinformation?

A Again, we define it all on the website. Our Community Standards Team is our experts on this, and they're the right people to talk to, sort of, on the nuances of those policies and definitions.

Q Does Meta's misinformation policy fall within the scope of your team's purview?

A Again, you can see that policy on the website, but my team's purview is supporting State and local governments. So, if they were to report something to us, we would pass it on to a team that would review it and then let us know what the answer is. But making decisions about what does and does not violate our policies is not in my team's purview.

Q Okay. If it's a misinformation report from a State or local official, who do you pass that information along to?

A Our Community Standards Team is who would pass along any, sort of, ask of platform review.

Q Okay. And who leads that team?

A [redacted].

Q Okay. Do you know how big that team is?

A I do not know how big that team is.

Q Who do you work with most closely on that team?

A [redacted].

Q And who is he?

A He's a member of the Community Standards Team.

Q Do you know what his title is?

A I do not know what his title is.

Q Okay.

Does disinformation -- is it a similar issue where, if you receive a report of disinformation from --

A Any report I receive from State and local government, regardless of what it is, would pass on to those teams to review.

Q Okay. Are disinformation reports passed along to the same team?

A Again, it's the same process for every report. They pass it on to Community Escalations Team, which then, if it needed to be reviewed against our community standards, would go to Content Policy.

Q Okay. And when you say pass it along, is this just via email?

A Via email.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with [redacted]?

A I am.

Q And who is he?

A He works on [redacted]'s team.

Q And who's [redacted]?

A He heads up our security policy work.

Q Do you work with either of them?

A I do.

Q And what's the context of your interactions with them?

A Primarily, my interactions with them are around platform security. We've done a lot of work to try to get government officials and government accounts to turn on two-factor authentication on their personal accounts. Their team has done a lot of work with our Facebook Protect program. So that two-factor authentication is the primary way in which I've worked with them and my partners.

Q Have you worked with them with respect to coordinated inauthentic behavior?

A I have brought them in to talk to my partners about coordinated inauthentic behavior takedowns, but I do not work on those.

Q And when you say your partners, who are you referring to?

A State and local government officials.

Q Are you familiar with Facebook's community standards?

A Generally. But I'm not an expert in our community standards.

Q Are there some aspects that you're more familiar with than others?

A I would say I'm generally familiar across the board.

Q Have you played any role in shaping these policies?

A I do not write our community standards.

Q And do you play any role in enforcing the policies?

A I do not.

Q If something is identified as misinformation and it's passed along to your team by a State and local official, you pass it along to the misinformation team. Do you know if they conduct the investigation?

A I don't know exactly what the process is, no.

Q Okay. Do they report back to you?

A The escalations team who we send the report to sends a report -- sends the decision back to my team, yes.

Q Okay. And how is that communicated to your team?

A Email.

Q Okay. And then do you share the decision with the State and local official that flagged it?

A I do.

Q Okay.

A If the report came in to me, I would be the one that would share it back via email. If the report came in to a member of my team, they would be the one that would check back. So, sorry, the person who the report comes in to would be the one who would share it back. That is not always me --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- or even usually me.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Would each member of your team also be communicating with [redacted], or would they all have their own contacts?

[redacted]. We would each -- each member of my team would send the report through to, like, a central reporting email address.

[redacted] Okay. And what is that central reporting email address?

[redacted]. [redacted]@FB (ph) or, I think now, Meta.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Could you repeat that? I couldn't --

[redacted]. Yes. [redacted]@meta.com (ph) now, I believe.

[redacted] Okay. Thanks.

[redacted] Could I ask you spell that?

That's okay.

[redacted]. It auto-populates.

[redacted] Fair enough. Don't worry about it. That's okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know if most instances of misinformation are coming from fake or real accounts?

A That's a very broad question. I do not know the answer.

Q Okay.

Do you recall serving on a panel called Protecting New York Summit that took place on July 17, 2018, at Baruch College?

A Where did it take place again?

Q At Baruch College.

[redacted]. And what year?

BY [redacted]

Q This was back in 2018, July 17th.

A Where is Baruch College?

Q I don't know its exact location. I believe New York.

A I believe I generally recall. I don't -- I'm sorry, I don't recall this.

Q On the panel, you spoke about misinformation, how Meta's fact-checking program works.

I guess it's a leading question. Sitting here today, are you familiar with how Meta's fact-checking program works at a high level?

A I'm generally familiar with the fact-checking program, yes.

Q Okay. Do you know how many fact-checkers Meta has?

A I do not know the exact number, no.

Q Okay. You mentioned Pointer International. Are you familiar with that organization?

[redacted]. I'm sorry. She mentioned that when?

[redacted] During this panel.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with Pointer International?

[redacted]. We don't have this, so do you have it? Could you share it with us, or no?

[redacted] We have the video link.

[redacted]. So you're just representing that she said this, and --

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted]. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Are you familiar with Pointer International?

A The name is familiar, but no.

Q Okay.

Do you know if Facebook's fact-checkers have changed over time?

A I'm not sure if they change over time.

Q Do you interact with Facebook's fact-checkers in your current role?

A I have never directly interacted with Meta fact-checkers.

Q Including in your previous roles?

A At Meta, no, not that I recall.

Q Do you know who at Meta interacts with the fact-checkers?

A I believe there is a team who, like, manages partnerships with fact-checkers.

Q And do you know the name of that team?

A I don't. They used to sit in our news org, but that has been reorg'd a bunch and so I'm not sure.

Q When you say they used to sit within the news org, when approximately was that?

A I think, like, generally in my background with the company, that's where I remember interacting with them, but I don't -- I don't have dates for you.

Q So more than a couple years ago? Is that fair to say?

A I don't recall the dates.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the term "downrank"?

A Generally.

Q Is that a term used by Meta personnel?

A I think I would need, like, a specific instance, but --

Q Sure. If there's a post that involves misinformation and someone wants to reduce how frequently it occurs in the news feed, would saying that the post was downranked -- is that an appropriate use of the term, as you understand it?

A If something is fact-checked, it would use the word "downrank" to apply what happened to it in feed.

Q Are there any other similar terms that Meta personnel use to describe that action?

A Not that I recall.

Q If something is identified as misinformation, is it your understanding that it is always downranked as opposed to removed, or are either an option?

A Again, our policies are sort of complex, and you can see the sort of full range of them and how we treat certain actions on the website, but that's not my area of expertise.

Q When you receive an escalation report returned from that team and it says -- well, let me stop there. What does the report say? Is it concerning only whether it is misinformation or not?

A It is an answer to the question that we've asked them.

Q What is an example of the type of question you would ask them?

A "Can you review this piece of content and see if it violates any of our policies?"

Q So the report will say it either doesn't violate any policies or it does violate a policy and it's this policy?

A Correct. Generally.

Q Okay. Does it include what enforcement action will be taken?

A Sometimes.

Q Okay. And would that include removal or downranking?

A I recall seeing removal generally as the -- if something does violate.

Q Do you know if there's different degrees of downranking?

A I do not.

Q Do you know how the process works in terms of communicating -- once Meta has decided that a post should be downranked, do you know the process of communicating that to Meta's engineers or whoever's responsible for actually implementing the downranking?

A I do not.

Q You don't know which teams would be responsible for that?

A I don't.

Q As a general rule, let's say there's a post in question that comes from a State and local official; they identify this post as misinformation. Does Meta downrank it until it's verified, or do you wait until the escalations report comes back and then an action is taken?

A We would send the report to our escalations team, and then they'll let us know what the action is that will be taken.

Q And in that interim period, is the post left as is? Is there any action taken against it?

A Not that I know of.

Q And throughout this whole process, is this all taking place over email?

A Generally, yes.

Q What other forms of communication?

A On some occasions I might get a phone call from a partner, or someone on my team might get a phone call from a partner, and we might provide an update over the phone. But, generally speaking, the practice -- our, like, general practice is email.

Q Okay. What about Slack?

A No.

Q Okay. Text message?

A No.

Q So you identified -- you know, you mentioned that State and local officials will identify forms of misinformation. Do you know who else will identify forms of misinformation that might come to your team?

A My team just works with State and local, the full range of State and local government, so government officials.

[redacted]. Could we take a break?

[redacted] Could we go off the record, please?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] You can go back on. Thanks.

[redacted]. So, just -- sorry -- clarifying that, while my team deals with reports from State and local election officials, sometimes -- or State and local governments, sometimes those reports would come through to us -- while the ultimate report is still from the State or local institution, it would come through to us from a Federal Government entity, like CISA.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And what is CISA?

A My understanding is that they're a branch of DHS.

Q And what are the contexts of your interactions with CISA?

A They would, during election cycles, pass on reports from people and my partners at State and local government officials to me and my team.

Q In which election cycles are -- which election cycles has CISA passed along reports to you or your team?

A To the best of my recollection, '18, '20, and '22.

Q Do you know if there are plans for that same process to apply for the 2024 election?

A I do not.

Q Are you in communications with any CISA officials right now?

A I am not.

Q Who from CISA were you in contact with?

A I worked primarily with [redacted] and Brian Scully.

Q And who's [redacted]?

A [redacted] was a former Ohio election official who worked at DHS.

Q And do you know where he is currently employed?

A I believe Microsoft.

Q And what about Brian Scully? Who is that?

A Brian Scully was a point of contact our team had at DHS, but that's all I know.

Q You don't know what his title was?

A I do not.

Q Who else from your team was in contact with CISA?

A They would pass reports directly on to the regional point of contact on my team. So anyone in my reporting chain.

Q Okay. So, like, [redacted] and [redacted].

And you said the 2018 election was the first election cycle that communications with CISA began occurring? Did I hear that right?

A What I recall is that they passed some reports on to the team that worked directly with them at Meta in 2018, and then they passed those reports on to us.

Q Okay. Do you know if other teams for Meta are in contact with CISA?

A There are teams at Meta whose job it is to manage the Federal Government, and so I believe they're in contact -- or, they were in contact when I was working with them.

Q And which teams are those?

A It would be our Federal Policy Team.

Q Okay. And who leads the Federal Policy Team?

A [redacted].

Q Do you work with anyone on that team?

A I worked occasionally with some folks on that team.

Q Who did you work with specifically?

A I worked -- when I started at the company and my job was providing platform support for House Republicans, I worked closely with [redacted], who was our House Republican lobbyist, who would oftentimes pass requests on to me.

Q When a State or local official provides a report of misinformation and -- some of the time, is it true the escalations team would recommend no action be taken?

A Yes.

Q When that's communicated to the State and local official, did they ever ask why or for a debriefing of why it didn't apply to Meta's policy?

A Yes.

Q And who would provide that briefing?

A It would depend.

Q What would it depend on?

A Oftentimes there wasn't -- you know, it was a simple -- it was -- the information was all provided to them, usually.

Q In the form of -- in written form?

A Yeah.

Q And if they wanted to have a followup discussion, did that ever occur?

A I'm trying to think. Sorry. It's been a lot of election cycles.

I believe so, yes.

Q During the different election cycles, were you ever the primary person to provide that explanation on a call?

A Yes.

Q You mentioned that you didn't draft Meta's policies. Who from Meta briefed you on how Meta's policies would be applied or enforced?

A [redacted].

Q And were you in frequent contact with him on this issue?

A Yes.

Q Do you know if he played a role in drafting the policies?

A I do not.

Q Do you know who did?

A I do not.

Q Are you familiar with how the misinformation policy has evolved since you first began at Meta?

A Again, I'm broadly aware of the policy, but I'm not an expert or steeped in the details.

Q Okay. Are there any major changes that you recall?

A I was there when we instituted our fact-checking program. That's a fairly major change that I remember. But --

Q When was the fact-checking program instituted?

A I don't remember the year.

Q Do you remember who else you worked with?

A Sorry?

Q So, with respect to the fact-checking program being instituted, who else at Meta did you work with?

A I didn't work to institute the fact-checking program.

Q Okay. But you --

A I just recall it being announced --

Q Gotcha.

A -- while I worked at the company.

Q Okay.

Are you familiar with the Center for Internet Security?

A I am.

Q And we'll call that C-I-S. I don't know if there's another --

A CIS.

Q CIS. What is CIS?

A My broad understanding is that they were a group working to organize or bring in reports from State and local election officials, is the context in which I've worked with them. I'm not aware of their, sort of, broader position or contacts.

Q Uh-huh. And when you first start working with CIS?

A To the best of my recollection, the 2020 cycle.

Q Okay. And does CIS work with CISA?

A I'm not aware. Or I don't recall.

Q Who from CIS did you work with?

Mr. Gaetz. Wait. I'm sorry. Can you strike that question?

Just on the last response, when you say you're not aware or you don't recall, can you specify which of those it is?

[redacted]. I don't recall.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. Thank you.

My apologies.

BY [redacted]

Q Who did you work with at CIS?

A [redacted] is the name I recall.

Q Would that be [redacted]?

A [redacted] is the name I recall. Sorry.

Q Did you ever work with Aaron Wilson?

A The name sounds familiar, but I can't recall.

Q Did you work with them -- with CIS, I should say. Did you work with CIS with respect to a misinformation reporting portal?

A I believe they were working to create one.

Q Do you know if it was created?

A I don't actually know if the portal itself ever got created.

Q Was something used in its place in the meantime?

A Yes.

Q And what was that?

A Email.

Q Do you know what the acronym "EI-ISAC" is?

A I don't believe so.

Q All right.

I'm going to introduce two exhibits. The first is going to be an email chain. The second is a Word document that's attached to the email chain. So I'll introduce the email chain first, give everyone a chance to review, and then we'll go over the Word document.

[redacted]. Sure.

[redacted] I have Meta 26485.

So the email chain will be exhibit 1.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. Thank you.

[redacted]. Do you want to help us out here? It's eight pages --

[redacted] Sure.

[redacted]. -- in really small font, so --

[redacted] We're going to be focusing on a series of questions that are posed by Facebook, beginning on Bates numbers 26489 --

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted] -- and continues on to the next page, 26490.

[redacted]. I'm done reading it. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Could I have you turn to Bates number 26490? So, halfway down the page, it's the end of the questioning, and then there's a set of email addresses. If we could just run through those names and see which ones you remember working with.

So, first, Aaron Wilson. Looks like he has a signature at the bottom of the page, "Senior Director of Election Security." Do you have any recollections of working with him?

A I do not. I do not recall working with Aaron Wilson.

Q What about [redacted]?

A I do not.

Q Do you recognize the other Facebook personnel included on the email?

[redacted]. Don't mark on there.

[redacted]. I do.

BY [redacted]

Q And who are they?

A [redacted] was on our Federal Policy Team. [redacted], I believe, was on our Security Policy Team. [redacted] is on Legal. [redacted] was an administrative assistant.

Q Okay. Do you know what the email address -- I'm looking at [redacted]. She's at sso.org.

A Yes.

Q Do you know what organization that is?

A [redacted] is the communications director for the National Association of Secretaries of State.

Q And what is that?

A It is, like, a membership organization for secretaries of state.

Q Do you know if each State's secretary of state is a member?

A I do not.

Q Did you work with them frequently -- or, do you work with them frequently?

A I did.

Q And what's the context of your interactions with them?

A Secretaries of state are State election officials. My team supports State election officials.

Q Would that include -- would you receive misinformation reports from them from time to time?

A I do not recall [redacted] directly sending me a report, but I do recall [redacted] connecting me with people in a State office.

Q There's an email address at nased.org. Do you know which organization that's affiliated with?

A It's the National Association of State Election Directors.

Q And what is that?

A A membership organization for State election directors.

Q Is it similar to the previous organization?

A It is.

Q Is your relationship with them similar to your relationship with the previous organization?

A It is.

Q Okay.

There are a couple DHS CISA individuals. There is [redacted], who you identified before. Do you know who Geoffrey Hale is?

A I don't recall who Geoffrey is.

Q What about [redacted]?

A Same thing, I don't recall.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A I apologize. There's another Meta address. [redacted] is on our policy team.

Q Do you remember working with CIS during the summer of 2020 to potentially set up a reporting portal?

A I generally recall, yeah.

Q And do you recall who worked on this issue, other than the Facebook personnel on this email chain?

A This is the group I recall working on it.

Q Okay. And what was your role in these efforts?

A My team represented State and local election departments, and so we were there to make sure that this felt like a system that would work for them and for our processes.

Q Uh-huh. Do you recall who first initiated this collaboration?

A I do not recall.

Q Before interacting with Facebook, do you know if CIS and -- excuse me -- if CIS and CISA had a preexisting relationship or working partnership?

A I do not know.

Q If we could introduce -- this will be CIS 1864. This is exhibit 2.

[Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

. Thank you.

BY

Q And this document was attached to this email chain and provides responses --

. I'm sorry. This -- the Bates stamp says this is from CIS, so it wasn't attached to -- so this is not our production.

It's not from your production, but this document is what was included with this email chain from CIS, so --

. It was attached to which of these emails?

The email, it begins at the very bottom of 26488 of exhibit 1. It is an email from Facebook, dated July 16, 2020, sent to several personnel, including several personnel from the Center for Internet Security.

The questions begin on Bates number 26489. There are 22 questions posed on this July 16th email. This document is responses to questions provided by Facebook on July 16th.

. Okay. Thank you.

BY

Q So I'll give you a moment to review.

[redacted]. We're ready.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you work on preparing these answers?

[redacted]. These are responses to questions that are supplied by somebody else, not answers from Meta.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall if you worked on providing these questions?

A I don't recall, no.

Q If I could call your attention to the first question. This is Bates number 1864, exhibit 2. Facebook asks about a quality control concern.

Do you recall if there were any quality control concerns with your interactions with CIS?

A Not that -- I don't recall, no.

Q You mentioned that the portal didn't come into being, or at least not right away, and email interactions were used. How frequently did you have email interactions with CIS?

A I don't recall the specific numbers. I don't recall the specific numbers.

Q Was this a year-round form of communication, or was it only in election season?

A My recollection is that it was election-season-focused.

Q And in the lead-up to the election, do you recall if it was every day? Every week?

A I don't recall the volume. Sorry. It's been a long time since 2020.

Q All right. Was there anything similar for the 2022 election?

A Yes. I believe we similarly took in reports via email in that cycle.

Q And when you say "we," who are you referring to?

A My team and I took reports from State and local election offices.

Q Directly or through CIS?

A Both.

Q Okay. And is it every member of your team that's receiving reports?

A Yes.

Q In the 2022 election cycle, how frequently were you receiving reports from CIS?

A I was not on all the reports, so I don't know the frequency.

Q On the reports you were on, how frequently did those occur?

A I did not directly manage any State and local officials, I believe, in 2022, so I would only get it if I was, like, on an out of office. And I got a handful throughout the cycle.

Q Okay. When CIS is forwarding a report from a State and local official, who are they directing it to? Do you know?

A The regional point of contact. So my team -- each person on my team owns a set of States. So we forward it to that person who owned that set of States.

Q Okay. And you said you were responsible for California; is that right?

A In my role now, I directly manage our California team. That is a role -- a new role, has not gone through an election cycle yet.

Q All right. And can you provide again the names of the folks on your team who directly manage either the regions or the States?

A Yes. Which election cycle?

Q For 2022.

A For 2022, [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted]

[redacted].

Q And what about for 2020?

A For 2020, [redacted] and [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], and -- I'm not quite sure when the transition point was, so [redacted] possibly could've done some, as well, early in the cycle.

Q If I could call your attention to question 3 from exhibit 2 -- it's on Bates number 1864 -- Facebook poses a question about what visibility the U.S. Government will have.

Do you recall Facebook having concerns about the U.S. Government having visibility --

A I don't --

Q -- on question creation?

A I don't recall this question creation.

Q Sure. It just says an issue, though. Do you recall --

A It's not a concern I recall having, no.

Q Do you recall anyone on your team having that concern?

A I don't.

Q Do you recall any of your managers ever raising a concern?

A I don't.

Q Turning your attention to question 6 -- this is on the next page, Bates number 1865 -- Facebook asked about data retention. Do you know if CIS retained the data that it was sharing with Facebook and other platforms?

A I do not know that.

Q And these communications -- when Meta receives these communications, you said it's via email?

A Yes.

Q Was there any other form from CIS?

A Not that I recall.

Q I'd call your attention to question 8. This is on the same page, 1865. Facebook asked a question about whether CIS will be properly sorting information. Do you know if CIS played a role in sorting information?

A Not that I recall. Again, what I recall is they would just forward on an email from the State or local election office.

[10:58 a.m.]

[redacted] Did any -- at any point, have any of your team members raised an issue that CIS was forwarding reported misinformation reports that were not serious or duplicative or burdensome?

[redacted]. Which?

BY [redacted]

Q We'll start with burdensome.

A I do not recall that.

Q What about duplicative requests?

A Yes.

Q How frequent was that complaint raised?

A I don't recall the frequency.

Q Do you recall which election cycle it was first raised in?

A I believe 2020. To the best of my recollection, 2020.

Q Do you recall who from your team raised that issue?

A I do not.

Q Did any team member ever complain or raise the issue that posts that are less serious, are of less serious concern than others, were being forwarded by CIS?

A Not that I recall.

Q When CIS is passing along this information, do you know whether there's any sort of indication provided about the seriousness or urgency of that request, or are they all treated equally?

A Not that I recall. No, it would just be a forward on.

Q If I could turn your attention to question 12. This is on the next page of exhibit 2, 1866. "Facebook poses a question about whether the portal will be used to surface trends and patterns across platforms."

You mentioned earlier the portal didn't come into being during the election cycles we've been discussing.

A I don't recall if the portal came into being during the election cycle.

Q Okay.

A I don't recall this document.

Q Sure. Do you know if Meta ever received email communications, regarding trends and patterns, from CIS?

A Not that I recall.

Q Did you ever receive email communications regarding trends and patterns from CISA?

A Not that I recall.

[redacted] Can we go off the record, please.

[redacted] We can go off the record, please.

[redacted] We're back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q And, [redacted], I want to thank you on behalf of the minority for coming here today. I know it's not easy. I want to talk to you a little bit, just some follow-up questions about your background.

You mentioned that you worked for Governor Rick Snyder's reelection campaign?

A I did.

Q And what was in Michigan, correct?

A It was.

Q And Rick Snyder was a Republican governor?

A He was.

Q And you worked for Carly Fiorina's Presidential campaign?

A I did.

Q And you were a policy coordinator at one point?

A I was.

Q And she was a Republican candidate for President?

A She was.

Q And then you stated that when you were working as a contractor for Meta, you provided platform support for House Republican Members of Congress?

A That's correct.

Q And also House -- Republican House candidates?

A Correct.

Q And so Meta obviously was aware of your experience working with various Republican candidates at various levels when they hired you to work for them?

A It was on my resume and a component of my interview.

Q Okay, thank you.

And when your position was as the State and local government politics outreach manager, you would help elected officials' campaigns, and State and local governments use Facebook and other platforms that -- for the company that now Meta has, to better connect with voters and constituents?

A Correct.

Q And you would also help them with account security for their own official accounts?

A Correct.

Q And you currently oversee folks doing the same work at Meta?

A That's correct.

Q And in your current position and in your previous position, you provided these services for State and local officials regardless of which party they were affiliated with, correct?

A Correct. My State and local team is not partisan. We don't have a partisan divide. We have a regional divide.

Q And you also mentioned that you played no role in determining whether a post violated Meta's community standards, correct?

A Correct. We would get a report. We would pass it on to a team who would make that determination.

Q And I believe you said that was the Community Standards Team?

A Yes. Content policy, community standards, I'm not sure what the official name is, but --

Q Okay. I believe you were asked a question about whether you sent it on to the misinformation team. Was there a specific team for misinformation as opposed to other types of reports, or was there just a content moderation team that you would send it on to?

A My team would send everything to Co-Press, and then they would triage appropriately.

Q Okay, thank you.

And so your role with respect to those reports, was simply as a go-between?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And you're aware that your attorneys have informed counsel for the majority that that was your role with respect to content moderation?

A Yes.

Q And you're aware that your attorneys have informed counsel for the majority of the names of the individuals who actually make the content moderation decision?

A I was not aware of that.

Q Okay. But it is your understanding today that despite knowing that you played no role in those decisions, if you did not appear voluntarily, you might ultimately be subpoenaed?

A That's my understanding.

Q You stated that your -- well, actually, strike that. Sorry.

You were asked several questions about your interactions with CISA at DHS, and my understanding is that your interactions were primarily receiving reports that they would forward you from State and local election officials about complaints of posts or other content that they thought violated Meta's community standards.

A That's correct, but also just requests for platform support generally, like, locked out of their account or something like that.

Q So those reports would sometimes come through CISA as well?

[The reporter read back the record as requested?

[redacted]. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q And just to clarify, when you talked about concerns about account access, you were talking about the actual State and local officials having access to their own accounts, not CISA having access --

A Correct.

Q -- to their account? Okay.

A Like, let's say you got a new phone and your two-factor code was delivering to your old phone, and so you needed support getting back into your own account.

[redacted] And that would sometimes come through CISA to you?

[redacted]. It -- on occasion, yes.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q And you were asked about your interactions with the CIS, or the Center for Internet Security?

A Yes.

Q And you're aware from your interactions with both CISA and CIS that they are, in fact, two different entities, correct?

A I am aware of that, yes.

Q And your understanding is that CISA is part of the Department of Homeland Security?

A Correct. When I started to work with them, it was under Chad Wolf's Department of -- Secretary Wolf's Department of Homeland Security.

Q Thank you.

And CIS was a private organization?

A That's my broad understanding, but, again, I'm not familiar broadly. I only worked for them in this one small slice of their work.

Q Fair enough.

And when someone from CISA, whether it was Brian Scully or [redacted], would pass on a request from a State or local official about a post that they believed violated Meta's community standards, CISA did not specifically ask for you to remove the content, correct?

A Not that I recall, no.

Q Reports would typically be, Please see the attached report from X person in X State, something to that effect?

A My recollection is, it was mostly just a forward of the email they received.

Q And they would simply ask you to send it on to the appropriate person?

A Yes.

Q To your knowledge, has any Federal official or agency ordered Meta, or Facebook, when it was known as Facebook, to remove an account, page, or any other content?

A Not to my recollection.

Q And to your recollection, has any official or agency ever tried to coerce or pressure Meta, or then, Facebook, into removing a page, account, or other content?

A Not to my recollection.

Q And to your knowledge, has any Federal official threatened Meta with any adverse consequences, or Facebook -- I'm sorry -- if it did not remove a page, account, or other content?

A Not to my recollection.

Q And have you ever personally felt pressured by any Federal officials or agencies to remove content on Meta or then Facebook's platforms?

A I have not, no.

Q Okay. A couple of clarifying questions from the last hour. You were asked about whether CIS would sometimes forward you duplicative requests --

A Yes.

Q -- correct?

And you said that they would occasionally?

A Yes.

Q And by "duplicative requests," do you mean requests to take the same post by the same person down, or do you mean content has been flagged as violating Meta's policies and then that content is shared by a different poster, and so it's duplicative in that sense?

A The instances I remember were ones where the State or local entity had reported the content directly to someone on my team, and then we got -- and they also reported it --

Q I see.

A -- to CIS who then sent it on to us, so it was same reporter, same content.

Q Okay. So duplicative in the sense that you were receiving it from two different sources?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Thank you for that clarification. Just give me 1 minute.

[redacted] And that's it for me, for now. Depending on what happens, you might hear a lot more from me, but maybe not.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go on the record, please.

This will be exhibit 3.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. Thank you.

[redacted]. So this document does not have a Bates stamp --

[redacted] Is this a new exhibit?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted]. -- does not have a Bates stamp on it at all. Can you tell us what the source is?

[redacted] Yeah. This has been a document that was produced pursuant to a FOIA request by an organization called Judicial Watch.

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Looks like these are two separate email chains, unrelated. Are you introducing them both as the same exhibit?

[redacted] Yeah, just one exhibit.

[redacted] So they're both exhibit --

[redacted]. I'm ready.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall this email exchange?

A I do not recall this email exchange.

[redacted] I'm sorry. That was a "do not"?

[redacted]. I do not.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted]. I'm sorry. Which one are you referring to?

[redacted] Oh, sorry. On the first page, there is a request to remove a profile posing as Secretary of State --

[redacted]. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q -- and it appears that the post is removed. If I could call your attention, at the very top of the first page. There's an email, it looks like it's someone from the Secretary of State's office in California, asking, can you add this link and the outcome to our tracking grid.

Do you know if Meta had a tracking grid for posts like this?

[redacted]. I'm sorry. I'm just looking at it. Where do you see Meta on this?

Meta's on a thread below that. The thread above --

[redacted] That's right.

[redacted]. -- which only includes people -- it's blurred because there's a double line there, but it's between somebody at the Secretary of State's office and somebody named [redacted] or [redacted] -- no -- [redacted]. But I don't see any reference to Meta.

[redacted] Yeah, no, I'm asking if Meta has a similar tracking grid.

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted]. Not to my knowledge.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Do you know if CIS had a similar tracking grid?

A I do not know.

Q Did different Secretaries of State offices ever mention a tracking grid to you?

A Not to my recollection.

Q Okay. We can take this exhibit back. Thank you.

At your time at Meta, have you ever worked with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A I am not familiar with the Election Integrity Partnership.

Q Have you ever worked with anyone from Stanford University?

[redacted]. Meaning, they went to Stanford or was that --

[redacted] Anyone who's employed by Stanford.

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted]. Not that I recall, but I -- not that I recall.

BY [redacted]

Q Starting obviously in 2020, did you ever play a role in shaping Meta's misinformation policy with respect to COVID?

[redacted] I'm sorry. I didn't hear that last part. The door was opening.

BY [redacted]

Q Starting in 2020, did you play any role in shaping Meta's misinformation policy with respect to COVID?

A I don't -- I don't play a role in writing our policies.

Q When receiving reports from State and local officials, did they ever flag posts that were related to COVID misinformation?

A Yes.

Q And who would you send those reports to?

A Very similar process to elections. We would send it to our Co-Press channel, again, have the appropriate team review and then pass that information back on.

Q So regardless of the content, the subject matter of the content, it was forwarded to the same account?

A Correct.

Q Do you know which -- do you know who was on the team at Meta that is triaging these requests?

A Sorry, can you re --

Q Sure.

A Which team are you referring to?

Q When you forward a post along --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- you mentioned there's a team that then is responsible for directing it to the right team at Meta. Is that a correct understanding?

A Yes.

Q Okay. On that intermediary team who is making the decision about who to pass along, whether it's COVID-related misinformation or election-related misinformation, do you know who is on that intermediary team?

A It's a -- sorry -- an operations team, so in our broader operations org.

Q And do you know who's on that team?

A I do not know everyone who's on the team, no.

Q Okay. Do you know who leads that team?

A I am not sure who the team manager is.

Q Do you have a point of contact on that team?

A I don't have a single point of contact, no.

Q Do you recall any names that you have used as a point of contact?

A I have used [redacted] and [redacted] -- I only recall the first name.

Q And since you began at Meta, has there always been a group listserv? Was there ever a time where it was not using that group listserv to pass along reports?

A That's a good question. I've been here for a very long time. I believe it's always been the group listserv.

Q Do you know if the name has changed over time?

A I don't believe so.

Q Do you know who [redacted] is at Meta?

A Yes.

Q And who is she?

A [redacted] worked for me for a short period of time.

Q And what was the context of that?

A She was my California person.

Q Okay. And when was this?

A I recall it was during the pandemic because I know I never met her in person, but I don't -- I don't know the exact dates.

Q And did she join your team from somewhere else within Meta, or did you hire her from outside?

A I hired her from outside the company.

Q Okay. You said she was with you only a short time. Do you know where she went next?

A I believe she went to the Department of Education.

Q Was her stint with you the only time she was with Meta?

A To the best of my knowledge, yes.

[redacted] This will be exhibit 4.

[redacted]. Thank you.

I've reviewed it.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 4.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay, good. Thank you.

Do you recognize this email from [redacted]?

A I don't recall the email, no.

Q Okay. Would she send an email like this without your approval?

A My team does not run their emails through me.

Q If I could call your attention to -- there's a series of bullet points at the bottom half of the page. The second bullet point begins in bold, Doing more to reduce the spread of misinformation.

The last sentence says, We will also attach an informational label to content that seeks to delegitimize the outcome of the election or discuss the legitimacy of voting methods, for example, by claiming that lawful methods of voting will lead to fraud.

Do you know if [redacted] worked on Facebook's content moderation policy.

A No. [redacted] was on my team, so [redacted] didn't support -- this, if it's a helpful clarification, this looks like one of a set of sort of standard form emails that our communications team would've given us to pass on to partners, so.

Q Okay. So this language would have been prepared by Facebook's communications team?

A Again, I don't recall this email, but based on the way it's structured.

Q Who is your point of contact with Facebook's communications team?

A I have many points of contact on the communications team.

Q Is there a point of contact for Facebook's content moderation policy?

A For -- on the communications team, specifically not one that I know.

Q Okay. Who did you work with most closely on Facebook's communications team?

A When?

[redacted]. What's the relevance of this to the legislative inquiry that we're focused on?

[redacted] We're in the fact-finding stage of determining who at Meta was involved with shaping the company's content moderation policies, and if there are personnel involved in --

[redacted]. But the company's content moderation policies are not the scope of the inquiry, right? It's about collusion and collaboration, and I'm just trying to understand how far we're going to go down this path.

[redacted] Yeah, and this all plays into it. And, [redacted], as you know, this is a voluntary interview, so if the witness does not want to answer, she cannot answer, but my colleague, [redacted] is going to go ahead and ask the questions.

Go ahead, [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Who did you work most closely with at -- on Facebook's communications team?

A Again, I am going to need a lot more specifics to answer that question accurately.

Q How many personnel are we talking roughly would you interact with, with Facebook's communications team?

A I have worked with dozens of folks across the communications team.

Q Do you know who leads that team?

A I mean, overall our communications team all report up to Nick Clegg.

Q If I could call your attention to the third bullet point, there's a phrase, it begins in bold, Preventing misrepresentations or threats about voting.

The next sentence says, We're expanding our voter suppression policies to include implicit misrepresentations about voting. Do you know what [redacted] meant by this language here -- implicit misrepresentations about voting?

A I don't. I didn't write this email.

Q Have you seen that phrase used elsewhere?

A I don't recall the phrase specifically, no.

Q Sitting here today, do you know what it would mean?

A I don't.

Q We can take these exhibits back.

Do you know what Meta's 3PFC fact-checking team is? And that is the number 3,

P as in Patrick, F as in Frank, C as in cat.

A I understand 3PFC to mean third party fact-checker.

Q Okay. Do you know whether Meta ever moderated content for content that was shared on Facebook Messenger?

A I do not recall the specifics, but I do know I have had instances where there have been, like --

[redacted] Can we go off the record, please.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Can we go back on the record. Thank you.

[redacted]. Sorry. Would you mind asking the question again?

BY [redacted]

Q Sure. Has Meta ever moderated content in Facebook Messenger?

A What I generally recall is instances of, like, threats being delivered via Messenger coming down. I don't recall the specifics or the partner, but I recall that generally happening in the course of my time at the company.

Q Do you recall it ever happening in the context of a message that contained misinformation?

A I do not recall that, no.

Q Okay. Do you know whether Meta moderates nonpublic groups?

A Sorry, can you clarify the question?

Q It's all right.

Do you know whether Meta moderates content posted in nonpublic groups?

[redacted]. You can answer the question, but I'd like a sustained objection to asking her about content moderation policies when she said that she doesn't do it, she doesn't implement them at all. So I just feel like we're --

[redacted] She receives requests for content moderation.

[redacted]. We're spending a lot of time -- so does anybody else that is in an intermediary role at the company. And it's very stressful for people to have to come and sit through this. We offered to make the people who do this work available to answer your questions, and so far, you all have not been willing to take us up on that.

But you can answer the question.

[redacted]. My broad understanding is that we enforce our policies across the platform, but, again, I don't know the specifics.

BY [redacted]

Q Did you ever attend a series of meetings called USG industry call meetings?

A I did.

Q Okay. And what was the purpose of those meetings?

A I was brought into those meetings around election cycles in case concerns came up from election officials. So I'm not familiar with sort of the broader context of the meetings. I was brought in sort of for a very specific role.

Q Do you recall when you first joined one of these meetings?

A I do not recall the date, no.

Q Do you recall how many you attended?

A I also do not recall that.

Q Do you recall whether you took notes during these meetings?

A I don't believe I took notes.

Q Do you recall who else from Meta was on these calls?

A I don't know the full list, but I know some of the folks.

Q What names do you remember?

A [redacted], [redacted] were the two that I primarily remember.

Q Do you know what CrowdTangle is?

A I do.

Q Can you explain that to me?

A My best description of CrowdTangle is that it's sort of like a tweet deck for Facebook.

Q Okay.

A And Instagram. I think it -- I think it has Instagram content now.

Q And who can use CrowdTangle?

A I'm not aware of the full set of folks who have access to CrowdTangle.

Q Okay. Who are you aware of that has used CrowdTangle?

A I'm aware that State election offices were able to use CrowdTangle.

Q And for what purpose would they use it for?

A To -- to monitor public elections content from their States.

Q Do you know when this tool was first developed?

A The CrowdTangle tool?

Q Yeah.

A I do not know when it was first developed.

Q Were you part of the team that helped to develop this tool?

A No.

Q Do you know who -- which team was responsible?

A I don't -- I do -- I recall using it when I started at the company, and it was a separate company.

Q Okay. And did Facebook, at some point, acquire the company?

A I believe so.

Q Do you recall when that was?

A I do not.

Q You said that the tool would allow election officials to keep track of content in a certain area. Was this done independently or in collaboration with your team?

A My team set up trainings for State election officials to, like, help them learn how to use the tool like our other platforms.

Q And then once they're trained, whatever it is they use the tool for, is that outside your team's scope?

A Correct.

[redacted] This will be exhibit 5.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 5.

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. Thank you. I've reviewed it.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Great.

Do you recall this specific email exchange?

A I do not.

Q Is this email exchange consistent with your interactions with State and local officials when they would pass along a request for removal?

A It looks generally consistent.

Q And when you received the bottom half of the email, where someone's flagged the post, asked for it to be removed, again, this would be forwarded to your -- the email distribution list you've discussed previously?

A Correct.

Q At the top, you say, It doesn't violate our community standards. Would you just be conveying whatever the escalations team had conveyed to you?

A Again, I don't remember this specific email, but generally speaking, yes, I would be passing that along.

Q And if it was a difficult call, or if you received pushback from the State or local official, would you receive a briefing on Meta's misinformation policy in order to communicate that, or would you put the State and local election official in touch with someone else?

A Generally speaking, I would be their point of contact.

Q Okay. We can take these back. Thank you.

During your time at Meta, do you recall having any interactions with the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force?

A I do not specifically recall that task force, no.

Q In your time at Meta, do you recall having interactions with the State Department's Global Engagement Center?

A I do not recall that either.

Q This will be exhibit 6.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 6.

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. Thank you. It's just the one page?

BY [redacted]

Q Just the one page.

A I've reviewed it.

Q Okay, great.

Do you recognize this meeting invite?

A I don't recall this meeting invite, no.

Q Do you know what the subject line DHS/Industry Sync regarding U.S. 2020

Voter Information, do you recall interacting with DHS on this set of issues?

A We discussed this earlier, but in 2020, under Secretary Wolf, we worked with CISA under DHS, and they passed the reports from State and local election offices.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q Do you recall, did you have a regular set of meetings, or is this maybe a one-off meeting?

A I did not regularly meet with DHS.

Q Okay. In your role at Meta, have you attended tabletop exercises with government officials?

A I recall attending one.

Q And which one was that?

A It was hosted by the Bipartisan Policy Center in the '22 cycle.

Q And what is the Bipartisan Policy Center?

A It's a think-tank.

Q And I'm sorry, you said it was 2022 or 2020?

A '22 cycle.

Q Do you remember when in the cycle it took place?

A I don't.

Q Do you remember who was invited?

A I recall there being State and local election officials there and other industry peers.

Q And you attended?

A I attended.

Q Did anyone else from Meta attend with you?

A My colleague [redacted] attended with me.

Q And what was the exercise or purpose of the meeting?

A I believe I was only there for half a day, and I think it was, like, a scenario of something bad going on in an election and how the groups would work together to address it. I don't remember the specific scenario.

Q Okay. Do you remember who from the government attended?

A I don't.

Q Do you know if there were Federal Government personnel in addition to State and local?

A I don't recall.

[redacted] Can we go off the record, please.

[12:30 p.m.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know if the other tech companies such as -- we'll start with Twitter -- has an analogous position to your team?

A Historically, I worked with somebody at Twitter who had, I think, a fairly similar role, yes.

Q Okay. And who was that?

A [redacted].

Q Okay. And how long was your -- the extent of your interactions with her?

A It was, like, conference interactions. Like, we would both be at the National Conference of State Legislatures or something like that. We would, you know, talk briefly there.

Q Yeah. Was there a similar point of contact at Google?

A Not that I had, no.

Q Okay. What about TikTok?

A Also no.

Q Do you know if at Twitter -- if they had a similar team to how your team functions? Did that ever come up with your discussions?

A It didn't. We would -- occasionally, I would get an email asking, like, if somebody could get Twitter verified, and I would pass that on to [redacted], and likewise, she would pass something back to my team, or I. So it's somewhat similar, I imagine, but I don't know the full scope.

Q Okay. What about Microsoft?

A I -- no, I don't know.

Q Amazon?

A I don't know how it is done there.

Q Okay. Anyone from Apple?

A No.

BY [redacted]

Q Were those communications where [redacted] was passing something along to you -- do you recall the types of requests that she was passing along?

A I don't. I do recall -- it would be, like -- it would be things where we would be confused easily. Usually a verification.

Q Okay. A verification of someone's identity?

A That's what I recall passing on to her. Like, a blue badge. Like, you are who you say you are.

Q Got it.

BY [redacted]

Q We've gone through a few examples of posts that were flagged for you or your team. A lot of impersonation requests, support for if someone is locked out of their account. You mentioned that previously.

Do you have a sense of what the most common request was or what -- you know, how frequently these different types of requests would come up?

A I'm not sure what the single most common is. The most common set would be verifications, account lockouts, username changes. I'm trying to think of other super common -- oftentimes, just like -- like, where to find something in the settings. I walked a lot of election officials through how to find a link on the telephone. Like, any sort of use of platform, confusion using the app, sort of where things are placed, that sort of stuff.

Q Okay. If we could turn back to -- you gave us a series of names of team members that you worked with during the 2020 and 2022 Election. And you mentioned that your team is divided based upon region?

A Correct.

Q If you could identify for each person which region they worked with, at least that you recall.

A Okay.

Q So we'll start with the 2020 Election cycle.

You mentioned [redacted]. Do you know which area was his responsibility?

A New England.

Q Okay.

A Or the Northeast.

Q And what about [redacted]?

A Midwest. And I think she helped with the Southeast in that cycle, too.

Sorry. I'm trying to remember. We had some transitioning staff. I think she was just the Midwest in the 2020 cycle.

Q Okay. [redacted]?

A She was the Southeast in the '20 cycle.

Q [redacted]?

A Southwest.

Q And [redacted]?

A California and the Pacific Northwest.

Q For the 2022 Election cycle, [redacted] was involved for that one as well?

A Still Northeast.

Q Okay. And [redacted]?

A Still Midwest.

Q Last name was [redacted]?

A [redacted]. Southeast.

Q Okay. And then -- sorry. Another last name.

[redacted]?

A Southwest.

Q And do you remember that person's first name?

A Oh, sorry. [redacted].

Q [redacted]. Great.

And then [redacted], I think you said, was --

A [redacted] was California and the Pacific Northwest.

Q Great.

Do you know if the Federal team had a similar -- obviously, Federal elections operate a bit differently -- but if they had regional divides?

A Our Federal team is party- and chamber-divided.

Q Okay. Great.

[redacted] Can you explain that a bit for us, the party and chamber divide?

[redacted]. Yes. There's somebody who supports, like, House Democrats, somebody who supports House Republicans, and so on.

[redacted] All right.

Anything?

[redacted] I think we're good.

[redacted] No further questions. Thank you for your time.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We're back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], you mentioned earlier that you -- and we saw some examples of requests from State officials flagging content for you to review, correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall exchanges that you had with an attorney for the Connecticut Secretary of State's Office about misinformation posts?

A Do you have a name?

Q I do. It's [redacted].

A Yes. I generally recall having interactions with [redacted]. I'd obviously have to see something specific.

Q Okay. I'm about to show you -- it's a fairly long thread, but I'm not going to ask you super detailed questions about it. But I'll ask you to take a few minutes to review.

A Great.

[redacted] I'm sorry. What number are we on?

[redacted] We are on seven.

[redacted] Seven. That's what I thought.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 7.

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. I've reviewed it.

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you.

So between November 2020 and January 2021, you and your colleague, [redacted], received several emails from the Office of the Connecticut Secretary of State, correct?

A Yes, that's -- I don't recall these specific reports, but based on what I'm looking at, that does seem to be right.

Q And that official was flagging posts that alleged false claims of vote hacking in Connecticut?

A Can you point out to me where you're --

Q Sure. On the last page. 16789.

A I see that he's written "vote hacking" there. Again, I don't recall these posts specifically, so I can't tell you if that's what they actually showed. But I do see him writing those words.

Q Fair enough.

And do you remember from -- or you see from your review of this chain that he also flagged as misinformation comments that the State of Connecticut used voting machines from Dominion Voting?

A I -- yeah, I see him say that, but I -- again, I don't recall the posts themselves.

Q Fair enough.

And do you see that both you and [redacted] responded to him that those posts that he was asking to be removed did not violate Meta's community standards?

A I do see that, yes.

Q And you told him that Meta only removes misinformation that directly interferes with the right to vote, or a person's ability to vote?

A I'm just reviewing what I wrote.

Yes. I see that I wrote that our policies are focused on misrepresentations that would directly interfere with the vote.

Q And so those would be misrepresentations about, for example, the time or place of an election?

A Correct. I mean, again, I'm not an expert on our community standards, but they generally focus on incorrect information about when, where, and how to vote.

Q Okay. Thank you.

And if people on the content moderation team determine that a post or a comment falls under that policy, a misrepresentation about when, where, and how to vote, then that content would be removed? Is that your understanding?

A That is my understanding.

Q Okay. And despite repeated requests from this official in Connecticut, Meta did not remove the posts that were flagged?

A Yes. Again, I don't recall the email exchange, but I do see that [redacted] and I consistently confirmed that.

Q And as you mentioned earlier, your team's role is nonpartisan, right?

A It is.

Q And so you would receive requests from whatever officials were in the region that you worked with or that you had contacts with?

A Correct.

Q And you would forward them on regardless of what party they were from?

A Yep. The process was exactly the same regardless of the party of the reporter.

Q And regardless of the content of the post or content that was flagged --

A Correct.

Q -- regardless of the political leaning?

A Yeah. The political leaning of the content would not influence how the factions are.

Q And so you were sometimes asked to review or to forward for review content that appeared to be targeting progressive voters?

A I don't think I recall anything like that specifically. Like, I know I was forwarded content from Republican State election officials for us to review it.

Q Okay. As well as Democratic State officials?

A As well as Democratic State officials.

Q And your understanding was -- and you were told by your content team that it's not about the partisan nature of the comments, it's whether it violates Meta's community standards about misinformation about when, where, and how to vote?

A Again, my team would take a report that came in. We would pen it on to our Community Standards Team. That process is the same regardless of the reporting party. What we did is the same each time.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you very much.

And that's it for me.

[redacted] Are you guys done?

We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 12:46 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	[redacted] - META
Date of Interview	MAY 22, 2023
Date of Review	JULY 10, 2024
Name of Reviewer	[redacted] - KIRKLAND & ELLIS
Signature of Reviewer

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
8	9	capitalize Regional Policy Partnerships
11	17	capitalize Director of External Affairs
17		COPRES C not copresk
18		"Q" & "A" transposed for a portion
19		Poynter not Pointer
40		COPRESC not copress
35	3	[redacted] not [redacted]

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: [redacted]

Tuesday, May 23, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in Room 6400, O'Neill House Office Building, commencing at 9:58 a.m.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] LAW CLERK

[redacted] DEPUTY GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] LAW CLERK

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted] MINORITY DETAILEE

For [redacted]:

MICHAEL D. BOPP, ESQ.

Gibson Dunn

1050 Connecticut Avenue NW

Washington, D.C. 20036-5306

For ALPHABET:

DANIEL T. DONOVAN, ESQ.

Kirkland & Ellis LLP

1301 Pennsylvania Avenue NW

Washington, D.C. 20004

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of [redacted].

Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state his name for the record?

[redacted]. [redacted].

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] House Judiciary Democrats.

[redacted] I'll have counsel introduce themselves for the record.

Mr. Donovan. Daniel Donovan, on behalf of Alphabet.

Mr. Bopp. Michael Bopp, representing [redacted].

[redacted] I'd like to go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning is going to proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

We typically take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like a break apart from that, just let us know. We're happy to accommodate you.

And, as you can see, there's an official court reporter here taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions. Do you understand that?

[redacted]. Yes, I do.

[redacted] And so the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you during any given hour just to those people on the staff whose turn it is.

So please try and speak clearly for the court reporters so they can understand you and so the folks down at the end of the table can understand you and hear you. It's a small room, so I don't think we'll have that problem.

[redacted]. I've got a loud voice too.

[redacted] Yeah. Good.

It is important that we also don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everyone present at today's interview.

We also encourage our witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with their counsel if they choose.

We also want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we're going to take our time today. If you have any questions or you don't understand one of our questions, just let us know. We're happy to clarify for you. We're going to cover a wide range of topics, so if you need additional clarification, just let us know.

And if you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess; please give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you learned the information from somewhere else. Please just let us know how you came to know that information. And if there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

[redacted]. Yes, I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand that?

[redacted]. Yes, I do.

[redacted] And witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. Yes, I do.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in the interview with anyone else or any outside individuals so we can preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason -- we are going to be using some exhibits today. Those marked exhibits will remain with the court reporter so that they can be part of the transcript and the transcript's record, and any copies of these exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up the interview.

So that's the end of my intro and preamble. Is there anything the minority would like to add?

[redacted] No, thank you.

[redacted] Okay.

My colleague [redacted] will be asking questions today. The time is 10:02, and we can begin the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], thank you again for appearing here voluntarily.

Could you state your full fume again for the record, please?

A Sure. [redacted].

Q And where are you currently employed?

A I work for Google.

Q And what's your current title?

A My current title is director of global elections integrity.

Q What is your educational background, beginning with college?

A So I have a B.A., Bachelor of Arts, from the University of Pennsylvania in political science and history.

Q Okay. And what is your employment history postdating college?

A Sure. Would you like me to go starting from most current backwards or earliest forwards?

Q Let's start earliest forwards, so first position out of college.

A Sure.

So, out of college, I worked at a telecommunications consulting firm called the Yankee Group, and in that capacity I focused on broadband infrastructure. I worked there from 2006 to 2009.

After that, I worked for the Federal Communications Commission for a period of about 9 months or so, also focused on broadband infrastructure.

After that, I worked in the Executive Office of the President. I worked within the EOP from 2010 to 2017 in a variety of roles.

And then, after my time in the EOP, I worked for a private philanthropic organization called Schmidt Futures. I worked there from 2017 through 2020.

And then I started at Google in 2020, and I've been at Google since then.

Q Okay. We will get to your Google position in a moment. Can you say, just at a high level, your responsibilities when you were working in EOP?

A Sure.

So I had a number of roles when I worked in the EOP. At the beginning of my time there, I worked in the Office of Management and Budget, where I was a career Federal official working within the Office of Federal Financial Management on a variety of issues. I worked in that role for a period of time.

I also worked on other manners -- other matters, I should say, within the, kind of, management half of OMB. I imagine most folks here are familiar with OMB, so on the Evans side of OMB. So I worked there for a period of time.

After my time at OMB, I worked in the White House Chief of Staff's Office, where I had a variety of responsibilities. I was focused on, sort of, effective implementation of Federal programs, so typically dealing with Federal agencies on, sort of, the implementation of large operational challenges.

Q Okay. And you said your next position was with Schmidt Futures?

A Yes.

Q Yeah. And that's a nonprofit?

A Yes, it is a not-for-profit.

Q Okay. Does it have any affiliation with Alphabet?

A No. When it was founded, Eric Schmidt was still the executive chairman of Alphabet, though was no longer the chief executive officer. He stepped down from the board -- I don't remember exactly when, but during the period of time that I was at Schmidt Futures. But even when he was there, there was no affiliation between the two.

Q And then you said you joined Google in 2020?

A Correct.

Q Do you remember which month?

A February.

Q All right. Was this before remote work began at Google?

A It was, shortly before. I started in February of 2020. I believe Google went to remote work because of COVID in the middle of March.

Q Okay. And what was your role when you first joined Google?

A Sure. My title when I first joined, I believe, was global head -- or maybe just head of global elections integrity.

Q Okay. And remind me what your current title is.

A Director of global elections integrity.

Q Okay. And when did you change positions?

A I got promoted to a director in November of this past year.

Q Okay. In your first position at Google, what were your day-to-day responsibilities?

A Sure. So my role was to lead the global elections integrity team, which was a team that was established prior to the time I joined Google. So there's a variety of things that the team does, which I'm sure we can get into, but my job was to lead a small team focused on elections-related work that Google was doing all around the world.

Q When you first started, who did you report to?

A The person I reported to was the director of emerging trends and risk management within Google's trust and safety organization.

Q And who led that team?

A The woman's name was [redacted].

Q Do you recall who led the trust and safety team at the start of 2020?

A Yes. The person who was the head of trust and safety at that time was a woman named [redacted].

Q And just one point of clarification: So, when you're working at Google and you have this title, is this for all of Alphabet? Alphabet obviously has multiple entities. Does this include YouTube, other Google companies? What was the scope of your team's --

A Sure.

Q -- responsibility?

A So, broadly speaking, the mandate of the team is focused across the whole organization, across all of Alphabet. In reality, the YouTube team, in particular, has within it a separate trust and safety organization that we partnered closely with but was somewhat of a separate operation.

Q And has that always been the case during your time at Alphabet?

A Sorry. That is, that --

Q That YouTube had its own trust and --

A Yes. During my entire time there, YouTube has had its own trust and safety function.

Q In your current role, who do you report to right now?

A So my manager is the senior director of strategic preparedness and response within the trust and safety organization.

Q Okay. And who is that?

A His name is [redacted].

Q How big is your team?

A So my immediate team is seven people.

Q Okay. And what was the size of your team when you first joined Google?

A When I first joined, it was five individuals, including me.

Q For the current members on your team -- you said there were seven -- are their responsibilities divided based off subject area? Region? How is the team structured?

A So a little bit of both. We have some people on the team that are based regionally whose responsibilities are specific to supporting elections in given regions. And then we have some people who work on particular types of issues and work on elections more globally across the full landscape. So it varies.

Q Okay. For the regions, what are the regional divides?

A Generally, Americas, EMEA, and APAC.

Q Okay. Is there someone who has a focus on U.S. elections in particular?

A On the current team?

Q Yes.

A Yes, there is.

Q And who is that?

A The person who's currently on the team focused specifically on the U.S. elections, his name is [redacted].

Q And then you said there are individuals who have a focus on particular issues. What are those issues?

A So it varies. The responsibilities of the team are somewhat varied and broad.

So there are folks whose responsibility is specifically around, like, data infrastructure.

There's somebody whose responsibility is specifically around the risk mitigation.

Folks whose responsibility is around, kind of, identifying factors where we should -- let me say it this way: like, factors for how Google should support various elections around the world. Obviously, there are, you know, tens, if not up to three digits, of elections in the world per year. And so Google does different things in different elections depending on a variety of factors, and there are folks on my team that take a look at that.

So there's a lot of responsibilities on the team.

Q Okay.

Before we get any further, are you familiar with the terms "misinformation," "disinformation," and "malinformation"?

A I'm familiar with the terms "misinformation" and "disinformation." I've always been a little bit sketchy on the distinction with "malinformation." But, generally, yes.

Q And does Google use a misinformation and disinformation -- what is the distinction between those terms, as you understand them?

A Sure. So, I mean, I'm not an expert, but my understanding is that misinformation is generally considered information that is false or misleading in some fashion but without necessarily an underlying intent ascribed to it, whereas disinformation is information that is out there that is a more active attempt to mislead for some end.

Q Okay. Do these issues fall within the scope of your team's responsibility?

A So, broadly speaking, my team does work that touches on these topics, though our responsibility is not to engage in things like content moderation for misinformation related to elections.

Q Okay. And which team is responsible for content moderation for misinformation?

A So there are a number of teams and a number of products, obviously, across all of Google. Broadly speaking, we have policy teams that set our product policies for every product across the spectrum, and those policies cover the full range of topics from spam content or child sexual abuse material or, you know, gore content or what have you; for most products, do also include, usually, topics around, like, false claims or factual accuracy or things like that, which one could consider to be misinformation depending on context.

So there are policy teams that are charged with essentially setting those product policies. And then there are enforcement teams that are charged with enforcing those policies across the various products.

Q You mentioned several areas of content -- CSAM, misinformation. Are these teams divided based upon that subject matter or, as you said, divided based upon Google product?

A So it's kind of like, in the first instance, the latter; and, in the second instance, the former.

Q Okay.

A So there are -- and this is probably an oversimplification, but the general structure is that policy and enforcement teams are segmented in the first instance by the product in question. So there is a dedicated team for, you know, Geo; there is a dedicated team for Search or what have you. And then, within that, sometimes they are further subdivided by topic area, though that varies by team.

Q Does Search have a team dedicated to fact-checking misinformation-related issues?

A I don't believe that they have a specific team that just deals with misinformation. I think it's one of those things that probably touches on a bunch of different topics in some fashion because it can be a broadly defined team.

Q Which team within Google Search do you think handles these issues?

A Sorry. That handles misinformation?

Q Yes.

A Do you mean from a policy perspective? Do you mean from an enforcement perspective?

Q Just policy, to start.

A Just policy? So there is a team -- there's a team within the policy team that specifically does search policy. And I imagine many people on that team deal with issues in this area.

Q Do you know who leads that team?

A The director of -- so the director of the search policy team is a woman named [redacted].

Q Okay. How do you spell that last name?

A [redacted].

Q And do you know which team for Google Search is in charge of enforcement of misinformation-related issues?

A Yes, I do.

Q And who is that?

A So there is a -- similar to the way that the policy teams are structured, there is enforcement teams for each product area or each grouping of product areas. And there is a team that specifically covers Search, who, to answer what I assume is your next question, is led by a woman named [redacted].

Q With respect to Google products, does YouTube have its own division with respect to developing policies and enforcing policies?

A Yes, they do. Yes, they do.

Q Okay. Do you know the name of the YouTube team responsible for developing YouTube's policies?

A I don't know the specific name of the team. We just refer to them as the "YouTube policy team."

Q Okay.

A That may be their name; they may have a more formalized team.

Q Do you know who leads that team?

A I believe the lead on that team is a person named Michael Grosack.

Mr. Bopp. That's for enforcement?

[redacted]. Policy.

Mr. Bopp. Policy.

BY [redacted]

Q So same question for YouTube with respect to enforcement. Do you know the name of that team?

A I don't. I don't know the specific name of the team.

Q Do you know who leads it?

A No. I don't -- I'm trying to think. I don't think I actually know who leads the, like, enforcement-specific function within YouTube these days.

Q Uh-huh. Do you have a point of contact on that team?

A I do. I don't know if they do just enforcement. They may do other things as well.

Q Okay. And who is that?

A It's a woman named [redacted].

Q Okay.

So we covered Search, YouTube. What are some of the other Google products that your team works most closely with?

A So, generally, our role is to work across the whole organization. When we think about elections in particular, we work -- we focus on Play; Geo, which is Google Maps; Workspace; as well as the, like, apps, the monetized team.

Q Do you work with -- I believe it's owned by Alphabet at this point -- a company named Mandiant?

A I have had a couple of occasions to engage with folks with Mandiant, but I don't work with them on a regular basis.

Q When it comes to misinformation, someone or an organization is the first to flag an issue of, you know, the accuracy of content.

Starting with the YouTube space, do you know how misinformation is first flagged with respect to YouTube videos?

A So I guess the first thing I would just want to sort of reiterate is that, like, this is not my team's role.

Q Uh-huh.

A We don't engage in content moderation.

My understanding is that content, both for YouTube as well as for other products, can be flagged from a variety of sources -- so from individuals internally within Google noticing that content may be harmful or violative of our policies, public reporting, somebody externally, press reporting. So there's a variety of ways that content can get flagged for teams.

Q And understanding this is not your team's responsibility, but do you know if these content-moderator-related teams use third-party fact-checkers?

A I don't believe so for the purposes of -- for the purposes of making decisions on content moderation. But, again, that's not really my role.

Q What about just for assessing the accuracy of a claim?

A I candidly don't know.

Q Okay. If you were asked this question from a partner you work with, who would be a good point of contact to ask?

A The question of whether teams use fact-checkers to engage in content moderation? I'm honestly not sure.

Q Yeah. Is there anyone that you can think of who might know this information?

A I'm honestly not sure.

Q For issues related to inauthentic accounts and behavior, is there a team devoted to that within Alphabet?

A So there are a few teams that deal with inauthentic accounts or behavior. The one that I think most directly does is called the Threat Analysis Group.

Q And where is that group housed within Alphabet's structure?

A It's part of Core, which is, like, an overarching organization that handles, sort of, like, some core technological infrastructure within Google, as well as, like, things like security.

Q Am I right in understanding, then, there are these different silos for Google products, and Core is outside of one of those silos? Or above?

A It's not above. Generally, like -- this is an oversimplification, but there is generally kind of, like, two categories of macro teams at Google; there's products and there's functions. And Core is considered function.

Q Do you know who leads the threat analysis team?

A Yes. A gentleman named [redacted].

Q And do you know who leads the Core team, if there is a leader of the Core team?

A Yes. It's a woman named [redacted].

Q Would this be the team primarily responsible for concerns related to a foreign malign influence campaign?

A So there's a few teams or there's a number of people that would touch on that topic from various angles, including public policy teams and others. But this would be one of the primary teams focused on investigation of whether there was such a campaign.

Q Do you know if these investigations take place in-house or if Google relies on third parties?

A I don't know. I don't know the way that TAG does their work.

Q Okay. Which other teams would play a role with respect to issues related to foreign malign influence campaigns?

A So there are intel teams in various other parts of the organization. None of them, I think, have a mandate that is as specific around, sort of, inauthentic behavior from both foreign and domestic actors as the Threat Analysis Group, but other intel teams, I'm sure, touch on that topic in some form or fashion.

Q Does your team handle these issues at all?

A We don't.

Q Do you know which team would have primary responsibility for issues related to a potential hack-and-leak operation?

A So it depends on from what angle. If it's from a determination of whether such an action occurred, it would probably be from a security-focused team. If it was a determination about implications on a given product, it would probably be the relevant product teams.

Q Turning back to the different teams divided by product, are there any other products that you can think of that have a team dedicated to misinformation, fact-checking-related issues?

A Not that I can recall. Not that I can recall. I think a lot of teams have people that touch on it in some form or fashion as part of their duties.

Q As part of your current responsibilities, do you play a role in enforcing content moderation policies for YouTube, Google Search, or any other Google product?

A I don't. That's done by the enforcement teams.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with YouTube's community guidelines?

A I'm not an expert in them. I have a broad familiarity with them.

Q Are there some sections that you're more familiar with than others?

A Like I said, I have a broad familiarity. I would say that, in particular, on stuff related to elections, I have more of a familiarity, but I'm still by no means an expert on them.

Q And if you wanted to consult with an expert on them, who would be your best point of contact at Google?

A For questions about YouTube's community guidelines specifically with respect to elections?

Q Yes.

A Probably [redacted], who leads their policy team.

Q All right.

I'm going to introduce an exhibit. It's a transcript of an interview you gave a few years back. So we'll pass this around and try to get more context. So this will be exhibit 1.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So we'll give you a few moments to review, but the interview took place on August 12, 2020. This was an organization called the Committee for Economic Development. We've provided a link. This exhibit is a transcript that recreates this interview.

Mr. Bopp. Did you guys -- did you create this transcript?

[redacted] We did. It was generated, and staff reviewed it to make sure it's consistent with the video.

Mr. Bopp. Who is [redacted] with?

[redacted] We believe he's with the Committee for Economic Development. He is the moderator asking questions of [redacted].

BY [redacted]

Q Are you ready?

A I am, but --

Mr. Bopp. Just 1 minute, please.

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted] --

A Yep.

Q -- do you recall participating in this interview?

A Yes, I do.

Q And what was the context of why you were invited?

A They reached out to me. The individual that's interviewing me, Devin O'Connor, is somebody that I know personally, and so was in this role and knew what I did and thought it would be useful for me to speak about it to the group.

Q If I could call your attention to the answer you give at the bottom of page 1.

A Uh-huh.

Q Kind of at the outset, you draw a distinction between two big buckets, whether Google is using the conduct of an election and whether Google is using the process of an election. And for the first one, you said it's a bit rare, it doesn't happen too frequently. You provided the Nevada Democratic Caucus as one example.

Are there any other examples of, we'll say, U.S. Federal elections that Google products have been involved in?

A Not that I'm aware of. Not that I can recall.

Q So then you spend the rest of the interview really digging into this other bucket. And you identify three ways that Google is involved with election-related information and process-related concerns.

And this is, again, the same answer at the bottom of page 1. Your answer continues on to page 2, and that includes the top paragraph. You're briefly interrupted by [redacted]. And then you finish your answer in that second paragraph.

And you provide three categories. The first is provide information, how to vote. The second is helping campaigns reach voters and keep campaign accounts secure, things like that. And then the third category is preventing abuse and harm, including misleading voters.

Is that still how your team views -- or, let me strike that. Is that still how you view that second bucket of how Google is related in process-related issues?

A Sorry, just the middle bucket of those three? Or you mean -- oh, sorry. You mean the -- I see what you're saying.

So, broadly speaking, those three categories -- helping voters, equipping campaigns or other election-related entities, and protecting users from harm -- are still the, sort of, three broad categories that we think about. Not just the work of my team, but broadly what Google does to support elections.

Q Great. That was going to be my next question.

Which teams at Google, in addition to yours, touch upon that third bucket?

A So there are a number of teams that focus on protecting users from harm. Generally speaking, the primary mandate for that kind of work rests within the trust and safety teams -- both the Google trust and safety team as well as the YouTube trust and safety team.

Q And when you say the Google trust and safety team, is that Google Search? Is that other Google products?

A Yeah. So this, I think, may be too general of a characterization, but, as a general matter, the trust and safety functions for Google products across the board are housed within a single trust and safety team, with the exception of YouTube, which has its own trust and safety team.

Q And when you mentioned enforcement teams earlier, are those enforcement teams housed within the trust and safety team?

A Yes. Yes, they are.

Q And do you have a sense of how big the enforcement team is for YouTube's trust and safety team?

A No, I don't.

Q Do you know which team is bigger, the enforcement team within YouTube or the enforcement team we'll just broadly call Google?

A No, I don't.

Q Okay.

Turning back to the interview, you then focus -- so there were two buckets. The second one had three categories. The third category, you then delve into a bit more detail. This starts on the last paragraph of page 2.

A Uh-huh.

Q And you say there are, sort of, six big categories of risk, and then you go through and list six items. And that includes domestic misinformation, foreign interference, social engineering, manipulating media, targeted attacks, and then unanticipated challenges. You put COVID-19 in that bucket. And this is on page 2. The sixth category is listed on the top of page 3.

First, let me ask: Is this, to your recollection, an accurate description of how you viewed these categories of risk in the summer of 2020?

A I think those six categories were generally the way that we talked about, broadly, the category of risks that we were thinking about, not just for the U.S. elections but globally. Yeah.

Q And when you say "we," are you referring to your team? Google as a whole?

A Principally my team, when we were describing our work internally.

[redacted] Can I just clarify, are you asking him when he uses "we" now or when he used "we" in the interview?

[redacted] "We" now, but thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q Sitting here today, 2023, does your team still view the categories of risk in these six buckets?

A I don't think that we have refreshed that particular framing since 2020. Sitting here right now, I think I probably would not have the same six categories, necessarily, and describe them the exact same way. But I'd need to give some thought to the appropriate way to bucket things in the current environment.

Q Is there anything in particular that stands out that you would revise?

A So, again, I think that I would need to give some considered thought to, like, what a new categorization would look like.

You know, to give you one example, I would imagine that, in any similar analysis right now, we would be taking a hard look at artificial intelligence, in particular generative AI, and the ways in which that might intersect with elections integrity on our products, which is, you know, somewhat nested in the category of manipulated media in this construct but, obviously, looks different in 2023 than it did in 2020.

Q If I could turn your attention -- this is about the middle of the last paragraph on page 2. You say, "The first is domestic disinformation or misinformation. So, actor-based, inauthentic networks that are designed to spread disinformation as well as content-based disinformation that either harms users or interferes in the election in some fashion."

First, can you provide, just at a high level, your understanding of the difference between actor-based and content-based mis- and disinformation?

A Sure.

So actor-based would be an instance where there is potentially a known actor that is, in some cases, to our conversation earlier about inauthentic behavior, trying to conceal their identity or conceal the provenance of the information that they are putting out there on a consistent and repeated basis.

A content-based sort of instance would be one where, just based on the four walls of the content, regardless of the source, there's potential content that might violate our policies and be harmful to users.

Q And does both actor-based and content-based misinformation touch upon your team's work?

A So, again, in both instances, our team is not engaged in content moderation. So, whether it's moderation actions that are taken at the actor level or at the content level, that's not something that our team is engaged in.

Q So, understanding that your team isn't responsible for executing YouTube's content moderation policy or Google's content moderation policy for other Google products, is your team involved in that process at all, so identifying misinformation or providing analysis on an actor or a piece of content?

A So, generally speaking, no. Our team's role is principally one of coordination. So those efforts are happening across a variety of teams across the organization, and our team's role is to help coordinate those efforts. But we, you know, are not doing analyses of specific type of content or specific actors.

Q If you could turn to page 3, you're asked about Google's response to misinformation. And you provide, again, three categories as you walk through your answer -- transparency, policy, and enforcement.

Building off what we covered earlier in the hour, are you communicating things --

Mr. Bopp. Where are you?

[redacted] Sure, sure. Sorry. So, on the middle paragraph on page 3 --

Mr. Bopp. Uh-huh.

[redacted] -- [redacted] begins his answer. It's about five or six lines down. He brings up the first thing; he says, transparency. "There's, you know, things that we do around transparency, there's things that we do around policy and there's things that we do around enforcement."

And then his answer for transparency finishes in that paragraph. The next paragraph covers policy and enforcement.

BY [redacted]

Q Going back to what we touched upon earlier, you mentioned there are a number of policy-related teams, a number of enforcement-related teams. When you were delivering this answer -- or, let me ask you this.

You've had a moment to review. Is what you're conveying those same set of teams? So, with respect to policy, you're referring to actions done by the policy team; with respect to enforcement, work done by the enforcement teams. Or is there conduct that your team conducted you're referencing in here?

A Sure. So, appreciate the opportunity to clarify this.

So I remember doing this interview. I don't remember my answers. But, in reviewing this, I am quite confident that what I'm doing here is speaking broadly on behalf of the work that the company does. So this is not necessarily work that is housed within my team, but, rather, more broadly, what the company is focused on.

Q If I could turn your attention to the start of your answer at the last paragraph on page 3, where you begin discussing policy.

You say, "On the policy side of things, you know, there's a number of things that we do across individual product areas to prohibit and prohibit sort of what we call -- to reduce misrepresentative content at one end of the spectrum and demonstrably false content on the other end of the spectrum."

A little bit later, you say, "Folks get a little bit too focused on just what is prohibited on platforms, and that's important, but one of the things we can also do is use our tools to make sure that even if content is not necessarily violative in a way that it can be removed from a platform, we can reduce that content in favor of elevating more authoritative content."

When you're referring to either reducing content or elevating content, which Google products does that step apply to?

A So there's a variety of products that have tools to sort of elevate more authoritative content to make sure that that high-quality content is what users encounter in the first instance, though still retain access to any content that they would like to have.

Certainly YouTube has those tools. Those are available for certain Search products, depending on the product. Those are the ones that I'm most aware of.

Q And when you say "certain Search products," would that include Google News?

A I'm not familiar with exactly the levers that Google News uses. I believe that they have those kind of tools. That's also stuff that is housed outside the trust and safety organization.

Q Okay.

When you say "Search products," when someone goes to Google and types in a search, what is the Search product name for that?

A Sure. So it's all Search -- if you'll give me a second to explain. So it's all Search, but there's different things that appear. So there's, like, what, you know, I think many of us remember from the early days of Google, what we call the 10 blue links, which we generally refer to now as "organic search." There's that content.

There's also, you know, when you search for something on Google now, a number of other things that you will see. You will see what are called "web answers." You'll see sometimes what's called a "knowledge panel." So if you're searching for a particular person or entity, you might see something on the right-hand side of the search page that has information from an authoritative source with basic information about that person or entity.

So there's, like -- and there's others. So there are -- you know, there's images sometimes that you'll see at the time, or videos sometimes that you'll see at the top.

So the Search page is a kind of, like, macro product, and then there are a number of, you know, products or features that exist within that. And they're treated differently.

Q You mentioned that there was a trust and safety team specific to YouTube and that there was, kind of, this broader bucket, with the caveat there might be some differences that weren't gone into yet.

Is there a trust and safety team devoted to Search products?

A Yes, there is. It's within the Google trust and safety team, but there is a specific policy team that focuses on Search. Within the Google trust and safety team, there's a specific enforcement team that also focuses on Search.

Q Okay.

A And I should say that the team is largely organized around Search as well as Assistant, Google Assistant.

Q Okay. And when you say that, is there someone in charge of Google Search, someone in charge of Google Assistant, and then there's a team leader on top of that?

A I'm honestly not sure of the organizational structure, whether that's the way that they're divided or not.

Q And I think I asked this already, but just to clarify again, who leads the Google search policy team?

A The director of the Google search -- the trust and safety -- Google trust and safety search policy team is under [redacted].

Q Do you know, as a practical matter, how reductions are executed with either respect to YouTube or the Google Search?

And by that, I mean: There is an issue that is flagged with certain content; let's say it's because it's misinformation. Right? And a policy team has identified that. It has been determined that this content should be reduced. How is that then actually, as a practical matter, executed so that it comes up fewer times in search results?

A I don't have direct knowledge of that. I'm not familiar with the tooling or the underlying algorithms that are at play there.

Q Okay. Do you know which team, whether it's an engineering team or someone with more technical expertise, would be responsible for executing that?

A You mean specifically with regards to reducing content?

Q Uh-huh.

A Typically, it would be an engineering team.

Q When it comes to reducing content, do you know if -- and this applies -- let me ask first for YouTube. Are there different degrees that are available when YouTube decides to reduce content?

A I don't know. I'm not familiar with the reducing mechanisms with YouTube.

Q And for Google Search?

A Similarly, yeah, I'm not familiar with them.

Q When content is reduced, do you know if the account is notified -- the YouTube account is notified?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. And who would be best to answer that question?

A I'm not sure. Potentially somebody from the relevant engineering team or from the YouTube public policy team, but I don't know.

Q All right.

If I could turn your attention -- we'll turn to page 6 of exhibit 1. And if you look at your answer -- it's one big paragraph in the middle --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- of the page. It's about maybe a half-dozen lines down. You talk about the challenge of domestic disinformation campaigns.

And you say, "It's become increasingly germane in this election cycle" -- again, this is referring to 2020 -- "and is going to sort of be the biggest thing that, that to focus on going forward."

Going on to the next sentence, "In terms of the way that Google's adapted, we've obviously changed a lot since 2016 as well."

So the first question is: From the company's perspective, has domestic disinformation continued to be an issue that Google has focused on?

A Yes. I think both domestic and foreign misinformation and disinformation, in all categories of content, are still things that the company is very focused on, protecting user -- user harm.

Q And in terms of focusing on a particular set of risks, or prioritizing focus on a certain set of risks, has domestic disinformation -- has the attention from the company changed at all from 2020 to today?

A Sorry. Can you clarify what you mean by "the attention from the company" there?

Q Sure. Let me actually back up a little bit.

You say, "We've obviously changed a lot since 2016." And you said this in 2020. In what ways are you referring to? What changes has Google made from 2016 to 2020?

A So, I mean, important to note, I wasn't at Google in 2016. So, in this instance, I'm speaking on behalf of the company broadly and my understanding of what had changed.

I think there was a lot of additional focus not just from 2016 but from elections that happened around the world during that intervening period. There were major elections in the European Union, in France, in India, and others where users turned to Google very heavily for assistance. And I think there was a recognition that the company as a whole could be doing more to help support election integrity everywhere around the world.

Q And do you know what steps Google took in particular to help support those efforts?

A I don't know specifically. Like I said, it was before my time at Google. I mean, certainly one of the things that did happen is they created the Google elections integrity team during that period that you're describing.

Q Okay. Do you know when the team was created?

A My understanding was it was created in the fall or early winter of 2019.

Q With respect to election integrity, what steps has Google taken since December of 2020 to today?

A Sorry. That's different from the approach in 2020 versus the approach now?

Q Yes.

Mr. Bopp. Wait, wait. You're asking with respect to the team itself?

[redacted] Well, for the company. It sounds like the team has primary responsibility in this realm, but [redacted] identified a couple of the steps that Google took with respect to from 2016 into 2020, including the creation of his team.

BY [redacted]

Q Well, let me ask, did these efforts stop, or have they continued into 2023?

A So, generally speaking, I think those efforts have continued. I think, in terms of what has changed, I guess what I would say is that we've spent a lot of time and effort focusing on standardizing the way in which we support elections everywhere around the world.

You know, like I said, the team was stood up in 2019, and there were elections that we were supporting over the course of 2019 and 2020, but, in some ways, it was kind of a building-the-plane-as-you're-flying-it situation. And over the course of time, I think, as the team has matured, we've done a lot to standardize process so that we kind of understand what to do when we are approaching a given global election, rather than kind of approaching each election anew.

Q Great.

We've reached the hour mark, so I'll allow the minority to ask questions. If we could take the exhibits back, and if we need them, we'll bring them again in the next round.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[11:15 a.m.]

[redacted] We're back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], on behalf of the minority, we'd also like to thank you for coming here today. We appreciate you taking the time.

So I want to ask you just a few quick questions about the work that you do and that you don't do for Google. Your work focuses on democratic processes and participation in elections generally speaking, correct?

A Yes. Broadly.

Q And you worked to ensure that Google's internal processes help voters have the ability to participate in free and fair elections around the world?

A As -- yeah. As I said before, our team's role is largely a coordination role. So we help kind of coordinate and gather the efforts towards that end that are being done from across the company.

Q And, as you said, I believe several times, it's -- you do not engage in content moderation, correct?

A Yes. Correct.

Q And that has never part of your job?

A Yes. That's correct.

Q And what that means is that you do not determine whether a piece of content violates Google's policies or YouTube's community guidelines?

A Yes. That's correct.

Q And neither does anyone on your team, correct?

A Yes. That's correct.

Q And you do not determine whether a piece of content on any of Google's platforms contains misinformation?

A No, I do not.

Q And I believe you were asked who the person to contact to ask about misinformation would be, and your answer was you didn't know?

A Yeah. Misinformation is a relatively broad topic, so it touches upon a number of teams depending upon the specific type of content in question.

Q And so you were also asked about the interview that you gave to the Committee for Economic Development. And, in that interview, a few times you said things like "we reduce misinformation." When you made those comments, the "we" referred to Google as a company, not you personally, correct?

A Correct. I'm speaking on behalf of the company in this context.

Q And you did not engage in fact-checking?

A No, I do not.

Q And neither does anyone on your team?

A No, they do not.

Q And are you aware that Google's counsel -- and I'm not sure if your own counsel has done this as well -- have informed counsel for the majority that you do not and have not engaged in content moderation?

A I actually don't know whether they've been informed as such.

Q You were asked a lot of questions today about who -- about the structure of Google's organization, who was on what team, who played what roles. Would you have been willing to answer those questions in writing rather than have to come here in D.C and give this interview?

A Yes. Though, I'm also happy to be here.

Q And is it your understanding that, if you did not appear here today voluntarily, that you would be subpoenaed?

A I don't have any understanding of what would have happened if I wasn't to appear today. But I'm happy to be here.

Q Can you explain -- and, if you can't, it's fine, but do you have an understanding of why Google, as a company, why it's important to Google to protect the integrity of elections around the world?

A Sure. So I appreciate the question. You know, at base, Google's overall mission is to organize the world's information and make it helpful to our users. And our users -- one of the things that users frequently come to Google for is information about civic processes around the world, and information about what their governments are doing and what is happening in the world. And so we have -- we, you know, we have a responsibility to help provide them accurate and useful information about those the topics. And that's what we try to do with respect to elections.

Q And so, in addition to the sense of civic responsibility that you just described, does Google also have a business interest in protecting the integrity of elections or election-related information on its platform?

A Yes, I think so. I mean, fundamentally, people come to Google because they find the information to be helpful, and if we were not providing helpful information in this or any other area -- there are a number of other areas -- presumably less people would be interested in coming to Google for their information.

Q Thank you. I appreciate that. So I want to talk about some of the issues that you discussed in the interview. For example, you explain that Google provides tools to help voters participate in information like how to register to vote, correct?

A Yes. That's correct.

Q Okay. And so -- and you explain that, if you go to Google and you look for that information, it will be tailored to you based on your location and where you can go to register to vote, correct?

A Yes, presuming that the user in question has the appropriate settlings enabled, but yes. They -- one of the things that we do -- one of the things that the company does that is most visible with respect to elections are features on the search page, as we were discussing earlier, the search page has a number of things on it around elections that will provide specific helpful information on topics related to how to vote or how to register to vote, et cetera.

Q And you provide that information around the world -- for elections around the world?

A We do. We don't provide it for every election around the world, but we do -- it is provided for a number of elections around the world.

Q And you provide that information regardless of the political leanings of the State, the locality, or country that you are -- that the election is taking place in?

A Yes. The considerations about the local or national political dynamics in any market are never part of the decision about whether to launch such a feature in that market. Typically, those decisions are made based on whether there is a reliable, authoritative data partner that can provide that information because none of the information that we provide in this context for these types of features is Google's information. It is information from a third party authoritative source.

Q So, for example, in the United States, that might be the Secretary of State's Office for a particular State?

A Yes. So -- yes. That's correct.

Q Okay. And that's the type of authoritative source that you refer to when you talk about elevating content from authoritative sources?

A Yes. That's correct.

Q Because if a user, like me for example, googles "where can I register to vote, what's my deadline to register to vote," you want to make sure I'm getting authoritative information rather than information that might be posted by, say, a malign foreign actor?

A Yes. That's exactly right. Our goal is, for queries like that, to make sure that users have access to high-quality information that is easily accessible and also that comes from the authoritative source on that information that you described. How to vote, for example, like there's an authority on that subject, and so that is the most helpful information to that user.

Q Because you don't want a user go on Google, search for "what's my voter registration deadline," get incorrect information, and then miss the opportunity to register to vote?

A Yes. That's an outcome that we would try to avoid.

Q Now, you also mentioned that, in addition to helping voters, Google helps campaigns and other entities that help to drive the democratic process, for example, by helping them use tools on your platform to reach voters, correct?

A Yes.

Q And Google does that regardless of the party affiliation of the campaign or the candidate?

A Yes. That's correct. And, as I was saying earlier, those are efforts that happen all around the world, and across the political spectrum in every country.

Q And fair to say that your work is nonpartisan and your team's work is nonpartisan?

A Yes. I -- all the work that myself and my team do is nonpartisan and apolitical in nature.

Q And, as you just said, you approach your work without regard to the political viewpoint of the campaigns or whoever it is relating to elections that's looking to use your tools?

A Yes. That's correct.

Q And it would be against Google's business interests in addition to its civic responsibility to prioritize one viewpoint over another?

A Yes. That's correct. It would be contrary to our -- contrary to our goals as a business, contrary to the goals of our team. It would also be not helpful to users, which is our overall goal.

[redacted] Give me one minute. I think that might be it for now. Yeah. That was quick. That's it for me for now. Thank you. Off the record.

[Recess.]

[11:35 a.m.]

[redacted] On the record.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you still have a copy of exhibit 1?

A I do, yes.

Q If I could turn your attention again to page 6, the last page? It looks about three lines up from the bottom, you say we have new intel desks. What are the intel desks that you're referring to?

A I'm trying to think what would have been new in -- at this time in 2020. I think the Trust and Safety Intel Team in particular was relatively new at that stage. There was an intel team specifically within Trust and Safety.

Q At a broad level, other similar Intel Teams at Google, are these all full-time Google employees, or are these contractors, third party entities?

A So I'm not familiar with all the various Intel Teams. My understanding is that they are the teams -- the teams are typically full-time employees but oftentimes work with third-party intel providers to provide information. That's my understanding.

Q Do you know who -- what any of those third-party providers are?

A No, I don't think I know any specific providers.

Q If you look -- and this is same paragraph, same answer, a few more lines up, you mention the hack of the Democratic National Committee in 2016. And, in the first hour, we talked about Google's hack and leak policy. When you started with Google February 2020, was the hack and leak policy already in place?

A So there's no -- there's no kind of like universal what we refer to as hacked political materials policy. Different product policy teams worked on policies in that space. I don't believe any of them were finalized before 2020. But I'm not positive on that point.

Q So, if I'm understanding you correctly, as of the summer of 2020, they were still being developed?

A I believe by the summer, at least some products that were looking at policies in the space had finalized their policy approach.

Q Do you know which products had?

A The ones -- the ones that I can recall that had a specific policy in this space were YouTube and ads. There may have been others. I'm not sure.

Q Do you know what motivated this change, and how YouTube approached hacked materials?

Mr. Bopp. You mean motivated the creation of a policy?

BY [redacted]

Q Correct me if I'm wrong; there was no policy before, and this was a new policy or a revision of an existing policy?

A Yeah. So I don't know -- I don't -- it's a distinction mostly without a difference. I don't know, whether in either the YouTube case or the ads case, whether they were constructed as new policies or like new subpieces of a broader policy that mostly matters for the way it like appears on, you know, like the help center externally. But in terms of -- sorry your question was why were they created is that?

Q Uh-huh. Yes.

A So I was obviously not in charge of creating these policies. My understanding was that this was an area of user harm that had been seen in the recent past. I referenced DNC here. There was also an instance with -- that I vaguely recall with emails from Emmanuel Macron in France that were obtained in a hacked fashion. So I think it was a recognition that this was an area of user harm that merited some exploration in terms of policy coverage.

Q Okay. With respect to the various policy and enforcement teams that we discussed earlier, there was teams for YouTube, you mentioned teams in other buckets. Do you know if any Google product had a team devoted specifically to COVID-related misinformation?

A I know that there were individuals across various policy teams and enforcement teams that were focused on COVID related issues in general. I don't -- I don't know of any specific teams that were stood up just around the topic of COVID misinformation.

Q In your role -- and this question's both for you and your about 17 members, you're interfacing with election officials on a regular basis, is that accurate to say?

A So, generally, my team's role is internal facing. So we don't interface with election officials or other election-related -- external election-related entities on a regular basis. We have done that on an occasional basis, usually arranged through our government affairs and public policy team.

Q Going back to the -- very early on in the interview, you mentioned there was kind of a product section of teams and a function set of teams. For government affairs and public policy, where do they fall within Alphabet's hire?

A They're a function. They're one of what we call our cross functional teams.

Q Is that two teams, government affairs and public policy, or is that one --

A No. It's one team. It's called the GAPP team, G-A-P-P.

Q Do you know who loads that team?

A The global head of government affairs and public policy is [redacted] -- [redacted] last name is escaping me. It starts with a [redacted]

Q Do you have a point of contact on that team?

A So, yes. Our team works with individuals from government affairs and public policy on -- all around the world. So it's a globally distributed team. So there are individuals that we work with on the GAPP team in the United States for U.S. elections. There's also, you know, folks that we work with in Turkiye for the Turkish elections that are happening right now. So in every country.

Q Within GAPP's team, is there a team devoted to U.S. elections?

A So my understanding -- and I'm not in GAPP, so I can't speak definitively on their org structure -- my understanding is that they do have a team that is specific to the U.S. and Canada, but it's not specific to elections. It's all public policy matters in both the U.S. and Canada.

Q Who do you work with most closely with the U.S. and Canada team?

A Do you mean currently, or in 2020? Or --

Q Start with directly.

A So currently?

Q [Nonverbal response.]

A There are a few people that I work with closely. So a person named [redacted] is on the GAPP team. [redacted]. [redacted].

Q And what are the context of your interactions with these three?

A So it depends. You know, sometimes it's discussions about a relevant public policy issue, you know, legislation that's being considered or, you know, public discussion on an issue related to Google that typically the GAPP team is until the lead on. Sometimes, it's about engagements with external entities, so it can be on a variety of topics, and different individuals handle different portfolios for the team.

Q With respect to if there's a new change in YouTube's policies with respect to election misinformation, who would brief you on those changes? You said that you aren't responsible for drafting them, preparing them, enforcing them. Does someone from Google brief you on changes that are made to the policy?

A From YouTube?

Q Yes.

A So there's not -- nobody sort of like affirmatively will necessarily brief me. You know, I don't oversee that area or anything of that nature. You know, I communicate with the Google policy team, and the Google policy team also communicates with the YouTube policy team. So sometimes it will be through that channel. Sometimes it will be from others at YouTube. But there's no kind of like formal briefing process.

Q You mentioned you're primarily internal facing. In your current role, do you interface with the Federal Government?

A As a general matter, I don't. There are select occasions where I have, but for the most part, I don't have direct interactions with the Federal Government. That's not one of my core sort of day-to-day responsibilities.

Q And what are some of those interactions?

A So the primary one is that I'm -- along with a couple of other individuals from Google, I join a somewhat regular sync that's held between a number of USG officials from security agencies principally and technology platforms. And so I participate in those calls.

Q Is this in the context of the Joint Cyber Defense Collaborative?

A I don't believe so. Though, the JCDC is an entity that Google interacts with, principally I think led by the Public Affairs and Public Policy Team. I don't recall having any direct interactions with the JCDC.

Q You mentioned that there were -- to go back to the answer before that -- security-related agencies from the U.S. Government when you occasionally interact, it tends to be folks from there. Which agencies?

A So I don't know all of the agencies that are on those calls. I know the acronym for CISA is going to elude me, but DHS, CISA is on there. I believe DNI is on there. I believe FBI is on there. There might be other parts of DHS that are on there as well. I'm not sure of various agencies that are on those calls.

Q And CISA, would that be the Cybersecurity Infrastructure and Security Agency?

A Yes. Thank you.

Q For the FBI, is that a task force within the FBI? Do you know which office?

A I don't know.

[redacted] [redacted] if we could grab Meta 25249. This will be exhibit 2.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this document?

A Yes, I do.

Q What is it?

A It's a calendar invite for one of the -- one of the U.S. Government industry meetings that I was referring to earlier and then a reply all to that calendar invite with two attachments.

Q So, just to clarify, this USG industry call is the call you had in mind with the example you gave?

A Yes. Yes.

Q Okay. If we could look at the "to" line on the top of page 1, and go down about four lines, there are some email addresses with a Google domain. Do you recognize who those email addresses belong to?

A Yes, I do.

Q Who are they?

A So shuntley is [redacted], who I mentioned earlier leads the Threat Analysis Group, and [redacted] is [redacted], who was -- I don't know his title. He was a lawyer within the YouTube team.

Q There's an email address at the very bottom of the "to" section, [redacted]@google.com. Do you know who email address belongs to?

A I believe it is [redacted] (ph), who is a member of the Google legal team.

Q Do you recall how many of these meetings you attended?

A I'm -- not exactly, like I would say probably somewhere between like 6 and 12, something like that. They were held on a somewhat regular basis.

Q Do you recall when you first began attending these meetings?

A I first -- I don't know the exact month, but I first started attending these sometime in the middle of 2022.

Q Are they ongoing?

A They are, though, they are less frequent than they were in 2022. But they continue to be on the calendar and occasionally occur.

Q Why do you think the frequency's reduced this year?

A You know, I can't say for sure. My instinct is that, because we are not in the immediate runup to an election right now, there's potentially less relevant information for industry and government to share about particular trends or what-have-you related to election integrity.

Q Do you recall who first initiated these meetings?

A I don't. They were initiated before I started joining them.

Q Do you typically take notes during the meeting?

A No, not typically.

Q Do you know if anyone else from Google does?

A I don't know.

Q Are there ever meeting minutes circulated after one of these meetings?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Do you know who Brian Scully is? He's at the top on the from line.

A I know the name. I'm not confident I could match the name with the person, but he's someone that I recognized in this context as somebody that is on these meetings.

Q Do you recall interacting with him outside of the context of these meetings?

A No, I don't.

Q In the industry -- so there's other companies' email addresses on here. Microsoft, Twitter. Do you know if these companies have teams that are similar to yours?

A I don't know whether they have teams that are sort of directly analogous. I do know that these other companies also focus on elections integrity. So I imagine they have individuals that perform functions. Whether they're organized the same as Google, I don't know.

Q For elections-integrity-related issues, do you have a point of contact at Meta?

A No, I don't specifically.

Q Does anyone on your team, or --

A Not on my team, no.

Mr. Bopp. To the best of your knowledge.

[redacted]. Yeah. To the best of my knowledge.

BY [redacted]

Q What about your manager --

A No.

Q -- if that's the right word?

A To the best of my knowledge, he does not have a point of contact or counterpart that he works with at Meta.

Q Is that true also for Twitter?

A Yes. Sorry, with respect to my manager?

Q Sorry. We'll start with you first.

A Yes. I don't have a dedicated counterpart that I work with at Twitter, nor, to the best of my knowledge, does my manager.

Q Well, I'll frame this question just to the extent of your knowledge: For Google, for Alphabet, do they have a point of contact at Microsoft for elections-integrity-related issues?

A So I certainly don't. To the best of my knowledge, Google does not have a single point of contact there either.

Q Do you know of any --

A Not specifically. I mean, I think there's probably folks -- I imagine some of the folks that are on here from Microsoft are also the folks that focus on similar issues, which is why they're on here, but I don't specifically know.

Q Have you ever worked with the State Department's Global Engagement Center?

A No, not to my recollection.

[redacted] [redacted] can you grab Google document 41? And we can take these back.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this document?

A I do. I know this was -- I reviewed it in advance of this session because I know that it was a document that was produced to the committee.

Q Great. And what is this document? What is it showing?

A It appears to be a calendar invite sent to a broad number of people for a meeting regarding a biweekly meeting with JCDC -- on JCDC elections security, cyber defense planning.

Q And again, what does JCDC mean as referred to here?

A I'm bad with acronyms. Joint Cyber Defense command.

Q Collaborative.

A Collaborative. Right.

Q What was the purpose of this meeting?

A So I don't recall this meeting. It appears to be a recurring calendar invite. It's possible that I joined this meeting, but I don't recall ever joining this conversation.

Q So do you know if it was a one-off meeting or if there were multiple?

A I don't. Again, it appears to be a biweekly that will be canceled as needed based on the language at the top of the second page. But I don't know.

Q So this is, several lines down, it looks like it's about five lines above the CC line, so this is in "to" category.

A Okay.

Q There's an email address, [redacted]@google.com, and before it, it says [redacted]

A Yeah.

Q Who's [redacted]?

A I don't know. That's not a name I'm familiar with.

Q Okay. Does the email address [redacted]@google.com, is that one that you recognize?

A It's not.

[redacted] We can take these back. [redacted] can you grab --

Just to clarify for the record, that previous one was exhibit 3. This will be exhibit 4.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Ready?

A Yeah.

Q Do you recognize this document?

A Yes, similarly to the last document, I reviewed it in advance of this session.

Q Okay. And what is it?

A It appears to be a calendar invite for a sync between Google and JCDC around elections webinars.

Q Okay. Do you recall this invitation?

A I do because I reviewed it in advance of coming here. I don't recall the meeting. And, in fact, in one of the other documents that I think we produced, it looks like I had declined this meeting invite.

Q Do you know if the meeting took place?

A I don't know.

Q If I could call your attention this is in the to line, the second line down at the end, there's an email address by [redacted] @google.com. Is that the email address for [redacted]

A Yes, it is.

Q And who is she?

A [redacted] is -- [redacted] works on our -- on the partnerships team, I believe, specifically around account security partnerships. So my understanding is that she works with external entities that help in some cases distribute or help explain, I guess, publicly some of Google's account security tools.

Q And what is the Partnerships Team?

A So broadly, the Partnerships Team -- I have a passing understanding, but they're the team that has responsibility for any external partnerships that Google has across, you know, whatever the topic area is. So it's a very widely ranging team.

Q And, going back to that kind of product versus function, would this be a team that falls under the function category?

A I believe so. I don't -- they're not a product team. I think that they are actually nested within the Global Business Organization, which is like the sales organization essentially, which I think is considered a functional team, a crossfunctional team, but I'm not positive on that. They're certainly not a product team.

Q Do you work with [redacted] in your current role?

A Yes, I do. I work with [redacted] on various things that Google does from an account security perspective related to elections.

Q Do you work with anyone else on her team?

A Yes. There's a woman who reports to [redacted] whose name I can't recall but that I've worked with.

Q The email, this invitation is from [redacted]. [redacted] has CISA email domain. Do you know who that is?

A No, I don't.

Q Have you worked with [redacted] in a different context?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q What about the other names from CISA in the "to" line?

A No, I don't recall having worked with any of these individuals.

Q Outside of the subject itself, the title, do you know what the purpose of the meeting was?

A I don't. Like I said, I don't recall the meeting. I believe I didn't attend the meeting, based on the document that I reviewed. So all I know is what's here in the meeting objective.

[redacted] We can take these back. [redacted] can you grab Google 60?

[redacted] Exhibit 5.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this document?

A Yes, I do.

Q What is it?

A It appears to be an email basically making calendar arrangements for an elections security briefing with DHS.

Q Okay. And what was the purpose of this meeting?

A So, to the best of my recollection, the purpose of the meeting was to brief officials at DHS, it looks like both CISA as well as potentially elsewhere with the DHS -- on what Google -- what Google observed and experienced during the course of the 2022 midterms. So this meeting looks like occurred in January and was arranged in December. So I think the purpose was to do a little bit of a retrospective on what we saw.

Q And do you know if this meeting took place?

A Yes, it did take place.

Q Did you attend?

A Yes, I did.

Q Did you present at the meeting?

A Yes. My recollection is that I did present at this meeting.

Q Do you recall what you presented?

A So I don't recall specifically. I do recall broadly that I talked about overall like a refresher on what our objectives are in the elections integrity space as an organization, the kind of like three pillars of helping voters, protecting campaigns, and other election-related entities, and protecting users from harmful or abusive content that I talked about earlier. So I recall talking about that. And then, specifically, what we -- what we did in each of those categories or what we observed in the course of the midterms.

Q At a high level, do you recall, you know, what some of those observations were with respect to the 2022 election?

A I don't recall all of them. I mean, I think, generally speaking, I recall that we saw -- we saw a little bit -- we were prepared for potentially a lot of content that was harmful to our users in some fashion, whether that be misinformation content or otherwise, and I think our lived experience from the midterms was that we ended up seeing less of that than was expected. So I imagine we discussed that. That's kind of in the third bucket.

In the middle bucket, I recall that there were -- there was some work that we did -- and here I'm using "we" in the broad sense of the company -- around making sure that election workers in particular had knowledge of Google's various account security tools to the extent that they had security issues during the course of the midterms. I think I recall speaking about that. And, in the first category, you know, I imagine we reminded DHS about some of our voter-facing features like the how-to-vote feature that we talked about earlier.

Q So, with respect to the work you did -- thank you for clarifying using "we" in the sense of Google. Right before you started to give that part of the answer, you said, "We were prepared." Was that "we" in reference to your team or to the company?

A To the company. Sorry.

Q Was your team involved in those preparation efforts?

A So, like I said, my team at base is responsible for coordination. So we were certainly part of coordinating overall efforts that were happening at the company, but it was not my team's role to sort of like be -- be the ones that were particularly monitoring for any particular content.

Q In your role, you know, serving as coordinating function, are you aware of what content the other teams are anticipating could be an issue leading into an election?

A The content that they're anticipating being an issue?

Q [Nonverbal response.]

A It depends on the team in question or the product area in question, but as a general matter, we work closely with all of the product teams. So we have a general understanding of the sort of risk areas that they are most focused on I would say.

Q And, again, understanding that your team is playing coordinating function at a high level for the 2022 election, what is your understanding that -- what some of those risk areas were?

A So I think there -- some of them are similar to the sort of categorization of risks that I had offered back in 2020. And I -- you know, some other stuff I know that we were focused on in the course of the midterms, there was a specific -- there was a specific desire to make sure that we were prepared for potentially harmful content in non-English language, whether it -- that be Spanish or other languages. So I know that that was something that we were particularly attuned to in the course of that. I mentioned the example of security risks with respect to election workers. I recall that being something that we were specifically attune to in the course of the midterms as well.

Q Do you recall if there was a focus or a concern on content related to the method of voting?

A Do you mean like with regards to mail-in voting? Can you explain a little bit what you mean?

Q Sure. Mail-in balloting would be one method of voting.

Mr. Bopp. And these are concerns that [redacted] would have been aware of because they are raised by somebody else at Google?

[redacted] Correct.

[redacted]. Not specific to the midterms. Like we have -- there are -- there are somewhat longstanding policies in place around demonstratively false content about things like voting procedures. I don't recall that being a concern that was like particularly acute in the midterms vis-à-vis, you know, 2020 or other elections that we've dealt with around the world.

BY [redacted]

Q Are there any other issues from -- with respect to the 2022 election that you recall in this category, to use a phrase you used, harmful content that you recall the other teams having on their radar?

A That were sort of specific to the midterms?

Q Yes.

A No, nothing else that comes to mind that's unique to the midterms.

Q Okay. With respect to the 2022 U.S. election, was there a similar internal dynamic in place where your team is serving a kind of coordinating function?

A Yes.

Q And, in the lead up to the 2020 election, does your team have some sort of visibility into the categories of harmful content that are on the radar of other teams?

A So, like I said before, that -- it varies by team and, in this case, varies temporally. But, as a general matter, we have visibility into a lot of various teams and what they were focused on.

Q Do you remember any specific topics from the 2020 election?

A Obviously, it's, you know, all 3 years ago, so I can't be certain. But my expectation was that like those six categories that I described earlier, while that was principally a construct that our team used, was probably a pretty good encapsulation of what other teams were focused on as well.

Q Do you recall if methods of voting, if that was an issue in the lead up to the 2020 election?

A So I think -- I think that that was a focus area in 2020. I think the main reason that I recall teams focusing on it during the course of 2020 was that -- and I think I explained this a little bit in the interview as I was reading it through, that facts about the methods of voting were changing, and there was a somewhat dynamic information environment around those topics during the course of 2020 as a result of COVID with more jurisdictions expanding mail-in voting, for example, or remote voting options. So I do recall there being a desire to make sure that we were providing helpful and accurate information to voters on those topics, particularly when the facts on the ground were evolving in real time due to COVID.

Q Do you recall which personnel at Google were most involved in this space? And by "this space," let me clarify, with respect to analyzing and enforcing content related to methods of voting.

A I'm not sure I recall specific individuals, but it would be, you know, the relevant policy teams and policy leads for those products and topics, as well as the relevant enforcement teams. So, if you're talking about search, it's the relevant search policy leads and the relevant search enforcement leads.

Q With respect to, again, going back to your team serving in this coordinating role, you have some visibility into what's on the radar of these other teams within the company. In the lead up to the 2020 election, do you remember concerns about hack and leak operation being on the radar of some teams?

A So I would say, I mean, as we discussed earlier, there was -- there was certain policy work that was done in that space, presumably like I said -- I don't necessarily have firsthand knowledge of that -- but presumably in response to some recent events or -- so I do recall there being policy work in that space.

[12:24 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q And with respect to this recollection, similar to how for the 2022 election you mentioned there was concern with respect to poll workers, was this an issue that was raised, that was anticipated to be an issue in the lead-up to the 2020 election?

Mr. Bopp. Let me make sure I understand the question. You're asking whether there was a concern about poll workers that [redacted] was aware of leading up to the 2020 elections?

[redacted] No. No. Sorry. Let me clarify.

BY [redacted]

Q And if my summary of your previous testimony is incorrect, please correct me. But you gave poll workers as an example for 2022 as something that the company anticipated could be an issue, right?

I guess as just a point of clarification for your recollection, this is referring now to the lead-up of the 2020 election with respect to, like, a hack-and-leak operation, when you say it's on the radar of these other teams, is that because they've seen evidence of a hack-and-leak or they're anticipating there is a risk of a hack-and-leak operation?

A I mean, I can't speak on behalf of the other teams. I guess my best sense is that it's probably some bit of both, which is that there was some recent experience where there were instances of that type of activity and potentially the spread of content derived from that type of operation on our platforms that was harmful to our users, as well as an expectation that something like that could occur again in the future.

I don't know whether -- I don't know the likelihood that individual teams ascribed to the possibility of that happening again, but, presumably, if there were policy solutions being explored, it's because there was an anticipation that something like that could happen again.

Q Yeah. And to the best of your understanding and recollection, where did this expectation come from?

A I don't think I know where those teams derived that expectation from at that time.

Q You mentioned there was some recent experience in this issue. Are there any examples that you recall in particular?

A Sure. So, I mean, as we mentioned before, there was the experience of the hack-and-leak operation with respect to the Democratic National Committee in 2016, I guess it was. I can recall also that there was an experience with emails that had been obtained via hack from President Macron of France. Those are the two that come to mind at the moment.

Q Okay.

Do you know if these other teams were receiving briefings from the government on this issue?

A I don't know.

Q Turning back to the initial exhibit just very quickly --

A Okay.

Q -- the first message -- this is about a third of the way down, second sentence. There's a reference from the Senator, saying, "Apologies for missing Project Zero."

Do you know what Project Zero is?

A No, I don't.

Q Do you recall who else from Google attended this meeting?

A The -- sorry. The meeting referred to here, not whatever Project Zero is?

Q Yes. Yes.

A Yeah. So my recollection was, I attended, [redacted] attended. I believe -- I mentioned [redacted] earlier from the Government Affairs and Public Policy team. I believe he attended.

I don't recall anybody else. There may well have been other people from Google there, but I don't recall whether anybody else specifically was there.

Q Yeah. And for [redacted], what's his title with the company?

A I do not know his specific title. He's within the Government Affairs and Public Policy team. He generally interfaces with a number of third-party groups.

Q Okay. Do you know if he has any other responsibilities that are within his scope?

A I don't. He generally focuses on -- or, he also has focused on U.S.-election issues in the past. I don't know whether that's part of his formal scope or not.

Q Okay.

So, again, you mentioned you serve in this coordinating function; you have some visibility into what other teams are seeing, what they have on their radar.

Once the election itself is taking place, once we're in the full swings of the selection season, are you also being looped in on what the teams actually do end up seeing? When they provide briefings to other teams or to other people, is your team looped in on those discussions?

Mr. Bopp. Just so I understand what you're saying, when you say "what the other teams actually do end up seeing," you mean in terms of --

[redacted] With respect to content.

Mr. Bopp. -- election integrity problems or --

[redacted] Sure. With respect to election-related content.

BY [redacted]

Q So we identified a few categories that there was an anticipation of what might occur. Does your team have visibility into what these teams see with respect to what content actually is discussed?

A So my team is -- not across the board, but in a few cases, in a number of cases, we will be copied on individual escalations for awareness. So we have broad visibility on what is happening. It's never our role to, like, act on any of those escalations, but we do have visibility into them in some cases.

Q Do you recall having visibility with respect to these content-related issues as they're arising in the lead-up to the 2020 election?

A Yes, in the lead-up to the 2020 election, we had general visibility into some subset of election-related, what we call, escalations internally or individual content issues that might be looked at by policy or enforcement teams.

Q And when you're having this visibility, when you're being looped in, are these summaries of trends and patterns? Are they with respect to a specific story? Or, we'll say, you know -- I don't want to say factual piece of information -- a wrong piece of information? How granular does it get?

A So it can vary. Sometimes it will be, you know, broad topic area things or trend-related things like, you know, a news article about this particular trend or, you know, a piece of intel that the intel team is providing about something. And, in some cases, it will be a more specific escalation that is about, you know, someone has reported or flagged a particular thing that the reporter believes may in some way violate our policies and so is being triaged for review to the appropriate -- either policy or enforcement team.

Q Are you familiar with the October 2020 New York Post story on Hunter Biden's laptop?

A I am. I don't recall the specifics, but I am broadly familiar with it.

Q Do you recall if that story or any issues related to it were elevated to one of these discussions that your team is having visibility into?

A So I do recall there being a few escalations with respect to both the story as well as the underlying content in the story that we had visibility into.

Q And do you know what steps YouTube took -- we'll start with YouTube -- with respect to this story or any of the underlying content?

A I don't. I don't recall what YouTube did at the time.

Q Do you recall if YouTube took an action of any kind?

A No, I don't.

I -- let me be specific. I recall one instance of an ad on YouTube that discussed the story. For organization reasons that I'm happy to explain, but the monetization part of YouTube exists within the Google trust and safety team as distinct from organic YouTube content. And because it was an ad, like, it was monetization. And, generally speaking, myself and my team had more visibility on issues that were traveling through the Google trust and safety team as opposed to the YouTube trust and safety team, which is why I recall that instance.

Q And what about with respect to Google Search?

A I don't recall specific escalations with respect to Google Search. In that story, there may well have been them, but I don't recall.

Q Yeah. Do you know whether any sort of action was taken at any point?

A Specific to Search?

Q Yeah.

A I don't.

Q What about with respect to any other Google product?

A So, also in the category of "it was a long time ago," I have a general recollection of there being some escalations on Geo, I think with regards to the, like, actual location of the, like, laptop repair shop. Like, I think that they were getting, like, spammy reviews or something like that.

I also have a general recollection -- though, again, I couldn't tell you the specifics, or I don't recall the specifics -- of escalations on Google Drive with respect to sharing some of the underlying content -- I don't think the story itself, but the underlying content. So I recall some escalations on Drive as well.

[redacted] We've reached the hour mark, so I think we'll go off the record, please.

[Recess.]

[1:35 p.m.]

[redacted] Okay. We are back on the record.

BY [redacted]

Q And, [redacted], just a couple questions.

You were talking before the break about elevations of the Hunter Biden story that you recall being aware of.

A Yes, escalations.

Q Escalations. Sorry. Escalations.

A That's the term we use internally.

Q You were not involved in those escalations.

A I was aware of them. I wasn't involved in the decision-making around them.

Q You played no role in the decision-making around them.

A Yes, that's correct.

Q And neither did anybody on your team.

A Yes, that's correct.

Q Okay.

You spoke also about the meetings that you went to with the U.S. Government-industry working group, correct?

A Yes.

Q And you did not start participating in those until, you believe, sometime in the middle of 2022?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q And you mentioned that you reviewed several emails that were shown to you by the majority in preparation for today's interview.

A Yes, I reviewed a set of emails that I believe were produced to the committee.

Q And in those emails there were calendar invites for several U.S. industry working group meetings that ended up being canceled. Do you recall seeing those?

A Yes, I do.

Q Okay. Do you recall seeing that the meeting that was scheduled for November 2, 2022, was canceled?

A I don't specifically recall taking note of that in one of the documents, though I do recall that that meeting was canceled.

Q And that was the last meeting before the 2022 election, correct?

A I believe, yes. I don't believe there were any meetings of that group subsequent to November 2nd -- or, I guess, on November 2nd.

Q Okay. And in those few meetings that you did attend of the U.S. industry working group, did any government official ever ask you or anyone else at Google to remove a piece of content from your platforms?

A No, not to the best of my recollection.

Q And did any government official ask you to demote a piece of content or reduce its distribution?

A No, not to the best of my recollection.

Q And, to your knowledge, has any Federal official or agency ordered Google or Alphabet to remove any content from its platform, other than in the context of through legal process?

A Yeah, I'm not familiar with the law enforcement process, but I'm not personally aware of any instances where Google has been ordered to remove content by any Federal entity or --

Q And are you aware of Google being pressured to remove content by any Federal entity?

A No, not to the best of my recollection.

Q And given that you do not engage in removing content, I assume you personally have never felt pressured or coerced into removing content by a government or Federal agency?

A No, I've never felt personally pressured to take any action on any individual content, which, as you noted, would not be my role anyways.

Q And that's it for me. Thank you. Hopefully that's it for me for good --

A Okay.

Q -- depending on what happens in the next hour.

Do you need to go off the record to do musical chairs?

[redacted] We can go off the record briefly.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record, please.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], before we broke for lunch and then in this most recent round of questioning, you referenced escalations with respect to analysis being done with the Hunter Biden laptop story.

Is that in reference to a team? Is there an escalations team? Or is it a process?

A So escalations generally are the nomenclature that we use internally for any issues that need some sort of resolution, where they may be -- whether it be content moderation or otherwise. Like, we will refer to escalating issues up the chain. So it's a quasi term of art within Google.

Q We'll start with in this context, again, since you have an understanding.

When this is being escalated, you know, I guess, what is point A and what is point B?

[redacted] I'm sorry. Could you clarify what you mean by "this"?

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Whatever analysis is being done that requires a resolution. We'll use the Hunter Biden story as an example.

A Sure.

Q What is the starting point? And you said it's being escalated. Escalated to whom?

A Sure.

So it will vary based on the content in question and the particulars of the situation. But, generally speaking, there are a variety of internal tools that Google uses to manage escalations.

And so, usually, though not always, what will happen is that somebody will file what's called a bug. This is, like -- I think the terminology on that dates back to kind of, like, early Google. But somebody will file a bug, either somebody who's reporting an issue directly or will file it on behalf of somebody else that's being reported externally or what have you.

And then, again, usually, there will be some sort of incident management team that will triage the issue. And depending on the type of issue, that triage may go to a policy team, to an enforcement team, to a product engineering team. It would depend on the specifics.

Q Okay. When you say that someone may file a bug, is that a ticket in the same context of, like, an IT help --

A Yes. Yeah, it's similar in concept to an IT ticket.

Q And is this bug communicated via email?

A So I think it depends a little bit on the particular tool. There's not one universal tool within Google, to my understanding, that is used, but there's the common ones. For the one that I'm most familiar with, which is a tool called Buganizer, if you are subscribed to the bug in question, it would also send you an email.

Q Okay. So if you're subscribed to it, you receive email notifications related to the bug, to this ticket. Is that correct?

A Yes, that's my understanding.

Q But this tool, the one -- Buganizer, is that right?

A Yes.

Q Is that, like, a project management software tool? What is that?

A I don't know the best categorization of it. Like, it's a task management tool, I guess I would say.

Q Uh-huh. And is this a tool that Google has purchased, or is it developed internally?

A I don't know. I don't know whether it's internally developed or purchased.

Q Do you know if records are kept?

A I don't. I don't.

Q Are you ever subscribed to one of these?

Mr. Bopp. You mean has he ever subscribed to a bug?

[redacted] Well, let me -- if I could ask a clarifying question too.

Mr. Bopp. Go ahead.

BY [redacted]

Q I used the passive voice. I was trying to reflect what you say. Do Google personnel choose to subscribe to a bug, or does someone assign them? What do you mean by "subscribe"?

A Yeah. So that's a good question, and I appreciate the opportunity to clarify on that point.

So it can be either. Either, you know, the person who is originating the bug will oftentimes add people to it, subscribe people to it, or people can add themselves. Other people can add other people.

It's, like, conceptually not dissimilar from, like, an email chain, basically, where, like, whoever originates it will send it to a couple people; those people sometimes will add other people to the chain. It's generally similar to that.

Q Is there a repository of these tickets? Can someone, of their own initiative, add themselves to it? Or is it like an email, where you can only be added by someone who's already on the chain?

A I'm honestly not sure. I think -- some bugs are access-controlled, and some aren't. For ones that are access-controlled, I think you have to be affirmatively given access to it. For ones that are not, presumably anybody can add themselves.

And I think it actually happens in an automated fashion. Like, if you were to comment on a bug, you would then be added to it by default.

Q Have you ever originated a bug?

A Not that I can recall.

Q How frequently are you added to bugs?

A So I personally am not added particularly frequently. I would say it happens on occasion.

My team -- like, our team alias is oftentimes added to bugs as sort of for awareness. There's a sort of -- for some products, the sort of standard operating procedure is that, when there is a bug that is related to elections -- or, in elections integrity in some form or fashion, regardless of the particular type of issue, the incident management team will -- excuse me. In addition to doing their normal triage, they'll CC some people on the bug, and usually my team alias is one of those things that will be CC'd.

Q And what was the term again you used? The insta-management team?

A The incident management team.

Q Incident management team.

A Yeah.

Q Okay. And that's the team responsible for triaging?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And do you know how the process works? Every time a bug is created, it goes to that team, and then they can add folks?

A So it doesn't go -- the bug doesn't go anywhere -- and this is to the best of my understanding, because I'm by no means an expert in the incident management process, nor in this specific tool, Buganizer, that I'm most familiar with. My understanding, though, is that the bug doesn't by default go to any place. You have to specify who it goes to.

I think, generally speaking, teams are encouraged, or reporters of bugs, whoever they may be, are encouraged to leverage incident management teams that may exist across the organization to help with that initial triage. Because whoever is reporting the bug may not be familiar with all of the right pathways to get something in front of the right people to review a particular escalation.

Q Okay. Do you know how many incident management teams there are?

A I don't. There's multiple. I don't know how many.

Q Okay.

Do you know if a bug was created with respect to the Hunter Biden story?

A So my recollection was that there were probably multiple bugs related to discrete issues. So, you know, I think I referenced earlier that I had a general recollection of, like, Maps-related issues or Drive-related issues.

I don't recall where there were bugs specifically. General standard operating procedure would be to create separate bugs for each of those discrete things that needed to be looked at.

Q Do you recall if there were -- with respect to the Hunter Biden story, if there were concerns that it was possibly the product of Russian disinformation or a hack-and-leak operation?

Mr. Bopp. Concerns by whom? On whose part?

BY [redacted]

Q Going back to our previous hour of questioning, you mentioned there were multiple teams that have issues on their radar. This story arose. Just broadly speaking, concerns raised by anyone within the company.

A My recollection is that there were questions internally as to whether or not the provenance of the content that was underlying the story was clear. And I think, you know, that is relevant particularly for some of our product policies, because, you know, as we talked about before, there are policies with respect to hackable materials or policies with respect to what we call coordinated deceptive practices.

So I do recall a conversation occurring internally, if that's your question.

Q Do you know if there was a bug created specifically for those issues -- hacked material, the -- I forget what the second example you gave was potentially.

A Coordinated deceptive practices.

Q Coordinated, right.

A Not to my recollection. But, usually, I think, in this case, a bug would be created with respect to a particular piece of content -- so, like, an example of a spammy review on Geo or, you know, a particular Drive file, or something like that -- as opposed to a broader, like, policy question that covered multiple different potential topics -- or multiple different potential pieces of content.

Q In a previous round of questioning, you mentioned -- in one of your responses, you said that you weren't one of the decision-makers with respect to the Hunter Biden story but that your team had visibility.

Do you recall who the decision-makers were?

A So it would depend upon the particular piece of content in question. Again, I don't have specific recollection of the individual instances, but let's just say that, you know, we talked about -- I do have a vague recollection of something on Maps, for example. In that case, under normal practice, the decision-makers would be the relevant enforcement teams responsible for Maps, potentially in consult with the policy team.

Q You said in normal cases. Do you recall if the normal protocol was not followed in this case?

Mr. Bopp. You're talking about the Hunter Biden case still?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted]. No. My recollection was that standard protocols were followed in all matters in the 2020 election. I don't recall any deviation there. I mean, of course, you know, for certain situations, whether they be particularly -- whether they're gray cases that are maybe, sort of, there needs to be an examination of whether or not it violates our policy, things can get further escalated up the chain, but that's also all part of the standard practice.

BY [redacted]

Q So, under standard practice, for cases that do require being escalated up the chain, to whom are these cases escalated up the chain to?

A So, typically, you know, they would go up the respective leadership chains of the relevant players. So, you know, if it was an issue that was within the province of trust and safety, for example, it would go up through the leadership chain at trust and safety, potentially the leadership chain within the relevant product. It would depend on the specifics. But, you know, it would travel up the chain for the trust and safety organization, potentially the product organization, any other teams that might have equities, whether that be, you know, legal, for example, or what have you.

Q And do you recall with respect to the Hunter Biden story or any of the underlying content that those, the Hunter Biden story or any underlying content, required further escalation than under, to use your words, the normal process?

Mr. Bopp. Do you understand the question? I'm not sure I do, but if you do, you can feel free to answer it.

[redacted]. Let me see if I can repeat it back to you and see if I understand.

In the case of the Hunter Biden-related content, are there any examples that I can recall where issues were escalated up the chain consistent with normal practice?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. Let me -- I'll add a clarifying point here.

So, as I understood you, under your standard operating procedures, there are many cases that don't require, we'll say, further escalation. They could escalate it to a policy team or enforcement team, but it's routine, maybe.

A Uh-huh.

Q And then still within these standard operating procedures, there's a smaller category that require further escalation.

Do you recall the Hunter Biden story or any of the underlying content falling into that smaller second category that required further escalation, consistent with the company's standard operating procedures?

A Okay. I think I understand your question. I appreciate that clarification.

So I don't have perfect recollection here. There may be others -- there is one case that I do recall where it was sort of further escalated up, which was the one I mentioned earlier, that there was an ad that was running on YouTube. And I recall, like, that being escalated up the chain, consistent with standard operating procedure. I don't know whether there were others.

Q Going back to the bug, and with respect to the Hunter Biden story, you said that if there were likely multiple bugs, that it was likely to be split by product, if I understood you correctly, so the Maps would have their own bug.

Am I accurately summarizing your description?

A Yeah, so -- so, appreciate the opportunity to clarify that.

I think that's right, but also it's possible -- stepping out of the Hunter Biden example for a second, because I don't recall specific bugs there, but you could have multiple bugs even within the same product.

So, to take the Drive example, if there were multiple discrete files that were being reviewed on Drive, normal procedure, I think, would be that there would be a separate bug for each of those.

Q Stepping out of the Hunter Biden example, just with respect to, again, kind of standard procedures, if there was a concern with respect to content on, say, a YouTube video, is YouTube its own separate product, such that it would be different from a bug related to Maps? Or is YouTube further divided?

A Sorry. Let me just make sure I understand you. So the question is whether YouTube -- a review of a YouTube video would be on the same bug as a potential review of a -- what we call a point of interest on Maps?

Q Yes. Yes.

A Typically speaking, those would be in separate bugs.

Q And then, within YouTube, are there multiple, for lack of a better word, silos within YouTube that a bug would be placed in, categorized in? Or is YouTube its own category?

A That I don't know. I don't know YouTube's internal, kind of, incident management process, which was somewhat separate from our process.

Q Okay.

And remind me, does Maps fall underneath the Google Search umbrella?

A It's not -- so what we call Maps internally is Geo -- is not part of the Search organization, but it is part of a broader umbrella that's called Knowledge and Information.

So one of the main product units within Google is called Knowledge and Information, which includes Search but also includes Geo. It includes ads. I think it also includes, like, payments. So they're part of the same macro organization.

Q Okay.

Going back to the line of questioning from the previous hour, before lunch, you mentioned your team has visibility into what other teams are anticipating and then also what they're seeing with respect to content.

Are these discussions occurring in in-person meetings? Is this over email? Is this all in connection to a bug ticket? What context do these communications take place in?

A So it can vary. I guess I would say that it could be all of those things. Like, information is shared internally at Google principally either -- well, if we're talking about 2020, not in person, but over video conference. Sometimes in the course of a bug, they'll -- typically the discussion in a given bug is about an individual escalation. And if that's a content-related escalation, as I said, our team has visibility but is not necessarily engaged in the decision-making. Or over email or chat.

Q Okay. Do you recall within the Hunter Biden context what context those communications occurred? Or how they were --

A Sorry --

Q -- communicated? Sorry.

A Like, any -- your question is, any communications with respect to bugs or issues related to the Hunter Biden story, how those were discussed internally?

Q Yes.

A I don't specifically. My expectation would be that it would be a combination of the things that we just discussed -- in-person meetings, video conferences, email, and chat.

Q When these meetings are taking place, these email communications, again, you mentioned your team has visibility of what's going on and that your team is not originating any of the analysis. But is your team actively participating? Are you sharing what other teams have seen? Or what is your team's role in these communications?

Mr. Bopp. The analysis you're talking about is, what analysis?

[redacted] We'll say content-related analysis.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted]. So, as a general matter, it would not be my team's role to weigh in on, like, specific content parameters or interpretation of policy or something like that. I would say -- you know, we talked earlier about the key portion of my team's role is around coordination. And so, occasionally, there will be information that we have visibility into that might be useful to others that are reviewing an individual escalation.

So, you know, to give an example, or to give a hypothetical example, like, you know, if somebody on the Search team is reviewing a piece of content and we have seen a similar instance of that kind of content on another Google platform, YouTube or what have you, you know, we might make sure those dots are connected so that the folks that are looking at the content on Search have the benefit of understanding other services that it might be appearing on.

But, as I said, the role there is principally one of coordination and making connections across teams.

BY [redacted]

Q When your team is serving in this coordinating role, are you the most likely person to be serving in that role? Do multiple team members?

A I would say multiple team members. Like, generally, folks on the team play different roles, a number of different roles. So, depending on the topic area, it might be a different person on the team, depending on what the issue is. So it could be other.

Q But, to your recollection, you were one of your team's individuals to be on these calls, meetings -- I know you don't have a specific recollection, but with respect to the Hunter Biden story, you were one of the team members to attend?

A I guess maybe I'm not totally understanding. You're asking if I attended a particular meeting? Or --

Q So you've shared some recollections that your team had visibility into, among other things, the Hunter Biden story and some underlying issues, that there were discussions within the company that took place.

A Uh-huh.

Q Let me reframe it this way. Is it your recollection that you learned this information by attending these meetings or discussions, or that someone else on your team attended these meetings and discussions and shared them with you?

A I see. I appreciate that clarification.

Mr. Bopp. Right. Or if there's another alternative that --

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Bopp. -- happens to be true, right?

[redacted]. Yeah.

To the best of my recollection, we learned and I learned about any and all issues related to the Hunter Biden situation from various bugs that had been filed by teams, is what I expect. I don't recall being, either myself or my team, being in specific meetings where teams were raising new issues with respect to the issue at hand.

BY [redacted]

Q With the exception of the ad that was escalated, do you recall any other bugs being escalated in a similar manner?

A Specifically with respect to the Hunter Biden story?

Q Yes.

A Not that I can recall. Not that I can recall.

Q Do you know whether YouTube took any action with respect to the Hunter Biden story or any information related to it?

A I don't recall -- I don't recall specific -- I don't recall what YouTube did on the organic side with respect to content about either the story or the underlying content in the story.

I do recall -- you know, I mentioned there's the, sort of, distinction of monetized content on YouTube. I do recall that the ad in question was allowed to run.

Q And the same question with respect to Google Search.

A I don't recall any specific escalations with respect to Search. There may have been some, but not that I can recall.

Q Okay. And do you know whether Google Search in any way moderated the Hunter Biden laptop story or related content?

A I don't recall.

Q Sitting here today, do you know whether Google Search took any steps to moderate the Hunter Biden story or related content?

A No, not that I -- I don't recall either way.

Q Okay.

Sorry. Just to clarify, it's your testimony that you don't know whether any action was taken, not that you know that no action was taken?

A Yeah --

Mr. Bopp. I believe he said he didn't recall whether any action --

[redacted]. Yeah. Let me -- let me -- let me -- yeah.

I don't recall whether Google Search did or did not take any action on any content related to the Hunter Biden story. I don't recall either way.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And sitting here today, you don't know the answer of whether they did or did not?

A No, sitting here today, I do not recall whether Google Search did or did not take any particular action with respect to the Hunter Biden story.

Q Sorry. The point there to clarify was not, when you're using the word

"recall," to try to recall what occurred in 2020. Just, at any point in time, have you since learned what steps were taken, if any?

A No, I don't -- I don't -- I don't know --

Q Okay.

A -- sitting here today, what occurred -- what Search did or did not do in 2020.

Q Okay.

I can reintroduce exhibit 1 if needed, but if not -- let me ask the question first, and if you think the context would be helpful, we'll reintroduce the exhibit.

You had mentioned at the very end of the interview that Google had worked with third parties related to misinformation, content-related concerns.

You know, first question: Based off everything you've told us today, I assume that you were testifying on behalf of the company -- not "testifying," that's the wrong word -- you were delivering that answer in the interview on behalf of the company, not with respect to your team?

A Yes, that's correct. My understanding from that interview was I was speaking -- when I was saying "we," I was speaking on behalf of Google as a company, as opposed to myself and my team.

Q Yeah. Sure.

Just to make sure you have a chance to take a look, this is on the last page, page 6, the third line up from the bottom. And it says, "We've developed new partnerships with third parties to protect campaigns."

Do you know which third parties you had in mind?

Mr. Bopp. Can you hold on for 1 second? It's the third line up from the bottom?

[redacted] From the bottom.

Mr. Bopp. "Partnerships with third parties to protect campaigns," that part?

BY [redacted]

Q Yes.

A So I'm not positive what I would've been referring to at the time. You know, an example of this is, we partner closely with an organization called Defending Digital Campaigns. I think that may have originated around that time, though I'm not sure. So it's possible that's what I'm referring to there.

Q Okay.

Do you know if Google has -- let me strike that.

Are you familiar with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A Yes, I am generally familiar with them.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of what they do?

A So I've never interacted with them directly. My understanding of what they do is, they identify content across various technology platforms -- I think just technology platforms, though I'm not actually sure -- that they think might violate, based on their understanding, those platforms' product policies, and will share them for visibility and investigation.

Q And is it your understanding that one of those companies, tech companies, is Alphabet?

A Yes, my understanding is that they look at Alphabet products.

Q Do you know who from Alphabet is in contact with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A Do you mean who is in contact with them currently?

Q Or at any point.

A So my understanding -- but, again, I've not been in any of these conversations directly -- is that, in 2022, in this most recent cycle, the person who worked with them directly -- or a person that worked with them directly -- there may have been multiple -- the one that I'm aware of is [redacted] from the Government Affairs and Public Policy team, who we spoke about earlier.

Q For the 2022 cycle, is there anyone else that comes to mind?

A For 2022? No, not that I can recall. There may have been somebody from the YouTube side, but I don't -- not that I can recall.

Q And do you recall who from the company may have been in touch with the Election Integrity Partnership with respect to the 2020 election cycle?

A So my recollection -- but, again, I wasn't directly in these conversations with the Election Integrity Partnership -- was the person from Google that was in touch with them was somebody else from the Government Affairs and Public Policy team, [redacted] and a woman from YouTube whose first name is [redacted] and whose last name is escaping me.

Q Okay.

Have you ever been in contact with anyone from the Stanford Internet Observatory?

A No. To my recollection, I've not been in contact with anybody there directly.

Q Do you know if anyone from Google has been in contact with the Stanford Internet Observatory outside of the context of the Election Integrity Partnership?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay.

Have you ever worked with a company called Graphica?

A I know some of our intel teams work with Graphica and are consumers of their intel analysis. I don't recall, it is possible that I have, like, participated in a briefing with them -- them briefing us, not us briefing them -- but I don't recall specifically.

Q In your time at Google, have you ever participated in a tabletop exercise?

A Yes. So various teams across Google, my team included, will somewhat frequently conduct tabletop exercises. So I've participated in those, yes.

Q Okay. Setting aside tabletop exercises that include only Google personnel, have you ever participated in any tabletop exercises that included individuals from the Federal Government?

A No, not to my recollection.

[2:18 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And what about with respect to any third parties outside of Google?

A No, not to my recollection. I think that I've perhaps been invited to some. I can't recall exactly where, but I do recall that I feel like I've been invited to some third-party tabletop exercises. I don't recall ever participating in one.

Q Is there an organization you think may have invited you to a tabletop exercise?

A I think -- I think I was invited to one by the Bipartisan Policy Center at one point. If my memory of that is correct, I don't recall attending it. There may be -- there may be others that I'm not recalling.

Q In your time at Google, have you ever worked with the Global Disinformation Index?

A No. I don't believe I've ever worked with the Global Disinformation Index directly.

Q Have you ever -- during your time at Google, have you ever worked with an organization called the Alliance for Securing Democracy?

A No, not that I can recall. I think I'm on a distribution list of theirs. Like, I get emails from them. I don't believe I've ever interacted with them directly.

Q All right. You mentioned having just a small familiarity with the Election Integrity Partnership. Are you familiar with the Virality Project?

[redacted] I'm sorry? What? I didn't hear that.

[redacted] I'll repeat the question.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you have familiarity with the Virality Project?

A No. I don't know what the Virality Project is.

Q Okay. In your time at Google, have you had any or have you worked with the University of Washington?

A No. To my recollection, I've never worked with University of Washington at Google.

Q Okay. If we could just circle back just very briefly on the Hunter Biden Bugs that were created and escalated. You mentioned that there was an ad-related one in particular.

Do you recall who the final decisionmaker was in that case?

A I don't -- so I don't recall specifically there being one individual that made the call. My recollection is that there was -- in -- in 2020, there was stood up something called the Political Ads Review Committee, which included leaders from various parts of the organization that had equities in political ads, and -- excuse me -- my recollection was that that ad in question was escalated to that committee, and the committee, I assume, collectively made the decision that the ad did not violate our product policies and, therefore, would -- was permitted to run.

Q Again, with the understanding that your team is not making these content-related decisions, do you have a sense of the average timeline from when a Bug is created to when the issue is resolved?

A So my best understanding is it varies widely depending upon the nature of the issue. I do know that Incident Management Teams typically have SLAs for particular turnaround times, but usually those are about the time from receipt of issue to triage.

I think some teams probably have time -- what we call TTR, or time-to-resolution, benchmarks as well, but I -- I don't know what those are.

Q Whether this occurred in the context of discussions or information that is visible on the Bug that you or your team can see, in the context of the Hunter Biden story or any underlying content, do you recall anyone bringing up information that had been shared from the government with respect to that -- this issue?

Mr. Bopp. I didn't hear you. Bringing up information --

[redacted] From the government --

Mr. Bopp. That --

[redacted] Related to this issue.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted] Provided information related to this issue.

[redacted]. I can't recall any instances where it was discussed about specific information provided from the government. I -- I do have a recollection that -- you know, we were talking before about -- you asked a question about whether there were discussions about the origin of the content. And I do recall, like, there being -- it being noted that, at least at the beginning, that the FBI had not made any sort of determination to that -- to that -- to that effect. But that's the only thing that I can recall being mentioned. And I don't think that was based on information that was provided directly.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall, when these Bugs are first created, to the best of your recollection, were they created the day the story came out?

A I don't recall. Standard process would be that we would try to -- that they would be created shortly -- as soon as issues were spotted. So I suspect that they were created around that time, but I -- I don't recall specifically.

Q Are you familiar with a letter that was issued about 5 days later by 51 former intelligence officials that raised the concern that the story may be the product of Russian disinformation?

A I'm familiar with it now because I'm broadly familiar with some of the work that the committee has done on that topic. I'm -- I was not -- I don't recall being familiar with it at the time.

Q And you don't recall that letter being raised in the context of the Bug and discussions surrounding the Hunter Biden story?

A No, not to my recollection.

Q With respect to the -- actually, let me take a step back.

Again, with the understanding that your team doesn't make content-based decisions, when there are Bugs that are related to issues of misinformation or other content-related concerns, does Google ever consult with other tech platforms, like Facebook or Twitter?

A So my understanding, but I'm not -- I'm not engaged in these conversations myself. My understanding is that we will consult with other tech platforms for the purposes of sharing broad trends or sometimes for the purposes of lead generation but that we do not consult on particular content moderation decisions. That's my -- that's my understanding.

Q Do you recall, with respect to the Hunter Biden story and the underlying content, whether anyone from Google consulted with anyone at other social media platforms?

A No. I don't -- I don't recall any such consultations.

Q Do you recall if anyone from Google was reporting what was publicly reported, other social media platforms -- what steps other social media platforms were taking with respect to the Hunter Biden story?

A Not specifically. That sounds like something that may have occurred just in the process of being aware of the news, but I don't -- I don't recall specifically a discussion on that point.

Q And do you have a sense for how long discussions continued related to the Hunter Biden story or any of the underlying content?

A No. I don't -- I don't -- I don't know how long those -- those conversations were ongoing.

Q Okay. Do you recall if it was more than one day?

[redacted] I think he said he doesn't know.

[redacted] You can answer the question.

[redacted]. I don't recall specifically. It was likely more than one day, but I just don't -- I don't recall specifically.

[redacted] Do you have any other questions?

We'll break there. If we can go off the record, please.

[Whereupon, at 2:29 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	[redacted]
Date of Interview	May 23, 2023
Date of Review	July 19, 2023
Name of Reviewer	Read Mills - King + Spalding LLP
Signature of Reviewer	[signature]

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
1	8	Firm name for Dan Donovan should be King + Spalding, not Kirkland + Ellis
12	22	"And does Google use ~~a~~ misinformation ...." Remove "a"
13	14	"... for most products, we do also include..." Add "we"
14	5	"... subdivided by topic area, although that varies..." Add "al" to "though"
15	4-5	"... terms are structured, there are ~~is~~ enforcement teams..." Replace "is" with "are."
17	5	"... violative of our policies, public reporting, somebody externally, or press reporting..." → Add "or"
25	23	"... are not doing analyses of specific types of content..." → Pluralize "type."
26	7	"He brings up the first thing; he says, on transparency: ..." Add "on" and change punctuation to ":"
26	20	"Sure. So I appreciate the opportunity to clarify this." Add "I"
30	25	"... very focused on, protecting users -- from user harm." Pluralize "user" and add "from."

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
34	19	"And that has never been part of your job?" Add "been".
37	4	"... has the appropriate ~~settlings~~ settings enabled...." settlings → settings
37	7	"... page. As we were discussing earlier, ..." Replace comma with period, capitalize "as."
38	23	"And is it fair to say that ...." Add "is it".
40	20-21	"When you started with Google in February 2020..." Add "in".
41	23	"I referenced the DNC here." Add "the"
42	3	"... discussed earlier, there ~~was~~ were teams..." was → were
43	21	"... typically the GAPP team is ~~until~~ usually the lead on." until → usually
46	9	"Do you know whose email address this belongs to?" Make "who" possessive and add "this".
51	3	"... this is in the "to" line..." Place "to" in quotes.
53	2	"... both CISA as well as potentially ~~elsewhere~~ others ~~with the~~ within DHS..." elsewhere → others | with the → within
53	4	"... looks like it occurred in January..." Add "it".
55	2	"... your team is playing a coordinating function..." Add "a".
55	12	"... that we were specifically attuned to ...." Add "d" to "attune."

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
57	17	"... and leak operations being on the radar" Make "operations" plural.
60	16	"... the full swings of the selection season..." swings → swing \ selection → election
74	2	"... category that requires further escalation." Pluralize "require".
77	17	"So it could be others." Pluralize "other".

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	Director of Global Elections Integrity, Google
Date of Interview	May 23, 2023
Date of Review	December 16, 2024
Name of Reviewer	Daniel Donovan
Signature of Reviewer
Page	Line	Suggested Correction
3	11	"DANIEL T. DONOVAN" should be "DANIEL F. DONOVAN"
3	12	"Kirkland & Ellis LLP" should be "King & Spalding LLP"
3	13	"1301 Pennsylvania Avenue NW" should be "1700 Pennsylvania Avenue NW #900"
3	14	"20004" should be "20006"
7	11	"fume" should be "name"
8	19	"Evans side" should be "the Management side"
13	14	"you; for most" should be "you; most"

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

15	5	"is" should be "are"
18	6-7	"there's products and there's functions." should be "there are products and there are functions."

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
25	23	"type" should be "types"
27	15	"though still" should be "though users still"
28	12	"time" should be "top"
35	17	"Google's" should be "Alphabet's"
36	13	"them accurate" should be "them with accurate"
37	4	"settlings" should be "settings"
37	7	"earlier the" should be "earlier. The"
40	14	"Intel Teams" should be "intel teams"

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

41	17	"broader policy that" should be "broader policy. That"
41	22	"that had been" should be "that was"
43	21	"is until the" should be "is the"
44	23	"Public Affairs" should be "Government Affairs"
45	4	"DHS, CISA is on there" should be "DHS CISA is on there"
45	6	"of various" should be "of the various"

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
47	19	"perform functions" should be "perform these functions"
49	21	"will" should be "would"
53	14	"talked about overall" should be "talked overall"
53	16	"campaigns, and" should be "campaigns and"
55	12	"attune" should be "attuned"

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

60	17	“selection” should be “election”
74	21	“Drive, normal” should be “Drive, the normal”
75	14	“is not” should be “it is not”
77	18	“other.” should be “others.”
82	24	“Graphica” should be “Graphika”
82	25	“Graphica” should be “Graphika”
85	5	“Washington at” should be “Washington while at”
85	12	“there was stood up something” should be “there was something stood up”

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: [redacted]

Tuesday, May 23, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 164, Cannon House Office Building, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ANTITRUST,

[redacted] DIGITAL ASSISTANT

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR OVERSIGHT

[redacted] RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted] LAW INTERN

[redacted] DIGITAL DIRECTOR

[redacted] SENIOR SPECIAL COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted] MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE ADMINISTRATIVE STATE,

REGULATORY REFORM, AND ANTITRUST:

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For [redacted]:

[redacted]

[redacted]

Kirkland & Ellis

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of [redacted]. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state his name for the record?

[redacted]. [redacted].

[redacted] Thanks. On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone else from the committee who's here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Jerry Nadler's staff.

[redacted] Jerry Nadler's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Thanks. I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there are official court reporters taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions. Do you understand?

[redacted]. I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we'll do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you, during any given hour, to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you.

It's important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other, if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose, and it's my understanding that you are appearing with counsel today. Is that correct?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] Could counsel please state their names for the record?

[redacted]. [redacted], Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted]. [redacted], Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we'll take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand any of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

[redacted]. I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. I do.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. I do.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

[redacted]. No.

[redacted] Thanks. Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporters so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

All right. That's the end of my preamble.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] No, thank you.

[redacted] Okay. The clock now reads 10:03. We'll start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q You gave us your name, but can you just restate it, your full name, for the record?

A [redacted].

Q What's your current job title, and where do you work now?

A Data analyst, Qapital.

Q And where's that located?

A It's a Swedish company.

Q Oh, okay. And can you give us your educational background, beginning with college? You don't have to do before college.

A Yeah. I did undergrad at Georgetown, and I'm working for a master's right now with -- with Northwestern.

Q Sorry, I didn't catch that.

A I'm working for a master's right now.

Q What's the master's in?

A Data science.

Q And what's your employment history?

A So a year at Qapital. Prior to that, I spent time working at Meta. Yeah.

Q Can you give us the years you were at Meta and the positions that you held, which specific positions?

A I was at Meta from 20- -- January 2018 to October 2021, so 3 years and 10 months. First 2 years was as an account manager, and the -- the latter year and 10 months was as a department manager.

Q And what divisions -- I don't really know that much about how Meta's set up -- what divisions or departments are those? Are they the same or are they different?

A I -- as an account manager, I was on their global marketing solutions team, and my -- both jobs were technically under that same -- same umbrella.

Q Okay. And what locations did you work in -- or location?

A Yeah. I started out working in Austin, Texas.

Q Oh, okay.

A And then in Washington, D.C.

Q Okay. And did you deal with misinformation, disinformation, malinformation while you were at Meta?

A That was not the core part of any of the jobs that I held at Meta.

Q But it was -- it was part of it or --

A It wasn't part of my job.

Q Okay. Did you interact with divisions or departments that did deal with those things -- misinformation and disinformation?

A There were third parties that dealt with that kind of stuff, folks I worked with that dealt did that.

Q Which third parties?

A Just folks concerned that dealt with that. But my job, for the most part, I was a customer service agent.

Q Okay. And so Meta encompasses a few different, I don't know what exactly you call them, subcomponents, like Facebook and WhatsApp, right, and Instagram? Do they -- do you do each -- sorry. Do they each operate independently or do they work with each other? Like, was your work solely for Facebook or --

A Yeah. I mean, the way internally, my job internally, I was a customer service guy, so I would answer questions or field requests that had to do with anything that folks that I was assigned to had questions on. So sometimes it would be on Instagram, sometimes it would be on Facebook.

Q I see. And can you explain what you did on a day-to-day basis as an account manager at Meta?

A I'm sorry. Could you repeat that?

Q What did you do on a day-to-day basis, like, what was your sort of typical tasks?

A As an account manager, my day-to-day was essentially I had a -- call it kind of a book of -- book of business of folks that we work with. And for the most part, I would answer emails, field them to the right parties, send them along, and redirect them to the right places if they needed additional assistance. But I was essentially just kind of the, you know, the best person, so I always just kind of taking those questions and helping folks get to where they needed to get.

Q You mean -- can you clarify a little bit, like, taking requests for -- about what sort of thing?

A Yeah. So somebody might reach out and say, Hey, my ads aren't spending, or, the platform seems to be broken for whatever reason, and then there are more technical folks that could handle that. I just catalog that in that order. So essentially it's like that's not the best personnel to substantiate shepherding a lot of those kinds of requests.

Q I see. Okay. And how about as a Federal partner manager, how is that different?

A Very similar job.

Q Okay. Was that a promotion or was it --

A Very lateral move. It was not a promotion.

[redacted] I'm sorry, what was that?

[redacted]. It wasn't -- it wasn't a promotion. It was not a promotion.

BY [redacted]

Q So, I mean, presumably it was a little bit different, right, or you wouldn't have had a different title?

A I don't know exactly how they determined the title of jobs. From -- my day to day was pretty much the same, some of the type of tasks that I would handle. You know, it was very much, I had this set of clients, and I had a different set of clients, and I was just a front-facing customer service person handling requests.

Q What was the Federal, what did that pertain to? Did that mean you were dealing more with the Federal Government?

A Yeah. There are different verticals as, you know, some folks work with hotels, some folks work with e-commerce, some folks work with Federal.

Q So did that mean that you dealt more with the government in the second position?

A In the second position I was in [inaudible].

Q Yeah, I see. Okay. And who did you report to in that position?

A My direct manager was [redacted].

Q Okay. And do you know what her title was -- or is?

A Actually don't remember.

Q And did anyone report to you?

A No. No.

Q And how many people were on your team, approximately?

A I'm sorry, I don't remember the exact number, and I don't want to guess.

Q Okay. Can you give us some of their names?

A Let's see, [redacted], I think was -- she was someone that I worked with at the time. Who else? [redacted] would've been another one that I worked with at the time.

Q Did your team stay around the same size while you were there or did it expand or get smaller or anything?

[redacted]. I'm sorry, could you just clarify for us what you mean when you say team?

[redacted] Well, the people that he was sort of working with, you know, regularly to do their projects or whatever they were doing.

[redacted]. Go ahead.

[redacted]. Yeah, I don't remember my team expanding in a noticeable way.

[redacted] Are you still in contact with anyone there professionally or personally or --

[redacted]. No.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], you've talked about sets of clients. Can you describe those clients for us?

A Is there anything you're -- it's a little broad. Can you narrow it down for me?

Q Yeah. When you talked about that you did day-to-day tasks and you had a set of clients, what were those clients? Were those customers that were reaching out to you? What did that look like?

A Yes. I was a customer service guy. So they're effectively customers, people that used Facebook for whatever purpose that they deem necessary, and if things didn't work as they wanted it to and they needed somebody to help field requests, I would be the person they would go to to start that process.

Q And the other Federal partner managers, did they also have sets of clients that they were responsible for that differed from yours?

A They also -- yeah, we each had our own set of clients.

Q And can you describe some of the other sets of clients? Did someone handle like businesses? Did others handle, like, government officials? How did that look?

A So, yeah, I can speak more clearly about my own and the folks that I worked with. But, yeah, I just had the Federal set of clients, so a lot of kind of the folks that tend to be more around the Federal Government. But, again, there were different verticals, and so you had folks in different areas doing different things. So the examples I mentioned earlier, you had folks doing e-commerce, you had folks doing hotels, travel. I was doing some Federal clients, so there's -- you know, that's kind of the way it was categorized, from what I remember.

[redacted] You mean it was categorized by subject matter?

[redacted]. I don't know the exact methodology of how they devised these. I can tell you what mine was and some of the different ones that I do remember seeing.

[redacted] In your resume, you described part of your role as a partner manager as boosting national awareness of credible --

[redacted]. I'm sorry, are you referring to a document?

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted]. Can we see the document?

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] And so the record is clear, my colleague has marked [redacted]'s resume as exhibit No. 1.

[redacted]. This was not produced by us, so wondering, can you tell me what the source of this is?

[redacted] Yeah. I believe it's available online.

[redacted]. You got this on the internet?

[redacted] From his website.

[redacted]. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Is this your resume?

A Yeah.

Q So under the Federal --

A Sorry, quick -- this is not the current resume.

Q Oh, okay. But it was at one point?

A At some point, yeah.

Q Under your partner manager -- Federal partner manager subheading, when you describe yourself -- part of your role as "boosting national awareness of credible health information and vaccination rates," how do you determine -- how did you determine what's credible health information?

A Yeah. That -- that determining the information wasn't my responsibility. I was -- in this case, the part that I was focused on was advertising, so helping folks put out whatever message they already had.

Q So who made that deter -- so someone else made the determination and you promoted that or you --

A I didn't personally promote anything. My role here was to just help folks that had something they wanted to use Facebook to amplify and make sure that the platform was working for them.

Q So do you mean that somebody at Meta made the determination about who was credible -- about what was credible or that it's credible according to the person who wanted to run the ad?

A No, that's not what I mean. Any person can start a Facebook ads manager account and put out messaging and -- but they need to bind it (ph). I happen to be one of the folks that if they have issues with that, they would reach out to instead of -- to make sure Facebook worked for them.

Q I see. And did you work with entities other than U.S. agencies in this position or just U.S. agencies as Federal partner manager?

A Mostly U.S. agencies. Mostly U.S. agencies. At some point, I did work with nonprofits as well.

Q Can you tell us the agencies and the nonprofits as well, which ones specifically?

A Some of the ones that I remember on the nonprofit side were Mayo Clinic, the Alzheimer's Association, the Ad Council.

Q And which agencies did you work with?

A Some of the ones I remember, they were CDC, HHS, IRS, some of those.

BY [redacted]

Q I had a quick question. It's about three lines down from Meta Platforms, Inc., and then partner manager/Federal. This reads: Strategic digital advertising consultant for U.S. Federal agencies -- CDC, DHS, State Department -- during the COVID-19 pandemic, guiding each partner and 5-plus cross-functional teams.

Would you be willing to go into a bit more detail about what those cross-functional teams were, what your interface with them looked like?

A Yeah. So as the kind of the -- you know, the customer-facing area of it, there's like just a cross-functional network of folks that are all much more experienced than I am and much more well versed in this topic than I am. So as I would get requests from some of these partners, I would field that and tap the network of folks to make sure that they could answer anything that was much more substantive.

Q Could you give an example of an instance where you might've needed to reach out to one of those cross-functional teams?

A We sometimes interfaced with a marketing science expert, for example. So if a client that I was talking to had questions around marketing science, understanding how an ads are performing, I would capture that, understand what exactly they're asking, and then bring in the right folks that are relevant there.

Q Got it. So marketing science. What are some of the other teams?

A Marketing science would've been one of them. There were -- there were folks on the policy side as well.

Q What's an example of an instance where you would need to reach out to someone on the policy side?

A I'm having a hard time coming up with an exact specific example here. It's been -- it's been almost 2 years and I'm doing something completely different. But

I -- anything that's really beyond the, you know, standard and basic "how does the platform work advertising," beyond anything that just has -- you know, ask any question that might include even the word "policy" in it, sometimes I would just reach out to somebody that kind of understood that a lot better than I did.

Q Thanks. And then so marketing science policy. What other teams do you recall?

A Those are the main two that I remember at this point, but there is a lot of -- this was a long time ago. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q If we can just go back to your resume for a second. So you mentioned a couple of agencies, specifically, CDC, DHS, and State Department. Who did you work with at CDC, if you recall?

A I don't remember the names of folks that I worked with there.

Q Okay. Do you remember sort of how you worked with CDC?

A Yeah. So it's similar to kind of what I've been saying, is if they had a question about the platform, if there was something that we could help them with, I would take the -- you know, they would email me, I would take the request and try to categorize what type of help we might need there, and then find the right people internally to make sure we address that and just -- yeah, I was just there essentially to face -- customer-facing side of it.

Q Can you be a little bit more specific? Do you mean like if they were requesting to run ads, or was there more to it?

A Yeah. It's the -- because I was on the customer-facing side, the request could be, it really -- reaching out to a company like Facebook is so big and there's so many different issues that folks don't often know really, you know, how to navigate sometimes.

So they -- I just -- a lot of those requests would first come through me, and from there -- it's hard to say every single thing at this point, it's been so long, but -- so any question that folks would have, they would just -- just try it through me first and then see if I could point them in the right direction.

Q And how about the Department of State, do you know anyone you worked with specifically there?

A I don't remember any names there. Sorry.

Q At DHS?

A I wouldn't remember any names at this point.

Q And Census?

A I don't remember any names, no.

[redacted] But for each of those, the kind of interface you described would be very similar?

[redacted]. Sorry. Could you repeat that?

[redacted] Sure. So for each of those agencies, the interface would be similar to what you just described?

[redacted]. Yeah, I would say so. I would say so.

[redacted] Did you consider it part of your job to grow sales of advertising space for the government? Like, were you trying to get them to buy more?

[redacted]. I wouldn't -- no, I wouldn't consider that -- I did not -- I wouldn't say that was part of my job, from what I remember.

[redacted] Okay. And do you have any idea how much each agency spent on advertising? You know, what was sort of a typical amount when you were dealing with a request?

[redacted]. I don't remember the exact numbers, but some of them spent in the millions for sure, but I don't remember -- I don't remember the exact numbers.

BY [redacted]

Q Your resume, kind of similar to where you were looking before, right in the middle. At the last line of that first bullet under partner manager/Federal, mentions securing, planning, and measuring over $50 million in media to support the company and national priority.

Could you unpack what that part of the resume means a little bit?

A Yeah. So in this case, this just means that the folks I was working with were spending that much money, so rich folks. And I essentially helped to make sure that, as they were spending, that they didn't run into any issues and that it worked effectively.

Q Okay. And for folks you were working with meaning -- that means the client, agencies that you were --

A Yeah.

Q -- the mix of --

A These different folks.

Q Thank you.

[redacted]. Just to be clear here, when [redacted]'s talking about the 50 million, that may include ad credits in addition, so dollar value isn't actual cash from the government to Meta. So I just wanted to make sure that, you know --

[redacted] [redacted], do you want to make --

[redacted]. -- if you want to make that distinction.

[redacted]. That -- that includes ad credits.

[redacted] Okay. Thanks.

[redacted] That includes what?

[redacted]. Ad credits.

BY [redacted]

Q What are ad credits exactly?

A Another -- another word you could use is maybe coupon. It's -- yeah, it's -- it's just -- it's money to spend on ads.

Q I see. Do you mean that Meta sometimes gave that to the agencies or they bought it and then they got credits to use it?

A I was really only involved in helping them spend it. I'm not sure how -- I can't speak too much around how some of these were decided or acquired. I just helped -- once they were in place, I helped them make sure that it was working for them.

Q Did Meta run any ads that organizations paid -- you know, the government or anyone else paid for, or did they make determinations about what they wanted to run based on content?

A I don't remember that.

Q Okay. Do you have any idea who might know?

A I'm sorry, I don't remember.

Q Did Facebook/Meta give agencies or other government entities free ad space?

A This might fall into the ad credits piece here. This -- yeah, that's -- yeah, this might fall into the ad credits piece here, but I don't really -- I don't want to guess here, so I'm just -- I don't know.

Q Okay. Can we -- this is --

[redacted] Exhibit 2.

[redacted] -- exhibit 2, yeah.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 2.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. You guys want the resume back at this point or are you going to keep coming back to it?

[redacted] You can hang on to it.

[redacted]. Hang on to it?

[redacted] You can hang on to exhibit 1. Thanks.

BY [redacted]

Q If you can just take a look at the emails on the first page there.

Well, maybe the whole thing, actually.

Do you recognize that? Do you recognize the --

A Yeah. Yeah, this looks familiar.

Q Can you just briefly explain what it is?

A This just looks like an exchange I had with HHS.

Q So it looks as though HHS was getting ad space in the form of coupons or something. Does that -- was that given for free by Meta, to your knowledge?

A I don't know how any of the billing situation would've worked here. From what I can see here and recall, my involvement was just to try to administer these and make sure that things were working effectively for them.

Q So did you then consult someone? Like when HHS was asking for this, would you, you know, ask someone and they would give you an answer and you would respond that --

A Yes, yeah, I would've likely consulted somebody here.

Q Do you know who that would have been?

A It would've probably been my direct manager.

Q Which is?

A My direct manager?

Q Who was that?

A That was [redacted].

Q Okay. Thank you.

On the first email there on the top page, you referred to the close partnership around COVID messaging. Can you give us a few examples or an example of what exactly you meant by that?

A I mean, as far as my role was concerned, it just meant that -- what they were doing was COVID messaging, and as far as I was concerned here, it was just to make sure that they didn't have any issues as they -- they were doing that.

BY [redacted]

Q Can I just make sure I'm understanding how the coupon just worked or your understanding of the coupon system? So the second email from the top is a request from [redacted]: Hi, [redacted], I wanted to follow up and see if we could possibly get 200,000 for this month's coupon. We feel the mental health content will garner huge engagement given the status of things as it relates to COVID-19.

Is requesting -- can you explain to me how requesting $200,000 for that month's coupon fits in terms of the types of services you would provide to your client?

A Yeah. My role here is very narrow.

Q Yeah.

A So when a question like this comes forward, I'll pass this on to somebody who can actually navigate the details of it. My role here is to, you know, once we can -- you know, as I'm hearing this question is, you know, can you help us navigate this, figure out somebody to -- who can help us with this, and then from here, help us make sure that we are advertising effectively and that the platform is working for us.

Q Got it. So the reference to the coupon, is that a reference to a request for additional funds in the account that were not paid for? Is that how you'd read that as you think about where to route the request?

A I don't really remember here. In this case, I would've passed this on to somebody else internally. And then my role would have been, again, just -- narrowly just to focus on, once they had the account and they have what they need and they're advertising on their own, just to make sure that they're doing that effectively.

[redacted]. Can we take a break, please? Off the record?

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] On the record.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q This is exhibit 3. If you can take a look at this, please.

Do you recognize this?

A Some of it, yeah.

Q Can you tell us what it is?

A It -- it looks like a series of exchanges with the -- the CDC team around, yeah, ad credits and measurement, I think.

Q On the fourth page from the top, stamped 14285, there's a reference in your email to $300,000 in ad credits to CDC. Do you know exactly what that meant? Again, was that free ad credits or -- to the best of your knowledge?

A I don't know. My role here, again, I just -- I sent this -- this email was actually copy and pasted. It wasn't --

Q So you would've consulted with somebody else and they would've --

A Yeah, I didn't write this. This was copy and pasted.

Q Okay. Thank you.

So you mentioned Ad Council a little earlier, or it was mentioned, which is on your resume. Can you tell us a little bit more about your work with Ad Council?

A Ad Council is a, yeah, it's -- they work with nonprofits. They're a nonprofit. So my work there was to -- they have a lot of different causes that they do every year, from fighting, you know, vaping in kids to heart -- to heart health of Black women --

[redacted] Sorry, could you repeat that?

[redacted]. They do campaigns that -- around things like, you know, preventing teenagers from vaping and raising awareness about heart health for Black women or underserved communities. That's the type of stuff that they run, and that's also what I would help with.

BY [redacted]

Q So they're a nonprofit, but they run ads about health-related issues. Is that correct or --

A That's -- one of their causes was around, as I remember, was around raising awareness around heart health in underserved communities and vaping with teenagers.

Q Okay. Do you recall what you worked with them on when you were at Meta?

A Those two were two -- I remember interfacing with them about those two and probably a couple other things, but I don't remember everything.

Q Do you recall working with them on COVID-related issues?

A That was -- yeah, I think I did work with them on that.

Q Do you have any specific recollections of how -- or exactly what kind of stuff you were doing with that?

A I don't remember much of the details there. Again, I would've been the customer service guy for them as well.

Q Okay. So Facebook and CDC held a lot of weekly sync meetings. Is that correct?

A I remember having syncs with them. I don't remember the exact cadence. I'm not sure if this is -- but I remember having just, yeah, meetings with them.

Q Did you attend those meetings?

A I attended, yeah. I attended some of those meetings, yes.

Q Do you recall when they started holding them?

A I don't remember. I'm sorry.

Q Do you recall the purpose of the meetings, like, sort of general purpose?

A It's -- I think it would've -- I don't remember the exact details, but it would've been a check-in, just a, Hey, how are things working, are there any issues, that kind of -- that's what I would remember around like the general --

Q Issues with what?

A Just things that might come up. Are you able -- do you have any issues with the platform, something broken, or anything like that.

Q Okay. Were those meetings that started during the pandemic or did they precede the pandemic?

A I don't remember the exact timeline. Yeah, my -- my role as a partner manager for Federal would've been January 2020 forward, depending, like, I think, kicked off in March at that time. So I wouldn't -- I definitely wouldn't be able to say anything prior to January. But, yeah, I don't remember the exact timeline.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 4.

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. This is exhibit 4. Can you -- do you recognize this, first of all?

A I -- I -- I don't remember this specific document, but I recognize that it's a meeting of sorts.

Q Can you tell us what the subject is in the -- described in the subject line?

[redacted]. You're asking him to read it to you?

[redacted] Yeah. Or I can read it.

[redacted]. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Facebook weekly sync with CDC, CDC to invite other agencies as needed. Do you recall if you were on this meeting?

A I don't remember this meeting. It says here I'm actually optional, so I'm not sure if I would've joined or not.

Q Okay. But you may have?

A Possible, but I don't remember.

Q These topics that were discussed -- CDC needs and misinfo collab status -- do you know what that means based on your --

A I'm sorry. I didn't write this email. I'm not -- I'm not entirely sure what actually would've been in this context here.

Q Do you recall those things being discussed at any of those meetings and what that meant?

A Again, substantively here, I'm not sure if I have much to add outside these documents. From my role, even if at the time I would've attended these meetings, was more so to point to the right folks, and anything on the ad side that might've been broken and needed assistance, I would occasionally jump into that.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], in your role, you've described it as being customer service representative. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And so in that role, would you receive outreach from agencies such as the CDC?

A What do you mean by outreach? Just --

Q Would they ask questions of you?

A Yeah. Yeah, in the same way you would write an email. If you have problems with Verizon, you call somebody there.

Q And can you describe some of those questions that the CDC reached out to you about?

A Very broad. Again, they -- Meta's a big company. It's not practical for any average person who would've come to the platform to reach out to everybody, so they need to start at a starting point. And that was my role there, customer-facing person. So questions, you know, there's a bug, could you help us figure out what's going on here, or, we -- yeah, we're not sure how to use the specific ad product, is there something you can point us to here, a resource.

So a lot of times, actually, I would just -- we have resources online already that are public, so I would just send around links that we already had that were public that they probably didn't know already. Just point them to the right resources so they're -- I designed the resources, and I would just make sure to point them to the right resources from there.

Q And so if there wasn't information that was already publicly available, as the customer service representative that was kind of the first point of contact interface with the CDC, would you then kind of help to point those individuals in the right direction or would you connect them with the right individuals? How did that work?

A Yeah. If there were substantive matters that I wasn't, you know, privy to or aware of, as it was usually the case, I would just point them to somebody else.

Q And would you connect them over email with those individuals or would you reach out independently to the correct individuals and see how they could help the CDC?

A In most cases, it would've been email, I think.

BY [redacted]

Q So, I mean, I understand if you don't recall who was in any specific meeting, but do you remember who was typically at these meetings?

A Outside of some of the ones here, I'm not sure if I -- I don't remember anything else.

Q Okay. Do you know if misinformation was discussed in meetings? Or disinformation?

A I don't want to guess here. It was a long time ago. I --

Q I mean, even if you just remember one email occasion or if you --

A It likely came up at some point. It's -- I don't remember. I can't give you too much context around that, but it likely came up at some point.

Q Okay.

[redacted]. I'm sorry. When you said "it," misinfo or disinfo or both?

[redacted]. The topic of misinformation, I believe, is what she was referring to.

[redacted] Sorry.

[redacted] Yeah. I think -- so the invite says "misinfo collab status." Do you see that down at the bottom? It's in the middle of the page, bottom of the substantive part of the exhibit. Does that phrase have any meaning to you?

[redacted]. I don't know what "misinfo collab status" means.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted]. [redacted] what I was getting at was, I think the question was whether misinformation or disinformation came up, and his response was "it" came up, and I was asking him to clarify for you which of the two.

[redacted]. Yeah. I would say misinformation likely came up at some point.

[redacted] Can you recall the context or what was discussed?

[redacted]. I'm sorry, I cannot. I don't remember the details there.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 5.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Okay. This is exhibit 5.

[redacted]. So this document doesn't have a Bates label that suggests that it's from Meta. Can you tell me the source for the document?

[redacted] Yeah. It was produced in FOIA litigation by America First Legal.

[redacted]. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this?

A I don't remember this document.

Q Do you have any idea if you attended this call that it's organizing on March 11th, 2021?

A I don't remember if I attended or not.

Q Do you know who the [redacted] and [redacted] are mentioned in the email on the first page, the second round from [redacted]?

A I don't remember who [redacted] and [redacted] were.

Q Do you know what they meant by the WhatsApp project?

A I don't want to guess here. I don't remember what this is referring to.

Q Okay. Do you know who [redacted] is?

A Sorry, I'm not sure I -- nothing really -- I don't know.

Q Okay.

A I don't remember. I don't remember who that is outside of what I'm seeing here in this document.

Q Okay.

[11:00 a.m.]

[Exhibit No. 6.

Was marked for identification.]

This is exhibit 6.

. Which exhibit are we up to?

Six.

. Oh, we're ready.

Oh, you're ready? Okay.

BY

Q Do you recognize this?

A I don't remember this document.

Q Do you know who is with the --

A I don't remember who that is.

Q Okay. You don't -- so you don't recall if you participated on the call?

A I don't remember.

Q Okay.

A I don't remember.

Q All right. How about ?

A I do not remember who that is.

Q Okay.

BY

Q And, , in the email you see at the top there, the "Hi Facebook team," it starts, in there is asking about is such segmentation possible.

If you would have received a question like that, who would you have referred that question to?

A Yeah, this -- this looks pretty substantive --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and detail oriented. I don't remember the exact team I reached out to, but this is something I would definitely needed support on.

Q Support on. Would you have used one of the cross-functional teams for that?

A Somebody in that network, yeah.

Q In the marketing science team?

A I don't remember if that would have been it.

Q The policy team?

A For something like this, I -- probably not, but I don't want to guess. I just --

Q Uh-huh.

A This was a while ago.

Q Would anyone on the email that was with Facebook, would they have been able to answer that question, or would this, in effect, go to someone else?

A I'm not entirely sure. Even if it started here, it's possible that it was an even larger team effort to understand and field this.

[redacted] Okay.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 7.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] This is exhibit 7.

[redacted]. Thank you.

One more?

[redacted] Oh, sure.

[redacted]. Thank you.

We're ready.

[redacted] Yeah. Oh, you guys are ready? Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall this document, do you recognize it?

A It's familiar.

Q Can you describe what -- what it is?

A It looks like somebody from the CDC reached out about -- let me see -- a graphic that was making the rounds, and I just confirmed and thanked them for sending an email to us.

Q They were saying it contained misinformation, right? That was the -- someone from the CDC?

A Yes, that looks like that's what they're saying.

Q So I assume you passed this on, right?

A I likely passed this on. Yeah, I definitely passed this on.

Q Do you know who you would've passed it on to?

A I don't remember who I would've passed it on to.

[redacted] Do you remember what team you would have passed it on to?

[redacted]. I don't want to guess here, but this is content related, so something on the content or ad -- or policy side.

[redacted] Policy side.

[redacted]. Did you say content or policy side?

[redacted] Content or policy side.

Can you describe what you mean by the content side? You mentioned in terms of the cross-functional teams, marketing, science -- pardon me -- policy. Was there a content cross-functional team?

[redacted]. Sorry. I don't -- I don't necessarily remember the details around that specifically. That's just my -- my -- my -- I would have passed this on to somebody else, somebody that probably deals with that. I don't know if there's a specific team that deals with that. I just know I passed it on to somebody that deals with that.

[redacted] Do you know if you got these kind of requests frequently?

[redacted]. I don't remember the frequency. I don't think so, but I don't recall the frequency of these kinds of requests.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] But it's certainly possible that other kinds of requests about misinformation came to you in the first instance and then you routed them?

[redacted]. If they came to me, I would've sent them to somebody that would have had more experience there, yeah, somebody, yeah, who was -- yeah.

[redacted] Do you know which agencies you got such requests from, in addition to CDC?

[redacted]. Yeah. I don't remember getting a request from anybody else around -- that was of this nature. But, again, if I did get such a request, I would have just passed it on to somebody else.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] When you're -- in the email, when you say, "please don't hesitate to reach out if your team ever notices any issues on this end," what does that -- what is "on this end" referring to?

[redacted]. It means if you get -- if you have issues, please reach out to me.

[redacted] Okay. Issues with respect to the products you've asked for?

[redacted]. Yeah, this is -- I mean, I'm just being a good customer service guy. Just trying to be nice.

[redacted] All right. We're about time. We're at the hour mark. So we're off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted]. We're ready whenever you are.

[redacted] Ready? Okay.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q I guess it's still morning, so good morning. I am [redacted] as you probably heard, and I am counsel for the minority. And just wanted to say that we appreciate you coming here and being willing to sit down and talk to us.

I have seated next to me [redacted] She is also counsel with the Judiciary Committee under Mr. Nadler, the minority. Okay?

A Okay.

Q So, first, let's start or go back to what you're doing now. I believe you said that you're getting your master's.

A I am.

Q Is that correct?

What are you getting your master's in?

A Data science.

Q Data science? What exactly is data science?

A It's applied math, essentially.

Q I was going to say keep it simple for --

A Yes.

Q -- us nonmath people.

Okay. And so you're studying at Northwestern?

A I am.

Q And that's in Evanston, Illinois?

A Yes. Northwestern is based in Evanston, Illinois.

Q Thank you. And that program is how long, 3 years?

A It kind of varies depending on the pace you take it.

Q Okay.

A So you can go as fast or as -- or slow as you need to.

Q Okay. And when do you expect to finish?

A Right now I'm expecting to finish in December.

Q In December. Okay. Great.

And right now are you in finals or have you finished finals?

A I have a final coming up next week.

Q Next week?

A Yeah.

Q Is that your last one?

A For this quarter, yes.

Q Okay. And did you have finals before you came here today?

A I've been in the process of preparing for them for the past couple of weeks, yes.

Q Okay. At the same time that you were preparing to come here and talk to us, right?

And when is that final that you had, the last one?

A It's a -- it's a project that's due at the end of next week.

Q Okay. And so you had to stop working on your project to come here and testify?

A I did.

Q Or to sit for the interview?

A Yeah.

Q And so you would much rather be working on that project, right?

A I needed time for the project.

Q Right. What kind of project was it -- or is it? Sorry.

A Yeah, it's just -- I'm just building models with a team, just coding, doing standard statistical models.

Q Okay. Excellent.

And in your -- well, first, let me ask you: Do you think that the job that you did for Facebook is related to the -- your expertise right now that you're studying to get your master's for?

A It is not.

Q Okay. And so was that a job that you just worked to get some money while you were going to school or to get ready to go to school?

A Yeah. The -- what I was really interested in doing is what I'm studying now.

Q Uh-huh.

A I just needed a job at the time, and that's the job that I happened to fall into.

Q Okay. And you said you did that for about, was it, 20 -- no, 3 years and some months, right?

A The -- I think the job in question here was a year and 10 months.

Q Okay. But you started with Facebook in 20 --

A '18.

Q -- 18? And when did you start your master's program?

A I started taking classes at a slow pace even as I was working at Facebook.

Q Okay. And so while you were at Facebook, Donald Trump was the President first for like half of your time at Facebook?

A He was.

Q Right. And I believe President Biden was inaugurated January 2021, right?

A He was.

Q And you left Facebook October of 2021.

A Yes. That was when I left.

Q And did you go -- did you get another job or did you just start your studies full time?

A After leaving, I focused on studying full time.

Q Okay. All right. So now -- and I guess I'll refer to the company as Facebook, because for the entirety of the time you worked for the company it was called Facebook, right?

A I believe so.

Q Okay. It didn't become Meta until around the same time that you left, October of 2021?

A I don't remember the exact time, but as I remember it, it was Facebook.

Q When you worked there.

A When I was there.

Q Okay. And so you said first that you were an account manager in global marketing. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And that was where you focused on sales and marketing of ads. Was that in markets outside of the United States or did it include the United States?

A Sorry. As I remember it, my -- most of the folks that I worked with were based in the U.S.

Q Okay. And I believe you described your duties or your responsibilities as akin to a customer service representative, right?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And you felt that the job that you took on in your second role at Facebook was akin to customer service as well, right?

A It was also customer service, yes.

Q Okay. And that was you fielded questions from governmental agencies, staffers, and helping them find somebody who could help them.

A Yes. I answered emails and directed them to somebody that could help them with whatever substantive matter needed it.

Q And I'm sorry, I forgot to ask you about the work that you have done since you left there.

You have a Medium page, right?

A I do.

Q Okay. And on your Medium page you post studies that you have conducted within your field of data science.

A Yes, I've posted papers on there.

Q Okay. And so you have four papers on there right now.

A I believe so.

Q And they would be "ADA & Gradient Boosting in Machine Learning" is one. Another is "Decision Trees: You can get with this, or you can get with that."

A Yeah.

Q That's a Black Sheep reference.

A Yeah.

Q I got it.

You also have "Regularization in Neural Net"?

A That sounds right.

Q Okay. And then, lastly, you have "Modeling the Signal, Regularization in Machine Learning."

A That sounds right.

Q Okay. Of these four studies that you posted, would any of them apply to the work that you were doing at Facebook?

A No.

Q All right. And so I don't understand that, so I'm not going to ask you anything else about it. Okay?

So let's break this down a bit because -- would you say that your job involved one providing general instruction to these governmental staffers that asked you questions?

A Again, what I would say is they would reach out if they had issues. I would try to understand what they were asking for. And in the vast majority of cases I would reach out to somebody who had more experience on the matter to help address.

Q Okay. And sometimes that involved guiding them through the ad process.

A Sometimes that involved the ad process.

Q And you said you would connect those staffers with the right people, and that meant the people that could help them address an issue.

A Yeah, sometimes I would connect them with folks that could help, depending on the substance, yes.

Q Okay. And you referred to something as other verticals. You said that your vertical was the Federal Government?

A That was, yeah, by -- by verticals, essentially my area of focus or the type of people that I'm servicing as a customer service guy.

Q Okay. And so, then, there were other verticals similar to you who focused on other sectors, such as e-commerce.

A Yes, there are others. There's e-commerce, travel.

Q Okay. And did they have similar titles like yours? I think you were an account manager -- excuse me -- partner manager/Federal. Would they have been partner manager/e-commerce?

A In -- it's a big company. I don't know everybody's -- it's hard to say what everybody's title's going to be. But account manager and partner manager are some of the titles there that are pretty common.

Q You mean like a subset of --

A Yeah, department manager and account manager are pretty common in the -- in the space.

Q Okay. And each of them dealt with different arenas, or you called them verticals.

A Verticals.

Q Okay. Could we call them also categories?

A You could.

Q Okay.

A You could.

Q But, like, vertical, that's a term of art within Facebook.

A Yeah, it's a -- it's a term that -- it's one of the ways that we describe the different categories there, as you --

Q Right.

A -- mentioned.

Q Similar to what you were calling the coupons.

And what were you calling the coupons?

A I think another word there would have been ad credits.

Q Ad credits. Okay.

And you said you don't know how the agencies received those coupons. You just knew that they had them.

A Yes. My role there was very narrow. When it came down to actually the execution and making sure that things worked for them, that's where I would step in.

Q Okay. And you don't know what those different agencies had to do to get those coupons?

A I do not.

Q So you were shown several emails. And thinking back to what you saw or you reviewed, in many cases when you responded, you used "we," right?

I think exhibit 7, you say: Thank you for flagging. We're making note of this.

And exhibit 2, you say on the front page: Our marketing team has identified some pieces of your creative that they would like to showcase in our creative gallery.

And then you go on to say: Here's a specific creative they have identified.

So when you are responding to these emails and you're talking about "we," you mean collectively the different teams that you have referenced or spoken to to get these answers.

A So when I'm referring to "we," it's a big network of teams that are working through, and I just happened to be the one relaying the message.

Q Right. And exhibit 6, they -- you were asked some questions about -- let's see -- [redacted]. And I think you said you didn't know her, right?

A I don't remember [redacted].

Q Okay. But isn't it true that this particular email, you are just cc'd on this email?

A If --

Q And I can show it to you again if you want to see it.

A Yes. Could I see that again?

Q Sure.

A Yes. It looks like I was just cc'd there.

Q Okay. And at no point do you respond or say anything or is anything directed to you in that series of emails?

A It doesn't look like I was directly addressed in this area of the email.

Q Okay. And then I think it was exhibit 7 where you are speaking to [redacted] of the CDC, and [redacted] was letting you know about some false information that he flagged.

And this is an employee of the CDC, right? Do you recall? Or I can show it to you again.

A Thank you.

Q Uh-huh.

A It looks like [redacted] is the CDC employee.

Q Okay. And he's flagging for you some -- what he believes is misinformation.

A It looks like he is, yes.

Q Okay. And you said that what you would do in that case is pass that along to the appropriate team to evaluate what should be done next.

A Yes. I believe that's what I'm saying here is we are making note of this.

Q Right. Okay. And what is the date on that email?

The first one, you can start with what -- where [redacted] sent it to you.

A Yes. [redacted] sent it on May 23rd.

Q Of what year?

A 2020.

Q And you responded?

A I responded on May 24th of 2020.

Q And who was the President at the time?

A This would have been Donald Trump.

Q Okay. And I believe you said that content evaluation was not your job, correct?

A It was not my job.

Q Identifying or determining whether or not something was misinformation was not your job either?

A It was not my job.

Q And I think there was also -- I wanted to go back to number 6 again, where I said that that was a conversation that didn't involve you. That is the one where you were asked what you would do in that situation, right?

A If I can re -- if I remember correctly.

Q Okay. But you weren't asked to do anything in that email, were you?

A It doesn't look like I was.

Q Okay. So let me ask you a little bit about the ad process, and you can tell me whether or not you know this or not.

The ads that were submitted to Facebook, they had to comply with -- and like I say, you can let me know if you don't know. But at the time that you were working at Facebook, advertisers, including governmental agencies, had to comply with community standards, right?

A I don't want to guess here. I don't remember --

Q Okay.

A -- specific details here.

Q And so it was not within your purview to determine whether or not the ads complied with community standards if you didn't even know what they were?

A It was not my job.

Q Okay. And it was not your job to determine whether or not the ads complied with Meta advertising standards either?

A That would not have been in my role description.

Q But if someone had a problem where they thought that something had happened or gone wrong with their submission of an ad, they might come to you with that?

A I might be the first person they reached out to to complain or --

Q Right.

A -- say something is wrong.

Q Because from what you understand, when these people become clients of Facebook or get -- the partnership is put -- you -- they come together, they are given your name or somebody else's name as someone they can contact if they have a problem?

A If they have a problem.

[redacted]. Can we go off the record for a second?

[Recess.]

[redacted] We're good.

Do you want to go back on the record?

[redacted] Yep.

[redacted] Great. We're back on the record.

[redacted] All right. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q So I'll try to pick up from where we left off.

You said at one point that sometimes you would refer the people who contacted you via email to put them in contact with somebody who could help them with an issue that you couldn't help them with.

A Sometimes, yes.

Q Okay. And sometimes would you provide an answer rather than connecting them? Would you say, this is what we found or this is what we're going to do?

A As far as I remember, most substantive matters, I would pass it on to somebody else or -- yeah, I would just pass it on.

Q Okay. And I believe in one -- the -- exhibit 3, you said that you -- your response was copy, pasted. I'm going to show you exhibit 3 again.

Is that the one that you identified as something that you copied and pasted?

A Yes, I copied and pasted this. I did.

Q Okay. And that is like a string of instructions with some links in it, right?

A Yes, they're links there.

Q A description of the coupons and what they -- what rules apply to those coupons.

A Yes. Those look like the rules that are applying to these coupons.

Q Okay. And from what you see that you copied and pasted, that would be they were subject to the Facebook terms of service, Facebook's commercial terms, Facebook's advertising policies.

A From what I --

Q From what you've written here.

A -- here, it looks like that's the case.

Q Right. But none of those three things were within your job description.

A No.

Q Okay. And that would be that you weren't the one who determined whether or not the coupons were used in the proper manner.

A I was not the one that made that determination.

Q All right. And -- sorry. This coupon is dated -- or this coupon discussion is dated between May and June of 2020. Or is it -- tell me what --

A It -- I see --

Q September. Sorry.

A September.

Q August and September. I was looking at the wrong one.

A Yeah, I see September and August.

Q Okay. And you were asked about the amount of money. You said you don't know, but you read from the email that there was somewhere around $300,000 or half a million dollars.

A That's what the email says, I believe.

Q Uh-huh. And that was a conversation with staff from the CDC, correct?

A Looks like the CDC was on the email.

Q All right. And that would be the CDC under the Trump administration, based on the date?

A Given the timing, it would have been the Trump administration.

Q Okay. So if they were given money or provided with coupons or ad credits, whatever the term would be, that would be under the Trump administration at the CDC?

A Given the timing, I believe it's the Trump administration, yeah.

[redacted] Okay. Give me 1 minute. I'm sorry.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We don't have anything else. Appreciate your time. And depending on what happens in this next round, we may or may not have any followup.

[redacted]. Thank you.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Everybody ready? Okay. Great.

We'll go back on.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 8.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] This is exhibit 8.

If you'll just let us know when you're ready.

[redacted]. We're ready.

[redacted] Ready?

BY [redacted]

Q All right. Do you remember this document, recognize it?

A I don't remember this document.

Q Do you have any idea why you were cc'd, why you were cc'd?

A I don't remember why I was cc'd on this document.

Q Who is [redacted]?

A Um --

Q Who wrote the email, for the record.

A [redacted] would have been somebody else that worked on the teams that supported here. I don't -- I don't know [redacted].

Q You don't know her.

A I don't remember [redacted].

Q Do you know why this email was sent to the General Services Administration, the people there?

A I don't want to guess here. I don't know. I don't remember why it was sent.

Q Okay. So the email discusses how Meta worked with election officials to identify misinformation. Do you know how Meta worked with -- in order to do that?

A This, I -- no, I don't -- I don't know. I don't know this.

Q And [redacted] also referred to on an issue with WhatsApp earlier this year. Do you have -- do you know what that means?

[redacted]. So where are you referring?

[redacted] It's on 4730, I believe. Yeah, so the last page.

[redacted]. Where on the page?

[redacted] It's the second bullet point under "Additional actions we're taking to protect the U.S. elections."

[redacted]. Again, I don't -- I don't recall this. It looks like there's a link here which would have probably been to some public resource.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], in your role which you have described here today as being a customer service representative, would companies or clients or U.S. agencies have reached out to you regarding questions about the 2020 election?

A I don't remember if they did or did not, but that's -- out of the collection of random questions that I got, that would have at some point have probably came up.

Q Could you have been included on this email for awareness purposes so you knew who to coordinate with regarding these types of questions?

A I could have been included on this for awareness. I'm not sure to what extent, I would remember to what extent, but I probably could have been included just for awareness.

Q And do you remember ever receiving any outreach from your clients regarding questions about the 2020 election, whether it be ad buying or just general platform questions?

A I don't remember anything there specifically.

[redacted] On the first email, on the first page, there's a reference in [redacted] [redacted]'s email to removing 120,000 pieces of content on Facebook and Instagram for violating voter interference policies.

Do you know how such determinations were made?

[redacted]. Sorry, where on the page is this?

[redacted] The first page. So it's at the very bottom.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Could you repeat the question?

[redacted] Does he know how -- who would have removed those pieces of content and who made those decisions?

[redacted]. I don't know who would have made that decision. I don't recall or know who would have made that decision.

[redacted] Okay. There's also on the next bullet point, so if you flip the page, there's a bullet point about: Displayed warnings on more than 150 million pieces of content viewed on Facebook from the U.S. that was debunked by one of our third-party fact checkers.

Do you know who those fact checkers were?

[redacted]. I don't know or remember who this would have been.

[redacted] Okay. The -- okay.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 9.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] This is exhibit 9.

[redacted] We're ready.

[redacted] Okay. Great.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this?

A I don't remember this.

Q Okay. Do you know why you were cc'd?

A I'm not sure why I was cc'd here.

Q Did you work with the CFPB, which this email is from, in other capacities or did you work with them typically?

A I had some exchanges with the CFPB.

Q About what?

A Again, just customer service stuff. If they had questions, I was one of the people that sometimes they would reach out to.

[redacted] How did the CFPB know to contact you?

[redacted]. I don't know how they had my email. I'm not sure how they got my email. I just -- I dealt with what came into my inbox.

[redacted] Was the CFPB one of the clients that you serviced? You mentioned having different --

[redacted]. Yeah, yeah. If they needed to reach out to somebody, I would have been one of the people that they probably -- they reached out to.

[redacted]. Just for accuracy, he's on the "To" line, not on the -- there's no "cc" line.

[redacted] Oh, right.

[redacted]. There's a bunch of people on the "To" line --

[redacted] Sorry.

[redacted]. -- including his supervisor.

[redacted] Right.

[redacted] Do you think of the CFPB in the same category as the other agency clients that we talked about at the beginning of the interview? You mentioned DHS, State, Census.

[redacted]. In the sense that if they had a customer service request they would reach out to me, then in that way they were similar.

[redacted] Do you recall facilitating, providing any credits or coupons to the CFPB as you did for other agencies?

[redacted]. I don't remember if I did or did not facilitate anything with them specifically.

[redacted] On the second page, there's an email from [redacted] with CFPB to [redacted], you, and some other people. And the body of the email says: The purpose of this call is to identify any possible areas of collaboration or partnership between the CFPB and Facebook on getting reliable, trustworthy information to Americans, and/or to help stop misinformation, scams, and fraud.

Do you know what that collaboration and partnership was about?

[redacted]. I don't remember. I don't remember.

BY [redacted]

Q Who would on the list of folks who were receiving this? So you received the email. Would anyone else have been a key point of contact for that question?

A It looks like they're mentioning [redacted] as a possible lead. I'm not sure if I can produce anything outside of what's in the document.

Q Sorry?

A It looks like they're -- they're -- the email looks they're saying the policy lead is [redacted]. But I'm not sure if I can give any answer outside of what's already in the document here.

Q So just to make sure I'm understanding. So would [redacted] have had any role in helping field that kind of question? She's on -- so I'm on page 2. And then the email, May 18th at 4:47 p.m., there's a -- in the "To" line there's [redacted].

A She may have been relevant here.

Q Uh-huh.

A I don't remember this exchange.

Q Uh-huh.

A Um --

[redacted] Do you know who [redacted] was or is?

[redacted]. Her signature says she was on Policy and Government Outreach.

[redacted] But you didn't work with her.

[redacted]. I -- I had some exchanges with her.

[redacted] This is exhibit 10.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 10.

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Are you all set?

[redacted]. Yep.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this?

A I don't remember this exchange in particular, no.

Q It looks like it's setting up a meeting between Facebook and the CFPB to discuss misinformation and other related topics.

Do you know if you attended that meeting on May 21st of 2020?

A I don't remember if I attended or not.

Q Do you know why you would have --

[redacted]. There's a series of emails, and the topics change from emails to --

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted]. -- to emails. So are you referring to --

[redacted] I'm referring to the ones on the last -- beginning on the last page.

[redacted]. Okay. Fair enough.

[redacted] Yeah, sorry about that.

Do you know why you would have been invited?

[redacted]. It looks like there's mention here, advertising. And that's something that I supported on. So I'm assuming that's -- that's where they would have added me in.

[redacted] Okay. I think -- I think we're all set then. We'll go off the record.

Thank you. Yeah, thank you.

[redacted] I don't have anything.

Well, actually, I have just one question.

Are we still on the record?

[redacted] We can go back on.

[redacted] I can do it from here.

BY [redacted]

Q With regard to exhibit No. 9, there was a question posed to you that said something about whether or not you provided coupons. And I think your response was you facilitated coupons, correct?

A Facilitated, yeah.

Q You did not provide coupons to any agency related to Facebook ads?

A That was -- that was not my role.

[redacted] All right. Thank you. That's it.

[redacted] We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 12:33 p.m., the interview was adjourned.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	[redacted]
Date of Interview	5/23/23
Date of Review	7/18/23
Name of Reviewer	[redacted]
Signature of Reviewer	[redacted]

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
8	6	"department manager" to "partner manager"
9	22	"Spending" to "spending"
10	1-2	"it's like that's not the best personnel to substantiate" → check audio
14	13	"bind it" to "buy it"
~~[illegible]~~	~~[illegible]~~	~~"[illegible]" to "[illegible]"~~
18	4-5	"company are national priority" to "country and national priorities"
18	8	"rich" to "which"
21	9	"doing that" to "doing ads"
26	20-21	"I designed the resources" to "folks designed the resources"
40	12	department manager to partner manager

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: KRISTIN WOOD

Tuesday, May 23, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 9:59 a.m.

Present: Jordan, Gaetz, Bishop, Massie, Spartz, and Biggs.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted], GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], COMMUNICATIONS DIRECTOR AND COUNSEL

[redacted], COUNSEL

[redacted], COUNSEL

[redacted], CLERK

[redacted], SENIOR SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted], PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

[redacted], DIGITAL DIRECTOR

For the PERMANENT SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE:

[redacted], STAFF DIRECTOR, SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND INVESTIGATIONS

[redacted], SENIOR COUNSEL

For KRISTIN WOOD:

D.E. ("ED") WILSON , JR.

Venable LLP

600 Massachusetts Ave., NW

Washington, D.C. 20001

V. THOMAS LANKFORD, JR.

Lankford & Reed, P.L.L.C.

120 North Saint Asaph St.

Alexandria, VA 22314

Mr. [redacted]. This is a transcribed interview of former CIA officer Kristin Wood. Chairman Jordan and Chairman Turner have requested this interview as part of the committees' investigation of Federal law enforcement and intelligence matters within our respective jurisdictions.

Would you please state your name for the record?

Ms. Wood. Kristin Wood.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [redacted]. Would counsel please state your names for the record?

Mr. Wilson. Ed Wilson.

Mr. Lankford. Tom Lankford.

Mr. [redacted]. This investigation serves to inform potential legislative reforms within the jurisdictions of the committees. For example, the committees may consider legislative reform such as revolving-door legislation for Federal employees with security clearances. These reforms might include allowing Federal employees with security clearances to retain their clearance after employment with the government, but limiting their ability to receive access to classified information for some duration after their government employment.

The committees may also consider legislative proposals that would ban or restrict intelligence agencies from engaging in, coordinating, or promoting any political activity related to Federal elections, including candidates for Federal office.

The House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence staff will be constrained today to issues relating to the letter signed by the 51 former intel officials.

On behalf of the committees, I want to thank you for appearing here today and for answering our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear today voluntarily.

My name is [redacted], and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff on the House Judiciary Committee. I'll now have everyone else from the committees who are here at the table introduce themselves for the record as well.

Mr. [redacted]. Good morning. [redacted] with the Judiciary staff.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], counsel with House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], oversight counsel for the Judiciary Committee Democrats.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], chief oversight counsel, House Judiciary Committee Democrats.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], House Intelligence minority general counsel.

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff, House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Wilson. Can you guys speak up a little bit?

Ms. [redacted]. [redacted], law clerk for House Judiciary.

Mr. [redacted]. I'm [redacted], counsel for Chairman Jordan.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted] at the House Intelligence.

Mr. [redacted]. [redacted], professional staff for the majority for Chairman Jordan.

Mr. Bishop. And I'm Dan Bishop, House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. [redacted]. I'd like now to go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have the opportunity to ask those questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is complete.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break before that or if you need to speak to your lawyer, just let us know, and that's fine.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say so that there is a written record, so we ask that you give a verbal response to all questions. She cannot record you shaking your head, nodding, or the always "uh-huh" answer we might give when we get comfortable. So we do need a verbal answer to each question. Do you understand?

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. You passed the first question.

Ms. Wood. Excellent.

Mr. [redacted]. So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we do limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour. Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand, and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

It is important that we do not talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody at the table. It may be in the course of this interview that I'll begin asking you a question and you probably know where I'm going, and then given -- you think, oh, I'll just answer it, but I would ask that you let me finish the question so that the court reporter can take it all down.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. You should also take your time answering if you're thinking about how best to respond.

If you have any questions or you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you do not know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess, unless we ask you to guess, but that should not be the case. Please give us your best recollection.

I'm just making sure everyone is awake.

Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to tell us if you learned it from somewhere else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or cannot remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to your knowledge, may have answers to those questions. There's a lot -- I'm throwing a lot at you now, so forgive me.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, by law, you are required to answer all questions from Congress truthfully, and the same goes for congressional staff. Do you understand that?

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mr. [redacted]. Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001. Do you understand this?

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mr. [redacted]. Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mr. [redacted]. Finally, I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of the committees' investigation. For the same reasons, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter, and although we will give out copies, we will collect them at the end of the interview.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

Ms. [redacted]. We just thank the witness for taking time out of your day to join us today.

Mr. [redacted]. The clock now reads 10:06 a.m., and we will start questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Could you please tell us a bit about your professional background, Ms. Wood?

A So I spent 20 years at CIA, beginning in 1989. I spent 5 years -- the first 5 years an imagery analyst, the next 11 or so as an all-source analyst working a variety of problems in war zones, and then a few years as a PDB briefer for Vice President Cheney and Scooter Libby, and then moved over to run the counterterrorism team that was looking at whether Saddam Hussein had a role in 9/11.

And after that, I went out to the Sherman Kent School to build the advanced analyst program for experienced analysts. And then I moved over to operations where I stood up as the deputy in the new Middle East operations division.

So just a question. This is open, right? So unclassified?

Ms. [redacted]. Unclassified.

Ms. Wood. Okay. So the new Middle East division.

And then from there, I left the agency for 6 years. I really needed to spend some time and focus on my sons.

And then I came back where I was the director's analytic support chief, so preparing him for all the meetings on the Hill and congressional testimony and many other things. And then the last few years, I've spent in the Open Source Center running innovation and technology. Since then, I've had my own consulting company.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q That's what I was going to say.

What do you do now? Consulting?

A Yeah. So right now, I just finished a full-time position, the last 2 years as the CEO of a startup that is a commercial data platform. And that ended in late January, and I'm taking a break.

Q Are you on any boards?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Let's move into the focus of the inquiry.

You were one of the 51 former intelligence officials who signed the public statement regarding Hunter Biden's emails, correct?

A Yes.

Q I'm entering into the record a document dated October 19, 2020, a public statement on the Hunter Biden emails, as exhibit No. 1.

[Wood Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm passing around copies for your review and your counsel.

A Thank you.

Q Are you familiar with this document?

A I am.

Q Okay. How would you describe the public statement?

A It was a warning that we were really concerned that the Russians, as we were seeing pervasively throughout the 2016 and then in the lead-up to the 2020 Election, were also interfering in the process and that, for me, this was -- the most important thing is, let the FBI do their work. We're still -- there's a rush to judgment. Let's let the FBI do their work because we're really concerned that one of our near-peer adversaries is -- does have a role in this.

Q You're saying does have a role in this, or you are assuming --

A We were concerned they had a role in it.

Q What was your understanding of the intent of the statement?

A So my intent was exactly as I described.

Q Do you think Mr. Morell shared that intent as well?

A I know you've spoken to him, and I've read his transcripts. He clearly had additional purposes.

Q What do you understand those purposes to be?

A From your transcripts, it sounds like he also had contacts with the Biden administration or the Biden campaign at the time.

Q So it's fair to say he was looking to help President Biden during the -- Vice President Biden during --

A Yeah. I wouldn't want to speculate. I think you have the record, and you spoke with him about it. But it's pretty clear from what he wrote that that was a part of things.

Q Did you share his desire to help Vice President Biden during the Presidential debate?

A No.

Mrs. Spartz. Did you have some concerns that it was very close to the debate? Did you have some concerns that it was very interestingly close right before the debate, and the statement was trying to be hurried out to be issued?

Ms. Wood. So I think, in hindsight, that may be something that you focus on. For me, what was going on in my role is I had just gotten news the afternoon before that my son had some pretty profound health diagnoses, and I was traveling in an area that was pretty remote, in and out of cell phone access. So whatever was happening on the national stage wasn't in my job jar or in my mental state at the time.

Mrs. Spartz. So you didn't even know the debate was happening, or you didn't think about it?

Ms. Wood. Probably I knew it was happening, but it wasn't anything I was concerned about.

Mr. Massie. Given those distractions, did you have time to vet this idea that it could be Russian disinformation?

Ms. Wood. Well, so, I think from the 2016 Election, we had seen that. We had seen SSCIs, what, five-volume report on this. We had the Obama administration talk about an executive order concerned about Russian interference. And then we saw it -- as an open-source person, you see it everywhere.

So for me, it was the kind of thing we had seen -- and the IC reported consistently on -- this could be yet another venue for that. And my concern, as always, was, how are the Russians trying to take away and undermine our democracy and faith in our democracy.

Mrs. Spartz. So did you do any due diligence before you put your signature with your former title?

Ms. Wood. I read the letter and I agreed with its contents.

Mrs. Spartz. But you didn't do due diligence to verify or not verify any incident in that letter?

Ms. Wood. So which part would you --

Mrs. Spartz. Just in general. Did you do any research? Any due diligence? Did you contact anyone? Who did you contact?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mrs. Spartz. No? You just pretty much read it and said --

Ms. Wood. And I agreed with it.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Are you a Russia expert?

A So my degree was in U.S. -- my degree was in political science with an emphasis on U.S.-Soviet relations. That tells you how long ago it was. I spent a fair amount of time seeing that in government most -- really since I left the government in 2015. Most of the things I've seen and witnessed have been in the open-source world.

Q So -- well, I'll come back to that.

Let me ask you, what was your initial reaction when you first read the statement?

A I don't remember. I agreed with it.

Q But you didn't -- did you conceive of the idea to issue a public statement in this regard?

A No.

Q Okay. I would ask you to let me finish the question.

A Sorry. I thought you were done.

Q Did you have any role in drafting the statement?

A No.

Q And when did you first become aware of the public statement?

A So Michael sent me an email.

Q By Michael, you mean Michael Morell?

A Yes.

Q Did he call you at any time to discuss the public statement?

A Not that I recall, but it would have been something he might have done to say, I have a letter. You know, would you take a look at it?

Q But you don't recall if that happened?

A No.

Mr. Lankford. I'm sorry. I didn't hear that.

Did you hear his comment? Or was it a question?

Mr. [redacted]. I said, you don't recall?

Mr. Lankford. Oh, I'm sorry.

Ms. Wood. And I agreed with him. I don't.

Mr. Lankford. Yep.

Ms. Wood. Thank you.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm entering an email from Michael Morell to Kristin Wood dated October 18th, 2020, at 6:06 p.m. into the record as exhibit 2, for you and your counsel.

A Thank you.

[Wood Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this email before, Ms. Wood?

A I have.

Q Was this the email when you first learned of the public statement?

A Yes.

Q If you recall, what did you think upon seeing this particular email at the time?

A Can you ask the question in a different way?

Q Do you recall your thoughts upon first receiving this email and reading it?

A I don't recall my thoughts other than agreeing with the letter.

Q And do you know Mark Polymeropoulos?

A I do.

Q How do you know him?

A I met him through Michael after our agency careers.

Q Are you two -- would you describe -- how would you describe your relationship with him?

A He's an acquaintance.

Q Okay. And what about Mr. Morell, how do you know him?

A I was his executive assistant more than 20 years ago. It appears to be a life sentence.

So I've known him for a long time. We were briefers together with the George Bush administration.

Q So what do you think -- why do you think he reached out to you to take on this task with respect to the public statement?

A It's something that happened, not uncommonly, after we were in government, everything from how do you use Twitter to, you know, do you know somebody who is an analyst or whatever.

Q Okay. Did you have any role -- and if I've asked this already, I apologize -- in the creation of the statement?

Mr. Wilson. Asked and answered.

Ms. Wood. No.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q No.

Mrs. Spartz. Did you have any concerns putting your former title with information that you didn't verify? You know, you just did it from public sources, but you used your prior title to give more credibility to your statement..

Did you have any concerns and thoughts about that?

Ms. Wood. So I saw that that had been a question that has been asked before.

Mrs. Spartz. I want to get your view.

Ms. Wood. Right. So it's what I've seen various national security -- letters written by various former national security officials over the last, whatever, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 years. It's common practice. It's because you're saying, this is why we are concerned. This is the insight we have based on monitoring intelligence and Russia in particular for many years.

Mrs. Spartz. But you didn't have insight in that specific situation, did you?

Ms. Wood. Certainly based on what the IC was reporting and had reported in the 2016 election and my role in open source just seeing what was happening in social media and elsewhere. As an analyst with deep experience on looking at how -- the origination of things, this was right in lockstep with the other things we saw that were consistent with what was happening with Russian interference in our elections.

Mrs. Spartz. Did you try to contact any current, at that time, FBI or CIA employees?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mrs. Spartz. So this was just purely on your prior judgment?

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mrs. Spartz. But do you think this stuff actually undermines the credibility of agents when you have -- your signature was tied to unverified information? What are your thoughts on that?

Ms. Wood. So I disagree with the characterization.

Mrs. Spartz. How would you characterize it?

Ms. Wood. So it is -- it was my analytic judgment that the Russians were interfering with our 2020 election, as they had our 2016 election, as well documented in executive orders and intelligence community assessments and the SSCI's reporting. And this kind of activity was consistent with the kinds of things we saw happening during that time. So it was very much in line with the work that we saw. I did not feel like it was a leap of faith to say, Let the FBI do their work, and let's see what's real here.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm entering into the record as exhibit 3 an email from Mike Morell to Nick Shapiro dated October 19, 2020, at 6:36 a.m. if you would review that, Ms. Wood.

[Wood Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Lankford. Take your time. He wants to make sure you read the entire document.

Mr. [redacted]. Yeah. You can look up when you're finished.

Mr. Lankford. Thank you.

Mr. Wilson. Is this the entire document?

Mr. [redacted]. This is the email that we're -- we're only concerned with the top portion.

Ms. Wood. Oh, you're only concerned --

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Yeah. The rest is the standard email that Mr. Morell sent to everyone.

A Okay.

Q Have you seen this email before?

A I think you have it in your interim report.

Q Okay. So, yes?

A Yes.

Q What are your views of this, of Mr. Morell's efforts in this regard?

A So it looks to me like he's organizing logistics for people to sign the letter.

Q Wasn't that your role, though, in the promotion of the public statement?

A So he asked me to help. There was a whole set of conversations or emails that happened that I wasn't privy to, and this would be one of them.

Q Now, when you say you weren't privy to them, is that a conclusion you came to recently having looked at the report, or did you know beforehand he was doing other outreach?

A I presume someone was, because I didn't speak to General Clapper or Director Brennan or a lot of the seniors whose names are on the letter.

Q Why do you think it was important to Mr. Morell that he wanted two things, "pairs of senior who served in the same position from different administrations"?

A I think -- speculation.

Q I'm asking you to speculate.

Mr. Wilson. And I would be very careful about speculating on things you don't know anything about.

Ms. Wood. I mean, to me, it looks like you're trying to create a balanced view. It's not just Democrats who think this or Republicans who think this, but people who served in both administrations who would have both sets of insights.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Why would a balanced view be important?

A I think that's something that we strive for in intelligence analysis in general. You want to be impartial and unbiased.

Q But this is a public statement on the eve of the Presidential election. So you're not briefing policymakers who are in office, right? So that same set of considerations probably doesn't apply?

A Well, I would actually think you would be more rigorous.

Q Why is that?

A Well, I mean, if there's the context that you're talking about, why wouldn't you want to make sure that you're having all voices represented?

Q But if this is a public statement that's going out to the American people, is the idea that it will be more convincing to them if it was a more balanced document?

A I don't know that.

Mrs. Spartz. Was it concerning to you that this information will be used, and your titles that you used to have in all of this letter in a political campaign? Was it concerning to you?

Ms. Wood. It wasn't in a political campaign. It was in a public statement.

Mrs. Spartz. Right. But it would be -- but you're aware that it was going to be used in a political campaign?

Ms. Wood. So my focus was, again, on warning about Russia and its interference in our elections. And this whole thing about using our former titles is the practice that's been in national security records and in letters for at least a decade when I went back and looked. This is standard practice.

Mrs. Spartz. But this letter -- you knew that this letter will be used in a campaign, correct?

Mr. Lankford. Object to the question. How would she ever know that?

Mrs. Spartz. Okay. Well, you had an email from Michael that said, "The campaign will be thrilled."

You received that email, correct?

Ms. Wood. So I sent that in to all of you because I found it, but I don't remember even seeing it. Like I said, this was not my biggest concern in life. My biggest concern in life was something happening with my son that was profound and the fact I was in and out of cell phone service where I needed talk to doctors and other things.

So I did a favor for Michael, as I've done many times. I was not involved in the rest of it. I don't -- I was not focused on the political piece of this.

Mr. Bishop. Ms. Wood, do you continue to believe at this point that the letter was entirely appropriate?

Ms. Wood. So if I were to say -- I would say things a little bit differently.

Mr. Bishop. Explain.

Ms. Wood. So I'm always for a little bit longer and a little more explanation because -- analyst. It's just part of our practice.

But I think putting more context about the environment we were in at the time, where we had the reporting from the IC, we had the executive order already from President Obama, we had the SSCI. I don't know if their first volume had been published by then or not, but I think at least one of the two of them had. So I think much more time on that context was important.

And then I think there was some sentence in there that said, you know, "if we are right," da-da-da-da. I don't think that was the right thing. It should have said, If the Russians were involved, and then the rest of the sentence.

Mr. Bishop. You testified a moment ago -- or you said a few times that this is common practice for intelligence officials to -- former intelligence officials to issue statements like this. Is that right?

Ms. Wood. A little bit different than that. Thank you for clarifying.

Mr. Bishop. Can you clarify that?

Ms. Wood. Yeah. Absolutely.

So two things: One is, there have been, I don't know, 10 times that I found in a quick search where national security professionals, so whether that's former Members of Congress, former National Security Council members, former IC members, former members of the military -- would come together when they thought the moment -- there was a really important moment happening where they needed to take -- they felt like they needed to make a statement.

Mr. Bishop. Do you believe that when those statements occur, there's an expectation that the public will rely on the expertise, experience, and knowledge of those persons in forming conclusions?

Ms. Wood. Can you repeat the question?

Mr. Bishop. Yeah. Let me state it more simply.

Isn't the point of that that those persons expect the public to rely on them because of their -- what they've done?

Ms. Wood. I think that's fair.

Mr. Bishop. And if your former intel officials -- if you put yourself in the mind of the public, wouldn't you expect them possibly to rely on what you know that the public doesn't know?

Ms. Wood. So I think what I would say is, if you have observed something for 20 years, or you've been in the military and then in the IC, or you've been in the IC and then the open source, you have a broad perspective of knowledge that is part of what we do as national security officials -- is share that. As formers, we're able to share an insight that maybe is useful to the public.

Mr. Bishop. You also have access -- I'm sorry.

Ms. Wood. Go ahead.

Mr. Bishop. No, I didn't mean to cut off your answer.

Ms. Wood. I probably lost it. Not much coffee.

Mr. Bishop. I apologize for that. Let me see if I can pursue it this way.

You also have had access to secret intelligence information, correct?

Ms. Wood. Not since 2015.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. As a group, those officials have had, during the course of their careers, access to secret information, fair?

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. And if you're issuing a letter stating your posture as having been former intel officials, you know that the public is going to be aware of that. Fair?

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. Do you think it's possible for that position and knowledge to be exploited by intel -- former intel officials to interfere with an election?

Ms. Wood. So your-- that would be a hypothetical.

Mr. Bishop. I'm asking your opinion.

Ms. Wood. So in my opinion, this letter -- the sole purpose for me, and the primary purpose for most of us -- and I haven't spoken to everybody -- was to warn about -- let the FBI do their work here. Let us see what is at the bottom of all of this because it's happening in the context of Russian interference in our election system.

Mr. Bishop. So the people should rely on the FBI and not the leaks of information. Is that -- exclusively. Is that what you mean?

Ms. Wood. For knowing what the facts are related to this laptop, the FBI needed to go do their work.

Mr. Bishop. To this date, is the public, to your knowledge, aware of any conclusion by the FBI about that information?

Ms. Wood. I don't know the answer to that.

Mr. Bishop. Do you believe -- when you say that you should let the FBI do their job, are you talking about the public should not know the answer, or what the information revealed until and unless the FBI decided to tell them?

Ms. Wood. So I do believe that we want to know the truth. We want to know what happened, right? And so speculation and allegations and sensationalism doesn't serve anybody. I think we all want to get to the truth of what happened. And if a forensic investigation takes however long it takes, it just does.

Mr. Bishop. In your opinion, would that also apply to, say, the Pentagon Papers?

Ms. Wood. I'm sorry. I don't know --

Mr. Bishop. You don't know what they are? Okay.

How about COINTELPRO, the release of information from COINTELPRO? Do you know what that is?

Ms. Wood. I don't.

Mr. Bishop. I yield.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, I want to talk about the outreach efforts you took.

In addition to who Mr. Morell may have contacted, it's a fair characterization that you were responsible for obtaining signatures for the public statement, correct?

A I sent out the letter to numerous people to sign to see if they wanted to sign it.

Q Okay. So first, how did you decide whom to send that public statement to?

A It was probably -- so on my phone driving through a rural part of Maine, anyone whose phone number or email address I had in my phone who I knew was a former who might have insight into the topic.

Q Did you send -- well, let me ask you this:

To your recollection, who did you send the public statement to?

A I think I sent the list of that to you, right?

Q We have documents from your counsel.

A Yeah.

Q So thank you for that.

But now I'm asking you, as to your recollection today, who do you recall sending the public statement to?

A I won't remember all of the times off the top of my head.

Q Having said that, who do you -- as you sit here today, who do you recall sending it to?

A Nada Bakos, Cynthia Strand, Tim Kilbourn, Dave Vanell, Dave Terry, Brett Davis, Patty Brandmaier.

Q Is that it, that you can recall today?

A That's all that I can recall.

Q As far as you recall, did everyone that you communicated with or requested review of the statement and sign respond to you?

A I don't recall if everyone responded.

Q Do you recall if anyone responded to you after the public statement was released?

A I don't recall.

Q Did you reach out to any individuals who then later told you they would not sign the public statement?

A No.

Q Now, when you say "no," you just have no recollection of anyone telling you, I will not sign?

A Right. I have no recollection of that.

Q As far as your recollection goes, did everyone you sent the public statement to -- withdrawn.

Did anyone give you reasons for why -- withdrawn there as well.

You produced documents to the committee, correct?

A Correct.

Q Have you made a full production of all documents related to the committee's inquiries?

A Yes.

Q Some of the formers have come in and said they have a practice of deleting emails for a variety of reasons.

Do you have a similar personal policy with respect to your emails?

A I would love to say it's like a philosophy, but it's more these are old documents, and I need to stop having 14,000 emails. So I delete -- I don't keep things. It's rare for me to keep things.

Q But you kept these emails that you produced?

A I have some of them, yeah.

Q Okay. Is it your view that there may be emails we did not receive that you sent out to intel --

A 100 percent.

Q Okay. And is that maybe because you deleted those emails?

A Over time.

Q Okay.

A But not after the chairman's letter.

Q Thank you for clarifying.

With respect to these particular emails -- rather with respect to your personal way of which you delete emails or retain them, do you actually review them before you hit delete?

A Rarely. If it's something I got in 2018 and I haven't read it, I probably don't care about whatever it was.

Q Okay. Since the public statement was released, have you spoken to any of the signatories about the public statement?

A Several.

Q Okay. Who?

A Tim Kilbourn, Dave Vanell, Michael Morell, Cynthia Strand, Patty Brandmaier, Brett Davis.

Q What did you speak to Mr. Morell about with respect to the public statement?

A So we've spoken several times about things that are not related to this, but he told me -- I think a couple weeks before he came in -- that some administration official -- or sorry. I keep saying administration. Campaign -- he had spoken to some campaign officials.

Q Okay. Anything else beyond that?

A Not related to the letter.

Q And when do you think this conversation started? Happened, rather?

A A few months ago.

Q Showing you what I am marking as exhibit 4. It is an email from you to Stephen Slick dated October 19, 2020, at 12:14 p.m.

A Okay.

[Wood Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q So you'll see it says, "Just need your CIA/OSC role, nothing from private sector."

We've touched on this a bit. Why was it important not to include the signatory's private sector information?

A I just thought the letter would get -- I mean, it was what the guidance was, number one. And number two, people do all sorts of things in the private sector from volunteer work to working at 501(c)(3)s, and it wasn't germane to the topic at hand.

Q So some of the people who have come to -- I'll represent to you some of the people who have come to testify before the committee have said, Look, I was doing this in my capacity as a private citizen. You keep talking about my title. I'm entitled to engage in First Amendment activity, which, of course, the committees do not dispute.

But I guess the question we're trying to figure out is, if it's just sort of First Amendment private activity and participation in the political process, why was it just so important to have those government titles?

A As I've said, I've reviewed many, many letters that have been written by former national security officials, including former Members of Congress, and they include their titles to say this is why we know -- why we have insight to what it is we're talking about.

Q So then by that logic, it would seem to be more convincing to the average reader if they look at the credentials and bona fides of the individuals making the public statement?

A I would think it would get to credibility.

Q So it would be more credible?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q So if you're saying that Hunter Biden's laptop is potentially a Russian information operation, that's going to carry more weight coming from the 51 former intelligence officials than coming from someone off the street?

A Perhaps.

Q Well, I mean, what is your opinion?

A So I think you have 51 people who care very much about this country and its national security, and between us, have more than 1,000 years of experience on the mission. And if you have people who are willing to be public -- which is a rarity for most of us and especially for most of the 51 -- that they're that concerned about it, I would think the question is, you know, would you not want people who see this coming to offer warning? I think it's really important to offer warning when you see danger to the country.

Q In that context, then, and given the experience of you all and the indication of former credentials and titles, you would agree, to the average American, that this could suggest you have access to information that the rest of us do not?

A So it's really very important to know that all of us have an obligation to go through our various publication review processes regardless of where we're from to make sure there's no classified information in the document, and that process was followed in this letter.

Q Fair enough.

But again, from a perception matter, to the average American who says, Wow, 51 former intel officials say Hunter Biden's laptop could be part of a Russian information operation, it would be reasonable for them to conclude, they must know something we don't?

A So I think, again, we go back to context, right?

Q Yeah.

A As we're seeing this happen across the space with key players who are involved in this story, too. We have formal IC assessments dating back from 2017, and we have current work going on in the Senate, the SSCI, probably elsewhere that I'm just unaware of, as well as executive orders warning about this -- it was and is a profound threat to our elections.

And so in the context of all this, it's important to say, let's just let the FBI do their work. We didn't have insights into whether it was true or not. But in the context of this space and the context of what was happening elsewhere, it's really important. Let's get to whatever the truth is, and that's the FBI's job.

Q And to that -- and I'll ask this one more time.

In your opinion, is it fair to conclude or posit that the average American reading the public statement would say, these individuals have access to information, perhaps classified, that the rest of us do not, and therefore, what they're saying is more credible?

A I think what I would say is they have experience dealing with these kinds of things, so they have a perspective that maybe others don't have.

Q And it could just as easily be what I suggested, right?

A I'm much more comfortable with what I've said, right? They have the experience and time on mission dealing with this situation. So they have exposure to a long history of things that happened, and so they have insights to offer.

Q Fair enough.

Can you tell us a bit more about your role in promoting the statement?

A What do you mean by promotion?

Q Did you simply just email the individuals in your phone that you were discussing, or was there any other efforts you've taken? Maybe phone calls to individuals? Text messages? Anything like that?

A The email is the thing I sent out. I sent out one email. If you recall reading it, it was some kind of a fast turnaround. I don't remember the details exactly. And that was it.

Q That was -- okay.

What did you understand -- do you know Nick Shapiro?

A I do.

Q How do you know Nick Shapiro?

A He was Director Brennan's staffer when I was the Director's analytics support chief.

Q Are you aware of his involvement in the -- of his involvement with the creation or promotion of the public statement?

A I am.

Q Okay. What is your understanding of his role?

A I think he does public relations professionally now and was working on a media piece of it.

Q What is the media piece of it?

A Getting the letter out.

Q To the media?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q Did you have any --

Mr. Wilson. Answer the question orally.

Ms. Wood. Oh, sorry. What was the question again? Getting the letter out? Yes. Sorry.

Mr. Wilson. No head nods.

Ms. Wood. Sorry.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Right. So he was in charge of disseminating the statement to the media outlets, correct?

A Yes.

Q And do you know if Director John Brennan played a role in creating or promoting the public statement?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q Do you know if Director James Clapper played a role in creating or promoting the statement?

A I have no knowledge of that.

Q Are you aware of whether Director Clapper suggested any changes to the letter?

A I think in one of the documents you guys have, there was something -- an editorial change he suggested.

Q I believe the editorial suggestion was to strengthen the verbiage -- and I'll represent to you that this is what the document states.

From the feel of Russian information to the, quote, "It would strengthen the verbiage if you say this has all the classic earmarks of a Soviet Russia information."

Do you recall that?

A I recall reading it in your interim report.

Q What is your opinion of Director Clapper's editorial change?

A He's putting it in the context of what was happening in the bigger picture.

Mr. Bishop. Ms. Wood, could I explore something with you for just a moment further?

Ms. Wood. Certainly.

Mr. Bishop. I was thinking about your answer earlier. I was looking at the letter. You may recognize this phrase, "if we are right," in this italicized paragraph --

Ms. Wood. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. -- three paragraphs from the bottom of the first page.

Ms. Wood. Right.

Mr. Bishop. The full sentence reads, "If we are right, this is Russia trying to influence how Americans vote in this election, and we believe strongly that Americans need to be aware of this."

Did I read that accurately?

Ms. Wood. You did.

Mr. Bishop. And you said -- looking back at it, I was asking, I think, what you believe was entirely proper, and you said that you would rephrase that, right?

And I think what you said is you would rephrase it to be -- well, maybe I can get you to just clarify what it was rather than my trying to remember.

Ms. Wood. Sure. And if my English isn't great in fitting in the sentence, forgive me. But the concept will be --

Mr. Bishop. We're improvising on the fly, and I want to get your sense of it.

Ms. Wood. Yeah. Thank you.

I would have suggested changing it to, if Russia is involved in this.

Mr. Bishop. At this point in time, do you have any more --

Mr. Wilson. Sir, may I ask, which point in time?

Mr. Bishop. Now. Now. Right now.

Mr. Wilson. Now. Okay.

Mr. Bishop. Yes, sir. Yes, ma'am.

Do you have -- do you know whether Russia was involved or not?

Ms. Wood. So I think the F- -- as you alluded to earlier, I don't think we have the FBI report, do we?

Mr. Bishop. Well, let me just get your answer to it. It could be that you're saying you don't know. Is that what you're saying?

Ms. Wood. Yeah. I'm saying I don't know.

Mr. Bishop. So you don't know.

And are you aware of any evidence that has emerged since the issuance of this letter that would say whether Russia was involved or not?

Ms. Wood. So it would get into what I would say are the reasons to be cautious, is the all sorts of allegations of the Russians coming after senior administration officials, coming after those in the Trump ecosystem to try to influence them. The storyline about corruption in Ukraine all fits the narrative that the IC assessment and SSCI reports reported on.

So what, to me, it looks like is there are a lot of work that needs to be done to determine the origination of the content on the laptop. And I'm hoping that that's the forensic analysis that's happening now.

Mr. Bishop. Are you aware that multiple media outlets have now reported -- including New York Times, Washington Post, others -- that significant parts, at least, of the Hunter Biden laptop are authentic? Meaning they were --

Ms. Wood. So I read the Washington Post report that you have in the interim report, the source that's on the first page. And in reading the actual article, it says that the forensic experts they hired could confirm that less than 10 percent of the emails were verified and that they were not able to determine, because so many people had been in and out of the hard drives, the origination of most of them. And so that's why I really think there's -- the big story, the 90 percent, is -- what is that?

Interestingly, The New York Times also said that some of the contents, the big folders about the big guy or something else, had been added to the external hard drives that existed outside of FBI hands, and had been added after the FBI took it into custody.

So to me, there's something happening there where someone is creating a story, and it makes me all the more convinced that we need to see what the FBI's forensic work comes up with.

Mr. Bishop. So do I understand, then, that you believe, since there's -- let me, first of all, see if I understand that correctly.

So what you're saying is, you believe there remain issues, as indicated in the news reporting, about whether some portions are authentic or not. Is that correct?

Ms. Wood. Correct.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. And you believe, furthermore, that -- it's your opinion, is it fair to say, that the American people should await the judgment of the FBI before being informed about the whole thing?

Ms. Wood. I do. I believe that.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. I yield back.

Mrs. Spartz. Just quick --

Mr. Gaetz. I have a few questions.

Good morning. My name is Matt Gaetz. I'm a majority member of the House Judiciary Committee.

Ms. Wood. Nice to meet you.

Mr. Gaetz. Nice to meet you.

Can you list for me all the basis you had to sign this letter?

Ms. Wood. The basis?

Mr. Gaetz. B-a-s-i-s.

Ms. Wood. So on the intelligence community's assessment of interference in the 2016 election -- I think it was 2017 published. I have a list of them if you want them. But that, and then the SSCI's report. There's five volumes. I'm not sure which of those volumes had been published by that time. Then we have the executive order signed by President Obama. Yeah.

Then there's the Countering American Adversaries Through Sanctions Act signed in 2017 by both Houses, 419 to 3 in the House and 98 to 2 in the Senate, mandating such sanctions against Russia to be considered in response to Russian election interference of 2016. So those were just a few. And then --

Mr. Gaetz. Hold on. Before we move on, I just want to get all of the basis that you had.

Ms. Wood. So did you --

Mr. Gaetz. Yeah. Is that an exhaustive list? You mentioned at the end of that testimony that that was just a few. I want to get an exhaustive list.

Ms. Wood. And then seeing what is out in open source, where we have reporting from the Institute For the Study of War, American Enterprise Institute, so many other think tanks, nonprofits, who were doing really remarkable work in this space as well as some academic institutions.

Mr. Gaetz. And then can you list for me all the people you talked to regarding your decision to sign that statement?

Ms. Wood. Do you mean who did I talk to in deciding to sign it myself?

Mr. Gaetz. My question is to list all the people with whom you communicated regarding the statement.

Ms. Wood. Is that the same --

Mr. Wilson. We've been through this before, if that's right.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. I just want to make sure we had a complete list. I just wanted to make sure it was a fulsome and complete list.

Ms. Wood. So off the top of my head, I offered the ones I could remember.

Mr. Gaetz. Are there any others?

Ms. Wood. Probably. I just -- I sent it out to probably 20 or 30 people. I just don't remember off the top of my head.

Mr. Gaetz. Okay. And can you list all the purposes you had to sign this statement?

Ms. Wood. To warn of Russian interference in the election.

Mr. Gaetz. So the debate was not --

Ms. Wood. Potential.

So as I was saying, perhaps before you arrived, this was not high on my list of things that I was focused on. My son had just been diagnosed with something profound the afternoon before.

Mr. Gaetz. I was here for that. I just want to make sure I have a fulsome list of every objective you had in signing the letter.

Ms. Wood. Right.

Mr. Gaetz. If the sole objective was to warn of Russian interference, that's a complete answer. But if there were other things that animated your desire to sign the letter, I just want to know them.

Ms. Wood. Perfect. Thank you.

Mr. Gaetz. That is it?

Ms. Wood. That is it.

Mr. Gaetz. Great.

You said you might have spoken to Mr. Morell on the phone. If that had occurred, do you know what the timeframe of that would have been?

Ms. Wood. Probably that day or the night before, if he gave me a heads-up about it. Sometimes he does, sometimes he doesn't.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you two text?

Ms. Wood. Occasionally.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you text more frequently than you chat on the phone?

Ms. Wood. We don't really text. It's mostly email.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your email provider?

Ms. Wood. Google.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your cell phone provider?

Ms. Wood. My son set it up. I think it's Verizon.

Mr. Lankford. Honest answer.

Mr. Gaetz. I think I'll have some questions for you in our other hours.

Mrs. Spartz. Just quickly, you said you thought it would be a danger to the country not to know about potential interference. Have you thought it could be potential danger to the country not to know of potential involvement of Hunter Biden's company that does a lot of business with Russians and Ukrainians? Have you thought about that?

Ms. Wood. So I really, really firmly believe in the rule of law, and I really believe in due process. And I think the allegations are out there, and I don't know if they're true or not. And I've seen some of the more salacious ones, and I don't know anything about that.

What I do believe is that we need to go through the process that we have used in callous investigations that have done by Congress, by the IC, by inspectors general, and let's get to what the facts are. And I don't feel like we are to the point where we have the facts.

Mrs. Spartz. What about your statement? Would you believe that your statement would discredit the potential connections and really bring legitimacy to something that is potentially -- you know, that may be happening, right? You legitimate with signatures and really would bring legs to bring credibility to this information.

Do you think it was a danger -- if that had turned out to be true and there was something and you didn't know anything about it because you just used your judgment, it's potential, it could be also bad for the public not to know a danger to the country not to know. Have you thought about it?

Ms. Wood. So I would say it a little bit differently. I would say that this is very much still obviously under active investigation because we haven't heard it publicly, and there's a danger in characterizing it either way, which is why we said we don't know.

But let us look at it within -- I mean, it deserves thorough investigation. Is it all true? I don't know. Is it all false? I don't know. But I think we all, as Americans, deserve the courtesy of -- let's get to the truth of what it is.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, did anyone at the CIA send you a list of potential signatories?

A No.

Q Did you discuss the statement with anyone at the CIA?

A No.

Q How did you obtain a list of signatories?

A It's people who I had their email addresses on my phone.

Q Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, I'm going to enter into the record an email from Michael Morell to himself -- but we understand it's blind carbon-copied to a number of the signatories -- as exhibit Number 5, an email dated October 19, 2020, 1:38 a.m., and it contains the first draft of the public statement.

[Wood Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Wilson. Is this five or six?

Mr. [redacted]. It should be exhibit 5.

Ms. Wood. Sorry. I have to get my glasses.

Mr. [redacted]. Sure.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I want to direct your attention to the last two paragraphs. It's page 3 of exhibit 5. The last two paragraphs of the first draft of the public statement. If you can review those and look up when you're finished.

A Okay.

Q Do you recall reading those paragraphs at the time that Mr. Morell sent them to you?

A No.

Q But you agreed to sign the public statement with those two paragraphs contained in it?

A I don't remember the sequencing. Is this the one I received that I sent you?

Q It's unclear at this moment whether or not it is. So I'll just ask you on the record as to your best recollection.

A I just don't remember seeing these sentences.

Q Okay. What are your views of these two paragraphs contained in the public statement?

A So this --

Mr. Lankford. I'm sorry. Could you repeat that question?

Mr. [redacted]. I just asked your client what her views were of these last two paragraphs.

Mr. Lankford. Okay.

Ms. Wood. For me, it looks explanatory of what he believed, I guess, that Vice President was doing.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Well, as you sit here today, would you have any objection to signing the public statement with these two paragraphs?

A I wouldn't sign it with those in it.

Q Okay. Why is that?

A Because, to me, it's defensive, and it becomes -- it really takes the focus off the Russians, and that was my focus. The politics of it are just not something I'm a political person in terms of playing in politics. It's really about what the national security goal here was, and that was for me to warn about Russian interference. I think this would have been distracting.

Q Okay. Because it sort of exculpates Vice President Biden from any criticism as to his dealings with the Ukrainians and Burisma?

A So the Ukrainians and Burisma story, I know, is a deep, deep -- I mean, it's a deep, deep substantive area that I'm just not an expert in. I wouldn't have been comfortable with this because I don't know the facts. But the point of the letter was to warn of Russian interference in the campaign. I think this would have been distracting and, you know, perhaps look a little apologetic.

Q Well, perhaps the point of these paragraphs would be to help Joe Biden become President of the United States?

A You'd have to ask Michael about that.

Q Okay. And we'd have to ask Michael about that because one of his objectives was to help Vice President Biden in the debate with President Trump?

A Again, you'd have to ask Michael about that.

[10:58 a.m.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q But that's your understanding, correct?

A Based on what you have in your testimony.

Q Okay. Showing you what we will mark as exhibit 6.

[Wood exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q An email --

A That was 5, right?

Q That was 5. An email from Nick Rasmussen to Michael Morell dated October 19, 2020, at 11:44 a.m. Here you go. And I'd like to direct you to the bottom half of the first page where it says, October 19, 2020, 8:41 a.m., Michael Morell wrote. Do you see that?

A Yep.

Q And that says, "Nick, attached is the current version letter with signatories so far. FYI: The last 2 paras are gone, as some folks thought them too political. Just Russia and intel now. Better."

Have you seen that email before?

A I have.

Q Okay. And at the time that you received the email, what did you think of it?

A No, I saw it I think as part of your process.

Q So recently was --

A Yeah.

Q -- is what you're saying, not contemporaneously.

Well, let me ask you, do you view those two paragraphs, having now read them, as too political?

A I think they're distracting. I mean, they are political. They're political statements about one of the candidates, and the point really needs to be Russia and intel.

Q Okay. Well, let me ask you this, the political statement as it was disseminated, is that a political document as well?

Mr. Wilson. I'm sorry, you said the political statement as disseminated. Did you mean the letter as disseminated?

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Thank you for clarifying. The public statement as disseminated, is it fair to call that a political document?

A I would call it a warning.

Q So it would be unfair to call it a political document?

A I didn't say that. I mean, people can interpret anything anyway. I would say it was intended as a warning.

Q But representing to you that Mr. Morell intended to help Vice President Biden become President Biden, it's fair to call it a political document?

Mr. Wilson. Don't speculate.

Ms. Wood. Yeah.

Mrs. Spartz. Do you think you would use political reasons?

Ms. Wood. So I didn't know about all the backstory that we have subsequently learned of, and I did talk to Michael about it. I just said, it wasn't fair to the rest of us to not know that.

Mrs. Spartz. So now looking back, you think you were used?

Ms. Wood. I don't -- I would not say that.

Mrs. Spartz. So how would you?

Ms. Wood. So there's two -- I don't know, I haven't spoken to everybody, but most of us, our purpose was to warn about Russian interference in the election. And that was the reason that so many people who have never written or signed anything signed on to it.

To know that there was an additional purpose, we should have known that in the calculation to sign, because for us, it's not that we're shy necessarily, but we don't like to be in the spotlight at all. And so for people who have had decades and decades of career in service, to make the extraordinary step of signing the letter, it is -- it is --

Mrs. Spartz. So you think --

Ms. Wood. It is really important to know the full story.

Mrs. Spartz. So you think it was disservice to your community if you look back?

Ms. Wood. I would just say, we needed to know. We needed to know that story too.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q When you confronted Mr. Morell and said it was unfair, what did he say in response?

A He apologized.

Q Did he say anything else?

A (Nonverbal response.)

Q As far as you know, did any of the other signatories confront Mr. Morell --

A I don't --

Q -- on their lack of knowledge?

A I don't know.

Q Other than his apology, did he have anything else to say about keeping you in the dark?

A (Nonverbal response.)

Q Well, let me ask you this, you're pretty close with Mr. Morell?

Mr. Wilson. Say yes or no.

Mr. Lankford. Answer.

Ms. Wood. Oh, sorry. Can you ask the question again? I forgot if it was a yes or no.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Other than his apology --

A Thank you.

Q -- did he say anything else --

A No.

Q I'll finish the question. Did he say anything else about keeping you or anyone else in the dark as to the impetus of the letter?

A He did not.

Q He did not. Did you inquire with him about the impetus of the letter?

A Before? Before this, no.

Q When did he -- when did he tell you -- when did -- when was his conversation in which he apologized?

A Recently.

Q After the committee's report that you reviewed?

A After his testimony. I don't remember the timing of the testimony and the report.

Q Okay. We just have a little bit of time left. Do you know if anyone else expressed similar concerns to Mr. Morell as you did about being kept in the dark?

Mr. Wilson. She answered that question already. The answer was no.

Ms. Wood. I do not.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay.

Ms. Wood. But I waited until the end of the question, so --

Mr. [redacted]. Thank you.

Mr. Lankford. Well done.

Mr. Bishop. Ms. Wood, you testified a couple times that this has been common practice for former officials to issue statements like this, and you said you identified a number of examples. Could you tell us what examples you identified for our context?

Ms. Wood. Yeah. Yeah. Absolutely. I think you have that.

Mr. Wilson. This one?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mr. Wilson. That's one of them.

Ms. Wood. Thank you.

So August 2016, a letter signed by Republican former national security officials. Undersigned individuals have all served in senior national security and are --

Mr. Bishop. Let me interject. Since you're reading that from something, do you have copies of it? How would you feel about marking one of those and --

Mr. Wilson. I'd be glad to as long as -- we don't -- we only have to that copy, if you all would like to make copies.

Mr. Bishop. Oh, okay. I'm sorry. I beg your pardon. I thought you were going off it. So if you would begin again, ma'am, and read it slowly.

Mr. Wilson. We're about to hit a break. We'd be glad to have copies made during the break.

Mr. Bishop. That may be the best idea. I'll yield now, and we'll come back to it.

Ms. Wood. I'm sorry?

Ms. [redacted]. Is it the statement?

Ms. Wood. Oh. I didn't have a statement.

Ms. [redacted]. Sorry. Go ahead.

Ms. Wood. I said I made a statement before I was asleep.

Ms. [redacted] I lost the thread.

Ms. Wood. Oh, it's okay.

Yes, we can make a copy.

Mr. Bishop. Then I'll yield for now and see if they have another question too before the break.

Mr. [redacted]. I think we only have about 7 seconds left so it's probably best to adjourn.

[Recess.]

Ms. [redacted]. It's 11:18 in the morning. We can go back on the record.

EXAMINATION:

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, good morning again. I'm [redacted]. I'm the Democrat's chief oversight counsel. Thank you for taking the time to be with us today.

A No, thank you. Happy to be here.

Q In the prior hour you were asked fairly extensively about whether the use of titles in signing the letter might convey something -- or what that might convey, I guess, to the American public. And I actually want to turn to the letter itself and some of the language that's in there, so that was introduced as exhibit 1.

A Uh-huh.

Q And actually, before we do that, in 2020, you did not have a security clearance, correct?

A Correct.

Q And you personally did not access any non-public information in --

A Correct.

Q -- deciding whether to sign this letter?

A Correct.

Q And you didn't access any classified information in deciding whether to sign this letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And you personally didn't have access to any of the supposed emails or what's been referred to as the Hunter Biden laptop, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And you didn't have access to any intelligence products or any other documents that would have analyzed the supposed laptop or its emails, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And the letter actually makes this fairly clear, correct?

A Correct.

Q And I want to walk through some points in here where it says that.

A Sure.

Q So in the fifth paragraph it says, we want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails are genuine or not. Right?

Mr. Lankford. Answer verbally.

Ms. Wood. Yes. Sorry. I was reading. That's correct.

Mr. Wilson. Take your time. Read it and then answer.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I know we talked about the if we are right language and whether you would've phrased it differently, but it does say if we are right, which suggests you might not have been right --

A Yes.

Q -- correct? Sorry. Just let me finish the question, if you would.

On the following page, which is page two, the third paragraph says, our view, correct?

A Yes.

Q And the use -- the term "our view" suggests that it's your subjective opinion, correct?

A Correct.

Q And it doesn't say that it's factual or that you've reviewed any non-public information to get there?

A Correct.

Q The next paragraph down refers to media reports, right?

A Yes.

Q And those would be public media reports, correct?

A Correct.

Q And so you -- again, you didn't suggest you had access to any non-public information. These are public media reports, right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And then in the very next paragraph it says, we do not know whether these press reports are accurate, correct?

A Correct.

Q And so, again, you said you don't know if they're accurate or not, but relying on their face this is what your impression of them is, right?

A Correct.

Q And then it goes on to say, they do suggest concern without -- within executive branch departments and agencies that mirror ours. It says they suggest concern not that you have any actual knowledge of such concern in executive branch departments or agencies, right?

A Correct.

Q And then I want to look at the actual signatures. If you look at Mr. Clapper, it says former director of national intelligence, former under secretary of defense and so on, right?

A Yes.

Q And the same with Mr. Hayden, it says former director of Central Intelligence Agency, former director of National Security Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q And, in fact, every single signatory signed these in his or her capacity as a former official, right?

A Correct.

Q So there's no implication here that anybody was an active agent who -- or an active official who had any access to non-public information, right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And, in fact, I think you said earlier that the use of your titles was to convey that you have certain experience, right?

A Correct.

Q Why do you think that's important for the American public to know?

A Because to comment on something like this needs the context of a bigger picture of the overall view of Russian interference in election -- in this election in the United States, but also broader view of looking at over 20, 30-year career for many of us, and bringing all of that context to bear on this tactical issue.

Q So is it fair to say that in the context of a 20 or 30-year career, you do have some expertise in Russian information operations?

A Correct.

Q And to the extent that people are suggesting that you should kind of put that in a shelf and act like it doesn't exist, do you think that's a fair request to make of you?

A I don't.

Q And why is that?

A Because I think one of the most important roles we can serve is to provide warning to the American people when something very dangerous is happening in the country, in this particular case, in the broader scope, Russian and other foreign malign influence but Russian interference in the election campaigns. And as formers, we did this because we continued to be concerned about national security regardless of whether we have a current title to our names or not.

Q Okay. You've taken an oath to protect and defend the Constitution against all enemies foreign and domestic, right?

A Yes, correct.

Q How many times have you taken that oath?

A Three or four.

Q Okay. When you were thinking about this project or when you're -- when you approached these issues more generally, do you have that oath in mind?

A Always.

Q How does that -- how did that contribute to your decision to sign this letter?

A So I think for us it really is we swear an oath to the Constitution, and it is a profound responsibility, all of us feel. It's a lifetime responsibility whether we are in government or not, and when we see something happening that is as dangerous as it is to the -- to our democracy and its future, we felt like we had a need to comment on it and provide some context around it.

Q Thank you.

I want to move on. You were asked in the earlier hour also about your efforts to obtain signatories for the letter. Do you recall that?

A I do.

Q The majority introduced as exhibit -- sorry. Give me one second -- as exhibit 4 an email chain involving you and Steven Slick.

A Yes.

Q And can you remind me who Steven Slick is?

A He was a former agency officer. I think he worked at the National Security Council for a while. I don't know him very well.

Q Was he one of the names in your phone?

A I don't remember if he got it directly from me or he was forwarded it by someone else.

Q Okay. So I actually want to introduce the full email chain because the majority only introduced the latter two emails.

A Okay.

Q So we'll introduce that as exhibit 7.

A Thank you.

[Wood exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. And the emails that the majority did not include are at the very back of this production.

Mr. Lankford. Am I right that this is three pages long?

Ms. [redacted]. It is three pages long, and I think it was actually produced -- we have the originals as produced by Ms. Wood. I think it was produced in a weird format so we put it into a Word doc. But if you would like the originals, we have them on hand.

Mr. Wilson. I think the answer is, this is not the same format we produced.

Ms. [redacted]. Yeah.

Ms. Wood. Yes.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay. You've had a moment to review?

A Yes.

Q Who is Roger George?

A He was a former national intelligence officer. He worked a lot of European issues. I think he's currently a political science professor at Occidental College, which is my alma mater.

Q Okay. And you know Mr. George?

A I do.

Q What's your relationship with him?

A I've spoken in his class.

Q Okay. Would you have his number in your phone, for example?

A I would.

Q Would you have his email address?

A I would.

Q Okay. So based on this email chain, looking at the email -- and I should say, it appears that Mr. George lives in Pasadena, California, based on this email chain. Is that accurate?

A It is.

Q So I think some of the timestamps may reflect Pacific Time and some may reflect Eastern Time. So I'm going to refer to them by the timestamp that's listed here with the understanding that it's not clear on this if that's Pacific Time or Eastern Time in some of that. There may be some confusion in that.

A That's fine.

Q So if you have clarity, feel free to shed it, but I think we just -- we might not be able to unravel that.

A Perfect. Thank you.

Q So it appears that at 7:27 a.m., on Monday, October 19, 2020, you sent this to a list of recipients who may have been bcc'd, and among them was Roger George. Does that -- does that track with --

A Yes.

Q -- your recollection?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And it appears that at 10:33 a.m., on October 19, 2020, Roger George forwarded this to Steven Slick.

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then Steven Slick responded to Mr. George and to you. He said, thank you, Roger. This sounds like a sensible approach to these highly suspect communications. Kristin, please feel free to add my name and signature to the list of folks endorsing this statement. And then he provides his signature block, right?

A Yes.

Q Then you responded to him at 11:37 a.m. saying, thanks, Steve, will do. And then after that there was some more back and forth with Mr. Slick, in between Mr. Slick and you copying, I think -- actually, not -- Roger George is not copied in the later communications. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So you actually didn't list Roger George in the first hour when you were asked about people that you sent this to, but this is an example of somebody that you sent it to that maybe you didn't recall, because you sent it to a number of people, right?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Do you know if Roger George forwarded the email to anybody else?

A I do not.

Q Okay. I want to introduce another email exchange. I'm sorry, before I do that, are you familiar with a man named David Cariens?

A Yes.

Q How do you know Mr. Cariens?

A He was in an analytic company that provided services to others that I -- we were both in the same company as 1099s, so not employees but people who came in and taught analytic classes.

Q Okay.

A And then he worked with, I think, several other folks I knew, so I knew his name.

Q Okay. I want to introduce an email from Mr. Cariens to you. We'll introduce this as exhibit Number 8.

A Great.

[Wood exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And I'll give you a minute to review it.

And, again, as with the other email, I think this was produced in a different format. It was on a couple different pages, and it was a little hard to track, so we put it into one. But we have the originals if you'd like to see them.

A Okay.

Q Okay. Do you recall this email exchange?

A Yes.

Q So in this email exchange it appears that the email was sent from you to Mr. Cariens who agreed to sign. Is that -- that's what this reflects?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall that exchange now that you've had a chance to review it?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So did you send Mr. Morell's -- the draft statement to Mr. Cariens?

A I must have.

Q Okay. And Mr. Cariens responded to you, yes, I want to sign. As for signing, just do David Cariens, former CIA intelligence analyst, over 50 years working in U.S. intelligence community, correct?

A Correct.

Q And then you added him to the list?

A Correct.

Q Do you recall where you would've gotten Mr. Cariens' name?

A He -- again, we were both working for a company where you had just 1099s, right, so you keep your personal email addresses. And so when the company would send out email blasts they would send it to all of us. So when I was looking up folks on my email, David -- well, David Terry and David Cariens, and I think there might have been another David too.

Q Okay. And I believe Mr. Cariens has a wife named Janice --

A She does -- he does.

Q -- who signed as well?

Did you -- do you recall if you sent the same statement to Janice Cariens as well?

A I do not believe I did.

Q Okay. So it might have been that he shared it with her?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Did you -- and you said earlier that you had no contact with the CIA's prepublication classification review board?

A Over this, correct.

Q Okay. And you never received any emails from them?

A No.

Q They never sent you any lists of names of individuals who wanted to sign --

A No.

Q -- on to the letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. We can move on.

A Okay.

Q You said in the first hour that your primary reason for signing the letter was because you wanted to make people aware that the Russians could be interfering in the election and to let the FBI do its job, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. I want to talk a little bit about why you were concerned about the Russians interfering in the election. The very first sentence of the October 19th statement -- of -- sorry, the very first sentence of the second paragraph of the October 19th letter reads, we are also individuals who see Russia as one of our Nation's primary adversaries. Do you see where it says that?

A Yes.

Q Was this an accurate statement with respect to your view at the time the letter was written?

A It is.

Q Do you still see Russia as a primary adversary of the United States?

A Absolutely.

Q Could you explain why you believe Russia is an adversary of the United States?

A Well, as it has been over watching -- a career of more than 25 years of watching them come against us in all sorts of ways, and the ability to interfere in our elections, while they might have aspirational over many decades, social media, media, the ability to move information and create bot farms has transformed their ability to be successful.

And so I think those of us who signed the letter, those of us who monitor this involvement are deeply, deeply concerned that we want Americans to go to the polls because of what they believe and what their views are based on what they have learned themselves, what they care about themselves and not be directed by any adversary.

Q And I think you said in the first hour that you have a degree in political science focused on U.S.-Soviet relations. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q Do you believe that Russia has a goal of harming the United States?

A 100 percent.

Q And can you say anything more about that?

A Well, we've seen it over so many decades where they're doing what they can to counter us, whether that's proxy wars, you know, dating -- long before the Cuban missile crisis, but I think they view us as in their way and our democracy experiment definitely flies in the face of theirs with communism. And I think as long as we are successful and we are leading the world in so many ways, technology, innovation, deep thinking, advancing, deep science, we are a threat to their story of their nation as they're facing corruption and shrinking populations.

And so this is not only pervasive as we're seeing that they're attacking Ukraine, right, the ongoing war there, but the war against us is profound in terms of how they're coming against us, how many people they have focused against us, and I worry about the damage it's doing not only to our election process but to our body politic, to our political dialogue amongst each other. I mean, if we're angry with each other, fine, but I don't want it to be because the Russians are -- the Russians or the Chinese, the Iranians, or anyone are stoking that anger.

Q Okay. Thank you for that.

The first sentence -- the final sentence of the October 19, 2020, letter reads, it is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy. And I think just now you said that, you know, Russia is trying to get people to vote based on what they're pushing out not based on what's actually -- the actual issues that America is facing.

Can you explain why you believed it was important to make it -- to make the public aware of Russian interference in particular?

A I think it's -- it has a profound effect on how people see each other and political candidates. And, I mean, it's race relations, it's societal relations, and so the schisms it's creating between us are profound. And to provide warning on that, the context of this is enormous. And it's rare to have now three executive orders, two intelligence community assessments, five volumes from the SSCI, and more all warning about the profound effects of this. So Russia is going to keep doing this to us until we stop them, and so the warning is we've got to stop them.

Q And do you believe that public statements such as the one you put out, making the public aware of what the Russians are doing can be a helpful way to counteract the Russians' efforts to interfere?

A I believe it's -- yes, I believe it's a public service.

Q And why do you believe that making the public aware of Russian efforts specifically can help to counteract their efforts to interfere?

A Because I think absent it the dramatic, sensational becomes fact as it runs away on Twitter or other social media, and that can swing -- regardless of the truth of the matter, it swings to the narrative they find is most destructive to the United States. There is in no circumstance in which they're advocating something that's for the greater good of the United States, and so providing warning of that and just having us all take a deep breath and see what's happening, actually let's do the investigations, let's do the hard work to see what the real story is.

Q In the first hour you said that you felt that Mr. Morell should have let people know about his secondary purpose regarding -- his political purpose in addition to the warning, but does that purpose in your mind diminish your purpose, which was to make sure the American public knew about election interference by the Russians or potential election interference by the Russians?

A It doesn't for me, does not for me.

Q Okay. So you still felt that it was important for the American --

A I do.

Q -- public to have this warning?

A I do.

Q And you still felt the need, a strong need, I think I can say, to counteract the Russian efforts to interfere. Is that fair to say?

A Yes, absolutely.

Q Okay. You've mentioned a couple times the products that the intelligence community has put out, and I think in the first hour you were asked to go through and list the bases on which you relied. I want to talk through some of those products now --

A Okay.

Q -- in some detail, and we'll introduce some of them into the record as well.

A Okay.

Q So the October -- and I think -- sorry. It's exhibit 1. So we're going to talk through exhibit 1, which is the letter itself, and then we'll introduce some of the intelligence products that support that letter as we go. So I don't think they've been introduced so far.

A Perfect.

Q So the October 19th letter says, there are a number of factors that make us suspicious of Russian involvement. And the eighth paragraph of the letter, which is the bottom paragraph -- the last paragraph in the bottom of the first page, it reads, such an operation, which refers to a Russian cyber hacking operation, would be consistent with Russian objectives as outlined publicly and recently by the intelligence community to create political chaos in the United States and to deepen divisions here but also to undermine the candidacy of former Vice President Biden and thereby help the candidacy of President Trump.

Do you see where it says that?

A I do.

Q Okay. Can you explain why based on your experience it would've been consistent with Russian objectives to create political chaos in the United States and to deepen divisions here?

A So among their worst nightmares is a vibrant, functioning democracy where people have the ability to speak freely and exchange their views and, you know, through the process of voting come up with, you know, the majority view of who should be the next President. And it is not in Russia's interest for that dialogue to be free and fair. It is not in Russia's interest for the U.S. election process to be seen as rigorous and well controlled and unbiased.

And so it is something we've seen over dozens and dozens and dozens of intelligence reports, well before social media became a thing, but since then, I mean, this is as established fact as you can get in the world of intelligence.

Q Okay. I want to introduce as exhibit 9.

[Wood exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q A statement from then-National Counterintelligence and Security Center Director William, or Bill, Evanina, which is dated August 7, 2020. It's entitled, "Election Threat Update for the American Public." And I'll give you a minute to review that.

A Okay.

Q Now that you've had a chance to review this, do you recall if you reviewed this in 2020, or if you were aware of it in 2020?

A I don't recall.

Q Okay. We've highlighted a paragraph on the second page that begins, and it's -- I should say, this is a print-off. So on the website it's all one giant page, but as printed it's the second page. It's all caps, Russia, and I'm going to read it into the record.

It says, We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it cease as an anti-Russia, quote, establishment. This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him when he was Vice President for his role in the Obama administration's policies on Ukraine and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia. For example, pro-Russian -- pro-Russia Ukrainian parliamentarian Andriy Derkach is spreading claims about corruption -- including through publicizing leaked phone calls -- to undermine former Vice President's Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party. Some Kremlin-linked actors are also seeking to boost President Trump's candidacy on social media and Russian television.

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So this statement -- to summarize, this statement says that the NCSC assesses that Russia is using a range of measures to denigrate former Vice President Biden and to support then-President Trump, correct?

A Correct.

Q So that is actually directly consistent with the statement, that first sentence of that eighth paragraph in the October 19th letter, correct?

A Correct.

Q Are you familiar with the NCSC?

A Yes.

Q Can you describe what they do?

A So -- and then under Bill Evanina, I mean, it's been kind of a remarkable evolution of how it's progressed as an entity. I think at ODNI they do a ton of work to kind of make sure that we have the best information we can on issues that also might be of domestic concern.

Q Okay. On the second page, it says, "The intelligence assessments above" -- which include this discussion of Russia that I just mentioned -- "represent the most current, accurate, and objective election threat information the IC has to offer in an unclassified setting at this time." Do you agree that, just based on your review of this, that this appears to be current, accurate, and objective?

A I do. And I would just add the following sentence, "Providing objective intelligence analysis is the solemn duty of the men and women of the IC, who work day and night around the world, often at great personal risk to safeguard our Nation."

Q And why is that important?

A That's important because that is the ethos from which we all come, the 51 of us, and we believe it's the solemn duty whether we're in office or we're in government or not.

Q Okay. And this press release -- it is a press release that was published August 7, 2020. This was publicly available to you and any other member of the public, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Continuing on, the ninth paragraph of the October 19th letter, which is the first paragraph on the second page, the top paragraph on the second page, it states, such an operation would be consistent with some of the key methods Russia has used in its now multi-year operation to interfere in our democracy, the hacking via cyber operations and the dumping of accurate information or the distribution of inaccurate or misinformation.

Russia did both of these during the 2016 presidential election. Judgments shared by the U.S. intelligence community, the investigation into Russian activities by Special Counsel Robert Mueller and the entirety, parentheses, all Republicans and Democrats, end parentheses, on the current Senate Intelligence Committee.

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q Do you recall what, quote, judgments shared by the U.S. intelligence community, end quote, was a reference to?

A It would've been the 2017 intelligence community assessment.

Q Okay. I'm going to introduce that into the record as exhibit Number 10.

[Wood exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Lankford. Is that 10?

Ms. [redacted]. Ten.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this before?

A I have.

Q Okay. So on -- this is a joint assessment by the Central Intelligence Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the National Security Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And this is a joint product they released that details a Russian campaign to influence the 2016 election, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So according to pages two to three of the summary -- sorry, it's Roman numeral two to three. There's a background section on top, so we're actually looking at Roman numeral two to three, which is -- yeah, sorry.

A What page?

Q So it's -- yeah. Sorry, it's confusing because of the way it was printed. I apologize.

Mr. Wilson. So the page starting "Scope" or the page after that?

Ms. Wood. "Scope and Sourcing"?

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q No, it starts "Key Judgments." So it's Roman numeral two. There we go, key judgments.

A Got it. I'm with you.

Q So I can give you a minute to review this, but briefly, this says that, "We assess Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered an influence campaign in 2016 aimed at the U.S. presidential election. Russia's goals were to undermine public faith in the U.S. democratic process, denigrate Secretary Clinton, and harm her electability and potential presidency. We further assess Putin and the Russian Government developed a clear preference for President-elect Trump Trump." Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q So this, in fact, supports that statement in the ninth paragraph of the October 19th letter, correct?

A It does.

Q Do you consider this a reliable assessment?

A Absolutely.

Q Why do you say absolutely?

A Because it's the considered view of key elements of the intelligence community responsible for this.

Q Okay. And it says -- under the first bullet point it says, we also assess Putin and the Russian Government helped to -- aspired to help President-elect Trump's election chances when possible by discrediting Secretary Clinton and publicly contrasting her unfavorably to him. All three agencies agree with this judgment. CIA and FBI have confident -- high confidence in this judgment. NSA has moderate confidence.

So when it says all three agencies agree with this judgment, what does that mean to you as an intelligence professional?

A As you know from reading many intelligence assessments, that's a rarity for all three agencies to be able to say something so direct. So to me, that even with the moderate confidence judgment from NSA, it says that they believe that this -- the Russian Government was aspiring to help President-elect Trump's chances.

So -- and it's something that is a pretty -- this is something that takes a long time to do. There is a lot of sourcing. There is a lot of background. There is so much work underpinning even these few pages that it's a really powerful -- how do I say this best -- for the IC to do something like this, it expresses profound concern and that they could do it in such a way, all three agencies agree, say that they're aligned in what the warning is.

Q Okay. So you consider this pretty conclusive evidence that the Russians did interfere in the 2016 election.

A I do.

Q Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q The October 19th letter also references the Mueller report. Are you familiar with the Mueller report?

A I haven't read it recently, but, yes, I'm familiar with it.

Q What's your understanding of what the Mueller report says with respect to Russian interference in the 2016 election?

A I won't recall the details.

Q Okay. We can introduce -- we're going to introduce the cover page from the Mueller report and page 36 of volume one of the Mueller report. We're not introducing the whole thing because I think it's like 500 pages long, and that would gum up the record.

Mr. Lankford. Thank you.

Mr. Wilson. Thank you.

Ms. [redacted]. You're welcome. And this is exhibit Number 11.

Ms. Wood. Okay.

[Wood exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So and, again, this is -- we're only going to -- we're only introducing one page of a very long document. But is it fair to say that on this page the Mueller report concludes that the Russians engaged in a hacking and leaking operation designed to interfere in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and undermine the Clinton campaign?

A It does.

Q Okay. And do you consider this to be a reliable assessment of what happened in 2016?

A I do.

Q Okay. And, again, turning back to the ninth paragraph of that October 19th letter, the last source it references in that paragraph is the current -- the report issued by the entirety, all Republicans and Democrats, on the current Senate Intelligence Committee. Do you recall what that was a reference to?

A I don't know which volume of the report it referred to, but among the five volumes that have been published by SSCI related to Russian interference.

Q Okay. We're going to introduce that into the record. That will be exhibit Number 12. And --

[Wood exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Wilson. What's exhibit 12, please? I'm sorry. Slow down.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So this is the Senate -- it's an excerpt from the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report on Russian interference in the 2016 election. And this is from volume five.

A I saw one of them. It was almost 1,000 pages, so I was thinking there were a lot of trees that were going to die.

Q So we're introducing the report and the findings section of volume five. We're actually just going to talk about the findings, the headline of the findings section, but the primary topic.

A Okay.

Q Oh, I'm sorry, we're actually going to look at Roman numeral seven. I haven't looked at this exhibit in a couple days.

A No worries.

Q So we've highlighted a section in there.

A I don't have a Roman numeral, but I do have a --

Q It's Roman numeral seven.

A Perfect.

Q So on Roman numeral seven of the findings section, it says, under "Hack and Leak" it says, "The committee found that Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered the Russian effort to hack computer networks and accounts affiliated with the Democratic Party and leak information damaging to Hillary Clinton and her campaign for President."

And then it continues on, "Moscow's intent was to harm the Clinton campaign, tarnish an expected Clinton presidential administration, help the Trump campaign after Trump became the presumptive Republican nominee, and undermine the U.S. democratic process."

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q So this is another assessment which supports the -- that paragraph in the October 19th letter, correct?

A It does.

Q And you've actually mentioned the Senate Intelligence report a couple times in your testimony today.

A Yeah.

Q Do you consider this to be a particularly reliable finding?

A Yes, I do.

Q And why is that?

A The SSCI's reports, when they put the effort into doing these massive undertakings, are just remarkable in terms of the breadth and scope and the research done and generally very, very high quality work, excellent in analytic judgment and sourcing.

Q Okay. And the October 19th letter references the fact that all members of the Senate Intelligence Committee, both Republicans and Democrats, joined this report. Was that something that was important to you?

A Hearing that now -- I did not realize that before -- I think it's a sign of the unified view of the threat to our democracy.

Q Okay. Do you think it's fair to say that there's a widespread agreement amongst intelligence professionals that Russia did interfere in 2016?

A Yes.

Q Okay. The -- going back to the letter, the tenth paragraph, which is the second paragraph on the second page, it says that the Russians, according to media reports and cybersecurity experts, targeted Burisma late last year for cyber collection and gained access to its emails.

Do you recall the media reports or cybersecurity experts to which this sentence refers?

A I don't.

Q Okay. We'll introduce as exhibit 13.

[Wood exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q A New York Times article entitled, "Russians Hacked Ukrainian Gas Company At the Center of Impeachment." And I'll give you a minute to review it.

A Thank you.

Q And we've highlighted the paragraph we're going to --

A And this is exhibit --

Q This is 13.

A Okay.

Q Okay. Do you recall if you've seen this article before?

A A long time ago.

Q Okay. So just to summarize, this article says that the GRU, which is the Russian intelligence unit, or the Russian intelligence directorate rather, used phishing emails to target Burisma and gain access to their computer systems. Is that a fair summary?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And that is pretty much exactly what the October 19th letter says, correct?

A It is.

Q So that sentence in the letter was supported by publicly available media reports, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Paragraph 10 of the letter also says that Ukrainian politician and businessman Andriy Derkach, identified and sanctioned by the U.S. Treasury Department for being a 10-year Russian agent interfering in the 2020 election, passed purported materials on Burisma and Hunter Biden to Giuliani.

What is your understanding of who Giuliani is, first of all?

A Adviser to then-President Trump.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of who Andriy Derkach is?

A I don't know him as well.

Q Okay. Are you aware with the fact that Mr. Derkach was sanctioned by the Treasury Department?

A Yes.

Q And what's your understanding of that?

A I think for influence, if I recall correctly, trying to influence election by all people.

Q Okay. And you referenced in the earlier hour an executive order. I believe it might have been the executive order sanctioning him. It's Executive Order 13848.

A Okay.

Q And I want to introduce into the record the Treasury Department press release, which references that executive order and references and announces the sanctions put on Mr. Derkach for interfering in the election.

A Thank you.

Q And this will be number 14.

[Wood exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And we're just going to look at the highlighted paragraph here.

A Okay.

Q So this says that Treasury designated Andriy Derkach pursuant to Executive Order 13848 for his efforts to influence the 2020 U.S. presidential election. Derkach, a member of the Ukrainian parliament, has been an active Russian agent for over a decade, maintaining close connections with the Russian Intelligence Services. Derkach has directly or indirectly engaged in, sponsored, concealed, or otherwise been complicit in foreign interference in an attempt to undermine the upcoming 2020 U.S. presidential election. Right?

A Yes.

Q So this directly supports the statements made in that October 19th letter regarding the interactions with the Russian agent, correct?

A It does.

Q Okay. And as far as you know, Treasury's conclusion -- are you aware of whether Treasury's sanctions are still in effect?

A I'm not aware.

Q Okay. I'll represent to you that they are in effect today.

A Okay.

Q We talked just a minute ago about who Rudy Giuliani is. Are you aware that Mr. Giuliani worked with Andriy Derkach throughout 2020 in an attempt to influence the election?

A I've read press reports that say that.

Q Okay. Do you recall any specific press reports?

A New York Times wrote a long article that was summarizing -- and Washington Post as well, that was summarizing that relationship and Mr. Giuliani's trips to Ukraine to seek dirt on the Biden family.

Q Are you familiar with a Daily Beast article, which is a report on a one-hour interview that they had with Mr. Giuliani?

A I'm not.

Q Okay. We're going to introduce that into the record, because it is a one-on-one interview with him.

A Great.

Q Or it's a report on that. The title of this article -- it's dated October 17, 2020, which was 2 days before your letter was released. The title of the article is, "Rudy:

Only 50/50 Chance I Worked With a 'Russian Spy' to Dig Dirt on Bidens and Ukraine."

This will be introduced as number -- as 15.

[Wood exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And we are going to focus on actually language on page five, which discusses the laptop issue specifically. But take as long as you need to review it.

A Okay.

Q So, sorry, I think we actually have a couple highlighted sentences. We are going to look at the one on page five, which is the last page of the -- so we've highlighted a paragraph -- a sentence here that said, "Giuliani said he viewed his latest leak to the New York Post as an extension of his years-long efforts to work with Ukrainians to dig up dirt on the Bidens." And the latest leak to the New York Post refers to the Biden laptop leak.

Would it have been concerning to you if Giuliani seemingly viewed the leak of the laptop as part of his ongoing work with the Ukrainians to, quote, dig up dirt on the Bidens?

A It would.

Q Why would that be concerning?

A Because it gets to the heart of the issue, whether this is something that has been propped up by the Russians to the disadvantage of the free and fair U.S. elections. So him saying that directly is a pretty profound statement.

Q Are you aware that the White House has warned that Rudy Giuliani was a target of a Russian intelligence operation to feed misinformation --

A I am.

Q -- to President Trump?

Do you recall why you're aware of that?

A There was a New York Times article and a Washington Post article that discussed multiple intelligence officers warning the Trump administration of the targeting of Mr. Giuliani.

Q Is that concerning to you that the Trump administration was warned about Mr. Giuliani being a target of Russian influence operations?

A The warning is something I think has happened in multiple administrations. If you're trying to be -- if someone is being manipulated by adversaries, you would want them to know. That continued is of concern.

Q And why is it a concern that it continued? And when you say it continued, that Mr. Giuliani continued to have interactions with the Russian --

A Yes.

Q -- with the Ukrainians and the Russians? Is that what you're referring to?

A Yes.

Q And why is that a concern?

A Again, it comes back to the fundamental view that U.S. elections needed to be decided by Americans voting their conscience, voting the things that they care about, and not being swayed by allegations prompted by any adversary.

Q So we've talked through some of the factors and some of the evidence that supports what's in the letter. In the earlier hour you were asked if you were aware of any evidence suggesting that the Russians were involved. And I want to turn to some evidence that suggests the Russians may have been involved.

So I want to introduce -- and we have about 10 minutes left. I want to introduce a January 7, 2021, intelligence community assessment. It's entitled, "Foreign Threats to the 2020 U.S. Federal Elections." This will be exhibit 16.

[Wood exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this before?

A I have.

Q Okay. Do you want a minute to review it?

A No.

Q Okay. Can you please turn to, it's the fourth page. As printed, it's Roman numeral one, small one. It's headlined, "Foreign Threats to the 2020 U.S. Federal Elections."

A Okay.

Q There's a highlighted section on there.

Okay. We've highlighted key judgment two, and I'm going read it into the record. It says, we assess that Russian President Putin authorized, and a range of Russian Government organizations conducted, influence operations aimed at denigrating President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party, supporting former President Trump, undermining public confidence in the electoral process, and exacerbating sociopolitical divisions in the U.S.

Unlike in 2016, we did not see persistent Russian cyber efforts to gain access to election infrastructure. We have high confidence in this assess -- in our assessment; Russian state and proxy actors who all serve the Kremlin's interests worked to affect U.S. public perceptions in a consistent manner.

A key element of Moscow's strategy, this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives -- including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden -- to U.S. media organizations, U.S. officials, and prominent U.S. individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration.

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q As an intelligence professional, what does high assessment -- high confidence in our assessment mean?

A That is as good as it gets in the world of intelligence to have a high-confidence judgment.

Q So does that mean that the agencies who contributed to this report have a firm belief that this is likely true?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you flip to the cover page. And this is in small print, but at the bottom it says, this intelligence community assessment was prepared by the National Intelligence Council under the auspices of the National Intelligence Officer, parenthesis, NIO, for cyber. It was drafted by the National Intelligence Council and CIA -- which is a reference to the Central Intelligence Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q DHS, which is the Department of Homeland Security, correct?

A Yes.

Q FBI, which is the Federal Bureau of Investigation, correct?

A Yes.

Q INR, which can you remind me what INR is?

A Oh, that's really good. Intelligence and research.

Mr. Wilson. That's right.

Ms. Wood. Yeah.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q And NSA, which is the national security administration, correct?

A National Security Agency, yes.

Q Agency, I'm sorry. Agency.

A No problem. Acronym soup.

Q And coordinated with CIA, again, the Central Intelligence Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q DHS, the Department of Homeland Security, correct?

A Yes.

Q FBI, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, correct?

A Yes.

Q INR, which is intelligence and research, correct?

A Yes.

Q Treasury, which is the Treasury Department, correct?

A Yes.

Q And NSA, which is the National Security Agency, correct?

A Yes.

Q So if all of these agencies contributed to this and they all have -- would this reference here to high confidence mean that all of these agencies have high confidence in this assessment?

A It does, otherwise they would've taken a footnote.

Q Right. And there's no dissent here noted, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So is it fair to say that every intelligence agency we just talked through has high confidence that Russian President Putin authorized, and that the Russians conducted, a range of influence operations in 2016?

A Yes.

Q Okay. That last sentence of that paragraph -- of that judgment, it says, a key element of Moscow's strategy this election cycle was its use of proxies linked to Russian intelligence to push influence narratives.

Based on what we just talked through, would you agree that Andriy Derkach was a proxy linked to Russian intelligence?

A Yes.

Q Okay. It says including misleading or unsubstantiated allegations against President Biden to U.S. media organizations.

Would you agree that the New York Post is a U.S. media organization?

A I would.

Q U.S. officials and prominent U.S. individuals, including some close to former President Trump and his administration.

Would you agree that Rudy Giuliani is an individual close to former President Trump and his administration?

A Yes, as I understand it.

Q So on its face, do you agree that this assessment as written, in fact, could support a narrative that Rudy Giuliani colluded with the Ukrainians to leak information potentially including the laptop information to the New York Post?

A It could absolutely be the case that's exactly how it happened, and I still want the FBI to do their work --

Q Understood.

A -- right. So I think this gets to the profound concern that we had though, right, is people in this space, including some of the actors involved, both in support of Russia and Russian goals, as well as U.S. officials, have been involved in a variety of other elements of election interference, which is why the laptop became such an issue for us.

Was there a laptop? Yes. Did it belong to Hunter Biden? Yes. It's all the story of what's on it. We don't know and we're still waiting for the FBI to tell us. But it's -- this whole context that you've offered is exactly why we were so concerned. It's the bigger picture.

Q And we had -- we've heard testimony from another individual who said that he thinks the story has not been completely written yet on this issue. Would you agree with that assessment?

A I would agree with that.

Q Okay. And we have -- we can go off the record.

[12:24 p.m.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Back on the record, 12:24 p.m. Ms. Wood, before the -- well, when the Republicans staff and Members of Congress concluded their questions, you had indicated that you spoke to Mr. Morell, and he gave you an apology for keeping you in the dark about his interactions with the Biden campaign. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Specifically, why did you view that as unfair, keeping you and others in the dark about those interactions?

A I think for me, I won't speak for others, but for me, this was really about the sanctity of our elections. And that's what the piece was about, from my perspective. And having the testimony that he offered indicate conversations with others, whether they generated or not, I don't know, it just -- there was an additional factor there that we needed to be aware of in making a decision.

Q Now, when you say, "we need to be aware of him making a decision," do you mean the signatories to the public statement or the American people?

A So for me, the number one issue, again, is Russian interference in elections. And if there was other calculations involved in it, it would have been good to know, and for the other signatories.

Q Okay. So why would it have been vented out?

A Because it has a political element to it that it doesn't otherwise.

Q You're a sophisticated, a former CIA officer?

Mr. Wilson. Ooh.

Ms. Wood. Hey.

Mr. [redacted]. He said it, not me.

Mr. Wilson. Oh, boy.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Look, notwithstanding what you eventually learned about Mr. Morell's involvement with the Biden campaign, you recognize there was a political element in this public statement, particularly, given the timing in which it was released, correct?

A So I think you're very focused on the timing. To me, it was, this is the moment this is happening, not whatever else is happening in the political debate. Right, this is the moment the laptop was coming out. There were salacious allegations all over the place. And the whole thing for me is, let's see what the facts are.

Q Well, if -- well, let me ask you this: If we wanted to see what the facts are, in a public statement that cast question upon Hunter Biden's emails and laptop, that contributed to suppression of that story.

Mr. Lankford. Objection. That's an answer to questions she hasn't been asked. And I don't know. It might be --

Mr. Bishop. I don't know. It might be a leading question, but I don't know. Objections to form are appropriate here.

BY MR. [redacted]

A Sir, can you ask the question again?

Q Yeah, I mean, did you read the committee's report before coming to the interview?

A The interim report?

Q The interim report.

A Yeah.

Q So you read it in its entirety?

A Yes.

Q Is that when you learned that Mr. Morell had dealings with the Biden campaign prior to giving you the call --

A I think he had a press release or something, or before the interim report went out, there was something that was released separately about it.

Q But did you read the actual report?

A Yes.

Q But did you read the actual staff report interim?

A I did.

Q The staff report concludes that there's a direct line between the public statement and the continued suppression of the Hunter Biden laptop and email story, including the underlying allegations in those emails, i.e., that Hunter Biden was influenced peddling perhaps with knowledge of his father. I'll represent to you, based on that report, the conclusions reached in the interim are that the public statement that you helped disseminate contributed to the suppression of that story. Is that your understanding?

A You have represented it to me, so that's coming right back to you. I'm saying to me, if our caution was let's -- I mean, there's a story that running wildfire may be, perhaps, aided by the Russians. Ninety percent of the emails can't be verified. Why not say, Let's let the FBI do their work? It doesn't matter what the public -- I mean, out in the public, it should be what is true. Where are we with facts?

Mr. Bishop. Ms. Wood, let me interject on that point. And you've testified a number of times the notion that you believe the public ought to defer to the FBI to determine what was true about this information concerning Hunter Biden. Why not also apply that to yourselves? Isn't it true that Director Ratcliffe, the Director of National Intelligence, said on the same day your letter came out, that there was no evidence of Russian involvement?

Ms. Wood. He did.

Mr. Bishop. So why not apply our own rule, and you all defer to the officials at the intelligence community?

Ms. Wood. So he said there's no evidence of it. They haven't found it. I did not find that credible.

Mr. Bishop. Well, so I hear you. And I think that's -- but what I'm asking about is, I'm trying to get at the appropriateness of your and your colleagues' involvement. You said that the American people should be content to await the FBI's official version, but you weren't prepared to accept the official version from the intelligence community. Isn't that correct?

Ms. Wood. So, I think what I would say in response to that is that the letter -- the purpose of the letter was to say, Let's not rush to judgment. Everyone, regardless of who they are as Americans, deserves due process. Let's let the FBI do their work. And when DNI Ratcliffe said that -- so as you have seen from all of these investigations, right, they take a very long time to do, to do the considered judgment of 17 or 18 intelligence agencies, and to come up with that to do the exhaustive search of asking new sources, of pulling in every bit of signals intelligence, there's just no way that's possible to have been done in the timeframe in which that statement was made.

So our whole point was to say, Be careful here. Let us -- we don't know if this is all real. We don't know if all the emails are real, and we don't know if this is tied to the Russians. Let's let the process work.

Mr. Bishop. Let me ask you about the list that you provided. You've testified a number of times today that it's commonplace for former national security professionals to make public statements. Do you have a copy of the document that we had copies made during the break in front of you?

Ms. Wood. I do.

Mr. Bishop. Just, first of all, it begins with a question -- isn't that just an allegation? -- in bold text at the top. And then after a paragraph, it has another boldfaced sentence that says: Give us some examples of other letters written by former national security professionals. Forgive my ignorance, it may be very clear to others sitting here, but what's the origin of this? What is this question and answer?

Ms. Wood. This is me being prepared for today.

Mr. Bishop. So you just did an internal preparation contemplating what the subject matter would be?

Ms. Wood. Yeah, I'm sharing my notes with you.

Mr. Lankford. It was for us really.

Mr. Bishop. Well, I appreciate you. I didn't know whether, perhaps, the committee staff had posed a question to you that you had answered.

Ms. Wood. No, no, no. But I do want to touch on something you said that is commonplace. I would not say it's commonplace.

Mr. Wilson. Maybe the same question. How would you characterize the word she used?

Mr. Bishop. Yeah, what are your words? And what bearing does this have on the subject matter --

Ms. Wood. So, I think --

Mr. Bishop. -- in your view?

Ms. Wood. Yeah, so it's -- and I won't characterize all the letters this way, because there's no way that I looked at all the letters. But the ones that I reviewed that are listed here, it is in an inflection point where someone who has served long and hard in some of these positions says we have to be careful. Like all of the living former Secretaries of Defense weren't even involving the military in election disputes in January 2020. In June, 89 former defense officials. Military must never be used to violate constitutional rights. And while I just didn't kill all the trees, I have links to all of these articles. And it has them by name and then whatever their former title was.

And so it goes with the others as well. And so I wouldn't say it's commonplace, but when you have a moment and inflection point related to national security, at times, national security professionals, whether they're from the military, the intelligence community, former Members of Congress, former national security officials, et cetera, former diplomats will do letters like this.

Mr. Bishop. And the ones that you have offered, I'll suggest to you that one of them is misdated. I've looked up each of them myself. The very last one says, January 2021, a statement by more than 100 former national security officials. That goes on to say: We believe that President Trump's refusal to concede the election constitutes a serious threat to America's democratic process. It appears to me that that was issued November 3rd -- or not November 3rd, but in November of 2020.

Ms. Wood. Okay.

Mr. Bishop. Is that possible?

Ms. Wood. Yeah, what's this one? Let's see. It's a different one. Yeah. It's absolutely possible.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. But in any event -- and again, the reason I even get at that is the timeframe covered by the examples you've chosen is 5 years, right?

Ms. Wood. 2016 is the first one. But I just didn't go back further.

Mr. Bishop. And every one of them -- is it coincidental that every one of them is antagonistic to President Trump?

Ms. Wood. Yeah, I don't --

Mr. Bishop. Did your lawyer whisper something to you there? I didn't --

Mr. Wilson. Well, we went through these in some length. For instance, here is a copy of one that's signed by Republicans.

Mr. Bishop. Now, I understand it's not a partisan thing.

Mr. Wilson. Correct.

Mr. Bishop. And I have taken a look at every one of them. My question is still to you, is it a coincidence that they're all antagonistic to President Trump?

Ms. Wood. These are the ones that have been done most recently.

Mr. Bishop. Can you think of any examples, similar examples that are not ones that are antagonistic to President Trump?

Mr. Wilson. Congressman, give us leave, we'll be glad to supplement the record. They go back generations after.

Mr. Bishop. I would like to get her answer, if you don't mind.

Ms. Wood. Yeah, I'd be happy --

Mr. Wilson. Would you give us leave?

Mr. Bishop. I would be delighted to get whatever else you might want to identity. I just want to know if you can identify, in your mind, any examples. You've closed your participation in the thing, the letter that is the subject matter of this inquiry by saying, essentially -- and I don't know what your words are to get it exactly right, but this happens from time to time. This is common or this -- other examples exist. As if to say, I think to validate it, it seems to me to be what you're saying. Insofar as that's true, every example you have given appears to be something where former officials were taking a position antagonistic to President Trump --

Ms. Wood. So --

Mr. Bishop. -- as far as it goes. But I just wanted to for your understanding, or the sense that this is something that happens as a regular occurrence, and can you think of other examples that aren't antagonistic to President Trump?

Ms. Wood. I can absolutely go back and look. These are some of the most recent --

Mr. Bishop. I yield.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, just to -- and we'll come back to Director Ratcliffe's public statement that was released prior to the statement you all put out. But just to sort of conclude with Mr. Morell's apology to you, I'm hearing everything you're saying. This political aspect that we should have known about it, perhaps the American people should have known about it, I think, it's fair to say -- but to that point, if he kept you in the dark, someone with whom he's had this very close relationship all these years, and the majority of the other signatories to the public statement -- he kept the American people in the dark. Is that fair to say?

A I don't know. I think his purpose, his two-fold purpose, right, as he has testified. One is to warn of the election interference, and the second one was to support President Biden. And the second one damages the first one.

Q Why is that?

A Because it creates an impression that isn't inaccurate.

Q The impression is you all want to help Joe Biden become President of the United States?

A Right.

Q But that is Michael Morell's intent?

A I'm sure if you ask all 51 of us, we would largely aligned around Russian interference, but we might have had other intents as well.

Q Well, that raises the question, why not just put that in a letter so the American people can evaluate, Wow, okay, this is interesting, but to help Joe Biden become President. That would have been a more honest statement to the American people. Fair to say?

A I can understand why you would say that; it's just not true for us.

Q Not true for you?

A Not true for me.

Q True for Mr. Morell?

A According to his testimony.

Q Mr. Morell drafted the statement in part with Mr. Polymeropoulos, correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q You did not make any additions to that letter, correct?

A No, I didn't. I made it --

Q Sorry, please. No, no.

A I'm interrupting you. I'm trying to learn.

Q But you had no objections to the letter as written, correct?

A Correct.

Q As you sit here today, do you think the letter should have included a caveat that says, This is to help Vice President Biden become President of the United States?

A It's an interesting question.

Q I'm hoping for an interesting answer.

A I would like a little time to think about that during this hour. Let's come back to it --

Q Sure.

A -- because it's a new thought in my brain, and it's not percolating as fast as it needs to.

Q Okay. We'll come back to it. I'm sure your counsel will remind us if we don't get to it. But in that vein --

Mr. Bishop. Maybe not. I don't think so. You have to remind yourself.

Mr. Lankford. This is a hypothetical one. I think she has a right to mull it over and decide what the right answer is. We want to be correct here and --

Mr. [redacted]. I think we have said as much.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q In that vein, would you have signed the public statement as written then today?

A I don't know.

Q Putting into the record as exhibit 17, the article from Fox News dated October 19, 2020, Ratcliffe says: Hunter Biden laptop email is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign. Here you are. And this is the statement I believe that Congressman Bishop had alluded to moments ago. If you can just review that, the first page in particular. Have you reviewed the first page?

A Yes.

[Wood exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'm going to direct your attention to specific passages in the interest of time.

A Okay.

Q Now this particular copy doesn't indicate it, but we know that the article came out at 8:57 a.m. on October 19, 2020, based upon Director Ratcliffe's appearance on a Fox News program earlier that day?

A The letter or the --

Q No, this article, excuse me. Thank you for clarifying.

A Yes.

Q So this is at least released publicly 12 hours before the public statement that you signed was released in Politico. So the first question: Were you aware of Director Ratcliffe's statement that Hunter Biden's laptop and email was not part of some Russian disinformation campaign prior to the publication of the public statement that you signed?

A No.

Q So on October 19th, 2020, you were unaware that Director Ratcliffe said the Hunter Biden email laptops are not part of some Russian information campaign?

A That's correct.

Q Had you known -- well, withdrawn. Directing your attention to paragraph 4, page 1 of this exhibit. He, meaning Director Ratcliffe, who was at that time the Director of National Intelligence stated: Let me be clear, the intelligence community doesn't believe that because there is no intelligence that supports that. And we have shared no intelligence with Adam Schiff, or any Member of Congress. This is my mistake. I should have went one paragraph up.

So directing your attention to the prior paragraph. Quote: It's funny that some of the people who complain the most about intelligence being politicized are the ones politicizing intelligence, Ratcliffe said. Unfortunately, it is Adam Schiff who said the intelligence community believes Hunter Biden laptop and emails on it are part of a Russian disinformation campaign.

And then if you go down to the fifth paragraph on page 1. Quote: Hunter Biden's laptop is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign, Ratcliffe said, adding, again, that quote: This is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign.

Now, as far as you know, neither you nor any of the other signatories were privy to classified information about Hunter Biden's laptop and emails at the time you all signed the letter, correct?

A As far as I know.

Q As far as you know. Okay. Now, Director Ratcliffe, who was in government at the time, right, and we know the FBI had possession of Hunter Biden's laptop and emails from at least December 2019, were you aware of that?

A I did not know the date, but I few they were in possession of it.

Q At the time the public statement was released?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So sitting here today, because you did not know about this statement at the time, would you have signed the public statement knowing that the government has said that it was not part of any Russian disinformation operation?

A I would not have found this statement credible.

Q Okay. Why?

A The simplest reason is that the FBI is still doing its forensic evaluation, so we don't know the answer yet.

Q Are you aware that the following day the FBI released a statement saying they had nothing to add to Director Ratcliffe's public statement about Hunter Biden's laptop and emails? Is that a yes or no?

A So, no, I'm not aware of that, but I do believe they're still doing their forensic evaluation of it.

Mr. Bishop. What is your basis for belief that the FBI is conducting a forensic evaluation?

Ms. Wood. Whether it would be part of the Russian interference in that campaign in the elections, or on the basis of individuals who may have been involved wittingly or unwittingly and spreading mis- and disinformation, or for the fact of knowing that there's something happening here that's corrupt or not in the interest of the United States Government.

Mr. Bishop. For those reasons, you expect that the FBI would be conducting a forensic evaluation?

Ms. Wood. I would expect.

Mr. Bishop. But beyond expectation based on those premises, you don't any way to know one way or the other?

Ms. Wood. I do not.

Mr. Bishop. If, in fact, the FBI has not conducted a forensic investigation, or has conducted a forensic investigation and has suppressed the results, should the American people continue to defer to the FBI?

Ms. Wood. I think that would be an excellent question to ask the FBI as part of this investigation.

Mr. Bishop. As far as you're concerned the American people, before an election, ought to defer to the FBI, correct?

Ms. Wood. I think even said more simply is I believe that the American people should make their decisions based on facts; should be able to make their decisions based on facts.

Mr. Bishop. But should be deprived -- well -- but you do believe that information that comes out of unknown problems, unknown origin, should be discredited to the end that the American people distrust it, correct, and instead would rely on the FBI?

Ms. Wood. So could you ask that maybe another way?

Mr. Bishop. I think I might have asked that --

Ms. Wood. I got a little lost.

Mr. Bishop. I think it's maybe a little asked and answered, and I am just -- well, let me just make sure I try to get at it in case I haven't before. Do you think the American people should make their elections decision based on facts? That was your statement just a moment ago, correct?

Ms. Wood. Uh-huh.

Mr. Bishop. In order to decide what facts are, you need information, fair?

Ms. Wood. Fair.

Mr. Bishop. And as to this information, the information that came out in the media concerning Hunter Biden's laptop, do you believe that that should be discredited?

Ms. Wood. So did you say "this" or "dis" information? I didn't quite hear it.

Mr. Bishop. This information.

Ms. Wood. This information.

Mr. Bishop. This information should be discredited. You engaged in an effort with other former intel officials to discredit him. Isn't that fair?

Ms. Wood. I think I wouldn't say discredited. I would say, Hold your horses. We don't know. And I think what the letter says: We do not know. But --

Mr. Bishop. But you suggested the possibl --

Ms. Wood. Let the FBI do their work. Because why is it -- how do I ask this? We would all want the American people to make their choices based on their preferences and their beliefs and whatever the facts are in front of them. And we wouldn't want any adversary helping promote facts or invent facts that influence the American people. And I think our purpose in this letter was to say, let's wait until we see what the facts are.

Mr. Bishop. Here's the concern as policymakers: If a body of former intelligence officials use their credibility to discredit, or even suggest disbelief or temporary suspension of belief in information, that may be relevant to an election, that's interference as much as a foreign power sending info through that is spewing information into the process. Would you agree?

Ms. Wood. I would be sorry you feel that way.

Mr. Bishop. Let me ask about that. Are you aware that under precedent of the United States Supreme Court in 1965, that the American people have a constitutional right of access under the First Amendment to foreign propaganda?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mr. Bishop. Do you believe that information, truthful information originates from a foreign power, that the government should prevent its access by the American people?

Ms. Wood. I think government -- I mean, I think truthful information should make it in the hands of the American people regardless of its providence.

Mr. Bishop. Okay. All right. I think I've explored that as far as I can. Thank you.

Ms. Wood. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Wilson. Does that case involve the Foreign Agent Registration Act?

Mr. Bishop. No. It's Lamont v. Postmaster General, 1965. It says that communist propaganda --

Mr. Wilson. I know the case, and it led to the Foreign Agents Registration Act. It said, you can say what you want, but you have to say it on whose behalf you're saying it.

Mr. Bishop. It didn't lead to it in the sense of Foreign Acts Registration Act was enacted in the forties.

Mr. Wilson. The first time.

Mr. Bishop. In 1965. They actually softened, took out the language of propaganda in the mid-1990s.

Mr. Wilson. But you still have to say on whose behalf you're saying it.

Mr. Bishop. Correct.

Mr. Wilson. Okay. I think that's the difference.

Mr. Bishop. But you still can't take this information out of the possession of American people.

Mr. Wilson. That's not -- I am not disputing that. I am saying you have to say on whose behalf you're saying it.

Mr. Bishop. All right, sir. I yield.

Mr. Wilson. Thank you, sir.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, you've testified quite a bit about the importance of the integrity of the American elections, the importance of all the facts getting out. But the concern here, in part, is that by virtue of the issuance of this public statement and the credibility of those who signed it, including their prior credentials and all of their experience, an extremely consequential fact was if not outright suppressed, minimized, marginalized, ignored, that emanated from Hunter Biden's laptop, which is that he works for Burisma, he is making a ton of money, and there's an explosive email that essentially strongly implies he's doing so because of who his father is.

When the letter comes out and casts doubt and makes that quantum of information that the American people should know, don't you believe more harm than good was done with the public statement for the election?

A So I don't -- I haven't read all of the emails in Hunter Biden's laptop. I hope to God no one ever gives me that job because it just sounds awful. So I don't -- I'm not aware of the contents or the one you are specifically referring to. And I'm also not aware of whether that is part of the forensic evaluation is one of the ones that is considered, in that 10 percent, that would be able to be verified. So I wouldn't feel comfortable commenting on that.

Q Why not let the American people decide for themselves whether or not the email is authentic or not?

A Why wouldn't we want them to know whether it is or not because it's gone through a rigorous process.

Q No one is suggesting they shouldn't, but the question becomes, if you all put this out and said, we don't have this information, but it's our strong suspicion that the Russians may be involved, right? And if the so-called fourth estate, the media, is to do its job, right, report on every -- all the facts, or all the alleged facts, or all the information for the American people, and your public statement helped to suppress the vetting of a major Presidential candidate's potential knowledge of influence peddling by his son with a foreign power, why does that not give you pause with respect to your involvement in the public statement?

A So I got a little bit lost in the question.

Q So did I.

A So maybe just --

Q Would you agree that the American people should know if Hunter Biden is working for a foreign company, he is getting paid exorbitant amounts of money, and he is trading it, or he is getting paid because of who his father is; that is a concern for the American people, correct?

A I would agree.

Q That is something they should consider before they opt to elect Hunter Biden's father President of the United States, correct?

A I think that that has to be a factor.

Q Okay.

A And I think the question for me is you characterize news media as being responsible for putting all the information out there, whether it's fact or not.

Q In part.

A Meaning if it's disinformation, if it's misinformation, if it's allegation, if it's supposition, if it's invented propaganda, it's not their job to slice and dice it, I get that. But it is the job of the intelligence community and the Bureau and others to look through all of that. And it takes time to know -- I mean, the considered judgment of the intelligence community came out almost 6 months after the 2016 election, right? So it takes time to do this and to do it properly. And if there is a story there that indicates wrongdoing, if there is crimes that have been committed that absolutely should be prosecuted, but I believe everyone deserved to be processed. Everyone.

Q No one's disputing that, but given the rigor you just said the intelligence community uses to come to judgment, sensible reasonable judgments, surely, you see the committee's concern where a large battery of former intelligence officials, using their title, issue a public statement that cast doubt on this information that the American people should have to evaluate before voting for the next U.S. President. Do you not see that connection?

A So I see it as a caution flag and a runaway story where we didn't have facts. And I think that's what it says in the -- hold on, let me pull up the letter. Third paragraph: Perhaps, most importantly, each of us believes deeply that American citizens should determine the outcome of elections and not foreign governments. And then we want to emphasize -- we do not know if the emails provided to The New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not. And that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement, just that our experience makes us deeply suspicious that the Russian Government played a significant role in this case. So I would characterize it as a caution flag.

Q Are you aware of how -- did you read the Politico article that disseminated the public statement?

A Not contemporaneously.

Q But have you since read it?

A Probably.

Mrs. Spartz. So you were not aware of this article that came out before the debate using your letter?

Ms. Wood. I was in and out of cell phone coverage on travel and then dealing with something that was more important to me at the time.

Mrs. Spartz. When did you see that article the first time?

Ms. Wood. I don't remember.

[Wood exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Okay. I'm entering into the record the Politico article dated October 19, 2020, titled, "Hunter Biden Story is Russian Disinfo, Dozens of Former Intel Officials Say," as exhibit 18. I guess I'll pass this around. Now, Ms. Wood, have you seen this article before?

A I am just going to reread it. It's been a while.

Q Well, I'll tell you that our time is somewhat limited. So I'm introducing it solely for the purpose of the headline. I'm not going to comment one way or the other on the underlying reporting.

A Okay.

Q It reads: Hunter Biden's story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say. And the subheading is, More than 50 former intelligence officials signed a letter casting doubt on the providence of a New York Post story on the former Vice President's son. My first question is, is that what you all did?

A Which part?

Q You cast doubt on the New York Post story involving --

A I say they drew a caution flag.

Q Okay. And you would agree with this headline, Hunter Biden's Story is Russian Disinfo. Is that correct?

A No, I would not agree with that.

Q Why not?

A Because in this letter it did not say that. It just said it could be.

Q Did you take any -- well, what is your opinion on this headline. Is it accurate?

A It's not accurate.

Q Okay. Would you say it's dishonest?

A I think it's leading. And I think to your point earlier about media needs to say whatever is out there, this is that school of thought. It's make it dramatic, make it salacious, make headlines.

Q Did you take any measures to correct this headline?

A No.

Mr. Wilson. Were you aware of the headline when it came out?

Ms. Wood. Not at the time. And, I mean, I was dealing with a pretty profound issue in my family, and this was not on my list of things that I was going to be able to focus on.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q And I want to be very respectful of that. So accepting your answer. Had you known at the time, would you have made any efforts to correct this headline?

A I would have talked to Michael about it.

Q Okay. Why?

A So I tend to be a bit politically naive. I'm really focused on being a national security professional. And the politics of things, I don't always get. The Hunter Biden story is Russian Disinformation, I think, there would be a lot to go back and say it's concerned about Russian disinformation to want to characterize it that way. Because I think accuracy is always better.

Q You can understand the concern, though, that this headline, right, it's popping up on all types of people's cell phones, people reading about the election. It's only days before the debate between Vice President Biden and President Trump. You can understand the concern that people will just use this as shorthand to say, Ah, the Hunter Biden laptop, emails, and the allegations against his dad, that's disinfo. We don't have to consider that. Is that a sensible conclusion that some people would reach given this article?

A So I think a little bit it feels like you want to have it both ways, right? People need to have complete access to what's out there. However, it gets spun in the media, however it does, whether it's disinformation, whether it's Russian information operations, they sit -- sit until it filters out for themselves. I don't think adding -- I don't agree with that in principal, and then this is another good example of why it's not -- doesn't serve the interest of the American public. And I think accuracy and being more judicious and careful is really important.

Chairman Jordan. That is the point, Ms. Wood. They didn't have it both ways. This article got to circulate and move, shared likes with the whole country. And because of your letter, the other one got suppressed in many ways. That's the concern that I think the committee has. Can I go back for a second?

Mr. [redacted]. Of course, sir.

Chairman Jordan. You were aware of Mr. Ratcliffe's statement on that morning. Is that right?

Ms. Wood. No. Sometime afterwards.

Chairman Jordan. So you didn't know about it beforehand. Do you agree with what Mr. Ratcliffe had to say on the morning of October 19th, 2020?

Ms. Wood. I didn't find it credible.

Chairman Jordan. And why didn't you find the statement from the Director of National Intelligence credible?

Ms. Wood. As you may know from maddening experience, it can take quite a long time for the intelligence community to come to a considered judgment on a big issue like this. And that time just hadn't happened yet.

Chairman Jordan. Do you know what Mr. Ratcliffe, what intel he may have had in front of him?

Ms. Wood. I do not.

Chairman Jordan. So you're just completely guessing that he didn't have any information that would allow him to make that -- to reach the conclusion he reached and tell the country which turned out to be accurate?

Ms. Wood. So survey in the intelligence community takes weeks, in and of itself, to find out do we have information like this. Then the Politico -- the process of doing a document like this and making a statement like that takes a lot longer than something that's happening so quickly. So that's why --

Chairman Jordan. How long would it take? Months, you said?

Ms. Wood. It depends upon how big the topic is. It can take weeks at most. At weeks, very fewest, and months if more. Are you going to task sources? Are you going to ask questions of people who might have knowledge about it? So that would take longer.

Chairman Jordan. And you don't think that could have happened?

Ms. Wood. There wasn't enough time.

Chairman Jordan. Even though you had the laptop, the FBI had the laptop 10 months prior?

Ms. Wood. So I don't think the -- the FBI, I don't know when they published their findings. When that process -- right, if there's a classified finding, I'm not aware of. But, there's some --

Chairman Jordan. Well, I'm just making the point. The government had the laptop almost a year before Mr. Ratcliffe made his statement. And you said there's no way he could have known, but you have nothing to base that on. And they actually had access to the laptop itself.

Ms. Wood. So the Bureau would have had access to it, right? It took them some time to do the forensic analysis. Maybe it's been done, and it's been classified, and it's released, I don't know. But there's some period in that 10-month time that that was involved in. Then you've got to have the intelligence community, national security, and all the community react to that.

Chairman Jordan. Could that have happened in 10 months?

Ms. Wood. Oh, perhaps.

Chairman Jordan. Well, you just --

Ms. Woods. It would have given --

Chairman Jordan. It could be as short as a few weeks, it can be as long as months. And I am just saying, could it have happened in 10 months?

Ms. Wood. On this issue, I don't believe so.

Chairman Jordan. You don't believe so?

Ms. Wood. Huh-uh

Chairman Jordan. Even though they had it in the report 10 months beforehand?

Mr. Lankford. Has the FBI issued a report on the analysis of the computer? I don't think they still have, have they? At least I have tried to track it.

Chairman Jordan. Well --

Mr. Lankford. We could all agree that that's an abysmal commentary on the FBI, but it hasn't happened.

Chairman Jordan. But that wasn't my question. I asked the question, and she should respond.

Mr. Lankford. Well, yes, she is saying, you know, we don't have a final result. That's what she is saying. Bottom line.

Chairman Jordan. But we don't know what Mr. Ratcliffe knew what he had access to after the government having the laptop for 10 months.

Are you aware of any protests by Hunter Biden or his lawyers suggesting anything on the laptop was fake?

Ms. Wood. No. No, I'm not aware.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Why did you find Director Ratcliffe's -- now that you're aware of his statement -- why was that not credible, because it's Director Ratcliffe?

A No, I just explained to the chairman.

Q Well, I say this because we are getting -- I'll represent to you that this has been a consistent theme, nobody found it credible. If it was Director Clapper who issued the same statement that the email laptops were not Russian disinformation, would you please find that credible?

A So what I would have expected, what is normal course for any senior leader to talk about any topic is here is our judgment, and here is what it's based on. And there's oftentimes some pros and cons with higher or lower competence. But blanket statements, I don't recall ever seeing one that's a simple blanket statement like that.

Q So if Director Clapper made the same statement, you would find it not credible?

A If he made that statement, yes.

Q Okay. Okay. I'm entering into the record partial transcript of the Presidential debate of October 22nd, 2020, between Vice President Biden and President Trump as exhibit No. 19. I'm going to direct your attention to the second page, Ms. Wood. Nine up from the bottom. And I'll read for the record.

[Wood exhibit No. 19

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. Do you have extra exhibits?

Mr. [redacted]. Sorry. That's my fault.

Ms. Wood. Which one is it?

Mr. [redacted]. The second page, nine up from the bottom.

Mr. Wilson. Nine lines up?

Mr. [redacted]. Say it again?

Mr. Wilson. Nine lines up?

Mr. [redacted]. When I say nine, let's call these paragraphs where they have the names bolded. And let's say nine up from the bottom. It says: Trump: It's the laptop from hell. Are we all on the same page, so to speak? Okay.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q So I'll read that.

"Trump: It's the laptop from hell. Welker --" who is presumably the moderator" -- President Trump, we're talking about race right now, and I do not to -- I do want to stay on the issue of race, President Trump. Biden: Nobody -- Kristin, I have to respond to that. Welker: Please, very quickly. Biden: Quote, look, there are 50 former national intelligence folks who said that what this, he's accusing me of is a Russian plan. They have said that this has all the characteristics for five former heads of the CIA. Both parties say what he's saying is a bunch of garbage. Nobody believes it except him and his good friend, Rudy Giuliani." End quote.

Do you understand that to reference the public statement that you and the 50 other former intelligence officials signed?

A I do.

Q Okay. So was that an accurate characterization of the public statement that you signed?

A No.

Q Why not?

A Because what we said was it could be part of the broader Russian disinformation campaign we saw happening in the 2020 election.

Q Do you have a critique of what Vice President Biden said beyond that?

A Well, so this is where intelligence analysts are kind of pains in the butt because, you know, characterizing as the laptop from hell, or characterizing it the way either candidate did isn't accurate, right? So --

Q Well, the laptop is not from hell, right, presumably?

A Presumably.

Q But focusing on President Biden's characterization.

A Yeah, so this is a political translation of an intelligence judgment.

Q But it's inaccurate. Is that fair to say?

A It is.

Q So then it's also fair to say that Vice President Biden took the public statement that you and 50 others signed and mischaracterized it to the American people only days before the 2020 Presidential election, correct?

A So you're saying that, and I absolutely agree with that comment.

Q Okay.

A And, you know, just as candidate Trump said it's the laptop from hell, mischaracterizing it to the American public.

Q So I'll ask now, having reviewed this, do you have any regrets about signing the public statement as you sit here today?

A So about what has become, yes. Right? When this was at the time, 2-1/2 years ago, it was a letter to say, Let the FBI do their work, which to me seemed as obvious as the sun rises to throw a caution flag to say, Let's not rush to judgment in any way, shape, or form. But what I have been through personally as a result of this, the personal attacks, the threats, the harassment that has happened as part of this, it's horrific. And it gets to this polarization of all of us, in part, directed by our adversaries. And so, it's a yes with a whole bunch of explanation as to why.

Chairman Jordan. It was used exactly as Mr. Morell intended it to be used, though, wasn't it?

Ms. Wood. I can't answer that for him.

Chairman Jordan. Well, you said earlier when you had a conversation with him that he apologized to you for the political nature of it. I assume you accepted that apology. But this is exactly how he intended it to be used in a political fashion. At the debate, he wanted to give President Biden a talking point against President Trump. Isn't that accurate?

Ms. Wood. I can't comment on that.

Chairman Jordan. That's what he said in his email.

Ms. Wood. You'd have to ask him.

Chairman Jordan. And I know you said you talked to him about the political nature of the statement that you all signed, and that he apologized to you for not letting you know how political it was. That was my read on what you said earlier today.

Ms. Wood. That is what I said.

Chairman Jordan. You referenced the forensic evaluation by the FBI. When it comes to matters relating to President Trump, should Americans trust the FBI?

Ms. Wood. I think it should trust the FBI period.

Chairman Jordan. Even in light of what Mr. Durham's report said last week?

Ms. Wood. So I read Mr. Durham's report. But, I mean, I read the Iraq, SSCI's Iraq post war, prewar intelligence review that led to a fundamental transformation of how the IC does its work. I think we can always do better. Absolutely always do better in Federal institutions. And not knowing the specifics of the Durham report, it sounds like it's a call to be better. Because --

Chairman Jordan. It sure is. Yeah, it sure is. So you still have no problem trusting the FBI when it comes to matters like this, headquarters related to this kind of thing involving Presidential candidates, you have no problem trusting them?

Ms. Wood. Their forensic work is just outstanding. And so, I believe if that is part of what their working on, that they will come up with whatever the data is there and whatever is truthful or not. I would just expect it would be a larger conversation with the Hill and elsewhere to get to the bottom of it.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. We'll have that conversation.

Mr. Lankford. Counting on you.

Ms. Wood. No, I mean, really, we have to do this, right, because this whole thing created a huge schism in 2016 and 2020. And we -- I hate to see our adversaries getting the upper hand and -- you know, if I had a chance to see President Putin, I would love to --

Chairman Jordan. Well, I hate to see this country so divided. I share that concern.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, directing your attention back to the debate, did you watch it?

A I did not.

Q Okay. Did you read reports about it at the time?

A No, I mean, I was in Maine, and I was in mountains. And I probably read something later, but not contemporaneously.

Q Okay. I'm putting into the record an email from Kristin W to Gregory Tarbell dated October 23, 2020, at 3:02:06 a.m.

Mr. Wilson. Is this exhibit 20?

Mr. [redacted]. 10/23/2020.

Mr. Wilson. Is this exhibit 20?

Mr. [redacted]. This is exhibit 20, excuse me.

[Wood exhibit No. 20

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I would ask you to read the entire page, Ms. Wood.

A Uh-huh, okay.

Q So is this an email that you sent to Gregory Tarbell?

A It is.

Q So the prior email from Mr. Tarbell says: TP worked well during the debate. Great idea, guys. Is that correct?

A It does.

Q And it looks like you responded: That was really cool, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. What did -- well, first, did you write that?

A I wrote that.

Q Okay. What was really cool and why?

A Throwaway line.

Q Meaning?

A Meaning I'm in the middle of other things, that was really cool.

Q Well, as to your recollection, were you aware that Vice President Biden referenced the letter and then characterized it as he did when you responded to Mr. Tarbell's email?

A Yeah.

Q Okay.

A But I hadn't read the content.

Q The content of what?

A The debate.

Q Of what Biden said?

A Yeah.

Q So I just want to be clear for the record. So when you said, that was really cool, it was -- you weren't commenting on the substance that he referenced the letter that you all participated in issuing?

A It was a throwaway line like I'm just responding to him.

Q Okay. But you could see how reading it today it looks like --

A I absolutely see that.

Q -- right. It looks, Hey, you were like excited that they -- he mischaracterized your letter, and he got the upper hand on this point. I mean, that's a fair reading looking at with all the evidence the committee has before it.

A I would disagree with it.

Mr. Lankford. Objection. That's your opinion.

Ms. Wood. It is your opinion.

Mr. Lankford. It's not hers.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q And your opinion is what?

A My opinion is I was in the middle of dealing with something with my son, and I'm on my phone in Maine. And, you know, responding to something that's innocuous that I hadn't even got involved in.

Mrs. Spartz. But at that time you realized that it was politically used, that letter, correct?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mrs. Spartz. So TP worked well during that debate. You said, until recently you had no idea that that actual letter's been used in the debate in any way? When did you learn about that then?

Ms. Wood. So I think it was several days. I don't remember what it was. But Michael sent a note out. He sent this note out. I think he said something else. I said very cool, too. Like, I'm just kind of trying to make this go away because I've got other stuff to do. This isn't a job, this was a favor.

Mrs. Spartz. But when did you learn that it was politically used?

Ms. Wood. I don't remember.

Mrs. Spartz. I mean, it was within a few days after this debate, or within a few months, or after the election?

Ms. Wood. It definitely wasn't after the election before then.

Mrs. Spartz. Or have you talked to and then brought that issue to people that prepared this letter and raised an issue with that?

Ms. Wood. I have not.

Mrs. Spartz. So you didn't have concerns until recently that it was politically used?

Ms. Wood. It just didn't register. It just didn't register with me at the time. I was so profoundly concerned about my son that I just -- I mean, like all this stuff just had to go away. And so throwing away a throwaway line that people stopped bothering me -- very cool, that was cool, just, like, leave me alone.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I want to direct your attention to the same exhibit email from Mr. Morell?

A Uh-huh.

Q The last paragraph.

A Uh-huh.

Q I think this is the most important election since 1860 and 1864 when the very existence of the country was on the ballot. Now, it is our democracy and the Constitution that are on the ballots. We all, of course, took an oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution. I think all of you did that yesterday by signing the letter. Thank you. Do you recall receiving that email?

A I do.

Q Okay. Do you share Mr. Morell's opinion on the importance of the 2020 election?

A I think it was very important. I actually think all of our elections are very important.

Q Okay. Okay. Excuse me. Well, let be me very clear. Do you share his view that the election of 2020 is the most important since 1860 and 1864 during the Civil War?

A I am sorry, but I am not an election historian. Like I haven't studied U.S. election history, so I wouldn't feel qualified to comment.

Q That's fair enough as it goes. But you recognize the timeframe as the American Civil War, correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q And we're just trying to completely understand everyone's motivation as to how they came to this public statement, what their intentions were. Clearly, you're saying their intent was different from Mr. Morell's as it relates to making Joe Biden become the next Presidential candidate. So when we read something like this, we're just trying to get a sense of where everyone stood. It just helps the committee have a full record. Do you share this view?

A I think it was an enormously consequential election. I think I have seen many of them. And I wildly agree we took an oath to preserve and protect to defend the Constitution, right? So it's this idea that we all get due process.

Q Okay. Were you pleased with the results, the outcome of the 2020 election?

Mr. Wilson. That's a private -- she doesn't have to answer that question.

Mr. [redacted]. It's voluntary. She doesn't have to answer the question.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Is it fair to say you did not want President Trump to become President?

Mr. Wilson. You don't have to answer that question.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. Well, certainly Mr. Morell answered that question. He was coordinating with the Biden campaign.

Mr. Wilson. Well, then ask Mr. Morell.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ultimately, were you satisfied that the public -- well, let me ask you this: In your view, did the public statement you and others signed help contribute to the election of Joe Biden to be President of the United States?

A No. I don't think it was that important.

Q Are you aware that former Attorney General Bill Barr stated that he believes that the election was so close that public statement may have very well got Joe Biden elected President?

A I am not aware of that.

Chairman Jordan. Let me go back, Ms. Wood, to your response. You said, That was really cool. And I understand understood what you said. We certainly appreciate the situation you're dealing with in your family. But what does "that" reference?

Ms. Wood. I have no idea.

Chairman Jordan. So what --

Ms. Wood. I mean, it looks like it's a reference to the below. All I could say is I'm trying to get these people to leave me alone. Like coordinating or sending notes out as a favor for a friend in the middle of lots of other things in my life, I just needed it to stop.

Chairman Jordan. Fair enough. But I would say most people would have said, Thank you. I hope you are well, Mr. Tarbell. You didn't say that. You said "that," in reference I would assume to what he sent you, which is talking points work well during the debate. And you said, "That was really cool." And I am just asking what ask is "that"? The word "that" refer to? Does it refer to what I think anyone looking at this exchange would conclude it refers to or doesn't it?

Mr. Lankford. Object to the form of the question; testifying.

Chairman Jordan. Does it refer to your point --

Mr. Lankford. Do you remember?

Ms. Wood. I don't. I just don't remember.

Mr. Lankford. Thank you.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mrs. Spartz. Within this here in this email, you know, it says: Politico did a nice job getting out the story of our letter. Here is a link to the article for those who have not seen it. Have you looked at the title of that article?

Ms. Wood. I don't recall that I was on -- in and out of WiFi for days. This just wasn't on my list of after action. Like it didn't matter to me.

Mrs. Spartz. But when you looked at it, did you see the report and Natasha Bertrand, are you familiar with her?

Ms. Wood. I don't know who she is.

Mrs. Spartz. You never heard about in The Washington Post story that he bootstraps [inaudible] on MSNBC, you are not aware about her?

Ms. Wood. I don't know who she is.

Mrs. Spartz. You never talked to her?

Ms. Wood. No.

Mrs. Spartz. So you generally learned about the article later and didn't give any significance to anything?

Mr. Lankford. She remembers the threats she has gotten. Do you want to ask her about those?

Mrs. Spartz. No, I'm just about, specifically, the article. You didn't think much of it?

Ms. Wood. Which article?

Mrs. Spartz. You know, the Politico article. You did care that it was used and how it was at all. Like, you just wrote the letter, article, debate -- you don't care at all. You put your name with your credential to information that you didn't really check, and the people say you discuss, and you generally say, Well, too bad, I don't have time, but I still was putting my time on there. Is that kind of how you can characterize?

Ms. Wood. No, I don't. I would not characterize it that way at all. I think I don't -- I would not characterize this that way at all. I think that's wildly unfair.

Mrs. Spartz. How would you characterize your not doing due diligence, not looking how it was used with the debate, and --

Ms. Wood. So there were 51 people who signed this letter, many of them what I call what we call seniors, right, and former leaders of organizations. And my job was logistics. The thing I did was send it out for other people to sign. I didn't write it. I didn't edit it. Like the politics of this were not my thing. I don't -- I'm just not that good at a political thing. The whole point for me was to get the message out that we needed to be cautious on this because it was yet another -- potentially yet another way that Russians were interfering in our elections. And so, the outcome afterwards, whatever, it didn't matter to me.

Mrs. Spartz. But did you learn about the politics before or after the election that it was politics involved in this?

Ms. Wood. After the election, more recently, and contemporaneous with all of this.

Mrs. Spartz. So you truly believe it was just pure, not political before no one raised to you that it could have been politically used?

Ms. Wood. It just wouldn't be a way -- we don't -- I mean, as national security professionals, it's very rare of CIA in any way to talk about politics in any way.

Mrs. Spartz. Okay.

Mr. [redacted]. I think that's our time. Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[1:34 p.m.]

Ms. [redacted]. We're back on the record.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q All right. So I want to start out by cleaning up some misrepresentations that were made in the last hour.

With respect to what Mr. Morell's purpose may or may not have been -- or his impetus for writing the letter, you said you learned about that from the majority's report, correct?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q Okay. Are you aware that the majority's --

Mr. Wilson. Say "yes" or "no."

Ms. Wood. Oh, sorry. Yes.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Sorry. I should have caught that as well.

Are you aware that the majority's report did not fully quote Mr. Morell?

A No.

Q Okay. So I want to read into the record the full statement. So I believe the majority's report quoted Mr. Morell as saying that he had received an email from Mr. Blinken -- who was, at that time, a member of the campaign -- who had provided him with a link to the laptop story or sent him the laptop story.

Mr. Morell said repeatedly that Mr. Blinken -- nobody -- neither Mr. Blinken nor anyone else from the campaign actually asked him to write the letter. And here's the language. The question was asked, actually, by majority counsel during his interview.

"When he called you," meaning Mr. Blinken, "did he direct, suggest, or insinuate in any way that you should write a letter or statement on this topic?"

And Mr. Morell responded, "My memory is that he did not, right? My memory is that he asked me what I thought."

The question then was, "Okay. It wasn't. The campaign could use some help on this. Could you" --

Mr. Morell answered, "He did not say that."

The question was asked continuing, "Could you cook up something that we could use?"

Mr. Morell answered, "It's not my memory that he said that."

The question was asked, "Why do you believe he called you, then, and asked for your opinion on this?"

Mr. Morell said, "You know, Tony and I were fairly close. I mean, I wouldn't say we were close friends, but Tony and I were fairly close. During our time in government when he was the Vice President's national security advisor and then when he was President Obama's national security advisor, I would be the person he would reach out to with those kind of questions. When we saw each other post the Obama administration, we would have conversations about what was going on in the world. He would ask me questions. So it was, in part, natural, you know, for him to do that. But, you know, he asked me a specific question here. You know, he'll have to tell you what his intent was, right, in asking me."

So I just wanted to correct the record on that. Was that information available to you before I read it to you just now?

A Huh-uh.

Q Okay. Can you say "yes" or "no" for the record?

A No.

Q Thank you.

On the question of keeping you in the dark -- and I realize you had a lot going on at this time, but I do want to just look at two exhibits where he did make that -- potentially make this information available to people that received the email.

So do you want to turn to exhibit Number 5? And this is the email from Michael Gmail New, which I'll represent to you is Mr. Morell's email address, to Mark Polymeropoulos, and then others were bcc'd.

A Uh-huh.

Q The second -- I guess it's the first full paragraph after the "to all." It reads, "Marc and I drafted the attached" -- which is a reference to the attached statement -- "because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate, and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response." Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q So recognizing, again, you had a lot going on. You maybe had not read this clearly. Maybe you didn't receive this directly.

But he did make that clear to at least some of the recipients of the letter, correct?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. And then if you can turn to exhibit -- sorry. Which exhibit? Exhibit 7. Sorry.

This is the email chain between you and Mr. Slick -- you and Mr. George that was then forwarded to Mr. Slick.

A Got it.

Q So the last email -- and this is the version that we introduced, the complete chain.

A Okay.

Q The last email, which is on the last page, you forwarded the email along, and you forwarded that language from Mr. Morell saying, "We think Trump will attack Biden on this issue at this week's debate, and we want to offer perspectives on this from Russia watchers and other seasoned experts."

So the fact that it was potentially going to come up in the debate, it was known -- and, again, I realize you had a lot going on, but it was -- Mr. Morell wasn't trying to hide the ball on that necessarily. Is that fair to put it that way?

A I would put it that he said this, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A "Offer perspectives on this from Russia watchers and other seasoned experts."

Q Okay.

A That's the part I remember.

Q Okay. But he wasn't hiding the fact that it was coming up in the context of the debate. Is that fair to say?

A True.

Q Okay. Okay. I'm going to move on to the Politico article that was discussed. And when the majority brought it up, they said they just wanted to focus on the headline. I actually want to look at the rest of the article.

A Okay.

Q So if you'll turn the page away from the headline. The very first paragraph, you see that it says, "More than 50 former senior intelligence officials have signed on to a letter outlining their belief that the recent disclosure of emails allegedly belonging to Joe Biden's son, quote, "has all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation," end quote.

Do you see where "signed on to a letter" is written in blue?

A It is.

Q I'll represent to you that that's a link to the -- a hyperlink to the actual letter.

A Uh-huh.

Q So in the text of this article, the very first line actually links to the letter that said exactly what you said. It didn't have any commentary. It was the letter itself. Is that fair to say?

A If you are representing that that's the link, then yes.

Q Okay. And then it quotes you as saying, "It has all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation," not that it was an actual Russian information operation.

A Yes.

Q Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q If you'll turn the page. So this is page 3 out of 7 as this article is printed out. The paragraph right in the middle begins, "Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe."

A Uh-huh.

Q That references John Ratcliffe's statement, right? It says, "Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe said on Monday that the information on Biden's laptop is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign, though the FBI is reportedly conducting an ongoing investigation into whether Russia was involved," right?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q Sorry. For the record.

A Yes.

Q So this actually says -- it actually directly references John Ratcliffe's statement in the text of the article. Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q And I will represent to you that the hyperlink to "said on Monday" is a link to Mr. Ratcliffe's remarks themselves, just the way there's a link earlier to your letter itself.

A Uh-huh. Okay.

Q And then if you'll turn the page again, in the middle of the -- sorry. It looks like you have --

A No. Is the hyperlink, "FBI is reportedly conducting an ongoing investigation" --

Q It's a hyperlink to a Politico article about the FBI conducting an ongoing investigation.

A Okay.

Mr. Lankford. And that demonstrates my point that the FBI reached no conclusion.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q As far as -- I mean, I think we had testimony earlier that the story is still being written on that. So I think it's fair to say, if you'll agree, that the FBI, to my knowledge, has not put out anything public, and you've testified that, to your knowledge, the FBI has not put out anything public.

A That's correct.

Q If you'll turn the page, on page 4 of 7, which is -- let's see. That paragraph right in the middle. It says, "We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani are genuine or not, and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement," the letter reads.

So that directly quotes to the portion of your letter where you say you don't have -- you don't know if the emails are authentic or not, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So whatever the headline of this article says, the body of the article references both John Ratcliffe's statement, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it references the text of your letter that explains that you don't have access to nonpublic information. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. I want to talk about -- we talked about John Ratcliffe fairly extensively in the prior hour, and I want to touch on him again briefly.

You said that you did not find his statement credible in part because it was released 5 days after the New York Post story, correct?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q And it was released -- we walked through the Fox News article on October 19th, 2020, correct?

A Yes.

Q Which was actually the day before the second debate, correct?

A Yes.

Q Did Mr. Ratcliffe's statement have any disclaimer in it that it was being released in advance of the debate?

A No.

Q Did he say that publicly that he was doing that to give President Trump a talking point to use at the debate?

A No.

Q And Trump, in fact, did reference the, quote, laptop from hell at the debate, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So it's entirely possible that Ratcliffe made his remarks in the hope that they would impact the debate. Is that fair to say?

A I wouldn't speculate.

Q But it's possible?

A It's possible.

Q Okay. Are you aware that on September 29th, 2020, Mr. Ratcliffe also released information about Hillary Clinton that has been widely acknowledged to be Russian disinformation by both Special Counsel Mueller and the then Republican-led Senate Intelligence Committee?

A I am not.

Q Okay. I am going to introduce as exhibit 21 -- is that right -- a New York Times article entitled, "Top intelligence official releases unverified, previously rejected Russia information." And we are going to look at the very first paragraph of this article.

A Okay.

[Wood exhibit No. 21

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And let me know when you're ready.

A Is there a particular part?

Q So I'm going to look at the very -- we're going to look at the very first two paragraphs.

A Okay.

Q I'm sorry. Actually, the first three paragraphs.

Are you ready to continue?

A Yes.

Q So according to this article, on September 29th, Mr. Ratcliffe, who was then the Director of National Intelligence, released unverified information about the 2016 campaign that was said to be disclosed over the objections of career intelligence officials, who were concerned that the material could be Russian disinformation. Is that fair to say?

A That's what the sentence says.

Q And according to this article -- are you aware that September 29th, 2020, was just 35 days before the November 3rd, 2020 election?

A No.

Q Okay. And are you aware that September 29th was also the day of the first Presidential debate?

A No.

Q Okay. So according to this article, Mr. Ratcliffe actually released this information, which appeared to be a bid to help Mr. Trump, hours in advance of that Presidential debate? Do you have any reason to doubt the veracity of this article?

A So that information was released. I don't doubt that. So this is where I get to the content, right? My concern would be over the objections of career intelligence officials.

Q Uh-huh. Understood.

But it's without a question that he did release information designed to impact the election hours before the first debate, right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Mr. Ratcliffe was the Director of National Intelligence in September 2020, correct?

A He was.

Q Would you agree that it's inappropriate for the Director of National Intelligence to be engaging in partisan activities or trying to impact the election while sitting in his office? I mean, while an active official?

A I would say it's unprecedented, to my knowledge, and not having -- where I'm reluctant to comment is not having access to the backstory of how this came about. But in general, when these kinds of things come out, timing isn't considered. It's, you know, when do I need to say what. So the timing is quite suspicious, and I'd want to know more.

Q Okay. And I can tell you that our members would also like to know more.

To your knowledge, is this committee or the House Intelligence Committee investigating Mr. Ratcliffe's actions?

A I do not know.

Q Okay. And I can represent to you that they are not.

I want to move on. There was a lot of discussion earlier about suppression and the suppression of the New York Post story.

The majority's report -- have you read the majority's report or their interim report?

A I have.

Q So you're aware that their interim report references --

Ms. Wood. I said I have. I said it out loud.

Mr. Wilson. Okay. It sounded pretty mumbled over here.

Ms. Wood. Sorry.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q So are you aware that the majority's reference to suppression is a reference to social media companies' reaction to the New York Post story?

A I assumed that's what they meant.

Q Okay. Sorry. One moment.

So your letter was published on October 19th, 2020, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the date of the New York Post story?

A No.

Q Okay. I'll represent to you that it was October 14th, 2020.

Are you familiar with the date that Twitter suppressed the story?

A No.

Q Okay. We're going to introduce as exhibit 22 a New York Times story, which was published on October 16th, 2020, and it's entitled, "In reversal, Twitter is no longer blocking New York Post article."

[Wood exhibit No. 22

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Lankford. When you say "your letter," I assume we all know --

Ms. [redacted]. Sorry. The October 19th public letter. Thank you. I should be more specific.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Have you seen this before?

A I have not.

Q Okay. Do you want a minute to review it?

A Sure.

Q Okay.

You ready to continue?

A Uh-huh.

Q So according to this article, by October 16th, 2020, Twitter was no longer doing anything to prevent the sharing of the New York Post story. Is that correct?

A That's what the article says, yes.

Q So if the public letter that you signed was released on October 19th, 2020, there's no way it could have had any impact on Twitter's decision regarding the story either way, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the day that Facebook took steps to limit sharing of the story?

A No.

Q Okay. I'm going to introduce as exhibit 23 an October 15th, 2022 article from Business Insider.

[Wood exhibit No. 23

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q It's entitled, "The New York Post's dubious Hunter Biden article was shared 300,000 times on Facebook even after the company said it limited its reach." And I'll give you a minute to read through this?

A Okay.

Q Okay. So according to this article, Facebook made the decision to attempt to limit the sharing of this article at least by October 15th, 2020. And I think it says it was on Wednesday morning, which would have been the 14th. Is that accurate?

A Yes, that's what it says.

Q So, again, if the letter that you signed was published on October 19th, there is no way that it could have impacted Facebook's decision to limit sharing of that article, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And in fact, on page 4 -- the last paragraph on this page -- it says that Facebook's approach was in accordance with a policy it implemented in late 2019, correct?

A Yes.

Q So it was not in reaction to your article, correct?

A Yes.

Q Or the letter you signed, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Now, with respect to media companies more broadly, are you aware that Rudy Giuliani actually first approached Fox News and asked them to report on the alleged laptop?

A No.

Q And are you aware that Fox News declined to run the story because it had credibility concerns with that story?

A No.

Q Okay. We'll introduce as exhibit 24 an October 19th, 2020 story entitled "Exclusive: Fox News passed on Hunter Biden laptop story over credibility concerns."

[Wood exhibit No. 24

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q I actually want to note not just the date of this article but the time stamp of this article. The time stamp on this article is 11:42 a.m.

A Okay.

Okay.

Q Okay. So according to this article, Giuliani approached Fox News with the story, and Fox News had concerns both about the lack of authentication of the laptop and established concerns about Giuliani as potentially not being a reliable source, right?

A That's what it says, yes.

Q So Fox News had passed on the story. Again, we don't know when that was, but we know this article was published at 11:42 in the morning on October 19th, 2020.

The Politico article, which published your letter publicly -- the October 19th letter publicly -- was published at 10:30 p.m. EDT on the 19th, correct?

A Yes.

Q So if your article -- if the letter that you signed came out after this article was even published, Fox News must have passed on the story well before your public letter was made public, correct?

A Yes, correct.

Q So it could not have impacted the Fox News decision?

A Correct.

Q And in fact, a number of Fox News anchors are cited in here as saying, for example, let's not -- let's say just not sugarcoat it. This whole thing is sketchy.

That's a quote from Bret Baier, correct?

A That's what it says, yes.

Q And Chris Wallace called the story suspicious and said, "I can understand the concern about the story. It is completely unverified, and frankly, Rudy Giuliani is not the most reliable source anymore. I hate to say it, but it's just true," correct?

A Yes.

Q So clearly, a number of -- a number of Fox News anchors had expressed concerns about the story well before any letter from you or anyone -- from you or any of your cosigners had come out?

A Yes.

Q Okay. All right. All right.

We've discussed the timing of the letter fairly extensively.

A Uh-huh.

Q On October 19th, 2020, you were a private citizen, correct?

A That's right.

Q Mr. Morell was a private citizen?

A Yes.

Q Even Mr. Blinken was a private citizen, correct?

A I --

Q He was a member of the Biden campaign?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And to your knowledge, were all of the signatories of the October 19th letter private citizens?

A Yes.

Q Would you agree that, as a private citizen, you have a right to sign a public letter like that?

A A First Amendment right.

Q Okay. And would you agree that the First Amendment protects and continues to protect -- protected then and continues to protect now your right to make statements such as those contained in the public letter?

A I would.

Q Okay. To the extent that there has been some suggestion made today that you do not have the right to engage in that type of political speech or that you do not have the right to use your title when engaging in that political speech, do you agree that would amount to potentially censoring your ability to make public comments?

A That's a great way to describe it.

Q Okay. You talked through earlier -- you had presented a list of public -- other public letters that had made statements?

A Uh-huh.

Q And actually, I was going to introduce it into the record, but I'm not sure we have copies for everybody. But the comment was made that all of those letters were in support of Biden or, I guess, opposing President Trump.

I want to introduce two exhibits now. They're going in together because the first is a public letter from 235 former military leaders entitled, "Open letter from senior military leaders," which is in support of President Trump. It's not dated, but I'm going to introduce along with it a Fox News article that dates it at on or about September 14th, 2020. So the whole purpose of the Fox News article is to provide dates to that article --

A Perfect.

Q -- that letter.

So we'll introduce the letter itself as exhibit 25 and then the Fox News article, to place the date on it, as exhibit 26. The sole purpose of the article is to date the letter.

[Wood exhibit Nos. 25 and 26

Were marked for identification.]

Ms. [redacted]. If you want to read it, feel free, but --

Ms. Wood. I'm good.

Mr. [redacted]. Is this part of 25?

Ms. [redacted]. The open letter is 25 and the Fox News article is 26. They're just two different documents. So to keep it clean, we're going to introduce them separately.

Ms. Wood. Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay. Have you seen this letter before today?

A I have not.

Q Okay. So the -- briefly, this letter says that the 2020 Election could be the most important election since our country was founded, and it argues that the Democrats' opposition to border security, their pledge to return to the disastrous Iran nuclear deal, their antagonism toward the police, and planned cuts to military spending will leave the United States more vulnerable to foreign enemies. And it then goes on to urge Americans to support the reelection of Donald Trump.

Is that a fair summary?

A It is.

Q Okay. The signatories to this letter are all retired Air Force and Navy and other flag officers, right?

A Yeah. Army as well.

Q Okay. And Army?

A Yes.

Q And they signed this using their official titles, correct?

A Yes.

Q In your experience, do flag officers often have security clearances while they are active officers?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Regardless of whether you agree with the contents of this letter, would you agree that these 235 military leaders had a right to express their opinions in this letter?

A Absolutely.

Q And to publicly sign this letter?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. I'm going to introduce a transcript from the first Presidential debate. This is going to be exhibit Number 27, and this is just an excerpt.

[Wood exhibit No. 27

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Again, the full transcript, I think, is several hundred pages -- or it's, like, 90 pages long. So we're introducing an excerpt. This is 27.

A Uh-huh. The part in yellow?

Q Uh-huh.

So during the first Presidential debate, President Trump said, "As far as the church is concerned, and as far as the generals are concerned, we just got the support of 250 military leaders and generals. Total support. Law enforcement -- almost every law enforcement group in the United States. I have Florida. I have Texas. I have Ohio."

Based on what I just read to you, is it accurate to say that the senior military leaders' letter in support of Trump was released prior to the first Presidential debate and that -- go ahead.

A Yes.

Q And that the letter from the military leaders, in fact, played a role at that debate?

A It was a talking point.

Q Okay. And I realize we just said that the senior military leaders -- that you agree the senior military leaders had a right to participate in the political process?

A 100 percent, yes.

Q To your knowledge, is the committee investigating the reasons that these leaders signed this letter?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Okay. And I'll represent to you that they're not.

Turning back to the letter, the October 19th letter that you did sign, the closing line states that, "It is high time that Russia stops interfering in our democracy."

Is it fair to say that the focus of the letter was actually a concern about Russia and not the Presidential candidates themselves?

A Yes.

Q Okay. In your opinion, was the letter true and accurate?

A Yes.

Q Okay. We talked about this a little bit in the prior hour. I want to find out a couple more details from you.

Has the aftermath of signing this letter, such as the fact that you're involved in this investigation, that your name has been in the New York Post -- has that negatively impacted you in any way?

A Oh, yes. Absolutely.

Q How so?

A Several ways. First of all, I've received death threats. I've received vicious calls, texts, emails from all sorts of random people. Mike Flynn -- General Flynn posted on Telegram all of our names and said, you know, let them know how we feel. It unleashed this viciousness that had several other folks calling the police, calling the Threat Management Unit at CIA, to let them know what was happening.

And so for the first time ever, I looked at getting a gun and getting a concealed carry permit because it's not just that people have been mean or say horrific things, but we've seen them take action. And so that feeling of vulnerability for speaking, exercising a First Amendment right, and for saying what I thought was as obvious as there's air in -- there's air. Let's just let the FBI do their work.

It has a profound effect on health as well. I've been to the emergency room for stress because of all of this. And so when you ask would I do this again, I would insist on a little more precision of language. But it has the effect of censoring people who have more than a thousand years of experience in this topic. And I would think the focus would be on stopping Russia and not on what feels like persecution.

Mr. Wilson. I want to add, one of our other clients has gone completely anonymous because of the amount of threats she's gotten. They've changed their email -- their snail mail address. You cannot mail them directly, you cannot find them, solely because of the threats resulting from being -- signing that letter and being named in this investigation. After General Flynn put out his missive, it jumped off the chart.

Ms. Wood. And then the New York Post "Spies who lie."

Mr. Wilson. Yeah.

Ms. Wood. And so we're, by nature, measured, careful, judicious, and we aren't prone to being in the public. Like -- so that this has happened has a profound effect on my life. So when you ask, would I do it again, the calculation isn't the politics. It's the personal safety.

BY MS. [redacted]:

Q Okay. And you feel that you are in fact -- your personal safety has been threatened?

A Absolutely. And I'm dreading this, whatever leaks out of this or comes out of this, because it will start all over again.

Q Do you think the fact that you and the others who have signed the letter are being so publicly investigated and have been the subject of the New York Post article and other -- Mr. Flynn's Telegram post, as you referenced -- do you think that could have a chilling effect on others -- perhaps in, for example, the 2024 Election -- others who may be considering making public statements about the election?

A 100 percent.

Mr. Lankford. It takes away the voice of a lot of people who have experience and backgrounds that we need in service of the American Nation. And that's what is so repulsive. It chills them. And I think Ms. Wood has really said it quite well.

Ms. Wood. I just think we all took risks. When you're overseas, you're in a war zone, you're in harm's way. Some ops officers are doing the most amazing, brave things. And to come back to this country and have some of the greatest threats come to us from the fellow Americans and allegations that are pumped up by all of this is just really -- it's really disheartening.

Ms. [redacted]. Thank you. We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

Mr. [redacted]. On the record.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q Ms. Wood, I think you've sort of -- if not alluded to this, you've sort of answered this question.

But did you have any discussions with the Biden campaign in relation to the public statement at the time that you signed it?

A No.

Q Okay. So no discussions with Tony Blinken?

A Nobody.

Q Okay. Have you had any subsequent conversations with anyone from the Biden campaign?

A No.

Q Okay.

A Nor the Biden administration.

Q Okay. Did you have any role in disseminating the public statement to the press?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you do any press in connection with the public statement?

A No.

Q Any media hits? Anything like that?

A No.

Q Okay. Were you asked to do any media in connection with it?

A No.

Q Okay. Now, if you've read the report, then you're probably familiar with --

Mr. Wilson. The report?

Mr. [redacted]. I'm sorry. The interim staff report that the House Judiciary Committee released in connection with this investigation.

Mr. Wilson. Thank you.

Mr. [redacted]. Thank you.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q You're probably familiar with information that David Cariens provided to the committee. Specifically, he indicated that someone at the PCRB, the preclassification review board at the CIA, read the letter to him and asked him if he would sign. Are you familiar with this claim that Mr. Cariens has made?

A I've only seen it through the document that is part of the interim report.

Q Given that representation he's made, what are your views on that?

A I would be shocked if it was true.

Q Okay. Do you know Mr. Cariens?

A In passing.

Q Okay. Have you had dealings with the PCRB in the past?

A Many.

Q Okay. And what -- could you explain?

A Right. So in writing articles, op-eds, podcasts, things like that. We have a lifelong duty to have them review anything we do to check for classified information. So over the course of the 7 or 8 years since I left government, I've probably sent two, three dozen pieces to them in writing, and they always respond in writing.

Q Okay. So email communications?

A Yes.

Q Okay. You've never had verbal interactions with anyone at PCRB?

A Not related to publications.

Q Okay. So do you write op-eds regularly?

A I wouldn't say regularly, but I have.

Q Okay. And what is the turnaround usually if you have, say, an 800-word op-ed?

A A day, 2 days. It depends on how busy they are and then if you give them a deadline. So if you say this is urgent for tomorrow, then it gets done pretty quickly. If you say, I'm fine, it's going to be a couple -- I don't need this for a couple weeks, they'll take a little bit longer.

Q Have you had sufficient time to think about the question I posed to you earlier?

A If you can reframe it because I'm a little muddled in my head.

Q Yeah. Let's hope I get this right.

It was to the effect of, given everything you know -- Mr. Morell's coordination with the Biden campaign, et cetera -- do you believe the public statement should have had a caveat that this was done on behalf of Joe Biden's candidacy?

A I don't think so. And I think, as the last hour -- the expansion of his testimony was that he didn't -- wasn't directed to do it. And I do think -- and one of the important things here is, as former national security officials, we have great insight into this area of focus. So providing that insight is really important, and doing it in a fair and balanced way is really important.

Q Would it be fair and balanced to indicate that Morell was in contact with the Biden campaign to disseminate the public statement?

A Is that what the testimony said? I didn't --

Mr. Wilson. You have no knowledge of that.

Ms. Wood. I don't have knowledge. I don't know.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q But you know -- you did say it was unfair, right? Mr. Morell ultimately keeping you in the dark about his communications with the Biden campaign?

A I just said we should have known.

Q Okay. And you should have known because it would have been an important fact to consider in whether or not you signed the letter, correct?

A So I think the bigger fact for me is what we just talked about, which is the consequences and the threats and the way life has become so much more difficult after the targeting from whatever kind of extremists you want to call them against me and others who have signed the letter. So my greater hesitation is much more related to not wanting to put myself and my family through that.

Q Understanding all of those concerns are very important, as they are.

My specific question is, given everything you now know about how the public statement came into fruition with Mr. Morell and his communications with the Biden campaign, it is not your view that the American public should have been informed as to that relationship with respect to --

A It's a double negative.

Mr. Wilson. I got lost in the negatives. I'm sorry.

Ms. Wood. I do not think --

Mr. Wilson. Let's let him rephrase.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q I'll rephrase it. At the end -- this isn't really a trick question, even if I'm unartfully asking it.

You should have known that Mr. Morell did this in part to help Joe Biden become President. Why is it not equally true the American people should have known that motivation? That's my question to you.

A I think you can be both things. So if I'm correctly paraphrasing the testimony and, you know, that's an if, he said he had two reasons. One is that the Russians -- he was very concerned that the story was a misinformation, information operations, whatever label you want to get it. Part of that broader concern with Russians involved in our election.

And then the second thing is he said he has supported President Biden in the election. And I think those two things can exist.

Q Right. But the letter only speaks to one of those things, not the second part.

Mr. Wilson. I deny the premise there.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. Fair enough. Your denial is noted.

BY MR. [redacted]:

Q So given your considered view, the letter speaks of one. Why not speak of the other? Again, if the concern is letting the American people know all of the facts --

A Because the purpose of that letter was to let people know that this could be a Russian -- part of a Russian disinformation campaign. Part of the ongoing Russian disinformation campaign. And that was the broader purpose of the letter.

Q And it could also be to help Joe Biden become President. Fair?

A That may have been Michael's purpose, but you'd have to ask him. I don't have the testimony exactly.

Mr. [redacted]. Okay. We'll go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 2:24 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: [redacted]

Wednesday, May 24, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:01 a.m.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] LAW CLERK

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ANTITRUST,

COMMERCIAL, AND ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

[redacted] DIGITAL ASSISTANT

[redacted] SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted] INTERN

[redacted] RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted] DIGITAL DIRECTOR

[redacted] PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

[redacted] SENIOR SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted] MINORITY DETAILEE

[redacted] MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION INTEGRITY,

SECURITY, AND ENFORCEMENT:

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF COUNSEL

For ALPHABET:

DANIEL F. DONOVAN

KING & SPALDING

1700 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE NW

SUITE 900

WASHINGTON, DC 20006

For [redacted]:

MICHAEL D. BOPP, ESQ.

GIBSON DUNN

1050 CONNECTICUT AVENUE NW

WASHINGTON, DC 20036-5306

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of [redacted]. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state his name for the record?

[redacted]. Yeah. My name is [redacted].

[redacted] Thank you.

On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else from the committee who's here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chief Oversight Counsel for the Judiciary Committee Democratic staff.

Mr. Donovan. Daniel Donovan, King & Spalding, on behalf of Alphabet.

Mr. Bopp. Michael Bopp, Gibson Dunn, representing [redacted]

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules --

Mr. Bopp. Can't we introduce others in the room?

[redacted] Sure.

Mr. Bopp. Thank you.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] just observing today. I'm on Chairman Nadler's staff -- or, sorry, Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] I'm the chief counsel for the Immigration Subcommittee.

[redacted] [redacted] also of Jerry Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] I'm an intern for the House Judiciary Committee, majority.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Thanks.

I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for one hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and then the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of the hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there are official court reporters taking down everything that we say to make a written record. So we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] So the court reporters can take down a clear record, we'll do our best to limit the number of people directing questions to you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It's important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. And it's my understanding you are appearing today with counsel. Is that correct?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] And counsel has already identified themselves. Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions, or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics. So if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess. Just give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you've learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law, you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff during the interview. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. section 1001. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. Uh-huh, yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

[redacted]. I don't -- no, I don't think so.

[redacted] Thank you.

Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporters so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

That's the end of my preamble.

Is there anything my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

Ms. [redacted] Not at this time.

Mr. Bopp. One question. What is the transcript review policy?

[redacted] Sure. After we get the transcript, we'll let you know. You can come and take a look for errata

Mr. Bopp. Okay. We have to come in to review it? You can't send us a copy?

[redacted] That's right.

Mr. Bopp. All right.

And how about the video? Can we review that as well?

[redacted] We have not been making the video available to folks.

Are you ready to begin?

Mr. Bopp. Uh-huh.

[redacted] The time is now 10:06. We'll start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted] can you give us your educational background, beginning with college?

A Yes, sure. I studied philosophy, politics, and economics at the University of York in the United Kingdom. And then I hold a double degree from the Universities of Bocconi in Milan and Sciences Po in Paris.

Q And in what?

A Economics and management from Bocconi and international European Affairs from Sciences Po.

Q And can you give us your employment history, starting from the beginning?

A Yes. My very first job was at the U.N. Non-Governmental Liaison Service.

Following that, I worked for a consulting firm called the European House-Ambrosetti in Milan.

Following that, I worked for the United Nations Development Programme in New York City.

Following that, I worked for the Office of the Italian Prime Minister Mario Monti.

Following that, I was the editor of the Italian fact-checking site Pagella Politica, after which I was hired as the founding director of the International Fact-Checking Network at Poynter Institute for Media Studies in Florida.

I held a three-month position as a researcher at TED Talks in New York City, after which I joined Google in August 2019.

Q Can you tell us which positions you've held at Google --

A Yeah.

Q -- and from what years?

A Yeah. So my first position was as News Credibility Lead at the Google News Lab. I was in that position for about two years. I think I changed roles in April '21.

I was then the product policy manager for Google Search until the end of February of this year, when I was hired as a principal on the Trust and Safety Intelligence team.

Q Okay. And before we go on, can you define misinformation, disinformation, and malinformation the way that you would define them?

Ms. [redacted] And beforehand, can I just ask, [redacted], if you could just slow down a little bit.

[redacted]. Yes.

Ms. [redacted] And I am also a fast talker, so I appreciate it. But it's hard to take notes.

[redacted]. Yes. No, my apologies. I'll do my best.

[redacted] Misinformation, disinformation, and malinformation, the way you define them.

[redacted]. Yeah --

Mr. Bopp. So you're asking for how he thinks of those terms --

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Bopp. -- not how --

[redacted] Well --

Mr. Bopp. -- the Google definition of those terms?

[redacted] You can give Google's definition. That's fine.

Mr. Bopp. Well, actually, I mean, I'm not sure he can give Google's definition.

If you are comfortable explaining how you think of each of those terms, then please go ahead.

[redacted]. Yeah. So the question, Google doesn't define misinformation or the others.

Misinformation is inaccurate information. Typically, in the industry parlance, disinformation is inaccurate information spread on purpose.

BY [redacted]

Q So you would say misinformation is not purposeful spreading of misinformation -- or of incorrect information.

A That is a kind of a generally agreed interpretation. But honestly, we spent a lot of time, and these terms get used interchangeably. So it's not a kind of hard-and-fast rule.

Q And what about malinformation? Are you familiar with that term?

A I've heard it used but not really used it myself.

Q Okay.

Just to sort of start, towards the beginning of your career, can you tell us about your work at the Pagella -- I don't know how to pronounce that -- Politica, the Italian?

A Yeah, yeah. It was a fact-checking site. So we would review claims in the public domain against primary sources for their accuracy.

Q I see. So you would review them and put them online? Is that right?

A Correct, via the website.

Q I see. Okay.

There was something about virus talk show. I was curious about that.

A Yeah, we also -- I also presented in a weekly talk show our fact-checks.

Q Okay. And what kind of topics did you fact check?

A The gamut, as the title of the website suggests. It was often claims made by elected officials.

Q Oh, okay. So it tended to be about politics rather than, say, science or something or --

A It tended to be claims by elected officials, what elected officials speak about.

Q Okay. True. That's true. Fair enough.

Can you tell us a little bit more about the International Fact-Checking Network at the Poynter Institute and your work there?

A Sure. So around the 2016, 2017 -- or the 2014, 2015 -- there was a first conference, a meeting of fact-checkers around the world, and the Poynter Institute School for Journalism decided to set up kind of a center to help train, inform, connect these publishers from around the world.

Q I see. And how does fact-checking work? Can you tell us a little bit? Like, how do you decide what's an authoritative source? How do you go about that process?

A Yeah. I mean, obviously I'm no longer a fact-checker, so just to be clear.

Q Yeah.

A Okay.

As part of my then role as a fact-checker, you would consult experts, find authoritative sources on a specific topic, ideally primary sources, sources that explain their data-collection process.

And then -- and I think the crucial part here is point to those sources. Fact-checking really is about this claim may or may not be accurate based on these sources, so that the user themselves can make an informed understanding of whether the evidence does or does not prove the claim they had.

Q I see. Okay.

And does the International Fact-Checking Network, do they work for particular organizations, or do they have their own -- how does that work exactly?

A So it was housed at the Poynter Institute for Media Studies, but it was meant to be an umbrella organization, almost like a convener.

Q Okay. Did you work with Facebook while you were there, or for Facebook?

A So in 2016, Facebook decided to launch a third-party fact-checking program, and a condition to be part of it was to be a verified signatory of the IFCN.

Mr. Bopp. You said a condition to be part of it was what?

[redacted]. To be a verified signatory of the International Fact-Checking Network. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q And did you work for particular teams there at Meta -- or Facebook, I guess, at the time?

A So I kind of want to clarify. Like, "work" is a slippery term, right. What --

Q Yeah. I mean, who did you work -- do you recall who you worked with there or --

A I would have had conversations with kind of product managers or people working on that topic. But, no, I don't remember their exact names.

Q Okay. So I guess back to Google -- or we'll go to Google now. I just want to understand a little bit more about the structure.

So Alphabet encompasses Google and YouTube. Is that right? That's the sort of bigger company, and those two are within it?

A Yeah. I mean, I'm not an expert of our org structure, but, yes, I assume that's correct.

Q Are there any other sort of social media companies -- or are there other subcomponents of Alphabet?

A I believe there are --

Q Okay.

A -- bodies of Alphabet, but I'm not -- I don't know all of them.

Q Okay. Do you know how the content moderation teams work there? Like, does Google have one content moderation policy team or --

Mr. Bopp. Let me just make sure I understand your question.

So your first question was, how does the content moderation work there. But then your more specific question is, does Google have a content moderation team?

[redacted] Yeah. Well, I'm asking first about the structure, not the sort of content of how they operate.

Mr. Bopp. Okay. Well, why don't we back up and maybe ask the first question first.

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Does Google have a content moderation team?

A Yeah. I mean, I think what is called content moderation is typically the work of Trust and Safety. So yes, there is a Trust and Safety team, uh-huh.

Q Okay. And is there a difference between policy, like the people who do policy stuff, and the people who do enforcement?

A Trust and Safety is composed of various kind of subcomponents. There is a product policy team, an Enforcement team. There are other teams. Yeah.

Q Okay. And you're on Trust and Safety now, right?

A I am currently on the Trust and Safety Intelligence team. I was previously on the Trust and Safety product policy team.

Q I see. Okay.

[redacted] What is the difference between those two teams.

[redacted]. Intelligence and product policy?

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted]. Product policy helps write and manage the kind of the content rules. To clarify, just to make sure, I was on the product policy team for Search specifically. The Intelligence team provides kind of insights for our leadership as to what may -- what content risks there might be out there.

BY [redacted]

Q So you said for Search specifically. Are there multiple product policy teams within the Trust and Safety umbrella?

A Yes, there are.

Q And how many are there, approximately?

A I don't know, but like, large products like Search, like YouTube, like Gmail, or Workspace will have different teams.

Q So there is one team dedicated to Search, one team dedicated to YouTube, one team dedicated to Workplace. Am I understanding you correctly?

A Yes. Uh-huh.

Q And this is all -- I guess, taking one step back, is there one Trust and Safety team for Alphabet as an entity?

A I don't know how to answer that because there are -- I think that it's correct to say there is one Trust and Safety team for Google because I am not familiar with some of the other, so I don't know if individually they have different Trust and Safety teams within them.

[redacted] So your work wouldn't be used for YouTube?

[redacted]. Correct. When I was --

Mr. Bopp. Wait.

[redacted]. Sorry.

Mr. Bopp. "Your work." You mean when he was on product policy? You're asking whether that work would have been -- whether he would have worked for YouTube at the time?

[redacted] Well, whatever he did, would that be applied to YouTube's content policy or whatever?

Mr. Bopp. I see. Okay.

[redacted]. No. The product policy team I worked on was Search.

BY [redacted]

Q I see. Okay.

And how large is your team right now?

A I'm sorry. Is that the product policy team or Trust and Safety writ large?

Q Sorry. Trust and Safety, yeah.

A I don't have the precise number, but I think it's probably in the 1,000, 2,000 full-time employees.

Q And what about the product policy team?

A Again, kind of take my numbers to the best of my recollection. I think there are probably 150, 200 people.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Specifically for Search?

[redacted]. For product policy.

[redacted] So any -- so just to clarify, your answer was 150, 200 for product policy for Search or product policy across the different product policy teams?

[redacted]. Across the Google product policy team.

BY [redacted]

Q So can you tell us what you do sort of day-to-day now, what your job is, to laypeople?

A In the current job in Trust and Safety Intelligence?

Q Yeah. In Trust and Safety, yeah.

A So as an intel analyst, we look at open source intelligence, internal kind of reporting of things that may have been critical, broken in our various products, to flag potential risks that are more than like a single incident.

So maybe there is a war somewhere around the world, or maybe there is a mass civil protests, and there is content related to that. Maybe it is hateful in nature. We would kind of note that maybe this has happened offline, but that there is a risk that it shows up on our platforms.

Q So you're trying to make sure that it doesn't show up on your platforms. Is that --

A No. I think intel really is upstream of that. It's more a question of this is the universe of risks. It's not our role to make kind of any kind of decision.

Q Okay. So you assess what the risks are and then you report them to another team that takes it from there? Is that --

A Yeah, we serve the broader Trust and Safety organization with kind of alerts about what's happening.

Q Okay. So who would you -- if you say we think this, whatever, war is a problem and maybe we don't want the information -- people to be exposed to that information, who would you bring that to?

A Yeah, we have a variety of internal processes, including kind of a maybe inter-Trust and Safety review fora, and so we would bring those, kind of with a regular cadence, to those fora.

Q So can you tell us the names of anybody that you would bring that to?

Mr. Bopp. Just let's be clear about this. When you say "bring that to," if we can just be a little bit more specific about "that."

[redacted] The information that they're concerned about.

Mr. Bopp. So the intelligence information?

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Bopp. Who would [redacted] communicate that to?

[redacted] Exactly.

BY [redacted]

Q Like, what would be the next step? What would you do, and who would you --

A Yeah, I mean, this directors forum will have maybe 20 to 30 invitees, and they typically are the directors of enforcement, Trust and Safety enforcement for PAs -- sorry, for product areas such as Search, et cetera.

Q And do you know what steps would be taken after that?

A Typically, this information cascades to their teams, and they can maybe see if any of this harmful content has potentially showed up, or if there are any -- yeah, any risks associated to it.

Q So how do you determine what harmful content is? What factors go into that assessment?

A Yeah. We have, even across product areas, a relative set of agreed-upon kind of harmful content type, such as child sexual content, violent and gory content. And so there are these categories, -- phishing, malware -- these are categories that we kind of keep an eye out for.

Q Okay. And excuse my ignorance. I don't understand how these things work that well.

But so you would want to prevent people who are searching terms, for instance, from coming across this type of --

A So, no. And so I realize that my changing jobs is also not helpful to the purposes of this conversation.

Q I mean, feel free to talk about the previous one, too.

A No, what I mean is like the intel service is for all product areas.

Q Okay.

A And it is never -- Trust and Safety is not -- it isn't -- your question was, is the purpose to avoid people finding this content?

Q Yeah.

A It's more the purpose is to make sure that our teams know whether this content is there and whether it violates existing policies or not. Like, whether we're fine with it being there because of the rules we have set out. It's not kind of a -- yeah.

Q Okay. Do you know -- can you describe what the policies are that are in place?

Mr. Bopp. Which policies?

[redacted] With the policy he just referred to, that he wants to make sure the -- sorry, that they want to make sure the content doesn't violate the policies.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you describe what the policies are?

A I mean, every product area has maybe 15, 20 different policy sets, most of which are public. I can, perhaps, speak to some of the Search policies in my previous role.

But, yeah, I mean, there would be sexually explicit content showing up in a highly elevated structure for Search would be something we wouldn't want to show.

Q What else? Can you give some other examples?

A Sure. Harassing content. Violent content.

Q What about during COVID? Were there any, say, vaccine misinformation content? Was that a category?

A So Search does have a health content policy, yes.

Q And do you know what that is?

A Yes. And just to take a step back again to my previous role to clarify.

So my role in Search was specifically to -- so when you search for a query, most of the results will be blue links, a link out to the type of content you want, a short blurb or just a blue link.

Some of the results will be a box highlighted with bold. Or say you search: What movies are on Netflix right now? You will have something pulled up that is a little bit further than your usual blue links.

Say you search for a person. You'll have like almost like a baseball card representation of that person with their bio and their photo.

Those are the results where the policy I worked on applied, and all that we would do if something was violative of those policies, including health content policy, is deactivate that feature, and the result would return to a blue link.

So it was never my role to remove kind of a link altogether. That's the type of -- that's the features I worked on.

Q But someone's role would be to remove the links altogether?

A To the best of my knowledge, it is a rare case, and it is a legal case rather than a policy case. I think there are certain legal obligations, including around the world, on what can make it -- especially around the world, I believe -- on what can be removed.

Q I see. Do you know what team -- like, who worked on that?

A I believe there is a legal removals team that would be responsible for those.

Q I see.

BY [redacted]

Q Was there an option to downrank content, as opposed to remove it?

A No. This feature, deactivation, was the type of policy lever, enforcement lever that we had in my team.

Q And is this option, is it a binary option? Either it's violative and it's removed? Am I understanding you correctly?

A Typically, yes.

Q And how big was your -- you said you were with the Trust and Safety team for Search. How big was your team?

A Yeah. So I was a manager on the Search product policy team. My manager had about 18 -- somewhere -- maybe 12 -- somewhere there, between 10 and 20. I had three reports.

BY [redacted]

Q This is your current role?

A No. This is my product policy role.

Q Product policy, okay.

How about your current role? How many people report to you?

A None.

Q Oh, none. Okay.

Who do you report to?

A I report to the head of Trust and Safety intel analysis, and then there's a director for intel.

Q Who are those people?

A You want their names?

Q Yeah, please.

A My manager is [redacted], and my director is [redacted].

Q Can you spell [redacted] last name?

A Yeah. It's [redacted]

Q Thank you so much.

So in your previous role of product policy manager, can you tell us a little bit more about that and how it differs from your current role?

A Yes, uh-huh. Yeah, the product policy team is responsible for writing, keeping updated the content policy rules that are, in my case, for Search features. So if you search for Search feature content policies, you'll find a list, and those are the ones that we would be responsible for.

Q I see.

[redacted] When you say writing the policies, so it's your team that's developing the policies that are on YouTube's guidelines that are available to the public now? Am I understanding you correctly?

Mr. Bopp. You're using the present tense. This is what he used to do.

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q In your previous role, when you said that your team was responsible for writing the policies, what did you mean by that?

A Yeah, at the time -- and, right, like, especially Google Search is a pretty mature product. So the vast majority of policies were already there. I don't want to overestimate what I did. But, yes, we would kind of help define what violative content would look like.

Q And during your time, do you recall any significant changes to Search's policy?

A So I was working for Search product policy during the -- I mean, it's still ongoing -- but the Russian invasion of Ukraine. So we did take significant policy action in that context.

Q I guess a point of clarification. Is your team involved with both writing the policies and -- you said taking action. Would executing or enforcing the policies, does that fall -- both of those responsibilities falls under your team, your previous team's role?

A Yeah, thank you. That's a -- I appreciate continuing to make that clarification.

There is a division, product policy and enforcement, and so product policy does not have access to the actual tools that manually would block a result. Enforcement does that. And it is, in part, a sense of there needing to be also this good kind of checks and balance in having multiple folks on any one decision.

Q And what's the name of that enforcement team?

A The enforcement team.

[Laughter.]

Q Appropriately named.

And are there -- you mentioned there were multiple of your -- and this is referring to your previous role -- of the policy teams. There is one for Search. There is one for YouTube. Is there an analogous enforcement team for Search and for YouTube?

A So we, at the product policy team for Search, had an enforcement team for Search that we interfaced with, yes. And largely, to my best recollection, this kind of pairing applies across products.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned doing a policy response to the Russian invasion of Ukraine. Can you elaborate on that a little bit more?

A Yeah, yeah. As I mentioned, there are blue links and then there's a variety of other elevated, structured, highlighted places in Search. Maybe it's the top news carousel. Maybe it's the highlighted images. Maybe it's -- there's a lot of features that are turned on when we think they're particularly relevant to a users group.

In the instance of the invasion of Ukraine, we determined that we would no longer show any Russian state media in any of those elevated surfaces.

Q So it was only Russian state media? It wasn't, for instance, different opinions on the subject from American media or --

A This was exclusively tied to Russian state media.

Q Okay.

Mr. Bopp. Make sure you wait until the question is --

[redacted]. Yes.

Mr. Bopp. -- complete before you answer.

BY [redacted]

Q One quick clarification point. What falls underneath the Search umbrella? Again, this is going back to your previous role. You mentioned images. When you pull up Google, there's a number of tabs. There's news, images. Is that all under the Search team's purview?

A Yes.

Q And what other subcategories are there?

A When you search for a query and there's a completion, that is a Search product, the Discover feed on Android.

Q And images, just to clarify?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Are there other policies you can talk about that you worked on? Like, you gave us one topic was Russia-Ukraine, but are there others?

A You asked me about like a big policy that was --

Q Yeah.

A A big policy.

Q Yeah, yeah. Okay. But there weren't any other subjects where you sort of did similar things?

A Where we wrote a new policy? No.

Q Okay. And how are those decisions made? So if you decide to make sure that Russian state media doesn't appear in those boxes, who decides that? Who do you consult with?

A Yeah. I should note that this was a big moment. So we would consult up our ladder and would also consult with the product team, so the Search features they are responsible for, these parts of Search.

Q Did you consult with outside sources, sources outside of Google in developing those?

A I did not. Not to my recollection, no.

Q Okay. So you didn't -- there was no government involvement in that? You didn't consult with anyone in government?

A I do not.

Q Okay. Do you know if anybody at Google did?

A I don't know.

[redacted] We'll use the Russia example, the decision to not have Russian state media in Search. Who is the final decision-maker in that decision?

Mr. Bopp. And the decision is to change the policy?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted]. And just to clarify, this still didn't remove Russian state media from Search to core, right? You can in the blue links, find them, and there is reasons to be able to find them. What we did was deactivate their capacity from showing up in the elevated structure features.

Sorry to belabor this, but it's just -- there's like a big difference, and we feel strongly about that, too.

In this case, my -- the VP of Trust and Safety and the VP in Search would have approved the policy before we launched it.

[redacted] And when your team is analyzing this issue initially, do you bring a recommendation to your managers? Is that a fair assessment?

You described earlier that the choice for your Search team is binary. Do you just provide the facts and analysis? Or what is your team's role with respect to your team's leadership?

Mr. Bopp. You're asking what actually happened or what -- sort of the usual practice?

[redacted] The usual practice.

[redacted]. So, once again, in my previous role in product policy, we would typically provide a few options for executives to review, yeah.

[redacted] And when this is being communicated to them, is this via email?

[redacted]. Yes, I would imagine. Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q So there were no other topics that you dealt with in your role? There were no other circumstances in which you suggested that certain types of media or stories be downgraded or the results not appear at the top?

A We didn't -- I didn't -- in those two years, I did not write new policy.

Q Okay. So just the Russia one.

A Again, let me reclarify that. There would have been updates on other policies. I remember one. I was mentioning before those knowledge panels, those baseball cards that people can -- where you have -- there is structured experience about someone. Users can actually claim them and request certain things be edited.

So one of my roles was updating the types of attributes that they could ask be removed from those knowledge panels.

Q Can you explain that more? I'm sorry. I'm not sure I understand.

A Yeah. I mean, say you are a notable individual, and there is this box about you and name, a little bio, maybe your date of birth or the school you attended or who you're married to. You can claim this knowledge panel and say, this is me -- I believe, yeah -- and you can request certain things be blocked.

These are very -- all we did was expand to allow, I think, removing your spouse if you didn't want them to be publicly that far up.

But, again, all about this highlighted structured experience, as well as then removing any content about you from Search altogether. All this stuff is still findable. It's just if we have put it in this kind of neat little experience for a user because we think it's helpful, then that's where we will have these policies that I was responsible for.

Q I see.

Are you familiar with the Great Barrington Declaration?

Mr. Bopp. You said the Great Barrington?

[redacted] Declaration.

[redacted]. I seem to recollect it was something about COVID vaccines?

[redacted] No. Actually, it was written by a few epidemiologists who thought that lockdowns were a bad idea and they recommended against them for the good of society.

[redacted] [redacted] can you answer again. When you were with the product policy team, what were the start and end dates of your tenure in that position?

[redacted]. Yeah. I believe my start date was sometime in April 2021, and my end date would have been February 27th, or something around there, 2023.

[redacted] Thank you.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] This is exhibit 1. This is an article about how the Great Barrington Declaration was censored on Google so it's very difficult for people to find it. I was wondering if you didn't -- weren't involved in that yourself, if you would know who might have been involved in that.

Mr. Bopp. We'll need a minute to look at this.

[redacted] Sure, sure. Just let us know when you're ready, please.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Could you tell us the sources for this?

[redacted] It's spiked-online. It's a British newspaper.

[redacted] Oh, I'm sorry. I didn't see it on the actual document. So it's spiked.com? Is that the website?

[redacted] I think so. I can double check that. I'm pretty sure. It's actually spiked-online.com.

[redacted] So s-p-i-k-e-d-online.com?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted]. I am not -- yeah, I'm not accustomed to American air conditioning.

[Laughter.]

[redacted] Yeah.

Ms. [redacted] Neither am I.

[redacted] Me neither.

BY [redacted]

Q I understand this might not have been your area, but do you know anything about it? Do you know who might know about it?

A So I see this is October 2020. I was not in role at the time. So I wouldn't have had anything to do with this, no.

Q Okay. And you don't know who would have had anything to do with it?

A No. No. Also, it's unclear to me what the precise accusation is, so, no.

Q Well, it's just -- the idea is that Google was downgrading things that, in its opinion, were counter to good policy on COVID and making it difficult to find.

BY [redacted]

Q On the policy team, you mentioned working on the issue with the Ukraine-Russia war, for a subject matter like that, is the whole team working on the subject matter, or do only certain individuals focus on creating a new policy for the Russian invasion and other folks are working on other issues?

A Yeah, there would be some form of a kind of division of labor.

Q Okay. And we'll stick with the Russian invasion example. Do you recall how many people were working on that issue in addition -- it sounds like in addition to yourself?

A Yeah. So I would have been the primary point of contact for Search, obviously, working with my manager and director and onwards. And then other -- for a decision this big, we would have spoken to Search product engineering folks, as well as other Trust and Safety product areas.

Q And you said you started that policy position April of 2021? Did I --

A Yes.

Q -- understand you correctly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Certainly that was still in the midst of the pandemic. Do you recall who on your team was the primary point of contact for updating policies with respect to COVID or vaccines?

A Yeah. So our health content policy is the closest to the topic. I believe in September of that year it would have been my responsibility.

Q In September of 2021?

A Starting in September '21, I think I picked it up. Someone left. That's to the best of my recollection, more or less.

Q Do you remember who left that was previously responsible?

A I do not, honestly. There was quite a lot of --

Q In September of 2021, when you're adopting this new responsibility, were there others on the team that you shared this responsibility with?

A I mean, I think everything we do, everything we used to do was like collegial in nature. So we would check with others, but there was a portfolio lead.

Q And you were the portfolio lead?

A In that case, yes.

Q You mentioned that there were policy teams for Search and for YouTube and other products across the company. To the extent you have knowledge, do you know if these other policy teams similarly had these divisions of labor where there was a portfolio lead for health-related content?

A I mean, I can't speak to every team, but some specialization is probable.

Q And did you have a point of contact -- actually, let me back up one question.

Was there an effort from your policy team to ensure consistency with Search's policy -- ensure that Search's policies are consistent with, say, YouTube's policy or the policies of other Alphabet products?

A I don't know that consistency is necessarily the term. These are different, very different products, if you think of how you search, versus YouTube. So there is definitely no like -- I think back to the Russia-Ukraine. Like, we would check what the others were doing, but there wouldn't be any kind of requirement to be aligned.

Q We can stick with the Russian invasion example. Am I understanding you correctly that the Russian invasion occurs, that triggers this response from your team to create this new policy. As part of your responsibilities, you would -- I don't know if consult is the right word, but at least communicate with other policy teams for other Alphabet products. Is that correct?

A In the context of Russia-Ukraine, yes.

Q And is that true also for the health-related content? Do you recall communicating or consulting with other policy teams for other Alphabet products?

A So, I want to draw a distinction because whereas the Russian state media policy was kind of new, health content was a policy that was around prior to me. So there wasn't really that much equivalent work to do or necessity to check. So I don't -- I definitely don't recall that much of a broad consultation on health content.

[redacted] So, I mean, when you started that role in 2020 -- September of 2021, did you -- I assume you changed some policies or did something, right? I mean, can you tell us what you --

Mr. Bopp. Is the question what did he do in that role --

[redacted] Yeah, what did he do specifically.

Mr. Bopp. -- once he took over in September -- once he changed -- once he picked up the health policy portfolio in September of 2021, the question is what did he do?

[redacted] Exactly.

[redacted]. I don't recall kind of making any major edits to the health content policy to the best of my -- honestly, it's been a while. I think what would have -- there may have been kind of edge cases that come up from enforcement on occasion where you are being asked whether or not the policy applies to something. But that's kind of a one-off occasion.

BY [redacted]

Q Was there -- I mean, there was a COVID policy, I assume, within that?

A So the health content policy -- and don't quote me precisely, but it is public in -- for Search features -- says that if something -- we may take -- we may block one of those highlighted structured features that I was mentioning, not the blue links, if content contradicts clear medical consensus.

Q I see. And how do you determine what's the medical consensus?

A Yeah, I mean, we would consult a variety of sources.

Q Like what sources?

A You know, internal and external medical experts.

Q And how do you decide on which experts?

A You know, there are markers of expertise in this field and those would be --

Q So if something is a minority view, let's say it's held by a scientist who works at Harvard, would that be considered outside of the consensus and it could be -- it would be considered misinformation under the policy?

Mr. Bopp. You are asking a hypothetical, like if there were a minority view from a Harvard professor, how would that be handled by the policy team?

[redacted] Sure. I mean, that's a hypothetical but it's also happened.

Mr. Bopp. I mean, if you want to ask the question of what happened. I think we'd prefer to answer a question that's not a hypothetical, but so if you have a question that's not, maybe you can pose that.

[redacted] Well, I mean, when -- so consensus, you're basing it on the numbers, right? Is that --

[redacted]. I think the times where it came up would have been numbers, authorities, institutions, a combination of factors that would potentially vary claim by claim because some claims have a lot of historical precedent and the science may be, more or less, settled.

I want to be clear that, again, we would consult experts who would help us even determine, understand consensus rather than make that.

[redacted] You say you consult. You said "we." Is that your team? Is that you? Who is interfacing with the experts who are conducting this analysis?

[redacted]. Yeah. I mean, I thought I was being asked about my role. So in this case, me.

[redacted] Well, okay. As far as a concrete example, I understand that you weren't there when the Great Barrington Declaration was written and this story was. But this is a real world example where there were three scientists from Harvard, Stanford, and Oxford who disagreed with the consensus about the proper approach to mitigating COVID.

Was that something that you might, if you had been there at that time, you might have recommended be censored or downgraded?

[redacted]. I'm sorry. I really don't know.

[redacted] I have a question about that process you just described for consultation.

Would that process of consulting with internal and external experts occur for other types of topic areas or policy areas that you would have been responsible for?

[redacted]. Yeah, thank you. And I appreciate that also you're continuing to make a clarification on kind of what consultation looks like.

We do have medical staff at Google, and so in that case, we might have asked them on health content what to do or what the consensus was looking like, shaping up to be. But I wouldn't -- consult in the external sense, was, like, look at external sources rather than actually actively engage with anyone.

And to your original question, I don't recall something similar for other policies that I worked on, but, yeah, it's not impossible.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You used the phrase "edge cases" earlier. Did I hear you correctly?

A I mean, we have a transcript. Maybe, yeah.

Q Okay. And I guess the first thing, what is an edge case? You said it comes from the enforcement team?

A Yeah. So when a user sends feedback because a piece of content may be problematic in their view, it would be -- the intake is handled by the enforcement team.

They will review policies and decide whether it's violative or not.

In some cases, a small percentage of it, the policy may not have kind of made that line clear for a piece of claim like that, and so those are what I was referring to, alleged cases that may have been then brought up to product policy teams for a second opinion or third or fourth.

Q And in these instances, does your team then analyze the claim and provide a recommendation back to the enforcement team?

A Yes. So when I was in product policy, the role would be to provide kind of guidance as to whether this would have been in scope of that policy or not.

Q And is this -- when you're communicating back to the enforcement team, this is a recommendation or a direction? Is the enforcement team required to follow whatever is being given to them?

Mr. Bopp. By [redacted] team?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted]. I think typically these really are like this is a difficult point. What do we do? So it's more of a collegial shared kind of poring over the policy guidelines and understanding whether we think it fits. But, yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned earlier that at least within the Search umbrella was kind of this binary option ultimately, and you have to go one way or the other. And certainly appreciate that there is this collegial relationship, it sounds like, between your team and -- referring to your policy team -- and the enforcement team.

But if it is an edge case and it's not clear exactly how the policy decides, and there are two different views, who gets the ultimate say in what the decision is?

A Yeah. I mean, I think, obviously, it varies case by case, but if the product policy lead is confident or clear about application, I would go there. Sometimes it would be escalated up, kind of direct to VP. But, yes.

Q Does the VP oversee both the -- that you're referring to in your answer -- oversee both the policy team and the enforcement team, or do they have separate leadership?

A So there is a VP for product policy and a VP for enforcement.

Q Do you know at what point in the hierarchy someone oversees both?

A Yeah, the head of Trust and Safety oversees both.

Q When there is an edge case, is that one of the ways that will trigger your team to consider revising the policy or updating the policy?

A Yeah, it is possible that a new type of harm might emerge, and that's kind of one signal.

Q And you mentioned the Russian invasion as one example. Obviously, that was unexpected, triggers wanting to create a new policy. You mentioned edge cases.

What else would motivate or catalyze your team to consider revising a policy or updating a policy section?

A Yeah, I really think this is the primary path where kind of the signals, the understanding we get from what users are submitting as feedback and what may or may not be violative policy kind of informs potential uncovered topics.

But as I mentioned, Search is a relatively mature product area. So there wasn't all that much major updating in the two years I was there.

Q In September 2021, when you adopted the responsibility to start handling the health-related content, at that point the pandemic is about a year and a half in, things have settled down somewhat. But similar to the Russian invasion, there's new facts coming in. It's developing. Were there -- let me ask the question this way.

With respect to the health-related content, when the policy is being revised, in your experience, was it typically reactive, in the sense that it's in response to an edge case that the policy previously didn't cover, or is it proactive, where as part of your responsibilities you're trying to understand what the medical consensus is, seeing what the consensus is, changing and trying to preemptively change the policy before it's unable to address an edge case?

Mr. Bopp. You're asking him for his actual experience with policy changes?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted]. I mean, I think it varied, but I think primarily it would have been reactive with some space for proactive.

[redacted] So when something was found to violate the health content policy, what would happen to it? I mean, are you talking about what you were discussing earlier where it's not in the blue boxes at the top, or does it become impossible to find, or what exactly?

[redacted]. Yes. Health content policy applies only to Search features, which is kind of how we name all these things that aren't kind of the core search, blue links. And so, yes, it would be potentially blocked from the top answer in bold but would still be available and searchable and obtainable through the same queries and blue links.

[redacted] So there is no circumstance in which something would be completely blocked, the link would be completely blocked just because it didn't -- you know, it wasn't in line with the consensus as Google saw it?

Mr. Bopp. You're asking about, again, [redacted] experience or just hypothetically?

[redacted] No, his experience.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted]. So in health content specifically, in my time at Search product policy, no, there wouldn't have been a full-on blocking of a link from Search.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall any of the edge cases related to the health content?

A Hazily, I want to say that there was something maybe about Ayurdevic medicine in India at one point. I remember the discussion. I honestly don't remember the types of specific content.

Q When there is this sort of edge case, is there a ticket of some sort that everyone can work on? Is it described to you in an email? How is an edge case communicated to you and your team?

A Yeah. So issues are documented through an internal tracking workflow so as to kind of follow it from kind of user feedback to the ultimate decision.

Q And what is that workflow's internal name?

A Primarily, we use a tool called buganizer, but that's for Search, for the work I did.

Q How does that work? Tell us more about it.

Mr. Bopp. Buganizer?

[redacted] Yeah.

Mr. Bopp. You're asking how does buganizer work?

[redacted]. It really is like kind of a tasking workflow whereas someone opens an issue, and it can be a product policy issue, it can be the second "o" on Google for some reason today is fluorescent pink. And so either through an external feedback, internal, whatever, something, that gets opened and gets assigned to someone, product, engineering, policy, based on what it is.

BY [redacted]

Q And sorry, just to clarify. When you say someone. So like users could report it or also employees or --

A So a lot of search has the feedback button.

Q Oh, okay.

A And, obviously, they don't -- that doesn't open for them the internal tool, but that ticket will eventually flow into buganizer.

Q I see.

[11:00 a.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q You said this is a task-flow tool; is that right? Is there email traffic, or do you have to -- I guess what I'm trying to get at is, is this a tool that facilitates communication?

Mr. Bopp. Can you be a little more specific?

[redacted] Sure.

Mr. Bopp. It facilitates communication --

BY [redacted]

Q So there's multiple team members, you know, working on -- at the very least, there's someone from the enforcement team and someone from your team. Are you communicating -- I'm just trying to better sense of how this tool operates.

Do you leave -- I don't know if you guys use Outlook for email, but are you communicating via email, and there's this ticket that's independent of that? Is it something that operates within Outlook, as an add-on or something like that?

Can you just say a little bit more about how this ticket works and how you're communicating when resolving an issue?

A Yeah. So it's a stand-alone site, internal. You can leave comments on the ticket, and so there is an exchange possible. You can -- yeah, so that's how it works.

Q And let's say there's an edge case and you have a similar one a couple weeks later. Is there a way to go back and reference what was discussed with the previous ticket?

A There is, yes.

Q Yeah. And that paper trail, is that housed within the tool? Do you receive a, I don't know, for lack of a better word, a transcript later? Where are those records available?

A So, A, you know, I don't own the architecture of Buganizer, but you can search Buganizer to find past cases.

Q Uh-huh.

A I think you can subscribe by email too, but -- yeah.

[redacted] Do you have a sense of what percentage of cases, in your experience, are edge cases versus other types of issues that have been dealt with in the past?

Ms. [redacted] Well, the hour's up, so --

[redacted] I have 5- --

Ms. [redacted] Oh, wow, look at you. I guess we started later than I thought. Go for it.

[redacted]. So you're asking me --

Mr. Bopp. Yeah, maybe we can restate the question here. Now I've forgotten.

BY [redacted]

Q Sure. The question was, what percentage of cases, in your experience, are edge cases versus other types? Or is that -- maybe I should say, is that measured?

A Yeah. Thank you. I would say, you know, "edge cases" was my term. It's not kind of a formal term.

Q Right.

A I think what I can approximate, to your question, is that, in my experience, maybe under 5 percent of, kind of, enforcement decisions, something like that, may have been raised to product policy. But the vast majority of decisions are, yeah, taken and point to enforcement.

Q Is there a way to distinguish between the type of user that is submitting or flagging a problem or potential problem? Is the identity of the individual or organization that is submitting a concern, is that known?

A No. I believe -- again, the architecture is not my responsibility. But by the time it gets to product policy, there's no, kind of, personally identifiable information associated to, kind of, the user who submitted the feedback.

Q So the focus internally is solely on the substance of the feedback, not the nature of the individual or entity submitting it?

A It would be content versus policy, rather than any other -- yes, it would be, kind of, analyzing the content based on the policy rather than the, yeah, submitter.

BY [redacted]

Q You've mentioned that, on your policy team, like, in December 2021, you became the portfolio lead for health-related content. Does the enforcement team have a similar division of labor, where there is a lead for health-related --

A I'm trying to remember with health specifically.

Because of the nature of Google as being global, we -- and enforcement having much higher volumes than us, typically the responsibility is also shared regionally and across time zones. So there would've been, probably, people who are health-specific but also region-specific based on the time zone, because that job, unlike mine, was a, kind of, always-on-call job.

Q And how big a -- at least for your enforcement counterpart team, how big was that team, do you recall?

A Not precisely, but I think maybe three to four times larger than ours, something like that.

[redacted] Thanks. So we're at the hour.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

Ms. [redacted] All right.

[redacted], thank you on behalf of the minority for coming here today.

EXAMINATION

BY MS. [redacted]

Q I want to first start -- since the purpose of this investigation is to determine whether Google and other companies colluded with or were coerced by the government to censor information, I just want to ask, when you -- in your current position as a principal of the trust and safety team, you do not interact with the Federal Government at all, correct?

A I do not.

Q Okay. And when you were the product policy manager for Search, you did not interact with the Federal Government at all?

A I did not, not to the best of my recollection.

Q And when you were the news and information credibility lead for Google News Lab, you did not interact with the Federal Government?

A To the best of my recollection, no.

Q Okay. So, in your entire time at Google, you had no contact that you can recall with Federal officials related to your work?

A Could you define "Federal officials" just to make sure?

Q Members of the Federal Government -- FBI, Homeland Security, the White House.

A Yeah, no, none of those organizations.

Q Okay. Was there any organization that you're thinking of, or agency?

A I'm trying to think whether there were WHO, World Health Organization-affiliated bodies that in my very first role I may have interacted with.

Q Okay. But that's it? Nobody from --

A Yeah, that's -- that's, yeah, what I can remember.

Q -- from Congress, anything like that?

A No. No.

Mr. Bopp. How about any other health-related organizations? You just need to be clear here.

[redacted]. Yeah.

Mr. Bopp. If you remember anything --

[redacted]. Yeah.

Mr. Bopp. -- you should state it.

[redacted]. There -- I'm trying to remember whether, again, in the first role, there was someone at the CDC, in the very first role I had at Google, but this was 4 years ago, so --

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Okay. And do you remember the nature of those interactions?

A In that role, it was mostly, like, events, right, public events. And so there may have been, kind of, invites to speak about things, stuff like that.

Q Okay. Nothing about content moderation?

A No.

Q Okay. Thank you.

So I want to talk a little bit about and get some clarity -- because we've been talking -- you spent most of the first hour talking about your work on the Search team.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I want to make sure I understand the difference between the Search -- some of the Search features that you were talking about and the blue links.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I think we're going to give you some examples about that.

So I'm going to show you -- I'm going to introduce as -- I think this is just exhibit 2, right? That's where we are?

A Thanks.

Q This is just a search that was, you can see, run this morning as an example of the type of search that I'm talking about.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q Did everybody who needs one get one? Okay.

So, on the top, where it says "Brad Pitt, American actor," and then it says, "Overview, Movies, Videos," and then there are some images, one with Taylor Swift that is confusing, is that the baseball card that you were referring to?

A Yes. This is a desktop version, a newer look, but yes, generally speaking, this is a Search feature, and that's the type of content I was referring to earlier.

Q And is there a technical term that Google uses to refer to that particular Search feature?

A Internally, it's called a visual entity. Externally, I think we just call it a knowledge-graph-powered feature. But, writ large, all of these top features are Search features.

Q Okay. And the "About" panel, is that the knowledge panel that you were discussing earlier?

A Correct, yes.

Q On the right side of the page?

A Uh-huh.

Q Okay. And so you mentioned, for example, how users could claim their Search features if they were people of note or if there was incorrect information.

A Exclusively the knowledge panel, so this --

Q The knowledge panel. Okay.

A -- little bit here they can claim.

Q Okay. So if Brad Pitt decided he did not want his children's names appearing on the knowledge panel, he could ask Google to remove it from the knowledge panel.

A Yes, he could make that request.

Q Okay. But that wouldn't stop me, if I googled "Who are Brad Pitt's children," from finding that information through Google Search?

A Correct. It looks like there's a Wikipedia link just underneath, and you would probably find the same information there.

Q Okay.

And what does the phrase "structured experience" mean with respect to Search?

A Yeah, and I think if I use that term, it's not a -- I think the Google term is "structured Search features."

Q Search features.

A That's the term we use for all of these. Basically it's a catch-all for anything that isn't -- you see there, below, there's a lot of these blue links, which are kind of your classic Search results. And so it's a way to differentiate between those and the more immersive, kind of -- you see these even have a slighter different color and they're at the top.

So it's just to differentiate something that we think is particularly relevant to a query. Which, in this case, right, you searched for Brad Pitt, and you get this experience that you probably wouldn't get if you searched for -- I don't know -- well, me.

Q Okay. Thank you. Fair enough.

And so you mentioned earlier that -- and we'll go back to the Russia-Ukraine invasion -- that the policy change was to not include Russian state media in the Search features, correct? So any content that came from Russian state media would not show up on, basically, the knowledge panel or this top page if I googled "Russia invasion of Ukraine," correct?

A That is correct, yeah, you wouldn't get Russian state media content here.

Q Sure. So I'm going to give a second example that is about Ukraine as exhibit 3.

A Thank you.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [redacted]

Q So, for this example, where it says "Top stories," is that part of the Search feature?

A It is.

Q Okay. And "About" is the knowledge panel, also a Search feature?

A It is.

Q Okay. And so is it fair to say that Search features are -- or, they include content and links that Google has decided to highlight?

A So I'm not a ranking engineer, but, generally speaking, they are content that our classifiers have determined to be particularly relevant or helpful or appropriate for the query that the user made.

Q Okay.

And you were asked by counsel for the majority several times -- I believe the term "downgraded" was used. Is that a term that Google uses when it refers to not including certain sources of content in its Search features?

A I don't know that we would have a specific term. I think we would just maybe block that feature so that it's not -- yeah.

Q And when you say "block that feature," what you mean is, it doesn't show up in these curated experiences, these Search features, but it still would show up on the blue links that are on the next page?

A Correct. Yes.

Q So users could still click on links that took them directly to Russian state media?

A Yes. Users in the United States, yes. I think there may be some legislations around the world where that is different.

Q And I appreciate that distinction. Thank you.

And your work for Google is global, correct?

A Correct.

Q And it has been for each of your three positions?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So -- I'm sorry. Give me a moment, please.

Can you explain, going back to that decision to remove Russian state media from the Search features, why was Russian state media information about the Russian invasion of Ukraine something that Google did not want to include in the Search features?

A Yeah. I think the concern was that at the time of the invasion there could be extensive violent content, misleading content, content that could potentially harm users in Ukraine, outside Ukraine, and that, as a internationally denounced aggressor state, there was a risk that that content could -- it would be best to not have that content. There was such a high risk that that content could violate our policies on violence, on other gory stuff, that we decide to remove it from up there.

Q Okay. That makes sense.

BY [redacted]

Q And just to clarify, and I know we've gone down this road a couple times, but that was removed from the highlighted Search features, not the blue link Search features, correct?

A Yes, I appreciate that. Yes, it would be still available, you know --

Q Right.

A -- further down.

Q And just to be clear, because I want to make sure the transcript shows this, when we're referring to the "blue links" that's on, for example, the third page of the Bakhmut exhibit, that's, you know, the title of a page highlighted in blue, and that's a hyperlink that leads to the actual article or the actual website, correct?

A That is correct, yes.

Q Okay. Thank you.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And I believe you explained earlier that actually removing content from showing up as a blue link under the Search result, that's a decision that has to be -- there's a legal process for that.

A Yes, to --

Q Okay.

A -- the best of my knowledge. But, again, my responsibility was for the Search features, so --

Q Okay.

A -- I don't know if there was any exceptions there.

Q And this is a more broad question, but just based on your experience and your understanding: Even if such a link were removed from Google Search results, the information is not taken down from the internet? I mean, Google does not have the ability to remove content from --

A Correct.

Q -- the internet itself?

A Yes. Yes. The content is still -- you can type it in or find it on another search engine.

Q I want to back up a minute and just talk about Google's mission generally and how the policies you've talked about, about preventing harmful content, like the sort of violent content you just mentioned, further Google's mission.

Is it fair to say that Google's core mission is to make sure that people around the world find the information that they're looking for? Or how would you describe it?

A Yeah. I mean --

Q I don't want to put words in your mouth.

A -- our mission is to -- and sorry to sound like an automaton, but I think it's helpful. It's to organize the world's information and make it universally accessible and useful. So, yes, uh-huh, we are.

Q Okay. So why is it important to Google to combat misinformation, as you understand that phrase, or disinformation?

A Users are looking for information that helps them in their everyday life. And so, generally speaking, we have this concept of expertise, authority, and trustworthiness that informs our classifiers -- which is not what I work on, but just -- and that's kind of a core value, though, that things should be helpful to the user.

Q And so, if there is information -- well, let me rephrase that.

In addition to wanting to be helpful to users, does Google have a business interest in preventing harmful information, like the type that you described, and not just misinformation but child sexual material, the violent and gory material that you describe -- the type of material that your policies prohibit, may be more a clear --

A Yeah. I mean, it is in our interest to set certain boundaries that users are aware of and, kind of, enforce those boundaries so users aren't shocked or find content that could harm them.

Q And can you explain why? Why is it in your interest for that?

A I don't know that -- I don't have, like, a business side to it, so I think just users will keep returning to Search and find it useful and use it more.

Q Be- --

[redacted] Go ahead.

Ms. [redacted] No, go ahead.

[redacted] So, I guess, just to clarify, is the concern that if Google's results return results that are not helpful to users, then they might go to another search engine?

[redacted]. Yeah, absolutely.

[redacted] Okay.

BY MS. [redacted]

Q And not rely on Google's other products as much as well?

A I -- again, I don't --

Q You know what? You don't have to --

A -- know about these conversations, but, generally speaking, yeah, like, Search, using Search.

Q Fair enough. And if I ask you -- which I might, but I'll try not to -- about other products that you don't work on or that you don't know about --

A Yeah.

Q -- feel free to tell me, "I don't know about that."

A Yeah.

Q Because I think that it's easy to talk about Google generally and assume that you have familiarity with other aspects of Google's products that you do not have.

You were asked earlier about the distinction between who was asking for certain material to be reviewed for compliance with your policies.

Google has a transparency center on its site that anyone in the public can access, correct?

A Yeah, I believe so, uh-huh.

Q And that transparency center publishes a variety of different reports about Google's products and activities?

A Yes.

Q And that includes reports about some of its enforcement activities?

A Yeah, I don't, kind of, collate those reports, but, yes, there are information on takedowns that are public.

Q Okay.

And if you're familiar with this, you can answer, and if not, just tell me. But YouTube specifically publishes reports about the content, because YouTube is so much more user-generated content. They publish quarterly reports about content that's removed. Are you aware of that?

A I believe they have a separate transparency report.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with what's in those reports?

A I am not.

Q No? Okay.

Just a moment.

That is it for me for now. So, depending on what happens, I might have some more for you --

A Thank you.

Q -- in the next round, but we can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] On the record, please.

BY [redacted]

Q Just to go back a little bit to the experts you consulted with in your previous role, can you tell us a little bit more? You said you consulted with internal and external experts. Can you tell us who they were or anything more about them?

A So this is in the product policy role for Search.

Q Yeah.

A And I think I kind of made this clarification a little to your colleague earlier. "Consulted" would've also meant just, like, read stuff.

But, internally, we do have health experts at Google, and so I would've, for the health content policy specifically, on the rare occasion where there was an edge case, reached out to them.

Q Who are those? Do you know their names?

A There is a clinical team within Google Health. I think I would've probably opened a ticket, actually, to get someone assigned to it for a question.

Q I see. And those people, is that their full-time job or is it something they do on the side, typically?

A I don't think that it is their full-time job, but it is a different function, so I think they probably have allocated some amount of time to that.

Q Do you know how Google finds those experts?

A I do not, no.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Do you know how big that team is?

[redacted]. I do not, no.

[redacted] Do you know where they're housed within the company?

[redacted]. I believe, on this, you know, our company changes structures with some regularity. They would have been in Google Health, which is, I think, the external name for, like, our health-related stuff.

BY [redacted]

Q And that's separate, obviously, from your team.

A From trust and safety?

Q Yeah.

A Yes, that's a different team.

Q That's an entirely --

A It's a different team.

Q Okay. And what else do they do?

A I am not certain. I think -- I believe we own Fitbit. Maybe there's things related to --

Q Oh.

A Yeah, I don't want to -- it's really not my topic there. Like, what they do, I don't --

Q Oh, okay.

And this pertains to both your current role and the product policy one. Is that U.S.-specific or global? Like, are you doing stuff for the entire world or just the United States?

A Product policy rules are global in nature.

Q Okay.

A And the policy itself is global in nature.

Q I see.

[redacted] Do you have team members that are devoted to U.S.-specific issues?

[redacted]. No, we would've been too small to do that for every country.

BY [redacted]

Q And do the policies change? Like, if you're searching in the United States, could that be different than what's happening if you're searching in Germany based on German law or whatever?

A Yeah, that's a great question. So the policy for Search features, which I was responsible for, is global in nature. Legal requirements do vary --

Q Yeah.

A -- so there may well be differences. I believe Thailand has a very strict rule around content about the monarch. So there may be legal content differences but not, kind of, product policy for Search feature differences globally.

Q I see.

[redacted] To your knowledge, do you know if the enforcement team had individuals that had a focus on U.S.-specific issues for the United States?

[redacted]. To the best of my understanding, it really is a time zone, rather than strictly geographic, division of labor, just so that if something requires action at a certain hour of the day, there's always someone on.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you talk a little bit about your first role at Google, the news and information credibility lead? And, also, what's the Google News Lab?

A Yeah. So the News Lab is part of the Google News Initiative, which was a, I believe, when it was announced in 2015 or around there, a $300 million investment from Google for helping the news ecosystem globally kind of adapt to the digital age through new tools, new business models, et cetera. And so the News Lab had some part of responsibility for some of this funding and some training.

Q I see. When was that developed? Do you know?

A I think it was somewhere around 2015 that the GNI launched.

Q I see. And so the Google News Lab, I assume, is completely different from, like, the trust and safety --

A Correct, entirely different.

Q I see. And how big was your -- was that team?

A I believe the News Lab may have been 20 or 30 people, something like that.

Q Oh, okay. So a lot smaller than the --

A Yeah.

Q And who did you report to there?

A I reported to a, kind of, head of News Lab.

Q Okay. Do you know their name?

A Yes. [redacted].

Q Okay. And did anyone report to you?

A No.

Q And so what did you do sort of on a day-to-day basis in that role?

A Yeah. A lot of it was, like, public engagement on the topic of verifying contents. Or, like, we have a lot of tools, like Reverse Image Search, that you can use to find if an image that you just got that told you if something that's happening right now actually appeared on the internet a long time ago; or Google Earth, if someone is saying that they're in a specific location, you can use it to see what that location looks like and if that doesn't quite match up.

So a big part of it was, kind of, training on what tools we had available for users and journalists who wanted to verify content.

Q All right. So how do you make those determinations?

A What do you mean? Sorry.

Q Like, about whether -- about when you try to verify something to see if it is real.

A I mean, it wasn't my role to verify anything --

Q Oh.

A -- at all, to be clear.

Q Oh, okay.

A And I appreciate that. It was really just to -- and these are public courses, by the way. It was, like, to users, to journalists --

Q Oh.

A -- to citizen journalists around the world, "Here's what you can use from Google to do your verification path." Yeah, we did not do any of that ourselves.

Q I see. Okay. And so what format was that? Like, the Google -- I mean, were you putting out --

Mr. Bopp. Go ahead.

BY [redacted]

Q Were you putting out articles? Or are these videos? Or how does that work?

Mr. Bopp. Yeah, so you're doing this well, but make sure you let her finish the question.

And then, here, for this question, when you said "do that," I know we're sort of down the line of questions, but if we can be a little bit more clear about what it is you're asking him.

BY [redacted]

Q So how did you convey that information to the public?

A So there was -- I think there still is a training center, I think, online that's available.

Q I see. Okay. I wasn't aware of that. Sorry.

And in your description of the job on your website, you mentioned fact-checking the ecosystem's response to the COVID-19 infodemic, you know, as one of your duties in that job position. Can you elaborate on that a little bit more, what that means?

A Yeah. So --

Q And what's an infodemic? I'm sorry. That's a term we're not familiar with.

A I believe "infodemic" may have been a term for the trove of information on pandemic that emerged from it eventually, but I don't exactly remember, but I think that's it.

Okay. We would train fact-checkers, as we would reporters, journalists, et cetera. So that's one part of it.

And, as I mentioned, there was a funding component too. And so the GNI administered some funds that provided support to the ecosystem.

Q Okay. Wait. So who funded that? I'm sorry. I don't quite --

A So the Google News Initiative --

Q Yeah.

A -- as I mentioned before, had these open funds to update business models, update tools, just adapt to the digital age. And it administered funds that organizations could apply to for that purpose.

Q I see. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q I have one kind of followup question based on the minority's questioning. I think in one of your answers you mentioned the term "ranking engineer." Could you talk more about that term? And -- could you talk more about that term?

A Yeah. And I am not a software engineer myself, so --

Q Yeah.

A -- just with that pretty major caveat on how well I will portray this.

Q Yeah.

A Obviously, our algorithms, our classifiers do their best to understand what content to return against any specific query. And that takes a lot of smart people to try and understand what a query is about, you know, even just, like, what common typos are, so if you search for the name slightly different, you still get those content. And so engineers who work on ranking would, kind of, work on these types of classifiers.

Q Where are ranking engineers housed or situated within Google Search's structure?

A There is a Search engineering team, and they're one of the functions.

Q Uh-huh. Thank you.

[Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY

Q This is exhibit 4. Can you just take a look and let us know when you've had a chance to read it?

Sorry, is this 5?

Is it?

Ms. I think it's 4.

Four. Are we all certain, is it 4?

Yeah.

Yes, exhibit 4.

Are you set?

Mr. Bopp. Yeah.

BY

Q Do you remember these emails?

A Yeah, now I do, uh-huh.

Q The ones you were on, at least. I know the last couple you're not.

Do you know who Elisabeth Wilhelm is?

A I do, yes.

Q Who is she?

A I believe she was a consultant at the CDC on the topic of immunization.

Q Okay. How did you come to know her?

A I believe we met in a previous role at TED where we were looking at crowdsourced content moderation as a possible path, and we were discussing, I think, measles at the time. And I can't remember how we were introduced, but I think I met her then.

Q So you were both working at TED?

A No, no.

Q Oh, oh.

A I think she was still at CDC at the time.

Q Oh, okay. I see. But you were --

A We were not --

Q Yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah.

And, actually, what were you doing at TED? I don't think we really talked about that.

A Yeah. It was a 3-month, kind of, research stint to see whether there was a new model for crowdsourced content moderation.

Q Okay.

And do you know Elisabeth in her -- sorry -- the June 5th email, which would be the last -- it's the one on the last pages. She refers to a social inoculation implementation research. Do you know what that means?

Mr. Bopp. Wait, where are we?

[redacted] That would be -- it's the last email. It's, like, the first email chronologically in time but on the last page, so it's the June 5, 2020, email.

Mr. Bopp. Oh, okay. And what you're asking about where she --

[redacted] She refers to -- so I'm just asking if he knows what she means by that, "social inoculation implementation research."

[redacted]. I don't, no.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

And in your response to her, I believe the following day, you referred to Question Hub, which is something that Google was working on with the CDC.

A I'm sorry. I'm seeing on the next day I replied about the job.

Q It might be --

A Oh, sorry. I think it's on --

Q It's on -- yeah. It's the Saturday, June --

A Yeah.

Q Yeah.

A Uh-huh?

Q Can you -- I mean, it doesn't say anything about it other than it's something Google is working on with the CDC. Can you tell us more about that?

A Yeah. So, to the extent that I recall -- and, obviously, here, even in the email, I said "I believe," so I'm not --

Q Yeah.

A -- hedging. I probably had this secondhand at the time too.

Question Hub is -- was? -- not sure it's still around -- a public tool that Google provided to online publishers who had access to the Google Console, so who could, you know, publish on Google sites, to see what questions users were reporting did not have enough answers about.

And so it was just a instrument for publishers who were looking to understand online appetite for information. Yeah.

Q And what was the CDC's -- I mean, you said the CDC was working --

A Yeah. I honestly -- again, even then I was unclear, and I'm certainly unaware of whether they did anything in the end or what the nature of it was.

Q Okay.

In the same email, the last paragraph other than -- above "Take good care," when you discuss "spinning down the COVID specific to focus primarily on the election, but the two are inevitably related," can you explain a little bit more what you meant by that, how they're related?

A I mean, I'm saying this in June 2020, so --

Q Yeah.

A -- the pandemic was front and center of, kind of, discussions. So I think, yeah, that probably COVID would continue to be a topic I worked on.

Q But, I mean, how were the two inevitably related, the election and COVID?

A Because it was a central topic of the election.

Q Oh, I see.

A I think.

Q Okay. You weren't -- so, okay. I see.

A little bit later on, so on June 11th, you responded to -- sorry. On June 11th, Elisabeth wrote to you and invited you to a conference on infodemiology.

Do you recall if you attended that conference? It was a virtual conference, I believe.

A I don't recall. To the best of my knowledge, I did not attend, but I'm not sure.

Q Okay. So, I guess, since you don't remember, you wouldn't know who was there?

A Yeah.

Q And, in your response, you referred to "Wardle." Do you know who that is, whose full name?

A I'm assuming this is -- in fact, it would've been Claire Wardle.

Q Do you know where Ms. Wardle works and what she does?

A Claire Wardle is currently at Brown University.

Q And what does she do there?

A I think she's a professor in public health, communication, something like that.

Q Okay.

A I'm not certain of what her title is.

Q Okay. Do you know how you knew her?

A Yes. I met Claire in a previous role, as she is an expert in online communications and the spread of online information.

Q I see. Does she deal with misinformation?

A Yeah. Yeah. She, I think, published a pretty seminal report for The Council of Europe on, kind of, maybe 2014-2015 stuff.

Q Okay.

Do you have any idea what "masterplan" is? A number of people emailed in a subsequent email, which you're not actually on -- so you were removed at that point -- have "masterplan" addresses. I'm just curious.

Mr. Bopp. Do you have a copy of that?

[redacted] It's here.

Mr. Bopp. Where is it?

[redacted] The chain continues without him on it for some reason. It's the third page. They discuss him a little bit, but --

[redacted]. So I'm not certain, but, from context, it might be an event-planning company --

[redacted] Oh, okay.

[redacted]. -- given that they're discussing a conference.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted] can you remind me again, when did you work for Poynter?

A Yes. I think I joined in December-2015-ish and then left in February-2019-ish.

Q And did you have the same position from 2015 to 2019, or did you change roles?

A I had the same position.

Q And can you remind us again what that position was?

A I was the director of the International Fact-Checking Network.

BY [redacted]

Q Is Poynter a bigger -- is IFCN within Poynter? Is that correct? Or --

A Yeah. And I think maybe the precise nature has changed now; maybe it's a fiscal sponsor. But, at the time, it was just a -- essentially a unit, you know, that was housed in the Poynter Institute.

Q I see. And so Poynter -- what's Poynter's broader purpose?

A So the Poynter Institute is sort of like a continuous education center for journalism.

Q Oh, okay. I see.

BY [redacted]

Q There's reference online that Poynter had a code of principles. And I think you mentioned it earlier in one of your answers with respect to Meta -- Meta's own fact-checkers had signed on or joined a particular document.

Can you say a bit more? What is the code of principles, if I'm using the term correctly?

Mr. Bopp. This is the Poynter code of principles? Or what code are you referring to?

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. There's a -- first off, is "code of principles," is that a term -- am I using that term correctly?

A So I think you're referring to the International Fact-Checking Network's code of principles, which was a set of guidelines that the International Fact-Checking Network's community from around the world put together as kind of a set of best practices for fact-checking organizations. It's a code of ethics of sorts.

Q Okay. And, in your role, did you work on that?

A I did. Yeah.

Q How big was your team at Poynter?

A I think the most we were, full-time, at Poynter, there were three of us.

Q Okay.

And you referenced contributions from people from elsewhere. Are these -- just at a high level, is it universities? Media organizations? What sort of entities are providing input?

A Yeah, I mean, the intention of it was, it was supposed to be kind of almost a, quote/unquote, "trade body," right, of and for the fact-checking publishers. So, you know, while in this country fact-checkers are often affiliated to large media outlets, in many parts of the world, especially where there are authoritarian regimes, these may be nonprofits. So it varied a little bit, but it would've been publishers who, you know, typically online would publish content verifying claims.

Q Are you familiar with PolitiFact?

A I am familiar with PolitiFact.

Q And did you work with them during your time at Poynter?

A I would have, as I did with -- I think there were 50-plus other members of the IFCN.

Q Okay. And did Poynter at some point acquire PolitiFact?

A So the precise nature there is something that I am not fully clear, but, to the best of my understanding, Poynter Institute had some sort of ownership status over the Tampa Bay Times, something like that. Or -- anyway, you can find this and have it explained better by people other than me.

So I think what happened, or more or less what happened, was PolitiFact moved from, kind of, the Tampa Bay Times to the Poynter Institute.

Q And what was the nature of your interactions with PolitiFact in your role?

A You know, checking whether they were available for our annual conference, hearing any best practices they were taking on, new formats or new tools, that kind of stuff.

Q Okay. As part of your role, did you ever get into something as granular as an individual post by PolitiFact?

A No. It was not my responsibility, nor my interest, frankly.

Q You referenced earlier about how Meta would only work with fact-checkers that agreed to abide by these guidelines, this code of principles, put out by the -- IFCN? Is that acronym accurate?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall how that relationship between Meta and Poynter first started?

A Of sorts. I think this is now 6, 7 years ago.

I believe fact-checkers, as others, had kind of published concern about the viral fakes on the platform, and I think there was an open letter that summer that the IFCN kind of helped write.

Q And -- yeah, go on.

A No, I also wanted to clarify one thing you said, a condition. I just want to make sure that -- it was a necessary but not sufficient condition, right? Meta chose its own partners --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- but they, as a floor -- and I can't speak to, obviously, their cause -- but, as a floor, the partners needed to be signatories of the code.

Q Understanding this is Meta who's putting these conditions, do you recall what some of the other conditions were?

A I don't, honestly, no. I don't think they were available in all markets, for instance, or all over the world, so --

Q Were you the one interfacing with Meta personnel, or, at the time, Facebook personnel?

A I had some meetings, but there was no -- the partnership that continued was then, like, one-to-one between the fact-checkers and Meta. It was never with the IFCN or Poynter.

Q Uh-huh. And what was the nature of your interactions? Were you facilitating other third-party fact-checkers and introducing them to Meta personnel, Facebook personnel?

A Yeah, I mean, in the nature of the role as a convener and representative of them, I would say I typically expressed the community's preferences or opinions.

Q Yeah. And did others on your team share this responsibility of introducing third-party fact-checkers to Facebook?

A And I also want to be clear, it's not like there was, like, a formal, "Hi, Facebook Representative. This is Fact-Checker X."

Q Uh-huh.

A You know, maybe there was some -- there was a meeting that summer or something like that. That's the type of event.

Q Do you remember who your point of contact was at Facebook?

A There were a few. I think one person was [redacted], maybe.

Q Once a third-party fact-checker has been introduced to Facebook, did you or your team play any further role? Were you looped in to further communications? Or once the introduction or whatever was made complete, your role was done?

A Yeah, the role of the IFCN remained the same as before, which was to help verify with respect to this code. We did not intervene in the contractual relationship between the fact-checkers and Facebook.

[redacted] Did you work with other social -- or, you know, play the same role with other social media companies, or just Facebook?

[redacted]. There is, to my knowledge, nothing quite equivalent to what Facebook did. I believe there would've been conversations with other platforms around what could be done, but nothing of this form, no.

[redacted] Do you know which platforms?

[redacted]. I'd imagine I would've spoken at the time with Google and with Twitter, but I'm -- yeah. I don't remember the nature of those conversations.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall if Meta, or personnel from Facebook -- let me take a step back. You mentioned that third-party fact-checkers agreed to abide by these guidelines, this code of principles, as a necessary but not sufficient condition.

For the other conditions that Facebook had in mind -- and recognizing you don't recall what those specific conditions were, but -- when Facebook is conducting its analysis, assessment, of whether those other conditions are met, do you recall if Facebook personnel were consulting you or your team?

Mr. Bopp. Do you understand the question?

[redacted]. I think I'm being asked, did anyone at Meta ever discuss the program with me? And if so, yes. But there was no -- yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Yes. And I appreciate the response.

With respect to Facebook, they're out looking to develop something -- and this is, again, how Facebook has presented it publicly -- find third-party fact-checkers that are legitimate, that do good work, whatever it might be. And, as you said, if they're willing to abide by a set of principles, that's a good starting point. That's a necessary but not sufficient condition.

Did anyone from Facebook reach out to you or your team for help in identifying or assessing the legitimacy of other third-party fact-checking organizations?

Ms. [redacted] I'm sorry. If you could repeat that, just the tail end. I'm so sorry.

[redacted] Assessing other third-party fact-checking organizations.

Ms. [redacted] Thank you.

[redacted]. I remember having conversations with folks at Facebook about the program, about how the code works. It was a big item in the news, especially for a sleepy journalism center in Florida. So, like, we would've had conversations around how the code works, what it takes to meet the conditions.

BY [redacted]

Q Similar to PolitiFact -- you said at some point it became housed within Poynter -- are there any other similar organizations that you recall that were owned or operated by Poynter during your time there?

A I don't -- no, I don't think so. But I -- yeah, I'm not necessarily an expert on it.

Q Fair enough.

During your time at Google, have you ever worked with someone named [redacted]?

A Yes.

Q Do you know who she is?

A She is the director of Search, Assistant, and Geo policy for Google.

Q And --

A Product policy, I should say.

Q Okay. And did you report to her?

A She was my director for the period of time that we referred to quite often, when I was a product policy manager.

Q Great. And that started in 2021?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Do you know if she's still in that role?

A She is still in that role.

Q Do you know who [redacted] (ph) is?

A I do.

Q And who is that?

A She would be, roughly speaking, the director for enforcement for Search,

Assistant, and Geo.

Q And was she in that role -- understanding this is a different team than yours --

A Yeah.

Q -- was she in that role when you were with the product policy team?

A I believe so, yeah. That's my recollection.

Q And do you know what her current role is?

A I believe she's in a similar role now.

Q Did you ever work with [redacted] (ph)?

A I don't think so, no.

Q Okay.

During your time at Google, have you worked with the Government Affairs and Public Policy team?

A Yeah, it will have happened. Uh-huh.

Q And what were the context of those interactions?

A Generally speaking, with the new policy launches, there maybe consultative roles for other functions within Google, where they don't approve or disapprove or reject something but they can express their opinion. And so that's the type of a relationship we might've had.

Q So they are communicating to you and your team a point of view?

A Right. Like, say there was a policy proposal. Before launching it, you might go kind of around, and there may be something that they know that we didn't, and so we'd get that piece of advice too.

Q Who was your point of contact on that team? Or did you have multiple points of contact?

A Yeah. I think -- and I think the director of the team changed in between, so there would've been different people in the GAPP team.

[12:17 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall who the director of the team was when you started with the product policy team?

A I think he had a three-letter name. But we did not have that many interactions, so no, I don't. Sorry.

Q You mentioned if there's a new development, again, you communicate this to other teams at Google. For a situation where you're looping in this Government Affairs and Public Policy team, let's take a specific example. You mentioned the Russian invasion caused, you know, catalyzed your team to develop a new set of policies with respect to that.

For that issue, did you brief or communicate that to the Government Affairs and Public Policy team?

A I would have, yes.

Q And did were they providing any input to your team?

A In an advisory function --

Mr. Bopp. Just again, were they providing -- are you asking about specific -- some sort of specific instance of them providing input or just generally?

[redacted] So we'll start with the specific example with the Russian invasion. You said you're sharing information with them. Are they sharing information or something back with you?

[redacted]. I mean, to be clear on sharing information, what they would have done is simply reviewed a draft policy doc and said this looks unclear or change this maybe in an advisory role. We were not under obligation to follow their advice.

[redacted] Were there other teams you would have consulted with similarly?

[redacted]. The legal team, potentially the comms team on how we would describe it on the public language. The product team's responsible for actually if there was a change. The enforcement team of course. Yeah. I think I've covered most of the functions.

BY [redacted]

Q And the Russian invasion example, that's an example of a new policy. But for policies that are being revised or updated, would that also trigger something similar where you'd be sharing that with the Government Affairs and Public Policy team?

A Within like a hard and fast rule. But more often than not, they'd at least get an FYI that something was coming so that if they were then asked about something that changed they could explain it to their interlocutors.

Q Are there any other topics that you recall during your time that you briefed the Government Affairs and Public Policy team on?

A So at my -- I think that I recall in those two years obviously Russia-Ukraine would have been a big one. I believe we updated the policy for our hotline on Box. When you do suicide seeking queries, we trigger a hotline at the top with a help line and information. So we would have consulted them with that. Yeah.

There would have been others, but this is what I can remember right now.

Q Earlier, you had mentioned that you became the portfolio lead for health-related issues in I think it was September of 2021. Do you recall if there was anyone on your team responsible for election-related content?

A Yes. Although we don't have an elections policy to the same way that we have a health content policy.

Q Do you recall who worked on these election-related --

A It would have been one of my reports.

Q And do you recall who that was?

A Yes.

Q And who was it?

A You want her name?

Q Yes, please.

A [redacted] (ph).

BY [redacted]

Q What other topics did you have specific policies about? You had health content. What else?

A We had for the Knowledge Graph and for featured snippets, so these boxes, et cetera, that I mentioned, an incorrect information policy. And so writ large under that portfolio.

Q So you mean the health would fall under --

A No. Health content was a separate policy.

Q Okay. So since it didn't fall under the incorrect info, did that mean that the health content was not necessarily incorrect or if it's a separate policy? I'm trying to understand that. Why wouldn't that fall within the category of incorrect input?

A Yeah. I mean, some of this is very kind of organizational structure, boring stuff of which features are fully covered by the incorrect information, which is a subset of the features that are covered by health content.

To some extent, health content publicly is about kind of understanding medical consensus, whereas incorrect information is often more just like zero, one.

Q I see. And were there like subcategories of incorrect information like different topics, or that was just one, kind of there was no separation?

A Generally speaking, we would -- policy would provide grounds for action on public interest verticals. So if, say, you googled what did the Italy score -- what was the Italy score yesterday, and we got it wrong, policy wouldn't manually intervene to fix that or block that. But we would, if it said, "What is the election day?" and it was the wrong day.

Q I see. And so health content is the only other category, or are there other categories too?

Mr. Bopp. Categories of what?

[redacted] What he's -- things that would be corrected or --

[redacted]. I mean, there are 20-odd public policies that apply to Search features, I think -- 15 -- I can't. And so harassing content. Hateful content. Sexually explicit content. Health content. Deceptive behaviors, which is when someone claims to be a publisher from Denver but is actually based in Kaliningrad. So there's a broad set of policies.

[redacted] Do you remember any other specific ones other than those you mentioned?

[redacted]. No. Just -- I mean, there's -- I mean, I could list them, but those are kind of the main ones.

BY [redacted]

Q During your -- let me strike that.

Are you familiar with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A I have heard their name.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of what they are?

A I think they're an academic group set up to monitor information about the election.

Q And do you know if anyone from Google is in contact with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A I don't know.

Q In your role as a product policy -- for the product policy teams, you mentioned at least with the health content space that you would look to see external experts that included open source research. Is that correct?

A Yeah. I mean, generally speaking, if there was some form of manifestation of scientific consensus, we would take it into account.

Q In terms of your work bandwidth, once you took the responsibility of health-related content, what percent of your bandwidth was devoted to that? Was it a hundred percent health related? Was it a fraction?

A It would have been a fraction.

Q So can you say roughly?

A I mean, it would have -- may have varied. But 20 percent. I don't know. Something like that.

Q And so you're still working on a number of other areas during this time?

A Correct.

Q Yeah. Did you -- would you reach out to -- outside of the health content space, other areas -- reach out to sources outside of Google for information, expertise, support?

A No. Product policy was quite insular and inward looking in that sense. We did not have any [inaudible] collection, but general practice outside contacts.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Off the record.

[Recess.]

[12:28 p.m.]

Ms. [redacted] We're back on the record?

BY MS. [redacted]

Q I want to go back and talk just a couple quick questions about Google News Lab.

So you described it offered online classes or training that journalists or news organizations could use to help them sort of up their game, and it was basically just a suite of resources for news organizations. Is that accurate?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And it's available to any news organization that wants to take advantage of it?

A Yes. I think there were just the notification. We may have done kind of in-person trainings as well. But those two kind of aimed at being as open and public as possible.

Q So news organizations from all over the political spectrum could take advantage of it?

A All over the world. Yeah.

Q So geographic -- no limitations geographic except some might that be based on the laws of whatever country?

A No, not even that. I mean, I think we would allow -- the goal really was to empower journalists and others to use our tools.

Q Okay. So the Google News Lab was completely nonpartisan?

A A thousand percent.

Q And I want to talk to you a little bit about the code of principles at the International Fact-Checking Network that we talked about earlier.

That code of principles was something that you helped to develop, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And organizations that have status as international -- I'm going to refer to the acronym -- the IFCN signatories, they have to agree to abide by those principles, correct?

A Yes.

Q And the first of those principles is a commitment to nonpartisanship and fairness, correct?

A Correct.

Q And as part of that principle, fact-checkers are not allowed to let their own personal viewpoints affect their fact-checking, correct?

A Yeah. I don't remember the exact formulation, but, yes, that would have been.

Q And signatories to the IFCN do not advocate or take policy positions on the issues that they fact-check?

A That sounds like what's in the code, yes.

Q Okay. And a signatory cannot be an organization that's affiliated with or shows support for any party or affiliation or politician?

A Once again, that sounds familiar. I don't remember the code verbatim, but, yes.

Q Fair enough. And I'll just really quickly list out the other principles just in the interest of completion.

The second principle in the code of principles is a commitment to standards of transparency and sources?

A That sounds right.

Q And the third principle is commitment to transparency of funding?

A That also sounds right.

Q And the fourth is commitment to standards and transparency of fact-checking methodology?

A I believe that's right.

BY [redacted]

Q I want to talk through those principles just briefly a little bit in more depth.

The commitment to nonpartisanship and fairness, do you recall why it was important for that to be included in the code?

A Yeah. I mean, I think the view of fact-checking at the time and now is kind of a fair umpire, as a referee would be affected if it -- if they were also a player, so to speak. So when making assertions about the veracity of a claim, they can't actually be interested in where that claim is going.

Q And did you have any policies or best practices for how to ensure that an entity maintained a nonpartisan viewpoint?

A So this was 7 years ago. The way that the -- so the code requirements are all public. And so each one of these principles has like four or five, I think, conditions.

These conditions may have included making sure that no members of the reporting team are registered with a party, that kind of stuff, they haven't taken public positions. I don't remember, again, exactly. But, yes.

And it's important to note that they would also have been verified by an external journalism expert. So those commitments would have been reviewed by someone before being submitted to the IFCN.

Q What about the commitment to standards of transparency and sources?

Why was it important for that to be included in the code?

A Yeah. I mean, fact-checking journalism is a different type of journalism, which promises to a viewer there is not to conceal sources and to be honest and transparent about how it reached a claim -- a conclusion about a claim.

And so including the sources helps the users themselves fact-check. In fact, the most important thing about fact-checking is this, letting users make their own understanding of what facts are out there.

Q So would that mean, for example, on a web page that has a fact-checking determination on it, under, at the bottom of it, it might say we relied on X, Y, and Z sources to reach this conclusion?

A Yeah. Typically it would be either in a dedicated section or hyperlinks.

Q Okay. And it would be -- and it's a best practice to include it on that web page itself so the user can easily find it?

A Yeah. Just as a note, obviously you know this, but this was my understanding of things back then --

Q I understand, completely understand.

A -- maybe the ecosystem was involved. But, yes.

Q Completely understand. We're relying on your memory from 7 years ago and what it was at the time.

A Yes.

Q What about the commitment to transparency of funding and organization, why was that important to be included in the code?

A Yeah --

Mr. Bopp. Just to be clear, are you asking for [redacted] view as just his view as a person and somebody who has worked in this area, or in his position when he was working for the Poynter Institute?

[redacted] Understood.

BY [redacted]

Q So you said you helped to develop the code, correct?

A [Nonverbal response.]

Q So when you were developing the code, commitment to transparency of funding an organization was one of the elements that you included in the code, correct?

A Yes.

Q Do you recall why you chose to include that particular element in the code?

A I mean, again, at the time, it's somewhat tied to even the nonpartisanship requirements, that being funded perhaps by overtly political groups would have been potentially an issue, and just being open about who funds you is a helpful way for users once again to fact-check the fact-checkers, so to speak.

Q Okay. And so, to be clear, transparency meant it should be publicly noted, not that somebody couldn't be funded, because everybody gets funding from somewhere, just has to be noted publicly. Is that fair to say?

A Yes. The sole exception -- again, because this was a global network -- I believe there were fact-checkers in Iran where some of this would have been physically dangerous, so there was an exception for that. But generally speaking -- and we needed a local expert to confirm that it was dangerous -- but generally speaking, the requirement was publish [inaudible].

Q Okay. And then finally, the commitment to standards and transparency of methodology.

Can you explain, again based on 7 years ago when you were drafting the code or helping to come up with the code, what does commitment to standards and transparency and methodology mean, or what did it mean to you when you helped to draft the code?

A Yeah. I mean, I think it was a way to help users, readers, understand what fact-checking is and isn't, how things are found, determined, et cetera, once again with a view to, like, enabling users, readers, to make their own assessment of whether what they're reading looks and sounds right.

Q Great.

Ms. [redacted] And is part of the goal so that a user can essentially trace the fact-checker's step and go through the same research process to see all the same information that the fact-checker did?

[redacted]. In an ideal world, yes, the time that a fact-checker spends finding the PDF that's a hundred pages long would be shortened and the user could access it directly.

Ms. [redacted] Great. Thank you so much.

[redacted] Thank you.

We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 12:36 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	[redacted]
Date of Interview	May 24, 2023
Date of Review	July 19, 2023
Name of Reviewer	Read Mills
Signature of Reviewer

Page	Line	Suggested Correction

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	Principal, Trust & Safety Intelligence Team
Date of Interview	May 24, 2024
Date of Review	December 16, 2024
Name of Reviewer	Daniel Donovan
Signature of Reviewer
Page	Line	Suggested Correction
9	8	“April '21” should be “April 2021”
11	17	“about virus talk show” should be “about the Virus talk show”
14	18	“Enforcement” should be “enforcement”
15	13	“Workplace” should be “Workspace”
17	7	“protests” should be “protest”
23	8	“falls” should be “fall”

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

25	23	“I do not” should be “I did not”
26	7	“there is reasons” should be “there are reasons”
31	12	“back to the Russia-Ukraine” should be “back to Russia-Ukraine”

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
35	3	“piece of claim” should be “piece of a claim”
36	25	“there's new facts” should be “there are new facts”
38	6	“Ayurdevic” should be “Ayurvedic”
40	12	“trying to better sense” should be “trying to get a better sense”
43	9	“trust and safety” should be “Trust and Safety”
50	5	“was any exceptions” should be “were any exceptions”
52	20	“there are information” should be “there is information”

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

54	17	"trust and safety" should be "Trust and Safety"
56	15	"trust and safety" should be "Trust and Safety
57	3-4	"verifying contents" should be "verifying content"
59	21	"get those content" should be "get that content"
72	14	"it will have happened" should be "it would have happened"
72	16	"there maybe consultative" should be "there may be consultative"
Page	Line	Suggested Correction
74	15	"And did were they providing" should be "And were they providing"
79	12	"there were just the notification" should be "there were just the notifications"
82	3	"promises to a viewer there is not to conceal" should be "promises to a viewer not to conceal"
85	7	"fact-checker's step" should be "fact-checker's steps"

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: [redacted]

Wednesday, May 31, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

Present: Representative Jordan.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] DEPUTY GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ANTITRUST,

COMMERCIAL, AND ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

[redacted] DIGITAL ASSISTANT

[redacted] RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted] DIGITAL DIRECTOR

[redacted] SENIOR SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY INTERN

[redacted] MINORITY STAFF ASSISTANT

[redacted] MINORITY PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted] MINORITY DETAILEE

[redacted] MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE ADMINISTRATIVE STATE,

REGULATORY REFORM, AND ANTITRUST:

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For [redacted]:

[redacted]

[redacted]

Kirkland & Ellis

1301 Pennsylvania Avenue NW

Washington, D.C. 20004

[redacted] This is a transcribed interview of [redacted]. Chairman Jordan has requested that this interview -- has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

[redacted] [redacted].

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table and in the room introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] for Ranking Member Nadler.

[redacted] [redacted] for Ranking Member Nadler.

[redacted] [redacted] for Ranking Member Nadler.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the grounds rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for one hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes or everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage the witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. And it is my understanding that you are appearing today with counsel. Is that correct?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] Could counsel please state your name for the record?

[redacted] Sure. [redacted], Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] [redacted], Kirkland & Ellis.

[redacted] Okay. We've had a couple others enter the room.

Mr. Jordan. Hi, [redacted].

[redacted] Please introduce yourselves for the record.

Mr. Jordan. Jim Jordan, RM.

[redacted] [redacted] for the majority staff.

[redacted] Thank you.

We want to answer your questions -- we want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it is okay to tell us if you learned the information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us to who to the best of your knowledge might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, that, by law, you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in the interview.

Do you understand this?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001.

Do you understand this?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

[redacted] No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

That is the end of my preamble.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] No, thank you.

[redacted] Great. The clock now reads 10:04. We will start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q [redacted], can you give us your current job title and tell us where you work?

A I work at Meta. My current job title is programs and partnerships team lead.

Q And is that for -- is there a geographical area that you work in, or --

A North America.

Q And can you give us your educational background, starting with college?

A I graduated from the College of William and Mary with an undergraduate degree and a master's degree from the George Washington University.

Q Can you tell us what those degrees were in?

A My undergraduate degree is in government. My graduate degree is in political management with a focus in crisis communications.

Q Can you tell us your employment history?

A After college, I did some odd jobs and went to graduate school. And, after that, a few odd jobs again. I came to Congress in 2013 and left Congress in 2018.

Q Who did you work for in Congress?

A Several Members. Chronologically --

Q If you can, that would be great.

A -- Congresswoman Barbara Lee of California; the House Committee on Rules and the ranking member, Louise Slaughter, from New York; then-Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi of California; and, finally, then-Minority Leader Chuck Schumer of New York.

Q Can you tell us what positions you held at Meta prior to the one you have now, if any?

A My original title was politics and government outreach manager.

Q And when did you begin that?

A 2018.

Q Okay. And when did you finish that position and move to the next one?

A My current title began in November of 2022.

Q So do you mean just the title changed but not your responsibilities, or --

A That's a fair assessment, yes.

Q Okay. And can you describe what --

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] As a clarification, I did add a few more people to my team that I directly managed, but my responsibilities stayed very similar.

BY [redacted]

Q I see. And when did you add those people to your team?

A In November of 2022.

Q Okay. Do you know why?

A We had a reorg on our team.

Q Okay. Can you describe what you do, did in each position, or --

A Sure. I served as a resource to Members of Congress relevant to the Meta family of apps, and I run the North American team of partner managers who do similar work.

Q So you're on the public policy team, and so what do they -- what do they do in general? What's their purview?

A The public policy team at Meta works much like any other public policy team. We have a Federal team and a State and local team.

Q And what do those teams do? Can you give us sort of specific examples?

A Portions of the team are subject-matter experts on topics relevant to the company. Some colleagues directly advocate for legislation. Others are programmatic.

Q Okay. And, just to clarify, Meta has different products, right, like Facebook, WhatsApp, Instagram. Do you work with all of those products, or just Facebook or --

A I cover our whole family of apps.

Q Okay. And how large is the public policy team approximately?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] I will clarify the previous question.

While I cover the full family of apps, I do have colleagues that are subject-matter experts in specific apps?

BY [redacted]

Q I see.

A So, should I need their expertise, I have them available.

Q I see. Okay.

And what would be an example of something where you might need the expertise of a particular --

A A good example would be a rarely used tool that I'm not familiar with.

Q I see. Okay.

And where in the chain of command are you? Do you report to people, they report to you?

A I'm managed by [redacted].

Q Who is above him? Do you know?

A Currently, he reports to [redacted].

Q Do you know who she reports to?

A She reports to [redacted].

Q And then do you know who he reports to?

A He reports to Joel Kaplan.

Q How about above Joel Kaplan?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

Mr. Jordan. What are the titles of each of those people in that report -- order or sequence you just gave?

[redacted]'s title?

[redacted] His title is programs and partnerships director.

Mr. Jordan. Uh-huh. How about Ms. -- was it -- I think you said [redacted]. What was her title?

[redacted] I believe her title is VP of external affairs.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. And [redacted] and Mr. Kaplan?

[redacted] [redacted], I believe his title is vice president of public policy. I'm not sure what Joel's formal title is, and I wouldn't want to get it wrong.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So who reports to you, and how many people?

A I manage a team of --

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] To be precise, from 2018 to November of 2022, I managed a team of one, not including me -- team of two including me. And, in 2022, I manage a team of five including me.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And what do those people do on a daily basis?

A They are partner managers as well.

Q Can you tell us their names, please?

A From 2018 to 2022, I managed a man named [redacted]. And, currently, my team consists of [redacted]; [redacted]; [redacted], who has just recently been married -- you may see her name as [redacted]; and [redacted]

[redacted].

Q Okay. Thank you.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] As a point of clarification, that larger team that I began managing in 2022, some of those team members are no longer with the company due to a reduction in force that came last week.

BY [redacted]

Q Oh, okay. So very recent?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So does Meta have a content moderation policy or policies?

A Yes.

Q And do you work on those policies?

A No.

Q Not at all?

A No.

Q Okay. Do you have any idea who comes up with the content moderation policies?

A There are lots of teams that weigh into that set of policies.

Q Can you tell us what they are?

A The one that is responsible for the content policies is organic content policy.

Q Do you know who works on those?

A That has changed over time.

Q Can you tell us, like, as far back as you remember, as many people as you remember?

A With turnover and reorgs, I don't want to misrepresent who worked where, when, so I want to be precise for you. But the -- the head of that team, which stayed stable over time, is [redacted].

Q Okay. So do you work -- does your work at Meta involve enforcing the content moderation policies or applying them however --

A I don't enforce on content, or -- I also don't work on applying penalties on content, no.

Q But you discuss -- you discuss misinformation, correct, and the -- that issue on social media?

[redacted]. Discuss with who? I'm just trying to understand the question.

[redacted] Well, various people.

BY [redacted]

Q For instance, I mean, you've discussed misinformation with the CDC; [redacted], for example. How do you -- like, what would you call that work?

A It's not my area of expertise, but misinformation is one of many topics that my partners focus on.

Q Which partners?

A Over time, it changes. You mentioned the CDC.

Q Yeah.

A That's certainly one of them.

Q Or the White House, for instance?

A I have discussed misinformation with the White House.

Q So, just to be clear, what would you call that -- I may not be using the right term, so that's why we might be talking past each other a little bit, but what would you call that work?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] I'm not on organic content policy. It's not my area of expertise. My area of expertise is to ensure that my partners know how to use the tools, and so they're -- I'm not sure where the disconnect is.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So, when you say your partners, who -- who do you mean by that?

A That's changed over time as well.

Q Can you tell us who it was in the past, who it is now, anyone you can remember?

A In 2018, my partners included the Senate and a few private entities. And, in 2022, it included the House of Representatives and a few private entities, and the White House in 2021.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] In the spring of 2021, I also added the health portfolio of the United States Government.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So, in 2018, when you worked with the Senate, who in the Senate?

A Any Senator in the Democratic Caucus or who caucused with Democrats.

Q Can you give us any specific ones, like who you worked with more often than others, say?

[redacted] Can I just -- I want to be careful about, like, specific, like, clients. She said she had all of the Senate Democrats. If we're going to get into specific Members of Congress and the like, it would just be helpful to know what the legislative, like, angle is on that.

[redacted] Okay. That's fine.

[redacted] We just want to be respectful of all the Members and their privacy --

[redacted] Sure.

[redacted] -- interests. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q So you said, in 2018, you also worked with a few private entities. Can you tell us what those entities were?

A The campaign corollaries.

Q I see. Okay. And how about in 2022? I'll stay away from the House Members, but the private entities?

A That included the DNC.

Q Okay.

A As a point of clarification, in 2018, I also did have the DNC.

Q Okay. And, when you said the spring of 2021, the health -- you mentioned the health portfolio. Can you explain that a little bit more?

A That encompasses the Centers for Disease Control, the National Institutes of Health, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Q And can you tell us a little bit more about what -- how you worked with them, like what that looked like?

A It was very similar to what I mentioned prior. As a resource to them to ensure they knew how to use our tools and family of apps.

Q Which tools do you mean?

A Facebook, Instagram, WhatsApp, et cetera, et cetera.

Q Oh, okay. I see.

So do you know what Meta's enforcement of misinformation policy is?

A I'm certainly not an expert in those policies. It's outside of my area of expertise.

Q Can you tell us to the best of your ability, understanding you might not have it totally correct?

A In an effort to be precise --

[redacted] Can you repeat the question? I just want to understand.

[redacted] How does Meta deal with enforcement of its misinformation policies?

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] I wouldn't want to overstep the specifics of that because it's -- it's just not my area of expertise.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And do you know what categories of misinformation are subject to some kind of penalty or removal of the post or other ways of sort of decreasing the visibility?

A That question might be better answered by a colleague who has an expertise in that area.

Q Do you know which colleague might be able to do that?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] I will note that our policies are public and online in the community standards.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. But Meta does have a health misinformation policy, though. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Mr. Jordan. Can I just interrupt for a second?

[redacted], earlier, you mentioned partners. You said that you and your team worked with partners, and then you said those partners were, if I get this right, Democrats in the House and Senate. And then you mentioned the DNC. And then you also mentioned that you had discussions with the White House about misinformation.

I mean, so you categorize all those folks as partners?

[redacted] Yes. That's a fair characterization.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]

Q And, just going off of that for a second, in 2018 --

[redacted] Oh, I'm sorry.

[redacted] No, go ahead.

[redacted] As a point of clarification, Mr. Jordan, to your question, I have analogs that also manage those Republican counterparts, so Republicans in the Senate, Republicans in the House. It encompasses both parties.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] Okay. And including the RNC.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q In 2018, you mentioned you worked with the DNC along with some other partners. Who else did you work with?

A At the --

Q The private entities?

A Oh, that includes, as I mentioned, the DSCC, the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Q And then the DNC?

A Yes.

Q Anyone else?

A No.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You said you took the --

[redacted] Just what's the timeframe that you're looking at, because that's --

[redacted] 2018.

[redacted] Just in 2018, or --

[redacted] Correct. For right now.

[redacted] Okay.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] To make sure that the chronological clarity is there --

[redacted] Sure.

[redacted] -- in -- I'm not sure what the time stamps are, if it was early 2019 or late 2018, but, as anyone declared their candidacy for President as a Democrat, they became my partner.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So a Democratic potential candidate became your partners?

A Right. So, in my recollection, I'm not sure. Maybe one or two of them declared in late 2018, but I want to make sure that's precise for you.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] It also included, in that -- with the corollaries, the campaign corollaries -- bless you --

Mr. Jordan. Thanks.

[redacted] -- as folks declared candidacy for the Senate as well, through the Senate campaigns and the campaign arm, as well as the DNC and those entities running for President.

BY [redacted]

Q And what would be your job duties as it relates to those partners?

A Principally to be a resource for tools to ensure they, "they" being my partners, knew how to use them effectively, and my corollary on the Republican side did as well.

Q Okay. You mentioned the tools for, like, the apps. That would be WhatsApp, Instagram, Facebook?

A Uh-huh. Yes.

Q Can you provide an example of how you might work with the partner to make sure they knew how to use an application correctly?

A Yes. A good example would be we had a program rolled out called Facebook Protect, which was -- is an advanced security feature. And my colleagues and I ensured that our partners knew how to enroll and what the features of that program were.

Q And what did that program do specifically?

A It helped civic actors, users in the government and political realm, ensure that they had two-factor authentication on, strong passwords. It's a security program.

Q Besides that program, can you recall any other programs that you might have interfaced with some of these private entities on how to use correctly?

A One common tool that comes up a lot with my partners and my colleagues' partners is our Insights tool, how to track how content is doing on the platform, read your comments, reply to comments, administrative features of the platform. That comes up a lot.

Q And how often would you say, on a weekly basis, would you be interfacing with the partners?

A With any given partner, or --

Q Sure. Any --

A Just for point of clarification.

Q Any given partner.

A Over time, it can change.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Oh, my book of business or my set of partners is quite large, so it feels like every day.

BY [redacted]

Q Would you be primarily communicating with them over email?

A Yes.

Q Would you ever have phone calls with them?

A Occasionally.

Q And you mentioned, in 2020, you had another set of private entities that were your partners, including the DNC. Who else would be kind of grouped in that, in your partners category for the 2020 cycle?

A That -- that covers it.

Q Covers it? Okay.

A Pardon me.

Q And you mentioned, in 2021, the White House came on board as a partner?

A Yes.

Q What were your interactions with the White House like?

[redacted] Can we go you have at record for a second?

[redacted] Sure.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]

A In 2021, I added the White House to my set of partners. And, at the beginning of administration -- an administration -- excuse me -- they set up all of their Facebook accounts, Instagram accounts, and I worked with my Republican colleague and the National Records association to ensure that the data and content of the Trump administration was appropriately captured and that the handles of, say, for instance, facebook.com/whitehouse were transferred over to the Biden administration.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Oh, yes. I'm sorry. What's the full title of that administration?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] NARA.

BY [redacted]

Q NARA?

A Yeah.

Q Got it.

A Excuse me. Administration, not association.

So that was a big one at the beginning.

Q Okay. And who would you -- who was your point of contact for, I guess, the Biden administration in 2021?

A The head of the Office of Digital Strategy at the White House is Rob Flaherty.

[redacted] And who was your point of contact with the other agencies that you mentioned? You mentioned CDC, NIH, I think and HHS.

[redacted] Can we do them one at a time?

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q CDC.

A Sure. CDC, as you mentioned, Carol Crawford was a consistent contact.

Q And HHS?

A It changed over time, but, at the beginning, a woman named Georgeta Dragoiu, which I wouldn't be -- want to be imprecise in the spelling of that.

Q I actually think I have it, so -- and what about NIH?

A NIH, principally a woman named Shuly Babitz.

Q And what were most of those interactions about, or what were the interactions about?

A I don't know that I can broadly characterize in one way what those interactions were. If there is something more specific --

Q Can you give an example of, you know, what you were doing for the CDC or with the CDC?

A I, again, ensured that they knew how to use the tools. I have given presentations to their distributed communications teams about the tools. I -- that's -- that's one that sort of broadly comes to mind.

BY [redacted]

Q You said you took over the health portfolio in 2021. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Who did -- was there someone who was previously responsible for the health portfolio before you took over?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] In the spring, I picked that up due to a parental leave, so there was an opening on the team.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] My predecessor was [redacted].

BY [redacted]

Q And how long did you have the health portfolio as part of your set of responsibilities?

A I still have the health portfolio today.

Q Okay. And do you know how long [redacted] had that as part of her portfolio?

A I don't know the time stamp on that.

Q You mentioned --

A I --

Q Oh, sorry. Please.

A I do know that she covered the health portfolio in the Trump administration as well as into 2021, but I'm not sure on the date that she began that portion.

Q Okay. You mentioned, within the policy team, there is Republican counterparts to your role and similar roles. For the health portfolio, is there also a Democratic and Republican counterpart, or is there one health portfolio lead?

A For the wide variety of Federal agencies -- excuse me -- we split the portfolio dependent on who is on the team, sort of zone defense versus man to man.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted]. There is -- because of that dynamic, there is no partisan affiliation for that.

BY [redacted]

Q What are some of the other subject matters that the team is divided? So you mentioned health is one. Are there are analogous --

A My colleague, [redacted], has -- a clear example -- excuse me -- [redacted] holds the defense portfolio -- veterans affairs, Department of Defense, all the branches of the military. We try to group them by topic. That's -- that's the clearest set, I think, analogous to the health portfolio.

BY [redacted]

Q So the health portfolio would be just various agencies that were -- whose purview is health? So you mentioned NIH, CDC, HHS. Are there others, like FDA, NAID?

A Those are included, yes.

Q Okay. Any others that come to mind that you haven't mentioned?

A For the health portfolio?

Q Yeah. Health, yeah.

A Oh, that covers it.

Q Okay. And I'm aware you may not know the answer to this, but, once someone is -- was identified as having spread or posted misinformation, did Meta have a policy of trying to get them off -- say they did it on Facebook -- try to get them off Instagram or --

A That's --

[redacted]. Can you -- what -- are you talking about anywhere on the -- are you talking about a particular -- like, what are you focused on? Just --

[redacted] Well, I mean, were there efforts to sort of coordinate the platforms so that, if someone had posted something that was deemed misinformation on one platform, they would be removed from another platform so that they would be unable to use any of them?

[redacted]. Okay.

[redacted]. That level of specificity is outside my expertise.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know who might deal with that sort of thing?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted]. [redacted] would --

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted]. -- know.

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Can I --

Mr. Jordan. Earlier you said, [redacted], you dealt with NARA. That's National Archives?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Jordan. Who did you deal with there? And this is during the transition?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] I don't have her name coming to mind.

[redacted] We'll get you a name.

[redacted] We can certainly --

[redacted] Sure.

Mr. Jordan. And tell me again the interaction you dealt with -- what were the concerns or the issues there with Meta and NARA were working together during the transition? Can you talk some things relative to the Trump administration?

[redacted] Uh-huh. In my understanding of NARA's purview --

Mr. Jordan. Uh-huh.

[redacted] -- they archive the Facebook pages and related Instagram accounts for each administration, I believe starting in the Obama administration, so that they have appropriate records of the content.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. And then, when you worked with the various partners, which you discussed earlier and you talked about security concerns, how to better use the apps, did you also, like, recommend, like, "here is ways that you can increase your reach, here is ways that you can better -- dealing with the DNC as an example -- here is methods that we think would help you increase fundraising" or whatever?

Was that part of your portfolio as well?

[redacted] We have a core principle on our team that we work with the tools, not the topic. So we certainly would illustrate the capability of a tool but not with strategic advice. I think that answers your question.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. And then you mentioned, at the White House, you dealt with Rob Flaherty. And then you said earlier this morning that you talked to the White House about misinformation.

Was that the individual you talked to about misinformation?

[redacted] He is one of them, yes.

Mr. Jordan. And who would the others be?

[redacted] Another that comes to mind is Andy Slavitt.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Are there any others?

A I do recall another instance related to misinformation with Brenna Parker in Vice President Harris' office.

Mr. Jordan. And, when you talked about misinformation with these individuals, was it largely related to your health portfolio?

[redacted] For the first two I mentioned, Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt, yes.

Mr. Jordan. Okay. And then the other was relative to what?

[redacted] It was relative to a tranche of comments on White House Instagram accounts after the invasion of Ukraine.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] This is exhibit 1. If you could just take a look at these and let me know when you've had a chance -- it's really the -- just the first page.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Read the whole thing.

[redacted] Uh-huh.

BY [redacted]

Q This is an email from you to -- well, the second one is an email from you to Catherine Jamal at CDC, is that right, on September 7th, 2021?

A Yes.

Q And you mentioned you had a request from your policy counterparts for a meeting to discuss long-term vaccine policy. Can you -- who would your policy counterparts be that you mentioned there?

A That -- that's referencing my colleague, [redacted], who is listed in the cc line.

Q Okay. And it appears to me that you're quoting an email or something from someone else. You, like, copied and pasted that. Is that -- in that paragraph starting with -- the topic is vaccine misinformation. Is that a correct understanding of --

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you know who wrote that, who you were quoting?

A My recollection is that is from [redacted].

Q Okay. And it looks like a meeting was arranged to discuss vaccine misinformation between the CDC and Facebook. Do you recall if that meeting took place?

A I don't recall.

Q Okay. Did you ever attend meetings with the CDC?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you -- what -- can you tell us what those meetings were about? I understand there might not be one topic, but --

A Yeah. In the pandemic, so many meetings were Zoom, just the same squares over and over. It's hard to pick one out. We certainly had meetings that would include conversations like this.

Q Okay. And what was the purpose of the conversations?

A We wanted to ensure that our policies were keeping up with the authoritative science. The science in the pandemic changed over time a lot, the known science, and we wanted to ensure that our policies were keeping up with that.

Q So, when you say your policies were keeping up with it, what do you mean by that? Do you mean in terms of removing posts that you thought were inconsistent with the authoritative information, or --

A Noting, again, outside of my area of expertise, but that's a good example.

Q Okay. Who usually attended those meetings, to the best of your recollection, from both Facebook and the CDC and anyone else who would have attended?

A [redacted] was certainly regularly attending. Carol Crawford, as I mentioned, attended regularly. And Catherine Jamal, listed here as CDC/OD/OADC, is a familiar one.

Q Did you take notes at these meetings or keep a record?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] The specifics of these meetings were in [redacted]'s wheelhouse, so any of the relevant notes would have been her purview.

BY [redacted]

Q I see. And how often did these meetings take place?

A That varied. A good estimate would be maybe once every 2 weeks on average. I --

Q Okay. Are those all be-on-the-lookout meetings, or were there different categories of meetings with the CDC?

A This is different than a be-on-the-lookout meeting.

Q Okay. What were the -- what was this called, then?

A I don't think it had a formal title.

Q Okay. And a couple of the people at Facebook on the email and that who are included on the invite, [redacted], do you know who she is, what her title is?

A I don't recall what her title is.

Q Okay. Does -- do you know what team she works on, or what her group --

A I don't recall that.

Q How about [redacted]?

A I don't know her title either --

Q Okay.

A -- or don't recall her title.

Q Okay. Can you describe a little bit more, like, what was -- what these meetings were about, what was discussed, and who led them?

A These were collaborative meetings. I'm not sure what you mean by lead them.

Q Well, I mean, presumably someone sort of organized and, you know, was in charge of making sure the topics were covered or --

A Facilitated?

Q Yeah. That -- you can use that word.

A I facilitated the scheduling and the communications to schedule, [redacted] facilitated the technical policy points being discussed, and we leaned on CDC's subject-matter experts to facilitate their portion of that discussion.

Q I see. And how did these meetings differ from the be-on-the-lookout meetings, like in terms of substance?

A Be-on-the-lookout meetings were initiated by the CDC, and -- in my understanding, and included other tech companies.

Q I see. Okay. Did you attend those?

A I attended a few of them, yes.

Q Okay. Do you know how often they were held?

A It changed over the pandemic. I recall them maybe monthly.

Q Okay. Do you mean it changed, like they weren't held at all during the pandemic, or they increased during the pandemic, or they increased throughout the pandemic?

[redacted] I'm sorry, but can we break it into --

[redacted] Sure.

[redacted] -- one question at a time --

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] -- because I don't want her to give you an answer to some --

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] -- part, and it's not clear.

[redacted] Not a problem.

BY [redacted]

Q So were these meetings -- to your knowledge, were these meetings held prior to COVID?

A I don't know.

Q Okay. Did they increase throughout COVID in frequency?

A I can't speak to the frequency before I held that portion of the portfolio.

Q Okay.

A It was outside of my scope.

Q Okay. During your -- during that time?

A During --

Q Did they increase in frequency?

A So --

[redacted] During what --

[redacted] During what period?

[redacted] While you held that portion of the portfolio.

[redacted] Oh, no.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And who -- who was usually at those meetings?

A I don't know. I recall joining over the phone.

Q Okay. So they were phone rather than Zoom?

A I recall myself joining by phone. Hard to track who -- who joined.

Q Yeah. Yeah. Did you keep notes of those meetings?

A I did not, no.

Q Do you know who may have kept records?

[Discussions off the record.]

[redacted] I don't know that I can speak to somebody else's notes-taking cadence, so I wouldn't want to overstep that.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. Was there any process during meetings with CDC? Would there typically have been someone at Facebook who took notes? I'm sorry. Meta.

A I don't know.

Q Okay. What about meetings in general? Was there someone who usually took notes or recorded what happened?

[redacted] Can I just -- can you clarify that a little bit? What about meetings in general? Like, are you talking about meetings with the government? Are you talking about internal -- there -- I mean, the range there is really --

[redacted] Anything.

[redacted] -- a broad topic. I don't know what you're focused on.

[redacted] Anything.

BY [redacted]

Q I mean, did Meta usually have a policy of keeping written notes or other forms of recordings of meetings -- any meetings?

A I don't know of any policy regarding that, no.

Q Okay. So were -- would notes -- what about with government? Would there be a policy regarding meetings with government?

A I don't know of any policy that would cover that.

Q Okay.

Mr. Jordan. Whether there was a policy or not, was that recorded in some way, memorialized in some way?

[redacted] Can you clarify that?

Mr. Jordan. Those meetings. Those meetings --

[redacted] Oh.

Mr. Jordan. -- you referenced, you said there is no policy on -- to your knowledge, there is no policy on recording what took place in these meetings. But the question was: Meetings you had with the government, is there -- do you know if there is any memorialization of those conversations and meetings?

[redacted] It's possible. I don't recall any formalized notetaking.

Mr. Jordan. I'm not asking that. I'm not asking if it's formalized or a policy. I'm asking: Did it happen?

[redacted] I don't know.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned that [redacted] would facilitate some of the substance of the policy. You were facilitating more with scheduling.

A Uh-huh.

Q Did you and [redacted] -- would you coordinate beforehand? Would she tell you what would be on the agenda for one of these meetings?

A As noted here in the email, she would give me a topic, and I would ensure that the CDC brought the appropriate subject-matter experts to that meeting. So there was a -- there was communication beforehand, yes.

Q And would that typically take place over email?

A No.

Q How would it typically take place?

A I don't know that typically it was -- I don't know that "typically" is a good word for it. Regularly over chat.

Q Okay. And, by "chat," do you mean an internal chatting system, or --

A Yes.

Q -- talking to her?

A Thank you. An internal chat system.

Q Okay. And what's that system called?

A We use a product called Workplace.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q You said something about bringing the appropriate subject-matter experts. Subject-matter experts from where?

A From the CDC.

Q From CDC?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Can you remind us, what is [redacted]'s title?

A I don't know what her formal title is.

Q Do you know which team she works with?

A She is on -- in -- in an effort to be precise there, I don't know. I wouldn't want to misstate her team.

Q What other interactions have you had with [redacted] outside of prepping for meetings with the CDC?

A That covers our interactions.

Q So these -- your only interactions with [redacted] were with respect to preparing for meetings with the CDC?

A Or other related health agencies --

Q Okay.

A -- yes.

BY [redacted]

Q And Carol Crawford at the CDC, what did she do exactly in her -- in her capacity with Meta?

A She is on the communications team.

Q At CDC?

A Yes.

Q And so she didn't provide information about, you know, health issues herself. She was just conveying that to subject-matter experts? Is that correct?

A That's a fair assessment, yes.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

[redacted] Can we go off the record?

[Recess.]

[11:22 a.m.]

[redacted] Okay. It's 11:22, and we are back on the record.

[redacted], my name's [redacted] and I'm counsel for the minority. And I want to thank you on behalf of the minority for coming here today.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q You were asked several questions earlier about Meta and Facebook's content moderation policies. And I believe you said that you did not work on those policies, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And that means that you did not help create their content moderation policies?

A No.

Q Okay. And those policies -- you were asked some specifics about how Meta handles certain pieces of violative content or misinformation. Those policies and the answers to those questions are all available online, correct?

A Our policies are available online, correct.

Q And so, your policies relating to misinformation?

A Yes.

Q And your policies relating to other types of violative content, correct?

A Yes.

Q And so misinformation is not the only type of content that violates Meta's policies, correct?

A That's correct.

Q There's also policies surrounding nudity?

A Yes.

Q Hate speech?

A Yes.

Q Bullying?

A Yes.

Q There's a whole range, and it's pretty broad. Fair to say?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And just as you did not play a role in writing those policies, it was not your role to determine whether a piece of content violated Meta's community standards?

A That's correct. Yes.

Q So, if somebody in the government, for example, at CDC or the White House, flagged a piece of content that they thought might violate Meta's community standards and they sent that to you, what would you do?

A I would pass that content along to my internal colleagues who are subject-matter experts and who would review that content against our policies.

Q And when you say "subject-matter experts," do you mean experts in the policies?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So you mentioned during questioning, you remembered an exchange with Brenna Parker at the First Lady's office -- I'm sorry, the Vice President's office --

A Yes.

Q -- correct? Okay. And that was about comments on the White House Instagram post. Do you remember that?

A On several different posts. Yes.

Q On their account. Thank you. And I misspoke.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Have you had enough time?

A Yes. Thank you.

Q Okay.

So, in March of 2022, Ms. Parker emailed you and your colleague, [redacted] -- I'm not sure if I'm pronouncing that correctly -- and said that she noticed that White House accounts and four principals were having a surge of pro-Russia and -Putin comments in their Instagram comments.

A Yes.

Q And she did not ask you to take any action with respect to those comments in that email.

A No.

Q She just flagged it for you and then said, "Looking forward to hearing from you."

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then you responded a couple of days later.

A Yes.

Q And you explained that "we did a review of the 1.2 million comments on all of your Instagram accounts" --

A Yes.

Q -- and that about 1 percent of them were looked at closely due to being flagged as engagement bait or in Cyrillic, correct?

A Yes.

Q And when you said "we," did you mean you personally or did you mean Meta generally?

A "We" refers to colleagues at Meta.

Q Okay.

And you said, "We dug into the content, behavior, and accounts and found no automated behavior, no bots, no inauthentic accounts," correct?

A Yes.

Q And you also said that we found "no violating content, no Foreign Inauthentic Behavior, or Coordinated Inauthentic Behavior."

A Yes.

Q Okay.

Now, you were not the person that made those determinations, correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. Others at Meta made those determinations, and you, as a liaison for the executive branch, or for the Democratic members of the executive branch, you conveyed those decisions to Ms. Parker.

A Yes.

Q And as far as you're aware, Meta did not remove any of those comments that were flagged, the pro-Russia, pro-Putin comments.

A Yes.

Q And that's because they were not violating any of Meta's community standards.

A Yes.

Q Thank you.

Now, you were on Meta's politics and government outreach team for nearly 5 years, correct? Four or 5 years? My math --

A Four and a half.

Q Sorry. Thank you. And you stated earlier that your primary responsibility was to help your partners use Meta's tools.

A Yes.

Q So you would help them with issues such as account verification?

A Yes.

Q Getting the blue check on Instagram?

A Yes.

Q And account security?

A Yes.

Q So, if an official who was somebody you worked with got locked out of their account, you would help -- you would work with others at Meta to help them regain access?

A Yes.

Q And you also would help Federal officials when people were impersonating them on Meta's platforms, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. For example, you received reports from Health and Human Services that there were hundreds of accounts impersonating a top HHS official, correct? Do you recall that?

A I recall that being a topic of conversation with HHS.

Q Do you recall that there were accounts that HHS said were pretending to be one of their officials and using those accounts to try to fraudulently obtain money from Meta's users?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you were not the person who decided how to handle those reports, correct?

A That's correct.

Q You passed that on to the appropriate team at Meta?

A Yes.

Q And they made a decision about what to do with those imposter accounts?

A Yes.

Q And then you would inform the person at HHS who brought it to your attention what the decision was?

A Yes.

Q And that was part of your role as a liaison?

A Yes.

Q In your 4-1/2 years in that position of the politics and government outreach team, did you at some point have to go on medical leave?

A I did, yes.

Q Okay. And I'm sorry to get personal, but I do think it's important to help understand and contextualize your testimony today. Can you explain to us why?

A I went on medical leave in 2020 to have and recover from a brain surgery.

Q So how long were you out for?

A About 8 weeks.

Q Okay. So you had brain surgery during your time at Meta?

A I did, yes.

Q And when in 2020 was that?

A Summer of 2020.

Q So during the pandemic.

A Yes.

Q And it was almost a year later that you picked up [redacted]'s health portfolio when she went on parental leave, correct? Or it was the following spring?

A Yes. Yes.

Q And you stated earlier that Meta wanted to make sure that you were keeping up with the authoritative science relating to the pandemic, correct?

A Yes.

Q As best as you understand it, why was that the case? Why did Meta care about having accurate and authoritative information about COVID-19 on its platforms?

A Noting that I wasn't the one to make that decision, my understanding is we had a shared sense of urgency about the health of the country, and we wanted to ensure that we made our best efforts to get it right.

Q Okay. And when you refer to the health of the country, you don't mean, like, the body politic; you're referring to the physical health of the millions and millions of people who used Meta's platforms, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Can we go off the record for a second?

[redacted] Of course.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on.

[redacted] Sure. Apologies for stepping in in the middle here. I'm [redacted]

[redacted] the Democrats' chief oversight counsel.

BY [redacted]

Q And was there also a concern that it could be problematic for Meta, or, I guess, then Facebook, when the pandemic started if people received inaccurate information and then got sick or even died as a result from your platforms?

A Yes.

Q And was this something that you personally cared about as well?

A As I mentioned, having had a major surgery in the pandemic, I was medically fragile for quite a long time of the pandemic, and it wasn't lost on me how many other people could be similarly fragile. It was important to me personally, yes.

Q Okay. And, for the record, I did ask because I imagined that since you had to go through surgery at a very fraught time that this must have been a particularly resonant topic with you.

A My -- another reason -- my partner is a doctor --

Q It's okay.

[redacted] Do you want to take a break?

Let's take a break.

[Recess.]

[11:42 a.m.]

[redacted] What I was mentioning before is that my partner is a doctor and, for a long portion of the pandemic, was working in COVID wards, and his patients were dying faster than he could learn their names.

And I took it very seriously, the addition of the health portfolio to my book of business.

BY [redacted]

Q And so it wasn't just Meta as a company, but also you personally wanted to ensure that you were providing Meta's users with the most authoritative information possible about COVID?

A I took and take the job very seriously.

Q And I think that's very clear.

Thank you. I appreciate it. And I'm sorry to ask questions that are emotional, but it's -- we're trying to make sure all of the facts come out. Thank you. We appreciate your cooperation.

And that's it for me for now.

A Thank you.

[Recess.]

[12:35 p.m.]

[redacted] On the record.

BY [redacted]

Q During the last line of questioning, we talked a little bit -- or, you talked a little bit about the authoritative science. Can you -- how did Meta decide what the authoritative science is?

A I don't know.

Q You don't know who was consulted in making determinations about what the authoritative science was?

A I don't recall any conversations about that topic.

Q Okay.

This is exhibit 2.

[redacted] This will be exhibit 3.

[redacted] Oh.

[redacted] Exhibit 2 was Meta 16280.

[redacted] Oh, sorry. Exhibit 3. Sorry about that.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Can you just read the emails and let me know when you've had a chance to finish?

A Before I dive in to read the email, I will, as a point of clarification, say: I don't know who decided which health body would have been the authoritative source, but that's how I understood your question.

Q Yeah. Okay.

I think the emails actually go in reverse order.

A Long thread. Sorry.

Q I know.

A Okay.

Q So, just for the record, this is an email thread between you, [redacted] of Facebook, Tegan O'Neill at the White House, Rob Flaherty at the White House, and [redacted] at the White House. The subject line is "Follow up on WH questions." And these emails were sent in July and August of 2021.

You wrote an email that's on the first page here, August 2, 2021, addressed to, apparently, Flaherty and Christian at the White House, with the others mentioned CC'd. And you mentioned the aggressive steps taken to reduce the spread of vaccine hesitancy and vaccine misinformation on our platforms and deploying technology to do so.

Can you describe what those steps were? What steps did you take? "Aggressive steps."

A The technological specifics of those steps is outside of my expertise.

Q Whose expertise would that be?

A Organic content policy.

Q Who's [redacted], by the way -- sorry -- just to back up, from Facebook?

A [redacted] was my colleague at Instagram. If you'll see, his name has an "IG" next to it.

Q Do you know what his title was?

A I don't.

Q Do you know what his role was there?

A You'll recall earlier in questioning when I mentioned I cover all the family of apps but if I need a subject-matter expert on one of those apps to rely on more nuanced or detailed tooling or policies, this would've been one of those cases -- [redacted], being from Instagram.

Q So, when you say "policies," can you explain what you mean by that? Like, when you say "Instagram's policies," can you give an example?

A [redacted]'s purview was tooling-specific, product-specific, not policy.

Q Okay. So you mean you would be asking him, sort of, how should this be implemented on Instagram to be effective?

A Can you clarify what you mean of "this" implemented?

Q Well, if you're trying to take aggressive steps to reduce vaccine hesitancy, for instance.

A The specifics of that policy and implementation is not in his purview.

Q So, if you weren't involved in, you know, these aggressive steps, were you simply reporting what someone else was doing?

A Yes.

Q So you have no idea what they meant -- so someone told you "we're implementing these aggressive steps," but you have no idea what those steps are?

A I leaned on my colleagues for their expertise.

Q So who would've told you "we're taking aggressive steps" that would've prompted you to write an email telling Rob Flaherty and Tegan O'Neill that you were taking aggressive steps?

A I don't recall.

Chairman Jordan. [redacted], the very first sentence, you said, "Per my and Christian's phone call last Tuesday, I gathered more details for you and your team." Next sentence, you say, and "we take aggressive steps to reduce the spread of vaccine hesitancy and vaccine misinformation."

Who did you gather the details from, and what were the specific aggressive steps?

[redacted] I don't recall who I spoke with to draft this paragraph.

Chairman Jordan. Did Christian give you the details? You reference his name, or her name, in the very first sentence.

[redacted] Christian works at the White House.

Chairman Jordan. Oh, I see. Excuse me.

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Chairman Jordan. So you tell the folks at the White House you gathered more details, but you don't know who you gathered them from?

[redacted] I don't recall this specific paragraph, no.

Chairman Jordan. And then you tell them, "As you know" -- so somehow that had already been conveyed to them, and you knew that it had been conveyed to them -- "we take aggressive steps," but you don't know what those steps are?

[redacted] The technical specification of those aggressive steps, those specifications are --

Chairman Jordan. I'm not asking about -- I'm not asking about the technical. I'm asking -- "As you know, we take aggressive steps that reduce the spread of vaccine hesitancy and vaccine misinformation" -- what are those steps? Not in a technological sense. What do those steps involve? Does it involve filtering what gets posted, what gets shared, what gets moved on your platform?

[redacted] The policy details of those steps sit with organic content policy, not with my team.

[redacted] Mr. Jordan, we, I think, have offered to try to get [redacted] in to meet with you all to go through this. And we're happy to get the right people in a room.

The requests that we've gotten so far are for people that are really the process people. But, on the substance, there is an answer to that, and we're happy to get the right people to share that with you.

Chairman Jordan. Well, I appreciate that, and we thank you for that.

But, I mean, again, this email is like, "As you know." Somehow that's been conveyed to the person you're sending the email to at the White House. You say, "We take aggressive steps," and the idea that you don't know anything about those aggressive steps I find interesting.

But we appreciate your offer to let us talk to the people who do know what those aggressive steps are.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Go ahead.

[redacted] My recollection of this interaction is that this paragraph was drafted by one of my SMEs -- excuse me, subject-matter experts --

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

[redacted] -- and I don't recall making any edits to that. So I did lean heavily on this colleague for that paragraph.

BY [redacted]

Q What's the name of the colleague?

A I don't recall who that was.

Q What about the following sentence, where you say, "We have measures to help ensure we don't recommend people follow accounts that promote vaccine hesitancy at scale"? What are those measures?

A The person who's best equipped to answer that is not me.

Q Who is best equipped to answer that?

A [redacted].

BY [redacted]

Q The colleague you mentioned that you relied on, is that one of the individuals that reports directly to you, or is that just "colleague" in a more general sense, someone at --

A "Colleague" in a general sense.

Q Okay. Do you recall which team that colleague would've been a member of?

A They would have been on an Instagram team.

Q Do you know which team within Instagram they would've been affiliated with?

A I don't recall that.

Q When you're engaging with your partners, whether it's the White House or whoever, and you receive a question that's outside of your expertise, I understand that you consult with the expertise at Meta. Do you facilitate direct communications between that other colleague at Meta and the partner? Or do they communicate what they need to you, and then you deliver that message directly to the partner?

A It depends on the partner and the topic, and has changed over time.

Q Is it your recollection, then, that you at times would connect other Meta colleagues directly with a partner?

A There have been a few cases of that, yes.

Q And are there cases where you're just receiving information from another colleague at Meta and communicating, delivering that message to your partner?

A Yes. And this is a good example of that.

Q Okay.

In your role today, if you were to receive a request from a partner with respect to, to use an example here, the spread of vaccine hesitancy and vaccine misinformation -- in an earlier answer, you said that's out of your expertise. If you were to receive a request today, who at Meta would you contact for assistance for that issue?

A As we mentioned before, [redacted] would be the person I would lean on for that expertise.

Q And, again, do you recall which team [redacted] is with?

[redacted]. I can tell you. [redacted] is on the policy team. We gave you her name. We also have given you her documents.

Chairman Jordan. [redacted], just to be clear again, I just want to go through the email here.

You say, "I've gathered more details for you and your team." You say, "We take aggressive steps to reduce the spread of vaccine misinformation." And you say, "We have measures to help ensure that we don't recommend...accounts that promote vaccine hesitancy."

So you say you've gathered details, you take aggressive steps, and we have measures, but you can't tell us any of the specifics about any of those three things. You can't tell us any specifics about the details of the call; any of the aggressive steps, what they are; or any of the measures that you put in place to deal with vaccine hesitancy.

Is that an accurate summary of what you've said?

[redacted] I'm not the best person to answer the specifics.

Chairman Jordan. Even though you said "I've gathered more details," you can't tell us what the details are?

[redacted] I don't recall the specific details.

Chairman Jordan. And then you said, "We take aggressive steps," and you don't know what those aggressive steps are?

[redacted] I don't recall the specific details for the category of aggressive steps.

Chairman Jordan. And you said, "We have measures to help ensure we don't recommend people follow accounts that promote vaccine hesitancy," and you don't know what the measures are?

[redacted] I don't recall the specifics regarding the measures written.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q When you're communicating with [redacted] in the example we were referring to earlier, what forms of communication would that take?

A Email, certainly. A lot of Zoom calls. It was in the pandemic, so no hallway run-ins. Principally those.

Q And what about -- you mentioned Meta had an internal messaging system. I think you said it was Workplace?

A Occasionally.

Q And when there was a request like this that came in, was there a, I don't know, database or some repository to track what the status was with the request? Or was it just you'd communicate whatever you needed to to [redacted] and you'd wait until you heard a response back?

A I don't know that I understand the question.

Q Sure.

You interact with a number of partners, right?

A Yes.

Q And it sounds like you receive a number of requests that are outside your expertise.

For those types of requests that are outside your expertise, is there any sort of internal tracking program or tool? Or are you just reaching out to the best person at Meta and waiting for a response back?

A I don't know of any tool that would cover what you're asking, no.

[redacted] Can we go off the record for a second?

[redacted] Sure.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on.

[redacted] This is exhibit 4.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q You can just take a look, and let us know when you're done.

A Okay.

Q So this is an email you wrote on February 8, 2021, to a number of people at the White House, including Rob Flaherty and Christian Tom and Clarke Humphrey, with the subject line "COVID Updates."

Do you know what prompted this email?

A We published the bulk of this email on our Newsroom website. And it goes into a lot of detail that we thought could be relevant, and so I highlighted it for them.

Q Had the White House asked you to provide it with updates about your misinformation policy on COVID?

A Is -- do you have a specific timeline in mind?

Q Well, any time, but --

A We certainly --

Q -- but certainly when the email was written. Yeah.

A We did have conversations with the White House about our misinformation policies.

Q And the White House asked you to keep it updated about what your policies were?

A Yes.

Q Did the White House ever ask you to change your policies?

A I certainly recall pushback and criticism of our policies and enforcement. I don't recall a specific moment where a single person said, change this X to Y. I don't recall anything like that.

Q Do you remember -- can you give an example of what -- in what way did the White House consider the enforcement or the policies to be inadequate or insufficient or -- [redacted] Can we break that up? There's three different things there.

[redacted] Sure.

Chairman Jordan. Do you mind if I -- first of all, did the White House want to know what your policy was? Did they initiate the outreach?

[redacted] In this instance --

Chairman Jordan. No. This is 1 month into the administration -- not even a month. This is 3 weeks into the administration. So did the White House say, what's Facebook policy on information about COVID and vaccines? Or did you just out of the goodness of your heart say, we're going to tell you what our policy is?

[redacted] In this instance --

Chairman Jordan. I'm not even asking about this instance. I'm asking, did the White House initiate, what's COVID's policy about vaccine information, COVID information?

[redacted] I'm sorry. Is there a specific timeline in mind? I want to make sure I'm being accurate.

Chairman Jordan. The Biden administration.

[redacted] Yes.

Chairman Jordan. They had reached out to you, "What's your policy?"

[redacted] Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. And this email is in response to that?

[redacted] This instance I recall being proactive.

Chairman Jordan. Oh. You decided you were going to tell the White House, here's what we're doing?

[redacted] When large announcements like this come out, it's standard practice for my team and others to send it to our partners to ensure they see it.

Chairman Jordan. Fair enough. All right. So you decided to do this. But before this, they had reached out to you and wanted to know what your policy was.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] To delineate a few things as well --

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

[redacted] -- at this time, my purview was only the White House and not the COVID agencies. I didn't pick up that portion until later.

Chairman Jordan. Fine.

[redacted] Okay.

Chairman Jordan. But sometime between January 20, 2021, and February 8, 2021, the White House had reached out to Meta and said, what are your policies regarding COVID and COVID-19 vaccines?

[redacted] I don't recall in that specific timeline.

Chairman Jordan. So it may have been after this.

[redacted] Maybe.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted] Or it wasn't her.

[redacted] Or it wasn't me.

Chairman Jordan. Fair enough.

And then you issued this statement on the 8th because you're rolling out a, kind of, new plan and process here?

[redacted] I highlighted this. I did not roll it out.

Chairman Jordan. I understand.

[redacted] Okay.

Chairman Jordan. I understand.

In the very first sentence, you say, "We will be running the largest worldwide campaign to promote authoritative COVID-19 vaccine" -- what's -- who's the authority?

[redacted] In this case, this reference to "authoritative vaccine information" would have been the Centers for Disease Control.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So the "authoritative" is -- you wrote this -- is a direct reference to CDC?

[redacted] The citations in these links may be different. But in the United States -- in the United States, the Centers for Disease Control. Elsewhere in the world, we used the World Health Organization as an authoritative source of information.

Chairman Jordan. Is it fair to say, when you say "authoritative COVID-19 vaccine information," you're referencing -- those authorities are CDC and WHO?

[redacted] We -- this is also in reference to a module on Facebook and Instagram called the COVID Information Center.

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

[redacted] And that information, in the United States, was sourced from the CDC. Elsewhere, it was sourced from the World Health Organization.

Chairman Jordan. So CDC and WHO.

[redacted] Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q So when you next say that you're expanding your efforts to remove false claims on Facebook and Instagram about COVID, how are false claims evaluated?

A We have an independent, third-party fact-checking program. This would be a reference to that.

Q What is that third-party fact-checking program?

A We -- excuse me. We have a collection of news outlets that have been certified by an independent body of fact-checkers. And all of this is public on our Community Standards website. And that would've been in reference to that.

Q So the fact-checkers identify the false claims?

A I don't know the technical aspects of how they are surfaced for the third-party fact-checkers.

Q Did the fact-checkers work with any particular organization that you know of?

A The details of that program are not in my purview.

Q And whose purview would they be?

A Those policies would roll up to [redacted].

Q Okay.

Just going back to what we were talking about earlier, you mentioned there were some contentious exchanges with the White House, or there were --

[redacted] She did not --

[redacted] Sorry.

[redacted] -- use the word "contentious."

[redacted] I can't remember the exact word she used.

[redacted] She said she recalled pushback and criticism of --

[redacted] Pushback and criticism.

[redacted] -- policies and enforcement.

BY [redacted]

Q Who launched that criticism?

A Rob Flaherty certainly had some criticisms.

Q And did he voice those criticisms over email? In what form?

A Email, Zoom meetings.

Q Can you recall any specific Zoom meetings on the subject?

A We had meetings to give context, to answer questions, to take feedback, to be communicative with the White House, and -- but the cadence changed.

Q What do you mean, "the cadence changed"?

A There wasn't a regular cadence, such as the BOLO meetings we mentioned before.

Q Oh. In terms of frequency.

A Correct.

Q I see. Who was present at these meetings typically?

A From Meta?

Q Both Meta and the White House and anyone else who was present from anywhere else.

A From Meta, I was present. [redacted] was a frequent addition. The two of us were principally --

Q And then who from the White House?

A Rob Flaherty.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Another would be Andy Slavitt.

BY [redacted]

Q Oh, okay. Can you recall what Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt said at these meetings?

A I don't know how specific -- is there a specific -- I'm not sure how to answer that.

Q Well, in terms of vaccine misinformation, what was the general -- what was generally being said?

A In general, the themes were how our policies were changing as the pandemic was changing; our enforcement practices. Those are two big things that come to mind.

Q Were Flaherty and Slavitt trying to get Meta to change its policies in response to --

A I don't recall a specific instance, as I mentioned, of a specific policy that they advocated for or wanted to change.

Q Did they complain that there wasn't enough removal of vaccine misinformation?

A They communicated that they would like to see more removal, yes.

Q How did they communicate that? What did they say?

A I don't know that I can give you specifics.

Q Did they have specific ideas about how Meta should be changing its policies in order to deal with this issue, the issue of vaccine misinformation?

[redacted] I want to pause. She just told you that she didn't have any specific recollection of them saying, change the policy. And then you just asked her the same thing.

So that's not what she said. She said that they were complaining about -- they wanted to see more removals. That's different than changing policies.

[redacted] Well, that would be changing the policy, presumably, to accomplish more removals.

[redacted] That would be an enforcement issue.

[redacted] That's actually right. Why don't you say what you just said?

[redacted] That would be more focused on enforcement of an existing policy.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So they weren't suggesting that the policy should be expanded to encapsulate more misinformation?

A I don't have a specific recollection of that type of request, no.

Q And how did they suggest that Meta escalate enforcement of misinformation removal?

A Their not knowing the specifics of the internal work, it was clear that just broadly they would want the enforcement to be more precise.

Q But they had no suggestions about how that should occur?

A No.

Q Did they ever ask for removal of content that was true but they thought stoked vaccine hesitancy?

A We have policies -- had policies on what we would call "borderline content" that they expressed concern that maybe it wasn't aggressive enough.

Q What's borderline content?

A Content that could be interpreted as an opinion or as a personal anecdote, which we did allow.

Q And so they wanted you to not allow it? Or --

A It's hard to talk about hypothetical pieces of content, but -- so I don't want to get over my skis there.

Q Well, did they make suggestions about how borderline content should be dealt with that, in their opinion, stoked vaccine hesitancy?

A I don't recall a specific conversation that encompassed exactly that.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall, during these meetings with Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt, would they bring examples of content to you, either over a call or via email?

A No.

Q Regarding the subject matter where you mentioned pushback and criticism, did that ever involve content that didn't involve health-related information?

A Can you ask your question again?

Q Sure.

So you mentioned pushback and criticism from a couple individuals from the White House. We've discussed a few examples with respect to content that touches upon health broadly. Do you recall, with respect to your earlier answer, pushback and criticism from the White House on subject areas other than health?

A The previous exhibit is a good example of criticism.

Q With reference to vaccines?

[redacted] Can you give it back to us?

[redacted] I'm sorry?

[redacted] Can you give it back to us so we can point it out to you?

[redacted] Sure.

[redacted] Thank you. Yeah.

The previous exhibit includes criticism and strong language on audience growth, technical issues, optimization techniques, and would -- it provides a good example.

BY [redacted]

Q With respect to concerns related to misinformation, so you mentioned -- let me frame the question better.

With respect to the pushback and criticism received from the White House with respect to misinformation, was there pushback and criticism with respect to misinformation on subject areas other than those related to health?

A There was another previous exhibit of a conversation about concerns of misinformation regarding Russia that would provide a good example.

Q Do you recall any other subject areas?

A No.

Q Do you recall receiving pushback or criticism with respect to misinformation relating to elections?

[redacted] From who?

[redacted] From the White House.

[redacted] No.

[redacted] I'd just pause. I really want to -- on the "who," like, I think you're talking about the Biden administration. They weren't in the White House at the time of the election.

So I want to be real clear that if you're talking about Biden, she can give you an answer. If you're talking about Trump, she didn't manage the relationship during that time period.

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q So, to clarify, the previous question was in reference to Rob Flaherty and Andy Slavitt, I guess, as a point of clarification.

Are there any other personnel in the Biden White House that you recall that communicated some form of pushback or criticism to Meta?

A On a specific topic?

Q Yeah. With respect to enforcement of Meta's policies related to misinformation.

A No.

[1:20 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned that borderline content was an issue with respect to an area of pushback or criticism received by Meta with respect from Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt. What was your understanding of why they were communicating the pushback or the criticism, if you could say?

A I don't know that I can speak to somebody else's intentions or motivations.

Q Yeah. Let me reframe. Not so much intentions and motivations. What was your understanding of what their position was? What was the -- when communicating this pushback or criticism on borderline content with respect to enforcement, was the request -- what was your understanding of what the White House's position was? What were they attempting to communicate to you and your team?

A In my estimation and in my experience in the meetings, my interpretation is that they wanted our policies to encompass more and for us to take down more.

Q So it was your understanding that it was both a concern with respect to the scope of Meta's policies and with respect to how Meta was enforcing its existing policies?

A That's a good -- that's a good way to say it, yes.

Q And what was your understanding of what they disagreed with with respect to the scope of Meta's policies?

A I don't have a recollection of a specific point of pushback. I don't recall a specific.

Q At a general level, was it your understanding that the White House's position was that Meta's policies did not go far enough?

A Yes.

[redacted] After you had meetings like that with the White House --

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Can we take a break? Thanks.

[redacted] Can we go off the record, please.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record, please.

[redacted] What was the sort of tone of these meetings like with the White House?

[redacted] I'm sorry, when you say "these meetings," which ones are you talking about?

[redacted] Well, the meetings about vaccine misinformation.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] They ranged. And I don't want to paint too broad a brush. They ranged from collaborative to critical.

BY [redacted]

Q When you say "critical," can you give an example of something that might have been said that was critical?

A I don't have a specific sentence in mind that could illustrate that.

Q Okay. From the -- one of the exhibits we looked at, which is 4209 is the Bates number, there's an email from Rob Flaherty: Are you guys fucking serious? I want an answer on what happened here today and I want -- happened here, and I want it today.

Is that the kind of thing that would be said?

A Let me make sure I've got the right one in front of me.

I don't recall this type of language in meetings, and it's not language that I would have used in writing.

Q What about the part from the language, the demand, the demanding tone, "this is what I want today"?

A There were instances where there would be a request for more information that they understood could take time to find, collate, and represent and present. I don't recall an instance over Zoom that had a similar tone.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned borderline content in an earlier response, and you gave an opinion, an anecdote as a couple of examples of things that might fall into this category of borderline content. Can you provide a -- what --

A I don't know that that's a good representation --

Q Sure.

A -- of the scope of borderline, but because that's not my expertise, I want to make sure that those are coupled properly. Those were separately discussions, but I want to make sure that's clear.

Q I guess just more a question of point of clarification, when you were referring to borderline content, is that borderline with respect to Meta's terms of service?

A In regards to community standards --

Q Okay.

A -- which are different than terms of service, and those are published publicly with tracked changes, how they change over time.

Q Sure. And so, again, just to clarify and make sure I'm understanding the term correctly, with respect to borderline content, is this content where it's a close call about whether it violates the community guidelines?

A Knowing that that's not my expertise, that is a good generalization.

Q You mentioned earlier that when communicating with your partners sometimes you're communicating directly. There were instances where you'd bring in a subject-matter expert. You also mentioned that the scope of Meta's policies came up in these meetings with Mr. Flaherty, Mr. Slavitt, and I think you've represented to us that understanding the community guidelines is outside of your expertise. Do you recall if you brought in any subject-matter experts for Meta for these communications with Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt?

A I recall a meeting where we -- we, [redacted] and I, brought [redacted] to give better detail or give more detail.

Q Do you remember what the catalyst of this meeting was, what was the issue that required Meta to bring in [redacted]?

A I don't recall that.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you know when the meeting occurred?

A I don't recall a date.

Q Do you remember if it was about vaccine misinformation?

A I don't recall the specific topic.

BY [redacted]

Q With respect to the pushback and criticism you referenced from Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt, do you recall the timeline of how long this pushback and criticism was communicated to your team? Was it a one-off instance? Do you recall there being multiple meetings?

A There were -- excuse me. There were multiple meetings.

BY [redacted]

Q Do these meetings still take place?

A No.

Q Do you know when they stopped?

A I don't recall a stop date. Like I mentioned, they weren't -- there was no formal cadence.

Q Right, right, right. So someone just stopped calling?

A One meeting was the last meeting.

Q Yeah, yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q With respect to the borderline content, do you recall -- you mentioned, again, with the understanding that this was not your expertise, but you mentioned opinions, anecdotes. Do you remember at a more specific detail what Mr. Flaherty and/or Mr. Slavitt, what their concerns were with respect to borderline content?

A As a generalization, the concern in my interpretation of their criticism was that that type of content could contribute to vaccine hesitancy.

Q Do you recall in these meetings if they, let me be specific, Mr. Flaherty and/or Mr. Slavitt, communicated -- whether the positions they were communicating to you and [redacted] were shared by others at the White House?

A I -- I don't know.

BY [redacted]

Q After you had these meetings with the White House, who would you take that back to, report back to?

A It would vary depending on the topic.

Q So, if it was vaccine misinformation, who would you take it to?

A Certainly, [redacted] would be a person that I would have talked to.

BY [redacted]

Q You mentioned the circumstances in which [redacted] joined a meeting, and that was, again, with respect to the scope of Meta's policies. You had mentioned a separate bucket, the enforcement of Meta's existing policies. Did [redacted] speak on that issue as well; do you recall?

A I don't recall the specifics.

Q Okay. With respect to --

[redacted] [redacted] just to be clear, I don't think she said that it was about scope, the [redacted] meeting.

[redacted] Well, the leadup to the question was that the scope of content is outside of her expertise, and a previous answer she said that the pushback and the criticism concerned both the scope of content and enforcement of policy.

[redacted] She said it wasn't her area of expertise. She brought in subject-matter experts. She recalled the meeting when they brought in [redacted] to give better, more detail about what those policies were. So I just want to be clear as to -- I mean, the transcript is the transcript, but I don't want to -- I don't want her to be laboring under the assumption she said something she didn't say.

BY [redacted]

Q It sounds like you were saying similar to what I was conveying. So I'm happy to run through some -- or we're up against time, but to clarify what your answer was.

A Can you ask it again?

Q Sure. With respect to that meeting that [redacted] attended, where you and [redacted] brought in to the meeting with Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Slavitt with respect to content, what was -- let me ask it this way: Why was [redacted] brought for that meeting?

A [redacted] is the expert in those policies.

Q And is that with respect to the scope of the policies or how the policies were enforced?

A I wouldn't want to speak to what is in his personal purview. I don't want to get it wrong for his portfolio.

[redacted] I think we're out of time. Thank you. Off the record.

[Recess.]

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So we're back on the record. And, [redacted], I want to ask you just a couple quick questions about exhibit 4, which is the email that you sent to some officials in the White House about announcing Facebook's campaign about authoritative COVID-19 vaccine information.

You were asked what the source of that authoritative information was, and I believe you said, in the United States, it was the CDC, the Centers for Disease Control, correct?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q Okay. If you look at the bottom on the last page -- I'm sorry, not the last page, the bottom of the first page, the last sentence, it says: Since December, we have removed false claims about COVID-19 vaccines that have been debunked by public health experts.

This reference to claims that have been debunked by public health experts, those public health experts were in the Centers for Disease Control, correct, with respect to claims in the United States?

A The phrase used here, "public health experts," includes the CDC, yes.

Q So you would ask the CDC if a claim had been debunked or not?

A We got input from the CDC about different misinformation claims, and they would provide clarification or citation or data to clarify or debunk claims.

Q Okay. Thank you.

And now turning to -- turning to exhibit 3, which is the email chain involving Rob Flaherty and others about the internal technical glitch, you were asked if Mr. Flaherty used language like "are you guys fucking serious, I want an answer on what happened here and I want it today" during meetings, and I believe you said, no, that this was as aggressive as it got?

A I don't recall language like this used in meetings; that's correct.

Q Okay. And you don't recall any other emails where this language was used?

A No.

Q Okay. And, just to be clear, the subject of that email from him was about an internal technical issue that affected a number of followers of the @POTUS account, correct? And you can take a look at the email if you don't remember.

A Yes, this email was about audience growth and the performance of the @POTUS account on Instagram.

Q Okay. This exchange was not about COVID, the "are you serious?"

A The issue at heart of this discussion was about account performance.

Q Okay. Thank you. And either you or your colleagues several times -- well, let me just ask what's in the email. So Tegan O'Niell, and I'm looking at page 4209, which I believe is the second page of the exhibit --

A Yes.

Q -- asked what the technical issues were, and [redacted] responded: It's an internal technical issue and we can't get into it.

Correct?

A I just want to make sure I'm on the right line. Yes.

Q And that's what prompted the response from Mr. Flaherty?

A I will note that the rest of my colleague's sentence reads: But it's now resolved and should not happen again.

Q Yes.

A Yes.

Q Thank you. And then, on the first page, in your response, you said: Per your request for remediation, while we cannot boost your account in our recommendations, we are always happy to help with content strategy, best practices, and further opportunities to collaborate.

Correct?

A Yes.

Q So there was a request for Facebook or Instagram to remediate this technical issue by boosting the White House's account?

A Yes.

Q And that request was denied?

A Yes, we declined to that.

Q Declined that. And that wasn't your decision?

A No. That's -- that's a policy that is -- I'll say, I did not make that decision, no.

Q But you conveyed it?

A I did convey that decision.

Q And that decision was made despite the language that Mr. Flaherty used --

A Yes.

Q -- in his email?

And you mentioned earlier that you -- the way you characterized the pushback that you received from the White House was that they wanted Facebook's policies to encompass more types of misinformation and for Facebook to take down more content, correct?

A That is a good generalization, yes.

Q Did Facebook take any actions in response to those criticisms? Did Facebook say, "Okay, we'll take down more content or we'll change our policies"?

A I don't recall any instance in which we changed our policies due to those conversations.

Q And did anyone at the White House ever order you or, to your knowledge, anyone at Facebook, now Meta, to remove a particular post or account from Meta's platforms?

A There is an instance that I recall from Clarke Humphrey requesting review of an impersonating account of Dr. Fauci.

Q But he did not issue an order, like as "on behalf of the President, you must take this down"?

A No.

Q Okay. And Meta investigated whether or not that wasn't, in fact, an unauthentic account?

A I referred it to my internal colleagues for review. That account was found violating of our impersonation policies. I will note, our impersonation policies allow for satire. They allow for criticism of public figures. This account was found to be violating of those policies, and it was eventually taken down.

Q And, again, it was taken down -- I know that this might seem obvious --

[Discussion off the record.]

A Pardon?

Q It was taken down because it violated your policies, your policies regarding inauthentic accounts?

A We make independent decisions. My colleagues, who are the subject-matter experts, reviewed the account against our policies, and in this instance, the account that I mentioned was found violating, yes.

Q And the nature of the violation was that somebody was pretending to be Dr. Fauci when they were not Dr. Fauci?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q And it was not in a satirical -- a satirical context?

A That's correct.

Q But did anyone at the White House ever order you or try to coerce you into taking down content based on the nature of the content itself, not who posted it? And I'm talking about a particular piece of content.

A I don't recall anything like that happening.

Q And did anyone at the CDC ever try to coerce you into taking down a particular piece of content?

A No, I don't recall anything like that happening.

Q And what about with HHS?

A No.

Q Now, we've talked a lot today about the concept of misinformation and vaccine hesitancy and those types of issues. I want to talk to you about some of the posts that -- that were popular on Facebook during the time period of the pandemic, and particularly when you were working on the health portfolio. Can you explain what CrowdTangle is?

A CrowdTangle is a third-party metrics platform.

Q And CrowdTangle prepared, for a period of time, in the fall of 2021, regular reports analyzing COVID-related posts that received high engagement on Facebook's platforms, correct?

A Yes.

Q And many of those posts were from individuals who expressed vaccine hesitancy?

A I don't have a compendium of those reports in front of me.

Q Fair enough. I'm going to show you a few emails regarding those reports. And let me back up by saying, one of your colleagues, I believe it was [redacted], would sometimes email those reports around to a group of people, correct?

A Yes.

Q And you were cc'd on many of those emails?

A Yes.

Q Okay.

[redacted] And we're on number 5, correct? Exhibit 5?

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Yep.

[redacted] And you can let me know when you're -- once you've had a chance to read it.

[redacted] Can I ask, this doesn't appear to be the whole exhibit. Does it -- it breaks off at the end of the sentence.

[redacted] Yeah. I'm just going to be asking her about this particular email, the September --

[redacted] Do you have the whole document?

[redacted] I can get it for you. It's very long. It's all of the report. It's all of the emails in the report. So, if -- here's a suggestion, why don't -- why don't I ask the questions, and then, once I get through the questions --

[redacted] That's fair.

[redacted] -- if you want to follow up on that.

[redacted] Yeah, I just -- in general, like to have the whole document so the person can read it and make sure they understand the context.

[redacted] Yeah. In the interest of efficiency, because of the length of the way it was produced, it's a very long chain of emails back and forth.

[redacted] We'll proceed and reserve the objection.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. So this is an email from your colleague [redacted] that you were cc'd on, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it's an email summarizing the CrowdTangle content insights reports for the period of September 8th to September 21st, and that's in the year 2021, right?

[redacted] Just -- I'm sorry to be a stickler about it, but I want to be consistent. It says that there's something attached, and the attachment is not there. So it says that attached is the CrowdTangle insights report, but we do not have the attachment. So any questions about the accuracy of the summary are limited by the fact that we don't actually have the attachment.

[redacted] And I understand that. I'm simply going to be asking her what is reflected in the email.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So, according to your colleague: Highly engaged COVID vaccine-related content across Pages feature posts from politicians and political influencers condemning the Federal vaccine mandates recently announced by the Biden administration.

Correct?

A That's written here in the second paragraph, yes.

Q And the report also explored, according to your colleague, highly engaged content with the following themes, and then there are three themes listed?

A Yes, there are three themes listed.

Q One of those was Federal COVID vaccine mandates?

A Yes.

Q COVID-19 mandates, excuse me.

And it says that many of the most engaged posts show support for lawsuits filed against the Federal government to counter the mandates, correct?

A Yes, that's written in the last sentence.

Q One of the subjects was celebrities and COVID-19?

A Yes.

Q And it mentioned some celebrities who have made headlines for their positions on COVID-19 mandates and vaccines, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it states that the most engaged posts found in the search feature reports of Nicki Minaj skipping the Met Gala due to vaccine hesitancy?

A Yes, that's the last sentence in the second point.

Q And the third topic was COVID-19 vaccines for children?

A Yes.

Q And you do not recall any of these types of posts, posts about Nicki Minaj skipping the Met Gala or posts showing support for lawsuits against the government for vaccine mandates being removed by Meta, do you?

A I can't speak to a specific post if it was removed or not. I -- I'm not sure I understand the scope of the question.

Q Fair enough. But the purpose of the CrowdTangle reports was to provide Facebook with information about what posts were receiving the most engagement?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And, for the period of September 8th to September 21, those posts included posts about vaccine hesitancy and criticisms of vaccine mandates?

[redacted] Objection. We don't have the report.

[redacted] I -- it's hard to speak to specific pieces of content because I don't have the report, but I trust that these -- I don't have it in front of me. It's hard to say.

BY [redacted]

Q Fair enough. But, in your experience, has this colleague of yours misrepresented the nature of the contents of a report in any of the emails?

A I don't have a -- any recollection of that.

Q When you were asked a question earlier about the tone of the meetings, I believe it was the in-person meetings that you had -- or maybe they were on Zoom.

A They were on Zoom.

Q Fair enough. Thank you. I hope they were. With the White House. You mentioned when I was questioning earlier about a sense of urgency that Meta felt regarding protecting the health and safety of Americans from COVID-19. Did you have an understanding of whether that sense of urgency was shared by the White House when you were in meetings with White House officials?

A I -- in my estimation, in my personal opinion, I do think we had a shared sense of urgency, yes.

Q And that shared sense of urgency was to save lives?

A To protect the health and well-being of our citizens, our country, yes.

Q And when you say "we," you mean Meta and the White House?

A Yes, thank you.

[redacted] Thank you. We're done.

[redacted] Can we go off the record?

[redacted] Yes, we can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[2:27 p.m.]

BY [redacted]

Q You just answered a question about whether or not the White House's demands ever led to policy changes. And is it fair to say that you didn't make those decisions so you might not be aware if that did happen?

A There is certainly a possibility of conversations happening that I didn't know about.

Q Did you make decisions about policy changes?

A No.

Q And conversations could've taken place in your absence?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Just clarifying.

Do you recall what COVID Insight Reports are?

A Yes.

Q How often were these reports -- well, first, tell us what they are. Sorry. Let's start there.

A COVID Insight Reports were reports that we, Meta, provided to the White House in an effort to be transparent and communicative.

Q About what?

A About content on our platforms.

Q Can you be specific? Can you give, like, an example of something that would be in these reports?

A I recall a category of the top 100 posts and discussion of how many of them encompassed vaccine hesitancy or things like that.

Q What was the purpose of the reports?

A The White House had questions that we thought that the report was a good way to answer those questions.

Q Was it the White House's idea for you to make these reports -- for Meta to make these reports, not you specifically?

A I don't recall a specific ask or answer, but -- I don't recall a specific time.

Q Do you know how frequently these reports were made?

A It varied. It could be -- in my recollection, it was maybe every 2 weeks, sometimes longer. It was meant to show --

[redacted] I believe we produced all of this, so you can figure out the dates.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] If she remembers, she can answer.

[redacted] What I was about to finish was, it was just meant to be broad. So it wasn't every day; it was a longer time period.

BY [redacted]

Q Who at Meta made those reports?

A Internal teams with data expertise.

Q Do you know which teams?

A I don't recall the specific team. I don't recall the specific team name.

[redacted] Okay.

No. 5, I think.

[redacted] We're up to 6.

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] This is exhibit 6.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] It's a hefty one.

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. I don't know if you need to read the whole thing, but it's just a -- these are COVID Insight Reports. I just wanted to refresh your recollection a little bit.

The first two emails -- well, chronologically, they're actually the last, but the ones on pages 1 and 2 from [redacted] on January 24, 2022, and January 8, 2022, they're reports about how many posts were deleted for violating COVID and vaccine policies, or labeled and demoted.

Do you know what is meant by "labeled and demoted"?

A I'm not on this last email thread.

Q That's -- oh, that's true. You're on the -- we can go to the second email then, from January 8th, if you want, which you're on.

A Oh. And -- oh, in the bullet points?

Q Yeah.

A Okay. The phrase "labeled and demoted" by third-party fact-checkers, that's the purview of the independent fact-checkers. "Labeled" refers to the labels that third-party fact-checkers can apply to content with their ratings of falsity.

Q "Demoted" would imply, though, that something is being done with the post, correct?

A In some instances. And there are lots of permutations of what type of content and what type of action, so I wouldn't want to speak to any specific or hypothetical post here. But, in my understanding, one action that can be taken associated with a post that has been labeled in a certain way, one of those options could be demotion.

Q And what does demotion entail? When you use that word -- is that equivalent to shadow-banning?

A I'm not sure what you mean by shadow-banning.

Q Well, I understand shadow-banning to be sort of a -- you know, rather than removing a post or suspending the user, it sort of downgrades it so the algorithm makes it appear less. So it's sort of effectively censored but it's not as obvious. That's my understanding of shadow-banning. I'm not sure if "demoted" means the same thing.

A "Shadow-banning" isn't a term that we have --

Q Okay.

A -- internally or that I'm familiar with.

Q So how does demoting work then?

A I would defer the specifics of demoting to technical teams.

Q Okay. Do you know who at the technical team might be able to answer that?

A That's policy. Again, would sift to [redacted] -- would ladder up, excuse me, to [redacted].

Q Okay.

And the second part of that bullet point says, "Both [posts] were suggesting natural immunity by COVID-19 infection is superior to immunity by the COVID-19 vaccine."

Did Facebook typically censor things like that about which there is sort of a scientific debate?

A I don't know about the word you're using, "typically." Can you rephrase that?

Q Well, I think that this is -- you know, this isn't a claim about, say, microchips in the vaccine. Natural immunity was something that was debated pretty extensively by people, you know, experts in epidemiology and immunology. So this is a claim that didn't really have a clear true or false answer but is being demoted by Facebook.

Is that something that happened in other circumstances?

A That's outside of my --

[redacted] Go ahead.

[redacted] That's outside of my scope. I don't -- I wouldn't want to give specifics on that.

BY [redacted]

Q Whose --

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Let's go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We're ready to go back on.

[redacted] All right.

BY [redacted]

Q Just one final question on this email. Do you know why reports about posts being removed or demoted were being made to people in the White House, such as Courtney Rowe?

A I didn't write this email, so I wouldn't want to speak to the motivation of my colleague, [redacted].

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q How frequently did you work with [redacted]?

A We work together frequently. Yeah.

Q And in what context?

A He is the VP of public policy for the executive branch, and I cover the executive branch for the programs and partnerships team, so we have a communicative, collaborative relationship.

[redacted] This is exhibit 7.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] Thank you.

[redacted] Let us know when you've had a chance to look at it.

[redacted] Could I ask what the second document or the second part of this is? It doesn't look like it's the -- in fact, it's not the next document in the sequence, so it looks like you don't have the whole document.

[redacted] Yeah. We kept some of it out because it was very long. But it was all --

[redacted] Do you have the whole document?

[redacted] Well --

[redacted] It's the same concern I had with the --

[redacted] We don't have that --

[redacted] -- questions from the --

[redacted] -- with us.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] It is from you guys, but --

[redacted] No, no, no. We produced the entire document.

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] I'm sure of that, because I can see the Bates numbers. It jumps from 6462 to 6471.

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] So the other documents were actually produced.

[redacted] Yeah. We just didn't want to, you know, burden everybody with huge amounts of paper.

[redacted] Then my client can't see the whole document, is the concern.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] It's the same concern we had with the Democrats just recently about that. So if you have the whole thing, we'd like to see it.

[redacted] Well, like we did the last hour, how about [redacted] ask her questions, and --

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] -- if she's inclined to answer based on what's in front of her, great. If not, we can go from there.

[redacted] Sure. We'll --

[redacted] I mean, I can describe it. It was all basically -- well, it's --

[redacted] I think I know the document. I just --

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] We don't have the whole thing for her to look at, and I just don't want her to be prejudiced by that.

[redacted] Yeah. Sure.

Are you all set?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q So it looks like this is a -- well, the first page is an email sent to several people at the CDC and Reingold.

By the way, what's Reingold?

A In my understanding, they are a consulting firm that the CDC hired.

Q Do you know what they were hired to consult on?

A I don't know the scope of that.

Q Do you know, like, any subject area they were consulting on?

A I don't know the scope of their work.

Q Okay.

So maybe you won't be able to answer this because we didn't include the whole thing, but it appeared to me that this was a PowerPoint presentation. But do you know if it was given as a PowerPoint presentation, or it was just given as a document that was attached to the --

[redacted] For the record, you guys have given us 6471, 6474, 6475, and 6484.

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] So there's a bunch of pages --

[redacted] Yeah. There were, like --

[redacted] -- missing at the beginning and at the middle of this. And so, you know, if you have the whole document, we're happy to go through it, but --

[redacted] Well, we didn't need to go through the whole thing. We just had questions about these pages. But, I mean, if there's a problem, we can skip the questions if she can't answer them. I mean, if --

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] I didn't produce the document --

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] -- either.

BY [redacted]

Q Yeah. I was going to ask you that as well. Do you know who did?

A These are only a few pages of the full document, but there were several teams involved in -- so I don't know --

Q Okay.

A -- how to answer that.

Q Sure.

On 6471, the title of that slide -- I don't know if that's the correct way to call it, but -- page is "Who we work with," and then there is "At Facebook" and "Outside of Facebook."

Can you tell us -- there are, sort of, various categories outside of Facebook, the first of which is academic researchers. Do you know any particular academic researchers Facebook worked with?

A I didn't create this doc, and those partnerships are out of my scope.

Q Okay. So you just sent the document. You didn't --

A In this instance, yes.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Absent this document, do you know if Meta partnered with academic researchers?

[redacted] My portfolio is U.S. government and politicians. I can't speak to other teams.

BY [redacted]

Q What about law enforcement, which is listed here but also outside of --

A I would also say, again, outside of my scope.

Q On the email at the beginning that you wrote, it says, "Making sure everyone who has been whitelisted to our misinfo claims portal has all the info they need."

What's the misinfo claims portal?

A The misinfo claims portal is a website that was created before I took over this portfolio. This is right at the beginning of my time with them. And it was intended to be a place where the CDC could submit pieces of content.

In my memory, this portal was used very few times. And, throughout the pandemic, we tried a lot of things, some of which worked and some of which didn't. And, in my understanding, the portal was used very infrequently.

Q And it was only for the CDC, or other agencies as well?

A For COVID misinfo claims, this portal was for CDC.

Q Okay. And so, just so that I kind of understand this, they would put in a claim of a specific post that they thought was misinfo --

A Yes.

Q -- and they were reporting to you?

A Yes.

Q Do you know what would happen with the post then?

A As I mentioned, the setup and the structure of it was solidified before I took it over --

Q Yeah.

A -- but, in my understanding, if the CDC flagged a piece of content through this portal, it would then be referred to subject-matter experts to review the content against our policies.

Q When you say "took it over," do you mean you administered it or you --

A I'm sorry. The portfolio. That was my --

Q Okay.

A -- fault for not being precise.

Q Thank you.

A As a reminder, what we discussed before is I took this over due to a parental leave --

Q Yeah.

A -- which was happening right at this time period.

Q I see.

A And so the person best equipped to answer the specific questions would have been my predecessor.

Q I see. Okay.

[redacted] And is that [redacted]?

[redacted] Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q When you say "making sure everyone who has been whitelisted," what does that mean?

A We onboarded specific email aliases to the portal.

Q Specific email aliases of CDC employees only?

A I would have to go back and check the whole list, but I do recall at least one Reingold email alias. But I would have to go back and check.

Q I see. By "whitelist," you just mean given access to? Or --

A Yes.

Q Okay.

And on the last page, 6484 --

[redacted] It's the last page you provided. It's --

[redacted] Yes. Correct.

[redacted] -- not necessarily the last page.

[redacted] The last page we provided.

BY [redacted]

Q The "Facebook Content Request System, Government Reporting System," is that different from the misinfo claims portal, or is that the same thing?

A It's the same thing.

Q The same thing. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q With respect to the misinfo claims portal, do you know how records were transmitted via this portal or if they were retained?

A I don't know about the document retention of this portal.

Q Okay. How were -- just as a functional question, this portal, is this a tool outside of email transmissions?

A The rest of the document has specifics, and I don't have the document in front of me, so I don't know how best to answer that question.

Q Okay. So this is the full email itself, though.

A Yes.

Q The attachment.

A Yes.

Q There's an excerpt copy provided.

But, absent this document, just in general -- and the misinfo claims portal, you referenced it was used on a few occasions.

A Yeah.

Q On those few occasions, again, what's your understanding of how those claims were submitted? In what form is Meta receiving the claim?

A It's a website.

Q Okay. And is there an output that's created on the website?

You said it was sent to subject-matter experts, so let me ask first, are those internal Meta subject-matter experts?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And how are they receiving these reports?

A I don't know the specifics of the document retention of that portal.

Q You mentioned your predecessor, [redacted]. Would she have been receiving these reports? Or was she playing a, you know, facilitating role between the experts and the CDC?

A I don't know the specifics of her involvement.

Q Okay.

And when you reference Meta's internal subject-matter experts, what's the name of that team in Meta?

A Organic content policy.

Q Okay.

During an earlier response, you mentioned that -- you said: We've tried, you know, multiple things. The portal was used very few times.

What alternatives were tried besides the portal?

A A good example was listed on a previous exhibit, profile frames to encourage vaccine uptake. So, when I say we tried a few things, that encompasses tools, tactics, policies, the whole breadth of tactics that we used throughout the pandemic, not specifically for a portal or something like that.

Q Were there other means that were tried in order to facilitate CDC to communicate issues related to misinformation?

A Not to my knowledge, no.

Q Okay. Not just via email, for example?

A Maybe I misinterpreted your question. The BOLO meetings were certainly -- but those were initiated by the CDC, so I wouldn't consider that to be part of that, in my interpretation of your question, so maybe we could rephrase it --

Q Sure.

A -- so I could be most precise.

Q Yeah. Was it your understanding that the misinfo claims portal was created with the goal to provide a means for the CDC to send information to Meta about misinformation related to COVID, vaccine, health-related information?

A Noting again that I was not on this portfolio when this was created, that's my understanding of its intention.

Q Okay. And what other avenues were tried by Meta and the CDC to facilitate this type of communication?

A Email, Zoom meetings, phone calls.

Q Do you know if there's a similar portal that Meta has created in a different context?

A There have been different contexts with similar tooling, yes.

Q And what are some of those?

A I did not hold the portfolio, and so I want to be clear about that again. It's my understanding that under the Trump administration the Census had an analogous portal. That's one that comes to mind.

Q And so, obviously, Census is a bureau; the CDC is an agency. Are you aware of analogous portals that were used with nongovernment entities?

A I'm not aware of anything like that.

Q Okay.

[redacted] This is exhibit 8.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] If you can just take a look and let us know when you're done.

[redacted] This is exhibit 8?

[redacted] Yes.

BY [redacted]

Q I know you didn't write these emails. It's [redacted] to Carol Crawford, but you were CC'd. They appear to be updates about Meta's COVID misinformation and harm policy to CDC.

Do you know how often these reports were made?

A I do not know.

Q Did you ever communicate these updates yourself to CDC?

A Can you be more specific on "these updates"?

Q Well, I guess I should ask, was this something that was done regularly, in your experience, that Meta reported its updates on its policy to the CDC?

A I don't know.

Q Okay.

[redacted] Are you done with this document, or --

[redacted] Yeah. We can take the documents back.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]

Q In the first hour, you had mentioned that you had five individuals that reported to you. Is that correct?

A Yes. Five including me. Four individuals that --

Q Gotcha.

A Yeah.

Q And how were the team's responsibilities divided?

[redacted] Can I just clarify as to timing, when you had four people reporting to you?

[redacted] That team structure started in November of 2022, so -- is that the time period you're referencing?

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] Yep. I, as we've discussed, managed the Federal Democratic portfolio. My colleague, [redacted], nee [redacted], manages the Republican Federal portfolio. My colleague, [redacted], manages political organizations, civic influencers on the political right. My colleague, [redacted], political influencers, civic influencers, et cetera, on the left. And [redacted] manages a portion of the Federal Government.

A few more Federal agencies are -- we spread them out, there are so many. [redacted], as I mentioned, covers the defense portfolio. [redacted], her portfolio has changed as we've had a lot of maternity and paternity leaves over the pandemic. And I also have, again, a little bit of the Federal Government. So there's a little bit of a mix.

BY [redacted]

Q And so, if I'm understanding you correctly, some team members are assigned a political responsibility, a Democratic- or Republican-leaning responsibility, and some are apolitical, agency-focused? I don't want to mischaracterize the division of responsibilities.

A They've all changed over time so many times. Sometimes folks will pick up a portfolio, and then if there's a medical leave, then those relationships move to the next person.

And it also includes the Government of Canada, so it's a North American team. And that point person has been [redacted], it has been [redacted].

So, not knowing a specific time period, it's hard to be precise about that portfolio.

Q Okay.

A I will say, the job itself is not partisan. The partners are political and partisan, so the portfolio is partisan.

Q And, to take one example, so you said that you took on the health portfolio starting in the summer of 2021. Is that correct?

A Late spring of 2021, yep.

Q And you mentioned a team member had to take leave. When that occurred, were you just wearing two hats at that point? You had, it sounded like, an existing portfolio of the White House and other, I'll say, political entities. Did you at that point have both your previous responsibilities and this new health portfolio?

A The health portfolio was added on top of my existing responsibilities.

Q Okay.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 3:05 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	[redacted]
Date of Interview	5/31/23
Date of Review	7/18/23
Name of Reviewer	[redacted]
Signature of Reviewer	[redacted]

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
6	3	RM → Chairman
[redacted] 21	[redacted] 1	Can we go off the record for a second
22	14	They were very different
24	3	Veterans Affairs
63	Bottom	White Space in transcript
65	19-21	Add quotes "Are... today"
72	6-9	Add quotes "Per... collaborate"
2	Appearances	Believe [redacted] & [redacted] were also present

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: [redacted]

Thursday, June 1, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in Room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

Present: Representative Jordan.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] LAW CLERK

[redacted] LAW CLERK

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ANTITRUST, COMMERCIAL, AND ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

[redacted] DIGITAL ASSISTANT

[redacted] SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted] RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted] DIGITAL DIRECTOR

[redacted] SENIOR SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY STAFF ASSISTANT

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted] MINORITY DETAILEE

[redacted] MINORITY DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSEL

For ALPHABET:

DANIEL F. DONOVAN, ESQ.

King & Spalding

1700 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Suite 900

Washington, D.C. 20006

For [redacted]:

MICHAEL D. BOPP, ESQ.

Gibson Dunn

1050 Connecticut Avenue, NW

Washington, D.C. 20036-5306

[redacted] We'll go on the record.

This is a transcribed interview of [redacted]. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

[redacted]. [redacted].

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted] and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted] Ranking Member Nadler's.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] Chairman Jordan's staff.

Mr. Donovan. Daniel Donovan, on behalf of Alphabet, with King & Spalding.

Mr. Bopp. Michael Bopp, Gibson Dunn, representing [redacted]

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions. Do you understand?

[redacted]. Yes, I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. And it is my understanding that you are appearing today with counsel. Is that correct?

[redacted]. That is correct.

[redacted] And counsel has stated their names for the record. Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your recollection. And it is okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else; just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that, although this interview is not under oath, by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

[redacted] Yes, I do.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001. Do you understand this?

[redacted]. Yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

[redacted]. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

That is the end of my preamble. Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] No, thank you.

[redacted] The clock now reads 10:04 a.m. We will start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q Thank you again for appearing here voluntarily.

Can you state your full name again for the record?

A [redacted].

Q Great. And what is your current place of employment?

A CapitalG.

Q And what's your current title?

A I'm a vice president.

Q What's your educational background, beginning with college?

A I went to Carnegie Mellon University.

Q And what did you receive there?

A A Bachelor of Science in business.

Q And what's your employment history following college?

A I worked for Goldman Sachs, and then McMaster-Carr, and then SeamlessDocs, and then Google, and now CapitalG.

Q Okay. And when did you first join Google?

A In 2015.

Q And what was your position when you first joined?

A I was a financial analyst.

Q And how long were you in that position for?

A About 2-1/2 years or so.

Q So sometime in 2017? 2018?

A 2018, beginning of '18.

Q Okay. And what was your next position?

A I was a founder in Area 120.

Q And how long were you in that position for?

A About a year.

Q Okay. Do you recall when you left that position?

A I want to say February of 2019.

Q Okay. And what was your next position after that?

A Product Partnerships.

Q And what was your title with the Product Partnerships team?

A I was a strategic partner development manager.

Q And how long were you in that position for?

A From 2019 to the beginning of 2022.

Q And what was your position after that?

A CapitalG.

Q Oh.

A Yeah.

Q In the Product Partnerships team, did you have the title of "manager" throughout that entire period?

A Yes.

Q With your first position at Google in 2015 as a financial analyst, which team was that with?

A With the People Operations team.

Q And what were your responsibilities in that role?

A It was a financial planning and analysis role, so budgeting, forecasting.

Q Who did you report to at the time?

A At the time, I had a few different managers. The first was [redacted].

Q You said your next position was founder of Area 120. Is that correct?

A Founder in Area 120. It's Google's internal accelerator. So I had an opportunity to pitch an idea and then work on it.

Q Okay. Can you say a little bit more of the function of that team within Google?

A It's an accelerator. So Googlers can pitch an idea, get funding and head count and basically build out their own startup within Google.

Q Okay. And whatever is being created, is it ultimately the property of Google or of the individual?

A It's the property of Google.

Q Just at a high level, what sort of issues were you working on -- or, what products were you working on during that time period?

A It was a platform to connect emerging market entrepreneurs and tech startups with funding and expertise.

Q Okay.

And you recalled joining the Product Partnerships team in February of 2019. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q And what is the Product Partnerships team?

A The Product Partnerships team, you know, in my experience, my role was to work with our product managers, our engineers, to understand their product roadmaps and the data or content needs for the products that they were looking to build, and then to work with the outside ecosystem to understand where that data and content might live, and then acquire it for the products.

Q Okay.

And within -- let me actually take a step back. Product Partnerships, is this for all of Alphabet, or is this more granular than that?

A This is for Google Search. And Health Search, specifically, was my role.

Q So, as it was specific to Google Search, it would've been outside your team's responsibility with respect to products related to YouTube?

A Yes, primarily. And then, when COVID-19 came about, I played a bit of a coordinator role with the U.S. Government and coordinated some communications with teams outside of Search.

Q Are there analogous teams -- so you referenced the Search teams. Are there analogous teams for the YouTube division within Alphabet?

A Yes. There are -- Partnerships is a very large organization, and each product has, in some cases, several Partnerships teams. So YouTube has their own Partnerships team, Maps/Geo have their own Partnerships team, and so on.

Q Are there others that you recall, in addition to Search, YouTube, Maps?

A I believe most Google products that require any type of partnerships would likely have a Partnerships team.

Q Okay.

Outside of Search, you referenced serving a coordination role. Which of the Google products did you serve a coordination function with?

A So the role of coordinating was more about engagement with the U.S. Government and the product needs. So it wasn't necessarily specific to every single product. It was more if a team needed information from a U.S. Government agency or, you know, needed to interact in some way, I would help facilitate that interaction.

Q Okay.

Do you recall which teams -- let me start with a more precise question. In your coordinating role, was the YouTube team one of the teams that you would coordinate communications with?

A Yes, YouTube was one of the teams.

Q Okay. Do you recall which other teams you served this purpose for?

A The Geo, or Maps, team.

Q Any others?

A The Google Health team.

Q Is the Google Health team separate from the Health Search team that you referenced earlier?

A It is technically separate, but Google Health Search and Google Health work closely together because there are clinicians within Google Health that Google Health Search consults.

Q And, within Google Search, is -- Google Health Search is housed within that?

A To the best of my recollection, Google Health was its own entity. Google's Health Search was within Google Search.

Q Okay. How many teams were there within Google Search?

A I couldn't say exactly. There were a number of different teams within Google Search.

Q Were there other teams that were divided by subject matter, such as Health being one?

A Yes. To the best of my recollection, there were a number of teams that were verticalized. So Sports was a team, Media, and so on.

Q Do you recall if elections was a subject matter that had its own team?

A Elections was another separate area.

Q During your time with the Product Partnerships team, who did you report to?

A I reported to [redacted].

Q Was that your entire time during the role?

A No. I initially reported in to [redacted].

Q And for [redacted] and [redacted], what were their titles?

A I'm not sure exactly. [redacted] is a director. And [redacted] I'm not sure exactly what his title was, but he was a manager and team lead.

Q During your time with the Product Partnerships team, did you have a team that reported to you?

A I did not.

Q Did you have a team of people that were equivalent to being your peers within the Google Health Search team?

A Yes, I did.

Q And how big was that team?

A Initially, the Google Health Search team was, to the best of my recollection, about four to five people globally. And then, when COVID-19 came about, there were up to 190 different Partnerships folks who worked in some capacity on COVID-19-related products.

Q Before COVID hit, the four to five, was there an individual that had responsibility for the United States in particular?

A Yes. I was responsible for the United States.

Q And once the team expanded significantly post-COVID, was there a division or a group of individuals in charge of the United States specifically?

A From a partnerships standpoint or from a product standpoint? Would you mind clarifying?

Q Sure. We'll start with from a partnerships standpoint.

A Sure. So, in the U.S., I played the primary point-of-contact role for COVID-19-related partnerships for Search and then the coordinator role.

Q And once the team expands, do you have people reporting to you at this point?

A I did not.

Q Okay.

You mentioned a number of partnerships and that you were in a coordinator function with the government. Which government agencies?

A The agencies that come to mind are the CDC, the FDA, and the HHS.

Q And when you're serving in this role as coordinator, are these responsibilities primarily on you, or were there others within the Google Search team that could fill this role?

A Would you mind just clarifying the question?

Q Sure. I just -- were you the primary point of contact? Or were there, say, a group of three people or more than one person that was primarily involved in these coordination efforts between -- connecting government agencies with the appropriate team or division within YouTube -- or, within Alphabet?

A Within the United States, [redacted], on the Government Affairs and Public Policy team, also played a similar coordinator role with me. I was the point of contact from a Partnerships standpoint. And then we had a similar setup of Partnerships and GAPP for over 190 different countries and territories.

Q Okay. And what was [redacted] title during this time?

A I'm not sure exactly what [redacted] title was, but I do know she was a part of the Government Affairs and Public Policy team.

Q Okay.

During your time at Google, who else from the Government Affairs and Public Policy team did you work with?

A [redacted] manager, [redacted].

Q And what was the context of your interactions with [redacted]

A I primarily worked with [redacted] but at times we would connect with [redacted] on just updates. Nothing in particular comes to mind.

Q In serving this coordination role, did you have to have a familiarity with YouTube's content guidelines?

A So, to the best of my recollection, each product area had their own Partnerships point of contact and GAPP point of contact. And YouTube's internal coordinator would play the role of understanding the product roadmap and the product need and then communicate that to myself and [redacted] and then we would then pass along the request or feedback or whatever they needed. I was not personally familiar with YouTube's policies.

Q Do you recall who served that role at YouTube?

Mr. Bopp. What role are you talking about?

BY [redacted]

Q The role responsible -- we'll start with the development of YouTube's content moderation policies.

A I'm not familiar with YouTube's team structure.

Q Okay. If you received a question from a government partner regarding YouTube's policies or the enforcement of YouTube's policies, to whom at the company would you refer that question to?

A I would most likely have passed it along to my counterpart in YouTube from a Partnerships standpoint to help navigate to the right internal teams at YouTube, and perhaps the YouTube Government Affairs point of contact.

Q Okay. And who was your counterpart at YouTube?

A [redacted] from Partnerships.

Q Did you work closely with [redacted]

A We were in touch fairly regularly during COVID. Pre-COVID, didn't work as much with any other product areas.

Q And were you with the Health Search team before COVID as well?

A Yes, I was with the Health Search team pre-COVID.

Q And pre-COVID, what were some of the issues that you worked on?

A The topics that we covered were primarily medical conditions. So Google has about a thousand knowledge panels about different medical conditions.

Q Okay. And just so we're on the same page, what is a knowledge panel?

A A knowledge panel is a structured experience that comes up on specific queries. For example, if you googled "migraine," you would see, most likely to the right-hand side, a medical illustration of someone with head pain and a migraine, some type of statistics around how common that condition is, and then a condition description of the migraine itself, and then potentially another tab that has symptoms information or treatment information.

Q Okay.

A It's completely separate from the 10 blue links. So, to be clear, my role the entire time in the role had nothing to do with content moderation or the 10 blue links, which are algorithmically sourced.

Q Which team at Google handles the 10 blue links and how they come up?

A There's a Search Ranking team within Google. However, just to be clear, the ordering of, you know, the 10 blue links is algorithm-based. So, to my knowledge, there's not a team that does manual intervention.

Q During your time at Google, were you ever required to consult with this team about what factors should be considered by the algorithm?

A I do not recall working with the team on algorithmic ranking, as it was not a part of my role. My role was primarily focused on the structured experiences, like knowledge panels.

Q Do you recall working with the Search Ranking team in any other context?

A I do not recall working with the Search Ranking team.

Q Who led the Search Ranking team during your time at Google?

A I'm not sure who led the team.

Q Okay.

With respect to the knowledge panels, does the knowledge panel ever feature a blue link?

A So the structured experiences are completely separate from the blue links. There are many different components to a Search page, and, you know, sometimes you'll see ads, which are separate from blue links and separate from structured experiences.

There might be structured experiences. Structured experiences might link out to another source, but they're completely separate from the 10 blue links.

Q And if there is a link provided or some mechanism to link out, that would fall under your team's purview? Is that right?

A If there were a link out within a structured experience on Search for health specifically, then attributing to the appropriate partner would be within my team's purview.

Q When in 2022 did you leave Google?

A I believe it was in the beginning of April.

Q Okay. And do you know who took over your responsibilities?

A I'm not sure.

Q Do you know who [redacted] is?

A [redacted]. She might've been the person who was hired after me, but I was on paternity leave, so I wasn't really a part of the process.

Mr. Bopp. When you say "she might've been," do you have any reason to believe that? I mean, do you have any recollection of her being hired to replace you?

[redacted] She was hired when I was out, so I don't know precisely.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

Go ahead. Sorry.

BY [redacted]

Q Other individuals at Google have shared information that there's a tool at Google called the Buginator. Do you have familiarity with that tool?

A The Buganizer? I'm --

Q Oh, excuse me. Yes.

A -- vaguely familiar with the Buganizer, yes.

Q Okay. And what's your understanding of what that tool is?

A That is a tool that, in my experience, was primarily used by Engineering and other teams. I didn't really use it much in my role. But it's a way to identify a bug or a concern or an error or a fix and address it.

Q On the occasions that you were involved one way or another, what was the context of when you or your team would be involved with a bug or an issue ticket?

A I don't recall specifically. It just wasn't a big part of my role.

Q Okay.

So you mentioned CDC was one of the agencies you coordinated with, would serve a coordinating function with. Do you recall who at the CDC you worked with?

A Primarily [redacted] and [redacted].

Q Okay. And who is [redacted]?

A She was, I want to say, the team lead or manager for digital content at the CDC. I could be wrong on the exact title.

Q And who is [redacted]?

A [redacted] reported to [redacted]

Q Once COVID hits, how frequently were you interacting with -- we'll start with Carol Crawford?

A It varied. In the very beginning of COVID, the engagement may have been more frequent, and then towards the end of the time in the role, less frequent. But it could've been anywhere from, you know, weekly to biweekly to daily. It really varied.

Q Okay. And what was the nature of your working relationship?

A It was similar to the working relationship with any other partner pre-COVID or during COVID. It was to communicate the data or content needs of the products and features we were launching and understand how you could acquire that content and then provide feedback to our internal product and engineering teams.

Q So when you say -- what do you mean by "acquire content"?

A So acquiring content could mean any number of different ways of getting information from one source into Google's products. In some cases, there are content licensing agreements. In other cases, information is publicly available, so, you know, it might mean our engineering teams going to a GitHub repository and ingesting that information.

Q What is a GitHub repository, just so we're on the same page?

A My understanding at eye level is that it's a public database of content or data.

Q Okay.

In addition to acquiring content, what were some of the purposes of your other interactions with the CDC?

A The other types of engagements could include this coordination role that I mentioned, so connecting them with other teams within Google or, you know, facilitating an introduction.

Q Okay. Do you recall which teams at Google you facilitated an introduction to with respect to the CDC?

A YouTube comes to mind.

Q Do you recall who from YouTube you introduced to the CDC?

A Lee Hadlow comes to mind. There may have been other folks as well.

Q When I asked about acquiring content, you mentioned that there could be different types of agreements. Did Google have an agreement with the CDC?

A Google had executed a trademark agreement to use the CDC's logo for some campaigns.

Q Okay. Do you recall when that agreement was entered into?

A I do not recall exactly when it was entered into.

Q Would it have been after COVID had started?

A Yes, it was after COVID had started, but I don't know exactly when.

Chairman Jordan. Before 2021?

[redacted]. I believe so, but I'm not entirely sure.

Chairman Jordan. Thanks.

BY [redacted]

Q Were there any other agreements Google had with the CDC?

A Not to my knowledge.

Q Were there any analogous agreements that Google had with other government agencies?

A I'm not entirely sure, because we had other Partnerships and Government Affairs contacts within Google who worked with governments outside the U.S.

Q Okay.

You mentioned a few government agencies. Did you serve a similar coordination role with respect to the White House?

A Yes, I did.

Q And who at the White House did you interact with?

A I don't recall specific names, but I do recall working with, I want to say, the U.S. Digital Services department or the White House COVID Task Force.

Q Do you recall if you worked with a gentleman by the name of Rob Flaherty?

A Rob Flaherty. I recall seeing his last name in preparing for this interview.

Q What was the context of your interactions with the White House?

A To the best of my recollection, my engagement with the White House was -- what comes to mind is the vaccine appointments availability effort.

Q And what was the vaccine appointment availability effort?

A To the best of my recollection, the White House was looking for a way to help the U.S. population find vaccine appointments and got together a group of retail pharmacies and invited some other companies like Google and search engines to think about a way to surface these appointment availability slots so that people can book their appointments and get vaccinated.

Q Do you recall which other companies were invited?

A I believe CVS, perhaps Walgreen's, perhaps Kroger's. Microsoft was part of it. There were others, but those are the ones that come to mind.

Q And do you recall when this effort was taking place?

A I don't recall exactly, but it would've been after vaccines became available.

Q Is it your understanding that would've been maybe winter to spring 2021?

A When did vaccines start to roll out? It could have started as early as winter 2020 or beginning of 2021. I'm not entirely sure.

Q Other than the vaccine appointment effort, joint effort that you referenced, what other interactions did you have with the White House?

A I recall having, I think, a meeting just generally sharing what Google was doing on COVID-19.

Q Do you recall when that meeting took place?

A I do not.

Q Okay. When you say "generally what Google was doing with respect to COVID-19," what do you mean by that?

A So my engagement was to just share the Health Search products that were out there, so the structured experiences around COVID-19 that I worked on.

Q Do you recall if Google initiated this meeting or if the White House or someone else did?

A I do not recall.

Q Okay. Do you recall if anyone from the White House during any of these meetings raised concerns regarding misinformation?

A I do not recall. Misinformation was not really a part of my role. So my role was purely to talk about the structured products on Search.

Q Okay. If someone from the government did have a question about misinformation, who at the company would you refer that question to?

A I likely would've referred them to someone on our Government Affairs and Public Policy team, who then could've helped route it appropriately.

Q Do you know if there's a team -- we'll start within Search -- if there's a team within Search that has primary responsibility with respect to misinformation?

A Search has Trust and Safety and Government Affairs and Public Policy teams, so I'm not entirely sure of the scope of each team, but I would assume that one of those two would be a good starting point.

Q Who led the Trust and Safety team for Search?

A I'm not sure who led the team.

Q Did YouTube have an analogous Trust and Safety team?

A I believe so.

Q And do you know who led that team?

A I'm not sure.

Q This will be exhibit 1.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall this document?

A I do not recall this document.

Q Do you recall whether you attended a meeting with the White House -- this would've been February 2021?

A I do not recall if I attended this specific meeting.

Q Okay.

Looking at the top of page 1, on the "To" line, the first email address is [redacted]. Who is that?

A [redacted] was a director in Google Health.

Q Okay.

A Or is a director.

Q And, to clarify, Google Health is a team separate from your Google Health Search team?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. How big is the team that [redacted] leads?

A I'm not sure if [redacted] had direct report at the time.

Q Okay.

Still on the "To" line, there's your email address, and then there's a gentleman by the name of [redacted]. Do you know who that is?

A I'm not sure who [redacted] is.

Q Okay.

Looking down, two-thirds down the page, there's a set of email addresses of individuals who are invited. There are some government emails. There's Rob Flaherty, who was mentioned earlier. Do you recall what his position was with the White House?

A I do not.

Q Okay. What about Benjamin Wakana?

A I do not recall Benjamin Wakana's role either.

Q Okay. For any of the four names that are there -- Flaherty, Wakana, Clarke Humphrey, and Courtney Rowe -- do you recall working with any of those individuals in your role as serving that coordinating function between agencies, the White House, and teams at Alphabet?

A I don't recall specifically working with the names mentioned here.

Q Okay.

Did you ever work with Andy Slavitt at the White House?

A His name is familiar. I'm not sure if I had direct engagement with him, but I may have been on some emails with him.

Q Okay.

Do you recall attending a meeting at any point in time, whether February 2021 or otherwise, with personnel from the White House regarding vaccine misinformation?

A I don't recall a specific meeting on vaccine misinformation.

Q Do you recall a meeting where the issue of vaccine misinformation was raised?

A Perhaps? I don't have a clear recollection of vaccine misinformation. My role was primarily on the structured experiences in Search, so that was my focus.

Q Okay.

Do you recall other government agencies -- do you recall having meetings with any other government agency where the issue of vaccine misinformation was raised during the meeting?

A Vaccine misinformation. I don't recall any specific meetings. There may have been comments or, you know, questions that have come up, but I wouldn't have been the person to speak to them.

Q Okay.

Turning back to the White House specifically, it looks like there's a Zoom link here. Do you recall, in the meetings with the White House you attended, were they all over Zoom or a video conference function of some kind?

A To the best of my recollection, I believe the White House did use Zoom. At Google, we try to use Google Meet, but different agencies have different policies.

Q In your meetings with the White House, would you take notes?

A Perhaps. There was usually someone on most meetings that would either take a note of action items, if there were any, or general feedback.

Q And when you say there was someone, do you mean someone from Google or anyone on the call?

A It depends. If it was a general sharing out and we were just sharing what we were working on, there might not be a need to share notes or take down notes. If it was a meeting that required some type of followup or decision point, then there may have been notes taken.

Mr. Donovan. [redacted] do you have a specific recollection of someone taking notes?

[redacted]. Not a specific recollection.

Mr. Donovan. Okay.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall internal Google email correspondence or internal conferring following a meeting?

A Do you have a specific example?

Q With reference to meetings with the White House, you said if there was a do-out or something to do, do you have a recollection of an internal Google meeting following a meeting with the White House regarding next steps?

A I don't recall a specific meeting about next steps with the White House. As a part of the role, we generally had internal meetings, so I'm not sure if we had any specific to the White House.

Q Okay. As a general practice with respect to meetings with the White House or with meetings with other government agencies, would you attend internal Google meetings in advance to prepare for a meeting with a government agency or with the White House?

Mr. Bopp. You're asking if, as a general practice, he would have a meeting with his colleagues at Google to prepare for a meeting with the White House?

[redacted] Yes.

Mr. Bopp. Okay.

[redacted]. I would say, as a general practice, we try to be prepared for any meeting, regardless of the partner type, whether it's government or nongovernment. So, if there are, you know, a number of different teams involved in the conversation, making sure that everyone knows the agenda and the purpose of the call and the goals.

So there may have been either an email or meeting or some kind of coordination about an upcoming meeting. I don't recall any specific prep sessions for a meeting with the White House.

BY [redacted]

Q Besides email, what forms of communication are used internally among workers at Google?

A GChat and virtual meetings.

Q What is GChat?

A It's just a chat feature on G Suite Google products.

Q Okay. And is GChat a feature that's available to the public, or is this specific to personnel at Google?

A I believe it's available to the public. Anyone who has a Gmail account can have that chat feature.

Q I can take these exhibits back now.

This will be exhibit 2.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Bopp. Hey, can we take just a very quick break?

[redacted] Sure.

Can we go off the record, please?

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record, please.

Mr. Bopp. Are you ready?

[redacted]. Yeah.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this email chain?

A I recall seeing this email as part of the prep.

Q Okay. Having since prepped and seeing the document now, do you recall the context in which you are engaging in this email communication with the White House?

Mr. Bopp. When you say "the context," can you give us a little bit more detail of what you're asking [redacted], just so we know?

[redacted] Sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall sending these emails?

A I do not recall sending these emails specifically. And it looks like the thread originated without me on it, so I don't recall the other interactions here.

Q Sure. But there are a few emails where you're the sender. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Do you recall interacting with the White House in -- this would've been in May of 2021?

A Generally, yes.

Q And exhibit 1 was from February 2021. Exhibit 2 here is from May 2021. Do you recall how frequently you were in contact with the White House during that time period?

A I do not recall how frequently.

Q Okay.

You mentioned the vaccine appointment joint effort as one interaction. Do you recall what other interactions you had with the White House during this time period?

Mr. Bopp. When you say "time period," you mean February through May of 2021?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted]. No specific interactions come to mind. I do know that we were in touch with them, but I don't have a specific example in mind.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay.

Who is Mina from the White House? Do you recall who that is?

A I believe Mina was a part of the vaccine appointment availability effort. I'm not sure what her exact title was.

Q During this period of February to May 2021, do you recall who in the White House you worked most closely with?

A Mina's name seems more familiar here.

Q Do you remember which contexts you had interactions with Mina?

A Primarily what comes to mind is the vaccine appointment availability.

Q Anything else?

A Nothing specific.

Q Okay.

The previous exhibit mentioned vaccine misinformation. Do you recall who at the White House raised that issue?

Mr. Bopp. Raised the issue with [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Raised the issue with [redacted] or with anyone at Google that you have knowledge of?

A Are you referring to this specific exhibit or --

Q Just in general.

A I'm not entirely sure who else had interactions. I know Karen DeSalvo had some communications with government officials.

Q Okay. And who is Karen?

A Karen is the head of Google Health and Google's chief health officer or chief medical officer.

Q Okay.

If I could call your attention -- this is exhibit 2. Starting on page 774, there's an email, and its last couple lines end on 775, but the bulk of it is on 774. There's an email from you to Mina. And at the start of the email, about three lines down of the first main paragraph, there's a reference to "combating misinformation."

Do you recall the context in which Google was providing an answer with respect to combating misinformation?

A So my role as coordinator, I guess, with the U.S. Government would be to take summaries, at times, of what other teams are working on and share them with external partners.

So, in this case, I don't have a specific, you know, recollection of the context for a misinformation effort, but I can say that I do recall sharing the structured experiences on Search that I worked on.

[11:04 A.M.]

[redacted] So, understanding that you're serving this coordinator function, if I understand you correctly, you're not the one developing Google's policies or developing a response. Who at Google would you consult with for issues related to misinformation?

Mr. Bopp. Is the question would or who did he consult with?

BY [redacted]

Q We'll frame or start as who did you consult with?

You mentioned that other team members were ultimately responsible. So who did you consult with in order to serve your coordinating role?

A So, just to clarify, my role wasn't specific to misinformation. It was more specific to structured experiences on Google search. So I don't recall consulting other teams necessarily on misinformation topics.

There were other teams like Trust and Safety and other policy teams that did focus on misinformation. So those would be the types of teams.

Q Okay. And do you recall -- we'll use this email as an example with the understanding that this appears to not be within the scope of your responsibility -- who you would need to consult with, discuss with, receive a briefing by in order to be able to communicate and send this email to the White House? Would Trust and Safety be the primary team?

A I'm not entirely sure who the team would be, per se. It really depends on the specific topic. Like I mentioned, there are cross-functional teams with each product area. So, if it was a YouTube-specific topic, it would go to a different team. If it was a Map-specific topic, it would go to a different team, and so on.

Q Okay.

And, for YouTube, do you recall who your point of contact would have been?

A I don't recall a specific Trust and Safety contact. Depending on the request, I may have looped in [redacted], just to have navigate YouTube.

Q So on exhibit 1, there's a reference to misinformation, February 2021. There is a reference here. This is May 2021. Do you recall how long the issue of misinformation was raised by personnel at the White House to individuals at Google?

Mr. Bopp. Do you understand the question? I'm not -- I'm not certain I do, but if you do, go ahead and answer it.

[redacted]. Would you mind just rephrasing or repeating the question?

[redacted] Sure, sure.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall how late into 2021, personnel at the White House were raising concerns related to misinformation to individuals at Google?

A I don't recall specific issues of, you know, the White House raising concerns about misinformation because that was outside of my primary scope. But what I can say is that we worked with White House officials, you know, across 2020 and 2021.

Q Okay. Do you recall what issues, what topics of misinformation were of most concern to the White House?

A I couldn't say what was of most concern to the White House.

Q Do you recall the White House ever communicating questions related to what a Google Product's content moderation policies were?

A I do not recall the White House specifically asking about Google's content moderation policies nor was content moderation a part of my role. So nothing comes to mind.

Q Do you recall -- maybe I have time for one more.

Do you recall receiving requests from any other government agency? I shouldn't say request. Do you recall having interaction with any other government agency with respect to misinformation?

A Again, the scope of my role was more about understanding the product roadmap for health search and then going out and acquiring that specific content. So misinformation topics weren't top of mind for me, but nothing specifically comes to mind. But I can tell you that we worked with other government agencies, like the CDC, FDA, and HHS.

[redacted] Okay. The hour is up. So we can take those exhibits back, and we can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We're back on the record at 11:23.

And, [redacted], my name is [redacted] again, and thank you very much on behalf of the minority for appearing here today.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]

Q You've already covered this with respect to one of your roles, but I just want to be clear. When you were working at Global Product Partnerships, you had no role in content moderation, correct?

A That is correct.

Q And no role in shaping or writing Google's content moderation policies?

A That's correct.

Q And that is also true when you were working at area -- was it Area 120?

A Yes, correct.

Q And I assume that that was true as well, that you had no role in content moderation or in shaping Google's policies when you were working as a financial analyst?

A Yes. I had no role in content moderation or shaping policies and any role prior or present at Google.

Q Okay. Thank you very much.

Now, you talked during the last hour about structured experiences on Google search and knowledge panel. I want to show you an exhibit so we can make sure that we all understand exactly what you're talking about.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted] We're on three?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted] This is my first time so.

Mr. Bopp. No problem.

[redacted] Luckily we don't -- we only have to put the sticker on one copy.

BY [redacted]

Q This is an example of a Google search we ran. And for the record, we are not in the habit of googling "Brad Pitt" every day. We did this for another witness.

So can you explain a little bit of what a structured experience is? And then talk us through which parts of this Google search, and it goes on to the other side, are structured experiences and what they're called?

A Sure. So structured experiences generally are just a way to provide a user experience or a design to help people digest information. They are separate from the 10 blue links. So, if you move over to the back of the page, there are different links from people -- or [redacted]. These are all 10 blue links. They're algorithmically sourced. They're not structured experiences.

On the first page, the movie carousel beneath the picture of Brad Pitt that has Bullet Train and others, that's an example of a structured experience. I didn't work on movies. So I'm not sure exactly how this carousel works, but that's an example of a structured experience.

Q And is the blue -- the images and the link to the CinemaBlend article and the age and spouse on top, is that what's known as a search feature, that blue section?

A The top section, that is a search product. Again, I'm not as familiar with movies, as I worked on health.

Q Fair enough.

And the knowledge panel is where it says "about" on this slide. Is that correct?

A Right. So on the right-hand side --

Q Thank you.

A -- this is an example of a knowledge panel, per se. I'm not sure exactly how this content was sourced, but this is an example on the right-hand side of a knowledge panel.

Q So, for a knowledge panel with respect to health, how would content be sourced?

A It varied. We worked with -- or Google worked with medical illustrators for the medical image components of the knowledge panel. Some of the pieces of information were algorithmically sourced, like how common a specific condition was. And then Google worked with partners like the Mayo Clinic for the condition's descriptions.

Q Okay. And so the structured experiences, like the knowledge panels, consisted of information that Google chose to highlight for its users before the users would see the 10 blue links?

A Just one point of clarification. Structured experiences, like in this case, can appear to the right or above or in another placement, not necessarily always on top of the 10 blue links, and not all queries have structured experiences associated with them. So you might type in a phrase into the search bar and only get 10 blue links.

Q But is it fair to say that when there is a structured experience, that's information that Google is curating for the user who is searching? With respect to, say, medical information, if I Google "heart disease," then I'm going to get a structured experience that contains information that Google has sourced from the Mayo Clinic or other similar sources and, perhaps, medical illustrators with an image of a heart?

A Yes, and the knowledge panels and structured experiences.

Q Okay. And so a knowledge panel is separate from a structured experience?

A Yes.

Q I just want to make sure I'm using the Google terminology correctly?

A When I say "structured experience," it could be a knowledge panel as an example. It could be something else, like a banner or some other type of designed experience that is separate from the 10 blue links and separate from ads.

Q And, when you say "designed experience," you mean it's designed by employees of Google?

A Yes, designed by engineers, product managers, UX designers, a number of different cross-functional teams.

Q Okay. Thank you.

Is it analogous to, when you walk into, say -- let's take it out of the digital world. You walk into a book store, and there's a table of, you know, recommended mysteries or new and hot best sellers, but the books -- the rest of the books that the store sells are still available to whoever wants them?

A So I wouldn't necessarily say that what's in a structured experience is being recommended by Google. My understanding is that the purpose of a structured experience is to help users digest information in a useful way.

Q Okay. And, if information is not in a structured experience, so if I search for something and Google has not chosen to include a link or an illustration, I'm still going to find, if it exists, blue links that relate to that information?

A You will find, you know, blue links and relevant websites depending on your query.

Q Okay. Thank you.

So when you were working in Global Product Partnerships, as you mentioned, you worked with employees at various Federal agencies, correct? And you mentioned that you worked with White House employees in 2020?

A Yes, I believe so.

Q And that was when COVID first started?

A Correct.

Q And so that would have been White House officials in the Trump administration, correct?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q Okay.

And then those communications with White House officials continued when the administrations changed in 2021?

A Yes. My role remained the same across administrations, and the way that I approached my job is nonpartisan and was pretty consistent.

Q And in that vein, when you would communicate with employees at the CDC, like Carol Crawford and Fred Smith, you would communicate with them -- or you did communicate with them, excuse me, in 2020 as well, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And that was, again, when former President Trump was in office?

A Yes.

Q And if you don't know the answer to this, that's fine, but given that Ms. Crawford and Mr. Smith were working at CDC across both administrations, is it your understanding that they're career CDC officials? They are not political appointees?

A That is my understanding. They were consistent throughout my time in the role.

Q And you also worked with employees at Health and Human Services?

A Yes.

Q And you did that in 2020?

A Yes.

Q And you did that in 2021?

A That's correct.

Q So, again, that work spanned both administrations.

And that's with respect to COVID as well, not just general health issues, correct?

A Yes, and respect to COVID.

Q But, even after COVID appeared on the scene, your work for Google health search did not just deal with COVID, correct?

A During COVID, my primary focus was COVID-19 itself.

Q But occasionally you would work on things like kidney awareness month or heart health awareness month or things like that?

Mr. Bopp. During what time period are we asking [redacted] about?

BY [redacted]

Q In 2021, if you recall.

A I recall the vast majority of my role during the pandemic being related to COVID-19, and occasionally, there might have been something that was not COVID related within the health search space that needed to be maintained or addressed, but the primary focus was COVID.

Q And, when you say "maintained," that's because, as you mentioned earlier, before COVID, Google health search was still a product that Google had, and it was just focused on the thousands of other medical conditions that humans deal with?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q Okay. Thank you.

Now, you mentioned a moment ago that -- and I believe you said it earlier, that with respect to the blue links, those are algorithmically decided?

A Yes.

Q And there's no human action taken to alter the order of the links or what shows up on the links?

A That is my understanding.

Q That's your understanding. Okay.

[redacted] Is that number four?

[redacted] Yep.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q So you mentioned that a lot of your work, once COVID started and certainly once the vaccines became available, related to making sure -- or to working on making vaccine appointments available or helping people find access to vaccines. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. And that was something you discussed with Carol Crawford at CDC?

A I don't recall if Carol was a part of the vaccine appointment scheduling effort.

Q Okay.

I'm going to ask you to take a look at this email. And on February 25, 2021, Carol wanted to point your attention to a new webpage that the CDC posted about vaccine finder. Do you see that?

A Yes.

Q And then she said: It would be great if this could come up higher in results instead of our provider page.

And then she pointed out, she also just wanted you to see it in case you found it helpful in any way, correct? And your response was -- well, first you thanked her for sharing, very polite, and then you said: As a reminder, we do not alter organic search results or have influence of ranking in any way.

That was a very gentle way of saying, no, we're not going to -- we're not going to make that come up higher?

A Yes. We do not alter organic search results in any way; "we," being Google, and this is just reinforcing that policy.

Q And you don't do that even if a government official says it would be great if you would?

A Google approaches it the same way whether it's a government or a nongovernment partner or, you know, a user. We get feedback from users, from millions of users all the time, and, you know, in some cases, if something violates Google's policy, then Google will act. In other cases, it's feedback that isn't acted upon. And, in this case, it was feedback that wasn't acted upon.

Q Thank you.

And you said that, once COVID hit, that was the vast majority of the work that you were doing for Google. What was Google's interest in -- well, let me back up.

Google's primary function is to provide access to and to organize information for folks who want to find it on the internet, correct?

A Yes. Google's mission is to organize the world of information and make it universally accessible and useful.

Q And, with respect to health information, you said that Google partners, certainly by the middle of the pandemic, were, I think you said, 190 organizations across the world?

A We worked with a number of partners. I would say hundreds of partners. Google looked to governments around the world for public health guidance, and so each country or territory has its own public health authority, and there would be a contact within Google that would work with them for public health guidance that was locally relevant for their region.

Q And that's because people all over the world use Google to search for health information?

A Yes, that's correct.

Q Okay.

And was it -- well, let me ask it differently.

What's your understanding of why you had to spend so much of your time working on COVID-19 and what Google's interest was in providing information about COVID-19 to people around the world?

A My understanding of why the vast majority of my role centered on COVID-19 was because I was working on health product partnerships prior to the pandemic, and COVID-19 was the most important and relevant health topic at the time.

Q And why was it important to Google to make structured experiences like with vaccine appointments or something like that to -- for its users? Why was it important for Google to have its users have easily accessible information about COVID-19 and ways that they could protect themselves from it?

A My understanding is that Google is looking to help organize information and serve users, and users wanted to know the most accurate, relevant, and up-to-date information about COVID-19.

Q Okay. Thank you very much.

[redacted] And I think that might be it for now. Just give me one moment. Yep, good for now?

[redacted] Yeah, that was good.

[redacted] For now that is it. So up to you guys if you want to take a break or go right into the next hour.

Mr. Bopp. Do you want to stretch for a minute, or do you want to just go right in?

[redacted]. We can stretch for a minute.

Mr. Bopp. Let's just take one minute while you guys switch sides here.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

This is exhibit 5.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Bopp. We're ready.

[redacted] Great.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this document?

A I do recognize this document from the prep.

Q Okay. And what is it?

A It's an email from Sheila Walsh.

Q And who is Sheila Walsh?

A I believe she was with the HHS.

Q Okay.

If I can call your attention to the first sentence of Sheila's email, it says: We are glad to hear that the box below has been moved up higher on search result pages. And she includes a screenshot, and, admittedly, an incomplete screenshot of the whole page.

In the -- with the questions with the minority, you were discussing the differences between the blue links and then, you know, what is presented above, sometimes to the right, sometimes to the above. Is it your understanding that here Sheila is referring to that ladder category?

Mr. Bopp. You mean when she says -- refers to the box below? You're asking if that's the boxes of a structured product?

[redacted] Yes.

[redacted]. This box in particular, the getting the vaccine, with the statement and register at vaccines.gov link, that is a structured experience.

BY [redacted]

Q Okay. And --

A Or part of a structured experience. There are many different components to structured experiences, and they display dynamically depending on your query.

Q And was your team responsible for deciding what the layout of this structured experience would be?

A Could you clarify what you mean by the layout?

Q Sure. So we -- the exhibit introduced by the minority involved an actor, and movies were displayed. Yours was in health products. You verbally described examples where there's -- that symptoms are identified for different diseases.

In terms of just the visual layout when you pull up -- you run a search, whether something comes up on the top or the right, which team at Google is responsible for determining how that layout will appear?

A So my understanding is that the actual display is dynamic, and depending on your query, different components of the structured experience may surface above or below. So, if you search for, let's say, "getting the vaccine," specifically, you might see this part of the structured experience first, followed by other COVID-19-related information.

Q Okay. And which team is responsible for implementing these structured experiences?

A The product teams, the UX design teams actually create the layout or, you know, user interface is what we call it. And then the engineering teams actually implement the code on the back end and launch it. There are a number of different teams that are involved.

And then, again, the entire page is dynamic. So it may look different if you're looking at it on mobile versus desktop, if you query, you know, the same type of phrase but with different words. So it really depends.

Q Okay. But, as far as, understanding that there are teams that are responsible for the coding, technical aspects, as at least is relevant to this request here, which team would be responsible for deciding where, take this for example, this box would appear in the structured experience?

A Again, it really is dynamic. So the appearance will vary depending on the query, but if you're asking, you know, which team works on what this specific experience or component looks like, that would be the teams that I mentioned, the product, UX design, and other teams.

Q Okay. Again, not to beat a dead horse, but where it appears, it seemed that Sheila ran a search. The box appeared somewhere. She ran a search again later. Appears to be happier now that it's in a different location. Is that just because there was different dynamics involved that happened to pop up later, or is there an element to the layout of a box is more frequently likely to come up for these searches?

A So I'm not sure why Sheila says that the box moved up higher or if that's true or not. The positioning of this specific component could have varied depending on factors like if she was looking at it on mobile one day, desktop another day, if she queried differently, like if slightly different words. So I'm not sure how the initial search was done and if it actually changed at all.

Q Do you recall receiving similar requests from other personnel at the government related to how the structured experience was displaying? We'll say with respect to COVID-19.

A Similar -- would you mind rephrasing the question?

Q Sure.

So there was an exhibit that was introduced in the previous round of questioning regarding organic search results and the order they came up in, and there was a response provided by you saying we don't adjust organic search results.

Setting that category of requests aside, do you recall receiving requests how the structured experience appeared to users?

A I don't recall specific examples of requests to change the layout of a structured experience. My interaction with partners generally was more about the data or content.

So, in this example, you know, just like with any other partner, we'd want to make sure, because we are attributing to them or linking out to their websites, that the information we're showing is accurate and reflects what is available online. So, if the guidance changed, then we'd want to reflect the most current guidance in the product.

Q In the previous round of questioning, there was a discussion about the algorithm. Do you know -- let me take one step back.

Can you state again which team is responsible for handling the algorithm that determines how organic search results appear?

A I'm not entirely sure which team is responsible for the search algorithm or if it's even one team or multiple teams. I can say there is a search ranking team, but I'm not sure exactly if they are fully responsible for the search algorithm.

Q But you never worked on that team. Is that right?

A That's correct, yes.

Q And you never interacted with another team that may have worked on search results?

A That may have worked on search results?

Q Let me clarify that question.

You're aware of at least one team that has at least some responsibility for determining how search results appear. You said there may be other teams. To the extent there are other teams, you did not work with those other teams on how search results appear?

A Are you referring to the 10 blue links? Are you referring to structured experience?

Q Referring to blue links.

A Sure. So my role did not include work on the algorithmically sourced organic search results. My scope was around the structured health search experiences.

Q And understanding that, and you did not have any interactions that were outside -- did you have any interactions that were outside the stated scope and responsibilities of your team and your team's role regarding how organic search links appear?

A I don't recall working with other teams on nonstructured experiences.

Q Do you know if Google has changed the algorithm that determines how search results appear?

A I'm not a software engineer or a ranking expert. So I couldn't say what goes into it or if it's changed or not.

Q Okay.

[redacted] We can take these exhibits back. Thank you.

This will be exhibit 6.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this document?

A I may have seen this as part of prep.

Q Do you know what it is?

A I don't recall exactly what this email or invite is about.

Q Do you know what the acronym BOLO refers to? It's in the subject line.

A According to Carol's email, it's "be on the lookout."

Q And do you recall attending meetings, these be-on-the-lookout meetings with the CDC?

A I do not recall attending be on the lookout meetings.

Q Okay. Do you know if anyone at Google attended be on the lookout meetings with the CDC?

A I don't know if anyone from Google attended.

[redacted] Who might know that?

[redacted]. I'm not sure who would know.

BY [redacted]

Q If we can call your attention to the "to" line, there, in addition to an email from Carol Crawford and CDC, there are email addresses with the census.gov domain. During your time at Google, did you work with the Census?

A I don't recall working with the Census.

Q Do you recognize any of the names in the "to" line for this meeting invite?

A I only recognize my own name.

Q Do you know whether the Census and the CDC were working together on any issues?

A I'm not sure if the CDC or Census worked together.

Q There's an email address with a Twitter domain. Do you recall attending meetings that were attended by other tech companies? Let me clarify. Do you recall attending meetings with the government that were also attended by other tech companies?

A I recall Microsoft being on a call about vaccine appointment availability.

Q Do you recall who from Microsoft that was?

A I don't recall the person's name.

Q Did you have counterparts at the other tech companies as part of your role?

A We didn't rely on other tech companies much in my experience for COVID-19. So I may have been on email threads like this with other tech companies, but I don't recall working directly with other tech companies outside of the vaccine appointment effort that I mentioned before.

Q Okay.

Did you attend any be-on-the-lookout meetings with any other government agencies?

A I don't recall attending be-on-the-lookout meetings.

Q Was that a term you were familiar with before prepping today?

A No, not that I recall.

[redacted] We can take these back.

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recognize this email chain -- actually, we're on it. So let me rephrase that question.

Do you recall attending a meeting in February of 2021, with personnel from the Census Bureau?

A I do not recall attending a meeting with the Census.

Q Do you recall being asked by someone at Google to attend a meeting with the Census Bureau?

A I do not recall being asked.

Q In your coordination role in interacting with different government agencies, do you recall any of these interactions that had personnel from the Census Bureau either on meetings or making communications to you directly?

A I do not recall being on threads with the Census specifically. As part of the coordination role, I was cc'd on a number of emails with different government agencies, along with [redacted]. So this may have been one that she participated in or drove. I'm not sure who sent the emails, but it's a google.com email address.

Q Okay.

[redacted] We can take these exhibits back.

This is exhibit 8.

[[redacted] Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]

Q Do you recall this email exchange -- meeting invite? Sorry.

A I do not recall this specific email exchange or meeting invite.

Q Do you recall being on meetings with personnel from HHS?

A Yes, I do.

Q And how frequently did those meetings occur?

A It varied. At one point, I believe we had a biweekly, and then I stopped joining those at some point, and I'm not sure if they continued regularly.

Q Do you know who from Google attended after you stopped attending?

A [redacted] and I joined most meetings together, and she may have, but I'm not sure.

Q If I can call your attention to -- this will be the second page. 464 is the bates number.

A Okay.

Q At the bottom, there's a message from [redacted] She says: Hi team.

And then it says she won't be able to attend the meeting, can you please send out meeting minutes.

Do you recall if there were meeting minutes that were circulated after these meetings with HHS?

A I don't recall if there were meeting minutes for this meeting.

Q And, just as a point of clarification, not for semantics, you don't recall one way or another, not that you recall there not being meeting minutes?

A I don't recall if there were meetings -- meeting minutes.

[redacted] Okay. We can take these exhibits back.

BY [redacted]

Q So we discussed that you served a coordinating function, among other roles, and there would be times where there was a request or an issue that was outside your team's responsibility, and you would, in one way or another, communicate that to someone else within Alphabet.

When that was the situation, when there was an issue that was outside your team's request, were there instances where you would directly connect the appropriate individual at Alphabet with the government personnel who had made the request?

A So, just to clarify, it was a two-way communication. So, at times, it might be initiated by a Google team, or it might be initiated by a partner, government or nongovernment. I can say that there were times when I would directly introduce a partner to the right team internally. So, yes, sometimes.

Q Do you recall which nongovernmental partners you worked with during your time with the Product Partnerships Team?

A We worked with a number of different nongovernment partners depending on the product.

Q Just as a class of entities? Do you recall what types of nongovernmental entities you were in communications with?

A It varied from nonprofit to companies.

Q Would it include universities?

A Yes, at times.

Q Did you have any interactions -- actually, strike that.

Are you familiar with something called the Virality Project?

A I'm not familiar with the Virality Project.

Q Did you have interactions with Stanford University?

A I don't recall specific examples of interaction with Stanford.

Q Do you recall interactions with the University of Washington?

A I don't recall interactions with the University of Washington.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 12:22 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	[redacted]
Date of Interview	6/1/2023
Date of Review	7/19/2023
Name of Reviewer	Theodore Kristek
Signature of Reviewer	Ted Kristek

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
32	3	"[redacted]" should become "[redacted]"

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	Vice President, CapitalG
Date of Interview	June 1, 2023
Date of Review	December 16, 2024
Name of Reviewer	Daniel Donovan
Signature of Reviewer

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
14	21	“then we would then pass along” should be “then we would pass along”
16	4	“my role the entire time in the role” should be “my responsibilities the entire time in the role”
18	25	“how you could” should be “how Google could”
18	25	“that content and then” should be “that content, and then”
21	9	“Walgreen’s” should be “Walgreens”
21	9	“Kroger’s” should be “Kroger”

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

25	16	“followup” should be “follow-up”
32	3	“have” should be “help”
33	5	“health search” should be “Health Search”
Page	Line	Suggested Correction
38	18	“and respect” should be “and with respect”
39	4	“health search” should be “Health Search”
47	6	“health search” should be “Health Search”
48	20	“CDC or Census” should “CDC and Census”

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: JENNIFER LEIGH MOORE

Friday, June 2, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:05 a.m.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] SENIOR ADVISOR

[redacted] SENIOR ADVISOR

[redacted] COUNSEL

[redacted] CHIEF COUNSEL FOR OVERSIGHT

[redacted] SENIOR PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

[redacted] CLERK

[redacted] MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY INTERN

[redacted] MINORITY OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted] MINORITY INTERN

[redacted] MINORITY STAFF ASSISTANT

[redacted] MINORITY OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

For the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION:

TASHA V. GIBBS, ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL,

OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

MEGAN L. GREER, ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL,

OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of Ms. Jennifer Leigh Moore of the FBI.

Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Ms. Moore. I'm Jennifer Moore.

[redacted] And you're here with agency counsel today.

Would the agency lawyers identify themselves?

Ms. Greer. Megan Greer from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

Ms. Gibbs. Tasha Gibbs, FBI's Office of General Counsel.

[redacted] And, Ms. Moore, you understand that agency counsel has a primary fiduciary duty to the agency, to the Bureau, and not to you individually?

Ms. Moore. I do.

[redacted] But, yet, you'd like to continue with agency counsel?

Ms. Moore. Correct.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here again today to answer all our questions. The chairman appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted]. I'm with Mr. Jordan's House Judiciary Committee staff.

I'll now have the staffers that are here in the room identify themselves.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], oversight counsel for the Judiciary Committee Democrats.

[redacted] [redacted], chief oversight counsel, House Judiciary Committee Democrat staff.

[redacted] I'm [redacted], House Judiciary Democrats.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], law clerk for Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] I'll go through the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour. Then the minority will have an opportunity to also ask questions for an hour. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

We'll do our best to go as quickly as we can. We understand that you and your agency counsel would much rather not be here, much rather be back at work or performing your duties.

Typically we'll take a break at the end of each hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, please let us know. As you can see, there is an official House reporter taking down everything we say to make the written record. So we'll try not to talk over one another.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we'll take our time. If you have any questions or don't understand one of our questions, please let us know.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else.

You also understand that, by law, you're required to answer questions before Congress truthfully?

Ms. Moore. Yes.

[redacted] And that applies to interviews with congressional staffers as well?

Ms. Moore. Yes.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for false statements under 18 United States Code 1001.

Do you understand that?

Ms. Moore. Yes.

[redacted] I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss today is confidential. Some of the information we're discussing were brought forward from whistleblowers who had the courage to come to the committee. And, while fair-minded people might disagree about the content of the whistleblower disclosures and what it means, we ought to all support the right of whistleblowers to come to Congress. And, consequently, we ask that this information today is kept confidential.

Along the same lines, the marked exhibits that we use today will remain with the court reporter so they can go in the official transcript. And we'll collect any copies to maintain the integrity of our work.

That's the end of my preamble.

[redacted], do you have anything?

[redacted] No. We just thank the witness for coming in again and --

Ms. Moore. Thank you.

[redacted] -- taking time out of your schedule to join us today.

[redacted] I'll turn it over to my colleague, [redacted].

[redacted] It's 10:09. We'll start our first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, thank you for being here again today.

At the time of your transcribed interview on April 24th, you were the Executive Assistant Director of the Human Resources Branch. Is that still your title?

A It is.

Q And do you continue to work out of headquarters?

A I do.

Q Do you have plans to retire?

A I do.

Q And what date is your retirement date?

A June 3rd.

Q June 3rd. Is today your last day with the FBI?

A Tomorrow will be my last day with the FBI.

Q Was this a planned retirement?

A It was.

Q And how far in advance had the retirement been planned?

A You want to specify your question?

Q Yeah. Had it been a series of months that you had planned to retire, or when did you put in your paperwork for retirement?

A I was eligible to retire on my 50th birthday, which was 2.5 years ago.

Q Uh-huh. And so you had been planning 2.5 years ago to retire?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. And, during your transcribed interview, you testified that you have participated in reviews of your performance. Is that correct?

A I have.

Q And you've generally received good markings?

A I have.

Q Have you ever been the subject of an EEO complaint?

A I have.

Q And what was the resolution of that complaint?

A I have been the named official in EEOs as I represent, much like I'm here today before the committee, because I'm the signing official for the Bureau.

Q Have you ever been the subject of an EEO complaint? Has someone filed an EEO complaint against you?

A I have.

Q And what was the resolution of that complaint?

A Because of my duties, again -- can I talk to agency counsel?

[redacted] Yeah.

[redacted] Go off the record.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

Ms. Moore. Do you want to repeat the question?

BY [redacted]

Q Have you ever been the subject of an EEO complaint?

A I have.

Q Okay. And what was the content of that complaint?

A I've been the subject of many because of my official duties, and, with supervisory responsibility, I'm always the named official. I've had no findings of misconduct against me.

Q And the committee has received information from a whistleblower that you were the subject of an EEO complaint that they filed against you in 2016 that resulted in a cash settlement. Is that accurate?

A I wouldn't know about the government's cash settlement with someone. There was no finding against me. At times, the government will choose perhaps to settle because it's just less expensive than going through legal.

Q And what was the misconduct alleged in that complaint?

A I would need to know specifically what you're asking about. Again, I've had multiple EEOs filed due to the positions that I've held.

Q The one that was in 2016. Did you have multiple filed against you in 2016?

A I'll need you to tell me what the details were. I'm sorry.

Q Yeah. It's a whistleblower representation to us, so they said that they filed an EEO complaint against you that resulted in a cash settlement. Any awareness of that?

Ms. Moore. I don't know what --

Ms. Gibbs. If you don't remember, then --

Ms. Greer. Then don't.

Ms. Gibbs. Yeah.

Ms. Greer. Then don't.

Ms. Gibbs. If you don't remember, then you don't --

Ms. Moore. Can you give me any specificity around that?

[redacted] We can go back to that subject.

BY [redacted]:

Q But, during your transcribed interview, you described how the security clearance adjudicative process was a two-step or a three-step process -- excuse me -- is that correct?

A It's an intake, an investigation, and adjudication, yes, ma'am.

Q And you testified that the allegation comes into the intake unit, step No. 1; there is an investigative stage, step No. 2; and then there is an adjudicative stage, step No. 3. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And you said that sometimes the allegation can go directly from the intake unit to the adjudicative stage; it can sometimes bypass the investigative stage. Is that correct?

A It can, yes, ma'am.

Q And, during your transcribed interview, you described how the initial unit makes the decision whether security allegations meet the parameters for the investigative stage. Is that accurate?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And who is on that intake unit?

A It has analysts, agents, and security specialists.

Q And who leads the intake unit?

A It has a unit chief over it.

Q And who is the unit chief over that?

A I don't know the unit chief's name.

Q How often do you interact with that unit chief at the intake unit?

A Never.

Q Never? Okay.

A If I do, it would be rarely ever. I, like -- I can't think of the last time I have.

Q And you described the parameters that the intake unit uses to determine whether to go to the investigative stage is the adjudicative guidelines. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And who is the ultimate decisionmaker when it comes to suspending a security clearance?

A That rests with the security program manager, and I currently hold that position.

Q When deciding to suspend a security clearance, do you as the security program manager involve the employee's direct supervisor?

A Ask that again.

Q When --

A When I'm making a decision, do I involve the employee's direct supervisor as -- could you clarify what you're asking?

Q Correct. So you just stated that you're the ultimate decisionmaker for whether or not to suspend a security clearance. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q When you are making that decision, do you involve the individuals whose clearance will be suspended -- do you involve their direct supervisor?

A No.

Q Does the employee have a right to appeal the suspension decision?

A No.

Q When does the employee have a right to appeal any sort of decision that you have made?

A After a revocation decision is made.

Q And can you describe that revocation -- after the revocation decision, what the appeal process is like?

A The individual has the ability then to receive the investigative file and to file an appeal for reconsideration of the revocation.

Q And who decides that appeal?

A The revocation reconsideration initially comes in, again, to the security program manager.

Q Uh-huh.

A After that, they can appeal to the ARC.

Q And what's the ARC?

A That is a panel of judges that make, or attorneys that make a decision that's located within the Department of Justice.

Q And what unit is the ARC in? Like, where did the attorneys come from for the ARC?

A I'm sorry. I don't know that answer.

Q Okay. So, once a employee's security clearance is suspended, the employee can no longer fulfill their duties as an FBI employee. Is that correct?

A Clearance is required to be an FBI employee, because our facilities are considered a legal minimum secret.

Q So, after security clearance is suspended, the employee is then indefinitely suspended without pay. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You testified at your transcribed interview that, once you signed the security clearance suspension letter, it is given promptly to the employee. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And you testified that you did not have any knowledge of who actually delivers those letters to the employee.

A I do not.

Q Is that correct?

A No, ma'am.

Q What is the average time for a security clearance investigation to determine whether or not an individual's clearance should be revoked?

A It does range. The average can be anywhere from 30 days to 1,300 days roughly.

Q Does the FBI have any data on the average amount of days that it takes to do a security clearance --

A We do, yes, ma'am.

Q -- investigation?

And what's that? What's that number? What's the average?

A I gave you the ranges it can be. We can provide you the average if you would like that. I don't know the number off the top of my head.

Q Yeah. We would like that. Thank you.

What's the average time for an investigation to determine whether or not to suspend a security clearance?

A Those are roughly the same. I can get you the exact number. I don't know the exact number, again, off my head to give you an exact number.

Q And, once the Security Division has revoked an employee's security clearance, what happens for the employee?

A Once they revoke the clearance, then they have the right to appeal.

Q Uh-huh. And is the employee still indefinitely suspended at that point?

A Once they're revoked?

Q The security clearance is revoked.

A Well, they cannot work for the Bureau if they do not have a security clearance, so they would eventually be removed from the rolls of the FBI.

Q And what's that process entail?

A To remove them from the rolls of the FBI?

Q Uh-huh. Is there an -- is there another investigation that's done after the revocation of the security clearance --

A No, ma'am.

Q -- or is the individual just terminated from the FBI?

A There is not an additional investigation.

Q Okay. So is the individual then just terminated from the FBI?

A Then an HR action is required to remove them, yes, ma'am.

Q And what is the HR action that is required to remove the employee?

A I don't know what the name of the HR action is. I know that, once a revocation occurs and the individual no longer has a clearance, they cannot longer -- they can no longer be an FBI employee. So then they are removed from the rolls of the FBI. I'm not sure exactly what that process is called. I'm sorry.

Q And is that process housed within the Human Resources Branch?

A It is.

Q Is there an individual who is responsible for that process?

A There would probably be a multiple of two individuals. That would probably -- that's at a different level. I'm sorry. I'm -- I'm not able to tell you who those individuals are. A notification goes from Security Division to Human Resources Division, and then the outprocessing of that paperwork occurs.

Q And those divisions are both within the Human Resources Branch -- is that correct --

A Yes.

Q -- that you oversee?

A I do.

Q Okay. And so you have no idea what kind of process the Human Resources Branch conducts to do the -- or the Human Resources Division conducts to terminate the employee?

A I think I need you to be more specific. I'm not exactly sure what you're asking me. Like, am I aware that it occurs? Yes.

Q Uh-huh.

A If you're asking me what form it happens, who exactly executes it and what that happens, I can't tell you exactly how that happens, no, ma'am. It comes out of our Performance Appraisal Unit, but beyond that; I'm sorry.

Q And who would know what that process is like?

A Well, the Assistant Director of Human Resources could speak probably more indepth to it.

Q And who is the Assistant Director?

A Michael Schneider.

Q Okay. And how often do you interact with Michael Schneider?

A On a daily basis.

Q Do you two discuss the termination of employees?

A Not usually -- no. It's usually already happened, and so those --

Q Uh-huh.

A Those mechanisms are happening below that. No, ma'am.

Q At what point does the FBI provide the employee whose security clearance has been revoked with the materials that the Security Division relied upon to make the revocation decision?

A After the revocation decision is made and they ask to appeal that decision.

Q So, after the employee asks to appeal the decision, then they can get the materials?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q At what point is the individual who's the subject of a security clearance revocation interviewed by the FBI?

A Generally, it occurs between suspension and revocation.

Q Uh-huh.

A Sometimes they'll not be interviewed if they just determine that the interview is not necessary due to the egregiousness of the behavior.

Q And can you give us an example of when an interview wouldn't be necessary because of egregious behavior?

A If an individual was arrested for child pornography or assaulting a child and they enter a guilty plea, we generally don't have a need to interview that employee.

Q And would that be one of the cases where it would go directly from the intake unit to the adjudicative process?

A It could.

Q Is that correct?

A It could.

[redacted] I'd like to offer as exhibit No. 1 a May 17th, 2022 -- excuse me -- 2023, letter from Mr. Christopher Dunham to the committee.

[Moore Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q I'll give you a moment to review this, ma'am.

Are you good?

A I'm familiar with the document.

Q Oh, okay. Ms. Moore, have you seen this letter before?

A I have.

Q And who wrote the letter?

A Chris Dunham.

Q Did the Human Resources Branch play any role in drafting the letter?

A We provided information on the statistical documents at the beginning.

Q And who from your team was involved in preparing the statistical information?

A This would have been the Security Division.

Q Okay. And who leads the Security Division?

A Douglas Beidler.

Q And do you know if Mr. Beidler was involved directly in getting the information prepared for Mr. Dunham?

A I would imagine that tasking for the information would have gone into Mr. Beidler's office, and then it would have come out of his office down to the team to ask them to gather the information.

Q And, besides the statistical data in the letter, did the Human Resources Branch provide any information on the security clearance revocations mentioned in the letter?

A Yes. They would have been the authors of those.

Q The Security Division was the author of those?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Did you have any role in preparing the letter?

A I did not.

Q Did you review the letter prior to its transmittal to Congress?

A I got it about, I believe, the same time it was transmitted.

Q Did -- do you know if anyone from the Security Division was able to review the letter before it was transmitted to Congress?

A I believe the general counsel assigned to the Security Division would have reviewed the letter before it was transmitted to Congress.

Q And who is the general counsel assigned to the Security Division?

A Tasha Gibbs.

Q And do you know whose idea it was to send the May 17th letter?

A I do not.

Q How often do you interact with Mr. Dunham?

A I don't interact with him on a daily basis. I see him in our morning briefs.

Q Uh-huh.

A But I don't necessarily speak to him on a daily basis.

[redacted] Let me just ask one.

BY [redacted]:

Q You said Mr. Dunham wrote this letter?

A Mr. Dunham is the signature on it.

Q He signed it, right? Who wrote it? Who drafted it?

A I'm not 100 percent sure who drafted it.

Q Okay.

A I believe that the general counsel for Security Division helped draft it for sure.

Q Okay.

A It would make sense.

BY [redacted]:

Q And are you aware that this May 17th letter was sent in response to your deposition subpoena?

A I am.

Q And so you had no role in preparing this letter in response to the subpoena you received?

A No, ma'am.

Q Do you know when the letter was finalized?

A I don't know when that letter was finalized.

Q And, to go through some of the specifics in the letter, on page 2 of the letter, the first draft there, the FBI provided information detailing the number of referrals for security incidents and security investigations.

Can you explain the steady rise in referrals? What have you been seeing?

A The steady rise in referrals? It's actually going down.

Q But, for fiscal year 2023 -- we're not done with fiscal year 2023, correct?

A Correct.

Q So --

A The rise is people become -- as we become more -- the Security Division has -- and I'm trying to think what year they started it -- probably about 2019 --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- 2018 -- really emphasizing operation securities throughout the organization. We do monthly newsletters, and they have posters that go up throughout the office, and people better understand the process. People were more likely to report. It's across the board. We see it, I believe, also in our internal investigation referrals.

Q Has there been an increased focus on encouraging third-party reports or employees to report information on other employees to the Security Division?

A It's an operational security campaign. It's anybody can report anything that's of concern.

Q And what's involved in the operational security campaign? Are, like, emails sent out?

A Just like I said. We send out, like, newsletters, emails, and they have posters that go up. The security officers in the different field offices may have different emphasis.

Q Uh-huh. And then I want to direct you to the footnote on page 2 there. It says: The Security Division receives referrals from different sources, including employee self-reports, third-party reports, other FBI divisions, and other government agencies.

Do you have a breakdown of how many of the referrals came from each of those sources? Does the FBI track that?

A I don't.

Q Do you know if the FBI tracks that at all?

A I -- we don't track it as something that's ever been reported to me in that capacity. I'm not sure that we have the ability to tag that in our systems.

Q Uh-huh.

A If that's something you're looking for, again, we'd have to get you that information.

Q And you said that the Security Division pulled this information for inclusion in the letter?

A That would be where that would come from, correct.

Q And how is this statistical information normally collected and memorialized in the FBI system?

A It would be in the database for intake.

Q Uh-huh. So the intake unit is in charge of memorializing this information?

A So memorializing it, I'm -- when you asked for it, we had them pull it.

Q Uh-huh.

A I won't say that we've been memorializing it on an annual basis before that.

Q But is it --

A I'm just not sure. So I'm not sure about that answer.

Q Is it kept and maintained on FBI's systems from year to year?

A It would be, yes.

Q Okay. Then the third graph on page 2 there, the FBI detailed the number of cases the Security Division has opened since 2020. Can you explain the difference between their -- the chart about cases opened on page 2 and then, on page 3, the total number of active security clearance investigations?

The numbers differ there. Is there, like, an -- does the active number carryover from year to year?

A It can, absolutely.

Q And do you know about how many cases carry over from the previous year?

A I don't.

Q And so, on page 4 of the letter, the chart at the top of the page details the number of suspensions and revocations by the Security Division since 2020.

If an individual is going to have their security clearance revoked, does it first have to be suspended, or can it just be revoked automatically?

A It could go to revocation. I'm not sure I've seen any of those since I've been -- as the security program manager, I could be wrong, but I don't recall any. It could.

Q Uh-huh. And so, on the graph, the security clearance suspensions are lower than the security clearance revocations. What accounts for that difference?

A That's the carryover. So there was a -- at one point, the concept was, if the person retired or resigned from service with the FBI, they just put the investigation in abeyance. So it's set to the side.

An obligation to the Intelligence Community and C4, we're obligated to follow those investigations to conclusion. So, when I came back in, we had discovered that this was not what was occurring, and so they had to go back and open up cases that were not fully adjudicated and complete those investigations. So they're carrying quite a lot of load that they're still trying to clear.

Q And, of the 17 security clearances that were suspended in fiscal year 2020, are any of those still awaiting resolution, final adjudication?

A I don't know that information as we sit here. I'm sorry.

Q What about the 26 security clearances from fiscal year 2021? Are any of those still awaiting adjudication?

A I won't be able to answer that. I don't know.

Q For fiscal year 2022, of the 45 security clearances that were suspended, are any of those individuals still awaiting adjudication?

A I don't know specifically the number. I would believe that, since we're still early in '23, it's possible, yes. But I don't know that number.

Q And I believe you said the average length of an investigation for revocation was anywhere between 30 days and 1,300 days. Is that correct?

A It could be anywhere in there. I don't know those numbers specifically. I know that's a range of it.

Q Uh-huh. And, in between 2021 and 2022, there was 20 more revocations. What accounts for the increase in revocations of security clearances?

A We talked a lot of time that, when we came in, we bifurcated or trifurcated our investigative group into three difference parts, and we increased the staffing in there. And that allowed them to have a faster throughput.

Q A faster throughput, meaning revocation investigations happen quicker?

A Meaning that the suspension investigations would happen quicker, correctly.

Q And, just below the graph there, it talks about the COVID-19 vaccination requirements and the reasonable accommodation requests.

The FBI stated that it received 2,878 reasonable accommodation requests, and the FBI issued 104 decisions.

What was the process for determining making final decisions on the reasonable accommodation requests?

A The office -- OEOA would make a recommendation and send it over to the Human Resources Division. It was then reviewed in Human Resources Division, and a decision was made by the -- I believe the Deputy Assistant Director.

Q And who was in charge of the review process within the Human Resources Division?

A Ultimately, it would be the Assistant Director of Human Resources who is in charge of it and responsible party. Who the actual individual that would have done it would have fallen under a section chief and a Deputy Assistant Director.

Q And do you know why there are only 104 decisions issued?

A I believe it is because an injunction occurred.

Q And did you have any involvement in the reasonable accommodation request process?

A I did not sign those, no, ma'am.

Q Who signed the decisions?

A Again, those were made, I believe, at the Deputy Assistant Director level. There may have been a section chief.

Q Were any employees suspended without pay for not complying with executive order 1000, or one thousand -- 4043?

A Which executive order is that?

Q It's the executive order mandating the COVID vaccine.

A Were any -- yes.

Q Individuals were suspended without pay for not complying with that executive order?

A I believe they were put on absent without leave was the direction at the time.

Q And so, once the injunction occurred, were those individuals restored to their normal duties?

A They should have been.

Q Do you know for certain?

A I wouldn't be able to testify to every single one of them, but that would have been the direction if the executive order went to an injunction.

Q And do you know how many employees were put on AWOL status?

A I do not.

Q Do you know if any personnel actions were taken against them because they were on AWOL status?

A Not specifically because of the COVID-19 vaccination, no, ma'am.

Q Were actions taken against individuals who were on AWOL status for the COVID-19 vaccine -- if they had personnel actions taken against them, what were the cause of those personnel actions if it wasn't the vaccine?

A I know that we had one individual who did not come back to work after the injunction occurred, so they had been on AWOL. And then, when they didn't come back to work and they were asked to come back to work, they continued to be on AWOL. And, after a certain number of days of AWOL, the individual can be removed from the rolls.

I know we had one of those.

Q Okay. Have you ever spoken to a journalist?

A Me?

Q Yes.

A Yeah.

Q When have you spoken with a journalist?

A In conjunction with my official duties.

Q Let's start, yes, there. In connection with your official duties, what have you spoken to reporters about?

A Bank robberies, kidnappings, criminal conduct, that type of thing.

Q Have you ever given any personal information regarding an FBI employee to a journalist?

A Never.

Q Shortly after the letter was transmitted to the committee on May 17th, The New York Times and The Washington Post had stories written and published the full text of the letter. You know, the committee majority didn't give it to the press. Are you aware of whether someone at the FBI gave it to the press?

A To my knowledge, no one at the FBI did that.

Q To your knowledge, who else had access to the letter?

A Our Office of General Counsel.

Q And so, to your awareness, it wasn't the FBI who gave it to the press?

A To my knowledge, it was not the FBI that provided that information.

Q And, during your transcribed interview on April 24th, you testified that you were familiar with Mr. Marcus Allen, knew of his combat veteran status, and knew that he was currently suspended. Is that correct?

A Will you repeat the question? I'm sorry.

Q During your transcribed interview, you testified that you were familiar with Marcus Allen, knew of his combat veteran status, and knew that he was currently suspended. Is that accurate?

A Yes.

Q And, according to representations made by Mr. Allen's attorney to the FBI, Mr. Allen has consistently been rated as exceeding expectations during his tenure at the FBI. Is that -- does that match your recollection?

A I don't know that for a fact.

Q According to Mr. Allen's attorney, he also has received annual step increases on the GS pay scale and several awards, including Employee of the Year in 2019 at the Charlotte Field Office. Were you aware of that?

A I know that he was nominated for or received the award for 2019 Employee of the Year at the Charlotte Field Office. I'm not sure about the rest.

Q And, during your transcribed interview, you confirmed that you were aware that you signed the January 10th, 2022, letter suspending Mr. Allen's security clearance. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q Between April 24th and today, have you had time to examine the documents particular to Mr. Allen's case?

A I have looked at the suspension letters and the revocation letter, yes.

Q And, during your transcribed interview, you refused to answer questions regarding Mr. Allen's suspension because it was an ongoing investigation. Is that correct?

A I did, yes, ma'am.

Q What investigative work occurred between April 24th and May 3rd, when his clearance was revoked?

A The finish of the adjudicative process occurred.

Q And can you describe the finish of the adjudicative process?

A The adjudicative EC would have been finished making a recommendation for reinstatement of clearance, a letter for suspension, or revocation of the clearance.

Q And what's involved with finishing the EC for the revocation?

A Taking the facts and putting it into a summarized document.

Q And so I want particulars here. So what happened between April 24th and May 3rd? What investigative steps --

A An individual -- an individual finished the revocation document by finishing documenting the investigation, the facts of the investigation, and summarizing a recommendation.

Q So --

BY [redacted]:

Q Which individual?

A I don't know the individual's name.

Q Does the individual work for you?

A There would be a -- there would be a supervisory special agent, yes.

Q All right. And who is that?

A I don't know the specific individual on this case. If you would like the specific individual on the case -- and I'm sorry. I didn't know you --

Q So we had you come back to talk about -- and we gave you a couple names, right? So we're not talking about thousands of matters you worked on. Mr. Allen's is one of them. We gave you a couple other -- Mr. Friend's, Mr. O'Boyle -- and you're telling us you don't know who worked on the revocation of Mr. Allen's --

A On the specific investigator, no, sir, I'm sorry, I don't remember it.

Q And this person works for you?

A Yes, sir, as do almost --

Q And you don't know the name?

A I have almost 2,000 employees --

Q Okay.

A -- that work for me in the HRB branch. I don't know all their names.

Q Okay.

A I did review the documents. I just can't tell you --

Q Okay.

A -- which investigator specifically did this one off the top of my head. I'm sorry.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you review the EC prior to the interview today?

A I did.

Q And how long was the EC? Was the summary bulky? Was there a lot of information included in the summary?

A It was multiple pages.

BY [redacted]:

Q How many pages?

A I don't know exactly how many pages it was.

Q Was it 5 pages, 10 pages, 20 pages, a hundred pages?

A I don't remember exactly how many pages it was. It was several pages.

Q Right. I'm just asking. Was it a hundred pages? Was it less than 50?

A It was less than 50.

Q Was it less than five?

A It was less than 50.

Q Was it less than five?

A I don't remember that.

Q Was it more than ten?

A I don't remember, sir.

Q Was it more than 20?

A I do not remember exactly --

Q When did you last see it?

A -- how many pages it was.

Yesterday.

Q Okay. So you can't tell us whether it was five pages or 20 pages?

A I read a lot of documents yesterday.

Q All right.

A So I'm sorry. I don't know the exact page numbers.

Q All right. And you don't know the name of the -- that the staffers that worked on this?

A Not the specific staffer on a specific case.

Q Do you know any staffer that worked on it?

A I know that the unit chief is Julie Halferty.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q And so all that occurred between April 24th and May 3rd, to your knowledge, is the EC was finished, the summary was compiled, and then the revocation letter was drafted. Is that correct?

A That would be correct.

Q What was your involvement in Mr. Allen's case?

A I am the security program manager, so I'm the final review that signs recommendation for the organization.

Q Uh-huh. Mr. Allen's case was included in the May 17th, 2023, letter to the committee. Is that correct?

A This letter that you're referring to here?

Q Yes, ma'am.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so we're going to talk about Mr. Allen for a bit. So we'll turn to his section of the letter, which is page 7.

BY [redacted]:

Q And, just to go back to this letter, so you're saying that you weren't responsible for sending this to The Washington Post, to The New York Times?

A Absolutely not.

Q And you don't believe anyone at the FBI was?

A I do not.

Q Okay. So the universe of people that had this letter would be the FBI -- did DOJ get a copy?

A I was told they did, yes, sir.

Q Okay. Do you think they leaked it to the press?

A I don't know, sir.

Q Okay. Did you -- when you saw the reports --

A What I can testify to here --

Q Let me ask questions.

Ms. Greer. Let the witness finish, please.

[redacted] Yeah, I don't think I had a question pending.

Ms. Moore. I wasn't finished answering my last question.

[redacted] All right.

Ms. Moore. What I can testify to is what I did in my actions and what I know. I know I did not leak that document in any capacity. I have no reason to believe that anyone at the FBI leaked that document in any capacity.

Beyond that, I have no information.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. Did you see it published in the newspapers?

A The document.

Q Did you see the public reports?

A I saw a public report, yes, sir.

Q Okay. Did it give you concern that the information was published in the newspaper?

A It surprised me.

Q Did you try to investigate whether anyone at the FBI was responsible for that?

A Did I personally?

Q Yes.

A No, sir.

Q Did you contact DOJ to see if they were responsible for it?

A No, sir. I don't have direct contact with DOJ.

Q Okay. Did you ask your -- anyone at your General Counsel's Office if they need to look into this leak?

A I asked specifically my General Counsel's Office did they send it, and I was assured absolutely not.

Q Okay. Do you know if the Inspections Division is doing an investigation of the leak?

A I don't know that answer. I'm sorry.

Q Okay. Well, if they were, they probably would contact you, certainly before your last day at work, right?

A Not necessarily, sir.

Q So the universe of recipients of this letter would be the Justice Department?

A I was told that it came to the -- the committee here --

Q Right.

A -- and the Justice Department got a copy of it.

Q Okay. So it went to the --

A And, beyond that, I have no control over the distribution.

Q So it went to Mr. Jordan, and then the minority as well?

A I don't know that it went to minority. I'm sorry. I just thought it came in to the committee. I'm sorry.

Does it say? I'm so sorry.

Q Yeah. The ranking member's copied here.

A Okay. So then I would believe that's who it went to. I'm sorry. I didn't -- I wasn't involved in that.

Q Okay. Do you know if it was sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee?

A I don't actually know who it was sent to. I know I was told that it was sent to the committee and that the Department of Justice got a copy.

Q Okay. So the universe of people that may have leaked this would be the FBI, DOJ, or the committee. Is that right?

A That's what I would relatively have to believe, yes, sir.

Q All right.

BY [redacted]:

Q So, on page 7 of the letter, it discusses Mr. Allen's case. Who drafted this section of the letter? You said it came from the Security Division, but who individually drafted this section?

A I do not know who individually drafted that section.

Q Would it have been the investigator responsible for Mr. Allen's case that you can't remember their name?

A I don't know who -- who drafted this section of this letter.

Q Do you know who was involved with putting together the information on the individuals discussed in the letter?

A Only the Office of General Counsel attorney was involved.

Q Okay. And who's the Office of General Counsel attorney that was involved?

A Tasha Gibbs.

Q Okay. Who approved the inclusion of Mr. Allen's section in the letter?

A I don't know who approved that.

Q Did you have any role in drafting or approving this section of the letter?

A I did not.

Q Did you have any conversations with the Office of Congressional Affairs regarding Mr. Allen's case prior to the letter's transmittal?

A Absolutely. We discussed it because, at one point, I was preparing to come to testify, and I was counseled. So we have many different discussions about Mr. Allen.

Q And what did you discuss about Mr. Allen?

A The facts surrounding his case --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- what questions we thought I might be asked in preparation since we didn't receive a list of topics.

Q Uh-huh.

A That type of thing.

Q This was prior to your April 24th transcribed interview?

A No. We would -- we do what is called prep, where we go back through, because I see a lot of documents in the course of my duties, and so we try to determine what I'm going to be asked about and what that logically would be.

Q And this occurred prior to your April 24th transcribed interview, or was this before the interview today?

A This document didn't exist before April 24th, I don't believe, dated May 17th.

Q Uh-huh.

A And so I remember I was supposed to come before the 18th. You all ordered me to appear, but I was out of town.

Q Yep.

A So we would have prepped before that, so we would have had those same similar discussions.

Q Yeah. I'm just trying to understand the world of discussions that you had with the Office of Congressional Affairs, because you said you discussed a lot about Mr. Allen's case, so I wanted to know, did you discuss it with the Office of Congressional Affairs prior to your April 24th transcribed interview?

A Let me recite. I discussed it with the attorney from the Office of --

Q Okay.

A -- public -- of Congressional Affairs.

Q Okay. And so, then, before your transcribed interview that was scheduled prior to the transmittal of the May 17th letter, did you have discussions with the Office of Congressional Affairs?

A The attorney within there, we would have, yes, ma'am.

Q And did you have discussions with the Office of Congressional Affairs specifically regarding the content regarding Marcus Allen in this letter?

A We would have talked about the situation surrounding his revocation recommendation, yes, ma'am.

Q And did you speak directly to Mr. Dunham, or did you speak to someone else in the office?

A I did not speak to Mr. Dunham. I spoke to someone else in the office.

Q Who did you speak to in the office?

A Megan Greer.

Q Megan Greer. Okay.

On page 7 of the letter, under the heading Mr. Allen's Security Clearance Suspension, it states: The Security Division opened a security investigation regarding Mr. Allen in October 2021 after receiving a referral from the FBI's Charlotte Field Office.

Do you know who submitted the referral?

A Into the -- it came from the field office.

Q Do you know who submitted the referral?

A I don't remember who it was signed out by.

Q Do you know what their role at the Charlotte Field Office was?

A It would have been in management at the role. I'm not sure if it was a signed out by their SAC or their ASAC or their chief division counsel or their CSO. One of the individuals would have been the author that sent in the referral.

Q Okay. So let's go through those titles again. It could have been the CDC, you said?

A Sure.

Q Could have been the SAC? Did you say SAC?

A Could have been the SAC. Could have been an ASAC.

Q Okay.

A Could have been the CSO. I can't -- I don't remember exactly who authored the document that came in. I'm sorry.

Q Are those the individuals at field offices that normally submit these types of referrals?

A That normally would, but, again, I would harken back to our earlier discussion. Anybody can.

Q And what leads you to believe that it was an individual at the management level at the Charlotte Field Office?

A Well, I did review the documents. I just don't remember exactly which one -- who sent this one in specifically on the authoring line. That wasn't what I was studying. I'm sorry.

Q And what were the allegations included in the referral?

A The allegations that there was a concern on statements that he had made and emails that he had sent.

Q And, with their referral, was there any documentation attached?

A I believe there were copies of the emails he had sent at that time.

BY [redacted]:

Q Were these public statements or just internal?

A Are you -- by "public," you mean in the newspaper, or -- do you mind --

Q Well, what were the statements in question?

A It would be statements that he made in a threat review prioritization meeting, and he had sent some emails, and he had some personal pontification in those emails. So it would be those.

Q Okay. What did he say in the meeting?

A In -- oh, God, what is it? He had -- I'm trying to remember exactly what he said in the meeting.

I'm sorry. I don't remember his exact words from the meeting, but it caused concern that his supervisor had to express to him that it was inappropriate in that platform.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you remember what the supervisor was concerned about?

A That it did not sound appropriate in the sense that it sounded almost like a rhetoric -- an anti-Jan 6 rhetoric.

Q And did the supervisor describe for you what they saw as an anti-Jan 6 rhetoric?

A I believe they provided the statement in the write-up.

Q Okay. Do you remember what the statement was?

A I've already testified that I don't.

Q Okay. And the letter, in the next sentence there, it states: On January 19th, 2022, Mr. Allen's security clearance was suspended based on security concerns pursuant to National Security Adjudicative Guideline A, allegiance to the United States.

What investigative work occurred at the Security Division between October 2021, when the allegation was received, and the security clearance suspension on January 19th?

A At this point, they would have gathered documents, done some workups on computer access, instant messaging, text messages, emails, and reviewed those.

Q Do you know what documents were gathered in that period of time between October --

A It would have been the things I mentioned here.

Q Okay. Do you know what analysis of computer access was performed?

A Do you want to clarify that a little more?

Q You described how they would have looked at computer access. What did they look at regarding computer access between October 2021 and January 19th, 2022?

A In a general sense, that is a review of what kind of cases they were accessing, were they into anything that they shouldn't have been into, that type of thing.

Q And so they performed that sort of investigative work regarding Mr. Allen, to your knowledge, in that time period?

A To my knowledge, yes.

Q Did they pull instant messages?

A As a general rule, they would, yes.

Q And text messages?

A Correct.

Q And then emails? And those would all have been on Mr. Allen's FBI --

A System, correct.

Q -- systems. Okay.

Did the Security Division conduct any interviews during that period of time?

A I don't recall that they did.

Q Do you know if they've conducted interviews at any juncture in the investigation regarding --

A Absolutely.

Q -- Mr. Allen?

A Yes.

Q Do you know who they interviewed?

A I can't name every single person that they interviewed. I know they interviewed a lot of his squad mates, his supervisor, the CDC, the ASAC, some task force officers.

Q Do you know if they -- if one of the individuals interviewed was Mr. Allen's direct supervisor?

A They would have interviewed him, yes, ma'am.

Q Do you know who Mr. Allen's direct supervisor is?

A I don't know his name. I'm sorry.

Q Do you know what his position is?

A He would have been a supervisory intelligence analyst.

Q Okay.

[redacted] And I'll enter as exhibit No. 2 the January 10th, 2022, letter you sent Mr. Allen regarding his security clearance suspension.

[Moore Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Have you had sufficient time to review?

A I'm familiar with the letter.

Q Okay. So the letter is dated January 10th, 2022. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you remember if you signed the letter on that exact date?

A The letters are dated on the day I sign them, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And, in the May 17th letter, which is exhibit No. 1, it states that Mr. Allen's security clearance was suspended on January 19th, 2022.

What's the 9-day delay there? Do you remember there being a delay?

A I would believe that -- and I am now making a hypothesis --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that, because I had signed it on the 10th, they still have to prepare the package and send it to the field office, and then it has to be served. So there would have been a Federal holiday in there.

Q Uh-huh.

A And I would believe that would be the first logical time they most likely had -- so I can sign the letter --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- effectuating it. The actual action takes effect when they serve the employee.

Q And when is the individual who receives the package and the letter -- when are they notified that you've signed the letter? Are they notified when you sign the letter? Are they notified when they receive the package?

A Are you talking about the person in a field office?

Q Correct.

A I sign the letter, and then it's transmitted back to Security Division.

Q Uh-huh?

A I have the requirement the division contact the executive management to let them know that a suspension package is inbound or a revocation package --

Q Okay.

A -- or just any type of letter is inbound so that the office doesn't just get it in their -- one day and be like, what is this; that they have an awareness that it is coming and to expect it.

Q So it would have been your understanding that, on January 10th, after you signed the letter regarding Mr. Allen, the Charlotte Field Office executive management would have been told that this package was incoming. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And are you -- what's involved in the package that the Security Division puts together? What's all in that package?

A I don't create the packages myself.

Q Uh-huh.

A But, having been a chief security officer, generally you get the suspension letter.

Q Okay.

A And then usually any human resource documentation that would go with that regarding their status as a suspended employee.

Q Okay. Is any of the information regarding the referral included in that package?

A They get the letter.

Q So the letter is all they get regarding the substance of why the security clearance is being suspended?

A For suspension, correct.

Q Okay. Are you aware of who delivered your January 10th suspension letter and the Security Division's package to Mr. Allen?

A I am not.

Q On page 7 of the May 17th letter, exhibit 1, it states: Specifically, the Security Division found Mr. Allen espoused alternative theories to coworkers verbally and in emails and instant messages sent to the FBI's systems in apparent attempts to hinder investigative work.

How does the Security Division define alternative theories in this context?

A In this context, it would be theories that do not support the January 6 investigations, that the -- I think it's common knowledge that, at that time, we consider the acts of January 6 to have been criminal in nature, and so we're pursuing those as criminal investigations.

So it would be that the government was behind January 6, something along those lines, or that -- that January 6 didn't occur as it is being portrayed.

Q So how does the Security Division determine if an individual is making statements that do not support the FBI's working investigations regarding January 6th?

A Do you want to repeat that again?

Q So you said that the alternative theories they did not support the January 6th investigations that the FBI was pursuing; how did you determine if Mr. Allen's statements did not support those investigations?

A So, for the suspension of his clearance --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- we would have taken, like, individual statements that he sent. I mentioned that he sent some emails --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that were links to stories that were contrary to facts that occurred at the Capitol that we knew.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then he espoused in them, like: Hey, you should be aware of this, be very cautious in your investigations going forward, because -- essentially that the government wasn't being forthright in what had occurred.

Q And the Security Division determined that those were alternative theories, then?

A That, at this point, there was concern, yes, ma'am.

Q And, when you say "at this point, there was concern," what was the concern?

A That the individual's trying to influence investigations positively or negatively.

Q And how did the Security Division determine that these were attempts on

Mr. Allen's part to hinder investigative activity?

A Because he sent them in emails to his colleagues and coworkers.

Q So what was the act that hindered the investigative activity? Was it just --

A He's trying to --

Q -- sending an email?

A He's trying to influence through his words and the information he provided.

BY [redacted]:

Q And did it influence anyone?

A Ultimately, his actions did, yes, sir.

Q Who did it influence?

A His ultimate actions that led to the revocation --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- were that he failed to provide information when asked to search a subject of January 6th, and he -- he failed to provide open-source information indicating the individual was involved in criminal activity.

Q Okay.

A It caused the agent to close the lead and not open the case and pursue it any further.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q And the letter continues: Mr. Allen's supervisor admonished him to stop circulating these materials on multiple occasions.

Who is Mr. Allen's supervisor?

A I don't know his name.

Q And you said that the supervisor was interviewed by the Security Division.

Is that correct?

A He was.

Q What information did the supervisor provide to the Security Division?

A That Mr. Allen had been a good employee but that they had started raising concerns that, after approximately -- over the course of the last year-plus, that his behavior had changed some, and that they were concerned based off of statements that he had made in that TRP meeting, and that these emails that he had sent regarding the links to some different theories and his statements in support of those theories.

Q Was it only the supervisor that was concerned, or did the others raise concern as well?

A Others raised concerns during the interviews.

Q And who were those individuals that were interviewed that raised concerns?

A I can't tell you by name, but I know that the totality was that some of his coworkers, obviously the agent that closed the case or closed the lead out without pursuing the case, and then the ASAC and the CDC also had concerns.

Q And they -- were they all concerned just about the emails, or the TRP process comments? What were they concerned about?

A The totality of the actions.

Q Okay. And the totality of the actions were the emails and the statement made in the TRP process? Is that your understanding, or is there more?

A Again, when we did the interviews, in the course of the investigation, there was more that was found. Specifically, the influence placed upon the case where the information was not appropriately provided in the search.

Q And when did these interviews occur?

A From the time that the case was open, I don't believe they did any interviews before the suspension, but from the suspension to the revocation period.

Q Were there a cluster of interviews? Did they happen over time? What was the frequency of the interviews?

A Over time.

Q Over time? So was it, like, one a month?

A I don't know that answer. I'm sorry.

Q And when was Mr. Allen interviewed by the Security Division?

A Between the time of suspension and revocation.

Q What was the date of his interview?

A I don't know the date of his interview.

Q Was that in the materials that you reviewed prior to your transcribed interview this morning?

A It would have been on the document of his 302, but I don't remember the date.

Q And did you read the content of the interview?

A I read generally the content of the interview in preparation for this, yes.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you read the 302?

A Yes.

Q How long was it?

A It was on an electronics computer screen.

Q Okay.

A So I had to scroll.

Q Okay. If we're going to request the information relating to Mr. Allen, how would you recommend we characterize our request so that we capture everything?

Ms. Moore. Let me ask my counsel.

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Back on the record.

Ms. Moore. Do you want to ask me that question again? I'm sorry.

[redacted] Yeah.

BY [redacted]:

Q If we're going to ask for all the documents referring or relating to Mr. Allen's security clearance suspension and revocation, how would we -- how would we ask for that? What would you recommend we ask for so that we don't miss anything and we get every -- all the relevant documents?

A I think you just stated it best, is that you would ask for any and all documents relative to the security decision regarding Mr. Allen.

Q Okay. Thank you.

[redacted] I'd like to enter as exhibit No. 3 a September 29th, 2021, email from Mr. Allen with the subject line 6 Jan Awareness. It was sent at 7:52 a.m.

[Moore Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, was this part of the referral that was made on Mr. Allen from the Charlotte Field Office to your knowledge?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And have you seen this email before today?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Did you review this prior to your transcribed interview this morning?

A I did.

Q Okay. And the -- the email includes -- was sent to multiple of his colleagues and contained leaks to websites. That was the characterization that was made in the May 17th letter.

The email started out with: There is a significant counterstory to the events of January 6th, 2021, at the U.S. Capitol.

The email recommended at the bottom there -- it said: Recommendation, exercise extreme caution and discretion in pursuit of any investigative inquiries or leads pertaining to the events of the day.

During the interviews that you conducted with Mr. Allen's colleagues, or the Security Division conducted, did this email come up in those interviews?

A It did.

Q Did anyone take action upon Mr. Allen's recommendation?

A In what regards?

Q Did they take action on his recommendation that they exercise extreme caution and discretion?

A To my knowledge, I think that most of them thought this was an unusual email, and they continued their investigations.

Q Why did they think it was an unusual email?

A Because it's pontificating that there's a counter story to the events that we know to have happened on January 6th.

Q And what did you understand Mr. Allen's role to be as a staff operations specialist?

A He's a support clerk.

Q And do you know what kind of job duties he's supposed to perform?

A He does -- when asked, he does open-source searches. He can cover leads. He can serve a subpoena if it's administrative in nature.

[11:05 a.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q So, during his role as a staff operations specialist, are you aware of whether or not he would send news articles, other open-source materials to individuals on the JTTF?

A He might, yes.

Q Did you -- as part of the investigation, did the Security Division look into what his job responsibilities were and what he normally did?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And was this email reviewed prior to the suspension of Mr. Allen's clearance on January 10th?

A I believe that the Security Division used this as part of that, yes.

Q What else did the Security Division use?

A It would have been any other emails that he sent, any information that they were able to glean from, like I said, the review of his accesses online, that type of thing.

Q And how many emails of Mr. Allen's did the Security Division review?

A I am not sure exactly.

Q How many -- are you aware of how many were reviewed prior to you signing the January 10th letter?

A I am not.

Q How many emails of Mr. Allen's did you review prior to signing the January 10th letter?

A I don't review the emails prior to signing the letters. I are review the summary document as provided to me.

Q So you did not look at this email prior to signing the January 10th letter?

A I did not.

BY [redacted]:

Q And were you aware that he was the 2019 Employee of the Year at the Charlotte Field Office at this time?

A At which time?

Q When you signed the letter.

A For the suspension?

Q Yes.

A I don't remember that I do.

Q Okay. And at any point in the process did you come to learn that?

A I did.

Q Okay. You know, evidently, if he was the 2019 Employee of the Year for the field office, a certain set of folks thought he was doing a great job at some point. Correct?

A Correct.

Q And did you ever try to reconcile the fact that he has an exemplary record?

A That would have been part of the investigative steps. Yes, sir.

Q But did you sort of ask anyone, "What is going on here? This fellow was highly regarded and received GS pay scale increases, was named the 2019 Employee of the Year for the field office, and now we are essentially getting rid of him because he sent some email links here?"

A Are you talking about for the suspension or the revocation?

Q Oh, either.

A So, prior to the suspension, I did not have conversation. I utilized the documents that were sent to me. And then we had conversations. I asked for a brief on this one because it was different than I had seen previously.

Q Right.

A And I received a brief on it. But did I specifically go, "Hey, he was Employee of the Year in 2019; justify why now you think he may not be so great"?

Q Right.

A I would have asked, "Could you please provide me the facts surrounding your recommendation," but not necessarily would I have said that he is Employee of the Year. No, sir.

Q Okay. So did you make an attempt to reconcile the fact that he's got a remarkable personnel record leading up to this when he sent a couple of links here?

A I would have looked at the totality of information provided to me and made my judgment and decision off of that.

Q Okay. So --

A The investigators would have taken all things into consideration.

Q And did they?

A And, in our adjudicative documents, it will talk about their career, the awards they received, what kind of any other disciplinary actions that of would occurred. So those are considered, yes, sir.

Q Okay. Do you know if he had any disciplinary actions?

A I don't believe he had any, no, sir.

BY [redacted]:

Q You said that you asked for a brief on Mr. Allen's case prior to signing the January 10th letter, and you received the brief. Is that correct?

A I cannot exactly when he did. I have definitely received a brief on Mr.

Allen, yes.

Q And who did you receive that brief from?

A It would have been from the Security Division.

Q Who from the Security Division?

A And I can't remember that name. Usually I communicate with the Assistant Director, who is Doug Beidler, and Mr. Beidler will set that up for me.

Q And how was the brief done? Was it in person, over email?

A Usually over link.

Q Okay.

A So they will be -- because they are not housed in the same building I am in, we will do it by video.

Q So what was the content of that brief? Did they discuss the specifics of Mr. Allen's case?

A They would have talked specifics of the case. Yes, ma'am.

Q And do you remember your reaction leaving the brief?

A I remember believing that it was compelling enough that I needed to sign the document. Yes, ma'am.

Q And how far ahead of the January 10th document did the brief occur?

A I don't remember. I am sorry. I just know I had one on this one because it was different.

Q And the allegations originally came in October 2021 and then you signed on January 10th, 2022. Do you know if it was still back in 2021 that you received the brief?

A I am sorry, I don't.

Q Okay.

[redacted] We will go off the record. We are at the end of our hour.

[Recess.]

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, I am [redacted] with the Democratic staff. Thank you again for joining us. It is 11:21. We are going back on the record.

Ms. Moore, I just want to first of all thank you again for returning for a second transcribed interview. And I want to go over with you briefly some of the context how we got here today.

You appeared voluntarily before this committee on April 24th, 2023, for a transcribed interview. Is that correct?

A It is.

Q And, during that interview, you were asked a series of questions about the process used by the Security Division when deciding whether to suspend or revoke an FBI employee's security clearance. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q In response to these questions, you described in significant detail the process used by your organization in making these decision. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You explained that the Human Resources Branch only investigates allegations and information that relates to national security risks and does not consider general misconduct allegations, which instead are handled by different branch within the FBI's Inspection Division. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You explained that decisions involving the suspension or revocation of security clearances are made with reference to the Adjudicative Guidelines. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And this refers to the Security Executive Agent Directive for National Security Adjudicative Guidelines effective June 8, 2017. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] And I am just going to mark that one as exhibit 4 so we have it.

[Moore Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you familiar with these guidelines?

A I am.

Q I am going to refer to them with some of my questions. But right now I am going to continue with a little bit of background. At the time of your interview in April, you were not able to answer questions about individual employees' security clearances revocations because the review process had not yet been completed in those cases. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You've returned today because the revocation review process for three relevant FBI employees -- Brett Gloss, Marcus Allen, and Stephen Friend -- are now complete. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Now, on May 17, 2023, Acting Assistant Director Christopher Dunham sent a letter to Chairman Jordan in response to the committee's deposition subpoena, which was authorized on April 24th, 2023. And this letter described in further detail the reasons for the FBI decision to suspend and eventually revoke the security clearances of the three employees that I just mentioned. The majority has marked that letter already in the record. It is exhibit 1.

With respect to each of these employees for the subject of today's interview, were the investigative, adjudicative and review steps that you described in your April 24, 2023, interview followed?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You were also asked during your previous transcribed interview whether the FBI uses security clearance suspension decisions to retaliate against or punish any employee by essentially forcing them into a situation where they cannot work for the FBI on an active duty paid status while their clearance is suspended, but they also cannot appeal their suspension while the final revocation decision is pending. Do you recall these questions?

A I do recall the questions.

Q And you answered emphatically on April 24th that the FBI does not suspend clearances or of employees in a punitive or retaliatory fashion. Correct?

A That is correct.

Q Do you stand by that answer today?

A I do.

Q You explained that the sole focus of the FBI's decision whether to suspend or revoke an employee's security clearance is to determine whether, based on the considerations enumerated in the Adjudicative Guidelines, the employee's continued possession of a security clearance giving them access to classified information would pose a threat to national security. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you stand by that answer today?

A I do.

Q Are you confident that the FBI's decision to revoke the security clearance of Brett Gloss was not punitive or retaliatory in any way?

A Correct.

Q Are you confident the FBI's decision to revoke the security clearance ever Marcus Allen was not punitive or retaliatory in any way?

A I am.

Q Are you confident that the FBI's decision to revoke the security clearance of Stephen Friend was not punitive or retaliatory in any way?

A I am.

Q And are you confident that the FBI's decisions to suspend and eventually revoke the security clearances of these three FBI employees was instead lawful and based on a fair and impartial consideration of the evidence and the factors set forth in the Adjudicative Guidelines?

A I am.

Q Okay. Let's talk about Mr. Allen since we spoke of him earlier. And I think we have already had the letter marked exhibit 2 in this record; the January 10th letter that you signed and sent to Mr. Allen has already been entered into the record.

There was a letter of revocation, a permanent letter of revocation. Is that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And that is not exhibit 2. That will be a different exhibit.

A Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] That one I am going to mark that as exhibit 5.

[Moore Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q It has got two pages. Sorry to confuse you.

A It is okay.

Q So exhibit 5 in front of you know now, Ms. Moore, is the security revocation or the notice of security clearance revocation for Marcus Allen. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And, according to that letter and your recollection, is it true that Marcus Allen's security clearance was revoked by the FBI on May 3rd, 2023?

A I executed the letter on May 3rd. Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And I guess you explained earlier that there is some process after that by which the employee would be notified or sent a package regarding --

A Correct. Yes, ma'am.

Q And did that happen in this case?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q With resect to Mr. Allen, the Security Division opened a security investigation regarding him on October 21 after receiving a referral from the FBI's Charlotte Field Office. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And Allen's clearance was initially suspended on January 19 based on security concerns under Adjudicative Guideline A, which is allegiance to the United States. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q The specific security concerns that resulted in the initial suspension of Mr. Allen's security clearance stem from evidence he espoused conspiracy theories to coworkers verbally, in emails and instant messages sent on FBI systems in attempts to hinder lawful FBI investigations. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q For example, and we have seen this in this record exhibit No. 3, which shared an email that Mr. Allen sent on September 29th. Do you have that in front of you?

A I do, yes, ma'am.

Q So the investigation revealed that, on September 29, 2021, Mr. Allen send an email using his official FBI email account to multiple colleagues within the FBI that contained links to conspiracy websites and urged recipients to, quote, exercise extreme caution and discretion in pursuit of any investigation inquiries or leads pertaining to the events of January 6th.

Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q Now this email was not the only email that was the subject of the security review for Mr. Allen. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q In fact, there were multiple emails. Correct?

A Yes, to my knowledge. Yes, to my recollection.

Q Okay. In addition to emails, there were multiple statements made by Mr. Allen of the same sort to colleagues within the FBI. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. The investigation also revealed that, on another occasion, Mr. Allen sent an email from his FBI account with a link to a conspiracy website that wrongly asserted, quote, "Now it's clear that Federal law enforcement had some degree of infiltration among the crowds gathered at the Capitol on January 6th," end quote, to which Mr. Allen commented, quote, "brings up some serious concerns about USG participation," end quote.

Is that your understanding of some of the evidence underlying Mr. Allen's security clearance suspension?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you familiar with claims that the FBI, quote, infiltrated the crowd on January 6th and somehow orchestrated the event as a false flag operation to implicate Trump supporters?

A I have heard that this is a conspiracy theory. Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you aware of any evidence that would support this false flag theory?

A Absolutely not.

Q Why is it concerning when FBI employees like Mr. Allen use their official FBI email address to espouse baseless conspiracy views that falsely accuse the FBI of improper conduct?

A It begins to cause concern as to their ability to effect investigations that are lawful and thorough and unbiased in nature.

Q And, in Mr. Allen's case, what evidence, if any, have you seen that his actions and espousal of these views actually did interfere with lawful FBI investigations?

A Mr. Allen was given a lead, which is a request to run open-source information on an individual who is a potential subject of a January 6th investigation. He did not provide any information back, stating instead that he found no evidence of criminal activity or unlawful behavior. The agent at that time, they enclosed the lead, marked it of no value, and no case was opened.

Subsequently, additional information came forward out of another office that was again forwarded back to the Charlotte Field Office where they were asked to relook at this lead. When they opened it back up, the agent asked a different analytical entity to run the exact same open-source information, and that information brought back positive results that lead to the opening of a case against a January 6th subject.

Q Okay. And that -- pardon me?

[redacted] So is it accurate to say that the information Mr. Allen provided in the first place stating that there was no evidence of wrongful activity was in fact a false statement?

Ms. Moore. That would be correct.

[redacted] Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q And that investigation that was reopened, the case of the January 6th subject, in that case, after the other employee had found information that should have been found by Mr. Allen because it was publicly available, the FBI learned that the subject had actually physically assaulted U.S. Capitol Police Officers on January 6th. Is that correct?

A Correct.

Q And that was the nature of the criminal offense that the FBI was investigating in that case?

A That is correct.

Q The information that that second FBI employee found was readily available in public sources and should have been discovered by Mr. Allen when he was previously asked to do an open-source research on that subject. Is that correct?

A Absolutely. Specific if someone had been named 2019 Employee of the Year, I expect a lot more.

Q Well, there was some discussion of that earlier, Ms. Moore, about Mr.

Allen's performance. Is it fair to say that it's possible you can have an employee in the FBI who is both a high performer in terms of his duties generally but also a security risk?

A Robert Hansen was promoted to a supervisory level.

Q And can you explain how that is an example of somebody who is both a security risk and a high performer?

A Robert Hansen was trading information to the Soviets, who was absolutely not aligned to the United States' best interest. And it's very possible for someone to, again, admit one thing while being someone else.

Q And, as the security manager in your position, is it your job to evaluate someone's general performance as an FBI employee?

A I -- as a security manager, it's not my job to evaluate their general performance. It's my job to evaluate if their actions and their performance pose a risk to national security.

Q And that's your foremost concern in that position -- -

A Always.

Q -- correct, national -- the interest of preserving the national security?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Now, in the end, with respect to Mr. Allen, the Security Division investigators determined that Mr. Allen had obstructed the FBI's lawful investigation of the criminal subject that we mentioned earlier. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And did you agree with this determination?

A I did.

Q Why is it a concern that Mr. Allen obstructed a lawful FBI investigation of a criminal subject?

A The FBI is charged with investigating criminal activity. His actions caused an individual who had intended to do harm to the United States Government not to be appropriately investigated in a timely manner.

Q Okay. Now we mentioned it was a letter revoking Mr. Allen's clearance -- mentions Adjudicative Guideline A, which is allegiance to the United States. It also mentions Adjudicative Guideline E. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And E refers to personal conduct. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you familiar with Guideline E?

A I am. Yes, ma'am.

Q Guideline E states, in significant, relevant respect: Conduct involving questionable judgment, lack of candor, dishonestly, or unwillingness to comply with rules and regulations, can raise questions about an individual's reliability, trustworthiness and ability to protect classified or sensitive information.

The guideline goes on to say: Of special interest is any failure to cooperate or provide truthful and candid answers during national security investigative or adjudicative processes.

Are you familiar with this aspect of Guideline E?

A I am.

Q Do you believe that Guideline E supports the decision to suspend Allen's security clearance?

A Absolutely.

Q And why is that?

A Because his actions were intentional in nature and they were intended to impede an investigation.

Q Now the Security Division conducted a thorough investigation before finally revoking Mr. Allen's security clearance. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And, during that investigation, the division reviewed documents, interviewed witnesses, and ultimately interviewed Mr. Allen himself. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q When you signed off on the revocation decision with respect to Mr. Allen, did you review all of that information in totality?

A What I review it is a summary document that I am provided that summarizes the entire investigation. Investigations are very long. There's lots of interviews, and so it's summarized down to me. I base my information off of that.

Q Is there any one single thing that you focused on or did you consider everything in its totality?

A I am charged by the United States Government at looking at the whole person. So that's all the positive and all the negative information that is found. I use a whole-person concept when rendering a decision as a security program manager.

Q And, in Mr. Allen's case, did you look at him under that whole-person standard?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q All right. The Security Division investigation revealed that Mr. Allen expressed sympathy for persons or organizations that advocate, threaten, or use force or violence or other illegal means to prevent the Federal Government personnel from performing their official duties. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q The division concluded that Mr. Allen's sympathies influenced his work product and resulted in him failing to provide relevant information to an FBI employee that impacted the FBI's ability to accomplish its mission. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q In light of this conclusion and the evidence underlying it, do you believe that the suspension and revocation of Mr. Allen's security clearance was motivated by animus?

A No.

Q Was it done to punish him for his political or ideological beliefs?

A Absolutely not.

Q What was the motivation behind the FBI's decision to suspend and revoke Mr. Allen's security clearance?

A Protection of national security information.

Q As you have stated -- actually you haven't.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, with respect to -- was it exhibit 1 -- the letter from Mr. Dunham, May 17, 2023, you indicated that you personally did not pull together the information in this letter. Correct?

A No, ma'am.

Q But you reviewed it before coming here today. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, on page 2, 3 and 4, there are some charts that offer visuals for some of the data that the FBI pulled. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the majority asked you a couple of questions suggesting that there was a trend or some significant increase in cases as time has gone on. Do you recall those questions?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Now, how many employees does the FBI have?

A 38,222.

Q Okay. So, on page -- and how many contractors?

A Roughly 4 0,000, contractors, detailees, and task force officers.

Q Okay. And all of those people would potentially be subject to security review if there was an issue with their clearance?

A They absolutely are.

Q And their cases would be included in these statistics?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So let's look, for example, on page 4 of exhibit 1. This is the fiscal year suspensions and revocations.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you have that in front of you?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So this chart shows, for example, that, in fiscal year 2021, there were 37 revocations. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, in fiscal year 2022, there were 57 revocations. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So that is an increase of how many cases?

A I don't like to do math in public, but it's 20.

Q I have confidence that you can answer that question. I think you are right. It's 20. So 20 cases out of, again, how many employees?

A 38,222 employees and an additional roughly 40,000 detailees, contractors, or task force officers.

Q Okay. So is that 20 a significant number in light of the number of people that are the subject potentially of those investigations?

A It's not. Additionally we get -- we get probably about 1,400 complaints that we might receive that we sort through in a given year. And so it's not that many cases that fall that way. No, ma'am.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q You were asked earlier some questions about whether you remember certain people or whether you knew who worked on certain matters. And, just to make this clear for the record, how many employees total do you directly oversee?

A It is roughly -- it's close to 2,000.

Q Okay?

A That are in my branches. Yes, ma'am.

Q And could you estimate about how many documents you look through in a day, roughly?

A A lot.

Q Maybe what percentage of your time, maybe that is a better way to phrase it, what percentage of your time you spend looking at documents?

A A lot. Probably half my day reviewing documents, reading documents. I oversee a lot of different things from training, human resources, security, and then all of our business analytics and statistics. And so, between those four groups, I spend a lot of time. I also oversee disciplinary appeal reviews. So it's a lot. It's just a lot.

Q Okay. And you said that tomorrow is your last day with the agency. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So is it possible that, in recent days, you have had to actually review even more documents because you are trying to wrap things up?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. You were also asked a number of questions about the timing of the May 17th letter?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And what processes might have taken place after the FBI -- after it sent by the FBI. You had no role in the transmittal of the letter? Correct?

A No, ma'am, I did not.

Q And you didn't have any role in the drafting of the letter? Correct?

A No, ma'am.

Q You appeared for a transcribed interview in April. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the majority actually asked you to come back for a deposition on May 10th. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And is it accurate that they threatened to subpoena you and hold you in contempt if you didn't appear on the 10th?

A That is correct.

Q And you in fact had a personal conflict. Correct?

A I did. Yes, ma'am.

Q And you had a personal conflict that was scheduled to continue for a number of days. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Is it accurate that you offered to change your personal travel to appear on the 17th?

A I did offer to change, and I did change in hopes that we would come to an agreement.

Q Okay. So you were willing to appear in person on May 17th?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the majority didn't take you up on that. Correct?

A That is correct.

Q Even though they had threatened to hold you in contempt if you didn't appear the week before?

A That is correct. Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] All right. We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]:

Q The time is 11:45 a.m.

Ms. Moore, when we wrapped up the first hour of questioning, we were discussing exhibit No. 3, which was the September 29th email from Mr. Allen.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q As part of the Security Division's review of this email, did they look at the articles that were linked?

A Ma'am, I am not 100 percent sure. But I would believe by logical investigation that would be yes.

Q Have you ever reviewed the --

A I --

Q Have you ever reviewed the articles that were linked in this email?

A Not myself, no, ma'am.

Q And do you know if it was the email itself or the articles that lead the Security Division to believe that Mr. Allen was espousing alternative theories?

A It would have been the totality of everything that they had in front of them, not just one email and not just one statement.

Q Okay. And so alternative theories came from the May 17th letter in that last paragraph there. It says: Specifically, the Security Division found Mr. Allen espoused alternative theories to coworkers verbally and in emails.

Ms. Gibbs. Which page are you on, may I ask?

[redacted] Page 7.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay.

Ms. Moore. Yes, ma'am, what about page 7?

BY [redacted]:

Q On page 7, that last paragraph there it says: Specifically, the Security Division found Mr. Allen espoused alternative theories to coworkers verbally and in emails and instant message sent on the FBI systems in apparent attempts to hinder investigative activity.

Did I read that correctly?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And then, in exhibit No. 2, which is the January 10th suspension letter.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Second paragraph, it says: The Security Division has learned you have espoused conspiratorial views both orally and in writing and promoted unreliable information which indicates support for the events of January 6th.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So, on January 10th, it was referred to conspiratorial views, and in the May 17th letter, it was alternative theories. Why wasn't conspiratorial views mentioned in the --

A I don't know, ma'am. That would be the writer's wording.

Q And what information did the Security Division have at the time of the January 10 letter that he was espousing conspiratorial views?

A Again, it's the same thing we have discussed right there. It's emails. It's statements that he made orally and in writing and instant messages.

Q And, in your April 24th transcribed interview, we kind of discussed your review process of these letters, and you might make some suggestions, but they may differ based on who wrote the letter. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And do you know how the individual author of this particular letter, how they defined "conspiratorial views"?

A Not the individual author, but I understand the totality of what they were writing there.

Q Okay. And what did you understand their definition of "conspiratorial views" to include?

A Alternate views to what was known as public knowledge of the events of January 6th.

Q And, at the time of the drafting of this email, going back to the email exhibit 3, the second sentence says: There is a good possibility the D.C. elements of our organization are not being forthright about the events of the day or the influence of government assets.

Do you know if, in his interview with the Security Division, was Mr. Allen asked about this sentence?

A He was asked about the document, yes, ma'am.

Q And do you know if he was asked about this specific statement in the email?

A He was asked about the document, so that would cover all statements made in the email. Yes, ma'am.

Q And do you know what the content of his testimony was regarding --

A I believe he was asked about why he distributed this. And he said that the Holy Spirit called upon him to do it.

Q Okay. And are you aware that, during Mr. Allen's transcribed interview with the committee, he said that, when he wrote this email and this sentence, he was referring to the veracity of Director Wray's testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee?

A I don't have his testimony in front of me. I am sorry.

Q And do you know if he spoke about that in his interview with the Security Division?

A I don't remember specifically. I am sorry. I would have to rereview the document. Do you want to ask me that again?

Q Are you aware of whether, during his interview with the Security Division, whether it came up that Mr. Allen was questioning the veracity of Director Wray's testimony?

A I do believe he mentioned that during the interview. Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you remember what the content of the discussion -- within the interview was?

A I believe he thought that Director Wray had lied in a statement that he made.

Q And are you aware that his supervisor at the time when this email was sent September 29th, are you aware that his supervisor called him into his office?

A I am aware that his supervisor counseled him.

Q And what do you remember the content of that counseling to be?

A I don't. I know that he was counseled in regard to statements he made at a TRP. And I know that his supervisor had counseled him in regards to the appropriateness of the messages that he was sending.

Q And, according to Mr. Allen's testimony before the committee, during this meeting that took place, his supervisors felt that they had to defend the Director's testimony. Are you aware of that?

A I have never heard that.

Q And that Mr. Allen was put into a position where he had to explain the content of the email. Are you aware of that occurring in that meeting?

A I believe he would have to explain the content of the email because there was concern around the basis behind the email regarding the D.C. elements to our organization are not being forthright. So I think there was some concern that we have factual information that happened on January 6th. What he was putting out was contrary to the factual information that the public has on January 6th, and they wanted to confirm what he was doing here.

Q And are you aware that, in the Revolver News article that he included here in the email, it mentioned a New York Times article that had just been published that found that there was an informant within one of the groups of Proud Boys that was texting or communicating with his FBI handler real-time updates. Are you aware of that?

A I haven't read those articles. No, ma'am.

Q And he was questioning Director Wray's testimony regarding whether or not the FBI had assets or sources, informants within the crowd at the events that occurred at the Capitol.

A I know that he --

Q Are you aware of that?

A I know that he personally questioned if Director Wray was honest in his testimony.

Q Are FBI employees able to question the veracity of the Director's testimony?

A Of course.

Q But he was being called into his supervisor's office regarding this email that questioned the veracity of the testimony?

A I don't believe that's exactly what this email says.

Q What do you believe the email says?

A I believe this email says that the D.C. elements for our organization are not being forthright about the elements of the day. I think we are conflating the issue here. Again, the security suspension is not based off of one statement or one act. It is the totality and the whole person.

Q Because Mr. Allen said that, during his security interview, there was this email and then some Skype instant messages that were exchanged that were shown to him in the security clearance interview. So, to Mr. Allen, this was the totality of what the Security Division was investigating regarding his alleged misconduct. Are you aware of that?

A According to Mr. Allen, that's what he was shown. I'm not aware of that,

but --

Q Do you know what he was shown in the interview?

The Reporter. You have to go one at a time, please.

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you aware of what Mr. Allen was shown in his Security Division interview?

A Not specifically. No, I am not.

Q Would that have been recorded anywhere?

A They record the results of the interview in the FD-302, which is the results of investigation interview.

Q And you said you had reviewed the 302 prior to your testimony?

A I had -- but I can't -- it doesn't specifically say he was shown this and this and this. So I am sorry.

Q Did you review the 302 prior to your testimony today?

A I did read the 302, yes, ma'am.

Q And when did you review the 302?

A Yesterday.

Q So, in your review yesterday, did you notice in the 302 what documents were shown to Mr. Allen?

A I didn't specifically. No, ma'am. I knew that they had included the emails -- some emails that he had sent, and then the IM exchanges, instant messages exchange from system, I knew that was mentioned. But I can't tell you exactly verbatim what they gave him. I am sorry.

Q And, according to Mr. Allen's testimony before this committee, he explained his use of the word "possibility" in the September 29th email to his supervisor. Are you aware of any sort of conversations regarding the use of the word "possibility" in this email?

A I am not. Not to my recollection right now.

Ms. Gibbs. I'm sorry. When you say "his testimony to the committee," what testimony are you referring to?

[redacted] Mr. Allen sat for a transcribed interview with the committee.

Ms. Gibbs. Okay. So it's --

Ms. Moore. I don't have that --

Ms. Gibbs. It's not something she would have --

Ms. Moore. I said that earlier. I don't have that.

BY [redacted]:

Q And I am just representing to you what he said in a transcribed interview. He described how the exchange with his supervisor, how they went through the email, and he describes that he used the word "possibility" as analytical language, and that seemed to calm his supervisor, calm his -- he called it emotions but kind of calmed his demeanor against Mr. Allen. Are you aware of any sorts of these conversations?

A No, ma'am.

Q Do you know if the supervisor mentioned during his interview that the use of certain words in the email came up when he was counseling?

A I don't. No, ma'am.

Q Did the supervisor let the Security Division know that he had canceled Mr. Allen on that day?

A The supervisor was interviewed, and in his interview, I remember that he stated that he had provided counseling. I don't know the specific day or right after this was sent or anything along those lines, no, ma'am.

Q So it wasn't specifically mentioned, to your recollection, in the interview of the supervisor that he counseled Mr. Allen on September 29th?

A Not on the specific date. Again, I know that he was counseled again on the TRP and the emails that he had sent and some statements that he had made. I don't know exactly what date he was counseled on.

Q And, during the last round you discussed with my colleagues, the incident where, on page 8 of the May 17th letter, reading from the last full paragraph, it says: The FBI found that Mr. Allen failed to provide relevant information to an FBI special agent regarding subjects who were allegedly involved in criminal activity at the U.S. Capitol on January 6th, 2021. Was this special agent interviewed by the Security Division?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And when did the special agent notify the Security Division that this incident had occurred with Mr. Allen?

A When she was interviewed.

Q So it was after the suspension of Mr. Allen's security clearance?

A That is correct.

Q What was the date of the incident?

A I don't know the date of the incident.

Q Was it mentioned in the 302 from the interview?

A It would have been.

Q Did you review that 302 prior to --

A I don't remember the date.

Q Did you review the 302 from the interview with the special agent prior to your testimony today?

A I did.

Q And you remember that the date was mentioned in the 302, or do you have a recollection?

A I remember her discussing in her 302 this incident. I don't remember a specific date. No, ma'am. If she said it in the 302, I don't remember.

Q In the interview with the Security Division with this special agent in question, did she say that she raised this issue with her supervisor?

A I don't remember her saying that in this document. At the time, I don't believe she thought it was a concern.

Q Do you know if she mentioned it to Mr. Allen?

A To my knowledge, she didn't state that.

Q Okay, because when Mr. Allen testified before the committee at the public hearing on May 18th, he said that he had no awareness of this incident. Are you aware of that?

A I don't have the testimony from the committee. I am sorry.

Q Would it surprise you to learn that Mr. Allen had no awareness of this incident?

A I would be surprised that Mr. Allen didn't have any awareness since he ran the lead. He marked it as no criminal activity so he clearly covered it.

Q But did the special agent ever bring it to his attention that he missed something?

A To my knowledge, the special agent didn't interview and state that she had, no.

Q Okay. And so do you know the range of time when the special agent asked Mr. Allen to look into this individual, he gave his reporting back to the special agent, and then the special agent asked another FBI employee to do open-source searches, do you know what time elapsed between those two?

A I don't.

Q And, as I mentioned earlier, according to Mr. Allen, the documents that were shown to him in the security interview by the Security Division was the May 29th email that we have been referring to today and then an exchange of Skype instant messages. Have you reviewed those instant messages?

A I didn't read them in their totality, I reviewed them.

Q Okay. Can you describe the content of those instant messages, what you understand them to be?

A They were him and another coworker talking about everything from the environment to family to thoughts.

Q And you said environment, family and thoughts. Just their thoughts in general or thoughts about specific --

A I reviewed them; I didn't study them. It was conversations between two individuals.

Q Okay. Did you review the instant messages prior to signing the January 10th suspension letter?

A No, ma'am.

Q Did you just review them prior to today's interview?

A Again, I'm the security program manager, I review the recommendation that came to me and the facts that are put forth. So, in preparation for this, I tried to refamiliarize myself because I knew that y'all would ask certain -- not knew, but I suspected you were going to ask me more questions, and I wanted to be able to be as forthright in disclosing as we possibly could because that was the agreement that I had made with you the last time I was here. But I don't know all these things by heart. I wasn't the investigator on the case; that's not my job. I make the ultimately decision based off the recommendation that's put forward.

Q By the time that you signed Mr. Allen's revocation letter on May 3rd, had you read the instant message exchanges?

A No.

Q No. Okay. So, before you revoked Mr. Allen's clearance, you had not read the instant messages?

A No.

Q Okay. And, according to Mr. Allen's testimony at his transcribed interview before the committee, he described the instant message exchanges between him and another colleague where they discuss the events of January 6th how hot the political climate was at the time and how a small percentage of the people can politically move the dial in the country.

Is this what you remember the instant messages to include?

A I can remember they included some of those statements.

Q And do you know if the individual who was communicating with Mr. Allen in these instant messages, are they also under investigation?

A I wouldn't be able to discuss about anyone else's investigative status.

Q Do you know if they are --

A I am not going to discuss anybody else's investigative status.

Q Would it be odd if the other person wasn't under investigation and Mr. Allen was under investigation?

A Not necessarily, if the other person's comments were benign in nature and that one individual in a two-sided conversation was much more vocal or opinionated.

Q And were Mr. Allen's comments in this exchange not benign?

A I would not describe his comments as I recollect them to have been benign. I remember they were cause of concern. And the other employee was providing different information than he was. Like: I don't see it that way. I don't think you are right. Have you really thought this through?

Those would be less concerning statements.

Q And can you describe some of the content of Mr. Allen's statements that you found concerning or problematic?

A Again, they were -- you kind of went down that road you stated it earlier. And I cannot -- I wouldn't be able to quote any of them. It was just the rhetoric of them about there being -- like not being forthright with what was being provided, there being this alternate story that wasn't being provided.

Q Okay. And, going back to page 8 of the May 17th letter, at the bottom of page, the letter states: Mr. Allen expressed sympathy for persons or organizations that advocate, threaten, or use force or violence, or use any other illegal or unconstitutional means in an effort to prevent Federal Government personnel from performing their official duties.

What information did the Security Division have that provided that these, that he had expressed sympathy for persons or organizations that advocate or threaten to use force?

A So it's the totality of the actions. Again, we have talked about this. Right? So it's the rhetoric that he espoused. It's the instant messages. It's the actions that he took that prevented an agent from following thoroughly through on a lead of an individual that had assaulted a law enforcement officer and caused that individual not to forward through that case. So those are the type of actions he intentionally influenced an investigation.

Q And how did the Security Division determine that he intentionally influenced the investigation?

A The totality of his actions, when you layer them upon each other.

Q Describe the totality of his actions.

A I just did.

Q Can you redescribe them?

A The totality of his --

Q Let me finish the question first for Penny.

A I'm sorry.

Q The totality of his actions that lead the Security Division to conclude that he had espoused sympathies for individuals, what information led them to that?

A So, again, we use a whole-person concept for review. We do all positive and all negatives. They would have looked at his performance record. They would have looked at his emails. They would have taken into consideration interviews with colleagues and coworkers. They would have looked at his instant messages. All of those things, his work product, all of those things are taken into consideration for a whole-person concept that led them to this conclusion.

Q Okay. And, taking some of those individually, the emails that he sent, where in his emails did he express sympathy for these individuals?

A It's the totality of the actions.

Q Were there specific statements that Mr. Allen made that led the Security Division to believe this?

A When Mr. Allen stated that there was no criminal activity that was found in an open source for an individual that we were considering a subject who had assaulted law enforcement actions, that would be an action.

Q And was Mr. Allen asked about this at his Security Division interview?

A Those were found after his interview.

Q Has Mr. Allen ever been asked by the FBI prior to the revocation of his security clearance about that matter?

A About the specific of the PASMI search?

Q Yes, ma'am.

A No.

Q So Mr. Allen, as I said earlier, had no knowledge of this when he testified before the committee, you said that the special agent never brought it to his attention, never told that special agent supervisor. Is that correct?

A To my knowledge, I am it not aware of that.

Q So the first time that the FBI was aware of this was at the special agent's Security Division interview regarding Mr. Allen?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And, during Mr. Allen's Security Division interview, was he asked about these alleged sympathies these that he professed?

A I am sorry; ask me that again.

Q During Mr. Allen's Security Division interview, was he asked about these alleged sympathies that he was espousing?

A He was asked about his actions that led to the interview. Yes, ma'am.

Q And what was Mr. Allen's response to those allegations?

A Mr. Allen's response was that he believed that the Holy Spirit had called him to share this with the individuals on his squad in the field office.

Q Did he ever say that he aligned himself with the individuals who participated in the events at the Capitol on January 6th?

A He emphasized a sympathy to the individuals.

Q When you say "emphasized a sympathy," what do you mean by that?

A That, again, when you take in totality everything that was provided, to include his interview, it evolved into an allegiance concern.

Q Okay.

A In his interview, it became clear that he was struggling between friend and foe, like he couldn't figure out what was truth and what wasn't.

Q And what you do mean by what was truth and what wasn't?

A There is facts regarding January 6th that are facts. He doesn't align to those facts. He does not believe that the United States Government is honest in those facts.

Q And did Mr. Allen, in his interview, was he ever asked if he aligned himself with the individuals who participated in the events at the Capitol on January 6th?

A I am sorry; I don't remember that specifically being asked of him or not asked of him.

Q Did Mr. Allen in his interview with the Security Division ever explicitly state that he aligned himself with the individuals who participated in the events at the Capitol on January 6th?

A I don't specifically remember what he stated in regards to his interview. But our decision to revocate his clearance is not based off of one interview or one statement that he makes in an interview. It's based off the totality of the facts. At times when we interview individuals, they are less than forthright with us.

Q And do you know -- I talked about this meeting that occurred between Mr. Allen and his supervisor, and I believe the CDC may have been there as well on September 29th, after he sent the email where they were defending the Director's testimony, according to Mr. Allen, and he was, you know, stating the reasons for, including certain statements in his email. Was the supervisor mad that he was questioning the Director's testimony?

A I am sorry; I wasn't there that day. I don't know.

Q Did the supervisor represent in his Security Division meeting the content of I think he used the word "counseling" that he provided Mr. Allen?

A I think it was because Mr. Allen's comments were concerning in regards to the email that he was putting out and the rhetoric that was contrary to known facts regarding January 6th.

Q Even though The New York Times had put out a news story at that point in time that there was at least one informant in the crowd that was reporting back to their FBI handler?

A Again, I haven't read The New York Times article. I can't provide any information on that.

Q Okay. Are you aware of whether Mr. Allen submitted a request for outside employment?

A I believe y'all asked me about this previously -- or I've heard that.

Q And did he submit?

A I don't know that personally.

Q Are you aware that, when he testified before this committee, he had still not heard back from the FBI on his request for outside employment?

A I don't have the transcripts of his appearance in front of the committee.

Q And how long does the FBI have to respond to an individual's request for outside employment?

A I don't believe there is actually a set number of days.

Q Okay. What's the average time period in which the FBI responds?

A I would say usually within 2 weeks.

Q Within 2 weeks?

A But it can be longer.

Q Okay. And I will represent to you it had been more than 2 weeks at that point in time.

Are you aware if the FBI has resolved Mr. Allen's outside employment request?

A Mr. Allen's outside employment request doesn't come to me. It would go to his field office.

Q Okay.

A And so I have never seen anything regarding Mr. Allen's outside employment request.

Q Who at the field office is in change of outside employment requests?

A Usually they go through the chief security officer, but then they are reviewed by the Office of Integrity and Compliance.

Q And Office of Integrity and Compliance is separate from the Human Resources?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And, prior to the submission of the outside employment request, Mr. Allen submitted a prayer journal in October 2022 for prepublication review but never heard back from the FBI. Were you aware of this?

A I heard that he had done this. I know that you all have asked about this. Unfortunately, I don't have anything to do with prepublication review. That falls outside my branch.

Q Was the Security Division aware of his request to publish a prayer journal?

A I am not sure. I am sorry, I don't know.

Q Does the Security Division normally get information regarding outside employment requests or prepublication review requests while an individual's clearance is suspended and they are undergoing an investigation?

A They usually -- prepublication requests, again, don't come through Security Division. That is a whole different group within the organization. Outside employment requests generally would go from the field office into Security Division, but they are reviewed by our Office of Integrity and Compliance. The Security Division is the archival receptacle for holding them. We don't approve them or deny them.

Q So how did you become aware of the prayer journal, was it just from representations by the committee or --

A It's either here or something that I have heard subsequently in prep, but I am not familiar with that at all.

Q During your --

A As far as my -- it hasn't come in front of me. I wasn't asked for it. I wasn't asked to approve it. I wasn't asked to intervene in anything with it. No, ma'am.

Q During your preparation for your transcribed interview this morning, did you look into any outside employment requests that Mr. Allen may have made?

A I did not.

Q Did you review the facts surrounding the submission of the prayer journal?

A I did not.

Q What is Mr. Allen's current status with the Bureau?

A His clearance has been revocated, and I believe we are in the 30-day window of his response to if he would like to be appeal the revocation.

Q Has Mr. Allen responded yet?

A I am not aware that he has.

Q Okay.

A But I wouldn't be briefed at that at this point.

Q When do you get briefed?

A I usually would get it once of revocation would be -- once the appeal is in and they are pushing the revocation package through to -- for reconsideration.

Q And what is included in the revocation reconsideration package?

A It would be any mitigating information that the individual provides.

Q Okay. And you are the official that reviews the mitigating evidence. Or who reviews the mitigating evidence?

A The mitigating evidence will be reviewed within the Adjudications Unit and then provided to me.

Q And then you make the final decision on the appeal. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And then the individual also has an appeal to judges or lawyers at DOJ. Is that correct?

A The ARC, yes, ma'am.

Q Yes, okay. What was the date of the Bureau's last communication with Mr. Allen?

A I'm sorry; I don't know that.

Q Do you know if it was the revocation letter?

A I don't know.

Q Has the Bureau provided Mr. Allen with the opportunity to review all of the materials relied upon as the basis for his security clearances revocation?

A Generally the process would be they would come in and say, "Hey, I want to repeal this revocation," and then you begin the redaction process, and then they get all the documents.

Q How long does the redaction process normally take?

A It depends. I don't do redaction either. That's done through a different group.

Q And what is redacted when it goes to the individual whose clearance has been revoked?

A Sometimes it's identifying information of individuals that have provided information that have requested confidentiality.

Q Okay. If the individual has not requested confidentiality, is their named released?

A I am not sure. I don't do the redactions, and I don't oversee them.

Q So what all is provided? What all would be provided to Mr. Allen after he appeals the decision for the revocation? Are the 302s provided to Mr. Allen?

A Any information utilized in the decisionmaking towards the revocation will be provided to him, any and all.

Q Any and all. So that would be the emails --

A Anything that has been used for the revocation decision he will get.

Q So I want to be specific about the materials. So the 302s, would he get access to those if they were relied upon?

A And I am going to end up answering the same thing over and over again. If it was the 302 that was relied upon for the revocation, absolutely, yes.

Q Okay. And if it was an instant message relied upon?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the emails relied upon?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Did the FBI unlawfully retaliate against Mr. Allen for raising concerns about the veracity of Director Wray's testimony?

A The FBI absolutely did not retaliate against.

[12:15 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And what's the basis for your conclusion?

A That I use the whole person concept regarding security clearances. I'm not involved in any type of retaliation or anything. I take my job very seriously.

Q Uh-huh.

A I'm very loyal to this country --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- myself. And I've been charged with making unbiased decisions.

Q Uh-huh.

A His investigation has nothing to do with the statement that he made about the director at all.

Q Does it raise any concerns that this whole security process was kicked off by a September 29th email that questioned the veracity of the director's testimony?

Ms. Gibbs. I think you're misstating the email.

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Moore. Yeah, absolutely.

Ms. Gibbs. Let's take a look at the email.

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Ms. Moore. This email doesn't say anything about the director's testimony at all.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay.

A None. Zero.

Q We'll read this. It says: There is a good possibility the D.C. elements of our organization are not being forthright about the events of the day or the influence of government assets.

And with that, Mr. Allen said he was referring to the director's testimony.

A But that's not what this email says. So when my intake --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- unit gets it, that's not what they're looking at. They're looking at the facts that come in. It had nothing to do about Director Wray's testimony.

Q Uh-huh.

A It had to do with the fact that his allegiance seemed to be off.

Q And did Mr. Allen describe how he was questioning Director Wray's testimony with this statement in his Security Division interview?

A I can't remember exactly what he said, if it related specifically to this. What he said --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that I do remember specifically from his interview was the reason he shared this --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- was because the Holy Spirit told him to.

Q Okay. Do you know if he mentioned --

A I don't know if the Holy Spirit told him that the director --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- lied. I don't know. He said he shared this stuff because of that.

Q Uh-huh.

A What I remember reading didn't specifically relate one to the other.

Q Do you know if he ever brought up the director's testimony in his Security Division interview?

A I do believe in his Security Division interview he discussed that, yes.

Q So if that is why he sent this email or used the wording "there's a good possibility the D.C. elements of our organization are not being forthright about the events of the day or the influence of government assets," and that was a reference to the director's testimony, does it concern you that this is the email that kicked off the Security Division investigation of Mr. Allen?

A Mr. Allen's Security Division investigation was --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- based off of information provided by the Charlotte division. It was not because he questioned the veracity of the director of the FBI. It was the totality of his actions. And all suspensions and revocations have been reviewed under the whole person concept in totality of all of his actions, not a statement.

Q Uh-huh. And this is the email that was shown to Mr. Allen at his security interview. Is that correct?

A I know that he saw this one. I'm not sure what else --

Q Okay.

A -- he was shown.

Q And so Mr. Allen was suspended on January 19th, 2022. And then his revocation was official on May 3rd, 2023, so roughly a year and a half. Is that correct?

A That would sound -- monthwise, yes, ma'am.

Q Is that a normal time period for these investigations, a year and a half?

A Investigations can take a very short period of time -- I kind of talked about them -- sometimes as little as 20 days, even less, and sometimes up in the thousands of days.

Q Okay.

A So his is not outside the norm, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. And is, like, the investigative file that the Security Division reviewed for Mr. Allen, is that a bulky file?

A It would be, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. I want to move to discussing Mr. Steve Friend. During your transcribed interview on April 24th, you testified that you were familiar with Mr. Friend, knew of his suspension, and knew he ultimately resigned. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Friend had received performance awards throughout his career at the FBI for various tasks, as well as for his overall performance?

A That would have been part of his final write-up, yes, ma'am.

Q And during your transcribed interview, you confirmed that you were aware that you signed the September 16th, 2022, letter, suspending his security clearance. Is that correct?

A I did, yes, ma'am.

Q Between April 24th and today, have you had time to examine the documents particular to Mr. Friend's case?

A I have reviewed them.

Q And you've reviewed all of the 302s or emails that would have been involved in Mr. Friend's case?

A I read most of them, yes, ma'am.

Q And when did you read those?

A Yesterday.

Q Yesterday. Okay. And during your transcribed interview, you refused to answer questions regarding Mr. Friend's suspension because it was an ongoing investigation. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q What investigative work occurred between April 24th and May 16th when his clearance was revoked?

A It would have been the logical investigative steps where they interview individuals, we look at computer access, those type of logical steps. I cannot tell you every single step that was taken because I don't know every single step. I wasn't the investigator.

Q So after April 24th, 2023, the Security Division was still interviewing individuals in Mr. Friend's case?

A I apologize. Would you ask your first question again? I must have misunderstood --

Q Yeah.

A -- what you asked me.

Q What investigative work occurred between April 24th, 2023, and May 16th, 2023?

A From April -- my understanding was, in April, that that case had been moved to the Adjudications Unit. If you'll remember --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- when we talked, I said that I would come back after the adjudication was complete --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- because I did know at that point that it had probably been moved over to adjudications and it would be imminently forthcoming.

Q Okay.

A I knew those were close. So my -- at that point it would be the Summary EC being done, all the facts checked and double checked and put into a document for my review.

Q Okay. And so do you know when it moved over to the adjudicative stage?

A I'm sorry, I don't know the date it did.

Q And do you know -- we were just talking about Mr. Allen. Was his case in the adjudicative stage when you testified here before the committee?

A From what I remember, yes, ma'am, it was.

Q Okay. Have you read the Summary EC?

A For?

Q Mr. Friend.

A Yes, I have.

Q And how long was that Summary EC?

A It was many -- it was multiple pages.

Q Multiple pages? More than 10?

A I can't tell you how many pages. I read it on a computer. So I don't know exactly how many pages. I'm --

Q Did --

A -- scrolling.

Q Did you have to scroll a lot?

A I had to scroll.

Q Okay. And who wrote the Summary EC?

A I don't remember who the investigator was that wrote it.

Q Do you remember any of the investigators on Mr. Friend's case?

A Not specifically I don't, no, ma'am. I know, again, Julie Halferty was the unit chief. It would have gone from her through Dena Perkins. It would have gone through our legal, Tasha Gibbs --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and then up through the section chief, the deputy assistant director, the assistant director, and then to me.

Q And I'm sorry, I can't remember if you said Julie or Julia. But Julie?

A It -- it's Julie Halferty.

Q Okay.

A Don't ask me how to spell it. I'm sorry. I don't know.

Q We'll just call her Ms. Julie.

A It could be -- it's Julie, I think.

Q Okay. Did she sign off on the Summary EC or --

A She did.

Q Okay.

A They would have, yes.

Q So she would have to approve every --

A And I'm going to be honest with you.

Q Yep.

A I'm so sorry if I --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- misstate this, so --

Q Okay.

A I'm trying to be really careful.

Julie would normally be the unit chief. I didn't check to see who actually signed it. There could have been an acting --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- on the desk that day. But by all typical processes, whomever was the unit chief on that specific day --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- would have signed it, which is Julie at this time.

Q Okay.

A And was then, unless she was out.

Q And what was your involvement in Mr. Friend's case?

A I'm, again, the security program manager.

Q Did you perform any investigative work?

A I did not.

Q You reviewed all the investigative material, though, correct?

A In preparation for today, I went through the file. I didn't review every 1A in everything, but I tried to get a good overview of the file so we could discuss it.

Q And prior to signing the September 16th, 2022, suspension letter, what documents had you reviewed regarding Mr. Friend's case?

A For that I review what came up for me, which is the recommendation for suspension.

Q Okay. And did that include a package of information?

A It would include a document, a summary document of the reason, yes, ma'am, along with the actual suspension letter that's served to the employee.

Q And do you know who prepared that summary document?

A I don't know who the investigator is, no, ma'am.

Q And would that investigator have also authored the suspension letter?

A More likely than not, yes, ma'am, it's usually the same person, unless they've transferred or it's been transferred.

Q And I'm assuming you don't remember who --

A I don't.

Q -- authored the letter?

A I didn't look at that part. I'm sorry.

Q And you signed the May 16th, 2023, revocation letter for Mr. Friend?

A I did, yes, ma'am.

Q What documents did you review prior to signing the revocation letter?

A Again, I would have reviewed the summary document that came with it.

Q How long was the summary document?

A It was pages. I had to scroll.

Q Pages. You had to scroll. Okay.

And Mr. Friend's case was included in the May 17th, 2023, letter to the committee, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And it's on page 9. Sorry. We'll flip --

A It's the date.

Q -- to page 9 now.

A I get --

Q Yeah. Do you know who provided the information for this section of the letter?

A The information, it looks like it's contingent upon Security Division investigation. So it would have come somewhere within Security Division would have provided the document. I know that the Office of General Counsel, Tasha Gibbs, who is assigned to Security Division, would have reviewed this.

Q And who authored this section?

A I don't know that answer.

Q And Ms. Gibbs would have reviewed this section --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- as written?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And then it would have been sent to Mr. Dunham for inclusion?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay.

A That's how I believe it worked.

Q Did you have any role in drafting or approving this section?

A I didn't, no, ma'am.

Q Did you have any conversations with the Office of Congressional Affairs regarding Mr. Friend prior to the letter's transmittal?

A We discussed it because I have the general counsel that signed to --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- OCA as preparation for that, yes, ma'am.

Q And did you discuss Mr. Friend's case with the Office of Congressional Affairs prior to your testimony today?

A I did. In regards to prepping for my testimony, which I didn't clearly state on the last thing, I talked to them about Mr. Friend not in relation to the letter but in relation to my prep for coming over.

Q Okay. On page 9 of the letter, in the first paragraph under Mr. Friend's security clearance suspension, it states: The Security Division opened a security investigation regarding Mr. Friend in September 2022, after receiving a referral from the FBI's Jacksonville Field Office.

Do you remember who submitted the referral?

A It came through their management, and I believe their chief security officer and ASAC and the SAC -- oh, wait, wait, wait, wait. Hold on.

No. That's not how it happened in this one.

Q Okay.

A This came in to us -- what was -- how we opened it, the information came from our Insider Threats Office.

Q Okay.

A I'm so sorry.

Q And who from the Insider Threats Office?

A I don't know the individual within there that sent it over. There's a process that if something rises to their concern, they'll send it over to us. So I'm sorry.

Q And what rose to the level of concern for the Insider Threat in this case?

A That it was the totality of the actions that had been reported to us to date. Mr. Friend had plugged in an unauthorized --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- unregistered, what we would find out was a personally owned thumb drive into an FBI secure system --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and downloaded a significant number of documents.

Q Okay.

A That gets flagged.

Q Uh-huh.

A We had received a referral prior to that from the Jacksonville Field Office.

Q Okay.

A In the totality, that's what opened the case.

Q And the referral specifically from the Jacksonville Field Office --

A Was not opened initially.

Q -- who did that come --

A I don't know. I didn't look at that part of the referral. I'm sorry.

Q And it wasn't opened initially. Why wasn't it opened initially?

A Initially it looked like misconduct.

Q Okay.

A Just employee misconduct. It wasn't until we had the security concern that it really fell into our lane.

Q And what type of misconduct?

A It was refusal to participate in a -- as a transport agent in a lawful arrest.

Q As a transport agent, is that what you said?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And what's a transport agent?

A It's the individual that drives the car after the person's arrested over to the United States Marshals Office and checks them in.

Q So was it your understanding that Mr. Friend was supposed to be the transport agent that day?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And are you aware that he raised concerns to his chain of command regarding the use of the SWAT team for this particular arrest warrant?

A Subsequently I'd be made aware of that, yes, ma'am.

Q And are you aware that he first went to his ASACs?

A I thought he went to his supervisor.

Q You're right. He did go -- so he went to his supervisor and then he went to the ASACs. Is that your understanding?

A I don't believe he went to the ASACs. I believe he was called in by the ASACs.

Q Okay. And what do you understand the chain of events to be there?

A That there was concern --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- because it was a lawful warrant --

Q Okay.

A -- and that he had not read any of the documents surrounding it.

Q Uh-huh.

A He was just refusing to go.

Q And who told you that he was refusing to go?

A Well, I subsequently read it in the file.

Q Okay. And who made the representations that Mr. Friend refused to go?

A I believe the special agent in charge or one of the ASACs.

Q Okay. And do you know who the special agent in charge of the Jacksonville Field Office is?

A It's Sherri Onks, O-n-k-s.

Q And are you aware that after his meeting with the ASACs, they ordered him to take AWOL status on the day of the raid?

A I subsequently read that, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And are you aware of whether or not he was ordered to go on AWOL prior to the day he was supposed to be AWOL?

A I wasn't part of those conversations. I've been -- I've -- somewhere I've been briefed that along the way, yes, ma'am.

Q That he was ordered to go AWOL status?

A I think there was, from what I was briefed --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that I remember -- this is not my firsthand recollection.

Q Uh-huh.

A I was not in the room.

Q Uh-huh.

A -- was that because we needed to know who was going to be on the arrest, who was going to be on the transport, we couldn't have someone just not show up or call out at the last minute. You'd like to preplan that, so for the safety of all involved and to --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- make sure there's no confusion.

And so I think at that point, because he refused to participate, he didn't want to read the affidavit, he was put out on AWOL.

Q Okay. And Mr. Friend has represented to the committee that he never refused to participate in the raid. Are you aware of that?

A I'm not.

Q Did he discuss that in his Security Division interview?

A I don't remember that, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. And so, obviously, if he's ordered to take AWOL status, he cannot show up to participate in the search and arrest warrant, correct?

A Correct. And so and, again, I think I've talked about that initially. When that came in, that doesn't fall under Security Division.

Q Uh-huh.

A That's a misconduct concern, and that goes in a different stream, not ours.

Q But this was considered as part of his security clearance investigation?

A It was in the totality of the person --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- because remember we talked about --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- I look at all their awards, their behavior, any disciplinary, and any actions that occur that we find during the course of the investigation, because we look at the whole person --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- not just one incident.

Q And how did the Security Division determine that it was misconduct if Mr. Friend was ordered to go on AWOL status?

A Again, we don't look --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- or -- I'm sorry. Ask me that again. I'm not sure what --

Q Because you initially said the referral that came from the Jacksonville Field Office appeared to be misconduct. Is that correct?

A It did.

Q And how does that determination that it appears to be misconduct get made?

A The intake unit makes the decision on does this rise to the level of something that is a risk to national security.

Q Uh-huh.

A So someone who doesn't want to go do something doesn't necessarily rise to a level of national security. So it's misconduct, like, hey, that's between you and your employee. That's going to have to go down the inspection, internal investigation route.

Q Uh-huh.

A That's not us.

Q And there's a difference between refusing to go do something and being ordered to take AWOL status.

Was Mr. Friend ever able to refuse to participate in the raid?

A I'm not part of those conversations, and I can't testify to that.

Q Okay. Do you know if those conversations occurred within the Security Division? Were they aware of those conversations?

A I am aware that, what you have told me today, that there was a conversation -- and I don't know if it's Friend that has said this or if I've read it somewhere -- was that he was ordered to take AWOL and so he didn't participate.

Q Okay.

A I know that originally he refused to participate.

Q Okay. And on May 7 -- in the May 17th, 2023, letter, at the bottom of the page there, it says: On September 3rd, 2022, Mr. Friend entered FBI space and downloaded documents from FBI computer systems to an unauthorized removal flash drive. The FBI then required Mr. Friend to attend a security awareness briefing regarding his actions, but he refused to do so.

Did I read that correctly?

A Which page are you on?

Q On page 9, at the very bottom.

A Okay. Which one -- okay. You started there. Okay.

Q Okay. Yeah. Would you like me to reread?

A No. That's okay. No, that's what it says. You can read.

Q Okay. According to Mr. Friend's testimony, he did not refuse to attend the security awareness briefing. Are you aware of that testimony?

A I am not aware of that testimony, no, ma'am.

Q After learning from his supervisors that the training was a disciplinary action, he requested to have an attorney present. Are you aware of his request?

A I'm not.

Q Friend testified that his supervisor said he was not allowed to have an attorney present and he was -- he asked to have documentation provided as for why he could not have an attorney present. And that was never provided to him, even though his supervisor said that they would.

A Somewhere in here I'm going to have to stop you, because --

Q Yeah.

A You've lost me now.

Q Okay.

A So he did not attend a security awareness briefing.

Q Correct.

A That, I know for a fact.

Q Okay.

A He was scheduled to come and attend --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- a security awareness briefing. So all the other, like, he wants an attorney --

Q Yep.

A -- and -- none of that has to do with me. He didn't attend the security awareness briefing.

Q Do you know if the fact that he asked to have an attorney present, was that ever considered by the Security Division?

A That would not have been considered by the Security Division, nor are attorneys allowed to be present during security awareness briefings.

Q Okay. And were the facts, as Mr. Friend has presented the facts, that his supervisor said that he would get back to him on that, was that ever considered by the Security Division?

Ms. Gibbs. When you say presented the facts, to who?

[redacted] To the committee.

Ms. Moore. Okay.

Ms. Gibbs. I just want to make sure we're --

Ms. Moore. I'm not aware of his testimony to the committee.

BY [redacted]:

Q And he never received further communication from his supervisor on whether or not he could have an attorney present. Are you aware of that fact?

A I'm not aware of that fact, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. And that was why he did not attend the training. Are you aware of that?

A What I'm aware of is that --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- Mr. Friend did not attend the training -- or attend the security awareness briefing.

Q Uh-huh. Okay. And on May 16th, 2023, the FBI revoked Mr. Friend's clearance. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And you signed that communication?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you know when Mr. Friend received that communication?

A I don't.

Q And -- but Mr. Friend had already resigned at that point in time. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am. We discussed earlier that some of this backlog and why it's --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- so many days is because we are obligated with the security -- the community of the intel -- intelligence community to follow through on misconduct invest -- not misconduct but security investigations as it relates to an individual's suitability to hold a clearance.

Q Okay. And on page 10 of the letter, under the inset portions of the guidelines there, it says: In addition to the security concerns that resulted in the suspension of Mr. Friend's security clearance, the investigation yielded evidence of additional security concerns.

What investigative steps led to the new evidence?

A Interviews, searches of publicly available social media inform -- PASMI, review of computer access, those same things that we've discussed previously.

Q And who was interviewed for Mr. Friend's investigation?

A It would have been his colleagues, his coworkers, his supervisors.

Q Do you know specific individuals who were interviewed?

A I can't give you specifically the names outside of I know the special in agent in charge was, the ASAC was.

Q Uh-huh.

A I don't know his supervisor's name. And then many of his colleagues, task force officers were all interviewed.

Q And was a 302 produced for every single interview?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Did you review all those 302s prior to today?

A I read through most of them. I didn't review them in detail.

Q Okay. And when was Mr. Friend interviewed by the Security Division?

A I don't know the date, but it was between his suspension and revocation.

Q Okay. And his clearance was suspended on September 16th, 2022, and then it was revoked on May 16th, 2023.

Do you remember if it was in 2022 that he was interviewed?

A I don't remember specifically.

Q Okay. And then directly below the paragraph that I just read from, it states: Mr. Friend participated in multiple, unapproved media interviews, including an interview with a Russian Government news agency.

Did you review those media interviews?

A I didn't review them myself, no, ma'am.

Q What did you review regarding the interviews?

A I read through his file, but I didn't specifically read that. I read about -- I know that this was in there. It was summarized for me.

Q Uh-huh.

A But I didn't read the interviews themselves, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. And Mr. Friend learned about some of the these media interviews when -- during his Security Division interview. Are you aware of that?

A He would have been asked about them, yes, ma'am.

Q And he only became aware that a portion of an interview he gave appeared on Russia Today in that Security Division interview. Are you aware of that?

A I am aware that he stated that one of the interviews he didn't know was Russian.

Q Okay. And so you're aware that he disputes that he appeared on Russia Today?

A There were more than one interview with a foreign news organization.

Q Uh-huh.

A He disputes one of the interviews that he believes was compiled from another.

Q And did those -- did those facts get considered by the Security Division?

A Of course. We consider the whole person. We consider all good things that they've done and all actions that have been taken.

Q Uh-huh.

A Absolutely.

Q And during your transcribed interview on the 24th, you were asked about Mr. Friend's request for outside employment. Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q And do you remember how many times Mr. Friend sought approval for outside employment?

A I don't know specifically how many times. I know specifically the one we asked -- were asked about.

Q Okay. Would it surprise you that he had sought approval for outside employment twice before?

A No.

Q Okay. And Mr. Friend's first request for outside employment was denied. Did you review the denial --

A I did not.

Q -- of the request?

A No, ma'am.

Q Do you know who denied the first request?

A I don't.

Q And then the second request for outside employment, he also included a request for his firearms training records. Do you remember that?

A I am very familiar with that one, yes, ma'am.

Q And you said it was a mistake that his firearms records were not provided to him. Do you remember that?

A They were provided to him.

Q Okay.

A They were not provided him in a timely manner.

Q Okay. And you described a mistake that occurred at the Bureau regarding the firearms records.

A Yes.

Q Between the time of April 24th and now, have you discovered who was responsible for that mistake?

A Again, we talked about it in my last transcribed interview.

Q Uh-huh.

A He sent in his request for his firearms records to the Firearms Training Unit.

Q Uh-huh.

A The Firearms Training Unit --

Q Uh-huh --

A -- when they didn't know how to give him the records, called Information Management Division.

Q Uh-huh.

A When -- we've talked about this. We -- for out of 38,000 FBI employees, we have very few that are ever suspended.

Q Uh-huh.

A And a general employee may not come in contact with a suspended employee. So the supervisor in the Firearms Training Unit gets a call from an individual who is suspended.

Q Uh-huh.

A He doesn't -- most general employees don't even understand the difference between suspension and revocation.

Q Uh-huh.

A It's just not just something they come across. And so he's like, I don't know how to provide this information. So it gets referred over to Information Management Division, who then misunderstand it to be a terminated employee. And they're like, oh, in order for terminated employees to get their training records, they have to file a Freedom of Information Act.

Q Uh-huh.

A So that is what gets relayed to him, which was wrong.

Q Uh-huh.

A We could have gotten him those records sooner.

Q Uh-huh.

A But it got convoluted. And by the time we finally figured out or it was brought to our attention --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that's when I'm like, get him the records.

Q Uh-huh.

A But it wasn't intentional by anybody. It was a convolution of his status.

Q And has any new training or newsletters or emails been sent out about how to deal with these sorts of requests?

A So the individuals in that chain obviously --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- were counseled and said, hey --

Q Okay.

A -- here's the difference. Here's that.

So I can assure you they won't make that mistake again. But for our entire --

Q Okay.

A -- population of 38,000 employees, no.

Q And Mr. Friend also testified about how individuals at the FBI leaked his personal medical records to a New York Times reporter. Do you have any awareness about this?

A No.

Q And who's the custodian at the FBI of medical records? What unit or division is that held within?

A Those are held within medical, which falls under HRB, but I'm not sure if those are stored at IMD or if they're maintained strictly within the medical group.

Q Okay. So you don't have any awareness of this allegation by Mr. Friend?

A I know he's alleged this.

Q Okay.

A I have no idea what he's referring to or what medical records he has -- he's talking about at all.

Q When you heard about this allegation from Mr. Friend, did you do any sort of investigating?

A No. I heard about it yesterday.

Q Okay. Between yesterday and today --

A No.

Q -- have you done anything?

A No.

Q Do you plan to take any actions on this?

A No.

Q Do you -- the individual who takes over in your role after June 3rd, will this be part of the brief to them to look into whether or not medical records were inappropriately released to a reporter?

A If Mr. Friend would like to write us a letter --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- alleging what it was and what information it was --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that was released and who it was released to --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that will be reviewed.

Q Okay.

A But just general things that are said out in the universe, we don't necessarily follow through on them, no.

Q Has Mr. Friend been provided with all the materials relied upon for his security clearance adjudication?

A He will if he asks for reconsideration of the revocation.

Q And it's your understanding that he hasn't asked for that yet?

A I don't know if he has or not, no, ma'am.

[redacted] Okay.

We'll go off the record. We're at the end of our time.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q Who's going to be taking your job now?

A They have not named my successor at this time.

Q Is there going to be an interim?

A Yes, sir, there will be. His name is Timothy Dunham.

Q And have you had some transition meetings with Mr. Dunham?

A Not really. We've met today. We met -- this morning for about 15 minutes.

Q Okay.

A And we met yesterday for about 30.

Q Okay. That's the totality of your transition?

A At the moment.

Q And today's your last day at the FBI?

A Yes, sir.

Q So you don't plan any future --

A I will be available for any and all contact that's needed. Mr. Dunham has served in my absence before.

Q Uh-huh.

A I think, as we know, I've unfortunately had a family issue that I've been out for the last couple of months on, and he has filled in in that. So he's largely up to speed.

Q Okay.

A He's my primary fill-in.

Q Okay. And is he up to speed with all the information on Mr. Friend's case?

A No, sir.

Q Is he up to speed with all the information on Mr. O'Boyle's case?

A No, sir.

Q Is he up to speed with all the information on Mr. Allen's case?

A No, sir. People who are not directly related to these would not be briefed on them until the time it was necessary. So when he comes in as the acting, if this is something that he gets called to testify on or he has to lay in on, so if the revocation reconsideration comes in, then he will.

Q Outside of your --

A So we just don't brief random people.

Q Well, he's not a random person. He's taking your job.

A He's coming in --

Q He's your deputy.

A He -- but not right at this moment. He wouldn't --

Q Okay. Well, he's not a random person. That's a ridiculous characterization.

A I'm sorry. I'm just trying to --

Ms. Moore. I'm so sorry.

[redacted] I said that's a ridiculous characterization. He is the number two official in your organization.

Ms. Moore. I apologize. As a general rule, we only discuss the stuff, again, with need-to-know. And until he is actually my acting or signing something, he has no need to know about it.

[redacted] Okay. In your opinion, I guess.

[redacted] Okay. We'll go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Back on the record, please.

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, let's just return briefly to Mr. Allen's security revocation decision, if we could. There was discussion in the last hour about the fact that one particular email that he sent on September 29th was the initial basis for his referral.

Do you recall those questions?

A I do recall those questions. It was one of the items, yes, ma'am.

Q Right. And you made very clear, I think, over and over that it was not just one thing, it was many things, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q But with respect to the beliefs that he expressed in that email, regardless of how you characterize them, whether he's talking about Director Wray's testimony or not, is it fair to say that it's not clear on the face of the email what he's referring to?

A That would be correct.

Q Because he doesn't mention Director Wray by name at all, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Regardless, suppose, if you would, that Mr. Allen had sent that same email from his personal email account and to individuals that he knew outside of the FBI. Would that have been a concern to you in your position as security manager?

A We wouldn't look at what he did from his personal email to a friend, no, ma'am.

Q So what's the difference? Why does it matter that he sent it from his FBI email to FBI colleagues?

A It appears that he is attempting to influence their decision and thought-making process.

Q And is it fair to say that he's trying to influence them specifically with respect to a lawful mission of the FBI, which in this case was the investigation of crimes occurring at the U.S. Capitol on January 6th?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Now, referring to exhibit No. 1, that May 17th letter --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- from Mr. Dunham, there is a footnote that was included. It's footnote 4, and I think it's on page 6.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Could you take a look at that and let me know when you've had a chance to review it?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay.

A I'm good. Yes, ma'am.

Q Oh, excellent. Would you mind reading that footnote?

A It is important to distinguish between criminal conduct and an individual who is engaged in First Amendment protected activity. Other FBI employees who attended events on January 6, 2021 -- but who did not commit criminal conduct, such as trespass into a restricted zone -- did not receive security clearance suspensions or revocations.

Q Now, I understand that that footnote was dropped in a discussion of a different employee, Mr. Gloss. But the footnote states clearly that the Security Division and the FBI was aware that other FBI employees had attended January 6th events in protest, presumably, protected First Amendment activities. Correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And those people were not subject to security investigations and review. Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And why weren't they subjected to security investigations based on First Amendment protected activities?

A Because we don't review people's conduct based off of First Amendment protected activities. FBI employees are entitled to those.

Q Now, isn't it fair to say that what distinguishes these other FBI employees, say the ones who went to demonstrations, you know, peaceful demonstrations on January 6th but did not engage in crimes, what distinguishes them from Mr. Allen is the fact that Mr. Allen obstructed a lawful FBI investigation and used his official position and his FBI email account to promote views of disinformation about the FBI and to discourage other FBI employees from doing their work?

A That would be correct, yes, ma'am.

Q I'm going to move to Mr. -- discussion of Mr. Friend.

Now, Mr. Friend's security clearance was revoked by the FBI on May 16th, 2023, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] Do we already have that as an exhibit?

[redacted] I don't believe we do.

Ms. Moore. I don't have his revocation letter, no, ma'am.

[redacted] So that revocation letter I'm going to mark as exhibit 6.

[Moore Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. And we also have exhibit 1 still which discusses the same process.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q The Security Division opened a security investigation regarding Mr. Friend in September 2022, after receiving referral from the FBI's Jacksonville Field Office, correct?

A Yes, ma'am -- or -- I'm sorry. We opened our investigation based off of a referral from the Insider Threat Office.

Q You indicated that before. Thank you.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And where is Insider Threat Office?

A It's located in Huntsville, Alabama.

Q Okay. So it's not a part of the FBI headquarters?

A It's conceived -- our Huntsville, Alabama, is like our HQ2 location. So it's a campus that's just located in Huntsville. Our technology entities are going to be located there.

Q Mr. Friend's clearance was initially suspended on September 16th, 2022, based on concerns under Adjudicative Guidelines E, personal conduct; and K, handling protected information. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And the specific concern that resulted in this initial suspension was stemming from an incident that occurred in August of '22, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And that incident, we spoke of it a little bit in the last hour. I'm going to get into it in a little more depth.

That -- in that incident, Mr. Friend refused to participate in the execution of a court-authorized arrest of a criminal subject. Is that correct?

A So Mr. Friend did that. I want to be really clear just to specify. We opened our case based off of the referral from Insider Threat where he put an unauthorized thumb drive into an FBI-controlled access system, a secret system, and began downloading a bulk of information.

Q Okay. You said that too.

A I'm sorry.

Q That's fine.

A I want to make sure we're really clear. Like, his refusal --

Q Yeah.

A -- was not the opening of our investigation.

Q Okay. So the initial referral from the Insider Threat Office, that's under Adjudicative Guideline K, handling protected information, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the fact that he put an unauthorized flash drive into an FBI system is just automatically a security trigger that no one would have the discretion of ignoring initially. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And that's because you don't know at that stage how serious a threat that kind of thing could be. But given the top secret information that's kept in FBI systems, you could imagine a serious problem if you don't investigate, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so you looked into it, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q All right. And during that initial investigation is when you learned of this other incident which occurred in August '22 regarding the refusal to participate in the arrest?

A Sort of, yes, ma'am. So originally we had been made aware of the August refusal to participate in the lawful transport of the subject. We did not open off of that one. When we got the Insider Threat, we opened off of that. And then you begin combining all the information to make a whole person review, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And I guess you might have said this earlier too, but when he initially stuck the unauthorized flash drive in the FBI system and downloaded the documents, that's what triggered the order or the request that he attend the security briefing, correct?

A Yes, ma'am. That is our standard procedure for initially -- some people plug in, like, a phone and they want to charge their phone, how you can do that with a cord. Well, you used to could do that in our system. And so that will also, because you can download information, so it triggers it.

So what we ask is that the employee must come in and have a security awareness briefing. They must surrender the device to us so we can review the device to determine if any classified information was inappropriately placed on it, and they must acknowledge to never do this action again.

Q And that requirement that he attend a security access briefing, that's a requirement that would have happened in any case if any employee had done what he'd done, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And his response to that request was to not attend, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And there was some discussion earlier that he thought he could have an attorney. Do you recall that discussion?

A I don't rem -- I remember that being asked about it, yes, ma'am.

Q Do you recall, during the investigation of his case, anyone telling you that he was requesting an attorney?

A No, ma'am.

Q And does an employee have a right to counsel when he attends a security access briefing at the FBI?

A They do not.

Q So if he did make that request, he was simply mistaken, correct?

A That is correct. As a condition of your employment, you're required to participate in internal investigations and, additionally, security investigations.

Q And that requirement of your employment is made clear to FBI agents from the beginning of their employment. Isn't that right?

A It's clear to all FBI employees, yes, ma'am.

Q And also with respect to your clearance generally, Federal employees are not given any right to hold a security clearance. Is that right?

A That is correct.

Q It's rather a privilege. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And in the process of reviewing security clearances, you're guided by an executive order that tells you you need to -- you need make your decisions with the utmost concern being national security, correct?

A That's what my obligation is to, yes, ma'am.

Q And there's no reasonable doubt standard as there is in the criminal context, correct?

A That's correct. Any doubt has to go to national security.

Q Very well. So in this case, when he chose not to attend the security briefing, the FBI was required to follow the guidelines under Guideline K, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And essentially to draw an adverse inference about his ability to protect classified information. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Now, beyond that, his investigation continued to reveal more security concerns. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And so now we're getting to the August '22 incident. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So in August of '22, Mr. Friend was given an order from a superior to participate, I think you said, as the driver in a court-ordered arrest of a January 6 criminal suspect. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And Mr. Friend resisted that request. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And, in fact, he refused to participate in the execution of that court-authorized search and arrest of the suspect, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And there was discussion earlier about whether you could really characterize his actions as a refusal.

Do you recall that discussion?

A I do, yes, ma'am.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Friend gave a declaration essentially under oath under 28 U.S.C. Section 1746 about these events? And this was a declaration that he made on September 21st, '22.

I'm going to mark it as exhibit 7.

[Moore Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q First, are you aware of that declaration?

A I'm not personally aware of it.

Q Okay.

A I'm sorry.

Q That doesn't surprise me.

It includes a cover page that was faxed to the IG.

A Okay.

Q But -- I'm going to hand you this. And, honestly, the only thing you really need to focus on right here is page -- there are no page numbers. Sorry.

A Okay.

Q But if you flip to -- that will be one, two, three, four -- the sixth page. So it might be kind of like page 3 on the back, I think. And there should be like a numbered paragraph 11 on that page.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So directing your attention to that paragraph -- and this would be down near the bottom. I think it's the -- it's the second to last sentence, full sentence. It starts --

A Okay.

Q -- "I told him." Let me know when you've located that sentence.

A "I told him." I've got it or -- you want the full sentence?

Q In just one second. I just want to make sure you have where I'm talking about, because I know I'm giving you --

A I have a half.

Q -- a long document.

A I have a sentence that's started, "I told him that." And that's a half a sentence, yes, ma'am.

Q Sorry.

A Yes, that's half a sentence. But, yes, ma'am, because I think it starts up that, He has stated that he wished I just.

Q Yes, yes.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So to be fair, let me have you take just a moment to look at that paragraph so you understand the context. I don't want you to ask -- I don't want to ask about something that you don't --

A Okay.

Q If you don't mind starting just with paragraph 11. And I know paragraph 11 continues --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- to the next page, but you don't have to keep turning. Just --

A I'm good. Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So fair to say that paragraph 11, in that paragraph, Stephen Friend is discussing this August incident where he refused to participate in the arrest of the J6 suspect. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And I guess my whole point here is to notice that he says, he admits in the declaration, quote: I told him -- meaning his superior -- that I was going to refuse to participate in any J6 cases.

Do you see that statement?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So is there any doubt that what he was doing was refusing to participate?

A No, ma'am.

Q Okay. This incident itself involved the use of a FBI SWAT team to execute the arrest, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And I -- you were a line agent at one point in your career. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am. I was also part of the SWAT team.

Q Oh, excellent. So you understand the SWAT matrix and how that works. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q All right. In this case, Mr. Friend was not part of that SWAT team. Is that correct?

A He was a member of SWAT previously, but at this time he was not, no, ma'am.

Q Was he familiar with the SWAT matrix in this case?

A He -- in this case, I don't believe he reviewed any of the documents in this case. I think he refused to also review any documents as they tried to help him understand the parameters of the arrest, and he refused to do that. So I would say, no, he was not.

Q Okay. And just briefly -- I don't need to get into details here. But when the FBI decides to use a SWAT team, is it fair to say that they do that because of danger to the agents who are executing the warrant, maybe the suspect is particularly dangerous, or a risk there would be flight or damage to evidence? Is that the kind of thing that you consider when you decide whether or not to use a SWAT team?

A We actually -- partially, yes, ma'am. So we will use a SWAT team if the situation calls for it. And so we do have a matrix. And it will say if they've previously been convicted of a crime that involved a handgun or a weapon, have they ever assaulted a law enforcement officer, are there violent dogs on the premises, are there excessive cameras, those type of things.

And so, again, it's much like building a cake we talked about. You start looking at those, and then it rises to the level of a SWAT team. We use agents a lot for different arrests. We use SWAT teams when very specific elements are hit.

Q Okay. And one of those is danger to the officers who are executing the warrant. Is that right?

A Absolutely. Our agents are very valuable to us.

Q And in the case here that Mr. Friend was objecting to, the SWAT team was charged with arresting a suspect named Tyler Bensch, B-e-n-s-c-h. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And Mr. Bensch was a member of the right wing militia group, the Three Percenters, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And Mr. Bensch had posted videos of himself out outside the Capitol on January 6th, wearing body armor, a gas mask, and holding an AR-15 style weapon. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And this was information that he posted and was publicly available for people to see, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And this information was known to the FBI when they decided to use the SWAT team in this case, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Did anyone explain that to Mr. Friend?

A My understanding was that they attempted to explain this to him, along with showing him the lawful court-authorized warrants. And he did not want to hear any of the information.

Q Okay. And I don't recall this for sure, So I'm just going to ask you. Around that time there was a high-profile incident in which one or maybe two FBI agents had been killed executing an arrest warrant. I believe it was in Miami.

Do you recall that incident?

A I'm very familiar with that.

Q Do you know when that happened in relation to this incident?

A It happened in February.

Q And this -- so the previous February. Is that right?

A It happened in -- this is '23. '22. February of 2021.

Q And it was a female officer. Is that right?

A It was. Laura.

Q Yes. Do you think Mr. Friend was aware of that incident?

A He absolutely was.

Q And were the people who made the decision to use the SWAT team to protect those officers aware of that decision?

A Absolutely.

Q I'm sorry if it's --

A We're fine.

Q Let me know --

A We're good.

Q Okay. All right. Just stepping outside a little bit. Are FBI agents allowed to declare themselves conscientious objectors with respect to certain kinds of criminal cases that the FBI is lawfully investigating?

A No, ma'am.

Q And what would happen if they did?

A That would go down a misconduct avenue to review that individual to determine if they're still suitable for work.

Q Okay. In this case -- and I think it was apparent in that declaration that you just looked at -- some of the things that Mr. Friend objected to with respect to January 6th cases included his belief that uniformly defendants who are charged in the District of Columbia are subjected to extended pretrial detention.

Are you familiar with that claim?

A I am familiar with that.

Q Do you believe that's true?

A I do not.

Q If it were true that some defendants were subjected to unfair or extended pretrial detention, isn't it true that that claim could be raised by the defendant to a magistrate judge in the district?

A Absolutely.

Q But it wouldn't be raised by -- to a Federal -- to a FBI agent. Is that right?

A That is correct.

Q In fact, FBI agents are not trained on constitutional issues as they apply to detention because that process happens after the FBI agent's role in the process is over. It happens when the case is already in a court and a Federal magistrate or a Federal judge is monitoring that process. Is that right?

A That is correct.

Q The other issue that Mr. Friend raised with his superiors and others, as he objected to January 6 cases, regarded jury composition. Do you recall that complaint on his part?

A I do.

Q And I believe that he said he believed that anyone charged in the District of Columbia would be subjected to an -- a biased or impartial jury. Do you recall that claim?

A I do.

Q Do you think that that is true?

A I do not.

Q Again, if a person, a defendant in a criminal case, had a concern about jury bias, they'd be able to raise that issue in -- after arraignment when his case was in front of a Federal judge or magistrate. Is that right?

A It would not be to the FBI. It would be later, yes, ma'am.

Q All right. And FBI agents are not trained on constitutional issues under the Sixth Amendment regarding jury composition. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. All right. So that's the August 22nd incident.

He letter marked as exhibit 1, the May 17th Durham -- or Dunham -- sorry -- Dunham letter also says that one of the bases for Mr. Friend's suspension of his security clearance was that he was espousing to superiors an alternative narrative about the crimes that occurred at the Capitol on January 6th. Is that right?

A It was, yes, ma'am.

Q And the nature of those alternative views are basically what we just described regarding pretrial detention and jury composition. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Why was this behavior of concern to the FBI?

A Again, it goes to his general conduct and his ability to carry out the duties of his job.

Q And if he had espoused his views privately and they didn't interfere with the execution of his professional obligations as an FBI agent, would the Security Division have been as concerned?

A No.

Q Would they have been concerned at all?

A If it had come to our attention, perhaps. But that's a First Amendment right. Not solo. You can pontificate that as a First Amendment right, so no.

Q So the main concern, fair to say, is that it was interfering with his work and, in this case, actually culminated in his refusal to participate in a court-authorized arrest. Is that right?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. In addition to what we've described already, the security investigation of Mr. Friend revealed that on September 3rd, '22 -- I'm sorry. That -- this says that he entered the workspace and downloaded documents from a system. This is the initial incident. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So disregard that.

A That's okay.

Q Okay. I'm sorry.

All right. I just want to note one thing about Guideline E in the Adjudicative Guidelines. You're familiar with Guideline E. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And that section of the guidelines specifically says that when an employee is directed and fails to participate in a security process, like a security access briefing, the guideline says, quote: Will normally result in an unfavorable -- and then ellipses -- security clearance action.

Are you familiar with that part of Guideline E?

A I am.

Q And can you explain a little bit about what that means while you're doing the security review?

A Sure. You have to be an active part of a security review; otherwise, you're an obstacle to it. And so, again, as part of that ability to have a clearance, you must comply with security investigations or security briefings or any aspect of that.

So his refusal to come in is an indication to us that he no longer cares about security.

Q And is it fair to say that the guideline is directing security managers like yourself to exercise less discretion in this context? Like, it's --

A Yes.

Q -- it's more significant --

A It is.

Q -- in your security analysis.

A It is.

Q And that's because it directly relates to security and his willingness to --

A To comply.

Q -- abide by your rules. Is that correct?

A People make mistakes. Like we kind of mentioned earlier that sometimes people will plug in an iPhone to charge it because it's the most convenient thing at their desk and they don't have any receptacles or something along those lines. That's an accident.

They come in. I'm really sorry, I didn't mean to do this. I won't do that again. Here's my phone, whatever you need to do to clean it up, or whatever that is.

That wasn't the case. When they refuse to come in, then it's an obstinance factor, and it begins to weigh into their ability to follow all security guidelines.

Q And that's your ultimate objective, right, is to determine whether this person is willing to keep national secrets safe? Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Everything that you look at is meant to go ultimately to that conclusion when you decide whether or not this is a safe risk for the --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q -- for the United States. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q All right. Ultimately, the FBI determined, pursuant to the guidelines, including Guideline E, that it had to mitigate its security concerns by suspending Mr. Friend's clearance. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And then after a thorough review, the FBI concluded that it had to revoke his clearance. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you agree with the decision to suspend Mr. Friend's security clearance?

A I do. We had to at that time remove the threat to national security. You're required to distance the two. So the suspension was necessary.

Q And do you agree that the ultimate decision to revoke his clearance was necessary?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q For the same reasons?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Was this decision to suspend and later revoke his security clearance consistent with the guidelines provided in the SEAD, National Security Adjudicative Guidelines?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. You answered a lot of these questions. I'm just going to skip ahead.

A Okay.

Q We talked a little bit about this, but the evidence in the investigation showed that Mr. Friend participated in multiple unapproved media interviews. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And there was some discussion about whether he didn't know that one of the media interviews was a Russian news agency. Do you recall discussion?

A I do, yes, ma'am.

Q And I believe that your answer in response to that was that there was multiple foreign media interviews. Is that right?

A There was more than one, yes, ma'am.

Q Can you explain what your recollection is with respect to that?

A I remember there were two that were from an adversarial country. One, he stated that he knew he did. And, two, the second one was that it was a conglomeration of other interviews that he had done that someone put together. And so he said that one wasn't his.

But, again, it's not a single action or a single interview. It was the totality, and it just wasn't those two. There were U.S. domestic ones where he disclosed information that, again, was not authorized publicly.

Q So there was an unauthorized disclosure of information. That was one concern, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q But also, he was supposed to have gotten approval -- I guess it's -- I'm sorry.

What office is it that would have given him approval for a media interview?

A Office of Public Affairs.

Q Oh, right. OPA?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So he at one point told investigators that he had obtained approval from OPA. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am. That would be untrue.

Q And how did you discover that that was not true?

A We interviewed the Office of Public Affairs, the individual who is authorized to approve media. And they didn't do it.

Q So in this case, there was the unauthorized discussion with the media and also a lack of candor with respect to this lie. Is that right?

A That would be true.

Q And did that lack of candor or lie cause additional security concerns?

A It does, yes, ma'am.

Q And why is that?

A It goes under general conduct. Again, now you're -- not only have you intentionally violated a security rule by refusing to comply, you're now in other areas not being forthright and truthful. And so it becomes, what are you being forthright and truthful with?

Q Right. And also -- so Mr. Friend in that case lied to investigators about whether he'd received approval for these media interviews. But on the other hand, he admitted that he publicly released sensitive FBI information on his personal social media accounts without authorization.

Do you recall that admission?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And was that part of your security review?

A It was, yes, ma'am.

Q Did this conduct raise additional security concerns for the FBI?

A It absolutely does. He readily admitted that he disclosed information that he was not authorized to disclose.

Q And what kind of harm could come from that kind of disclosure?

A You could harm future investigations, the reputation of the organization, reputation of other agents. It just undermines the entire organization and puts individuals at risk.

Q Are FBI agents in Mr. Friend's position aware that they need to have approval before they speak with media and reveal information?

A They are. We have media training every year.

Q All right. Finally, the evidence in the investigation of Mr. Friend showed that he secretly recorded a meeting with FBI management in apparent violation of Florida law. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

[1:22 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And this triggered an additional concern under Adjudicative Guideline J, I believe, criminal conduct. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Why is it a concern if an FBI agent commits a violation of State law?

A Because we expect our employees -- all employees to abide by all rules and regulations of the State or Federal Government.

Q I mean, to be a law enforcement officer, you might be expected to follow the law. Is that right?

A You would be expected to, yes, ma'am.

Q All right. In the end, the Security Division investigators determined that security concerns under guidelines E, personal conduct; J, criminal conduct; K, handling of protected information; and M, use of information technology, together warranted the revocation of Mr. Friend's security clearance. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And taken in its totality, do you agree with that determination?

A Yes, ma'am. We do the whole person review, as we've discussed numerous times. We take into all the accolades, all the behavior, all any prior awards or disciplinary actions, and then the actions of the investigation.

Q Was the suspension or revocation of Mr. Friend's security clearance motivated by animus?

A No.

Q Was it done to punish him for his political or ideological beliefs?

A No.

Q What was the motivation behind the FBI's decision to suspend and later revoke Mr. Friend's security clearance?

A Separate a risk from national security.

Q All right. Wasn't the FBI's true motive to protect the national security of the United States against a potential serious risk posed by Mr. Friend's continued access to top secret information?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q All right. And as you've stated before, there were other FBI employees who had expressed political and ideological views similar to Mr. Friend's who were not subject to security clearance review by the FBI. Is that right?

A That is true.

Q And isn't it fair to say that what distinguishes these other FBI employees from Mr. Friend is the fact that Mr. Friend refused to participate in the execution of a court-authorized search and arrest of a criminal suspect; he mishandled protected FBI information -- information systems -- excuse me -- then refused to participate in remedial security training; he engaged in unauthorized media interviews, including with a news agency of an adverse nation, and then lied to investigators about first obtaining authorization to participate in the interviews; and, finally, that he engaged in criminal conduct in violation of Florida State law?

A Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] Okay. One second. Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, can you remind me, how long have you been with the FBI?

A Twenty-eight years.

Q And you've been promoted a number of times, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. There was some discussion in the earlier hour about whether certain individuals had received performance awards or positive performance reviews. You've participated in a number of performance reviews for yourself, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Have you ever had a negative performance review?

A I have not.

Q Have you received any performance awards?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Can you tell us about any of those?

A I've received sustained performance, outstanding performance awards, which are -- it's a medal --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- for being selected as one of the highest performers in the office. I've received those multiple times. Incentive awards, again, for being one of the top 15 performers; on-the-spot awards; time-off awards. I received a multitude. I've been very fortunate.

Q I appreciate it.

[redacted] All right. Thank you.

We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We'll go back on the record. It's 1:41 p.m.

BY [redacted]:

Q Ms. Moore, last round, you were discussing Mr. Friend's case and the use of the SWAT matrix, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And you're familiar with the SWAT matrix?

A I am.

Q And would it concern you if an individual was cooperating with an investigation, willing to turn themselves in? How does that factor in to the SWAT matrix?

A It can factor in, but, again, we'll take the totality of the person and the situation.

Q So it doesn't matter if the person is cooperating or is willing to turn themself in?

A It depends.

Q Okay. What does it depend upon?

A If we believe them to be truthful and truly cooperating and in the best interests of the government.

Q If the individual's attorney had represented that they were willing to turn themselves in, do you take that as a truthful representation?

A I wouldn't know. I wasn't part of that investigation.

Q Okay. I want to turn to Special Agent Garrett O'Boyle. Are you familiar with his case?

A I am familiar with Garrett O'Boyle.

Q What is the status of Mr. O'Boyle's security clearance investigation?

A Mr. O'Boyle's security clearance investigation -- he is under suspension, and it is in -- currently, I am aware that it is in adjudication.

Q Adjudication?

How long do you foresee the adjudication process taking?

A That part, I don't know. I did ask, because I had hoped that it would come out before we came here so we'd be fully able to talk about everything. So I'm not sure.

Q Do you think it'll be soon?

A I think it'll be in the next -- within the month, I would think.

Q Okay. Uh-huh. And what investigative steps has your office taken -- the Security Division taken regarding Mr. O'Boyle's security clearance investigation between the transcribed interview on April 24th and today?

A I can't talk about the specific steps. I can talk about everything up to the suspension that I personally signed, because I won't be the one in seat to sign the revocation. I can tell you that I'm aware that he did not comply with the deadline for an interview, which currently is viewed as failure to cooperate.

Q And --

Ms. Greer. I would -- sorry. If I could just put something on the record.

It has obviously been the FBI and the department's position that we prefer that all of the clearance adjudications continue to their full adjudication before discussing them with the committee. That has been sort of longstanding executive branch position.

But in an effort to provide the committee additional information and given the fact that EAD Moore will no longer be the security program manager who will sign off on the adjudication -- on the final adjudication of Garrett O'Boyle, and recognizing the committee's specific interest in pursuing this information, she is prepared to discuss what information that she has about Mr. O'Boyle's suspension today.

[redacted] Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q And --

[redacted] Let me just add something.

[redacted] Yep.

[redacted] Megan, you just said the adjudication process, but Ms. Moore said the revocation papers, like it's already a foregone conclusion that Mr. O'Boyle --

Ms. Gibbs. I'm not sure.

Can you just read back what she said about that? I just want to make sure that we all the have the same understanding.

[redacted] Can we go off the record?

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]:

Q I thought I heard you say that you will not be signing the revocation papers. Is it your understanding that Mr. O'Boyle's -- ultimately will have his security clearance revoked permanently?

A I don't know, because I don't know what the recommendation will actually come up as, and I apologize if I stated that. It's a recommendation either for a security awareness briefing, a letter, or a revocation, or no action.

Q Okay. Have you discussed any of these cases -- Mr. Friend, Mr. O'Boyle, Mr. Allen -- with anyone outside of your group? Like, who in the FBI have you discussed these cases with?

A Office of General Counsel, the deputy director, and the assistant director of Security Division.

Q Okay. So you have spoke -- you have communicated with the deputy director about these cases?

A Not in detail.

Q Okay.

A He knows I'm here today. He knows I'm testifying. He walked past yesterday when I -- they were looking for me to sign some other paperwork, and I was in a prep for this.

Q Okay.

A He clearly knows those things.

Q Okay. And what can you tell us about the nature of your conversations with the deputy director about these three individuals?

A We haven't talked about them in detail in sense of like -- like we have today or any of that. I'll tell him that, hey, I know that that one is over in adjudication. I really had hoped it would come out so we could talk about it fully. That type of stuff, but not specific details.

Q Okay. So there's been no coordinated understanding that these individuals will have their, you know, security clearances revoked permanently?

A Absolutely not, no. Oh, and I've also talked about it with the associate deputy director, who sits above me.

Q Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q And you briefly mentioned that Mr. O'Boyle was failing to cooperate with the investigation. Is that correct?

A My understanding was he was given a date to have an interview done, and he did not comply with that date or respond to us in a manner.

Q And do you know when that date was?

A I don't.

Q Okay. Was that supposed to be after your April 24th?

A It was.

Q Okay. And so what other steps have been taken by the Security Division between April 24th and today?

A I can't talk about those.

Q But you just spoke about --

A I told you the one thing that I do know.

Q -- a interview that was supposed to --

A Because I asked specifically, is this an adjudication? Was there any chance this will be done? And I --

Q So you don't know what other investigative steps have been taken or you can't talk about those?

A Both.

Q Both. Okay. But you could talk about how he hasn't -- failed to cooperate with the investigation?

A I can tell you that, yes.

Q Okay. So you can't tell us any other investigative steps that the Security Division has taken?

A From suspension to current, no, I can't.

Q Okay.

A I can talk about anything before the suspension.

Q Okay. Do you remember signing Mr. O'Boyle's September 23rd, 2022, letter?

A I know that I signed it on that date, yes, ma'am.

Q We'll enter that as exhibit No. 8.

[Moore Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Have you had sufficient time to review, Ms. Moore?

A I'm familiar with it, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So in the letter, you wrote, the second sentence: The suspension of your security clearance is based on security concerns related to Adjudicative Guideline K, handling protected information; and Guideline M, use of information technology of the National Security Adjudicative Guidelines for determining eligibility for access to classified information or eligibility to hold a sensitive position.

What information did you have to support these security concerns at that time?

A We received a referral from our Insider Threat Office that there had been an individual who had leaked information on an FBI criminal investigation.

Q And what was the context of the individual leaking?

A The individual leaked investigative information that compromised the case and had been interviewed apparently, like, behind a shield. And so that had opened up a leak case. It had come in as a referral.

They had done a workup on the case. They can see who all's accessed a case, what subfiles were accessed, if something was downloaded, if a snipping tool was used to snip out certain pieces of the case and drop it into another file.

And so through their independent investigation, they had determined that Garrett O'Boyle was the individual who was inappropriately accessing the file.

Similarly, at the same time, the investigative field office had conducted a review of the case file, because as a case agent, you can see who's accessing your file, you can run an audit report. They also ran an audit report of every individual that had accessed the case file. They ran a spreadsheet. They took out everyone who was authorized to be in the case, everyone who was a participant or had covered a lead at any point in the case, and they too independently came up with Garrett O'Boyle was inappropriately accessing the case file.

Q And the criminal investigative case file, what did it pertain to?

A I'm not -- because it's an ongoing still criminal matter --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- I've been asked not to discuss it.

Q And were there other individuals on the audit that the office flagged?

A There were not other individuals specifically, because the individual had provided an interview. And in the course of that interview, they spoke about very specific information within the file and very specific information within very specific subfiles of the case.

Garrett O'Boyle was the only one who accessed all of those things that were discussed in there, and nobody else did it. So there were other people that had gone into the file to cover a lead or you -- but no one else had accessed actually the exact same things that were discussed in that interview.

Q And you said the individual in the interview was covered by a shield. Is that correct?

A It was.

Q And how did the FBI determine that it was Mr. O'Boyle behind that shield?

A At the time, the belief that it was Mr. O'Boyle was the one behind the shield based off of the leak information that we could tell who had accessed information, what specific information they had said, and what had been done at that point.

Does that make sense?

Q Yes. And what information does the FBI have now that it was Mr. O'Boyle behind the shield?

A I can't talk about that.

Q Okay. Does the FBI still --

A Because that comes after the suspension.

Q Does the FBI still believe that it was Mr. O'Boyle behind the shield?

A I can't talk about that. Our basis for the suspension up to that point was that it was Mr. O'Boyle that was in that case file --

Q Okay.

A -- and that downloaded information, that snipped information out of the case file, and that removed it from the system unauthorized.

Q So is that the only information received in the referral?

A For the suspension.

Q Okay. And then has there been additional information within the referral or was it just the --

A That was the information we received in the referral.

Q Okay. And so was that the sole basis for his suspension?

A That was what led to it, from what I reviewed, because I can't -- I can only go up to the suspension. That was the result, suspension, as we were looking to remove, again, the threat to national security. And at that moment, Mr. O'Boyle appeared to be a threat to national security.

Ms. Greer. Sorry. Could we go off the record for just 1 minute?

[redacted] Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q Please continue.

A I apologize. There was additional information.

Q Okay.

A When they were doing the workup on Mr. O'Boyle, the Insider Threat Office additionally looked at other things that he had accessed, and they determined that he had accessed multiple Guardian investigations of January 6 subjects that he was not -- have any part into, no lead value into. He had accessed and downloaded that information without authorization.

Q Okay. And so those were the only two allegations referred to in the referral?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Has additional information been found?

A I can't talk about anything from the suspension beyond.

Q Okay. And what's the -- why are we stopping at the suspension?

A Because that's what I signed.

Q Okay.

A So for a revocation or a letter or no action or a counseling, I won't be the one to review those, and so I did not review all of that, because I wasn't authorized by the agency. I can only authorize to talk about my own personal actions at that time.

Q Have you been involved at all in the investigation?

A No, ma'am.

Q Have you had any briefs on the investigation?

A Let me think about that one second, because it's hard to -- because we get briefs -- I was briefed on this initially when it came in, because it was a huge concern to us to have that type of information.

I don't think -- oh, I have been briefed on Mr. O'Boyle, because you all asked about the timeline. So I have been briefed on the timeline subsequently to that, yes, ma'am --

Q Okay.

A -- as to how we got there. I've been briefed on what happened in his move, because you all were interested in that, and those pieces, but not about the investigation.

Q Okay. And have you discussed the investigation with the Office of Congressional Affairs in regards to your interview today?

A In prep for this.

Q Okay.

A I want to clarify one other little piece.

Q Uh-huh.

A In hypothetical, if one case touches another case, I may be briefed on another case that gives some information to this, but I made the decision on that, but not -- and I may know --

Q Okay.

A -- it because of that, but not this.

Q Okay.

A Does that -- are you tracking what I'm saying there?

Q Uh-huh.

A Okay.

Q And so what did you discuss with the particulars of the investigation with the Office of Congressional Affairs prior to today's interview?

A Just exactly what my parameters were that I would be allowed to discuss.

Q Have you reviewed any documentation regarding Mr. O'Boyle's case prior to today's interview?

A I interviewed the stuff at the suspension.

Q Okay. So you reviewed the suspension letter?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Did you review the suspension packet?

A I went -- yes, ma'am. That would be -- so the letter is attached to like a packet. And so I went back and reread the packet, yes, ma'am. And then I asked for clarifying details if there were any I needed.

Q Okay. Has the FBI conducted -- Security Division conducted any interviews of witnesses in regards to Mr. O'Boyle's case?

A That would have followed after the suspension. I'm sorry. I can't discuss that.

Q Okay. But you could discuss that they wanted to interview Mr. O'Boyle?

A I could tell you that they would, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Are there any other individuals that they wanted to interview?

A In a course of any normal investigation, we would interview any and all individuals that we would believe would be pertinent into that investigation. We would run instant messages. We would look for text messages, emails. All of those things we've talked about in the other case, those would be things that would, again, continue on after suspension. But I can't talk specifically about what they're doing in Mr. O'Boyle's case.

Q Prior to the suspension, did the Security Division have any interaction with Mr. O'Boyle's chain of command?

A Yes. They would have told him that the -- it was inbound, that a suspension was coming, yes.

Q Did they discuss any particulars about why the suspension was occurring with --

A They would have, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And at the time, as you know, Mr. O'Boyle was between moves. He was moving from Kansas to Virginia.

Which chain of command did the packet go to and the suspension letter go to?

A The suspension letter would ultimately go to his Virginia -- what would have been his Virginia chain of command. But it's very specific to know that Security Division opened the investigation on August 1st.

Q Uh-huh.

A He applied for the job that he received in March and was selected for it in May and accepted transfer orders in June. He had already scheduled to have his house packed up. It was packed up and moved on August 10th.

So there was very -- we did not know, like, he was packing up his house or any of those things. We knew that he was -- had been accepted for a new job. As part of the package, we would understand that when we were looking. But as part of that course, that was the timeline we were working with.

Q Okay. So then the -- the suspension package would have gone to his new office, you stated, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And why was the decision to send it to the new office?

A Because he had already left his old office.

Q Okay. And when was your understanding of when his last day was with the Wichita resident agency?

A We were trying to determine that, because there is some gray in there in the sense of he had his house packed up on August 10th, 11th, and the 12th, if I'm not mistaken, but he didn't take any leave for that. And that's unusual, because generally you have to be there when your house is packed up. Perhaps his wife with three kids --

Q Yeah.

A -- or two kids covered it for him. I'm not sure. So the first lead that I could find was in September.

Q Okay.

A So it started like -- I'm not going to get -- but it was very -- it was very soon, and it was all maternity leave. He had started with --

Q Yep.

A -- a biological birth leave, and it looked like he took about a week of that. And then he started admin leave that you're entitled to when you move. And I don't know why he switched, because he could have done biological birth leave for 12 weeks. And then he took admin leave, and then he reported to the office.

Q Okay. And so did the Wichita resident agency have any awareness as to whether or not Mr. O'Boyle was going to have his security clearance suspended?

A They would have been briefed on it, yes, ma'am --

Q Okay.

A -- that we've got that -- because we were trying to locate exactly where he was at that point.

Q When was the Wichita resident agency or Kansas City field office briefed?

A I'm not going to be able to tell you exactly. I will tell you that there were conversations, because once he came on our radar and we realized that he had downloaded the documents and we were looking that he still was actively accessing cases, it then becomes a concern like, how do I stop this as quick as possible?

He was out on leave already, and so the determination was we will just go ahead and cut that access since he's not in the office. And so that gave us some breathing room to get everything in order to do the documents.

Remember we talked about it's like that seven-step chain of --

Q Uh-huh.

A Well, you've got holidays in there, and you've got weekends in there, and you've got people on leave in that chain, and so that we would have time to appropriately route it through all the -- the approval process.

Q Okay. And so at your transcribed interview on April 24th, we discussed Mr. O'Boyle's move and how his personal belongings were packed up, as you just mentioned, August 10th, 11th, and 12th, that shipped to Virginia. And then he came here. He gets suspended on his first day at the office, and he's unable to access his personal belongings.

Between August 24th and today, have you looked into why the FBI failed to provide Mr. O'Boyle with access to his belongings?

A His belongings were moved by a professional moving company. The moving company is the one that he has to access his belongings to. The FBI didn't deny him access to his belongings.

Q And according to Mr. O'Boyle, he tried numerous times with the -- I don't know if it was like a storage facility, but the moving company. He tried to get access with the FBI, and they were going back and forth with one another.

Did you see any of those conversations or any correspondence?

A I got briefed on it to some to degree, because I was trying to, again, determine whether his household goods goes in. I didn't see this correspondence he has. I don't have that, because that would be with him and a private company, so I don't have the private moving company.

But the Bureau paid for the move to go to Virginia. For him to then -- what he asked us, my understanding is he asked us then to move his goods back to Kansas City, and we're not going to do that. But that he could pay -- I think the company said that -- all right. Excuse me. He didn't ask us. He asked the company to move his goods back to Kansas City, and they said, Sure, but this is how much it's going to cost you, and he didn't want to pay that fee for them to move it back. We wouldn't move it back at that point.

Q Was there any -- did you see any correspondence between Mr. O'Boyle and the FBI regarding obtaining access to his goods?

A I didn't see any correspondence regarding that, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. In regards to the allegations that came in via the referral about Mr. O'Boyle being behind that screen in the media interview that we spoke about earlier, has the FBI made any sort of determination about the veracity of those allegations?

A I'm going to break this down because I don't think I quite understand your question.

So, again, there was an individual who was behind a screen that provided an interview. The interview that he provided was very detailed and discussed very specific things from a case file.

The suspension is based off of the access of that case file and that very, very specific information that was provided. Regardless of who was standing behind that screen, the only way that person got that information from our investigation was Garrett O'Boyle's access, other than individuals who have a right to be in the case that were case file agents who did not leak that information. Garrett O'Boyle was the flaming gun for us.

Q Okay. And have those other individuals who were the case agents been interviewed regarding their access?

A They have.

Q And they all definitively stated they did not?

A They did not leak the information. They're the ones that brought it, again, to the attention that their case had been leaked.

Q In between the date that the allegations were received and the suspension, was Mr. O'Boyle asked about this interview?

A I'm sorry. From the date that -- no.

Q No, he wasn't asked --

A No.

Q -- between --

A That date? No. And the suspension? No. We moved to suspend to remove the threat from the national security. So, no, he was not interviewed prior to suspension.

Q So prior to suspension, he wasn't asked if he leaked the information?

A No.

Q And he wasn't asked if he was the individual who was behind the screen in the --

A No.

Q -- media interview? Okay.

And you said it's -- his case is now in the adjudicative process. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You said hopefully soon?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And once the adjudicative process happens, will Mr. O'Boyle have access to all of the information relied upon by the FBI in making these decisions?

A If he asks for reconsideration, yes, ma'am, he will.

Q Okay.

Ms. Greer. If he's revoked.

Ms. Moore. If he's -- I'm so sorry. Yes. If he is revoked, yes. I'm sorry.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know if Mr. O'Boyle has requested outside employment?

A I don't know that, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. And do you know if Mr. O'Boyle submitted a leave election form once his pay was suspended?

A Not that I'm -- I don't know anything about that, no, ma'am.

Q Okay.

A I'm not saying he didn't. I just am not aware of it.

Q So during the transcribed interview on April 24th, my colleagues entered as an exhibit, which we can enter as an exhibit now, the FD-889, the FBI Information Technology and Information Systems Rules of Behavior for General Users Agreement Form.

A Okay.

Q That will be exhibit No. 9.

[Moore Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Moore. Do you want me to read the whole thing or do you want to direct me --

[redacted] No. I'm sorry.

Ms. Moore. This I recall is more than five pages.

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you generally familiar with this document?

A I'm generally familiar, yes, ma'am. I cannot quote it to you.

Q And on page -- I think it's 8 of 9 here -- there's an acknowledgement. Have you signed this as an employee of the FBI, the acknowledgement?

A I have, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And can you just generally describe what's in this, the rules of behavior?

A I can give you a general overview, but if you're going --

Q That's great.

A -- to get specific, we're going to -- it's going to talk about what you can and cannot do when accessing government information systems and the expectations of any information system that you access or even what you bring in and take out of the facility.

Q And does it describe whether or not on like the unclassified system, you can share sensitive information or operational information?

A If you want to point me to that paragraph, I'll read it and make sure what it says.

Q There's a couple spots. On page 4, the "a" at the very bottom, or on page 3, 6a and 6b has some.

A All right.

Q Okay. Did I accurately describe --

A Do you want to tell me what you -- how you read it?

Q Yeah. What kind of information can be shared on the different systems, the classified and unclassified system, and making sure you're sharing the correct information on each system.

A It generally talks about that, but that leads in, as required, a part of official duties, so --

Q Okay. And do you have to sign the acknowledgement yearly or --

A I can't remember how often we sign it. I want to feel like it's yearly when we do our infosec security.

Q And is there training that goes along with this?

A There is. Information security training, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And I want to jump to your time as special agent in charge of the Washington field office of the Intelligence Division.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And when were you the special agent in charge of the Intelligence Division there?

A From October of 2019 through June of 2021.

Q June 2021, did you become the EAD?

A I became the assistant director of Security Division.

Q Okay. And then the EAD?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with, during your time as the special agent in charge of the Intelligence Division during the pandemic, there were some emails that you wrote with the subject line, Captain's Log, Day --

A I did, yes, ma'am.

Q Yes. Okay. And --

A I believe those were leaked, yes, ma'am.

Q Yes. And they were leaked. The -- and they were posted on a website. Do you remember?

A I do remember being advised they were posted on a website. I didn't personally go to the website.

Q Yeah. And did the FBI request that they be taken down by the website, are you aware of?

A I was advised that they probably were, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And why was the FBI advising that they be taken down?

A Because it was disclosing the identities of many FBI employees. And as we've talked about previously, there's been an increase in threats to FBI employees in the current atmosphere.

Q Okay. And did this only begin with COVID? I know they have like a range of days, like Captain's Log, day No. 1, or day No. 250. Did it only begin with the COVID quarantine or were you doing those prior to the COVID pandemic?

A I started those during COVID.

Q Okay. And when you were sharing this information with your team prior to the pandemic, how -- what form did that take?

A I started in October of -- what did I say, 2019?

Q 2019.

A And we started those in March.

Q Yeah.

A So I don't remember that I was sending out weekly emails prior to that, no, ma'am. This was an attempt to continue to communicate with a dispersed workforce.

Q Okay. And between October 2019 and March 2020, when the kind of COVID pandemic hits beginning peak, did you do any sort of weekly meetings with your team where you discussed similar information or have any sort of correspondence where similar information was discussed?

A I met weekly with my managers.

Q Okay.

A My direct reports, yes.

Q And were your managers and direct reports included on the captain's logs emails?

A They would have been, yes, ma'am.

Q Were all of the employees under your supervision included on those emails?

A For the captain's logs?

Q Yes, ma'am.

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And would all of the -- you just said it was the managers that attended the weekly meetings that you held. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Did you compile any sort of handouts that you dispersed at the weekly meetings about accomplishments of the Intelligence Division or --

A No.

Q -- various operations?

A Not that I recall.

Q Okay. And you said that the FBI was concerned about disclosing employee names publicly.

Did it ever concern you, when you were compiling these emails with special agents' names, what operations they were working on, other employees, that they could leak?

A No. At that time, I was naive.

Q Okay. And in these emails, you discussed various operations that the team was working on, and it included like photo contests and updates. Is that correct?

A Photo contests, like we had a best Christmas light --

Q Yes.

A -- display contest or an ugly --

Q Yes.

A -- sweater contest. There were no photo contests of any ongoing investigations.

Q I'm sorry if I -- if you misunderstood. I was talking about -- so you gave updates on what everyone was doing. You gave shout-outs for different individuals who had had great successes. And in addition, you discussed, like, the photo contest, that you were having Christmas lights. You discussed births for the unit.

A Yes.

Q Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And individuals moving to and from the unit?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Were you aware if any other special agents in charge were doing similar emails?

A They were.

Q And what field offices were they affiliated with, do you remember?

A Many.

Q Many?

A Yeah.

Q And they were going out to everyone within the division that they oversaw?

A Yes.

Q Okay. When you were drafting these emails, what kind of consideration went into what should be included?

A Extensive consideration went in.

Q Okay.

A I spent hours --

Q Can you tell --

A -- writing those.

Q Okay. Can you tell me a little bit about the process?

A Each of my substantive divisions would send -- or branches -- excuse me -- would send me the accomplishments and the accolades for their week. And then I would take some of that and compile that, trying to recognize employees to know that they were still being seen and heard even though we all weren't together.

Q Uh-huh. And at the time, you said it didn't concern you that it could be leaked, the information, the operations that different units within your division was working on?

A I didn't give very specifics on operations. It would be anything that was generic in nature, like, hey, great job on the surveillance this week, or, hey, we got an indictment. So no.

Q In several of the emails, you reference information that's classified, so you couldn't go into a lot of details.

What kind of steps did you take to make sure that the information you were sharing wasn't classified?

A The document was reviewed by multiple people before I sent it out.

Q And who were the emails reviewed by?

A My special assistant did.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then, again, each of my branches sent up the information that was directly taken from their reports.

Q Okay. So did you copy and paste what the --

A Not necessarily copy and paste, no.

Q Okay. So it was only the special assistant who reviewed, or did you send it out to the other management?

A It depends upon who was -- for weeks. So some weeks a special assistant may have reviewed it. Maybe one week it would be an ASAC and a special assistant -- maybe it was an SIA -- to make sure that it was resonating with the employees, that type of stuff.

Q Okay. And what was the special assistant's role in reviewing?

A Grammar, grammatic, making sure I didn't miss anything or add something I shouldn't, any of those type of things.

Q Were they checking to make sure the information you were sharing wasn't sensitive in nature?

A They would have.

Q Okay. And how did they decide what was sensitive and what was not sensitive?

A To the best of their ability and training.

[Moore Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. Let's -- I'll enter as -- I think I'm on exhibit No. 10 here. Day 275.

A Do you want to point me to what you want to talk about or do you --

Q Yeah.

A -- want me to read the whole thing before we talk about it?

Q Whatever you're most comfortable with. I'm happy just pointing to you where --

A Why don't you do that.

Q The first paragraph, it starts out: What an amazing week it was. I can't even wait to tell you about IS-2. Okay. I can't really tell you about what IS-2 is doing, because it is both classified and special access program, but wow. I mean, wow, wow, wow. In very generic terms, they have acquired something from an adversary. The something is insane -- off the charts.

Did it concern you that you were talking about something that could be sensitive here?

A Obviously. That's why I'm using very generic terms.

Q Uh-huh. And you still shared it with -- in the email?

A There is nothing in that email that is classified.

Q Were you concerned at all that this could become public or someone could have accessed the unclassified FBI system?

A There is nothing about that paragraph that discusses what we were talking about. It's very generic and benign.

[Moore Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. Let's go to exhibit No. 11. This is day 261.

A Do you want to firm with me?

Q Yes, definitely. So third page.

A What part?

Q The second paragraph there. I'll read it.

There was a BEAR sighting. Yep, it has been a long time since we were able to report on a bogie bear. You know all the details and even a definition of a bogie bear is classified, but a shout-out to Oscar Team who responded quickly. Awesome job on short notice.

Did it concern you about including this in the email since the details and definition of a bogie bear are classified?

A It did, and so I had it reviewed by the assistant special agent in charge over that to make sure that it was benign enough that it wouldn't be classified.

Q And did they rule that it was benign enough?

A They did.

Q Okay. And when you were unable to do these, like, weekly reports, others would step in and do them, correct?

A That would be correct.

Q And to your knowledge, who all did these logs besides you?

A Each of my special agent in charge and each of my SIAs. My ASACs. Excuse me. Special agent in charge.

Q How many -- at the time that you were the special agent in charge of the Intelligence Division, how many ASACs did you have?

A Two.

Q Two? And were they in charge of specific subject matter areas?

A Yes.

Q What subject matter areas?

A They each had a branch.

Q Okay.

A One of them had surveillance assets.

Q Surveillance?

A And one of them had human assets.

Q Okay.

Okay. And then exhibit No. 12, day 55.

[Moore Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Greer. While we're passing out this exhibit, I would just request for the record that to the extent that any transcript would ever be released publicly, that these documents in particular contain not only non-SES information, but information about --

[redacted] Family members.

Ms. Greer. -- family members, children. So we would just respectfully request an opportunity to redact as always.

[redacted] Okay.

Ms. Moore. Do you want to point me to what part you want to talk about?

[redacted] Yes. Page -- the second page there. And then the second to last full paragraph beginning, "In February 2020."

BY [redacted]:

Q States: In February 2020, Legat Abu Dhabi specifically requested the assistance of IA/Reports Officer Rosemary Rice and C12 -- CI-2 SA Grant Parrish regarding intelligence pertaining to petroleum tanker Nautic, aka Gulf Sky. Both the DOJ and Department of Treasury were highly interested in this vessel and sought any information connecting it -- connecting it to ongoing investigations. IA Rice and SA Parrish were specifically tasked with this request due to prior success in working with Legat Abu Dhabi on another high-profile case that received the attention of the National Security Council. IA Rice took point on researching Nautic and provided the results of a deep-dive intelligence review to all the Abu Dhabi ALATs. Thank you Rosemary and Grant for going above and beyond to assist our colleagues outside the AOR.

Did I read that correctly?

A You did.

Q And at the time this email was sent, it was May 10th, 2020. Was the investigation into the Nautic petroleum tanker done at that point in time, do you remember?

A I'm not sure.

Q Okay. And did this -- the last email we discussed, an ASAC reviewed for --

A This would probably --

Q -- information?

A -- have been replied to -- provided by an SIA.

Q Okay. And it was the special assistant then -- your special assistant who reviewed to make sure nothing was sensitive?

A Correct.

Q Correct? Okay.

Ms. Gibbs. I'm sorry. When you say sensitive -- can you just clarify what you mean by sensitive?

[redacted] Like sensitive, for official use only, law enforcement sensitive.

Ms. Gibbs. Yeah. So I think that's --

Ms. Moore. That's different.

Ms. Gibbs. Yeah, that's different.

Ms. Moore. Classified is different than sensitive. It's very different.

[redacted] Yeah.

Ms. Moore. Sensitive can be processed on an unclassified machine, and it's in the course of someone's official duties.

[redacted] Yeah.

Ms. Moore. So I don't know what you're asking in this paragraph. You were trying to insinuate something here?

[redacted] No. I'm --

Ms. Gibbs. I just want to make sure you were speaking about the same thing.

[redacted] Yes.

Ms. Gibbs. Because I don't think you two have the same understanding of what sensitive means.

[redacted] I was just making sure whether -- did the special assistant -- I was assuming you weren't sharing classified information, so did they review it for sensitive information as well or just for classified?

Ms. Moore. No. They reviewed it for classified information.

[redacted] Okay. Okay.

Ms. Greer. Would you recall specifically who reviewed this language for you?

Ms. Moore. I don't.

BY [redacted]:

Q And during the course of your work at the Human Resources Branch, do you communicate with other branches of the FBI?

A Of course.

Q And how often do you communicate with other branches?

A Of the FBI? On a daily basis.

Q Yes, ma'am.

And when you're communicating with other branches, do you communicate mainly email, in person?

A Do you want to specify what you're talking about communicating? Like, what are we communicating about? Are we communicating with the other executive assistant directors? Am I -- are you asking me if I personally talk to other ADs? Are you asking if my ADs talk to other ADs? What -- I don't understand the question.

Q Just very broadly, how do you communicate with others at the FBI? We'll start with that.

A We communicate in all means. We can communicate personally. We can communicate in writing form. We can communicate via telephone. We can attend Teams meetings with each other. We can attend SCION meetings with each other. So any broad number of ways.

Q Okay. And have you ever used a personal device to communicate with other -- with others at the FBI?

A Sure. I have friends that are in the FBI.

Q Okay. About official business?

A No.

Q You've never used a personal device to communicate about personal --

A No.

Q -- not -- excuse me -- official business?

A No.

Q Okay. Does the Human Resources Branch, does it ever use Signal or Telegram?

A The Human Resources Branch?

Q Yes.

A No.

Q Do you use Signal or Telegram to communicate?

A I do.

Q Okay. In a personal capacity or in an official capacity?

A In a personal capacity.

Q In a personal capacity.

And do you communicate with other FBI employees in a personal capacity on Signal or Telegram?

A I have.

Q Okay. And what instant messaging capabilities do you use for official FBI business --

A Skype --

Q -- you personally?

A -- or Teams.

Q Okay.

[redacted] I think that was my last question, but just let me -- we'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q All right. One quick little set of questions about Mr. Friend again before we move on.

In the last hour, the -- there were some questions about what Mr. Friend might have known regarding the SWAT matrix in the relevant case where he was asked to execute that warrant. Do you recall those questions?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And I believe the suggestion was that Mr. Friend might have known that the suspect was willing to cooperate. Did you get that impression from the questions?

A I did, yes, ma'am.

Q Do you know the answer of what Mr. Friend knew about the suspect's intention to cooperate?

A I don't specifically know. I know that he declined the opportunity to read the warrant or to have any discussion regarding that decision. He just felt himself that it was wrong.

Q So as far as you know, Mr. Friend never spoke to the suspect personally before the warrant was executed, right?

A That is correct.

Q And he didn't read the warrant affidavit. Is that what you're saying?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So we have no reason to believe that he actually -- the suspect actually was going to cooperate?

A That's correct.

Q Okay.

All right. Moving on to Mr. O'Boyle. Are you familiar with Garrett O'Boyle?

A I am familiar with his case. I don't know him in any capacity.

Q His security review case?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Do you know what his position is within the FBI?

A He is a special agent.

Q Okay. And I learned something new in the last hour, so I want to ask a few questions if you can follow up, but I understand if you cannot.

Is it fair to say that the initial security clearance review for Mr. O'Boyle was initiated by the threat -- Insider Threat -- I'm sorry. What did you call it? Insider Threat group?

A Insider Threat Office, and that is 100 percent correct. The complaint came in to Security Division from the Insider Threat Office.

Q And that's the same office that you spoke of earlier with regard to Mr. Friend's use of an unauthorized thumb drive?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So like you said earlier, is it fair to say that when that threat was -- or when that referral was generated by the Insider Threat Office, it was an automatic trigger?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So no one had any discretion in that case to report the conduct once they learned that the files had been accessed in an unauthorized manner?

A Yeah. There's no discretion in that. All FBI employees are obligated to report.

Q Okay. And it -- fair to say that, once the investigation began, that was the -- there was a level of urgency about that investigation that might have been a little unusual. Is that fair to say?

A When it came into Security Division, there was a level of urgency because of the identity of the individual, and it appeared that he was still accessing case files and information that he wasn't authorized to have access to and disclosing it, because we had seen information obviously in public forums.

Q So when the referral came in, you -- people at the FBI had already seen the information in public?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Was that part of the initial referral? The -- I'm sorry. I'll be clear. Was the information that came out in the public forum part of the initial referral?

A That was the referral, was that the information had been seen publicly.

Q Okay. And then looking back is when it was discovered that those files had been accessed in an unauthorized manner?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Why was there such urgency in that case? Can you explain why the FBI generally would be concerned about that kind of ongoing access?

A It shows a disregard for, one, need to know, or basic security of any information. You don't have a right to go into a file, download information, and disclose it publicly.

Q Where was the public disclosure?

A I cannot tell you. I know that it was to a media organiz- -- I do know who it was. It was Project Veritas who did the interview of the individual behind the screen.

Q Did you see the interview yourself?

A I didn't watch it myself, no, ma'am.

Q Okay. And the subject of the interview was January 6 cases?

A No. I believe the subject of the interview was an ongoing criminal case in a field office.

Q One particular case?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Is that case still ongoing?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Did Mr. O'Boyle have any official connection to that investigation?

A None at all.

Q From the investigation that the FBI did into the unauthorized access to those case files, do you know if -- do you know if they discovered how many files had been accessed?

A So they had -- they went through and did a history of what Mr. O'Boyle accessed. Eventually that was what would be leading up to the suspension and where we realized that he had also started accessing other cases and other leads -- Guardian cases, we call them -- and had been downloading those cases without what was an apparent need to know or authority to be within those files.

Q So you say that he didn't have an apparent need to know. Is that because he wasn't assigned to any of those investigations?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And it wasn't within his field --

A Purview.

Q -- of purview?

A Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] The cases -- the other Guardian leads or the other information he was downloading, about how many leads or cases did that involve?

Ms. Moore. So up to the suspension, it was just a couple. I can't remember exactly how many. I can't talk about what they've determined since the suspension has occurred, but up to the suspension, it was a few.

[redacted] So up to the suspension, you were able to determine he had downloaded a certain number -- he didn't -- it -- I'm sorry. But it's possible that you were able to run -- to make further determinations after the suspension, but you can't talk about that?

Ms. Moore. I can't talk about those.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] Was any of the information that he leaked to Project Veritas personal information regarding witnesses or criminal suspects or non-FBI agents?

Ms. Greer. I'm sorry. Off the record for one second.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Moore. So let me -- let me try to clarify. So, again, what we know from the insider threat up to the suspension was that Mr. O'Boyle was the only individual, based off of the interview that was public, that had access to all of those information unauthorized. I can't tell you who was behind the screen that was --

[redacted] Right.

Ms. Moore. -- the actual individual that provided the interview. He is the -- what we would call the linchpin of all those pieces that that individual behind that screen spoke about.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. So I'll clarify my questions. I'm not asking about the person behind the screen necessarily. But --

A Okay.

Q -- the information itself, just focusing on the information that was revealed. First of all, do you know when that Project Veritas interview was?

A I don't remember specifically, no, ma'am. And I don't actually -- because I know you just asked me that question, I didn't watch the interview, and so I don't know specifically everything he discussed.

Q Okay. But the information revealed in that interview, did it include any personal identifying information about non-FBI employees that might have been like, say, a victim in a criminal case?

A I believe that it did, yes, ma'am.

Q Do you know -- I'm not asking for that person's information, but, like, for example, did it include any references to a crime victim?

A I'm sorry, I can't speak to that.

Q Okay.

A I don't know. I'm sorry.

Q And when you say you believed it did include some personal information, are you just saying there were -- there was information about people that might have been connected in some way to the investigation?

A Correct.

Q Okay. What about information about FBI agents who were working on the case, was there anything leaked?

A I do remember being briefed that that was part of it, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And did that cause any concerns for the FBI?

A Absolutely, as we try not -- I mean, working for the FBI in itself is not classified or anything along those lines, but people become very passionate about certain cases that we work and people become targets because of those cases.

Q Do you know if that happened in this case?

A I can't talk about that.

Q Okay.

A I'm sorry.

Q All right. So Mr. O'Boyle's security clearance is ongoing. You already said that. Is that right?

A The investigation continues, yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And for that reason, you're somewhat limited today into what you can talk about?

A I can only talk about the events up to the suspension. I can't talk anything beyond the suspension.

Q Okay. From what you know -- now, first of all, that limitation that you're under right now, the reason that you're limited is out of concerns for fairness in the adjudicative process basically, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Fairness to him. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. But you know that Mr. O'Boyle's security clearance was suspended based on an allegation that he had made unauthorized disclosures of what you considered law enforcement sensitive materials to the media. Is that right?

A That he had made inappropriate access and downloaded information he was not authorized to, and misused information systems.

Q Okay. You clarified that. I'm sorry. That was a bad question --

A That's okay.

Q -- because you -- you're not sure who it was that actually gave the interview. You just know that the information originally that was accessed unlawfully by Mr. O'Boyle?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And that conduct was a violation of Adjudicative Guideline K, handling protected information?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And Guideline K, which I think you're familiar with, states, in part, quote, Conditions which may be disqualifying include disclosure of protected information to unauthorized persons, including the media.

But, also, accessing information is prohibited conduct under that guideline. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And just generally, why would it be a concern at the FBI if an employee was accessing this protected information without authorization?

A We are very specific regarding need to know, and if you don't have a need to know of something, you should not be accessing that. It's a risk to national security. We don't want excessive people involved in any case or information that don't have -- that they do not have a need or a right to be in.

Q Okay. Are you confident that the suspension of Mr. O'Boyle's security clearance was not motivated by animus?

A I am 100 percent confident of that.

Q And was it -- the decision done to punish him for his political or ideological beliefs?

A Absolutely not.

Q Are you confident that the true motive behind the FBI's decision to suspend his security clearance was to protect the national security of the United States against a serious potential risk posed by Mr. O'Boyle, who was continuing to access secret information?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you familiar with allegations that Mr. O'Boyle has made that the FBI intentionally timed the notification of his security clearance suspension letter in a punitive fashion so that he would have incurred the hardship of executing a move to a new duty station before receiving the information that his clearance was suspended?

A I am -- I am familiar with the accusation.

Q And what's your response to that?

A That that is not accurate.

Q And how do you know it's not accurate?

A Because I'm the one that signed that security suspension letter, and I would never do that to an employee.

Q And at the time that you signed it, I think you explained in detail what the timeline was for his move, but did you know his -- whether he had packed up his goods, for example, at that time?

A At that exact moment, I didn't know. I knew that he had moved, so I -- by logical explanation that if you're moving or reporting to a new duty station, as a general rule, you've packed up, you've moved, you've moved forward.

Again, I kind of say that with surprise, because I did know that he had had a new baby. We had been made aware that he was out of the office, because we were trying to quickly figure out how to limit his access to information systems, but yet still give us enough time to do the appropriate document and get everything approved through the chain.

But it's not always a given that someone packs up and moves just because they get a promotion. Sometimes the families stay behind, and that's not also unusual.

Q Okay. Is it fair to say you were simply following your normal course of action as the package was being prepared and notifying him as soon as you could?

[2:44 p.m.]

Ms. Moore. That's correct.

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you aware that Mr. O'Boyle raised the issue of improper notice at a hearing before the Merit Systems Protection Board in April of 2023?

A I know that Mr. O'Boyle had a Merit Systems Protection Board hearing. I wasn't -- I am not positive of what that entailed. I was not part of that board.

Q Okay. So you don't know that -- you are not aware of the outcome, they found that the FBI had not improperly handled that notice?

A I am aware that his complaint in front of the merit protection board was denied.

Q Okay. So essentially, just to be clear, the board made a favorable finding for the FBI in the notice issue?

A They did. And that was what one of the reasons, I won't go on, but I thought that I could come today and openly talk about Mr. O'Boyle. That was why I was briefed. As a general rule, I wouldn't just be briefed on the outcome of those boards. It was only because we were trying to see what was still pending litigation and what I could or could not talk about today.

Q I understand. You were trying to be cooperative with the committee?

A Yes, ma'am.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY [redacted]:

Q The letter in our exhibit 1 from Mr. Dunham refers to another FBI employee, Mr. Brett Gloss. Are you familiar with the discussion of Mr. Gloss?

A I am familiar with Mr. Gloss, yes ma'am.

Q Okay. Mr. Gloss' security clearance was revoked by the FBI on May 3rd, 2023. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am. May 2nd, 2023.

Q Okay. I am sorry. Yeah, I have the wrong date there. Thank you. May 2nd.

And we have I believe --

Ms. Gibbs. He may have gotten it on --

Ms. Moore. He may have gotten it on a different day. I would have to see the letter itself.

[redacted] Let me pull out the letter now.

Mr. Moore. But I believe I signed it on the 2nd?

[redacted] All right. I am going to mark this as exhibit -- where are we? 13?

[Moore Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q So exhibit 13 it says, May 2nd on the letter. So it looks like the revocation was May 2nd. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am. That's when I signed it.

Q Got it. Okay. The Security Division opened an investigation regarding Mr. Gloss in August of 2021 after receiving referral from the FBI's Washington Field Office. Is that correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And Mr. Gloss' clearance was initially suspended based on concerns under the adjudicative guidelines (a), allegiance to the United States, guideline (e), personal conduct and guideline (j), criminal conduct. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Now the specific security concerns that resulted in his suspension stem from evidence, according to the letter, that, quote, "Mr. Gloss was in a restricted area of the U.S. Capitol Grounds on January 6th, 2021." Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And the exhibit 1, May 17 letter there is a discussion here I guess on page 6, just to direct you to that.

The security division's investigation revealed that Gloss had committed a criminal trespass into the restricted zone at the Capitol on that day. Is that right?

A That is correct.

Q And that is a violation of Federal law. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Based on this conduct, the FBI determined that Gloss, "Showed questionable judgment and inability to follow rules and regulations, indicating Mr. Gloss may not properly safeguard classified or sensitive information. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you agree with this determination with respect to Mr. Gloss?

A I do.

Q And why do you agree?

A Because of his actions that he took. So we received a referral from the Washington Field Office based off of AdTech data that indicated that an employee, Mr. Gloss, had entered the restricted area on January 6th. We opened an investigation. We do the logical steps again emails, instant messages, computer access, generally those open-source searches that we can do through PASMI. Okay, I don't have to explain that again. And that information indicated that Mr. Gloss was indeed inside a restricted zone at the Capitol intentionally.

We subsequently interviewed Mr. Gloss. And Mr. Gloss, on a map, indicated where he was, which again indicated that he was within the restricted zone. He then told us a story that he was directed there by an individual in a -- like a construction-type vest, or like an orange vest. As we all know, there's lots of cameras in that area that we all have access to now. Mr. Gloss did not come in contact with anybody in an orange vest. There was no one at any point in that area directing anybody into restricted zones.

Additionally, he made statements to us about being gassed. We have pictures that he transmitted to other FBI employees that clearly show him within the restricted zone. And again, we have his own admission as to where he was.

Q And the fact that he was in the restricted zone, that conduct alone is the violation of Federal law. Is that right?

A That is.

Q Because it was marked and it was clearly restricted, being in that area was a crime?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And he sounds like was not forthcoming when the security interviewers were talking to him about that day. Is that right?

A That is correct.

And I do want to clarify for our purposes as well, conviction of a crime or even being fully charged of a crime does not mitigate the guideline for criminal conduct.

Q Meaning that the guideline (j), criminal conduct, adjudicative guideline is broader than merely having been convicted? Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Or even having been charged?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So if the FBI determines that the conduct would have amounted to a crime, that would have be sufficient under guideline (j)?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And in this case that's what the FBI determined?

A That is what the Security Division determined. Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And your investigation according to the letter included other evidence, for example, video and photographic evidence that showed Mr. Gloss in the vicinity of this restricted area, even after witnesses in that same area could be seen protesting violently and climbing scaffolding. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And also people around him were, at that time, struggling with law enforcement visibly who were trying to maintain barriers.

A That is correct.

Q The law enforcement was trying to maintain the barriers. There were people struggling against the law enforcement and you could see that Mr. Gloss was right there in that mix, maybe not struggling himself, but in that restricted area at that time?

A He was clearly in that mix. He was clearly seeing the contact. He was in the area which most people refer to a hangman's noose area. He even mentions in one of his emails how he -- or text messages, excuse me, how he's glad that they have been able to enter the Capitol so maybe they'll all stop getting gassed as much now. So he's clearly in the area where, you know, pepper spray is being utilized.

Q So he can see that law enforcement is struggling at that time to gain control of the area?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And he is not leaving, he is staying intentionally, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And you said the area is referred to as the hangman's noose area? Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Is that referring to the gallows, essentially a noose that was hanging by the Capitol when the crowd was yelling for Vice President Pence?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So that was going on at the time that Mr. Gloss was in that area? Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Do you know if he participated in that?

A The video doesn't indicate that he participated, but he was clearly there.

Q And aware of that going on at the same time?

A Yes, ma'am. Although he told our investigators he wasn't and that he didn't see any clashes, which our investigation reveals, again, not everyone is truthful with us when we interview them and they like to tell a story that perhaps mitigates their actions. But the video does -- clearly shows where he was.

Q Yeah. I would imagine and correct me if I am wrong, but when you investigate and speak to a subject like the person whose appearance here is being reviewed, you are not obligated to take what they say at face value. Are you?

A No, ma'am.

Q And as an FBI agent, you are not trained to do that when you speak to criminal suspects or anyone in fact. Right?

A That is correct. And again, when we are using for security adjudications we use the whole-person concept. We use what they tell us, along with the facts that we have gathered in the course of the investigation.

Q And you are able to then use your judgment and show -- and decide where the evidence leads you. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And in this case, the evidence led the Security Division to conclude that Mr. Gloss was a security risk and that he had engaged in conduct under the adjudicative guidelines that we mentioned, (a), (j) and (e). That caused the FBI to question whether he was willing to maintain the FBI's standards in -- with respect to his clearance. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q You already mentioned that Mr. Gloss showed a lack of candor with his false and misleading statements. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And did that make it even more troubling to the FBI if you were to continue his clearance?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q The Security Division investigation also revealed that Mr. Gloss had shared photos of FBI special agents who were engaged in the performance of their official duties. And he shared that with an individual conspiracy theorist who is known to post sensitive FBI information publicly. Isn't that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Could that conduct have jeopardized the safety of FBI agents?

A Absolutely.

Q And why is that of concern to the FBI?

A Again, we value our agents very much. They are carrying out a constitutional obligation that they have in the course of their official duties. And we do not expose each other unnecessarily.

Q At that time, were you aware that there were increases in threats to FBI agents around the country?

A Yes, ma'am. Yes, ma'am.

Q And in your opinion, does this kind of behavior contribute to that, increase the threat to FBI agents?

A It does. Yes, ma'am.

Q Did this play a role in the FBI's decision to suspend and eventually revoke Mr. Gloss' security clearance?

A It was considered in the whole-person concept.

Q Was suspension or revocation of Mr. Gloss' security clearance motivated by animus?

A No, ma'am.

Q Was the decision to suspend and later revoke his clearance intended to punish him for his political or ideological views?

A No.

Q Are you aware, as you said before, that there are other FBI employees, besides Mr. Gloss, who have expressed political beliefs that are supportive of former President Trump, but who have never been the subject of an FBI security investigation based on their beliefs?

A Absolutely.

Q In fact, there are even FBI employees who were present on January 6th doing peaceful demonstrations that were not subject to security clearance review?

A Correct.

Q Is it fair to say what distinguished Mr. Gloss from those other employees, including some who demonstrated lawfully on the 6th, is that Mr. Gloss committed a crime, he lied to security investigators, and expressed support for crimes against the United States?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Moving on from Mr. Gloss, are you familiar with someone named Kyle Seraphin?

A I am familiar with Kyle Seraphin.

Q How are you familiar with him?

A Kyle Seraphin was the subject of a security investigation, and ultimately a revocation.

Q Okay. And I understand that you were actually recused from working on that investigation. Is that right?

A I did have to become recused. Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Despite your recusal, have you ever seen the FBI's letter revoking his clearance?

A I don't think I ever saw the actual letter. No, ma'am.

Q I am going to mark it as exhibit 14.

[Moore Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q I'll let you take a look at it since you have not seen it.

A Yes, ma'am. I have now read it.

Q Okay. And just for the record, the quality of this exhibit is not great and that is because this is a letter that Mr. Seraphin posted on his Twitter and it was difficult to print out, but that's the source of this.

So the letter to Mr. Seraphin informing him of his security clearance revocation states that the security adjudication revealed -- security concerns under adjudicative guideline (e) personal conduct, (k) handling protected information and (l) outside activities. Do you see that on the letter?

A I do. Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. The letter further states the security investigation revealed that Seraphin had, quote, "demonstrated a repeated pattern of unwillingness to comply with numerous FBI rules and regulations," unquote, which included, but were not limited to, disregarding safe weapons-handling policy, engaging in disruptive and inappropriate behavior by routinely using derogatory, racist, sexist or homophobic language that offended coworkers, and making unauthorized releases of sensitive information. Do you see that in the letter?

A I do.

Q Would this type of behavior -- excuse me. Why would this type of behavior be of concern to the FBI under the guidelines?

A Under the guidelines, this individual, again, his unwillingness to comply with rules and regulations would be in direct conflict with SEAD 4 in the security executive agents directive and all of the adjudicative guidelines. And you would want to separate the risk from national security.

Q There is a pretty good variety of misconduct or whatever you want to call it, security concerns, in this particular case. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q I mean, it ranges from offensive behavior that is disruptive in the workplace to mishandling weapons. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And that is a new one in the cases that we have discussed so far, the mishandling of weapons. Can you say a little bit -- I know you don't know this case in particular, but what kinds of things would be included in that?

A Well, so I knew his case initially until I had to be recused. In his specific case, the mishandling of the weapon was they were at a firearms range, the firearms instructor had called for the line to be holstered safe. And they check, everybody confirms, everybody's holstered safe. The firearms instructor then announces that he is moving forward to fix a broken target. As he moves forward, Kyle Seraphin pulled his gun, shot across the range diagonal in front of the firearms instructor as he moves forward to fix the target and shot the target he was going to fix.

Q Wow.

Why is that behavior a concern to the FBI?

A That is threatening and intimidating behavior, unacceptable. It shows a complete misunderstanding of rules and safety. Again, it goes to his whole-person concept as well.

Q And would it lead the FBI to be concerned about Mr. Seraphin's mental state in any way?

A I would think that that would be concern. I will tell you, that had that come in alone as a standalone allegation, it would have been sent through misconduct. It was the totality of all of his actions that brought that specific thing into the security adjudication. Additionally, I had to be recused because Mr. Seraphin expressed his desire to use me as a target.

Q During the investigation he expressed that?

A He communicated with another FBI employee who provided us those communications. And in that, he specifically indicated that he wanted to use me and another female executive as targets.

Q Was the firearms instructor also a female?

A I don't know that answer.

Q The letter also states that Seraphin made repeated media appearances in which he disclosed the existence of FBI investigations, FBI methods and capabilities and the identities of active FBI personnel without authorization. Do you see that in the letter?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Why would this kind of conduct raise security concerns for the FBI?

A I think and we have already talked about if you don't know what to keep safe and secure, then we can't trust you with national security information. And you have a blatant disregard for rules and regulations.

Q Do you know if Kyle Seraphin is still an employee of the FBI?

A Kyle Seraphin is not. I do know that he is not an employee of the FBI.

Q Okay. Do you know what he does for a living now?

A I believe he runs a podcast.

Q Are you familiar with the podcast, The Kyle Seraphin Show?

A Oh, I've been told about it. Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Seraphin refers to himself as, quote, "a whistleblower," and that he devotes much of his energy to fundraising off of his whistleblower claims?

A I am aware of that. Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you familiar with Mr. Seraphin's GiveSendGo campaign?

A I was only recently made aware of that, but yes, ma'am. But not as the course of any adjudicative action.

Q Okay. So this information is things -- information that came to you after you were recused?

A Yes, ma'am. Yes, ma'am.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Seraphin claims to have raised over $590,000 with his GiveSendGo fundraising campaign?

A I was not aware that he was claiming that.

Q Okay.

A I was recently made aware that he wrote two checks to two of the other individuals that we have discussed in this investigation. But I wasn't aware of what he was saying he had raised or had not raised.

Q Yeah. I am going to mark as exhibit 15, images of those checks.

[Moore Exhibit No. 15

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. So exhibit 15 is a photograph of two checks that was attached to a tweet from Kyle Seraphin and that's the source of this document. So -- and I think you were just getting to this. So you were aware that Mr. Seraphin gifted large amounts of money, in this case, $255,194 each to two FBI employees, Mr. Allen, Mr. Marcus Allen, that we discussed earlier, and to Mr. Garrett O'Boyle who we also discussed earlier. Do you remember that?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Or we should say at least it appears that, because this check was posted on Twitter and we can see the photograph. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q So the tweet -- can I have the next --

I am going to mark this exhibit 16, the actual tweet from Mr. Seraphin that was connected to these images.

[Moore Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q So on May 30th, 2023, are you aware that Mr. Seraphin tweeted that he was, quote, "sending the first of two checks today," unquote, from his GiveSendGo fundraiser, and then attached this photo in exhibit 16, showing two checks in the amount of $255,194 to Garrett O'Boyle and Marcus Allen?

A I did not see this. I don't follow Mr. Seraphin. But I was aware, someone mentioned to me yesterday in the course that did you know that Kyle Seraphin had posted that he was going to give Marcus Allen and Garrett O'Boyle $255,000.

Q Okay. Can you see in, I guess the photograph, or either exhibit, it might be easier to look at the photograph, can you see on the memo line of the checks what is written?

A It says a gift, quote, "Hold the line," unquote.

Q Now that's what it says on the check to Mr. O'Boyle, right?

A That is what it says on the check to Mr. O'Boyle, yes.

Q And Mr. Allen, it says something similar. Do you see what that says?

A It says, "holding the line, a gift."

Q So he actually uses the word gift, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And he tells you or tells Mr. Allen and Mr. O'Boyle holding the line is why they are receiving that gift, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q As a law enforcement officer, do you know what he means by holding the line? If you don't, that's fine.

A I know as military that they use it as in when you are defending the home front, that you hold the line. But I am not sure for law enforcement, no, ma'am. It's not a term I use.

Q Okay. Does it suggest to you that Mr. Allen and Mr. O'Boyle are being given this money partly because of their role with the FBI?

A I read it that they are aligned in some way.

Q Okay. Fair enough. You don't know exactly --

A No, ma'am, sorry.

Q -- what's in Mr. Seraphin's mind anyway, right?

A No, ma'am. I am sorry.

Q Now, you know Mr. O'Boyle in the context of the security review that we discussed earlier, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Is Mr. O'Boyle currently a Federal employee?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And is he still employed by the FBI?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Mr. Allen, is he a Federal employee?

A He technically is a Federal employee until his time runs on his request for reconsideration or the reconsideration is completed.

Q And that has not been done yet, isn't that right?

A No, ma'am.

Q Okay. As a Federal employee yourself, at least for another day, do you understand that Federal employees are required to follow Federal ethics rules restricting their ability to accept gives from outside sources when the gifts are related to their official positions?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And are you aware that these regulations, which are codified in 5 CFR 2635, subpart (b), which I'll introduce as exhibit 17, prohibit an employee from accepting cash gifts of any kind from outside sources when the gift relates to the employees position in the government?

A I didn't know that specific statute, but we are provided ethics briefs about what we can and cannot accept. Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. I mean, this is going to be -- what did I say, 17?

[Moore Exhibit No. 17

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q I am just going to direct you to this one section --

A Thank you.

Q -- because it's long. Okay. So on the second page of the document, section 2635.202 titled, General prohibition or solicitation or acceptance of gifts (b), it says, prohibition on accepting gifts. The language reads, an employee may not, and then part two, accept a gift given because of the employee's official position. Do you see that?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. And then if you skip forward one page, so now you are on page 3 under paragraph (b), there is the definition of the word "gift," right off the bat, it tells you gift includes any gratuity. Do you see that?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q That means cash, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And as a Federal employee, did you understand that you cannot accept cash from outside people that's directed at you because of your job?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q In any amount, correct?

A Correct. We've terminated people for it, right.

Q And then if you turn to page 7, there is section, I guess it's paragraph (e), little (e).

A Yes, ma'am.

Q It says, given because of the employee's official position, it defines what that means. A gift is given because of the employee's official position. If a gift is from a person other than an employee, or would not have been given had the employee not held the status, authority or duties associated with the employee's Federal position?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So in that case, it just means because these guys were FBI agents, that's why they were given this money. Is that right?

A I would logically assume that seems to be the appearance since Stephen Friend wasn't provided infor -- it doesn't look like there was a check that was posted that he was given one and he's not an employee any longer.

Q As far as we know?

A Correct.

Q Okay. So is it fair to say that Mr. Seraphin appears to have provided a gift to Mr. Allen and Mr. O'Boyle in the amount of $255,194 each, because they are FBI employees who are raising complaints about the FBI?

A Do you want to repeat that question?

Q Yeah, I read it real fast. I am sorry. But is it fair to say that it appears Mr. Seraphin has provided a gift to Mr. Allen and Mr. O'Boyle in the amount of $255,194 each because they are FBI employees who are raising complaints about the FBI?

A I can't speculate to why he gave it to them. I can say that they are both FBI employees. He gave them both money and they are both part of what I am being questioned about today.

Q Understood.

A And I don't know exactly why he gave them.

Q I mean, there's a hint a little bit, isn't there, in the memo line where he praises them for, quote, "holding the line."

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And both of these men had testified before this committee approximately 12 days before these checks were cut. Is that right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q And I understand that you don't know what's in Mr. Seraphin's mind, but could this be -- could this apparent violation of the ethics rules for Federal employees raise additional security concerns for the FBI if Mr. O'Boyle and Mr. Allen were still security clearance holders?

A If we had FBI employees that were receiving large sums of cash from an outside entity, it would cause concern. There's a requirement to report over a certain dollar value, I don't know what that is. I didn't realize we would talk about that. But you have to report that. And then we kind of look and see where that's coming from, is it an inheritance, what that is.

Q Okay. And does it matter that this was an apparent violation of ethics rules for the security clearances purposes?

A For a clear violation of ethics rules, we would consider it, though, potentially in a whole-person concept again as one more rule that, perhaps, isn't being followed.

Q Okay. Aside from potential security risks and concerns that are the subject of most of this hearing, does it raise any broader concerns for you, just as a FBI employee, about the motivation of the FBI employees who appeared to be fundraising off of public criticism of the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And why is that?

A I don't know -- you are breaking down the organization and -- you work for and the allegiance that you've taken to the Constitution. And so, it would cause a concern that you are profiting from -- you are creating a negative publicity.

Q Right. And does it also raise any concerns in your mind about whether the concerns they have are sincere because they also are profiting by making those concerns?

A I guess you could draw that parallel, but that is not what I would be concerned about. For me, I am most concerned again about their allegiance to the United States, their behavior as it relates to all of the adjudicative guidelines and the totality of the whole person as it relates to national security.

Q Mr. Seraphin chose to tweet out the photos of these checks intentionally to draw attention to these illegal gifts. When he could have just privately given the money to Mr. O'Boyle and Mr. Allen. Do you find that surprising in any way?

A I am afraid I don't find anything Mr. Seraphin does surprising.

Did the Committee redact these two pictures or did Mr. Seraphin redact --

Q He did.

A It's nice that he choose to redact something in relation to him, but when he released all the pages of my weekly captain's logs, he couldn't have the courtesy to release or redact anybody else's children's name or any other FBI employee's name. I am glad he continues to look out for himself.

Q Well, it says something about him, I suppose, right?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Now Seraphin's public announcement of an illegal gift got attention on Twitter from some high-profile conservatives. Do you think it's possible that Mr. Seraphin is publicizing this fundraising because he believes it will help him raise even more money from a segment of the public that he and his allies have already tried very hard to stoke outreach from by promoting this information about the FBI?

A Again, I am going to say I can't even begin to fathom what Kyle Seraphin thinks, or what his motivations are. I think that is a logical parallel that could be drawn is that he's obviously trying to draw -- drum up more money. But again, I can't begin to speculate.

Q Okay. Finally, the fact that Seraphin, O'Boyle, and Allen, and others, appear to be using this very public criticism of the FBI to make substantial amounts of money, does that make the alleged concern seem any less credible?

A No, ma'am.

Q Oh, just one other thing, this is a small thing, but there were a series of questions about the captain's log emails that you were sending out during COVID --

A Yes, ma'am.

Q The emails that you sent out, is it fair to say those were meant in some sense to reconstruct the sort of atmosphere of in-person workplaces. Is that right?

A It was. In a dispersed workforce, it's very hard to fill part of the greater whole. And we were receiving lots of wellness concerns about employees that were feeling disassociated. And so it was an intent to remember that you belong to a bigger thing, that we're seeing you, you're heard, we are still here, you are there, but we are still on the same team.

Q So if you had been in the office, as you had been before COVID, you would have a lot of personal conversations with people about Christmas lights, or other things that were the subject of those emails, right?

A Indeed that is true. We had had a contest, like, right before COVID at Christmas for gingerbread house construction and it was squad versus squad and who won. And we did a lot of those things to try to build a camaraderie amongst the organization.

What I can say without a doubt is had I known that those would have been leaked, I would have done something different. I would have never are put that many employees names out there in the public, much less their newborn children for -- in the hostile environment that we currently live in towards FBI employees.

Q Understood.

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you know if any of the employees who are mentioned in those logs that were leaked or their children, do you know if there's been any threats to life or safety of those individuals? You don't have to get into specifics, but just generally if you know.

A We have stood up an entire threat unit to address threats that the FBI employees' facilities are receiving. It is unprecedented. It's a number we've never had before.

Q How big is the unit?

A It's going to be about 10 people when it's finished. We just -- we are still in the process of staffing it right now. But their sole mission on a daily basis is threats to FBI employees at facilities.

Q Based on the captain's log?

A Not just the captain's log.

Q Okay.

A But just in general.

BY [redacted]:

Q Have those threats increased with this committee's hearing, for example, on May 18th regarding the FBI alleged, quote, "whistleblowers"?

A I would have to ask for the numbers to be pulled. They report them to us on a monthly basis is what our trend is. I know that from October, which was the new fiscal year, until about April 1st, we had had more threats in that period of time than we had had in the entire previous year.

Q What period was that? I'm sorry.

A From May 1st of 2022 -- I'm sorry. Excuse me. From the fiscal year so the beginning -- October 1st, 2022, until roughly March 31st -- 30 days, 31st day of 2023 we had received more threats against FBI people and facilities than we had in the entire previous year.

Q And has that trend seemed to continue, if you know?

A Yes, ma'am.

BY [redacted]:

Q Quickly, what's been marked as exhibit 12, it's the Captain's Log Quarantine

Day 55, you were asked about the Nautic, a/k/a Gulf Sky. Do you recall that?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Your email is dated Sunday, May 10, 2020, 11:20 p.m., correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Is that an accurate representation of when you sent the email?

A Most likely. Yes, ma'am.

Q I want to introduce -- I have no idea what exhibit number we are on. Exhibit 18.

[Moore Exhibit No. 18

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q A case caption and a forfeiture page, so forgive me, it is going to take me a second to read it. It is United States of America v. $2,340,000 associated with Petroleum Tank Nautic, with International Maritime Organization number 9150377, held by Liberian Company 1, and $9,998,941.91 associated with the Petroleum Tanker Nautic. With International Maritime Organization number 9150377, held at U.S. Bank 1.

And I am just going to ask you about the front page of the document.

A Okay. Thanks.

Q And let me know when you are ready to continue.

A I am ready to continue.

Q Do you see at the up top where it has the case number and document number and a filing date?

A I do. Yes, ma'am.

Q Can you please say for the record what the filed date is on this case?

A May 1st, 2020.

Q So that was actually 9, 10 days before your email, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. So this was already in the public eye at this time?

A Yes, ma'am.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you. I don't think I have anything else.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Whereupon, at 3:22 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: KATE STARBIRD

Tuesday, June 6, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

Present: Representatives Jordan and Bishop.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted], [redacted]

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIME AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SURVEILLANCE:

[redacted]

For the SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE ADMINISTRATIVE STATE,

REGULATORY REFORM, AND ANTITRUST:

For KATE STARBIRD:

PRESTON BURTON, PARTNER

TIFFANY ROWE, SENIOR ASSOCIATE

ORRICK HERRINGTON & SUTCLIFFE LLP

2001 M STREET NW, SUITE 500

WASHINGTON, DC 20036

[redacted]. Can we go on the record?

This is a transcribed interview of Dr. Kate Starbird. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's investigation of how and the extent to which the executive branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Ms. Starbird. Kate Starbird.

[redacted]. On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

Ms. Starbird. Thank you.

[redacted]. My name is [redacted], and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff. I will now have everyone from the committee who's here in the room introduce themselves as well.

[redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted], House Judiciary Committee, Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] with Ranking Member Nadler's staff.

[redacted], chief oversight counsel with House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] with Mr. Nadler's staff.

[redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted], counsel for Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted]. I would like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour. But if you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

Ms. Starbird. Okay.

[redacted]. As you can see, there's an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand?

Ms. Starbird. Yes.

[redacted]. So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just those people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you.

It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

We encourage witnesses who appear before the committee to freely consult with counsel if they so choose. It is my understanding that you are appearing today with counsel.

Is that correct?

Ms. Starbird. Yes.

[redacted]. Would counsel please state your name for the record.

Mr. Burton. Yes. Preston Burton, Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe. I'm here with my colleague, Tiffany Rowe, R-o-w-e.

[redacted]. Thank you.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it is okay to tell us if you learned the information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

Ms. Starbird. I do.

[redacted]. This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview.

Do you understand this?

Ms. Starbird. I do.

[redacted]. Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury or making false statements under 18 U.S.C. 1001.

Do you understand this?

Ms. Starbird. I do.

[redacted]. Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Ms. Starbird. No reason.

[redacted]. Finally, I would like to make a note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript. Any copies of those exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

That is the end of my preamble.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted]. We just thank the witness for traveling across the country to join us today.

Ms. Starbird. Thank you.

[redacted]. The clock now reads 10:03. We will start the first hour of questioning.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Can you tell us your current job title and where you work?

A Yeah. I'm an associate professor at the University of Washington in the Department of Human Centered Design & Engineering.

Q And is the University of Washington public?

A It's a public university, yes.

Q And can you tell us your educational background, starting with college?

A I have a bachelor's of science in computer science from Stanford University, and I have a Ph.D. in technology, media, and society from the University of Colorado.

Q And your employment history?

A My employment history --

Q You don't have to tell us, like, little jobs before college or anything like that.

A Okay. From approximately the age of 21, from graduation of college, to about age 30, I was a professional basketball player in several capacities. I could name off the teams if you would like me to.

At 31, I went back to university, got a Ph.D., and then my only employer since then has been the University of Washington.

Q Okay. And can you tell us about your work at the University of Washington, what you teach -- well, assuming you teach. Do you teach?

A I do teach. Yeah, I do teach. Currently, I'm teaching a class on human-computer interaction, which is how people use computers and how the ways that we use computers change how we socialize, communicate, and interact with each other.

Q And what other courses do you teach?

A I teach experimental methods to master's students. I've taught classes, a couple special topics classes on the methods of analyzing social media data and on online rumors and misinformation.

Q Can you expand a little bit on the online rumors and misinformation? What does that mean exactly?

A Online rumors and misinformation, sure. I think there's a couple different definitions here.

So online -- so rumors, actually the definition of rumors goes back -- you start to see research on that in around World War II really kind of take off. Actually it has a longer definition.

But rumor means sort of information that's not verified, that's traveling through informal channels. And rumors can turn out to be true. Rumors can turn out to be false.

So rumor is just sort of, like, uncertain information. They often occur during crisis times. And my original research at the University of Colorado was on the use of social media during crisis events. So rumors are common during crisis events.

Misinformation is information that's false. So a false rumor, you could categorize that as misinformation. And misinformation is not intentionally false.

And then disinformation is a variation of misinformation that's intentional, so someone is intentionally spreading false or misleading information for some sort of objective.

Q And when you say false, either in the context of mis- or disinformation, how do you decide what's false?

A I don't -- well, there's -- I don't even know who -- that's a hard question to answer. I don't necessarily decide when things are false. I think these are the terms that we would use to classify things.

Q Do you rely on other third parties to --

A In my research? In my teaching?

Q Well, both. Can you tell us each?

A Yeah. In my research we tend to look towards official sources and fact-checking organizations to determine veracity, although it's not often that I'm classifying information as misinformation or not. We're just sort of talking about -- we're talking about the ways that information flows and how people make sense of things.

And we tend to more recently kind of go back to the rumor definition because it's a lot easier to work, especially in real-time, because you're not sure about the veracity of information. And so we tend to use the word "rumoring" in the research.

And especially in our historical research and some of the research projects that we may talk about today, we've used the term "misinformation" and "disinformation." And for misinformation, usually if we're working in a real-time capacity, we'd be trying to use official fact-checking organizations.

Q Are there any specific fact-checking organizations you work with frequently?

A I don't work directly with them. I just use their information. I would go online --

Q I see.

A -- and check different fact-checking organizations to see what they say.

Q I see. Okay.

And you mentioned that you do research. Can you tell us more about the kind of research you do?

A Yeah. So starting in around 2010, I started doing research on the use of social media during crisis events; crisis events being mass emergency events, hurricanes, earthquakes, as well as acts of terrorism, looking at how informal information could be used to actually initially -- I have a study in digital volunteerism, how people helped people using social media by helping people find resources, figure out where shelters are, ways to communicate about hazards so people can avoid going towards something that's dangerous, information about how to evacuate, those kinds of things.

So we would actually create these maps in real time to map out crisis events, and then I would study digital volunteerism at the activity that people used to kind of create these maps.

Around 2013, I started to look at rumors during crisis events because rumors became a larger part of the social media record around that time. Hurricane Sandy in 2012 was another case that just started to see rumors become a bigger and bigger part of the conversation that was happening there.

And so 2013, we start to study rumors. Around 2015, 2016, we begin to see that it's not just accidental rumors that we're seeing, it's that people are intentionally spreading falsehoods to try to -- for various reasons that we could try to infer. But we began to see sort of disinformation become pervasive within some pieces of the network of sort of online interactions.

Q And can you tell us about some of your recent research, maybe in the last 5 years or so?

A Yeah. Last 5 years. So 5 years -- so I would say I have a couple of different strong focus points.

So I would -- so one of the things we've been doing was we looked at disinformation campaigns around the 2016 election. We mapped out -- so we've been studying -- one of my students had led a project where we were studying Black Lives Matter discourse, and we had written a paper about sort of both sides of that conversation. We could map out the networks.

And we then learned when Twitter reported out publicly, I think through some conversations with Congress, they ended up getting pressure to point to -- to publish where the Russian troll accounts from the Internet Research Agency in St. Petersburg had been operating accounts impersonating Americans.

And so we did a pretty intensive study mapping those accounts to the Black Lives Matter discourse and actually found those accounts that infiltrated both sides of U.S. discourse and wrote about that.

Another project around the same time we started -- and it probably finished in 2020 -- we looked at a campaign that has Russian, Iranian, and other -- and Syrian Government elements where they were running a disinformation campaign targeting a humanitarian response organization in Syria. And so we have -- one of my students did a dissertation on that. We have several studies on that.

More recently, in the last couple of years, I think in 2020, a lot of my colleagues were really focused on sort of misinformation around COVID, including, like, where people started to get mad at the 5G towers or tell people where to -- that they can drink water and it would make them better, those kinds of things. So we did a little focus on that.

But I ended up spending a little bit more time doing research on the 2020 election.

Q Can you tell us a little bit more about that?

A Yeah. So in real time, my team participated as part of the Election Integrity Partnership to basically use our skills on social media data analysis to help analyze rumors, is what I would call them now, analyze rumors that were spreading in online environments, analyze those in real time, and then try to communicate about them to let people know that these things were spreading in hopes that they could be corrected and that people could get better information about what was going on.

So that included -- so it included real-time activity similar to what I had been doing with the crisis mapping years ago, sort of like a real-time analysis, using our data analysis skills to show how rumors were spreading.

We had four focus areas in that project, in the Election Integrity Partnership.

The first one was on false, misleading claims about when and where to vote that would have caused disenfranchisement.

The second one was on misleading information that would encourage fraud.

The third one, I think, the third dimension, I think, was on false or misleading information that could -- that was motivating violence.

And the fourth one was on false, misleading, or unsubstantiated claims that undermine trust in the election processes, materials, or results.

Q Just to clarify, that wasn't limited to looking at foreign actors, correct? That was also domestic?

A It was looking at information flows through social media spaces. And it is not possible to distinguish between foreign and U.S. actors. As we, you know, when we wrote our Black Lives Matter paper, we thought those were all U.S. actors and then found them to be people impersonating.

And so, yeah, so when you look at social media spaces, those kinds of things are hard to determine.

Q And do you get funding for your research outside of the University of Washington?

A Absolutely, yeah. So my rumoring research and then my early -- I got a career grant from the National Science Foundation. So I have -- early funding for my rumoring research was from the National Science Foundation, and I got a career grant from the National Science Foundation to study disinformation. I think I was awarded that grant in early 2018. And I think 2017 I had some funding from the Navy -- I forget the office there -- to study --

Q Office of Naval Research?

A Office of Naval Research, yeah, to study disinformation. Those, I think, were foreign disinformation focused.

And then more broadly I get a lot of research now through the Center for an Informed Public, and I can talk about that; from philanthropic organizations, the Knight Foundation, Omidyar Network, Hewlett Foundation, Craig Newmark Philanthropies. I may be leaving one out there.

Chairman Jordan. Ms. Starbird, what percentage of -- thanks for being here today.

What percentage of your funding is directly from the government?

Ms. Starbird. I haven't done the math on that. It depends on what generation.

So the government funding funds very specifically our research, our research stuff. It mostly funds my students to do -- to work on things and occasionally funds a month of my salary in the summer.

The other research I have from the Knight Foundation, Hewlett Foundation, those fund the operations for the Center for an Informed Public, as well as student hours and post-doctoral scholars as well.

I think the amounts of funding for me personally in the recent years have mostly come from philanthropic funding through the Center for an Informed Public, but I do still have funding from the National Science Foundation. I also still have one more grant from the National Science Foundation in the crisis space where I look at crisis events.

BY [redacted]:

Q You're one of the cofounders of the Center for an Informed Public. Is that right?

A I am, yes.

Q And when did you cofound that center?

A We cofounded it in fall of 2019.

Q And who are your cofounders?

A Cofounders are Emma Spiro, Jevin West, Ryan Calo, and Chris Coward.

Q And what was the purpose of the CIP? What was it created to do?

A The CIP has a mission to understand and help address the problem of misinformation and strategic manipulation in online spaces, and we do that through four different dimensions.

One is research, just to understand the problem.

We also have an educational mission and an outreach mission to help people. So we do media literacy kinds of things, trainings.

We also consult, give talks, to help members of the public understand the challenges of online misinformation.

And then we have a law and policy pillar as well. I'm not as connected to that. That's Ryan Calo.

Q But you're very involved in the other three. Is that correct?

A I'm probably most -- like, I lead the research and co-led the research component and the data infrastructure piece because of the data and analyses that we do. But right now I'm the director of the center, so I have a larger view of the other dimensions as well.

Q And, in your opinion, what should tech companies do to combat the misinformation, disinformation, and malinformation? Which you actually defined the first two, but I don't think we talked about malinformation. If you don't mind defining that.

A I don't use that term myself very much.

Q Oh, okay.

A I don't like it.

Q Okay.

A And I know the government uses it. So in a capacity we'll talk about later, I was on a committee that had that in their name, and I tried to remove it from our conversations because I don't care for that term.

Q Why don't you care for it?

A I think it's murky, and I prefer to focus on things that are -- that we can define as on a veracity scale, as opposed to malinformation tends to be information that can be harmful, like harassment and other kinds of things, but is not necessarily false.

And I've really been focused in the sort of, like, rumors and veracity space. And I think when we bring malinformation in, things can get harder to talk about with clear delineations.

Q I see.

So can you tell us what steps you believe tech companies should take to combat misinformation and disinformation? I know that's a very hard question.

A It's a hard question to answer because every day it changes, because we're learning more things all the time. I mean, I'm a researcher, right? And we have to understand this space is extremely dynamic. The phenomenon is changing. People's understandings of it are changing.

In 2016, people had never heard -- they never even thought that someone would be impersonating someone else online and that we could fall for that and have conversations with that.

And then now media literacy, people are actually much more aware of that. I think there's been times where I might have said that sort of we could think about the affordances of the platforms and changing those to kind of change how -- so we kind of think about design and how these platforms actually amplify the problems of misinformation in part by creating opportunities for influencers to gain influence by purposefully putting malicious content and misinformation, disinformation out in the space.

And so thinking about how the platforms could design the ways that people are recommended certain content, to change some of those dynamics to make healthier spaces.

But my opinions have evolved over time, I would say, and so my opinions today right now, I'm much more focused on the media literacy pieces and also trying to think about how we build tools that actually can give people who are using these platforms information about how the information reaches them so they can make better decisions about what they believe and what they share.

And so one of my recent papers focuses on that aspect, which is how do we sort of support new media literacy. So that's kind of where I would say I am most encouraged about where the research is going now.

Q Can you define media literacy for us, please?

A Media literacy?

Q Yes.

A And we've got a few different terms. We've got media literacy, digital media literacy, information literacy. These fields are evolving so quickly that the language is changing underneath us as we're doing that work.

Media literacy is actually -- and probably used the wrong term there -- media literacy has been focused, it's got a history of kind of focusing on how information moves through media and how we can be better critical thinkers about how we're getting that information.

I think information literacy speaks a little bit more. It combines that but understands how information is moving through online platforms. And so people have a better understanding of sort of digital information literacy. They can understand a little bit where they may be more vulnerable to mis- and disinformation.

And so there are ideas to improve people's media literacy. Unfortunately, we could teach people all day to say, okay, you don't want to believe someone who is impersonating. But if we don't give them the tools to be able to detect when someone is impersonating someone else, they're not going to be able to use those skills.

So coming up with ways to develop signals within these platforms to help understand information provenance, which is the basis of my career grant, was to help people kind of track -- part of it was to study disinformation. Part of it was to understand those dynamics. And then part of it was to help people figure out how they could track information provenance with this understanding. If we understand better how information moves through systems, we can make better decisions.

And I would say information literacy or digital media literacy is what our Center for an Informed Public is focusing on right now when we've had our conversations in the last 3 to 4 months.

Q Have you worked with government agencies, or do you work with government agencies in your capacity?

A Have I worked directly -- with the University of Washington?

Q Yeah.

A I have recently been sitting as --

Mr. Burton. You mean Federal, because she works at the University of Washington?

BY [redacted]:

Q Yeah, sorry. Federal agencies.

A Yeah. And do we want to start after my crisis work? Because the crisis work, I don't -- I do think I had a grant from, like, NOAA to work in that space, and I would sometimes have meetings with people.

When people ask me to help and lend my insight, I usually say yes. And so I don't know how we're defining "work with." But I've been doing that my whole academic career, starting back, like, after the 2010 earthquake, I would be on the phone sometimes with folks who were asking questions about what we thought was going on.

But more --

Q Tell us as much as you can.

A Yeah. But more recently -- I can focus on more recent because my memory is probably better. I'm on the CISA -- the advisory board for DHS, CISA, external advisory board, and I've been on that since 2021. I'm sure we're going to talk about that. And so in that capacity I've been working with that office.

Prior to that, would I be directly working with anyone in the Federal Government? Not that I know of.

Q Okay.

A Now, indirectly, other folks on the project I was on were -- they were an external partner to a project that I was on, but I wasn't directly interfacing with them.

Q Okay. So as far as -- yeah, let's talk about the subcommittee.

Are you familiar with -- it's CSAC?

A CISA?

Q No, not CISA. The -- I don't know what -- how you pronounce it. The acronym is CSAC.

BY [redacted]:

Q So are you familiar with CISA?

A I'm familiar with CISA now, yeah.

Q And what is CISA?

A I mean, I live in Washington State. All these letters, they don't all make sense to me. We don't have this alphabet soup.

Yeah, the CS -- the CSAC is the advisory board that I'm on, I believe.

Q Yes.

A Yeah, they say that -- it took me a while to figure out what the term meant.

Q And what is that?

A It's an external advisory board that we meet with a group of people. A lot of them come from industry. I think there's two researchers on that group. And we advise Jen Easterly around cybersecurity issues.

So we're going to jump over to, like, most of that is, like, traditional cybersecurity on sort of cyber hygiene kind of initiatives, so how we help people figure out how to protect their devices, use two-factor authentication so they don't fall victim individually to hackers, but also people in companies, to help companies not to get hacked.

And we talk about as a workforce issues. So they have a lot of initiatives around, like, trying to get people into the workforce there. And, yeah, conversations to inform the CISA office on -- we give recommendations. So we don't do anything operational. We just kind of give recommendations on different issues that Jen Easterly has asked to get feedback on.

BY [redacted]:

Q And you're on the MDM Subcommittee under --

A I was on the MDM Subcommittee, right.

Q When did you stop being on it?

A The MDM Subcommittee was dissolved last fall.

Q Oh, I see.

Do you know when it was formed?

A So I think the advisory board was formed in -- I think Jen Easterly first -- so I met her through an email or she reached out to me through an email in 2021 in the fall, and then she asked me to be on the committee.

The committee starts to convene around 2022 in the winter, maybe December of 2021, and around that time she asked me to lead the MDM Subcommittee. And I asked: What is MDM? And then we got -- yeah, figured it out.

Q Did they define the terms the way that you defined them earlier, misinformation and disinformation?

A Their terms are slightly different than mine because there's a lot of -- I'm going to get really into the weeds here.

But these terms are dynamic. So these are problems that are just rising in terms of awareness, in part because of the online systems that we use.

And so their terms on disinformation are very specific, like -- and I have a slightly different term of -- definition of disinformation than they do. But I would say, like, the one I gave you is probably pretty consistent with what the Federal Government uses, which I think is what CISA uses.

Q Okay. So how does your definition of disinformation differ from theirs?

A Oh, mine has -- mine acknowledges that the role of unwitting agents in the spread of disinformation, going back to sort of, like, reports -- sorry.

So 2016, we kind of become aware of this term, and some of us had used it before. We didn't really understand what it meant, disinformation, and how it has a history of a certain technique via Russian intelligence starting in the -- probably even before World War II. Thomas Rid has a great book about that.

And the disinformation is intentional, but that a large portion of the people that spread disinformation do not always realize that they are witting participants in that -- or so they're not -- they don't always realize that it's disinformation, so they're unwitting participants in the spread of disinformation.

And so my definition kind of suggests that even when disinformation is spreading and a person doesn't know it, it's still disinformation. They just happen to be an unwitting conduit.

Q Right.

A Whereas CISA draws a line where you have to be -- it's misinformation if you don't know it's --

Q I see.

A If you don't know it's not true, it's misinformation. It's just sort of semantics.

Q Okay. So according to CISA, it could sort of originate as disinformation, but then other people --

A Then it comes misinformation as it spreads, yeah. And there's actually a little bit of academic, like, we're still trying to figure out what it means, right?

Q Yeah. What was the primary purpose of the subcommittee?

A The primary purpose of that subcommittee was to address what they perceive to be as one of the hard -- the biggest challenges for election officials, local and State election officials. In fact, I'd been to a couple of conferences prior, which is probably why I said yes to this, where election officials said that, like, the thing that was hardest in their jobs was dealing with misinformation.

And I think Stephen Richer had said: Dealing with misinformation is my day job. Running the election is my night job.

Q Who is Stephen Richer?

A Stephen Richer is -- happened to take over as recorder in Maricopa County in 2020, which Maricopa County is 3,600 -- we're going off to the side here -- but we have, like, 3,600 different jurisdictions for voting in the United States, but that one happens to be a very big county in a swing State, and so gets a lot of attention.

And in 2020, they had perceived problems with Sharpie pens. And in 2022 -- well, in 2020, Stephen Richer took over as -- he wins that election as a Republican in Maricopa County and becomes the recorder there. And there were a lot of false claims about the validity of the 2020 election there related to Sharpie pens. I'm happy to talk about it.

And he is dealing with all that kind of fallout from that as he takes over. And he begins to say that misinformation is, like, overtaking his job because it's so hard to deal with all the misinformation that he's confronting.

Q And what about malinformation? How did the subcommittee define malinformation, or CISA?

A I don't know how they defined it. In our work we just tried to avoid it. So when we gave recommendations, we tried to take malinformation off of the recommendations and just make recommendations about mis- and disinformation.

Q I see.

A And we were working pretty much specifically in elections context. We were asked to give recommendations possibly more broadly, and we thought that we would focus our energy, especially leading up into the 2022 midterm election with this sort of -- the acute problem of misinformation that election officials were experiencing -- we focused our attention on just thinking about that particular problem.

Q Did you attend meetings? Were there meetings?

A There were meetings, yeah, yeah, really exciting ones.

So I attended I think -- I think I've been in three in-person meetings with the full group, the full advisory board, which has some 20-some members maybe. In fact, it's got more. They added a bunch in the last round.

And then there would be, I think, biweekly meetings. From maybe February or March of 2022 until September of 2022 we had biweekly meetings, like 1-hour meetings remotely.

Q I see.

A Yeah.

Q And --

[redacted]. Sorry. Just real quick.

[redacted]. Okay.

BY [redacted]:

Q You mentioned the full committee expanded since the last round?

A Yeah.

Q What did you mean by that?

A I think they invited additional members onto the advisory board.

Q Okay. And was that -- what do you mean? I guess what do you mean by round?

A It was like the completion of a year. So when -- so it had been -- it was at the year date. And I mean round because we have the meetings at the same time each year.

So it was a December meeting that we had, like, a first meeting, and it was the next December of that day that they changed the committees, they changed around the subcommittees, and they added more people to the larger committee.

Q And are people asked to serve for 1-year terms?

A I think it's 2 years, yeah.

Q What are the other subcommittees?

A I don't know all the other subcommittees. But in the first year my memory is there was like a cyber hygiene around like trying to protect individuals and companies by two-factor authentication and other kinds of things.

There's some kind of technological advisory committee. There was a committee on trying to improve, like, the workforce or grow the workforce. And I honestly don't remember the other committees.

BY [redacted]:

Q You said that the MDM Subcommittee disbanded?

A After the first year, yeah.

Q Do you know why?

A I don't know why. She said that our work was over, the midterms were done, and that was it.

Q Okay.

[redacted]. Who is "she"?

Ms. Starbird. Jen Easterly, Director Easterly.

BY [redacted]:

Q And who are the other members? I know you said there were lots of --

A I can't remember.

Q Yeah. So the ones that you can remember?

A Yeah. I can name the members of my subcommittee.

Q Yeah.

A So that was Alicia Tate-Nadeau.

Q Can you tell us where they came from, where they worked?

A Where they came from?

Q Yeah.

A Okay. Alicia Tate-Nadeau I think is maybe Illinois emergency response. Suzanne Spaulding, I think she is -- I can't remember the letters. There's C's and I's and S's, but I don't know which order, and she is the director of an organization, I believe. And then Vijaya Gadde, whose name I might be mispronouncing, she was at Twitter at the time.

Q And some of these people were from government, right, from Federal Government agencies?

A On the actual committee?

Q Yeah.

A I don't believe the actual committee had people from Federal Government agencies. I could be wrong.

Q Okay. Did people besides subcommittee members attend the meetings?

A Yeah. So these are online meetings, and they were run in Microsoft Teams, and I could not always see who all was there.

My understanding is that some individuals that are on these committees could bring a second, so a person to help them. I learned that too late to have brought my own. It would have been nice to have a notetaker. So there is seconds.

And then there were staff from CISA who would help us -- staff from CISA who would, like, help us take notes. They would help produce an agenda and minutes and those kinds of things.

And then there were folks -- in our subcommittee there were folks, Kim Wyman and Geoff Hale, who would come from the CISA office -- not always, they would show up when they could make the meetings -- that could be a resource for us to ask, like, what -- basically we would ask them how things worked, so then we could kind of think about if there was something that could be different or kind of blend that into our recommendations. So they were resources for us to ask questions of.

Q Okay. And what was typically discussed at the meetings, I guess more specifically than just MDM?

A Yeah. So we were put on this committee to give advice to Director Easterly around -- initially she gave us a set of questions, and they're probably in the minutes notes. She gave us a set of questions around how they should scope their work and what their work should be and how they should go about it.

And we, our goal was to create what she said is a short, readable set of recommendations that she could then review and then decide whether or not to integrate those recommendations into their mission. And so all of our work was focused around making those recommendations.

Q And how are those recommendations decided? Like, did you discuss and then vote? Or was it just --

A Well, there was four of us, and it was often only a couple of us made it. Vijaya was actually very busy, didn't come to all the meetings. And Alicia Tate-Nadeau was unable to come to a lot of those meetings as well. So Suzanne Spaulding and I probably did the bulk of the work.

But we talked to each other. And then we would also interview outside experts at those meetings. We interviewed some outside experts -- including, I think, Stephen Richer, which is why I have the quote from him -- to ask them what their experiences were and what they thought -- I don't know if all of them answered it -- but just how they were going about their work, what their problems were, what they were dealing with, so we could kind of ideate on how CISA might be able to support them.

Q Do you know what CISA did with the recommendations? Did they always adopt them? Did they --

A So we only gave -- we gave recommendations at two different periods. One was in June of 2022 and one was in September of 2022.

The June ones, she accepted some and didn't accept others. And the September ones I honestly don't know because I couldn't go to the meeting because I had COVID. And I don't remember looking through and seeing exactly which ones were accepted or not.

Q Do you --

A Or actually maybe her -- maybe that came later. I missed -- whatever it is, I missed the meeting where she described that. And, to be honest, they sent me a document for how to see how she was going to accept the recommendations, and I couldn't open it, and so I never did.

[redacted]. Do you recall who sent you that?

Ms. Starbird. I don't.

[redacted]. Was it someone from CISA?

Ms. Starbird. Yeah, it is. And it's probably public. I think it's public. You could probably look it up.

BY [redacted]:

Q What were the recommendations?

A I can't remember exactly all of the recommendations.

Q That's okay.

A But our big focus was on trying to really focus their mission as a communicative mission. So communication around sort of PSAs, around digital media literacy or digital information literacy. I think we might have called it civic media literacy. We were trying to play with those words a little bit.

But recommendations on sort of, like, how they could communicate generally about how people can be more aware of their vulnerabilities, and then working with State and local election officials to help them identify when there's rumors about their processes and procedures and help them proactively communicate with the right audiences in the right ways to be able to address false rumors; again, for instance, about when and where to vote or around the integrity of their processes.

Q And what specific recommendations would you make about that, how to address that problem?

A I mean, I think it's really important for them to be able to -- and the problem is, is that local and State election officials, they don't have resources. They don't have the resources that have a communications team to be able to communicate this, which is why they're suffering so much.

Our recommendation was that there could be information sharing to help the local and State election officials understand what was -- the kinds of things -- understand when there's a rumor spreading and especially kind of make a determination of whether or not -- there's a whole thing about whether or not to respond to rumors, depending on how visible they are. And so to give them the support they need on making those determinations around how to respond.

And it was a communication response. So it's about -- we didn't put the details in the thing. But the example is Sharpie pens in Maricopa County in 2020.

So the Sharpies were bleeding through the ballots, and people began to think that they were -- that their ballots weren't getting counted correctly because the Sharpies were bleeding through.

And it was a legitimate concern that they had. It turns out the ballots were developed in a way that if they bleed through, the readers aren't reading the part that's bled through. They're only reading the front side of the page. So it wasn't actually affecting their votes, but they thought it was affecting their votes.

And so the trick is, like, how do we help these local and State election officials identify that quickly on election day as it's happening? People were getting really upset. There was confrontations at the polls. People were bringing other pens in.

They start to have these confrontations at the polls. And so if the local and State election officials have been able to sort of get ahead of that and say, "No, we designed them that way and that you can't bring your other pen because these pens don't dry fast enough" -- well, this is actually a felt tip pen.

But if it was an ink pen, the ink pens don't dry fast enough and they smear the readers when you put them in there. And so the ink pens actually cause another problem.

But they weren't able to understand that this was happening and communicate fast enough. And so you end up with a bunch of people that thought they had been disenfranchised, who truly thought they had been disenfranchised with those things.

Q Did the subcommittee deal with topics other than elections?

A We talked about the fact that there could be other places where critical infrastructure could be affected by the spread of mis- and disinformation. For instance, in emergency response you could see, like, if you have an earthquake, you could see a foreign adversary trying to get into that information space. And people are supposed to be evacuating, going to shelters over here, and trying to get people to go towards the hazard or whatever.

So you could see, like, places like emergency response was one that we thought about adding. And I know that we talked a little bit about financial services where people might spread falsehoods about financial services to kind of create runs on banks or different kinds of things.

Another one is -- so if you think of CISA's core mission is as a cybersecurity outfit, so when the pipeline was hacked and then the pipeline went off I think in 2022 -- 2021 maybe -- you can see a disinformation attempt to try to get people to all go fill up their gas tanks, which can actually amplify the problem.

So there are all these places where critical infrastructure intersects with mis- and disinformation in ways that we thought we might think about, but we really, because of the timing, because of the acuteness of election misinformation and thinking about 2022, we focused our recommendations almost totally on that.

Q What about COVID? Was that ever discussed?

A We didn't talk about COVID.

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you serving on a different subcommittee now or once MDM Subcommittee was disbanded --

A I'm serving on a different subcommittee now.

Q And which one?

A It's the technical advisory committee. I've been to one meeting. I'm still trying to figure out how all the things work and what the new acronyms are.

Q Do you know if any of the subcommittees covered concerns related to mis- or disinformation related to financial services in light of, like, the recent bank failures?

A No, I don't know. I haven't heard any conversation about that in the context.

Q You mentioned a couple names. Kim Wyman?

A Yeah.

Q Who is she?

A Close to my heart. She's the former Republican secretary of state of the State of Washington, and she now works for the CISA office.

Q And what's her current position with CISA?

A I don't know exactly what her title is, but it has something to do with elections.

Q And who is Geoff Hale?

A Geoff Hale is someone who also works at CISA, and I don't know his title.

Q You mentioned that there was CISA staff that helped with the logistics?

A Yeah.

Q Did they, did any of the staff members play a substantive role in your meetings?

A No. They were mostly a resolving door of people, so I can't remember all their names because they would change every couple of weeks.

But they would just come -- it was virtual. Sometimes they would have a meeting with me beforehand for 15 minutes. They would say: What do you want to be on the agenda? What are we going to do?

And so they would create an agenda with me, and then they would open the meeting and then step out of the way and then let me lead the meeting. They would then close the meeting. And then after the meeting, they would send me meeting notes to give a thumbs up to.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. This is exhibit 1. If you can just take a look at it and let me know when you've had a chance to.

[Pause.]

Ms. Starbird. All right.

[redacted]. At the bottom of page 1, the first bullet point, it says: "Dr. Starbird thought CISA might have a role based on the Subcommittee helping to define the narrative so the 'whole of government' approach" -- which is in quotes, whole of government -- "could be leveraged."

What did you think CISA might have a role in exactly?

Ms. Starbird. I have no idea what I meant by that.

[Laughter.]

So for me this meeting was just completely educational. I have never worked in government, and I don't know how things work. And I was actually trying to understand, A, what the FBI does in this context, where the line is between what the FBI does versus what CISA does work.

And I'm still trying to figure out what CISA did at this point because a lot of that was a little bit opaque to me even as a person who's on the committee. So I was probably asking an open question.

I actually don't use the word "whole of government," so that may have come from someone else in the conversation or just been sort of a summary from the person who was writing the minutes notes.

[redacted]. Go ahead.

[redacted]. What's your understanding of what role the FBI plays in this space?

Ms. Starbird. From this meeting, which is the majority of my education on this, is that they're very focused on two types of actors. One is sort of foreign actors, and one is criminal actors. And that they don't do anything on a content base, and they're just looking at foreign and criminal actors. And those were very strong delineations for them.

[redacted]. On the next page, so it's 2, the -- well, I guess you would call it the first bullet point on that page: "Ms. Dehmlow was asked to provide her thoughts. She stated we need a media infrastructure that is held accountable."

Do you recall any of that discussion and what was said about that?

Ms. Starbird. I don't recall, no.

[redacted]. In your research, do you have -- have others discussed how to hold the media accountable?

Ms. Starbird. Hold the media accountable? Not -- I mean, in my research -- how to hold the media accountable. I don't think so. I think accountable in the sense of, like, yelling at them when they do the wrong thing maybe. But I don't think, like, there's any -- that I've ever discussed, like, what media should do.

[redacted]. A little bit later on, it's the bullet point starting with: "Ms. Kim Wyman identified a study out of Stanford University and stated a recommendation was for social media companies not to promote MDM actors, which would reduce the promulgation of information from these people."

Do you agree with that statement?

Ms. Starbird. Do I agree with that statement?

Mr. Burton. Do you agree that this accurately reflects what this person said at the time?

[redacted]. No. Does she agree with the sentiment --

Mr. Burton. Or do you agree with the sentiment that's being attributed to this person?

[redacted]. Yeah, yes.

Ms. Starbird. I think when you think about some of what we're experiencing in terms of our online environment and some of the trends we've watched around the pervasiveness of mis- and disinformation, part of what we're experiencing is because the design of social media systems has changed how we get our information and who we get it from.

And part of that, there's a lot of research on the displacement of gatekeepers, that we used to have gatekeepers who were these mainstream media outlets. And that was problematic in any number of ways. We had very limited viewpoints that we could get access to.

And social media changed that in ways, it democratized information in ways that have been largely celebrated, especially in the early 2010s.

As we start to realize there are these other kinds of problems in the information space, because there's no gatekeepers, in some ways, anything goes. We have access to all of this different information, but it becomes much harder to determine what we should trust and whom we should trust.

And more recently there has been sort of a redistribution -- this is just kind of coming out in the research -- where it's not anything goes. It's not really that we all have an equal voice in these online environments. There's a few people who have figured out how to manipulate the system to gain larger and larger megaphones.

And part of that -- I mean, there's been history of, like, using bots, using paid accounts to kind of amplify their things. And so people can take advantage or game the system to gain outsized influence.

And in my, like, my research I have really focus on, like, what could the platforms do to counter that to get back to where we have this more democratic discourse where we have access to ideas, we can share ideas, but there's less ability for a few people to game the system. A lot of because how they game the system is gaming our psychological vulnerabilities, which is giving us a lot of what we want to hear, but is exactly where we're vulnerable to spreading and believing mis- and disinformation, which can be harmful to us individually and harmful to us as a society.

And so my personal views from my research is that it's an open question on how we intervene in that system in order to create healthier democratic discourse, but that there could be some ideas around the platforms reconsidering how they become these spaces that a few individuals can manipulate for representational gain that allows them to manipulate us at scale.

BY [redacted]:

Q You mentioned there was an open question about how we intervene. Who are you referencing?

A We as a society. I think about solutions on all different scales. There's intervening in the sense of, like, you create educational initiatives.

My colleague, Jevin West, has a class on "Calling Bullshit" that teaches people how to identify when they're being lied to by a data visualization. And we can teach people to better recognize when people are impersonating accounts and trying to infiltrate our online communities, to become part of our group and then manipulate us from there.

We can think about, again, like I talked about building tools that give people the signals of where they're getting -- how information is getting to them so they can make better decisions about what they should trust.

And so there's intervening all along the ways.

There has been a lot of talk -- and I'm sure you want to ask about this -- around platform moderation as part of that. Personally, I think the research is still out on whether that's successful or whether it's useful.

Initially, I was not a real proponent of labels. Then I got a little bit more excited about them. And then I got a lot less excited about them after looking at the research come in.

But, yeah, so there's all different levers that could be -- that could have sort of interventions. But me, personally, I talk about what can society do. When I say "we," there's like a global we there. But what can society do? And as a researcher, I might have impact on what society does by giving a talk or by being on an advisory board or by teaching my students to go out there and design better platforms.

Q And you said this meeting was educational to you and you were learning about what the FBI --

A Yeah, because I had no idea how the FBI works, yeah.

Q Did you have the sense that the FBI and CISA had similar understandings of what each agency's role was?

A I don't know if I could answer that question. I mean, it's a Teams meeting. I can't even see everybody's faces. So I don't know that -- there didn't seem to be -- and the CISA folks weren't talking. We were talking -- our committee was talking to Laura Dehmlow.

And so I didn't really get any -- I don't remember getting any feedback from the CISA team on how they were interacting with her comments.

Q Do you recall who brought the FBI to this meeting, if it was one of the subcommittee members or someone from CISA?

A We created the invitation list. I would not have known to invite her. It must have been one of my colleagues. And I would assume that it was Susan Spaulding because she would probably be the person to have more knowledge about how different government agencies worked and whom we should talk to.

[10:57 a.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And whenever someone brought a second -- or an expert that you referenced earlier, would that make it into the meeting notes?

A I believe the meeting notes had a list of the people that attended, but I don't know that for sure.

And an expert -- the experts would have been in the meeting notes because they would have been the focus -- whenever an expert came -- and I think we had three or four -- about half of the meeting would be spent talking to them. And then they would leave, and then we would sort of discuss among ourselves what we learned.

Q And did everyone on the subcommittee have an opportunity to review the meeting minutes?

A They were sent them -- I reviewed them -- I'm a busy person, so I probably didn't review them as closely as one could. But I reviewed them, and then they were circulated to the rest of the subcommittee. And I'm not sure that they read them either.

Q Just to clarify, you said you had an opportunity to review. Was it your understanding that others on the subcommittee had an opportunity to review as well?

A No, no. I reviewed, and then they went out.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. That's my understanding.

Q We can take these back.

A Okay.

[redacted]. This is exhibit 2. You can take a look, and let me know when you're finished.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Starbird. All right.

BY [redacted]:

Q On the page marked 2, which is Bates No. 5374, it says that you asked what should be the limitation -- sorry. It's actually the next sentence.

You asked if rumor control should be a project within CISA and what it should look like.

What do you mean by "rumor control"?

A My understanding is that CISA was using the term "rumor control" internally as part of their work prior to us having this committee convened. I think it might have been in the list of questions that were given to me as a -- when we were asked to sort of -- here's your questions to give us feedback on. I think that this question was one of them. It was like, is rumor control -- should that be part of what CISA is doing?

And my understanding of how they ran that -- rumor control was mostly as a place of communicating about what rumors were spreading. And so -- and I said, from my research in rumoring, that terminology is not -- and that kind of approach to rumors is probably not as -- you know, may not be the best thing. And so I was kind of asking if rumor control was the right approach.

[redacted]. Okay. Our first hour is up.

We can go off the record, please.

[Recess.]

[redacted]. It's 11:15. We can go back on the record.

EXAMINATION

BY [redacted]:

Q Dr. Starbird, thank you, again, for joining us today. I appreciate you taking the time to fly out here and join us voluntarily.

A Happy to be here.

Q You were asked in the earlier hour about the grants you had received?

A Yes.

Q And you mentioned that you had received some grants from the National Science Foundation?

A Absolutely, yeah.

Q Can you -- are you familiar with the process that people go through to get an NSF grant?

A Yes. I've served on panels. Of course. Yeah.

Q Okay. Can you describe that process to us?

A Yeah. You write a proposal that outlines sort of the intellectual contributions. It's got, like -- so what are the intellectual merits, the broader impacts of that work, and you write a proposal -- 10 to 15 pages, depending on the size of the grant -- to basically articulate what you're going to do, what the methods are, and how that's going to enhance science and enhance what we understand about something that we care about.

And then -- again, there's these two criteria. One is the intellectual merit, the scientific contribution. One is the broader impact. And that is essentially, like, how does this help society?

Q And then, on the NSF side, are you familiar with the process --

A Yeah.

Q -- that NSF undertakes to review and decide whether to make a grant award?

A Yes. They bring in other researchers, experts in that field and related fields. They have a strenuous review process. They've got all these different review criteria. You'll have three or four experts, like, review those grants. Then they rank those grants from not competitive to low competitive to competitive.

And then, from there, they -- the NSF program officers make determinations of how to get the ones that the panel decides need to be funded -- how to get those funded.

Q How long does the process usually take?

A It takes usually about a year from the time that you submit a grant to the time that you receive the funds.

Q Would you describe this as a fairly rigorous process?

A Extremely rigorous. It's very hard to get a National Science Foundation grant, yeah.

Q And compared to, for example, other grants that you've received, would you say NSF is one of the most rigorous?

A Absolutely. Other grants, we can write, you know, a page or two depending on if the funder knows -- like, philanthropic grants, they know us. They know what we do. We might write a page or two. We'll have some conversations. And they might, you know, fund the Center for an Informed Public.

National Science Foundation, it's a peer-reviewed process. And so it's not any one individual. It's other -- it's other researchers who then say that this work has value.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And you also mentioned that you received a grant from the Navy, and I didn't write down the name of the actual grant program. Do you recall that?

A Yeah. It's the O- -- Office of Naval Research -- ONR.

Q Okay. And you only received one grant from them, correct?

A I think I might have been on two grants from them.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. One was -- I received it, and one was -- I was contracted to do some work on it.

Q Were you part of the process for applying for those grants?

A Was I part of the process for applying for the grants? Yes, but I don't remember the process very well.

Q Okay. Understood.

A Yeah. It was in 2017. Yeah.

Q Okay. So it was a while ago?

A Yeah. And it wasn't very much money compared to other things. They were very small projects.

Q And you said that they were fairly limited in scope for what you could use the grant money for?

A Yeah, yeah. They were very kind of delineated around -- around -- and the first one was foreign disinformation.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q Earlier in your career -- taking a step back. Earlier in your career, you said you graduated -- that you obtained your Ph.D. in 2010, correct?

A No. My Ph.D. in 2012.

Q 2012. I'm sorry.

As part of your process of getting your Ph.D., did you conduct any research?

A Yeah, I did a lot of research. So my research as a Ph.D. student was mostly focused -- there was another strand initially on the education and computer science, but I moved over to focusing on the use of social media during crisis events.

And we studied that in a couple of different ways, but we collected a lot of data from social media platforms, including Twitter back when we were able to do that. No longer true today.

But we collected a lot of data from Twitter, public data that was publicly shared and publicly available, and we looked at how people were sharing information about a crisis event like the Haiti earthquake. There was an earthquake in Chile, floods, Red River floods, all sorts of different kind of crisis events, and looked at how people shared information, looked at the value of, like, understanding a crisis event by the information that people were sharing with the opportunity that we have to learn more about how a crisis event is unfolding both in real time and as researchers after the fact.

And then I also started digital voluntarism, which is how people come together to help other people during crisis events using social media platforms. As part of that -- and the discovery of the online volunteers actually happened through a project that my team was doing that I led part of it as a Ph.D. student, which is really common. I led a project to do real-time crisis mapping based on information that was coming through Twitter. We would take that information, process it, do quick data analysis, and create maps of an unfolding crisis event.

And then other volunteers online sort of helped us create those maps, and then I started to study the online voluntarism that people would do to try to help each other by creating informational resources during a crisis event. And that was my -- my dissertation was in that.

Q Okay. Did you also do work tracking the use of social media in the 2010 Deepwater Horizon oil spill?

A So I did two things in Deepwater Horizon around that event. One was this real-time work. So I created this way of sort of automatically taking tweets -- if people put them in a certain format, I could automatically take them and add them to a map. And so what I was doing was creating these live crisis maps of events.

And so, for the 2010 oil spill -- the Deepwater Horizon oil spill, we would map -- like, people would take pictures on the beaches. We were mapping the impacts of that event sort of in real time.

Now, years later -- 2 years later, we came back to all that -- so, in order to do that data, I had to collect data from Twitter in order to do the real-time mapping. So, when I started my job at the University of Washington, I went back to that dataset and started studying the online sense-making process that people were going through to make sense of what was happening. That was with, I think, a NOAA grant with two or three other collaborators at the University of Washington to start kind of thinking about, in particular -- it was a really quirky thing we were focused on, but, like, how people processed the use of dispersants -- the dispersant technology -- as one of the options to clean it up. There was a lot of controversy around whether or not to use dispersants, and so we studied how people made sense of that controversy.

Q And what's the value of understanding how people make sense of that type of controversy?

A Well -- what's the value? The scientist in me is like, everything is valuable. We're curious. We want to answer these questions.

I think one of the -- it's interesting -- it's been a focal point of a lot of research in crisis events because sometimes those discourses can go right and can lead us towards, you know, understanding what's happening in ways that are enlightening and useful and help for responses. And also, those sense-making processes can go wrong. And so there's a lot of research on collective sense-making or sense-making within organizations, which are related but not exactly the same concept. But there's a lot of research on sense-making.

And so we saw this opportunity with this new kind of data to look at sense-making in real time. To look at sense-making not through conversations -- through interviews later, but we could look at actually people making sense of things through their social media posts as these events were happening. And so there's this kind of new window of insight into this, like, very human process of how we process a disaster event.

In the case of Deepwater Horizon, like, the people there -- there were all sorts of people talking about it. It's a platform that's global, right? But there were a lot of locals that were really sort of processing this, like, horrific event that was happening to them that was marring these beaches that they really cared about. They were worried about health, the health impact, and those kinds of things. And some of that, you know, was really valuable to start working through it.

And they also were very vulnerable to rumors and conspiracy theories that we remarked on -- in our research in 2012-2013, we started to remark on that -- on how they were really vulnerable at those times due to those kinds of anxieties. But we know that anxiety and uncertainty makes us vulnerable to rumors. That's part of why rumors spread during crisis events. That's why we, as researchers, study those events as opportunities.

Q When you talk about individuals being vulnerable to rumors --

A Yeah.

Q -- and conspiracy theories, is that -- would you agree that that poses a risk to those individuals or it poses a risk to society at large if people are susceptible to kind of -- for example, in the case of Deepwater Horizon, if they are believing in -- I don't want to say false rumors because I understand that rumors may or may not be false --

A Yeah, well --

Q -- but whatever the right terminology would be?

A Well, rumors do turn out to be false, right?

So let me give you an example. So we were doing that live crisis mapping activity around Deepwater Horizon. And I'm on Twitter, and I'm mapping things, and some people would -- these volunteers would share things. And one of them -- because I was a researcher -- I was still a Ph.D. student, but, you know, I was the leader of this project.

This digital volunteer reached out to me via my DMs in Twitter, and she said: I'm really worried about this article that I read.

And I guess I'd seen it kind of bouncing around.

I said: Well, can you send it to me?

She sends it to me. And it's this article where they've interviewed two scientists, and it turns out to be Russian scientists, but I didn't catch it at the time.

And they had said that they -- there was this article featuring them, and they said that they thought the ocean floor was going to collapse because all the oil was going to be taken out of it, sending a tsunami onto shore, and, like, basically wiping out the population.

And I said: Well, there's something about this article I don't quite understand. I don't think it's probably true.

But she was like: Well, I'm really worried.

It was clearly making her anxious, and she was asking my expert opinion whether or not she should go and move in with her daughter in a different place for a few months. And I said: Well, it probably couldn't hurt to be with your daughter for a few months.

But in that case, like, disinformation -- which we later learned was Russian disinformation, but I didn't learn that until many years later when I went back and looked at that data and was, like, oh, my goodness.

But when we -- at the time, it probably didn't hurt her to do the wrong thing, but her emotional stress that she was -- the stress that she was experiencing due to some of those false claims and conspiracy theories -- and, in this case, disinformation really was having an impact on her acutely and I imagine was affecting a lot of the population there. I mean, she's just one person, but that article was spreading around a lot of the locals and the activists that were -- that were participating in collective sense-making around that event. Yeah.

Q And I want to actually look at the ways that there can be harm from kind of false rumors in the election context.

A Yeah, for sure.

Q So I think you've done some work on election rumor -- false rumors, I guess, pertaining to individuals impersonating election workers, right?

A Impersonating election workers --

Q Or online accounts that would be falsely impersonating an official election account?

A I personally don't think I've done any work with someone who's impersonating -- I think a project I was on did identify that, and so that is part of -- the Election Integrity Partnership, I do think had, like, one of those cases, but I didn't work directly on it, so I don't remember it.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q Would you agree that, if somebody was impersonating an official account, it could potentially harm the process?

A Absolutely. I think one of the most acute worries in the election context -- the first and foremost one is that false information about when and where to vote can confuse people and can disenfranchise voters. And that can be accidental false information.

So one of the things that happens in online spaces -- because we have 3,600 different jurisdictions or something close to that -- that the rules in one place are not the same as rules in others. Times are different, when your mail-in ballots are due are different, those kinds of things. And so information that's true in one place may be false in another.

And so just, like, accidentally seeing the information about another State and then thinking, "Oh, my ballot doesn't count anymore because I sent it in too late," when really, in your State, it did still count, is actually a potential for disenfranchisement.

We've also seen people intentionally mislead about when and where to vote. Sometimes they say it's a joke, but in other cases, there have been, like, intentional efforts to disenfranchise people through false information as well. And so that's one -- certainly an acute threat in that space.

And there's others as well of just sort of -- eroding trust in the processes and procedures and results can have sort of meta-level effects on trust in democracy.

Q And I think you used the example of Sharpiegate earlier?

A Yeah.

Q And how that -- if people used the wrong type of pen because they believed the rumor that Sharpies didn't work, then that actually could ruin the ballot, right? Or make it unreadable?

A Right. So a couple of different things on the Sharpiegate.

So using -- using the wrong pen -- so using an ink pen at home didn't matter because it had time to dry before it got mailed in. So it really doesn't matter what pen you used at home.

But, on Election Day, in the election facilities, if you feed those things into the election -- you fill out your ballot and feed it in, it could -- if you use the wrong pen, it could harm the reader -- the optical reader of the ballot. And so Sharpie pens were recommended in Arizona -- not recommended. They were -- Sharpie or felt-tip pens were the pens that you were supposed to use in the election facilities.

What happened was a rumor that the ballots weren't counting because they were bleeding through -- the Sharpies did bleed through, and that was concerning to the people that were voting, especially people that thought that they might be -- they heard that they could be cheated. And so they were kind of predisposed to kind of interpreting this: Oh, this is a problem. You know, this isn't going to work. Maybe I'm being cheated.

And so there was sort of this misinterpretation that happened based on that, which became really acute. We could actually see it -- it goes into a second stage the next day where people start going online to check the status of their ballot, and it says that it's canceled, and all these people begin to share "my ballot is canceled," except when you look at it, it's actually the status of their mail-in ballot, which was canceled when they went to vote in person. But, again, they misinterpreted that as having their ballots canceled.

And so these people really did begin to -- and you can see that they're feeling anxiety, and they're very upset because they really did think that their ballots didn't count. And that led to a lot of consternation, as you can imagine, from people who really care about the democratic process. Yeah.

Q And that could lead people to potentially lose faith in the democratic process?

A Absolutely, yeah. Lose faith in the process.

On Election Day in Arizona, it led people to going into the facilities and demanding to use and to bring their own pens, which were potentially harmful to the system, which could have caused downstream effects. We actually -- there's also a possibility that the problems in 2020 caused Maricopa County to use thicker printed -- thicker paper in 2022, which caused a whole other set of problems. And so they're even worse off this year because then the paper didn't print properly, and they didn't -- it has downstream effects.

So, actually, those rumors can make the process less secure and less -- you know, less functional, where false rumors begin to pick at how things work.

Q I want to look at another rumor and kind of use this as a little mini case study.

A Yeah.

Q Are you familiar with something known as the Sonoma County ballot dumping allegations?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you broadly explain your understanding of what that is?

A Of what happened?

Q What happened?

A So I think it's in September of 2020. There -- so let's go back and explain this. Because election officials know this happens a lot.

It turns out the law is that you have to -- if you're an election facility, you have to recycle or get rid of the ballots from the last election 20 months later or something -- 22 months later. Some amount of time later. So not quite 2 years.

And, when they do that, those ballots go into dumpsters or recycling units, and people often mistake those for actual election -- it's not actually ballots, but ballot envelopes. And people can mistake those for election materials.

What happened in Sonoma County in 2020 is someone saw a bunch of what they thought were ballots in a dumpster, and they -- again, they're hearing that there's going to be -- there was a dominant narrative around the -- that voter fraud was occurring. And they see these ballots and think, oh, this is an example of voter fraud. And they don't trust the mail-in ballot processing.

So they take a picture, and they send it to apparently some -- a couple different media influencers, and those media influencers post about it. So one post is from a reporter from The Blaze, and another goes out -- and the article goes out through The Gateway Pundit, which --

[redacted]. And I just want to pause you right there because I want to introduce --

Ms. Starbird. Yeah.

[redacted]. -- as exhibit 3 the post from The Blaze, and then -- or I'm sorry. The tweet from --

Ms. Starbird. Yeah.

[redacted]. -- Elijah Schaffer, who was a Blaze reporter.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Starbird. Yeah.

[redacted]. And then I'll introduce as exhibit 4 The Gateway Pundit article.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Starbird. Okay.

[redacted]. While she's reviewing the documents, I just want to note for the record that we are joined by Mr. Bishop as well.

BY [redacted]:

Q So is exhibit 3 the Blaze tweet that you were referring to?

A Yeah. So this is the Blaze tweet. And I know this case well because I was doing real-time research as this was sort of spreading.

Q Okay.

A So I was with my team of three or four students studying this particular case, and I've used it in slides since.

What's happening here is that this is a reporter from The Blaze. He's taken this picture that, I think, was sent to him. And he's -- he's sharing it with a large audience. And it says, you know: Shocking, thousands of mail-in ballots have been found in a dumpster.

And he says that they were allegedly discovered at this landfill, and the ZIP Code matches the ballots, and these are original photos, and he says: Big if true -- which is one of these common sort of ways that people -- I wrote a paper in 2016 with a few students around using sort of expressed uncertainty and hedges to be able to spread rumors and misinformation but not have to take responsibility for them. And that's a common technique for doing that. It's a reputational hedge -- or a reputational shield using, like, hedging language. Yeah.

Q So the tweet came out -- I think the time is 12:52 a.m. This might have -- I'm not sure what time zone that is.

But that came out first, right?

A Yeah.

Q And then, after that, there was The Gateway Pundit article, correct?

A Yeah. The Gateway Pundit article comes out about 6 hours later. And, if you actually look, I think you end up with -- this spreads through Twitter -- it mostly spreads, in about 24 hours, something like 25,000 to 45,000 tweets, retweets, quote tweets, and those kinds of things. It eventually starts to die down on Twitter and then hops over on Facebook a couple of days later with the same rumor.

And it turns out that these ballots are not ballots. They're ballot envelopes, and they're not from 2020. They're from 2018. So what's happened is you've taken something out of context to build that narrative that we can't trust the mail-in voting process because ballots are being thrown away when they're actually not. Yeah.

[redacted]. So, in this case, the Sonoma County elections Registrar actually put out a statement -- I'm going to introduce as exhibit 5 an article recording what a Sonoma County Registrar said that day. It's September 25th. There's not a time stamp on this article.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. But sometime that day --

Ms. Starbird. Yeah.

[redacted]. -- the Sonoma County Registrar actually tried to correct the record and said that they're not ballots, the county won't even send out the mail-in ballots for another 9 days, and that these ballots were in fact the envelopes from the prior election.

So I'll give you a minute to look at this article, and then I'm going to ask you why -- if this correction was made the same day, why that didn't have any impact on the spread of the rumor.

And then I'll introduce as exhibit 6 as well -- the County of Sonoma put out a tweet at 4:21 that afternoon. Same basic concept. Not as much detail as is in the article.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Starbird. Yeah.

BY [redacted]:

Q Are you familiar broadly with this tweet and with -- maybe not the article itself but the contents of the article?

A I'm not as familiar with the article. I'm familiar with the tweets --

Q Okay.

A -- because I spend way too much time looking at tweets.

Q So these comments came out from official sources, right? It's fair to --

A Yeah.

Q -- qualify the Sonoma County Registrar as an official source, right?

A Well, it's not just the official source. It's the source that actually has the information that would give context to this.

And, yeah, I think that's important to note. It's, you know -- if it's an official voice across the country, it's not as helpful, but this -- they would know what their processes and procedures were. So this would be a credible source in this case, yeah.

Q Okay. So, in this case, we have a credible source showing that the original story is demonstrably false. So the rumor is demonstrably false, I should say.

A Yeah.

Q Is that fair to say?

A Yes.

Q So the credible source was out there with the correct information within hours.

Did you see that this actually slowed the flow -- or slowed the distribution of that rumor at all?

A It's hard to say whether or not it slows or accelerates it, but we do know that corrections just don't get the same kind of visibility as the originally false claims. And this one certainly didn't get the kinds of retweets or exposure that the original false claims did. And it didn't stop the rumor from coming back a couple days later on Facebook. Yeah.

Q And has your research explored why that is? Why this type of correction is not effective in helping to stem false information?

A Yeah. Because the reasons we spread -- spread things have to do with -- like, they're entertaining. They're novel. They're exciting. And, you know, a correction is not half as exciting or interesting for our audiences as a, you know, claim of potential voter fraud, especially if you're -- you know, one of the things we've seen that plays out in the research is a lot of rumors and misinformation -- we're most vulnerable -- as individuals, we're most vulnerable when rumors align with our priors and when they align with our political or social identities.

And, at this moment, there were a lot of people in sort of -- who qualify as politically right-leaning or conservative who had heard that the election was going to be fraudulent and had heard that you can't trust the mail-in ballot process, and this aligned with those priors. And so they were sort of -- you know, there was that motivation to share it.

There's not the same motivation for anyone to share a correction. Nobody cares. All right. Okay. It wasn't true. Who's going to share it, right? So you just don't see the same kind of viral spread for corrections as we do for false information.

Q Okay. And I understand that, with respect to the Sonoma County tweet, but The Gateway Pundit also -- if you turn to the article at the end, they issued -- they cited the Sonoma County comments as well.

They issued -- I think in the version that I handed out today, it says "updated," and near the end, it says: The Sonoma County Registrar says this -- you know, decide for yourself, I think.

A Right. And they put the question mark after that.

In our 2016 paper -- which, you know, was written in 2015. I just want to, like, stage that. It's before a lot of the shifts in how many of us view these things. But we noticed that these leading questions were a common technique used to spread false rumors and conspiracy theories.

Q Have you researched what kind of ordinary Twitter users and maybe the public at large understood the Schaffer and The Gateway Pundit tweets to mean?

A Yeah. One of the techniques we use -- so it's not what you say; it's what your audience hears. One of the techniques we use is what -- we'll actually look at some of these posts by an influencer. Influencers are often pretty careful in how they say things. They do these reputational shields. They don't want to, you know, put things that are overtly false out there, but they'll put insinuations. We can see what they mean by looking at their audiences' replies and quote tweets.

And so what we'll do is go and look at all of the quote tweets of these comments. And, you know, you'll see, oh, here goes the fraud again. Or, you know, voter fraud 2020 or whatever. So you'll see that their audiences will repost these things with hashtags that show that they're interpreting this as being another example of voter fraud, which is what that data for this case shows.

Q So what are the possible harms, in this particular instance, if voters believe that there are ballots being thrown in the trash? What are the possible harms that would flow from the belief that that rumor could be true?

A There's a couple of different ones. So there's the loss of faith in the process. That you no longer, you know, trust that the results are what the results are. You no longer trust the other party.

One of the things about a functioning democracy -- Henry Farrell has some great stuff about this. In a functioning democracy, you have to have, you know, at least faith that the other party is a legitimate actor. You might not believe what they say; you might not believe their policies or whatever. But you have to think about them as, you know, playing by the same set of rules. You have to have a shared sense of rules of how elections work.

And these kinds of things begin to suggest to folks that the elections are rigged against you, they don't really work, and that you can't trust the other side of the political spectrum because they're trying to cheat you. And that can turn people to do -- you know, have good people then take undemocratic actions based on these sort of misperceptions that the other side -- there's another good study that just came out this week on this.

It's that when you begin to believe that the other side isn't playing by the rules, that you don't play by the rules anymore, right? And so you don't need to play by the rules because the other side isn't. So this can just contribute to sort of the erosion of democratic norms and, you know, kind of ultimately, you know, puts democracy in danger if too many people -- if too many of us begin to get into these patterns.

Q Thank you for that.

A Oh, there was another piece of this that I had in my head, and now it's slipping away.

It's -- oh, in this particular one, what can happen is a particular -- especially with mail-in ballots in particular -- that one political party can begin to believe that mail-in ballots are not what they want to use, right? And so that has some implications for election day in 2020.

But an example of how it has implications in 2022 is, in Maricopa County, where people have just been kind of saturated in this kind of thing. They do have a case where Democrats are more likely to use mail-in ballots because Republicans no longer trust the mail-in ballot processing. And that actually sets them up for all being -- all voting on election day or voting on election day in a much higher proportion, which, when the machines actually have problems, they're more affected than the other party.

So it can actually hurt your own party by kind of pushing you away from different -- from voting in the way that's easiest and best for you because you're falling for these rumors. So it can be personally harmful and lead to disenfranchisement when you no longer trust the process.

Q Interesting. I want to move on and talk about the CISA advisory committee that we talked about.

A Okay. Yes.

Q Do you remember those questions at the end of the last hour?

A I do --

Q Okay. The MDM -- and I think you -- were you successful in changing it from the MDM to --

A Oh, we didn't change the name. I just -- I just put mis- and disinformation and didn't -- tried not to use the --

Q Okay.

A I didn't always have the last say exactly on how things were written. So it may still end up in places, but I tend to prefer to use misinformation, disinformation.

Q Okay. So the subcommittee that you are the chair of --

A It's still called the MDM Subcommittee. I didn't win that battle. I lose my battles sometimes.

Q You referenced recommendations that you submitted to the CISA Director in June -- on June 22nd, 2022.

A Yeah.

Q Do you remember those?

A I do -- I remember referencing them. I don't have them memorized. So, if someone wants me to talk about them, I'm happy to.

[redacted]. So we're going to introduce those as exhibit No. 7.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

Ms. Starbird. Yeah. It turns out I write a lot of things and can't remember what they all are.

[redacted]. And I actually just want to look at the first page.

[redacted]. Is this exhibit 7?

[redacted]. This is 7.

[redacted]. Yep. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q So this report does make various findings and recommendations, but I want to look actually at the introduction on the very first page.

I'm sorry. Before we get there, did you draft this?

A I drafted this, yes.

Q Okay.

A I had people helping me. I didn't write every word. Often, I'm translating others' words. But I wrote most of this and collaborated primarily with Suzanne Spaulding but also with Vijaya Gadde in writing this.

Q Okay. And you had final clearance on it before it went out? Is that fair to say?

A Yeah.

Q The fourth paragraph under the introduction -- I'm going to read it into the record. It says: The First Amendment of the Constitution limits the government's ability to abridge or interfere with the free speech rights of American citizens. The First Amendment and freedom of speech are critical underpinnings to our society and democracy. These recommendations are specifically designed to protect critical functions from the risks of MD -- which is a reference to misinformation and disinformation -- while being sensitive to and appreciating the government's limited role with respect to the regulation or restriction of speech.

Did I read that correctly?

A You did, yes.

Q Okay. So is it fair to say that the subcommittee made its recommendations -- the recommendations contained in this document and, I guess, in the September document as well -- with the protection of the First Amendment forefront in your minds?

A Absolutely.

Q Okay. Do you believe that any of the recommendations contained in this document -- and I can give you a minute to look through them again if you'd like -- do you believe that these recommendations respect individuals' First Amendment rights?

A Yes. I mean, we -- our goal was to communicate in a way that acknowledges the difficulty of these challenges but that put the First Amendment first and foremost. And that's why it's in the introduction and acknowledging that, you know, that's what makes this space challenging. And -- yeah.

Q Okay. So, when you say that was your goal, were there any -- to the extent you can talk through it, when you were -- were there any steps you took through the writing process? Did you consult with First Amendment scholars, for example? Did you -- were there any specific steps you took to make sure these recommendations protected First Amendment rights?

A We had a brief -- I had one brief conversation with Jameel Jaffer, who was a First Amendment scholar, and I think directs the Knight -- the First Amendment organization. I don't know the name of it. But to kind of understand what the limitations are.

And, to be honest, he was like -- you know, with some of the questions that I had -- like, I'm just trying to learn how everything works as a person who's not -- that's not my primary research area, but trying to understand what the limitations are, and there were still some open questions that he said in some of these different areas.

And so we tried to -- a lot of times, we said, you know: If there's an open question and we can't answer it here or it's above this committee, we'll talk about this later.

But the way we crafted this was trying to stay within the lines and also trusting that, if we're outside the lines in what we're recommending, that CISA should be able to figure that out and -- you know, and make those decisions.

And, again, these are recommendations. These are not orders or anything else. We're an external advisory board. We didn't have a lot of power. And in fact, she didn't accept all of our recommendations.

Q Sorry. One second.

So there's been an allegation made, I think, with respect to these recommendations in particular --

A Yeah.

Q -- that they suggest that the MDM Subcommittee recommended that CISA effectively be placed in a situation to be an arbiter of truth with respect to what is and what isn't misinformation or disinformation.

Are you familiar with that allegation?

A Not directly, but it doesn't surprise me. Yeah.

Q Okay. Do you think that's accurate?

A Absolutely not. I think when we are talking about the role of CISA, it was always around -- if there was a veracity thing, it was around CISA trying to point to the authoritative source in that case.

So, if it's an issue of Sharpie pens in Arizona, they're pointing to the Maricopa County recorder. If it's an issue of the Sonoma County ballot envelopes, they're pointing to the Sonoma County thing.

For -- CISA's role would be to find those authoritative sources and help broadcast their message to make sure it reached the audiences that needed to hear it.

Q I want to look at exhibit 1, which is -- we'll redistribute it because it was taken away before.

This is the advisory -- Cybersecurity Advisory Committee meeting summary 0301 -- 2022 PDF. I'm sorry.

It's a 3-7-2022 email from the Cybersecurity Advisory Committee to a whole list of people.

A Uh-huh. So the meeting notes?

Q The meeting notes. Correct.

A Yeah.

Q And this is the meeting that you had described as educational in nature for you?

A Yes.

Q Okay. What's the value of having these type of educational discussions? How does that inform the work that the MDM Subcommittee did?

A Yeah. I mean, we were just trying to learn the space. Like, who are the actors? You know, who plays what role? What are the limitations of different organizations? And where is the gap -- where is the need that CISA might be able to fulfill in terms of what they're supposed to do and what the needs are?

And, for me, it was, like, figuring out, what does CISA do? You know, what do these other folks do? You know -- and how do they work together, and where are those sort of delineations?

It was really just, like, you know -- and to be honest, you know, 1 hour every 2 weeks is only so much. I understand a lot about how misinformation spreads -- rumors, misinformation, disinformation spread online. Government agencies and how they work and how they work together was something I didn't know a lot about when I started as the subcommittee chair.

Q In the earlier hour, you were asked about what the FBI -- what the FBI's role is with respect to misinformation, disinformation. And you used a phrase that I want to turn back to.

You said they look only at foreign interference and criminal actors, and there's a pretty strong delineation between that and, I guess, other work that could be done. Do you recall saying that? Or could you --

A I mean, that's my understanding. I could be wrong on that. I had a 30-minute briefing from them. I don't have a complete understanding.

But in our conversation, I remember they stressed those two dimensions and that that was a limitation. And, again, that's -- for us, we were thinking about -- okay. They cover that, and they maybe collaborate with CISA when things intersect with that. When things don't intersect with that, they wouldn't be a collaborator in that space.

Q Okay. So your impression is that FBI really doesn't do anything with respect to domestic content moderation. It's solely focused on foreign interference and, you know, addressing criminal activity?

A If it was criminal.

So, in the election space, my understanding is that it's illegal to purposely mislead on when and where to vote. That could be something that could feature into their work. But on just, like, the fourth dimension of the Election Integrity Partnership's work where it's, like, misinformation that undermines trust in the process, that would not be a place where the FBI would be working -- if it was domestic.

Q And that was pretty clearly conveyed to you when you met with them in March of 2022?

A Yes. Yeah.

Q Okay. I want to look next at what's been marked as exhibit No. 2. This is the meeting notes from March 15th, 2022. You were asked a couple of questions.

And I want to look at the -- on what's marked as page 2. The second -- there's a bold bullet point and then some bullet points underneath it. It's kind of like a second section of bullets there.

A Okay.

Q The second one down, it says: Dr. Starbird addressed the highly limited scope for government in terms of social media monitoring.

What does that mean?

A My understanding is that government is not permitted -- except in very specific cases -- to collect private data from U.S. citizens. I don't know where the delineations are from public data. But my understanding is, on the private data, they're not allowed to sort of monitor that kind of thing.

And I think there's some open questions there that -- one of the conversations I had with Jameel Jaffer was to understand, what are the open questions, and who should be answering them? Which is actually, you know, one of the reasons that having a committee like that would be really important, right? Because we should be having those conversations, and we should be having them transparently. And "transparently" meaning -- that's why they come out with the meeting notes and recommendations and kinds of things.

And so my understanding is there is still opportunity to have those discussions. This is something that we probably should be doing as a society.

Q But your understanding right now is that the government not only does not collect that information, but it cannot? It's not allowed? It's illegal for it to do so, correct?

A My understanding is not complete, but that is my understanding.

Q Your understanding?

A Yeah. Again, it's not my area of expertise. But that's my understanding.

Q And then just a couple of quick questions on the social media company platforms. The -- sorry. The content moderation policies.

A Yeah.

Q You were asked kind of a little bit about that in the earlier hour.

You haven't drafted any social media company content moderation policies, right?

A No.

Q Okay. Have you directly advised the platform? In other words, have you been sent a draft of a policy and said, "Can you provide feedback and commentary on this?"

A I have been presented with, like -- I'll have a conversation -- I'll have a conversation with almost anybody. I'll have a conversation sometimes with the platforms or, like, a representative of the platform, and they'll say: You know, this is what we're thinking. You know, what do you think?

And I'll say: Oh, that might work. That's probably going to backfire or whatever.

I don't draft them, but I've had conversations with representatives of several platforms, actually.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q So you mentioned earlier labels and the emerging research on labels --

A Yeah.

Q -- that you used to be -- used to think maybe they were helpful, and now you're thinking, no, they're not helpful. Like, that's not actually a useful technique.

That's something that, if somebody wanted your input on, you'd be able to provide that?

A Yeah. And actually, it's very nuanced. It turns out that labels work in some contexts, and they don't really help in others, and they absolutely backfire in others, right? So it's really contextual.

And those are the kinds of things that I'm happy to have a conversation with a platform about: like, how you might want to go about labeling, which accounts you might want to not bother labeling. Maybe you really only want to label -- you know, I might advise, like -- you know, you focus labels on the people that, you know, are verified accounts or have large audiences, those kinds of things.

But those would be, again, conversations, and it would be my expert opinion at the time with the knowledge that these are changing because the research is still coming out. The labels on social media platforms are only, like, 2 or 3 years old as a platform affordance, right? We don't even -- you know, we don't even know yet how those things work.

Q But, ultimately, that's your expert advice based on what the research shows?

A Yeah.

Q And platforms are free to say no?

A Yeah.

Q They're free to say: We don't agree. Go take a hike.

Or they're free to accept it, right?

A Absolutely. 100 percent. And -- yeah. And I would actually also tell them that this knowledge is changing at the time. So you have to take my advice with a grain of salt because we're learning something new every day. Yeah.

[redacted]. Okay. All right. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[12:46 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Dr. Starbird, we've, I think, referenced this in passing a few times, but can you state what the Election Integrity Partnership is?

A The Election Integrity Partnership, this is a hard question, because we've had two versions of it, and it's different across those two.

I'll start with 2020. If you want to ask me about 2022, I'm happy to talk about that. I probably know more about 2022 than '20 in terms of I was higher up on the leadership infrastructure.

But the Election Integrity Partnership in 2020 was a partnership that at the core were four research organizations that do research on social media data analysis. And then there was a range of other partners.

And the goal was to identify rumors, false, misleading, and unsubstantiated claims specifically around election processes and procedures, and to identify them, analyze them, and rapidly communicate about them with a range of partners and the public at large.

Q And can you say who the main four partners were?

A Organizations? Yeah.

Stanford convened the group, so Stanford University, the Stanford Internet Observatory. And then there was the DFRLab, which is a data analysis lab within the Atlantic Council, I think. And then Graphika, which is an industry partner. And then the University of Washington, particularly the Center for an Informed Public.

Q Okay. And when you say Stanford convened the group, was this an idea initially pitched by them? Was this -- let me ask that way.

A Yeah. When I become aware of this -- I don't know if it had a name yet -- it was from outreach from Stanford who were working on an idea around something in the election space, yeah.

Q And who from Stanford contacted you?

A Alex Stamos.

Q And who is that?

A Alex Stamos is the head of the Stanford Internet Observatory.

Q And had you worked with him in other areas previously?

A I had not worked with him closely. I did a sabbatical at Stanford University in 2019 where I met Alex. I think I met him two or three times while I was there.

Q Did you work with Renee DiResta at all?

A Renee DiResta was part of the Election Integrity Partnership. I also met her, I think, on two occasions when I was at Stanford in 2019. Had not worked with her prior, but knew her, was on panels with her, and would see her at different kinds of conferences and things.

Q And who is she?

A She is a research scientist -- I'm not sure that's exactly her title -- but at the Stanford Internet Observatory.

Q Okay. Do you recall when Stanford first approached you, the University of Washington, about joining this partnership?

A It would have been early July.

Q Of 2020?

A Of 2020, yeah.

Q And how quickly was the partnership up and running?

A I don't remember exactly when we launched. I imagine we were operational by September 1 or so. And so it would have been between, yeah, July -- first or second week of July and September 1.

And I think there was sort of a running start in the sense that -- I don't even know how to describe this -- but things that the partnership talked about being under the partnership were things -- like our piece, we were already kind of doing some of those things anyways. It was just kind of the kind of thing that we did in terms of some of the real-time analysis.

And so that stuff began to fall under the partnership, and I don't know whether we would have said that in August or whether it started in September.

Q Do you know if there are any organizations who were invited who declined to participate?

A My understanding is that the RNC was invited to decline -- to participate and declined. And I don't know about others. And I only understand that from post communications about it.

Q And where did you gain this understanding, understanding that it was post it occurring?

A I don't know whether it's been in, like -- in just sort of, like, making sense of what happened along the way that we've been doing over the last year. But I seem to recall that they had been a potential partner. I did not know that they had been contacted and declined until afterwards.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And is it your understanding that the DNC was contacted?

A From my understanding, that they were contacted, yeah.

Q And accepted?

A I think they did, yes.

Q Besides the RNC, the DNC, and obviously the four members who accepted, the four critical ones, do you recall who else was invited to participate?

A I don't have a full list of partners. If you showed me an example, I could say, "Oh, yeah, that's probably who they were."

At the University of Washington we didn't manage the external partnerships except for in one case, the AARP. That's the only one that we managed.

We talked about also bringing in some libraries. They didn't end up joining. It was just too late in the process to include them. But we did have -- we did manage the relationship with AARP, and that's the only external partnership that we managed.

Q Okay. And what was AARP's role with the partnership?

A So I think it was just the northwest branch. And we ran a little project where one of my colleagues who works closely with them did some training with them around recognizing rumors and misinformation in their information diets.

And then they had the potential to, when they ran across a rumor about -- again, rumors, only about election processes and procedures, very scoped -- that they could send a message to our team about that rumor.

And then we would determine whether it met the scope of the EIP project. And if it did, one of our students, who was the lead at that effort, would then add that rumor to our system, or that item. It probably was like an email that we might receive or something. They would add that kind of rumor item to the system that we were using to kind of try to identify false, misleading, or unsubstantiated claims about election processes and procedures.

Q Okay. And you've referenced a couple times your role. And just to clarify, you're speaking of both you as individually and University of Washington and their role?

A Yeah. So that's a great question. I speak as -- it will be good to differentiate these things, because there are things that the Election Integrity Partnership did, there are things that the University of Washington did, and then there's, like, the things that I had directed participation in or direct visibility in. They're all kind of large collaborations.

So the UW's role was specifically around analysis and communication. And communication for us really meant public communication. So we would do social media data analysis.

When we would become aware through the system that we have -- we'll probably talk about it -- become aware through the system that we had that there was a specific kind of rumor, we would do this data analysis based on the methods that my team's been using for now almost a decade of, like, tracking how that rumor was spreading, to see which audiences it's spreading, how far, is it worth sort of writing about or communicating about.

And then we would do public communication. We create visualizations. We create tweet threads, blogs, and eventually research papers based on analysis of the data that was -- based on the analyses that we would do of those false, misleading, or unsubstantiated claims.

Q And when you first were invited by Stanford to join this partnership, was the request to fulfill that role you just described?

A I don't remember exactly what the request was. I just remember coming away from a single conversation with Alex, which was audio or audio-video, I can't remember which one, with the understanding that he recognized that we had a lot of expertise in social media data analysis and that we would be applying that in sort of a real-time way as part of the project.

And I kind of -- and I remember thinking, oh, this is very similar to the work that I did as a graduate student when we were doing that live crisis mapping stuff. First of all, it's really horrible to try to work that fast, just because it's very taxing on students.

So I remember thinking, okay, this would be a really big commitment because of the ways that that kind of work happens and how it's different from the academic rhythms that we have.

Q In 2020, do you recall how many people from the University of Washington were involved with EIP?

A Yeah. I don't have an exact number, because we had people coming in from different ways. But I think we had three faculty members were at least involved in sort of managing these analysis teams. And then we probably had 15 to 16 students or postdoctoral researchers on those analysis teams, and then a couple other students that worked in slightly different capacities. One helped to do the policy analysis.

And then we had our communications. The Center for an Informed Public has a communications -- a full-time communications person, and that person contributed in a couple of ways. And we had a data engineer who would help us do our data collection and occasionally gave technical advice.

Q When you referenced policy analysis, what did you mean by that?

A There was one piece of the project where the students -- I think it was a student-led team, but certainly the UW participant was a student. They looked through all the social media platforms to see what kinds of policies they had around elections, like civic integrity policies, and they documented those and sort of did an analysis, which they published as a blog post, I think, in August or September. And they might have done a follow-up analysis as well.

And one of them ends up writing a paper and getting a published paper a little bit later, maybe a year later, based on sort of the same analysis.

Q You referenced in the previous round of questioning that some social media platforms would present their policies to you from time to time and you might offer your thoughts. And please correct if that characterization is not accurate.

A Yeah. I've been asked by social media platforms to give feedback on their policies before, yes.

Q Did any of those occasions occur in the context of EIP?

A I don't remember that any did, no.

Q You said there were three faculty members. Is that including you?

A That's including me, yeah.

Q Who were the other two?

A Emma Spiro and Jevin West.

Q Turning back to the central four partners, understanding there were others involved, too, what was your understanding of what role Graphika would serve in EIP in 2020?

A I actually never got a mapping of what all of the different organizations would do. I sent a statement of what we were going to do, the University of Washington, but I don't think I ever read similar statements from the other groups. So I don't know the scope of their work.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. I'd recognize them as having similar kinds of skills in social media data analysis, so I assumed that that's the role that they would be fulfilling.

Q Okay. And so any familiarity with what DFRLab's role would have been?

A Same thing. I would have seen them as playing a role in sort of the data analysis piece. And they may have also played a role in sort of outreach to potential external partners, but I don't know that -- you know, I don't know the details around that.

Q And who is leading the partnership? You mentioned that you sent a proposal over.

A Yeah. In terms of who I saw as the leader -- I mean, there's no leader -- there's no proposal. We sent them a statement over just because I wanted to have a clear, like, articulation of what we were going to do. I don't remember them saying a statement of here is the organizational chart or here's how things are going to work.

I can say who I perceived as the leader. And so I would say it was almost a dual -- like, I saw -- if you put it in an academic context, because of the way we work with students, sometimes, like, when I did the work when I was a Ph.D. student, I would be the leader of something, but my adviser would be mentoring me. And so sometimes people would see her as the leader, sometimes me as the leader.

So I saw -- the two folks that I saw leading were Alex Stamos, who I kind of saw as sort of a leader in terms of thinking about how we might work together and reaching out to collaborators. And then there was a student at Stanford who was the -- who was sort of the everyday in the moment helping us organize things, who they might have talked about as like a project manager.

Q And do you know who at EIP was responsible for managing external relationships?

A I don't know who, if it was one person or many. My assumption was that most of those were managed through Stanford, but I don't think that's completely true. There may have been other. I want to give you as completely -- the complete picture.

There may have been other folks that had other relationships, just like we had at UW. We had our relationship with AARP, and we brought that in sort of like on our own because we were already working with them.

Q Uh-huh.

A Yeah.

Q Was it your understanding that some of the external partners were government agencies?

A It was my understanding that there was one Federal Government agency and that there were other organizations that convened local and State election officials who we saw -- who my understanding was is that we could help them and they could help us figure out what the ground truth was around election processes and procedures. And so that that would be an important part of a collaboration when you're trying to address that kind of misinformation.

Q And which Federal agency was the one that you were referencing?

A The Federal agency that -- is kind of who was -- is the CISA agency, yeah.

Q And do you know who at EIP was interfacing with CISA?

A My understanding is that it was Alex and the student, but there may have been more people there interfacing with them. Again, I didn't have full visibility into their activities.

Q And to the extent you have knowledge or understanding of this, what was CISA's role as serving as a partner or collaborating with EIP?

A I don't know, because I never interacted with them directly. My understanding was that, during the operations, they were primarily a recipient of our information.

So if we were putting out something around -- gosh, there was a case that -- where we had heard from one of our external partners that there was Democratic voters were receiving threats from someone saying that they were the Proud Boys, that were intimidating them at the polls. And this is not an analysis that happened at University of Washington. But that the folks at Stanford were able to figure out that those emails were not coming from the Proud Boys, they were actually coming from an Iranian disinformation operation. And my understanding is they did interface with CISA around that to let them know that was happening.

There may have been other times that we were, like, helping. Like the products that were coming out of the EIP -- and, again, this is we, the EIP, not we, UW -- the products that were coming out of EIP were informing some of what they may have been calling rumor control at the time at CISA.

But I didn't have a lot of visibility into that. I wasn't looking at their websites, and I wasn't interacting directly with anyone at the CISA office.

Q Do you have a sense of when CISA was brought on as having some sort of partnership with EIP?

A I don't know when, but I remember in the first set of slides they were among the partners that I saw, which would have been in July or August.

Q Did EIP partner with social media platforms?

A My understanding is that we did, yes.

Q And which ones, to your understanding?

A I might not have the complete list, but I know that Twitter and likely Facebook were those partners. There may have been three or four others. I just don't know.

Q Uh-huh.

A Yeah.

Q So as part of your role with EIP, did you ever interface with the social media platforms?

A No.

Q Do you know if anyone from UW did?

A I don't know if they did. I don't know that anyone did from UW. But, again, I don't have full visibility into all the activities of all the people that were as part of that.

Q Do you know who at EIP had primary responsibility for interacting with the social media platforms?

A My memory of the structure of the EIP, I don't know who invited them into the partnership. But the way that the communication would have happened, probably folks at Stanford, and there may have been a group of managers that would have had maybe -- we might have called them on-call managers -- that had direct interfacing with the social media platforms.

Q And who were the managers that you're referencing there?

A I don't remember exactly who they are, but there would have been one person from each of the organizations. I think it was probably Emerson from DFRLab. I don't know who was from Grafika. I am pretty sure that at some point Renee DiResta was a manager, but I'm not sure she was in there initially, because she was on maternity leave. And there may have also been a student as part of the managers.

Q Do you recall if UW had someone that was serving as a manager?

A I recall that we did not have someone serving as a manager.

Q Okay. Do you know if -- well, let me ask it this way first.

Are you familiar with the Global Engagement Center?

A Mildly. Not directly.

Q Do you know if they played any role with the Election Integrity Partnership?

A I don't know if they did or didn't.

Q Do you know if EIP had -- if individuals associated with EIP had separate email domains created specifically for EIP?

A I don't think that we did. But if we did, that would be a surprise to me. But I don't know that.

Q And so is it your understanding, then, that the partnership is loosely formed? Was there an office created or a title for someone to direct, or was it loosely formed?

A No. Loosely formed. There's no paperwork. There was no signatures. There's no office. There is a branding and a shared website, and then some infrastructure for managing the workload.

Q And so, when you're interfacing with Alex, let's say --

A Yeah.

Q -- is it from his Stanford email, to the extent you have a recollection?

A My recollection is I would interface with Alex a little bit over email, sometimes in a phone call, maybe two or three, or they could have been Zoom chats, I can't remember, and then possibly through a Slack chat infrastructure that Stanford managed for, like, real-time collaboration since we were all remote.

Q And what is that Slack chat channel?

A What is it? You want me to describe what Slack is? Is that --

Q Right. Sure. I guess is it --

A Yeah. I mean, it's a --

Q You're referencing that common --

A It's a work environment. And I studied this. Computer-supported cooperative work. It's like the folks that I teach go and develop platforms like Slack.

Yeah, it's a real-time communication platform. It's especially good for distributed work, which was probably happening a lot during 2020. Almost everyone's either using Zoom or Slack or both at the same time.

And it's organized into different channels. And different people within an organization are invited into different channels. And you might have conversations in a channel with multiple people or you can have individual conversations with someone in the group in sort of like a side conversation.

And those platforms -- yeah, they just -- it's basically textual chat, although you can add other things into the platform as well. If you wanted to add documents and things, they could be added there as well, although I don't remember any documents going through there.

Q Yeah. And Stanford, you said, was the one that --

A Stanford hosted the Slack chat on their infrastructure.

Q Okay.

A I believe they also hosted our, like, blog infrastructure. They hosted a lot of -- the shared infrastructure was hosted at Stanford.

Q Okay. So in addition to email, Slack, how else did partners communicate with one another at EIP in 2020?

A Are you talking about the four core partners --

Q Yeah.

A -- or the broader partners?

Four core partners, it was primarily through Slack and Zoom chats.

Q Okay. And what about external partners?

A My understanding on external partners is that there may have been some Zoom chats where they convened them, but I wasn't -- I don't remember being in any of those, and that the communication during the real-time activities would have happened through a system called the Jira project managing system, which is for software engineering. And it's pretty much a disaster to use for real-time collaboration. But it's getting -- we're getting better at that.

But the external partners could send something into the system where it would become part of our analysis team, and it would go through our tiers, different tiers of analysis, and that there was a way for us from inside that system to send something out through that system.

So, like, the AARP, they couldn't directly send something into the system. They actually sent it to our student, and then he would enter things into the system.

But there were ways for external partners to enter things into it. And then a somewhat different set, although I don't know exactly the mapping of who had internal -- incoming versus external or outgoing.

Q Okay. Do you recall anyone who had -- any of the external partners who were able to directly submit information into the system?

A To put them in? I don't know how that worked, and I don't know which ones. But I imagine when they list off their civil society partners, that those folks could enter things into the system directly.

And when we're thinking about that, what we're thinking about is people monitoring -- or not monitoring -- well, monitoring -- identifying information from within their own communities.

So when we're talking about the AARP, it's elders and what they're receiving in their emails. When it's the DNC, it would usually be things that their constituents were receiving and looking at.

And so they're kind of seeing what rumors are happening within their own constituents and then putting those into the system so that we can see and take a look and see are those spreading, is it something that -- is there a fact check on it? Is there something that we should take action on by doing a public communication? Is this something that the platforms might want to become aware of because it may violate one of their policies?

Q And who is managing the Jira system? Is that a proper way to refer to it?

A Yeah. You can talk about it as a Jira system.

Who is managing it? I guess it's a hard question. There's many people using it.

Our technical person may have set it up, because he had some experience with the Atlassian system. But he would -- he never -- he wasn't managing it. He was just making sure it all worked. But he set it up with -- it was -- Stanford hosted it. He just helped them figure out how to configure it.

But in terms of who is managing it from the day to day, again, we had that project manager. That's who -- if I had a question, that's who I would ask if something was going wrong or what's going on in the system or how does it work. But there may have been other people who would have seen themselves as managers of it, but I -- we just didn't talk about it like who is managing it in that way.

Q Okay. And just --

A We were just like users of the system, just like we used Slack.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q And just real quick, you referenced Atlassian?

A Yeah.

Q Who is -- what is Atlassian?

A It's a company that own different kinds of software. So they -- Atlassian owns this platform called Jira.

Q Okay. And would external partners be invited to use Jira? Do you know how that initial setup process worked?

A I don't. My understanding is they didn't -- they weren't using it, but they could put information in and take information out. But I don't know exactly how that looked. I never saw what an external partner would see.

Q Okay. And what do you mean by using it? So if someone is sending information in but is not using it, what do you mean?

A Yeah. So inside the system, yeah, there would be, like, a workspace where each kind of report of a rumor -- imagine an internet form, and it has like radio buttons and a tech space and we can add comments.

I worked on probably two or three tickets total, and one of them I might attach a link to my visualization or I might attach a screenshot of a visualization to say, "Hey, look, this looks like it's really taking off," or, like, "Oh, this is dying down, let's just ignore it and move on," those kinds of things.

So there's comments about a lot of data analysis that's going on. And it may be touched by ten people or two people or only one person depending on whether it's interesting enough to spend time with. And there's all sorts of different, like, data pieces of it.

So it's just like a multimedia web form, yeah, where, like, real-time analysis was happening, yeah.

Q You mentioned that you worked on two to three tickets.

A Yeah.

Q Do you have a sense of how many tickets there were? We'll start with in relation to the 2020 election?

A Yeah. I've got a bunch different numbers, because when we -- we did a lot of post hoc research where we boiled it down and realized a lot of tickets were duplicates, or these are the same things, and it kept getting smaller and smaller. At the end of the day, the set we were working with was like -- something more like 350 or 400 tickets.

But I think, total, there was more on the lines of maybe 800 tickets. But that could -- it could be higher. That's just the first time that I kind of looked at the data. There's about 800 tickets. And, again, a lot of that had to be deduplicated.

Q Did you use Jira previously?

A No.

Q You mentioned that there's both input coming in and then an output that would come out.

A Yeah.

Q Can you describe what is being sent out and to whom?

A I believe what goes out is a message, a single message that may have links to say, "Hey, here is one link or a set of links to content that we think is both within scope for us and violates an existing policy that you have at a social media site." So this would only be for the external partners that are social media platforms.

So we could send out a textual description with links to say that here's something that's spreading that is either, again, misleading about election processes and procedures in a way that could disenfranchise someone, encouraging fraud, encouraging violence, or using false, misleading, or unsubstantiated claims to sow doubt in election processes, procedures, or results.

Q And how is this message being communicated?

A I have no idea.

Q Do you know if it was via email?

A I don't know what the -- how that was configured to go out to the other group, yeah.

Q Do you know who at EIP was responsible for determining how things were being communicated to social media platforms?

A Do I know who designed the environment, or who was pushing the button to send them out?

Q Well, we'll start with either.

A I don't know where the design came in and how that worked. I think it was probably due to the, like, limitations or capacities of the system, which is we're adapting what we do to a system.

How it went? like who decides whether it went out was kind of a layered process. I think what would happen is some analyst would say, "Hey, this looks like it's something -- it's spreading, it could be harmful, it's in scope, and it violates one of these processes." And they could, like, hit a button within that form that says this should be looked at.

And my understanding is that that then went to a layer of managers who were on call, and they decided to hit that final button to push it out.

I could be wrong about that. That was my understanding of how it works.

Q Okay. So, again, to the extent you have an understanding on this, the managers you just referenced in your last answer --

A Yeah.

Q -- is that the same managers you mentioned previously?

A I think that's the group that had access. There may have been other people that had access to that manager status or that capacity. And it's possible that people could push buttons directly from within the system, but that's my understanding.

Q You mentioned that, post election, you were -- you or your team were doing some research on this. Were the Jira tickets available to you after the election?

A I think we had access to the Jira tickets through about mid-2021 to -- as we were writing the final report and to conduct analysis. And then we pulled down just kind of a list of different data and used that.

But we could have also been invited back into the Jira at different times. Again -- not again, probably maybe the first time -- I didn't go there, but I had -- I was working closely with students. And so they would know more about when we needed to pull data from the Jira versus, like, we put it in a spreadsheet and were able to use it.

We put it in a spreadsheet. What we ended up doing was taking -- so there's those 800 tickets that were sort of like then deduplicated. I don't know where that goes.

But then we took that, and we wanted to analyze it for our research. We wanted to just take a specific set of tickets, and those were the ones in the fourth category, which were the ones about false, misleading, unsubstantiated claims that would have sowed doubt in election processes or results, and so we identified the tickets that had that criteria.

And then we just took those ticket numbers and a description of that, of what each of those tickets were about, and then we tried to create a search string that would go back through other Twitter data we'd collected and find all the tweets related to that ticket. And so we spent a lot of time doing that.

It didn't require us to go back to the initial Jira tickets very often, but every once in a while, for our research, I think there was a reason to go back and see the original Jira ticket. And so we might have been pulled back in, or I might have asked for permission to, "Hey, can you open this up so I can see this Jira ticket?" which I did two or three times in 2021.

Q Okay. And who are you going to when you're asking for permission?

A I probably would have asked Renee DiResta, because I know her best, and she's usually accessible via Twitter.

Q So is Stanford the one with custody of these Jira tickets or --

A Stanford owns the infrastructure and has the Jira data.

Q Yeah.

A Yeah.

Q And is it your understanding if those tickets are still available?

A I have not asked about them anytime recently.

Q If you needed to ask, is it your understanding that they would be available to you?

A I don't know.

Mr. Burton. That's an impossible question.

Ms. Starbird. Yeah, I don't know.

BY [redacted]:

Q When is the last time that you asked?

A 2021, I believe, yeah.

Q Has anyone from UW asked that you are familiar with?

A I don't think they have. In fact, I don't think they would ask directly, because they don't -- my students don't work directly with the folks at Stanford. They would ask me to mediate that relationship.

Q Yeah. Any other faculty members?

A I don't believe my other -- the other faculty members were doing any of this kind of analysis where they would have asked.

Q Okay.

A And I think they would have gone through me as well, because they don't know the Stanford folks. I'm their connection to the Stanford folks.

Q And as a point of clarification, when you're going back and asking for permission, are you reentering the Jira system? Are you reviewing a spreadsheet with archived data?

A We may have had the spreadsheet already with the archived data. We've actually put out a data set with some of that information. But it would just have the ticket number, a description of, like, what that thing was about, and then like a number of tweets and some of the analysis we would have added to categorize different tickets into different buckets.

What was your second part of your question?

Q Just when you were going back and asking for permission --

A Yeah.

Q -- are you back into the Jira system as it was originally when it was active?

A What I would --

Q Is that the right word?

A If I was going to ask, I don't know. It would just mean that I could just put in that ticket -- the link to that ticket -- and I could go see it. I could go see the full form around that ticket.

But in terms of, like, the back end and, like, how many numbers of this and look at all the tickets, I don't know if I had access. I imagine I did, but I would just go look at that one ticket, because I wanted to check: What time did we start working on the Sonoma ballots ticket? I would usually check ones that I had had access to and -- or not that I had access to -- that I had been a part of as part of the analysis to kind of remember what we did in real time.

Q And so when you're reviewing this ticket, are you able to see what -- you said at times up to ten people might comment on a ticket?

A You could see everybody who touched it, including students, yeah.

Q When you were reviewing, was there a way for you to see what was communicated to social media platforms?

A There may have been, but I didn't check it.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. I don't know if you could see whether or not that final thing has gone out. You could see whether another analyst had said that this violates the policy and we should take a look at sending it over to the platforms.

Q Do you recall, in the initial setup, in setting up this Jira ticket system, if there were discussions about how to archive this information?

A If there was -- how to archive it? I don't remember being part of those conversations.

Q Okay.

Mr. Burton. When you say this information, you mean the Jira tickets themselves?

[redacted]. Yes.

Ms. Starbird. Yeah. In 2022, we talked about archiving and talked about how do we do this in a way that preserves what's going on, but that preserves the privacy of the students who were working on this, because that's something that we're really concerned about at the University of Washington.

BY [redacted]:

Q All right. So with respect to -- actually, let me back up.

You mentioned that you were working on this summer of 2021, conducting some research?

A Doing some post hoc research.

Q And there was a report that came out as well.

Did EIP close shop, for lack of a better word, at some point in 2021?

A We stopped doing any active work in December of 2020. We weren't doing any more identifying rumors or anything else. In fact, we might have stopped in November. The bulk of our operations stopped that Thanksgiving when the Stanford students went home.

Other people may have entered a few more things into the system into December, but we stopped that active period of the real-time work in December of 2020.

In the interim, several of us talked about the possibility of doing something again in a future election if we thought it was needed. And we had conversations about how we might go about that and how we might configure that differently.

Q And who is "we"?

A I think I had conversations mostly -- maybe two or three conversations with Alex and/or Renee.

Q And did the partnership decide to take up -- sounds like the 2022 election?

A We did in a very different way. So we limited it just to the two -- the analysis teams to just the two university partners. And at the University of Washington we decided we wanted to take intake completely into the University of Washington so we could -- because of the research we wanted to do on the data, we wanted to know exactly how it came in and be able to document that. And so we pulled our intake into the University of Washington for 2022.

Q Okay. And, sorry, just to clarify, what do you mean by pulled the intake in?

A So the discovery process where you have students kind of combing through social media posts to try to identify potential rumors, we pulled all of that -- that was all at Stanford in 2020, and we pulled all of that to UW, or the bulk of that to UW in 2022.

Q And when you say you, do you mean your team or all of EIP?

A EIP became just our team and the team at Stanford. And we just decided we wanted to own intake. They decided they didn't want to own intake, so it was a good thing, because intake is a whole lot of work, and you've got to manage a bunch of undergraduate students.

Q And for 2022, did you have any sort of partnership or collaboration still with Grafika or DFRLab?

A We did not in 2022 have direct -- it wasn't set up the same way where we would be partners with them. There were conversations that if we saw things that were interesting for each other we would have conversations with them, but I don't remember having any of those in 2022. And there was no formal collaboration or informal collaboration with them.

Q Yeah. Do you remember what the reason was to not include them in the same form as 2020?

A I think it had to do with me just being more comfortable with another research group that wasn't university based, because I think I was pushing for that, and they probably know that.

Q And what was the reason for that to the extent you recall?

A I don't -- I don't remember. I don't know if I can articulate it. But I just felt comfortable with sort of, like, having -- if we were going to base a lot of research on it, I wanted to have that research be sort of like coming out of these two academic -- base a lot of academic research on it, I wanted to have it be coming out of two academic research organizations.

And there is just a lot of similarities in sort of the structure, the timing, expectations, understanding of student demands and kinds of things that are shared between universities that don't necessarily overlap with external organizations.

Q Okay. When you're preparing for this 2022 election-related effort, when did EIP reorganize or begin in earnest for this next election cycle?

A Say that again. I'm just trying to think about -- yeah. Say that again.

Q Yeah. Let me reframe it differently.

A Yeah.

Q You said in this kind of second iteration, it's just Stanford and UW.

A Yeah.

Q Do you recall when these discussions took place and when --

A Yeah. So I may have to correct here, because I'm trying to think now. At some point, people talked me on to -- talked me into, like, allowing other sort of -- other partners to be, like, federated partners or something, who could be a part of things. They just weren't a part of the core team.

And so we came up with these different labels, and I don't remember -- I don't think Grafika was in there. DFRLab may have been a broader partner. Again, I don't remember interacting with them directly in the context of 2022.

So I wanted to correct that. Give me that question again, because that's the piece that was bothering me.

Q Sure.

A Yeah.

Q Just when are these discussions occurring and when --

A Yeah. So Stanford and UW committed to doing something similar in 2022, and we wrote a grant proposal for that in January of 2021. And so then we would have sort of committed to having -- to collaborating on something in that space in January 2021.

And then how we were going to do it comes after that. So here is my memory coming back. How we were going to do it comes after that. And that's where we had that sort of shared grant, and I was sort of advocating let's just keep it to ourselves, and then we have more control of what's happening here. So the conversations would have been starting in January 2021.

Q Okay. And who was that grant from?

A It's from the National Science Foundation.

Q Okay. And do you recall when you were awarded it?

A I think we get it in September of 2021 or October. Something in like the fall.

Q You referenced -- there are a couple different names -- other partners, federated partners.

A Yeah.

Q Do you recall what the final structure was?

A I don't recall exactly what the structure was. Again, it's not formal. It's just like people we agreed to talk to and share information with if we saw something.

But the structure in 2022 looked very different. We didn't have external groups putting information in our system. I think we had one partner who could, but we had them mark it differently, because I wanted to see that our data -- I wanted to keep like a pure data set that I knew exactly how the data came in so we could write research on it and know exactly what the provenance of the information was.

But we didn't have the same kind of external partnerships with election officials or government organizations. And our partnerships with platforms were very thin. I think we only sent three pieces of content to them in 2022, and they were all things that had, like, an undercurrent of potential violence at the polls.

Q Okay. Do you recall which partner was able to submit content for the 2022 --

A Yeah. It would have been Junkipedia.

Q Okay. And what is Junkipedia?

A I don't know. It's actually -- it seems to be connected to a civil society organization. But what Junkipedia is, is a technical platform that allows people to search content in all sorts of different ways.

I don't even know if they ended up submitting anything. We had talked about whether they could or not, and you'd have to ask someone who knows better than I what the data is there.

But we sometimes use their platform, because it allows you to search not just Twitter data, which we're really good at, but it allows you to search TikTok data and Facebook data and just -- it allows you to search more different platforms. And so it was valuable for us to be able to get a sense of what was happening in other places.

Q Do you recall who from EIP wanted to bring in or invite Junkipedia?

A Probably Renee DiResta.

Q Did Junkipedia play a role in the 2020 version of EIP?

A I remember the fact that we could use the Junkipedia platform. I think that's true in 2020. But I don't know that they were a formal partner. I don't -- again, I didn't manage the partnerships.

Q In 2022, did EIP in any way collaborate or work with CISA?

A No.

Q And you mentioned that there were only maybe three tickets with the social media platforms.

A Yeah.

Q Were there communications in the lead-up to it to reestablish relationships with the companies?

A My understanding is that folks at Stanford did make an effort to kind of put some of that infrastructure in place, and that we, in the end, decided not to do that and at the same kind of scale. But there were conversations with different social media platforms.

Q Do you know who from Stanford was having these conversations?

A Probably Renee DiResta, but also perhaps one of the more junior folks there, whose names I sometimes get mistaken.

Q Going back to 2020 and this Jira ticketing system, do you know how it was determined who would receive each ticket? It sounds like there were -- actually, let me strike that and go back.

A Yeah.

Q How many people had access to the Jira system? Do you know?

A Well, I think everyone might have had access. I think the 120 students all had access, because they could put information in.

We may have looked at different parts of it. But some people could -- so there's a set of students that are looking through social media posts, and they can create a form, a ticket, like a web form, and they can put information in it.

And then my teams, we did, at UW, we did analysis where we could pick up that ticket and we could manipulate that form and we could push certain buttons. And then there's a group of managers that could also look at those tickets.

So we all had access to it, probably 120 people.

Q So I understand you as far as when the students are researching they identify something.

A Yeah.

Q That individual student or group of students can create a ticket. But you're also receiving input from external parties.

A Yeah.

Q Do you know how it was determined to whom within this group of 120 or so, who receives the ticket first, or how those tickets are triaged?

A Oh, just whoever picked it up when it came in through the system. It was like a real-time system.

And so there's these queues, and if you're on call -- students worked in shifts, this is my understanding of the Stanford system, students are working in shifts. If they're on call, there's a queue, there's a new ticket, or maybe it's not the newest one, it's the one that's been in there the longest. But they can pick up that ticket. They start to work on it.

And they can make a determination: Is this in scope? Many tickets aren't in scope. We would just push a button, and that goes away. If it is in scope, then they would start working on it.

I didn't go through their training. I don't know what their process of what they did for that work or how they prioritized things.

But, yeah, when we did it in 2022, it was the students on call. It was first come, first served. But they weren't taking in external tickets. But when we were in analyst teams, we would pick it up first call, first served.

Q Do you know who did the training?

A The training? I don't. I don't remember. I mean, organizationally, I remember it was the Stanford folks did the training, in 2020.

Q You mentioned at the very beginning of this line of questioning, sounded like some frustrations with how the Jira ticket system operates?

A Oh, it's just hard to use software engineering, a platform made for software development, for a crowdsourcing project, yeah.

Q Due use Jira for the 2022 iteration project?

A We did, yeah.

Q And what changes, if any, were made?

A Oh, we adapted it to make it -- we adapted it a lot so that we could do a lot more sort of classification and real-time research to, like, put things in different kinds of buckets and to classify whether they were -- remember I said we had those four criteria? To be able to classify which criteria it is or which part of the election process something deals with, and whether it's about pens bleeding through ballots or something else.

We took a lot of what we learned in 2020 and we sort of embedded that in the system so we could more quickly kind of sort of categorize the information and then put out sort of weekly reports on the kinds of things that we were seeing.

Q Did you keep the same four categories or criteria that you referenced from 2020 to 2022?

A I believe we did, yeah. And we talked about adding a fifth one, which we might have added, but we didn't spend a lot of time on that. And that was misinformation or things based on misinformation that were invoking specific threats to election officials.

Q And you mentioned it was a much -- it sounds like a much smaller number. Three tickets, I think you said, were ultimately sent to --

A We sent only in three tickets, yeah. Only when there was like a sort of -- something about violence. One was an example of there had been a bomb threat at a school that was near an election facility, and people were saying that that bomb threat was trying to scare off voters, and it just wasn't true. And then there were a couple others that had some kind of intersection of violence at the polls with misinformation.

Q And do you know what process was in place to archive these tickets? Could you conduct similar research post election like you did in 2020?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And what was the archival system or access system that --

A Well, Jira keeps track of the things that happen within it. And so there is -- yeah, that Jira system is keeping track of -- and you can export things into spreadsheets and different kinds of things to see the intersections.

Q Do you know whether that information is available to you today?

A Is that information available to me today? Yeah. We're still doing analysis on 2022.

Q And is that -- for 2020, you mentioned that Stanford was the organization that had this information.

A Yeah.

Q Is it still Stanford?

A I think they're still housing it, yeah.

Q Is there a way for the system that you used in 2022 to see tickets from 2020?

A I don't think so. I think they have different log-ins.

Q Okay. Do you know how many personnel from UW were involved in the 2022 version of EIP?

Mr. Burton. I'm sorry. Could you repeat that?

[redacted]. Sure.

How many people from UW, the University of Washington, were involved in the 2022 version of EIP?

Mr. Burton. Thank you.

Ms. Starbird. I'm going to say something more on the order of 40, because we brought in sort of -- maybe even -- maybe more like 50, because we tried to bring in, like, 30 undergraduate students to do the intake, so we had a much bigger team.

The overall project is much smaller, but UW had a much bigger team. And we're studying the collaborations. That's what our grant is for, to study the collaborations. And so we're watching and studying how those students are using the system.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. Do you know how many people total were involved in the 2022 version of EIP?

A I don't know what Stanford's size team was. I think it was more on the order of 20, or it could even be fewer. They had a much smaller team.

Q All right. Are there plans to have a similar partnership in the lead-up to the 2024 election?

A Well, I think there's still a need, and I think we still have skills to participate there. And I am hopeful that we'll be able to do the same kind of thing and provide that service to society.

Q Have you had these discussions with Stanford?

A We have, but we haven't had the final discussions of where, when, who, how, how is it going to work? We're still really processing 2022 at this point. And we'd be, if we were going to start, probably thinking about supporting this kind of activity in the primaries in 2024.

Q And to the extent these conversations have occurred -- or let me ask it this way.

Would it be your preference if the model used for 2024 was closer to what was used in 2022 or in 2020, and specifically referring to the use of external partners?

A Yeah. I think my preference would be not to be reporting to platforms. I don't think that's very useful. My preference and I think something I've been advocating for since, for about a year and a half now, is that our outputs are all public, that when we do any output anybody can read it. If Twitter policy people want to read it, great, but it's also going to be public for any one of us could read it when we had an output. I think that's the model we're going to move to in 2024.

And then I still think there would be a lot of value to be able to work with local and State election officials so we can contact them to see whether something's true or false and so we can, if they see something that's affecting them, we can try to help.

I don't know how that's going to work. But I think that would be something where we could really provide something that would benefit society.

Q Do you recall -- in 2020 there were external stakeholders you said who could provide input.

A Yeah.

Q And that, if it was outside the scope of EIP, you guys would throw it out.

A Yeah. We'd just -- we would say closed, and it just wouldn't become part of our -- it would be marked in a certain way that it wouldn't become part of our analysis.

Q Yeah. Do you know -- do you recall if there were any external stakeholders who were sending more requests than others that were outside the scope of EIP?

A Again, I haven't done the data analysis. I do remember post hoc being like there were certain things that were higher quality and closer to what we wanted to do than others, and the ones that weren't high quality and didn't help, we just didn't pay attention to.

And it's just about -- my interpretation was that that partner just didn't really understand what we were trying to do. But I can't remember a lot of examples.

Q Do you remember if any of the partners -- do you have any recollection one way or the other if any of the partners stood out as having a better understanding or a poorer understanding of what EIP was aiming at?

A I don't, no.

Q Okay.

A And, to be honest, like a lot of the external partners only submitted like two or three things, and some didn't submit any. It was variable.

Q On the ticket itself, could an analyst see who sent the report?

A I believe they could. But I don't know that for sure. I don't think I picked up an external -- I don't think my team, while I was watching, picked up a ticket that came in from an external partner. I think 70 percent of our tickets came in internally.

And at the times that our team was working, we were working while a Stanford shift was live with doing intake, and so almost everything we were picking up was coming directly from their analysts.

Q Do you recall if there were issues related to, for lack of a better word, borderline content?

So let me take a step back. You referenced that there were the four categories --

A Yeah.

Q -- of election procedures and processes.

A Yeah.

Q Do you recall if there was a sub area or topic that was difficult to navigate about whether it fell into the category or not?

A I don't recall anything like that happening. It could have, but that's not something that I saw.

Q Okay.

A I mean, qualitative classification by people can always be challenging, but I don't remember, like, "Oh, this is an edge case that we keep running into we're not sure what we're dealing with." I never -- I don't think I remember any communication about that.

Q In 2020, obviously COVID is going on. Is it your understanding that States -- some States chose to change certain election procedures during the calendar year of 2020?

A Is it my understanding? that's my understanding, yes. Yeah.

Q And I guess the lead-up to this question. Certainly people are voicing opinions on how things should change, if they should change.

Who is making the determination as far as what was a false statement as opposed to, we'll say, an opinion or a stance on an issue?

A I guess I'm not kind of sure. I would love to get an example of what you mean by the two different cases would be.

The cases that I saw were really focused on not this is how it should work, but here's the -- here's a claim about ballots in a dumpster. Like the cases that I saw weren't -- I guess I'd need more information about what you mean in terms of that.

Q Sure. it seems like some cases are not too difficult to categorize or put this in that.

A Right.

Q But you mentioned that there were hundreds of tickets. You only worked on two or three to the extent you recall?

A Well, directly in real time, I wasn't working on that many, yeah.

Q Yeah. Do you have a sense of how many you were able to review or had a sense, just as a point of clarification?

A How many that I've reviewed?

Q Well, if you only directly worked on two or three.

A Well, in real time, I was only working -- I could only remember two or three that we spent a lot of time with. Post hoc, we've done a lot of research across all of the different tickets.

Post hoc, what we've done is we've taken -- we identify one of these claims, and then we'd go look at all of the tweets related to that claim. And if all of the tweets with a claim -- if about 50 percent of them -- or if a majority of them are false or misleading, then we would kind of classify that as spreading a rumor, even though not every particular piece of that might have been making it.

Just like in the case that they showed, there is sometimes where the initial information doesn't directly say something that's false, but you can look at what the audience says about it.

And so, if the audiences were picking up those claims to say, "Oh, it's another case of voter fraud and this is voter fraud," then we would interpret that as part of like a false rumor when there was no evidence of voter fraud to be in -- or false or unsubstantiated rumor when there was no evidence of voter fraud in those cases.

[1:45 p.m.]

BY [redacted]:

Q Do you have a sense of what the reason was for the tickets that didn't fall within the EIP scope, why they were thrown out?

A You know, each analyst may have been making a different decision. And, to be honest, we don't have quality control across every decision that each one of these students made, and the students, you know, were trained, you know, for a week, maybe two. But I couldn't tell you about each one because they're all made by different people.

Q And, if you needed to go conduct further research on this, who would you contact to see if those tickets were still available?

A I would probably contact Renee just because she now is the person that I contact at Stanford when I want things. But I don't know who -- they've had a lot of other turnover there, and she's the only person that's been really consistently still there, even though I don't think that she was involved in that early part of the training because Renee was on maternity leave until I think September of 2020.

[redacted]. Great. I believe the hour is up.

Can we go off the record, please?

[Recess.]

[redacted]. It is 1:55. We can go back on the record.

Dr. Starbird, we just spent about an hour talking about the Election Integrity Partnership --

Ms. Starbird. Yes.

[redacted]. -- which is also referred to as the EIP.

I'm going to look a little more closely at the circumstances around EIP's creation.

Ms. Starbird. Okay.

[redacted]. So I want to introduce as exhibit No. 8 an email chain that's dated July 15, 2020, through July 2l, 2020. And this is University of Washington Bates number 5314 to 35.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q And I'm introducing the whole chain for completeness, but I'm only going to talk about the very first email as it's the last in time email. It's the first email on the page.

A Yeah.

Q And this is exhibit NO. 8. So this is an email from you to [redacted], who is, it appears, a Stanford individual, and then there's a number of other individuals in the cc line. Correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And it's dated Tuesday, July 2l, 2020, 14:01:55. Correct?

A Yes.

Q And the subject line is "SIO Elections Monitoring Warroom Kickoff." Right?

A Yes.

Q Do you remember this email?

A I do, yes.

Q Okay. So, in this email, you're talking about how excited you are to join the team. And I want to look at the second paragraph.

A Right.

Q So it says -- you wrote, "We foresee" -- and "we" refers to UW and your participation. Correct?

A UW's Center for an Informed Public, as well as my colleagues there.

Q Okay.

A Emma Spiro and Jevin West. I was speaking on behalf of them.

Q So you wrote: We foresee our primary role as contributing to the near real-time analysis, particularly with visualizations and large-scale quantifications (network graphs, topic models) that can inform and complement more qualitative/forensic analyses. We are also setting up rapid-response teams to do qualitative coding (of posts or accounts or media outlets). Our analyses rely heavily on Twitter, Google, and You Tube. We're developing some expertise with Crowdtangle data on Facebook groups as well. Data sharing is something we might all want to talk about, and we can about how we might contribute there.

Did I read that right?

A You did.

Q So this language is incredibly technical --

A Yes.

Q -- and kind of flows over my head a little bit, so I want to break it down a little bit.

A Yeah.

Q What does "visualizations and large-scale quantifications" mean here?

A Right. So we often rely on Twitter data, so let me kind of do it with that. So we may take 50,000 or 100,000 tweets and create a graph on them. We could graph them a couple different ways. One of the things we do is graph sort of tweets over time to see, you know, if there's a couple of search terms that represent a rumor, you can see if that rumor is growing or shrinking.

We also created a kind of novel visualization technique where we can see the influence of individual users in the sort of trajectory and see, like, when it hits an account that has a large following, that spikes. Right? So one of the things that we've learned to recognize about misinformation and rumors -- not misinformation, but rumors is that influencers can grow their influence by spreading them, but also they play a big role in amplifying them. So when it hits a large influencer, that's a time where you might want to react when you -- you know, if it hadn't hit any large influencers, it might burn out. You might not want to react to it. So building a large-scale quantification would be to help us see the sort of the patterns at scale.

And then network graphs are another important part of what we do is we can map out -- so, within our social media interactions, we may interact with different people in different ways. And some of the -- one of the common techniques we use is to create a retweet network graph where you see the accounts that retweet each other, and they'll be structurally separated from the accounts that don't retweet each other. So you can see different kinds of audiences.

If you think about an epidemiology model of, like, how things spread, things are going to be more likely -- once they hit a network, they're going to spread through that network pretty strongly.

So we can map out those networks, and structurally sometimes, because of the ways that we interact as people online right now, a lot of our political conversations will kind of end up into two different structural networks where people of like minds will basically retweet each other and not retweet people from the other side.

We create other kinds of network graphs as well, but -- I don't need to tell you about them all, but we have other ones that show, like, which kinds of media domains are cited by the same kinds of accounts, and so that that also can get sort of different kinds of structures that can reveal sort of political orientations of different pieces of a conversation, but not just politics. Other kinds of things can come up there. Geographic location and other things can kind of be inferred from some of these network graphs as well.

Q Okay. And then you say: We are also setting up rapid-response teams to do qualitative coding (of posts or accounts or media outlets).

And I think rapid response kind of in the political world probably means something very different than it does here.

A Yeah, yeah, yeah.

Q So I'm hoping you can explain what that means there.

A So, right. So, if we have -- you know, one of the things that's really hard in social media environments is to figure out what kind of account you're looking at, whether it's like an individual account, an organizational account, whether it's a legacy media or a new kind of media. And sometimes your analysis -- like if I created a network graph of different domains that are cited together, it might be really valuable to see, okay, these ones are organizations, these ones are election officials, these ones are sort of like web media outlets.

And so we had talked about -- I don't think we ever used them -- having students rapidly go qualitatively code to differentiate the different kinds of accounts, or whatever research question emerged at the time, so that a group of three or four students, we could develop a qualitative coding scheme or a categorization scheme, and they could quickly go through the data to mark those up so we can create some more interesting visualizations that also can let us see different kinds of patterns at scale.

So it's just like a -- this is like doing traditional qualitative methods but at a rapid pace, which is kind of what our special sauce is at our research lab.

Q And then you refer to data from Twitter and Google and YouTube --

A Yeah.

Q -- and other entities.

So, in the prior hour, there was a lot of discussion about what material was, I guess, flagged, for lack of a better word, for social media companies and the like.

A Yeah.

Q But really your focus was really kind of on the data analysis, right, and kind of taking all of this data and mapping it and graphing it. Is that fair to say?

A We're trying to understand the patterns of how things spread and where that can inform -- again, when you're thinking about how to respond to something in real time, especially a rumor, there are a lot of considerations about whether you want to give more attention to something that's going to die out or not. And so being able to analyze how it's spreading, you can say: Okay, this one is going to die out. Let's not draw attention to it.

We have all of these examples -- the NyQuil chicken, or whatever, all of these examples of things we shouldn't have drawn attention to. Right?

And so, in doing these analyses, you can say: Okay, this one is going to die out, or, you know, this one is about to hit. It's hit one influencer. It's about to hit a few more. Let's probably think about a global strategy for communicating about it. Or look this one is really just spreading among politically oriented people in a very specific location because they really are concerned about Sharpie pens. Well, then you want to create a different kind of message to target it towards a different kind of person.

And so these kind of analyses can help kind of inform the right communication strategy to help people get to the truth when they're, you know, kind of misinterpreting things or being misled.

Q And the communication strategy might not involve going to social media platforms at all. Right?

A For our team, no. We really thought about political communication -- public communication, right, like how do we communicate this publicly? Again, we did tweet threads, blogs. I've created so many interactive graphs. My, like, home page is full of them. Right? Like -- I don't mean home page, but my web environment of graphs that people could go to and see how things were spreading and who was spreading things. So, for us, we were really focused on public communication.

[redacted]. I want to introduce as exhibit No. 9 a July 27, 2020, post from the EIP. It's announcing the EIP.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. And if you want to take a minute to review it.

Ms. Starbird. I will. Thank you. Yeah.

BY [redacted]:

Q So down at the bottom, the -- like I guess it's the second to the last mini paragraph, it says: We would like to thank the Knight Foundation and Craig Newmark Philanthropies for their support of this effort.

Do you see where it says that?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with the Knight Foundation?

A I am.

Q What's the Knight Foundation?

A It is a philanthropic organization that gives funding to a variety of entities. But they gave us the foundational granted for the Center for an Informed Public and as part of our effort to fund research at the intersection of information, integrity, and democracy.

Q And they're a private entity. Right?

A Indeed.

Q Okay. No connection to the government?

A No.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with the Craig Newmark -- I'm sorry -- with Craig Newmark Philanthropies?

A I am, yes.

Q And what are Craig Newmark Philanthropies?

A They're a philanthropic fund that is associated with Craig Newmark, who was the founder of Craigslist, and he gives money to a lot of causes, including information, integrity, and democracy, among many others, yeah.

Q And that's also a fully private philanthropic entity. Right?

A It is, yes.

Q No connection to the government?

A None, no.

Q So, to the best of your knowledge -- and the EIP, kind of the bulk of its work was July 2020 to November of 2020, right, until like Thanksgiving 2020?

A I would say we were still writing our report through December, yeah.

Q Okay.

Mr. Burton. And that's, just to be clear --

Ms. Starbird. But the live activities were --

Mr. Burton. But it's this EIP?

Ms. Starbird. In 2020.

[redacted]. In 2020, correct.

Ms. Starbird. Yes.

Mr. Burton. Correct.

[redacted]. The 2020 EIP.

BY [redacted]:

Q So, during that time period of the 2020 EIP, to the best of your knowledge, did EIP receive any funding from any government entity?

A I can't speak for the other groups. The University of Washington, my understanding is that our funding did not come from the National Science Foundation or any other Federal entity for our real-time work in -- with the Election Integrity Partnership.

Q I want to look at the second paragraph of that post. It says: The Election Integrity Partnership is a coalition of research entities focused on supporting real-time information exchange between the research community, election officials, government agencies, civil society organizations, and social media platforms.

Now, we touched on this just a minute ago, the type of communications. It's not just sending information to the social media platforms; it's public communications as well.

A Yeah.

Q This reference to real-time information exchange, is that also a reference to ways to push information out?

A Yes. Yeah, information exchange was just -- yeah. I don't know exactly where that comes from. My assumption is it's, you know -- I don't even know how to answer that question. I didn't write that sentence, so I, you know --

Q Understood.

A I mean, information exchange, it's about, you know, like us calling up and asking during the Sonoma ballots case, I do believe one of my students called up the folks in Sonoma County to ask them about this picture to understand whether or not it was true or not. I think it's that kind of thing where we can kind of have a conversation about: Oh, yeah we're seeing this thing spread. Okay, it's about to take off, or, like, that one isn't going to take off. Don't make it the next, you know, NyQuil chicken. Right? Like don't put a lot of attention -- that kind of thing.

That's my understanding of why -- of why that configuration of a partnership would be valuable here.

Q Yeah.

A And I think -- I think it aligns with some of the traditional ways that cybersecurity information sharing is happening. So cybersecurity is really about being hacked or different kinds of things. Like an organization like Microsoft might discover a vulnerability in their tools and they'll want to communicate that with government, and they'll want to communicate that with other industry members so they can see if they have the same vulnerability and clean it up. Right? So I think it comes from that kind of orientation around thinking around information sharing.

Q Okay. And my point is like it seems like it's more flow, information flow more generally. Again, it's not -- the purpose of EIP wasn't to report things to platforms necessarily. It was about broader discussions, broader information flow. Is that fair to say?

A Absolutely that's fair to say. When I joined this project, I did not think about it primarily as a way to inform social media platforms. In fact, I thought that that was probably the least interesting piece and possibly the least valuable piece of the project. That's why at the University of Washington we were so focused on public communication and trying to get these things out publicly.

Q The post continues -- and I think this gets into kind of the four -- the limited scope in the four areas that you were looking at.

So it says: Our objective is to detect and mitigate the impact of attempts to prevent or deter people from voting or to delegitimize election results. This is not a fact-checking partnership to debunk misinformation more generally. Our objective explicitly excludes addressing comments that may be made about candidates' character or actions and is focused narrowly on content intended to suppress voting, reduce participation, confuse voters as to election processes, or delegitimize election results without evidence.

So those last four that I just read I want to go through each of those in turn.

A Okay.

Q To the extent that you recall, what did "content intended to suppress voting" refer to?

A I can make an inference here about what I think we meant by that, but I don't remember exactly the conversations that would have gone into that.

But, for instance, content that scares people away from the polls, so false rumors that there's going to be violence at the polls, for instance, might suppress votes, and people might not go to the polls to vote because of it. So that was one of the kind of specific cases that we would think about around voter suppression in this -- when it intersects with misinformation.

Q What about content that would, quote, "reduce participation"?

A I think similarly, something that would cause people -- well, if you don't think your vote is going to count, if you think you might -- if you think that it's going to be -- that there's going to be fraud and, you know, you're not going to be considered -- you know, it's not going to be counted, that might reduce participation. Other kinds of things, anything that might, you know, using false information cause a person to think that they don't want to vote, whether from fear or from lack of agency or something else, that would be kind of reduced participation.

Q What about the reference to content that would confuse voters as to election processes? What did that refer to?

A I think that means kind of the content about confusing people about when and where to vote, which may actually cause them to make a mistake and not vote at the right time and the right place and cause them to be disenfranchised by not understanding how the processes work.

Q Okay. And what about content that would delegitimize election results without evidence?

A This is claims that are not based in factual evidence. For instance, that voting machines are changing your vote or that, you know, that your votes -- that somebody is cheating, so unsubstantiated claims and false claims of voter fraud that cause people not to believe in the results of the election.

Q And so all of these are scoped to ensure that voters can have their votes registered and count and ensure that they're not scared away from the polls. Is that fair to say?

A Many of them apply to that, yeah, yeah.

Q Okay. And the EIP specifically made clear in its introductory post that it did not intend to address comments about characters' character -- about candidates' character or actions. Correct?

A Yeah.

Q Was that important to you to have the area that the EIP was looking at to be narrowly scoped to just specifically areas that are designed to protect voters from being disenfranchised?

A Yeah. I think we wanted -- scope helps in any kind of project just because it helps you not to get too broad. But I think in the sense that we were doing collaborations with certain -- with certain, you know, different partners, it was really important to have a very narrow scope to things that were really like in the wheelhouses of those organizations and that were something that had the sort of shared societal awareness that, like, delegitimizing election results without evidence is a problem. Right? And so scoping to those kinds of things where you don't want to get into a tit for tat about, you know, candidates' children or whatever it is. Right? So we really wanted to really focus on misinformation just about the election processes and procedures, which is why I probably repeated that over and over again today.

Q Now, after -- after the active part, I guess, after post-December 2020 --

A Yeah, yeah.

Q -- let me put it that way, the EIP put together a report. Right?

A Yes.

Q And it's entitled "The Long Fuse"?

A Yeah. It's a long -- it's a long report too.

Q Did you help to draft that report?

A I did.

Q Okay.

A Mostly in the chapters 4 and 5.

Q I'm going to introduce the cover page and the executive summary. As you said, it's a long report. I think it's like 300-some pages, so --

A Yeah. We warn you in the title that it's going to be long. And, in fact, it was probably 1,000 pages when first drafted because you have 120 people helping to draft.

[redacted]. I'm sorry. Yes, this is exhibit No. 10.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q All right. And I should say the way -- I printed this out so that it has the cover page and the executive summary. That's actually -- if you print out the entire report, there's table of contents. I think there's some acknowledgment pages, so that is cut out, so the whole report is available online. This is not an accurate representation of what it looks like in the first couple of pages.

And I'm going to start by asking you about the "What We Did" section, if that's --

A Okay.

Q So, under this "What We Did" section, it says -- it describes the scope of your work across the four categories.

A Uh-huh.

Q And I think we have touched on that a little bit, but I want to look at them again in the context of the post hoc analysis piece.

A Uh-huh.

Q So it says: To identify the scope of our work, we built a framework to compare the policies of 15 social media platforms across four categories.

And then you list procedural interference, participation interference, fraud, and delegitimization of election results.

Now, in the earlier discussion, there was some question about, you know, what was the work on platforms. This was really just an analysis of that, of those platforms' policies. Right?

A Yeah. We built the framework to compare the policies was just we took their publicly available communication about their policies, and our students did an analysis and a write-up of that with help from some of the researchers and faculty members.

Q And is that publicly available?

A It is, yeah, I believe so.

Q Okay. And so it's not like you were having discussions with the social media platforms about how to form their policies in the context of the EIP?

A I don't believe we were. I think this is just students doing their analysis of the platforms.

Q Just a publicly available analysis?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then moving on to the key takeaways part, the very first key takeaway is that misleading and false claims and narratives coalesced into the meta-narrative of a stolen election, which later propelled the January 6 insurrection.

Are you familiar with this key takeaway broadly?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Can you explain what's meant by a meta-narrative?

A A meta-narrative is -- so a narrative is a story, and we can think about the individual claims and rumors. Many of them may be kind of related into a larger narrative. And so we saw different kinds of larger narratives. One is that, you know, the voting process -- with Sharpiegate, the voting process was intentionally marred by people giving certain voters certain kinds of pens, and that might be a sort of larger narrative of people sort of deterred from voting at the polls. There could be other narratives about so the mail-in balloting process was rife with fraud, these kinds of things. They were all wrapped into a larger meta-narrative that there was widespread and systematic fraud that would lead to the conclusion that the election was stolen.

And so this meta-narrative of a stolen election is a combination of all of these different narratives. And, if you can unpack the narratives, there's a bunch of different rumors or claims that feed into different narratives.

Q The third bullet down says that the meta-narrative of a stolen election coalesced into the #stopthesteal movement, encompassing many of the previous narratives. And the previous narratives above reference destroyed ballots, misleading framing of real-world incidents, things like that.

Can you describe how -- to the extent you're familiar with it or the extent you can recall sitting here now, how the research showed that these narratives coalesced specifically into the #stopthesteal movement?

A Yeah. We could see the "stop the steal" hashtag actually starts to be added to different tweets within, you know -- step back. So we took all of the different tickets, and we de-duplicated them, and then we identified all of the ones that were related to claims that delegitimize the election processes, procedures, or results and into this sort of false misleading or unsubstantiated claims. We threw out ones that didn't meet those criteria. And then we did these analysis, and we did very close analysis in some cases and meta analysis in others. And we can see that the "stop the steal" hashtag begins to be added to false, misleading, or unsubstantiated rumors on election day in the morning. And over time, if you watched that happen, other rumors come up, especially sort of the ones around Dominion voting machines, and other kinds of things that begin to grow in attention after election day. And you can see that the "stop the steal" narrative gets added -- the "stop the steal" hashtag gets added to these different claims and kind of all wrapped together, and then they begin to mobilize protests and rallies. And some folks used it to try to fundraise, combining, you know, the "stop the steal" hashtag with these rumors and false claims.

Q And the research showed that as the "stop the steal" narrative was spiking, there were also increasing calls for violence or civil war. Is that right?

A Yeah. That doesn't come directly from our work, but you can see that -- our work at the University of Washington, but that happens a lot in more of the private groups and other places that we don't spend a lot of time in. But you can see there's sort of Stop the Steal private Facebook groups we weren't in, but my understanding is that the violent language, calls to action increase over time. We have studied sort of calls for other -- different kinds of mobilization, and my understanding is that intersects as well with research from Facebook itself and other places that they could see the rise of those kinds of more violent language in combination with the calls to action.

Q And sorry. Did you just say that you did see -- your research did identify other calls to mobilization?

A Yeah. We saw other kinds of calls to mobilization, right. So there's -- to file affidavits, so there was a lot of effort, as people are -- in the Sharpies -- I spent way too much time in that case. But, with the Sharpie pens, you can see even as people are just trying to see: Oh, I used the Sharpie pen, and it didn't work.

They're, like: Oh, file an affidavit, file an affidavit.

Well, they used that to get into lawsuits, and later we see people say: Oh, look, there was so much wrong. Look at the lawsuits.

Right? So there's this kind of cyclical thing between the lawsuits and the individuals.

So there was actually this sort of infrastructure and support for people to talk -- to share what they saw as evidence of voter fraud, and then there was an effort to connect them with lawyers to file affidavits as part of that process. And then we can also see mobilization into things like to rallies and to protests.

Q I want to move on from the key takeaways and look at the key recommendations section.

A Yeah.

Q Which -- again, just the executive summary. I know there's a much longer recommendation section in the report itself, but for brevity, we're going to look at the key summary.

So, under the Federal Government, the EIP recommends the development of clear authorities and roles for identifying countering election related mis- and disinformation and creating clear standards for consistent disclosures of mis- and disinformation.

Do you know what "disclosure" means here?

A No, I don't have the -- I didn't write that, and I don't know what they mean by that.

Q Do you think it could be a reference to putting out more information?

A My understanding is probably more from the work I did later at CISA, and that was the focus of trying to broadcast these messages when people find -- you know, be able to connect local and State election officials and to corrective information that they have with the audiences or help them to reach their audiences.

Q Okay. And, putting aside what exactly "disclosure" means, there's nothing in here that recommends that the government take any steps to remove content containing mis- or disinformation. Right?

A No.

Q And it doesn't recommend that the government be involved in any actions to remove accounts, for example, that spread misinformation or disinformation. Correct?

A No.

Q Okay. And so EIP really didn't make any recommendations about content moderation at all with respect to the Federal Government. Right?

A No.

Q Okay. I want to talk about some kind of myths that are circulating, or maybe rumors is the better way to phrase it, around the Election Integrity Partnership?

A Yes.

Q Are you familiar with a journalist named Matt Taibbi?

A Vaguely and mostly through the last few months of reading some of the things that he's written about us.

Q Okay. Mr. Taibbi has claimed that EIP has, quote, succeeded in getting nearly 22 million tweets labeled in the run up to the 2020 vote.

Are you aware of that statement?

A Yes.

Q Is that an accurate statement?

A No.

Q Okay. Do you want to say anything further about that?

A I think he's conflating the real-time work where the Election Integrity Partnership helped to label things or helped to advise or make the platforms aware of things that they might want to label, to be honest, is how we approached it. He's confusing that work with our much later work to analyze how these different rumors were spreading on Twitter using, like, search strings that we developed. And it was like our -- he's conflating our post hoc empirical research with our real-time efforts to draw attention to the platforms to things that might violate their policies.

Q Okay.

[redacted]. I want to introduce page 183 from "The Long Fuse," and this is from a section about the way you did your work.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q I just want to look at the paragraph -- 1, 2, 3 -- it's the fourth paragraph down, right above "Facebook and Instagram Data Collection." It begins "In total."

So that paragraph reads: In total, our incident-related tweet data included 5,888,771 tweets and retweets from ticket status IDs directly, 1,094,115 tweets and retweets collected first from ticket URLs, and 14,914,478 from keyword searches, for a total of 21,897,364 tweets.

So this is actually -- the 21 million -- it's not 22. It's almost 22 million --

A Yeah.

Q -- is the total data set that was collected, right, that you looked at?

A Yeah. It's the total data set of all of the tweets that we could map to tickets, yeah.

Q Okay. So that's not the total number of tweets that were --

A No.

Q Yeah. It's not the total number of posts, I should say, that were flagged. It's the total number that were mapped --

A Yes.

Q -- that were looked at?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. On March 17, 2023, the Stanford Internet Observatory posted a blog post. It's entitled "Background on the SIO's Project on Social Media."

Have you reviewed that?

A I didn't read it closely, but I'm aware of it.

[redacted]. We'll introduce it as exhibit 12.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Burton. Did you mark this as a separate or is it just a --

[redacted]. That's separate. That is exhibit No. 11, and this will be exhibit No. 12.

Mr. Burton. Okay. Thank you.

BY [redacted]:

Q And this is a blog post that I printed out, and so it's not a page number, but I am going to look at what is the third page, the very bottom, the last -- it begins: Is it true that EIP censored 22 million tweets and labeled them as "misinformation."

That paragraph.

A Yeah.

Q Okay. So Stanford says that, as part of its nonpartisan research related to the 2020 U.S. Presidential election, EIP analyzed 22 million tweets that contained key words or URLs relevant to EIP's scope of work. EIP identified 2,890 unique tweet URLs in potential violation of Twitter's stated policies. EIP provided its factual analysis to the relevant platforms, which were then responsible for each platform's own content moderation decisions.

So, according to this, Stanford is saying that of the 22 million tweets that were all of the tweets in the database, only 2,890 were potentially in violation of policies, within the scope of your research.

Is that fair?

A Um, can you ask that question again?

Q Sorry.

A Yeah.

Q So Mr. Taibbi has said that EIP flagged 22 million tweets to be labeled.

A Right.

Q What Stanford is saying is that the number was actually about 2,890.

A Yes.

Q Does that sound right to you?

A That sounds right to me.

Q Okay. So that's a -- I did the math last night. That's about .01 percent of the entire data set?

A Yeah.

Q Okay. And this references Twitter's stated policies. That's a reference to Twitter's publicly available policies on what is and is not allowed on its site. Correct?

A Right.

Q Okay. So, to the extent that you know, would an account of an individual who is impersonating an actual election worker likely violate Twitter's policies?

A I don't know that to be explicit, but I think that's probably part of their policy. But I don't know that to be specifically true.

Q What about a post that incites others to commit violence, would that be in violation of Twitter's policies?

A Yes. I believe so, yeah.

Q Okay. So those are the type of items that may have been within that 2,890 subset. Correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And I know we don't have them in front of us, but just to --

A Yeah. There's -- yeah, confusing people about when and where to vote would be the one that I would have anchored on and -- yeah.

Q So, if a post said polls open at 10:00 a.m. and they, in fact, open at 7:00 a.m.?

A Yeah.

Q Something like that?

A And in the Sharpiegate case and the Sonoma ballots would also have been within those things that may have had pieces of it that could have been reported. Sharpie, it would have been a little bit harder, but --

Q Okay.

A -- Sonoma ballots would have been reported.

Q And when we say were reported -- when you're saying that the posts were reported, all that happened was they were sent to the social media platforms with an explanation. Correct?

A My understanding is that they would send the posts and sort of an explanation for why that analyst thought it might violate their policy.

Q Okay. And you had no control over what Twitter or Facebook or anybody else did with those reports once they were received. Right?

A Not at all.

Q Okay. And you couldn't --

Mr. Burton. When you're saying "you" --

[redacted]. Sorry. Fair clarification.

Ms. Starbird. Yeah, right.

Mr. Burton. -- could you distinguish between her versus EIP?

Ms. Starbird. Yeah.

BY [redacted]:

Q Did you personally have any control over what Twitter did with those reports once they were received?

A No, I had no control over what Twitter did with those reports once they were received.

Q And the same with posts sent to any other social media company?

A With any social media company.

Mr. Burton. Or whether she was involved in communicating to the posts.

Ms. Starbird. I also didn't communicate with anybody, but that's -- for EIP, let's go for EIP.

BY [redacted]:

Q Yeah.

A My understanding is that Twitter and other platforms, that they got to choose what they did with what we gave them.

Q Right.

A And sometimes they took action on it, and sometimes they didn't.

Q Right.

A When they did take action, the majority of time they put labels on things.

Q Okay. So all that EIP was doing was sending these reports over. After it left your hands -- after it left EIP's hands, it was up to the platforms to decide what to do with the posts. Correct?

A Yeah. We were using our powers of communication to let them know that we thought this thing violated their policy and they could do with that what they may.

Q Okay. Are you familiar with what's been referred to as the Hunter Biden laptop story?

A I'm familiar, yes.

Q Okay. So this is a reference to an October 14, 2020, New York Post story about a laptop purportedly belonging to Hunter Biden. Correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Did EIP analyze the laptop story as part of its work?

A No.

Q Okay. And this story was actually completely outside the scope of EIP's work. Is that fair to say?

A It was outside the scope of EIP's work, yeah.

Q Okay. Mr. Taibbi also conflated in his Twitter Files reporting something called CIS with CISA.

Are you familiar with CIS?

A Familiar only through this project, and I didn't connect with them directly. But I understand the difference between the two organizations, yeah.

Q So what is your understanding of what CIS is?

A I think CIS is a nonprofit organization that helps communicate information among local and State election officials.

Q Okay. And it's entirely private. Right? It's not a government entity?

A My understanding it's not a government entity.

Q Okay. And are you familiar with CISA?

A I am familiar with CISA.

Q And what is CISA?

A CISA is a -- I'm familiar with it now that I've been on the board -- is a cybersecurity agency within the United States Government whose primary role is to build resilience among -- in our country around cyber attacks.

Q Is it fair to say that CIS and CISA, or CISA, are two very different entities?

A They're very different entities.

Q Okay. Did CIS send content to EIP to analyze?

A My understanding is they did, yes.

Q Okay. Did CISA, or CISA, ever send content to EIP to analyze?

A Again, my understanding is they did not.

Q Okay. Did the EIP, to the best of your knowledge, ever flag content for social media platforms on behalf of CISA?

A No. To the best of my knowledge, we did not.

Q Okay. There was a reference earlier to CISA being a partner of EIP. That took place between July 2020 and November, December 2020. Is that right?

A I think that's the range of it. But, again, I didn't have a lot of visibility of when that started and when that ended.

Q At the time that -- during that time period, so let's say July to November, December 2020, do you know who the Director of CISA was?

A Yes. It was Chris Krebs.

Q And who was Chris Krebs?

A Chris Krebs is -- my understanding is he was a Republican who was an appointee of Donald Trump.

Q Okay. And CISA is an agency that's under the authority of the Department of Homeland Security. Correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. During, again, this relevant time period, July 2020 to November, December 2020, DHS was run in an acting capacity by Chad Wolf. Correct?

A I'll take your word for it. Again, I don't know how everything works, but I will take your word for it, yes.

Q And it was -- Mr. Wolf was an appointee of President Trump as well. Correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So, to the extent that there was a partnership between EIP and CISA, it was in the context of CISA being run by a Republican appointee under the authority of another Republican Donald Trump appointee. Is that right?

A That's true, yes.

Q Okay. There have been allegations that EIP's work targeted Conservative political speech. Are you familiar with these allegations?

A I am.

Q Are those allegations accurate?

A Those allegations -- well, it depends on how you define "targeting," but we did not purposely go to look for Conservative political speech. What we were studying were rumors about election processes and procedures. Unfortunately, around the 2020 election, those were more predominant in right-leaning discourse and social media than in left-leaning discourse. Now, there were ones on the left too, and we reported on things on the left and the right, but there just is -- a larger proportion was on the politically right leaning, within those networks.

Q Okay. And I want to get back to that in a second.

A Okay.

Q But, before I do, you mentioned the outreach to the RNC.

A Yes.

[redacted]. I want to introduce as exhibit -- I don't know what we're up to now.

[redacted]. 13.

[redacted]. -- 13, an email dated July 3l, 2020. It's part of a chain that began as a calendar invite dated July 30, 2020, and then there was a followup email sent on top of that.

And we're only going to look at -- I mean, they've got the calendar. It's just a calendar, but we're only going to look at the email on the first page. And this is Bates stamped UW-5152 to DW-5153.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

BY [redacted]:

Q So this was sent from an individual at Stanford to you and a number of others. It begins by thanking the recipients for joining the July 30th meeting, and then it lists a number of next steps.

On the number -- underneath next steps number 1, it's meetings on the calendar for next week.

Do you see where it says that?

A I do.

Q And then there's a whole list: NASS, NASED. Those are election directors. Right?

A Local and State election officials, yes.

Q Okay. Common Cause, Twitter, ASD, CIS, DNC, and then it has the RNC listed here. Right?

A Yeah.

Q So there was active outreach to the RNC right at the very beginning of the EIP. Is that fair to say?

A Yes, it is fair to say. And that was communicated to me when it was pitched to me is that they were reaching out to the RNC. They wanted them to be a partner.

Q Okay. And do you know if this meeting took place?

A I don't know that it did or did not. My understanding is that it did not.

Q Okay. Because the RNC chose not to --

A It chose not to participate.

Q Okay. I want to look at the question of how bias might impact research kind of in a general way.

A Yes.

Q Are you aware of the risk of bias impacting research, generally speaking?

A Yes. It's something that we talk about as researchers all the time, yes.

Q Are there particular steps that can be taken to account for that during the research process?

A I think one of them is we make ourselves aware of the biases we have, and we, you know, talk about how to make sure that, to the best of our ability, we don't let that guide our process, because we want to get towards the truth. We want to get an accurate vision of what's going on. And so, in my field, you acknowledge your positionality, you acknowledge that you're political leanings might be in a research project, not individually. We don't go around the room saying what we are, but, you know, if we think that we might have sort of a bias we acknowledge that, and we try to counter that.

For instance, leading up to election day around our work, I had a talk with all of my students, and I advised them that, you know, it is quite possible that Donald Trump will win, and if you are -- if you, you know, begin to see -- and if he does, we are likely to see a rise in misinformation on the left to say that there's voter fraud, to not believe the results. And I expect you all to be just as committed to, you know, working on those tickets as you would be to working on tickets where it was -- where that information was spreading on the right.

So we had those kinds of conversations among our team.

Q And what about kind of at the post hoc analysis stage? I think there has been -- you hear references to cleaning the data, for example. Are there ways to look at the data after it's been collected to ensure that bias is either accounted for or minimized or addressed in some way?

A Yeah. I mean, we can go look back over things. I think with this kind of research and we knew, you know, that it could be something that's quite visible, I think as a researcher I was extra careful with the results after the fact, to go back and just make sure that we had been kind of handling things in an evenhanded way; that, if the same kind of misinformation that was spreading, for instance, accusing the DeJoy Post Office of intentionally slowing down the process, which was a very common theme on the left, that we treated that in the same way as someone talking about mail-in ballots in the trash can on the right. Right?

So we were really -- and I tried to be very careful, also removing any noise that got in there and delineate it and really make sure that, if there was a claim that we were featuring in some of the things that we were counting, that it was the majority of communication about that was, like, false, misleading, or unsubstantiated. Because sometimes you actually get -- there's a rumor, but most of what you see is just a correction of that rumor, and we didn't want to count that the same way as we counted something else. We were just very careful before we did our peer-reviewed research to really make sure that everything was -- you know, that there was no bias. And, fortunately, our peer-reviewed research that we did after that process aligns almost exactly with the research that we did, you know, a little bit earlier that we put out in reports. But I was just, you know, really cognizant that there might -- not just bias but just like validity issues, yeah.

Q So you took, it sounds like, a fair number of pretty rigorous steps to try to account for or minimize the impact of bias?

A We did.

Q And, even in light of that, at the end of the day, is it fair to say that EIP identified more misinformation spreading among right-leaning audiences than left-leaning audiences?

A It is fair to say that, yes. And that also aligns with other research. It's not aberrant. It's not an outlier with other research that I have seen from other independent researchers that are not in our group, yeah.

Q Did your research explain why more misinformation was spreading through right-leaning than left-leaning audiences?

A I think there's two main reasons that we can kind of look at. One is that President Trump himself was pushing this idea that there would be widespread voter fraud, and his followers were and supporters were believing that and actually misinterpreting things that they were seeing in the world in some cases through that lens, and so there was sort of a concerted effort to push that narrative.

And the second piece is that Donald Trump lost. Had Donald Trump won, I think we would have seen more on the left, not maybe more overall, but I think we would have seen like a larger -- you know, an increase of misinformation on the left.

Claims of voter fraud have not historically only been on one side. It depends on how the election goes. So those two factors together, both the sort of intentional effort to spread that narrative before the election and certainly afterwards by Donald Trump and his supporters, was a big part of why we saw more there, but also had he won, we might have seen a different pattern.

Q Thank you.

And I just have a handful of wrap-up questions.

A Okay.

Q So we spoke in my first hour, so I guess the second hour here, about some of the negative real-world impacts of misinformation and disinformation. We talked a little bit about the impacts on election workers, but I think we've not -- I just want to talk about that in a little more detail.

Has your research or through your work with the CISA advisory committee, did you examine the impact that kind of these misinformation or misleading narratives have on election workers themselves?

A We talked a lot about that. And, in part, Kim Wyman has very personal experiences that she had as a secretary of state in Washington in 2020 and the experience -- her personal experiences of how misinformation about the election turned into threats to her family. And she also had stories from other election officials who had experienced similar things. We brought in a couple of election officials, brought in remotely for one meeting, Stephen Richer and I think someone else from Maricopa County, and they talked about the threats that they faced on their family and other things that sort of, like, the false rumors and disinformation have led people, you know, who begin to believe those things to threaten them because they think of election officials as dirty and cheating and taking away their democracy. And so, yeah, we talked about those real-world impacts on election officials.

Q Do you have concerns that this might cause individuals to be unwilling to do the work of election workers in the future?

A Absolutely. I think we've seen a trend where people have left -- Kim Wyman left her secretary of state job in part -- my understanding is in part because of that, and that's just one -- you know, that's just one person. We have seen conversation about a trend of election workers leaving because of the harassment or the threat of harassment.

Q Would you agree that a lack of election workers, really the people who keep the polls running, for example, could have serious implications for our democratic processes in the future?

A Yeah. Again, this is another case where the rumors and misinformation actually make a less secure process.

Q You've also been placed in the public eye, not because of your work, but more because of discussions of your work in the Twitter Files and other outlets. Correct?

A Yeah.

Q Have you also faced negative consequences through these discussions in the Twitter Files and other misrepresentations of your work?

A I have.

Q What impact has that had on you?

A It's been distressing, yeah.

Q Have you faced threats to your life or safety?

A Yes, yeah.

Q Have you felt the need to take precautions because of that?

A I have.

Q Are you able to tell us anything further about that?

A Um, yeah. I've taken cybersecurity kinds of actions. To be honest, at this moment, I'm worried that this video will be leaked out and used to increase those things, so I'm very careful about what I'm saying, but trying to scrape my name from the internet, my address, changing the lock on my doors, meeting with, you know, the UW police around, like, very specific threats that I received.

Q I'm sorry.

A No, that's all right.

Q Do you think the fact that you've been -- that your work has been misrepresented, that you have been brought into this investigation, for example, do you think that might limit your willingness to do public-facing work in the future?

A I mean, quite frankly, I don't have kids. If I did, I would no longer be doing this work. I'm worried about my students. I know they're worried about doing this kind of work because of these kinds of threats and what they see that I'm going through. And, at the same time, I just think the work is so important, and I want to make sure it keeps going. So I don't -- I don't want to step off that stage. I don't want -- I think we have, like, special skills that can be really useful and helpful and help make our country stronger and -- but this is having a chilling effect, and it's not just me. Other researchers are experiencing the same thing.

[redacted]. Thank you.

We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

[2:56 p.m.]

[redacted]. Back on the record, please.

BY [redacted]:

Q In the previous round of questioning there were some questions about CIS, the Center for Internet Security.

A Yeah.

Q Was CIS one of the external partners that worked with the EIP?

A My understanding was that they were.

Q Okay. And did you ever interface with them directly?

A I don't remember having any direct interface with CIS.

Q Okay. Do you know if they were one of the external stakeholders who could submit tickets?

A My understanding is that CIS could submit tickets.

Q Okay. Do you know where CIS gets its funding?

A I don't.

Q Okay. Do you know if it receives Federal funds?

A I don't know their funding.

Q Okay. Would it surprise you if they receive funding from CISA?

A No.

Q Okay.

A From CISA or Federal?

Q From CISA.

A I don't know if it would surprise me. But, yeah.

[redacted]. Okay. I don't remember which exhibit number this was.

[redacted]. 12.

[redacted]. 12?

BY [redacted]:

Q So exhibit 12 is the response of the Stanford Internet Observatory put out in March of 2023?

A Yeah.

Q If I could call your attention, it looks like it would be the fourth page. And there's a question in the middle of the page asking if EIP received direct requests from CISA. Do you see that?

A Yeah.

Q And then a couple lines down is the answer. It says that the reports were channeled through the Election Infrastructure Information Sharing and Analysis Center.

Do you know what that center is?

A The EI-ISAC?

Q Uh-huh.

A My understanding is that that is a group of local and State election officials. And they might -- my understanding is they have some connection to CIS, but I don't know what it is.

Q Okay. And do you know if that group has a connection to CISA?

A I don't know that they do.

Q Okay. Was the center viewed as a separate stakeholder from CIS, or is that one and the same?

Mr. Burton. Which center?

[redacted]. EI-ISAC. The center referenced in the answer. EI-ISAC.

Ms. Starbird. I'm not sure that I would be the best source of information on this particular part of the relationship. I just don't know a lot about the structure of EI-ISAC, CIS, or how they were interfacing with the EIP.

BY [redacted]:

Q Okay. And who at EIP would have been the best point of contact?

A Again, I think Stanford managed a lot of our external partnerships, and I would probably direct questions to them.

Q Okay. And who --

A This is their statement, so this is -- yeah.

Q Sure. Sure.

A Yeah.

Q And who at Stanford?

A If I were to ask this question, I would probably ask Alex.

Q Okay. And if CISA and CIS were to jointly manage the EI-ISAC, would you view that as a direct request from CISA?

A I don't understand the question.

Q Okay. When receiving a request from EI-ISAC in the Jira ticket, would that -- would the Jira ticket show that the request came from EI-ISAC?

A My understanding is it would say that it came from -- I actually don't know. I don't know how those would look. I haven't looked at those tickets.

Q Okay.

A Yeah. So I don't know whether it would say CIS or EI-ISAC.

Q To a response to a separate question, you mentioned that you were not in favor of sharing tickets with the social media companies directly? Is that an accurate summary of your --

A No, I would say that I don't think it's a good use of my time. And as a researcher, I think there are other ways to have a bigger impact.

And so I was -- it was not something that I thought was the best use of my time or my students' time to be working to inform the companies on a piece-of-content by piece-of-content basis.

Q Yeah. And do you recall who at EIP did think it was a good use of time?

A I don't know who thought that that was an important part of the project. I don't know when it became part of the focus -- the focal point. Not focal point. I don't know when it became part of the workflows, and I don't know who made those decisions.

Q Okay. Do you recall ever having the opportunity to voice your viewpoint on this?

A The only time I voiced my viewpoint was probably indirectly when asked to be part of the managers team that would be helping to direct content to the platforms, and I declined. I declined to provide someone from UW to do that. It would have probably been me, and I declined.

Q And why did you decline?

A I declined because, again, I just didn't think it was the best use of my skill set or time. I think -- my opinion has been that the social media companies should do their own moderation and that I'm not going to do free work for them, and I'm not going to take any money from them. So it puts me in a position where I'm not going to do that kind of work.

Q Okay. If I can call your attention to page 3 on the same exhibit. So one page earlier.

The last sentence -- or really after the semicolon. The second-to-last line at the bottom of the page. It says: "EIP did not make recommendations to the platforms about what actions they should take."

Do you know if that statement is true?

A I have no reason to believe it's not true. But I did not -- again, I didn't use that part of the platform that looked at what those comments would have been.

My understanding is that individual analysts could write in those boxes, and it's possible that some analysts made different kinds of comments there. But my understanding was that they were trained to just say that this violates the policy.

Q Okay.

A But not say you should take this down or you should do this or that.

Q Okay. And those communications would have been captured in the Jira ticket, is your understanding?

A My understanding is those would have been captured in the Jira ticket and written by individual analysts who could have been undergraduate or graduate students.

Q Okay. And those communications, again, this is what was going directly to the social media platforms?

A Those would have gone up to a manager -- my understanding is this would have gone up to a manager, and the manager would have sent those on to a social media platform and may have made decisions about which ones to send and not send.

Q Yeah. You mentioned earlier the managers -- it sounded like multiple of them were not students. They were either at --

A My understanding, at least one manager was a student and other managers that I know of were probably not students. They were at the different organizations.

Q So there were instances where the social media companies are receiving these communications from someone who is not a student?

A Yes.

Q And you said --

A But the students' names would be on the tickets themselves.

Q Okay. And --

A Every student that touched it is on the ticket.

Q And so the social media companies could see anybody who worked on the ticket?

A No. The social media companies could probably -- I don't know this for sure. I think the social media companies could see a message. I don't know if they had access to the ticket with the individual names.

But if the Jira -- you said the Jira system still has it. If the Jira system has it, it has that record, and it probably is connected to student names in there or analysts' names, whether they'd be students or not.

Q Yeah. So you're not sure whether the social media companies would be aware of any personnel who worked on it other than whoever was sending the communications?

A Yeah. I don't know how the social media company -- I honestly don't know how the social media company would have seen it, whether it would be -- whether it would have the student name on it that pushed the button in the system to send it up to the manager, or whether it would just have the manager on it, or whether it would have everybody who touched it. Like, I don't know what those records looked like.

Q Yeah. You mentioned when it comes into the system, the analysts, the students, can see that it came from an external stakeholder and who the external stakeholder was?

A My understanding is that you could see within the system that -- yeah.

Q Do you know if whatever is being sent out directly to the social media companies, if they could see --

A I don't know if they could see or not.

Q Okay. Did you work on the Virality Project?

A I managed -- a couple of students managed -- I advised a couple of students who worked on the Virality Project. And two of our postdocs worked on the Virality Project for a couple of weeks, maybe up to 4 or 5 weeks, and then stopped. And I had conversations with them while they were working on the Virality Project. I never had my hands in the data or the actual information streams of the Virality Project.

Q Were there any faculty members at UW who worked --

A No, I don't believe there were.

Q Is there a relationship between the Election Integrity Partnership and the Virality Project?

A I think the Virality Project tried to use some pieces of the model. If you think of it as a research project within a university. They try it once. Okay. It's got these things. Okay. Maybe we can improve it in this way.

And so they tried to use some similar elements of the model for the Virality Project, but they made some key changes, too. And I don't know exactly what all of those changes were, but I think the workflows were definitely different for the Virality Project.

Q And understanding that it sounds like you didn't work on it directly --

A Directly on it. I just didn't have capacity. Yeah.

Q What is your understanding of what some of those changes were, just at a high level?

Mr. Burton. The changes the Virality Project wanted to --

[redacted]. It sounds like it adopted --

Ms. Starbird. Yeah, I don't think they had external partners putting in tickets. I think that's one of the differences. But I don't know that to be 100 percent true.

But that was my understanding, is that they didn't -- they did not have external partners, and if they did, it was far more limited than in the Election Integrity Partnership.

Some of the work streams were different in terms of how they collected information. There was far fewer people. It didn't have the same kind of structure. And how they -- even how they reported out was different. We weren't doing, like, tweet threads, or they weren't doing -- they didn't have the kind of visualization stuff because we didn't have our team supporting that. Yeah.

But I don't know exactly how it worked. I know that they had some briefings that they would do periodically of what they were kind of looking like at scale.

And in the next version of the EIP, we turned that into just, like, weekly public reports. So it's just more like summarizing the research they were doing.

That's what I'm aware of as kind of the major differences?

BY [redacted]

Q So you didn't work on -- I think some of them were weekly. You weren't working on those?

A No, I didn't work on the weekly things. The only thing I did is I had an undergraduate student who did some writing for the final report, and I edited her writing to make sure it was accurate and well written. And I think I would have read the final report for, like, just a cursory review.

Q Do you know if the Virality Project is ongoing?

A I don't believe it is, no. I think it ended sometime before that final report came out.

Q Okay. And do you know if there's any discussions regarding to -- similar to the EIP -- how it kind of reorganized later?

A I don't believe I've heard of any of those discussions, no.

Q Okay. Do you know how many people worked on the Virality Project?

A I don't know.

Q Do you know how many people from UW?

A Yeah. I would say two postdocs, three students, five people total. Different levels of commitment over different time periods.

Q And is it your understanding that the Virality Project used this Jira ticketing system also?

A I think that's true, but I could be wrong.

Q To the extent you know, would it be a separate system, then, from the EIP tickets?

A I would assume it would be a separate iteration, but I don't remember -- I don't know -- I don't remember how they set that up.

Q Okay. When conducting your research post election in 2020 and 2022 and you were either working in the tickets or the spreadsheet, do you recall if there were Virality Project tickets in the mix, or was it a pretty discrete category, it was just the EIP tickets?

A EIP was just EIP. There was nothing about COVID-19 in our -- unless it had to do with the election processes and procedures, it wouldn't have been in our dataset.

Q Okay. Do you know if any of the initial partners of EIP, like Graphika or DFRLab, have supported the Virality Project?

A I don't know if they did or not. I don't remember. I probably knew at the time, but I don't remember.

Q Okay.

A They had additional partners.

Q Were you -- and I think you said this -- you were invited to participate --

A We were invited at the University of Washington. Aspirationally, we said, "Oh, yeah, sure, but we don't really have capacity." And then as the time went on, we realized we really didn't have capacity to help.

Q Okay.

A I forgot to add, beyond the three students that continued the sort of student projects. The capstone project or something else.

[Starbird Exhibit No. 14

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]. All right. This will be exhibit 14.

Mr. Burton. Is this just one and I got a whole bunch of copies? It's just one document?

[redacted]. Yeah, it's just one.

Ms. Starbird. All right.

BY [redacted]:

Q If I could call your attention -- this is on the second page. The Bates number is 832.

A Yeah.

Q There's a paragraph at the top that starts to discuss the work done by the Election Integrity Partnership.

A Uh-huh.

Q And the last sentence in that paragraph reads: "Our industry relationships led to content tagging and takedowns that helped shape nascent platform policies around 'civic integrity.'"

A Yep.

Q Do you agree with that summary of EIP's work?

A Do I agree that's a total summary of everything? No. But do I agree that we led to the tagging of content and some account suspensions and that we helped shape the nascent policies? Yes. But I would clarify, "helped shape" was by actually putting out public communication about what the policies were.

Q Can you say more?

A Around the policy analysis paper that we read -- that we -- sorry -- that we wrote -- may have informed some of their policies and the platforms.

Q Just as a point of clarification.

A Yeah.

Q EIP produced a post about --

A About the policies.

Q -- platforms' existing policies?

A About the existing policies with a list of recommendations for what they should do, and that those recommendations may have shaped those policies. I think that's what that statement is meant to convey.

Q Gotcha. Do you know if any of the social media platforms contacted anyone at EIP to say that they incorporated some of the recommendations?

A No. We never had any direct feedback that says, "Oh, you all said this, and this is what we put in for our policy around the EIP stuff," that I remember. Other times, they have told me things about their policies, but I don't remember any about election -- actually, that's not true. There may have been one time that they said, "We put something in place." But I don't think that's because we told them to. I think that's because I was yelling at them at Twitter for not doing it, like, publicly. And they said, "Hey, look, we've done this." If that makes sense.

Q If you could say a bit more.

A Yeah. So in August of 2020, I do think one of the social media companies contacted me -- it would have been Twitter, possibly [redacted], possibly someone else -- contacted me to say that they had put some kind of policy in place around civic media integrity. And I replied something around the lines of, "Yep. Okay. That's great, but it's not working fast enough."

Because we had just done an analysis to show how fast misinformation was spreading, and we could see specifically false claims from Donald Trump about the process being rigged and something about people being able to get COVID from turning in their ballots into a ballot dropbox.

And so we had tracked that, and we had shown that their policies were going -- and they had gone into place. They were trying to enforce things, but they enforced it after the content was already fading anyway. So I think I made a snarky comment about the fact that it was working too slowly.

But I did sometimes -- we did, like, public communication and visualizations and blogs, and I think sometime in, like, August I had done a blog or a visualization showing how fast that kind of content spread from his account. And I was making -- and I made some comments. And they sent me the email to say, "Hey, we have this policy now." And I said, "It's not going fast enough."

But it wasn't, like, I hadn't told them to do that policy change. They just gave me an update. It was more like I did a public communication that their policies could be improved, if that makes sense. Yeah.

Q Yeah. So just to clarify, the back-and-forth that you had with Twitter, and it sounds like potentially [redacted], is that private communications? Or is this over, like, a --

A In this one case -- I haven't had a lot of communications with [redacted].

Q Yeah.

A In this one case -- there's maybe two or three cases that you probably have the communications with since you have all my communications.

But in this case we did a public communication. I did a tweet thread showing a graph of the spread of a particular piece of content and how -- and where their actions went into place.

And they had sent, "Hey, we have this" -- they had responded, I think in an email, to say, "Hey, look, we put this policy in place." They often did send, like, "Hey, we have a new policy." And I went back and said something snarky about how it's not going fast enough to make a difference on this kind of information.

Q Okay. Were there any communications preceding the public statement that was issued about showing that the policy was not having any effect?

A No. I mean, what we did as researchers -- we were actually pretty critical of the platforms in my research group. And so we would publicly put out things sort of criticizing and showing how they were facilitating the widespread, the vast spread of rumors and misinformation about the election. And in defending themselves, sometimes the platforms would send me back messages of how they were taking action.

So we were just doing public advocacy for the platforms to be more responsible media platforms in today's environment.

Q Do you recall -- sorry. I was just going to say, it was August 2020, you recall?

A That one, I think, was -- if it's around the blog I think it was around, it would have been in July or August. Yeah.

BY [redacted]:

Q What do you mean by --

A But it wasn't within the Election Integrity Partnership. It was actually before the Election Integrity Partnership was going on.

As I said before, we were already doing that kind of real-time work before the Election Integrity Partnership kind of brought us together under a common umbrella.

Q When you say you were critical and you wanted them to be more responsible, more or less -- I realize I'm paraphrasing -- can you be more specific?

A Yeah. We would be critical of saying, "Hey, you know, these are clear cases of something that's false or unsubstantiated, and it's causing widespread exposure to misinformation."

This is the same kind of stuff that built into that Meta narrative we talked about earlier. And we were saying, "You know, you've facilitated this in happening, and is there" -- just to say, "Hey, this is a problem, and you're part of that problem."

Q Facilitated it by --

A The way the platform is designed that's allowed certain people to get outsized voices and quickly conduct information in ways that can expose people to false information long before any kind of correction can get out into the space.

And, unfortunately, what we know about misinformation is, once exposed and the repetition, the correction doesn't really correct the false impression. So it's very effective if that kind of information can be -- expose a million users in a matter of 20 to 30 minutes.

The policies that they were putting in place and the enforcement actions that were taking place 2 hours later wasn't going to be able to contain that kind of damage.

BY [redacted]:

Q Was the purpose of the public communication to have Twitter change its policy?

A It was, for me -- again, this is not, like, within the EIP brand. This is sort of something that we were just kind of doing that eventually we start working together. But this is just something that I do a lot, which is to put out analysis and have recommendations for the platforms at the end of that analysis.

Sometimes that's in formal papers. In this case, I would sometimes put the analyses out on Twitter to say this is happening and that it's a problem, to draw attention to it, and for them to think about what they should do to change. Yeah.

And I don't always recommend -- I rarely recommend a specific action. I wish -- I didn't get to say this -- I wish I had something better to say. But most of the time, I just point out problems and don't tell them how to fix them. And I understand that the fixes for the problems are very tricky and very hard, so I give them credit for that. But I did a lot of, like, pointing out: This is a problem.

Q Do you recall if there was media coverage related to this example?

A I don't think so, no.

Q Okay. Do you know if other universities -- we'll start with Stanford. Did Stanford University issue similar public communications?

A On this case I don't think so, but I don't know.

Q What about analyses?

A They might have. They might -- you know, it's online, right? People might retweet other things.

I don't -- they work a little bit differently. They tend to do more sort of reports that are based on a month or 6 weeks of intense work. A lot of their work is focused traditionally on sort of foreign disinformation campaigns, often in other contexts, that aren't even affecting the United States.

They also usually have recommendations for platforms. But, again, those are recommendations, but they're not -- that's just what we're supposed to do as researchers, is to hopefully propose solutions that could help society address things.

Q Do you recall what this one example, what the threshold was that led you and your team to decide to issue a public communication?

A I think it was just the size of it. And I think -- if I remember it correctly, because they had started to put -- so when you think about 2020, these companies didn't have policies around misinformation prior to 2020. And so as a researcher all of a sudden you see these platforms are trying to take action. They're trying to add these labels. It becomes an interesting research question.

So one of the things that we were doing -- again, quite independently from the Election Integrity Partnership -- was to try to look at, like, what are the platforms doing, and how is that having an impact?

And so we could graph, like, here's the spread of it, here's when they added the label, and here's, I think, where it looks like they changed whether or not this could be retweeted or whatever it was.

So we were trying to track what those interventions were and what kind of impact they were having. So we had a communication about that.

Eventually, some of my colleagues have a paper about just describing what that is. And as we would describe it, in this case we were describing it to say, "Hey, look, you're doing these things, but it's way too late in the process. If you're trying to stop the exposure to misinformation, you've only stopped about 10 percent of it because 90 percent happened before you took any action."

Q You've mentioned a couple contexts. Labeling is one.

A Yeah.

Q Action a tech company could take. In Twitter's context, prohibiting people from retweeting.

A Yeah.

Q Was there any distinction made with respect to the EIP's work when transmitting a communication to a social media platform?

A Can you ask me that again?

Q Sure. As you've represented -- and I understand that you weren't the one directly engaging with the social media platforms.

A Yeah, yeah, yeah.

Q When it's being communicated, whatever the message is --

A Through the EIP?

Q Yes.

A Yeah.

Q Are there -- is there any discussion regarding labeling versus removal of content?

A My understanding is they just sent over -- they just sent, "Hey, this violates your policy" that we did not send recommendations.

Q Do you know if any of the social media companies at the time had a set of policies saying, if you violate this policy, removal is warranted. If you violate this policy --

A I don't know what they had at the time. And they were evolving. So the only thing I remember is something about a strikes policy. But I don't remember anything about, like, if you do this versus that, like a scale of severity. I don't remember that.

Mr. Burton. Did you say it violated a policy -- do you know if they said it violated a policy or may violate the policy? Was it more direct?

Ms. Starbird. With the EIP, my understanding is we -- actually, I don't know. I don't know how we communicated that. But when I was talking there, I was talking about the platforms themselves and their policies, not about the EIP.

BY [redacted]:

Q You mentioned just in context -- totally outside of EIP -- but that platforms from time to time will say, "Hey, here's our policy."

A Yeah.

Q And you're obviously an expert in the field.

A Yeah.

Q Do you have a sense of the timeline of when these different requests came in? Is it a broad timeline?

A I started to get invitations to talk to platforms around 2017 or '18. And I probably have had 12 to 15 conversations between then and now.

In terms of, like, actual conversations, whether it's I might go in and give a talk, and then they'll ask me questions, or they may reach out to me and say, "Hey" -- maybe three or four times someone has reached out to me and say, "Hey, we've got some ideas for what might work. Can you give me your feedback on those ideas?"

For instance, they gave me feedback on, like, the Birdwatch thing and community-based crowdsourcing, which is now community -- they changed the name of it. Elon Musk changed the name of it when he took over.

So they would present what they were working on and say, "Oh, this might work." "Okay. You might want to work on that. Or I'm not sure how that would work."

So both about the policies as well as how the, like, interventions with -- other kinds of interventions within the platforms, they might ask my opinion as an expert in the field.

Q And what do you mean by other interventions?

A Birdwatch isn't -- well, it is -- they do add labels, but it's community-based labeling.

Q Gotcha.

A Yeah.

Q In your interactions -- and you said there's maybe a dozen conversations or so.

A Yeah.

Q Did you get the sense of whether companies change their policies proactively or as more of a reactionary step?

A I don't know if there's a simple answer to that. I mean, I think the companies were asking a lot of different people for input, and they didn't always take my advice. And I think they were just looking to get input on ideas.

I think when a person comes to give a talk, they're more likely to just ask us questions about what our recommendations might be. But there were other times where they already had a policy and they were looking for a policy, or they're saying they're moving in this direction and they're looking for feedback on it.

Q The August 2020 Twitter example that you gave, do you recall if Twitter had received criticism from anyone else on that issue?

A I wouldn't know if they did or not, but I assume they were receiving criticism from many people around misinformation coming out of that particular account at that particular time.

Q When onboarding the companies for EIP, were there any meetings where all the external stakeholders were brought together? Or you mentioned that you were not directly --

A I never -- we're in online environments. And in online environments we all look flat, even though the names are there.

So I can't 100 percent say that I never encountered these folks, but I don't remember being in conversations where we gathered together these external stakeholders. In many of them, I don't remember meeting anyone from those groups in the course of my work with the EIP.

Q Do you recall if there was ever any discussion within EIP about publicizing an incident that was being analyzed by the team?

A That's a hard question. I mean, early on in the process of EIP my team started this thing where if we saw something that was valuable for the public to know so people could react to it, that we would create tweet threads or blog posts around that.

And I believe that that became a thing that we would do. We would actually take something that we were analyzing. And it would probably take 2 or 3 days to get a blog post out. It could take about 2 to 6 hours to get a tweet thread out. But to, like, publicly intervene.

The Sonoma ballots case was one where we put out tweets while that was spreading to try to draw attention to the spread and to make people aware that this was a false -- that it was a false narrative.

So there were -- so in terms of, like, responding during -- as we're analyzing during the moment, that's actually the model that I was kind of pushing us to move towards, like a public response to these things.

Q And what about publicly revealing whatever messages were communicated directly to the social media companies?

A I don't remember any conversations about that. Yeah.

Q Was there any discussion, after the conclusion of the 2020 election and EIP's work through the first iteration, about publicizing what was communicated to the social media companies directly?

A I don't remember having any conversations about that.

Q You mentioned in the previous answer and then also earlier that there are benefits to -- transparency, I think, is one word you used -- as far as showing what you're seeing.

A Yeah.

Q Can you say a little more about what those benefits are?

A To transparency -- can you explain that again? There's too many ways I could interpret that. So can you be a little bit more specific into what aspect?

Q Sure. So you and your team -- and earlier it sounded like EIP -- are looking at incidents of misinformation?

A Yeah.

Q You're able to organize it by a particular issue. We've gone over a few examples here.

If I was understanding your previous answers correctly, it's that you would view that there would be benefits in more publicly revealing your research, your analysis, your conclusions of what's going on?

A Yeah.

Q So I guess just at a high level, what -- I think I could probably guess the answer -- but what are the benefits of publicly revealing --

A We worked throughout to try to draw attention to the work that we were doing to try to let people know. I mean, at the end of the day, it's a communication problem. We're trying to make people aware that they are being exposed to false and misleading claims, that they may be misinterpreting things, and to, at the end of the day, help them find information they can trust so that their vote counts and that they have trust in the process.

And so I think in that kind of case, like, being transparent is -- that transparency is going to be a value of a project like that. And my understanding of how we approach this and through our work at the University of Washington is we were trying to make as much as we could public.

Q Okay. Going back to EIP. There are these tickets, some form of communication that's being sent directly to the social media companies.

A Yeah.

Q Is the intent there that they will take some sort of appropriate action?

A Is our intent that they will take appropriate action?

Our intent was to make them aware that there were things that violated their policy. And I think our -- again, this is not the part of the project that was front and center in my mind because I think it's a Whac-A-Mole kind of endeavor.

But I think that the idea was that we could help them with what they thought was their policy, we could help -- what they established as their policy -- is that we could help them identify where things violated their policies.

Again, it's not something -- I just don't think that that was a good use of our time, but it's something that the EIP was doing.

Q Okay. So understanding, again, what your position on this is and that you weren't the one directly sending whatever it was to the social media platforms. But if I understood your testimony earlier, it sounded like there was a large number of tickets, and only a subset of them are being communicated to the social media platforms. Is that right?

A I don't know what percentage was communicated to the social media platforms. I think they had to meet a certain threshold and be in scope for us and meet a certain criteria.

Q But your research that you were conducting post election involved more than just that subset of tickets, right?

A The research we did postelection, we didn't cross-reference to whether things were -- the research my team did, did not cross-reference for whether things were sent to the platforms or not. So I don't know where they overlap.

Q So I guess it appears clear that you have these tickets. There's a value in conducting the research, doing the analysis. Your team is, post election, able to do that.

But why were some of the tickets sent to the social media companies?

A We sent tickets to the social media companies when we saw that they -- when our analysts thought that they violated their policies. I think the idea was that our analysis could contribute to their understanding of what was flowing on their platform.

Q I guess if I could just push a little bit farther.

So you have to go through all this hassle to onboard the social media platforms. What is the goal that EIP is trying to accomplish?

A Again, I didn't onboard the social media platforms.

Q Sure. EIP.

A Yeah.

Q To the extent you have an understanding of what --

A Yeah. I think you would have to ask the people who brought those folks on. You're asking me to defend pieces of the project or talk about pieces of the project that really weren't core to what I was doing.

Q Okay. And your understanding is that Stanford was the one that was --

A I don't know who --

Q -- responsible for this part of the partnership?

A I don't know who brought this on, but my guess would be Stanford. And I don't know when, whether it was early in the process, whether it came later. Certainly, when I was thinking about it, initially when the project was developed, I was thinking that it was more -- and it was going to be more -- certainly it was going to be more for our group about the kinds of things we did about public communication in real time.

[redacted]. Okay.

Can we go off the record, please?

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted]. Back on the record.

BY [redacted]:

Q Dr. Starbird, there was just a reference made to onboarding the social media companies.

To your knowledge, were the social media companies onboarded onto the EIP?

A I don't know how the social media companies were coordinating with the Election Integrity Partnership, but they were considered sort of external partners.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q There was a fair amount of discussion earlier about your August interaction -- August 2020 interaction with [redacted].

A Yeah.

Q I just want to have this clear.

You made a public Twitter post?

A Yes.

Q And your Twitter -- your Twitter is publicly available. It's not private now?

A Yes. And at the time, it was getting lots of interactions.

Q Okay. And so that was you exercising your First Amendment rights to put your thoughts out on the internet, correct?

A Indeed, yeah.

Q Okay. And so -- and Twitter saw that and -- like many people did -- and you can't control what people do with your free speech once you put it out there, correct?

A Indeed. Yes. In fact, that's how I met those folks from Twitter, is I would do public posts, and they saw them, and then they contacted me about them. Yeah.

[redacted]. Okay. Thank you.

We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 3:38 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

Transcribed Interview Transcript Errata Form

Interviewee	Kate Starbird
Date of Interview	6/6/2023
Date of Review	7/21/2023
Name of Reviewer	Tiffany Rowe
Signature of Reviewer

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
13	13	@ end add "U.S. actors"
13	25	change "disinformation" to "misinformation"
16	24	confirm "affordances of the platforms" is accurate
20	mid page	about 'workforce issues'
26	20	"so there is seconds" to be "so there are seconds [to committee members]"
27	second answer	"often only a couple of us made it" means "to the meeting" and NOT to vote
36	9	'representational' should be 'reputational'
37	4	"come" should be "coming"
37	24	"Susan" = "Suzanne"
44	mid page + line 21	"voluntarism" = "volunteerism"

Page	Line	Suggested Correction
74	25	"them" = "the students"
77	15	clarify that "Alex and the student" are Stanford, not EIP
111	4-5	strike "political communication" Unintentional choice of words
116	4	"using false information COULD cause..."
117	1-14	requires clarification by Starbird re 'scope'
121	First full answer	requires clarification by Starbird re "work @ UW" v. EIP work
135	mid page	aberrant = apparent? confirm from video?
152	mid page	"conduct" = communicate
15	2	Confirm Chris "Coward" is correct spelling
121	9	requires clarification by Starbird re "@ Univ of Wash"
154	mid-page	"One of the things that WE were doing" Clarification by Starbird of "we"

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: STEVEN D'ANTUONO

Wednesday, June 7, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 2237, Rayburn House Office Building, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

Present: Representatives Jordan and Massie.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

Also Present:

For STEVEN D'ANTUONO:

LAWRENCE BERGER, ESQ.

[redacted] We'll go on the record.

Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of former FBI assistant director in charge Steven D'Antuono. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI.

Would the witness please state your name for the record.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes. Steven Michael D'Antuono.

[redacted] I understand you are appearing with personal counsel today.

Can counsel please state your name for the record.

Mr. Berger. Sure. Lawrence Berger.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today voluntarily to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to come voluntarily.

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely.

[redacted] My name is [redacted], and I am with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] of Mr. Jordan.

Chairman Jordan. Jim Jordan.

[redacted] [redacted], oversight counsel for the Democrats.

[redacted] [redacted], chief oversight counsel, House Judiciary Committee, Democratic counsel.

[redacted] [redacted], Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Mr. Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], Mr. Jordan.

Mr. Massie. Representative Massie.

[redacted] [redacted], Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions for the first hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they so choose. We'll alternate back and forth until there are no more questions, and the interview is over.

Mr. D'Antuono. Okay.

[redacted] Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like a break apart from that, please just let us know. Also, please feel free to consult with your counsel at any point in time.

Mr. D'Antuono. Okay.

[redacted] As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record. So we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions. Do you understand?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes, I do.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of staff directing questions at you during any given hour.

Please try to speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

It is important we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everyone present at today's interview.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner possible. So we will take our time. If you have any questions, or if you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics. So if you need clarification at any point, just say so.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information. If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer.

Mr. D'Antuono. Okay.

[redacted] You should also understand that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely.

[redacted] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview. Do you understand this?

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. section 1001. Do you understand that?

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm aware of that section, yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Mr. D'Antuono. No.

[redacted] Finally, I'd like to make note that the content of what we discuss today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this interview to any outside individuals, to preserve the integrity of our investigation. For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of the exhibits we will take back at the end of the interview.

That is the end of my opening remarks.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority have to add?

[redacted] We have nothing to add. Thank you.

[redacted] Okay.

Well, we'll now start our first hour of questioning. I'll turn it over to my colleague, [redacted]

The clock now reads 10:04 a.m.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you, [redacted]

EXAMINATION

[redacted]

Q Mr. D'Antuono, we're going to go over some basic questions here just regarding your tenure at the FBI. When did you join the FBI?

A January of 1996.

Q And why did you join the FBI?

A That's a long story. I got called for -- I'm a CPA by trade. I got called by -- to become a financial analyst with the Bureau, which is basically a forensic accountant.

I don't want to bore you guys with the story, but it's -- you know, the FBI has always been a great job. I'm not one of those people that like from age 6 I wanted to be an FBI agent type stuff, right.

So it's a great opportunity. So the FBI is a good career. So I decided to join as the forensic accountant, financial analyst, you know, in the province office of the Boston division.

Q And what did you do before joining the FBI?

A I'm a CPA. Yeah, I graduated with a Bachelor of Science in accounting.

Q Can you briefly walk us through the positions that you held at the FBI?

A Yes. All right, so financial analyst from '96 to '98. I became a new agent in July of '98. I went down to Quantico, Virginia, FBI Academy. From Quantico, I went to Washington field office in November of '98 when I graduated. I worked primarily public corruption, government fraud squad. You know, served all the way through 9/11 as a brick agent on that squad, different squads, I did that.

After 9/11, I worked a couple years until '05. I went down to the FBI Academy as a white-collar crime instructor, basically a supervisory position. So supervisory position, supervisory special agent, white collar crime instructor. So I instructed all of the new agents, analysts, national academy for about 3 years, from '05 -- it's almost exact -- January of '05 to January of '08.

After that, I went back to Washington field office as a supervisory special agent for the D.C. public corruption squad, and worked from D.C. public corruption, SSA, from '08 to 2014. Almost 7 years as a supervisor, right. So I didn't just touch bases, right.

So then I went to become an ASAC, assistant special agent in charge, in the St. Louis division, the field office there, from '14 to '17. I got there right when Michael Brown got shot in August of that year. I led the civil rights investigation on Michael Brown, the crisis response -- well, the perceived crisis response for the grand jury announcement that we were expecting. I led all of that stuff with my counterpart ASAC and SAC, obviously. It wasn't just me. That was in St. Louis.

So in '17, in September, October of '17, I went to -- back to headquarters. So we're now back to this -- that's the only time I've been in the building was at this point, from 2017 as a section chief of the financial crimes section, from 2017 to 2019. So I only did 2 years at actual headquarters. My headquarters time was at Quantico. And [redacted] will understand this, right. So only 2 years at the main building.

And then in '19, 2019 of October, September or October of 2019, I became the SAC in the Detroit field office, the entire State of Michigan. And then, the Director asked me to come down as the ADIC of Washington field office, which is -- I wasn't very -- I was happy in Detroit, you know, but it was 11 months in. In September I got the call from the Director asking me to come down and take the seat.

That's where I started. So I was honored to do that, but I was happy to be out of the Beltway, honestly, but I came back as the ADIC in 2020, and then served until November of last year. So 2 years as the ADIC of the WFO.

Q Thank you, sir.

So prior to retirement, your last position then was the assistant special agent in charge of the Washington field --

A Assistant director.

Q Assistant director in charge. I'm sorry. Yes, of course, ADIC.

A Yep.

Q And all of that with one headquarters, too. Well, well done.

What was the date of your retirement?

A November 30th, '22.

Q Okay.

A Yep.

Q Can you briefly describe for the committee your roles as the ADIC at Washington field in general terms?

A So it's basically I ran the field office, right, as the assistant director in charge. I had five SACs. Now it's four SACs and an IAC, which is the intelligence analyst in charge, right. It's still at the SAC level. It's just a different name now. You have the intelligence analyst in charge of the intelligence division, but at time I took over, there were five SACs. So basically five of me from Detroit, right.

So it's a large field office, about 1800 employees, task force officers, the second largest division in the country. That's why we have an ADIC position. You know, it covers most of the northern Virginia region. Richmond has the Winchester area and stuff like that, and we have D.C.

So, you know, every program in D.C. comes under me as the ADIC, right. So criminal, CT, CI, intelligence, every matter. It's just like you're the CEO, the president of the company, you know, so.

Q Can you describe the five SACs, just sort of the branches?

A Yeah, so it was criminal, the criminal and cyber branch. I always forget the cyber portion of it, but the criminal and cyber division, the counterintelligence division. At the time I took over as the counterterrorism and crisis -- I think we named it crisis management division, right, because it had the crisis management under it. So counterterrorism of crisis management at the time I took it over. And the intelligence division and admin, administrative, or mission support is what we called it. No one likes to be the admin portion.

Q So, and you said you had retired in November of '22. When did you decide to retire?

A So all right. When you become an agent and you have the 50-year mark, right, you know, lots of times we start looking, right. So for me, I was 50 -- what was I -- yeah, I was 50. I started, you know, looking, putting feelers out there. An opportunity came calling about in the spring, I think, of '22.

Like, I was happy with my job. I really was. A lot of my positions have kind of fallen into place at times, even the FBI in the beginning, the financial analyst. I just got a call out of the blue. I didn't put in for the financial analyst position.

So the opportunity was there. Honestly, I was hoping to continue to ascend in the Bureau, you know, but the opportunity wasn't there for me. I could see that about springtime. So I decided to take the call and start looking at the opportunity, and so you go down the path when you're at that point and see if it works. If it did, great. If I didn't, then I could continue on, right.

In this case, the opportunity was too good to pass up. I love the Bureau, I really do. I love my job. I love serving. You know, that's important for me, you know, but it was -- what might have been said out there about me running from this, I was welcoming this conversation. I really was. So that was not -- and I'm happy to be here to assist and answer your questions.

Q I'm going back to your time as ADIC at the Washington field. How often would you say you interacted with the Director of the FBI?

A Not often. I would see the Director. My tenure at WFO, obviously, was a 2-year tumultuous tenure. I don't think any other ADIC, and I've talked to a lot of them previously, had as much turmoil as the Washington field office went through at that point in time. And I wasn't -- I wasn't there during the summer under of unrest either, right. So I missed that portion. I was in Detroit.

So the Director, I would see him. He would come over, you know, to our command post just to kind of, you know say hi to the troops and thank everyone for their service there and everything that they're doing. So I'd see the Director at that point.

I would see the Director at -- when we're at SAC conferences, but those are like few and far between because of COVID, right. Again, realizing in that period of time we still have COVID, right. And that was basically my only interaction with the Director.

Q So you were the assistant director, assistant -- the ADIC, rather, in charge of the Washington field office. Of course, it's our flagship office, one of the flagship offices of the FBI.

A Yes, I consider it that.

Q And at this time, you would say it was very -- the interaction was very interspersed or not very regular with the Director even in that capacity?

A That would be correct. My direct supervisor or direct report was to the deputy director. I had --

Q So conversely, how often did you interact with the deputy director?

A All the time. He always -- phone calls --

Q Weekly? Daily? How would you --

A It depended, right. I could go days without talking to the deputy director. In contrast -- as the ADIC, in contrast with the SAC, when Dave Bowdich was the deputy director in Detroit, I barely talked to him, right. He would just -- unless something happened, right.

As the ADIC, definitely, especially stuff leading up to January 6th. The election cycle, back then in 2020, when I became the ADIC, I was talking to the deputy director a lot. And then after January 6th and all that, the deputy director and I talked a lot, you know, a lot. And I can't -- it would be phone calls. It would be just a whole host of different things. If he had a question, I answered it, right, but I did not speak -- the Director never called me.

Q Would it be fair to say that the deputy director was your regular inject thing at FBI headquarters?

A Absolutely, yes. He was my -- he's my direct boss in a sense, right. I report to the -- well, like all SAC meetings. Other than the SACs that worked for the ADIC offices, they technically report to the ADICs. When we do performance appraisals, the deputy director was my boss.

Q Okay. Thank you for that.

And this is sort of redundant, but how often would you interact with FBI headquarters generally?

A It's -- it was on a case-by-case basis, right. So again, you know, I think ADIC, it's -- the level there is -- we're mostly on par -- the ADIC in New York, WFO, and L.A. are on par with basically the EADs, right, the executive assistant directors, right. So the AD level at headquarters is still an AD. So we're partnered up with them, too, but a lot of times, because I had SACs, the ADs would call the SACs.

For lower SCSers, the SACs, as you well know, is a larger division. So the criminal division is larger than -- my criminal division was larger than the St. Louis division, which has one SAC over it. So things like that are just a difference that people don't understand, the complexity of the Bureau.

So I would communicate with the ADs. A lot of times my conversations were with the deputy or the EAD, and the ADs would contact the SAC, but in certain circumstances, in some of these cases that you're probably going to ask me about today, I wasn't -- I was talking to the ADs, right, but it was off and on.

We're a field office, right. So we have cases -- I believe in the field office, right. We have cases in which we're just working on our own, right, and we have oversight, program management oversight by headquarters when I was on the criminal side, as you well know, as opposed to the counterterrorism side, right, or the CI side. There's a lot more program management in that respect than on the criminal side of the house, and I'm a criminal person through and through, so.

Q Thank you for that clarification.

When -- did you interact with anyone at Main Justice?

A It depended. It depended on the cases, right. So a couple of these cases, again, that you're probably going to ask me about, there was intersection with some of the DOJ components.

During the January 6th investigations, I interacted more so with the U.S. Attorney's Offices that were running the prosecutions. I had a, at the time, a daily call with the chief of the criminal or the -- John Crabb, who is the -- he was chief of criminal, but he also had the -- I don't know what title he had. I don't know if there even was a title, but he was over basically the January 6th investigations, right. So --

Q I'm sorry. Was he at Main Justice --

A He was at the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Q -- or was that the U.S. Attorney's Office?

A The U.S. Attorney's Office, yeah.

Q Okay.

A Yep.

And then occasionally I would talk to the U.S. Attorney in either district, you know, the Eastern District of Virginia, or the U.S. Attorney in D.C. But the January 6th stuff I was talking mostly to the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Every once in a while I would talk to somebody at the -- the DAG's office would come over every once in a while. A couple of the individuals, like Matt Axelrod started, right, when I was there. He was the DAD'S advisor, I believe. Again, I'm not sure what their titles were. I then went to Chris Cavanaugh, I believe, after him and then Rush Atkinson after him. So I had conversations with them.

Q Those gentlemen sequentially were where then?

A DOJ, Main --

Q Okay, at Main Justice?

A Yeah, yeah, with the DAG's office.

Q National security branch in this case or --

A No. They were -- my understanding is they were with the DAG'S office, right. So that was a lot of times during the January 6th investigation, a lot of stuff that was going through January 6th.

Q Okay.

A If I'm talking too fast, too, please slow me down. I have an accent from Rhode Island, so I'm trying to enunciate.

That was January 6th. If you're talking the Mar-a-Lago investigation, which you'll probably get to, right, you know, I know why we're here right, the Mar-a-Lago investigation would have been with the national security division, but it wasn't like constant. Like, there were times in which I had meetings with them.

Q Do you recall who you met with regarding that?

A Yeah, that would have been -- Matt Olsen was in one of the meetings I was in, George Toscas, and Jay Bratt.

Now, going back to the January 6th stuff, there was a lot of things going on and off there, too. We, when I say "we," the deputy director was basically in the lead, we would meet with DOJ every once in a while on certain issues, and in that case, national security was there, Toscas was there, George was there, Matt Axelrod was there. I don't think Olsen was in place at that time. I'm not sure if the PDAG was there. I can't remember so.

But there were other times that we were meeting with people, so but through headquarters.

[redacted]

Q And can you give us the titles for George Toscas and Jay Bratt?

A I don't know George's title. My understanding, he's in the national security division. I don't know his titles, yeah. Titles, they didn't mean much.

Jay, I don't know his title either, but he was basically the lead prosecutor on the Mar-a-Lago investigation, as far as I recall.

Q Okay. Thank you.

A You're welcome.

Q And what do you do now for work?

A I'm a consultant. I work for -- I'm a consultant at a Big 4 accounting firm.

Q And how long have you worked for the consulting firm?

A I started in December.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Where do you work?

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm sorry. I work for a Big 4 consulting firm.

[redacted] Thank you. I appreciate it.

[redacted] Do you have any job-related interactions with the FBI at the consulting firm?

Mr. D'Antuono. No. I'm -- 12-1, I'm supposed to have -- I have a year moratorium that I abide by my year moratorium that, you know, I do not interact with the FBI. And no, I don't think I would even after that either so, you know, other than, you know, I have tons of friends there.

[redacted]

Q Okay. We're going to shift gears.

A Okay.

Q We're going to talk about Mar-a-Lago a little bit.

Are you aware of the FBI's raid on former President Trump's personal residence at Mar-a-Lago?

A Yes. I would not call it a raid, though. It's a search.

Q You would characterize it as?

A It's a search, yeah. It's -- you know, it's a lawful search.

Q And, of course, you were still the ADIC at Washington field then?

A That is correct.

Q Which FBI field office is handling the investigation of the documents located at former President Trump's residence at Mar-a-Lago?

A When I was ADIC, it was the Washington field office.

Q Do you know if that's still the case?

A I don't know. Like you, I've read the articles about there being a grand jury down in Florida now. So I'm not sure where it went, you know, but my understanding is still the special counsel is up here. Before I left, the special counsel was being put in place. We were putting agents and analysts to help with that stuff.

You know, so Washington field office, to the best of my knowledge, is still working that or agents from that position.

Q As of the time of your retirement, your best knowledge was?

A Yeah, at the time of my retirement, yes. But my best knowledge was the fact that I know we were putting our agents and analysts that were working the prior investigation to the special counsel and resourcing that. Right now, my understanding is that we are still -- WFO is still doing that stuff.

I'm sorry. When I say we, it's the -- again, Washington field office.

Q Do you -- can you explain to the attendees here why this case was not assigned to, for example, the Miami field office?

A I have absolutely no idea. The headquarters made a decision that it was going to be -- so there's probably a couple of investigations you want to talk about. So the Mar-a-Lago investigation, the classified document investigation, right, when that came in, we met with headquarters. The allegation came in. I remember AD Alan Kohler, and I think Kurt Ranell was in there, too, the DAD.

Counsel -- I believe our ODC was in the meeting when this all came about. So the venue would have been here for the classified documents. You know, that's in D.C., because the classified documents would have been here, right.

Now it's bringing us the --

Q By here you mean the White House?

A D.C., yeah, yeah. Sorry, yeah, D.C. area, right.

Q Okay.

A So I didn't think it was out of the ordinary that WFO would be the OO for that, the office of origin, right.

There were a lot of like -- WFO, we had enough to do, already did, you know. So when it was coming down to the search, I might have made some comments to people, like, why aren't we just transferring this down to Miami, you know.

Q Normally, would a case, in your experience, if it was in the area of responsibility in southern Florida, would your experience indicate that that would normally be a case that would be assigned, you know, to that division, in this case, Miami?

A Not in the case like this, right. So Washington field office has a lot of experience and knowledge in working public corruption cases, right. I served in the Washington field office working public corruption cases. We have a large, you know, presence, you know, where I pride ourselves on being the public corruption experts, right.

Also, it's corruption, but it's also national security, right. So being a very large field office, second largest, and having the presence of a lot of nation state actors here and the counterintelligence program that we have at the Washington field office and dealing with classified documents, us, New York are probably the two experts in that, right. Much to New York's chagrin, I would say we are the experts, right, WFO is, right, the agents and analysts on that squad.

So the collective experience and the knowledge of dealing at some point with this, like, look, I don't -- I don't have that. Even as the ADIC, I worked a lot of criminal cases, but, you know, with the classified document stuff, I had a squad that dealt with this all the time, right. So I looked to them as my experts, the ASAC, the supervisor, and the agent.

So that's a lot of the experience of why we do it. Is there a venue? Yes, absolutely there's a venue in D.C. Would this have been better served down in the Miami field office? I'm not sure but that's a case management decision. There was no other decision being made other than at WFO we do a lot of high-profile cases, and we do a lot of these cases, much to my chagrin, because we had enough to do, you know, with a lot of stuff.

Chairman Jordan. But there was at least a discussion about who would handle it?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't -- sir, I don't know if there was a discussion so much.

Chairman Jordan. It was a suggestion from you that maybe it would be better if Miami handled it?

Mr. D'Antuono. It was probably an offhanded discussion at the end when we were getting to that point. Like, why isn't Miami just -- why don't they do it?

Chairman Jordan. And this is just an offhanded comment that came from you while you were meeting with headquarters?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, I believe. Yeah, if I remember correctly. Yeah, I think it was -- Chairman Jordan. And then headquarters said, No, we want you to do it?

Mr. D'Antuono. They didn't primarily say no. It was just kind of -- it was more of an offhanded comment. We were always expected to do it. It just -- look, I serve -- I serve a -- you know, I take orders well. It wasn't anything that I saw that was against policy or procedure. So it was perfectly fine for us to do it.

One thing with that case, though, I didn't understand -- we didn't understand why there was not a U.S. Attorney's Office assigned to it initially.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. D'Antuono. All right. So it was -- we raised that concern. WFO raised that concern a lot with DOJ.

The U.S. Attorney's Office, as you well know, is usually the ones that, you know, hand-in-glove with DOJ. We raised our concern. We never got a good answer.

Chairman Jordan. What answer did you get?

Mr. D'Antuono. NSD is handling it.

Q As in national security division at Main Justice?

A Yeah, NSD is handling so --

Q And I believe, if I recollect, Jay Bratt may have been one of the executives?

A Jay Bratt was the lead prosecutor as far as I know, right, the lead prosecutor on the case. But I did -- we raised that concern a couple times.

I've been in the Bureau 27 years, right. I've seen a lot of different things, right. I've worked with DOJ on a lot of public corruption investigations, PIN included, right. A lot of times PIN, the public integrity section, would take over cases that the U.S.

Attorney's Office wouldn't have, right, or be conflicted out of or whatever, right.

So it wasn't completely out of the ordinary, but something like this, the severity of this, you know, we were asking for it.

Q Sure.

[redacted]

Q How was the case opened initially? What was the origin of it?

A Well, the origin was basically classified documents coming -- you know, that were found in the boxes, the 15 boxes of records that were delivered to NARA. So the allegation came in. My understanding --

Q Who did the allegation come from?

A NARA, National Archives.

Q Okay.

A Right. I'm not sure. I think it came from the general counsel, maybe the counsel. I'm not sure.

Q Gary Stern?

A Yeah, I'm not sure. It just came through -- it came through headquarters. Alan Kohler reached out to myself and Tony Riedlinger. Anthony Riedlinger was my SAC. We went over and met with him. We discussed it. He was like, okay.

Q And did they have the intent element? You know, because when the President leaves the White House in 2021, he's not packing his own boxes.

A I know. I'm aware of that, yeah.

Q So --

A You know, every case is about intent, right. And, again, I'm an old white-collar agent, right. It's about intent, right. And I taught this down at the Academy. You have to prove intent, right, but that's what you do an investigation for, right. So there has to be an investigation open in order to prove intent or not prove intent, right.

So I've worked a ton of cases. I've supervised a ton of cases in which you open a case, and you don't find out anything. You find out that, okay, we can't prove this, and you close the case quietly.

There's other times you find it, and you bring it to the prosecution or you bring it forward. That happens, right. That's that balanced approach that I've always done as a supervisor of public corruption, as an agent in public corruption, an agent in government fraud. That's what you do.

So you keep that balanced approach and that's what -- that's how I led the Washington field office. That's how I was trying to lead these cases, so it was a balanced approach.

Q Okay.

So when Gary Stern brought the case to you, and he's a NARA official that's really interested in this --

A Yeah, he didn't bring it to me. He brought it to headquarters, right. So I never had a conversation with him. I don't want to insinuate that I did. My conversation was with AD Kohler and stuff.

Q Okay.

A So I don't know who brought it, but NSD was on the call. You know, we had the conversation about who is going to open it. You know, again, just -- we had enough going on. It was just like, all right, we'll do it, you know. And then we put the resources to looking into the matter.

Q Okay.

Do you have any idea who pitched the idea that the national security division was going to operate this case, as opposed to --

A Well, it's classified documents, right. So it's classified information. So it's clearly a national security realm. It's not in a corruption realm. It's not in a CD realm. It's clearly within national security. Again, my experts, my people, my squad that has dealt with this countless numbers of times, right.

Espionage cases. They're the experts. And I get an education and it's just because, you know, when these documents come in, you know, you have to look at them and vet them and send them back to the agencies that need to tell you, Yes, they're classified or they're not, right, because in some cases, they're not, right. You know, it happens.

And so that's part of the calculus as well. That takes time, right, to go back to the agency. So we didn't know what we had. All we understood is that NARA opened up the boxes and they went, Oh, my God, these are classified documents and they closed the boxes again and called the Bureau.

Q Any idea how long was it Jay Bratt was going to be prosecuting this in D.C.?

A Yeah, I believe so. I can't speak to the idea or how long, but I know Jay was involved in the initial conversations. He was part of the national security division. They've done these cases before. That was not out of the ordinary for me. I didn't think anything was out of the ordinary.

Q What was out of the ordinary was the U.S. Attorney's Office wasn't involved?

A Correct. Just, yeah -- look, I'm going to be completely honest here at this hearing. I have no other reason to be, right. This is -- that was just how I saw things, right. It was just -- I just did not understand that, why the U.S. Attorney's Office was not involved. And maybe I'm just completely wrong on that stuff, but we raised those concerns a couple times, right.

And then when I raised those concerns to them, a couple times I got told, Well, the U.S. Attorney's Office -- we have a U.S. Attorney's Office. It's in Miami. Okay, now you do because the search is happening, but before then you didn't. So I don't know.

[redacted]

Q How would you characterize your role and the planning and the execution of the actual operation down in south Florida?

A Thank you for not calling it a raid.

It was a -- I was integrally involved. I was in all the meetings up to the thing. It's been reported out there that I had a dissenting view, right. Me and my people, we had a dissenting view of what to do in the case.

Now, I've said this before to several people. It's not what happened, it's not against the law, it's not against Bureau policy, right. I just didn't think it was the right direction.

In my experience, dealing with cases like this, when an attorney is involved, you give the deference to the attorney when you think the client might not be doing what they're supposed to be doing or cooperating fully, right. So our suggestion was to go to the attorney first, and give him the opportunity to say we have more evidence. We believe that there's more classified documents there. We would like, in my opinion, consent.

And if you -- I don't know what documents you have to show me today, or whatever, but there are emails that I have written back and forth that my view is we want consent. Consent, I think, is the way I worded it in my email, the fact that consent would be good. It would be the best thing for all parties. And I firmly believed that, right. For the FBI, for former President Trump, and for the country, the best scenario would have been consent.

Q And can you describe why that did not happen?

A It was not my decision, ultimately.

Q And the decision was made by?

A I would assume it was the Director and the AG, right. I was not in any of those conversations. My conversations stop with the deputy director. I voiced my opinions. My people voiced -- I voiced my opinions for my people, because I was talking to the deputy director about it. They --

Q You did, though -- I'm sorry to interrupt.

You did put in a communication that you had some concerns about not doing the normal protocol of you have attorneys working together. You have consensual parties.

A I did.

Q There's other opportunities for other tactics to be employed. You did.

So who then came back over top of that and said to the ADIC of Washington field, We're going to go this direction?

A It would have been the deputy director.

Q At that time, was that --

A Mr. Abbate, Paul Abbate.

[redacted] I didn't hear what you said.

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, sorry. Mr. Paul Abbate. Sorry.

Chairman Jordan. The referral letter comes from NARA to the Justice Department, and then at some point, they come talk to you guys saying here's what we have. There's a discussion about whether it's going to be handled -- at least something -- you raised the point, whether it's going to be Washington or Miami.

Mr. D'Antuono. I didn't raise that at that point, sir. That was way after.

Chairman Jordan. Well, tell me the timeline. When is the date that you get -- you have this conversation about the referral that came from NARA?

Mr. D'Antuono. So when the referral came from NARA, it was, to me, a forgone conclusion that the Washington field office was going to work this, right. NARA is here in the district. The documents came here. The White House would have -- is here, obviously, right. The documents would have left here, went to wherever they went, right. You know, obviously, we knew of their Florida, right.

So the venue is here. So it was not an issue of us working the case. It was just another high-profile case I didn't need the headache on, to tell you the truth, right.

So the second part of that is when -- basically, when we were planning for the search and getting the search at that point --

Chairman Jordan. What's the time frame between that? You're talking about when you get the referral and when the search happened.

Mr. D'Antuono. So the search happens in August, right, I believe, right. I don't -- I can't remember when the referral came in. I want to say it was the spring. You guys probably know better than I do, right, at this point. Months before, say. Me making the comment about, you know, can we just transfer this down to, you know, Florida would have been right before the search.

Chairman Jordan. Okay. So after you had -- that's what I was trying to figure out. During that time frame when you get the referral to when the raid happens, it's happening after -- 91 days before elections is what I remember. I don't remember what day in August.

Mr. D'Antuono. It was August 7th or 8th I believe. Right? Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah.

Q Is it fair to say that you did not feel that the overwhelming use of force to execute the warrant, the search warrant was appropriate, and you went on paper with that and you overruled?

A No, no, no. So it wasn't the use of force, right. It was basically the --

Q Or show of force.

A It wasn't even a show of force, right, because we were all in agreement. We didn't do a show of force, right. I was adamant about that, and that was something that we agreed on, right, the FBI agreed on, right. No raid jackets, no blazed FBI. We interact. We made sure we interacted with the Secret Service to make sure we could get into Mar-a-Lago with no issues. We're not banging down any doors. We weren't bringing any like FBI vehicles, everything that was reported about helicopters and a hundred people descending on, like a Die Hard movie, was completely untrue, right. That is not how we played it.

Q How many FBI personnel would you approximate was on scene?

A I want to say it was 30 but I'm not sure. I think it was 30.

Q Were you the on-scene commander?

A No, no. My ASAC, one of my ASACs was the on-scene commander.

Q And I'm sorry. That was? Do you recall?

A Derek Pieper.

Q Derek Pieper.

[redacted] I'm sorry. Who was that?

Mr. D'Antuono. Derek Pieper.

[redacted] Pieper?

Mr. D'Antuono. Pieper, yeah.

[redacted]

Q I'm sorry. Continue.

A So that was -- we didn't want a spectacle, right. We just did not want a spectacle of this. And so -- and there was no reason to raid or break down a door or anything like that. We could get access to it. And then we also called the attorney, right, to make sure that they knew we were coming and this is going to happen.

We, WFO, myself, we would have liked it to have been played just it a little differently, and giving the attorney an opportunity to allow for consent. The President, former President stated to us on that June day that the -- whatever you need, you know, just ask. That's the principle we were going on, and that's how I understood it.

So for me, I've done these things before, maybe not at this level, but I've done these things before. You go to the attorney first, and you give them the opportunity to bring the client around and in line.

Now, we --

Q That had been done, to my recollection. I believe we had FBI personnel, and Mr. Bratt, if memory serves.

A That was first in June.

Q Correct.

What facts and circumstances changed that would dictate at that point, when there had been cooperation on all sides, that now, after the instructions were given, allegedly, to secure the material and believably, supposedly that was done. What changed in the 2 months?

A I don't know. Nothing changed in our minds to be able to give Mr. Corcoran the ability to talk to his client first, right.

So and I've done this a countless number of times in my career, right. If you want to go talk to someone, you have a subpoena in your pocket. You go up to the door. You knock on the door. Tell them, we'd like to talk to you. Yeah, come on in. Have some coffee. We'll talk, right. Come in. Subpoena stays in my pocket, right.

If you say pound sand, I'm not talking to you, get out of here, okay, here's a subpoena for you. Come talk to the grand jury, right.

In a case like this, same thing, right. You have a search warrant, which is a completely lawful search warrant, right. We had PC in order to do the search warrant, right. We really did. That went through so many different hands, through general counsel, CDC, all our agents, all the DOJ attorneys. The PC was there, right.

Q The scope of that warrant seemed like it was quite -- the aperture was quite large.

A It was. It was overall governmental records.

Q Especially based upon the fact that FBI personnel and Mr. Bratt himself had been on scene literally 2 months prior, had seen exactly where the documentation was. And so it seemed as though the search went well beyond the confines of the original areas that were believed to have been where the documents were.

A Well, the PC was there for viewing of the video that we viewed to have belief that some of the documents might be in other places at the residence.

Q In the First Lady's closet then?

A I can't speak to that, you know. So documents could be anywhere. When you're doing a document search, a white-collar search, you search everything.

Q I understand but it did seem like there was foreknowledge.

Chairman Jordan. Can you just go back? You were saying that in your experience, what happened in the first visit where there was this process of the attorneys talking and how it was handled, versus what happened in the second was unusual and against what you had recommended to happen. So you were talking about that.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, so I don't know where it switched or at what point in time, but DOJ had an opinion that they weren't going to get cooperation out of the attorney, which I still think you have to give it the college try because that -- to me it's about the narrative.

Chairman Jordan. And that's what your folks who were on the ground in June recommended to you of what to do.

Mr. D'Antuono. Correct. That's what my folks from the squad level dealing with this all the way up to me through the ASAC and the SAC to myself told me.

Chairman Jordan. And was that a consistent feeling among the agents who were working the case?

Mr. D'Antuono. My understanding is yes.

Chairman Jordan. So all the agents said, You know what, we should handle this like we handled it in June. Let's have the lawyers talk, see if we can get the information that's been requested from NARA, why we got this case in the first place, let's work it out. And someone said, No, we're not going to trust what the agents say, what the head of the Washington field office says. We're going to do this search with this subpoena and go do it.

Mr. D'Antuono. With the search warrant, yes.

Chairman Jordan. I understand.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yep. Yeah, yeah. And that's -- again, that's not against policy or against the law.

Chairman Jordan. I'm not saying that. It's against practice and it's against the recommendations of the guys working it.

Mr. D'Antuono. It's -- everyone has different ways of doing investigations. I've seen it different ways, right. I could have wanted to interview this person this way, and another case agent wants to do it this way. So there was nothing wrong with the way they wanted to do it. I just, in my experience, working 27 years in the Bureau and seeing a lot of corruption cases and a lot of attorneys, I would have preferred to do it the way we did it.

I do think there was a good likelihood that we could have got a consent and then we wouldn't have had to -- I think the Bureau -- we left -- we were left holding the bag again, right, and we cut ourselves. And that's just me.

[redacted]

Q To that end, I mean, were there specific instructions from either Main Justice or FBI headquarters as to how the FBI should conduct the execution of the warrant once on scene?

A No, not that I believe -- like, you guys -- again, I don't know what you know or what you've seen in the emails. So I'm just going to tell you. The email -- you know, there's an email exchange between me and George Toscas in which I basically said, you know -- he was telling us when we were going to do the search, and I'm like, We're not doing the search that day.

Q And George, I'm sorry, was?

A George Toscas. I don't remember what his title was.

Q Over at --

A Yeah, DOJ.

Q Main Justice?

A Main Justice, right.

And so if you guys want us to do the search, we're the operational lead. I'm going to tell you how to do the search, right. I'm not going to be told by DOJ -- and that's where -- we do put our foot down on that side, right. We put our foot down.

Like, we're going to do it. It's -- it all comes down to -- you know, it all comes down to officer safety. Not in this situation, obviously. We didn't -- it wasn't about officer safety, right.

But there was a way to do it. You know, if we're going to do the search, then we're going to keep it very low key and not make a spectacle of this.

Chairman Jordan. What did he tell you that would -- that led you to believe it wasn't going to be low key and not a spectacle?

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, I didn't believe George wanted it to be a spectacle or not low key. I think they were fine with it. They just wanted us to do it on -- you're going to do it -- everyone is willing to do it on Thursday. We're not doing it Thursday, George.

Chairman Jordan. So the DOJ told you what day you were going to do the search, and you said, No, we're going to do it when you wanted to do it?

Mr. D'Antuono. They were pushing for a certain day. They were -- it was that week of that August, the week prior to it. It was national night out. You know, that Tuesday, getting emails. We're trying to decide what we're doing. I was adamant. We were adamant about, you know, talking to the attorney first. I was adamant about that with George. I got overruled in a sense, right. So, you know --

Chairman Jordan. Okay, but why did they want the date they wanted versus what the experts recommended?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't -- I think -- again, it's speculation. There was a large concern about the documents being lost, destroyed, going someplace else, right. So in any search like that, you know, when you're dealing with stuff, whatever you're trying to find, you have the fear of, like, losing out on that evidence, right, or securing that evidence.

So there's a big fear in DOJ about the documents being leaked out, or getting into the wrong hands, right, and I understand that, right. These are classified documents. We don't know what we're going to find, but we surmised that they were classified documents based upon what we got in the initial 15 boxes, and then 37 or 38 that were handed to us in June. We believed there were going to be more down there.

We didn't believe that the security of those documents in that storage room would suffice to secure classified documents, right. So there was that overall concern by DOJ, and that was their concern, right. I firmly believe that was their concern in their rush to get the documents.

For us, and we made comments like this, like, no one is down there anyway at this point, right. No one is living down there. It's empty. The President is gone. He was in Bedminster, or wherever he was. Let's plan this the right way. We've got time.

And the concern was -- one of the concerns when I was -- when we were formulating the attorney thing is, Well, if you tell them, now they're on alert. They might try to get rid of the documents. That's every case, right. That has nothing to do with the former President. That's everyone, right.

So we had a plan in place to have surveillance around if we needed to, right. Again, no one was there. So if they brought in -- they meaning the President's, you know, people, brought in a big box truck, we would see it, right, and we would have the search warrant in hand and be able to act at that point. So that didn't hold water for me. There were ways to do it.

And so, it's a large property. A lot of the stuff that, you know, we needed to search, that's why we brought a bunch of people into it, but their concern -- my belief is their concern was more so about the classified documents and them getting into the wrong hands because of what was there.

Now, it's been like -- we didn't -- it was best not to have the President there, the former President there, obviously, because if he's there, that causes even more problems, right. So it's been comments or accusations thrown around that, Yeah, we didn't want the former President there.

Who wants the subject of the search present at any search you do? You don't normally want that, right. It just makes it easier and less of a spectacle at that point. And honestly, I didn't want the spectacle for obvious reasons of why we're sitting here today. You know, what it did to the country, too, right. That was my concern.

So, you know, it's a reputational risk, right, and that's the way I looked at it from the Bureau.

Sorry. I talk a lot.

Mr. Berger. It's okay. They asked you for the clarification.

[redacted] Did you want -- our hour is going to be -- can we go off the record for a second.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Okay, back on the record.

Mr. Massie. All right. Sorry for the disjointed questions.

Mr. D'Antuono. That's fine, sir.

Mr. Massie. I want to ask some questions about the pipe bombs --

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Mr. Massie. -- that were allegedly planted on January 5th and found on January 6th. Can you describe the nature of the pipe bombs? Were they viable?

Mr. D'Antuono. So my -- the tip that we received from Quantico, from the lab down in Quantico was that they were viable devices, that they could explode and they could cause harm or death depending on the explosion, right.

Mr. Massie. Did they have explosives in them?

Mr. D'Antuono. My understanding from Quantico was that they did. They had black powder, I believe, but I'm not completely sure on that. But we were told by a lab report that they were viable devices that could explode.

Mr. Massie. Did the lab report say what the detonator mechanism was?

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm not -- I don't recall what they said the detonator mechanism was. There was a kitchen timer on top with the clips and wires and all that stuff. I'm not a bomb expert, so I don't know.

Mr. Massie. What was -- so I saw wires as well, which would presume they were electrical detonator. Were there batteries in it?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know all the components, sir. I really don't. I'm sorry.

Mr. Massie. The kitchen timer, how long could you set it for? What was the duration?

Mr. D'Antuono. If I remember the picture of the kitchen timer, I think it was 60 minutes. It was rudimentary, at best, yes.

Mr. Massie. Are you aware that former agent Kyle Seraphin, that he talked with technicians working in this office, said that they were not viable, that they couldn't have been -- wouldn't have exploded?

Mr. D'Antuono. So I've seen the report from Mr. Seraphin. I won't -- I'm not going to discount Kyle's view. That's his view from wherever he sits and the people he talked to. I don't know who he talked to. All I know is that we, at the Washington field office, received a report from the lab division, which are the bomb experts -- I don't know what Kyle's expertise in bomb making is -- that they were viable devices. So the only thing I could go by is what my lab said, and not what Kyle says.

Mr. Massie. Are you familiar with the diversion thesis, that these were set up to be a diversion?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, I've heard people say that, but if you watch -- I've done a lot of media reports. I was trying to get the information out there, tips and stuff like that, right. I will not speculate. I'm not going to speculate on that. I think that's speculation, at best, when people say that it's a diversionary tactic.

We'll never know until we find the person that actually did -- or persons that actually did it. So I can't speculate on that. Could it have been? Yes, that's one theory. Obviously, it's one theory. But is it the only theory? I don't -- I really don't know.

Mr. Massie. It looks like the head Capitol Police believes it was a diversion.

Mr. D'Antuono. So Steve Sund, chief of police, yes. I believe he wrote that in his book. Again, it's pure speculation. There's no intelligence -- look, I ran the investigation for 2 years until I stepped out. We don't know. We don't even know the gender at this point as to -- we could speculate, and there's a lot of people that are speculating as to the gender.

Mr. Massie. How confident are you that the individual depicted in the surveillance footage on January 5th set both of those pipe bombs in place?

Mr. D'Antuono. So the video that we saw, I feel confident that by the video that we have, that that person planted those.

Mr. Massie. Do you think they intended for the bomb to go off the next day?

Mr. D'Antuono. I can't speculate on that, sir.

Mr. Massie. Well, let me ask you this: Do you think it was technically possible for a kitchen timer --

Mr. D'Antuono. No, no.

Mr. Massie. -- that has 1-hour duration --

Mr. D'Antuono. No.

Mr. Massie. -- to detonate a bomb 17 hours later?

Mr. D'Antuono. No, I don't. And I saw the same kitchen timer as you. I agree. I don't know when they were supposed to go off. Maybe they weren't supposed to go off. We can't -- we don't know. We honestly don't know, and that's some of the pain and --

Mr. Massie. Shouldn't you know these things? Like, it seems --

Mr. D'Antuono. If you don't know who the subject is, you don't know what their motive and intent is, right. So you can never find out.

Mr. Massie. Going back to the technical aspects, the bomb had a 1-hour timer.

Mr. D'Antuono. Should it have exploded in the hour? Or should it have been waiting there to -- for somebody to find? Those are the theories that we have, right. In any investigation, you hypothesize what the theory of that case is going to be.

Mr. Massie. Let me get to the waiting there for somebody to find aspect of this. Do you think it's a remarkable coincidence that they were found minutes -- a coincidence -- minutes in time just away from the initial breach of the Capitol just prior to?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, I don't know. It just is a lot of coincidences happen all the time. There's a lot of unanswered questions. There really are.

Mr. Massie. How did the first -- who found the first bomb at the RNC? And how was that found?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't recall, sir. I really don't. That was two -- I don't recall who found it.

Mr. Massie. Just to refresh your memory, it was somebody who was walking through the alley to do her laundry, supposedly.

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, okay. Yeah, so where it was is behind a garbage -- it wasn't a dumpster, but a can, I believe, and there was a door in the back, and then she came through to do her laundry. I believe it was right near there, yeah. I don't recall --

Mr. Massie. It seems like a remarkable coincidence that it sat there for 17 hours and then got discovered about 5 minutes before the initial breach.

Mr. D'Antuono. So I'm not sure how much foot traffic went through there, right. I don't know if you've visited that location.

Mr. Massie. I have.

Mr. D'Antuono. Okay, I have, too. It wasn't in an open area. It was kind of in that back area, right. So where the alleyway was, I'm not sure how much foot traffic was back there.

Mr. Massie. Let's talk about the DNC bomb because there is amazing foot traffic there.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, absolutely. Yep. It's right on that street.

Mr. Massie. How was that one discovered?

Mr. D'Antuono. Again, I'm not sure of the specifics of who discovered that. I was in the command post that day, and all I found out was that the -- that there were pipe bombs discovered.

Mr. Massie. Was your office responsible for the investigation?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Mr. Massie. How would you characterize the resources spent on that investigation?

Mr. D'Antuono. So I was the head of the office. I put every person I possibly could, given all the other circumstances of January 6th, and every resource I possibly had to that investigation. It was a priority case from day one until the day I left, so.

Mr. Massie. But your investigation didn't find out how the bomb was discovered at the DNC?

Mr. D'Antuono. No, this video of the person sitting on the bench and putting the device down.

Mr. Massie. Discovered, not planted. I'm sorry.

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, discovered? It would have been. I just don't recall what it was.

Mr. Massie. Because I think it's remarkable it was discovered within minutes of the other bomb being discovered. And my staff and I found video, and I don't know if you're aware of it, that seems to indicate that a passerby in a black hoodie --

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, okay.

Mr. Massie. -- discovered that. Remarkably coincidental time. Walked up to a Metro police car, told the Metro police, who seems to have directed that individual in the video that I've seen to a detailee of the Vice President's car, another SUV, and within minutes, they get out of their SUV, find -- the officials now see the bomb. And then incoming Vice President Kamala Harris is evacuated. This all happens within minutes.

Mr. D'Antuono. Okay.

Mr. Massie. But the individual in a hoodie going up to two police cars after he's passed by that bench, did your investigation review this video?

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm not aware of the video you're talking about, sir. I'm not.

Mr. Massie. If you had seen that video, would you be interested in speaking to that person --

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely.

Mr. Massie. -- who seems to have discovered that second bomb?

Mr. D'Antuono. In any investigation, whoever discovers the device is somebody you need to talk to, right, because they could be the one that planted the device in the first place. You know, so that's just investigation 101.

So, but I am not aware of that video. I'm not aware of that person. I'm not -- I don't recall. It's 2 years ago, too, right. So there's been a lot of stuff that's happened prior to that, but I'm not aware of that, how it was discovered.

Mr. Massie. I'm not an investigator, but I would want to talk to that person --

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely.

Mr. Massie. -- who discovered the second bomb. I think it's remarkable nobody has mentioned that in public. If we're trying to get the public -- you know, you did a video appealing to the public to give you information.

Mr. D'Antuono. Correct, with the tips and all that stuff. That information is paramount as well, so.

Mr. Massie. So I just -- I think the timing is questionable.

The video that you did release to help the public maybe find this person who you think may have set the bombs the night before, there's two camera angles at the DNC, and we know this because the FBI released video from two camera angles. But the camera angle that would have shown the alleged perpetrator placing the bomb isn't -- wasn't released to the public.

Is there a reason you didn't release that other camera video?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't recall what a reason would be. You know, the case agents describe -- people put those videos together for us to kind of put out there. I wasn't part of playing -- you know, I wasn't editing the videos or putting the videos together as the ADIC. I'm not sure. No one, you know, explained to me that there was -- the reason why that would have been left out.

Mr. Massie. Did they release them from the full resolution in the full frame?

Mr. D'Antuono. My understanding -- yes. My understanding, too, is the cameras at the facilities weren't exactly the best cameras like you would expect in this day and age. I think I would have a better camera on my house than the DNC had in, you know, the areas that we were talking about.

Mr. Massie. Former FBI Assistant Director Christopher Swecker said the Bureau sometimes withholds or circulates incorrect information to protect an investigation, though he didn't know whether that was the case in the pipe bombs. Was that the case? Did you circulate any information that's not correct?

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, God, no. No, I would never do that. Why -- you know, so I know Chris. I don't know why he's making comments like that when he doesn't know anything about the case. Those are dangerous comments to be had anyway. So he never called me and asked me my opinion, but I never released anything that was not truthful or we would never release disinformation.

We might have withheld information to not alert the person that we know more than that, but I don't believe in this case. Like, we were asking for tips at this point.

Hopefully you can see on my face that we want -- I want to find that person, right. That is a -- person or persons, right. We don't know who planted those things.

You know, to my -- before I left, the same case agents that were working this case from day one were working the case at the end. They were extremely passionate about what we were doing. We briefed the Director when he came over for a visit in October about everything.

We've put so many data scientists, computer scientists, going through every single document, every single receipt, every single component that was into that pipe bomb -- those pipe bombs to try to track down everything. And I hope the Bureau gives you a brief. I really do.

[11:00 a.m.]

Mr. Massie. We received a video of this. The alleged perpetrator uses a cell phone. Where -- that produced nothing; it's a geofence of data cell phone records?

Mr. D'Antuono. So the -- there's a lot of phone data that came in. Yes, I've seen the same video. I've watched the same video. We put out the same video. It looks like a phone. Was it a real phone, a not a real phone, was it a ruse? Was it a -- you know, I picked up my phone several times at meetings going, oh, yeah, I got to take this call, and walk out, right. The phone's not on, right. So was the person just sitting there trying to pretend like they're on a bench taking a phone call? We don't know until we find the person, right, and ask them those questions.

We did a complete geofence. We have complete data. Not complete, because there's some data that was corrupted by one of the providers, not purposely by them, right. It just -- unusual circumstance that we have corrupt data from one of the providers. I'm not sure -- I can't remember right now which one. But for that day, which is awful because we don't have that information to search. So could it have been that provider? Yeah, with our luck, you know, with this investigation it probably was, right. So maybe if we did have that -- that data wasn't corrupted -- and it wasn't purposely corrupted. I don't want any conspiracy theories, right. To my knowledge, it wasn't corrupted, you know, but that could have been good information that we don't have, right. So that is painful for us to not to have that. So we looked at everything.

And again, you were -- I think you were looking -- I would have love -- I would have given you a brief -- I would have loved to give you a brief on this stuff, right. I really would have. Because I think it's important that everyone understands, before people like Kyle Seraphin and others that are not a case agent, have no knowledge of the case, have no knowledge of what happened in the case, he also made another accusation too that there was an individual with a Metro card. My understanding is all that was chased down. There was a lead that was chased down, but he says that we didn't chase it down. He has no clue what we did.

Mr. Massie. But you didn't have a lead on who discovered the second bomb. You didn't see that in the video?

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm not aware of that, sir. I'm just like -- as the ADIC, I'm like over -- I'm up here and everyone else is doing it. And so I was never -- I wasn't working the case. So I would --

Mr. Massie. Right. But you looked at a lot of resources --

Mr. D'Antuono. I would suspect that -- oh, sorry.

I would suspect that my squad, my agents would've chased that information down.

Mr. Massie. All right.

[redacted] So just to be -- to put a fine point on it, you do not know whether they interviewed the person that discovered --

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't --

[redacted] -- the file at the DNC?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know. If there was that video and we have that video, we definitely should have, yes. But I'm not intricately aware of every single step that we took, right, because I'm being briefed on these things, right. So --

[redacted] That's all I have for now. I think our hour is just about up. We'll go off the record --

[redacted] Off the record.

[redacted] -- and let the Democrats ask questions.

Mr. D'Antuono. Sure, no problem.

[redacted] Thank you.

[Recess.]

EXAMINATION

[redacted]

Q Good morning again, Mr. D'Antuono.

A Good morning.

Q I'm going to start with the subject of the Mar-a-Lago search.

A Sure.

Q So that search began -- or the investigation began with a referral from the National Archives and Records Administration that the FBI received on February 9th, '22. Is that correct?

A That sounds familiar, yeah.

Q And that you mentioned came to headquarters first. Is that the way it works?

A Yeah, it came -- I believe it went to headquarters first. It didn't come to us first, so definitely.

Q So it came to your attention via that referral from headquarters?

A Correct, from AD Alan Kohler I believe reached out to me, he might have reached out to SAC Riedlinger first. I'm not sure, but we went over and had a meeting. I remember sitting in Alan's office and discussed it, yeah.

Q Okay. And what was your role in the investigation?

A So as the ADIC of Washington field office, I oversee every investigation, you know, that's in the office. So -- but overseeing everything, like, thousands upon thousands of cases, you know, things come up to me, and if I have to make a decision as the ADIC, I make a decision as the ADIC. If not, the SACs make decisions. If not, the ASACs make decisions, supervisors make decisions. So -- and that with this case being this high profile, obviously, I need to be intricately aware of what Washington field office's resources are going to be at that point in time.

Q Okay. So because of the profile of the investigation, you maybe had more knowledge of what was going on.

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Is that fair to say?

A Yes. Fair to say. Yep.

Q But there were also people beneath you who were working on this case as they would with any investigation, right?

A Yeah, absolutely. The squad -- the whole squad full of case agents -- or agents and analysts and other professional staff that were working the matter.

Q Okay. I'm going to try to walk through the process of this investigation a little more.

A Sure.

Q I understand that you may or may not recall all the details. Just say you don't know if you don't know.

A Will do.

Q Okay. So the NARA referral stated that on January 18th, 2022, which was about 3 weeks before the referral came through, in accordance with the Presidential Records Act, the agency had received from the office of former President Trump 15 boxes of records which had been transported from Trump's Mar-a-Lago property and which contained, among other things, 184 highly classified documents intermingled with other records. Is that your recollection?

A My recollection is that -- I am not sure about the doc -- how many documents? I think at the time when we were discussing it we didn't know how many documents because they hadn't completed inventory. They just opened the box and went, oh my God, there's classified records in here, and closed the boxes. That's my understanding.

Q Okay. So you don't have --

A At the time we were talking about --

Q I'm sorry. Go ahead.

A No. I was just saying at the time we were talking about it when -- the referral first came in, I don't know how many documents were in there.

Q Okay. But you do understand that among the documents that NARA had received from former President Trump, there were what they considered highly classified documents?

A Correct, yes.

Q And that was the concern that triggered the referral?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Okay. And do you agree that at that stage it was appropriate for them to refer that to the FBI?

A Yes. Yeah, or DOJ. I think it might have gone to DOJ first and then came to us as the investigative arm of DOJ --

Q Sure.

A -- to investigate these things, right. I don't know if it came directly to the FBI first. I'm assuming it went to DOJ and then came down to us.

Q It would be the normal course for --

A It would be the normal course.

Q -- criminal investigations --

The Reporter. You have to go one at time.

[redacted] I'm sorry. We'll slow down.

[redacted]

Q It would be the normal course for criminal investigations like that to go to both DOJ and the FBI, correct?

A It depends on which -- what the relationships were. Like, if NARA knew people over at DOJ, they would call DOJ first and then it came down to us, right. Sometimes things go to DOJ and there might be another agency that has to deal with this. But oftentimes the FBI is expected to deal with everything, not just one thing.

Q Sure. And the FBI is part of the Department of Justice, correct?

A Correct. We are the law enforcement arm of the Department of Justice.

Q And you do the investigating, correct?

A We do.

Q And DOJ does the prosecuting, correct?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. So, so far, the process is you as you would expect it?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Okay. Now, briefly or generally, what happened when the FBI received the referral?

A So when we received the referral, you know, like I said, we talked to AD Kohler, who has decided that we were going to open up a case. I think we were trying to decide if this is going to be a preliminary, assessment of a preliminary or a full. I didn't get into the weeds of that. We eventually -- my understanding is we eventually opened up a full investigation on it, and then we just carried it forwarded. The case agents and the ASACs and the supervisors were working the case. So --

Q Okay.

A Just like any normal case.

Q Sure. It's a criminal investigation, correct?

A No. My understanding it was a CI investigation --

Q Okay.

A -- counterintelligence. But my CI squad was working it, right. So there's classifications in the Bureau being criminal, CI, CT, right. So my counterintelligence -- I'm sorry -- CI, counterintelligence, squad was working the case. Because it was classified documents and so it's a national security type of matter.

Q Okay. So the foremost concern at this point was restoring those documents to their authorized --

A Correct, yeah. Any type of, you know, spillage in a sense, right -- using the classified term "spillage" of classified documents or potential spillage of classified documents is a concern for national security purposes. We want to get those documents back. We want to make sure the people that are viewing the documents have the respective clearances. That's why I never looked at any of the documents. I don't believe I had the clearances for some of them and I didn't want to look at them, right. So I didn't want to cause that -- more spillage.

[redacted]

Q So you said you didn't think you had the clearances to look at all the documents?

A My clearances are top secret, SC -- SCI. But there's a lot of other clearances, I believe, that the documents are hitting against that it just, -- there's experts. I rely on my experts and my experts are my squad.

Q So other compartments. Is that fair to say?

A Yeah, I believe so.

Q So like more class -- differently classified compartments?

A That was my understanding of what some of the documents were, yes. But I'm not sure of all the classifications are so that's not my forte.

Q Okay. Thank you.

A Yep.

[redacted]

Q Fair to say that -- well, actually, why is it important, in your opinion, for the FBI to locate these documents that may contain national defense information and restore them to a secure place?

A Well, it's a national security issue, or it could be, if there are classified documents that could get into the wrong hands. Like, we've had several instances across decades and decades of this country of, like, stuff getting into the wrong hands. So if they're a class -- if they're truly a classified document, they are to -- top secret or higher or just, you know, classified in any respect, they shouldn't be viewed by anyone else.

Q Okay.

A We take it seriously, right. So --

Q Okay. So in response to the referral, the FBI began an investigation into these matters that started on February 9th, '22, when the referral came through, and continued through the spring and summer of 2022. Is that correct?

A Yes, that is correct. Yes.

Q Okay. And during that time, the FBI and DOJ together made an escalating series of efforts to recover the classified documents containing national defense information that were being retained by President -- former President Trump at unauthorized locations on his property. Is that right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Now, these efforts included multiple communications with Mr. Trump's attorneys, correct?

A Yes. Well, I wasn't involved in any of those, but that's what I was told, yes, that DOJ had conversations with the attorney.

Q Okay. And NARA had had conversations with Mr. Trump's attorney before the referral. Is that correct?

A That's my understanding from media reports and everything else that came out, that they were trying to get the documents back. So --

Q Did NARA's referral itself refer to these communications between NARA and Mr. Trump's attorneys, do you recall?

A I'm not -- I don't recall that at all. I didn't see the referral.

Q You didn't see it yourself?

A No. No, there'd be no reason for me to have to actually see the referral.

Q Okay. I'm going to mark as exhibit 1, just because I think this might help, a application in support of -- I'm sorry. This is the affidavit in support of the application for the search warrant --

A Yep.

Q -- that ultimately was filed.

[D'Antuono Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

Q Okay. Let's hope there are page numbers on this. It's kind of hard to see.

A Yeah. This is 7, 8, 9. Yes, there's pages.

Q Yep. There we go.

So there are actually page numbers on the top of the exhibit, which is from --

A Oh, yeah.

Q -- the docketing system from the Southern District of Florida where this was filed, and then there are page numbers on the bottom.

A Okay.

Q If you can see both.

A I can see both.

Q Okay. So referring to the bottom page number 14, this page is almost completely redacted other than the beginning of paragraph 39. Let me know if you've located that paragraph.

A Yes. Yep.

Q Okay. And can you just read to yourself that first sentence?

A Yes.

Q Okay. So according to that affidavit -- which is a sworn statement from a special agent, correct?

A The affidavit overall.

Q Yeah.

A Yes, yeah.

Q According to that paragraph, NARA had made a request for the missing Presidential records and continued to make requests until approximately late December 2021. Is that correct?

A That -- that's what it sounds like, yeah, from this.

Q I mean, do you have any reason to believe that that isn't true if was included in the affidavit?

A No. Absolutely no.

Q Okay. I guess my point is just there were many efforts made by NARA --

A Yeah.

Q -- even before the referral to get Mr. Trump and his staff to agree to return these records?

A That -- that was our understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And you can set that down. We might refer to it later. Thank you.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So at the beginning of this investigation, you were involved and participated in strategy discussions. Is that right?

A Yes. In the beginning and then throughout the investigation, I was just getting briefed on some of the evidence that was being found. There wasn't much strategy going on at that point. It was just doing an overall investigation, trying to find out what was -- what was there and where more stuff could be.

Q Okay. So in February 2022, you have these boxes of documents that were turned over from Mr. Trump to NARA and then from NARA to you, correct?

A Yes.

Q And they contained documents bearing classification markings, correct?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q And there were about 15 boxes total?

A That's what I was told, yes, 15 boxes.

Q Okay.

A Is the number I --

Q And the FBI's investigation was supposed to determine what they had initially, correct?

A Correct, yeah. What classified documents, what classification levels they're at, are they still classified. You know, that's all the components that go into an investigation like this.

Q Okay.

A You know.

Q And would you be surprised to learn that the initial review by the FBI discovered 184 documents that had markings such as confidential, top secret, secret, and additional compartment dissemination controls like H-C-S, F-I-S-A, O-R-C-O-N, N-O-F-O-R-N and S-I?

A That was my understanding.

Q Okay.

A Yeah, from some of my people.

Q I know you said you're not an expert on these classifications --

A No, no.

Q -- but do you know what H-C-S stands for?

A I believe it stands for -- it has something to do with the confidential human source information.

Q Okay. And F-I-S-A?

A FISA.

Q Okay.

A Sorry.

Q That's okay.

A I had to think about that one, visualize it.

Q It's not a test.

A Yeah, I know.

Q And O-R-C-O-N?

A I am familiar with ORCON, but it's -- I'm not like, you know, up on the --

Q Is that an additional --

A It's an additional classification, yeah. It's not a level. It just -- like dissemination.

Q Does it limit the people with a classification --

A Yeah.

Q -- who can see the document?

A Correct. It's -- yeah, dissemination control.

Q Okay. And N-O-F-O-R-N?

A Yeah, nonforeign. Yeah.

Q So no foreign people can see?

A Yeah, yeah. So again, dissemination. They are dissemination controls.

Q Okay.

A FISA is basically where it's derived from.

Q Okay. During the course of its investigation, the FBI, in April and May of 2022, the FBI interviewed witnesses. Is that correct?

A My understanding yes, it's correct.

Q And some of these witnesses included Mr. Trump's associates and staff. Is that correct?

A That is correct, yes.

Q And these witnesses told investigators that there were more boxes of records at Mar-a-Lago that could contain national defense information. Is that correct?

A That's my understanding that there were more boxes. They didn't know if there were classified records in there or not. I don't believe -- I don't believe, to the best of my recollection, that anyone saw unclassified documents, but they -- there were more boxes.

Q One of the things that these witnesses told FBI investigators is that the boxes were similar in shape and marking to the boxes where the previous classified documents had been found. Is that correct?

A That is correct, yes.

Q And that lead investigators to think that there was a good chance that there might be more such documents in those boxes, correct?

A That led to the probable cause, yes.

Q Okay. Based on this and other evidence, DOJ officials started to become alarmed and made recommendations to you and other FBI officials to seek a search warrant at that point. Is that right?

A I --

Q To be clear, I'm talking about like May of 20 --

A Yeah, early on they wanted to do a search warrant.

Q Okay. And this was --

A That means DOJ wanted to do a search warrant.

Q Sorry, I don't mean to keep talking over you.

A No, it's all right.

Q This recommendation initially from DOJ officials to do a search warrant, which came around May of 2022, it was based on the additional evidence that the FBI had uncovered in the investigation, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And the DOJ officials believed at this point that they had probable cause for that warrant, correct?

A Yes, I believe they did. I -- again, I didn't talk to them, but they wanted to do a search. They requested I do a search.

Q Okay. And at this point you disagreed that a search was appropriate?

A I don't -- I wasn't part of that discussion initially. That was my squad was doing a lot of that stuff. The ASACs and the SACs were talking to -- were being briefed on it. I agreed with the direction my people wanted to do.

Q Which is what?

A Subpoena.

Q Okay.

A They -- they wanted to do a subpoena, which as a leader, as somebody -- you know, that's leading, if you have a countering opinion, then you change -- try -- you direct them differently. When you don't, you back up your people and say, you're the experts. This is what you want? Okay, I'll back you up, and we'll proceed forward. I believe -- my understanding was headquarters agreed with that too, the Director agreed with that as well. Because it went all the way up -- up to that point. That was my understanding.

Q So fair to say the people beneath you and the people above you at the FBI were essentially in consensus that a subpoena was the appropriate course?

A That's correct. That's my understanding, yes.

Q And DOJ actually agreed to do that?

A They did, yeah. I think reluctantly, but they did, yes.

Q Okay. And the subpoena, as you understand I'm sure, is actually part of a grand jury investigation. Is that correct?

A That's correct, yes.

Q And the same legal showing is required for a subpoena as is for a search warrant that is probable caused. Is that correct?

A Yeah. It's probably a lot -- it's a lot less than for a search warrant in a sense because you're just trying to get the documents from someone as opposed to actually searching someone's residence.

Q Well, sure, the process is different, correct?

A Yeah, yeah.

Q But the legal standard of probable cause exists --

A Correct.

Q -- in the grand jury as well.

A Yeah, yeah.

Q Correct?

A Yes. Yeah.

Q You cannot open a grand jury investigation without probable cause, Correct?

A Well, you know, it takes factual basis to believe that there's something going on. And you have probable cause to believe that there's, you know, a crime that was committed. So yeah.

Q Yeah. Those are two different legal standards, though, correct?

A Yes.

Q And a subpoena requires probable cause?

A It does, but it's -- it's not as -- it's not completely like a search warrant.

Q I agree. The process is not the same.

A Yeah. It's completely different, right. A grand jury, you know, is opened by the U.S. Attorney's Office on everything, on any investigation that we look into; to get bank documents, to get subscriber information, to get whatever information. So the level of getting a search warrant and probable cause is completely different than me asking for a search warrant -- or a subpoena for someone's bank records, right. So I don't have to provide an affidavit or anything like that in order to get a subpoena, you know.

Q That's true. There may not be --

A That's what I'm saying. We don't have to write down and articulate why we believe a person has a bank account there, right. We can serve a subpoena on someone's bank that we don't even know -- we surmise that maybe they have a bank account there, right, so --

Q Well, the grand jury cannot issue a subpoena without probable cause, correct?

A Correct, yes. But -- yeah. So it's a walking legal system, though.

Q Right.

A The grand jury doesn't issue the subpoenas, right, so --

Q Well, the prosecutor needs to go to the --

A Correct, yes.

Q -- grand jury to get the subpoena.

A I know. But it's -- the civics lesson here is just different, right, you know, so --

Q Okay. So I'm marking as exhibit 2 the subpoena that was retrieved from the U.S. District Court from the District of Columbia pursuant to the grand jury investigation. This dated -- date is May 11th, 2022. So this is the subpoena that we talked about for this investigation.

A Yes, yes.

[D'Antuono exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]

Q Okay. Pretty simple document.

A Uh-huh.

Q If you see, there's a, on the first page, a description of the documents that were requested by DOJ. Do you see that box in the middle?

A Yes. Yes, I do.

Q And would you mind just reading that? What are the documents that you were looking for at this point?

A Myself or to --

Q If you wouldn't mind reading it for the reporter.

A Any and all documents or writings in the custody or control of Donald J. Trump and/or the office of Donald J. Trump bearing classification markings, including but not limited to the following: Top Secret, Secret, Confidential, Top Secret/SI-G/NOFORN/ORCON -- O-R-C-O-N -- Top Secret/SI-G/NOFORN, Top Secret/HCS-O/NOFORN/ORCON, Top Secret/HCS-O/NORFORN, Top Secret/HCS-P/NOFORN/ORCON, Top Secret/HCS-P/NOFORN, Top Secret/TK/NOFORN/ORCON, Top Secret/TK/NOFORN, Secret/NOFORN, Confidential/NOFORN, TS, TS/SAP, TS/SI-G/NF/OC, TS/SI-G/NF, TS/HCS-O/NF/OC, TS/ -- sorry, we're going too fast -- HCS-O/NF, TS/HCS-P/NF/OC, TS/HCS-P/NF, TS/HCS-P/SI-G, TS/HCS-P/SI/TK, TS/TK/NF/OC, TS/TK/NF, S/NF, S/FRD, S/NATO, S/SI, C, and finally, C/NF.

Q Thank you for doing that.

A No problem. It's a tongue twister in a sense.

Q It is. But these, fair to say, are highly classified documents?

A It's fair -- yeah, again, I'm not a complete expert on all these classifications, but, yeah, some of these within here are definitely highly classified documents.

Q Okay. And just to explain how these work, the grand jury subpoena actually commands the custodian of these records to appear before the grand jury, correct?

A Correct, yes.

Q But what happens normally is, informally, the prosecutor will call and say, hey, I really want these documents listed in here and that will suffice if you turn them over in lieu of your appearance, correct?

A Absolutely, yep.

Q Okay. And that's what happened here?

A That's my belief, yes. Yep.

Q Okay. So on June 2nd, in response to this grand jury subpoena, counsel for the former President requested that FBI agents meet him the following day at Mar-a-Lago in order to pick up the documents that you just described that were responsive to the subpoena, correct?

A That is correct, yes. My understanding what I got from my people, yes.

Q Okay. And so the next day was June 3rd, 2022, correct?

A It would be in the normal course of a calendar, yes.

Q Yes. And on that day, several DOJ and FBI officials went down to Mar-a-Lago in order to accommodate this request, correct?

A Yes. I know some of my people went down there, and I believe Jay Bratt was down there. I don't know anyone else from DOJ. But yes.

Q Okay. You weren't down there yourself?

A I didn't go down there, no.

Q Okay.

A I'm leading an office. I don't need to go.

Q And on June 3rd, counsel for the former President, Mr. Corcoran, as well as a woman who's also a lawyer, Christina Bobb --

A I've heard the name.

Q -- was present. Is that correct?

A I don't know if that's correct or not. But I've heard Christina Bobb's name as an attorney for the former President.

Q Okay. Well, in this case, Ms. Bobb identified herself as the custodian of records, correct?

A That is my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And when Mr. Bratt and the other officials arrived, Ms. Bobb handed the FBI officials a single double-wrapped Redweld envelope that contained 38 documents, correct?

A That is my understanding, yes.

Q And among these documents were documents that bore classification markings, correct?

A My understanding is yes, from my people, that's what they were.

Q Okay. And Mr. Corcoran at that time told the DOJ and FBI officials that the 38 documents bearing classification markings had come from boxes inside of storage room at Mar-a-Lago, correct?

A That's my understanding.

Q Okay. In addition to these 38 documents bearing classification markings, Ms. Bobb, the custodian of records, also handed one of the DOJ officials a certification letter, correct?

A Again, my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. I'm going to show you what's going to be marked as exhibit 3.

[D'Antuono exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Q Again, this document was taken from the case file in the Southern District of Florida. Do you recognize this document?

A I don't. I didn't -- I probably saw the document at some point in time, I'm just not intimately aware.

Q Okay.

A But I understand my people said that she certified the records that were provided to us. So I was briefed on this.

Q Okay. All right. Take a minute to look at it --

A Sure.

Q -- because I'm sure it's been a while since you've seen it.

A Okay.

Q Okay. So in the first paragraph, the certification states that the person who signed it, which I'm going to represent to you is Christina Bobb, even though it's redacted, it says that she has been designated to serve as custodian of records for the office of Donald J. Trump for purposes of the testimony and documents subject to the subpoena. Is that correct?

A That's what it says on the document, yes.

Q Okay. It further says that: Based on the information that has been provided to me, I'm authorized to certify, on behalf of the office of Donald J. Trump, the following: A, a diligent search was conducted of the boxes that were removed from the White House to Florida; B, the search was conducted after receipt of the subpoena in order to locate any and all documents that are responsive to the subpoena; C, any and all responsive documents accompany this certification; and D, no copy, written notation, or reproduction of any kind was retained as to any responsive document.

Is that correct?

A That's correct.

Q And finally it says: I swear or affirm that the above statements are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

Correct?

A That's correct.

Q Okay. So when the FBI received this certification, that was significant, correct?

A Correct.

Q Why is that?

A The officer of the court certified.

Q And did that -- the fact that the former President's attorney and custodian of record had certified that they diligently searched for any responsive documents and that all of it had been turned over, did that change your opinion in what the investigation should do next?

A Yeah. When we get the documents, I believe we had a conversation -- or my squad I believe had a conversation with the DOJ, saying, all right, what next, at this point. You know, what do we do. So --

Q And what did you think should happen next?

A Honestly, it's -- you have to follow the facts and evidence of this at this point. At this point, right, we would receive documents. There was an officer of the court that was attesting to it. You have to believe in our judicial system and people's oaths and stuff. So if they're attesting to it and it's an attorney doing it, you have to take it as truthful.

So at this point in time you also -- the documents are there. If they're classified, we have to still do the investigation to see what classified records, are they still classified. We had a whole slew, like you said, 184 before. Now we are going down to 38. We have to run down the cause of action in the case, right. So you can't just close the case, you are not just going to close it, oh, we're done. You have to see if they're classified and what the impact could that be.

And then you also have to determine what the intent is of the person or persons that either had them in their possession or not. If it's just mere possession, you know, by happenstance or not by neglect or malice, then DOJ makes the determination as the prosecutor. Like, FBI is the fact finders, we're investigators. We don't make that determination, that's DOJ, right. So we're just trying to find the facts for them, they make the determination. So it's not my job to do that.

Q Okay. So there was some reporting in The Washington Post I believe it was --

A Yeah.

Q -- about a disagreement among DOJ and FBI officials regarding what to do at this particular nexus in the investigation.

A Yeah.

Q Are you familiar with that reporting?

A I'm familiar with that reporting. It's not -- like, the way it was categorized is not completely correct, that portion of that -- that article.

Q Just to be clear, I don't need to rehash the whole article.

A Yeah. No, no, no.

Q There was some suggestion that you and perhaps other FBI officials at this stage wanted to close the investigation.

A That is absolutely false. We did not, my squad did not. You know, their -- the case is open, we still have to find out if there's truth to any of this stuff, what the intent is, what the classification. We're not just going to, done, right. That's not what we do. Like I said before in this interview, there's plenty of times when I've done investigations as you run down and you run down information, not exonerate the person, but you don't find evidence that they had intent or whatever, you close the case, you move on, right. You have to actually finish the case.

So at this juncture, there's no point that we're going to finish the case. But we had to ask the question, what next, what are we doing, right. Because otherwise, you're just stuck in the mud, what are you doing, right.

Q Right.

A So we had to push DOJ and ask those questions. So if DOJ categorized that, which I believe they did, that we wanted to shut it down is completely false.

Q Okay.

A Yep.

Q You've made that clear. I understand.

A Yeah, I'm sorry. I just -- yeah, I don't like being told I did something or said something when it's not --

Q That's true. You're the one who knows what you said.

A I take accountability for everything I do.

Q Okay. And I know you've already said that you were not present on June 3rd at Mar-a-Lago, correct?

A I was not, no.

Q Do you -- are you aware that during that same meeting where the certification was given to the DOJ officials, FBI and DOJ officials asked the attorney for Mr. Trump whether they could see the storage room where those documents had been stored?

A I was told that, yes. Yep.

Q And is it fair to say that the reason they wanted to see it is because part of their investigation was to assess how those documents were being stored and whether they were secured?

A Absolutely, yeah. If they were classified documents, we wanted to see them. And they wanted to see if there is, you know, any security around those.

Q Like a SCIF?

A Yeah. If they're classified documents, they should be in the SCIF. They should be locked behind, you know, in safes and stuff like that, if they're back in there. But we're getting information that we have all the documents. So I believe it was the FBI agents, not DOJ, that asked, hey, can we just -- and I believe they asked -- I was told they asked the President. The former President was there with the attorneys when the documents were provided to them.

Q You're saying that Mr. Trump was there himself?

A He was there. Yes. He was -- what was reported to me by my agents is the fact that Mr. Trump was there with his attorneys. I believe he was on the steps of Mar-a-Lago, whatever. And he -- and they asked him. He's like, whatever you need, you know, I'll comply, or whatever he said. You know, whatever you need, just ask. And they said -- my agents asked, could we see the storage room? And he said, yeah, sure, come on in, much to the chagrin -- again, my understanding, much to the chagrin of the two attorneys who were never allowed that. And they went in and he showed them the storage room.

Q The storage room was not an authorized SCIF, correct?

A No. Not my understanding. I don't believe it was. I didn't see it, but it's a storage room --

Q Sure.

A -- with a bunch of boxes in it. And I don't think it would --

Q It wasn't locked, right?

A I was told it was not, no.

Q Okay. Now, in that --

A Well, it might have been locked. I'm not sure if it was like completely secure with a padlock and all that stuff. So it might have been locked. I can't say it was not locked.

Q Okay. That's fair, if you don't --

A Yeah, yeah. I just -- yeah.

Q Okay. The FBI officials that asked to see the storage room, they also asked if they could look inside the boxes that were remaining, correct?

A I'm not sure about that. I know that's what was reported, but my understanding is that we didn't, right. Because we, meaning the collective -- myself, the deputy, and all us -- were like, why didn't the agents just ask to look at the boxes, that would have solved some of these issues. So my understanding is that they didn't. I know what's been reported out there, but I don't believe -- you'd have to ask the agents that were there. I don't believe that they asked to look at the boxes.

Q Okay. So your understanding is they just asked to look at the room but not actually look inside the room?

A Correct, because we -- our -- when we were leading up to the search, we were like, oh my God, why didn't they just ask to look at the boxes, right. If he was allowing them to look at the storage room and allowing them whatever you need, the next question is can I look in some of these things and look through them. And if the former President was there and he wanted to cooperate, like he said he did, I don't -- you know, so we were like, darn it, why didn't you go one step further?

So that's what my belief is. I know what was reported out there, but my belief is that they didn't. But I'm not the one to ask that, right.

Q Okay.

A So it would be the agents.

Q Is it fair to say that you've never asked the agents who were physically there whether they did ask to --

A I never did.

Q -- look at the boxes?

A No, I never did.

Q Okay.

A So I'm getting this from my briefings as the -- from the SAC and the ASACs and stuff like that --

Q Okay.

A -- supervisor.

Q But the reason that they might have wanted to look in those boxes is because, like you said, the investigation was continuing at this point, correct?

A Yeah. You know, at this point we wanted to -- you know, we're getting the documents. You know, can we look at -- look behind the door there. And, yeah, can we see for ourselves that you got all this stuff, right. You trust but verify, right.

Q Right.

A And this is trusting, but the verification is the other side. You go, hey, can we look at it, a consent search, you know. Which we never asked for and that's why we were like, darn it, you know, we -- and I didn't -- I didn't talk to the agents about it because I don't want to make them feel bad, right. Because you don't want the ADIC going down to the agent saying, why -- you dummy, why didn't you do this, right. I don't know what I would have done in that circumstance either. I'm not going to say. I was a young agent or as the agent with the experience that they had. I don't want to, like, do that to them. So it was past that at that point, right.

Q Okay.

A We're past it, and we have to go on to the next step.

Q Got it. I don't want to put words in your mouth, but it sounds like, in a sense, you and the agents were being especially careful in this case. Is that right?

A Yeah. Any high profile -- I've worked so many public corruption investigations, high-profile cases throughout my career, you have to be careful, right. You don't want to damn someone for something that they didn't do, you know, wrong, right. So that's why we're very -- we try to keep things close to the vest in the FBI because we don't want it getting out there to damage someone's reputation. It's not right. So --

Q In particular, the former President of the United States, correct?

A Yeah. For anyone, right. Former President, President, Vice President, whatever, Congressman, Congresswoman, you don't want that information getting out there because it's a reputational thing, right.

Q But I mean, you're an FBI agent on the scene, right?

A Well, I was not on the scene.

Q Not you I mean, but your agents are on the scene there.

A Correct.

Q They know this investigation's continuing. They see these boxes, right?

A Yes.

Q And they could have asked for a consent search, like you said, right?

A They could have, yeah.

Q And if it was another person besides Mr. Trump, they might have, right?

A Maybe. I don't want to speculate on that. They could have, right.

Q I think that's not a very aggressive step, is it?

A No, it's not. But they were being cooperative, right.

Q Right.

A They were being -- to our understanding, they were being cooperative and they were turning over the documents.

Q Right. But they knew that there were more boxes that looked just like the other boxes, right?

A We believe that there were more boxes there, yes, at that point in time.

Q Right. And you know that the investigation had to go on at that point, right?

A Yeah. Obviously, it has to go on because we have to get to the logical conclusion of the investigation. We don't just willy-nilly say we're done.

Q Absolutely.

A You know.

Q And those agents could have simply asked for a consent search at that point?

A They could have, yeah.

Q But they didn't because it was Donald Trump, right?

A I mean -- well, it was only two -- I believe it was only two agents. They weren't going to be able to search every box anyway, so it's going to take a little more effort than that, right.

Q Okay.

A So they did what they did at that point in time, given the resources that they had. So I don't want to damn them for not going one step further, right.

Q Okay. All right. But like you said, the investigation did go on when everybody left Mar-a-Lago that day, right?

A Correct. Yeah, it never stopped.

Q Okay. And one of the things that happened was another grand jury subpoena was issued for surveillance video from Mar-a-Lago. Is that correct?

A Correct. It was decided -- my understanding, it was decided amongst the team, DOJ and the FBI, that we would get the video from the property to see if there was any movement of the boxes or what happened possibly to the boxes, where the storage room was, and all that stuff, so --

Q And the time period that was shown on that video surveillance included a period after Mr. Trump was notified that these documents were being asked to be preserved and to be returned and then the point where you all went down to receive those documents pursuant to the subpoena, correct?

A I'm not sure what the date range was, but that's what I was told, basically, that that date range from there to there.

Q Just the general timeframe --

A And you mean the documents going back to NARA, right? The 15 boxes?

Q Right.

A Right, going back and then up to the point where we were there.

Q Right. And DOJ, after the referral, actually issued a preservation letter. Is that right?

A Yeah. That's normal, of course, a lot of times.

Q I mean, basically, it's just formal notice to the President that you need to keep these things --

A Yeah.

Q -- where they are so that we can get back what we need, right?

A Correct. The coverup is always worse than the crime, right. So you don't want to get someone into that mode of like, hey, here's the preservation letter, make sure you don't get rid of these documents. We put them on notice that we want them, right. So if all of a sudden they're lost or destroyed or erased over, then it causes concern.

Q Absolutely. And that happens in every case, right?

A That we send preservation letters on every case almost, yeah. Not every case but, you know, a lot of cases.

Q Okay.

A You know, to banks, to subscriber information, to whoever, right. Maybe not to the subject, but yes.

Q Okay. But that surveillance video showed an employee of Mar-a-Lago moving documents from the storage room before you all got back down there to receive the responsive documents from Ms. Bobb and Mr. Corcoran, correct?

A That's my understanding. I'm not sure what the timeframe was, was it right before we got down there and the attorneys looked through the documents, or was it during the search, or it was during the NARA request.

Q Well, it was before Mr. Trump returned the responsive documents --

A Yeah.

Q -- to DOJ, right?

A Okay. To NARA. Was it to NARA? My understanding, it was to NARA before they -- before he turned over whatever boxes he turned over to NARA.

Q Okay.

A But that was my understanding. I could -- I could be commingling my understanding here of what the timelines were. But I do think there was also a period of time when we saw movement of boxes as well prior to that, right.

Q Okay.

A Prior to us getting down there, so --

Q Okay. Prior to you getting down there but after the preservation letter was issued?

A After the preservation letter. My understanding too is, like, we asked the -- we asked for the storage room to be locked, padlocked, right, which they complied with, right. And then I believe that's when we saw boxes being moved out of there, so --

Q Before the padlocking?

A After the padlocking. That's -- that was my understanding.

Q Okay.

A But I'm -- it's been a while.

Q Got it.

A So yeah.

Q Well, broad-brush here, what you saw or what your agents saw on that surveillance video was concerning. Is that fair to say?

A It was concerning that the -- in the sense that the boxes -- I think DOJ was a little more concerned than we were, right. The boxes were being moved. We don't know what purpose they were being moved for. At that present time we hadn't talked the individual, which we all know who he is, right.

Q Right.

A We hadn't talked to him about what was in the boxes, when they were moved, why they were moved. We -- prior to the writing of the affidavit we didn't talk to him, which was one of the things we wanted to do in the course before we did the search.

Q You talked to many people, right, not just this particular employee, right?

A I don't know how many people we talked to. I don't have the whole list of interviews. Yeah, there was a lot of people that we were trying to get information to see what was down there, where it was, was stuff moved to other places, where are these documents possibly, where'd they go, where'd they come from, how they started from point A to point B, how they got to that point. So yeah, there's a whole host of people that you need to talk to, you know, including the individual that was one of the caretakers for that. So yeah.

Q Okay.

A And I'm trying not to divulge too much because there's confidentialities of like -- I don't want to, like, ruin someone, you know -- the names and stuff like that. But there was a lot of people that were giving us -- some people that were giving us information, so --

Q Okay. About documents still being onsite. Is that right?

A About boxes, documents, all that stuff, yes. Which led -- that's a lot of what's in this affidavit and, you know, witness one, witness two --

Q Right, right.

A -- the way we devised it, right. So all that's coming from interviews.

[redacted] And I know you don't want to divulge identities and I'm not asking --

Mr. D'Antuono. Honestly, I can't even remember the identities because it's been so long.

[redacted] But you'd know if they were Mar-a-Lago employees, for example?

Mr. D'Antuono. That was my -- that was my understanding, yes, that they're Mar-a-Lago or they worked for the President in some capacity, the former President in some capacity.

[redacted] Okay. Thank you.

[redacted]

Q So during the continued investigation that, you know, continued after June 3rd when the responsive subpoena documents were delivered, the FBI, through various means, including that surveillance tape and witness interviews, discovered that former President Trump's response to the subpoena was incomplete, correct?

A We had probable cause to believe it was possibly incomplete. We weren't --

Q Well, that's based on the evidence that you recovered, right?

A It's not -- it's not definitive, right.

Q Sure.

A So it's probable cause to believe that there are -- I think the number was 85 boxes in there. There's a large amount of boxes in that the boxes -- the information we received prior to and that what we got in June. And then in looking at the video and movement of the boxes, there was enough probable cause to believe that there could be more classified documents, or also, the way the warrant's written is very broadly, other Presidential records and governmental records, right.

Q Sure.

A So one of the things when we read the P.C. -- like, our OGC went through this with a fine-tooth comb. Our CDC, our chief division counselor, or Office of General Counsel, every attorney in the Bureau that could opine, the director's office, his attorneys, chiefs of staff, they looked at this, right, including my agents, right. And I wanted to make sure that my agents were comfortable signing the warrant. Sorry. Signing the warrant, right. Because as an agent, you're making sure that what's in here -- and a lot of it was being written by DOJ and a bunch of DOJ attorneys, right.

So DOJ attorneys are writing this with a combination of the agents, and it went back and forth with so many different revisions because there were a lot of leaps that were being taken in this document as to the probable cause, right. A lot of revisions went through. We got comfortable. I made sure, can you sign this? And they're like, yes, we're comfortable signing this, right.

Q Well, your agents wouldn't sign an affidavit that included false statements, correct?

A That is correct. But there are --

Q Okay. Are you confident that the evidence that they describe in that affidavit is correct?

A Correct. The probable cause for the search, the lawful search of Mar-a-Lago is correct, yes.

Q Okay. The probable cause is a legal determination, correct?

A Correct.

Q And the facts are something that are the responsibility of the agent to be truthful about, correct?

A Correct. But the --

Q And they are truthful in that affidavit, right?

A They are truthful, yes. But to say that there were definitely classified documents, we don't know. That's why we're doing the search.

Q Well, the affidavit doesn't say there are definitely classified documents.

A No. No, no. But there was a belief that there could be classified documents and other governmental records down there too, right. That's the -- other governmental records, Presidential records, and then on top of that, classified documents as well.

Q Right. And I mean, the point of the affidavit is that you're setting out what you found factually, correct?

A Factual, yep. Probable cause to believe that the search is warranted in this case.

Q The probable cause determination is something that the magistrate judge will determine when they --

A Right.

Q -- allow the warrant, correct?

A Yes. That is correct, yes.

Q And that's exactly what happened in this case, right?

A That is correct, yes.

Q So the facts, you're confident, are accurate, correct?

A I am confident that the facts in this affidavit are accurate.

Q Okay. And as you can see from the exhibit, the magistrate found probable cause, correct?

A Yeah, he signed it. Yeah.

Q Right. So that's why the search eventually happened?

A It is a lawful search, yes.

Q Okay. This investigation was handled differently than it would have been handled if it were not President Trump -- or former President Trump, correct?

A It was handled differently than I would have expected it to be -- that any other case is handled. I'm not sure -- like, I've never done a investigation of this magnitude on a former President, right. So I can't opine on the fact that it would be handled one way or the other.

National Security Division, DOJ Main, prosecuting this matter, you know, what's been reported out there is the fact that we had a Crossfire Hurricane hangover, which is not true, but we learned a lot of stuff from Crossfire Hurricane that headquarters does not work the investigation, it is supposed to be the field offices working the investigations. My concern is that DOJ was not following the same principles, right. So the U.S. Attorney's Office, in my opinion, should have been brought in, and we asked for it several, several times.

Q Well, let me just -- I mean, you mentioned that in the earlier hour. The National Security Division at DOJ has concurrent jurisdiction with the U.S. Attorney's Office, right?

A That's correct.

Q So they can take any national security case anywhere in the country, right?

A That's correct, but --

Q Including in Washington, D.C., right?

A That's correct.

Q And it's not unusual for them to do that when they have classified documents, right?

A No.

Q So really the process is not that different?

A It's not, but normally the U.S. Attorney's Office was involved in most of these cases. Like, it's -- DOJ can do whatever they want, right. Again, it's not against policy or procedure or anything like that. It's just like you can -- I don't know if you -- you probably haven't been able to do FOIA requests or whatever requests you've made getting the documents of the case, but my agents, which I was trying to back up, now sort of concerned about the fact that the U.S. Attorney's Office not being included in this matter. That's all.

Q Okay. Well, I mean, the U.S. Attorney's Office and Main Justice are part of the same department, right?

A They are, yeah, yeah. But U.S. Attorney's Office also have a lot of autonomy as well, right.

Q Well, I mean, in this case, Attorney General Garland has said publicly that he signed off ultimately on these decisions, right?

A That's what he said. Yeah, absolutely.

Q And he would have done that whether it was the U.S. Attorney's Office in the District of Columbia or the National Security Division, correct?

A Correct, yeah. Well -- yeah, I believe so.

Q And he's above both of them, right?

A Absolutely. The buck stops there.

Q Okay. All right. Now, when I say that this was handled differently, I'm also thinking of cases like the David Petraeus case. You're familiar with that case?

A Yes.

Q I know you didn't work that --

A I didn't work it. Yeah, I'm familiar from the media and what was reported.

Q Did you all ever discuss the operations in that case when you were considering what strategy and what process to use here?

A I didn't with my people, no.

Q Okay.

A No.

Q Well, in the case of Mr. Petraeus, you recall that -- first of all, he was a four-star Army general, right?

A That's my understanding.

Q And he, in the course of his duties, I think he was also the -- was he the Director of the CIA? I believe he was.

A I'm sorry, I don't know.

Q Regardless, he had access to some very highly classified information, right?

A Yeah. Yeah, yeah, yeah. Yep.

Q And at some point, he -- during his course of his official business, he would keep these black notebooks that contained classified information, right?

A Okay. Yeah.

Q Well, I don't know. Have you heard that? Maybe -- if you haven't --

A I don't think. I know little bits and pieces of the case. I didn't work the case, so --

Q All right. Fair to say that you know he had classified information?

A Fair to say I know he had classified, and then he was, you know, charged with all that stuff. Yes, fair to say.

Q Okay. So at some point, Mr. Petraeus was out of the Army, and he had a biographer/affair partner that he disclosed some classified information to because he allowed her access to those books, right?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And the FBI had to recover those books at some point, right?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q And the way they did it was by executing a surprise search warrant, right --

A That's my understanding.

Q -- on his personal residence in Alexandria? Or Arlington. I'm sorry.

A I have no -- sorry, I don't know where he lives.

Q Let me mark this as exhibit 4.

A I only know where I was during that case and what --

Q Where were you?

A I don't know. What year was it? I can tell you where --

Q 2013.

A 2013. So I was supervisor of the public corruption squad in D.C.

Q All right.

A So I had nothing to do with this case. I had other cases going on.

[D'Antuono exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

Q Okay. This is the FBI evidence response team casebook with the Petraeus case.

A Okay.

Q There's just a couple things I want you to note. On page -- let's see. Actually, on the first -- I think it's listed as page 2 on the bottom, it's page 2 of 111. Do you see that at the bottom?

A Yep.

Q There's like a little highlight. It says, Condition of Seen on Arrival, on the top, and it mentions "Secured by"?

A Yeah.

Q Do you see that?

A WFO/SWAT.

Q Yeah. They used a SWAT team in this case, right?

A Apparently so, yes.

Q What you do think about that tactic?

A Every -- every determination or use of SWAT or not SWAT is a -- we have to determine if SWAT's necessary at that point in time. I don't know what the circumstances of this, so it's hard for me to speculate on that. He had weapons. You know, a lot of times if anyone has weapons, we're concerned about that stuff, making sure that, you know, people are safe in going in.

I can't opine on this because I don't know what type of -- if they used the full SWAT team, if they used a couple of SWAT members. I don't -- I don't know, right.

Q Fair to say that's a pretty substantial show of force compared to what you did at Mar-a-Lago. Is that right?

A Yeah. Yeah. That would definitely -- using a SWAT team any time it causes attention, right, for neighborhoods and stuff like that. So if you're talking it was in Arlington or Alexandria, it was probably close knit, there will be people out there with cameras and all that stuff, right. So --

Q But it's David Petraeus. He's not like an unknown person, right?

A Well, I don't know how known or unknown he would have been in the neighborhood.

Q I mean, he's a four-star general, right?

A Yeah, I know. But if he walked in this room I probably wouldn't recognize him, so --

Q Okay.

A I'm sorry. I just --

Q He's not Trump, but --

A Yeah. Well, correct. Yes, yes.

Q Okay. But in this case, when the FBI needed to recover potential classified documents from the home of a former government official, they did not give him any notice, right, it appears from this case file, right?

A I -- I -- I don't know if they did or didn't.

Q Well, they --

A Well, they did a search.

Q -- showed up at his door at 6 a.m. with a SWAT team.

I mean, you can see from the notes that they arrived at 6:03 a.m. with a SWAT team, right? You can look on page --

A Oh, yeah, yeah. If they arrive at 6:0 -- yeah, 6:05 -- arrival time is 6:05 a.m. -- you know, yeah, they wouldn't have given him notice. Yeah, absolutely. But I don't know what happened prior to this, right. So I wasn't part of the case, so I don't know what they did leading up to that asking for the documents back or if this is the first thing that they did in this investigation. I don't know.

Q Okay.

A Right? Which is different -- it could be different than the former President Trump investigation --

Q Okay.

A -- which we had a lot of conversations leading up to a search.

Q Okay. In the case of Mar-a-Lago, there was no SWAT team, right?

A No.

Q And, in fact, there weren't even any FBI emblazed in jackets on your team, right?

A No. We wanted to make sure that -- yeah.

Q They wore khakis, right?

A I don't know what they wore. I don't know if I prescribed them to have to wear khakis or not. So I think business attire would have been good.

Q Okay. But you did that because you did not want to show force, right?

A Yeah. I just didn't think it was nec -- in a lot of cases I don't think it's necessary to show force when someone's, you know, cooperating or not. Every search is different.

Q Okay.

A Right? So sometimes we're in suits and ties and sometimes we're not, right. So --

Q Understood. Right. But in this case, you hadn't had full cooperation because you had a false certification, right?

A Well --

Mr. Berger. Can you answer whether it's false or not?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know if it's false or not at that point. At this point we didn't know what was in that residence.

Mr. Berger. False assumes that the certifier knowingly misled the recipient, but I don't think he could attest to the knowingness element.

[redacted]

Q Well, fair to say you had a certification that they'd done this diligent search and that they turned over all the documents, right?

A There was belief that maybe they didn't do as thorough of a search as they say they did.

Q Well, I mean, ultimately the search warrant, you found more classified documents, right?

A Correct.

Q So, in fact, they had not turned over all the documents, right?

A That is -- but prior -- well, your question was prior to the search. After the search, yeah, it does not look like they were --

Q Well, I actually wasn't asking what was in your mind at the time. I'm just saying, like, you've got a certification on June 3rd, right?

A Uh-huh.

Q Right?

A Yeah.

Q And that certification said that all of the responsive documents had been turned over, right?

A That's what the certification says, yes.

Q In fact, they had not been, right?

A Now that we know, no, they had not been.

Q No, right? Because the search warrant actually yielded many additional documents bearing classification markings, right?

A That's correct. My understanding was over a hundred or more, I believe, if I get the number correct.

Q Right. And let's just -- we keep talking about classified documents. The Federal statutes that were at issue in this case were 18 U.S.C. 793, which is part the Espionage Act, right?

A Uh-huh, yes. I believe, yes.

Q 18 U.S.C. 2071 and 18 U.S.C. 1519, correct?

A Okay.

Q I mean, it's in the --

A It's in the --

Q -- document in front of you if you want to look at it.

A Yeah, no, that's fine. I trust you.

Q Okay. Well, you don't have to trust me.

A Well, if it's in the affidavit, which is public record.

Q Yeah. You should see the --

A Yeah, 1519, 2070 -- sorry. 1519, 2071.

Q Okay.

A And then 2201 as well, and then 3301 too.

Q Okay.

A Those are under 44, so --

Q Right. And just to be clear, you understand that those statutes don't refer to classified information, right?

A No. Some -- these don't.

Q Do you want to see the statutes?

A Yep. No, I can see them. No, I remember reading the affidavit, I read it. Some of the discussion was at the time that we are searching for other than classified documents.

Q The Espionage Act, for example, refers to information's considered national defense information. The Espionage Act was enacted in 1917, right? Are you aware that it was enacted in 1917?

A I was not aware it was enacted in 1917.

Q Okay. It was before the modern classification system existed, right? If you don't know, you don't know.

Mr. Berger. If you don't know, you don't know?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, I don't know.

[D'Antuono exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

Q Just marking as exhibit 5 a copy of 18 U.S.C. 793. This is statutory authority from which the FBI and the DOJ proceeded when they searched Mar-a-Lago, right?

A Uh-huh.

[12:04 p.m.]

Q Okay. Read it. I think it's highlighted in your -- yeah, it is.

A Yeah, I see it talks about that.

Q Section 793 is entitled, "Gathering, Transmitting, or Losing Defense Information." So defense information is what you're looking for, right, under the statute?

A You're correct. Well, anything could --

Q Well, I'm just talking about the statute.

A Yeah, yeah. Under the statute definitely, yeah.

Q Right.

A Well, under the statute it says classified.

Q Right. It doesn't say classified information, does it?

A No, it doesn't. No, it's just broadly termed "defense information," yeah.

Q And the reason is because there was no classification system at the time that this statute was enacted, right?

A Makes sense, yes.

Q Right. And it's still the Federal law that you have to -- that there is a crime if you lose the so-called, quote, defense information, or mishandle it or --

A Yeah.

Q -- do any of the things listed in the statute, right?

A That's what the statute states, yes.

Q Okay. So --

A Unauthorized possession to access control, yep.

Q Okay. And I'm just going to represent to you that the other statutes in here are similar.

A Okay.

Q But that's the point. The point is, even if there wasn't classified information, or that the information had been somehow declassified, the FBI's investigation would've continued, right?

A That's correct. That's the statute that we would've investigated.

Q Right. That's what the Espionage Act says.

A Yep.

Q Okay. I think I went through most of this. Pardon me. One second.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] Yeah. I think that's it for now. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[D'Antuono Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

[redacted]

Q We'll go back on the record. It's 12:11.

Mr. D'Antuono, we -- my colleagues spoke about a Washington Post article, and I'm going to enter that as exhibit No. 6. The article was posted on March 1, 2023, titled, "Showdown Before the Raid: FBI Agents and Prosecutors Argued Over Trump." Feel free to take a moment to review.

A I've read it. Trust me.

Q You've read it? Okay.

So the second paragraph, the second sentence states: "But two senior FBI officials who would be in charge of leading the search resisted the plan as too combative and proposed instead to seek Trump's permission to search his property, according to the four people who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe a sensitive investigation."

Do you know who the two senior FBI officials were?

A Well, one would be me. And I don't want to -- I believe the other one probably would be Tony, Anthony Riedlinger.

Q Okay.

A He's going to kill me for, you know, bringing up his name.

Q That's okay. What was his title?

A He's the SAC, special agent in charge. So he reported to me. He was the counterintelligence SAC. He was the one leading -- you know, his people would be working the case, the ASAC would be underneath him, and then he's the SAC, so --

Q Do you ever remember describing the plan as too combative?

A I don't believe I used the "too combative," you know, terminology. I think The Post sometimes takes liberties with words, so --

Q And two more paragraphs down, the really short one says, "Starting in May, FBI agents in the Washington Field Office had sought to slow the probe, urging caution, given its extraordinary sensitivity," the people said.

Do you remember those events?

A Not -- not slow the probe. It just -- you know, in May, this is -- I believe we were talking about the search, right. And I think I said "they," meaning DOJ wanted to do a search immediately, right. After the information came in they wanted to search. They wanted to search the residence. We felt that, you know, in this case, the subpoena was more warranted, right. The boxes were turned over by NARA -- to NARA by the former President and his people, found classified documents in it. To us, that related just to immediate search.

Every case is different, right. Every case agent is different. Every ADIC, SAC, the bases of how we come up with theorizing how to do an investigation is different. So from the Petraeus case to this, like I have no involvement in that, right, so I don't know how that was worked. In this case, to me, as a white-collar agent, as someone that has done these high-profile cases, maybe not the President, Tony as well, is the fact that -- and the squad is that we should do a subpoena first and request the records. I don't know. Is it right or is it wrong? Who knows, right? Someone else to decide, but that's kind of the path that we chose.

Q And do you think the suggestion of doing the subpoena first before the search, do you think DOJ officials took that as an attempt to slow the probe?

A They may have, yeah. Yeah. There was consternation from both sides, you know. DOJ wants stuff. We were pushing back. That's the beauty of our system, right. It's like, that's the judicial system in a sense. That's how DOJ -- somebody mentioned they prosecute, we investigate. They don't like hearing that comment, right, but that's the truth of the matter, right. They're the prosecutors. We're the investigators. There's things that we opine from an investigative standpoint that needs to be done.

Now, the prosecutors disagree with it. It happens all the time. So that's why I laugh at the showdown and all that stuff. These are conversations I had with U.S attorneys -- AUSAs and U.S. attorneys and everyone else throughout my whole career. This was not a showdown. This is just a general discussion. This is an everyday discussion. So if somebody took it the other way, I'm sorry, but that's -- that was just the general discussion that we would have in every case. Every case.

Q And if we flip to the next page, the sixth paragraph down.

A You're making me count. This is like a quiz today.

Q Yeah. I'll read it. It says, "The FBI agents' caution also was rooted in the fact that mistakes in prior probes of Hillary Clinton and Trump had proved damaging to the FBI, and the cases subjected the Bureau to sustain public attacks from partisans, the people said."

I know last hour you mentioned some things that were learned from the Crossfire Hurricane investigation?

A Correct.

Q And you mentioned the aspect of the headquarters running the investigation --

A Yeah.

Q -- instead of field offices. Can you describe what your concerns were?

A Yeah. You know, right now in this country, in this world, perception is not reality a lot of times, right, and it rules over it. So, you know, it's unfortunate that we as leaders, in trying to determine courses of action, that we have to take things into consideration that are not normal, right.

In this -- in a matter like this, you have to be consistent, in my opinion. This is Steve D'Antuono's opinion, right. You have to be consistent in the way that you investigate. And so, when you learn of things that have happened in the past, you want to stay consistent and balanced, which is what I was always trying to just achieve throughout every single one of my investigations that I lead or did my -- on my own as a brick agent is consistency.

Because once you're not consistent, that's when people have cause to -- it's like being an umpire. I've used this analogy several times. I was an umpire as a kid. An umpire has to call a consistent game for both teams, right. And there's no teams here, but, come on, we all realize that, right. So you have to be consistent. And when somebody is in that position and you're not consistent, that's when it's not good. It's not.

So in this, we were just -- we had -- you learn from the past things that happened, and we just wanted to make sure that it was being consistently followed for reputational stuff. And, hey, I'll take the blame, accountability, whatever, but I was -- for me, the reputational risk to the Bureau, to the country, and to everything else, maybe I shouldn't put that on my shoulders, but I did as a leader. That's fine. Fault me for that. Whatever. But the reputational risk that we had to the breakdown of the trust of the FBI, that was -- that was in the back of my mind. I'm sorry, you know.

Q And is it accurate to say that one of the issues that you flagged as being inconsistent was a U.S. Attorney's Office not being involved?

A Yeah. For me, that's always been -- regardless of what the DOJ Main's, you know, mandate is to do, they usually always, in my 27 years of -- I've seen them involved in the U.S. Attorney's Office, you know. So this, to me, wasn't a consistent -- it wasn't consistent. So when I see inconsistencies, I'm going to call question to that for my own edification too.

So when somebody asks me later on, it's like, I can -- I can explain. Well, we asked that question. We pointedly asked them, and they answered, okay. Well, at the end of the day, DOJ is our parent corporation, and we do what they tell us to do, right. And so was it completely against policy? Was it completely against the law? No, absolutely not. But that's just the way they chose, and it's fine. I'm a good soldier, I'll march on, right, and we did. And we did. And we did the investigation to the best that we could.

Q And last hour when you were discussing how headquarters was not supposed to run investigations, it was supposed to be the field offices, you mentioned you were worried that the Department of Justice wasn't following that same protocol.

A Yeah. In a sense, like, you know -- and maybe they don't have too, right, I don't -- you know, but that was what we learned from Crossfire Hurricane, right. And the Bureau has taken those points to heart, right. We don't want to make the same mistakes. When I say "we," you know, the collective SACs, you know, ADICs, headquarters, we don't want to make those -- we don't want to make issues for ourselves. Why would we want to, right? And that's just calling the reputational risk and the Bureau into question. None of us want to sit there.

You read article after article about the Bureau being biased and politicalized and whatever, so you don't want to play into that. So you have to take, like the Director says, you've got to take the lessons and make sure we don't do the same thing, and we were collectively not -- trying to not do that in this case, you know.

Q And was the concern about the DOJ not following the same protocol, was that in regards to the -- only the National Security Division being involved and not a U.S. Attorney's Office?

A Yeah. And, again, I'm not sure if it's a protocol or not, right, but just the way we've always operated, the way I always operate, the way my people, right, I'm getting an understanding from my people working these cases before, right. They're the experts. I keep saying that, right. They're the experts. I didn't work classified cases before. They're telling me like, boss, this is not normal, right. The U.S. Attorney's Office should be involved. Okay.

As the ADIC, I'm the champion for them because I'm the one that's talking to the leaders, and so I have to take what my people tell me and champion that, right. That's what you do as a leader, right. You disagree with it, then you have to have a conversation with them and disagree and you come to an agreement. But that's my responsibility as a leader.

So I don't know every bit and piece of investigation. You can't. If you're doing that as a leader, you're not doing anything what you're supposed to be doing as a leader, right, for every other case. So that was my understanding from them.

My understanding from my past experience working public corruption investigations, not national security, right, not national security, was that a U.S. Attorney's Office was usually involved, you know. And we kept getting the response back, we're good, we're good, blah, blah, blah, and okay, that's fine. We marched on. We did what we were supposed to do, and we continued to investigate, you know, but we had disagreements. But that's --

Q Yeah.

A Every case you have disagreements. And I laugh about this with some of the AUSAs that I'm still friends with, like, Oh, my God, we had not fist to cuffs but we were arguing constantly, right, just different directions and stuff like that. So to me this is just normal.

Q Yeah. On the fourth page of the article --

A Yes. Sorry, I talk a lot.

Q We want you to explain. It's not --

A Yep.

Q Yeah. I think it might be before the white page. There's a sentence that -- kind of midway down that says, "But they said national security prosecutors."

A Yes.

Q I'll read that. And it says, "But they said national security prosecutors pushed back, and instead urged FBI agents to gather more evidence by conducting follow-up interviews with witnesses and obtaining Mar-a-Lago surveillance video from the Trump Organization."

The court sought surveillance video footage by subpoena in late June. I just kind of wanted to ask you about how the FBI came in possession of the surveillance video?

A My understanding of how -- it was a subpoena request, as was discussed before. And I believe the chronological -- yeah, it's after the June 3rd, right. So my understanding was the team got together and decided, you know, DOJ wanted to get the surveillance videos, and we said, okay. And then we put resources to viewing the surveillance videos, you know. And then we saw what we saw in the videos, my agents and analysts did, which is recorded in the affidavit as to what they've witnessed.

Q So the Trump Organization turned over the surveillance videos?

A That's my understanding, yeah. Yeah. They're responsive to the subpoena, so --

Q Okay. One more page over.

A Sure. Yeah, that's fine.

[redacted] Was that another data point that settling this via cooperation was a legitimate pathway?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, in the sense they complied with the subpoena, right. Initially, the first subpoena, we weren't getting much compliance with that, so I think that might have been what led to DOJ's, like, mentality of that, the attorney wasn't being compliant. They had to push for compliance, like, Hey, we've got to get these documents, and that's when the June 3rd meeting happened, right, eventually. You know, like you guys know the process, right. If they're not going to comply, we're going to hold them to comply, come to a grand jury and they agree to.

So there was some consternation back and forth, I think, between DOJ and the attorneys for former President Trump. I wasn't involved in any of that stuff. I know my agents were somewhat involved. I think there's a lot of just like head butting between attorneys. I don't know if they had personal relationships between Jay and Everett(ph), I'm not sure. It happens, you know. It happens on other things. So the compliance with this subpoena, yeah, it just lends -- [redacted] But there was surveillance coverage?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. There was surveillance coverage, not primarily of -- my understanding was not -- what was told to me by my people that there wasn't exactly a camera on the door. There was a camera, like, in the vicinity of the door, so, you know.

[redacted]

Q And so, if we're looking at the section under, "A rift within the FBI" --

A Yep.

Q -- it says, "Against the backdrop, Bratt and other senior national security prosecutors, including Assistant Attorney General Matt Olsen and George Toscas, a top counterintelligence official, met about a week before the August 8th raid with FBI agents on their turf, inside an FBI conference room. The prosecutors brought with them a draft search warrant."

Do you remember this meeting occurring?

A Oh, yeah.

Q And who all was in attendance at the meeting besides Bratt, Olsen, and Toscas? Was that all from DOJ?

A No. It was -- okay, so it was Jason Jones, our OGC, general counsel, FBI OGC, right; Matt Olsen; I believe Jay was over here, Jay; I don't know if Julie, I think her last name is Edelstein, I don't know if Julie was there or not. I'm not sure. George was on the phone. I remember that. Alan Kohler, our AD of counterintelligence; myself; and Tony Riedlinger, my SAC. That's all I could recall. I think there were other people in the room, but I'm not sure, so -- but those are the big players, so.

Q And is it accurate that prosecutors brought with them a search warrant, a draft search warrant?

A They may have. I don't think we passed around the search warrant. We discussed the search warrant. We discussed the probable cause of the search warrant. Jason, my general counsel, opined that there was probable cause. He believed that there was enough probable cause in the search warrant.

Because that was one of the things that, I guess, headquarters put on this discussion as to it was going to be reviewed by the general counsel, right. The general counsel was going to make an opinion as to the probable cause, which we all looked at too, and my -- so I have a chief division counsel as well within -- and ADCs within Washington field office, all field offices do, that they look through warrants, they do a lot of our legal work. They are our legal advisers, in a sense.

But, so Jason opined that there was enough probable cause. I wasn't disagreeing with the probable cause. I just wanted to make sure my agent, who was signing this, was comfortable with signing it. I've been involved in situations in which sometimes the agents are not comfortable with it. They are just good soldiers, and they believe that, you know, well, the attorneys wrote this or helped with this, and I'm supposed to sign it.

Well, that's not how I operate, right. It's like, you make sure that you're the one attesting to this. The attorney is not attesting to anything on this document. This is an affidavit by a special agent of the FBI. You make sure that every I is dotted, every T is crossed. If you don't have comfortability with this, you don't sign it. I'm sorry. I'm not being made to do anything of my agent -- that's just the way I operate, and that's how I've always done for 27 years. And, you know, not trying to push on my agents, but, you know, everyone is different, right, so -- Chairman Jordan. So in this meeting there were you, Mr. Jones, Mr. Kohler from the FBI?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. And then from DOJ were Bratt, Olsen, and Toscas.

Mr. D'Antuono. And, yeah, Tony Riedlinger too, SAC Riedlinger.

Chairman Jordan. Riedlinger. And so there were four from the FBI, three from Justice?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. And there might have been more from the FBI. I think there was a DAD for George -- for Alan, but I don't recall her name, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Who gave the information to The Washington Post about this meeting?

Mr. D'Antuono. Well, I have no idea from DOJ, but I can tell you, I dispelled some of the stuff that was coming up. I was asked, so -- Chairman Jordan. Wait, wait, but this information from this news story, did you, Mr. Riedlinger, Mr. Jones, or Mr. Kohler give this information to the FBI?

Mr. D'Antuono. They -- I don't know who gave it to, right. So after this came out, this is after I retired, right, so The Post --

Chairman Jordan. I'm not worried about that. That's fine. You cleared it up after the fact.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, yeah, I cleared it up. I don't know who gave the information, but I'm like, Wow, you -- somebody was taking notes in this meeting, because if you could -- I don't remember everything I always say.

Chairman Jordan. If you were guessing, I mean --

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't want to guess, sir.

Chairman Jordan. I understand.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. But do you think it would be your FBI agents, or do you think it would be folks from the Justice Department?

Mr. D'Antuono. I really don't. I don't want to guess, sir. I just don't, so --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't think it was my FBI agents, put it that way.

Chairman Jordan. You don't think it was your FBI agents?

Mr. D'Antuono. In my opinion, my opinion, and everyone has -- I had that disagreement with the attorney a couple weeks ago, stuff doesn't come out of the FBI. Like -- like, I've never leaked anything.

Chairman Jordan. I'm not saying --

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, no. And I know FBI, right. We don't -- we take our oath extremely important, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Thanks.

[redacted]

Q A little bit further down, it says, "Tempers ran high in the meeting." Would you agree with that statement?

A No, it's like, I don't -- well, maybe their tempers did. I -- you know, my personality is -- I'm from Rhode Island, right, and so, I speak it like it is, right. I'm a northerner, so I tell it like it is. And sometimes I wear my emotions on my sleeve or whatever, and so -- but to me, it wasn't tempers. I was just like, I was asking questions that they weren't -- they were giving answers to, and they didn't like me asking the questions. But I'm sorry, I am the ADIC of WFO, I'm a senior government official, I'm a senior Bureau official, and I'm going to ask a damn question. And I'm not just going to take it lightly what DOJ tells me to do. That's just not how I operate, you know.

And I might have said, and I think it was reported in there, like, if I'm ordered to do something, I'm going to do it, but I'm going to ask questions first, because I want to make sure I have comfortability in anything I do, because I'm not taking in the shorts for somebody else.

And that's kind of how -- I asked several questions, some of what we discussed here about, you know, the U.S. Attorney's Office, and all of a sudden they're like, nope, NSD is working this. Fine, okay. That's your answer. But I asked the question, right. So if their -- their tempers ran deep, it wasn't mine. I was just trying to do the best thing for all parties. That's all I cared about. So --

Q And a little bit along that same line, you know, two more paragraphs down, it said, you questioned why the search would target presidential records as well as classified records, particularly because the May subpoena had only sought the latter. Is that accurate?

A Yes. Yeah, I asked that. It's like, so it was brought up in the last -- you know, the affidavit was written based upon presidential records and other governmental records, and, you know, classified documents were in there as well, right. So the statutes that were -- we discussed before were viable statutes, right. We investigate those things, we do, under the, you know, National Security Act. I got an education today as to where that came from, which is great, right. I love history.

So, but that -- my concern, again, was the FBI getting involved in something that maybe NARA -- I made this comment in the meeting, like why is NARA not here? It's their records. The presidential -- their presidential records. They're the ones trying to get them back. Why is NARA not involved? Why is this always coming to the FBI? Why are we always taking everything and taking the responsibility of everything, right? Where's the other parties to this? And they're like, we don't need NARA. NARA is going to leak this. That's what they said, NARA is going to leak this. And I'm like, all right. So you can't -- I can't argue with that, right, and so --

[redacted]

Q Just to be clear, DOJ officials said NARA is going to leak this?

A That's what they said.

Q And I think we pretty much established, although you wanted to be polite about this, that either Olsen, Bratt, or Toscas leaked everything in the meeting to The Washington Post?

A I don't know who leaked. Was it them or was it somebody else that they talked to or described the meeting to? Like, I went back and talked to a bunch of my SAC peers and stuff like that about the meeting. I'm like, Oh, my God, this is what just happened, because I'm a -- you all have peers, you all have people you talk to, you all have confidants, mentors, people that you're like, this just doesn't seem -- you know, so you talk.

So I don't know if it's them, and I don't want to, like, damn Matt and -- they're good people. They really are. Matt, Jay, and George, they're good people. And I don't know but maybe there was somebody else that they tangentially said it too. I don't know who leaked this, but they had some pretty good information.

Q This is a long --

A Well, yeah, they're putting words in my mouth too that -- like I don't appreciate the reputation that -- my reputation that has gotten crushed out there for stuff like this, that I didn't do anything wrong, you know. It's like I question things. I'm sorry that I, as an FBI senior official, actually question DOJ, but I think that's somewhat my job, isn't it, as a leader? That's how I took my oath, you know. And that's how I took my position, you know. So and I did it to the day I left the Bureau. I did it from the beginning to the end.

Q Okay. Circling back to where the --

A Yeah, so the presidential records, you know, that type of stuff, I asked about that, and the response was, you know, we don't want NARA in this. I'm like, all right, Well, I said -- and I made this quote, I made this comment, I think it's in there, I'm not sure, it might be in another article, you know, I said we're not the presidential records police, right. I said that. We're not -- FBI should not be the presidential records police, right.

We've got enough responsibilities in this country, CI, CT, violent crime, everything I had to do in Washington Field Office was a mess. People just don't understand the -- what we have to do in a field office. And then to lop something else on to us, especially at the Washington Field Office when we're trying to protect this Nation's -- this Nation, you know, the Capitol from CI and CT threats, it was just, come on.

Like, and that squad, that squad that was dealing with this stuff, had other espionage cases that they could've been handling too, right. So, you know, things like that, it's like, if somebody else can do it, I'm a firm believer in that, if other agencies can do this stuff too, let them do it. Why does it always have to come to the FBI? That was my take on that stuff.

But at the end of the day -- bless you, sir -- at the end of the day, we're the law enforcement arm of the DOJ. I believe in that. I truly believe in that, that we were the law enforcement arm of DOJ, and that they're our parent corporation, and if we need to do stuff, we need to do it, you know. But you need to question too, not blind loyalty, so -- sorry, I made a speech. That's not good.

[redacted]

Q If we flip the page to the next page, there's a discussion about -- in the second paragraph that says, "FBI agents on the case worried the prosecutors were being overly aggressive." Then it kind of goes into what you've testified about regarding how you wanted to seek consent from Trump's attorneys to search.

And I know the last hour you went through kind of the timeline with my colleagues about, you know, when the subpoena was issued, when the DOJ was speaking with Trump's attorneys, when NARA was speaking with President Trump's attorneys. Even though all of that occurred in this meeting that occurred the week before the raid, you still agreed that you should seek consent from President Trump's attorney. Is that accurate?

A Yeah. We believe, my team and myself, believe that that was accurate, that the -- the first person we should have went to is the attorney. He was involved, given the deference, even though, you know, there was belief -- but DOJ had a different belief, and I don't -- you know, that's their belief. We as investigators believed one thing. We thought, you know, we could talk to the attorney. You know, there was -- we actually had a script that we wrote to talk to the attorney.

You know, we didn't believe that Jay had a very good relationship with the attorney. We didn't think he would be the one that should deliver it because of the relationship, and it's like, it's all about relationships, right. It's like, I've built a career around relationship-building and getting information out of people and making people -- not making people do stuff but, you know, getting people to, you know, consent and stuff like that or to talk to you. And so, you want to put the best person in the position to do that.

And so we felt strongly that it could've worked, and we wanted to give it a try, but we were -- they felt differently, and they convinced my bosses that their course of action was correct. Deputy tells me -- believes what they're saying, and Steve just, you know, do it, make it happen. Roger that, sir. I'm on it. We'll make it happen, but we need to do the operation this way. Absolutely, yeah, we're not going to -- you know.

We're all -- and then we had a meeting right before -- a couple days, like that Thursday or Friday, with George and Jay to discuss the operation and stuff like that. And, you know, I wanted to make sure my people were comfortable doing it. And we got it done, you know. We got it done in the most expeditious way we could and safest, and we were trying to be very quiet about it just for the reputation of the former President, as well as for the reputation of the Bureau and everyone else.

So, I cared about the optics, I really did, for both sides, you know. And, again, blame me for that. That's fine, whatever. Maybe that's not my job, but that's how I felt my job was, so, you know --

Q And you testified earlier about how your team could've done surveillance, was prepared to do surveillance on Mar-a-Lago to make sure the documents didn't leave the premises. And it's quoted a couple paragraphs down in the letter. It says, your team said they could keep surveillance on Mar-a-Lago and act quickly if they saw any scramble to move evidence.

What kind of techniques was your team prepared to use to make sure the documents weren't moved?

A Yeah, we were just -- I think I've said before that our understanding was no one was looking at the property at that point. It's a very, very large property. No one was living there. There was caretakers, people there, and stuff like that. The service is always there, I believe, protecting it.

So, you know, we would've put a surveillance team around it. I'm not sure what the components of the surveillance team were. We didn't get into that specificity, but we were going to surveillance team some sorts around it to see what the comings and goings were, if they decided, like, if we were going down the road of talking to the attorney and then someone decide that we're going to try and go destroy evidence or move the evidence, right, if we see a big box truck coming in. And, you know, at that point, we would've had a search warrant in hand and signed, right.

Just because -- and I made this comment too, right. Just because you have a search warrant, you have probable cause for a search warrant doesn't mean you have to actually do the search warrant. I've heard plenty of times that I've had probable cause to do a search warrant, but you don't do it, right. Other people disagree with that, right. In my opinion, in my experience, just because you have the right to do a search warrant doesn't mean you do it all the time, right.

There's reasons for it, safety issues, there's other ways, or there's other ways of getting documents, right. So in this case their fear of -- DOJ's fears of this stuff being destroyed or moved or whatever, we were just trying to alleviate that. Like, boss, I said to one of the deputy directors, boss, I can -- we'll just put a surveillance team around it. We'll make sure. If they do, here's a search warrant, and we'll enact it, we'll start it right then and there.

The Bureau comes with a lot of resources and flexibility in what we can move and when we need to move, right. And that's -- that was -- I firmly believe, my team firmly believes that we could do -- we could protect that. I just -- I guess we didn't convince our DOJ counterparts of that.

Q And during the first hour you briefly discussed conversations with the Secret Service. Who was interacting with the Secret Service?

A I don't -- I don't remember. I don't know if it was my ASAC or SSA. I think my ASAC or my SSA. I don't recall. I really don't. But we were -- FBI was interacting with the service. I don't want to speculate as to who and stuff like that, but it was one of the leads for the detail.

Q Do you know what FBI was discussing with the Secret Service? Were you briefed on those?

A No. I was -- broadly. All I understood, because one of the concerns was -- not concern. It was like, you know, someone, a comment, which I think is absurd, but, you know, Oh, is the Service going to block us from going in? It's like, come on, the Service is not going to block us from going in. You know, this is a duly, lawful search. The service isn't going to do that, right. We had no concerns about that.

Somebody brought it up, and we just -- I remember the conversation like, No, we've already been in contact with the service. We've been in contact with the team lead. We will be in contact with the team lead. They'll know that we're coming or to open up the gate, because we have a lawful search warrant, right, so there was no issues, you know. So that was kind of -- to me, I just put that out of mind, out of sight.

Q And after this meeting that's been described in the Washington Post article, the decision was to move forward with the search warrant, and then I believe you stated that there was some operational discussions. Is that correct?

A Yeah.

Q Do you know how many discussions there were or meetings, I guess?

A So I was only -- I was involved in this meeting, and I was involved in the meeting prior to the search, a couple days before. I can't remember the date. It was probably on a Friday. I think we did the search on a Monday, Tuesday. I don't recall. I think it was that Friday. So we had an overall meeting to discuss the operational-type stuff.

Q And was DOJ involved in that meeting as well?

A Yeah, Jay Bratt and George Toscas were on that meeting. It was a Teams call.

Q And was that when they discussed what date to do the search? I believe you discussed that.

A So that came from an email exchange between me and George Toscas.

Q Okay.

A Yep.

Q And did that happen before this meeting a couple days before?

A Yeah. Yeah. That was all -- that was after this meeting, but before the search. So I don't -- I don't -- I don't have my calendar. I didn't keep anything. So this meeting happened, and then we left this meeting still hoping that we could get them to, you know, change their mind and do it the way we wanted to do it, which is, again, people blast me for that. I wasn't trying to stop anything. I wasn't trying to stop the investigation or throw the investigation out or anything like that. But I just thought there was a different way of doing it, right, and to retrieve the documents that we needed to retrieve.

The Tuesday after -- I think this might have been on Monday. Tuesday -- or this could've been on Tuesday. It was National Night Out in the city. I remember specifically because I was at National Night Out in D.C. with Tony and several of my other folks, and the deputy director came and all that stuff. And we had a conversation about it.

George had sent this email that was out there and said, Hey, Steve, you know, the agents are ready to do the search, you know, we're good to go, something like that. We're good to go, we're going to do it Thursday or Friday, let's discuss it. And I wrote, George, I'm out at National Night Out. We're not -- I don't have time to discuss this right now.

I kind of got, not upset, but it's like, you're talking about my agents? Like they're my agents, not yours. They're mine. I just -- I talked to the ASAC and the SSA, they're not -- we have a different plan for this, my agents. So don't tell me what my agents -- I didn't say this, but in the back of my mind, I was like, don't tell me what my agents want to do because my agents tell me completely different, right.

So that's why I said, We don't have time for this, Tony and I are out, and we'll discuss this tomorrow at the call. And I might have said that we are going to, you know -- I might have been very strong with George saying we are going to talk to the attorney, you know, and we're not going to do it this -- before -- something like that. I don't know. It's in the email. I don't have the email. And he shot back and emailed later and said some other nasty stuff, but, you know -- and then I talked to my deputy director, and he said, you know, we're just going to go forward with the search.

[redacted]

Q What type of nasty stuff did he say?

A Something about my gruff and something demeanor is often cute, or whatever, but not in this case, and he kind of tried to put me in my place, which I didn't take -- you know, I took a little umbrage to that.

Chairman Jordan. From the Post story, FBI agents wanted to call Corcoran, President Trump's lawyer, once they arrived in Mar-a-Lago and wait for him to fly down and join the search. Prosecutors said that would not work.

That's how it happened?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. They just disagreed that it was -- they just didn't believe that Mr. Corcoran was going to comply, you know.

Chairman Jordan. So they wouldn't even -- in other words, you said, okay, how about instead of us trying to work it out with the lawyer ahead of time, what if when we get there, we call the lawyer then, have them come over, do the search, and they said no to that?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. There was a bunch of iterations that we were just trying -- I try to compromise on things, or I try to negotiate and stuff like that.

Chairman Jordan. I can see what you're trying to do, yeah.

Mr. D'Antuono. It was just trying to like, Okay, why don't we just do it this way, then. How about, like, we have the search warrant, we're ready to go, we've got 30 people there, staged, and then try to call their attorney, right. They didn't want to do that either. And, again, it's their belief. You have to talk to them as to what mindset they had. I don't know what their mindset was. They are entitled to their belief about what the attorney would or would not have done. That's based upon their thought. My people were telling me their interaction with the attorney is they thought that this was going to work. My people were telling me.

[redacted]

Q So you have 30 agents on the scene?

A Approx -- I don't know.

Q Approximately?

A Yeah. Could've, yeah.

Q You have video surveillance in the area?

A Well, we could've.

Q That you had access to?

A We could've, yes. Yeah.

Q Right. And they still would not wait for Mr. Corcoran to arrive. At that point, there's no -- no evidence is escaping. There's no box truck that's going to be driven in, correct?

A Again, I wasn't on scene. I don't -- you know, it was improbable something like that would happen, like that would be able to take the documents out or set fire, whatever.

Q You're just trying to deescalate the situation, correct, by having Mr. Corcoran there?

A Yes. You know, I think at the time we didn't know where Mr. Corcoran was too, right. So I think their concern, DOJ's concern was, well, by the time it's going to take them to fly there or, you know, the former President to fly there, it's going to take too much time. And that's where I was like, well, put a surveillance around it. We'll do -- we could do what we -- you have concerns, I'll try to alleviate those concerns.

But apparently, we did not alleviate their concerns, so they made the decision, which is perfectly fine, you know. They just had a different belief than we did. And I was just -- as a leader, I was just trying to take what my people said, use my own experience, and kind of say, Okay, I see plausibility here, and in my experience we usually go to the attorneys first, you know. If there's no attorney involved then maybe you go straight to the search warrant, right. I've done that plenty of times.

Q So that would have been the ordinary course of action?

A In certain circumstances, yeah. Yeah, yeah. Yeah. So -- maybe. Maybe not. I don't know. So every case is different. This case is completely different, right, so --

Q Fair enough.

Mr. Massie. I just have some quick follow-up questions about the pipe bomb investigation that happened while you were in charge there.

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely.

Mr. Massie. We've got the January 5th pipe bomb suspect who's seen on video meandering about for several minutes.

Mr. D'Antuono. Correct.

Mr. Massie. And I asked you, was there an effort to use geofencing, to use the data to identify the suspect or to track the suspect, because we see in the video then what looks like they're using a phone. And can you tell me, you said that there was some data that was lost or corrupted by the telecom provider. Can you tell me that again?

Mr. D'Antuono. My understanding was that we had -- we would try to get cell phone data from those days from everyone, right, every carrier, T-Mobile. I don't want to like name --

Mr. Massie. Right. All of them.

Mr. D'Antuono. All of them, right, because that's what we do. And so these questions, ah, did you do this? Yeah, we did. We did them all, right. There was one provider -- I can't remember and I don't want to speculate as to the provider, but there was one provider that the data for I believe January 5th and possibly January 6th was corrupt and we couldn't get it.

Mr. Massie. What was your reaction when they told you we can't get that data because it's corrupt?

Mr. D'Antuono. Oh, great, you know, that's -- that's wonderful, right. That, like, really screws up everything, right, because that's -- you hope to have all the data, right, as an investigator you want all the data. But things happen in investigations. This has happened before with bank statements or bank account information or corrupted data or email servers and whatever. Things happen, right. And it's just like, oh, Jesus, you know.

Mr. Massie. In an investigation this important, has it ever happened with a telecom provider in your experience?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know, like this --

Mr. Massie. For you in the ones that you've covered.

Mr. D'Antuono. Well, this is the highest profile investigation I would've done. I've had corrupted data before in other cases and stuff like that and subscriber information, other matters. I don't -- I don't put any thought that there was any reason for that data to be corrupted. I really don't. I think it was just happenstance. It was just dumb, bad luck on all our parts, because we're still waiting to find out who the hell this person was. And it just sucks for everyone.

Mr. Massie. Okay. I think earlier you -- and I don't want to mischaracterize this, so I want to give you another chance. When I asked about the quality of the DNC video cameras --

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah.

Mr. Massie. -- to me, they don't seem as good as your average gas station. And given that Watergate and things like that have happened here, I would expect a little more in the quality. Is it fair to say that they are lower quality than you would expect?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. Well, for this day and age, yes, absolutely. But I believe what my people -- because we discussed that, right, with my agents and stuff like that. And they're like, Yeah, the camera system was not that good, right. And it's just unfortunate, again, another unfortunate. There wasn't a lot of video around there. People surmise and suspect that, oh, there's all this video all over the country, all over D.C. It's not true, right. Ring cameras, all that stuff, if you look at it, and I've talked to people about this, right, because we've gotten that bash, and I don't like the Bureau being bashed for stuff that we've looked at. We've gone through neighborhood searches. We've asked everyone for their Ring camera stuff. Not everyone subscribes.

If you look at the row houses, they're pretty far off the street, right, so they're not going to capture that movement sometimes, right.

Mr. Massie. Right.

Mr. D'Antuono. So there's a lot of that. So DNC, I was -- we were flabbergasted by the fact that they don't have a very good system of video. But again, it's something you have to ask them, and I think they've upgraded their system to the point now, but they didn't, so --

Mr. Massie. What was the chain of custody of that video? Can you -- are you sure it didn't get compressed or degraded? Did it go through a contractor before -- between the DNC and the FBI? Do you guys hire outside contractors?

Mr. D'Antuono. We don't. If we're getting video evidence, we don't hire outside contractors. We would get it directly from DNC, but I can't opine on that because I don't know what the procedures were that my agents and analysts followed to get that. You'd have to go through the records and the chain of custody for the case.

Mr. Massie. I think you agreed earlier that the two people who found the pipe bombs would naturally be suspects. Is that true?

Mr. D'Antuono. Well, yeah. It's -- I think in any investigation, you know, if the person that's finding the evidence there could possibly be a suspect and you kind of rule them out, right, by talking to them and getting evidence. So I would suspect that my agents would've ran that to ground and ruled them out.

Mr. Massie. So -- but the person who found -- you either haven't identified the person who found the second pipe bomb, or did you?

Mr. D'Antuono. I -- honestly, sir, I don't know the granularity of everything my agents and analysts did in that matter. It's just -- it's a whole host of stuff that's going on. As the ADIC, as like any senior leader, I'm getting briefed on things, and that part never came up, so --

Mr. Massie. Given that, you know, 1-hour kitchen timer can't detonate a bomb 17 hours later --

Mr. D'Antuono. That's correct.

Mr. Massie. -- it seems likely that these were meant to be found the day of. And one of them we do know who found it, Karen -- Karlin Younger. Do you know how she was ruled out as a suspect or an unwitting accomplice to somebody?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know. Again, it would be in the case file. The Bureau should be able to give you those answers.

Mr. Massie. That's my final question. Who is the person who would know the answer to these questions at the FBI?

Mr. D'Antuono. You know, the case agents would. You know, honestly --

Mr. Massie. Did they work for you?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah.

Mr. Massie. What were their names?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't recall at this point, so -- it's just names sometimes escape me, so --

Mr. Massie. Was there a supervisor between you and them?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes, there were several supervisors between me and them, so --

Mr. Massie. Can you give us their names?

Mr. D'Antuono. Could you just find out those -- I don't want to like put people on the spot and stuff like that. I really don't. You know, could you just find out from the Bureau and that stuff? Just because it's just like --

[redacted]

Q Can you just tell us titles?

A Yeah, it would be supervisory special agent, and then there would be the ASAC, and then there would be the SAC, so those three.

Q So the line agent, okay.

A Yeah.

Q Supervisory special agent?

A Yeah. They're hardworking people, right.

Mr. Massie. I understand.

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't want to put them in a bind, you know.

Mr. Massie. We can -- I guess, now that we know their titles, we could find out. Thank you.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. It's the standard hierarchy of the Bureau, right. It's like those -- that case came under a supervisor that would've supervised that investigation, right, and everything that transpired, the ASAC at WFO, an ASAC and an SAC, and then the ADIC obviously. That's why I was like four levels removed. And I'm not like in the granularity of everything that's being done, you know, at that present time.

Mr. Massie. But you did appear on camera making appeals and giving details to the public?

Mr. D'Antuono. Correct. Well, we needed information for the public. We -- what was -- the briefings I was getting from my agents and analysts was like, we need more tips, right. We need more of that information. So we collectively, the FBI, with headquarters, Washington Field Office, OPA, the deputy, everyone opined that, you know, okay, this is good. Put this out there. Because in a lot of circumstances, and I disagree with Chris Swecker in this, we put out information in order to elicit information, right. So we have to put out something in order to get people to respond.

We got a lot of tips. Now, a lot of them didn't lead to the -- you know, lead to anything, but some of them do, right. And same thing with the January 6th stuff, we put a lot of information on that, and we were getting people responding, right. So it was the same course of action here that we didn't have enough information. Our leads weren't turning into it. So we turned to the public. Again, be it right or be it wrong, the public helped a lot in this investigation, and they help in a lot of investigations, so, you know, that was our rationale.

Mr. Massie. But there's -- still nobody has been arrested as a suspect?

Mr. D'Antuono. I wish somebody would've. I really do. It's like, it's a case that I wish we would find the person for the good of everyone, right, for the -- for people to stop speculating, one, and causing rumors and innuendos out there that the Bureau is not doing what we're supposed to be doing.

We put -- when I was there for 2 years it was a high priority, as much detail as they want, we put every resource that we could. We did every check, every lab test, every data. We ran this through systems back and forth, up and down, sideways, all over the place. And I wish you could talk to the case agents and the data analysts, and you -- I honestly believe you would get an understanding that we didn't just put this to bed and not want to find the person.

Do I look like a person that doesn't want to find this person?

Mr. Massie. You do not.

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't, right. And if I could have talked to you back then, you would've gotten the same response from me that you're getting now that we put every matter to it, right. And so when I was doing the media stuff, they were asking me the same questions, but I couldn't say everything, right. You just can't.

Chris is right in some sense, you can't give all the information. I don't know.

I'm more communicative than most probably. I'm a lot more transparent than most, right, most FBI agents than maybe you've talked to, right. That's just me. It's, like -- I believe in educating and understanding the process, because without that, you're not going to get the true understanding of what we actually did and people are just going to speculate. That's bad for everyone.

Mr. Massie. All right. Thank you.

Mr. D'Antuono. So, sorry, sir.

[redacted]

Q Mr. D'Antuono, for Mr. Massie's edification, just to clarify that, because we may not be as familiar with Bureau structure.

A Yep.

Q So, A, this would still be, to your knowledge, would still be a high priority with your success?

A Yeah, I know Dave.

Q So the ADIC?

A Yeah, the ADIC, I saw him last weekend at memorial service. Absolutely. This is still a high priority for the WFO as far as I know, yes.

Q And then, B, of course, the SAC in this situation would've been under the counterterrorism branch, I would assume --

A It was under counterterrorism.

Reporter. Wait for him to finish the question.

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm sorry.

[redacted]

Q It would be under the counterterrorism branch in Washington Field?

A That is correct.

Q And then that, of course, lineage would've been underneath that. Your assistant --

A Correct.

Q -- special agent in charge, I'm assuming, who would've had domestic terrorism, maybe it was divided or bifurcated?

A So there were three branches. It might have been -- that particular matter for case manager purposes might have been put under a different branch under the CT. I forget if it was under branch two. I don't think it was under branch three, so --

Q Okay. And then for members of this committee, if they wanted an informational briefing on the status, your best recommendation, of course, I suppose, would go through FBI legislative affairs but --

A Absolutely. That's -- the general course of action, as you well know, is go through, you know, legislative affairs, and then they determine who's the best person to come talk, so, you know.

Q Sir?

Mr. Massie. No. I think I need to have a meeting with legislative affairs and share some of this video of what appears to be the second pipe bomb being found by somebody in a hoodie at the DNC.

Mr. D'Antuono. Now, I will say, a hoodie wasn't uncommon back then, remember that, right?

Mr. Massie. Right.

Mr. D'Antuono. So everyone was hoodie'd up and masked. So that's why a lot of the -- well, the questions were getting was like, how can you find out what this person's gender is? It's like, my God, they're in a hoodie, gloves, mask. That was not out of the ordinary. And we talked to a lot of people that you saw in that video, like the person walking the dog, I think there was a person walking the baby, and all that stuff -- not walking the baby, but, you know, walking the carriage, you know, the -- so a lot of speculation out there of what did the Bureau do. We did a lot of that, right.

And a lot of those leads didn't amount to anything because they didn't see anything out of the ordinary. You can't believe that they didn't, because you were taking that from a hindsight, you know, armchair quarterback, Monday morning quarterback view. But back then, you've got to realize, it was COVID, you know. Everyone was hoodie'd up in masks. I still -- but today, if you see somebody in a hoodie, like I saw a couple, you know, days ago, in a mask, that's suspect now, right.

Mr. Massie. Right.

Mr. D'Antuono. And I'm like, I'm staying away from that person in the city, so --

Mr. Massie. Thank you.

Mr. D'Antuono. Sorry.

Chairman Jordan. Did you know if the prosecutors -- going back to the Mar-a-Lago situation. Do you know if those prosecutors have now moved from this investigation and working with you to the special counsel's investigation?

Mr. D'Antuono. My understanding is they -- I was told that Jay moved over under Jack Smith. That's what I was told.

Chairman Jordan. Jay?

Mr. D'Antuono. Jay Bratt.

Chairman Jordan. So what about Mr. Olsen and Mr. Toscas?

Mr. D'Antuono. Mr. Olsen is like the AAG, so he's top guy for national security as far as, you know, in that.

Chairman Jordan. Understand.

Mr. D'Antuono. And George is, I think, a higher official above Jay as well.

Chairman Jordan. But the key guy, Jay?

Mr. D'Antuono. That's my understanding, sir, yes.

Chairman Jordan. He's moved over. And have you had any -- you -- the special counsel is named the 15th. You retired, I think, the 30th of November.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. Did you have any interaction with the special counsel in that 2-week timeframe?

Mr. D'Antuono. I did not. He was still over at the Hague. I think he had a biking injury to his leg, so it took him some time to get over, so I never did.

Chairman Jordan. I remember those news reports. No phone calls with him? No emails with him?

Mr. D'Antuono. No, no.

Chairman Jordan. Anyone else that he put together on the team?

Mr. D'Antuono. No, no. Other than U.S. Attorney's Office people and stuff like that that I believe eventually went over to the team for the other matters as well.

Chairman Jordan. What about your -- any of the agents who had worked on the case?

Mr. D'Antuono. So I do not talk to -- I just saw them at a memorial service, my assistant, my executive assistant just passed due to 9/11 cancer.

Chairman Jordan. I'm sorry to hear that.

Mr. D'Antuono. So we just had a memorial service on Friday. I'm a strong believer and I'm not putting my people in a position that I'm not putting them in, right, so I purposely do not ask questions.

Chairman Jordan. I understand that. I appreciate that. I'm saying in that 2-week timeframe, from the 15th to the 30th.

Mr. D'Antuono. So we hadn't solidified what was going over at that point, but what I suggested to the deputy was that the case agents that were working this, I think it was like four or five, a couple analysts and the forensic accountants that were working some of the cases, like the other part -- not the Mar-a-Lago side, the classified document side would go over.

But no one in the Bureau likes independent counsel investigation -- not no one. I shouldn't say that. But it just -- you don't want to get sucked into an independent counsel investigation because you get lost, right. So they wanted to tether back to WFO for their own sake so that they don't get lost. It's just -- it's unfortunate.

I went through the whole Clinton administration when there was independent counsel, as I was a young agent back then, you know, all the other stuff. So I understand, right. So what we tried to do with Jack, and I believe this because I -- I believe this happened is that they're still tethered to Washington Field Office. So they work for the independent special counsel, but they're still tethered to Washington Field Office.

Chairman Jordan. Thanks.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yep.

[redacted]

Q Have you ever had any interactions with a lawyer named Sophia Brill at the Justice Department?

A Does not ring a bell, no.

Q She was on the special counsel's team.

A Yeah, so I didn't have any interaction with special counsel's team. Like I know a couple of the people that went over from the U.S. Attorney's Office in name only. Again, I haven't talked to them at all. But I was on my way out, you know, so I was just trying to -- to the last day, I was just trying to manage and make sure my people were taken care of, so I was trying to broker the -- which the deputy director agreed with and they brokered that deal.

[redacted]

Q Mr. D'Antuono, we're going to slide back to January 6th, if we may, writ large. Were you or anyone else at FBI headquarters aware of planned protests to take place in and around the Capitol on January 6th?

A Yes.

Q To what degree were you aware or briefed in advance?

A So we had a lot of briefings, a lot of discussions leading up to January 6th with my intelligence folks, with all my CT, criminal, everyone. It was all my executive management and then headquarters as well, so --

Q How would you characterize the types of information that were coming in from what types of sources or, you know -- I'm --

A Well, you know, a lot of it was stuff that was put out in open-source information, right. Some of the stuff is from CHS information.

Q Sure.

A You know, it's just a whole collection of where we usually gather our intelligence for these things, right. Partners, right, MPD, Capitol Police, Park, right, Secret Service. We were sharing, right. We were consistently trying to share the information. And I think it's been, you know, obviously reported out there the fact that, you know, we had a different take on, like, January 6th at this point. It felt that it was going to be something different than the last two protests, November and December, so --

Q Would it be fair to say that those -- there were preemptive, you know, intelligence sharing and planning meetings prior to January 6th that --

A Yeah.

Q -- were happening?

A I might not have been involved in every single one of them. My intelligence analysts were involved in things, right, and I was getting briefed at the end --

Q Sure.

A -- you know, as to how those meetings were, and there was a lot of information coming out. The week leading up to January 6th, I think it was that, you know, the holiday week and stuff like that, there was a lot more conversations between me and the deputy director, Dave Bowdich as well, you know, kind of going, Oh, this has a different feel to it, you know.

Q Sure.

A And so a lot of questions were going back to my people to get the answers. We were going back to our partners and definitely sharing that information. We, when I say "we," collectively, as a law enforcement community here in the city, I can't speak for all of them, but I firmly believe that we all knew that about 20,000 to 25,000 people were going to be coming in the city that day, amassing on the Ellipse, right, and then the end result was going to be at the U.S. Capitol. I knew that. I'm not -- we connected the dots, as much as people say we didn't. We're not dumb. I'm not dumb, right. We connected the dots.

Honestly, we had a document which was open-source document from one of the groups. I don't remember what. But it was -- showed a map of the U.S. Capitol and it showed where all the -- it was like a Disney map or a Busch Gardens map, right. It was very color code and stuff. It showed all like the East Lawn, West Lawn, who was going to be speaking on each, which time and all that stuff.

It's out there. The OIG has a copy of it. I've spoken to the OIG for 6 hours about this stuff or more. You know, that stuff -- that's the intelligence that led us to believe that there is going to be people amassing on the Capitol lawn in droves, right.

Q Commensurate with Bureau protocol or their command post setup at either Washington Field our headquarters in the SIOC or both?

A Yeah. We -- WFO had it, and I do believe there was a sister one at headquarters at SIOC, right. But WFO would've been the lead, right. SIOC would've been -- well, we wouldn't -- I put a big responsibility on my people to make sure that we were in contact with them, right, because you have to have their information flow, right.

So we set up ours on January 5th, the day before. We shut it down probably that night, whenever, like, you normally do if there's no activity going on. I don't remember the time. We had a final brief out on that time. We shut it down, and then picked it back up the next day, I think at 6:00. I'm not sure. I'd have to look at the thing. But I was in early. I was in. My people were in. We were monitoring with our TFOs and stuff like that.

Q Okay. So it would be fair to characterize there was a lot of front-end sharing and multilateral sharing as we often do with partners at that, there were command posts set up, there was a lot of, kind of, front-loaded awareness and preparation prior to the events on --

A Absolutely. Absolutely.

Q Thank you. So with that in mind then, the committee has received testimony that domestic terrorism subjects who indicated a desire to attend the January 6th protest were physically surveilled from various field offices up to the border of Washington Field Office, at which point, a handoff of surveillance from field office to field office would take place. Were you aware of that activity?

A So I was aware of like -- one of the questions I had leading up to this is like, what CHS information do we have to know that there are people coming into the city, right. The thing with D.C. is the fact that, and this is, again, my opinion, there's not a big domestic terrorism nexus here, right. It's D.C., right. But we are the end point for a lot of the anger, right, so we receive everything.

So prior to this, I brought the two other protests, and my question back to headquarters is like, we need to know who is coming into my territory so we need to prepare for this stuff. So that was a lot of the questions going back and forth. So I would question my people, they were questioning headquarters, and we were trying to flow that information. So a lot of that stuff is going at the lower levels, not on my level.

But my understanding was there were a lot of CHSes -- not a lot. I shouldn't say a lot. There was a handful of CHSes that they were trying to get information, then there were a lot -- there were some people that were planning to travel that we were trying to dissuade from traveling, because we felt that they would've been violent here, right, so --

Q And by that, sir, are you referring to subjects in that case of active domestic terrorism investigations or CHSes or both?

A No, not CHSes.

Q You had said dissuaded.

A Not the CHSes but the actors, the DT actors or the people that we were --

Chairman Jordan. People the CHSes were telling you about?

Mr. D'Antuono. Correct, yeah. We would've used CHSes to -- or anything, any means. Like, I think in some cases, we might have used like, you know, police officers or whoever to go talk to the person, Hey, you know, type stuff and dissuade them from coming here because we felt through CHS information or other information -- again, I don't have all the particulars -- that they might have been coming here to -- it just wasn't -- we didn't want violence, right.

So we tried to dissuade and not arrest so much, right, because there's nothing to arrest them on, right. But if there was other actions that we could've put into place because we believe people were possibly coming here to do nefarious acts, then we have all the policies that we can do. But that was a lot of the plan. A lot of that was being done by headquarters. I had my own mission trying to figure out the preparation here in D.C. That's what headquarters is for, right. That's what CTD is for. That's what DTOS is for. They program manage this stuff. They're supposed to look at the national, the field offices, know what they're providing and then at the end result, right.

And so there's a lot of times -- my problem with sometimes like, we find out, I found out, WFO, I was like, what the hell, that would've been nice to know prior to this, right, but we don't find out until later because communication isn't there all the time, which is unfortunate, so --

Q I know we're nearing the end of our hour here. I will ask though, was the -- the physical surveillance of the subjects, how many would you guesstimate that actually traveled in of the bad guys that were not dissuaded, and how were they covered once they were here?

A I don't -- I don't have those answers because, again, it was a long time ago. That would've been in a lot of SITREPs, or it would've been --

Q Dozens? You know, I --

A Probably more than a dozen, I think at the time, but I couldn't give you a number. If I give you a number, I would just be guessing, and that's not right, right. So there was a handful of people that they were worried about that they were trying to dissuade from coming, right. There was CHS information that was coming in. There was open-source information too, right. There's all that stuff that we could see.

I don't know all the particulars because I wasn't working those particulars, right. I was the end result of that stuff. So something like that would have to be asked of someone like CTD or DTOS, the people that were running that stuff, so -- Chairman Jordan. Are there 1023s on these individuals?

Mr. D'Antuono. Well, 1023 is the report of CHS information. So if we're talking to a CHS and gaining information, we should be recording that on a 1023. Sometimes not all information is captured on it, because there's negative information, they didn't provide anything, right. So you have a contact, you know, all that. But if there's information from a CHS, it should go on. That's our administrative policy.

Chairman Jordan. All right. And you've got extensive experience putting together 1023s? You've done that?

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah. You know, so the delta system came out after I was a supervisor, so I wasn't -- I was a supervisor dealing with -- delta is our confidential human source system, right. 1023s, all that stuff was afterwards, right. So I wasn't running CHSes then. I was supervisor. Supervisors don't run CHSes. They shouldn't. So I was supervising that action. So, yeah, I'm intricately aware, but I'd be lying to you if I said I physically typed a 1023 before.

Chairman Jordan. But you have some familiarity with that?

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely, yeah. No, I was there when the system was being built and had a lot of input.

Chairman Jordan. We'll have some questions about that in the next hour.

Mr. D'Antuono. Excellent. I look forward to it.

[redacted] Thank you, sir. And that does wrap up our second hour, so --

[redacted] We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[1:22 p.m.]

[redacted] We can go on the record.

[redacted]

Q Welcome back, Mr. D'Antuono. I just had a couple questions. It's not going to take an hour.

A Okay. I talk a lot, so it may take an hour.

Q That's okay. Back to the Mar-a-Lago search subject.

A Yes.

Q You said many times that it was your preference at various points in the investigation to proceed in a cooperative fashion rather than by the use of a search warrant, correct?

A That's correct, yeah.

Q Okay. And it is true, isn't it, that there were many efforts made by NARA and by DOJ and the FBI to get cooperation from Mr. Trump? Is that right?

A That is completely true, yes.

Q NARA was discussing with Mr. Trump's attorney for months the return of those records, right?

A That is correct.

Q And it didn't work out, right?

A Completely, I say no, it didn't work out because there's a lot more records down at Mar-a-Lago.

Q Exactly.

A Yep.

Q And when DOJ was persuaded by you and other FBI officials to go ahead with the subpoena before their initial desire to do a search warrant in June, they were trying to proceed in a cooperative fashion, right?

A Yeah. We had to convince them to do the subpoena initially, yes.

Q But you persuaded them, right?

A We did. Yeah, yeah. Much -- yeah. They were reluctant, but, yeah, we persuaded them.

Q Ultimately, that's the course they agreed to, right?

A Correct. It was a little back and forth, but yes.

Q I'm sorry. Back and forth. Is that what you said?

A There was a back and forth, yes.

Q In response to the subpoena, the -- well, let's just say President Trump and his staff were not fully responsive to the subpoena, correct?

A Yes. Initially, they were not -- the first subpoena, right, you're talking?

Q Right, the one -- I'm sorry. I'm talking about the subpoena for documents that was served on June 3rd or June 2nd.

A Yes. Yeah, there weren't -- they weren't being as cooperative or responsive. So DOJ reached back out to them to, in a sense, compel them, in a sense, say, you know, we really need these documents, you know. And so --

Q Oh, I see. You're saying initially when they were given the subpoena from the grand jury, they didn't immediately respond with documents?

A Correct.

Q Mr. Bratt and others had to actually say, hey, you really need to respond to the subpoena?

A Yeah, and my understanding from my team, when I was getting briefed off my team was the fact that, you know, at that point, to Jay and the team, just, well, we're just going to do a search, right, or something like that. We're going to take other action.

And we were -- the FBI team was more adamant, like, just compel them, right. Just compel them, right. And so that's what we did agree to.

And my understanding is that the Director opined on that and that the deputy opined on it and got some higher ups at DOJ to agree to that and say, look, you've got to compel him first, right. We're not going to just do a -- serve a subpoena and then all of a sudden follow up with a search warrant. Compel them to see what we get from him.

So that's what happened. My understanding is that's what happened. Jay, I think, had a conversation with everyone, I'm assuming, and then they came forward with the documents that they had.

Q Okay. So I actually didn't fully understand that then.

A Okay.

Q So, initially, there was the subpoena that the grand jury issued, which was actually, if I recall, signed in May. I think it was May -- I want to say the 19th. It's part of our exhibit.

A Yeah, it's the one you showed me.

Q Yes, right.

A Yep.

Q And it was actually -- because Mr. Trump was not responsive to the subpoena itself, that is initially what created the concern among DOJ officials that they were going to need to do something even more --

A Yeah, absolutely.

Q -- forceful, like a search warrant, at that point. Is that right?

A Correct, yeah, because the concern is, obviously, it's a classified document. We have some hundred or so, whatever is found in NARA, 13, 14, 15, boxes. So --

Q But I mean in terms of cooperation. They didn't respond to the subpoena initially, correct?

A My understanding is they didn't fully comply with the subpoena. I don't know if they didn't respond. I can't say they didn't respond. Like, I don't know -- I think they -- I'll be speculating if I said this, but my understanding is that they were in contact, possibly, but they didn't comply and give us the documents yet, right. You know what I'm saying?

Q You just used the word "compel." You said that you encouraged DOJ to compel the subpoena. What did you mean by that?

A So because the doc -- because they weren't providing the documents by the date that's on there, right.

Q Right.

A So if anyone gets a subpoena, right --

Q May 24th.

A -- the normal course -- yeah. Normal course of action is here's the subpoena. We require the documents by May 24th.

Q Right.

A When it's coming up to May 22nd, May 23rd, where are the documents, right. And so you have to compel them and say, either you're going to come forward to the grand jury and explain why you did not -- don't have these documents to produce or you're going to produce the damn documents, right. And so that's the course of action.

So we wanted DOJ to compel and have that conversation with Mr. Corcoran to say, hey, look, we need these documents, right. And then I'm assuming, because they didn't hit the date, that by the time June came up, because they would have been in not compliance with that subpoena --

Q Right. May 24, '22, they would have needed to produce the documents.

A Yeah. There was an agreement there between DOJ and the attorney to produce them on June 2nd, right. Because in that timeframe, from that point on to June 2nd, they were not in compliance, and they could have been held, you know --

Q In contempt.

A Correct.

Q Right.

A Yeah. That's the heaviness people don't understand about a subpoena, right. There's a contempt charge too.

Q Right. And the point that I'm trying to make here is this was another instance in which Mr. Trump and his staff were being noncompliant with DOJ --

A Absolutely.

Q -- even under a subpoena, correct?

A Absolutely. No, I don't disagree with that, and it's -- that's the normal -- not the normal course, but you can -- in any investigation you understand who the subject of that investigation is and you understand what motivates that person. It's not -- it was not out of the ord -- we weren't surprised by it. I wasn't surprised by it. If anyone was surprised by it, then they haven't been paying attention for the past couple years.

Q Understood. I'm just trying to clarify --

A Yeah, I know. Yeah, yeah.

Q I'm trying to clarify just -- you had said many times that it was your preference to seek cooperation from Mr. Trump, right?

A Correct.

Q And what I was saying is this record shows there were many opportunities for Mr. Trump to cooperate, correct?

A Absolutely. And June 2nd they did comply, and they gave us some records. It just wasn't enough.

Q Right. Again --

A Again, it wasn't enough.

Q -- on June 2nd and thereafter, the FBI had discovered that still there was not compliance with the subpoena fully, correct?

A Yep. And that's why I don't -- I don't, like, completely disagree with DOJ's process on this and the way they wanted to do it. That's why I've said before, like, I don't disagree with it. I just -- I believe in a different view sometimes, and you have to explore all views, right.

Q Right.

A So that's what I was just trying to get out with -- but it was the belief of my team that it would have worked, right, that the talking to Mr. Corcoran would have worked, right. And so I'm getting it from my team, right, the agents, the supervisors, the ASAC that had inter -- I didn't have any interaction with Mr. Corcoran, right, but they formally believed.

So as the ADIC, as the leader, I'm trying to go, okay, I understand, but going to try it this way. DOJ decides a different route, that's fine. It's all good.

Q I understand your position.

A Yeah.

Q I'm just saying, for the record, do you understand that Mr. Bratt was also communicating with Mr. Corcoran, correct?

A My understanding is that he was, yes.

Q And he was getting the feeling that Mr. Corcoran was not cooperating, correct?

A You'd have to talk to Mr. Bratt about that.

Q Okay. But if he did feel that --

A That's what he conveyed to us -- yeah. Yeah, that's what he conveyed to us.

Q Okay.

A But I also understand that Jay -- through my team -- that Jay had a contentious relationship with Mr. Corcoran.

Q I understand. And maybe some of the reason could be that Mr. Bratt was not getting compliance even when he went through the process of getting a grand jury subpoena, correct?

A Correct, because of the head bashing between him and the other attorney, which is never a good thing.

Q Sure. For whatever reason, Mr. Bratt had sought a subpoena and gotten one, correct?

A He did.

Q And he did not get compliance by the date of the return on the subpoena, which was the 24th of May, correct?

A My understanding is he did not, but I don't know what led up to that. I don't know how the --

Q Sure.

A -- conversation went.

Q We don't know that. We just know that there was no compliance by the 24th, correct?

A That's as far as the records show, yes.

Q And so Mr. Jay's position was, we tried cooperation. Now we're going to try the next level of compulsion, correct?

A That was their take on it, yeah.

[D'Antuono Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

Q Okay. So now I just want to introduce what's exhibit 7, which is the actual search and seizure warrant that was issued by the magistrate judge in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida. And there's a few pages, which includes the return on the warrant.

A Yep.

Q Once you've had a chance to look at it, I'm not going to ask you details.

A That's fine.

Q But just a general refresher on what was recovered when that warrant was executed.

A Yeah. It's just the 597, which was the property receipt.

Q Yeah. And the property receipt actually itemizes the things that were recovered by the FBI that day. Is that right?

A Yes. Not in specifics but more generalization, right, obviously. There's some specific match in here, but for the most part, it's just generalization.

Q Okay. And so on page 5 under the page number for the docket system, which appears on the top of the page, there's a set of lines, Description of Items, and the first says four documents. Is that right?

A Yes, I see that.

Q And then it's got 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, which are boxes, correct?

A Yeah. It looks that way.

Q And those contained documents, as far as you know, or do you know?

A I don't know what they contained.

Q Okay.

A They could have contained anything. There's a whole host of stuff that they contained.

Q Got it. And if you turn the page to page 6, again with the docketing system, page 6, there's a further set of descriptions of various items that include, No. 1, an executive grant of clemency for Roger Stone, Jr.?

A Uh-huh.

Q 1A, information regarding the President of France. 2, leather-bound box of documents. Is that correct so far?

A Yeah. Yeah, yeah, absolutely.

Q You're the witness, not me.

A Sorry. That's what's written on the document, so yes.

Q 2A, various classified/TS/SCI documents, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And that refers to top secret compartmented information?

A Correct, yep.

Q That's highly classified, correct?

A Yeah, it is just compartmentalized, you know. It depends on what the document is.

Q Sure. No. 3, potential Presidential record, correct?

A Correct.

Q No. 5 and No. 6 say binder of photos, correct?

A That's correct.

Q No. 7 says handwritten note, correct?

A Correct.

Q I'm going to skip over some of this stuff to number 10A, which says, miscellaneous secret documents. Is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q Number 11A, miscellaneous top secret documents, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Number 13A, miscellaneous top secret documents again?

A That's correct.

Q Number 14A, miscellaneous confidential documents, correct?

A Correct.

Q And turning to the next page, page 7, line item 15A, miscellaneous secret documents, correct?

A That is correct.

Q 19A, confidential document, correct?

A Correct.

Q And 23A, miscellaneous secret documents, correct?

A That's correct.

Q 24A, miscellaneous confidential documents, correct?

A Correct.

Q 26A, miscellaneous top secret documents, correct?

A That's correct.

Q And finally, 28A, miscellaneous -- I believe it says top secret documents again, correct?

A Yeah, it does. Somebody initialed that typo in the top.

Q Okay. And at the bottom is the signature of Christina Bobb, attorney, correct?

A That's correct, yep.

Q Okay. And that means she was there to, I guess --

A As a representative to, you know, keeping the record as to what we took, right. We always have to give a record and inventory of what we initially took.

Q Understood.

A So yeah.

Q And finally, the last page, as you see, is a photograph. Do you see that photo?

A Yes.

Q And that is a photograph taken by the evidence technicians at the search warrant execution. Is that right?

A That would be my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And that's some of the documents that they saw during the execution of the warrant that they recovered, correct?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And you can see in the picture that some of these documents had cover pages that say things like Secret/SCI, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Or Top Secret/SCI, correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And those documents are things that the FBI has an interest in recovering and having -- be assured that they're being stored safely, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. You've talked a lot about your concerns that you shared with DOJ during this process, and you've characterized them as just kind of part of the normal back and forth between FBI and DOJ when they're discussing strategy.

A Correct.

Q Is that right?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And would you say that that's basically what happened here?

A Oh, yeah, absolutely. Yeah.

Q And you don't disagree with the ultimate conduct of the investigation, given the outcome, which was the recovery of all of these documents, correct?

A No.

Q And do you believe that anyone was motivated by animus in their choices here?

A No.

Q Do you believe that Mr. Bratt, for example, was simply trying to do his job as a National Security Division attorney to help the DOJ recover what he thought was important national defense information?

A Yeah, I believe Jay was doing his job, yes.

Q Okay. One other thing. Recently, on May 31st of 2023, multiple news outlets reported that DOJ prosecutors had obtained a audio recording of Mr. Trump in which he discusses holding on to a classified document that he knows is classified. Have you heard that reporting?

A I've read the reporting, honestly, but I have not -- I have no idea.

Q You have no knowledge of whether it's --

A No, I don't believe it was found when we were -- when I was the ADIC.

Q I'm sorry. What was that?

A I don't believe it was -- I left in November, end of November. So I believe that was found after I left. So I have no knowledge of it, other than the report.

Q Oh, you have no knowledge of the evidence itself?

A Yeah, no, I don't believe that was found prior to me leaving --

Q Understood.

A -- or retiring.

Q But you heard the report --

A I heard the report, yes.

Q -- about the audio recording?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Okay.

A Yep.

Q So my question was, like, according to the reporting, again, this recording was allegedly made during a July 2021 meeting at Trump's Bedminster Golf Club in New Jersey. Did you hear that?

A I read the article, yes.

Q Okay. And according to the reporting, the recorded -- in the recorded conversation, Mr. Trump tells listeners that if he could show them this document that's classified, then they would see that General Milley had produced a military plan to attack Iran during his administration. That was the reporting, correct?

A That's my understanding, yes.

Q Okay. And there were people in that room as this audio recording was being made, correct?

A That's what they reported, yes.

Q Okay. And those people, according to the reporting, did not hold security clearances themselves that would have allowed them to hear the information in this classified report?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. Now, if this reporting is accurate, hypothetical, I know you don't understand if it is, but if this reporting is accurate, the audio recording would be very powerful evidence that Trump knowingly and unlawfully retained national defense information after he left office, would it not?

Mr. Berger. I don't think he can answer that.

Mr. D'Antuono. I can't answer.

Mr. Berger. There are so many elements to whether there's a crime or not?

[redacted] Well, the question was whether it would be evidence of it, not whether there's a crime --

Mr. Berger. Would it be evidence of it? I don't even think he can answer that.

[redacted] Why?

Mr. Berger. Because we'd have to understand, first of all, what the elements of the relevant statute is, what the accused -- what the crime --

[redacted] Well, I produced the statute for you.

Mr. Berger. Well, what is the statute? Why don't you show us what it is.

[redacted] It's marked as -- what is that exhibit?

[redacted] I took it back.

Mr. Berger. Show it to us again so I can see it.

[redacted] It's exhibit -- what is it?

[redacted] No. 5.

Mr. Berger. So the elements -- I'm looking at the elements and it's -- you have to have an intent to be used to injure the United States or to take the advantage -- exploit an advantage of a foreign nation. I don't know how anyone can sit here -- [redacted] I'm sorry. Where are you looking?

Mr. D'Antuono. 793.

Mr. Berger. 793.

Mr. D'Antuono. For the purpose of obtaining information --

Mr. Berger. Obtaining it because you believe that the information is to be used, the injury of the United -- you're using it for the injury of the United States or you're using it to advantage a foreign nation. Those are elements of this crime.

[redacted] I'm sorry. I'm not asking you --

Mr. Berger. He's not in a position to answer that. He's not in a position to answer that.

[redacted] -- to opine on whether the elements have met. I'm asking if it's evidence relevant to the --

Mr. Berger. I'm going to direct him not to answer.

[redacted] -- investigation.

Well, he's here voluntarily.

Mr. Berger. I'm going to tell you not to answer.

Mr. D'Antuono. I'm going to take the advice of my counsel.

Mr. Berger. All right. Thank you.

[redacted]

Q Just to be clear, how many years did you serve in the FBI?

A Twenty-seven.

Q Okay. And you --

A Approximately. Twenty-six and ten months.

Q And you served in roles, everything from case agent through supervisory, all the way up to ADIC, correct?

A Correct, yeah.

Q So you would have understanding of what is and is not evidence in your -- as part of your experience, right?

A Uh-huh, yes.

Q Okay. But you're still being directed not to answer whether something is --

Mr. Berger. He's being directed not to answer, end of story, that question.

[redacted] I understand. I understand. He's here voluntarily. So if he chooses to answer, he can still answer.

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Berger. I told him not to and he's not. He's absolutely --

[redacted] I heard you.

Mr. Berger. -- unequivocally not going to answer, no matter how many times you ask him.

[redacted] We're not asking him. We're just --

Mr. Berger. That's it.

[redacted] We heard you.

Mr. Berger. Move on to the next question and we're good.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted] In addition, the audio recording demonstrates a significant national security risk, if it is true, posed by the former President.

Mr. Berger. Don't answer.

Mr. D'Antuono. I --

Mr. Berger. You're not answering.

[redacted] You have no opinion about sharing -- if someone were to share classified information with people without a clearance, do you agree that that poses national security risk?

Mr. Berger. Don't answer.

Again, I haven't even determined what's classified, what's not classified. There are so many elements.

[redacted] It's a hypothetical question.

Mr. Berger. I don't want him asking --

[redacted] Okay.

Mr. Berger. -- answering hypothetical questions. No one has asked any hypothetical questions right now.

[redacted] Just to be clear, you also, in your role as ADIC, oversaw the counterintelligence section of WFO, right?

Mr. D'Antuono. That's correct, yes.

[redacted] So you regularly did oversee and have to make a determination of whether items were, in fact, classified or not, correct? Or whether the importance of -- you had to make decisions regarding classified evidence. Is that fair to say?

Mr. Berger. Yeah, when he has the totality of the circumstances --

[redacted] I understand. I'm asking the client.

Mr. Berger. Correct. When there's -- when you have all the information and you have all the particulars -- when you have all the information and you have all the particulars, you're in a position to make assessments, I'm sure.

[redacted] Okay. I'm sorry. I'm actually asking your client.

[redacted]

Q In his experience, having served 28-some years in the FBI, including as ADIC of the Washington field office --

A Yes.

Q -- you did, in fact, oversee the Counterintelligence Division?

A I did, yes.

Q And the Counterintelligence Division handled classified evidence, correct?

A They did, correct.

Q And so you were a supervisor above that?

A Yes.

Mr. Berger. Yes. Okay.

[redacted] Okay. Do you believe it's a national security risk if someone divulges top secret information or secret information to someone without a clearance?

Mr. Berger. She's asking a hypothetical question in the abstract.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Mr. Berger. You can answer that. Thank you.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes. If national security information is leaked out or provided out to people that don't have a clearance or a need-to-know, that's -- yeah, that's not good for anyone. We take that -- I take that strongly.

[redacted] Okay.

[redacted]

Q Are you familiar with calls for the defunding of the FBI?

A Yes.

Q Okay. How do you feel about that?

A I don't agree with it.

Q Okay. Why?

A Want the soapbox version?

Q Sure. Your version.

A My version is the FBI is an institution that we need in this country, and further chipping away at the foundation of the Bureau is not a good thing for this country. You know, we do a lot of stuff.

If people -- if someone's kid got kidnapped right today, who would you call? You'd want the FBI on it, right? But nowadays, we're in this position of not trusting anything the FBI says, not trusting probably what I say here, right. There's going to be people that will see this transcript at some point in time and say -- and don't believe me. I don't understand why. I don't know what I ever did to make people not believe what I have to say but believe what others have to say.

Look at the facts and circumstances. I built a career on the facts and evidence and collecting it.

You know, so defunding the FBI is a bad thing for this country. Defunding all law enforcement is a bad thing for this country. That's just my opinion.

Q How about even the political calls to defund the FBI? When somebody stands up in a committee hearing, for example, and says that we should defund the FBI, whether or not they ever intend to follow through, when they make those kind of calls, does that, in your mind, undermine the legitimacy of the FBI and make it harder for people to do their jobs in the agency?

A Yes. In my opinion, it's just like the more the American people hear about not trusting the FBI, it's not a good day for this country. It's not a good day for the FBI. And we need all law enforcement, not just the FBI. We just need all trust, right. It comes out to trust, and there's no trust in this country anymore in our institutions, which is, to me, sad.

Q And do you believe in the mission of the FBI?

A Yes.

Q And do you believe that most people that you've encountered in your career who are in the FBI are well-meaning FBI employees who are trying their best to do their job?

A Oh, absolutely, yeah. Through and through.

Q Are you familiar with the claim that the January 6th insurrection was a, quote, false flag operation, that somehow the U.S. Government and the FBI was responsible for that attack?

A Yes. Yeah, yeah.

Q What is your opinion of that theory?

A Well, they're basically talking about me, you know, because I led the office, and it's not true, absolutely not true.

[redacted] Okay. That's all I have.

Do you have anything?

[redacted] No, I don't have anything. We can go off the record. Thank you.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Okay. We're back on the record.

[redacted]

Q We are going to go back, Mr. D'Antuono, to January 6th, a day that I'm sure you know well.

A Uh-huh.

Q We're talking about -- we left off with some of the surveillance, preparatory activities that may have been going on in advance of the event. Of course, a key feature of conducting surveillance is remaining inconspicuous and, you know, blending into the crowd.

Is it fair to assume then that FBI personnel in the crowd had to at least possibly feign aggression so as not to highlight themselves by acting different than those around them?

A We didn't have people in the crowd.

Q We didn't have any --

A FBI did not have people in the crowd. To my knowledge, we did not. We had like -- I think, [redacted] you're familiar with eye teams and stuff like that that we've done --

Q Sure.

A -- you know, in past, you know, protests or a demonstra -- or whatever, right --

Q Yes.

A -- that we've had with the knowledge that there's going to be violence or something like that, right.

In this case, to my knowledge, as the ADIC of WFO, we did not have eye teams. Secret Service was responsible for the Ellipse. U.S. Park Police was responsible for the parks. Capital Police was responsible for the Capitol Grounds. And then everything else in between is FPS usually, right?

Q Sure.

A Or MPD, right. So there was enough coverage, and we were never asked to do anything like eye teams that we've done in like inaugurations or all the special events, NSSEs. You hear about NSSEs all the time. Why wasn't this an NSSE type stuff, right.

So in this -- for this particular matter, we didn't have people in the crowds. We were getting reports from -- the way the command post works is we have task force officers within the command post, which we were getting reports from their people that were on the ground or that were viewing it, right, because that's their responsibility. That's not the FBI's responsibility to watch peaceful protestors. It's just a process. You know what I'm saying?

Q Yeah, I do, and I appreciate that clarification for the committee.

And so the task force officers would have been in touch with their own agencies who would have had personnel represented on the ground. But the Bureau themselves were not in plain clothes on the ground?

A To my knowledge, I did not have anyone there, and that would have been something that should have been brought up to my response, because as the leader of the office, that would have been my direction to do that, and that would not have been my direction.

Q Okay. Understood.

A So if that happened, then I'm going to be pissed with some people.

Q Regarding -- we talked a little bit about some of the very, you know, robust, preemptive activities that you would assume were occurring at a, you know, at a sharing level with all the partners, State, local, Federal, you know, the folks that you'd normally work with.

Were there any investigations involving the events of January 6th, you know, proactively or, I guess, presumptively opened prior to actually January 6th? If that makes sense.

Were there cases that were opened in advance? And I don't want to speak for you because I know there might be some administrative files opened on things. But as far as operational cases, was there anything that was open in advance that you assumed there may be an activity that necessitated opening a case?

A I don't believe so, but I would have to look back at like the records. Again, this is -- well, we'll say 2.5 years ago, right. So I don't recall there being cases specifically opened for January 6th.

Now, there were speculation, there were other cases, obviously, throughout the country that might have involved actors that were coming to D.C. Those cases were -- may have been at WFO, but they might have been at other offices, but I can't definitively say yes or no on that.

Q I understand that you had -- we had subjects traveling in from other areas of responsibility. That's a different scenario.

A Yeah.

Q Okay.

A There would have been Guardians opened, like leading up to January 6th, if there was information that came in. And that's Guardian, G-u-a-r-d-i-a-n, right -- Guardians open to take in the tip or the information that was coming in, whatever it was, and then working through logical, like, is this a threat or is this not a threat.

If it came to the point where there was some validity to this, we may have opened up a case at that point, but I can't definitively say yes or no that we did.

Q Understood.

A We may have and we may not have.

Q I appreciate the clarification. Thank you.

All right. Moving on, did FBI headquarters or any FBI field offices initiate investigative activities to cover the event?

A Well, FBI headquarters does not initiate investigative activity. They would, you know, direct or program manage it, right. I don't -- I can't answer for the other field offices. Again, I believe there were other cases that were around the country.

Q Can you explain for maybe some of the others in the room what that would look like in an event of this size? How perhaps -- as the ADIC of Washington field, if it's happening in your space, sort of what that looks like administratively. Like, how are you covering that event?

A Well, so -- covering the January 6th event or --

Q In advance.

A Well, in advance we're preparing for the possibility of violence, right. So, you know, the FBI is not -- we don't have the responsibility of being the CDU, the crisis disruption unit, right. We're not on the front lines. We're not law enforcement in which we have riot gear on or anything like that preparing for stuff like that.

Our role, because we're very sensitive to the fact of the Constitution and our ability to protect the American people and uphold the Constitution, that's ingrained in what we do. Want to make sure that we're not trampling on people's constitutional rights. So it's a balancing act.

So we want to help law enforcement, provide them with everything we possibly can to provide them the intelligence that we know -- credible intelligence, right, credible and actual intelligence that we can provide them that they can then do their job and protect whoever they need to protect, right. They have the mission.

And there's been comments out there, I said this, I said that. But, you know, I firmly believe, it's like MPD was the main component here to protect the city, that 3,000-plus strong, sworn officers strong, you know, they have -- they've always taken that role, right.

FBI isn't on the streets. You don't want an FBI agent in that role. You really don't. We have a lot of guns and, you know, we train differently than others, right. And we don't train for a simple disturbance. So we provide the intelligence.

Q No, understood. And there are command posts proactively stood up to sort of triage and disseminate the activity coming in?

A And the information that, like you alluded to before as to how we were leading up to this, we were having meetings. My people were having meetings with their counterparts of all these different agencies, collecting information, intelligence. What do they have? What do we have? And they're discerning as to who gets, you know -- where the information is shared.

We shared as much -- like, I believe fully that we share until it hurts, right. We share as much as we possibly can because we don't want a situation that happened. And so, unfortunately, it still did.

Q So we have a lot of -- I'm sorry. The FBI has a lot of -- it happens. The FBI has a lot of investigative resources, as everyone in this room understands. Things like CHS, as we're going to talk about a little bit more later.

But leveraging current platforms that may have been in existence, were there any -- did we have any physical surveillance teams out and about?

Based on your last answer, I'm assuming that may not, but I don't want to put words in your mouth. Pole cameras or electronic surveillance, anything of that that proactively deployed? Maybe leveraging other existing cases that would have been in the vicinity is how I'm envisioning that may have occurred, but I don't want to speak for you.

A Again, I started as an ASAC in St. Louis during the Michael Brown situation. I got an education in civil disturbance, right. I got an education in what we do as the Bureau and what we can and can't do from a legal perspective and elsewhere, right. So there's things that we can and can't do, and we're not supposed to be watching peaceful protests, right, unless there is articulable, factual basis to believe that there's some officer safety issues or violence happening and stuff like that.

So I take that extremely to heart, okay. So my -- to my knowledge, we did not have pole cams up. We didn't have any of that stuff up to watch peaceful protests, right.

Now, when information was coming in, and it might have led to the fact -- like, I remember there was like information that came in that somebody had, you know, a gun stock in their -- underneath their waist coat or whatever. So, oh, wait, gun stock? You know, stock of a gun, right, a long gun or whatever. I don't remember what it was, but I think it was described more as like a long gun or something like that. That's concerning, right.

So now we're going to investigate. We're going to, with our partners, investigate. That might come through Park Police, might come through MPD, we don't know. So you have to stop, go and investigate that. That's what the FBI does, right.

So as you well know, the gun laws in this city are completely not broad, right. They're very, very specific. You cannot bring a gun into this city like that, right. So that would have been something we would investigate. That's what we're there to do, and that's what we did.

So there could have been times that we did send people down there for surveillance of those purposes, but the overall, we're not surveilling. Again, there's plenty of law enforcement here in this city. It's not St. Louis. It's not Detroit. There's plenty of Federal law enforcement: MPD, Park Police, Secret Service, Capitol Police.

Q Understood.

A There are enough eyes there. They didn't need a bunch of FBI agents.

Q Having said that, though, the committee has received information that there were some FBI SWAT teams predeployed.

A Yes.

Q Are you aware of that --

A Absolutely.

Q -- or can you speak to some of what that may have entailed?

A I'm the one that ordered it. So I'm the one to speak to, and I wish people would have spoken to me before.

So when we're preparing for situations, right, again, the responsibility of the FBI is to not be the riot police or the control, right. But if something happened, a terrorist attack in the city, violence in the city, any type of violent activity, we want our tactical teams in place, right.

And I had an enhanced team at WFO. It's a double team in a sense, more than other field offices have, right. So we put them on call. Like, we -- or on the bags, as we call it, right, in the possibility that things happen.

Again, going back to my St. Louis days. We had our tactical team responding there too. We get a call out to help the county police with a barricade situation, barricade subject. That night when -- a November night, we respond because they asked us to. That's what our job is, to help them, right. We try to provide support. We're not going to [redacted], but we're going to go help them because the SWAT team is working.

Two of my agents get shot, right. Bad night. But that was our job, to help our brothers and sisters in law enforcement to do that. That's what we do, right.

So in the case of January 6th, if violence erupted anyplace in the city and we needed to call out for tactical, we were prepared. If it happened at the Capitol, if it happened at the Ellipse. Also, if MPD had their hands full, and then there was violent activity, and they had tactical teams do it, we could have responded to that, right.

Q Sure. How many SWAT teams do you recall? I understand your enhanced

SWAT team at Washington field.

A Yes. So we had two teams. One was on call in the morning shift and then we were prepared to bring the other ones in at 2 -- like 2 or 3 I believe, right. So that's our team.

It was decided, through my conversations with Deputy Director Bowdich at the time, he's just like, Steve, I think we might need another SWAT team. Boss, that's your call. Yeah, let's do it. Whatever makes you comfortable, boss, right.

And so I called Baltimore. Jenn was up there. Jenn Boone was the SAC up there at the time. She said, absolutely, whatever resource you need. We called Baltimore because they're right next door, right.

So we decided, me and my SWAT team lead, and my ASACs are over that, we tried to put them in place as to where they should be. I suggested an offsite facility that we have here in D.C. They suggested out in Maryland because it would have -- tactically it would have been better.

Q Yeah.

A If something happened in Virginia or Arlington, to get around the beltway, right.

So we put thought, like a lot of thought into this. This is not just willy-nilly like we're making this stuff up. There's a lot of thought and process that went into this. So those are the three tactical teams. And then also HRT was on standby too.

Q Okay.

A Which, in a case like this, in my experience, never have HRT on standby for something like this. That's severity that we in the FBI took to this matter, right. HRT, 20 minutes out by helo, right. The problem was like where they land. And then that's a story for another time. You can read the IG report on that, I guess, unless you want to talk about it. But that was HRT as well.

So that's the severity that we put to this.

Q So an awful lot of predeployed assets.

A ERTs, CMTs, everyone else, yes.

Q Okay. We're shifting gears over to confidential human sources, CHSes, of course. There's been a lot of information of all types floating about about CHSes deployed here, there, everywhere.

Were FBI CHSes proactively deployed to the Capitol on January 6th of 2021?

A I didn't deploy -- my people, to my knowledge -- I didn't. WFO did not predeploy any CHSes. I can't speak for anything else that happened, but I know we did not. WFO did not. I didn't do it.

Q In your role as ADIC, you're of a high degree of confidence that Washington field did not?

A Correct. Washington field did not have C -- now --

Q Can you explain for the committee who may not understand what the protocol is for traveling CHSes from other field offices and how that's supposed to work?

A Yeah. It's supposed to work that the field office is supposed to notify the receiving field office that someone's coming to town or whatnot. That should be happening at the ground level, right. In most circumstances, when you go into someone else's territory, you're supposed to get approval from the SAC. It's dumbed down all the way down to the ASAC and SACs half the time, right.

So even like -- even in Baltimore coming -- you know, which is right next door, coming into WFO, technically, they're supposed to tell us when they're coming into WFO's territory. Realistically, does it always happen? No. And that's what causes some consternation, like, why are you doing an operation in our city? You know, and the reason for that is because if there's a shooting or something happens, you need to know, right.

If all of a sudden FBI agents get into a shooting and I'm getting called by the deputy director saying your people are -- my people aren't deployed. What the hell's going on? Then that's a bad day. That's a problem, right. So that's normally what happens.

Q So what is your -- based upon that -- and thank you for the explanation for the committee.

What is your degree of confidence on that, that there were not other, perhaps, FBI CHSes that may have been onsite on January 6th?

A So my understanding now is there were CHSes onsite. So back then I didn't know that there were going to be CHSes onsite. I didn't.

Q Sure. And when you say now, with, of course, the benefit of hindsight, which we always bat a thousand, but with that being knowledge now, would that revise your prior, you know, understanding that Washington field may have had?

A Washington field may have had, but I believe my people would have told me if our CHSes were involved.

Q So you're referring to other divisions?

A Correct, right. So -- and I don't want to say that we didn't know, being WFO. I may not have known as the ADIC from up here, right. And, again, it gets delegated down. So the supervisors, those are the people you need to ask, or the ASACs, did they know that these people, particular people were traveling in, like the ones that are known to this day.

Like, I found out afterwards, through the course of the investigation of, like, this CHS from X city was -- you know, that's -- but the question that's always asked out there is like, do we have CHSes in the crowd, right. So when we -- when we polled the field offices to find out if they're CHSes, the thing with the CHS is like -- and it's like there's a distinction that needs to be made.

Now, WFO may have had a CHS in the crowd that was a drug CHS, violent crime CHS, that didn't tell us they were going, right. People have a citizen's right to go and protest. We're not going to stop them from doing that. As you well know, we had FBI agents there. We had other government officials. People are there, right. That's -- I firmly believe that's their citizen's right, right.

So if a CHS was there and then we found out afterwards, that doesn't necessarily mean that there was malicious, nefarious action by the FBI to put that person there, right. They might have just been there and then told us after the fact that they went. That happens all the time. We don't have that much control over CHSes, right. The ones that are working off matters, yes, but the other ones, it's interesting.

So there's a lot of --

Q I understand the assessment.

A Yeah. There's a lot of other things that could have been involved, and it's not always malicious and nefarious, especially on the part of the FBI, especially on the part of the FBI.

[redacted] And how did you come to learn that there were CHSes onsite?

Mr. D'Antuono. Through the course of the investigation, as we were going through the investigation, it would have come up. I think at some point in time we were like -- it was chaotic, right. Obviously, January 6th, chaotic for you all here, chaotic for us during the investigation, crisis. January 20th, we still have the inauguration to come up, right. There's a lot going on, right.

So as these things were being put in place, I don't remember at what point, but I think at one point we were like, we need to know how many CHSes were here, because that's going to be a question. You know, I'm not dumb. I've been through this before. We know this question is coming, right.

So I think we asked headquarters to do a poll or put out something to people saying was any CHSes involved. And I think that's when we started getting responses back.

I think also through the course of some investigations we would find out that there was a CHS involved. I remember particularly there was one from like Kansas City or whatever. That was like, okay.

Chairman Jordan. Were they known CHSes or unknown CHSes or both?

Mr. D'Antuono. Well, I think they were both. I think they were --

Chairman Jordan. So you now know that there were CHSes that the FBI knew ahead of time were going to be here on January 6th and that there were also some unknown CHSes who, on their own accord, decided to come here on January 6th?

Mr. D'Antuono. That is my belief, yeah. The one in particular I'm remembering was the Kansas City CHS that I believe the case agent knew he was coming because I think he told them, if I recall. It's possible WFO knew. I didn't know. And again, the --

Chairman Jordan. We now understand that there were confidential human sources that the FBI knew ahead of time were going to be here and those that they didn't know were going to be. There were both of those?

Mr. D'Antuono. I believe that, yes, through the course of what I learned after January 6th, yes.

[redacted]

Q And with the Kansas City confidential human source -- I believe we're talking about the same individual -- I think they were the subject of a New York Times article.

A I'm not sure.

Q And may have been reporting back to his FBI handler.

A Correct, yes.

Q Is that your recollection?

A While they were -- yeah, that's my --

Q While they were in the crowd.

A While they were in the crowd, I think, saying that they were going in. They were trying to stop some of the action happening and they left or whatnot. Yeah, that was -- but I'm not sure if that handler knew that he was coming or not.

Q Uh-huh.

A I want to say yes, but I'm not sure, right. That's, again, a question for headquarters or DTAS or whoever.

Q And when that poll came back from headquarters of how many --

A I'm not sure if there was a poll or not, but yes.

Q Yes.

A Okay. Yeah.

Q After you were learning of confidential human sources, were you able to quantify how many? Was it a handful? More than 10? More than 20?

A I think it was maybe a -- I think it was a handful, but I'm not -- I'm not honestly sure, right.

Q Okay.

A The ones that were bubbled up to us were like my level, because I was trying to deal with issues, right. As the ADIC, you have to fire a man or fire a woman that -- you know, a lot of stuff comes up and you have to deal with issues, right.

So some of these were like, oh, God, you know, what are we going to do about this? We wanted to make sure we got it right, right. And we wanted to make sure we knew who was our -- so my recollection is maybe a handful of people, but I can't say for sure.

Q And kind of just -- not to speed ahead a little bit, but when did the WFO begin investigations that -- of individuals regarding events that occurred on January 6th?

A Immediately. Absolute -- it was -- I can't pinpoint. Once we got through the crisis, right, that's when you turned on the investigative wheel, right, and the gears. So once the -- I think you guys got back into session at like 8 or 9 or whatever, but we were still in the building, tact teams, evidence response teams, all that stuff till like 1, 2, or 3 o'clock in the morning, I believe, if my log -- like HRT didn't leave until like 3 -- I think 2 or 3 in the morning.

So throughout that, we started trying to figure out why this happened, right. Who did it? And who was doing what, right. It was just like any case, but it was a immense case, so --

Q And at what point during the day did HRT deploy, and at what point in the day did the SWAT teams deploy? If you can walk through that.

A Yeah. So I don't remember all the times, right. You'd have to -- I don't know if you have access to the logs, the surveillance logs, all that -- not surveillance logs. I mean the command post logs that we put together for everyone and their brother, OIG.

If I remember correctly the times that the Capitol was being breached or whatever, it was like 1, 2 o'clock. I think 2 o'clock or whatever.

I received a call -- we received a call through our command post for support, tactical support. Can you send the tact team? Because I had said previously to Steve Sund and everyone else that we have our tact teams on, right. So they can call out.

We have to go through our authority, right, go through CDC authority to make sure that it's something we can do. That was like a no-brainer answer in 30 seconds, right. Yes, deploy. My tact team, I believe, got here within 10 minutes. That was one.

And then the other tact team came from the Maryland area. They would go in on scene. We redeployed them to the Capitol. They got here probably about a half hour later or something like that. And HRT, the call out to them, I think -- I don't know what time, but after the other two tact teams. And then they had to deploy here.

And that was the logistical problem with HRT, because they had to land someplace. I was not allowing them to land on the front lawn of the Capitol or anywhere in the vicinity. That would have been a bad day. And so we had to land them someplace else, and then figure out logistics of getting them from here to -- from there to the Capitol.

I'm dealing with everything else as the ADIC. I have a lot of people that are handling that stuff, so -- the logistics, so -- but I don't know times. You'd have to look -- if I gave you times, I would be -- I might not be right.

Q I'm sorry. I jumped in the timeframe a little bit.

A That's all right.

Q Did you receive any sort of direction from headquarters about how to pursue investigations into the events that occurred at the Capitol on January 6th?

A Yes.

Q And what were those directions?

A So -- all right. So initially, after a couple of days, right, maybe it was a week, everything blends together for me at this point in time, we wanted -- me and my team -- well, some -- well, my SACs and myself, my advisers, we were opening this case under a criminal investigation, under CID, right, criminal, under what we classify as a 72 case, which is obstruction, right.

So in our mind it was obstruction. So obstruction of Congress, right, a proceeding of Congress. Everyone can disagree or not disagree with the statute, whatever, but that's what we needed to open up a case under. So we opened it up under the umbrella with components of domestic terrorism, assaults against Federal officers, 176, which would be insurrection matters, and then other, right, if I remember the org chart that we had.

I believe, I'm almost positive, that we -- my criminal folks opened up a case in D.C. and actually opened up the investigation under the classification. We're a field office, right. We can run the investigation the way we determine to run the investigation. Headquarters found out that we did it that way, and I got a call from the deputy director saying that -- or someone. I think it was from the deputy, and just disagreeing with the way we opened it.

Well, he's my boss and, you know, I gave him my opinion as to why we needed to open it this way. He disagreed with it and said we're going to open it up under, you know, CTD, and they're going to program manage it in DTAS and all that stuff. And, again, I gave my opinion, like I think you see here that I give, but at the end of the day, there's nothing wrong with the way he wanted to open it. It was just, from my sense, my case management, the way my people articulated it to me, the way I saw it -- and I'm a criminal -- I worked criminal most of my career, right.

As an ASAC, SAC in Detroit, and then as the ADIC, I've always seen CI, CT, right, DT matters as well. And I understand the policies and procedures and how we do that stuff. So it's not -- it wasn't wrong to do it the way they wanted to do it. It wasn't wrong the way I wanted to do it either. I thought it would have been cleaner doing it the way we wanted to do it.

CID, in my opinion, has more resources to provide. They were going to offer a bunch of resources for us to provide. DTAS at the time didn't have as much people under them at that point to program manage the severity of this case. We saw it throughout the Washington field office as we were running these investigations, a lot of speculation that has come out from people and stuff that has been thrown at Washington field office after this. And so I could tell you that from the Washington field office perspective, that was not the way we wanted to work it.

Now, again, there's a DT nexus to this, right. You know, we worked -- the conspiracy cases were under my direction, right, so -- but I'm not -- I wasn't sure if everyone needed to be under a 266. So -- and not everyone is, right. There's a lot of AFO cases. There's a lot of 176 cases. Those are classifications, right.

[redacted] Do you recall how soon after the events you probably had that conversation with the deputy director as far as, you know, redirecting which headquarters entity would program manage it, you know, from CID to CTD? Was it days? Was it -- I know it's probably a mind melt as far as all that stuff, but what's your best estimate?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know, right. Everything blends together at that point in time. I'm not sure if it's weeks or months. It was probably within the first couple of weeks at least. It makes sense, because we were trying -- from a case management standpoint, we needed to figure this thing out. Best estimate at that point in time, there was 2,000 to 2,500 people that came into the Capitol or in the vicinity of what we would consider, me and my team would consider the restricted area.

I didn't believe that the restricted area went all the way to the grass, right. So working with the U.S. Attorney's Office and coming to an agreement with them, which they're very, very good, Matt and John Crabb and everyone there, it was fantastic working with them. We decided that the steps, the scaffolding, you know, that area and then, obviously, if you entered the Capitol, you have to be looked at, right.

We have a responsibility to everyone in this country to do our due diligence to investigate, regardless of how you entered the Capitol, right. So that is my firm belief, right. And so we investigate; they prosecute, right. So in that respect of knowing the severity that we're going to have to do with this, we needed to case manage it, and I wasn't going to be able to do it from WFO. Just was not going to be possible, right.

So -- and I think this gets to your next questions as to the case management of it being in other field offices, stuff like that. I didn't have the resources to be able to do every single one of these cases and do my CI mission and my CT mission and my violent crime mission and protect this country from all those other actors that are in this city and do 2,000 to 2,500 cases as well.

And all those individuals went to other areas of the country because they weren't here, right. They're not residing here. So we needed Dallas or L.A. or Florida, whatever, to open up those cases. We were basically on the hook at the end because we're WFO and the U.S. Attorney's Office is here, which was decided by DOJ that the U.S. Attorney's Office was going to prosecute all these cases.

There's a lot of U.S. attorneys that disagreed with that across the country. They wanted to prosecute the cases in their -- but DOJ decides. Okay, fine. No problem, right.

So I'm probably getting ahead of you guys.

[redacted] And with the deputy director, did you have an understanding of why he wanted to classify the cases and use CTD?

Mr. D'Antuono. I can spec -- through my 27 years in the Bureau and seeing a lot of different things, I can speculate as to why, right. In my opinion, it's not from politicalization of the Bureau. It's not to pad numbers for DT cases. It's not, right. That's just me, Steve D'Antuono, the way I understand it.

I've seen countless number of times in the Bureau, after 9/11, in which CTD gets the program responsibility for cases. Take, for example, the Las Vegas shooter, right. A tragic day. CID was running that case. We were program managing that case. I was in CID as a section chief at that time.

The AD was told by the deputy director -- I think it was AD McCabe at that time -- you're not program managing this anymore. It's going to CT. CID was like, what? That's just wrong, right. This is a -- there's no ideology here. We don't know it, right.

But the Bureau has a tendency to always go to the ideo -- like go to -- it's terrorism first and it's criminal after, much to the chagrin of law criminal agents, right. And it's not the Guardian cases, and it's not the padding numbers. It's just the way people have been brought up since 9/11.

A lot of our senior leaders are CTD people, right. They're not -- I don't know why there's not a lot of criminal people in it like myself, but a lot of our senior leaders are CTD. So they want it under their program. They understand that. There's things that we can do, tools, different tools that we can use, all that stuff, that we don't do on the criminal side.

So, you know, and there's -- but there's complexities to it too. Like in 266 cases, domestic terrorism, you have to open up a case on each individual, which is bizarre to me, but it's policy, right. It's just the way it is.

We don't do that in gang cases. We don't do that on violent crime. We don't do that on white collar cases. But on, you know, terrorism cases, that's what you do. It's policy.

[redacted]

Q It is policy, but you can understand the inevitable optic of --

A Absolutely.

Q -- a predicate event and a defined area of responsibility, a bad day for all of America, and then 2,500 cases scattered throughout the country that very easily tend to paint a picture of this broad-based, diabolical, metastasizing threat picture, which was honestly based on a very bad day and moment in time in one place.

A Yeah.

Q And the optic is --

A I get it. It's just -- it's not like -- I think you understand -- I understand the optic for the FBI, right. So that's not the optic WFO was trying to portray. I was really just trying to get the cases done, right, at the end of the day. And what's the most efficient and effective way of getting it done is spreading the cases out amongst the field offices.

We wanted to open up the criminal matters and do it that way. There were some DT components, obviously. There are some DT components to this, but I don't believe -- it's just my belief. I don't believe the deputy or the Director or anyone in that chain was trying to pad the numbers. In my conversations, I know them all personally, I don't see it that way, right.

And, look, I know what's been said out there by people. Like, I didn't get any extra bonus for putting a DT -- having 2,000 DT cases. I really don't, right. I didn't get a bonus when I left, right. It's like, I don't care about that. You can interview anyone that worked for me. I actually said that. I don't care about this stuff. I just want to do the job.

And so when I put things in place, I was a hybrid, like criminal and DT or CT when they're doing crisis stuff, right, because it takes everyone to do it.

Chairman Jordan. You said you wanted to do the job.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah.

Chairman Jordan. And you felt the best way to do the job was for them to be assigned to the Criminal Division, not the Counterterrorism Division. And you said you had more resources, more people to handle the job in the Criminal Division. Is that right?

Mr. D'Antuono. That's correct.

Mr. Jordan. Okay.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. And then you also said that within 2 weeks of this terrible event, that within 2 weeks is when you had this conversation with the deputy director, and he instructed you, no, we're not going to do it that way. We're going to do it through the Counterterrorism Division.

Mr. D'Antuono. I think it was 2 weeks. I'm not sure. Like, I can't recall when Dave Bowdich left, because I don't -- it wasn't really -- I don't believe it was with Mr. Bowdich. I believe it was with Mr. Abbate. So it could have been a little bit longer than 2 weeks. I'm not -- yeah, I would have -- you'd have to check the records on that. I just -- I don't want to give you an answer that is not correct, sir. I believe it was with Deputy Director Abbate at the time. So I don't remember when Mr. Bowdich left.

Chairman Jordan. And just to go back when -- your service, Mr. D'Antuono, did you -- so from '96 to 2022, always had good recommendations, good evaluations, good always?

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely, sir.

Chairman Jordan. Is there certain awards you may have won or commendation you received?

Mr. D'Antuono. I didn't care. I pride myself, but I didn't care about awards, sir.

Mr. Jordan. I understand. I'm the same way.

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't have like -- I don't have the director's award or the AG's award or anything like that. And I'm surprised I rose to the level of the ADIC with the mouth that I have and the opinion I have, because I did not -- from day one, how I entered, how I left was the same.

[2:19 p.m.]

Chairman Jordan. Yeah, we can pick that up in the few hours we've spent with you. But always stellar evaluations throughout your --

Mr. D'Antuono. As far as I know, yeah. I don't think I got any bad --

Chairman Jordan. You kept moving up, right?

Mr. D'Antuono. I kept moving up. But that doesn't preclude somebody from moving up, as you probably well know, right, so -- Chairman Jordan. Yeah.

Mr. D'Antuono. -- but not that I know of. I didn't have any, you know, problems with evaluations.

Chairman Jordan. Yeah, I find that interesting, and yet -- that you were suggesting some recommendations you made being, you know, overturned by folks.

Mr. D'Antuono. Well, I -- yeah, I have opinions of that, right? So I'll let those people believe what they want to believe, right? They don't listen to sometimes the experience that people have, and they discount it, so -- that's fine.

[redacted]

Q And the committee has learned that there were nationwide phone calls with field offices, kind of, coordinating --

A Oh, yeah. Okay.

Q And Mr. Thibault may have been involved, Timothy Thibault. Do you remember these calls?

A So I don't believe Tim was involved in that. And so --

Q Okay.

A -- I'll just lay it out, that Tim's a friend --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- right? I started with Tim. He came in in, I think, '97; I came in in '98. We were on the same squad together. I've known Tim 25-plus years, right?

What's been said about Tim is not true --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- is my opinion. I was the one -- as the ADIC, I was the one who had to deliver the news to him, so was there. I was the one who had to make the decision to move him on. He understood. He completely took responsibility for, you know, what he did.

Q Uh-huh.

A But if you look at Tim Thibault's record and look at the cases he prosecuted, you'll see there's no -- there's no politics there. He's a good guy.

Q Do you remember nationwide calls?

A I don't believe Tim was involved in any of those calls.

Q Okay.

A So there were nationwide calls at different points of time, in conjunction with DTOS, right, "DTOS" being the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section, right?

Through the course of the investigations, there were times in which we needed to talk to field offices to make sure that, you know, we're all communicating about the cases, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A And so WFO was in a precarious situation. I think this is where we get the knock. We're in the precarious situation of being DTOS, which I said several times to my people -- we've all said this, amongst my SACs and myself and ASACs -- like, we shouldn't be DTOS. That's not my function. I'm a field office, okay? I have responsibility for the field office. I'm not program management.

But DTOS had issues because there weren't as many people there, right? They just couldn't program-manage the severity of these cases, as many cases as there were. So there were times that came up, the field office had questions, and they weren't posing them to DTOS; they were posing them to my people. So, you know, there were questions that people had, and we tried to answer them.

This was a priority case -- these cases were a priority case from the Director and the Deputy Director. They were a priority. They both said it several times to all the SACs, the ADICs, and everyone out there that they're priority cases and we're gonna put the full force of the FBI to investigate all these cases. That was the direction we received at WFO.

When another field office would ask questions and say, we're not going to do something, I -- we get it. I get it, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A CDCs, legal people, have opined upon this as policy -- opined upon this. Don't take it up with WFO; take it up with headquarters, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A Because we're just trying to do our job, right?

And that's kind of what my people did. So the reports of all the supervisors and ASACs and the people that are trying to direct things -- Tim was not involved, as far as I know, in any of those -- he didn't work DTOS.

So, if he was involved in a nationwide call, it might've been -- the only thing I can surmise, it might've been during a command post, in which -- or during the initial course of the investigations when we had the command post up, from, like, January throughout the inauguration, and then some for the investigation, of briefings --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- right, a briefing as to what we're seeing on some of these things, some of these cases.

That's the only thing I can surmise, but you'd have to ask him, you know? And he would be the one to be able to tell you that. But he wasn't involved in the domestic terrorism matters. He barely was involved in this case, because after that was all done, he went back to his ASAC job.

Q Uh-huh.

And who was your counterpart at DTOS? Who did you speak with the most there?

A So it would've been Steve Jensen. I believe Steve was initially the -- yeah, I believe Steve was the DTOS section chief, yep.

Q So, if WFO needed to get in touch with Mr. Jensen, would you reach out to him, or were others reaching out to him?

A Yeah, it depended, right? So, as the ADIC, I would talk to anyone. It doesn't matter what level it was, right, you know? But Steve was section chief. That's a couple levels -- so his counterpart would've been the SACs, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A But because of the profile of this case, I was directed by the Deputy Director to be intricately involved with the January 6th investigations.

So I had a call every single day -- I don't know when 'til when, but it was a very long period of time -- with the U.S. Attorney's Office and John Crabb. Like I said before, John was leading, you know, the January 6th stuff. So we would just have a call to make sure there were no issues.

And in a case this complex, there were issues. There were minor issues and the big issues, the discovery issues. And with an attorney here, you understand, like, the severity of the discovery in a case like this. Like, making sure that you get it right for discovery purposes is immense. This is a case like no other in this country. Unprecedented. 9/11 was so tragic, but it wasn't as involved, as many subjects as we had in this case.

So there's a lot of those issues, from administrative to CHSes, to just, you know, operational, to, you know, we need to go arrest this person or that person, that were decided on. And the things were going up to the DAG and up to the Deputy Director and back down to me, and I was going back up.

So, for communication purposes, the Deputy asked me to talk to John Crabb, who is not really my counterpart. The U.S. Attorney is my counterpart, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A John was low. But I don't care. I've known John for 20, 20-plus years. I'll talk to anyone. If we can resolve this stuff, let's do it.

So John, myself, Steve Jensen, my SACs, my ASACs, my SSAs, we're all on a call, mostly, every single day. It weaned at a certain point in time. We started going every other day, then once a week, blah, blah, blah. But in the beginning, it was every day that we were talking.

So Steve would've been on those calls. So we talked a lot. And sometimes Steve would reach out to me; sometimes he would reach out to the SACs. But we were all just trying to get to the root of, like, some of these issues and make sure that they weren't bigger issues -- case-manage correctly.

Q Uh-huh.

And to the extent that a field office had a concern or had a question about information they had received from DTOS or WFO regarding a January-6th-related case --

A Yeah.

Q -- would they reach out to DTOS or reach out to the WFO?

A Well, they should've been reaching out to DTOS, but they reached out to us. Because, again, we were the liaison between them and the U.S. Attorney, right? The U.S. Attorney's Office, for a time, was right across the street from Washington Field Office.

So we knew this was going to happen when we set it up this way, right? It's just -- it's inevitable. If the U.S. Attorney's Office wants something, they're going to come to the people that they know, and it's us, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A So, when there were issues, they were going back and forth, because the AUSAs are trying to work with the person in Dallas, Omaha, wherever it was. We were unfortunately in the middle of a lot of these situations.

Q Uh-huh.

A And then I'm in the middle, as the ADIC, getting the questions from the Deputy, which I don't even know the answers to half the time, so I have to reach down, because this is involving another field office and he's hearing stuff from other people.

Q Uh-huh.

A So it was this roundabout communication game that took up a lot of my time.

Q And would the WFO, through you, try to answer those questions, or would they give them to DTOS?

A Normally, we would try to answer the questions because it was the most efficient and effective way of doing it. And the supervisors or the agents or the ASACs would. A lot of times, what I would say to them was, like, look, if you need to raise this up the chain, raise it up the chain. Right?

Q Uh-huh.

A Have an ASAC call. Have an SAC call. If I need to call, I'll call.

And so there's a lot of different issues that came up with, you know, cases -- not opening a case, not wanting to open a case -- you know, all the stuff that you've probably heard about, right? And I'm not dumb; I know this is what you've heard about, and I know what you're getting at. That would've come through.

And I'm not sure what my supervisors and ASACs -- I wasn't in the room with them, right? But when I had conversations with an SAC, it was just like, "Look, you know, I completely agree. I understand you don't have the resources here, you don't have the resources there, you know. But you heard as well as I did, the Deputy Director and the Director have a priority. They want this case as a priority. I don't know what you want me to tell you, but, you know, I'm going to have to go back to the Deputy and say I had the conversation, and he's just going to call you. So cut out the middleman, because I have other things to do, and go right directly to the Deputy Director."

And I'm not sure what happened in a lot of these things. A lot of times, like, people were just, you know, "I don't have the resources to do this. This is an RA." You know? And, look, I've supervised RAs. I know what some people have said, right? You can't do everything in an RA. If you have a two-man RA, good luck.

[redacted]

Q Beyond resources, though, were some of those questions about whether there -- on a case-by-case basis, or a lead-by-lead basis perhaps --

A Yeah.

Q -- about sufficient predication? Were there discussions about predication?

A Yeah, absolutely.

Q About protected First Amendment activity --

A That's a --

Q -- that may or may not have gone on, and just merely, you know, being here wasn't predication, so to speak? Were there concerns voiced to you by others?

A There were concerns, not specifically voiced to me, but I believe there -- I know that there was to others, right?

And so there's a lot of legal complexities in these cases, a lot of policies, procedures, all that stuff, within DT cases, right? And I'm not an attorney, but we got legal opinions to do -- and that's not an excuse, right? It's just definitely not an excuse. But there's our legal people, our CDCs, in the field offices who would confer and say, "Well, we see it this way." And if, you know, attorneys --

Q Did you have a lot of pushback?

A Um --

Q There were so many leads going out. And we're talking thousands of cases --

A Yeah.

Q -- potentially. Was there pushback, again, beyond resources? I understand --

A Yeah, yeah. No, there was pushback, but it never got to the point where it was just, like, pushback like it was -- it was sort of like when I was trying to talk to the DOJ, providing a different opinion, right? And then we come to an agreement, like, "Okay, well, all right, I see your point now. Okay, we can do it under this," right?

And that happened a lot, right? That happened in a lot of cases, that -- and people could say we -- "we," WFO -- like, strong-armed them into that. To me, that's not true. I didn't strong-arm anyone into doing anything. And I'm pretty sure my people wouldn't have done that either. It just -- if the CDCs agreed and DTOS agreed and the OGC agreed that it was within policy to open up that Guardian or open up that case, then that's what we did, you know -- they did.

I don't know, to the point of, like, how much other people had consternation about that.

Q Appreciate that. Thank you.

A Yeah.

Q I'm certain that was quite a goat rodeo to attempt to manage.

A Yeah.

[redacted] Mr. Jordan, did you have some questions?

Chairman Jordan. Do you think there would be -- the dossier was used as part of the premise for getting the FISA warrant. Would there be 1023s on the reports given to the FBI from Christopher Steele?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know anything about that case, sir. I don't. I just --

Chairman Jordan. I'm not -- I'm just saying, in general --

Mr. D'Antuono. Yeah, yeah.

Mr. Jordan. -- would you expect there to be 1023s on the reports given to the FBI by Christopher Steele?

Mr. D'Antuono. If Christopher Steele -- and hypothetically, right -- for process, if Christopher Steele was a CHS opened up by the Bureau, right, and there was conversations with him as a CHS, the memorialization of those conversations --

Chairman Jordan. Would, in fact, be a 1023.

Mr. D'Antuono. -- would be a 1023. That's just process.

Now, if there wasn't evidentiary conversation, if there was nothing to put in a 1023, you might not find a 1023.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. D'Antuono. All right? That happens, so --

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

[redacted]

Q The committee has been told about information that Bank of America voluntarily provided to the FBI. Do you have any knowledge or awareness of the list that was provided?

A So I heard about it after the fact --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- that it happened, I think through the news reports.

Q "After the fact" meaning when? Just recently or --

A No, no, no. After, like, when we were going through the case and stuff like that, so -- the January 6th investigation. Like, I read on a report or something like that.

But I believe headquarters would've handled that. I don't know -- like, I don't think we did at WFO.

Q So you never saw the Bank of America list?

A Again, I was up here --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- so I wouldn't have seen something granular -- like, that granular.

Q Did any of your subordinates raise it to you?

A Not that I recall, no.

Q Another January-6th-related --

Chairman Jordan. Can I go back on the same --

[redacted] Oh. Yep.

Chairman Jordan. So when did you learn that Bank of America had provided information on people, their customers, who were in the D.C. area on January 5th, 6th, or 7th?

Mr. D'Antuono. Honestly, sir, I don't remember. It was probably through the course of the investigation at some point in time. It could've been weeks, it could've been a couple months afterwards. Whenever the article or report came out -- or, there was -- I think there was an article or a media report about it. That's probably when I heard about it. Up to that point, I hadn't heard about it.

Chairman Jordan. So you heard about it and you saw it in the press.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. But, then, did someone confirm that that, in fact, had happened?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't know, because it wasn't something that I would've had to deal with. I had other things going on.

Chairman Jordan. Uh-huh.

Mr. D'Antuono. So, you know, in my experience, when there is terrorism-related crises or active-shooter situations or whatever, there's questions relating to people and, you know, financial information, and that's part of the normal course of the investigation, that we try to ferret out as to, you know -- that's part of the process.

Chairman Jordan. I see. So how do you -- you sort of ferret out financial information.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yep.

Chairman Jordan. How is that done?

Mr. D'Antuono. Normally through subpoenas, yes.

Chairman Jordan. Right.

Mr. D'Antuono. Yes. Or an NSL too, right? You know, an NSL is a subpoena for the national security stuff, so --

[redacted]

Q Would you characterize it as unusual, that that voluminous of a data set was just provided without process?

A I don't have enough information to be able to say it's unusual or not. I do know, in my experience of, like, dealing with white-collar cases, a lot of times there's informal information that you just ask if someone has a bank account, you know, information and stuff like that, and you don't get anything specific, right? You just know the -- to be able to go through and subpoena that, those records, at that point in time.

Q Did the Bureau follow up, to your knowledge, with process to go deeper if need be?

A I don't know. Honestly, I don't know anything about that, because it had nothing to do with what I requested or, to my knowledge, WFO requested. I don't know.

Q So headquarters would be the likely best place for those types of answers?

A There was a lot of people doing different things during January 6th and trying to run down information. Yes.

Q Okay.

A But WFO, to my knowledge -- to my knowledge, me and WFO did not have anything to do with that request.

Q And so you don't know if any investigations were predicated upon that information, specifically, in your field office?

A I don't know. I don't know the answer to that.

Chairman Jordan. Did any of the folks who worked for you at the Washington Field Office bring up Bank of America data on the people they were investigating? Did that come up in conversation with the agents working these cases?

Mr. D'Antuono. I don't recall that, no. And, again, the granularity like that wouldn't have bubbled up to me, you know? It would just be through the normal course of investigative, you know, techniques and stuff like that, if that information came up. So I was dealing with a lot of issues, right, if issues came up, fires and stuff like that.

Chairman Jordan. Were there any situations where a private company would give you information without first having a subpoena?

Mr. D'Antuono. Not that I recall. But there were a lot of complexities to the fact that, when companies have information, they can or cannot share that, right? So, being an all white-collar-crime agent and stuff like that, we have FIRREA laws, right? So, you know, Right to Financial Privacy Act. A lot of parameters around that.

Other information can be duly turned over by the company because they have the information for us. So, take a receipt or information that a private company has. They don't need a subpoena -- in my opinion, they don't need a subpoena, sometimes, to turn that stuff over.

So, when we go talk to the company -- and this is just hypothetical, right? -- I'm going to talk to any type company, and they say, "Hey, I want a subpoena for this," okay, we'll get you a subpoena, but you don't require the subpoena, right? There are certain parameters that require subpoenas.

So there might have been stuff that some company turned over I'm not sure of that would've not fallen under a subpoena requirement.

[redacted]

Q And another January-6th-related investigation we've become aware of is regarding a bus trip that 140 individuals from --

A Yeah.

Q -- Boston to D.C. rode together. The two individuals who organized the bus actually entered the Capitol, and so they were investigated and, I believe, prosecuted.

And then there were some allegations that the WFO or DTOS had asked the Boston Field Office to investigate the other individuals on the bus.

A Yeah.

Q Do you have any recollection of that event occurring?

A So I recollect the information about the bus trip or whatever, the bus being here, shortly after January 6th, when we were trying to figure out who was here and all that stuff and was there a concerted effort to do this.

Q Uh-huh.

A I'm not -- like, I didn't have any involvement in what -- I know who provided the information to you all, or at least I was told, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A I never had a conversation with Joe Bonavolonta, the SAC -- it never raised to my level -- about their concerns about it. So I don't have, like, firsthand knowledge of what happened there.

I know what was said. I don't recall any of what was said happening at WFO or my people saying that type of stuff. But I don't have the specifics, right? If I had the specifics, I might be able to -- you know.

Q Uh-huh. And if SAC Bonavolonta contacted WFO or DTOS regarding this bus trip, who would he have contacted? Who would've been his point of contact, do you surmise?

A He most likely would've called me.

Q Okay.

A Because I know Joe, right? Joe and I came up in the Bureau together. He would've called me -- he's called me on other things too, right? Not these things, right, but other matters, like, that don't involve stuff like this. So I would've surmised he would've called me. If he didn't call me, he would've called my SAC for counterterrorism, so --

Q And if one of his ASACs was communicating with the WFO or DTOS, who would the ASAC have gone through? What would their contemporary have been?

A It's usually ASAC to ASAC --

Q Okay.

A -- usually. You know, sometimes it goes ASAC to supervisor too, right? It depends. It's like, it depends if people care about titles and stuff like that, so -- or levels. And so the ASAC could've just called their counterpart ASAC there or one of the supervisors, so -- or a supervisor calls a supervisor, or whatnot, so -- yeah.

[redacted] I think we're nearing the end of our hour.

We'll go off the record. Thanks.

[Recess.]

[redacted] We can go back on the record, please. It's 2:50.

Hello again, Mr. D'Antuono.

Mr. D'Antuono. Hi.

[redacted]

Q Okay. A couple of questions, I guess, on the subject of the January 6th investigation.

A Sure.

Q You understand that the suggestion that the confidential human sources who were associated with the FBI and in the crowd on January 6th -- that the implication of that is this theory that somehow the FBI was directing those people and, again, orchestrating sort of a false flag. Do you understand that that's the suggestion?

A Absolutely, I understand that, yes.

Q And what is your response to that?

A That that is furthest from the truth.

Q Okay.

A It is -- like I explained in the last session, there was no nefarious or malicious -- in my opinion, no nefarious or maliciousness to having a CHS in the crowd, possibly going to the protest. That's, you know, what we have CHSes for all the time. You know, it was -- none of this was orchestrated by the FBI, nor myself, as has been talked about in other veins, you know, so --

Q Okay.

And then you talked quite a bit in the last hour about the organization of the January 6th cases, how they were classified --

A Yeah.

Q -- the relationship between headquarters and the field office. Do you recall those questions?

A I do, yes.

Q And isn't it fair to say that January 6th -- the investigations that followed were truly unprecedented in the criminal history of events of the United States?

A Oh, my good- -- it was the most unprecedented -- yeah, definitely, you know.

Q And that's the kind of situation where you'd expect program management to come in, correct?

A Yes. Yes.

Q Because it's unique, correct?

A Well, program management helps in cases when they're vast amongst -- all over the place, right? So, like, with this being a nationwide -- it wasn't just centered -- it was centered here in D.C., but obviously it was nationwide. We've said that before within the Bureau, that this is not just WFO's problem or D.C.'s problem; this is a nationwide issue, right? Because everyone that -- not everyone, but most of the people that were here on that day that did whatever acts that they did, legal or not legal, went back to their hometowns in the country. So --

Q Right.

A -- there needed to be some sort of program management aspect to bring all that under, which -- you know, every division does program management. CID does program management; CTD. Headquarters' function is program management.

Q Okay. And just for the record, could you explain what "program management" means in this context?

A Yeah. It's not so much a direct -- like, from a CID perspective, right, from a criminal perspective, right, program management isn't about directing the traffic and how to do investigations. From CID's perspective, it's providing resources for the field offices to do the investigations, right?

So, as a section chief, I oversaw every single white-collar-crime case in the Bureau, all the public corruption and all that stuff. I had, like, 3,000. Did I really oversee every single one? No, but I had people to do it.

And so they were checking on the case, making sure that it was progressing forward in a reasonable manner. If there were issues came up or there were monetary issues that needed to be -- you know, a bribe payment or other authorities that needed headquarters' approval, that's what they're there for, from a program management standpoint.

Counterterrorism Division and Counterintelligence Division, different style of program management. They have a lot more oversight and direction as to how investigations -- the process of investigations are, right, and what's going to take place, more so than CID.

Q Okay.

A So there's differing -- I'm just trying to explain -- there's differing levels and nuances of program management within the FBI. It's not one-size-fits-all.

Q Okay.

And you mentioned resources. That's one important component that can come from the program management, correct?

A Correct.

Q But, also, consistency is another issue, correct? Like, if you have a case like January 6th, where, again, as you just described, it's reaching all over the country, there's a value in having consistency in your investigatory and prosecutorial choices, correct?

A Yes. But there was a difference in a lot of these cases. So it wasn't cookie-cutter with January 6th.

Q Of course. No, that's not what I was implying. Yeah, of course it's going to be based on the defendant and the facts, right?

A Yeah. Well, it's also based upon what they did, right?

Q Of course.

A So we have assault-against-Federal-officer cases, which are not DT- or CTD-focused.

Q Sure.

A They're criminally focused, right?

Q But if you had similarly situated defendants, say, like, that entered the same area in the U.S. Capitol, you would want the FBI in Alabama and the FBI in Rhode Island to take the same approach in terms of whether that was the restricted area, for example, and whether you would prosecuted a person who was here.

A So that comes down to a prosecution, not an investigation.

Q Well, even in the investigation stage, all I'm saying is, like, you want some consistency with respect to these novel issues that were presented to the investigators regarding discovery, regarding --

A Yeah.

Q You know, I mean, sedition is not a crime that is charged that often in the United States, correct?

A Yep.

Q But if somebody needed to look at that in this case, you want to make sure that, wherever you are in the country, you have a uniform understanding of the law. Is that fair to say?

A That's fair to say, but that's not how we set it up at WFO --

Q Okay.

A -- because Washington Field Office was doing most of the seditious cases. And then, from a prosecutorial standpoint, the U.S. Attorney's Office here was told -- well, they were doing all the prosecutions, right? So --

Q Yep.

A -- we try not to get involved in that for consistency's sake if a prosecution was going to take place.

Investigations, it depends on the -- it depends on the case, it depends -- like, Washington Field Office's DTOS is not telling every field office to do it one way or the other. There is no cookie-cutter way to do investigations. That's the problem, right?

I understand what you're saying. So the consistency portion of program management is to make sure it's consistent across the board. I don't know if really a program manager gets to that level.

Q No, I wasn't trying to imply that the prosecutions were going to be consistent. I'm saying the novel issues that you were presented with for discovery, for example.

A Well, so discovery was run out of Washington Field Office --

Q Okay.

A -- right? We were the all -- we were taking every single -- I had a supervisor assigned to discovery, I had agents, we had TDY bodies, all at WFO, which was where a lot of these conversations were happening with other field offices --

Q Okay.

A -- you know? For a consistency portion, yes.

[redacted]

Q And I think you just said, and I just want to emphasize this, that the Washington Field Office was not telling other field offices how to run their cases.

A No. No. That should not have happened. You know, we may have given, like, you know, nudges, like, you know, "This is what headquarters expects. This is what the Deputy Director expects. Take it up with them --

Q Right.

A -- DTOS, if you have an issue." That's headquarters' job, is to program-manage these things, not Washington Field Office's job. We were adamant about that.

How far that was taken, though, when I'm up here, SAC, ASAC, SSA, and all the agents here, who knows, right? Because people might've said stuff that I don't know that they said. So I can't --

Q Understood. Understood.

A -- 100 percent --

[redacted]

Q Okay. Your background, substantively, in most of your career, was in the criminal context. Is that right?

A Yeah. So I -- most of it was in --

Q That's all.

A Yeah, yeah.

Q That was the question.

A Yeah.

Q And I'm just saying, in the --

A Well, it's like, as an ASAC and as an SAC, I did have CI and CT experience too --

Q Okay.

A -- because I was over a whole field office for almost a year in Detroit. So I don't want to be painted into a picture of all I have is criminal experience. I have plenty of CI and CT experience as well. I just never worked the cases -- which you don't need to do in the Bureau. You don't. As a leader, you don't need to do that.

Q Okay.

Fair to say that some of the facts that you were presented with in these cases could fall equally under a Criminal Division or DTOS? It's sort of redundant, in a sense, or either one of them could have proceeded?

A Yeah. So DTOS -- most of the time when you're doing a domestic terrorism, it's a criminal violation anyways, half the time, all right? Because there is no DT statute, as --

Q Right.

A -- we well know, right? And so most of that's coming under there. So it's apples and oranges.

And I'm not trying to portray that I was any different. Like, it was -- I just thought it would've been easier doing it the way we wanted to do it, like, under the umbrella of a criminal case, with branches. The Deputy decides it's another way? No big deal, you know?

Q Right.

A We did it the way he wanted it done. That's fine. "Roger that, sir. I'm onboard. Let's do it."

Q So you have no problem with the way they proceeded. Is that right?

A No, I don't have a problem with it. No. It just -- and it's not -- it was not nefarious, opening up DT cases. Like, in my opinion, there's no padding of the numbers. It meant nothing. In any context, from metrics, bonuses, or whatever else was said, it had no bearing whatsoever on what my counterpart peers and myself were doing.

I can't speak from headquarters, like, from the -- from the standpoint of how many cases we have and what they're trying to -- you know, show what they have. I don't know what people's motivations are on that. I don't want to believe it was nefarious or malicious. I don't lie. What's the point, right, in my opinion.

But, you know, I could speak for WFO and myself, that I didn't care if it was a DT case or it was a criminal case.

[redacted]

Q Were there tools available under criminal that wouldn't have been available under CID or vice versa?

A Nah, not really.

Q Okay.

A No. It was just -- from our standpoint, it was more or less -- so, from Washington Field Office's point, like, my CID branch -- my criminal branch was bigger than --

Q Okay.

A -- CT, right? CT was, I think, my smallest branch. It was just, you know -- or close to. So I have more resources in criminal.

Q Okay.

A Also, other than, like, violent crime -- like, there's white-collar crime that other agencies do. Violent crime, drugs other agencies do as well, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A Counterterrorism, counterintelligence no one else does. That's the Bureau, right? So am I going to be taking my agents from there and resource them to this and not be able to do the CT/CI mission? That's not good, in my opinion, right? We need to continue doing this.

So I had -- at one point in time, I had CI agents working a lot of these cases. Well, my SAC was like, "Boss, we've got things we could be" -- that's a bad day.

Q Uh-huh.

A Okay, we need to get these people off this case --

Q Right.

A -- and put them here. I have more resources in CID to work those things. Which, they're already working all the AFO cases, which is assault-against-a-Federal-officer cases, or the other cases that were not deemed, like, domestic terrorism. There were other cases that weren't all deemed domestic terrorism cases, right? But it came under the umbrella of mostly DT and CTD, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A But there were 365 officers -- or, 365 subjects, I believe, 160-something officers that were assaulted that day.

Q Right.

A There were a lot of cases that were worked by my criminal folks. So I don't want to imply that it was all worked by DT folks. It was worked by criminal as well.

Q Right.

A We were pulled in a lot of directions.

Q Right. You had to put a lot of resources on it.

A Absolutely. And as a manager, as a leader, I've got to decide what --

Q Right.

A -- best resources to put in place to be able to do my other jobs too, you know?

Q Right.

I'm sorry. How many police officers did you say were assaulted?

A I want to say it was, like, 160, 165.

Q Okay.

A There's -- you can look it up.

Q Yeah.

A There's been media reports on all that stuff. They have all the figures.

Q Yeah. Okay.

Q You would agree, though, that this was a very important investigation?

A Absolutely. Yeah, yeah. No, we put a priority to this. I believed in what the Deputy Director and the Director were saying, that this was a priority. You know, I said from day one that we were going to try to figure out why this happened, what happened. Yeah, it was absolutely a priority, and my people at WFO know that I considered it a priority.

Q And did you follow many of the cases as they proceeded through prosecution and trial, just even in the news?

A Here and there. There were so many cases.

Some of the -- like, the seditious conspiracy cases or the conspiracy team cases, you know, the Oath Keepers/Proud Boys cases that came out, yeah, I needed to keep on track of that stuff, because those are unprecedented cases, as you said. Like, seditious conspiracy and stuff like that, that isn't normally charged, you know? So that I made sure.

But the other misdemeanor cases, some of the assaults-against-Federal-officers cases, obviously Officer Sicknick, right, all those things -- you know, the officer that died -- you know, those are -- made sure that we kept track. But all the 2,000-plus cases? No.

Q Did you guys also handle the one involving Officer Fanone?

A Yeah, I believe we -- yeah, we would've. Yeah.

The Officer Sicknick case, I think Capitol Police might've been running that, with cooperation with us.

Q Uh-huh.

A But it was just -- you know, still, we were all involved in all those things.

[redacted]

Q On Officer Sicknick, we've heard some testimony from people who say that, you know, his death wasn't the result of January 6th. Do you have a response to that?

A You know, I don't -- I'm not a doctor.

Q Uh-huh.

A I just know what the report said.

Q Yeah.

A I've seen the video.

Q Uh-huh.

A You know, other than that, it's like, I'm -- my opinion is, he died after January 6th and everything that he went through.

Again, I'm not a doctor. I don't know if -- like, it's not as clear-cut as he was shot --

Q Right.

A -- you know? But, yeah, I believe it was a law enforcement officer that died doing his duties, which is absolutely horrible.

Q Thank you.

A Yep.

[redacted]

Q I guess my final question: Are you proud of what the FBI did in that investigation?

A Absolutely. Yes.

Q Can you explain?

A You know, unprecedented.

A lot of the reports that came out were the fact that, you know, we didn't do enough, we didn't protect -- like, there was an intelligence failure. It was not an intelligence failure. In my opinion, it was a security failure. There wasn't enough protection that day.

I and my people -- I sent about 250 agents down there, plus -- all the components of ERT, everyone else -- to help the Capitol Police and our brothers and sisters, Capitol

Police and MPD and the rest of everyone else that responded that day, to push the people out of the Capitol and take the Capitol back, as my Deputy Director said we were going to do.

So that was important. And, then, after the fact, of trying to bring people to justice that perpetrated illegal acts, yes, you know, I firmly believe that, you know, what my people did in an unprecedented situation and continue to do is we follow the facts and evidence of cases. And that is what we did in this, with no bias whatsoever, one way or the other.

[redacted] That's all I had. Thank you.

[redacted] Thank you.

Mr. D'Antuono. Thank you.

[redacted] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

[redacted] All right. We are back on the record at 3:08.

[redacted]

Q Okay. We're going back in time to your time as a special agent in charge of Detroit. You were in that position, I believe, in November of 2020?

A No. It would've been 2019. So I think I started in October 2019.

Q You started -- okay. And then when did you head back this way for ADIC --

A Well, I think it was actually September of 2019 I got to Detroit, Michigan. And then October 16, 2020, I took over Washington Field Office.

Q All right.

A So I was notified September of 2020 by the Director that I was getting the job. That's why a lot of the reports that say it was, like, days before January 6th are completely untrue --

Q Yeah.

A -- you know, so -- it was just --

Q It seems like there were a lot of reports about a lot of things that aren't necessarily right.

A Yes.

Q Okay.

So this may be even faster. Were you there at all when the Whitmer investigation --

A Yes, I was.

Q -- unfolded? We had some just general questions about some of that.

A Absolutely.

Q But, again, we'll move through these fairly quickly.

Okay. So, while SAC in FBI Detroit, in conjunction with the Department of Justice, as you know, filing a complaint against the six -- it was six men -- for an alleged plot to kidnap the Governor. Do you recall essentially why that investigation was opened, what the predicate was, at a high level?

A What I recall the predication being was that we had individuals that were conspiring to -- I'm not sure if it raised to that level of the Governor at that point or how we opened up the matter, but it was a domestic terrorism case that they were perpetrating to -- or, looking to conspire to -- I'm not sure what the definition or the opening of that case was, but it was a domestic terrorism case. I --

Q Yeah.

A I'd be --

Q I've seen the affidavit. I was just curious what --

A Yeah. I'd be giving, like, erroneous information, and I don't want to say what I believe now in my head. That was 3-plus years ago, right?

Q No, that's fine.

A But it was a domestic terrorism case. There were a lot of conversations about, like, how to open it, what to open it under, all that stuff. And we went through the whole complexities of the policy and procedures that you go through for domestic terrorism cases. So, again, the CDCs opine on it, which is unusual -- not "unusual," but happens in all DT cases because that's policy. So --

Q And I know domestic terrorism cases are unique within the terrorism sphere of operations because of the U.S.-person status and things of that nature.

A Absolutely, yeah, versus --

Q Can -- better you than I -- can you maybe articulate for this committee just a little bit as to some of the steps you may have to jump through in that sort of investigation, for domestic terrorism?

A Yeah. So, because it's a U.S. person, it's extremely sensitive, right? We don't want to be opening a case on a U.S. person that is wrong, right, not factually based, right? And so the predication -- there's a high level of predication, which, at the end of the day, we have to have the CDC opine on that, the Chief Division Counsel, opine on making sure that we're within the parameters to open up a case. So it's one of the higher sensitive cases in the Bureau.

Q Do you recall any external pressure, outside of just the investigation and the facts that supported that, to open up the investigation?

A Oh, absolutely not, no. I never got any external pressure on that.

Q At the time as you were SAC, were you briefed that several of the defendants in the case were allegedly destitute at the time of their recruitment by the FBI? Were you aware of some of their status?

A I was not briefed or aware that they were destitute, no.

Q For example, according to one of the defense attorneys, one defendant was living in a basement of a vacuum repair shop in Grand Rapids in a strip mall, with no running water, toilet, et cetera.

I was just wondered if any of those details were --

A I was aware that he was living at the basement of a vacuum shop, but I was not aware of the no running water and no toilet. I don't believe that ever came up to me.

Q I know there were multiple sources employed in the investigation. Was the original source reporting used to predicate this investigation -- to your extent, was it corroborated, from what you saw, through --

A At this point, I can't opine on that. Again, that was a long time ago. And if I saw the case file or whatever, I could give you more of a definitive answer on that.

Q Sure.

A But it's too long of a period of time, you know?

Q Understood.

At any point from the initial receipt of source reporting, did either FBI headquarters or DOJ provide any direction or guidance with respect to this investigation or its steps, to your knowledge?

A Well, yeah, because it's a DT case, so it comes into the DTOS and program management of headquarters, right? So there would've been opinions thrown back and forth, and I believe there was conversations going back and forth between my people and DTOS and our CDC and everyone to say, is there enough predication to open the case? Because they have to come under that program management, and you have to have a conversation with headquarters.

Q Sure.

A Unlike in, like, a criminal case, where you just open up it on your own and just work it.

Q Yeah. And that is a distinction which you made for the committee earlier --

A Correct.

Q -- with regards to terrorism and counterintelligence investigations.

A Yes.

Q To my understanding, those were more headquarters-driven programs in that regard.

A You're correct.

Q According to evidence presented at the trial, the FBI's case involved at least 12 confidential human sources, CHSes, as well as undercover employees.

Does that sound accurate, from what you recall?

A I don't remember, at the moment, the number. Again, it was a long time ago.

Q Would you have by chance recalled if any of those CHSes had issues with their past reporting?

A I don't -- I can't recall about that stuff.

Q And would it have been normal or would you have been briefed or asked about, inquired about the reliability of any of those CHSes, as the SAC?

A I wouldn't have. I'm the SAC. I have an ASAC, a supervisor, and the case agents dealing with this. There were several ASACs because it crossed a lot of different territories, the Eastern and Western District of Michigan. Two U.S. Attorney's Offices involved too.

I was getting briefed on it. I wasn't involved in the inner workings of what was going on.

[redacted] So you would say your ASACs were more involved?

Mr. D'Antuono. Absolutely. Yeah. Well, that's the normal course of everything, right?

[redacted] Uh-huh.

Mr. D'Antuono. So, as the SAC, you're leading the office. You're getting briefed on certain things and certain cases that are important, through, like, the $50,000 white-collar case all the way up to the DT case. So you have conversations all the time with your ASACs --

[redacted]

Q So your National Security Branch ASAC in that case.

A Correct.

Q How many ASACs did you have in Detroit at that time? Do you recall --

A I think it was --

Q -- how that was broken down?

A -- five.

Q It seems in later years that that --

A Five. Yes.

Q -- sort of --

A Five and an SSIA, which was a supervisory intelligence analyst.

Q Do you recall if terrorism and counterintelligence were broken out, or were they under one ASAC?

A So, at that time, counterterrorism was -- I had an NSB ASAC, National Security Branch ASAC, right?

Q Okay.

A The way the field office was, we also had ASAC out in Grand Rapids, which was the Western District, right? That covered the Western District. I had an ASAC that was responsible for the Eastern District RAs --

Q Okay.

A -- right? A national security ASAC, a violent crime ASAC, a white-collar ASAC, admin ASAC, and then an SSIA. That's six, right? I think I got that right.

Q Yep. Yep.

A So the thing --

Q Three programmatic ASACs and two ASACs that covered resident agencies --

A Correct.

Q -- territorially?

A But, you know, [redacted] like, all the cases I worked out of RAs, we have a responsibility to the RA to come under that ASAC.

Q For the program?

A And then the program NSB is involved in that. So there was a complexity there with the way it was structured. I walked into that structure; I changed the structure afterwards -- not after -- you know, before the Whitmer --

Q So this may have actually had a couple different ASACs involved. And --

A It did.

Q -- I guess the nature of my colleague's question would be, if we were going to seek perhaps further information about that particular case, what would your recommendation be? Who would have more granular knowledge per se?

A Okay. There were three ASACs, to my knowledge, that were dealing with that matter.

Q Any still current in the Bureau, to your knowledge?

A Two are, I believe, yes.

Q All right. Anyone in particular whose name comes to mind if we did have further questions along those lines?

A I don't want to throw them under the bus.

[redacted]

Q Were you familiar with any of the CHSes that were used in the Whitmer plot? Did you have any knowledge about them?

A No, other than after -- like, I'm here. When the trial was going on, I started reading the reports and stuff like that. No, I just -- that stuff didn't really -- there were no issues that were coming up, right? If there was an issue I needed to deal with as an SAC, I would've dealt with it, but, honestly, in that case, there were really no issues that came up.

Q Uh-huh. And are you --

A To my level.

Q Do you remember a CHS named Dan Chappel?

A No.

Q No?

A Other than, I'd probably remember him from the media reporting and stuff like that, the trial.

Q Do you ever remember it coming up during the course of the case, plans to take similar action regarding the Virginia Governor?

A Yes, I do remember there was a -- there was information that was coming out that the Virginia Governor, you know, might've been involved in this conspiracy as well. Not "involved," but --

Q Yeah.

A -- the action against him. He wasn't involved in a conspiracy.

Q And were you learning that at the time that the case was occurring, or did you learn that after the fact?

A No, I believe I learned that during the case.

Q Uh-huh.

A There were a lot of other -- there were a couple other DT cases around the country that we were working, too, at that point in time.

Q Uh-huh.

A I don't remember all the case numbers or anything like that at this point, but there were other cases that were involved -- I think the group was called The Base, I believe, right?

So there were other things that were involved there. From a program management aspect, that's why DTOS was involved in a lot of these things, right, in trying to -- as somebody asked what program manager -- like, making sure the dots were being crossed amongst all the field offices and that people had the flow of information that was correct, right? And that happens a lot, DTOS and CID and CTD making sure that people weren't stepping on each other.

Q Did you ever interact with the Virginia Field Office that had responsibility over --

A That would've been Richmond. No, I don't believe I had a call with Richmond Field Office. Now, my people might've, right? My ASAC and stuff like that, but --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- you know.

Q Were you ever briefed on any conversations that took place between the Richmond Field Office and your field office?

A I don't recall. I really don't. I may have been, but I don't recall what my ASACs would've told me, at this point, so --

Q And was there a regular briefing that you had with your ASACs regarding this specific case?

A No.

Q Okay.

A This is -- this is not, like -- it wasn't, like, this huge case, like, that I needed to be briefed on all the time.

Q Uh-huh.

A So I had meetings weekly with my ASACs. We all sat on the same floor and all that stuff, most of us. Out in Grand Rapids, the ASACs sat in Grand Rapids. But we were all in communication through Teams meetings.

Also, you've got to realize, I believe this was -- case is opened; COVID happened.

Q Uh-huh.

A Right? So that threw in a whole different complexity to this case as well, right? Because, for a time, when everyone else was out of the offices, we were out of the offices. So a lot of what I was dealing with was keeping the morale and my office functioning along all lines.

So this case would've just been one case out of so many others. It wasn't that, like, "Oh, my gosh, this is the most incredible case in the world"-type stuff. No. I had a violent crime issue in Detroit too, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A So I was dealing with a lot of violent crime stuff. That was the summer, you know, we had the unrest. I was dealing a lot with that too.

So this is just one -- that's why a lot of this reporting that came out, I'm like, this is just a normal case. This wasn't botched. It was just a normal case. And it wasn't that, like, spectacular.

Q Uh-huh.

A I don't know. I didn't see it that way.

Q And you said you followed the trials when they occurred, or saw some reporting on the trials?

A Well, yeah, I did, because of what was being said about me, being botching the investigation and how I ran that into ground, and then I became the ADIC of WFO and the Director put me down there to run the false-flag operation. I wanted to -- I had a vested interest in seeing what happened with the trial, you know?

Q Uh-huh.

A And it was also my old field office too.

But there were a lot of issues that popped up in that trial, or before the trial, that were completely out of the control of the FBI -- completely out of control of the FBI and myself and my ASACs, you know, that caused a lot of questions with that.

Q Uh-huh.

A You know, you don't have a crystal ball to know that one of your agents is going to commit domestic abuse against his wife.

Q Uh-huh.

A Who was an undercover agent as well, which causes problems.

And anyone that's ever worked cases, prosecuted or investigated cases, it's not about the evidence; it's about the people presenting the evidence. Like, if you can't attack the evidence, you attack the person.

Q Uh-huh.

A So that was just like, oy vey, you know? That's not good.

Q And when you were reading the reports about how you had, as you said, botched the investigation, what were some of the ways that they said you had botched the investigation?

A There was no specifics.

Q No specifics? Just --

A Oh, no.

Q -- that it was botched?

A It's just that it's me and I'm the ADIC of WFO and I obviously botched the investigation.

Q Uh-huh. And --

A There was so much innuendo and speculation that was so untrue. And there were people here in this -- the other building that made accusations against me in a committee hearing.

Q And do you remember during the trials the defense attorneys brought up the entrapment?

A Yes.

Q What did you make of those arguments?

A So, in my opinion, there's no entrapment issues, right?

Q Okay.

A So cases like this, domestic terrorism or IT cases or whatever, right, when there's a -- when information comes in that somebody wants to do an illegal act, be it an IT case or a DT case -- and I'll go back to St. Louis to give you an analogy, right?

So, during St. Louis -- and this is probably little-known, but -- during St. Louis, leading up to the announcement, we had information that came in that a couple of

New-Black-Panther-movement individuals wanted to get a bomb and throw it at Bob McCullough -- McCulloch, I think, is Bob's last name -- the prosecutor --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- and Chief Belmar, I believe. They wanted to throw bombs at them and blow them up.

We get that information from a CHS or -- I forget where we got it from, but I think it was a CHS. So the SOP in the Bureau is what we normally do, is, we're going to try to corroborate that information, and we're going to send in the CHS to record the conversation.

You record the conversation, the people saying in their own words, yeah, they want an explosive. We tell the CHS, we got a guy -- or a girl -- right? "You need explosives? We can help you with that." They say, "Yeah, absolutely, we're going to do it." That's in their own words, right? We're not putting that in their mind, but if they want something, guns or whatever, that's the standard operating procedure, right?

That case, we eventually prosecuted those two individuals because we took them down during a -- when they were going to buy the explosive from an undercover FBI agent.

Q Uh-huh.

A All right? It's the same thing -- DT case, New Black Panther movement.

Fast forward, now I'm in Detroit. Same type of scenario, different players. Same SOP, right? Take it from an IT perspective. We have an individual that wants to, you know, do harm to an Army Reserve center. Same thing. Or go shoot up the CIA headquarters. Same thing.

[redacted]

Q I know undercover operations were utilized in that particular case with Whitmer.

A Yep.

Q Was that a Group 1 or a Group 2? And we can describe for the committee what the difference is. Do you recall?

A I don't recall. But the -- you know, I've forgotten a lot of the policies as to what raises to the level of a Group 1 versus Group 2, right?

Q Usually the scope and scale of --

A Yeah. I want to say it would've been a Group 1 most likely because of the sensitivity of that and also involving the Governor, I think. I want to say it would've been a Group 1. But there's really --

Q So Group 1 was being approved at headquarters --

A Yeah.

Q -- and Group 2 in the field. Do you recall any stipulations in those approvals? You know how oftentimes they'll stipulate --

A Yeah, yeah. Yeah.

Q -- perhaps "yes, but," you know.

A That's another -- yeah.

Q But do you recall any particular right or left bumpers on the use of that undercover operation?

A I don't. I don't recall, like, the -- well, I don't recall if it was a Group 1 or a Group 2, so I wouldn't recall the stipulations on that. If I saw a document in front of me --

Q That's fair.

A -- yeah, I could read that for you, if you had a document.

But, you know, undercover operations are very sensitive operations, all right?

We had two U.S. Attorney's Offices that were overseeing this, right? I'm not an attorney; I've said that several times, right? So, from an entrapment issue, the attorneys, the agents, everyone is looking at -- or, listening to the recordings. Entrapment is a big issue in undercover operations. We want to make sure we're not entrapping anyone. It was the opinion of the U.S. Attorney's Office, the prosecutors -- not my opinion, not the investigators' opinion -- to prosecute this case the way that they did, with the opinion that there was no entrapment.

So they say we entrapped? We got a ton of people, attorneys that are much smarter than I am, saying that we didn't. So that's why I take umbrage with the fact that we botched anything.

[redacted]

Q I know earlier we asked about the role of confidential human sources and undercovers in January 6th.

A Yeah, yeah.

Q Are you aware of the Ray Epps story?

A Yep. I am very aware of that.

Q What can you tell us about your awareness of the Ray Epps situation?

A I feel awful for Mr. Epps because he has been wrongly accused of being a CHS and I think it's ruined his life.

Q Okay.

A So it's horrible. And, to my knowledge, I know nothing about Mr. Epps being a CHS for the Bureau.

Q Uh-huh.

A As far as I'm aware, he was not a CHS for the Bureau or had anything to do with the FBI.

Q Okay. Do you know why he wasn't -- you know, after January 6th, he was featured on the FBI's -- I think they had a "most wanted" poster --

A Yeah.

Q -- and he was one of the --

A Yeah. So, when we were coming up with, like, who's who, right, at the scene, like, my agents and analysts were poring over so much video, right? So we were trying to figure out what people did and if they did an illegal act, right? So, in order for us to identify people, we asked for the help of the public, right?

Q Uh-huh.

A So one idea was to put their photos on a website.

Q Uh-huh.

A Why he was taken off or not taken off, there was a -- I didn't have this discussion -- there was a discussion that happened someplace else, and I heard about it. And I'm like, "Just take him off, and explain why you took him off."

But I think the rationale of how it went, no one explained. And the Bureau, in my opinion, just doesn't explain very well --

Q Right.

A -- right? We don't give the narrative, so people come up with a narrative. And then when they come up with the narrative, the Bureau doesn't correct the narrative --

Q Okay.

A -- right?

And so it was an unfortunate -- I feel absolutely awful for Mr. Epps that it came to that and no one was responding. And then all this rumor and innuendo was out there by media and everyone else that we could've maybe answered but maybe -- I'm also not -- like, I'm a realist too. A lot of people don't believe what the FBI has to say nowadays anyway, so we could say until we're blue in the face, "I'm saying right here that Ray Epps is not a CHS" and people are not going to believe me.

Q Right.

And you're aware of the YouTube footage of him talking the day before January 6th about how we're going to do this and we're going to do that and --

A I've never watched the video. I've heard about the video. I've read the media reports and stuff like that. But I've never watched it, so I can't, you know, opine on that.

I've heard the media reports about, like, how he said, like, don't do this, don't to that --

Q Right.

A -- we're going to do this, type stuff. He's not a CHS for the Bureau --

Q Okay.

A -- you know? As far as Steve D'Antuono, ADIC of WFO: I don't know of Mr. Epps being a CHS for the Bureau, unequivocally.

Q Uh-huh. Okay.

And do you know if the FBI interviewed him about what his role in January 6th was?

A So it'd be speculation. Like, if he was on our photo lineup, we should've interviewed him --

Q Okay.

A -- right? And I do believe he was interviewed, but I'm not 100 percent sure. I'd have to check with my people.

Q Okay.

And are you aware -- I mean, there are some trials proceeding in the present day where it's been represented that Mr. Epps whispered in their ear, you know, you should do this or you should do that. Are you aware of that?

A Only in what I heard from the media reports.

Q Right.

A But, you know, as far as I know, he was not directed by the FBI to do anything. I don't know that he's a CHS for the Bureau. I don't have that -- you know. But I think the Bureau -- I believe the Bureau has answered the fact that he was not a CHS, so --

Q And so you're not sure whether the FBI came to a conclusion about why Mr. Epps was saying what he was saying the day before but then decided not to go in the building? Or --

A I think that's more of a question for Mr. Epps, but I do --

Q Right.

A -- think we probably interviewed him to make sure that -- you know, to carry the investigation further, right, to see if he did any illegal acts or not. And then he was washed out and not being the subject and not prosecuted.

Q Okay. Even though he was on the Capitol Grounds and he was in restricted space?

A Well, so the restricted space is -- you know, I think I described before, like, it depends on where he was, right?

Q Right.

A So restricted space -- and I'm going to use, like, 3rd Street over here, right? So the grass area here with the restricted -- that was deemed restricted initially, right? And you go all the way to the Capitol over here, with the scaffolding and the stairs.

Q Uh-huh.

A I don't know where Mr. Epps was, but, in my mind, in my opinion, what I discussed with the U.S. Attorney's Office and with DOJ and I think we ultimately compromised on was, this was not going to be prosecuted.

Q Okay.

A If we prosecuted this many people, we'd be at this for decades --

Q Uh-huh.

A -- you know? And, in my opinion, they didn't -- there was nothing wrong here, right? We needed to do what's the most priority, right? And that was the people that incited the riot, the people that broke stuff, stole stuff, broke in, you know, the assaults against Federal officers, domestic terrorism, you know, all that stuff.

[3:31 p.m.]

[redacted]

Q Okay.

So you don't have any specific information on Mr. Epps that would help our Members understand the apparent conundrum?

A I do not. And that's something I was never briefed on at all. Again, it didn't even raise to the level of the ADIC at WFO because there was nothing there there.

Q Right.

A There was nothing. You know, this is like -- when we saw the reports, we were like, "What is this? This is wrong."

Q Were you ever a part of communications regarding the media response to Mr. Epps -- the Mr. Epps story?

A No. That wouldn't have even come under me anyways. That would've been handled by OPA and the Deputy's office, the Director's office, or whatever, as to the response.

Like, even at WFO, like, the thing at WFO is like, even if we wanted to make a media response on something like January 6th, it went all the way up to headquarters.

Q Right.

A I couldn't decide, as the ADIC, what to do --

Q Okay.

A -- in that kind of bind, right? So -- which is fine.

Q Okay.

[redacted] All right. We're going to go off the record.

[Recess.]

[redacted] Okay. We can go back on the record. It's 3:34.

[redacted]

Q Okay. Mr. D'Antuono, regarding the Whitmer case when you were in the Detroit Field Office, you discussed reports -- or, criticism that you had botched the investigation. Do you recall those questions and answers?

A Vividly, yes.

Q Okay. Is it fair to say that you couldn't have botched it too badly because the lead defendants in the Federal case, Adam Fox and Barry Croft, were both convicted at trial? Mr. Fox was sentenced to 16 years in prison; Mr. Croft, 19 years and 7 months, correct?

A That is correct, yes.

Q And that was a verdict by a jury on charges of kidnapping, conspiracy, and conspiracy to use a weapon of mass destruction, with respect to Mr. Fox; and then Mr. Croft, same charges but also possession of an unregistered destructive device, correct?

A That's correct, yes, as far as I know, yeah.

Q Yeah. Those are serious charges, right?

A Oh, absolutely, yeah. Yeah.

Q And the confidential human source that was used in that case that was discussed earlier, Mr. Chappel, I know that you said your memory of this isn't super-sharp, but do you recall that he actually approached the FBI and that it wasn't the other way around? He came to the FBI via local law enforcement, correct?

A I believe so, yeah. I'm not, like, 100 percent sure, but, yes.

Q And he was someone who had sympathies with this group and wanted to kind of train with them, in his own words --

A Uh-huh.

Q -- and then became concerned with some of the things that he heard on his own, correct?

A That's my recollection, yes.

Q And he went to local law enforcement that he had personal relationships with, and then local law enforcement went to the FBI, correct?

A It sounds correct, yes.

Q And, ultimately, someone at the FBI asked him at that point to continue his connection with this group and to become a source for the FBI?

A That's what we normally do, yes.

Q Okay.

And in the handling of Mr. Chappel and other CHSes in that particular case, was there anything that you thought was inappropriate or unusual?

A Not that I saw or witnessed, no.

Q And did you think that case was properly predicated?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Okay.

I'm going to have marked as exhibit 8 -- this is just the press release from the United States Attorney's Office that announced the sentence in the cases that we mentioned.

A Thank you.

[redacted] We should probably mark them as 8 and 9.

[redacted]

Q Yeah. Sorry, 8 and 9. There's actually a separate release for each of the defendants.

A Okay.

Q But they're stapled together.

A Oh, okay.

Q Yeah, they're connected, but they're actually two different press releases.

[D'Antuono Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

[D'Antuono Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

Q I'm just introducing that. You've already testified to the sentence, which is just written out in this exhibit.

A Yeah, one's DOJ, and one is the Western District.

Q Okay.

Now, regarding the use of confidential human sources and undercover officers, those law enforcement methods or tools are used in a variety of criminal cases, correct?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q They're used frequently in narcotics cases?

A Yes.

Q Also in child exploitation cases?

A Correct.

Q You'll often have an undercover officer who is posing as a child, for example?

A Correct, yep.

Q And that type of technique is very important in gaining evidence in those cases, right?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Even though theoretically a defendant could raise the defense of entrapment, often those cases still garner enough evidence to overcome that at trial, correct?

A The majority, I believe, do, yes.

Q And in this case that's what happened?

A Absolutely, yes.

Q Okay.

Do you think that it was important for the FBI to investigate the plot to kidnap and kill Governor Whitmer?

A Absolutely.

Q And why is that?

A It's a serious matter. You know, to conspire to, you know, kidnap and possibly kill a Governor -- or anyone, for that matter; it doesn't even have to be a Governor -- is a serious thing. You know, we take violent crime completely serious, right? And, in this case, there was a conspiracy to do that.

Q And would the FBI's handling of the case have been any different if you'd been investigating a plot to kidnap a Republican State official?

A God, no. No. Absolutely not.

Q Was the investigation politically motivated in any way?

A Absolutely not. No.

Q And was there any outside influence from headquarters or any part of Department of Justice, outside of the field office, that was trying to influence your steps?

A I never talked to anyone at headquarters or DOJ about this matter until it came down to the final operation.

Q Okay.

[redacted] That's all I had. Off the record.

[redacted] Thank you. We're done.

[Whereupon, at 3:39 p.m., the interview was concluded.]

Certificate of Deponent/Interviewee

I have read the foregoing ____ pages, which contain the correct transcript of the answers made by me to the questions therein recorded.

_____

Witness Name

_____

Date

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, D.C.

INTERVIEW OF: CHARLES DAYOUB

Tuesday, June 13, 2023

Washington, D.C.

The interview in the above matter was held in room 164, Cannon House Office Building, commencing at 10:01 a.m.

Present: Representative Jordan.

Appearances:

For the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY:

[redacted] GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], DEPUTY GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], RESEARCH ASSISTANT

[redacted], COUNSEL

[redacted], CHIEF COUNSEL FOR OVERSIGHT

[redacted], SPECIAL COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY CHIEF OVERSIGHT COUNSEL

[redacted], MINORITY INTERN

[redacted], MINORITY PROFESSIONAL STAFF MEMBER

For the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION:

[redacted], ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL, OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted], ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL, OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

[redacted] We'll go on the record.

Good morning. This is a transcribed interview of Special Agent in Charge Charles Dayoub. Chairman Jordan has requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the FBI.

Would the witness please state your name for the record?

Mr. Dayoub. Sure. Charles Dayoub.

[redacted] Could agency counsel please state your names for the record?

[redacted] Sure. [redacted] from the FBI's Office of General Counsel.

[redacted] [redacted] from the FBI's Office of the General Counsel.

[redacted] Mr. Dayoub, you do understand that agency counsel has a primary fiduciary duty to the Bureau and not to you individually?

Mr. Dayoub. Yes.

[redacted] And so you would like to continue with agency counsel today?

Mr. Dayoub. Yes.

[redacted] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to appear voluntarily.

My name is [redacted], and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff.

I'll now have everyone else from the committee who is here at the table and in the room introduce themselves as well.

[redacted] I'm [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan's staff.

[redacted] [redacted], chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with the House Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted], legal intern, Judiciary Democratic staff.

[redacted] [redacted] with Chairman Jordan.

[redacted] I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions for one hour and then the minority will have time to ask questions for an equal period of time.

As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

Do you understand that?

Mr. Dayoub. Yes.

[redacted] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to the people on the staff whose turn it is.

Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you as well.

It's important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it, and that goes for everyone present at today's interview.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we'll take our time. If you have any questions or you do not understand one of our questions, please just let us know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point, please just say so.

Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour. If you would like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it's best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. And it is okay to let us know who you learned the information from.

If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete answer to the question.

You should also understand that by law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

Do you understand that?

Mr. Dayoub. I do.

[redacted] And this also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an interview.

Do you understand that?

Mr. Dayoub. Yes.

[redacted] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. Section 1001.

Do you understand this?

Mr. Dayoub. Yes.

[redacted] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to today's questions?

Mr. Dayoub. No.

[redacted] Finally, I would like to make note that the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in the interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

For that same reason, the marked exhibits that we use, they will remain with the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of the exhibits will be collected at the end of the interview.

All right. That's the end of my preamble.

Is there anything that my colleagues from the minority would like to add?

[redacted] No. We thank the witness for taking the time to come up to D.C. today.

Mr. Dayoub. Sure.

[redacted] Okay. The time now reads 10:06 a.m.

I'll turn it over to my colleague [redacted]

BY [redacted]

Q Good morning, Mr. Dayoub. Thank you for being here today.

You're currently employed by the FBI, correct?

A Correct, yes.

Q What's the title of your job?

A I'm the special agent in charge of the FBI's Kansas City Field Office.

Q And when did you take that position?

A August 2021.

Q Okay. So in that position, what are your roles and responsibilities?

A So I basically head the office. My main roles are to be the external face of the FBI. We cover both the State of Kansas and the western part of Missouri. It's a lot of external partnerships, community outreach, private sector engagement.

I also work to ensure the employees of my office have the resources they need, help them do their jobs, and make sure that they can do their everyday actions. So that's kind of my general role.

Q Okay.

And who is your direct supervisor?

A The deputy director of the FBI.

Q Okay.

So in the FBI Kansas City Field Office, can you describe that organizational chart?

A Sure. So there is myself. So I'm the special agent in charge. I have currently now four ASACs and one administrative officer, AO. The branches I have are criminal, an ASAC that covers my criminal branch. I have an ASAC that covers our counterterrorism, weapons of mass destruction, and special operations. That ASAC currently covers also my Missouri Resident Agencies.

Then I have another ASAC that covers my cyber, counterintelligence. That ASAC covers also the Kansas Resident Agencies.

And then I have an intel ASAC. That's new, and I can go into that if you'd like. That has my intel branch, and he's an ASAC over that. He was recently appointed.

Then I have my administrative officer. She's an AO. She covers all our administrative matters.

Prior to having an ASAC for intel, though, I previously had a supervisory senior intelligence analyst covering intel. So that was just a switch based on how we posted the position.

Q Got it.

And who are your four ASACs?

[redacted] He can answer. I just request that these are non-SES, so if the transcript were to be released, we'd request that they would be redacted.

[redacted] Sure. Absolutely.

Mr. Dayoub. So the ASAC for CT special operations is Jeffrey Berkebile. He now covers the Missouri Resident Agencies. Chad Jaffe has our CI cyber and now Kansas RAs.

And I did switch those, but recently. Tom Sondgeroth is a new intel ASAC. I'll have to pull how you spell his name, honestly, if you need to know.

BY [redacted]

Q I was definitely going to ask.

A Yeah, I can get that for you.

And my criminal ASAC is -- why am I blanking on the names? I'm sorry. Jeanette -- how do you spell her last name? Here, just so I have it for you. Milazzo, M-i -- if you need it, Jeanette Milazzo. So it's M-i-l-l-a-z-a (sic).

And then I'll tell you Tom's name so you have it. So Sondgeroth, S-o-n-d-g-e-r-o-t-h. He's the intel ASAC.

Q Okay.

A So you have it.

Q Thank you for that.

Who is your AO?

A Oh, Lauren McGuinn. Sorry.

Q So, generally, are FBI agents required to have a security clearance?

A Yes. I think all FBI employees are required to have a security clearance.

Q Okay. So can you work for the FBI if your security clearance is revoked or suspended?

A My understanding is you cannot, no.

Q Okay.

Mr. Dayoub, when did you join the FBI?

A 2005.

Q 2005.

And what was your key motivation for joining the Bureau?

A Honestly, it's something I've always wanted to do. My parents immigrated to the United States, and I wanted to kind of serve the country in a way. I joined the military and then joined the FBI.

Q So since 2005, can you walk us through your positions in the Bureau?

A Sure. So, obviously, I came in as a special agent, served initially in the El Paso Field Office and then the Washington Field Office, for about 3 years in El Paso, about 3 or 4 years in the Washington Field Office as a special agent. I did some criminal matters but mostly counterterrorism work.

I then spent some time as a supervisory special agent at FBI headquarters in the Counterterrorism Division. From there, I was selected as a field supervisor in the Philadelphia Division. I spent a couple years as the counterterrorism supervisor and then as the senior resident agent in the Newtown Square RA.

From there, I went back to headquarters as an assistant section chief in the Counterterrorism Division. From there, I became an ASAC at the Washington Field Office covering cyber matters.

From there, I was promoted as section chief to the Counterintelligence Division, and then, from that position, out to Kansas City as special agent in charge.

So that's kind of the process.

Q Gotcha.

So before the FBI, you mentioned you were in the military. What did you do immediately before you joined the Bureau?

A I was an attorney.

Q Okay. Where did you practice?

A In Texas.

Q Texas. Are you currently barred in Texas?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Did you practice at a law firm?

A Yes.

Q Which law firm?

A Haynes and Boone, LLP.

Q And what type of law did you practice?

A Insurance coverage litigation.

Q What did you think about that?

A It was very -- it was good. It was nice. Very policy driven. You have to read and interpret kind of policies. And we -- our clients were the insured, not the insurance company. So we basically -- our clients were companies that were having issues with their insurance policies, and then there were issues with the insurance company coverage. So a lot of policy discussion, case law review. It was very exciting.

Q How long did you do that?

A Not long. It was 6 months, 7 months. I was in process with the FBI out of law school, got that job, and then jumped to the FBI shortly thereafter.

Q Okay. I gotcha.

So going back to your military service, what branch did you serve in?

A Marine Corps.

Q And what was the highest rank you achieved in the Marine Corps?

A I was a sergeant, so an E5. I was enlisted.

Q Okay. Did you receive an honorable discharge?

A Yes.

Q Mr. Dayoub, do you recall Special Agent Garret O'Boyle?

A I do.

Q When did you first meet Mr. O'Boyle?

A So when I first arrived at the Kansas City Field Office, I did -- I went around the first month and just met everybody. Went to every squad, went to all my offices, both in Kansas and Missouri. And that was the initial time I met him, was I was meeting everybody else. And specifically, he was in the Wichita Resident Agency, and that's where I met him and his team.

Q Did you interact frequently with Mr. O'Boyle?

A Not initially. There were some interactions later on, but initially, it was just all like everybody else, kind of the introduction, meeting people in the office, seeing what they did, how can I help, stuff like that.

Q Sure.

So while he was employed in the Wichita office, how would you describe Mr. O'Boyle as an employee?

