who testified before the Committee and Select Subcommittee believed that BoA acted alone in sending customer data to federal law enforcement, the documents indicate that federal law enforcement encouraged financial institutions to engage in financial surveillance of American citizens. These documents shed light on back-channel networks that facilitate discussions between financial institutions and federal law enforcement, as well as the information-sharing methods that federal law enforcement used as part of an ostensible investigation into the events of January 6.

THE STATUTORY FRAMEWORK FOR ACCESS TO AMERICANS' PRIVATE FINANCIAL DATA

The emergence of credit cards, mobile banking, and other digital marketplaces have resulted in an unprecedented amount of private data entrusted to financial institutions, potentially revealing all sorts of sensitive information about a customer.³³ For that reason, financial records have become an important investigative tool for federal law enforcement.³⁴ Still, federal law enforcement's interest in financial records must be weighed against the privacy interests of Americans. Without greater oversight and the necessary legislative reforms reflecting the advances in modern-day banking practices, Americans' private financial data is still vulnerable to the shortcomings of an outdated legal framework and pervasive government surveillance.

In 1976, the Supreme Court of the United States held in United States v. Miller that customers of financial institutions have no reasonable expectation of privacy in documents voluntarily conveyed to a third party.³⁵ In effect, that decision meant that law enforcement did not have to obtain a warrant in order to retrieve bank records held by a financial institution.³⁶ The Miller decision triggered Congress to enact the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (RFPA), which afforded some privacy protections to financial records held by a third party.³⁷ Most notably, the RFPA requires law enforcement to utilize certain legal processes as a condition of receiving financial records, subject to a number of exceptions.³⁸ In addition, the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) imposes additional reporting obligations on financial institutions and Section 314(a) of the USA Patriot Act of 2001 gave federal law enforcement greater access to account information entrusted to financial institutions.³⁹ From the information obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee, these pieces of legislation have failed to adequately protect Americans' financial information. What it has left is an expansive, backdoor information-sharing regime led by the nation's most powerful law enforcement agencies and their partners in the financial sector.

A. The Right to Financial Privacy Act

In general, the RFPA protects customer information by limiting access to the "financial records of any customer from a financial institution unless the financial records are reasonably described" and the "government authority" receives customer consent, or the records are disclosed in accordance with certain notice requirements pursuant to an administrative subpoena, search warrant, judicial subpoena, or formal written request.⁴⁰ However, if one of the eighteen exceptions under the RFPA apply, legal process and notice may not be required.⁴¹ In some circumstances, these exceptions allow the FBI and the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network

(FinCEN), along with other government authorities, to pursue certain customer bank records without utilizing any legal process.⁴² Doing so, however, may limit the kinds of records the requester may receive.⁴³

Under many circumstances, the exceptions to the RFPA function as the rule. For example, the RFPA does not permit the “withholding of financial records or information required to be reported in accordance” with any other statute or rule⁴⁴ and allows financial institutions to voluntarily notify any “[g]overnment authority that such institution, or officer, employee, or agent has information which may be relevant to a possible violation of any statute or regulation.”⁴⁵ The customer has no redress available against the institution for such a disclosure or for its failure to provide the customer with notice.⁴⁶ Another exception to the RFPA allows for “disclosure pursuant to legitimate law enforcement inquiry.”⁴⁷ That exception permits law enforcement to seek the “name, address, account number, and type of account of any customer or ascertainable group of customers associated with a financial transaction or class of financial transactions”⁴⁸ Similarly, the RFPA does not protect . . . against actions initiated by the U.S. Secret Service or other “government authorit[ies] authorized to conduct foreign counter- or foreign positive-intelligence activities for purposes of conducting such activities . . . or a government authority authorized to conduct investigations of, or intelligence or counterintelligence analyses related to, international terrorism for the purpose of conducting such investigations or analyses.”⁴⁹ The FBI is also excepted from the RFPA’s general protections and legal process requirements if the FBI certifies to a financial institution that the records are “sought for foreign intelligence purposes to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.”⁵⁰ The financial institution is generally prohibited from disclosing to any person, including its impacted customers, that any such intelligence-related request has been made.⁵¹

B. Section 314(a) of the USA Patriot Act

Section 314(a) of the USA PATRIOT Act of 2001 required the Secretary of the Treasury to “adopt regulations to encourage regulatory and law enforcement authorities to share with financial institutions information regarding individuals, entities, and organizations engaged in or reasonably suspected, based on credible evidence, of engaging in terrorist acts or money laundering activities.”⁵² The law authorized “federal, state, local, and foreign (European Union) law enforcement agencies, through FinCEN, to reach out to more than 37,000 points of contact at more than 16,000 financial institutions to locate accounts and transactions of persons that may be involved in terrorism or money laundering.”⁵³ When a request is received, “financial institutions must query their records for data matches,” and then report whether there is a positive match to FinCEN within two weeks of receiving the request.⁵⁴ These requests are subject to strict confidentiality requirements prohibiting their disclosure.⁵⁵

Put differently, federal law enforcement is able to direct more than 16,000 financial institutions to conduct a search of their financial records if law enforcement “reasonably suspect[s], based on credible evidence,” that the suspected individual or entity is engaging in terrorist activity or money laundering.⁵⁶ If the financial institution identifies a positive match, it reports to FinCEN the name, account and transaction, as well as the social security number, taxpayer identification, passport number or any other identifying information related to the individual.⁵⁷ This is done without any judicial involvement.⁵⁸ The Committee and Select Subcommittee have obtained documents indicating that federal law enforcement invoked its “terrorist activity” authority under Section 314(a) as a part of its investigation into the events at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021.⁵⁹

C. The Bank Secrecy Act

Finally, the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) authorizes the Department of the Treasury to impose certain far-reaching reporting obligations on businesses and financial institutions.⁶⁰ As part of these requirements, financial institutions must file a Currency Transaction Report (CTR) with FinCEN reflecting the information of any individual involved in any transaction of over $10,000, including the individual’s government-issued identification and Social Security Number.⁶¹ The BSA also “requires that a bank or other financial institution file a SAR [suspicious activity report] whenever it identifies a ‘suspicious transaction relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation,’”⁶² while placing a de facto gag order on financial institutions prohibiting the revelation of “any information that would reveal the transaction has been reported” to any third party.⁶³ Indeed, “SARs contain personally identifiable information about individuals and entities, details about financial transactions, and unconfirmed information regarding potential violations of law or regulation . . . subject to strong confidentiality protections”⁶⁴ The BSA also grants broad immunity to “[a]ny financial institution that makes a voluntary disclosure of any possible violation of law or regulation to a government agency.”⁶⁵ By contrast, failure to file a SAR can result in large monetary penalties.⁶⁶ This creates a strong incentive for financial institutions to file defensively, even when there is little reason to do so.⁶⁷

In other words, the BSA shields financial institutions from ever facing liability for any disclosure made to law enforcement regarding its customers’ transactions—regardless of the financial institutions’ reasonableness or motivations—and the institution never has to disclose to the customer that the transaction was reported to law enforcement, leaving meaningful judicial review lacking. The BSA also cloaks the reporting of a “suspicious transaction” activity report in a nearly impenetrable veil, which some banks have used in an attempt to shield these reports from congressional oversight.⁶⁸ Combined, this framework treats banks as agents of the government and obstructs congressional oversight of federal law enforcement and its relationship with the financial sector, leaving the American financial system ripe for pervasive surveillance. Indeed, the Supreme Court of the United States has expressed skepticism about the BSA’s reporting requirements in considering its constitutionality, noting in a 1974 opinion that the “reporting requirements . . . would pose substantial and difficult constitutional questions” and warning that “the potential for abuse is particularly acute where, as here, the legislative scheme permits access to this information without invocation of the judicial process.”⁶⁹

To illustrate the breadth of the BSA’s reporting requirements, FinCEN announced that in 2019 it received over 20 million filings from more than 97,000 financial institutions as required by the BSA.⁷⁰ According to FinCEN, those filings “provid[ed] a wealth of potentially useful information to [government] agencies”⁷¹ Among those BSA-required filings, FinCEN reported that it received over 4.3 million SARs in 2022, nearly doubling from the number it received in 2019. FinCEN also reported that “Other Suspicious Activities” was the most reported reason for filing a SAR, with “terrorist financing” as one of the least reported SAR activity types.⁷² This means that FinCEN is using the BSA and its SAR reporting requirements to track far more transactions than just those limited to money laundering and terrorist financing. Similarly, FinCEN reported that it received over 20.6 million CTRs in 2022, averaging to nearly 56,500 per day.⁷³ A CTR contains sensitive financial data and is required to be filed for any transaction over $10,000, regardless of whether anything about that transaction is “suspicious” or otherwise related to criminal activity.⁷⁴

As a result, a vast amount of personal financial information is regularly shared with FinCEN and, in turn, to other law enforcement agencies via a searchable BSA database.⁷⁵ For example, in 2020, “FinCEN reported that DOJ agencies conducted more than 500,000 searches of SARs through its database.”⁷⁶ However, neither Congress nor American consumers have any real access to examine the propriety of the SARs or law enforcement’s use of them.⁷⁷ The Committee and Select Subcommittee’s investigation has obtained documents revealing that SARs were likely filed on sprawling classes of transactions and individuals despite the lack of any link to criminal—or even “suspicious”—activity.

FINANCIAL SURVEILLANCE OF AMERICAN CONSUMERS

The Committee and Select Subcommittee have obtained documents showing that federal law enforcement’s investigation, predicated on the events that transpired at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, devolved into a fishing expedition for Americans’ financial data. Federal law enforcement agencies, including FinCEN and the FBI, treated lawful transactions as suspicious and shared information with financial institutions through backdoor channels, often circulating materials exhibiting a clear animus towards conservative viewpoints. In addition, FinCEN and the FBI relied on Zoom discussions, private and online government-run portals, as well as sweeping searches of financial institutions’ records to conduct its investigation. Given the important civil liberties at stake, federal law enforcement’s overreach and political bias is alarming.

A. Federal law enforcement used informal meetings and backchannel discussions with financial institutions to devise the best methods for gathering Americans’ private financial information.

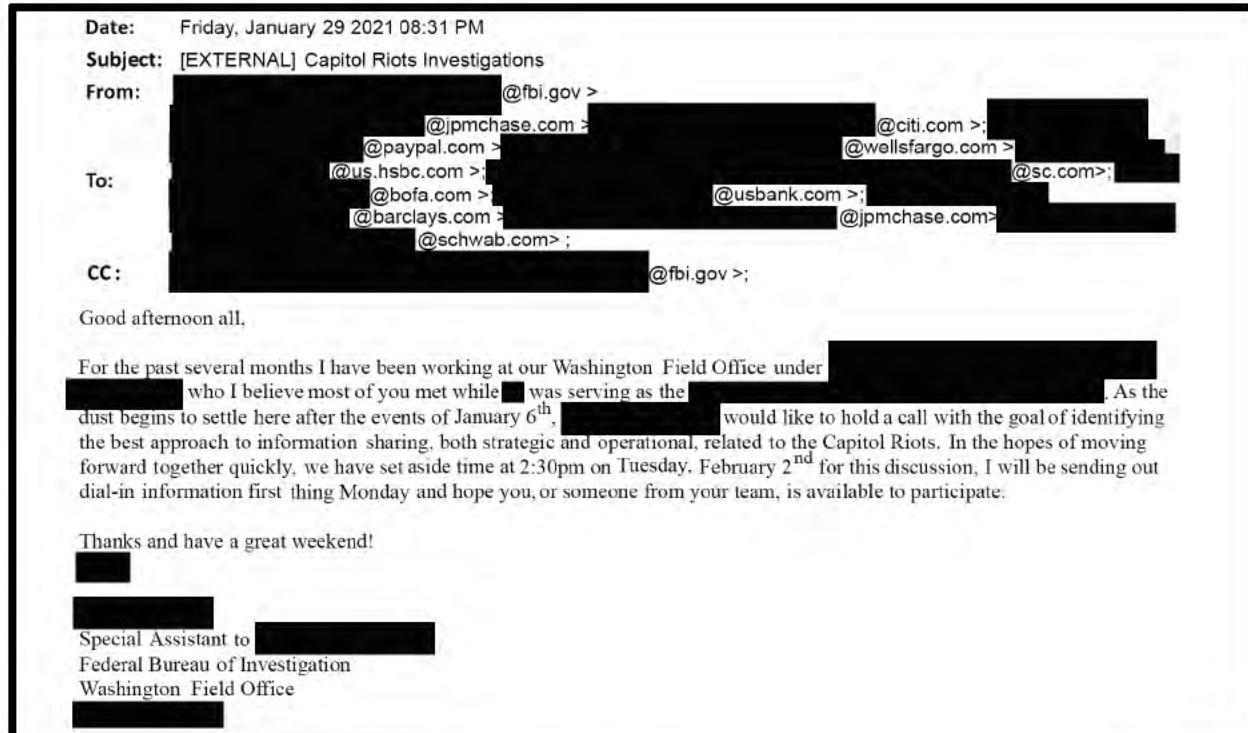

Federal law enforcement officials organized Zoom discussions with financial institutions as part of their investigation into the events of January 6, 2021.⁷⁸ Participants in these meetings included Barclays, U.S. Bank, Charles Schwab, HSBC, BoA, Paypal, KeyBank, Standard Chartered, Western Union, Wells Fargo, Citibank, Santander, JPMorgan Chase, Union Bank, and MUFG.⁷⁹ In one meeting, an FBI official from the Washington Field Office reached out to a number of financial institutions to arrange a meeting with the goal of “identifying the best approach to information sharing, both strategic and operational,” in the wake of the events of January 6.⁸⁰ At least five other Zoom meetings were scheduled by FinCEN officials and financial institutions and included the subject “Capitol Riots.”⁸¹ Viewed together, these meetings suggest that federal law enforcement officials were brainstorming informal methods—outside of normal legal processes—for obtaining private customer information from financial institutions.

⁸¹ Zoom Meetings, supra note 78.

B. Federal law enforcement circulated politicized materials that evidenced hostility towards conservative viewpoints and weaponized financial institutions’ databases by treating lawful transactions as suspicious.

Federal law enforcement circulated materials to financial institutions as part of an information-sharing operation that alerted financial institutions to the risk of customers and accounts that may be associated with conservative views.⁸² In particular, federal law enforcement attempted to cast swaths of lawful and otherwise harmless transactions as potentially suspicious.⁸³ Given that these materials were distributed to some of the largest financial institutions and companies in the world, their reach could potentially impact the transactions and accounts of hundreds of millions of customers without the customers ever knowing it.

i. Federal law enforcement shared information equating conservative beliefs with domestic terrorism through a controlled-access portal managed by the “Domestic Security Alliance Council.”

One way that information is shared from federal law enforcement to certain corporations and financial institutions is through an obscure government-run portal led by the Domestic Security Alliance Council (DSAC) that is only accessible to its “members.”⁸⁴

⁸⁴ About DSAC, DOMESTIC SECURITY ALLIANCE COUNCIL, <https://www.dsac.gov/about> (last visited Jan. 17, 2024); see also BofA-HJUD-00000051.

The DSAC is a program spearheaded by the FBI’s Office of Private Sector Engagement Programs and Initiatives (OPS) and the Department of Homeland Security’s Office of Intelligence and Analysis that promotes “timely and effective exchange of security and intelligence information between the federal government and the private sector.”⁸⁵ According to the official website, the DSAC is a “corporate membership program,” that requires all of its members to be “for-profit” and “generate a minimum of $1 billion in annual revenue”⁸⁶ Its mission includes facilitating “enduring relationships among its private sector member companies, across the FBI enterprise, and with the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Headquarters . . . to detect, prevent, and deter criminal acts.”⁸⁷ Since its creation in 2005, “[t]he DSAC program has grown to include more than 650 member companies . . . collectively account[ing] for nearly two-thirds of the U.S. Gross Domestic Product and employ[ing] more than 35 million people.”⁸⁸ Through the DSAC portal, among other avenues, the FBI, DHS, and other government agencies are able to share non-public intelligence products, including Liaison Information Reports, with members of the private sector.⁸⁹

One such intelligence product, titled “Domestic Violent Extremists Likely Emboldened in Aftermath of Capitol Breach,” was shared as a Liaison Information Report and prepared by the FBI, DHS, and the National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC).⁹⁰ The FBI’s Office of Private Sector shared the report with financial institutions and other DSAC members on January 18,

2021 to “alert private sector partners that the 6 January 2021 violent breach by suspected domestic violent extremists (DVEs) into the U.S. Capitol Building may serve as a driver for a diverse set of DVEs.”⁹¹ In the report, the FBI described reasons that “may play in mobilizing criminal actors and DVEs to violence.”⁹² Among the reasons that may mobilize DVEs to violence is “the belief in the existence of global or ‘deep state’ actors who work to manipulate various social, political and/or economic conditions”⁹³ It also assesses that “DVEs’ efforts to engage in violence at lawful gatherings will probably increase throughout 2021, as some DVEs perceive increased socio-political pressures.”⁹⁴ Those “pressures” mobilizing DVEs to violence, in the eyes of the FBI, included opposition to “firearm legislation, the easing of immigration restrictions, and new limits on the use of public land,” as well as “narratives by DVEs that the 2020 General Election was illegitimate,” or “discontent with renewed measures to mitigate the spread of COVID-19, the ordered dissemination of COVID-19 vaccinations, and the efficacy and/or safety of COVID-19 vaccinations.”⁹⁵

In other words, according to the FBI, an American citizen’s opposition to firearm regulations, open borders, or COVID-19 lockdowns and vaccine mandates—all of which are viewpoints protected by the First Amendment to the Constitution—“feed into” an “existing narrative many DVEs subscribe to regarding the U.S. government’s exercise of power.”⁹⁶ Put another way, expressing a belief in the existence of the “deep state,” support for typical conservative policies with respect to firearms or immigration, or doubt about the conventional narrative, may result in an individual being labeled by the FBI as a “DVE Actor” and “Likely to Pose [an] Increasing Threat at Lawful Protests, Rallies, [and] Demonstrations. . .”⁹⁷ It is disturbing that the most powerful law enforcement agency in the country would consider views widely held by millions of Americans as the signs of domestic violent extremism. Worse yet, the federal government endorsed this determination with its partners by sharing the report with the largest and most powerful for-profit corporations in the world to alert them about potential “threat[s]” from the people it describes.⁹⁸

Astoundingly, the FBI’s report was an incredibly tone-deaf exercise of government gaslighting. In a clear example, the report deplored the belief in the existence of a “deep state” as indicative of domestic violent extremism.⁹⁹ Ironically, the report itself was likely shared through a secret, government-run information-sharing portal that is only accessible to the government and some of the largest “for-profit companies” in the world.¹⁰⁰ To put a finer point on this hypocrisy, the report defines “deep state actors” as those who “work to manipulate various social [and] political” conditions.¹⁰¹ In the same breath, the report acknowledges the existence of “removal efforts” of social media platforms against potential domestic violent extremists.¹⁰² In effect, the report admits that social media companies are engaging in censorship—or the “manipulat[ion]” of speech—while labeling those who believe in the existence of such manipulation as potential domestic terrorists.¹⁰³

ii. The FBI commandeered financial institutions’ databases to conduct sweeping searches without an individualized nexus to particularized criminal conduct.

The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution protects against unreasonable searches and seizures by the federal government.¹⁰⁴ The founders likely would have never imagined a circumstance in which the federal government would conduct mass surveillance of Americans’ financial data. Yet, the information available to the Committee and Select Subcommittee shows how federal law enforcement sought sweeping searches of financial institutions’ customer databases without legal process, and even circulated materials instructing financial institutions on how to conduct those searches using Merchant Category Codes (MCCs) and other materials to alert them to customers likely to be associated with conservative political views.

1. The FBI contacted Bank of America directly and provided extremely broad search terms for querying its database and sharing any potential matches with federal law enforcement.

At 9:56 a.m. on January 15, 2021, an FBI official emailed BoA with the subject line “upcoming SAR product idea/brainstorming and check-in with you both.”¹⁰⁵ In the body of that email, the FBI official wrote that “[i]f either or both of you have time this morning to discuss SARs [Suspicious Activity Reports] and a couple ideas, that would be great.”¹⁰⁶

In a subsequent email just a couple of hours later, the FBI told BoA “thanks for the very quick communication/response over the phone this morning . . . [t]o recap our morning call, we [FBI] are prepared to action [immediately] the following thresholds,” supplying BoA with broad search thresholds for querying the financial transactions of its customers for potential matches.¹⁰⁷ The FBI explained that it “is interested in all financial relationships” of any BoA customer transacting in Washington, D.C. and that made “ANY historical purchase” of a firearm, or that had purchased a hotel, Airbnb, or airline travel within a given date range.¹⁰⁸

Just one day later, BoA confirmed to the FBI that it was “doing some work around the parameters we discussed and should have something out before the end of the weekend.”¹⁰⁹ BoA delivered as promised. On the evening of Sunday, January 17, 2021, BoA replied to the FBI indicating that it had compiled a product that was responsive to the FBI’s parameters, explaining “you [FBI] should have an email from [redacted]@bofa.com with our filing on the parameters you discussed with [redacted] last week.”¹¹⁰

Following up from our conversation yesterday morning, we are doing some work around the parameters we discussed and should have something out before the end of the weekend.

This massive search request, sent directly from the FBI to BoA, appears to have occurred via direct email, without any legal process or individualized criminal nexus.¹¹¹ As a result, a “filing” was created that was seemingly a “data dump” of BoA account information—reflecting potentially thousands of customers—that was turned over to the FBI.¹¹²

The Committee and Select Subcommittee requested, and subsequently subpoenaed, this “filing” from BoA.¹¹³ The Committee and Select Subcommittee also offered to accommodate BoA by allowing “redact[ions] to protect personal identifiable information.”¹¹⁴ Despite this, BoA declined to produce the requested documents, writing “[e]ven though a subpoena has now been issued, federal law, including the Anti-Money Laundering Act and the Bank Secrecy Act, together with their implementing regulations, still would prevent the Bank from disclosing certain documents.”¹¹⁵

While BoA has refused to provide the Committee and Select Subcommittee with its “filing on the parameters” it discussed and shared with the FBI, it is clear that the FBI was not interested in particularized criminal activity.¹¹⁶ Rather, the FBI cast a wide net with its search parameters and used BoA’s database to identify responsive accounts, creating a sprawling file of individuals whose financial accounts were flagged for federal law enforcement without any particularized allegation of engaging in federal criminal conduct. It is highly disturbing for any huge financial institution to comply with such a sweeping request from federal law enforcement and hand over its customers’ information without any legal process or regard for the privacy of its customers’ information.¹¹⁷

2. FinCEN, in coordination with a select group of financial institutions, shared Merchant Category Codes and politicized search terms and typologies for financial institutions to probe their databases for problematic accounts or transactions.

In addition to the sweeping requests from the FBI to financial institutions, FinCEN circulated materials to financial institutions containing instructions on how to search their databases and flag certain transactions using Merchant Category Codes (MCCs), typologies, and other key terms, phrases, or groups of concern. MCCs are used by “[p]ayment brands, issuers and acquirers . . . to categorize, track and restrict transactions” and can be used for “tax reporting, interchange promotion and gathering information about cardholder purchasing behavior.”¹¹⁸ MCCs, therefore, are a powerful tool for monitoring and restricting customer

Even worse, they show how federal law enforcement leveraged its relationship with financial institutions to search transactions and account records without legal process or the customers' knowledge or approval.

a. FinCEN provided financial institutions with politicized materials casting conservative points of view and lawful purchases as suspicious.

On January 15, 2021, at 4:00 P.M., FinCEN circulated two attachments to various financial institutions titled “Jan 15 2021 compiled typologies” and “KeyBank Query Logic for Active Shooters v. 01-15-2021.”¹¹⁹ These attachments provided financial institutions with suggested search terms—such as “AMERICA FIRST,” “TRUMP,” and “MAGA”—to use for identifying transactions that may be an indication “of involvement in riots or potential violence.”¹²⁰

2) Lone Actor/Homegrown Violent Extremism Indicators (developed from prior FinCEN analysis)

- ✓ Long periods of account inactivity, or show normal usage, but in the months or years preceding an attack, a sudden surge or change in activity type.
- ✓ Sudden purchase of firearms, firearm parts and accessories, ammunition, tactical gear at outdoor supply stores, and purchases at shooting ranges not commensurate with previously known customer behavior.

In addition, the documents include a "prior FinCEN analysis" suggesting indicators of potential "Lone Actor/Homegrown Violent Extremism."¹²¹ Those indicators included, among other items, "frequent ATM withdrawals and wire transfers with no apparent economic or business purpose"; "transportation charges, such as bus tickets, rental cars, or plane tickets, for travel to areas with no apparent purpose"; "purchases that appear excessive or unusual for hobbyist or other legitimate use"; "the purchase of books (including religious texts) and subscriptions to other media containing extremist views”; and “donations to organizations known to promote radicalism.”¹²²

- ✓ Frequent cash deposits of unknown origin, followed by debit or credit card purchases at retailers not commensurate with previously known customer purchase activity.
- ✓ Frequent ATM withdrawals and wire transfers with no apparent economic or business purpose.
- ✓ Sudden account closings, asset liquidations, and disbursements in days or weeks leading up to attacks.
- ✓ Life insurance policy purchases not commensurate with typical behavior for the type of account holder.
- ✓ Transportation charges, such as bus tickets, rental cars, or plane tickets, for travel to areas with no apparent purpose or not commensurate with the previous travel history of the customer, for example, travel to high-risk areas or indirect flightpaths for no apparent legitimate reason.
- ✓ Purchases that appear excessive or unusual for hobbyist or other legitimate use.
- ✓ The purchase of pre-cursor chemicals, fireworks, or potential bomb-making equipment, for example, ammonium nitrate, citric acid, aluminum powder, triacetone triperoxide [TATP], potassium nitrate, red iron oxide, tannerite, lengths of piping, BB pellets, cell phones, and others.
- ✓ Purchases of international calling cards not commensurate with previously known customer behavior.
- ✓ The purchase of books (including religious texts) and subscriptions to other media containing extremist views.
- ✓ Donations to organizations known to promote radicalism.

As shown, the list, prepared by FinCEN, demonstrates that federal law enforcement is interested in scrutinizing otherwise lawful transactions such as “ATM withdrawals,” transportation-related expenses for “no apparent legitimate reason,” “donations to organizations known to promote radicalism,” and “the purchase of books (including religious texts) and subscriptions to other media containing extremist views.”¹²³ In other words, the federal government broadly enlisted financial institutions to flag certain kinds of purchases made by Americans that the government deemed to be unnecessary—e.g., taking trips for “no apparent legitimate reason”—or extreme—e.g., purchasing certain books or “religious texts.”¹²⁴ There is no indication in the documents that FinCEN recognized the serious civil liberty concerns associated with its demands or took any steps to protect Americans’ financial privacy.

In the same email, FinCEN also circulated a PowerPoint slide deck as an attachment, authored by KeyBank, titled, “KeyBank’s Query Logic for Active Shooters,” that “intends to detect potential active shooters, who may include dangerous International Terrorists / Domestic Terrorists / Homegrown Violent Extremists (‘Lone Wolves’).”¹²⁵ That slideshow showed in stark terms how federal authorities and financial institutions can weaponize MCCs to identify and target Americans using the financial system.

Active Shooter Detection – Intent of Query

- Intends to detect potential active shooters, who may include dangerous International Terrorists / Domestic Terrorists / Homegrown Violent Extremists (“Lone Wolves”).
- Assumes individuals are creatures of habit and tend to frequent and/or shop at the same places when buying the same or similar items, rather than purchasing the same thing at multiple merchants or vendors.
 - Looks for purchases at multiple merchants or vendors who sell weapons and/or ammunition over a shorter period of time.
- Looks for “bursts” of potential suspicious purchase activity, especially when activity not seen previously.
 - Run query periodically, using a rolling lookback period of 60 days.
- Focuses on credit / debit card transaction activity with merchant / vendor counterparties.
 - Looks at specific counterparty Merchant Category Classification Codes (MCC Codes) and distinct merchant IDs.
 - MCC Codes are used by credit card companies to classify merchant businesses into market segments and industries, with each merchant / vendor location having a unique merchant ID.
 - No minimum dollar threshold for individual transactions.
 - Uses an iterative feedback loop process to build out and refine the exclusion and inclusion keyword lists (detailed in the next slides).
 - Limitations – Due to a lack of industry identifiers for counterparties for other transaction types, does not look at cash, check, ACH, or wire transactions at this time.
- SARs filed for public safety / law enforcement awareness purposes.
- Alert Example – John Doe makes 5 credit card purchases at 4 different gun shops, plus makes 4 charges at 3 gun ranges, spending $3,000 on weapons-related transactions over a 5 week period. Doe does not appear to have any previous firearms purchases.

The concern around the use of MCCs to sift through and flag certain purchases on behalf of federal law enforcement is well-documented. For example, in September of 2022, after being petitioned by Amalgamated Bank—an institution that leverages financial power to promote “sustainable organizations, progressive causes, and social justice”¹²⁶—the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) announced its intent to create a separate MCC for the sale of firearms in America with the unabashed support of gun control advocates.¹²⁷ That announcement sparked an outcry from many Americans who opposed ISO’s announcement out of fear that it would be used to track, harass, and limit firearm vendors’ and purchasers’ access to financial services.¹²⁸ As a result of the pressure, the program was reportedly put on pause.¹²⁹ However, the Committee and Select Subcommittee’s investigation has revealed that similar MCCs are already being weaponized against customers by financial institutions in collusion with federal law enforcement.¹³⁰

The KeyBank slide deck also included slides that provided financial institutions with search query logic terms and instructions on how to search through their transactions and accounts in order to “detect potential active shooters, who may include dangerous International Terrorists / Domestic Terrorists / Homegrown Violent Extremists (‘Lone Wolves’).”¹³¹ These slides detail how financial institutions can wield MCCs, merchant IDs, and other keyword searches to monitor customer transactions for “suspicious” activity. explains, “MCC Codes are used by credit card companies to classify merchant businesses into market segments and industries, with each merchant / vendor location having a unique merchant ID” and should not use any “minimum dollar threshold for individual transactions.”¹³² In other words, every transaction is assigned an MCC and financial institutions use these codes to search through customers’ financial history for any activity it deems “suspicious.” If it finds a possibly suspicious transaction, it can report that information to federal law enforcement by filing a SAR or similar report without the customer ever knowing about it.¹³³

As the KeyBank slide demonstrates, financial institutions often use MCCs to query and review transactions for potentially suspicious activity. This slideshow directs particular concern to firearm-related purchases, lawful or otherwise, under the guise of detecting DVEs.¹³⁴ It reveals that financial institutions can use special MCCs to identify certain purchases for review, including “3484: Small Arms,” “3489: Ordnance and Accessories, Not Elsewhere Classified (includes businesses manufacturing firearms and accessories having a bore more than 30mm),” “5091: Sporting and Recreational Goods and Supplies (includes retail ammunition and retail guns sales),” “5099: Durable Goods, Not Elsewhere Classified,” “5933: Pawn Shops,” “5941: Sporting Goods Stores (largest sellers of firearms and ammunition),” “5999: Miscellaneous and Specialty Retail Shops (includes firearms and ammunition dealers),” and “7999: Recreation Services, Not Elsewhere Classified (includes shooting facilities or shooting ranges).”¹³⁵

These MCCs were also used to target transactions involving specific retailers and may have been flagged for federal law enforcement despite having no nexus to criminal activity.¹³⁶ As the KeyBank slide shows, transactions involving any of the previously named MCCs can be narrowed using additional keywords. Those keywords include transactions from retail stores like “Dick’s Sporting Goods,” “Gander Mountain,” “Bass Pro Shop,” “Cabela’s,” “Backcountry World,” “TargetSportsUSA.com,” “AR15.com,” “MidwayUSA,” among many others.¹³⁷

Another one of the KeyBank slides, circulated by FinCEN, directed financial institutions to other transactions of interest, listing such “red flags” that “[i]nvestigators may wish to consider” when “reviewing financial accounts” and included:

- “unexplained travel transactions, or unexplained transactions with a high-risk jurisdiction”;
- “any recent purchases of counter-surveillance equipment”;
- “any recent purchases of covert / secure communications equipment” such as “Virtual Private Networks (VPNs), online gaming, prepaid phones / calling cards”;
- “any recent rental of storage facilities”;
- “other excessive transactions” such as “hardware, beauty supply, auto parts, electronics, machinist / engineering, gym / martial arts, political donations / materials, religious donations / materials, work uniforms”;
- “excessive ATM, Prepaid Cards, Person-to-Person, or Virtual Currency transactions”;
- “recent life insurance purchases and/or bank account closures”;
- “any life stressor indicators” such as “no payroll deposits”;

- “recent excessive legal / medical expenses (legal / family status or health challenges)”;¹³⁸ and
- whether the individual is unemployed, was “recently fired or laid off,” has “delinquent / excessive debt,” or has “social media posts of concern.”¹³⁸

Of course, none of these transactions standing alone are unlawful—in fact, many are indicative of constitutionally protected political or religious activity.

Active Shooter Detection – Additional Red Flags to Consider

When Investigators are reviewing financial accounts, besides alerted transactions, other factors Investigators may wish to consider:

- Is the alerted transaction activity consistent with previous activity, or has it begun recently?
- Unexplained travel transactions, or unexplained transactions with a high-risk jurisdiction?
- Any recent purchases of counter-surveillance equipment?
- Any recent purchases of covert / secure communications equipment?
 - Virtual private networks (VPNs), online gaming, prepaid phones / calling cards, etc. transactions?
- Any recent rental of storage facilities?
- Other excessive transactions, especially if not consistent with previous activity?
 - Hardware, beauty supply, auto parts, electronics, machinist / engineering, gym / martial arts, political donations / materials, religious donations / materials, work uniforms, etc.
- Excessive ATM, Prepaid Cards, Person-to-Person (P2P), or Virtual Currency transactions?
- Any recent life insurance purchases and/or bank account closures?
- Any life stressor indicators?
 - Recent excessive legal / medical expenses (legal / family status or health challenges)?
 - No payroll deposits? Unemployed? Recently fired or laid off?
 - Delinquent / excessive debt?
- Any social media posts of concern?

Similarly, on January 16, 2021, FinCEN circulated additional slides prepared by the Global Financial Crimes Division (GFCD) at MUFG Bank, the largest bank of Japan, to other financial institutions and that included a “list of subjects of interest and high-level typologies.”¹³⁹ That slide revealed typologies for review as they relate to the events of “1/6” and included a broad scope of credit, debit, and ATM transactions, suggesting a look-back period ranging from November 3, 2020, to January 12, 2021.¹⁴⁰ These typologies include otherwise lawful activity such as “use of business cards (not held by tactical or security firms) for the purchase of arms / ammo,” “transfers to GiveSendGo or other crowdsourcing sites,” “purchasing of gift cards; Use of debit cards for Crypto,” and “transactions in or near capitols or state capitols at/around 1/6.”¹⁴¹

Consequently, account information and transactions meeting any of the eleven “typology” criteria may have been flagged and shared with federal law enforcement as being “suspicious.” The slide is another clear example that these typologies were not necessarily evidence of criminal activity, but that were nonetheless scrutinized and potentially shared with federal law enforcement. Unfortunately, the use of MCC search parameters were not the only kinds of typologies and transactions that FinCEN was interested in. FinCEN also circulated politicized materials to financial institutions for monitoring their databases for certain “hate groups” and other “key terms.”¹⁴²

¹⁴² HJCSWFG_0000004 (email from FinCEN sharing hyperlinks to KeyBank, Standard Chartered, Western Union, Wells Fargo, PayPal, Citibank, Bank of America, Santander, HSBC, MUFG, Union Bank, and JPMorgan Chase).

b. FinCEN shared a “hate symbols” database and a report on the funding of American “hate groups” to financial institutions.

On January 16, 2021, FinCEN circulated another email to financial institutions “in advance of today’s discussion.”¹⁴³ That email included links to “key terms applicable to matters related to racially and ethnically motivated violent extremism, which may have application to the capitol riots and related activity.”¹⁴⁴ In addition, the email included a hyperlink to “relevant terms” from the Anti-Defamation League website and a hyperlink to a “publicly-available overview on the funding of American hate groups.”¹⁴⁵ The first hyperlink was to a database of “Hate Symbols” indexed by the Anti-Defamation League (ADL)—a notorious anti-conservative activist group—and the second was to a report authored by the Institute for Strategic Dialogue

(ISD) titled “Bankrolling Bigotry: An Overview of the Online Funding Strategies of American Hate Groups.”¹⁴⁶

In recent years, ADL has become significantly more left-wing and taken an aggressively anti-conservative stance. For example, the “Hate Symbols” database maintained by ADL and circulated by FinCEN to financial institutions treats “Anti-Antifa Images,” the “Celtic Cross,” the “Okay Hand Gesture,” “Pepe the Frog,” and “White Lives Matter,” as hate symbols.¹⁴⁷ It should alarm Americans that FinCEN approved of and distributed a link to a database that considers symbols of faith such as the Christian Celtic Cross and other images opposing Antifa—a violent left-wing anarchist group—as hate symbols. This practice is reminiscent of the FBI’s disdain for “Radical Traditionalist Catholics,” and the FBI’s reliance on the Southern Poverty Law Center—another far-left activist group—as an authoritative source on the Catholic Church.¹⁴⁸

FinCEN also circulated a hyperlink to a report authored by the ISD. The ISD is a left-wing organization that holds itself out as an “independent” monitor of “disinformation” that promotes the censorship of speech it decries as false or extreme.¹⁴⁹ FinCEN’s distribution of the ISD report amounts to an approval of its content, its methods, and its conclusions. Such an endorsement is concerning because the ISD report labels and demonizes various right-of-center groups in America as “hate groups.”¹⁵⁰ For example, the ISD’s report incorrectly characterizes several conservative groups such as the Center for Immigration Studies, Numbers USA, the Alliance Defending Freedom, along with several others, as “hate groups.”¹⁵¹ In fact, the ISD’s report draws a false equivalency between certain conservative civil society groups and the American Nazi Party and the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, suggesting FinCEN views them equally.¹⁵² Still, FinCEN circulated the ISD report to some of the largest financial institutions in the world, including the very financial institutions that are likely responsible for providing financial services to many of the listed “hate groups,” without regard for the chilling effect it would have on protected speech and its potential to be weaponized against the groups by financial institutions.

C. FinCEN used financial institutions to monitor and report on accounts involved in crowdfunding for conservative events.

On January 18, 2021, FinCEN circulated a “list of crowdfunding sites” that “[p]eople have been observed using to post an event and sell tickets including bus tickets to the casting the selling of “bus tickets to the demonstrations” as suspicious without articulating any basis for believing such demonstrations might be unlawful.¹⁵⁶ However, the weaponization of crowdfunding against conservative movements is not new.¹⁵⁷ For example, GoFundMe removed fundraisers associated with the “Freedom Convoy,” a group protesting COVID-19 mandates internationally, and removed fundraisers on its platform supporting the legal defense of Kyle Rittenhouse while leaving fundraisers for Antifa militants and Black Lives Matter rioters untouched on the platform.¹⁵⁸ FinCEN’s incursion into the crowdfunding space represents a trend in the wrong direction and a threat to American civil liberties.

D. FinCEN circulated a KeyBank-created “Appendix” of “Domestic Extremist Groups” to other financial institutions.

FinCEN also distributed an additional slide, prepared by another financial institution, via email to other financial institutions.¹⁵⁹ The slide is an “Appendix” that labels certain groups as “Domestic Extremist,” including “American Border Patrol,” “Anti-Abortion (violent),” “Anti-Government,” the “Center for Immigration Studies,” and the “Center for Security Policy,” among many others.¹⁶⁰ By sharing this slide prepared by KeyBank, FinCEN endorsed a listing of groups it considered “domestic extremist.”

CONCLUSION

The decline of cash and the rise of digital payments and e-commerce platforms has provided financial institutions with more insight and influence over the financial system than ever before. In fact, very little financial activity occurs beyond the purview of modern financial institutions. As a result, these financial institutions often act as arms of federal law enforcement as they work in coordination with federal law enforcement to identify what transactions and other information is “suspicious” enough to be reported. Other times, law enforcement uses backchannel discussions to commandeer financial institutions’ databases in order to collect Americans’ data and build a profile of any “typology” it deems “suspicious.” When working together, these two parties wield a tremendous amount of influence and power over the American financial system with almost no oversight of their partnership and no possibility for recourse when that system is abused at the cost of victims who have been wrongfully targeted by the secret information-sharing network.

As this investigation shows, greater scrutiny of the partnership between federal law enforcement and financial institutions is warranted. When “Big Banks” and “Big Government” collude to violate American civil liberties, Congress has a responsibility to step in. Thanks to the brave whistleblower testimony that brought it to light, what started as an investigation into alarming information-sharing between Bank of America and the FBI without legal process has exposed what appears to be an even greater state of financial surveillance and weaponization. From targeting customers and transactions that shop at Bass Pro Shop or Cabela's using MCCs, to profiling customers with "typologies" that cast the purchase of religious texts and other donations to organizations that promote "radicalism" as indicative of "Homegrown Violent Extremism," federal law enforcement has overstepped its bounds.

As this investigation continues, the Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government will continue to conduct oversight of the state of financial surveillance, targeting, and the vulnerabilities of Americans' data. Secret information-sharing portals and backchannel discussions outside the normal course of legal process pose serious risks to the nation. Larger questions remain regarding how the information shared between federal law enforcement and financial institutions was acted upon, and the ongoing extent of the financial surveillance. The Committee on the Judiciary and the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government remain committed to answering those questions and upholding the civil liberties of Americans.

Good afternoon all,

For the past several months I have been working at our Washington Field Office under [REDACTED] who I believe most of you met while [REDACTED] was serving as the [REDACTED]. As the dust begins to settle here after the events of January 6th, [REDACTED] would like to hold a call with the goal of identifying the best approach to information sharing, both strategic and operational, related to the Capitol Riots. In the hopes of moving forward together quickly, we have set aside time at 2:30pm on Tuesday, February 2nd for this discussion. I will be sending out dial-in information first thing Monday and hope you, or someone from your team, is available to participate.

Thanks and have a great weekend!

LIAISON INFORMATION REPORT (LIR)

Domestic Violent Extremists Likely Emboldened in Aftermath of Capitol Breach

References in this LIR to any specific commercial product, process or service or the use of any corporate name herein is for informational purposes only and does not constitute an endorsement, recommendation, or disparagement of that product, process, service or corporation on behalf of the FBI.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), Department of Homeland Security (DHS), and National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC) prepared this LIR to alert private sector partners that the 6 January 2021 violent breach by suspected domestic violent extremists (DVEs) into the U.S. Capitol Building may serve as a driver for a diverse set of DVEs.

DVEs may exploit future lawful protests, rallies, demonstrations, and other gatherings to carry out ideologically motivated violence and criminal activity. The death of an individual directly engaged in the U.S. Capitol breach may serve to galvanize DVEs and increase collaboration between such diverse DVE groups.¹ These DVEs may also perceive the event as a step toward achieving their initiatives and consider the death of a perceived like-minded individual as an act of martyrdom.²

The belief in the existence of global or “deep state” actors who work to manipulate various social, political, and/or economic conditions of the United States likely serves as a driver of some DVE violence. Some rioters and DVEs’ view the 6 January event as a success and may exploit follow-on lawful gatherings; this perceived success may inspire some DVEs to target racial, ethnic, or religious minorities and institutions, the media, law enforcement, and government officials and buildings.

- An individual who traveled to Washington, D.C. engaged in lawful protests, illegally entered the U.S. Capitol Building, and was shot and killed by law enforcement personnel.
- Some participants at the Capitol displayed insignias used or adopted by a range of DVEs. Nooses and plastic restraints were carried or stationed at or near the Capitol by some rioters, possibly to demonstrate their intent to cause harm to government officials.
- During rioting on the Capitol grounds, individuals pursued and threatened journalists, according to open-source reporting. Rioters destroyed or stole cameras and other media equipment outside the Capitol, and the phrase, “Murder the media,” was found scratched into a door within the Capitol.

² The perception that deaths of like-minded individuals at the hands of law enforcement were unjust has historically been a significant driver for DVEs. DVEs have seized on the deaths of two U.S. persons Vicki and Samuel Weaver at Ruby Ridge, Idaho in 1992; U.S. persons at the Branch Davidians compound at Waco, Texas in 1993; and U.S. person Duncan Lemp in 2020 to justify threats against law enforcement and government officials.

OFFICE of PRIVATE SECTOR

LIAISON INFORMATION REPORT (LIR)

DVEs May Target Elected Officials and Government Buildings Following Political Shifts

Perceptions of fraud surrounding the outcome of the General Election and the change in control of the Presidency and Senate—when combined with long-standing DVE drivers such as perceived government or law enforcement overreach, and the anticipation of legislation perceived to oppose or threaten their beliefs— may lead to an increase in the DVE threat.

Narratives surrounding the perceived success of the breach of the U.S. Capitol will likely lead to an increased DVE threat towards federal, state, and local governments across the United States, particularly in the time period surrounding the 20 January Presidential Inauguration. The targeting of government buildings and officials is consistent with observed activity in 2020, when armed individuals, including DVEs, threatened elected officials and occupied state government buildings. Since the 6 January event, online rhetoric regarding the 20 January Presidential Inauguration has increased, with some calling for unspecified “justice” for the 6 January fatal shooting by law enforcement of an individual at the Capitol Building, and another posting that “many” armed individuals would return on 19 January, according to open-source reporting. The recent removal efforts by social media platforms used by DVEs may push some to revert to other platforms they perceive as more secure.

Range of DVE Actors Likely to Pose Increasing Threat at Lawful Protests, Rallies, Demonstrations, etc.

Throughout 2020, DVEs with differing goals and perspectives exploited such events to promote, organize, conspire, and plot against ideological opponents and other targets. DVEs’ efforts to engage in violence at lawful gatherings will probably increase throughout 2021, as some DVEs perceive increased socio-political pressures. Such perceived pressures may stem from, but not be limited to, one or more of the following factors:

- The potential for shifts in various policies many DVEs may perceive to oppose or threaten their ideological goals and agendas or feed into existing narratives many DVEs subscribe to regarding the U.S. government’s exercise of power, influence, and initiatives: possibly including firearm legislation, the easing of immigration restrictions, and new limits on the use of public land.
- Ongoing narratives by DVEs that the 2020 General Election was illegitimate, or fraudulent, and the subsequent belief its results should be contested or unrecognized.
- Some DVEs’ discontent with renewed measures to mitigate the spread of COVID-19, the ordered dissemination of COVID-19 vaccinations, and the efficacy and/or safety of COVID-19 vaccinations.

The FBI, DHS, and NCTC remain concerned about the potential for a loosely organized, sustained, and significant DVE population mobilizing to violence based on social media calls to target government infrastructure or officials. The shared narrative of election fraud and the opposition to the change in control of the executive and legislative branches of the federal government may lead some individuals to adopt the belief that there is no political solution to address their grievances and violent action is necessary. Additionally, in-person engagement between DVEs of differing ideological goals during the Capitol breach likely served to foster connections, which may increase DVEs’ willingness, capability, and motivation to attack and undermine a government they view as illegitimate.³

In the near term, DVEs could exploit upcoming events to engage in or justify violence, including events attended by MVEs and “boogaloo”⁴ adherents scheduled nationally from 16 to 20 January; the 20 January Presidential Inauguration and associated events in Washington, D.C.; and the impeachment and possible departure of the 45th President prior to the end of his term. The “boogaloo” is a concept most commonly used to reference an impending second civil war or insurgency against the U.S. Government. Calls for revolution may especially resonate with militia violent extremists (MVEs), who often justify violence based on their belief that they are guardians of the Constitution and the legacies of the American Revolution. While they may not necessarily share the partisan views of those who engaged in the 6 January breach, MVEs and other DVEs who adhere to the “boogaloo” concept and seek a politically motivated civil war, and racially motivated violent extremists who seek a race war, may exploit the aftermath of the Capitol breach in an attempt to create conflict in the United States.

If companies witness any suspicious activities related to potential domestic violent extremism, please report it to your FBI Private Sector Coordinator at your local FBI Field Office:
<https://www.fbi.gov/contact-us/field-offices>.

As always, thanks for the very quick communication/response over the phone this morning.

To recap our morning call, we [FBI] are prepared to action [immediately] the following thresholds:

- CTD/SPES/SEU is interested in all financial relationships that meet the following thresholds:
 - Customers confirmed as transacting, either through bank account [debit card] or credit card, Washington D.C. purchases between 1/5/21 and 1/6/21, with the additional [identifying] targeting thresholds:
 - Purchases made for hotel/airbnb RSVPs in the DMV area [the day before and during Inauguration Day] -----since 1/6/21.
 - ANY historical purchase [going back 6 months generally, for weapons or weapons related-vendor purchases].
 - Secondly, purchases made for returns to Washington, D.C. and the surrounding DMV area:
 - With Airline travel to DMV area for Inauguration Day
 - With no identified airline purchases for the DMV.
-  - SEU intends to capture, with its FI-partner concurrence, all customers who might be more strategic in carrying out attacks related to CTD interests; travel with weapons by vehicle and [not by] air, given the current threat and aftermath of the 6 Jan Capitol building incidents. The intention by SEU is to identify all potential networks of threats vs. individual threats to Inauguration Day and beyond.

KeyBank's Query Logic for Active Shooters

[REDACTED]
SVP – Compliance Director - Financial Intelligence

[REDACTED]@keybank.com

Active Shooter Detection – Intent of Query

- Intends to detect potential active shooters, who may include dangerous International Terrorists / Domestic Terrorists / Homegrown Violent Extremists (“Lone Wolves”).
- Assumes individuals are creatures of habit and tend to frequent and/or shop at the same places when buying the same or similar items, rather than purchasing the same thing at multiple merchants or vendors.
 - Looks for purchases at multiple merchants or vendors who sell weapons and/or ammunition over a shorter period of time.
- Looks for “bursts” of potential suspicious purchase activity, especially when activity not seen previously.
 - Run query periodically, using a rolling lookback period of 60 days.
- Focuses on credit / debit card transaction activity with merchant / vendor counterparties.
 - Looks at specific counterparty Merchant Category Classification Codes (MCC Codes) and distinct merchant IDs.
 - MCC Codes are used by credit card companies to classify merchant businesses into market segments and industries, with each merchant / vendor location having a unique merchant ID.
 - No minimum dollar threshold for individual transactions.
 - Uses an iterative feedback loop process to build out and refine the exclusion and inclusion keyword lists (detailed in the next slides).
 - Limitations – Due to a lack of industry identifiers for counterparties for other transaction types, does not look at cash, check, ACH, or wire transactions at this time.
- SARs filed for public safety / law enforcement awareness purposes.
- Alert Example – John Doe makes 5 credit card purchases at 4 different gun shops, plus makes 4 charges at 3 gun ranges, spending $3,000 on weapons-related transactions over a 5 week period. Doe does not appear to have any previous firearms purchases.

Active Shooter Detection – Methodology 1 – Keyword EXCLUSION (Broad Focus)

FINANCIAL SURVEILLANCE IN THE UNITED STATES:
HOW THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WEAPONIZED THE BANK SECRECY ACT TO SPY ON AMERICANS

Interim Staff Report of the Committee on the Judiciary and the
Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government

U.S. House of Representatives

December 6, 2024

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Financial data can tell a person’s story, including one’s “religion, ideology, opinions, and interests”¹ as well as one’s “political leanings, locations, and more.”² Because of this data’s usefulness, federal law enforcement agencies increasingly coordinate with financial institutions to secure even greater access to Americans’ private financial information, often without legal process, and use federal laws like the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) to do so. This interim report continues the oversight of the Committee on the Judiciary and its Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government into financial surveillance in the United States. Based on nonpublic documents, this report sheds new light on the decaying state of Americans’ financial privacy and the federal government’s widespread, warrantless surveillance programs.

The Committee and Select Subcommittee began this investigation into government-led financial surveillance after a whistleblower disclosed that following the events of January 6, 2021, Bank of America (BoA), voluntarily and without legal process, provided the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) with a list of names of all individuals who used a BoA credit or debit card in the Washington, D.C. region around that time.³ In response to these allegations and corroborating testimony from FBI officials, the Committee and Select Subcommittee requested documents from BoA and six other national financial institutions about the provision of Americans’ private financial information to federal law enforcement without legal process.⁴ On March 6, 2024, the Committee and Select Subcommittee released an interim report revealing that federal law enforcement had used sweeping search terms like “MAGA” and “TRUMP” to target Americans and even treated purchases of religious texts or firearms as indicators of “extremism.”⁵ That report detailed how federal law enforcement derisively viewed American citizens—treating Americans who expressed opposition to firearm regulations, open borders, COVID-19 lockdowns, vaccine mandates, and the “deep state” as potential domestic terrorists.⁶

Following these revelations, the Committee and Select Subcommittee requested additional documents and communications from seventeen different entities, including national banks, crowdfunding sites, money service businesses, and the U.S. Treasury Department, to further examine the federal government and financial institutions’ information-sharing relationship and to determine whether the federal government was abusing its access to Americans’ sensitive financial information.⁷ To date, the Committee and Select Subcommittee have reviewed over 48,000 pages of documents and conducted three additional transcribed interviews.

The information obtained during the Committee and Select Subcommittee’s investigation, and detailed in this report, is concerning. Documents show that federal law enforcement increasingly works hand-in-glove with financial institutions, obtaining virtually unchecked access to private financial data and testing out new methods and new technology to continue the financial surveillance of American citizens.

- The FBI has manipulated the Suspicious Activity Report (SAR) filing process to treat financial institutions as de facto arms of law enforcement, issuing “requests,” without legal process, that amount to demands for information related to certain persons or activities it considers “suspicious.”⁸ With narrow exception, federal law does not permit law enforcement to inquire into financial institutions’ customer information without some form of legal process.⁹ The FBI circumvents this process by tipping off financial institutions to “suspicious” individuals and encouraging these institutions to file a SAR—which does not require any legal process—and thereby provide federal law enforcement with access to confidential and highly sensitive information.¹⁰ In doing so, the FBI gets around the requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA), which, per the Treasury Department, specifies that “it is . . . a bank’s responsibility” to “file a SAR whenever it identifies ‘a suspicious transaction relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation’”¹¹ While at least one financial institution requested legal process from the FBI for information it was seeking,¹² all too often the FBI appeared to receive no pushback. In sum, by providing financial institutions with lists of people that it views as generally “suspicious” on the front end, the FBI has turned this framework on its head and contravened the Fourth Amendment’s requirements of particularity and probable cause.¹³
- In the days and weeks after January 6, 2021, the FBI coordinated with the Treasury Department’s Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) to encourage financial institutions across the country to scour their data and file SARs on hundreds of Americans, if not more, without any clear criminal nexus.¹⁴ Documents reveal that at least one financial institution took the initiative and reached out to FinCEN with an idea that would “support the Bureau’s efforts to address the acute threat of domestic terrorism.”¹⁵ That financial institution encouraged FinCEN to use SARs as the basis for issuing Patriot Act 314(a) requests, which allows FinCEN “to canvas the nation’s financial institutions for potential lead information” from “more than 37,000 points of contact at more than 16,000 financial institutions to locate accounts and transactions of persons that may be involved in terrorism or money laundering.”¹⁶

- The government’s access to Americans’ private financial data is widespread and virtually unchecked. In 2023, financial institutions filed 4.6 million SARs and 20.8 million Currency Transaction Reports (CTRs) with FinCEN, which are accessible to government officials for querying and downloading via various programs.¹⁷ According to FinCEN, at least 25,000 authorized users across federal, state, and local government have warrantless access to these filings, known as BSA data, through the FinCEN Query program.¹⁸ In 2023, government officials ran 3,362,735 searches of the filings in the FinCEN Query program.¹⁹ In addition to the FinCEN Query program, approximately 27,000 federal officials have access to BSA data through the Agency Integrated Access (AIA) program that allows certain federal agencies to download the data onto their own systems.²⁰ In total, according to FinCEN, “472 federal, state, and local law enforcement, regulatory, and national security agencies have access to BSA reports”²¹
- Financial institutions and FinCEN are expanding their capacity to surveil Americans through new, confidential projects and emerging technologies. Officially, the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group (BSAAG) serves as an advisory body to the Treasury Department on issues related to the BSA.²² However, in practice, documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee indicate that it is also a tool for federal law enforcement and financial institutions to monitor the private, financial data of American citizens.²³ Previously confidential BSAAG documents indicate that it is advancing plans that would require Americans to have a digital identification to access financial services, testing artificial intelligence to surveil Americans’ financial activity, and working towards even closer coordination between financial institutions and federal law enforcement.

All Americans should be disturbed by how their financial data is collected, made accessible to, and searched by federal and state officials, including law enforcement and regulatory agencies. With the rise in e-commerce and the widespread adoption of cash alternatives like credit cards or peer-to-peer payment services, the future leaves very little financial activity beyond the purview of modern financial institutions or the government's prying eyes. This is because, as a condition of participating in the modern economy, Americans are forced to disclose details of their private lives to a financial industry that has been too eager to pass this information along to federal law enforcement.

The Committee's and Select Subcommittee's investigation makes clear that federal law enforcement has taken advantage of this dynamic by deploying financial institutions as arms of federal law enforcement, directing financial institutions to profile Americans using the typologies it distributes or urging financial institutions to identify any "suspicious activity" an individual may have engaged in.²⁴ As promoted by the BSAAG, this surveillance will be catalyzed by even greater government entanglement with financial institutions as they begin to integrate new technology to more effectively track their customers' financial habits. Absent renewed safeguards, the federal government and financial institutions will continue to siphon off Americans' sensitive financial data, place it into the hands of bureaucrats, and erode any remaining semblance of financial privacy in the United States.

THE BSA REGIME INVITES EVER-INCREASING FINANCIAL SURVEILLANCE

Documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee demonstrate that federal law enforcement increasingly relies on financial institutions for highly sensitive information about Americans without legal process. Federal law enforcement has effectively deputized financial institutions to advance its investigations and to gain access to the information that financial institutions possess. As financial institutions' capacity to track and gather data on Americans continues to increase, federal law enforcement will continue to be incentivized to rely on banks for easy access to sensitive information about Americans' private lives.

A. The reporting requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act turn financial institutions into confidential informants that are required to secretly report Americans' financial activities to the federal government.

Enacted by Congress in 1970, the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA)²⁵ and succeeding legislation are “the primary U.S. anti-money laundering (AML) law[s]’ regulating financial institutions,”²⁶ and that authorize the Treasury Department to impose far-reaching reporting obligations on businesses and financial institutions.²⁷ The BSA is primarily enforced by the Treasury Department’s Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN).²⁸ According to FinCEN, its mission “is to safeguard the financial system from illicit activity, counter money laundering and the financing of terrorism, and promote national security”²⁹ Consistent with that mission, the BSA is touted as the “principal U.S. law for the prevention of money laundering, terrorist financing and proliferation, and other forms of illicit financial activity.”³⁰

Pursuant to the BSA and other anti-money laundering laws, covered financial institutions operating in the United States—like banks—are required to file certain reports, such as Suspicious Activity Reports (SARs) and Currency Transaction Reports (CTRs), with the federal government reflecting their customers’ information and their financial activities.³¹ A financial institution is required to file a CTR on any person who conducts a transaction over $10,000 or multiple transactions that amount to over $10,000 in a single day.³² Likewise, the BSA “requires that a bank or other financial institution file a SAR whenever it identifies ‘a suspicious transaction relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation.’”³³ The BSA also grants broad immunity to “[a]ny financial institution that makes a voluntary disclosure of any possible violation of law or regulation to a government agency”³⁴

The BSA’s reporting requirements are also extremely broad and are not limited to potentially criminal conduct.³⁵ When a financial institution files a SAR, it must make sensitive information available to the Treasury Department, including “personally identifiable information about individuals and entities, details about financial transactions, and unconfirmed information regarding potential violations of law or regulation.”³⁶ These filings are ostensibly subject to “strong confidentiality protections” that purport to limit access to the highly sensitive information they contain.³⁷ However, despite these protections, the Treasury Department estimates that tens of thousands of government officials have warrantless access to these filings.³⁸

The BSA regime creates strong incentives for financial institutions to over-file SARs about American citizens—at the cost of Americans’ financial privacy. In a transcribed interview with the Committee and Select Subcommittee, FinCEN Deputy Director Jimmy Kirby explained:

There’s the mandatory requirement and then there’s the ability to voluntarily file, as the statutory construct laid out by Congress really is to encourage filing. So . . . there’s the ones you’re required to file, but there’s also very much an encouragement for people to voluntarily file beyond what they’re required to file.³⁹

In addition to the voluntary filing option, financial institutions have a further incentive to over-file because failing to file a SAR can result in large monetary penalties.⁴⁰ As a consequence, financial institutions often file defensively, even when there is little reason to do so.⁴¹ This dynamic is compounded by the BSA’s broad grant of immunity which protects “[a]ny financial institution that makes a voluntary disclosure of any possible violation of law or regulation to a government agency.”⁴² Financial institutions are also placed under a de facto gag order prohibiting the revelation of “any information that would reveal that the transaction has been reported.”⁴³ Viewing this framework together, financial institutions frequently err on the side of over-filing.⁴⁴

During his transcribed interview with the Committee and Select Subcommittee, Peter Sullivan, former FBI Senior Private Sector Partner for Outreach within the Strategic Partner Engagement Section, acknowledged how useful sensitive financial data can be to law enforcement.⁴⁵ He explained that “financial intelligence can illuminate a lot of deliberate information . . . it could tell the pattern of life.”⁴⁶ Now, decades removed from the BSA’s enactment, financial institutions are able to collect and report more granular financial data than ever, heightening privacy concerns for Americans and casting renewed doubt on the BSA’s constitutionality.⁴⁷

i. Financial institutions report millions of Americans’ transactions to the federal government as part of the BSA’s excessive reporting requirements.

The BSA’s reporting requirements have gone far beyond providing the government with reports and records that will be “highly useful in ‘criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.’”⁴⁸ Instead, the BSA has become a dragnet that forces financial institutions to report millions of transactions to the federal government each year for potentially “suspicious activity” without any clear nexus to unlawful behavior.⁴⁹ The staggering number of these filings demonstrate the breadth of the BSA’s reporting requirements and, with it, the number of Americans’ transactions that are increasingly swept up by its reach. Indeed, according to Sullivan, the reach of one single SAR can be enormous. He testified that he has seen “many SARs that have more than one individual on the SAR . . . I have seen thousands.”⁵⁰

According to FinCEN, it received over 25.4 million BSA reports from 294,000 separate financial institutions and other entities in fiscal year 2023.⁵¹ Among those filings, FinCEN reported that it received an average of 57,000 CTRs per day.⁵² Given the threshold for the reporting requirement, the volume of CTR filings should not come as a surprise. In a letter to FinCEN, the American Bankers Association (ABA) explained the absurdity of the CTR filing threshold, stating, decades “after the inception of this threshold, $10,000 is no longer an unusually large transaction.”⁵³ If adjusted for inflation, the $10,000 threshold—which was set more than 50 years ago—would be nearly $75,000 today.⁵⁴ The ABA observed, “CTR reports have proliferated exponentially and . . . are no longer inherently tied to combating financial crime.”⁵⁵ To further illustrate, if a consumer purchased a car, furniture, jewelry, art, or made a tuition payment totaling more than $10,000, a CTR was likely filed containing the consumer’s information despite there being no evidence of any suspicious activity.⁵⁶

With respect to SAR filings, the trend is the same. FinCEN reported receiving a daily average of 12,600 SAR filings, totaling more than 4.6 million in 2023.⁵⁷ FinCEN reported “Other Suspicious Activities” as the most cited reason why a financial institution filed a SAR in 2023, making up an overwhelming portion of the annual filings—totaling 3.174 million.⁵⁸ By comparison, “money laundering” accounted for just 1.629 million reports and “terrorist financing” accounted for only 1,500 filings—the least reported reason for why a SAR was filed.⁵⁹ These data confirm that FinCEN is using the BSA and its SAR reporting requirements to collect far more than “highly useful” reports on transactions that may be related to money laundering and terrorist financing. Instead, FinCEN regularly receives information about private transactions concerning “Other Suspicious Activities” that Americans may be engaged in, completely disconnected from FinCEN’s stated mission or the stated purpose of the BSA.

 —Association of Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists

The explosion of BSA-required filings has become a topic of discussion in the industry. One of the purported leading groups in the financial crimes space is the Association of Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists (ACAMS), which describes itself as “the largest international membership organization for Anti-Financial Crime professionals”⁶⁰ and provides “the global gold standard in AML [Anti-Money Laundering] certifications.”⁶¹ A slideshow obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee shows that even ACAMS believes that SAR over-filing is a problem.⁶² According to these documents, on May 9, 2023, ACAMS hosted a panel titled, “SAR Command: Battle Plans to Safely and Effectively Curb Excessive Filing Volumes.”⁶³ In the description of the panel, “[l]ed by seasoned compliance veterans,” ACAMS observed: “To paraphrase a saying about the weather, everybody complains about high SAR volumes, but nobody does anything about it,” and explained that the panel’s discussion would focus on “the current climate of escalating SAR filing volumes.”⁶⁴ One slide from the presentation showed a 118-percent surge in SAR filings over the last decade.⁶⁵

Another slide from the panel’s discussion on “curb[ing] excessive filing volumes” touched on “the need to change” the BSA regime.⁶⁶ According to ACAMS, SAR numbers are increasing, despite law enforcement having “[l]imited success” in using SARs as part of their criminal investigations.⁶⁷ The ACAMS slide aptly described the over-filing problem, by inquiring “do[es] law enforcement want to know everything or do they want intelligent SARs?”⁶⁸ Under the current BSA regime, law enforcement appears to want to know everything. As this report details, financial institutions are filing millions of SARs on Americans’ transactions in the hopes that it will appease law enforcement’s appetite to “know everything.”

ii. In order to effectuate the BSA’s requirements, financial institutions must engage in mass surveillance of Americans’ private transactions.

To comply with the BSA and related requirements, banks must establish a “BSA/AML [Anti-Money Laundering] compliance program” that includes “proper monitoring and reporting processes” to “identify unusual activity” and monitor “suspicious activity.”⁶⁹ These “[m]onitoring systems typically include . . . transaction-based (manual) systems, surveillance (automated) systems, or any combination of these.”⁷⁰ With so much data collected by financial institutions, this monitoring is becoming increasingly widespread.

In a July 2022 presentation about these compliance programs, the ABA explained how financial institutions “identify[] the suspicious activity” using a technique called “surveillance monitoring.”⁷¹ To reinforce the point, a picture on the slide showed a figure monitoring several one-way video feeds for “suspicious” activities.⁷² The slide explained that “surveillance monitoring” programs “are designed to capture a wide range of account activity, such as cash activity, fund transfers, automated clearing house (ACH) transfers, and ATM transactions and include rule-based and intelligent systems to detect unusual or higher-risk transactions.”⁷³ With the assistance of technology, the slide noted, these systems are becoming increasingly

Surveillance monitoring

Surveillance monitoring is an automated type of transaction monitoring that may combine multiple types of transactions and is likely to use various rules to identify individual transactions, patterns of activity, or deviations from expected activity.

The programs may be off-the-shelf or developed and customized in-house, but they are designed to capture a wide range of account activity, such as cash activity, funds transfers, automated clearing house (ACH) transfers, and ATM transactions and include rule-based and intelligent systems to detect unusual or higher-risk transactions.

Surveillance monitoring is generally more sophisticated than transaction monitoring since transaction monitoring is only based on a single rule (e.g., a transaction greater than $10,000). Surveillance monitoring, though, applies multiple overlapping rules and filters or “alerts” that are more complex to identify potentially suspicious transactions.

“Surveillance monitoring is an automated type of transaction monitoring . . . to identify individual transactions [and] patterns of activity. . . .”

—American Bankers Association Slideshow

Americans should be rightly skeptical of a federal regime like the BSA that requires unaccountable financial institutions, on behalf of federal law enforcement, to build out a surreptitious and highly sophisticated surveillance system for monitoring and secretly flagging Americans’ transactions as “suspicious” or “unusual.” As the former Director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement in the Strategic Operations Division at FinCEN explained, a bank’s surveillance system is “[l]egal and required” under federal law.⁷⁶ He testified:

Q. . . . And [are there] investigators in, particularly the banks that are large enough to have multiple employees and entire compliance units, whose job it is to search and monitor their customers' financial records for suspicious activity that must be reported?

A. Yes.

Q. And based on your experience both at a financial institution and at FinCEN, that type of monitoring by a bank, by a financial institution of its own customers' data, that's entirely legal, correct?

A. Legal and required.

Q. Legal and required?

A. Yeah.

Q. No subpoenas required, no—no warrant is required?

A. Correct.⁷⁷

The mass monitoring by financial institutions opens the door for federal law enforcement to spy on Americans' constitutionally protected activity. For example, on September 28, 2022, Peter Sullivan and a representative from Wells Fargo presented at an ABA webinar, titled "Domestic Terrorism: A Threat to the Financial System."⁷⁸ Their presentation included a slide titled "Radicalization & Warning Signs."⁷⁹ The slide illustrated how banks should review a customer's transactions, explaining the transition from a "sympathizer" of a cause (which the ABA concedes is legal), to an "activist" (which is also labeled as legal), to an "extremist" (which begins the shift from "legal to illegal"), and, ultimately, to engaging in illegal "terrorist" activities.⁸⁰ While the presentation included a disclaimer that "[b]anks don't want to interfere with customers' First Amendment rights,"⁸¹ by highlighting transactions related to First and Second Amendment activity as an early sign of radicalization, the slide seemed to encourage financial institutions to begin tracking Americans' transactions even when they are engaged in constitutionally-protected activity. For example, the "warning signs" that the ABA suggests banks should look for include customers making "payments related to extremist political activity or donations to the cause," "more financial commitment to the cause," and the "purchase [of] weapons, gear, literature & other inflammatory propaganda," which the ABA concedes are all

In effect, the BSA requires financial institutions to engage in mass surveillance of Americans’ transactions and report en masse their personal information and financial activities to the federal government. Once filed, federal officials, through multiple programs, have warrantless access to search through the SARs and CTRs filed on Americans.

B. The BSA and Treasury Department programs provide law enforcement officials with broad, warrantless access to Americans’ financial data.

The Treasury Department claims that access to confidential BSA documents is limited in part because SARs “contain personally identifiable information, details about financial transactions, and unconfirmed information regarding potential violations of law or regulation.”⁸³

⁸³ Letter from Corey Tellez, Acting Assistant Sec’y, Office of Legislative Affairs, U.S. Dep’t of The Treasury, to Rep. Jim Jordan, Chairman, H. Comm. on the Judiciary at 1 (July 31, 2024).

Therefore, BSA “documents or the information therein should not be disclosed to, accessed by, or disseminated to unauthorized individuals in any fashion.”⁸⁴ However, despite these sensitivities, tens of thousands of government personnel have widespread and warrantless access to BSA data, like SARs and CTRs, through FinCEN programs, and, in some circumstances, programs that leave FinCEN and Congress in the dark about how BSA data is used once it is accessed.

i. Thousands of law enforcement officials have warrantless access to Americans’ financial information through a vast and searchable system.

A Treasury Department program known as the FinCEN Query system grants thousands of federal, state, and local law enforcement officials the ability to “easily and quickly access, query, and analyze” BSA data through a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with each entity.⁸⁵ FinCEN also provides access to this program, through MOUs, to employees from intelligence agencies and other external financial regulatory agencies “to conduct official agency business.”⁸⁶ According to the Office of Inspector General (OIG) of the Treasury Department, FinCEN has “475 MOUs with external LE [law enforcement], intelligence, and regulatory agencies.”⁸⁷ Once a “partner agenc[y]” reaches an MOU agreement with FinCEN it “identif[ies] employees for access to the system” and, once identified, the agency provides those users with a “unique login” to access the FinCEN Query system and begin running searches.⁸⁸ Users can search “first and last names or parts of addresses,” as well as other “keywords” and “search terms” to “scan across all text fields.”⁸⁹ Searches conducted in the FinCEN Query system are logged by FinCEN in an audit log.⁹⁰

During his transcribed interview, FinCEN Deputy Director Kirby described how the query system works. Using his name as an example, Kirby testified that a search for “Jimmy Kirby” would reveal any “SARs that have been filed on [Jimmy Kirby] . . . to the extent a bank has filed currency transaction reports or a non-bank has filed a Form 8300 on [Jimmy Kirby], you would see those” and “any of the other BSA forms that involve [Jimmy Kirby], you would be able to see those,” it would be the “universe of . . . what has been filed on [Jimmy Kirby].”⁹¹ Indeed, because these reporting “obligations apply to U.S. financial institutions,” Kirby explained, it is safe to assume that a “substantial portion,” if not the “majority of the filings,” involve “U.S. persons.”⁹² Thousands of law enforcement personnel can generally conduct these searches on the FinCEN Query system without ever needing a warrant or any legal process.⁹³

FinCEN informed the Committee and Select Subcommittee that, in 2023, there were 14,415 registered and authorized users with access to the FinCEN Query system.⁹⁴ That year, users conducted 3,362,735 million searches of the database without a warrant or legal process, amounting to an average of 9,212 searches per day.⁹⁵

However, the FinCEN Query system, including its searches and authorized users, do not reflect a complete picture of government officials' access to, or their searches, of Americans' financial data. In fact, according to FinCEN, "FinCEN Query users represent only a fraction of users who access" BSA data.⁹⁶ In other words, the number of government searches that FinCEN reported of its BSA data, and the number of government officials with access to the BSA data, is likely much higher. Another FinCEN program, called Agency Integrated Access, provides an additional avenue for federal officials to transfer, access, and use BSA data with little to no oversight from FinCEN.

ii. FinCEN provides federal law enforcement agencies the ability to copy and transfer entire BSA data sets from FinCEN, onto their own systems, and access it without a warrant.

FinCEN's Agency Integrated Access (AIA) program provides approved federal agencies the "ability to ingest the BSA data that is filed with FinCEN" if the agency has an MOU in place with FinCEN.⁹⁷ The Treasury OIG describes AIA as the "transfer of entire copy sets of FinCEN BSA data to an external agency" by "downloading an encrypted file daily from [the] FinCEN Portal"⁹⁸ From then on, FinCEN Deputy Director Kirby explained, "those agencies control the access to that data on their systems."⁹⁹ Once a partnered agency imports the BSA data onto their system, FinCEN does not maintain "visibility" into how the agency uses the data.¹⁰⁰

FinCEN informed the Committee and Select Subcommittee that "because the agencies manage [their AIA] user accounts, FinCEN does not have an exact contemporaneous count of the number of [government] users" with AIA access.¹⁰¹ However, as of September 2023, FinCEN reported "approximately 27,000 authorized agency users who had access to BSA data through AIA agencies," comprising nine federal law enforcement and national security agencies, including the FBI, Internal Revenue Service (IRS), National Security Agency (NSA), United States Secret Service (USSS), Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), Organized Crime and Drug Enforcement Task Forces (OCDETF), National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC), and one other agency whose involvement is classified.¹⁰² With this access, these federal agencies download the “same BSA filings” onto their own systems instead of using the auditable FinCEN Query system.¹⁰³

The very existence of the AIA program—which allows certain federal agencies to download the same data already made available through FinCEN Query—suggests that its purpose is to provide federal agencies with the ability to access and use BSA data outside the scope of the FinCEN Query system. Given that AIA access does not provide FinCEN with the “same degree of visibility” as FinCEN Query and grants the receiving agency “control [of] the access to that data,” federal law enforcement appears to operate in a regulatory blind spot in its use of Americans’ financial data and in an environment ripe for federal surveillance.¹⁰⁴

iii. In addition to law enforcement’s access to Americans’ financial information, some financial institutions use third-party contractors to monitor and report on their customers’ confidential transactions.

According to documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee, some financial institutions also appear to be sharing confidential BSA data with “third party vendors.”¹⁰⁵ On February 5, 2024, the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group (BSAAG) shared a draft white paper with its members that “addresse[d] unique issues that arise with BSA data and third-party relationships” and “to communicate . . . clear, consistent, cross-industry guidance/practices for information security and confidentiality when sharing BSA data with third parties.”¹⁰⁶ This white paper illustrates the concerning practice of third-party vendors with access to confidential BSA data and that are responsible for “monitoring” Americans’ banking activity.

The white paper discussed “Third Party BSA Data Sharing,” a practice in which financial institutions contract with vendors that offer “Financial Crimes Management” solutions, such as “transaction monitoring, customer due diligence, and other features”¹⁰⁷ It explained how financial institutions may use these vendors “to augment their BSA staffing” and to “assign[] tasks in the review of transaction monitoring alerts, unusual activity investigation, or even [the] SAR preparation process” despite the fact that regulators “have not addressed the question of whether information subject to SAR confidentiality rules may be shared with business relationship partners”¹⁰⁸ Still, financial institutions appear to be contracting with vendors that offer “solutions in which BSA data, including Suspicious Activity Report (SAR) data, is stored on the business relationship partner’s platform.”¹⁰⁹ However, these practices may be violating the BSA.

As the white paper acknowledged, “Federal Functional Regulators (FFRs) and FinCEN have not issued comprehensive rules or guidance relating to sharing BSA data with third parties” and that “it is not entirely clear to what extent [a financial institution] may use [a third party’s] contract resources to perform these functions consistent with SAR confidentiality rules and guidance.”¹¹⁰ The white paper observed the tension between keeping BSA data confidential and sharing the same information with third-party contractors:

The sharing of BSA data with third parties carries elevated risks, beyond data privacy and security risks related to all third-party relationships. Most BSA data, by definition, is highly confidential and sensitive . . . An FI subject to BSA regulation can run afoul of the law and prudent practice by over delegating BSA-related functions to a business-relationship partner or agent without sufficient supervision, training, and oversight.¹¹¹

Despite the legal uncertainty, security risks, and privacy concerns that sharing BSA data with third-party vendors presents for Americans’ private financial data, financial institutions appear to continue doing so with the tacit approval of the federal government.

iv. FinCEN appeared to have provided an individual with unauthorized access to a financial information-sharing system.

Section 314(b) of the USA Patriot Act “permits financial institutions, upon providing notice to the United States Department of Treasury, to share information with one another in order to identify and report to the federal government activities that may involve money laundering or terrorist activity.”¹¹² As of 2020, the 314(b) program included over 7,000 financial institutions.¹¹³ In 2020, 17,384 SAR narratives, which consist of a summary of the suspicious activity, referenced use of the 314(b) program, indicating that financial institutions actively collaborated to share information concerning potentially suspicious activity.¹¹⁴ The 314(b) program requires participating financial institutions to “protect the security and confidentiality of all information . . . and only use such information for the purposes laid out” in the statute.¹¹⁵

According to nonpublic documents, it appears that in at least one instance, an individual with “no connection” to a financial institution was mistakenly able to register with FinCEN as the bank’s program representative and received access to the sensitive data of customers’ and their transactions in this program.¹¹⁶ On May 5, 2021, a BoA employee emailed the former Director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement at FinCEN explaining that there was “a 314(b) registration issue” involving BoA.¹¹⁷ He wrote:

I have a 314(b) registration issue that I want to discuss with someone of appropriate seniority within FinCEN to make sure you are aware. It appears someone with no connection to Bank of America was able to register with FinCEN as Bank of America’s 314(b) contact. I’d be happy to pull up with you to share what we know or if you want to direct me somewhere else that would be fine too.¹¹⁸

The fact that an unauthorized representative appeared to have gained access to FinCEN’s 314(b) program raises the question of whether FinCEN is adequately protecting the sensitive financial data under its control and properly screening and vetting all individuals with access to this information. After BoA flagged the issue, the FinCEN employee agreed that the unauthorized access was “troubling” and would “escalate this immediately.”¹¹⁹

Given the amount of information that can be gleaned by viewing financial data, a bad actor who gains access to the 314(b) program could use it to view, target, or disclose Americans' sensitive information. It is concerning to learn that FinCEN could mistakenly register someone with no affiliation to the bank as their representative for the 314(b) program and seemingly gain unauthorized access to the data.

The threat of potential financial surveillance is expanding. Financial institutions are filing an ever-increasing number of confidential BSA reports like SARs and CTRs on Americans and, at the same time, the federal government is providing tens of thousands of federal, state, and local officials with warrantless access to this information and using it in undisclosed ways. As a consequence, more people than ever before have access to Americans' sensitive financial information.

FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AND ITS PARTNERS ABUSE THE BSA'S INFORMATION-SHARING REGIME

The FBI treats the SARs filed by financial institutions as a valuable resource. The FBI has told at least one financial institution that it “data min[es]” SARs as part of its investigations and that “all cases are required to search FinCEN data including SARs/CTRs.”¹²⁰ The FBI even asked financial institutions to include “as much . . . biographical info in SARs as possible: email address, phones, IP addresses, App data (cookies / push tokens, etc.) EVEN OLD DATA!”¹²¹ It also directed financial institutions to “[p]ut as many key words in the SAR write-up as possible.”¹²²

 - Include location info for branches and activity (can help with venue)
 - Back up docs are great; continual/reoccurring SARs for updates

In his transcribed interview with the Committee and Select Subcommittee, the former Director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement at FinCEN acknowledged that the SAR process sweeps in much more information than just suspicious activity.¹²³ He testified:

So, again, it's instead of looking for that needle in a haystack in millions of transactions, it's let's take a narrow subset that fits certain characteristics and look at those to evaluate whether they are suspicious. . . . Are we going to be overly inclusive in looking at things that we decide are not suspicious? Absolutely. But it makes it manageable.¹²⁴

The issue with FinCEN's "overly inclusive" approach, however, is that it subjects innocent Americans and their highly sensitive information to potential FBI scrutiny or other law enforcement investigations. The customer's information is never deleted and the customer never learns whether a financial institution has filed a SAR on them.¹²⁵

A. Federal law enforcement has broad discretion in what it considers "suspicious" financial activity and urges financial institutions to review their customers' transactions and file reports on the activity they consider "suspicious."

In 2021, Congress codified a new program called the FinCEN Exchange "to facilitate the sharing of information between law enforcement, FinCEN, and financial institutions" to include the sharing of "typologies," "trends," and other information that financial institutions "could consider incorporating into their existing AML/CFT [Anti-Money Laundering / Countering the Financing of Terrorism] programs" in order to "identify indicia of suspicious activity."¹²⁶ FinCEN Deputy Director Kirby described the FinCEN Exchange as "probably our premier public-private partnership, and it's a way for the private sector and different parts of government to come together and share information on priority topics."¹²⁷

Financial institutions review the typologies, trends, and other criteria provided to them through the FinCEN Exchange and subsequently review their own customers' transactions to determine if there is reportable suspicious activity.¹²⁸ This exchange of information creates a feedback loop between the government and financial institutions that, when used appropriately, may help the government and financial institutions detect and deter fentanyl distribution, human trafficking, or terrorist financing.¹²⁹ However, as Peter Sullivan, the former FBI Senior Private Sector Partner for Outreach within the Strategic Partner Engagement Section noted during his transcribed interview, the FBI is not limited in the kind of transactions it can suggest to financial institutions as potentially suspicious. He testified:

- Q. Are there limits in terms of the kind of transactions that you can express an interest as being possibly suspicious?
- A. From my law enforcement standpoint, there [are] various things that we can discuss and brainstorm. So, in that sense, you know, it varies. It's a pretty wide scope.¹³⁰

While “it is ultimately a bank’s responsibility to determine when—consistent with the BSA and its implementing regulations—a bank must file a SAR,”¹³² when federal law enforcement and Treasury Department regulators share information with banks for them to “consider incorporating into their existing AML/CFT programs,”¹³³ financial institutions have a massive incentive to act on the intelligence they receive from government officials and regulators. If the banks fail to file SARs that they should have, or otherwise fail to comply with the BSA by maintaining effective AML programs, they could incur civil penalties that could total hundreds of millions of dollars.¹³⁴ This is the incentive framework in which financial institutions are forced to operate.

Federal law enforcement has regularly abused the information sharing process in order to deploy financial institutions as de facto arms of federal law enforcement. For example, following the events of January 6, 2021, federal law enforcement and FinCEN deputized the entire financial sector to identify anyone who may have been present at the U.S. Capitol.¹³⁵ This collaboration included sharing information and developing typologies that clearly targeted Americans with conservative views—gun owners, those concerned with illegal immigration, and those opposed to COVID mandates, to name a few.¹³⁶ The FBI exploited its relationships with financial institutions by asking them to file SARs based on specific typologies crafted by FinCEN and the FBI to ostensibly identify potential threats to Inauguration Day.¹³⁷ Yet, even after Inauguration Day had concluded and any potential threats to the event had passed, the FBI still sent financial institutions specific names, requesting that they search their database for those individuals and file SARs on any potential suspicious activity.¹³⁸

On January 8, 2021, FinCEN convened a call with Peter Sullivan, representing the FBI’s Counterterrorism Division, and approximately thirty to fifty financial institutions.¹³⁹ On this call and others, “FinCEN asked [the FBI] to discuss different fact-based patterns that would help institutions look at their data, review their data for anything . . . that would help the institutions understand if they had any threats”¹⁴⁰ Following the January 8, 2021, conversation, BoA reached out to Sullivan directly to discuss the FinCEN call.¹⁴¹ On January 15, 2021, Sullivan and BoA representatives “brainstorm[ed]” potential indicators and thresholds that could be used by BoA to file a SAR related to the events at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, and to identify potential threats to Inauguration Day.¹⁴² Sullivan memorialized this call in an email to BoA with a list of thresholds the FBI was “prepared to action.”¹⁴³ According to these thresholds, the FBI sought information on any BoA customer who transacted in the Washington, D.C., area and who made “ANY historical purchase” of a firearm or who had made a hotel, Airbnb, or airline reservation within a given date range in January 2021.¹⁴⁴

—Jan. 15, 2021, email from FBI personnel to Bank of America personnel

Ultimately, according to Sullivan, BoA filed a SAR based on these FBI-provided thresholds. Sullivan testified:

Q. And did Bank of America’s production of the SAR and information that was in the SAR, did it correlate with these thresholds?

¹⁴³ Email from [Redacted] at FBI to personnel at Bank of America (Jan. 15, 2021 12:40 PM) (BoFA-HJUD-00000002).

A. It did.

Q. Do you recall how many individuals then were identified in that SAR?

A. My recollection is that there were 211 individuals that met the three thresholds that you can see within the email.¹⁴⁵

Sullivan’s interactions, however, were not limited to only BoA. He testified that, “my engagement was not just with Bank of America. My engagement was with all [of the] finance sector. And so that covered banks, fintech, it covered neobanks, cryptocurrency, I mean, you name it.”¹⁴⁶ Sullivan stated that “a handful” of those financial institutions, like BoA, filed SARs based on thresholds developed by the FBI and FinCEN and that, at times, he even received SARs that were “handpicked” for him directly by executives at financial institutions.¹⁴⁷ He testified:

Q. Do you know, approximately, how many other banks . . . did, in fact, send you information complying with those three criteria like Bank of America did[?]

A. Yeah, there were between 40 and 60 representatives on the first FinCEN [call], which probably spanned 30 to 50 financial institutions. So I received a lot of SARs related to the Capitol riots and the unknown threat to Inauguration Day.¹⁴⁸

Following the January 8 phone call between FinCEN, the FBI, and financial institutions, FinCEN “created a tag for all SARs related to the Capitol riots”¹⁴⁹ and financial institutions swiftly complied with FinCEN’s and the FBI’s requests, directing their employees to expedite SARs related to the events of January 6, 2021.¹⁵⁰ In an email from a Citigroup Senior Vice President, employees received direction that “for any SAR filings related to the Capitol Riots, the following reference should be included in SAR Field 2 (Filing Institution Note to FinCEN) and in the narrative of the SAR: ‘FIN-2021-DE01.’”¹⁵¹ It further directed, “[a]s a reminder, all SARs related to the Capitol Riots should be expedited.”¹⁵²

Despite stating that the SAR filing process was voluntary, Sullivan could not recall a single financial institution that declined to produce a SAR after the FBI sent the thresholds for banks to use in compiling SARs. Sullivan testified:

Q. [I]s it voluntary for Bank of America to file a SAR after discussing the very thresholds that were subsequently filed by Bank of America with you?

A. Under BSA, it would be up to the bank exclusively whether or not they met [the] SAR thresholds[.]

Q. Anyone not respond? . . . Any financial institutions you sent similar requests to, like you did [with] Bank of America, and Bank of America sent you back information, including documentation that included 211 American customer names, any other financial institutions you sent similar stuff to, did they not respond?

A. I can't recall any financial institution that didn't produce SARs during that time.¹⁵³

While the FBI frequently claims that financial institutions voluntarily produce SARs, this information raises questions about whether financial institutions truly have a choice to file SARs when the FBI solicits them.

Ultimately, the FBI's focus shifted from sending thresholds and typologies to financial institutions to soliciting information on specific individuals potentially under investigation.¹⁵⁴ On January 15, 2021, Sullivan sent an email to various financial institutions with the subject line "[a]dditional names/selectors for SAR purposes only at your [financial institution's] discretion."¹⁵⁵ The email included names and other selectors "linked to the 6 Jan Capitol building incidents . . . for SARs purposes only."¹⁵⁶ In other words, Sullivan, on behalf of the FBI, provided a list of Americans to financial institutions suggesting that the companies search their databases to find additional information and potentially file SARs on those individuals.

Folks,

SEU has been working hard over the last week to get you additional names/selectors linked to the 6 January Capitol incident and the current threat environment leading up to Inauguration Day.

Please see the attached list of names/selectors linked to the 6 Jan Capitol building incidents and review at the discretion of your own investigation/compliance teams---for SARs purposes only.

If you chose to publish a SAR, SEU will be interested to review and disseminate to the appropriate FBI operations personnel immediately.

To be clear, none of the names on this list are part of our SEU's code Yellow/Red/Equity Check outreach tool. But this list is being provided as a collective effort by SEU to help your investigations/compliance teams in your normal course of value-added SAR production.

SEU requests that nothing in the attached be considered a higher priority than SEU's current [pending and future] outreach code YELLOWS/REDS/Equity Checks.

—Jan. 15, 2021, email from Peter Sullivan, FBI, to FBI employee, and bcc'd financial institutions

However, despite Sullivan's assurance to financial institutions that his information sharing was a part of the “normal course of value-added SAR production,”¹⁵⁷ the FBI's provision of specific names and selectors was a manipulation of the SAR-filing process, which “requires that a bank or other financial institution file a SAR whenever it identifies ‘a suspicious transaction relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation.’”¹⁵⁸ Indeed, as Deputy Director Kirby testified in his transcribed interview, “[W]ith a suspicious activity report it's the bank who's investigating or monitoring their customers and then flagging for FinCEN and law enforcement what they deem to be suspicious.”¹⁵⁹ By sending specific names to financial institutions and requesting any SARs related to those individuals, however, the FBI is turning the SAR process on its head, suggesting for the banks that certain people could be suspicious and impliedly urging financial institutions to examine them more closely.

This may turn into a code red, but in the interim we wanted to push you selectors we confirmed on the ops side. So yes, for now, we have not confirmed we have GJS' teed up for all results from our normal "code red" protocol --but we will take any SARs you decide to file on.

If this turns into a code red over the weekend, you will hear it from me first.

Hope this helps.

Hope you all have a safe weekend with your families.

Folks,

—Apr. 16, 2021, Email from Peter Sullivan, FBI, to Union Bank personnel

In at least two instances, one financial institution replied to Sullivan’s emails and sought legal process from the FBI before it would turnover more detailed financial records. Sullivan pushed back on those requests. On April 20, 2021, Sullivan sent an email to Standard Chartered employees, requesting information on various names “in response to a CODE YELLOW.”¹⁶⁴ Standard Chartered responded to Sullivan and informed him that its search registered a “positive hit” but stated that “[i]f additional information is required, we ask that you send a subpoena.”¹⁶⁵ Sullivan responded, asking for a phone call, explaining that “typically for Code Reds and Yellows, we get more on the front end than ‘positive’ only” and affirmed that “because this outreach name on [redacted] was a code yellow, we’d like to get something additional.”¹⁶⁶ He contrasted this request with “Equity Checks” that require a response of “‘positive’ only with no other info offered because Equity Checks are priority investigations but have no . . . emergency-related nexus.”¹⁶⁷

In a similar exchange, on May 24, 2021, Sullivan requested that Standard Chartered “run the following name and associated selectors in response to an Equity Check.”¹⁶⁸ Standard Chartered responded, acknowledging that it had identified transactions “with an exact name match,” but again asked for legal process, writing, “If additional information is required, we ask that you send a subpoena.”¹⁶⁹ Two days later, on May 26, 2021, Sullivan replied to Standard Chartered asking, “I wanted to revisit our conversation on your two cents if we could discuss next steps to try to get more information on name matches”¹⁷⁰ Sullivan and the Standard Chartered employee scheduled a call for the next day.¹⁷¹ Sullivan also sought a “pre-call” with the Standard Chartered employee to see if the bank planned to have “compliance or someone else on the call” so that Sullivan could “make sure at a minimum” that he was on “the same page” as the Standard Chartered employee regarding these requests.¹⁷² This apparent effort to avoid any legal process to obtain the sensitive information of a bank’s customer is concerning, but does not appear uncommon.

The FBI clearly recognizes the usefulness of Americans’ financial data and frequently contacts financial institutions to request information for the FBI’s investigations. While avoiding making outright demands for this information, documents show that the FBI avoids requests for legal process and routinely operates on the edge of what is permissible information sharing under the BSA. By soliciting financial institutions for SAR filings directly, the FBI is treating financial institutions as arms of law enforcement charged with investigating whether a customer has engaged in any “suspicious activity” on the FBI’s behalf.

B. FinCEN solicits customer transaction information from financial institutions, on behalf of the FBI, even if the transaction activity lacks a clear nexus to criminal activity.

FinCEN also serves as an active partner of the FBI by collecting Americans’ financial data on its behalf. During his transcribed interview, the former Director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement in the Strategic Operations Division at FinCEN, stated that “if the FBI said, hey, we’re desperate; you know, something major is happening . . . we need you to jump, we would jump.”¹⁷³ This closeness played out following January 6, 2021, when FinCEN coordinated with the FBI to share hordes of information with financial institutions to assist in the FBI’s investigation. The Committee and Select Subcommittee’s investigation has revealed that FinCEN provided financial institutions with politicized search terms and typologies that cast certain ideologies, namely conservatives, as potentially dangerous or extreme.¹⁷⁴ New documents reveal that, as it sought to assist the FBI in its January 6-related investigations, FinCEN cast such a wide net that it inevitably caused financial institutions to flag ordinary Americans’ transactions as suspicious.

One example that demonstrates the problem with casting such a wide net, is a list that FinCEN circulated to financial institutions that included hundreds of shops and vendors that any traveler would have made at D.C.-area airports, train stations, and bus stops, including purchases from major nationwide food and retail chains.¹⁷⁵ On January 22, 2021, after the presidential inauguration, an employee from MUFUG sent FinCEN an email with an excel sheet that included “a compilation of vendors at the 3 major DMV airports (Reagan, Dulles, BWI), Union Station (rail), and Bus Stops.”¹⁷⁶ A FinCEN employee responded to MUFUG, saying, “this is terrific. —Jan. 22, 2021, Email from the former Director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement, FinCEN, to financial institutions and FinCEN personnel

In his transcribed interview, the former Director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement stated that FinCEN shares typologies or red flags with financial institutions to provide guidance for their AML/CFT programs.¹⁷⁹ Therefore, by sharing a compilation of vendors at the major Washington, D.C. area transit facilities, it appears that FinCEN expected banks to use the list to identify people or transactions made at those vendors that may be suspicious and merit a SAR filing. This dragnet, suspicious treatment of purchases at vendors around the DMV area, coincided with the FBI soliciting BoA to search its database for any individuals seeking to travel to the Washington, D.C. area around January 6, 2021, and January 20, 2021, and FinCEN’s distribution of a PowerPoint slideshow explaining how financial institutions could search through Americans’ transactions using MCC codes and other keywords like “Bass Pro Shop” and “Dick’s Sporting Goods” to scrutinize their purchases.¹⁸⁰ These kinds of sprawling requests have an extremely limited nexus, if any, to individualized criminal conduct. Despite the lack of a criminal nexus, the Treasury Department acknowledged in a letter to the Committee that FinCEN was sharing this kind of information with financial institutions for them to “consider incorporating into their existing AML/CFT programs.”¹⁸¹

Documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee indicate that federal law enforcement was not the only entity that was abusing the information-sharing process. Deployed as arms of law enforcement, financial institutions seemingly assumed their role and sought ways to manipulate FinCEN’s existing authorities in order to expand the amount of financial data that could be turned over to the FBI.

As an email between MUFG and FinCEN shows, MUFG suggested using the USA PATRIOT Act’s Section 314(a) process to notify other financial institutions about what would otherwise be confidential SAR information. The 314(a) process gives investigators the ability “to canvas the nation’s financial institutions for potential lead information” from “more than 37,000 points of contact at more than 16,000 financial institutions to locate accounts and transactions of persons that may be involved in terrorism or money laundering.”¹⁸² MUFG suggested to FinCEN that it should issue 314(a) requests, based on SAR filings, in order to trigger other financial institutions into conducting a review of their databases for any positive matches and presumably file SARs with law enforcement, “assuming [FinCEN has] the authority.”¹⁸³ But, according to FinCEN, “Section 314(a) provides lead information only and is not a substitute for a subpoena or other legal process.”¹⁸⁴ As Deputy Director Kirby testified, this process is “essentially a hand-raising exercise for whether [the financial institutions] have responsive accounts” in response to a law enforcement inquiry, but the response “does not include the actual financial records.”¹⁸⁵ Yet, the strategy concocted by MUFG would appear to be a substitute for the Section 314(b) legal process, which already exists so that “financial institutions . . . [can] share information with one another in order to identify and report . . . money laundering or terrorist activity” after notifying the Treasury Department.¹⁸⁶ Though Section 314(b) allows financial institutions to share information with one another, according to FinCEN, the 314(b) process “does not relax the prohibition against SAR disclosures” and financial institutions “remain prohibited from disclosing a SAR or any information that would reveal the existence of a SAR notwithstanding

Confidential

AnnaLou, I hope you are well. We live in interesting times. As you might imagine, our bank, and I expect many others, are thinking hard about how we can support the Bureau's efforts to address the acute threat of domestic terrorism we are facing at the moment.

I wanted to bounce an idea off you. Would FinCEN have an appetite (assuming you feel you have the authority) to, in SARs filed in relation to the current acute threat of domestic terrorism, identify whether the suspicious activity being reported involves a customer of another institution in the U.S. and, if so, make a 314(a) request, perhaps under a specific code, for such subjects? In other words, Bank A files a SAR for suspicious transactions involving John Doe, a customer of Bank B (an FI in the US). However, Bank B is unaware of the concern surrounding its customer (unless Bank A utilized 314(b) authorities—but even then, the delay would be unworkable when addressing an acute terror threat). FinCEN, by doing a 314(a) request for that subject, will trigger an internal review in Bank B (most banks will open an investigation following a 314(a) match). If the 314(a) request is coded under a project name, all the better.

I'm happy to explain myself more in a call. [REDACTED] I'm also curious if FinCEN is planning anything independently (i.e., red flags circular). I'm sure that BSAAG members would be happy to contribute thoughts and ideas that could be shared more broadly – even with other BSAAG members.

Anyhow, we are open to assisting however we can, within the existing authorities. Take care and say hi to Ken and congratulations to you both on the passage of the NDAA. That's a big accomplishment!

MUFG’s and other financial institutions’ efforts to assist FinCEN and federal law enforcement’s investigative efforts did not go unnoticed. On April 13, 2021, FinCEN Acting Director Michael Mosier sent a thank you letter to various financial institutions for “the timely and proactive attention of your team during this period – many times on short-notice, late into evenings, or over weekends – to respond to this challenge and to share information and work with law enforcement to follow leads and identify potential threats.”¹⁸⁹

“I am writing to express my gratitude to MUFG Bank for its collaborative efforts in working with [FinCEN] and our law enforcement partners in the aftermath of the tragic events at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021 . . . I am truly proud of the partnership that we formed”

¹⁸⁹ Michael Mosier, FinCEN, to personnel at MUFG, Apr. 13, 2021 (MUFG-0001196).

This letter exemplifies FinCEN and law enforcement’s expectation that financial institutions work to assist the federal government whenever the government calls.

C. The federal government, through the BSAAG advisory group, is increasing its coordination with financial institutions and pushing them to adopt new and invasive technologies that augment the ability to surveil Americans.

Established by the Annunzio-Wylie Anti-Money Laundering Act of 1992,¹⁹⁰ the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group (BSAAG) advises the Treasury Department on issues related to the BSA.¹⁹¹ The BSAAG includes representatives from government agencies like the Treasury and Justice Departments, national financial institutions, trade associations, and other businesses subject to the reporting requirements of the BSA.¹⁹² Documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee indicate that the federal government, through the BSAAG, is pushing financial institutions to integrate new technologies, such as AI and digital ID requirements, that will expand the access to and surveillance of Americans’ data.

i. BSAAG documents indicate that Big Banks and Big Government are advancing the implementation of a national digital ID system.

As the world becomes increasingly digitized, there has been a global push toward requiring digital identification systems.¹⁹³ These systems, under the guise of modernizing identity verification, are designed to authenticate a claimed identity with the real-life existence of the individual “us[ing] electronic means to assert and prove a person’s official identity online.”¹⁹⁴ Traditionally, verifying a person’s identity has relied on physical documents like driver’s licenses and passports.¹⁹⁵ However, in the United States and around the globe, interest groups comprised of financial institutions, influential global organizations, and various governmental bodies are pushing the integration of a national “digital ID” system into financial and public services.¹⁹⁶ Troublingly, the Committee and Select Subcommittee obtained a confidential BSAAG Working Group White Paper, titled “Brick & Mortar to Bits & Bytes: Adapting the U.S. AML/CFT Regime for Digital Identity,” which indicates that a push for a national digital ID requirement in the United States appears to be underway and that financial services may be the vehicle for its adoption.¹⁹⁷

In the white paper, the BSAAG Working Group acknowledged “the reality that there is [a] deep political and cultural skepticism of, or even hostility to, a national ID system in the U.S.,” and that the “national ID system will face unique political challenges and structural hurdles in the U.S. . . .”¹⁹⁸ Despite this public skepticism, the BSAAG Working Group recommended that “U.S. financial institutions . . . support digital identity proofing and/or authentication for AML/CFT efforts (customer identification/verification at on-boarding and ongoing due diligence and transaction monitoring) . . .”¹⁹⁹ The white paper also discussed how the biometric information and digital signals enabled by the use of digital ID could be repurposed for “broader KYC [Know-Your-Customer] and transaction monitoring purposes,” mentioning, in particular the use of:

- “geolocation, MAC and IP addresses,”
- “biophysical biometric attributes (e.g., fingerprints, iris patterns, voiceprints, facial recognition),”
- “biomechanical patterns (e.g., keystroke mechanics, typing cadence, or device angle compared with known patterns),”
- “behavioral attributes (e.g., expected log-in channels, email/text message patterns, file access log, time of log-in, etc. compared with historical behavior), email age, patterns of website interaction (e.g., expected progression through product offering and account opening), frequency and type of usage . . .”²⁰⁰

IV. Progressive Identity and the Customer Journey

- A. Encourage the use of information associated with digital identification for broader KYC and transaction monitoring purposes

Financial institutions (and their examiners) should take the FATF’s cue and expand their view of traditional KYC information to include those “anti-fraud and cyber-security processes to support digital identity proofing and/or authentication for AML/CFT efforts [like] customer identification/verification at onboarding and ongoing due diligence and transaction monitoring.”⁶⁰ Depending on the purpose and stage of the relationship, these “digital signals” may include: geolocation, MAC and IP addresses, biophysical biometric attributes (e.g., fingerprints, iris patterns, voiceprints, facial recognition), biomechanical patterns (e.g., keystroke mechanics, typing cadence, or device angle compared with known patterns), behavioral attributes (e.g., expected log-in channels, email/text message patterns, file access log, time of log-in, etc. compared with historical behavior), email age, patterns of website interaction (e.g., expected progression through product offering and account opening), frequency and type of usage, among others.

—BSAAG FinTech/RegTech Working Group

The white paper also noted that successful digital ID implementation would have “potentially profound policy implications and benefits” by “focusing financial institutions on behavioral risk” and “leveraging the digital signals” financial institutions would gain from digital ID to better surveil its customers for behavior that the bank considers risky.²⁰¹ This includes expanding and utilizing a concept called “progressive identity” which “recognizes that digital ID is not simply a new method for static identification and verification, but can facilitate the ‘customer journey’ through which customers increase their digital footprint”²⁰² If digital ID and the concept of “progressive identity” are integrated into American financial regulation, government surveillance is likely to pervade even deeper into Americans’ financial activities as the “digital footprint” of Americans increase.

The BSAAG document explicitly stated, “First, the U.S. AML regime should create the conditions for digital ID practices to take root in the U.S. financial industry by expanding and updating the existing customer identification program (CIP) rules”²⁰³ In doing so, digital ID is sold as a portable and secure way of determining the validity of an individual’s credentials;²⁰⁴ however, in reality, digital ID can be a potential Trojan horse. It can be a governmental tool used to regulate access to banking services and can lead to constant surveillance, as every transaction becomes associated with a digital ID. Some proponents maintain that individuals will have control over their information and the ability to voluntarily participate in the system, but, in practice, digital ID often becomes mandatory, leaving individuals with no choice but to surrender their privacy.²⁰⁵

Indeed, the BSAAG document speaks to the consequences of refusing to comply with digital ID signals, “if a customer uses a VPN [Virtual Private Network] or blocks location permissions—both legitimate privacy-based decisions—the progressive identity of the customer will be hampered . . . as the financial institution may likely have to resort to more traditional KYC [Know-Your-Customer] techniques or limit the customer’s access to its services.”²⁰⁶ In other words, making “legitimate privacy-based decisions” may result in a different reality: either accept these tools of surveillance and digital ID, or risk being debanked.

ii. The federal government encouraged financial institutions to incorporate new technologies, including artificial intelligence and machine learning, into their systems to more aggressively track Americans.

Incorporating artificial intelligence (AI) and machine learning (ML) into financial institutions’ AML programs also appears to be a priority of the BSAAG. In April of 2022, Himamauli Das, the then-Acting Director of FinCEN, testified before the House Committee on Financial Services that “we can envision consideration of efforts involving artificial intelligence or machine learning-driven transaction monitoring . . . digital identity tools . . . and automating the adjudication and filing of SARs related to certain types of activity.”²⁰⁷ Confidential BSAAG documents obtained by the Committee and Select Subcommittee reveal that digital identity tools, along with AI and ML solutions, may already be being used to monitor Americans’ financial activity.

On June 23, 2022, the BSAAG Innovation and Technology Subcommittee held a meeting in which one item on the agenda was “AI/Machine Learning—new focus area.”²⁰⁸ Following this meeting, FinCEN and financial institutions exchanged ideas on how to incorporate and utilize AI to further track and report suspicious customer activity.²⁰⁹ On September 19, 2023, a FinCEN liaison sent an email to the AI and ML working group calling for volunteers to draft a white paper on its risks and benefits.²¹⁰

As the Committee and Select Subcommittee have discussed in other reports, the growth and expansion of AI present major risks to Americans’ civil liberties.²¹¹ For example, the Committee and Select Subcommittee uncovered AI being used to censor “alleged misinformation regarding COVID-19 and the 2020 election”²¹² Those concerns are not hypothetical. Some AI systems developed by Big Tech companies have been programmed with biases; for example, Google’s Gemini AI program praised liberal views while refusing to do the same for conservative views, despite claiming to be “objective” and “neutral.”²¹³ With financial institutions seemingly adopting AI solutions to monitor Americans’ transactions, a similarly biased AI program could result in the systematic flagging or censoring of transactions that the AI is trained to view as “suspicious.”²¹⁴ Given that financial institutions and federal law enforcement previously worked together to flag transactions using biased search terms like “TRUMP” or “MAGA,” in addition to FinCEN sharing typologies that treated purchases of “religious texts” or “donations to organizations known to promote radicalism,” as “indicators” of “homegrown violent extremism,” concerns over biased AI transaction monitoring are well-founded.²¹⁵ If financial institutions are using a biased AI to spy on Americans’ transactions, they may begin flagging purchases associated with conservative views such as lawful firearm purchases, tickets to conservative political rallies, or even Bibles—all constitutionally-protected activities.

The BSAAG appears to support using AI and other innovative technologies to monitor customers’ transactions. Another document drafted by a BSAAG working group noted that “[e]ncouraging the adoption of innovative technologies is a priority for industry, law enforcement and regulators to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of AML/CFT programs”²¹⁶ The BSAAG document proposed, among other things, using “[s]uspicious activity detection and reporting programs that leverage machine learning, robotic process automation or artificial intelligence” to monitor Americans’ transactions surreptitiously, without human input.²¹⁷ The white paper also encouraged “[b]ig data infrastructures . . . that can enable financial institutions to ingest, store, index, and analyze information”²¹⁸

II. TECHNOLOGY EXAMPLES AND CHALLENGES TO ADOPTION

Technologies either being used or developed/contemplated by financial institutions or vendors include:

- Suspicious activity detection and reporting programs that leverage machine learning, robotic process automation or artificial intelligence.
- Technologies that extract, capture, and analyze structured and unstructured data (e.g., text, speech, voice, image, video, metadata) to identify unusual or suspicious patterns.
- Technologies which review, digitize, and interpret new and existing regulatory intelligence (e.g., rules, regulations, enforcement actions, no-action letters, advisories).
- Big data infrastructures (e.g., cloud computing, data lakes, knowledge graphs) that can enable financial institutions to ingest, store, index, and analyze information within their organizations more quickly and make faster data connections.
- e-Know Your Customer ("KYC") and Know Your Business ("KYB") utilities that leverage distributed ledgers and cryptography to create trusted networks managed by a central provider that stores data that is made available to a larger group via personalizing access per user.
- Use of automated verification tools (e.g., using biometrics, computer vision, deep learning) that speeds up and increases security during remote onboarding.
- Use of distributive ledger platforms to enhance transaction monitoring and enable comprehensive investigations across financial institutions and jurisdiction (e.g., enclave-supporting data sharing).

“Technologies either being used or developed/contemplated by financial institutions or vendors include: [s]uspicious activity detection and reporting programs that leverage machine learning, robotic process automation or artificial intelligence.”

—BSAAG Innovation and Adoption Working Group

In other words, the BSAAG document explored how financial institutions can make greater use of Americans’ financial data and extract additional information on behalf of law enforcement and sought greater collaboration with “law enforcement, regulators, financial service providers, vendors, and technology companies” in order to “facilitat[e] the adoption of new technologies”²¹⁹

Unfortunately, the BSAAG document glosses over any real concern for Americans’ financial privacy and makes no mention of civil liberties, and, instead, prioritizes the interests of the financial industry, law enforcement, and new technologies designed to provide them with even greater insight into Americans’ financial habits and their pattern of life. Documents uncovered in this investigation reveal that the financial information-sharing regime continues to grow alongside the financial institutions’ capacity to surveil Americans.

POTENTIAL LEGISLATIVE REFORMS

Congress enacted the BSA and other relevant pieces of Anti-Money Laundering legislation with the stated goal of curbing money laundering, terrorist financing, and detecting and deterring other crimes.²²⁰ However, the aims of that legislation has fallen short, while needlessly sacrificing Americans' financial privacy. Based upon the Committee's and Select Subcommittee's findings, Congress should act to protect Americans' financial privacy.

The Financial Reporting Threshold Modernization Act proposes, among other things, raising the CTR threshold from the $10,000 mark—set more than 50 years ago—to $60,000.²²¹ The original $10,000 CTR threshold, was set “to identify unusually large currency transactions that exceed the legitimate and customary conduct of a bank’s customers, and produce information highly useful to combat financial crime[;]” however, if the CTR threshold were adjusted for inflation, it would be nearly $75,000 today.²²² For that reason, the $10,000 threshold actually makes the program less effective as the sheer number of CTR reports—20.8 million in 2023—transforms the CTR from being about criminal activity into a government surveillance program. If inflation trends continue, the number of transactions passing the $10,000 threshold will continue to increase, resulting in even more CTR filings and greater surveillance of Americans' finances.

Congress could also consider reforming the SAR filing process. Under the current BSA framework, financial institutions are required to act as confidential informants on their customers, reporting them to the federal government without any recourse or notice available to the customer. Congress could amend the BSA to require that banks, after a certain period of time, give notice to the customer that a SAR was filed, provide a justification, and offer an opportunity for the customer to respond to allegations they engaged in “suspicious activity.” Other reforms propose establishing “a private right of action for Americans and financial institutions harmed by illicit government activity.”²²³

Finally, Congress could restore Fourth Amendment protections to Americans' financial records. In order to end warrantless surveillance, Congress could require a warrant before law enforcement can gain access to Americans' private financial information. Senator Mike Lee's Saving Privacy Act proposes bolstering the warrant requirement under the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978.²²⁴ Americans should not have to choose between having a bank account and worrying that the federal government may have warrantless access to their personal financial decisions and other revealing details about their pattern of life, interests, faith, politics, and more.

CONCLUSION

The Committee and Select Subcommittee opened this investigation to determine how and to what extent the federal government and financial institutions weaponized financial surveillance to monitor the private lives of American citizens. The result of the investigation reveals that financial surveillance goes far beyond the targeting of one political ideology and is more pervasive than one act of criminal conduct. The information-sharing apparatus, designed by Congress and implemented by the Executive Branch and financial institutions, has been warped into a tool designed to constantly monitor the activities of millions of Americans.

Federal law enforcement has shown that it will leverage any opportunity to operate outside the bounds of the statutes that govern access to Americans' financial data. Because the existence of a SAR and other BSA filings may never be revealed to a customer, Americans may never know the extent to which their finances are being tracked. The most egregious abuses of this system occurred in the days after January 6, 2021, in which seemingly anyone with any possible connection to Washington, D.C., was potentially subjected to warrantless government surveillance and SAR filings. It is very likely that, without intervention or reform, federal law enforcement will abuse this system again in the future.

Indeed, the information gathered by the Committee and Select Subcommittee shows that the federal government continues to exploit the laws governing financial data and is deputizing financial institutions as arms of law enforcement. By sharing typologies and even specific names with financial institutions, federal law enforcement has shown its willingness to manipulate the SAR filing process. Although the FBI and FinCEN claim that financial institutions have the choice to act upon the information federal law enforcement shares, the reality is different. When federal law enforcement demands something, it is difficult—if not impossible—for banks to say no.

As the federal government and financial institutions adjust to modern finance, there will come a time when almost no financial activity will occur outside of the watchful eye of the federal government. And as the federal government and the financial sector explore integrating new technologies like digital ID and the use of AI to monitor transactions, every financial movement of every American could soon be automatically recorded and scrutinized. With the documented abuses of AI technology already mounting, these new tools pose a threat of biased enforcement.

Absent adequate congressional oversight and legislative reforms, it is likely that countless more Americans will be subject to financial surveillance and potentially federal investigation, all without ever knowing about it. The Committee and Select Subcommittee will continue to investigate the coordination between Big Banks and Big Government to protect Americans' civil liberties.

1 ██████████ Thank you. I would like to now go over the grounds rules and 2 guidelines that we'll follow during today's interview. Our questioning will proceed in 3 rounds. The majority will ask questions first for one hour. Then the minority will have 4 an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they so choose. We will 5 alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.
6 Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour, but if you would like to take a
7 break apart from that, please just let us know. As you can see, there's an official court
8 reporter taking down everything we say to make a written record. So we ask that you
9 give verbal responses to all questions. Do you understand this?

10 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

11 ██████████ So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we'll do our best 12 to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just 13 those people on the staff whose turn it is. Please try and speak clearly so the court
14 reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you. It
15 is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we can help it,
16 and that goes for everybody presence at today's interview. We want you to answer our 17 questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time.
18 If you have any questions or if you do not understand one of our questions, please let us
19 know. Our questions will cover a wide range of topics. So, if you need clarification at 20 any point, just say so. If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not 21 remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection. And it is okay
22 to tell us if you learn information from someone else; just indicate how you came to know
23 that information. If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and 24 please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more
25 complete answer to the question. You should also understand that by law you are

1 required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

2 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

3 [REDACTED] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff when 4 interviewed. Do you understand this?

5 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

6 [REDACTED] Witnesses that knowingly provide false statements or false
7 testimony can be subject to criminal prosecution for making false statements under 18, 8 U.S.C., section 1001. Do you understand this?

9 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

10 [REDACTED] Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to 11 today's questions?

12 Mr. Sullivan. No.

13 [REDACTED] Finally, I would like to make note that the content of what we 14 discuss here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in 15 this interview to outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation. For 16 the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with the court 17 reporters and go in the official transcript, and any copies of those exhibits will be 18 returned to us as we wrap up.

19 All right. That's the end of my preamble. Is there anything my colleagues from 20 the minority would like to add?

21 [REDACTED] No, we would just like to thank Mr. Sullivan for appearing here
22 today. We appreciate it. And we would also just like to note that we at this point have 23 done well over a hundred transcribed interviews, and only a fraction of the transcripts 24 have been released, and we would encourage our majority counterparts to release all of 25 them.

1 [REDACTED] I will just note for the record that our minority counterparts have 2 equal access to the transcripts, and I'll turn it over to agency counsel who would like to 3 make some remarks.

4 [REDACTED] Thank you. As you know, the FBI has determined to make Mr.
5 Sullivan, a non-SES employee, available to speak to the committee today, pursuant 6 to the accommodations process, related to the facts and circumstances of this matter,
7 including his personal knowledge and communications he has had with financial 8 institutions as part of his work at the FBI. As part of that, it's our understanding that we 9 are likely to talk about a specific suspicious activity report, or SAR, today. The existence
10 of any details within any SAR are confidential according to the Bank Secrecy Act. The 11 Department of Treasury, specifically FinCEN, maintains the SAR program. It's our 12 understanding that Treasury has confirmed the existence of the SAR at issue today and 13 has further provided access to the SAR to the committee and the scope of this inquiry.

14 Accordingly, Mr. Sullivan can talk about this specific SAR today. If falls within his 15 official duties as a current FBI employee to respond to questions within this transcribed
16 interview to the extent that it remains within the scope of the committee's stated inquiry
17 and as he is here today in his official capacity. He will not be able to detail specific 18 identifying information of individuals correlated with the SAR or any other SARs. Any 19 other dissemination of this information outside of the committee is subject to the Bank
20 Secrecy Act's obligations concerning confidentiality.

21 Finally, we would like to request that Mr. Sullivan's name is redacted from any 22 public releases about this interview, including those that have already been released and 23 are currently posted online. He is a non-SES employee, and we ask the committee
24 respect longstanding practice to not publicly post non-SES names to protect line-level
25 employees from threats and other security concerns, which are acutely present here.

1 Thank you.

2 [REDACTED] The clock now reads 10:06 a.m. We'll start our first round of
3 questioning. I'll turn it over to my colleague, [REDACTED]

4 EXAMINATION

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q Mr. Sullivan, when did you first join the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

7 A In 1999.

8 Q And what was your key motivation for joining the FBI?

9 A Mostly because I wasn't good enough at baseball, but I wanted to -- I had a 10 family that had a law enforcement and a government service background, and it was one 11 that I wanted to participate in and contribute in any way I could.

12 Q And what is your current position at FBI?

13 A Currently, I'm an intelligence analyst in a Financial Targeting Analysis Unit.

14 Q And can you describe your roles and responsibilities in this position?

15 A In my current position, I'm on a leadership team to advance some of the 16 mission items with respect to financial targeting, terrorist financing, and leveraging 17 financial sector data internally for FBI investigations.

18 Q And can you elaborate a little more on what financial targeting and 19 leveraging financial data means?

20 A It's a very basic concept of financial targeting being -- narrowing the focus of 21 data to understand whether or not a threat exist, and then reactively using existing 22 intelligence or investigative activities that reveal something to a terrorist nexus to which,
23 you know, we examine further and support operations.

24 Q And, in your current role, is it limited to terrorist financing?

25 A It's limited to terrorism.

1 Q To terrorism. And do you work with private sector companies in the 2 current role?

3 A I do not. I work with my former unit. I work directly with them. It's the 4 Strategic Engagement Unit where I was the finance sector liaison for the division.

5 Q And can you describe the organizational structure of your office?

6 A Of my office? We fall under the Targeting Development Section. There 7 are many units that are basically set up for terrorism targeting as well as on the 8 counterterrorism analysis side all-source analysts. Within my unit, we're on the 9 Targeting Development Section side. So we support current investigations and look at 10 proactive information, various sources, tips, and leads to try to enhance whether or not 11 we should further pursue those targeting leads.

12 Q And you stated as a part of the Strategic Engagement Unit?

13 A Strategic Engagement Unit is in a separate section. They are in the 14 Engagement Section.

15 Q And so what section are you in?

16 A I'm in the Targeting Development Section.

17 Q Okay. And is that a part of a larger division?

18 A They're all part of the Counterterrorism Division.

19 Q Okay. And how is the information you receive ordinarily provided?

20 A In my current role or in the role that I had for today's proceedings?

21 Q In your current role.

22 A Information either is received through upper management. It could be 23 intel. It could be existing investigations, leads from existing investigations to which, you 24 know -- within our mission of targeting, we'll provide that support to the investigation or 25 development of the lead.

BY [REDACTED]

Q If I could, when did you leave the Strategic Partner Engagement Section?

A In December on paper. In January.

Q December of 2023?

A Yeah.

Q And then you moved over to become an intelligence analyst in January 2024.

Is that correct?

A Yeah. I was an intelligence analyst when I was a finance sector liaison in a supervisory capacity at the time of the Capitol riots.

10

Q And how long did you hold the position that you left in December 2023?

11

A I held it for 3 years.

12

Q Three years. And how many people did you supervise in that role?

13

A As part of the Strategic Engagement Unit?

14

15

A Yeah, two, over that time period.

16

Q And what were their titles?

17

A Supervisory special agent.

18

Q And can you tell us how the Strategic Engagement Section is organized?

19

A The Strategic Engagement Section -- it's the Strategic Partner Engagement

20

Section. They are organized as a ops support branch. They fall under the National

21

Joint Terrorism Task Force. It falls under the Strategic Partner Engagement Section as well as Strategic Engagement Unit. They have a couple of new units that they've developed, the Guardian Enhancement Unit. I believe they have two; one that's 24

22

23

CT-focused, and one that has, I think, terrorist links that also connect to other operational divisions.

1 Q And you focus on the financial sector. Is that correct?

2 A In my previous position in the Engagement Unit?

3 Q Correct.

4 A Yeah, so my job was to engage at the executive level with financial
5 institution.

6 Q And, when you say "executive level," what do you mean?

7 A It would be -- it would vary from in any supervisory capacity from senior vice 8 president to managing level director to BSA AML director.

9 Q And the two individuals that you supervised, did they work specifically with 10 the financial sector as well?

11 A They did.

12 Q And, within the Strategic Partner Engagement Section, were there
13 individuals who worked with other sectors?

14 A Yes, within our unit. So our unit, I was a finance sector liaison. I worked 15 with a number of financial institutions, banks and nonbank financial institutions. We 16 also within the unit covered the trucking and shipping sector, the tech sector, the 17 hospitality sector. We did also engaged with the retail sector.

18

BY [REDACTED]

19 Q And where is your duty station now?

20 A Headquarters.

21 Q And how often do you interact with the FBI Director?

22 A Very little. As my GS-15 position would -- is likely consistent with most 23 GS-15 positions. Very little.

24 Q How often do you interact with the FBI Deputy Director?

25 A I know the Deputy Director personally, but professionally, I interact with him

1 very little.

2 Q And do you interact with Main Justice often?

3 A Very little in my capacity of what we're talking about today within my 4 capacity as Strategic Engagement Unit. In prior capacity, I worked a little bit more with 5 Department of Justice reporting to White House National Security Council.

6 Q And, before we move on, can you walk us through the positions you've held
7 at the FBI?

8 A Sure. So, starting in 1999, 25 years, my first position was with the Special 9 Surveillance Group out of Washington Field Office. I worked counterterrorism and 10 foreign counter intelligence surveillance, all types of surveillance. I served on a special 11 recognizance team. We had -- WFO had number of high-profile investigations. I was 12 on the arrest team for the Russian spy Stanislav Gusev, who was listening in on State
13 Department meetings. I also served on the special recognizance team for evidence
14 recovery for the Robert Hanssen case as well as worked with a number of my colleagues
15 in WFO, because of my duties on the special recognizance team, recovering evidence at 16 the Pentagon after the 9/11.

17 Q And those were all in the surveillance roles that you mentioned?

18 A Yes. Correct.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q Okay.

21 A Correct. You want me to keep going in my career, or you asked me about 22 my career?

23 Q Yeah, the positions you've held?

24 A Yeah, so, following that surveillance, I became an intel analyst for the 25 Terrorist Financing Operation Section in roughly 2003, where I served in about four

1 different units covering operations, targeting, all-source analysts. I was -- I served on a
2 number of capacities dealing with other government agencies and access to different
3 financial platforms. And then I served on the Syria-Iraq Task Force as a supervisory 4 intelligence analyst. I believe I became a supervisor in 2009. The Bureau, I applied for 5 and was granted a sabbatical opportunity to get my master's degree in 2010. I did that,
6 and a year later came back into my role as a supervisory intel analyst at the Syria-Iraq
7 Task force. From there, I applied for and was promoted to my GS-15 position as the 8 Bureau's first deputy intel officer for threat finance for the Bureau of Intelligence Council, 9 where I worked various matters representing FBI executives at the White House National 10 Security Council, Office of Director of National Intelligence, as well as working with 11 section chief DAD and AD level for the operational divisions on policy, intelligence, and 12 operations matters that were related to finance. From there is when I returned back to 13 the Counterterrorism Division as I the Finance Sector Liaison in the summer of 2020.

14 Q And what is your formal education, training, or prior work experience just 15 formal education really?

16 A Yeah, so I mentioned my master's degree in strategic intelligence. I have 17 an undergrad. As far as -- do you want to know about training about other job training 18 or just academic?

19 Q Any other certifications?

20 A Yeah, so I'm an AKM certified. So that's an anti-money laundering
21 specialist. There are -- it's a pretty wide-scoped certification. And then over more 22 than half of my career spending it on finance-related side, just a number of financial 23 intelligence operations and compliance training, and just basically more -- some formal 24 and a lot of on-the-job training and a number of those positions that I discussed.

BY [REDACTED]

1 Q And, during your time at the Strategic Partner Engagement Section from the 2 summer of 2020 to December 2023, can you describe for us the reporting structure that
3 you followed? Did it change at all? Was it the same?

4 A What was the dates, again, I'm sorry?

5 Q You said you went back to the Strategic Engagement Section the summer of 6 2020 and then you left --

7 A Back to the division, yeah. Right. I never been in the Strategic 8 Engagement Unit until I returned in 2020.

9 Q In 2020. Okay. So, between 2020 and 2023, did you have the same
10 reporting structure?

11 A Yes.

12 Q And can you describe that reporting structure?

13 A I did have the same reporting structure to the unit chief position.

14 Q To the unit chief?

15 A Which was also a GS-15.

16 Q And the unit chief, they were they -- were they overall the whole Strategic 17 Partner Engagement Section or just specific to a unit?

18 A The unit fell under the section.

19 Q Okay?

20 A So that would be a subset. Every unit is a subset of a section at 21 headquarters.

22 Q So you reported to the unit chief, and then there was someone above the 23 unit chief?

24 A Section chief.

25 Q Who was that -- the section chief. And then who did the section chief

1 report to?

2 A Up to the Deputy Assistant Director.

3 Q The Deputy Assistant Director of the Counterterrorism Division?

4 A Correct. Yes.

5 Q Okay. And who --

6 A One of three Deputy Assistant Directors.

7 Q And who was the Deputy Assistant Director at the time?

8 A I believe it was Kevin Vorndran.

9 Q Kevin Vorndran. And then --

10 A And you say at the time of when I was hired?

11 Q At the time, did it change at all between 2020 and 2023?

12 A Yeah, I mean headquarters management changed. It was all the time.

13 Q But would you say you mainly the Deputy Assistant Director at the time was 14 Kevin Vorndran?

15 A At this the of the Capitol riots, yeah, absolutely.

16 Q And the Assistant Director at the time was who?

17 A Was at the Tim Langan. Tim Langan.

18 If my memory serves, I believe it was Tim Langan. I served three ADs, so -- in the 19 Counterterrorism Division, and many others in other divisions.

20 BY [REDACTED]

21 Q In that role, what was the mission of that, if you remember that?

22 A To engage with the private sector on all things law enforcement-related.

23 The banks and nonbank financial institutions all had BSA obligations to report suspicious

24 activity as well as understand how to do better due diligence when it comes to various

25 threats, but certainly within our role in Counterterrorism Division concentrate focusing on

1 terrorism.

2 Q And, as the financial sector liaison, can you talk through some of your
3 general duties and responsibilities?

4 A Yeah, on a daily and weekly basis, to engage with executives at various 5 institutions. Most of the engagement went primarily by volume of the financial 6 institution and what they took on in terms of the volume of threats that they were trying 7 to cover down on. But it could go all the way down to, you know, a nonbank financial 8 institution as a fintech company that had proprietary data, and they also had BSA
9 reporting obligations. And they would be looking to participate in information exchange
10 on threats, on typologies, on indicators, on that type of thing. And that's what our team
11 would take in -- was responsible for taking in tips and leads. Oftentimes, because of SAR
12 reporting thresholds, oftentimes they came in the form of a SAR. Other times, that 13 engagement was reactive, meaning the Bureau, my unit, myself or someone on my team
14 had, you know, a legal process, such as a grand jury subpoena, that they wanted 15 expedited on a priority investigation.

16 Q And why does your division reach out to the private sector?

17 A Actually, out of all the operational divisions, they all have an element that 18 has an engagement responsibility with the private sector and partnerships in general.
19 It's one of Director Wray's pillars, his partnerships. In the Counterterrorism Division, 20 under the national security lens, we've actually done a very good job at formalizing that 21 engagement based off of the threat-based threats that we cover on the national security
22 side. So that engagement -- you know, our authorities to engage spreads across all the 23 operational divisions. But, in the Counterterrorism Division, it's definitely more 24 formalized. And we've codified that, I believe, in 2019 before I came to the section.

25 Q And are there other industries besides financial institutions that --

1 A Yeah, the different sectors that I mentioned previously.

2 Q Okay. And how do you manage your outreach and your relationships with 3 the private sector?

4 A It's really about, you know, engagement at the supervisory and executive 5 level. You're dealing with information and brainstorming that obviously your 6 counterpart has many other people under them that have BSA reporting thresholds.
7 They have due diligence reporting requirements. They have their own internal audits,
8 right, that they deal with. That engagement is daily on interacting of what the threat is 9 as well as brainstorming with the institutions. I also set up briefings for the institutions
10 to bring in subject-matter experts when I as a generalist wouldn't be able to brief them
11 on a specific type of terrorist threat. I wasn't an all-source analyst. So my job was to 12 bring in the right folks and facilitate that engagement.

13 Q And how do you decide who to reach out to or who to partner with?

14 A So, when I came into the division, you know, my previous experience as a 15 line analyst in the Terrorist Financing Operation Section, there were a number of legacy
16 partnerships. Most of those were very -- are anchored in those legacy partnerships with 17 the large financial institutions. So that engagement had been codified before I came 18 back into the unit. And I was actually recruited to come into that position because the 19 GS-15 that had that position that was appointed by Director Mueller specifically had 20 passed away of a heart attack. And I was recruited to come back from my position as an 21 intel officer to take on that role.

22 Q When you say that these relationships were codified or formalized, what do 23 you mean by that?

24 A Just internally as far as, you know, even though all of the operational 25 divisions don't -- aren't required to have a codified relationship, I think because of the

1 legacy partnerships that were anchored in that engagement since 9/11. There were 2 various programs and initiatives that supported operations and that also supported
3 compliance reporting obligations by the institution that the Bureau supported. And so 4 there was so much engagement that we felt like, at the division level, that we wanted to 5 formalize that.

6 Q And do you have to receive approval before reaching out to an entity in the 7 private sector or an individual in the private sector?

8 A No.

9 Q Are there any formal procedures or guidelines that you all followed in 10 dealing with the private sector?

11 A Like what?

12 Q Manuals, guidance, training?

13 A No, I mean, I think that, in terms of engagement and what my role was 14 engaging with executives, there was certainly compliance assumptions in terms of legal 15 process and lawful regulatory allowances, whether it was SARs or grand jury subpoenas,
16 on either side of the fence. There was a management level that had that understanding.
17 So, in terms of a manual, there was no manual -- we didn't need a manual because of the 18 experience on both sides of that engagement.

19 [REDACTED] But general policies --

20 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah, FBI policies applied broadly, right, with that engagement.

21 But, in terms of, you know, FBI and DOJ authorities, that's what permitted me to engage 22 on a regular basis.

23 BY [REDACTED]

24 Q And how is your relationship with financial institutions important?

25 A Partnerships in general. But certainly my role as the finance sector liaison,

1 finance and financial information plays a huge role in understanding whether or not we 2 need to assess a specific threat or finding out more information to support an 3 investigation. It's one of many different information areas of need, right, when you're 4 supporting operations or any investigation. But finance is a very deliberate piece of 5 information. Communications intelligence and other things that are gathered within the 6 investigation are all critical. Finance is just one piece of that critical evidence or
7 information.

8 Q And how would you describe your relationship with the private sector in 9 general, the FBI?

10 A I mean, in short term, great. The relationship was very professional.
11 There was never any misunderstandings about -- day-to-day or weekly things were 12 quickly taken care of, I think due to the experience on both sides of the coin, that 13 engagement either from me to an executive or to a supervisor that was supervising, you 14 know, supervising specific analysts within the bank that we're looking at, say, ISIS or 15 al-Qaida or another threat.

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q And, in your role as financial sector liaison, did you share information with 18 members of the private sector?

19 A Oh, absolutely, yeah. Anything at the unclassified level, we shared on a 20 regular basis. If -- we also shared information in briefings to include case successes, 21 cases that were adjudicated, fully adjudicated in unclassified briefings to investigators as 22 almost a training and also a morale booster for investigators that do a lot of hard work
23 pushing out SARs or setting up alerts and doing a lot of analysis. There is plenty of other 24 information that, you know, we share on a regular basis that is unclassified. However,
25 we also invite financial institution senior executives to an annual counterterrorism

1 conference where they're read in to a briefing to receive classified information so that
2 they can get a context of how to better tackle a threat. So that relationship is very, very
3 unique and critical to the various assistant directors I've fallen under. And, of course,
4 Director Wray holds the Counterterrorism Division as one of the positive partnership
5 engagement.

6 Q And so what sorts of materials are you sharing with the private sector?

7 A It could be information that's approved by the case agent and the program
8 manager at headquarters at the unclassified level. It could be PII. It could be grand
9 jury subpoena, soft copies in order to expedite subpoena on a priority investigation. It
10 could be information about a threat, right. Again, going back to giving briefings or just 11 brainstorming on information that I've seen either through our all-source analyst section 12 that's been downgraded to unclassified or discussions with our targeters that are seeing 13 trends in specific data that we might be able to share. So it's a lot of different 14 information. But mostly at the unclassified level.

15 Q Yeah, and are they liaison information reports? What is the name of the 16 documents, and what medium are they sharing?

17 A If it's downgraded to unclass and shareable, if it's an actual production, 18 that's something that our unit will receive from the analytic section or the Office of 19 Private Sector. Usually, it's only finished production that we would share in that case.
20 But I am addressing your LIR issue. But there are plenty of other unclassified, you know, 21 pieces of information that we would also share.

22 Q Is that ordinarily shared via email or another medium?

23 A Typically email. Typically email.

24 Q Directly to an executive at a financial institution?

25 A Or it could be briefed orally over, you know, like a Teams briefing or

1 something like that.

2 Q Do you have to get approval prior to sharing those materials?

3 A Only approval in a sense of typically our upper management would say,
4 this is -- if it's a finished production, finished intelligence production, we typically would 5 get it from either our unit chief or our section chief and say, "Feel free to share it with 6 your partners."

7 Q Okay. And does the private sector regularly share information with you?

8 A Yes.

9 Q Outside of the Bank Secrecy Act space, do they share other kinds of
10 materials?

11 A I don't really understand the question.

12 Q Do they share PowerPoints? Do they share documents?

13 A Yeah, I don't know that that would be outside their BSA requirements.

14 Q So they only would share things that are pursuant to the Bank Secrecy Act?

15 A Well, BSA data, in general, is, you know, it requires the financial institutions
16 to obligate to share suspicious activity and other information. So, within those kind of 17 broad -- that broad scope, I would say it's all generally within BSA.

18 Q Okay. And what medium is that information normally shared?

19 A BSA data, it would be due the FinCEN portal -- or once SAR is published, it 20 may be through an email -- a secure email portal.

21 Q And, once it's received, how is it stored within the Bureau?

22 A Once it's received, typically the unit, depending on what we review -- first of 23 all, we review the information that we receive from them every time as we're receiving it
24 from an executive level. You have to understand that there are like 5 million SARs that 25 are published a year. So, if I am receiving, say, give or take, a hundred SARs in a given

1 year, I'm receiving a handpicked SAR from an executive at a financial institution that 2 thinks that it might be worthy of taking a look at. There is no understanding by the 3 institution that that would require us to open an investigation. But the fact that the 4 executive is highlighting that is enough for me to say, "Yeah, I'm going to review what you
5 send me," and then further assess does this need to be looked at further.

6 Q So, within that universe of 5 million SARs, you said you get a hundred or so,
7 we'll say. So there are SARs that are filed in the FinCEN portal, and then there are SARs 8 that are sent directly to you from an executive?

9 A All of the SARs that are sent to me are already published in the FinCEN
10 portal.

11 Q So, in addition to sending them in the portal, it may be sent to you?

12 A Might be. A number of times within my role at the time, there would be 13 occasions where they would just give me the BSA ID, and then one of our analysts on our 14 time would retrieve that with from the FinCEN portal. Or we have a SIPRNet access to 15 SARs that the Bureau intakes that will take a look at it that way.

16 Q And why would they ordinarily send it in addition to filing it in the portal to 17 you or someone on your team?

18 A If they thought that it was worthy of taking -- for me or someone on my 19 team to take a review, they may send it once it's published by the institution into the 20 FinCEN portal.

21 Chairman Jordan. And who makes the determination whether it gets to you?
22 Is it the executive at the bank or is it someone in the FBI who is screening them all and 23 then -- or could it be both?

24 Mr. Sullivan. No, it's generally the executive at the bank or the supervisor.

25 Chairman Jordan. So they have to -- according to the Bank Secrecy Act, they

1 have to time some -- they file these SARs, and it goes into this portal. And then they
2 said, "These 5 million we filed, I think this is important enough" -- that they are going to 3 alert you to it.

4 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah, I mean, when I say 5 million, that's across all financial
5 institutions.

6 Chairman Jordan. I understand.

7 Mr. Sullivan. So that would be kind of the strategic picture of the volume of it.
8 But, within the line-item SARs that are sent to my attention, it's because they think that it
9 either could have a potential terrorist nexus or, a number of the executives that I've dealt 10 with, because we had a very robust program and engaging with the private sector.
11 Oftentimes, they may -- the information that they would share may be involved in 12 nonterrorist issues, and they knew that we had good cross-divisional communication with 13 our other operational divisions, whether it be the Criminal Investigative Division, Cyber 14 Division, or WMDD, or, in rare cases, counterintelligence. So, if we felt after reviewing 15 the information that would be relevant to one of the other operational divisions, that 16 trust with the executives and the executives that I was engaging with at the time knew 17 that I would find the right home for it to put it in front of whatever investigator or 18 supervisor should take a look and determine at that point if it warranted further 19 investigative review.

20 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

21

BY [REDACTED]

22 Q And so, once you receive one and you start that review process, what does 23 that review look like?

24 A Just reviewing -- I mean, primarily reviewing the SAR narrative, which is at 25 the conclusion of the end of the SAR; making sure that I understand the suspicious

1 activity; the information that's being communicated, if I have any questions in my mind
2 about that, I may request the supporting documentation. If, in fact, it came with the 3 SAR, or it was listed in the narrative that there's supporting documentation for it, I would
4 request that. If I still had questions, then I may ask the question again. That was kind
5 of a critical first review piece before I determined whether or not we were going to take a
6 further look at it and either assign it to the SSA that was working for me at the time or an 7 analyst on our team.

8 Q What is supporting documentation?

9 A Supporting documentation may or may not be included referenced in a SAR.
10 Typically it's referenced within the narrative that supporting documentation exists. It 11 could be, you know, every -- you know, the scope of supporting documentation could be 12 very informal research or screen shots of data that they were looking at that helped them
13 formulate the SAR narrative and actually published the SAR. So it could be a Word doc.
14 It could be an Excel spreadsheet. It could be just various, you know, very open-sourced 15 intelligence type of things that the bank would have access to. Oftentimes, you know,
16 screen shots of, you know, commercial software that they used in order to do better due 17 diligence on the thing that they were investigating.

18 Q Does it often include customer names or just the customer transactions?

19 A Sometimes. Not all the time.

20 Q Okay. Do you interact often with the Office of Private Sector?

21 A Often, I interact with them. What would you consider often?

22 Q Well, why don't you tell me? How often do you interact with them?

23 A In my role at the time?

24 Q Yeah.

25 A Probably once a quarter, roughly. So four times a year -- I'm

1 generalizing -- maybe more. Maybe eight. It might be four.

2 Q As the financial sector liaison, how are the responsibilities that you had
3 similar or different to the role of the Office of Private Sector?

4 A Yeah, so the Office of Private Sector, they have more of an overarching
5 engagement role to the private sector. There -- think of them -- I generalize here, but 6 Office of Private Sector would be more of the C-suite engagement at kind of the 7 wide-scoped C-suite engagement kind of level. We do a lot of information sharing that 8 reaches unclass levels. You mentioned LIR, and you mentioned LIR. There are a 9 number of things that they would share from OPS whereas, at the Counterterrorism
10 Division level and other operational divisions, that engagement is to support operations.
11 So that engagement is direct to support operations and to share information on the 12 threat.

13 Q So you would say your work is more granular?

14 A Yeah, I mean, in a general sense, you could say that, but the Office of Private 15 Sector's work is no less important than ours. It just serves a different function.

17

BY [REDACTED]

18 Q And when did your engagement with the FBI's investigation into the events
19 that occurred at the Capitol on January 6th, 2021, begin?

20 A I couldn't tell you the exact time, but it was immediately after the Capitol
21 riots.

22 Q And how did that engagement start?

23 A It just -- after the Capitol riots happened, there were -- obviously, there was 24 a large number of individuals that took part in violent, criminal behavior, and that, within 25 the first 24 hours -- and I'm generalizing here -- I believe that the Counterterrorism

1 Division had taken the lead knowing that there was some suspicion of domestic violent
2 extremist activity -- obviously not limited to that because there was other criminal
3 behavior. In that whole Capitol riots investigation, there were a lot of people there that
4 day. So the Counterterrorism Division started to get leads in on, you know, perpetrators
5 of the criminal behavior of the violent criminal behavior.

6 Q And which division did you have an understanding was leading the FBI's
7 investigation into the January 6th matter?

8 A I mean, there was a general sense -- at my level, there was a general sense
9 that the Counterterrorism Division would play at least a lead role at the time of the outset
10 of it. But, again, you know, oftentimes, you can see that there are, you know, violent
11 attacks that weren't maybe as large as the Capitol riots that turn into, say, like a Criminal 12 Division investigation. And it would remain with a Criminal Division, you know, squad in 13 the field depending on where the threat emanated from. So, in this particular case, we 14 knew Counterterrorism Division was at least one of, if not the lead, in the Capitol riots
15 investigation.

16 Q During your engagement on the January 6th investigation, did you interact 17 with the Washington Field Office at all?

18 A I did, not at the onset. I believe probably within the first 2 weeks. I don't 19 think we -- I don't think I interacted with the Washington Field Office in the first 2 or 20 3 days. But, again, it's possible I did, but you have to remember that, hours after and 21 then a day after and 2 days after, Counterterrorism Division is being flooded with leads,
22 tips and leads, calls with financial institutions. They want to know what's going on. So 23 there was a lot of triaging, as you might imagine, that happens on large events like that.
24 So it's possible I could have spoken to them within the first few days, but I believe that I 25 spoke to them probably like more like 2 weeks after.

1 Q And what was your specific role in the investigation? Were you tasked with 2 doing anything?

3 A No, just to receive information, triage information, review information that
4 internally that we were receiving on investigations, determining what deserved priority,
5 what we should be sharing with the institutions versus, you know, some of the internal 6 communication that our unit would be doing with the other operational units.

7 Q And when did you start sharing information with financial institutions?

8 A Well, I believe the -- I believe the first -- I believe this is the case that the 9 Financial Crimes Enforcement Network the Friday after the Capitol riots asked
10 Counterterrorism Division to jump on a call with them on Friday afternoon. It was an ad
11 hoc meeting. And I was told by my upper management to represent Counterterrorism
12 Division on the call.

13 Q And your upper management being which title or which role was that 14 individual?

15 A Unit chief and section chief.

16 Q And you were to represent the whole Counterterrorism Division on that call.
17 Is that correct?

18 A Yeah. That was my understanding, yes.

19 Q Okay.

20 [REDACTED] Following the events at the Capitol on January 6th, are you aware 21 of communications between FBI and Bank of America?

22 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

23 [REDACTED] I would now like to enter in two emails from Peter Sullivan to 24 Bank of America, both dated January 15th, 2021, with the subject line, "Upcoming SAR 25 product idea/brainstorming and check-in with you both" into the record as exhibit 1.

1 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 1.

2 Was marked for identification.]

3 [REDACTED] Can you confirm that you sent these emails?

4 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

5 [REDACTED] I will just note for the record that these documents were produced
6 to the committee from Bank of America. And you will see at the bottom the Bates
7 stamp indicate that it came from Bank of America. I just wanted to make sure you knew 8 where there was coming from, but please take a moment to review.

9 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah. I'm familiar.

10 BY [REDACTED]

11 Q Is this the first email correspondence you had with Bank of America directly 12 following January 6th?

13 A I don't know if it was the first, but it's certainly -- on the 15th. I don't know
14 if it was the first. I would be surprised if it was the first, but I also wouldn't be surprised
15 if it was the first. Because I spoke with a lot of financial institutions this week, the week
16 following, and the weeks following that. But this is my email to them for sure. Both.

17 Q The second email states that you and Bank of America had a phone call 18 before you sent the email. Do you remember that phone call?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And?

21 A I had two phone calls actually. So there was a phone call that occurred
22 before, before the email on the 15th and then a phone call that occurred before the email
23 on the 15th that went out at 12:40, the second one that you showed me.

24 Q And what did you discuss on those calls?

25 A The Bank of America representative who I knew who I knew was on the

1 FinCEN call that was invited by FinCEN to participate in a Friday call were not the two
2 people that that individual wanted me to speak with. It was my understanding, through 3 the phone call, before this email that that individual from Bank of America who has also 4 held a supervisory role wanted me to get with the two individuals on the email that I sent 5 at 9:56 on the 15th.

6 Q And so, on the second phone call, what was discussed?

7 A A lot of what you see in the email was discussed. A lot of what you see in 8 the email, I can't say exclusively, is what I discussed on the FinCEN call, the Friday before.
9 But a lot of the fact-based pattern indicators where FinCEN asked us to discuss different 10 fact-based patterns that would help institutions look at their data, review their data for 11 anything worth things that would help the institutions understand if they had any threats
12 that may help cover down on the threat to Inauguration Day.

13 Q So you reached out to these two individuals from Bank of America as a result
14 of a Bank of America individual on the FinCEN call reaching out to you?

15 A Say that again, I'm sorry?

16 Q Well, I'm trying to follow, when you reached out to Bank of America on the 17 first email, why did you reach out to them?

18 A Because of the phone call that I had with one of the two individuals on the 19 attention line, the one I sent on 9:56 a.m., she was privy to getting a heads up from the 20 individual that was on the FinCEN call the Friday before that FinCEN asked me to jump on.
21 And that discussion was, "Yeah, let's touch base." So this was me following up that 22 phone call and touching base.

23 Q And that --

24 A And, adding other executive onto the email, which was also discussed on the 25 phone call.

1 Q And she was privy to what?

2 A The fact that one of her colleagues at --

3 Q Bank of America?

4 A Yes. One of her colleagues at Bank of America had sat in on the financial 5 crimes enforcement call to discuss the threat to Inauguration Day.

BY [REDACTED]

7 Q When you say do you have time this morning to discuss SARs and a couple of 8 ideas, what did you mean by a couple ideas?

9 A That would just be me informally just saying, you know, brainstorming,
10 which I often did with all financial institutions.

11 Q You said brainstorming. Is that correct?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And, when you were brainstorming, was that information you could share 14 with Bank of America, or was that information that Bank of America can share with the 15 FBI?

16 A Yeah, and any time that we would be brainstorming over the phone or on a
17 Teams call or any other medium, it would be unclassified information that I could share
18 with them.

19 Q Okay. So, when you said you have couple of ideas, that was information
20 going to Bank of America, in your mind?

21 A Yeah, just to talk about the threat.

22 Chairman Jordan. Do you know what the subject line means? You say,
23 "Upcoming SAR product idea/brainstorming and check-in with you both." Were you
24 suggesting to them information that you wanted from them?

25 Mr. Sullivan. No, I mean, if anything, oftentimes, you know, unlike the other

1 set -- there were a lot of other sectors that don't have SAR provisions as part of their
2 regulatory regime. So, oftentimes, I may say SAR product idea because I know that's 3 primarily what medium they would have if they found something that met a SAR
4 threshold, it would be a SAR. It wouldn't be something else. In other words, for this
5 particular email, the discussion wasn't going to discuss -- which I sent various other emails 6 that actually discussed this, would be expediting subpoenas or something that was on the 7 proactive side from the Bureau trying to get information that was also through a lawful 8 purpose. In this particular case, because I work with all banks and all nonbank financial 9 institutions that have SAR reporting obligations, this is just me generalizing in terms of 10 what may come if, in fact, they met SAR thresholds for those brainstorming. If they 11 didn't, then I wouldn't get a SAR.

12 Chairman Jordan. Maybe I don't fully appreciate -- understand how SAR works 13 then. The banks are required to give certain information, SARs, is the, you know, how 14 it's done is my understanding. So you said earlier there are millions sent to whatever 15 number you use, some number, sent to the government.

16 Mr. Sullivan. FinCEN.

17 Chairman Jordan. FinCEN. But I guess when I read this subject line, it's almost 18 like you're saying, "Hey, this is information, or this is the kind of SAR." -- I am just not 19 fully understanding this subject line. Because it looks like you are the one trying to 20 initiate what should go in this and when this report should come.

21 Mr. Sullivan. No.

22 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

23 Mr. Sullivan. No. I mean, if a SAR came from it, again, I would go back to -- you
24 know, my engagement was not just with Bank of America. My engagement was with all 25 finance sector. And so that covered banks, fintech, it covered neo banks,

1 cryptocurrency, I mean, you name it.

2 Chairman Jordan. So what does that mean, "Upcoming SAR product idea"?
3 What was the idea that you shared with.

4 Mr. Sullivan. No, I think, in general, institutions on the call, FinCEN relayed, you
5 know, the Bureau could potentially assist in helping the financial institutions understand
6 how to look at that threat. Obviously, with the Capitol riots, when you look at it from an 7 event and from a crime scene, obviously, there are a lot of lawful citizens there to 8 participate, and there are a lot of people that participated in criminal violent activity.
9 So, from a kind of a larger investigation standpoint, knowing on the FinCEN call what was 10 specifically discussed was FinCEN wanted the institutions to hear how might they go 11 about understanding what the potential threat to Inauguration Day was.

12

BY [REDACTED]

13 Q And, if you flip to next page of exhibit 1, there is that followup email that 14 we've discussed that looks like you sent this first email, you had a call, and then you sent 15 this followup email that identified threshold. Were these thresholds discussed on the 16 call?

17 A On the call, and many of these were discussed on the FinCEN call.

18 Q And who came up with these thresholds?

19 A I mean, I certainly came up with some of the thresholds in terms of 20 fact-based patterns that would help them narrow their focus. Meaning, in and of 21 themselves, none of these indicators were discussed either on the FinCEN call or my 22 followup calls with Bank of America or any other institution, that, in and of themselves,
23 they could put, you know, they could narrow their focus by just one of those indicators.
24 It was specifically discussed that these fact-based patterns would be looked at collectively 25 in order for the institutions to actually find out whether or not they can narrow their

1 focus enough.

2 Q And so did all of the thresholds that were mentioned here in the bullet
3 points, did those all have to be met, or was it just one?

4 A That was the assumption. How the bank, however, whether or not they 5 felt they met threshold for SARs, that would be exclusively up to them.

6 Q So do you know how Bank of America interpreted these thresholds? Was it
7 all of these thresholds had to be met or just one?

8 A That was my understanding.

9 Q It was your understanding that Bank of America thought all of these 10 thresholds had to be met in order for someone to be included in the SAR?

11 A In order for them to narrow their focus or to understand whether or not that 12 focus with all factors present, along with any other activities they saw, right, because we 13 don't have access to their duty, if collectively those met SAR thresholds, then I knew that 14 potentially I would get that in the form of a SAR because financial institutions have BSA
15 SAR reporting thresholds that they can use.

16 Q So it's your understanding that Bank of America, in looking through their 17 customer data, would have to with look to see whether purchases were made in the 18 Washington, D.C., area between the 5th and the 6th and then, subsequent to that,
19 reservations were made at a hotel or Airbnb for the day before or during the 20 inauguration, just to name the first few.

21 [REDACTED] I'm sorry; are you asking his understanding or Bank of America's 22 understanding of it?

23 BY [REDACTED]

24 Q His understanding, and then we can take it both.

25 A Yes.

1 Q So that was your understanding. And do you know if Bank of America
2 understood it that way?

3 A I assume they did because I discussed -- I had frequent interaction with both 4 individuals that I was on the call with.

5 Q And then, looking at the SAR that Bank of America filed with FinCEN and 6 others -- there's other emails I am sure we'll get into in a later hour where they send the 7 filing to you, did you look at that filing?

8 A Once it was published to FinCEN, I believe I did receive it in the secure email
9 portal, yes.

10 Q And did Bank of America's production of the SAR and information that was in 11 the SAR, did it correlate with these thresholds?

12 A It did.

13 Q And it correlated with the understanding that all of the thresholds needed to 14 be met?

15 A That's the way that I read the SAR narrative.

16 Q Okay.

17 Chairman Jordan. Do you recall how many individuals then were identified in 18 that SAR?

19 Mr. Sullivan. My recollection is that there were 211 individuals that met the 20 three thresholds that you can see within the email.

21 Chairman Jordan. So, backing up, when you said, the subject line both in this 22 email and the prior email, "Upcoming SAR production idea," then the production idea was 23 you produce a SAR if these three elements are met. Is that fair?

24 Mr. Sullivan. When you say "production idea," I mean, again, this is me -- that 25 subject line is a generalization of what I brainstorm and share information and concepts

1 with financial institutions all the time.

2 Chairman Jordan. So it's a subject line you use all the time?

3 Mr. Sullivan. I mean, it would be similar to a subject line that I might use for --

4 Chairman Jordan. Fair enough, but I guess I'm asking --

5 Mr. Sullivan. -- it, but the Capitol riots is a very unique situation, so, but I can't --

6 Chairman Jordan. Fair enough. But I'm asking -- you said, you recommended
7 like produce a SAR that has these -- if anyone -- the individual with these three elements
8 would be in a suspicious activity report that you would send to the government?

1 [11:00 a.m.]

2 Mr. Sullivan. I didn't say it produced a SAR, if that's what you're inferring. I
3 didn't tell the bank to produce a SAR. And they know that I would never tell them to 4 produce a SAR either.

5 Chairman Jordan. Okay, fine. I just want to make sure I understand.
6 Upcoming SAR product --

7 Mr. Sullivan. Uh-huh.

8 Chairman Jordan. -- and then you outlined three criteria that should be met, and 9 if so, you received a SAR that identified 211 people. That's what happened, right?

10 Mr. Sullivan. I received a SAR that had 211 individuals that met the three 11 fact-based patterns that --

12 Chairman Jordan. That you outlined to the bank?

13 Mr. Sullivan. That I discussed with the bank.

14 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

15 [REDACTED] And with the 211 --

16 Mr. Sullivan. This wasn't a one-way conversation. Sorry. I want to make that 17 clear. It was never a one-way conversation in any capacity when I discussed these types
18 of brainstorming ideas after a threat occurred with not just Bank of America, but any 19 institution.

20 Chairman Jordan. Understand. But you sent this email to Bank of America with 21 the subject line we've now discussed at length, with these three criteria having to be met,
22 and then subsequent to that, you received a SAR with 211 Americans' names on it that 23 met those three criteria?

24 Mr. Sullivan. That met those three criteria, correct.

25 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Q And once the FBI received the SAR after it was posted on the FinCEN portal and it identified the 211 individuals that met the thresholds, what did the FBI do with that information?

A So I reviewed the SAR first. I reviewed the narrative. I verified that the fact-based patterns were present, and I did -- either I requested or I was able to get the supporting documentation once the SAR was published, so that I could see how they pieced out. I don't know if you guys have read the -- if you've read the SAR. My understanding is that you have.

10

12

13

14

15

17

A To understand, within -- they had tabs within the supporting documentation. So I wanted to make sure that I understood the SAR narrative and the supporting documentation, because once I review the SAR narrative in its entirety, I knew at a minimum -- again, at a minimum -- there was a question that I needed to ask regarding one of the fact-based patterns that I wanted headquarters to be able to -- my office to then further review and determine if there was an assessment that we needed to push out to respective field offices.

18

Q And what was that question that you needed answered?

19

21

22

24

A I called Bank of America and I wanted to understand, within the fact-based patterns that they had down as weapons purchases since July, I wanted to know, of the fact-based patterns that were met, which of those weapons purchases were -- and, again, I can't stress this enough, weapons-related transactions -- which of those transactions, from a data standpoint, was made after the Capitol riots, after Jan. 6th and before what would be inauguration day and beyond.

25

So once I received the clarification on the supporting documentation within those

1 211 customers, I was -- I received the information that four individuals of the 211 met
2 that threshold that made weapons-related transactions after the 6th.

3 And so I remember going to my supervisor and saying, we should push out these 4 four, do baseline queries of these four, which are basic criminal background queries, and
5 push out via assessment -- it's called a Guardian. A Guardian is a no-stone-unturned
6 assessment. It's not an investigation. But we pushed those four guardians out to 7 three field offices, respectively.

8 Q And do you remember what field offices those were?

9 A Memphis, San Francisco, and Tampa.

10 Q And with the other, you know, 211 individuals as a whole, what action did
11 the FBI take on that information beyond just requesting information on firearm purchases 12 after the 6th?

13 A I can only speak generally --

14 Q Okay.

15 A -- to your question. I know that the information -- the four Guardians that 16 we did to three field offices, once the Guardians went out, we uploaded the four 17 Guardian references to what's called electronic communication, and that electronic 18 communication also included the case file for our internal unit, as well as the WFO case
19 file on the Capitol riots because Washington Field Office had the lead on the Capitol riots 20 investigation. And it's practice that if your Guardians that you're pushing out, either at 21 the headquarters level or at the field office level, that you would include a case file that's 22 related or linked to an open investigation. In this case, WFO had the case file, so we 23 uploaded the four Guardians in reference to the SAR for Washington Field Office.

24 From there, I know Washington Field Office had a number of leads that were sent.
25 I can't speak to the decisionmaking in those leads, and so you would have to ask

1 Washington Field Office about those.

2 There were a number of -- so ours, to be clear, ours was the four Guardians, and
3 there were a number of leads and a handful of Guardians that also went out that my unit
4 did not handle.

5 [REDACTED] Did you know that at the time?

6 Mr. Sullivan. No, I did not.

7 [REDACTED] We're at our hour, so we'll go off the record.

8 [Recess.]

9 [REDACTED] Okay. We can go back on the record.

11

BY [REDACTED]

12 Q Mr. Sullivan, thanks again for appearing here today. I'm going to step back 13 and ask some pretty general background questions.

14 You have been with the FBI for 25 years now?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And have you received any awards or recognition during your service?

17 A Yeah, many awards, time-off awards, of course, for priority foreign 18 counterintelligence investigations, including Robert Hanssen, the Stanislav Gusev case,
19 the Russian spy case, Anwar Awlaki. And I was nominated for the Director's Award. I 20 didn't receive it, but I was nominated in 2008 for a Southeast Asia case linked to a San 21 Jose material support sibling that was sending money over to his then famous 22 bomb-making brother over in the Philippines.

23 Q And when you say "material support," you mean material support for 24 terrorism?

25 A Correct.

1 Q That's the shorthand?

2 A Correct. And just, you know, other -- I did receive a Mission Integration
3 Award from the Office of Director of National Intelligence prior to returning back to 4 Counterterrorism Division and my role for the Strategic Engagement Unit.

5 Q And what was that award for?

6 A That was for mission integration. I took the lead, with other three-letter 7 agencies, to help enhance the policy and the intelligence footprint on a specific type of 8 national security threat.

9 Q I believe you stated in the earlier hour that you've worked about half of your 10 25-year career in the field of financial intelligence, correct?

11 A Yes.

12 Q Can you describe what that means exactly, what intelligence means,
13 generally and specifically, what financial intelligence means?

14 A Sure. I mean, intelligence drives operations. You know, the FBI receives
15 over half of its tips and leads from private sector and foreign partners. And intelligence
16 comes in various forms. It's not just one type. There are several intelligence
17 disciplines where we receive intelligence. There's also tactical and operational
18 intelligence that a tactical analyst or an investigator, FBI agent, would get through, you 19 know, various means, whether commercial databases.

20 In the intelligence realm that I worked in, you know, of course there's the 21 classified intelligence you're getting from other collection platforms within the intel
22 community and the law enforcement community, law enforcement sensitive level. And 23 integrating that intelligence is what continues to drive and support operations, certainly 24 within the threats.

25 Primarily, my career has been in the Counterterrorism Division, so it's been for

1 supporting terrorist threats and terrorist operations and covering down on those, but not 2 limited to that.

3 Q Can you explain how specifically financial intelligence helps in 4 counterterrorism efforts? How does it help keep Americans safe?

5 A Yeah. I mean, it's one of many different aspects of how a terrorist might 6 acquire, move, store money in order to carry out an attack. And in another tactical very 7 basic sense, financial intelligence can illuminate a lot of deliberate information where that 8 person pattern -- it could tell pattern of life. It could understand, you know,
9 transactions that could indicate potential violent activity. It could highlight how a 10 terrorist might, you know, move their money in order to, you know, to support their daily 11 expense.

12 If you're looking at a network, finances can tell a lot about who's connected to 13 that network. But it's one of many. It's just -- but I believe it remains a critical piece of 14 looking at terrorism.

15 Q And is it fair to say that one of the critical pieces of that is that financial 16 intelligence can help you identify who might be a terrorist, whether it's an international 17 or domestic terrorist --

18 A Yes.

19 Q -- based on the nature of their purchases --

20 A Absolutely.

21 Q -- or their activities?

22 So I want to step back a minute and just talk about the FBI's mission generally.

23 The primary mission of the FBI is to protect the American people and uphold the 24 Constitution of the United States. Is that correct?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And protecting the United States from terrorist attacks is the top priority of
2 the FBI?

3 A Yes.

4 Q And does that include attacks by domestic terrorists?

5 A Yes.

6 Q And so the counterterrorism work of the FBI is really fundamental to what 7 the FBI is here to do in the United States, to protect Americans and keep us safe?

8 A Absolutely.

9 Q Are you familiar with the term "domestic violent extremism"?

10 A Yes.

11 Q Okay. And that's often abbreviated as DVE?

12 A Uh-huh. Yes.

13 Q And I believe you mentioned that earlier. So any time I use that phrase, 14 that's what I'm referring to.

15 A Okay.

16 Q Are you familiar with how the FBI defines domestic violent extremism?
17 How do you define it?

18 A Yeah. Generally, it's a terrorist that, basically, that has to satisfy three 19 different caveats. It would be that there is the -- some sort of ideology -- terrorist 20 ideology involved, that there's a violent aspect that's involved or an intent to use 21 violence, and that there's some sort of criminal activity present, obviously terrorist or 22 otherwise.

23 Q And so when you say there's an ideological component, the ideology itself is 24 not what would have somebody labeled as a domestic violent extremist --

25 A Correct.

1 Q -- correct?

2 A Yeah. All three would be required in order for even an investigation to be 3 opened up.

4 Q So it's essentially someone -- it would be fair to say that it refers to 5 somebody who wants to use -- threatens violence or actually uses violence to further 6 their ideological goals?

7 A Yeah. Violence is the -- really the linchpin of that, of the three.

8 Q And so the mere advocacy of a particular political or social position using 9 strong rhetoric, even just sort of a philosophic embrace of violent tactics is not enough,
10 correct?

11 A Correct.

12 Q There has to be more, there has to be the actual official threat of violence or 13 actual violence?

14 A Uh-huh.

15 Q May I have a moment?

16 And in the domestic context we're talking about folks who are operating primarily 17 in the United States, if you're talking about a domestic violence extremist, correct?

18 A In most cases, yes.

19 Q Can you describe the current landscape in the United States with respect to 20 DVEs and what you're seeing, the nature of the threats they pose? Is it on the rise?
21 What are you seeing?

22 A Sure. Yeah, I can speak generally to it just because I'm not an all-source
23 analyst in the domestic terrorist -- you know, I'm not a domestic terrorist --

24 Q Fair enough.

25 A -- analyst. But in terms of my previous engagement looking at data related

1 to domestic violent extremists, I know that within the Counterterrorism Division, I know
2 during the social unrest leading up to the Capitol riots and since then, you're talking
3 about more than doubling of the cases within Counterterrorism Division that have been 4 opened at the time.

5 Q And I imagine you've seen a real spectrum of activity. For example, lone 6 actors committing acts of domestic extremism, correct?

7 A Yes.

8 Q And then also folks who mobilize in groups, correct?

9 A Yes. However, I would caveat that to say that State Department designates 10 foreign terrorist organizations so that opening investigations on international terrorism is 11 much easier.

12 The challenge is -- on the domestic terrorist side is, because there is no such thing
13 as a domestic terrorist group -- and you have to have those three factors that I mentioned 14 present -- the challenges to identifying networks are much greater than if you were 15 investigating it on the IT side.

16 Q So separate and apart from formal networks -- and by the way, "IT" you
17 mean international terrorism?

18 A International terrorism. Sorry about that.

19 Q That's okay.

20 Separate from the concept of a formal domestic terrorist organization, the FBI has 21 seen groups of people mobilize online through social media, for example, to act together
22 or at least talk about acting together to commit acts of violence to promote certain 23 ideologies.

24 A Yes.

25 Q Is that fair to say?

1 A Yes.

2 Q And would you agree that domestic violence extremists have a large
3 presence on the internet?

4 A Yes.

5 Q And that social media platforms and messaging platforms facilitate the 6 ability of these folks to radicalize and recruit individuals who might be receptive to their 7 message?

8 A Yes. Generally, yes.

9 Q And do you -- this might seem like a silly question, but it's something that I
10 have to ask because it seems there's some dispute about this. Do you believe that the 11 FBI should be devoting resources to identifying domestic terrorists and preventing 12 Americans from dying at their hands?

13 A Oh, I think that the FBI is dedicating resources to that.

14 Q And you believe that's an appropriate deployment of the FBI's resources?

15 A Well, you have to understand the Bureau. FBI's budget covers a myriad of 16 threats, all of which are priorities. National security threats aren't just within the 17 Counterterrorism Division, but they are in cyber, counterintelligence, and there are some 18 threats in the Criminal Investigative Division that are also national security threats.

19 So when you're talking about national security, I think that, in general, we don't 20 have enough resources to cover down on all threats, but I think that the response that 21 Counterterrorism Division has had on the domestic terrorist threat has been generally 22 appropriate.

23 Q You believe it's been proportional to the nature of the threat to the extent 24 possible with the resources you have?

25 A It has grown enough in the emphasis at the headquarters level that I've seen

1 has been dedicated to that growth.

2 Q Okay. Thank you.

3 Are you familiar with the Domestic Investigations and Operations Guide?

4 A Yes. Generally, yeah.

5 Q It's also referred to as the DIOG?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And the DIOG applies to all FBI employees and all other individuals operating 8 under the FBI's authority --

9 A Correct.

10 Q -- correct?

11 And it applies to all domestic intelligence activities conducted by the FBI?

12 A Correct.

13 Q And all of your work is covered by the DIOG?

14 A Yes.

15 Q And the DIOG is meant to ensure that the criminal and national security and 16 foreign intelligence investigative activities are consistent throughout the FBI?

17 A Correct.

18 Q Okay. I'd like to introduce an excerpt from section 3.1 of the public version
19 of the DIOG.

20 [REDACTED] And just to note for the record, the version we're introducing I think 21 is a year or two old. It's the non- -- I know part of the DIOG is currently 22 law-enforcement sensitive. We don't have access to that. This is the version that's 23 made to be publicly available that we're introducing.

24 [REDACTED] Okay.

25

[Sullivan Exhibit No. 2.]

1 was marked for identification.]

2 [REDACTED] And you can see it says "unclassified" on the bottom.

BY [REDACTED]

4 Q Okay. So section 3.1 starts by listing the core values of the FBI. And I'm 5 just going to read them into the record, and you can tell me if I read this correctly.

6 The first is rigorous obedience to the Constitution of the United States. The 7 second is respect for the dignity of all those we protect. The third is compassion. The 8 fourth is fairness. The fifth is uncompromising personal integrity and institutional
9 integrity. The sixth is accountability by accepting responsibility for our actions and 10 decisions and their consequences. The sixth (sic) is leadership, by example, both 11 personal and professional. And the seventh (sic) is diversity.

12 Did I read that correctly?

13 A Yes.

14 Q And are you familiar with these core values?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And through your 25 years at the FBI, have you worked to ensure that all of 17 your actions have adhered to those core values?

18 A Yes.

19 Q And have you witnessed a similar commitment from your colleagues at the 20 FBI?

21 A Yes.

22 Q And from FBI management as well?

23 A Yes.

24 [REDACTED] Mr. Sullivan, can I just ask you to speak up so the people at the end
25 of --

1 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah.

2 [REDACTED] -- the table can hear you.

3 Mr. Sullivan. Sure.

4 [REDACTED] Okay.

5 BY [REDACTED]

6 Q Now, the second sentence of the first paragraph underneath the core values
7 says, "Our individual and institutional rigorous obedience to constitutional principles and 8 guarantees is more important than the outcome of any single interview, search for 9 evidence, or investigation."

10 Do you agree with that sentence?

11 A Yes.

12 Q Okay. And is it fair to say that that means your goal in any one case or 13 situation cannot override your obedience to the Constitution and the other laws that 14 guide the FBI?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And that applies even if you're involving terrorism or domestic violence
17 extremism?

18 A Yes.

19 Q Now, you mentioned in the earlier hour, I believe you stated the mission of 20 the Strategic Engagement Unit, but I'd ask you to repeat it because I'm not quite sure I 21 caught it.

22 A Yeah. The mission of the engagement unit was to basically cultivate and 23 share information on core terrorist threats with the ability to help the private sector
24 understand the threats and help push out information that may be relevant to law
25 enforcement and support operations.

1 Q And operations with respect to terrorism -- counterterrorism?

2 A Correct.

3 Q Okay. So SEU is specifically about counterterrorism?

4 A It is. And we handled some leads that we would facilitate or push
5 information within other divisions.

6 Q And I believe you said that sometimes the people you knew at the banks
7 would send you leads on other issues because they knew that you would send them --

8 A Get it to the right person.

9 Q -- to the right people?

10 A Correct.

11 Q Are you familiar with the term "National Security Special Event"?

12 A Yes. Generally, yes.

13 Q Okay. What is your understanding of what a National Security
14 Special Event is?

15 A Yeah, a large event that is either -- oftentimes sees potential criminal activity
16 around it, so Super Bowl, other types of events. It could be something like the Capitol 17 riots or 9/11, that type of thing.

18 Q And would the Presidential inauguration fall under the category --

19 A Yes.

20 Q -- of a National Security Special Event?

21 A Yes.

22 Q I'd like to introduce a letter, January 31st of this year, and this is a letter
23 from Assistant Director Patrick Findlay to Chairman Jordan. And I'm not sure if you've 24 seen this, but you can take a few minutes to read it.

25 [REDACTED] Oh, of the FBI, correct?

1 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 3.

2 was marked for identification.]

3 [REDACTED] And Mr. Findlay is the assistant director -- FBI's assistant director for 4 congressional affairs.

5 [REDACTED] Oh, sorry. Thank you.

6 Mr. Sullivan. Yes, I've seen this.

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q Okay. So if you look at the second paragraph about midway through, it 9 says, "For NSSEs" -- which is the abbreviation for National Security Special Event -- "such 10 as an inauguration, the Super Bowl, or the Olympics, the FBI has designated responsibility
11 for domestic intelligence, counterterrorism, and the investigation of Federal crimes 12 leading into an event."

13 That's correct, I take it?

14 A Yes.

15 Q And that's your understanding?

16 A Yes, that's my understanding.

17 Q And, "Such events represent significant targets for a variety of criminal or 18 national security threats, and the FBI relies heavily on cooperation and coordination with 19 a variety of stakeholders to protect lives and security."

20 Do you agree with that statement as well?

21 A Yes.

22 Q The letter goes on to say, in the third paragraph, that, "The Strategic Partner
23 Engagement Section" -- which Chairman Jordan referenced in his letter to the FBI -- "can 24 play an important role in advance of NSSEs by developing proactive initiatives with key 25 interagency, public and private sector partners in furtherance of developing actionable

1 intelligence which can be leveraged to enhance threat mitigation and preventive
2 strategies."

3 Do you agree with that statement?

4 A Yes.

5 Q And does that statement characterize what your efforts were in the wake of
6 January 6th?

7 A Yeah. Generally, yes.

8 Q And then the letter goes on to say, "As part of this work, the Strategic 9 Partner Engagement Section partners with financial institutions in their effort to 10 safeguard the United States from the abuses of financial crime, including money 11 laundering, terrorist financing, and other illicit transactions."

12 Would you agree with that?

13 A Yes.

14 Q Okay. Now, banks are not required to work with SEU, correct?

15 A They're obligated to report suspicious activity. So knowing that suspicious
16 activity is almost exclusively in the hands of law enforcement agencies, to include the FBI,
17 not limited to the FBI but to include them, oftentimes paralleling that, they themselves 18 have programs where they feel that engagement is required or necessary -- they,
19 themselves.

20 Q So they're required to report the activity, but they could choose to not 21 engage with you in terms of brainstorming ideas for how to identify that activity.

22 A Absolutely.

23 Q Is that fair to say?

24 A Sure.

25 Q They could just take their own understanding of what they're required to

1 report, their own interpretation, and send it through the portal and not have the --

2 A Correct.

3 Q -- the type of partnership that you describe?

4 A Correct.

5 Q And it's their choice to have those partnerships with you?

6 A Yes.

7 Q Okay. So I want to talk a little bit about the Bank Secrecy Act, and I assume 8 that any time you said "BSA," you're referring to the Bank Secrecy Act?

9 A Correct.

10 Q So if you take a look back at Assistant Director Findlay's letter on the second
11 page --

12 A Yeah.

13 Q -- in the first paragraph, it says, "The Bank Secrecy Act and its implementing 14 regulations provide for financial institutions to report information for use, quote, in 15 criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations, risk assessments and proceedings, end quote,
16 including reports on, again quotation marks, suspicious transactions relevant to a possible
17 violation of law or regulation."

18 Is that your understanding of the Bank Secrecy Act.

19 A Yes.

20 Q And if you look at the footnote in that letter, it actually cites the U.S. Code
21 provisions that constitute the Bank Secrecy Act, correct -- or that are referenced there?

22 A Yes.

23 Q And I believe that you touched on this in the earlier hour, but the letter goes
24 on to state that, "Suspicious Activity Reports, or SARs, are filed with FinCEN and made 25 available, under strict statutory and regulatory protections, to the FBI and other

1 authorized law enforcement, national security, and regulatory agencies."

2 And that's consistent with your understanding of SARs --

3 A Correct.

4 Q -- and their availability -- excuse me -- availability to the FBI?

5 A Correct.

6 Q And the letter then goes on to say, "The FBI understands that the BSA and its 7 implementing regulations require financial institutions to determine what activities and 8 transactions are deemed persistent to -- deemed suspicious pursuant to the BSA."

9 And, again, that's consistent with your understanding of what the Bank
10 Secrecy Act requires?

11 A Correct.

12 Q So the banks are obligated to file a Suspicious Activity Report for anything 13 that meets the thresholds set by regulation, correct?

14 A Correct.

15 Q And it's up to them, the banks, not you, to determine whether they see 16 information that meets those thresholds --

17 A Correct.

18 Q -- and to compile the report?

19 [REDACTED] All right. And if I could just ask you to let her finish the question 20 before you answer so we --

21 Mr. Sullivan. Sure.

22 [REDACTED] -- have a clean record.

23 Mr. Sullivan. Sorry.

24 BY [REDACTED]

25 Q And you indicated this earlier, but just to be clear, BSA data, including SARs,

1 is used across many types of criminal investigations in the FBI: money laundering,
2 organized crime, fraud, terrorism, drug trafficking. I mean, pretty much anything that
3 the FBI is investigating --

4 A Yes.

5 Q -- a SAR could be relevant to, correct?

6 A Yes.

7 Q Okay. And the FBI considers, as reflected in this letter, the preliminary and 8 unverified leads that you receive in SARs to be raw intelligence, correct?

9 A Yes.

10 Q And can you explain what that means? What does that phrase "raw 11 intelligence" mean?

12 A It's, you know, in any investigation, or if you're an analyst or an investigator,
13 raw intelligence would be all of the information that in and of itself may not be anything
14 but that helps you understand what is and isn't connected to the thing that you're looking 15 at.

16 So it could be -- raw information could be an informal tip from a private sector, 17 not even under the guidelines of the regulatory environment with BSA. SARs just 18 happened to be more formally regulated raw information. So there's -- raw information 19 could come in various forms.

20 Q Okay. Thank you.

21 And are there -- well, can you give us an example -- I know you've already 22 described several of the higher profile cases that you've worked on, but a case where a 23 SAR helped identify or prevent -- identify a perpetrator of a violent crime or helped 24 prevent one, can you think of a case?

25 A Yeah. In my mind of what's adjudicated, yes.

1 Q Yes. Thank you.

2 A So the FBI provided information regarding chemical precursors that could be
3 used for bomb-making materials and provided that information to -- the engagement unit
4 provided that information to a finance sector partner, who used that to set alerts within 5 their system, to understand, when they saw those transactions, what combination of 6 those chemical precursors were being purchased.

7 They -- obviously from a proactive standpoint, because they're setting the alerts
8 themselves on general chemical precursors in combination, they produced several SARs.
9 One SAR in particular looked like other SARs that had chemical precursor purchases in it.
10 The engagement unit reviewed it and decided that they were going to do a Guardian
11 assessment.

12 There's a terrorist explosive device -- they call it TEDAC -- down at Quantico that 13 verified our assessment that this should go to the field office. In this case, it was the 14 Chicago Field Office. The transactions for the chemical precursors, when Chicago
15 Field Office received the Guardian, they decided to go visit the consumer whose bank
16 account had made these transactions.

17 There was a husband and wife that lived there. When they asked them about 18 the transactions, they said, oh, that's our son, he's into science. And they asked if they 19 could see some of the things that, you know, he was into, and they agreed to a consented 20 search where FBI agents discovered elaborate plans for their son to carry out an attack at 21 his high school, using several pipe bombs, grenades, a backpack bomb that he, himself, 22 wrote down that it would kill between 12 and 20 people.

23 And they wound up arresting the person and -- the minor, and the case, you know,
24 obviously went from there, but that terrorist attack was prevented because of the SAR
25 that was published by the financial institution.

1 Q And if I understood what you just explained, the genesis for that SAR was the 2 Strategic Engagement Unit explaining to the banks what chemicals to look for because 3 the banks might not know that --

4 A Correct.

5 Q -- this combination of materials could be used to create a bomb?

6 A Correct.

7 Q And is that typical of the nature of the sort of advice and guidance that you
8 provide to your partners?

9 A Absolutely.

10 Q Okay. So even though the banks have their own -- they have their 11 reporting requirements, they might not know what transactions could be indicative of a 12 violent offense without the information provided to the FBI. I mean, sometimes I 13 imagine it's very obvious and other times --

14 A Yeah, correct.

15 Q -- it's --

16 A Yeah. I mean, I think the way that you characterize it is spot on. In some 17 cases they would know and they've already set up their alerts; in other cases, they would 18 use that law enforcement information to set their alerts.

19 Q And when the FBI receives any tip from a third party, including a SAR from a 20 financial institution, it has to take its own step to review that? It would conduct its own 21 review of that information, correct?

22 A Yes.

23 Q You don't open an investigation or send out a Guardian on every SAR that 24 comes in?

25 A Correct.

1 Q You have to go through a review process to determine if there is enough to
2 move forward with the initial steps of an investigation?

3 A Correct.

4 Q I want to step back a minute. We've talked a lot in the previous hour about 5 the events of January 6th. Can you describe, in your own words, what happened that 6 day?

7 A Yeah. You know, I would say, on that day there was a large gathering
8 outside the Capitol, and there were a number -- a large number of individuals that 9 decided to partake in violent, criminal activity, violence that was intended for not only 10 law enforcement but also threat of violence to a lot of the legislative branch members
11 that, you know, that I'm talking to today.

12 Q And you're aware that Director Wray has referred to the events of that day 13 as domestic terrorism -- acts of domestic terrorism?

14 A Yes.

15 Q And do you agree with that assessment?

16 A Yes.

17 Q And some of the participants in the riots that day displayed insignias that 18 have been used or adopted by DVEs, correct?

19 A Yes.

20 Q There were nooses and plastic restraints that were found at the Capitol or 21 stationed at or near the Capitol?

22 A Yes.

23 Q You're aware that people -- police officers were violently attacked, one was 24 killed that day?

25 A Yes.

1 Q People were chanting "Hang Mike Pence," correct, who was, of course, the 2 Vice President at the time?

3 A Yes. It's my understanding, yes.

4 Q So in the immediate aftermath of January 6th, you described the flood of 5 tips and the flood of activity. The FBI was concerned, I imagine, about preventing 6 further violence, whether on a smaller scale or a larger scale, that was fueled by the same
7 ideologies and motivations --

8 A Yes.

9 Q -- that appealed to the folks who overtook the Capitol on January 6th?

10 A Correct.

11 Q Okay. Now, the inauguration of then President-elect Biden was scheduled 12 for 2 weeks -- about 2 weeks after that day, correct?

13 A Correct.

14 Q And as you've stated earlier, inauguration is a National Security
15 Special Event. And so the FBI was tasked with preventing acts of terrorism and violence 16 at that event, correct?

17 A Correct.

18 Q And after January 6th, online rhetoric regarding violence during the 19 inauguration increased. Is that correct?

20 A Absolutely, yes, correct. That was my understanding.

21 Q And your understanding was the FBI was seeing people online talking about 22 mobilizing to participate in acts of violence at the inauguration?

23 A Correct.

24 Q Similar to what we saw on January 6th?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And would you agree that January 6th showed that there were many,
2 perhaps thousands, of people who were willing to break the law and use violence to
3 prevent the peaceful transfer of power --

4 A Yes.

5 Q -- at that time from one President to another?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And the inauguration is the moment where that actually happens, where 8 power is transferred from one President to another?

9 A Correct.

10 Q And the FBI had specific intelligence indicating that it was likely that people
11 intended -- who were present at January 6th -- intended to return to D.C. to commit acts
12 of violence at the inauguration, correct?

13 A At the time that was my understanding, yes.

14 Q Okay. If I could have the January 14th email. And this is exhibit 4, I 15 believe, we're at.

16 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 4.
17 was marked for identification.]

18 BY [REDACTED]

19 Q So this is an email sent on January 14th, 2021, from the DSAC portal. Can 20 you explain what that is?

21 A Yeah. The DSAC portal is open to all DSAC members. The Office of 22 Private Sector is the one that coordinates that portal, and DSAC members, a lot of it's 23 Fortune 500 and large companies are members of the portal. They have access, and 24 they would receive -- they would ostensibly receive production within that portal, this 25 being one of the products.

1 Q And "DSAC" stands for the Domestic Security Alliance Council?

2 A Correct.

3 Q And can you just describe briefly what that is and what the portal is?

4 A Again, it's Office of Private Sector's portal for communicating production
5 related to a gamut of threats. It wouldn't be limited to terrorism, but any threats that 6 are relevant to FBI and the FBI operational divisions.

7 Q Okay. And it's open to any private sector company that meets certain 8 thresholds, correct?

9 A Correct.

10 Q Based on their revenue and --

11 A Right.

12 Q -- that sort of thing?

13 And it has a public website, correct?

14 A Uh-huh, yes.

15 Q So I could go on, I can look and see who the members are and who the 16 leaders are, that sort of thing?

17 A Yeah. I haven't been on the site in a while, but I think generally, yes.

18 Q Now, according to this email, the subject line is, "Some Domestic Violent 19 Extremists Likely Will React With Violence to the Presidential Transition Process." That's 20 the subject line, correct?

21 A Yes. That's what I'm reading here, yes.

22 Q And the email indicates in the first paragraph that, "The FBI assesses some 23 domestic violence extremists, DVEs, including anti-government or anti-authority violent 24 extremists, specifically militia violent extremists, abbreviated as MVEs, are very likely to 25 attend alleged armed protests where they are likely to use violence in response to what

1 they perceive as the illegitimate transfer of power from the current President to a new
2 administration."

3 Did I read that correctly?

4 A Yes.

5 Q And the FBI made this assessment of the likelihood of violence at the 6 inauguration with high confidence based on FBI CHS reporting -- and that stands for 7 confidential human source, correct?

8 A Correct.

9 Q -- open source information and law enforcement information reporting calls
10 for violence, correct?

11 A Correct.

12 Q And then this email has some examples of some of those threats and some 13 of those sources. So if you look at the second example, there was a human source with 14 direct assets, and the last sentence says that that human source reported that DVEs
15 reportedly plan to storm government offices on 20th of January 2021, according to that 16 human source, correct?

17 A Correct.

18 Q And January 20th of 2021 was the day of the inauguration?

19 A Correct.

20 Q And if you look at a few lines down, it says, "As of 8th of January, multiple 21 social media postings promoted the 'Million Militia March' on 20th of January 2021, to 22 prevent the new President from entering the White House, according to law enforcement
23 information."

24 Is that correct?

25 A Correct.

1 Q So these are just some examples of the specific threats that the FBI had
2 identified to the inauguration?

3 A Correct.

4 Q And if someone were to bring, for example, a fully automatic firearm to the 5 inauguration, they could potentially kill thousands of people, correct?

6 A Ostensibly, correct.

7 Q Including the soon-to-be inaugurated or the immediately inaugurated
8 President and his family?

9 A Sure.

10 Q The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court who's administering the oath?

11 A Correct.

12 Q And as this document reflects, the FBI was concerned the violence could spill
13 over outside of Washington, D.C., to the rest of the country, correct?

14 A Correct.

15 Q And as the first paragraph of this email indicates, the FBI was concerned that 16 potential violence could result in a range of consequences, including the loss of life,
17 property damage, disruption of government operations, and the overwhelming of U.S.
18 local, State, and Federal law enforcement, correct?

19 A Correct.

20 Q And the FBI, including you and your colleagues at SEU, wanted to use all of 21 the tools at the FBI's disposal to prevent that from happening, correct?

22 A Correct.

23 Q And in fact, you had a duty, as part of a sworn officer of the FBI, to do
24 everything possible within the letter of the law to prevent that from happening, correct?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And would you agree that the events of January 6th demonstrated that the
2 threat posed by DVEs in this country was greater and more imminent than previously 3 understood?

4 A Yes.

5 Q And that the successful breach of the Capitol and the loss of life that ensued
6 brought home the urgency of the threat to our national security that DVEs posed?

7 A Correct.

8 Q Now, you mentioned FinCEN during the earlier hour. That's the Financial 9 Crimes Enforcement Network of the Treasury Department, correct?

10 A Correct.

11 Q And they were also tasked with trying to prevent an attack on the 12 inauguration?

13 A Correct. That was my understanding.

14 Q Okay. And you mentioned a call that you participated in on the Friday after 15 January 6th. Was that call about -- was it focused on threats to the inauguration?

16 A Yeah. I mean, summarize on the call. So when I was told by my upper 17 management to represent Counterterrorism Division on the call, as a FinCEN-sanctioned
18 call, the gist of the -- of what I discussed on it was, you had the Capitol riots, violent 19 criminal activity as an event, and you had the investigation of that, and then you had the 20 inauguration that was happening soon and the unknown threat to that. So there's 21 managing the threat, right, and also supporting investigation.

22 Q And the conversations that you had with the bank representatives that led 23 to the email that we talked about -- and we'll get to that in a minute -- those were 24 focused on the future threat to the inauguration?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And it was about the inauguration specifically?

2 A Correct.

3 Q Okay. And all of the methods that were discussed in those calls and in 4 those emails, in these post-January 6th communications that you had with the bank, all of 5 these were in compliance with the requirement for the Bank Secrecy Act, correct?

6 A Absolutely.

7 Q Now, going back to your email, which was exhibit 1, there was a lot of talk
8 during the previous hour about the subject line. But just to be clear, the -- well, let me
9 ask you, the nature of the conversations that you were having with these Bank of America
10 employees, were they in the same vein as the conversations that you described in that 11 chemical precursor investigation where you were helping to identify what they should be 12 look -- you know, what to keep an eye out for, what might indicate --

13 A Yes.

14 Q -- suspicious activity?

15 A Similar in the sense of discussing the threat, talking about the threat, yes.

16 Q It was --

17 [REDACTED] Sorry. Could we go off the record for 1 minute?

18 [REDACTED] Absolutely.

19 [Discussion off the record.]

20 [REDACTED] And so I just wanted to be clear --

21 [REDACTED] Back on the record.

22 [REDACTED] Oh, sorry. Back on the record. Thank you.

23

BY [REDACTED]

24 Q The full subject line of this email says, "Re, colon, upcoming SAR product 25 idea, slash, brainstorming and check-in with you both," correct?

1 A Correct.

2 Q It doesn't just say "upcoming SAR product." It's an idea?

3 A Correct.

4 Q You were talking about -- I mean, "brainstorming" is self-explanatory, but 5 essentially you were discussing with the bank employees things they might look for. But 6 you at no point directed them to file a SAR for anything that met these thresholds,
7 correct?

8 A Correct.

9 Q It was up to the banks to consider the information you gave them, review
10 their own data, and make their own determination about whether a SAR was appropriate
11 or required under the Bank Secrecy Act?

12 A Correct.

13 Q Now, just to be clear -- you stated this during the prior hour, but I want to 14 make sure that it is very clear -- in your mind -- and your understanding was that Bank of 15 America understood this -- all of the thresholds had to be met that were specified in this
16 email, correct?

17 A In order to help the bank narrow their focus, correct.

18 Q So you didn't tell the bank, anyone who made a purchase in Washington, 19 D.C. on January 5th or January 6th, that alone is enough, we're interested in that?

20 A Right, correct.

21 Q And a purchase of an Airbnb or a hotel reservation in the D.C. area for the 22 time of the inauguration, that wouldn't be enough --

23 A Correct.

24 Q -- correct?

25 And historical weapons or weapons-related purchase going back 6 months, that

1 would not be enough, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q It had to be all three?

4 A It had to be, correct.

5 Q And that was what you indicated to the banks?

6 A That's what we discussed.

7 Q That's what you discussed, correct?

8 A Yes.

9 Q And your understanding was that's what the banks understood?

10 A That's what the banks understood of capabilities, how to narrow their focus,
11 correct.

12 Q And to be clear, your email doesn't mention firearms specifically at all,
13 correct?

14 A Right.

15 Q Okay. It just talks about weapons generally?

16 A Correct. Because the financial institution would not necessarily, in most 17 cases, not only have information tied to the type of transaction.

18 Q And just at a higher level, you were hoping to identify people who were 19 present at the Capitol, participated in those violent acts, and intended to return and 20 commit more violent acts at the inauguration? That was the goal of these 21 conversations, correct?

22 A The end goal, correct.

23 [REDACTED] Can you explain -- the criteria that we just walked through, can you 24 explain your understanding of why these criteria would identify individuals who had 25 committed acts of violence -- or had been present at the Capitol intended to return to the

1 inauguration to commit acts of violence?

2 Mr. Sullivan. Well, first, just to clarify, not to commit acts of violence, but
3 potentially committed acts of violence. I mean, which do you want me to address? Do
4 you want me to just read it or --

5 [REDACTED] I'm thinking, you know, we've walked through what each one of the 6 criteria says on its face, but you've said over and over it was the combination of these
7 three together that were designed to help identify relevant individuals. Can you explain 8 your understanding of why that was?

9 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah. I would simply say that these are all just fact-based 10 patterns that would narrow the focus of anybody that was doing data exploitation, 11 whether you were in a bank or another institution that would have data relevant to being 12 able to look at those factors together at the same time.

13 [REDACTED] Thank you.

14 BY [REDACTED]

15 Q And according to your understanding of the Bank Secrecy Act, the 16 information that you provided to the banks and any information they would've presented 17 to you in response to that conversation, you do not need legal process for that, correct?

18 A If I was receiving something in a SAR, I knew that the institution made -- met
19 SAR thresholds. So once it's published into FinCEN, I am a law enforcement recipient 20 just like any other law enforcement agency that has access to the same data.

21 Q And so once they filed that SAR, you knew they had made their own
22 determination that it met that threshold?

23 A Correct.

24 Q Okay. So I want to talk a little bit about the SAR. We discussed it briefly,
25 and I know we don't have it here, but I think you'll be able to answer these questions.

1 First, I just want to make clear, the SAR indicated that there were 211 total 2 customer relationships that were identified that met the three thresholds that we
3 discussed, correct?

4 A Correct.

5 Q Now, I believe Chairman Jordan said that there was a list of 211 Americans,
6 but we don't know that they were all Americans, correct?

7 A No.

8 Q It could've been any --

9 A Correct.

10 Q -- foreign nationals who were doing business with the bank?

11 Yeah, it could've been business entities as well, correct.

12 A Correct.

13 Q Okay. And the SAR itself did not have a list of those names, correct?

14 A The SAR itself did not have a list of those names, correct.

15 Q Right. That was part of the supporting documentation that was referenced 16 in the SAR?

17 A That's correct.

18 Q And the SAR -- the supporting documentation was divided into three tabs,
19 correct?

20 A I think it was more than that. I think there were more tabs.

21 Q Okay. But the initial tab was everybody who met those first three criteria,
22 correct?

23 A Yes, I believe so. I think the last tab -- the last tab, from what I recall, had 24 all 211 on it.

25 Q Okay. Thank you.

1 And the way the bank -- and tell me if this comports with your
2 memory -- described those three criteria were, customers confirmed with transacting,
3 either through bank account debit card or credit card purchases in Washington, D.C.,
4 between January 5th and January 6th, 2021.

5 That's the first part of the threshold, correct?

6 A Correct.

7 Q And then purchases made for hotel, Airbnb, RSVPs in D.C., Virginia, and 8 Maryland since January 6th, 2021, correct?

9 A Correct.

10 Q And any historical purchase of weapons or at a weapons-related merchant
11 since July 15th, 2020, correct?

12 A Correct.

13 Q It wasn't ever in the history of time --

14 A Correct.

15 Q -- if you made a weapons purchase. It was limited by time?

16 A That was never discussed --

17 Q Okay.

18 A -- past that date.

19 Q And as you testified in the previous hour, you had follow-up conversations 20 where you wanted to identify individuals whose weapons-related purchases postdated
21 January 6th?

22 A Correct.

23 Q Okay. Can you explain why that was important to you?

24 A After reviewing the SAR and seeing that -- you know, knowing that 211
25 customers met the criteria, I knew that was still a very small amount when you look at

1 the -- when you compare it to the Bank of America's customer base. But my intent,
2 again, going back to the call from FinCEN, including my call with Bank of America and the 3 email that we discussed, was covering down on potential threats to inauguration day.

4 So I felt, just as the transactions that you detailed that were post-January 6th, I
5 wanted to know, because the weapons-related transactions were since July, I wanted to 6 know, of the 211, how many we were talking about that also made transactions just after 7 January 6th, not since July of 2020.

8 Q And why would it be significant to you that somebody made a weapons
9 transaction post-January 6th? What was the nature of your interest in that?

10 A Because while it wouldn't necessarily mean that there was criminal activity
11 involved, it certainly, from a very -- narrowing the focus even further on the law
12 enforcement side, knew that we knew at the engagement unit, at the headquarters unit,
13 those four that wound up being those four identified, we didn't want to sit on potential
14 risk. And in order to offload that risk, in essence, we want to ensure that those 15 Guardian assessments were pushed out, those four, to the three field offices.

16 Q And when you say "sit on potential risk," you mean -- well, what do you
17 mean? I'm not going to put words in your mouth.

18 A If in the assessment, when the field office reads the assessment, it's up to 19 them to take further investigative activity. Those investigative activities would vary, but 20 it's at a very low level because there's no open investigation. It's a -- it's a 21 no-stone-urned, low-level look at whether or not the field office thinks that there's a 22 threat there.

23 Q And just going back, so anyone on that list had made a purchase for a hotel
24 or some sort of accommodation in the D.C. area after January 6th, correct?

25 A I'm sorry. Repeat that.

1 Q Anybody who was on the list that was in the supporting documentation for 2 the SAR had made a purchase for a hotel or Airbnb or some sort of accommodation in the 3 D.C. area post-January 6th?

4 A Correct. That was my understanding of the SAR.

5 Q And the reason for that is that indicates an intent to return to this area or to 6 travel to this area?

7 A In terms of the reservations, correct, yes.

8 Q Correct. And the four individuals who made -- well, you asked for 9 weapons-related purchases post-January 6th because the combination of a 10 weapons-related purchase and a hotel reservation to come to D.C. might raise alarm that 11 the person is coming to D.C. to use that weapon, correct?

12 A Ostensibly, but at the headquarters level, we wouldn't know that. That 13 would be up to the field office to further investigate.

1 [12:12 p.m.]

Q And that's what you mean by sitting on risk -- is you just pushed out -- "maybe take a look at this person," and it's up to the field office to determine whether or not to take look at the person?

A Correct.

Q The guardians that you sent out, they were, well actually -- the guardians

you sent out were information-only leads. Is that correct?

A Correct.

10

Q So what does that mean in the FBI parlance?

11

A It means, while there wasn't any definite -- there wasn't any criminal activity

12 identified, that the assessment itself that headquarters wanted to ensure that the field

13 office knew that those fact-based patterns were met in this case, and that any further

14 activity that they chose to do may help them identify potential criminal activity.

15

Q And they don't have to take any further action at all?

16

A Correct.

17

Q Correct? They could --

18

A Correct.

19

Q They could do absolutely nothing with that information?

20

A Correct.

21

Q And the SAR itself made clear, it actually stated that the individuals who were part of the supporting documentation were not considered suspect at that time and that it was filed for informational purposes only, correct?

22

23

24

A That's my recollection of the SAR narrative, yes.

25

Q Okay. Now, we've heard -- you stated earlier that the guardians that you

1 pushed out were sent to San Francisco, Memphis, and Tampa, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q You did not send any --

4 A No.

5 Q We have heard testimony from agents who said that the Boston Field Office
6 did receive some guardians related to these Bank of America inquiries. You don't know
7 how they got them or when. Is that fair to say?

8 A I only know generally that Boston received a lead, but that's only based on 9 my cursory review in trying to prepare for today, looking back 3 years to understand.

10 Q Fair enough.

11 A But, at the time, that would have been after the guardian assessments that 12 we did went out.

13 Q Okay. And so you don't know what assessment was made or why those 14 leads went out?

15 A No.

16 Q And, of the four leads that you sent out, they were all closed in 17 January 2020, shortly after you sent them out. Is that correct?

18 A Yes, between January 20th and January 28th, I think, is the scope of all four 19 guardians closed.

20 Q And I imagine that's typical with information-only leads?

21 A Yes.

22 Q Is it fair to say that those are the types of leads that you sent out in an 23 abundance of caution because you just said you don't want to sit on risk?

24 A Yeah, I would say the majority -- at least only speaking for myself, being in 25 the Engagement Unit for 3 years, we had several information-only guardians that went

1 out to the field.

2 Q And the agents in the field who are reviewing those guardians and making a
3 determination about whether or not to take any action, they will have a different set of 4 skills and training and experience than you do because they're field agents, correct?

5 A Correct.

6 Q And the purpose of sending them this information is to allow them to apply
7 their particular set of skills to the intelligence that you've developed --

8 A Correct.

9 Q -- and make their own independent assessment, correct?

10 A Correct.

11 Q Sorry. And, again, all of the actions that you took with respect to this 12 information was compliant with the Bank Secrecy Act --

13 A All of the actions I took were compliant with my authorities as an FBI and 14 DOJ authority, correct.

15 Q Thank you. And at any point did you or, to your knowledge, anyone else at 16 the FBI make representations to Bank of America or any other financial institution that 17 information contained in SARs alone could or would be used to predicate an investigation 18 against a suspect?

19 A No.

20 BY [REDACTED]

21 Q Yeah, I just want to be abundantly clear, the Bank of America's supporting 22 documentation included a list of 211 names. You said earlier that the supporting 23 documentation wasn't part of the SAR, it was a separate set of documents, correct?

24 A Correct.

25 Q And you knew there were -- presumably knew there were 211 names, but

1 you didn't investigate 211 customers, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q In fact, you went back to Bank of America and said, "I will need to narrow 4 this down, I'm looking for these more specific parameters"?

5 A Correct.

6 Q So, you know, I just want to be clear that the earlier -- there's a reference
7 earlier to 211 Americans on the list. First of all, we've established that there weren't 8 necessarily 211 Americans; it was 211 customers, correct?

9 A Correct.

10 Q And there might have been -- a customer might be an entity, it might be a 11 business entity?

12 A Correct.

13 Q It might be a foreign person?

14 A Correct.

15 Q Okay. Ultimately, if somebody were to leave here and say that the FBI
16 investigated 211 Americans based on those lists, that's not accurate, correct?

17 A Correct.

18 Q Thank you.

19 [REDACTED] Thank you. We can go off the record.

21

BY [REDACTED]

22 Q We can go back on the record. It's 1:25. We'll start with the second 23 round of questioning for the majority.

24 Mr. Sullivan, at the end of the last round, my colleagues were talking about the 25 leads that were sent out. And you had said that other sections or divisions had sent

1 leads out that you were unaware of. When did you become aware that other leads
2 were sent out based upon Bank of America information?

3 A I did not become aware that leads were being sent out specifically, only that 4 the Washington Field Office was looking at the data.

5 Q And what did you understand that the Washington Field Office's look at the 6 data included? Do you know what steps they were taking? Were you involved in that 7 process at all?

8 A No, I had very preliminary discussions on different SARs that we had already 9 reviewed. This was one of them.

10 Q And, when you were liaising with the Washington Field Office, who were you 11 liaising with? And, if they're not an SES position, you can just give their title?

12 A An ASAC.

13 Q An ASAC. I think you can probably give their name.

14 A I don't want to give their name --

15 Q You don't want to give their name?

16 A -- in this proceeding, yeah.

17 Q Okay. Can we have the ASAC's name?

18 [REDACTED] We will email --

19 [REDACTED] Okay. So are you instructing the witness not to answer, or he is 20 just choosing on his own volition not to answer?

21 [REDACTED] Can we go off the record for a second.

22 [REDACTED] Yeah, we can go off the record.

23 [Discussion off the record.]

24 BY [REDACTED]

25 Q We can go back on the record.

1 A Yeah, so, apparently, the ADIC at the time, Steve D'Antuono, who has been
2 interviewed.

3 Q Okay. That was who you were liaising with, was Mr. D'Antuono?

4 A I wouldn't call it liaising, but communicating as another FBI employee who 5 came across private sector production and interaction with the private sector.

6 Q And how often during your engagement on the January 6th matter did you
7 speak with Mr. D'Antuono?

8 A Probably twice.

9 Q Okay.

10 A Give or take.

11 Q And did Mr. D'Antuono kind of fill you in on what steps they were taking on 12 the Bank of America information?

13 A No, only that they were in -- they had -- were also engaging with the private 14 sector but also reviewing financial information that we had discussed, not necessarily the 15 BOA SAR but just SARs in general.

16 Q And did you receive SARs from any other financial institution other than 17 Bank of America in the scope of the January 6th investigation?

18 A Yes.

19 Q What other financial institutions did you receive SARs from?

20 A Can I have a second?

21 [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

22 [Discussion off the record.]

23 BY [REDACTED]

24 Q We'll go back on the record.

25 A Yeah, so, during the FinCEN call, the first FinCEN call we already discussed

1 that Friday, they created a tag for all SARs related to the Capitol riots. So, if you are to 2 follow that tag from FinCEN, they -- you would be able to know the scope of the financial 3 institutions for that.

4 Q And did you receive any other SARs; how Bank of America, that executive 5 after they filed it with FinCEN, the executive then sent the SAR to you, did you receive any 6 other similar SARs in that manner?

7 A Yes.

8 Q And from what financial institutions?

9 A I would refer you to FinCEN for that. They would be able to provide you all 10 the scope of that tag.

11 Q I'm asking specifically did you receive any SARs in a similar manner as Bank
12 of America sent you their SAR after they filed it with FinCEN; did you -- you said you 13 received other SARs from other executives that forwarded you the SAR. Is that correct?

14 A From a handful. Correct.

15 Q From a handful.

16 Chairman Jordan. And was this the same three criteria?

17 Mr. Sullivan. I don't recall.

18 Chairman Jordan. Did you have similar conversations with those other
19 institutions saying, "Here is what I would -- here's how we would" -- what was term you 20 used? "Here's the product idea or how we would like it done, these three criteria, then 21 we get that information"?

22 Mr. Sullivan. No, there was never a discussion of how we the FBI would like it
23 done. It was always interaction with the institution.

24 Chairman Jordan. Okay. But, back to [REDACTED] question, then you did receive 25 that similar type of information from other financial institutions?

1 Mr. Sullivan. Correct.

2 Chairman Jordan. All right. Which one of those institutions?

3 [REDACTED] He is not able today to talk about any other specific SARs. He can
4 generally answer what was discussed and that he got other SARs during that time.

5 [REDACTED] And what's the privilege that the FBI is asserting?

6 [REDACTED] The Bank Secrecy Act.

7 [REDACTED] Which privilege is that?

8 [REDACTED] He is only allowed to speak about a SAR if it falls within his official 9 duties within the scope of answering the questions of the SAR already produced by the 10 Treasury in the scope of this inquiry.

11 [REDACTED] I think the committee would like to know the financial institutions
12 that interacted with Mr. Sullivan and sent their SARs to Mr. Sullivan like Bank of America
13 did. So I think the committee would like to know that information.

14 Mr. Sullivan. So my understanding for today's questions, which we were 15 supposed to have a week ago, was that the ODAG expressed concerns that the 16 committee would have access to the SAR, the Bank of America SAR. Because the 17 committee didn't have access to any other SARs, I don't want to speak to any other SARs.

18 [REDACTED] Okay. But, if you can take that back, we'd like --

19 Chairman Jordan. We're not asking you to speak not specificity of the SAR; we're 20 just asking you to tell us which bank sent it to you.

21 [REDACTED] We'll take that. I certainly appreciate the committee's question.
22 Given the Bank Secrecy Act's implication, we want to make sure not to put the witness in 23 any jeopardy of disclosing information before he has the clearance to disclose that. We 24 certainly understood the Bank of America SAR to be the committee's priority interest to 25 talk about it today, but we will certainly take it back and see if there is additional

1 information we can share.

2 [REDACTED] Is there a specific provision under the Bank Secrecy Act that you
3 can note for the record.

4 [REDACTED] I don't have it in front of me.

5 [REDACTED] I do. 31 U.S.C., 5318(g)(2), and the official duties exception is 6 (g)(2)(a)(2).

7 [REDACTED] Thank you.

8 Chairman Jordan. Do you know, approximately, how many other banks -- the 9 Bank of America --

10 Mr. Sullivan. I don't recall. There's a handful. I couldn't tell you exactly.

11 Chairman Jordan. But you know that other banks did, in fact, send you 12 information complying with those three criteria like Bank of America did.

13 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah, there were between 40 and 60 representatives on the first 14 FinCEN, which probably spanned 30 to 50 financial institutions. So I received a lot of 15 SARs related to the Capitol riots and the unknown threat to Inauguration Day.

16 Chairman Jordan. And did those SARs, like the documents that accompanied the 17 Bank of America SAR, did they name specific individuals?

18 Mr. Sullivan. Within the SAR? Yeah, potentially.

19 Chairman Jordan. Just to be clear, you told us, I think, in the first hour that there 20 were 211 names associated with the SAR coming to the government from Bank of 21 America on those three criteria. I'm just asking; that was similar with the other 22 institutions that sent information as well?

23 Mr. Sullivan. That the same fact-based patterns were in several of the SARs with 24 respect to the unknown threat to Inauguration Day, correct.

25 Chairman Jordan. Names were in the other SARs as well?

1 ██████████ He is not authorized to speak to the content of those -- only if
2 SARs -- if they existed.

3 ██████████ Were leads sent out to field offices based upon the other SARs?
4 You had identified four leads that were sent out based upon individuals who purchased
5 firearms after January 6th that your unit sent out. Were similar leads sent out based on 6 upon the other financial institution SARs?

7 ██████████ Can we go off the record.

8 ██████████ We can government off the record.

9 [Discussion off the record.]

10 BY ██████████

11 Q We can go back on the record.

12 A So, generally speaking, I can't speak to that each SAR that I received -- and 13 remember, I have -- at this same time, I am receiving SARs from multiple financial 14 institutions. I have never read a SAR that was exactly the same. And so, with respect
15 to this, I can't recall exactly how the SAR narrative was in these other SARs. But I 16 handled various SARs that we either determined did not or did meet the threshold of 17 guardian, for example, where we did assessments.

18 Q Okay. And, after you received the Bank of America SAR, you said you went 19 back to the executives and requested additional information based upon firearms
20 purchased. Do I have that right?

21 A I requested information based off of the supporting documentation that was 22 specifically talked about as attached to that SAR.

23 Q And, in order to -- how did you obtain the supporting documentation? Did
24 that come with the SAR, or did you have to request that from Bank of America?

25 A Typically, that's always a request. In that particular instance, once it was

1 published, there are some instances where we may receive the supporting 2 documentation. If, say, we would request it over the phone, as long as the SAR was 3 published, we could then get access to the supporting documentation.

4 Q And, for the other financial institutions that you received January 6th related
5 SARs from, did you request the supporting documentation for those SARs?

6 [REDACTED] All right. He is not authorized to talk about what came with the 7 other SARs.

8 BY [REDACTED]

9 Q So you can't even say if you received supporting documentation?

10 A My understanding is, yes, that I can't speak to that.

11 Q And, with regards to the other financial institutions, did you go back with 12 requests for additional information like you did with Bank of America to the other
13 financial institutions?

14 [REDACTED] Again, he is not authorized to talk about these other SARs.

15 [REDACTED] So he can't even answer if he went back and made another request?
16 Just generally overview.

17 Mr. Sullivan. So my understanding --

18 [REDACTED] Do you recall specifically any other --

19 Mr. Sullivan. My understanding is that the only reason we're speaking about this 20 today is that the SAR was leaked. And the SAR itself is a product that only law
21 enforcement under BSA and under FinCEN regulations is supposed to have access to. So 22 you're putting me in a compromising situation to speak to other SARs that I'm not 23 authorized to speak to. But, in my capacity, yes, I reviewed hundreds of SARs.

24 BY [REDACTED]

25 Q And so --

1 A Over my 3-year period in the unit.

2 Q Okay. So you do not -- was the answer that you don't recall if you reached 3 out to the other financial institutions, or is it that you're relying upon the instruction of 4 agency counsel not to answer the question?

5 [REDACTED] He's not authorized to talk about specific SARs and if he had a
6 communications afterwards about specific data within the SARs.

7 BY [REDACTED]

8 Q Okay. And --

9 A And I'm not trying to be difficult. I want to address all of your questions.
10 So, if it's about the BOA SAR, I am pleased by all means.

11 Q And do you remember -- going back to a previous question, do you
12 remember if any other leads were sent out based upon other SARs?

13 A Generally, but I can't speak to what specific SAR it was or what it was in 14 relation to. I can just say generally that we've reviewed SARs, and assessments have 15 gone out.

16 Chairman Jordan. Okay. So, in a general sense, were the SARs you got back
17 from other financial institutions similar to what you received from Bank of America in all 18 aspects? The number of people who were talked about, I mean, was that a general, 19 were they generally the same?

20 Mr. Sullivan. Again, a SAR, I have never read a SAR that was the same.

21 Chairman Jordan. I'm saying that -- okay.

22 Mr. Sullivan. Sorry.

23 [REDACTED] I'll enter as exhibit No. 5.

24 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 5.

25 Was marked for identification.]

1 BY [REDACTED]

2 Q This is an excerpt of testimony from Special Agent in Charge Bonavolonta
3 from the Boston Field Office. He came and testified before the committee. And, you
4 know, there's several pages of excerpts. I'll point you in the general direction of where 5 I'm going to read from. But please feel free to take as much time as you would like to 6 review.

7 A Thanks. This is portions of it. I'm sorry.

8 Q This is just portions of it. The front of it you'll see is the cover page of the 9 transcribed -- and then just relevant portions that I may refer to.

10 A Okay.

11 Q Okay. And I want to kind of refocus on the leads that were sent out by 12 other units or divisions that you were unaware of. Is that an accurate statement?

13 A Yes.

14 Q Okay. So, on page -- I'm referring to page 12. There is an answer section 15 from Mr. Bonavolonta. And I will just read that into the record. It says, "So they 16 brought the information to my attention, first and foremost, to make me aware that a 17 lead had been sent to our office from a unit within FBI headquarters that fell under the 18 Office of Private Sector. And the lead, the lead itself was for informational purposes
19 only. There was no directive in the lead to do anything, you know, from an investigation 20 standpoint. However, in the body of the lead, there was an information that was 21 provided by Bank of America following a certain number of criteria that in essence
22 aggregated a list of individuals that were supposedly living up in the New England area,
23 you know, either had potentially made certain credit card purchases for hotel
24 reservations or plane tickets or potential purchases at certain gun stores in and around 25 January 6th or plan for inauguration date like around January 20th, in that timeframe."

1 So is it your understanding that the lead was -- any other leads would have been
2 sent out by the Washington Field Office because SEC Bonavolonta seemed to think that it
3 came out of the Office of Private Sector? Are you aware of any other leads that were 4 sent from the Office of the Private Sector?

5 A So, no, and my general -- again, this is only part of, you know, his testimony,
6 so I can't speak to collectively how I might interpret this. But only from what you're 7 presenting to me, the Office of Private Sector wouldn't be the one to send out any kind of 8 operational or investigative lead. It would be the Strategic Engagement Unit or some 9 unit at headquarters. It could also be from a field office, such as, including but not 10 limited to WFO, the Washington Field Office. So it wouldn't have come from the Office
11 of Private Sector, number one. And, in terms of the leads, I'm sorry, your specific 12 question? I just want to make sure I'm answering it fully.

13 Q Yeah, so my question was, were you aware of any other leads that were sent 14 from the Office of Private Sector?

15 A My understanding there were no leads sent from the Office of Private 16 Sector, which is a headquarters, overarching the Office of Private Sector.

17 Q Okay. And then, further down on page 12 that I already read into the 18 record about, in essence, aggregated list of individuals that were supposedly living up in 19 the New England area. When you received the information, was it aggregated in that 20 type of way where the individuals or entities were sorted into geographic areas?

21 ██████████ What information are you asking about?

22 BY ██████████

23 Q The supporting documentation for the 211 individuals or entities.

24 A It was not aggregated by region.

25 Q And how would -- do you know if other field offices or other units at

1 headquarters aggregated that information based upon region?

2 A I mean, I don't know how either Washington Field Office -- again, going back
3 to Office of Private Sector, they would not put -- they would not send leads out period. I
4 think -- I think -- what then SEC Bonavolonta meant was a headquarters entity that 5 handles private sector leads. Office of Private Sector is an actual thing at headquarters
6 that's not in the Counterterrorism Division. So there is that. I'm sorry. Specifically?

7 Q I was just asking, were you aware of any steps that were taken to aggregate
8 the list based upon region?

9 [REDACTED] Do you know from reading this where this information specifically 10 came from?

11 Mr. Sullivan. No.

12 [REDACTED] Just --

13 Mr. Sullivan. I mean, in terms of what?

14 BY [REDACTED]

15 Q Okay. Back to the question that I asked.

16 A Yeah. I want to answer your specific question. That's why I asked.

17 Q So are you aware of any steps that were taken to aggregate the list based 18 upon region?

19 A By Bank of America?

20 Q By the FBI?

21 A No, I'm not aware.

22 Q Okay. So you're not aware SEC Bonavolonta received some sort of list that 23 was aggregated specifically to his region and area of responsibility. You wouldn't know
24 how that information got put together by the FBI?

25 A No, no.

1 Q And then, if you turn to page 17, at the very bottom, the last question that
2 was posed on that page is, "How many individuals were included on that list that were in 3 the jurisdiction of the Boston Division?" Answer, "Approximately six or seven, or around 4 that number."

5 And I know you testified previously that you were not aware of these leads being
6 sent out. But, just to make it clear for the record, you were not aware that another 7 headquarters unit or field office was sending, you know, lists of individuals specific to 8 field office area of responsibility to that field office for information purposes?

9 A At that time?

10 Q Correct.

11 A Correct.

12 Q And when did you come to know that that had happened?

13 A Not until much later that Washington Field Office was using the information.

14 Q Okay.

15 [REDACTED] I'll just mark as exhibit No. 6 testimony from Mr. Steve Jensen, who 16 was the section chief of the Domestic Terrorism Operations Section at this time.

17 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 6.

18 Was marked for identification.]

19 Mr. Sullivan. This is also not the whole thing, correct?

20 BY [REDACTED]

21 Q Correct. It's just relevant excerpts that we may refer to. Have you had 22 sufficient time to review it?

23 A I mean, it's partial, so we might as well just jump to it.

24 Q Okay. So, on page 147, Representative Gaetz asked Mr. Jensen, "What was 25 the Bank of America information that was provided?" Mr. Jensen said, "My

1 understanding -- and, again, I didn't see the information directly. I was made aware of 2 certain leads that were sent out of field offices. I don't recall how many. My
3 understanding of that information was it was certain purchaser transaction
4 individuals -- of individuals that Bank of America provided over to the FBI that wasn't
5 requested by the FBI. It was of their own volition."

6 I just wanted to provide some context. If we go to page 149, I'll ask -- read some 7 more, and then ask a specific question, but I wanted to make sure you had all the context.

8 A Well, I don't have all the context, but, with what you're giving me, yes.

9 Q Correct. So, as he had said previously, he was made aware that leads were 10 being sent out to other field offices. And, down towards the bottom of page 149 in a 11 response, he says, "But, as I noted, one of my employees made me aware that and we 12 took -- I didn't get to this part, but we took immediate action to pull those leads out of 13 our system." Mr. Gaetz said, "When was that?" Mr. Jensen said, "It was immediate 14 upon finding out that those leads existed. I don't know the date. It was a verbal 15 briefing that I received."

16 Were you ever made aware that Mr. Jensen or anyone at the Washington Field
17 Office or headquarters was pulling leads back based upon the Bank of America
18 information?

19 A Pulling leads, no.

20 Q Okay. Were you -- did you ever find out that it was like taken out of the FBI
21 system -- any leads were taken out of the FBI system based upon the Bank of America
22 information?

23 A Not at the time.

24 Q Not at the time.

25

BY [REDACTED]

1 Q I would like to go back to your thresholds that were sent to Bank of America.
2 Who put together these thresholds?

3 A Who put together the thresholds? The brainstorming discussion that I had 4 with Bank of America.

5 Q So that would be you and representatives from Bank of America?

6 A Executives at Bank of America, correct.

7 Q Was FinCEN involved?

8 A FinCEN was the one that sanctioned the first call that discussed fact-based 9 patterns that may help banks identify potential threats to Inauguration Day.

10 Q Did they include these fact-based patterns or thresholds?

11 A Yeah, I think -- I mean, I think I have spoken to that today already that the 12 fact-based patterns were discussed on the first FinCEN call and thereafter.

13 Q Okay. So which one of these thresholds were prepared by you and Bank of 14 America, and which ones were prepared by FinCEN?

15 A I couldn't tell you specifically. I can just tell you that that was a collective 16 brainstorming that we came up with fact-based patterns that could help them identify 17 potential threats to inauguration.

18 Q And so, when you're putting together fact-based patterns, what are you 19 relying on to do that?

20 A Just my own understanding of the threat itself. And then, if you're a data
21 analyst, understanding data and data capabilities both of the financial institution as well
22 as what might be useful to law enforcement and further looking at that data.

23 Q So what are you looking for when you're looking at that financial data? I
24 mean, you're on a call with Bank of America, and you guys are trying to determine 25 thresholds, what's that discussion like?

1 A Most of it is about, you know, when you're talking about narrowing focus,
2 you're talking about narrowing focus by relying on data that collectively may help narrow
3 that focus significantly.

4 Q And were these thresholds sent to other financial institutions?

5 A Those exact I couldn't tell you. I don't think those exact, but similar in 6 terms of the inauguration threat.

7 Q And, when you sent these thresholds, what was the expectation?

8 A You mean, when I emailed those thresholds that you're talking about?

9 Q Correct.

10 A The expectation was, if those helped them narrow their focus, that we 11 would -- we would be happy to review any information that met their thresholds for 12 sharing the information back to law enforcement.

13 Q So you stated before that this was sent by Bank of America of their own
14 volition. But you sent these thresholds and discussed a SAR product idea. Is that 15 right?

16 A I'm sorry; what's the question?

17 Q Well, the question is, is it voluntary for Bank of America to file a SAR after 18 discussing the very thresholds that were subsequently filed by Bank of America with you?

19 A Under BSA, it would be up to the bank exclusively whether or not they met 20 SAR thresholds?

21 Chairman Jordan. Anyone not respond?

22 Mr. Sullivan. You're going to have to clarify.

23 Chairman Jordan. Any financial institutions you sent similar requests to, like you
24 did the Bank of America, and Bank of America sent you back information, including 25 documentation that included 211 American customer names, any other financial

1 institutions you sent similar stuff to, did they not respond?

2 Mr. Sullivan. Of the folks that were on the FinCEN call? Of the banks or 3 financial institutions on the FinCEN call?

4 Chairman Jordan. You can limit it how you want. The question I'm specifically
5 asking is, financial institutions who received a similar request to what was in this email
6 that went to Bank of America, did any of them not respond?

7 Mr. Sullivan. I mean, my issue with your question is did they all not -- did any not
8 respond to the same request? I can't say that every institution had the same request.
9 There were a number of institutions on the FinCEN call that I did not have a followup
10 one-on-one phone conversation with or otherwise that produced SARs that related to the 11 unknown threat to Inauguration Day.

12 Chairman Jordan. Okay. Fair enough. Any of them that you did send 13 something out to today and not respond?

14 [REDACTED] Do you want to take a minute?

15 Mr. Sullivan. Sure.

16 [REDACTED] Off the record.

17 [Discussion off the record.]

18

BY [REDACTED]

19 Q Back on the record.

20 A So it's a hard question to ask because it was 3 years ago. But I want to 21 answer your question. So it's hard for me to answer whether there was any financial 22 institution that I had either a phone discussion with or who was on the FinCEN -- original
23 FinCEN call that didn't produce SARs. I can't recall any financial institution that didn't 24 produce SARs during that time.

25 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

1 Mr. Sullivan. I can't speak to 3 years ago if you're asking me that very specific
2 question.

3 Chairman Jordan. So I just want to make sure we understand, there's a phone
4 call before the 1/15/2021, 9:56 a.m. email that you sent to -- to folks at Bank of America.
5 There's a phone call prior to that. In that phone call, there is a call between you guys, or 6 is that the FinCEN call?

7 Mr. Sullivan. No, the -- before the 1/15 and 9:56 a.m. email, there was a phone
8 call to -- between myself and one of the people in the attention line on this email.

9 Chairman Jordan. Tell me when the FinCEN call happened because I don't have 10 that document.

11 Mr. Sullivan. Two days after the Capitol riots.

12 Chairman Jordan. So prior to all of this?

13 Mr. Sullivan. Correct.

14 Chairman Jordan. Okay. And you're saying, based on the FinCEN call, there 15 were a number of SARs that were sent to you guys?

16 Mr. Sullivan. That were highlighted to us. They were published to the FinCEN
17 portal.

18 Chairman Jordan. Highlighted to you guys?

19 Mr. Sullivan. There were a number of financial institutions that may have 20 published that didn't alert me, and FinCEN wound up also passing out to other law
21 enforcement agencies, us being included in that, that FinCEN tag that they decided all 22 Capitol riot SARs would be tagged with that FinCEN tag.

23 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

24 Mr. Sullivan. So I just want to make it clear, I'm receiving SARs from FinCEN at 25 the time, but I'm also receiving, "Hey, you might want to take a look at this. We've

1 already published it to the FinCEN portal."

2 Chairman Jordan. From the institutions themselves. From the financial
3 institutions. Okay. Got it. Then you have this email, and then there's another phone
4 call before the email where you lay out the thresholds?

5 Mr. Sullivan. Correct.

6 Chairman Jordan. Okay. And we've established, I think, throughout the day
7 that you had similar types of correspondence with other financial institutions you are not
8 allowed to get into. But my question is, of those other financial institutions that you've 9 talked to, did any of them not send you -- did any of them not send you a SAR?

10 Mr. Sullivan. Again, my answer is nuanced because, number one, it was 3 years
11 ago. Number two, the FinCEN call would have allowed institutions to be able to 12 determine whether or not they met SAR thresholds just from the FinCEN call. That 13 didn't require any followup conversation with me. Some did; some didn't. So me
14 speaking directly about that, to what you're saying specifically, I couldn't say.

15 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

16

BY [REDACTED]

17 Q And, on the FinCEN call, the thresholds that you're speaking about that some 18 financial institutions may have just taken and run with it, those thresholds were identified
19 by FinCEN and FBI. Is that accurate?

20 A I believe that they were brainstorming thresholds that we discussed on the 21 call. The call wasn't exclusively the FBI participation. I couldn't speak to other law
22 enforcement agencies that would log in. I can tell you that we were receiving tips and 23 leads and covering down on open investigations at the same time that this call is going 24 on. I do remember also being at home and handling other unclassified leads that were 25 tied to the Capitol riots investigations. So, once I was done talking about my

1 brainstorming of fact-based patterns that had -- might collectively help narrow their 2 focus, I was on to what I was working on. And I couldn't tell you who at FinCEN was 3 saying, "Yes, we don't like these fact-based patterns, or we like these fact-based 4 patterns." What I do remember FinCEN saying is, "Hey, any SARs that results, anything
5 that you the banks collectively are able to publish on SAR thresholds, we would request
6 that you use this specific FinCEN tag to group these in." So that's -- I mean, that's the --

7 Chairman Jordan. Did the FinCEN make -- maybe a couple -- did FinCEN make 8 similar suggestions on what the threshold should be, like what you did in the Bank of 9 America communication?

10 Mr. Sullivan. Like what? Like, sorry, I know -- I think I know what you're asking, 11 but if you could fine tune it.

12 Chairman Jordan. In your notification, you have timeframe purchased, location
13 purchased overlaid with any firearm purchase at any particular time. So you had these 14 sort of three things there. Did FinCEN do the similar stuff in that notification?

15 Mr. Sullivan. I think it was weapons-related and not firearms purchases.

16 Chairman Jordan. Fair enough. Did FinCEN do something similar?

17 Mr. Sullivan. I don't recall if FinCEN did something similar. I do recall the 18 FinCEN tag being on just about every SAR linked to the Capitol riots after that. So, based 19 on their directive, I do remember -- even if I were to get a SAR that was published in the 20 FinCEN portal, in this case, Bank of America, they sent it to me in a secure portal, as well
21 saying "this has been published. FinCEN, that tag was on that SAR and other SARs that 22 followed that.

23 Chairman Jordan. Okay.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q We talked a little earlier about these thresholds. I think you said that you

1 assumed that these three thresholds needed to be met. Is that right?

2 A I didn't say that they needed to be met. This, again, going back to -- this is
3 a -- you have to understand my job role as the finance sector liaison is to engage with 4 these executives and brainstorm and talk about the threat. So this wasn't what we 5 needed but, rather, what we discussed.

6 Q So, when you said, "We are prepared to action immediately the following
7 thresholds," what did you mean by action?

8 A First of all, with every institution that I work with directly, especially at the 9 executive level, because I had weekly, daily, weekly, monthly engagement with these 10 executives, they would know what that meant. That would mean we would review it.
11 And, if anything met additional assessment level, low-level investigative activities, that it
12 wouldn't necessarily be based on the SAR, but that they knew we would review what they 13 had immediately.

14 Q And so, when these thresholds that follow, it could have been one that Bank
15 of America could have understood this to mean one individual threshold being sufficient?

16 A No. What was discussed on the call was that the thresholds in and of 17 themselves -- and I want to make this clear: There was an assumption on the phone call 18 as well as the email that these thresholds had to collectively be met. There was never 19 an indication of Bank of America -- especially at the executive level -- that would be highly 20 unusual. And I've never experienced this in the 3 years that I was finance sector liaison 21 where they take one of those fact-based patterns and say, "We've got a great SAR from 22 just this one fact-based pattern," because that would be -- from a data standpoint, would 23 be an unruly number of volume and irrelevant for us to even take a look at it. So it was 24 understood that these were collective thresholds.

25 Q Okay. The last asterisk -- I'll read it into the record. It states, "SEU intends

1 to capture with its FI partner concurrence all customers who might be more strategic in 2 carrying out the tags related to CTD interest, travel with weapons by vehicle, and not by 3 air given the current threat and aftermath of the 6 Jan Capitol Building incidents. The 4 intention by SEU is to identify all potential networks or threats, those individual threats to 5 Inauguration Day and beyond." What did you mean by FI partner concurrence?

6 A Financial institution.

7 Q Specifically, FI partner concurrence?

8 A Financial institution partner concurrence.

9 Q Meaning with their agreement, with their?

10 A No, the assumption there was, again, if they met information-sharing 11 thresholds under BSA, that, you know, again we would review it.

12 Q And the language to identify --

13 A If I can add, if anything, that's -- I wouldn't even necessarily, you know, 14 discuss this in an email. But the assumption there is that the institution is always under 15 BSA reporting thresholds. So I wouldn't see the data unless it was in an open
16 investigation where I was sharing like specific information of an investigation or a soft 17 copy of the grand jury subpoena to be expedited so that we can get records faster.
18 Does that make sense?

19 Q Yeah.

20 A Does that answer your question fully?

21 Q Yeah, I think so. When you say "to identify all potential networks or threats 22 versus individual threats to Inauguration Day and beyond," what did you mean by and 23 beyond?

24 A So the beyond was discussed -- I remember having a conversation with an 25 analyst in the domestic terrorist section that discussed, along with the earlier memo of

1 "unclassified for official use only" memo that went out by Office of Private Sector that
2 detailed potential unknown threat to Inauguration Day. That beyond -- the original
3 Inauguration Day was March the 4th, the 3rd or 4th. And, after whatever amendment
4 that was made, to change the date from March 4th to January 20th, that was discussed
5 on the phone call with Bank of America. And I can say that, you know, that was a 6 general date range. It wasn't -- we were requesting specific date range from Bank of 7 America that again was up to the bank's threshold.

8 Q So were all individuals that met the criteria of these thresholds viewed as 9 potential network threats?

10 A I'm sorry; were all?

11 Q All 211 individuals, were they considered, in your words, a part of networks
12 of threats?

13 A No.

14 Q Did anyone from Bank of America question the legality of the thresholds?

15 A No.

16 Q Did anyone from Bank of America express concern about the scope of the 17 thresholds?

18 A No.

19 Q Did you have to receive approval from supervisor or anyone at the FBI
20 before sharing these thresholds?

21 A No, but I did discuss them as I would normally discuss them with upper 22 management. My -- typically my direct writing official, which is also a GS-15 and a chief.

23 Q And how did those discussions go?

24 A Great. Like specifically what?

25 Q Did he or she express any concern?

1 A No.

2 Q So, going into these thresholds, how did you expect Bank of America to sort
3 its customers' financial data according to these thresholds?

4 A I couldn't tell you. You'd have to ask Bank of America.

5 Q You don't have any idea of what methods Bank of America might use?

6 A I don't have access. Law enforcement doesn't have access to bank records
7 and proprietary data.

8 Q Sure, but you're a financial sector liaison expert, and your testimony is that 9 you don't have any idea how Bank of America might return customers based on the 10 thresholds you provided?

11 A Yeah, again, I don't want to speak for the bank. I can tell you what I did.
12 Once I reviewed the SAR, I understood that -- and the bank knew this too -- that I would 13 need to review the SAR fully and its content to determine next steps for law enforcement.

14 Q Did the SAR reveal the methods that Bank of America used?

15 A No.

16 Q Did the supporting documentation?

17 A Outside of the fact-based patterns that were notated in the SAR narrative, 18 no.

19 Q The supporting documentation didn't either?

20 A The supporting documentation highlighted additional information on the 21 211.

22 Q And what was that additional information?

23 A It was just names. It was basic information. Name, address.

24 Q Do you think Bank of America could have used merchant category codes?

25 A You'd have to ask them. It would be under their capabilities.

1 Q So that wouldn't be unusual?

2 A For them to use merchant codes in reviewing criminal activity or suspicious
3 activity, no. Anything the bank had access to would be my understanding from my 4 interactions with the banks. It would be -- the capabilities are vast. The critical point
5 is, do they meet SAR thresholds under BSA? Yes or no? So my receiving end of that 6 would be law enforcement access to that.

7 Q Did you have any concern with the thresholds that were shared?

8 A No.

9 Q And, when these thresholds were shared, were there specific identifiable
10 individuals you were interested in, or was this created -- did those fact-based patterns
11 include specific identifiable individuals, or was it just based off looking at raw data?

12 A I mean, my review of the SAR was more about the data and understanding 13 the data to determine whether, you know, what next steps to take, whether, in this case, 14 the guardians that we pushed out, the four that we pushed out.

15 Q One of the thresholds states -- the fourth threshold, it states, quote, "any 16 historical purchase" -- and then, in brackets, you write, "going back 6 months generally 17 for weapons or weapons-related vendor purchases."

18 What did you mean what you said any historical purchase.

19 A Well, the financial institutions generally, generally do not know specific 20 purchases, so, to your point of merchant category codes, they may be looking for those 21 merchant category codes that typically have weapons-related transactions. But there
22 would be no way to determine without a doubt that there were a weapon per se. So, 23 when this was -- this again was a discussion that met a fact-based pattern that was 24 discussed on the call.

25 Q And, when you said any historical purchase, you meant any historical

1 purchase?

2 A Well, it says going back to 6 months generally. That's what Bank of 3 America felt would narrow their focus enough, at least initially in reviewing the data.

4 Q So Bank of America pushed back against any historical purchases?

5 A No, that's not what I said. My understanding is that there -- of the phone 6 call and this email, that this was the brainstorming discussion result.

7 Q Another one of the thresholds mentions purchases made for hotel, Airbnbs,
8 RSVPs in the DMV area, in brackets, the day before and during Inauguration Day since 9 1/6/21. Is purchasing lodging ordinarily evidence of criminal activity?

10 A No, none of -- any one fact-based pattern by itself is not an indicator -- all 11 three together are not an indicator. But, again, this was about the collective fact-based 12 patterns. I can also tell you I have never reviewed a SAR that would ever have one of 13 those fact-based patterns as the SAR. If it had, it wouldn't have been pushed to me by 14 an executive at a financial institution, and my initial review of it would be dismissive.

15 Q Is it normal for SARs to contain the names of 211 individuals or entities?

16 A Define normal.

17 Q Have you received a SAR with that number of persons before?

18 A It's up to the financial institution and the suspicious activity that they're 19 meeting thresholds for of whether or not they're including other individuals in that. So,
20 to answer your question, yes, I have seen many SARs that have more than one individual
21 on the SAR.

22 Q Is it how you have seen --

23 A I have seen thousands.

24 Q Thousands?

25 A Yeah.

1 Q Okay.

2 A And, again, I want to clarify, too, my original comment earlier this morning
3 was there are 5 million SARs that are produced that FinCEN can discuss with you at length
4 the various -- the scope of what's included in the SAR narrative. But, at the end of the 5 day, the FinCEN regulator is still the regulator for all those SARs, and the institutions are 6 responsible for what goes into the SAR and what's published.

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q Of the 211 names in there, how many of those persons did you investigate
9 or did you send to have investigated?

10 A Again, it wasn't an investigation. At the headquarters level, in order to 11 mitigate potential risk, we agreed that we satisfied the threshold of a guardian, which is 12 like a no-stone-untuned assessment. We determined, based off of my interaction with 13 Bank of America, my followup conversation on specifically the weapons-related 14 transactions that I wanted to understand which ones were made after January 6th that 15 we were able to drill down to only the four of the 211.

16 Q And the names that didn't reach the level of guardian, were those names
17 stripped from the FBI databases or anything?

18 A No.

19 Q They remain --

20 A No. The SAR, as published in FinCEN, all of law enforcement had access to 21 that SAR, not just the FBI. So any law enforcement agency, once this was released to 22 FinCEN, had access to that Suspicious Activity Report.

23 Q Do they continue to have access to that Suspicious Activity Report?

24 A Any SAR. And I can't speak to FinCEN. I have no idea if they have 25 redaction procedures or not. But I am sure FinCEN could answer that.

1 Q Do you know if there are retention limits on how long the SAR can remain in 2 the system?

3 A No, I think, for bank information generally on the bank side, it's 5 to 4 10 years.

5 [REDACTED] Do you know from personal knowledge?

6 Mr. Sullivan. No. FinCEN would have that information because they're the 7 steward of the data. They also house the data.

8 [REDACTED] Can we go off the record.

9 [Discussion off the record.]

10 BY [REDACTED]

11 Q We can go back on. So is it a normal process for SARs to be sent directly to 12 your email as it was in this case?

13 A What do you mean by normal?

14 Q How do you typically access a SAR?

15 A Either someone on my team accesses it through the FinCEN portal, or based 16 off of a bilat agreement that the Bureau has with FinCEN because of FBI is -- are power
17 users of SAR data, they can also access the data on our SIPRNet, FBI net system.

18 Q Do you know how many people access this filing?

19 A For which? For FBI net or for FinCEN portal?

20 Q Let's start within the FBI, the FBI net?

21 A I don't have those numbers. I can tell you that because of that bilat
22 agreement, because SARs are so critical to law enforcement, the fact that we have that 23 on FBI net accessible to our agents and analysts is huge. So FinCEN does an annual 24 report on users of their data. They wouldn't know what that number was unless they 25 spoke with the FBI, but they would have a number of FBI analysts and agents that log in

1 through the FinCEN portal.

2 Q Okay.

3 A I don't have the numbers. That's an information technology question for 4 us, and that's above my pay grade.

5 Q I apologize since I've been out of the room, but does FinCEN notify you when 6 they have a SAR?

7 A No, it would be impossible to notify when they have a SAR. However, in 8 some cases, like with the Capitol riots, because on that FinCEN call, they came up with 9 that FinCEN code to use in SARs related to Capitol riots, anything related to Capitol riots,
10 they were pushing SARs to me and other law enforcement entities. I think WFO, but I
11 can only tell you they pushed SARs to me during that timeframe. In a normal non-NSSE
12 event, right, I would never -- I may receive one of their products, which is kind of a 13 preliminary analysis of SARs collectively, you know, a potential threat. But, quite 14 frankly, I mean, it's not -- it wouldn't be typical, but during the Capitol riots, I did receive 15 SARs from FinCEN.

16 Q So all the SARs were tagged with a certain code that meant to get sent --

17 A Yes, that FinCEN wanted its financial institutions on that first Friday call after 18 the Capitol riots, they wanted the institutions to use.

19 Q Okay. And then, non-January 6th-type situations, what triggers FinCEN
20 reaching out to you with a SAR?

1 [1:21 p.m.]

2 Mr. Sullivan. Again, they have -- FinCEN, they -- over the years, they've taken on 3 different products where they're -- they review SARs and other BSA activity, like CTRs,
4 cash transactions above 10,000, and they'll put that in, almost like a summary product.

5 I can only speak to a few of them. They used to publish, I don't even know if 6 they still publish, flash reports, which is almost like a summary of multiple SARs on related
7 activities. So most law enforcement would have access to that just like they have access
8 to FinCEN portal for line item SARs that are going in there, thousands, you know, on a 9 daily basis.

10 [REDACTED] So were there, to the extent you know, individuals at FinCEN
11 who were reviewing every SAR that comes in?

12 Mr. Sullivan. On the Capitol -- for what?

13 [REDACTED] Beyond Capitol riots actually.

14 Mr. Sullivan. I can't speak to what FinCEN, you know, did or didn't do on that. I
15 just know that that tag prompted them to be able to, I guess in their own way, review
16 Capitol riots-related SARs.

17

BY [REDACTED]

18 Q So just to clarify, with respect to the Bank of America SAR, there was no legal 19 process provided to Bank of America?

20 A So, I mean, the question is odd because we only -- the partner engagement,
21 the Strategic Engagement Unit, in dealing with any private sector entity, will only deal in a 22 lawful avenue for sharing information.

23 Q Sure. Was process, in terms of a subpoena or national security
24 lever -- letter, sent to Bank of America in this specific instance?

25 A No.

1 Q And in the Bank of America filing --

2 A And if I could clarify, we wouldn't send process for information that was 3 provided to us based off of the financial institutions' meeting of SAR thresholds and they
4 produced in a SAR.

5 Q Thresholds in response to your email and the FinCEN call?

6 A No, not in response to anything. If we received a SAR or had access to a 7 SAR, there would be no subpoena provided for that, unless down the road after an 8 assessment or an investigation may be opened up on on an individual or business entity, 9 only then would we even want to provide grand jury subpoena for fuller records on that
10 individual.

11 [REDACTED] Can we go off the record for a minute?

12 [REDACTED] Sure.

13 [Discussion off the record.]

14 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q So just to continue to clarify, so when you asked for the supporting 17 documentation -- so the SAR is filed, it just has the general information -- when you 18 request the supporting documentation, you don't have to subpoena that?

19 A No.

20 Q You can just request that from the banks?

21 A No. No law enforcement needs to -- that has access to SARs needs to 22 subpoena for records that come -- supporting documents that come with the SAR, 23 provided it's attached to that SAR.

24 Q Okay. And are there any efforts to protect the privacy of the individuals
25 that are on there? How much -- well, are there -- step back.

1 Are there efforts to protect the privacy of individuals that are listed in that
2 supporting documentation?

3 A Well, in terms of there's no public access to that, correct.

BY [REDACTED]

5 Q On the filing provided by Bank of America, did it include historical purchases
6 of weapons?

7 A Yes.

8 Q Did it include historical purchases of lodging?

9 A You're talking about the supporting documents or the SAR?

10 Q Either.

11 A The SAR narrative discussed that as a threshold that was met.

12 Q Yeah.

13 A Correct.

14 Q So in the supporting documentation, did it include historical purchases of 15 lodging?

16 A The information captured in the supporting documents was related to that,
17 correct.

18 Q And did it include historical purchases of travel?

19 A Yeah. Any of the -- any of the thresh -- all thresholds that were discussed in 20 the SAR were directly related to the supporting documentation.

21 Q And once you received the filing, what was your expectation for how you
22 would use it at the FBI?

23 A Again, I mean, we receive thousands of tips and leads. SARs is one form of 24 raw intelligence we would receive. The financial institution filing the SAR knows that 25 law enforcement may or may not be, you know, the reviewer of their SAR.

1 Once we review it, we understand, does this warrant further assessment, and 2 then deal accordingly. In this particular case, we determined that there were four
3 Guardian assessments that were met.

4 Q And we may have touched on this already, but did you share the SAR
5 information with other FBI offices, apart from the four Guardian assessments?

6 A So when the four Guardian assessments were finished, and I spoke to this
7 earlier, we highlighted the four Guardian assessments -- there's a tag to each assessment
8 in what's called -- summarized them in what's called an electronic communication, or EC.
9 That EC that was done by our unit included the four Guardian assessments and the SAR
10 itself, and we uploaded it to our case file within the unit, and also the case file, which was 11 normal practice to -- if there is a case, if there is an investigation case file related to the 12 data you're looking at, you should upload it to that case file as well.

13 In this case, we uploaded it to the WFO case file on the Capitol riots, so that they 14 had access to the data and so that there wouldn't be any redundancy on any action or 15 nonaction that they felt was necessary reviewing the data.

16 Q And so when you uploaded the SAR, did that also include the supporting 17 documentation?

18 A I believe it did.

19 Q Would the Office of the Private Sector have access to that portal that you 20 uploaded it to?

21 A Yeah. Anybody with Sentinel case data access, FBI employee, would have 22 access to that.

23 ██████████ We can go off the record.

24 [Recess.]

1 [2:10 p.m.]

2 [REDACTED] Okay. We are back on the record.

BY [REDACTED]

4 Q And I want to start by talking a little bit about the Bank Secrecy Act, because 5 based on some of the questions earlier, it appears that there might be some 6 misunderstanding about it and about when legal process is and is not required. And I
7 would hate for any confusion about that to lead to legislation regarding the Bank
8 Secrecy Act based on a fundamental misunderstanding, so I just want to talk about it a 9 little bit.

10 The Bank Secrecy Act, among other things, one of its primary provisions is that it
11 requires financial institutions to report suspicious transactions relevant to possible 12 violations of law and regulation, correct?

13 A Correct.

14 Q So long as those transactions meet certain thresholds?

15 A Correct.

16 Q And it's up to the bank to determine whether or not they meet those 17 thresholds?

18 A Yes.

19 Q And that reporting requirement is something that the bank does pursuant to 20 the Bank Secrecy Act. It does not require a subpoena or a search warrant or anything
21 from law enforcement other than the Bank Secrecy Act itself --

22 A Correct.

23 Q -- correct?

24 A Correct.

25 Q So the Bank Secrecy Act itself is the legal process, correct?

1 A For financial institutions, correct.

2 Q Correct.

3 And I know, based on your educational background, that you're not an attorney,
4 but are you aware that, nearly 50 years ago, the Supreme Court ruled that the Fourth
5 Amendment does not apply to bank records because bank records are considered to be 6 the property of the banks and not the property of the customers whose records they 7 relate to.

8 A Yes.

9 Q You're aware of that, correct?

10 So to the extent that there's any restriction on the ability of banks to provide
11 financial records, those restrictions come from the Bank Secrecy Act --

12 A Correct.

13 Q -- correct?

14 And as you just said, that act requires the provision of certain records relevant to 15 suspicious transactions, correct.

16 A Correct. It obligates the financial institutions to report that activity.

17 Q And no legal process is required for that?

18 A For SARs --

19 Q For SARs.

20 A -- correct.

21 [REDACTED] And to be clear, when we're saying "legal process" meaning a 22 subpoena --

23 [REDACTED] Correct, exactly. A subpoena or --

24 [REDACTED] -- but basically the Act itself is legal process, but an additional 25 subpoena on top of the --

1 Mr. Sullivan. Yes, thank you for clarifying.

2 The Reporter. Hold on, please. Just one at a time, please.

3 [REDACTED] The Bank Secrecy Act itself is the legal process. A subpoena would
4 be a separate form of legal process. The Bank Secrecy Act itself provides legal authority
5 for banks to produce that information, correct?

6 Mr. Sullivan. Correct. Correct.

7 Sorry.

8 [REDACTED] And you were also asked a question about what steps you took to 9 ensure the privacy of the individuals whose names were referenced or incorporated by 10 reference into the Bank of America SAR. And I wanted to talk about the secrecy 11 provisions that are inherent and built into the Bank Secrecy Act. I'm actually going to 12 introduce those into the record. And apologies for making you look at a long section of 13 the U.S. Code.

14 Mr. Sullivan. It's okay.

15 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 7.

16 was marked for identification.]

17 [REDACTED] But I'm going to direct you to subsection -- so this is 31 United 18 States Code, Section 5318, the statute that was mentioned earlier. And if you look on 19 the second page of this, subsection (g), section (2).

20 [REDACTED] And the section we're looking at begins on the bottom of the second 21 column on the second page, and it goes on to the third page.

22 [REDACTED] Okay.

23 Mr. Sullivan. All right. Got it.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q So technically this is 5318 (g)(2)(A) little 2, and it says, "no current or former

1 officer or employee of or contractor for the Federal Government or of or for any State,
2 local, Tribal, or territorial government within the United States, who has any knowledge
3 that such report was made may disclose to any person involved in the transaction that 4 the transaction has been reported, or otherwise reveal any information that would reveal
5 that the transaction has been reported, other than as necessary to fulfill the official duties
6 of such officer or employee."

7 Is that what the statute says?

8 A Yes.

9 Q And is that what you were referring to when you said earlier that the SARs
10 are nonpublic and, therefore, the information contained in them is enough to maintain 11 the privacy of those individuals?

12 A Correct.

13 Q Thank you.

14 Now, I want to go back to -- sure. I'm also going to read into the record one of 15 the implementing regulations. This is from, I believe it's 31 CFR, Section 1020.410.
16 We're going to introduce this. And we are on, this is exhibit 8, correct?

17 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 8.

19

BY [REDACTED]

20 Q Actually, it's 1020.320. And if you look at the page that's numbered 1123
21 at the bottom. And in the middle of that page, section (2), it says, "Prohibition on 22 disclosures by government authorities. A Federal, State, local, territorial, or Tribal 23 government authority, or any director, officer, employee, or agent of any of the 24 foregoing, shall not disclose a SAR, or any information that would reveal the existence of 25 a SAR, except as necessary to fulfill official duties consistent with Title II of the Bank

1 Secrecy Act. For purposes of this section, "official duties" shall not include the 2 disclosure of a SAR, or any information that would reveal the existence of a SAR, in 3 response to a request for disclosure of nonpublic information or a request for use in a 4 private legal proceeding, including a request pursuant to 31 CFR 1.11."

5 Did I read that correctly?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And that is, again, your understanding of the secrecy provisions, or the 8 privacy provisions, I should say, of the Bank Secrecy Act?

9 A Yes.

10 Q Thank you.

11 ██████████ So just to put a finer point on this, in the prior hour the question was 12 asked to you, were there any efforts made to protect the privacy of the individuals
13 mentioned in the Bank of America SAR?

14 The answer is that the regulation, the Bank Secrecy Act itself, both inherently 15 provide for those privacy protections, correct?

16 Mr. Sullivan. Correct.

17 ██████████ Thank you.

18 BY ██████████

19 Q Now, I want to talk -- go back, and even though this ground has been 20 trudged quite a bit today, I think it's necessary to go back and just make some 21 clarifications, because I believe we've been loosely using the word "request" to describe 22 your email to Bank of America.

23 And I just want to be clear, this email was a memorialization of criteria that you 24 and the banks had discussed and agreed upon that might be helpful for them in 25 identifying suspicious transactions that could be related to potential violence surrounding

1 the inauguration, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q And there was no request in that email for the banks to take any particular 4 action, correct?

5 A Correct.

6 Q And there was no order for the banks to take any particular action?

7 A Correct.

8 Q No compulsion, no pressure?

9 A Correct.

10 Q I believe you -- it was characterized as you saying, here's how we would like 11 it done, but the email didn't even suggest that, correct?

12 A Correct.

13 Q And the banks were free to disregard that criteria and use their own criteria
14 to determine what transactions needed to be reported under the Bank Secrecy Act as 15 relevant to possible violations of crimes that prevent terrorism or other forms of violent 16 activity, to include in their SARs, correct?

17 A Correct.

18 Q Now, you were asked several questions about SARs received from other
19 financial institutions regarding these same criteria or similar criteria. And putting aside
20 the fact, we understand it was 3 years ago, and it's very difficult to remember what you 21 did and didn't receive, but given that the banks have their own independent obligation to 22 review their records and report suspicious activity, and given that everybody was focused,
23 in the days and the weeks after January 6th, on preventing future violence in that vein, I
24 imagine it would be very difficult to distinguish between a SAR that was made in 25 response, say, to that FinCEN call, as opposed to one that the banks just came across on

1 their own accord, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q You were also -- you made a reference earlier, and I believe it was in 4 response to a question about your use of the phrase "January 20th and beyond." And 5 you mentioned March 4th and the original inauguration date or something to that effect.
6 Can you explain what you meant by that and what you were referring to?

7 A Yeah. We discussed on the call, there was a -- the domestic terrorist 8 analyst, I remember there were discussions that came within the division that the 9 inauguration day, in terms of a threat, could also possibly mean the original inauguration
10 day, which was back -- I think changed in 1933 -- don't quote me on that -- as part of an 11 amendment, and that was permanently changed to what we know today as January 20th.

12 Q And do you recall there was a theory by QAnon and other domestic 13 extremist groups that former President Trump would actually be inaugurated on March 14 4th, that, quote/unquote, original inauguration date?

15 A I can't remember that specific, but variations of things like that.

16 Q Are you aware that Capitol Police had intelligence that showed a possible
17 plot to breach the Capitol by an identified militia on March 4th of 2020?

18 A Am I aware of who?

19 Q Capitol Police.

20 A That specifically, no.

21 Q Okay. But to be clear, there was concern, not just for violence at the actual 22 planned inauguration date, but that that same type of violence might happen again on 23 March 4th?

24 A That was the fear, correct.

25 Q That was the fear.

1 And you wanted to do what you could, using the lawful tools at your disposal, to 2 prevent that?

3 A Absolutely, yes.

4 Q Now, I want to ask you about some claims that have been made by some of 5 the witnesses in this investigation and by the majority. Are you familiar with 6 George Hill?

7 A I am.

8 Q Okay. And so you're aware that he's a retired FBI supervisory intelligence
9 analyst in Boston, correct?

10 A Yes.

11 Q And you're aware that he previously testified before this committee?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And in his testimony, he stated that Bank of America data-mined its 14 customer base and created, what he described, a huge list of any customer who used a 15 Bank of America debit card or credit card between the dates of January 5th to 16 January 7th.

17 To your knowledge, was that testimony accurate?

18 A No.

19 Q And why not?

20 A Only from the limited amount of what I've read that's been quoted, that's in 21 open source on what Mr. Hill testified to, he obviously wasn't a part of that actual 22 determining whether those assessments were, you know, reviewable and what that field
23 office was going to do with them, with the information.

24 So that particular quote that you're giving is just obviously just one piece that he 25 decided, for whatever reason, because he didn't have access to the information, that he

1 was going to focus on.

2 Q And to the extent that his understanding was that the only criteria to make it
3 onto the list was a financial transaction between those dates, that would be incorrect?

4 A Correct.

5 Q Okay. And he also testified that on top of that list, they put anyone who 6 had purchased a firearm during any date. That's incorrect as well?

7 A False, that's correct.

8 Q Because as we saw, Bank of America reported only firearms purchases from 9 July 2020 through --

10 A That also met --

11 Q That also met -- correct.

12 A -- the additional thresholds --

13 Q Exactly.

14 A -- which was key.

15 [REDACTED] Can I have a quick minute?

16 [REDACTED] Of course.

17 [REDACTED] Thank you.

18 [Discussion off the record.]

19 [REDACTED] Thank you.

20 [REDACTED] Thank you.

21

BY [REDACTED]

22 Q Mr. Hill also testified that there was a list of customers who used a B of A 23 product and who also purchased a firearm at any time that was then, quote, racked and 24 stacked and sent out as leads to the field office in Sentinel, from the case that the 25 Washington Field Office opened, quote/unquote.

1 Was that testimony accurate?

2 A No.

3 Q The entire list was not sent out as leads, correct?

4 A I can't speak to what any other FBI office did. I know that Washington
5 Field Office obviously from previous -- from discussions previously, that we uploaded the 6 information to Washington Field Office. I do know that later -- I found out later that 7 they used the information for further assessment. But I -- from everything that you've 8 read, my understanding is that did not happen the way that he described it. But I also 9 don't know what was in George Hill's head when he was speaking to this. A lot of it
10 didn't make sense to me.

11 Q Fair enough. And your understanding is that he did not actually see the 12 SAR itself --

13 A That's my understanding.

14 Q Thank you.

15 And during his transcribed interview, minority counsel posed a hypothetical to 16 Mr. Hill, and that hypothetical was that if counsel's sister visited him -- I'm sorry.

17 [REDACTED] Majority counsel.

18 BY [REDACTED]

19 Q Majority counsel. I'm sorry. Strange mistake to make.

20 -- but if his sister visited the D.C. area on January 5th, 2021, and made a purchase
21 at a Safeway, would her name have been on the list, and Mr. Hill testified, yes.

22 That was incorrect, wasn't it?

23 A That alone, but I wouldn't want to speak to hypotheticals either. I mean,
24 he would. I know he spoke about a lot of things that he wasn't aware of, but I don't 25 want to speak to any hypotheticals either, on my side of it anyways.

1 Q So last month after Bank of America produced documents to the majority,
2 including your January 15th email that's exhibit 1 to this transcribed interview, the 3 majority released a report entitled, "Financial Surveillance in the United States: How 4 Federal Law Enforcement Commandeered Financial Institutions to Spy on Americans."

5 Do you believe that the FBI commandeered Bank of America to do anything?

6 A No.

7 Q Do you believe that the FBI commandeered Bank of America's databases?

8 A No.

9 Q And I believe I covered this earlier, but I want to ask it again. Did the FBI
10 order Bank of America to conduct any search of its database in connection with your 11 email?

12 A No.

13 Q The minority's report alleged that Federal --

14 [REDACTED] The majority.

15 [REDACTED] The majority. It's been a day.

16

BY [REDACTED]

17 Q The majority's report alleged that Federal law enforcement officials were 18 brainstorming informal methods outside of normal legal processes for obtaining private 19 customer information from financial institutions.

20 What is your response to that allegation?

21 A It's false.

22 Q Okay. And why is it false?

23 A Because we've never exchanged information that we took any kind of 24 investigative activity on and whether that -- that wasn't lawful.

25 Q And also as we discussed earlier, legal process is not required for the

1 information that's produced in a SAR, correct?

2 A Specifically for a SAR, correct.

3 Q The report also criticizes the email you sent by saying that it constitutes a 4 request made without any legal process to individualize criminal nexus. And, again, it's 5 your understanding that legal process, such as a subpoena or a search warrant, was not
6 required for Bank of America to submit the information in that SAR, correct?

7 A Correct.

8 Q The report also referred to -- we discussed earlier, and this was a couple
9 hours ago now, but the DSAC portal that private corporations use to communicate 10 information and to submit information to the FBI, and the majority's report referred to 11 that portal as an obscure government-run portal or a back-door channel.

12 Would you agree with that assessment?

13 A From what I've seen, no.

14 Q And in fact, as we discussed earlier, there's a DSAC website explaining to 15 anybody who has access to the internet exactly what that portal is, who may join, and 16 what it does, correct?

17 A Correct.

18 Q Now, you know, we've talked a lot over this afternoon about legal process
19 and why it is not necessary for SARs. But I want to spend some time talking about the 20 times -- the situations in which you do use legal process.

21 The committee has received document productions from other financial 22 institutions, including Citibank, and I want to show some of those to you just to highlight 23 the difference between communications sent pursuant to legal process and the 24 communications related to SARs.

25 [REDACTED] So if I could have the -- I believe this is 9? Thank you.

1 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 9.
2 was marked for identification.]

3 [REDACTED] Thank you.

4 BY [REDACTED]

5 Q So if you look at the bottom, there's an email that you sent to another
6 individual at the FBI on January 7th, 2021. I don't know if that individual is an SES-level
7 personnel or not, and if not, then we'll make sure to have his name redacted, but can you
8 tell me what that person's role is at the FBI?

9 A That was my rating official of my -- my supervisor.

10 Q Okay. And the subject of the email is "Yellow - Florea." That's F-l-o-r-e-a.
11 And the email States, "Folks, good morning. As you might expect, the current situation 12 has turned this week into a busy week."

13 And I assume by "current situation," you meant January 6th?

14 A Correct.

15 Q Okay. "I have another one for you.

16 "Please check your holdings on Eduard Florea and all associated selectors below in 17 response to a Code Yellow, Pete."

18 And then you provided some more information, and we'll get to that in a minute.
19 But the first question I have for you is, can you explain what a Code Yellow is?

20 A Code Yellow is one of several -- part of a nomenclature we would use to 21 only -- in this instance and others -- discuss priority investigations where there's a 22 subpoena already involved.

23 Q Okay. So Code Yellow itself indicates that a subpoena has been issued for 24 the records?

25 A No. All I can say is that, in terms of protecting sources and methods,

1 existing investigations, this would apply to an existing investigation and a means to
2 prioritize an investigation for a financial institution that we're proactively sharing
3 information on that's covered by a grand jury subpoena.

4 Q Okay. Thank you very much.

5 A Yeah.

6 Q And underneath where you signed it Pete, it says, "FYA, Edward Florea, a 7 New York City resident who has claimed to be armed and intending to travel to D.C. to,
8 quote, unleash some violence, unquote. He previously urged violence against those he 9 disagreed with politically and posted a guide for how to create cyanide as well as photos
10 of knives. Florea was arrested in 2014 on firearms charges in New York City after the 11 NYPD seized 30 guns from his residence."

12 Did I read that correctly?

13 A Yes.

14 Q And then you have some biographical and personal identifying data for 15 Mr. Florea.

16 A Uh-huh.

17 Q Was it your understanding that the recipient of this email would forward it 18 to folks at the bank, at Citibank or whatever bank this was sent to, to identify 19 transactions?

20 A My under- -- so, again, without limiting what I say here, this has to do with a 21 priority investigation that's covered by a grand jury subpoena. The recipients in our 22 financial institutions would naturally involve those lower level that can do the queries in 23 order to understand more about their exposure.

24 Q And you would not make those queries, generally speaking, those types of 25 queries, that level of specificity, without a subpoena, correct?

1 A Yeah. This would have to be an open investigation.

2 Q Okay. And are you aware of whether Mr. Florea was ever arrested and 3 convicted in relation to the activities you describe below?

4 A I am not. There are some that I am, but I can't speak to it, and I wouldn't 5 know -- I probably wouldn't speak to it either because I wouldn't know if it was fully 6 adjudicated.

7 Q Okay. Well, I'm going to introduce a press release from the adjudication of 8 that, just for the record.

9 [REDACTED] And are we on 10? Thank you.

10 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 10.

11 was marked for identification.]

12

BY [REDACTED]

13 Q So this is a press release from the United States Attorney's Office for the 14 Eastern District of New York, dated December 16th, 2021. Is that correct?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And the press release reflects that Mr. Florea pled guilty and was sentenced 17 to 33 months in prison for threatening to kill Senator Raphael Warnock, correct?

18 A Correct.

19 Q And he also pled guilty and was convicted of being a felon in possession of 20 ammunition, correct?

21 A You are reading it correctly.

22 Q And he was found in possession of more than 1,000 rounds of ammunition
23 when authorities searched his residence pursuant to a warrant, correct?

24 A Correct.

25 Q And the press release reflects that Mr. Florea had made several posts about

1 traveling to D.C. and engaging in additional violence during the very hours when the 2 Capitol was under siege, correct?

3 A Correct.

4 Q For example, he posted, quote, Mine are ready, I am ready, we need to 5 regroup outside D.C. and attack from all sides. Talking to some other guys. I will keep 6 watching for the signal, end quote.

7 Did I read that correctly?

8 A Yes.

9 Q He also wrote, quote, Guns cleaned and loaded, got a bunch of guys all 10 armed and ready to deploy, we are just waiting for the word, end quote.

11 Did I read that correctly?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And then he said -- and this is the phrase that I believe was quoted in your 14 email -- quote, It's time to unleash some violence, end quote.

15 Correct?

16 A Correct.

17 Q Okay. I'd like to discuss another individual whose Citibank records you 18 requested in January of 2021.

19 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 11.

20 was marked for identification.]

21

BY [REDACTED]

22 Q Okay. So this is an email from you to that same -- I believe you said it was 23 the supervisor --

24 A Correct.

25 Q Correct. -- at the FBI, dated January 14th, 2021. And the subject line is

1 "Yellow - Hunt." And the email says, "Folks, Please run the following name and 2 associated selectors below in response to a Code Yellow.

3 "Brendan Hunt posted a video on social media calling for people to take back their 4 government and shoot up the inauguration day ceremony.

5 "We are interested in all suspicious activity, associations, and recent purchases.

6 "Thanks, Pete."

7 Did I read that correctly?

8 A Yes.

9 Q And then below that, there's a similar listing, as with the previous email, of 10 personal identifying information, correct?

11 A Correct.

12 Q Okay. And as you testified earlier, Code Yellow means that it's a prioritized
13 investigation?

14 A Yes.

15 Q Okay. And that there's a grand jury subpoena?

16 A It would be an open investigation.

17 Q An open investigation?

18 A Correct.

19 Q Okay. And are you aware of whether Mr. Hunt was arrested and 20 convicted?

21 A You're really quizzing me today.

22 Q That's okay.

23 A You know, there were a number of individuals that were part of the 24 prioritization system that involved people that were arrested.

25 Q And there were enough that you don't remember the details of all of them?

1 A Correct, yeah.

2 Q And these were the types of individuals who, because they had made threats
3 to commit additional violence after January 6th, the email that we sent earlier, the more
4 generalized email to Bank of America, was an attempt to uncover more potential suspects
5 who might be in a similar position, correct?

6 A Yeah. To be clear, the latter was within BSA.

7 Q Exactly.

8 A This was proactive from FBI open investigation.

9 Q Okay.

10 [REDACTED] And the open investigation, the proactive outreach from the FBI only 11 occurred with a subpoena in place?

12 Mr. Sullivan. Correct.

13 [REDACTED] Thank you.

14 [REDACTED] Okay. I would like to introduce the press release from Mr.
15 Hunt's sentencing.

16 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 12.

17 was marked for identification.]

18

BY [REDACTED]

19 Q All right. So this is a press release, again, from the United States
20 Attorney's Office in the Eastern District of New York, and it was issued on November
21 22nd, 2021. And this press release reflects that Brendan Hunt was sentenced to 19
22 months in prison for threatening to assault and murder Members of U.S. Congress, to 23 impede, interfere with, and intimidate those Members, and to retaliate against them on 24 account of their performance of their official duties, correct?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And the press release reflects that on January 8th, 2021, just 2 days after the
2 Capitol riots, Hunt posted a video, titled, Kill Your Senators, that included the summary
3 "Slaughter Them All." Is that correct?

4 A Correct.

5 Q And he made additional threats in the video, exhorting his viewers to 6 violence and telling them, quote, We need to go back to the U.S. Capitol when all the 7 Senators and a lot of the Representatives are there. And this time, we have to show up
8 with our guns, and we need to slaughter these MFs, end of quote.

9 Is that what's reflected there?

10 A You read that correctly.

11 Q Thank you.

12 And he also claimed that, quote, Our government at this point is basically a 13 handful of traitors, so what you need to do is take up arms, get to D.C., probably the 14 inauguration, so-called inauguration of this MF'ing communist Joe Biden. That'll 15 probably be the best time to do this, get your guns, show up to D.C., and literally just 16 spray these MFs, put some bullets in their f'ing heads. Is that correct?

17 A You read it correctly.

18 Q Okay. Probably a safe assumption that he actually spelled out the curse
19 words in the video.

20 A I don't know.

21 Q Sorry, you're not going to assume. Okay.

22 And then he said, If anybody has a gun, give it to me, I'll go there myself and shoot
23 them and kill them. We have to take out these Senators and replace them with actual 24 patriots.

25 That's what's reflected in the press release, correct?

1 A Correct.

2 Q All right. We're going to look at one more individual. This will be our last 3 one.

4 [REDACTED] This is 14, correct? Thirteen.

5 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 13.

6 was marked for identification.]

7

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q Okay. So this exhibit is an email that you sent to your supervisor also on 9 January 14th, 2021, with the subject line "Yellow - Lemke," L-e-m-k-e. And it says, 10 "Folks, Good morning. Please run the following name and associated selectors below in 11 response to a Code Yellow.

12 "On January 6th, 2021, Robert Corey Lemke made interstate threats of violence
13 targeting the family of a U.S. Congressman, as well as others, in furtherance of 14 anti-government, slash, anti-authority extremism. We are interested in all suspicious 15 activity and all recent purchases.

16 "Thanks, Pete."

17 Did I read that correctly?

18 A Yes.

19 Q And then below that, again we have the individual's personal identifiers?

20 A Correct.

21 Q And, again, because this is a Code Yellow, that means it was an open
22 investigation for which there was a grand jury subpoena for the information that you 23 requested?

24 A Correct.

25 Q And are you aware of whether Mr. Lemke was convicted of any offenses?

1 A I'm going to take a guess, probably. This particular instance, I don't have 2 the extent of the details.

3 Q Okay. Well, we will provide them.

4 [REDACTED] Before we go to that, just to be clear on these emails, the "from" and 5 "to," was there anybody blind-copied --

6 Mr. Sullivan. Yes.

7 [REDACTED] -- on these probably --

8 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah.

9 [REDACTED] -- from your general practice?

10 Mr. Sullivan. There are a number of executives that are blind-copy counted, 11 which would -- which is why you would see the email that you saw from Citibank.

12 [REDACTED] Sorry. Executives at the financial institutions or executives at the 13 FBI?

14 Mr. Sullivan. At the financial institutions. Blind-copy counted.

15 [REDACTED] Thank you.

16 Mr. Sullivan. The FBI person is in the regular attention line.

17 [REDACTED] Thank you.

18 BY [REDACTED]

19 Q Okay. So they're blind-copied, and that's why they were produced to us
20 from the bank, that the bank had -- that's how the bank became in possession of them
21 because --

22 A Aware.

23 Q -- they were blind-copied?

24 A Correct.

25 Q Thank you. And I appreciate that clarification.

1 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 14.
2 was marked for identification.]

3 BY [REDACTED]

4 Q So this is a press release from the United States Attorney's Office for the
5 Southern District of New York, so moving a little bit west here, and it's dated December
6 20th, 2021. And this press release reflects that Mr. Lemke was convicted and sentenced 7 to 3 years in prison for making interstate threats, correct?

8 A Correct.

9 Q And obviously it's a crime to make an interstate threat to kill Members of 10 Congress or their families?

11 A Yes.

12 Q Or really anyone?

13 A Correct.

14 Q And you were investigating that for him?

15 A The Counterterrorism Division was, correct.

16 Q Yeah, fair enough. Thank you.

17 The press release reflects that Mr. Lemke refused to accept the result of the 2020
18 Presidential election and sent electronic audio and video messages threatening
19 approximately 50 victims, including journalists, politicians, Members of Congress, and 20 individuals who had made statements expressing that then-President Trump had lost the 21 election, correct?

22 A Correct.

23 Q He even sent the Congressman from the New York City area a picture of a 24 home in the same neighborhood as the home of the Congressman's brother and stated,
25 Your brother is putting your entire family at risk with his lies -- and other words. We are

1 armed and nearby your house. You had better have a word with him. We are not far
2 from his either.

3 Correct?

4 A I'm sorry. Where -- what part of the article are you reading that from?
5 Sorry. I just --

6 Q It's on the second page, and one, two, three, four -- fourth and fifth 7 paragraph down.

8 A Oh, okay.

9 Correct.

10 Q These types of threats were not uncommon, correct, in the weeks
11 after -- and I don't mean specifically threats against Congressmen's brothers, but just 12 threats of violence?

13 A It wasn't -- I mean, it wasn't the only threat to Congressmen or other 14 officials. There were -- but, yes, there were several other threats.

15 Q And that's what your work was focused on in those weeks after January 6th 16 and before the inauguration?

17 A Correct.

18 Q And I want to completely switch gears and talk about a different type of 19 threat, because at the beginning of this interview, I believe that -- and I don't recall, I
20 apologize if it was you or your counsel that mentioned that threats and other concerns
21 about privacy are acutely present here in this case.

22 Has your name been publicized in relation to the majority's investigation about 23 Bank of America's searches?

24 A Yes.

25 Q And have you received any threats or harassment as a result of that

1 publication?

2 A I have not received any direct threats. However, the time around January
3 17th, when my name was released to -- in a letter to Director Wray, my personal cell
4 phone has been ringing off the hook.

5 Q With what kinds of calls?

6 A I don't pick up.

7 Q And do you know how your personal cell phone number was obtained?

8 A I don't know.

9 Q Do you have concerns for your safety or that of your family if, for example,
10 your name were not redacted from the testimony today?

11 A Yes. And I did then when I found out.

12 Q Okay. And have you been concerned basically consistently since January 13 17th?

14 A I wouldn't say consistently. More frustrated, but still concerned, yes.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q I just want to make one point for the record. Going back to what I believe 17 is exhibit -- what was introduced as exhibit 5, which is the testimony of Mr. Bonavolonta, I 18 want to make it clear, on page 13 of that testimony, you were asked a number of 19 questions about the leads that may have been involved in --

20 A Yeah.

21 Q -- and indicated you didn't have personal knowledge of that. But I do want 22 to note, Mr. Bonavolonta said in his testimony, quote, So I reviewed the lead, and it was 23 very clear in the lead that there was not a request to engage with anybody. Or we 24 weren't being directed to do anything.

25 Do you see where it says that?

1 A Yes.

2 Q So Mr. Bonavolonta said during his testimony there was no directive for his
3 field office to take any particular action with respect to that lead, correct?

4 A That's what he's saying.

5 Q Right.

6 A Correct.

7 Q He said that on the record, that there was no directive associated with that 8 lead?

9 A Correct. Without knowing what lead he's talking about, correct.

10 [REDACTED] Okay. Thank you.

11 [REDACTED] And the leads you sent out were the same, they did not contain 12 any directives?

13 Mr. Sullivan. Well, I can't speak exactly to any leads that Washington Field Office
14 or any other field office pushed out. I'm aware that they occurred after our four 15 assessments. So in this case, I'm just simply saying I don't know which lead he's 16 speaking of.

17 [REDACTED] Right. But he said he -- in his own words he said that there was no 18 directive, no order, no instruction, that they were to take any action with respect to that?

19 Mr. Sullivan. You're reading it correctly, yes.

20 [REDACTED] Thank you.

21 We can go off the record.

22 [Recess.]

23 [REDACTED] All right. We'll go back on the record.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q Picking back up, at some point, the Bank of America information was

1 recalled from FBI systems. Is that correct?

2 A I'm sorry. Repeat the question.

3 Q At some point, the Bank of America information was recalled from FBI
4 systems. Is that correct?

5 A Not to my knowledge, not the information that we sent out.

6 Q Okay. I'd like to now enter an excerpt of the transcript from the Judiciary
7 Committee's July 12th, 2023 hearing with FBI Director Wray into the record as exhibit 15.

8 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 15.

9 was marked for identification.]

10

BY [REDACTED]

11 Q And, again, that's just relevant excerpts.

12 A What page?

13 Q Page 33 and 34, if you want to take a second.

14 A All right.

15 Q I'll just go ahead and read into the record the relevant portions.

16 "Mr. Massie. In my remaining 1 minute, I want to turn to another issue.

17 George Hill, former FBI supervisory intelligence analyst in the Boston Field Office, told us
18 that the Bank of America, with no legal process, was -- gave to the FBI gun purchase
19 records with no geographical boundaries for anybody that was a Bank of America
20 customer. Is that true?

21 "Mr. Wray. Well, what I do know is that the -- a number of business community
22 partners all the time, including financial institutions, share information with us about 23 possible criminal activity, and my understanding is that's fully lawful.

24 "Mr. Massie. Did you --

25 "Mr. Wray. In the specific -- in this specific instance --

1 "Mr. Massie. Did you ask for that information?

2 "Mr. Wray. In the specific instance that you're asking about, my understanding is
3 that that information was shared with field offices for information only but then recalled
4 to even -- to avoid even the appearance of any kind of overreach. But my 5 understanding is that that's a fully lawful process."

6 What does it mean when information is recalled?

7 A It can mean a number of things, discontinued or otherwise. I don't want to 8 speak to what the interpretation here is of "recalled." I know that information cannot 9 be further pursued. It could be discontinued, but, again, I'm generalizing.

10 Q Is information removed from FBI systems when it's recalled?

11 A It depends on the instance. I can't speak to all instances where things are 12 recalled. I can only speak to my involvement in the Bank of America SAR and the 13 information that we dealt with.

14 Q Were you aware of this statement before just now?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And what's your reaction to it?

17 A That Director Wray is correct. I mean, he's informed on what 18 Counterterrorism did and didn't do with that information, so --

19 Q How soon after the Bank of America SAR was filed was the information 20 recalled?

21 A For which? So just to clarify, there was the assessments that we wrote 22 from my office and the information that was available to other folks that had access to 23 that in our Sentinel case file. That would include the field office who was running the 24 Capitol riots investigation and their case file, Washington Field Office.

25 Q I'm talking about whichever information was recalled.

1 A I'm only generally aware that information that was used for leads to other
2 field offices after we did our assessments, the four assessments that I detailed, that there
3 was some information that was discontinued and some information that was not
4 discontinued.

5 Q Information that included the Bank of America filing and supporting 6 documentations?

7 A I can't speak to specific information that was recalled. I can only speak to 8 the assessments we pushed out, and my general understanding that there was 9 information that another -- at least one other field office used to determine there may be 10 other leads that were relevant to this.

11 Q Were you part of the decisionmaking process to recall the information?

12 A For specifically what he's -- I can't speak to that.

13 Q So you weren't involved?

14 A I'm not -- I don't have the knowledge of that because I wasn't -- I have been 15 involved in other conversations related to this and other SARs with Office of 16 General Counsel in and around that timeframe. I can speak to that, but I can't speak to,
17 as an enterprise, what was decided on. I wouldn't be in a position to make those 18 decisions or know all of the information related to that.

19 Q Well, and that was the question. So were you a part of the decisionmaking
20 process to recall the information?

21 A No, not to my knowledge.

22 Q Do you know who made the decision to recall the information?

23 A Again, I don't know specifically what information was, quote/unquote,
24 recalled and what that constituted.

25 Q Are you aware of whether it included information that stemmed from the

1 Bank of America filing?

2 A Yeah. I only know that it was generally related to that filing. I know that
3 there was other information that was recalled not related to this filing.

4 Q Are you able to speak to what other information that is?

5 A No. Because I don't know.

6 Q You just know generally that there was other information?

7 A Uh-huh. Yes.

8 [REDACTED] So when you say that information was discontinued -- do I have 9 that correct? You used the word "discontinued"?

10 Mr. Sullivan. I used the word "discontinued," yes.

1 [3:07 P.M.]

BY [REDACTED]

Q When that happens, is there any directive to the field offices that goes along with that saying, "This information has been discontinued, you can't continue to investigate these leads"?

A If there is, that's up to the operations section or entity or the program management for their operations at headquarters. That's generally the decision that's made is involving them as kind of a forefront of that decision.

11

12

Q They would make that decision and then direct the field offices?

A I mean, I can't speak just for again the operations section. I'm telling you generally how it works. There may be other Office of General Counsel and other discussions at an executive level to determine if there would be a message or not that would discontinue something. From where I stand. From what I know.

16

Q When the director says that the information was recalled to avoid giving the appearance of any kind of overreach, was there any discussion around that that, that it was improper to request and receive this information from Bank of America?

17

A No.

18

[REDACTED] Are you saying was he in that discussion?

19

20

22

Q Were you in a discussion, or are you aware of any discussions about that? When it was recalled to avoid this appearance of any kind of overreach, was there any discussion of maybe we shouldn't have done this in the first place?

23

A There was no discussion of maybe we shouldn't do this in the first place.

24

Q Were you surprised that the information was recalled?

25

A Again, I don't know what specific information was recalled. Because,

1 remember, we had already pushed out our assessments on the four of the 211. I am
2 only generally aware that Washington Field Office used the information, and I don't know
3 what other field offices or any other entity that used the information, but the information
4 was accessible.

5 Q Have you ever had any other information that you worked to procure be 6 subject to this kind of recall before?

7 A Not to my knowledge. Not to my recollection. And, again, I don't want
8 to -- I don't want to beat a dead horse, but recall and what that means, I don't know
9 because I can only tell you what I did with the assessments that were involved and then 10 how we uploaded the information and how it was accessible.

11 Q After you upload the information and notice it was accessible, is your role
12 done at that point?

13 A Not necessarily. We can always revisit information that we think may 14 warrant for whatever reason, additional information where we feel like it may meet 15 threshold for further assessment, but that's rare.

16 Q Okay. Would you ever advise field offices on how to use the information
17 and how to conduct their investigations?

18 A Field offices would, you know, routinely contact us if we did write a 19 guardian. Typically, on an information-only guardian, we don't get a lot of questions, 20 but it varies. It varies by field office. There's 56 field offices and legats that would 21 receive the information that responses vary.

22 Q What do you think Director Wray meant by the appearance of overreach?

23 A I'm not going to speak for Director Wray, especially in my position. But,
24 you know, I can only tell you, you know, that, as far as the information that was closed on 25 the four assessments, to your previous question too, that we could have revisited the

1 information, but we did not. And, when the leak of the SAR occurred to FOX News on 2 the fourth, I believe, I have a general awareness that a lot of leads outside of the four that
3 we detailed were discontinued once the SAR was leaked.

4 Q So those leads were discontinued. Is the information still accessible on the 5 FBI databases?

6 A Which specific information?

7 Q The leads that were discontinued, can those still be accessed by FBI agents?

8 A Yeah, and you can see that it was discontinued as well.

9 Q Okay.

10 A Or you may see something along the lines of closed for various reasons,
11 because each field office may get the lead and respond in a slightly different way.

12 Q Okay.

13 A From my exposure to our case system and reviewing guardians.

14 [REDACTED] The last time you saw it and checked, right?

15 Mr. Sullivan. Yeah, from the last time I reviewed and checked.

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q I want to move back to the legal standard under the Bank Secrecy Act, as you 18 were brainstorming the thresholds with Bank of America, are there other limits on what 19 thresholds you can share?

20 A I mean, those limits would be intuitive, right? Can you be more specific?
21 Like what?

22 Q Are there limits in terms of the kind of transactions that you can express an 23 interest in as being possibly suspicious?

24 A From my law enforcement standpoint, there is various things that we can 25 discuss and brainstorm. So, in that sense, you know, it varies. It's a pretty wide scope.

1 Q Okay. So that standard, in other words, allows the Bureau to decide what
2 thresholds are suspicious and share that information with financial institutions.

3 [REDACTED] I'm sorry; can you repeat that question?

BY [REDACTED]

5 Q Yeah. The legal standard under the Bank Secrecy Act permits the Bureau to 6 determine what threshold its interested in actioning for the financial institution to 7 subsequently act on?

8 A No, I think the BSA -- so the BSA is the bank's regulation side. On the 9 Bureau side of it, under my authorities and FBI and DOJ authorities, my discussion can be 10 on various topics and brainstorm on various, you know, fact-based patterns or typologies, 11 indicators. So that's what I'm saying; it varies widely on the FBI, the Department of 12 Justice side. Under the BSA, that's the financial institution and what they're allowed to 13 do or capable of doing or responsible for reporting.

14 Q Sure, but you liaise with the financial sector. You worked with them in 15 putting together the thresholds. Are there limits on what thresholds you could decide 16 to share with financial institutions?

17 A As a financial institution?

18 Q No, as the Bureau.

19 A Yeah, I mean, I would say the same answer. You know, under the FBI DOJ
20 authorities, I'm able to speak about the threat, and I am able to brainstorm about 21 narrowing the focus of data. I mean, it's a wide scope. I think BSA puts more of 22 the onus on the institution to determine how they're going to report it but that it's their 23 obligation to report suspicious activity.

24 Q Okay. I would like to turn back to the transcript of Joseph Bonavolonta.

25 Page 14. At the bottom of the page, we discussed how -- we discussed who the lead

1 came in from. So the question is posed, "Who did the lead come in from?" "The lead
2 came in from our -- I believe the Strategic Engagement Unit, but I can't say for sure if
3 that's the actual name of the unit, but it fell under or falls under the Office of the Private 4 Sector, which --" "Is that in Boston or out of headquarters?" Answer: "No, out of 5 headquarters." Question: "Do you know if they solicited the information from Bank of 6 America or whether Bank of America just offered it up?" Answer: "The way it reads in 7 the lead, it was -- it did not solicit the information, that the information was just 8 proactively provided to them."

9 Do you agree with that statement that the information was just proactively
10 provided?

11 A Yeah, in my limited access to then SAC Bonavolonta's transcribed interview, 12 yes.

13 Q Do you have an idea why Mr. Bonavolonta believed the information was 14 proactively provided and not requested by the FBI from the way the lead reads?

15 A I'm not going to assume what he thinks by making that statement. I can 16 only tell you my perspective is, if I were him, if I'm reading it this way is because the fact 17 that it's in a SAR.

18 Q Okay.

19 A Yeah.

20 Q And, turning to page 17, there's a question at the middle of the page that 21 states, "And it was also represented to us that individuals were prioritized on that list if 22 they had a firearms purchase. Did that match your recollection?" Answer: "So I 23 don't have any knowledge of anybody being prioritized over a firearm purchase, but in 24 one of the criteria that was in there in terms of Bank of America's data was related to 25 purchases that had been made at either gun shops or, you know, stores that would sell

1 firearms." Is that accurate?

2 A Is what accurate? What you read?

3 Q Yes.

4 A Yes, what you read was accurate.

5 Q And is Mr. Bonavolonta's testimony accurate in terms of how it described
6 the Bank of America information?

7 A Can I review it again?

8 Q Of course.

9 A Again, my answer is going to be based off of limited access to this
10 transcribed interview. I don't have everything in front of me, but if I can just take a 11 second and review this. Yes, I would say that it's correct in that it's weapons-related 12 transactions.

13 Q Okay.

14 A Is there anything specific, though, that -- the reason you're asking, like a 15 more specific question?

16 Q Yeah, were firearm purchases prioritized?

17 A Weapons-related transactions were one of many fact-based patterns that 18 were prioritized by Bank of America in this SAR.

19 Q Okay. And I would like to move to the testimony of Steven Jensen.

20 A What page?

21 Q I'm sorry; I'm going to redirect you.

22 A Okay.

23 [REDACTED] You can set aside that right quick. I now enter an email dated
24 January 18th, 2021, and then attach the liaison information report prepared by the FBI's 25 Office of the Private Sector, titled "Domestic Violent Extremists Likely Emboldened in the 1 Aftermath of the Capitol Breach," into the record as exhibit 16.

2 [Sullivan Exhibit No. 16.

3 was marked for identification.]

4

BY [REDACTED]

5 Q What are liaison information reports?

6 A They are reports that are put together by our analysis section, and they can 7 oftentimes be in concert with unclassified intelligence information that we're able to 8 push out. I say "we" as a division, Office of Private Sector often may have access -- may 9 have their member access to it. But the LIR, from my understanding, is -- it's an analytic 10 product.

11 Q And are you familiar with this liaison information report?

12 A Yeah. Around the 17th of January, yes, I remember reading this.

13 Q And when did you become first aware of the report?

14 A You know, I can only generalize. We're going back 3 years. I can't tell you 15 exactly when. I apologize.

16 Q I want to direct you to the date at the top left. Is that the correct date,
17 January 17th, 2020?

18 A I didn't produce this report, so I am not going to make any assumptions that 19 that date is correct. But it looks like a final product that's been disseminated, so likely.

20 Q And do you know who wrote this report?

21 A I do not. I can only tell you that an analytic element would be responsible 22 for putting this information together and producing it. This would not be within my 23 partner Engagement Section.

24 Q So, at the top, it says Office of the Private Sector.

25 A Yes.

1 Q Did the Office of the Private Sector author this?

2 A They were the ones to disseminate it. They likely coordinated on it. I
3 don't know that they did -- they wouldn't have done the analysis of it, but they would 4 have been one of the tools of kind of the chain of how it was produced.

5 Q And did you work with any of the individuals that prepared it?

6 A No, my unit was engaged with the private sector. This would not be 7 something that our unit authored or published.

8 BY [REDACTED]

9 Q Have you seen this document before?

10 A I have. Like to his question, I couldn't tell you exactly when I read it.

11 Q Do you know if you were still within the Strategic Engagement Section when 12 you saw the document?

13 A I believe so. Probably.

14 Q Do you know if it was during the course of your duties working on 15 January 6th-related investigations that you saw this document?

16 A I can't be sure of it. Likely, yes, probably.

17 Q Were you ever responsible for transmitting this document to any financial
18 institutions?

19 A I don't know that I sent this or if our front office had sent it to all sector
20 partners. Again, you have to remember this is during an NSSE. This is 17th January.
21 This is only 11 days after the Capitol riots, and we're supporting operations on an hourly
22 basis, and leads that are coming in. So that's the only reason I can't tell you for sure if I
23 sent it. I'm not saying that I didn't, but I don't know that I did. But LIRs, I have, we 24 have processed other -- in terms of disseminated LIRs that were published and granted
25 access. I think, earlier this morning, I was given a similar email where my supervisor had

1 said "Feel free to push this out to your partners" -- I'm paraphrasing -- I can't remember
2 the exact email. And, you know, our job is to engage and provide information. So 3 anything that was published officially we would be the steward of that.

4 Q And I know you said you were doing a lot during this time period. Were 5 there other LIRs that were sent out pursuant to the January 6th investigation?

6 A Probably. I couldn't tell you exactly how many or what topics they were 7 outside of, you know, general threat information at the unclassified level.

8 Q Do you remember pushing any LIRs out to your strategic partners in the 9 financial institutions?

10 A I could have. I don't remember specifically. I do remember sharing 11 information with them on a regular basis.

12

BY [REDACTED]

13 Q How is this report distributed?

14 A I'm not in charge of how it's distributed. I can just tell you that, when it's 15 published, oftentimes we're made aware of it and that it's okay to share, because at that 16 point, if it's at the unclassified level, we can share data like that.

17 Q And so what purpose did sharing this liaison information report with 18 financial institutions serve?

19 [REDACTED] Are you asking on a general level because he's already testified that he 20 doesn't recall specifically how this was disseminated?

21

BY [REDACTED]

22 Q What would a liaison information report like this being shared with financial 23 institutions, what purpose would that serve?

24 A Just covering a gambit of what it could serve just in my regular engagement,
25 it would be information only if there is information in the report that helps them set

1 better alerts. That may be the case. If that was the case or the private sector member
2 had specific questions about something that the division provided to them to read, I may 3 be the first person to take the question or maybe not.

4 Q Yeah, footnote 1 states, quote, "The information in this LIR is provided to 5 inform law enforcement of the referenced narratives and theories which may play in 6 mobilizing criminal actors and DVEs to violence." Why was this shared with financial 7 institutions if it was meant to inform law enforcement?

8 A I can't speak to the authors of this of why they decided to footnote. I
9 mean, you can see the footnotes are specific to the quotes and the different assessment.
10 I wouldn't have taken part in that assessment either in analyzing it or producing it.

11 Q And I would like to move back to the DSAC portal. Can you explain briefly
12 the DSAC portal? I know you've touched on that previously.

13 A Yeah, just generally, the DSAC portal -- DSAC members in the private sector
14 may have access to information sharing that occurs in the portal. I don't -- Office of 15 Private Sector runs the portal. Again, Office of Private Sector is enterprise C-suite level 16 engagement. On the engagement that I do, we don't use the DSAC portal to -- and nor 17 do the other operational divisions -- I don't want to speak for them, but I mean for the 18 CTD in terms of sharing information, operational information, and other information on 19 the threat. We don't use the DSAC portal.

20 Q Are the materials shared via the DSAC portal public?

21 A My understanding is that it can be, but I have a very -- I would direct you to 22 the Office of Private Sector to give you a very fine scope of what is and what isn't 23 accessed.

24 Q Because companies have to apply to be a member of the DSAC?

25 A That's my understanding.

1 Q And so, if you're not accepted, you might not have access to that
2 information?

3 A You may not. Again, but that's generally speaking. My understanding.

4 Q Is the liaison information report something that might be shared via the 5 DSAC portal?

6 A I can't be sure. I think that it could have been. The fact that it's coming
7 from the Office of Private Sector, my understanding from the specific types of LIRs that it 8 could be.

9 Q Are there any other organizations like DSAC that provide for public-private 10 portals?

11 A There are -- in terms of specifics, I couldn't speak to specifics. I know that 12 there are other public-private sector partnerships kind of across government, whether it
13 be FBI, other law enforcement agencies, you know, specific sectors that share
14 information with, you know, various field offices in the different law enforcement
15 agencies. I mean, there are different types of public-private partnerships that share
16 information.

17 Q Okay.

18 [REDACTED] We can go off the record for a second.

19 [Discussion off the record.]

20 BY [REDACTED]

21 Q We can going back on the record. Mr. Sullivan, just a couple more 22 questions, and I think, you know, we're done, while our minority counterparts have 23 another round. So I want to turn back to the testimony of Mr. Jensen. I believe that is 24 exhibit 6, looking at page 152. And I'll read the Q&A towards the end of the page here 25 and then ask you a couple of questions on it. The question was, "If an individual was

1 identified because they used their Bank of America debit card in Washington, D.C., on
2 January 6th, but that's all you have, you would agree that that's not enough information
3 to go speak with that person about their role in illegal activities on January 6th?"

4 Answer: "My concern is those instances where Bank of America data was used to 5 initiate leads is that the leads lacked allegations of Federal criminal conduct. Contact by 6 an FBI agent can be consensual at any time, right? But sending leads out based solely on 7 information of purchase history that have no attachment of potential crimes or criminal 8 conduct is what was concerning to me." Do you agree with Mr. Jensen's concerns here?

9 A In terms of how the question was posed, they're only talking about one 10 specific fact-based pattern, yes. But the answer would be no if you're talking about if 11 this question was posed, has Bank of America pushed out the SAR, which was -- had other 12 fact-based patterns present also.

13 Q And when he said -- says "that sending leads out based solely on information 14 of purchase history that has no attachment of potential crimes or criminal conduct is 15 what was concerning to me," were you concerned that the information that was 16 contained in the SAR lacked allegations of Federal criminal conduct?

17 A As far as the assessments that we took part in and pushed out to the four 18 offices that I mentioned, those assessments were specifically done as information-only 19 leads based off of those fact-based patterns that could allow the field offices to use the 20 information to determine if there was a potential threat, i.e., Federal criminal conduct.

21 Q So you don't agree with Mr. Jensen's concerns here that leads that he was 22 sent or he knew were sent lacked Federal criminal conduct?

23 A I'm not saying I disagree with him. I'm saying I agree with his statement in 24 and of itself. But the question that's posed before it only discusses one type of purchase
25 that my office and nobody I know in the Counterterrorism Division would think would be

1 useful in pushing out any type of assessment.

2 Q So was it concerning to you that the information that was obtained from
3 Bank of America through the SAR through the thresholds that were identified by the FBI
4 and FinCEN on a call were then used to push leads out to the field that lacked Federal 5 criminal conduct? Was that concerning to you?

6 A I don't understand the question. What specifically are you asking?

7 Q So was it concerning to you that the information that Bank of America sent 8 to the FBI was then used to push out leads to the field that lacked Federal criminal 9 conduct according to Mr. Jensen who pulled the leads out of the system, was that 10 concerning to you at all?

11 A It wasn't concerning to me in the role that I played in the assessments that 12 went out for my unit.

1 [3:37 p.m.]

2

BY [REDACTED]

Q So after it left your unit, you weren't concerned about how the data would be used?

A No. In fact, you know, like I mentioned before, the data that we put in the electronic communication involved the four assessments to prevent any potential

redundancy if, in fact, there was another entity -- it could be Washington Field Office, in this case, who had the lead on the Capitol riots investigation -- determined that they wanted to use the data for something else.

8

10

Q So the data -- besides just the four, you know, individuals that you identified, that other data was still available in the FBI system. Is that correct?

11

12

A So I don't -- please clarify because there -- the data was the data. So there aren't two different types of data. So what are you speaking about?

13

14

Q So the 200- -- the supporting documentation with the 211 individuals or 15 entities that were identified, you took out four of those to, you know, do Guardians that you thought had more of a likelihood to have criminal conduct because they had bought a

16

17 firearm after January 6.

18

Was the other information still available in the FBI system just beyond those four individuals?

19

20

A Well, first, you're -- and just to clarify, you're mischaracterizing. It wasn't a 21 likelihood that there was criminal conduct. It was the assessment to determine. The field office would make that determination if there was reason to further investigate it.

22

23

Q Uh-huh.

24

A And I'm sorry, the second part of your question?

25

Q Was the information on the 211 individuals or entities, was that still in the 1 FBI system? The supporting documentation, was there still access to that?

2 A In the electronic communication that our unit authored, yes.

3 Q Okay. That was my question.

4 A Yeah.

5 Q Thanks.

6 A That was uploaded to the Washington Field Office's case file.

7 [REDACTED] Uh-huh. We can go off the record.

8 [Recess.]

9 [REDACTED] All right. We are back on the record.

10 At the top of the hour, I just want to note, during the minority's prior hour of 11 questioning, we introduced as exhibits 9, 11, and 13 a number of emails -- email chains
12 between the FBI and Citibank. The exhibits, as introduced, had PII included in them.
13 We're going to swap those exhibits for identical exhibits that have PII, email addresses, 14 phone numbers redacted.

15 Mr. Sullivan. Thank you.

16 [REDACTED] I just want to make that note on the record.

17 Mr. Sullivan. Thank you.

18 BY [REDACTED]

19 Q Mr. Sullivan, I want to turn back to the Jensen and Bonavolonta testimony.
20 And we actually don't need to go back into it, but I want to clarify the record on a couple 21 points.

22 A Sure.

23 Q To be clear, when you brainstormed information with Bank of America, your 24 goal was to develop information that could be used to prevent violence at the 25 inauguration and potentially on March 4th as well, correct?

1 A Right.

2 Q Okay. And so you weren't --

3 A Not on March 4th, but leading up to that and --

4 Q Correct.

5 A -- in that area. That timeframe.

6 Q Understood. But my point is that the reason that you were having that 7 brainstorming session, the goal was to prevent violent -- prevent violence that might 8 happen in the future?

9 A Potential. Correct.

10 Q Okay. There were references that we discussed kind of extensively in the 11 prior hour with the majority counsel to various leads and what might have been done
12 with various leads by different field offices. Do you recall that conversation?

13 A Yes.

14 Q And what Washington Field Office might have done with various leads,
15 correct?

16 A Correct.

17 Q You didn't send out leads -- whatever the Washington Field Office did, you 18 did not send those leads out, correct?

19 A Correct.

20 Q So there was a reference -- I think the assumption is that the Washington
21 Field Office took the 211 names and sent them out to field offices. You don't know what 22 happened?

23 A Correct.

24 Q You have -- you know, there has been representations made to you, but you 25 don't have any personal knowledge of that?

1 A No.

2 Q Okay. And you don't know when Jensen -- when Mr. Jensen -- you read Mr.
3 Jensen's testimony. He said that certain leads had been recalled. You don't know
4 what leads had been recalled?

5 A I only know generally that some were discontinued.

6 Q But you don't have personal knowledge of what or who or how?

7 A No.

8 Q Okay. And there was reference to the data that WFO had. You don't 9 know what data WFO had, correct?

10 A Correct. Generally speaking, yes.

11 Q So they -- so you said that the Bank of America saw or the information was in 12 the system, but you don't know if other information was in the system as well, for 13 example?

14 A Yeah. There was plenty of other information out of the Capitol riots case 15 file.

16 Q Okay.

17 A A ton of information.

18 Q And so -- and you didn't work in Washington Field Office?

19 A Correct.

20 Q So you don't know what WFO did?

21 A Correct.

22 Q Okay. In the prior hour, the majority introduced as exhibit 15 testimony
23 from Director Wray's testimony before this committee. And I'm going to ask you to 24 return to that --

25 A Okay.

1 Q -- and also to pull out exhibit 1, page 2. I guess it's Bates stamped 225, but 2 it's the second page of the exhibit. It's the actual email from you to the Bank of 3 America.

4 A Okay.

5 Q I want to turn to page 90 and look at the -- some comments that were made
6 on page 90 against your email side by side.

7 A Yeah.

8 [REDACTED] I'm sorry. Which email was that?

9 Mr. Sullivan. Oh, I'm on -- you said what page?

10 [REDACTED] Okay. Sorry. So we're going to pull out exhibit 1, which is your 11 email to Bank of America.

12 Mr. Sullivan. Oh, okay. Sorry. I've got a lot of papers. Sorry. Is it in there?
13 Oh, thank you.

14 Okay. I got it.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q And then look at that side by side with page 90 from the hearing transcript.
17 And I want to look at some statements that Chairman Jordan made during the 18 hearing, and I'm going to ask you if they're actually an accurate representation of what 19 your email says.

20 A Okay.

21 Q So on line 2196 on page 90, Mr. Jordan asks, "Did the FBI ask financial 22 institutions to turn over their customers' debit and credit card purchase history in the 23 Washington, D.C. area for January 5th and 6th, 2021?"

24 Do you see where it says that?

25 A Uh-huh.

1 Q The answer to Mr. Jordan's question is no, correct?

2 A Yes.

3 Q The FBI did not ask financial institutions to turn over their customers' debit
4 and credit card purchase history in the Washington, D.C. area for January 5th and 6th,
5 2021, correct?

6 A Correct.

7 Q Okay. Mr. Jordan continues on. He says -- he reads from your email, and 8 he says, "I have the email in hand."

9 He says, "Let's read it. To recap" -- and he reads out loud, "To recap our morning
10 call, we are prepared to action the following threshold, customers transacting debit card,
11 credit card, Washington, D.C. purchases between 1/5/21 and 1/6/21."

12 Do you see where it says that?

13 A Yes.

14 Q In fact, your email -- that bullet point says, "with the additional identifying 15 targeting thresholds," doesn't it?

16 A Correct.

17 Q So Mr. Jordan's representation of what you said was not accurate, correct?

18 A Correct. It was not accurate.

19 Q Because it left out the part where you said "with additional thresholds"?

20 A Correct.

21 Q Okay. And he says, "That is scary enough."

22 Do you think it's scary for the FBI to have these conversations with the Bank of 23 America?

24 A No, not at all.

25 Q Okay. Then he says, "But the next bullet point is even more scary."

1 He says, "Any, any historical capital letters, all caps, any historical purchase of a 2 firearm."

3 Do you see where Mr. Jordan said that?

4 A Yes.

5 Q And, in fact, your email says "any historical purchase going back 6 months
6 generally for weapons or weapons-related vendor purchases."

7 Do you see where your email says that?

8 A Correct.

9 Q So, in fact, Mr. Jordan's statement did not fully represent what your email 10 said, correct?

11 A I agree. That's correct.

12 Q Okay. And then he says again on line 2205, "Did you guys" -- meaning the 13 FBI -- "ask them?"

14 And, again, the FBI did not ask the Bank of America for anything, correct?

15 A Correct.

16 Q On the following page. At lines 2208 to 2213, I'm just going to read this 17 out.

18 Mr. Jordan said, "Well, does this email trouble you as much as it does members of 19 the Judiciary Committee, that the FBI is asking for every single -- I mean, we had 20 Members of Congress here that week, first time they are getting sworn in as a new 21 Member of Congress, their family in town. And you are sweeping. And they may 22 happen to be a customer of Bank of America. And you are sweeping up every debit and 23 credit card purchase of their family who are in town that week because their husband or 24 their dad or their mom is getting sworn in as a new Member of Congress? And then you 25 are also overlaying that information with, did you, did this person buy a firearm?"

1 Do you see where Mr. Jordan said that?

2 A Yes.

3 Q Mr. Sullivan, were you sweeping up the credit card purchase history of new 4 Members of Congress and their families?

5 A No.

6 Q Okay. And, in fact, Mr. Jordan's representations here do not accurately 7 reflect the many -- the one, two, three, four, five -- the six bullet points included in your
8 email, correct?

9 A They do not. Correct.

10 Q And, in fact, your email was much more targeted than that, correct?

11 A More specific.

12 Q And so to the extent that somebody purchased a firearm, that alone
13 wouldn't be sufficient?

14 A Correct.

15 Q And even if the person purchased a firearm and was a customer of Bank of 16 America and purchased something in Washington, D.C., January 5th or 6th, that would 17 not be sufficient, correct?

18 A Correct, with the linked weapons-related transaction.

19 Q Right.

20 A Not firearm, per se.

21 Q Right. Weapons-related transactions --

22 A Uh-huh. Correct.

23 Q -- dating back 6 months generally.

24 And in addition, there was a requirement that there was a purchase made -- or 25 the threshold included bullet point two, which was purchases made for hotel, Airbnb, or

1 RSVPs in the DMV area, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q So, in other words, the actual conversation between FBI and Bank of 4 America, the brainstorming session, the thresholds were much more specific?

5 A Correct. Collectively.

6 Q Correct. And it wasn't -- none of these thresholds were to be taken on 7 their own?

8 A Correct.

9 Q Okay. Line 2227, that, "This is lawful, that you can ask this is scary."
10 Again, you didn't ask for anything, correct?

11 A Correct.

12 Q And he said, "This is something else we are going to have to change."

13 I think I can represent that Chairman -- that Ranking Member Nadler is very 14 concerned that this is a suggestion that the Bank Secrecy Act should be taken down. I 15 think that act has been in place since 1970, so it's 54 years.

16 I just want to reiterate. You, in your prior capacities, regularly relied on 17 information provided through Bank Secrecy Act provisions, correct?

18 A Correct.

19 Q And we talked through earlier that the Bank Secrecy Act, for example,
20 helped to stop -- the information provided through the Bank Secrecy Act helped to stop 21 the bombing of a school, correct?

22 A Correct.

23 Q It's frequently used to help target fentanyl trafficking operations, correct?

24 A To my knowledge and speaking to Criminal Investigative Division people that 25 use SARs, generally, I can say correct.

1 Q So you would agree that the Bank Secrecy Act is a pretty valuable tool for
2 the FBI?

3 A Absolutely.

4 Q Okay. Thank you.

5 [REDACTED] Thank you. We can go off the record.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
WASHINGTON, D.C.

February 9, 2024

The Honorable Jim Jordan
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Chairman Jordan:

Thank you for your January 30, 2024, letter concerning the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) and the ways in which FinCEN supported law enforcement in the aftermath of the violent attack on the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, to help identify those responsible and bring them to justice. To date more than 1,200 people have been charged with crimes in connection with the Capitol attack and nearly 900 have been convicted.

FinCEN and the Department of the Treasury (Treasury) take the matters described in your letter extremely seriously. FinCEN's mission is to safeguard the financial system from illicit use, combat money laundering and its related crimes including terrorism, and promote national security through the strategic use of financial authorities and the collection, analysis, and dissemination of financial intelligence. FinCEN is deeply committed to fulfilling this important national security and criminal justice mission in accordance with the law.

As you may know, new leadership took over at FinCEN within the past six months. While we have provided some additional background here, we are still working to ensure that we fully understand FinCEN's activities in supporting the Department of Justice (DOJ) and other law enforcement agencies in the aftermath of the January 6 Capitol attack and in advance of the 2021 Inauguration.

FinCEN and the Bank Secrecy Act

FinCEN's mandate encompasses several roles and responsibilities. First, pursuant to the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA), FinCEN is authorized to collect, analyze, and disseminate financial intelligence to law enforcement, national security, and regulatory agencies for use in connection with criminal investigations and related matters.¹ In this capacity, FinCEN promulgates regulations regarding the filing of certain information by financial institutions and individuals, and FinCEN is also responsible for "maintain[ing] a government-wide access service" to provide authorized users with access to this important data that is extremely valuable to law enforcement.² Second, FinCEN regulates financial institutions for compliance with the BSA and its implementing regulations. In this capacity, FinCEN brings enforcement actions against financial institutions and other regulated entities for failure to comply with the BSA and its regulations. Finally, FinCEN serves as the Financial Intelligence Unit (FIU) of the U.S. government, and as such is responsible for receiving (and, as permitted, requesting), analyzing, and disseminating to competent authorities financial information related to certain criminal activity.

BSA Reporting

One of the key sources of information that FinCEN uses to carry out its mission are suspicious activity reports (SARs), which are filed by banks and other financial institutions that possess customer transaction information. The BSA requires that a bank or other financial institution file a SAR whenever it identifies “a suspicious transaction relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation.”³ SARs constitute critical tip-and-lead information that helps law enforcement identify, stop, and apprehend criminal actors. SARs contain personally identifiable information about individuals and entities, details about financial transactions, and unconfirmed information regarding potential violations of law or regulation, and as such they are subject to strong confidentiality protections under the law, and FinCEN takes its responsibility to safeguard SAR information extremely seriously.

Law enforcement agencies use BSA reporting in investigations and prosecutions of criminal activities to detect, target, and disrupt illicit financial networks that threaten our national security. BSA data is used across many types of criminal investigations—from fentanyl and other drug trafficking matters, human trafficking, organized and other violent crime, fraud, public corruption, and other financial crime, as well as national security matters such as sanctions. DOJ and other law enforcement agencies also use information generated from SARs and other BSA reporting on both a proactive and reactive basis in investigations of individuals and entities to identify leads, “connect the dots,” and otherwise expand ongoing investigations. This information is also critical to the ability of law enforcement to identify broader trends and risks in illicit finance.

Banks and other financial institutions subject to the BSA are responsible for maintaining their own anti-money laundering (AML) programs, which must be designed, among other things, to ensure their compliance with the BSA and to assist them in detecting and reporting suspicious activity.⁴ While FinCEN and the prudential regulators provide general guidance to and oversight of banks concerning what constitutes an effective AML program, it is ultimately the banks’ responsibility to ensure that their AML programs are effective; that they file SARs in accordance with the law; and that their AML programs effectively detect and report suspicious activity on their networks. It is also the banks’ responsibility to ensure that they comply with all applicable financial privacy laws.

FinCEN Exchange Program

AML programs benefit from banks engaging with the government, so that banks are aware of law enforcement’s highest priorities and can benefit from current information about trends and patterns in money laundering and other crimes. As criminal enterprises expand and adapt, these public-private partnerships between banks and law enforcement are all the more important. By understanding how criminal actors operate financially, banks can design better and more effective AML programs. Similarly, these partnerships allow law enforcement to provide guidance to financial institutions, through FinCEN, on the most useful information to include in SARs—which leads to better, more effective SAR reporting by banks and, in turn, helps law enforcement detect and deter criminal activity.

Congress recognized the value of this public-private information exchange when it enacted—with bipartisan support—the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 (AML Act). The AML Act codified a voluntary program, called FinCEN Exchange, to facilitate the sharing of information between law enforcement, FinCEN, and financial institutions for the purpose of disrupting money laundering, terrorism financing, and other crimes.

FinCEN Exchange is a valuable tool not just for our law enforcement partners, but for the financial institutions themselves. FinCEN and Treasury greatly appreciate the bipartisan support for this program, which FinCEN has used to advance law enforcement efforts on a variety of topics of critical importance to national security, criminal justice, and that of our allies. For example, recent FinCEN Exchange events have addressed: Russian sanctions evasion; the terrorist financing networks that support Hamas; fentanyl trafficking; human smuggling; and the abuse of the digital financial ecosystem by North Korea.⁵ In these Exchange events, law enforcement or FinCEN have shared critical information on financial methods used by bad actors and ways in which they try to evade detection, which in turn enhances the ability of participating banks to improve their AML programs and better identify and report illicit activity.

Participation in FinCEN Exchange is voluntary, and no bank is required to implement changes to their AML programs based on the information shared. Further, banks continue to use their judgment in assessing transaction information holistically, as reflected in their overarching AML program, to determine whether it is required to be reported under the BSA.

FinCEN Exchange Events Relating to the January 6 Attack on the Capitol

In the wake of the violent assault on the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, FinCEN convened a series of FinCEN Exchange events. While we are still looking into the details of these events, we understand that these FinCEN Exchange events included government and private sector representatives who voluntarily participated in discussions and information exchanges focused on identifying the perpetrators of this attack and providing support to ongoing law enforcement investigations. The purpose of these FinCEN Exchange events was for law enforcement, FinCEN, and banks to share trends, analysis, and information that banks could consider incorporating into their existing AML/CFT programs to more effectively identify perpetrators of crimes during the January 6 attack or individuals who may have been plotting or conspiring to disrupt the 2021 Inauguration.

As part of these Exchange events, which began shortly after January 6 under the prior Administration, FinCEN and banks shared information about methodologies that banks could consider using as part of their AML/CFT programs to identify indicia of suspicious activity relevant to the January 6 attack on the Capitol or threats of violence in connection with the then-upcoming presidential Inauguration.⁶ Many of these typologies were based on previous efforts to develop robust AML/CFT programs that could identify specific types of illegal activity, including activity related to violent extremists or active shooters. For example, one typology suggested methodologies for identifying active shooters based on, for example, series of large weapons-related purchases from multiple stores over a short period of time, in a pattern that was out of the ordinary for the customer, which was to be considered together with other indicators that the customer had already or was about to engage in imminent, mass violence—not to identify normal, lawful gun purchases.

FinCEN provided these typologies so that the participating banks could integrate this information into their AML/CFT programs to the extent they found it helpful. Banks consider a variety of factors and inputs as part of their AML/CFT efforts, including a bank's existing knowledge of its customers and their histories and information about the nature and purpose of specific transactions. No one specific word or transaction code included in these typologies was designed to be used in isolation to “flag” or “target” any individuals. Rather, to the extent key words or phrases were suggested, it was expected they would be used alongside other factors and data that banks regularly analyze as part of their AML programs to detect and report suspicious activity. For example, a document distributed on January 15, 2021 suggested that banks could review payment messages for indications that an individual participated in the assault on the Capitol and included terms such as “antifa,” “MAGA,” “Trump,” “Biden,” “Kamala,” “Schumer,” and “Pelosi,” along with terms indicating an intent to do violence, such as “shoot,” “kill,” “murder” and “storm the Capitol.”

We understand that FinCEN convened these Exchange events starting under the prior Administration and continuing until approximately mid-February 2021. During this time period, law enforcement was actively investigating the January 6 Capitol attack and was also concerned about efforts to disrupt or threaten the upcoming presidential Inauguration. FinCEN's primary role through these Exchange events was to support law enforcement efforts.

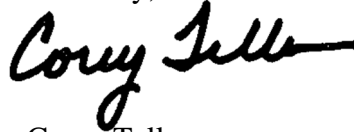

* * * * *

AML programs and the resulting suspicious activity reporting are a vital part of the government-wide effort to prevent the financial system from being used to finance terrorism, drug trafficking, money laundering, and other crimes, and ensure that those who use the financial system for illicit ends are brought to justice. While FinCEN provides guidance, it is ultimately a bank's responsibility to determine when—consistent with the BSA and its implementing regulations—a bank must file a SAR. Once filed, FinCEN takes its obligations to safeguard BSA data, including SARs, extremely seriously for many reasons, including to protect the privacy and civil liberties of citizens who use the financial system.

⁶ In mid-January 2021, law enforcement publicly warned of violence in connection with the upcoming inauguration. See <https://www.foxnews.com/us/fbi-warns-substantial-danger-explosives-protests-domestic-hot-spots-outside-capitol>.

Thank you again for your continued support for the people and mission of FinCEN.

Thanks!

At your earliest convenience, could you please give me a call at my desk line at your earliest convenience?

FYA, typically for Code Reds and Yellows, we get more on the front end than 'positive', only.

However, the third bucket of priority--'Equity Checks', fall more in-line with your response of 'positive' only with no other info offered because Equity Checks are priority investigations but have no current threat to life or other emergency-related nexus. But because this outreach name on [REDACTED] was a code yellow, we'd like to get something additional. Hope this makes sense.

Analou, I hope you are well. We live in interesting times. As you might imagine, our bank, and I expect many others, are thinking hard about how we can support the Bureau's efforts to address the acute threat of domestic terrorism we are facing at the moment.

I wanted to bounce an idea off you. Would FincEN have an appetite (assuming you feel you have the authority) to, in SARs filed in relation to the current acute threat of domestic terrorism, identify whether the suspicious activity being reported involves a customer of another institution in the U.S. and, if so, make a 314(a) request, perhaps under a specific code, for such subjects? In other words, Bank A files a SAR for suspicious transactions involving John Doe, a customer of Bank B (an FI in the US). However, Bank B is unaware of the concern surrounding its customer (unless Bank A utilized 314(b) authorities—but even then, the delay would be unworkable when addressing an acute terror threat). FincEN, by doing a 314(a) request for that subject, will trigger an internal review in Bank B (most banks will open an investigation following a 314(a) match). If the 314(a) request is coded under a project name, all the better.

I'm happy to explain myself more in a call. [REDACTED] I'm also curious if FincEN is planning anything independently (i.e., red flags circular). I'm sure that BSAAG members would be happy to contribute thoughts and ideas that could be shared more broadly - even with other BSAAG members.

Anyhow, we are open to assisting however we can, within the existing authorities. Take care and say hi to Ken and congratulations to you both on the passage of the NDAA. That's a big accomplishment!

1 [REDACTED] This is a transcribed interview of Jimmy Kirby. Chairman Jordan has
2 requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the Department of
3 Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network.

4 Would the witness please state your name for the record?

5 Mr. Kirby. Jimmy Kirby.

6 [REDACTED] Could agency counsel please state your name for the record?

7 [REDACTED] [REDACTED]

8 [REDACTED] [REDACTED]

9 [REDACTED] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here
10 today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to 11 appear voluntarily.

12 My name is [REDACTED] and I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have 13 everyone else from the committee who's here in the room introduce themselves as well.

14 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Chairman Jordan.

15 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Chairman Jordan.

16 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] Chairman Jordan.

17 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Ranking Member Nadler.

18 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Ranking Member Nadler.

19 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Ranking Member Nadler.

20 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] Chairman Jordan.

21 [REDACTED] I'd like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will 22 follow during today's interview.

23 Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 24 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal 25 period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more

1 questions and the interview is over.

2 Typically, we take a short break at the end of each hour. If you would like to take
3 a break apart from that, please just let us know.

4 As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to
5 make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions.

6 Do you understand?

7 Mr. Kirby. Yes.

8 [REDACTED] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best
9 to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just 10 those people on the staff whose turn it is.

11 Please try and speak clearly so the court reporter can understand and so the folks
12 down at the end of the table can hear you.

13 It is important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we 14 can help it, and that goes for everybody present at today's interview.

15 We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner
16 as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or you do not 17 understand one of our questions, please just let us know.

18 Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any 19 point just say so.

20 If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not remember, it is best
21 not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it is okay to tell us if you learned 22 information from someone else. Just indicate how you came to know the information.

23 If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and please 24 inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more complete 25 answer to the question.

1 You should also understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by
2 law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully.

3 Do you understand that?

4 Mr. Kirby. Yes.

5 ██████████ This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an 6 interview.

7 Do you understand this?

8 Mr. Kirby. Yes.

9 ██████████ Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to 10 criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 USC Section 11 1001.

12 Do you understand this?

13 Mr. Kirby. Yes.

14 ██████████ Is there any reason you are unable to provide truthful answers to 15 today's questions?

16 Mr. Kirby. No.

17 ██████████ Finally, I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss
18 here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this
19 interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

20 For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with 21 the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript, and any copies of those 22 exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

23 That is the end of my preamble. Is there anything that my colleagues from the 24 minority would like to add?

25 ██████████ We thank the witness for appearing voluntarily today.

1 I also note that this interview is being video'd. The practice has been that the 2 Republicans have not been video'ing current agency employees, and I'm not sure if there
3 was a discussion in advance.

4 I know we are -- the minority staff is usually taken off of emails, so if there was a
5 discussion we might've been excluded from it, but I don't know if there was an agreement
6 reached. I do know that this is not practice for the way that the majority has been 7 proceeding.

8 [REDACTED] Counsel, do you have anything?

9 [REDACTED] I mean, it wasn't flagged for us beforehand. I don't think we 10 have any objection to proceeding this way, but --

11 [REDACTED] Okay.

12 [REDACTED] Then I would also note that, again, the minority has not had any of 13 the videos made available to them. I understand the quality is not very good, so that 14 might be part of the reason. But we have not had any videos made available to us, and 15 that does create concerns about transparency.

16 [REDACTED] The clock now reads 10:08. We will start the first hour of 17 questioning.

18 [REDACTED] We do -- sorry, beforehand, just like we flagged before, we do 19 want to, given the content and the nature of this investigation, want to sort of, again, put 20 on the record with all of you that the BSA provides the suspicious activity reports and a 21 number of other reports, and any information that would reveal the existence thereof is 22 confidential.

23 Unauthorized disclosure of this information is a violation of Federal law. It's 24 subject to civil and criminal penalties. It also can cause, frankly, unjustifiable and 25 irreparable harm to people who are named in these and to national security and to law

1 enforcement interests.

2 So to the extent there is any testimony today concerning a particular SAR -- again,
3 I don't anticipate that there will be -- or any testimony that would reveal the existence of 4 a SAR or lack thereof, we would ask that the committee redact those portions of the 5 transcript, not make them publicly available, as, again, we think any type of disclosure of 6 that nature would cause harm to ongoing law enforcement equities and to national 7 security.

8 Mr. Kirby. And could I start with making an opening statement? Is 9 that permissible?

10 [REDACTED] Yes.

11 Mr. Kirby. Okay. It's short. I promise.

12 So good morning. My name is Jimmy Kirby, and I serve as deputy director of the 13 Financial Crimes Enforcement Network.

14 FinCEN is a bureau of the Treasury Department and a key component of Treasury's
15 Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, or TFI.

16 I have been with Treasury for almost 18 years, virtually all of that time supporting 17 Treasury's national security and counter-illicit finance mission set.

18 I started my Treasury career in the Department's Office of General Counsel in 19 2006 supporting Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control, or OFAC, and I served in the 20 Legal Division until September 2020.

21 I spent more than 8 years in the OFAC counsel's office focused on a range of 22 priority national security matters, including enforcing Iran and North Korea-related 23 sanctions, as well as sanctions targeting global narcotics trafficking networks.

24 In late 2015, I was detailed to lead the FinCEN Chief Counsel's Office, and I served
25 as FinCEN's chief counsel from July 2016 to September 2020.

1 opportunity to do more of that work on behalf of the Department.

2 Q And what is your current position?

3 A I am the deputy director of FinCEN.

4 Q And can you describe your role and responsibilities as the deputy director of
5 FinCEN?

6 A I support the director in her management of the bureau's operations, and as
7 well as sort of supporting leadership -- again, the director -- in terms of ensuring FinCEN
8 meets our sort of mission goals and mission sets.

9 Q How many people do you oversee in your role?

10 A I believe our current head count is approximately 280, give or take a few 11 either direction, so approximately 280. So I support -- I manage, for all intents and 12 purposes, the senior executives principally that oversee the sort of different divisions of 13 the organization and the workforce.

14 Q And in 2021 what was your position?

15 A In 2021 I was the associate director of the then-Intelligence Division of 16 FinCEN.

17 Q And how long were you the associate director of the Intelligence Division?

18 A So I started that job in October of 2020, and I moved out of the role in the 19 summer of 2022, I think July of 2022, to serve as acting deputy director. So that's, I 20 guess, about a year and a half, maybe a little more, give or take.

21 Q And when you were in that role, what were your responsibilities?

22 A To sort of manage the operations of the Intelligence Division and to, again,
23 sort of support the other components of FinCEN with regard to their analytic research
24 needs of -- based on our -- the reporting that comes to FinCEN under the Bank Secrecy
25 Act.

1 Q And can you describe the organizational structure of the Intelligence Division
2 and how it fits within FinCEN?

3 A Sure. Then or now?

4 Q Then.

5 A Then.

6 So then, when I took that job in late 2020, if my recollection is correct, I believe 7 the position had been vacant essentially for the prior 2 years-ish, and at the time it was 8 divided into, I think, three offices.

9 So there was a deputy associate director and then three office directors that 10 reported to that deputy director, and there was an Office of Western Hemisphere Affairs, 11 an office of transnational issues, and then a -- I believe the last one was an analytic and 12 research office.

13 Q And who is your direct supervisor as the associate director?

14 A When I started the position, the deputy director of FinCEN at the time was 15 Michael Mosier.

16 At some point early -- relatively early in the current administration, Michael 17 moved out of that job, I think it was in Q1 of 2021, and AnnaLou Tirol moved into that 18 position. So AnnaLou became -- Ms. Tirol, my apologies -- became my supervisor.

19 Q And when did she become your supervisor?

20 A I think it's approximately December 2021, around in there. I mean, I'm 21 sorry, February 2021. I've gotten my calendars backwards in my head.

22 Q That's okay.

23 A There you go. Sorry.

24 Q And how many employees did you oversee in the Intelligence Division?

25 A I would say approximately 50, maybe a little more -- maybe a little more at

1 times. But I think approximately 50 to 55.

2 Q And is it a similar head count now?

3 A I think so, yes. I think their head count is in the 50s now. I'd have to sort
4 of confirm that. But it's about the same size.

5 Q And what was the mission of the Intelligence Division?

6 A So FinCEN's overall mission is to protect the U.S. financial system from illicit 7 finance. We do that in a number of ways, and one of them is through research and 8 analysis of the information filed with FinCEN pursuant to the Bank Secrecy Act.

9 And so a key function of the Intelligence Division is it's staffed with analysts who 10 are knowledgeable in terms of that data and different ways to support the mission set.

11 So, for instance, at the moment, a big part of their function is supporting our work
12 to sort of counter fentanyl in support of law enforcement.

13 So it would be very common for analysts in the then-Intelligence Division and now
14 Research and Analysis Division to be working sort of like very closely with law
15 enforcement on sort of priority issues or individual cases with a particular law
16 enforcement agent.

17 Q And why did the name change?

18 A I think a couple reasons for that.

19 One was our function -- FinCEN's functions were substantially modified by the 20 Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020. And so y'all are probably familiar with we have a 21 new beneficial ownership reporting program that was contained in that statute.

22 There are also other things contained in that statute. Congress established an 23 analytic hub at FinCEN, which is now housed in this division. They set forth certain -- a 24 requirement that we regularly publish certain trends information based on information
25 filed with us, which I think we're required to do that at least twice a year.

1 And so we've been doing that since the statute was enacted in 2021 on sort of any
2 number of priority issues -- ransomware, other financial exploitation, and the like.

3 So the name change, one, reflected some of the changed responsibilities in the 4 division post this congressional act, and also to give a little bit more clarity as a practical 5 matter on what the division does.

6 FinCEN is not part of the intelligence community, the Intelligence Division was not
7 part of the intelligence community, and it wasn't always clear to folks what that term
8 meant. Whereas, research and analysis I think is a little more transparent in that regard 9 in terms of what the folks sitting in that division are doing on a day-to-day basis.

10 ██████████ And just so the record is clear, what role were you in when the 11 name change took place?

12 Mr. Kirby. I was the acting deputy director. I think that happened late last 13 year. We could confirm that if that's necessary, but I'm pretty sure it was late last year 14 when that happened.

15 BY ██████████

16 Q How frequently did you interact with FinCEN leadership as the associate 17 director?

18 A I would say pretty regularly.

19 So there's sort of a series of standing meetings, check-ins with leadership. There 20 would be, if I'm correctly recalling, sort of regular senior staff meetings.

21 And then on -- if there was certain particular like individual -- I would say, yes,
22 pretty regularly. That's kind of a mumbling answer, but I think that's the best answer I 23 have.

24 Q Would you say weekly? Daily?

25 A I would say, yeah, weekly. I don't know about daily.

1 Q Okay.

2 A Most of the time that I was in that role -- I changed into that role during 3 COVID. And so we weren't sitting around a table like this talking to each other, which 4 had been the practice prior to COVID during that period of time. But still, yes, regular 5 interaction with senior leadership.

6 Q And that would include the then-director of FinCEN?

7 A Correct, yes.

8 Q Okay. And how often did you interact with the Department of Justice?

9 A Me directly? Actually, me directly, I wouldn't say actually that was all that 10 common. That would've been more common, for example, in my prior role, the role I 11 had before the associate director position as chief counsel, because a key portion of that 12 job was actually supervising litigation involving FinCEN.

13 So in the run-up to me changing jobs in 2020, then numerous -- I wouldn't say 14 numerous -- we'll say three -- two or three substantial litigations in which we were in 15 regular contact with the Justice Department because of the need to file briefs, do case
16 coordination, strategy, that sort of stuff. I certainly did not have that kind of regular 17 interaction with the Justice Department when I moved out of the Legal Division.

18 Q And now how often do you interact with the Justice Department?

19 A Again, I would say it's not a regular thing for me in terms of my current 20 day-to-day job. If there's an interagency meeting where I'm attending, someone from 21 the Justice Department is attending, those are not very common for me. But, yeah, I 22 would say it's not a frequent occurrence.

23 [REDACTED] And just to clarify, when you were talking about your prior role 24 interacting with DOJ in connection with these litigation matters, what parts of DOJ would 25 you generally be interacting with?

1 Mr. Kirby. Oh, so principally the Civil Division. So the office -- the Federal
2 Programs Branch in the Civil Division represented us in one of the litigations I'm recalling,
3 and then also the Civil Division of U.S. Attorney's Offices, because, again, these were all
4 civil litigations that I'm thinking of at the moment.

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q And prior to joining the Department of Treasury, you said that you worked in 7 private practice?

8 A Correct.

9 Q And were there any other positions before private practice?

10 A I clerked for a Federal judge after leaving law school for a little over a year in 11 Dallas, and then I -- when finishing that I went back to school, did an additional degree,
12 before coming and joining the law firm here in D.C., which was about 3 years there.

13 Q And what was that additional degree?

14 A Public international law at a law school in London.

15 Q Are you a licensed lawyer?

16 A I am, yes.

17 Q When did you become licensed?

18 A So I took the bar in 2001, so I'm going to go with 2001 is when I became 19 licensed.

20 Q And were you a lawyer throughout your tenure at Treasury and FinCEN?

21 A Yes. I am still a lawyer, so technically yes, though I do no longer work in a 22 legal role.

23 [REDACTED] Have you worked for any financial institutions?

24 Mr. Kirby. No.

25

BY [REDACTED]

1 Q Is the associate director of the Intelligence Division functionally the head of
2 the division?

3 A Yes.

4 Q And how did your role relate to the operation of the FinCEN Exchange?

5 A So the FinCEN Exchange was codified in the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 6 2020 that I mentioned before.

7 Management of that function is actually housed in a different division and was 8 housed at the time in a different division of FinCEN, the Strategic Operations Division.

9 The predecessor to the current FinCEN Exchange program -- so we had a program
10 in this space prior to the AML -- was also housed in that Strategic Operations Division.

11 Q And what program was that?

12 A It was still called FinCEN Exchange.

13 Q Okay.

14 A But it was sort of codified and formalized by Congress in the Anti-Money
15 Laundering Act of 2020.

16 Q And the Strategic Operations Division is primarily responsible for the FinCEN
17 Exchange?

18 A Yes, that's correct.

19 Q And that is separate and apart from the Intelligence Division?

20 A That is correct.

21 Q And so your role in relation to the FinCEN Exchange was limited?

22 A Yes, that is correct.

23 Q How does the FinCEN Exchange influence operations at FinCEN?

24 A Hmm.

25 So the FinCEN Exchange is probably our premier public-private partnership, and

1 it's a way for the private sector and different parts of government to come together and
2 share information on priority topics.

3 So a good example of that at the moment is our Project Protect FinCEN Exchange
4 series, which we are doing across the country this year in connection with the Treasury
5 Counter-Fentanyl Strike Force as a way of bringing regional and local banks together with 6 law enforcement and others as a way of sharing typologies and other information to sort 7 of help more broadly -- help financial institutions and others recognize transactions that 8 may involve fentanyl trafficking, but also just to sort of share information and practices.

9 That's a current example of how it is used. Combating fentanyl trafficking is 10 obviously a very high priority for us at the Treasury Department.

11 But it could sort of be on any number of priorities like that where the idea is to 12 sort of share knowledge and expertise. And so we've also done them on countering 13 Russian sanctions evasion. We've done them on different types of money laundering
14 typologies. So it is meant to be a venue that people could come together and share
15 information.

16 Q And where does that information typically originate from?

17 A I don't know if there's a typical. Based on my understanding of the 18 program, sometimes it's -- it may be law enforcement coming and giving a presentation 19 on -- again, going back to fentanyl -- different aspects of fentanyl trafficking; or it may be 20 a financial institution sharing expertise about different ways they analyze the information
21 they have to sort of identify illicit finance threats.

22 Q Would those materials ever come from the Intelligence Division?

23 A Yes. It is not uncommon for -- going back to my fentanyl Project Protect 24 example -- analysts that work on the fentanyl mission set do regularly participate in the 25 FinCEN Exchanges.

1 Q And when material was exchanged with the FinCEN Exchange that came 2 from the Intelligence Division, would you have a role in reviewing and approving those
3 materials?

4 [REDACTED] Can you be a little more specific with that? Like, we're talking
5 in sort of very high generality. So is there something specific you want to ask him about,
6 some specific materials, or, like, more specificity with that question?

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q I'm just asking for process. So if the Intelligence Division is sharing material
9 to the FinCEN Exchange, which you've testified that it has, what was your role in getting 10 that material approved and out the door?

11 A I think it would -- I actually -- I think it would depend. Again, given the 12 timeframe is the reason that I'm here, I had been in the position about 90 days when the 13 FinCEN Exchanges that I understand are one of the focuses of this investigation began.

14 So to the extent there were materials that had already been sort of approved, like 15 developed and approved, I would not have expected those necessarily to come back to 16 me for additional approval if they were something that was essentially on the shelf, for 17 lack of a better way of putting it.

18 And I don't think -- sort of, like, this is old recollection at this point, but my 19 recollection is that it wouldn't necessarily be there for every exchange. Something that 20 the Intelligence Division analysts may be presenting in that environment would've come 21 to me for clearance beforehand.

22 Q How does -- how did your role relate to the operation of the Bank Secrecy
23 Act Advisory Group?

24 A So the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group is another function that is actually 25 principally housed then and now in our Strategic Operations Division. It's another form

1 of essentially public-private partnership. So my role then would've been actually quite 2 minimal in connection with the sort of operations of that function.

3 Q And are you more involved with that function now?

4 A Yes.

5 Q How so?

6 A So there was a BSAAG -- for example, there was a BSAAG meeting earlier this 7 year, of which I gave the opening remarks in connection with that event. So that is not 8 something that I would've done in a prior and I did not do in a prior role. That is 9 different in the role that I'm in now.

10 Q And how does the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group influence operations at 11 FinCEN or the Department of Treasury?

12 [REDACTED] Can you explain what you mean by influence?

13

BY [REDACTED]

14 Q Change. I mean, it's an advisory group.

15 A Yeah. I mean, I think it's an opportunity for -- it's another way for us to sort 16 of hear from and learn from, in this case, usually actors that are actually subject to the 17 requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act in terms of their views and perspectives on any 18 number of sort of regulatory or enforcement or things like that.

19 And influence is sort of hard for me to sort of define one way or the other, but in 20 its, I think, proper form, in its current form, it's an avenue for us to hear views from the 21 sector.

22 I don't know if that answered your question.

23 Q I think so.

24 A Okay.

25 Q Do you know AnnaLou Tirol?

1 A Yes.

2 Q And what was her role in operations at FinCEN?

3 A When she arrived at FinCEN she arrived as the associate director for the 4 Strategic Operations Division. And I'm sorry, but I can't actually recall the date on that.
5 I think I cut you off though from something else.

6 Q What was your professional relationship with her?

7 A So when she arrived at FinCEN, my recollection, I think it was still when I was 8 the chief counsel, so she would've been my, for all intents and purposes, my client at the 9 time. And then when I moved over to the Intelligence Division in late 2020, she 10 would've been my peer. And then in early 2021, she became my manager.

11 Q And do you know [REDACTED]?

12 A I do know [REDACTED] yes.

13 Q And what was her role in operations at FinCEN?

14 A If I remember correctly, [REDACTED] came to FinCEN as the chief of staff. At the 15 time, I was the chief counsel, so, again, she would've been my client. And then we both 16 transferred to the Intelligence Division around the same time in October of 2020, and at 17 that point she would've served as my deputy.

18 Q And do you know [REDACTED]?

19 A I do know [REDACTED], yes.

20 Q And what was your relationship with [REDACTED]?

21 A [REDACTED] was an employee in FinCEN's Strategic Operations Division or its 22 predecessor, I think, for the entirety of our -- he's no longer with FinCEN, but I think for 23 the entirety of his time at FinCEN that we overlapped, I think he was in that division the 24 entire time.

25 Q Do the different divisions within FinCEN that you've described, do they

1 interact frequently, or would you say they're more siloed?

2 A Yes, they do interact. My current and prior understanding is that teams
3 interact regularly.

4 Q And does each division interact with the private sector?

5 A Do you mean in like a regulatory sort of like supervisory way?

6 Q Just in terms of contact with the private sector.

7 A So I think it would vary based on division, would probably be the best
8 answer I could give you.

9 So, for instance, our like Management Division, the folks that sort of run HR and 10 run like services and that sort of stuff, I would think of their private sector interaction as 11 more like managing contractors and managing contracts, dealing with vendors, that sort 12 of stuff.

13 Whereas the more like policy-facing operations at FinCEN -- the Policy Division, 14 the Strategic Operations Division, the Enforcement and Compliance Division, and the 15 Research and Analysis Division, probably along with our Chief Counsel's Office as well -- in 16 different ways, in different fora, not necessarily uncommon for them to interact with 17 different parts of the private sector.

18 Q And did you work closely with the Office of Stakeholder Integration and 19 Engagement?

20 A No, I don't think so. I was aware of what they did, their function at the 21 agency, but I wouldn't say that I worked with them a lot.

22 Q Did you interact with [REDACTED]

23 A Yes.

24 Q How frequently?

25 A I would not actually say it was that frequent, because at least my normal

1 interactions with that division, if my recollection is correct, [REDACTED] was sort of a mid-level
2 manager in that division. I would've probably interacted with his more senior managers
3 when I was interacting with that division more than I interacted with him directly.

4 Q And who would that have been?

5 A That would've probably been, again, AnnaLou in the first instance.

6 AnnaLou was the head of that division when I moved to the Intelligence Division.

7 Q And just so we have a clear record, which division was that?

8 A I moved to the Intelligence Division, and AnnaLou was the head of the 9 Strategic Operations Division at that time.

10 Q And did your office, the Intelligence Division, rely on the Office of 11 Stakeholder Integration to share Intelligence Division material?

12 A Yes, in the context of things like if employees were participating in 13 the -- actually, maybe not. I'm not actually sure.

14 So let me answer your question as I understand it, because I'm not sure my "yes"
15 is 100 percent right.

16 They would have interacted with that office if they were participating in a FinCEN
17 Exchange or if they were doing a presentation at a Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group 18 meeting.

19 [REDACTED] I'm sorry, who's the "they" in this?

20 Mr. Kirby. Intelligence Division employees.

21 [REDACTED] Thank you.

22 Mr. Kirby. I'm sorry. I'm slipping into pronouns and acronyms quite a bit, so 23 please stop me when I do that.

24 So it would have not been uncommon for them to interact with that office if they 25 were participating in a public-private partnership like that. And it would not have been

1 uncommon for them to share what they were going to be presenting with that office.

2 Does that answer your question?

BY [REDACTED]

Q Yes.

5

A Okay.

Q Would you ever share materials with the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement for distribution with the private sector?

8

A I don't know that that was a common -- I don't know that that was necessarily common. But I also don't know that it's not something that would've

10 happened, particularly with regard to -- for instance, if you're talking to folks on the Bank

11

Secrecy Act Advisory Committee, you might share information with them for the 12 presentation so that folks are speaking from sort of a common set of facts, and it can give a more robust -- that's sort of me speculating. But that's one scenario in which I could see that playing out.

13

14

15

Q And when you were the associate director of the Intelligence Division, did you interact with private sector entities?

16

17

A Yes.

18

Q And what types of private sector entities did you work with?

19

A So I did participate in a -- so one example would be I did -- I did participate in 20

FinCEN Exchange.

21

Am I allowed to talk about FinCEN Exchanges? I think I am.

22

[REDACTED] Uh-huh.

23

Mr. Kirby. Okay. Thank you.

24

That's why we always have to have the lawyers nearby.

25

And so I participated in FinCEN Exchanges involving, for instance, like

1 counter-Russia illicit finance after Russia invaded Ukraine.

2 And that's actually, in the Intelligence Division, the sort of most direct
3 circumstance I remember interacting with the private sector. Again, it was different 4 than when I was the chief counsel where you'd be interacting more with like opposing 5 counsel and stuff like that.

6 But I don't remember that being a sort of frequent thing that I did in the 7 Intelligence Division compared to, for instance, my job now where it's much more
8 common for me to interact with the public and the private sector than the job I had 9 before this one.

10 [REDACTED] And were those primarily financial institutions?

11 Mr. Kirby. I think so, yes.

12 [REDACTED] What sorts of nonfinancial institutions would you work with?

13 Mr. Kirby. I actually can't recall any off the top of my head that would not have 14 been considered financial institutions under our regulations.

15 [REDACTED] Would you have interacted with law enforcement entities in this 16 role?

17 Mr. Kirby. Yes, but I'm trying to think when.

18 So, for instance, going back to my Russia example, we worked with a lot of law 19 enforcement agencies in connection with trying to identify oligarch assets or other sort of 20 illicit assets.

21 And so we have worked very closely with not just sort of like the traditional law
22 enforcement at the Justice Department, but also the Bureau of Industry and Security at 23 the Commerce Department in terms of trying to share information to counter improper
24 exports and sanctions evasion by Russian actors for U.S.-origin or U.S.-restricted goods.

25 So I think some aspects of BIS are technically -- I'm sorry, Bureau of Industry and

1 Security -- are technically considered law enforcement. So in those circumstances -- but
2 I wouldn't have been the principal interlocutor with them, but in those circumstances I
3 would expect that I would have had interaction with those folks.

4 [REDACTED] How do you decide who to partner with in the private sector?

5 Mr. Kirby. I think it kind of depends on the topic and the mission set. And so
6 going back -- and I'm sorry, I keep going back to this example, but it's one we're doing a
7 lot right now, the fentanyl set. The Protect Exchange series that were really the priority
8 for us at the moment, a lot of the financial institutions that we're inviting to those 9 sessions are sort of regional and local banks as a way of sort of, as they're closer to their 10 communities, to ensure that we're sharing information in sort of like all levels of the 11 financial sector.

12 In terms of pulling together a FinCEN Exchange, you would sort of think about who 13 are the right law enforcement partners who were working on the topic or that have 14 expressed an interest in doing an exchange.

15 So I think some of it is sort of organic around the topic, the setting, the mission 16 set.

17 Going back to my Russia example, many of the agencies I mentioned are the 18 agencies you would expect to be working in that space. BIS, the Bureau of Industry and 19 Security, they're very focused on avoiding improper shipments to folks who are not 20 supposed to get them. Same with like oligarch money-laundering assets you would be 21 working with FBI and others; fentanyl you'd be working with DEA and others.

22 So, again, there's sort of -- it can change based on the mission set and setting.

23 [REDACTED] But just to make sure so the record was clear.

24 So I think the record was, how do you decide who to partner with?

25 Mr. Kirby. Oh.

1 [REDACTED] So I just want to make sure the record is clear on, when you
2 were in the role as the AD of the Intelligence Division, would you have been making those 3 decisions?

4 Mr. Kirby. No, I would not. I'm sorry if I missed that.

5 [REDACTED] Who would have been making those decisions?

6 Mr. Kirby. Again, principally that function was housed in the Strategic 7 Operations Division, so I think in that division sort of up to FinCEN front office at the time.
8 But principally I think the Strategic Operations Division would have been the sort of 9 interlocutor and coordinator in that space.

10 [REDACTED] Were those relationships preexisting?

11 [REDACTED] Which relationships?

12 [REDACTED] The relationships with the private sector in terms of the folks that 13 the Strategic Operations Division is interacting with. Are you cold reaching out to 14 institutions, or is there a list of partners FinCEN has?

15 [REDACTED] I think to the extent he knows, since he's just said that 16 would've been housed in a different division at the time and he wasn't the one making 17 those decisions.

BY [REDACTED]

Q Sure. He's the deputy director now.

A So maybe I'll -- yeah, let me try that a couple different ways.

So some would be longstanding. So, for instance, we have a longstanding partnership with most of your major law enforcement agencies. I don't think that would surprise anyone given the nature of our mission. So we work very closely with the FBI, at times we work very closely with DEA, just given the nature of our mission set.

And so with regard to -- so I think if you're asking like do we could call in that space,

10

I think that would probably -- my expectation would be that would be a more organic

11 exchange. Sometimes it's partners want to have a FinCEN Exchange on a topic, have an idea of the topic and the location and how that would be helpful.

12

13

With regard to private sector components, some may be entities that have

14 interacted with FinCEN in the past. I think some may be those that haven't. And I think the Project Protect series I mentioned before that's focused on fentanyl you have

15

16 really a focus there on trying to reach regional, local banks to sort of share information

17 with them.

18

So while I don't know specifically how much of those may have involved like someone participating in the exchange had a relationship with bank A, bank B, or bank C, it would not surprise me if in a space of trying to reach out to make sure we're reaching

19

20

21 broadly in these spaces that you may -- some of that may be reaching out to a bank or another partner that hasn't previously been in an exchange with us.

22

23

So I think it may be a mix. Hopefully that answered the question.

24

Q Were there tensions with the private sector? Were there ever

25 disagreements?

1 A So that one you're going to have to help me with being a little bit more
2 specific, because we also house an enforcement function at FinCEN. So that tends to 3 not be a kumbaya space. So if, you know --

4 Q In terms of receiving material or sharing material with the private sector,
5 vice versa.

6 A I think it's important -- one aspect of the FinCEN Exchange I think sometimes
7 that gets lost is that these are voluntary exchanges. They're voluntary. We don't order
8 people to show up at FinCEN Exchanges. The people on BSAAG apply to be on BSAAG.
9 So they're not folks that we've ordered to show up for those events either.

10 So I would say, at least in those types of exchange spaces, you're already starting 11 from a space of folks have asked to be there. And so while I'm not entirely sure what 12 would count as tension, I think you're starting from a space that the people in the room 13 have raised their hand generally to be in the room.

14 Q And you've testified to this, but FinCEN has oversight responsibilities over 15 the financial institutions?

16 A That's correct. We are the administrator of the Bank Secrecy Act, which 17 sets forth a number of anti-money laundering and counterterrorism finance regulatory 18 obligations for U.S. financial institutions and others.

19 Q And did the Intelligence Division have oversight responsibility?

20 A I don't think that's how it would normally be described.

21 So I think the principal role of the financial -- the Intelligence Division in this space
22 would be the analytic expertise that the analysts bring to being able to sort of review the 23 suspicious activity reports and other information that the financial sector and others file
24 with FinCEN pursuant to the Bank Secrecy Act.

25 They may support, in an analytic sense, efforts in, say, the Global Investigations

1 Division, in the sort of 311. I don't know if you all are familiar with that authority. It's 2 a PATRIOT Act authority that allows targeting foreign financial institutions in foreign
3 jurisdictions, a primary money-laundering concern.

4 So, for example, Iran, North Korea are right now designated as foreign financial 5 institutions of primary money-laundering concern, for example. So they may 6 support -- provide analytic support for work like that in that division or they may 7 provide --

8 Q What does that analytic support look like?

9 A It might be looking at things like SARs we receive on a certain topic. So
10 if -- so the -- to take two steps back, to give you a not fentanyl example, because I feel like 11 I'm giving you that example a lot, the Cyber and Emerging Technology Office at FinCEN is 12 housed in the Intelligence Division. It's now full-blown one of the three divisions I 13 mentioned to you before in the organizational structure. That division houses a lot of 14 FinCEN's expertise in that space.

15 So to the extent the Global Investigations Division is looking at using one of our 16 targeting authorities against a foreign illicit finance threat, they may look -- and it would 17 not be uncommon for them to look -- to the analytic expertise housed in that office if 18 they're looking at illicit activity involving virtual assets, things like bitcoin, Monero, Ether, 19 things like that.

20 So that would be a regular area for them to collaborate, the employees in the 21 Intelligence -- the Research and Analysis Division supporting the work of the employees in 22 our Global Investigations Division, maybe our Policy Division, if they're putting together
23 an alert or an advisory on the topic and they're looking to discern sort of filing trends, 24 filing typologies in a certain space.

25 The analysts in the Research and Analysis Division could support that work on a

1 topic that they are already familiar with. So that's what the support would frequently
2 look like.

3 Q And just back to the original question, how does the Intelligence Division's
4 analytics support the enforcement aspect?

5 A So one aspect of that might be -- I think it was -- that one's harder for me,
6 because I'm having a hard time coming up with a specific example of that.

7 But if an enforcement case were evaluating has this financial institution filed
8 with -- SARs with FinCEN that they are supposed to file, that would not be an unusual
9 thing, in my opinion, for someone in the Enforcement Division to reach out to an 10 employee in the Research and Analysis Division or a team in the Research and Analysis
11 Division and coordinate with them, because we also have a data quality metrics team in 12 our Research and Analysis Division who is very sort of good at sort of checking those sorts 13 of things for other teams.

14 Q Coordinate and check in terms of have they filed SARs? Are they filing the 15 things that they should be?

16 A Yes.

17 Q Are they -- okay.

18 A They can also check like how many have they filed. They can also check 19 how many using certain SAR filing codes and things like that.

20 So a lot of the expertise of analyzing the filings that we get is housed in the 21 Research and Analysis Division. There may be employees in other parts of FinCEN that 22 have that expertise as well, but the real -- the sort of concentration of that expertise is in 23 our Research and Analysis Division.

24 Q And changing gears some, did you engage with Google regarding domestic 25 violent extremism?

1 A I do -- no, I do not recall doing that.

2 Q I'd like to now enter an email from Aaron Weiss, Western Union, to [REDACTED]
3 [REDACTED] dated April 19th, 2021, with the subject line "Capitol Riots/DVE" into the record
4 as exhibit 1. Take some time to review.

5 [Kirby Exhibit No. 1
6 was marked for identification.]

7 [REDACTED] It looks like this is just the first page. Is there a beginning of 8 this email, second page?

9 [REDACTED] No. This is the exchange that we're introducing.

10 [REDACTED] Okay. So for the record, is there additional context that 11 began this email chain?

12 [REDACTED] No, there's not.

13 [REDACTED] So there's no emails before the email at the very bottom of this 14 document on this chain?

15 [REDACTED] This could be a part of a larger chain.

16 [REDACTED] Okay. So you don't know one way or the other whether 17 there's any emails before this that would give this context?

18 [REDACTED] I just want to ask about this specific exchange.

19 [REDACTED] Okay, without providing the full document or the full context.
20 That's what I want to be clear on the record, especially since he's not on this email.

21 [REDACTED] And this is the document that we've been -- we've received from 22 a financial institution, and this is the relevant excerpt.

23 [REDACTED], if it's helpful, we can pull up the document production and see 24 what, I think it would be, 256 or 258 says.

25 [REDACTED] I think we just want to know for the record like is this the full

1 email or not.

2 [REDACTED] That's understood, and I think it's noted for the record. But I
3 think we should just move forward with this. I'm not prepared to get into super detail
4 with this email.

5 I just want to ask whether you can describe any conversations FinCEN may have 6 had with Google.

7 [REDACTED] Also noting for the record that he's, of course, not on this
8 email.

9 [REDACTED] Your note has been made for the record.

10 Mr. Kirby. So, yeah, not being on the email, I don't recall ever having seen this 11 email before, and I don't recall any conversations with Google on this topic.

12 [REDACTED] Are you aware of any financial intelligence received from Google
13 regarding the Capitol riots or DVE?

14 Mr. Kirby. No, not that I recall.

15 [REDACTED] Do you know why FinCEN may have been in touch with Google?

16 Mr. Kirby. Beyond what's on this piece of paper, no.

17 [REDACTED] In your role as associate director of the Intelligence Division, 18 would you have -- would Google be one of the private sector entities that you would 19 communicate with?

20 Mr. Kirby. I don't recall having communications with Google in that role. But 21 just given who Google is and what they do, like it wouldn't -- it doesn't necessarily 22 surprise me that FinCEN would have communications with Google. It's just I'm not 23 familiar with this exchange.

24 [REDACTED] We can move on.

25 Mr. Kirby. Okay.

1 Do you want this back?

2 [REDACTED] Sure.

3 [REDACTED] We'll take this back.

4 BY [REDACTED]

5 Q Shifting back again. Does FinCEN have a role in the creation and filing of 6 SARs?

7 A So I'm going to deconstruct your question a little bit, because the 8 creation -- I'm not really sure what that means. But on the filing side, we are the 9 repository for financial institutions when they file SARs. So when you say creation,
10 could I ask what you mean by creation?

11 Q Yes. Does FinCEN ever direct financial institutions to file certain kinds of 12 SARs?

13 A I think the answer to that is no, but I'm not actually sure. Maybe I can put 14 some meat on that because I don't know that's -- I want to make sure I'm complete and 15 clear.

16 We are the administrator of the statute that requires the filing of SARs. And so 17 Congress has set forth a requirement in this regard. The regulations implementing that 18 are administered by FinCEN.

19 FinCEN regularly publishes advisories, alerts, and other sort of public-facing 20 material to advise the financial sector and others of illicit finance threats.

21 So within the last couple weeks we've filed one on fentanyl. We have put -- over 22 the course of this year we have materials that we've published on elder financial 23 exploitation, online exploitation of children.

24 These are things we put out for the sector in terms of trying to share information
25 with the public, particularly the financial sector, regarding illicit finance threats in a way

1 of hopefully helping folks identify this activity, file SARs with FinCEN that are then
2 available to law enforcement to support USG and other efforts to sort of combat these 3 issues.

4 So that's how I would sort of describe our role in that space. I don't think of it as 5 creation; I think of it as we're the administrator of the statute.

6 Financial institutions have the obligation under the regulations in the statute to 7 stand up their anti-money laundering program, identify suspicious activity, file it with 8 FinCEN, and we share information to sort of help them sort of identify suspicious or illicit 9 activity in a number of areas, but not all areas.

10 Q And does the Intelligence Division help identify potentially suspicious
11 activity?

12 A So at the Intelligence Division, now the Research and Analysis Division, it 13 would not be uncommon for analysts in that division to -- so the alert advisory function is 14 principally housed in FinCEN's Policy Division.

15 It would not be uncommon for analysts in the Research and Analysis Division to 16 support their colleagues in the Policy Division with regard to evaluating filings that we've 17 received, looking for information that we could sort of push out to the public and others
18 to sort of, again, help raise awareness of illicit finance threats, but also sort of guide the 19 sector in terms of hopefully being able to identify this type of activity and to file it with 20 FinCEN.

21 Q And how does that analysis occur? What tools are they using? What 22 sorts of things are they utilizing to identify things that may be worthy of sharing a
23 suspicious activity?

24 A Okay.

25 [REDACTED] Could I just -- I think just to --

1 Mr. Kirby. That's a long answer.

2 ██████████ I was just also going to clarify what you mean by identify as 3 suspicious activity, because I think he's just testified a moment ago that that's actually the 4 banks that support suspicious activity and the now-Research and Analysis Division does 5 analysis of that reporting.

6 So when you say identify suspicious activity, can you just explain what exactly you
7 mean by that?

8 ██████████ Yeah. So he also testified that the Intelligence Division helps 9 share materials related to potentially illicit activity and administering the statute, bringing 10 things to the attention of the public.

11 And so I'm asking, when you're analyzing those materials, what does that analysis 12 look like?

2 [11:02 a.m.]

3 Mr. Kirby. Here's a couple. I don't want to get too, like, bogged down. I don't 4 think this is a short answer, so I apologize in advance.

5 So some of it is just their expertise in a topic. So, you know, we have -- again, to 6 go back -- sorry I keep going back to this, but I think it is one that is sort of very topical at 7 point -- fentanyl space. We have worked -- we have a close partnership with DEA in 8 terms of identifying and working closely on cases and other matters in that space. So 9 there's a -- there's a familiarity and expertise analysts may have on the topic.

10 There's also the ability to, sort of, identify via key words or the filing code that a 11 financial institution may use for us. So if we've published an -- if we've published a prior 12 document that had -- so, for instance, in the fentanyl space, we have -- there's -- you 13 know, we've previously published in that space.

14 We have a filing code from our last advisory in that space we ask the financial 15 sector to use, identifying -- looking at what we're getting in response to those, sort of,
16 public guidance documents, and evaluating those as to both -- you know, so it's not just 17 the internal piece of that. It's potentially highlighting that to our law enforcement
18 partners or sharing that internally because it may be -- you know, the Policy Division, it
19 may be useful to them in terms of, like, crafting some sort of public document.

20 And then there are other -- you're now going to, sort of, go beyond my, sort of,
21 areas of expertise in terms of the ability to, sort of, engage in data analytics and other
22 things with regard to the filings we have in front of us to identify, sort of, themes, 23 typologies, information and the like.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25

Q And was the Intelligence Division responsible for reviewing SARs?

1 A The Intelligence Division -- the then-Intelligence -- see, I get kind of caught
2 up on this, too. The then-Intelligence, now Research and Analysis Division, like, so they
3 don't review every SAR we get. We get. I think. About 55,000 filings altogether a 4 day. We are an agency of approximately 285 employees.

5 So -- but a big part of their job is -- is identifying the -- is reviewing the filings that
6 we get against the, sort of, prior- -- we have published priorities under the Anti-Money
7 Laundering Act 2020. They're on our website. The statute required us to do that.

8 And so we have -- we have identified a set of AML priorities on our website. We 9 have priorities as set forth by departmental administration leadership. These are sort of 10 long-standing, not different from one administration to the other. They each have their 11 priorities that they want us to focus on.

12 And so they are identifying our filings against these, sort of, priority mission sets
13 whom usually in the context of -- their area of assigned responsibility. So the folks that 14 work on Cyber and Emerging Technology are likely going to be focused on the filings 15 we're getting in connection with things like ransomware or the use of virtual currency to 16 engage in, you know, various illicit things on the internet, like engaging with dark net 17 marketplaces and things like that.

18 So, yes, they do review those materials. They don't review all of them that we 19 get, but it is a key part of their day-to-day function.

20 ██████████ How do employees decide which filings to review? If you're 21 getting 55,000 a day, are you just hoping the ones you review lead to something?

22 Mr. Kirby. So I think there's a couple answers to that question, too.

23 One is actually, sort of, going back to what I mentioned before with regard to the 24 filing codes. You know, one of the advantages of, you know -- pick a topic, fentanyl, 25 elder financial exploitation, ransomware, anywhere we have a published code. One of

1 the reasons we encourage financial institutions to use the code is it makes it much easier
2 for our analysts and our law enforcement partners to identify the filings that would come
3 in on ransomware, elder financial exploitation, et cetera.

4 And then the other are these, sort of, like, analytic tools -- which, again, you're 5 now escaping my -- sort of the outer bounds of my expertise in that regard. No one will 6 ever confuse me with a computer programmer. And so there are a variety of tools that 7 can be, sort of, deployed in that space.

8 [REDACTED] So is FinCEN using artificial intelligence or machine learning to 9 sort through this?

10 Mr. Kirby. I don't -- I don't -- I believe the answer to that is no. I do not believe 11 we're using artificial intelligence. That's my current understanding.

12

BY [REDACTED]

13 Q Are there any --

14 A But you may search -- just to, sort of, finish that thought. But it wouldn't 15 be inappropriate -- or it wouldn't be unusual is a better way of putting it -- for someone to 16 be searching for key words in filings.

17 So even if -- and by that I don't mean the key word the filer used. I mean a SAR
18 usually includes a narrative section, for example. So they may search the narrative 19 section for, sort of, key words, typologies, perhaps the names of certain cartels, for 20 example.

21 So, you know, there is the ability to, sort of, search across documents. You're 22 not just, sort of, like, clicking through every document that came in yesterday sort of 23 thing.

24 Q Are there any codes or typologies that aren't published?

25 A I don't know the answer to that question in a, sort of, definitive way. My

1 expectation would be that most are -- most are public. But I actually don't know if there
2 are others that may not be over time.

3 Q Do you know if financial institutions are using artificial intelligence or 4 machine learning to identify potentially suspicious activity?

5 A I don't know the answer to that in a definitive way. I know that it is an area
6 of interest, but I don't -- I don't know the degree to which -- the degree to which people
7 are varying degrees down the road in that regard.

8 Q You mentioned that it's an area of interest. Could you explain a little bit on
9 that --

10 A Well, by that I mean -- and, frankly, I'm going by just what I read in the 11 papers on that principally of, you know, there's just -- I think there is -- one of the aspects 12 of the Anti-Money Laundering Act was, sort of, a drive to think about different ways to 13 reduce regulatory burden.

14 And so, you know, just from what I read in the press, there's a fair amount of 15 discussion about different ways. AI could be deployed in not just the financial sector but 16 other sectors in the future. But I don't have any sort of specific definitive knowledge of 17 where things are in that regard.

18 Q Does FinCEN ever notify law enforcement of particular SAR filings?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And how does that notification process occur?

21 A I don't know that there is a specific, sort of, definitive, it's always this way,
22 but I don't -- my understanding is that I don't think it would be uncommon. Going back
23 to my, you know, fentanyl example, if an analyst saw something they knew was relevant 24 to a DEA case that they were supporting, they might alert the DEA agent to that.

25 Similarly, you know, to the extent we receive filings on ransomware -- you know,

1 there's a fair amount of interest in combatting ransomware, so to the extent we have
2 relevant filings to that mission set, making the relevant law enforcement agencies aware
3 of that fact is something that I understand happens.

4 [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

5 [Recess.]

6 [REDACTED] We are back on the record.

7 EXAMINATION

8 BY [REDACTED]

9 Q Mr. Kirby, you mentioned that you were FinCEN's chief counsel for 10 approximately five years. Is that correct?

11 A Altogether, including actings, yeah, almost five years.

12 Q And so I imagine that you are then well-versed in statutory and regulatory 13 authorities pursuant to which FinCEN operates?

14 A I would like to think so, yes.

15 Q I would certainly hope so. And also the ones that --

16 A You know, we'll see.

17 Q As well as the authorities that FinCEN helps to administer that you discussed
18 earlier?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And you used the term financial intelligence a few times during the previous 21 hour. Can you explain exactly what financial intelligence is.

22 A So when we use that term at FinCEN, we tend to be referring to the 23 information that is filed with us pursuant to the Bank Secrecy Act. So that would be 24 things like suspicious activity reports, forensic transaction reports, you know, those types
25 of reports that financial institutions and others file with FinCEN under the BSA.

1 And when I say BSA, Bank Secrecy Act. I'm trying to watch the acronyms, so --

2 Q Thank you. And just so you know, I'll be saying BSA regularly.

3 A Okay. Okay. Good.

4 Q Can you explain at a high level how the BSA and the financial intelligence
5 that FinCEN obtains through it, how does that help keep Americans safe?

6 A Well, the overarching purpose of the Bank Secrecy Act is set forth in the 7 statute to essentially -- to, sort of, generate reports helpful to law enforcement, helpful to 8 regulatory exams, you know. The purposes are expanded under the AMLA. It also 9 includes, sort of, like, tracing criminal proceeds and things like that.

10 So, you know, I think in terms of keeping people safe, suspicious activity reports, 11 we hear pretty consistently from our law enforcement partners, are a critical tool for 12 them in terms of combatting an array of financial crimes. I'll sort of come back to a 13 topic I mentioned before, you know, be it elderly -- elder financial exploitation. You 14 know, we've done -- we have a lot out in the space.

15 That's an area where, you know, a lot of financial institutions really are on the 16 front line with regard to the risk of things like so-called grandparent scams or romance 17 scams or things like that.

18 And we've worked hard to get information out to the sector in that topic and 19 some others to sort of alert, you know, the folks who may encounter that firsthand, 20 things they could be on the lookout for in terms of red flags, typologies of how that 21 works, et cetera.

22 Q But illicit finance doesn't just refer to crimes that are themselves financial,
23 but also just transactions that further other crimes, like violent offenses or drug 24 trafficking, for example. Is that fair to say?

25 A Yeah, I think that's fair to say.

1 Q Okay. We had a witness from the FBI tell us an example of a situation
2 where he was able to use SARs to identify somebody who was making, I believe it was,
3 bond-making equipment and was able to prevent what seemed like it could have been a
4 very serious tragedy.

5 Does that surprise you that SARs would be helpful in that regard?

6 A No. I mean, my understanding is they are -- they are useful and helpful in a 7 wide array of efforts to combat criminal activity.

8 Q I want to take a step back and ask you about FinCEN's mission. I believe 9 you stated the mission during the previous hour, but I missed some of what you said.
10 So if I could ask you to repeat that, I'd appreciate it.

11 A Sure. And I probably gave you the truncated version. I'm not sure I 12 always get the full thing from memory, but it's -- you know, our principal goal is to 13 support safeguarding U.S. financial system from illicit and criminal use and to support,
14 you know, law enforcement and other efforts to, sort of, combat those actions through 15 the strategic analysis of financial intelligence and other information. That's, essentially,
16 in a nutshell, what we do.

17 Q Your website -- or FinCEN's website. I'm not going to give you ownership of 18 it -- says that FinCEN's mission is to safeguard the financial system from illicit use and 19 combat money laundering and its related crimes, including terrorism, and promote 20 national security through the strategic use of financial authorities and the collection, 21 analysis, and dissemination of financial intelligence.

22 Does that sound right to you?

23 A Yes. That's much more articulate than the way I put it.

24 Q Well, it's a lot easier when you're -- when you have the time to sit and type it
25 up or copy it from -- from the internet, as I just did.

1 So one of the things that FinCEN focuses on is combatting the use of financial
2 systems to finance terrorism, correct?

3 A Yes.

4 Q And that is often referred to by the acronym of CFT, combatting the 5 financing of terrorism?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And FinCEN's Anti-Money Laundering activities are referred to often as AML
8 or --

9 A Correct.

10 Q -- generally in the field of -- in this field that acronym is used.

11 In FinCEN's work in countering the financing of terrorism applies to international 12 terrorism but also domestic terrorism here in the United States, correct?

13 A Yes.

14 Q FinCEN is not a new bureau or agency? I mean, it was established by 15 Congress in 1990. Is that right?

16 A We were initially established, I think, by the Department and then 17 Congress -- I think it was in the Patriot Act, but don't -- we can confirm that -- formally 18 established us as a bureau within the Department reporting to the Under Secretary for 19 Terrorism and Financial Intelligence.

20 Q Okay. My understanding is that in 31 United States Code Section 310 in 21 1990 FinCEN was codified as a bureau within --

22 A I will take your word for that then.

23 Q -- the Treasury Department. Thank you.

24 Separate and apart from FinCEN's regulatory function, in terms of its 25 information-sharing function, would you say that FinCEN essentially works as, sort of, a

1 clearinghouse for law enforcement, the Treasury Department, and financial institutions to 2 share information about trends and issues that they're seeing in illicit finance?

3 A I think that's a fair description. Yes.

4 Q And you talked during the previous hour a little bit about FinCEN's work or 5 collaboration with law enforcement agencies.

6 Why is it important for FinCEN to work with law enforcement agencies?

7 A You know, I think that's, sort of, one of the key functions that Congress has 8 set out for us in the Bank Secrecy Act.

9 When you look at the purposes of the statute, many of them involve combatting
10 criminal and other illegal activity in terms of making information available to them, you 11 know, that's the -- the sort of -- that's sort of embedded into our statutory, sort of,
12 overlay and construct.

13 So it's set forth for us as a key portion of our mission in our statutory -- in our, sort 14 of, overall statutory construct is at least in my mind how I would think about it.

15 Q So is it fair to say that Congress has directed FinCEN to work with law
16 enforcement to help in combatting illicit finance and the various crimes we've talked 17 about?

18 A Yeah. I see that as a key component of our underlying statutory structure.

19 Q And would you say that it's also a key component of your underlying 20 statutory structure to work with financial institutions and share information with them to 21 help them identify illicit transactions or suspicious activities that -- that could be related 22 to illicit conduct?

23 A I do. I see that sort of connecting back in a couple of different ways. You 24 know, one is we are the administrator of the statute, and the goal of the statute is -- at 25 least with regard to SAR filings is, you know, for the -- you know, the statutory construct

1 sets out, you know, the types of information that should be filed with FinCEN in this
2 regard, and as administrative statute see this, sort of, consistent with that in terms of the 3 sharing information that can help those subject to these rules better comply with them.

4 And then, as I said before, you know, the overarching, sort of, purposes section of 5 the statute lays out a number of purposes that involve combatting criminal activity as,
6 sort of, the key functions of the overall statute.

7 Q And --

8 A I'm missing my statute book right now because, as a lawyer, that's what I
9 would be, like, reaching for to actually read it back to you. So I'm -- I'm sorry in that 10 regard.

11 Q I've got Section 310 here. I can --

12 A Actually, the section I was referring to is actually 5311, which lays out the 13 purposes of the overall statute and will sort of lay out all of these different functions that 14 the reporting is meant to support.

15 Q Thank you. And we're going to talk about some of the other statutes 16 briefly as well.

17 But FinCEN is required by statute to maintain a database as a repository for SARs,
18 correct?

19 A Yes, that is correct.

20 Q And to make that database available to law enforcement?

21 A Yes, that is correct.

22 Q And FinCEN is required by statute to analyze and disseminate the data it has 23 and to issue guidelines to help identify criminal activity to appropriate federal, state, 24 local, and tribal law enforcement authorities, correct?

25 A Yes. That is correct. It looks like you have our statute in front of you. So

1 that all sounds right to me.

2 Q And FinCEN is required by statute to establish and maintain a financial
3 crimes communication center to furnish law enforcement authorities with intelligence
4 information related to emerging or ongoing investigations, correct?

5 A Yes.

6 Q And all of this work FinCEN is doing by statute in the interest of detection,
7 prevention, and prosecution of terrorism, organized crime, money laundering, and other
8 financial crimes, correct?

9 A Yes.

10 Q And you've talked about some of them at length during the previous hour, in 11 particular fentanyl, which seems to be a big focus.

12 But there's a wide range of crimes that FinCEN helps to -- helps financial 13 institutions to identify transactions that support those crimes, correct?

14 A Yes, that is correct.

15 Q You mentioned financial abuse of elders, I believe you mentioned some sort 16 of child sexual abuse?

17 A Online child sexual exploitation and child sexual abuse material.

18 Q Obviously, we have international and domestic narcotics trafficking --

19 A [Nonverbal response.]

20 Q -- terrorism?

21 A Yes. I'm sorry. I caught myself as soon as -- no nodding. Yes.

22 Q And I'm the only person who didn't catch it.

23 So I want to ask you a couple questions about the Bank Secrecy Act and how it 24 functions.

25 First of all, Bank Secrecy Act has been around for over 50 years. Is that right?

1 A Yes. I think -- I believe the, sort of, initial statute is an early 1970s statute.

2 Q And it's the Bank Secrecy Act that requires financial institutions to file
3 suspicious activity reports, or SARs, correct?

4 A The statute, in conjunction with regulations that have been promulgated by 5 the Treasury Department over the years.

6 Q And under those statutes and regulations, banks are legally obligated under 7 the Bank Secrecy Act to file a SAR for certain transactions that are relevant to a possible
8 violation of criminal law, including terrorism, correct?

9 A That's correct, but it's actually a little broader than that. It's possible -- a 10 relevant or possible violation of law or regulation.

11 Q Thank you for that.

12 A I actually don't think there's a criminal qualifier in front of law. So it's any 13 potential violation of law or regulation would meet the standards set forth in the statute
14 or regulation.

15 Q It could be a civil law?

16 A It could involve civil enforcement. And there's a -- and you may be getting 17 to this, but there's a conjunction to that.

18 There's the mandatory requirement and then there's the ability to voluntarily file,
19 as the statutory construct laid out by Congress really is to encourage filing. So 20 you -- there's the ones you're required to file, but there's also very much an 21 encouragement for people to voluntarily file beyond what they're required to file.

22 Q And -- but there is that first section, which is mandatory, correct?

23 A Correct, yes.

24 Q And that means that if a bank fails to appropriately identify transactions that 25 fall within those mandatory requirements, they could face penalties?

1 A Correct, yes.

2 Q And it would be FinCEN that would make that determination?

3 A Yes. And FinCEN -- and at least with regard to banks and credit unions, we 4 would normally be in close consultation with the relevant functional regulator in that 5 space for the financial institution in question.

6 Q Okay. Law enforcement agencies use information that they obtain from 7 FinCEN's database from the SARs in both proactive investigations in terms of helping to 8 prevent crime and also reactive investigations, helping to -- once a crime has occurred,
9 helping to identify the perpetrators. Is that correct?

10 A That sounds correct to me, yes.

11 Q And that's across all of these different types of offenses and threats to 12 national security that we've discussed?

13 A That is my understanding, yes.

14 Q Based on your experience and over nearly 20 years at the Treasury
15 Department, what would happen, in your opinion, if Congress were to roll back the Bank
16 Secrecy Act and stop requiring or even permitting banks to file suspicious activity reports?

17 A So that's a hard question for me to answer in the sense that, you know, 18 those are -- those are policy decisions that I often, sort of, feel like are beyond my 19 agreement in the first instance without, sort of, consultation above. So I'll sort of start 20 with that qualifier.

21 You know, I maybe would answer your question, if it's okay, a slightly different 22 way and would go back --

23 Q Sure.

24 A -- to what you said before about the role of these filings that we hear pretty 25 consistently from law enforcement are incredibly useful to them in a variety of 1 investigatory ways.

2 And, you know, we -- one of the, I think -- could be safe to say that one of the 3 goals of the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 was to, sort of, put on us as an agency
4 the obligation to, sort of, provide more, sort of, public visibility and feedback into the 5 utility of the information that we're getting.

6 So over the last couple of years, you've seen FinCEN start publishing things, like a
7 year in review, that lays out, with input from law enforcement, you know, the different 8 ways they use the information that's made available to them from -- you know, from our 9 holdings. Or a relatively new product line for us, another sort of AMLA obligation, our 10 financial trend, financial threat analysis reports that are also available on our website, and 11 that is, sort of, walking through, you know -- and we're required to at least two a year,
12 but I think we're ahead of the two this year.

13 And that's where we're -- things like -- we published one earlier this year on online
14 child sexual exploitation. We published one on elder financial exploitation, I believe it 15 was this year as well. We've published them on ransomware and other things like that.

16 So, you know, one of the things that is, sort of, incumbent upon us under our 17 statutory authorities now is actually, I think, to show more, sort of -- to give more public
18 visibility into the value of the information that we get. We're trying to do that in a 19 variety of ways.

20 Q Those year in review reports, do they provide examples of, here's an 21 investigation where SARs were helpful? This is --

22 A I don't know if they go quite that far. But we have another publication that 23 does some of that, and that is every year -- there may have been a hiccup during COVID.
24 But usually most years -- let me phrase it that way -- FinCEN does the director's law
25 enforcement awards where there's an effort actually -- law enforcement agencies can,

1 essentially, highlight cases where BSA filings have been instrumental to the underlying
2 investigation, and we publish summaries of those on our website. So, again, to give 3 some visibility to the different ways the information is used.

4 Q And so in that situation, the director is awarding law enforcement for --

5 A Yes.

6 Q -- their service in --

7 A The law enforcement agency may get, like, an award recognition
8 from -- from the FinCEN director in response to those nominations that we receive.

9 Q You stated in the earlier hour that typically the process with SARs is a 10 financial institution files a SAR with FinCEN, and then it goes into a database where it's 11 made available to law enforcement, correct?

12 A Correct.

13 Q And FinCEN itself is not investigating the potential crime to which the SAR 14 relates?

15 A So FinCEN is not a criminal law enforcement agency. So we would not be,
16 in the first instance, investigating criminal activity. However, our analysts do provide a 17 lot of support on those -- on, sort of, priority topic areas.

18 -- and, again, to go back to fentanyl, you know, so our analysts may be doing
19 analysis of the information we get in that space both in support of our law enforcement
20 partners, but also, you know, Treasury is the -- Treasury -- sort of above us Treasury is the 21 administrator of the sanctions programs in the narcotics space. And we -- we have our 22 own, sort of -- as the department efforts to combat fentanyl trafficking and things like 23 that.

24 So FinCEN analysts can be supporting law enforcement, and that work could also 25 support the department's broader efforts in this space as well.

1 Q Thank you for that clarification. I want to go back to something that we
2 talked about a few minutes ago.

3 You mentioned there's the mandatory SARs reporting and then the voluntary SARs 4 reporting.

5 The voluntary SARs reporting allows banks to report any transaction that may be 6 potentially relevant to any violation of law or regulation regardless of how small that 7 transaction is. There's no -- there's no threshold for voluntary reporting, correct?

8 A That -- that is my recollection, yes. I think that's correct.

9 Q And you also stated --

10 A And I should add, actually, the safe harbor applies to both.

11 Q Can you explain what that means?

12 A So the statute sets forth a safe harbor for mandatory filings, the ones you're 13 required to make, and the statute extends the safe harbor to any that you -- really, again,
14 going back to the, sort of, encouraging filings. So you can't -- I don't have the exact
15 language in front of me, and I should have the exact language in front of me before I 16 speak to it.

17 But it, essentially, provides legal protection for any institution that chooses to file
18 suspicious activity with us if it's required or not.

19 Q So, essentially, is it fair to say that it means the banks can't be held liable for 20 disclosing that information?

21 A I think that's correct. That's probably a concise way of putting it.

22 Q Now, SARs are made available to law enforcement agencies, but they are 23 also subject to strict confidentiality provisions under the law, correct?

24 A Yes.

25 Q And FinCEN takes those -- its responsibilities to maintain the confidentiality

1 of SARs very seriously?

2 A Yes. That's -- it's very important for us to do that.

3 Q And I believe you stated earlier that FinCEN is receiving approximately, did
4 you say, 55,000 SARs a day?

5 A I think we receive 55,000 BSA filings a day, which is all forms. And as I say
6 that out loud, that may be an old stat.

7 But we get a decent number of filings per day across all the filing sets that we 8 have.

9 Q Can you explain what some of the other filing sets are?

10 A So we also receive currency transaction reports. Those are the -- for folks
11 who may not be familiar with them, if you go to a bank and clunk down $11,000 in cash,
12 they will fill out this -- it's the one I feel like people are most familiar with with FinCEN
13 because they've seen it in, like, movies and stuff. So that's one.

14 There is a -- the form when you cross the border with more than X number of 15 dollars, that's also a FinCEN form. And there's a nonbank counterpart to the currency 16 transaction report that requires the reporting of certain transactions by nonbanks in 17 excess of $10,000 as well.

18 Q With respect to those currency transaction reports, that's a requirement that 19 any transaction in excess of $10,000 be reported, correct?

20 A Yes. And there's a requirement to aggregate in connection with that. So 21 if you go to three branches of the same bank in the same day, the bank would aggregate 22 those up, and if it exceeds the 10,000, they would file a currency transaction report.

23 Q And that's different than a suspicious activity report, correct?

24 A Different from a suspicious activity report, yes.

25 Q But you could have a situation where the requirement of a currency

1 transaction report evolves into something that triggers a suspicious activity report. For 2 example, somebody goes to the bank to deposit $10,000. They're told they have to fill
3 out this report, and then they say, I'll just do 9,000. How about that? That might --

4 A Yes. That would be called a structuring SAR, and -- I'm sorry. That would 5 be called structuring. And a financial institution would normally file a SAR with someone 6 indicating they're seeking to avoid a regulatory obligation.

7 Q And you stated during the previous hour that FinCEN does not review all of 8 these -- I mean, there's millions per year, correct?

9 A Correct. Yes, we do not review all of them.

10 Q And law enforcement does not review all of them?

11 A That is correct.

12 Q So it's fair to --

13 A That is my understanding, I should say. I've never actually worked at a law
14 enforcement agency, so I'll say that is my understanding.

15 Q The Bank Secrecy Act is the legal process that authorizes banks to file
16 suspicious activity reports, correct?

17 A The Bank Secrecy Act and the regulations implementing the Bank Secrecy
18 Act, yes.

19 Q And that also allows the -- the Bank Secrecy Act and its implementing 20 regulations also allow financial institutions to provide the supporting documentation
21 underlying a suspicious activity report --

22 A Yes, that is correct.

23 Q -- to FinCEN or law enforcement?

24 A To -- I know for FinCEN, yes. I think for law enforcement, too, but I also 25 know that law enforcement has their own, sort of, authorities in that space as well, sort

1 of, separate from ours.

2 BY [REDACTED]

3 Q A couple minutes ago you were asked about the confidentiality protections
4 for SARs. Do you recall that quick line of questioning?

5 A Yes.

6 Q And you were asked SARs are subject to strict confidentiality protections
7 under the law, and you said yes. You recall that?

8 A Yes.

9 Q Could you explain your understanding of what those confidentiality
10 provisions or protections are?

11 A The statute sets forth very broad protection for -- to prevent the 12 unauthorized disclosure of SARs. And so, basically, any use beyond the official purposes
13 and official purpose, and the prohibition applies to financial institutions, their employees, 14 their directors. It also applies to government employees and contractors as a means of 15 safeguarding the data, given the sensitivity of the data as a means of safeguarding the 16 data.

17 Q And with respect to FinCEN in particular, does FinCEN have particular
18 structures or procedures or regulations in place that pertain specifically to FinCEN
19 employees that -- to protect these -- protect the confidentiality of these SARs?

20 A So with regard to partner agencies, they enter into MOUs with us in terms 21 of -- and they sort of agree and recognize the sort of -- the need to protect the 22 confidentiality of the information.

23 And then with regard to employees, yes, it's part of the, sort of, conduct
24 obligations that would attach to any FinCEN employee that you have to respect the 25 confidentiality of this information. I believe -- but I should double-check this. I believe

1 that all employees that have access to the database have security clearances. And,
2 again -- and a sort of background investigation comes along with that in terms of ensuring
3 they should have access to this and other, you know, sensitive information.

4 So there are a variety of, sort of, technological but also just policy-based 5 restrictions on people's activities in this regard.

6 Q And are you familiar with what might happen to an employee if they are 7 careless with a SAR or if they intentionally were to leak a SAR or to make a SAR available
8 outside of the group of individuals that should have access to it?

9 A I am familiar with that. So -- and this is a space where, you know, if we 10 have concerns like that, we refer the matter to our Office of Inspector General and our 11 office of inspector general has taken action in the past in connection with potential 12 improper conduct in this regard.

13 Q And could that action include, for example, an employee losing their job?

14 A Yes, it could.

15 Q Thank you.

16

BY [REDACTED]

17 Q Now, you talked about this a little bit earlier, but I want to get into it in some 18 more detail.

19 It's the financial institution's responsibility to determine when, pursuant to the 20 BSA and its implementing regulations, they must file a SAR, correct?

21 A Yes, that is correct.

22 Q It's not FinCEN's responsibility to tell a financial institution -- and I'm going to 23 use the word bank to mean financial --

24 A Right.

25 Q -- institutions generally just because that's a mouthful.

1 It's not FinCEN's responsibility to tell a bank, you have to file a SAR for X
2 transaction or X pattern?

3 A That is correct.

4 Q And in order to meet this responsibilities under the Bank Secrecy Act,
5 financial institutions are required to have their own anti-money laundering and 6 countering the financing of terrorism programs, correct?

7 A Yes, that is correct.

8 Q And that's actually a requirement that is codified by statute?

9 A Yes. It's both in the statute and in regulations implementing the statute.

10 Q And those AML and CFT programs must be designed, among other things, to 11 ensure the institution's compliance with the BSA and to assist them in detecting and 12 reporting suspicious activity, correct?

13 A Yes, that is correct.

14 Q And while FinCEN provides general guidance and oversight of banks
15 concerning what constitutes an effective AML/CFT program, it's ultimately the bank's 16 responsibility to ensure that those programs are effective, correct?

17 A Yes, that's correct.

18 Q And it's the bank's responsibility to ensure that they file SARs in accordance 19 with the law?

20 A Yes, that is correct.

21 Q And it's the bank's responsibility to ensure that their programs effectively
22 detect and report suspicious activity on their networks, correct?

23 A Yes.

24 Q And most financial institutions, at least the larger major ones, have entire 25 units dedicated to their anti-money laundering and countering finance of terrorism units,

1 correct?

2 A That is my understanding, yes.

3 Q I mean programs. Excuse me. And those institutions have investigators,
4 people whose job it is, to analyze their customers' data, regularly search and monitor
5 them to identify suspicious activity --

6 A Yes, that's my understanding.

7 Q -- is that fair to say?

8 And based on your understanding of the applicable statutes and regulations, that 9 type of monitoring by a bank of its own customers' activity is -- that's entirely legal,
10 there's no issue there?

11 A I'm not aware of any legal issue with a bank doing that.

12 Q And you're aware, I imagine, that nearly 50 years ago the Supreme Court
13 ruled that the Fourth Amendment, for example, does not apply to bank records, 14 customers' bank records, because those records are the property of the bank, not the 15 private records of the accountholder, correct?

16 A That is my -- that is my recollection of that holding, yes.

17 Q And you stated earlier that banks can incur civil penalties or have civil 18 penalties and fines imposed on them for failing to file SARs.

19 In the appropriate circumstances they can also face penalties for, generally 20 speaking, not having an effective program design to root out suspicious activities,
21 correct?

22 A That is correct, yes.

23 Q So I want to talk about -- move on to talk about FinCEN exchanges a little bit
24 and how they work with banks to help banks meet their responsibilities under the BSA.

25 Information-sharing between banks and agencies through FinCEN exchanges and

1 other means help -- helps to inform banks about law enforcement priorities and identify
2 current trends in terrorist financing, money laundering, and other offenses, like fentanyl
3 trafficking, correct?

4 A Yes. I think that is correct. And the Project Protect series of exchanges
5 that we're doing this year in the fentanyl space, I think, is a good example of that.

6 Q So -- and in those exchanges, sometimes -- well, let me back up.

7 Those exchanges are often a two-way street in terms of information-sharing,
8 correct?

9 A Yes. The goal is for it to be a -- for it to be a sharing of experience and
10 information.

11 Q So the banks are sharing what they're seeing in their own customers' data, 12 and law enforcement is sharing with the banks the trends and the methodologies that 13 they're seeing. Is that fair to say?

14 A I think that's a fair statement, yes.

15 Q And the goal is that this information-sharing will help lead to more effective
16 and efficient SARs reporting by banks, correct?

17 A Yes, I think that's also a fair statement. Again, the Project Protect series in 18 the fentanyl space, I think, is a good example of that.

19 Q And those types of exchanges help if you have more effective, more
20 targeted, more efficient reporting by banks, that's going to help law enforcement detect 21 and deter criminal activity more effectively. Is that fair to say?

22 A I think that is our goal, yes.

23 Q Okay. And you stated earlier that, while the FinCEN Exchange program was 24 codified in 2020, just a few years ago, FinCEN exchanges have been operating before
25 that? There was a prior iteration?

1 A Yes, that is correct.

2 Q And can you explain a little bit about how those prior iterations worked or 3 how they differ from the current FinCEN exchange program?

4 A Let me see when they started. I think they started about two-ish, give or 5 take, years prior to the codified one -- the current codified version. I don't actually 6 know that there is a substantial difference in terms of what the goal of the exchange is 7 than in the way they function now.

8 But my understanding is that the perception was that these were a very positive
9 way of having public-private partnership, and that was one of the things that led Congress
10 to pick up the program and codify it in the statute, in the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 11 2020.

12 Q So, essentially, Congress thought it was valuable enough to make it a 13 statutory requirement so that FinCEN couldn't just decide one day we don't have the time 14 or the resources to do this?

15 A My understanding is that they were generally viewed as a very positive
16 thing, and that's how they got picked up and added to the statute. But that's a -- that's 17 a -- that's old memory at this point, so I need to add that qualifier.

18

BY [REDACTED]

19 Q When you say they were generally viewed as a positive thing, who viewed 20 them as a positive thing? Was it the government? Was it the private sector? Was it 21 law enforcement? Some combination thereof?

22 A Our law enforcement partners, my understanding, we get pretty positive
23 feedback on the ability to have these exchanges. I think we've heard similarly positive 24 feedback from the financial sector.

25 But also, I would say, maybe taking a step back from that, I don't remember if it

1 was y'all's questions or y'all's questions, but we -- one of the things we talked about 2 earlier is that one of the goals if the statute is to, sort of, create more public-private 3 feedback.

4 So there's conversations, there's -- there's some of the other materials we're 5 putting on our website with regard to the value of the data, sort of, throughout the 6 Anti-Money Laundering Act are different ways that FinCEN is being asked to either, you 7 know, engage in more public-private partnership or share more output with regard to the 8 value and utility of the data that we're getting.

9 So it's sort of, in my mind, kind of part and parcel with a lot of the other things
10 that are set forth in the statute for us to do.

11 Q Understood. I think -- my point is just that when you say that the exchange
12 is reviewed policy, the private sector viewed them positively, as well as law enforcement, 13 as well as government entities?

14 A I think that's right. And the fact that they've always been voluntary. So,
15 you know, the only people who show up are people that want to be there. So if you
16 don't want to be there, you don't come is sort of my view -- would be my view at the end
17 of the day.

18 So the fact that people continue to use the space and continue to sort of share 19 information in the space, to me, that is a testament to the perceived continued value of 20 the exchange.

21 Q Thank you.

22

BY [REDACTED]

23 Q Now -- well, before I -- I want to follow up on that voluntary nature of it, but 24 I just want to step back for a minute.

25 The Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 -- which I believe you referred to earlier

1 as AMLA. You used that acronym.

2 A That's the acronym we used for that, yes.

3 Q That was passed in December of 2020, correct?

4 A Either that or, like, the first or second day of January 2021. It was like --

5 Q It was effective in --

6 A -- right in that -- right in that end of year, right at the beginning of the next.

7 Q So it actually went into effect just days before the attack on the Capitol?

8 A Yes, I think that's correct.

9 Q And you're aware that that bill had broad bipartisan support?

10 A Yes, I am.

11 Q Now, FinCEN exchanges, including the ones that were set up in the 12 aftermath of January 6th, operate under all the permissible legal authorities, including 13 the Anti-Money Laundering Act, Section 310, Section 53 -- 53? 58? The Bank Secrecy
14 Act --

15 A Yeah --

16 Q I'm going to -- I don't --

17 A There's a bunch of weird statutes get rolled into that. But yes, I think the 18 answer to your question is, you know, the program at large does operate under these 19 various legal authorities, and FinCEN takes its responsibility under those legal authorities
20 very seriously.

21 Q Now, during the previous hour, you mentioned several times about -- I think 22 you might have been asked as well about FinCEN providing typologies to financial
23 institutions.

24 Can you explain what a typology is in this context?

25 A Sure. So maybe I'll juxtapose that with red flags because I feel like those

1 tend to be the terms people use a lot in this space.

2 At least in my own mind, typology -- and I think this is sort of laid out -- would be
3 reflected in our public documents. Typology, to me, is sort of an overall way someone
4 goes about conducting some sort of illicit activity. And, you know, to go back to a
5 document that I mentioned before, we've previously published an advisory on elder
6 financial exploitation, and one of the typologies set forth in that document is the, sort
7 of -- what I think is commonly referred to as the grandparent scam, of someone calling 8 up, purporting to be a law enforcement official, purporting to be someone else, there's an 9 emergency with regard to your grandchild, your whoever, and we need you to send us
10 money, like, ASAP to deal with this situation. That's sort of an overall typology in my 11 mind.

12 A red flag would be a data point that may be indicative of the broader typology.
13 SO in that same document you would see as a potential red flag, if you're in a financial 14 institution, the person on the other side of the counter is referencing, you know, my 15 grandchild has been arrested in X place, I need to get X number of dollars to send to, like,
16 bail him out of jail. But you notice that the email -- the, sort of, money destination
17 or -- doesn't actually look like an official destination. That could be -- that could be a red 18 flag that this broader typology of elder financial exploitation is, sort of, going on.

19 So I don't know if that answers your question. But I view the typology as the,
20 sort of, overarching way something, you know, illicit may be happening. And then the,
21 sort of, individual red flags may be data -- data points that point to the overarching either
22 typology or to the illicit conduct.

23 Q So what I took from what you just said is that the typology is almost like a 24 fact pattern of this is -- this is how this particular scheme is working or this particular 25 criminal offense is -- I mean, not all, obviously --

1 A Yeah. And there could be multiple typologies.

2 Q Of course.

3 A And so -- but I think that's a fair -- I think that's a fair statement.

4 Q And so if a financial institution or a FinCEN is sharing a list, for example, of 5 terms that could potentially be indicative of suspicious activity, that would be more of a 6 red flag in your mind as opposed to typology?

7 A That sounds right to me.

8 Q And do you think that -- or have you experienced sometimes people in this 9 space using those terms interchangeably?

10 A Yes.

11 Q So sometimes people --

12 A Which is why I wanted to juxtapose them, as I think oftentimes they get 13 interchanged for each other. At least I think it's helpful to think of them -- I think they 14 say something slightly different.

15 Q So when FinCEN provides, whether it's passing on from law enforcement or 16 through its own analysis, either a typology or a set of red flags to a bank, is it instructing
17 banks to file SARs for any transaction they see that fits that -- that information they were 18 provided?

19 A No. And something we -- I think this is pretty standard across all of our 20 public products that, sort of, lay out typologies and red flags.

21 We often have a statement before the red flags that says something along the 22 lines of no individual or even, sort of, collection of red flags is necessarily indicative of 23 illicit activity. The thought is this information is shared with the sector that they can,
24 sort of, be aware of these data points, but sort of ingest them against a broader backdrop
25 of their know your customer, the, sort of, knowledge of your customer and transaction

1 set to sort of further inform the overall picture they have in the specific situation.

2 So we try to be careful in the -- in the public space to say that in our public 3 products.

4 Q And that's important because FinCEN is aware that banks know their 5 customers far better than FinCEN does. Is that fair to say?

6 A I think that is fair to say.

7 Q And is it your --

8 A We would expect them to know their customers better than we -- than we 9 know them.

10 Q You would certainly hope so.

11 Is it your understanding that when banks are looking or trying to identify 12 suspicious activity that they consider a variety of factors, not just information that they 13 might receive from law enforcement or from FinCEN, but their own knowledge of their 14 customers, their history, their transaction patterns, that sort of information?

15 A Yes. That's my understanding.

16 Q And when FinCEN passes along typologies or red flags, these are suggestions
17 to the bank of things to look out for, correct?

18 A You know, I'm not sure I would say suggestions. I think I would say, you 19 know, this is -- you know, we're trying to share information, so sometimes it may be 20 closer to us -- going back to my -- my elder fraud example, you know, these are typologies
21 we see in this space, and we're sharing them with you so that you're aware of them.

22 I don't -- I view them as more of an information-sharing exercise than a, sort of,
23 suggestion-based exercise. I think, you know, we show this information, we make it 24 available, we -- in some documents we may suggest departments that you share it with.
25 Like, that could be an area where it sort of veers into that. So it may not be just your

1 BSA/AML department. It may be your legal department. It may be other -- I think
2 some of our ransomware products may even say, like, your IT department, like, you
3 know, sort of things.

4 But I think -- that's another old memory that we should probably qualify.

5 But -- so I think, you know, the main goal is to share the information to make folks aware
6 of it with the hope and -- with the hope that it's actually helpful in identifying the activity
7 that we're talking about.

8 Q When FinCEN shares that type of information, it does not have any 9 expectation of the financial institution of how or whether the financial institution is even 10 going to use it. Is that fair to say?

11 A I think that's fair. I think -- I think we would be surprised a little bit if, like, 12 we publish something on elder financial exploitation -- just to go back to that one again.
13 You know, if you did absolutely nothing with that and you were in a space where that's an 14 issue that may come up for you, I would be surprised if a financial institution didn't make 15 use of that in some way, even if it's just to familiarize themselves with the topic.

16 But, again, there's no specific expectation of what you're supposed to do with the 17 information that we share.

18 Q And financial institutions have to be invited to participate in a FinCEN
19 Exchange. Is that correct?

20 A Yes.

21 Q And they're free to reject that invitation?

22 A Yes.

23 Q And if a financial institution does participate, if it accepts the invitation and 24 participates, it's not required to implement any changes to its AML/CFT programs,
25 correct?

1 A Yes, that's correct.

2 Q And banks who participate in FinCEN exchanges still must use their own
3 independent judgment in assessing transactions holistically to determine whether a 4 transaction is required to be reported under the BSA?

5 A Yes, that's correct.

6 Q And they're free to use their own judgment in determining whether or not to 7 utilize any of the red flags or typologies that FinCEN provides?

8 A Yes, that's correct.

9 Q I just want to move on before we conclude this hour.
10 You were shown an exhibit in the previous hour about -- that referenced an 11 invitation from Google and Google's Financial Intelligence Unit, or FIU. And I believe you 12 said that you would not be surprised about FinCEN having communications with Google.
13 Why is that?

14 A I believe Google has a payment function, and so, you know, if they have a 15 payment function, they're a financial institution under our regulations. So they would 16 have regulatory obligations with FinCEN in that regard.

17 And so the term "financial institution" encompasses a broad array of actors in the 18 moving money space. So it's banks, it's credit unions, and people we've principally been 19 talking about. But it's also money services businesses, your Western Unions, your RIAs, 20 your people like that, casinos, you know, check cashers, you know, virtual currency
21 exchangers.

22 So there's kind of a broad array of actors that have -- that are considered financial 23 institutions for purposes of our regulation.

24 [REDACTED] I just want to clarify one -- when you say there's a broad array 25 of actors, under the BSA in our regulations, is it appropriate for some part of an entity to

1 be subject to a regulation while others may not be?

2 Mr. Kirby. That's a good flag, yes. So the fact that they're doing payments, I
3 wouldn't -- wouldn't necessarily mean, like, the totality of Google is subject to our 4 regulations. That's a good flag.

5 [REDACTED] So because Google Pay is a payment processing system or 6 platform, they -- that section of Google qualifies as a financial institution?

7 Mr. Kirby. Probably qualifies -- I would need -- again, I always want to qualify
8 that because I don't know what I don't know. But in -- sort of, in at least the threshold
9 analysis of -- if you're telling me that an entity is involved in processing payments, I think
10 there's a pretty strong argument that they are going to have at least some obligations
11 under our authority.

12 [REDACTED] Thank you. We can go off the record.

13 [Recess.]

1 [12:18 p.m.]

2 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

3 BY [REDACTED]

4 Q Mr. Kirby, I just want to get into a couple things that we discussed in our 5 previous hour.

6 You mentioned the different offices within the Intelligence Division.

7 A Uh-huh.

8 Q Can you describe the responsibilities of each of those offices?

9 A And you mean then --

10 Q Then.

11 A -- in the past?

12 Q Yes.

13 A Okay.

14 So, as I indicated, there were three. There was a Western Hemisphere Office, an 15 Office of Transnational Issues -- or maybe an Office of Transnational Threats. I think it
16 was Office of Transnational Issues. And then a third office that was the -- its acronym 17 was "ARO," but I'm actually struggling to recall what the acronym stood for.

18 So Western Hemisphere, I think, would've -- would've housed -- actually did house
19 things like what was then our Cyber and Emerging Technology Section, if I remember 20 correctly, was there. Also, the team that worked sort of your traditional 21 counternarcotics, Mexican cartels cases, or support to law enforcement, was there.

22 The Transnational Issues Office, if I remember correctly, housed the team that 23 supported the broader counterterrorism mission set and state actor -- I feel like that set 24 would've been there too.

25 And then the third office, the ARO office, included the data quality metrics team

1 that I mentioned before. There's a group of data scientists in that office, that are in that
2 office, that support the -- supported then and support still now the work of that overall
3 team.

4 That's sort of broadly what I recollect, how the offices were divvied up.

5 Q How many people, generally, were in each office?

6 A So we were sort of 50 to 55. I'm not sure it was quite a third/a third/a
7 third, but I don't remember with any -- I don't remember precisely how it broke up
8 between those three, to be honest with you.

9 Q And when you were in charge of the Intelligence Division, what was your 10 day-to-day like?

11 A So I think as I mentioned the prior time we spoke, the position that I stepped 12 into had been vacant for some period of time, I think actually right at about 2 years
13 before I stepped into the role. So, you know, I would say, at the beginning of my time, 14 the day-to-day was probably getting my hands around the different functions, the teams.
15 And it was a very different role than being the legal counselor, for example.

16 After the enactment of the AMLA, I would see that kind of changed a little bit, to 17 think about how we were going to meet these new obligations that had been placed on 18 us.

19 And so, you know, one example being the publication of these financial trend,
20 financial threat analysis reports. That was a new product at the time. And thinking
21 through how we were going to do that, how we were going to do that in a way that's 22 manageable -- because, you know -- and with results that we could sort of explain to the 23 reader.

24 Also, so 2021, there was -- we obviously had a change of administration in 2021,
25 and some, you know, mission sets took on sort of greater prominence. I would say, you

1 know, the ransomware mission set is one that has sort of continued to sort of tick up in 2 terms of priority. After Russia's further invasion of Ukraine, you know, that mission set
3 consumed quite a bit of my time.

4 And so, to the extent there's sort of a day-to-day, I don't know if that answers
5 your question, but maybe that's sort of the best way to divide it up. Because it
6 did change post me getting my hands around it a little bit more, the nature of the role.

7 Q Was there an office responsible for DVE issues?

8 A I don't believe we had an office for DVE. To the extent folks were working
9 on DVE, I think those were folks that had a background in working the terrorism mission
10 set. So I don't think it was a separate office or separate section or anything like that, if I 11 remember correctly.

12 Q Some people likely in that office --

13 A I would think so --

14 Q -- would be handling it?

15 A -- yes. That seems -- that's my general recollection. Yeah.

16 Q Going to the information-sharing operations at FinCEN, when the Strategic 17 Operations Division would share information with the financial institutions, what was the 18 protocol for sharing that information?

19 Would that office reach out to the Intelligence Division for approval on the types 20 of documents, the trends and typologies that they would then be sharing with financial 21 institutions and seek your approval on that or your team's approval on that?

22 [REDACTED] Can we just clarify the context?

23 So the Strategic Operations Division has a very broad mandate, right? They also 24 are the Financial Intelligence Unit. Like, they -- so I just want to make sure we're very 25 clear about what context, when you talk about, sort of, information-sharing. Are you

1 talking about FinCEN Exchange specifically?

BY [REDACTED]

3 Q I would say the FinCEN Exchange and other means, one-off emails of emails
4 from employees at FinCEN to financial institutions along the lines of, "We have some 5 typologies and trends that we think you might be interested in. See attached."

6 A So I don't know that there is a -- at least at that time, and I'm not really sure I
7 would think that one exists at this time either, really -- sort of a standard practice of that,
8 you know. I think it would be more sort of specific to the nature -- you know, again, to 9 the extent the folks are sharing information in anticipation of a FinCEN Exchange on what
10 that's going to look like, versus sharing in the context of maybe an advisory committee 11 meeting where they're going to be talking about something involving, like, regulatory 12 burden or something like that. So I don't know that there's sort of a -- I think it, like, 13 would be more, like, topic-, forum-specific.

14 I don't recall in my time in the Intelligence Division getting some document like 15 that, like, either be it a typologies or something document like you were referencing in 16 your exchange with [REDACTED] -- I don't recall getting a document like that to sort of evaluate 17 and clear for sort of the context of sharing in one of those venues.

18 But I also feel the need to preface that with: That was a long time ago at this
19 point, so I don't discount the possibility that I may have seen something and I just don't 20 recall having seen it.

21 Q So, as the Intelligence Division is analyzing BSA data and developing 22 typologies and trends that are then shared with financial institutions, were you sending 23 that to the office that dealt with the private sector and shared information?

24 A So I'm not quite sure I understand that description.

25 Let me sort of -- so, you know, in most circumstances, if we are sharing, you know,

1 typologies and red flags, if an analyst in the then-Intelligence Division, now-Research and
2 Analysis Division, is working on a project like that, I think in most circumstances my 3 expectation would be that that information is probably going to land in a public-facing
4 product of some kind. So that would be probably either our Policy Division or maybe
5 our Enforcement Division if it's in the context of an enforcement action. And any 6 resolved enforcement action by FinCEN ends up being placed on our website so everyone 7 can see what those are.

8 I don't -- off -- I just -- I don't recall it being sort of a standard practice that an 9 analyst would be developing, you know, sort of a typology sort of thing that you would 10 share directly with, like, one financial institution. Now, there may be needs to talk to 11 one financial institution in connection with a filing or something like that. But if we're 12 going to do the work of building out typologies and red flags, I would normally expect 13 that to be to a broader audience.

14 Q When that information was shared with the broader audience, would that 15 information have been analyzed by the Intelligence Division or maybe the Enforcement
16 Division before it is shared with a broader group of financial institutions?

17 A Again, I think it would depend.

18 So if the document you're talking about is, you know, trends and typologies in 19 terms of, you know, fraud filings, so if we have an analyst that did a lot of work on 20 analyzing fraud filings and identified typologies and trends out of that, then, yes, the 21 Intelligence Division, now-Research and Analysis Division, would play a leading role in that 22 analytic effort and would be working with the office that's sort of packaging that up into a 23 public product.

24 But, you know, to the extent that you have a FinCEN Exchange on fentanyl and a
25 non-FinCEN party is presenting on or discussing, you know, lessons they learned in this

1 space that might be useful to you, Financial Institution B, as you're looking at this same
2 mission set, that's not something I would expect the Intelligence Division to have weighed
3 in on prior to a partner agency, be it law enforcement or be it, you know, the private
4 sector potentially, sort of separately weighed in on before it's a topic of discussion in a 5 meeting like that.

6 Q Shifting gears, how many people have access to SARs and other BSA data?

7 A So FinCEN maintains this Electronic Access System that we were talking
8 about before. We have MOUs with partner agencies to be able to access that. My 9 recollection -- and we may need to confirm this -- is, I think via those partner agencies, it's 10 approximately 15,000 people, employees of those agencies, who are Federal, State, local 11 officials, who can access the data via that system.

12 I'm going to put a pin in that, though, as an estimate, because that is not 13 something I checked before we came up here.

14 There's -- I need to finish that response, because it's not complete. There is 15 another -- there is a very small subset of agencies that have the ability to ingest the BSA
16 data that is filed with FinCEN. Those are Federal agencies. Most of them are your sort
17 of usual, I think, agencies that probably wouldn't surprise you in this regard -- DEA, FBI,
18 folks like that -- who have the ability to actually just sort of take our data onto their own
19 systems. And so, you know, I don't have -- those agencies control the access to that 20 data on their systems. That's not something that I have visibility into at FinCEN.

21 So the principal way that people access the data is via the Electronic Access
22 System we were talking about earlier, but there is this other way of accessing the data
23 over here, and I want to be complete about that.

24 Q That other way is that Agency Integrated Access?

25 A That is Agency Integrated Access. And maybe I preempted your question.

1 Q We'll get into that in a little bit. The initial -- that is hosted by FinCEN, is 2 that FinCEN Query?

3 A Yes. And you access that via a system called FinCEN Portal.

4 Q Who's responsible for overseeing the access to that portal?

5 A That is also principally a function housed in our Strategic Operations Division.
6 So they manage the MOU processes with partner agencies and the coordinating with 7 those agencies.

8 Q And how is the data accessed?

9 A So my understanding -- and I will preface this with someone who has not 10 ever used this system, so -- but my understanding is that you have a unique login as an 11 external user. You come onto the system. We know it's you when you come onto the 12 system. You are able to run searches on the system. The system logs those searches 13 that you make.

14 And I think that's actually kind of it, in a nutshell. But the important part being,
15 it's a restricted system. There are expectations partner agencies have to meet in terms
16 of granting -- you know, identifying employees for access to the system. And the system 17 does -- my understanding of it is that it does track the searches, that if we let you onto 18 the system, it would track the searches that you make.

19 Q By tracking that, that's tracking the terms that are used to search?

20 A Yes. We call it an audit log. And so it maintains an audit log of the 21 searches that you would make.

22 Q And what type of data is available via these queries?

23 A So, in that system, you would have access to the sort of BSA form filing
24 information. So that would be the suspicious activity reports that we've been talking 25 about, and it would also be currency transaction reports that we hit on a little bit earlier.

1 The counterpart to the currency transaction report, what is known as Form 8300,
2 that's sort of a similar $10,000 filing for non-bank institutions.

3 And I think the CMI -- the form when you cross the border, that's the -- I
4 don't -- I'm going to get the acronyms wrong, but the acronym is "CMIR," but don't ask
5 me what the "C" in that -- Currency Monitoring -- anyway.

6 And so all of those reports are housed in that database. Because they're all
7 collected under the broader BSA authority within -- with the sort of same purposes and 8 uses set forth in the statute, and they're available on the system for authorized users.

9 Q And when a user searches those reports, do they only see -- so if they search
10 a name, will they only see reports filed on that name? Or will they get access to the rest 11 of that individual's transaction history?

12 A So I'm going to disaggregate that a little bit, and you tell me if I answer your 13 question, please.

14 So we don't have the ability to track -- and I'll use myself as an example so I'm not 15 using anyone else's name. FinCEN does not have the ability to track, to the best of my 16 knowledge -- and I feel like I would know if we did -- the transactions that Jimmy Kirby 17 engages in at his bank, on his credit card, on whatever.

18 So, when you come into that system, what you're going to have access to, if you
19 search for "Jimmy Kirby" -- and, again, as someone who has never used the system, also 20 take this with a grain of salt, that this is how I understand the system works. When you
21 search "Jimmy Kirby," you would get -- to the extent there are SARs that have been filed
22 on me, you would be able to see those; to the extent a bank has filed currency
23 transaction reports or a non-bank has filed a Form 8300 on me, you would see those; to 24 the extent -- or any of the other BSA forms that involve me, you would be able to see 25 those, because they are all filed on me.

1 But it would be -- the universe of that would be what has been filed on me, not
2 that there is some way to access transactional history involving me across the financial 3 sector. We do not have the ability to do that.

4 Q Are there limits on what purpose a user can query the FinCEN -- the BSA
5 database?

6 A So my understanding is that, when an authorized user goes in, they actually
7 have to put a purpose in for the search they are doing, and under the MOUs and other
8 access protocols, searches are to be limited to the purposes consistent with the Bank
9 Secrecy Act. I think that's more or less the precise language the statute uses in terms of 10 information-sharing.

11 Q And have there been instances where a FinCEN Portal query has been 12 misused?

13 A We have had instances where people have unauthorized disclosed data that 14 they had access to. And in -- both at -- it's a small number of cases over the years, but 15 that has happened.

16 When we become aware of that, it's referred to our Office of Inspector General, as 17 any other sort of potential violation of law would be that we come across involving either
18 an employee of ours or, if we become aware of this involving someone in another agency,
19 we would similarly refer to our Office of Inspector General to look into it.

20 Q Have those situations ever led to access being revoked for a user?

21 A So there's a -- and I don't know if this is where you're going, but I'll just sort
22 of jump ahead. There's a rather prominent case of this at FinCEN from 2018, and it
23 actually involved an employee getting arrested.

24 So this is a space where we take our obligations very seriously. This is a space
25 where employees have been arrested for engaging in improper conduct. This is a space

1 where former employees have gone to prison for improper conduct.

2 So this is not a slap-on-the-wrist type of situation. To the best of my knowledge,
3 this is the only circumstance in which an employee of FinCEN was walked out of the 4 building by Federal law enforcement agents, for potential, like, improper activity in this 5 space.

6 So, to jump ahead to, this is something we have dealt with and we have dealt with 7 quite seriously and our Office of Inspector General has dealt with quite seriously, we take
8 our obligations to safeguard this information very seriously. It is front of mind for us,
9 this obligation, in terms of thinking about ways we can think about different ways, better
10 ways, to safeguard the data, because the data is really sensitive.

11 And it's an important thing -- I mean, it's a very fair question, because it's an 12 important thing for us to do as an agency. You probably noticed my tone shift. It's 13 something I feel really strongly about, that it's an important trust and obligation that is 14 placed on the agency. And I don't have a lot of patience if we come across 15 circumstances where people have done stuff they're not supposed to do in this space.

16 So I was there in 2018. I have seen how important this is, to take these actions.
17 It's something I take very seriously in my job still, something we take very seriously as an 18 agency.

19 Q Thank you for that.

20 You mentioned that there is an audit log of the searches --

21 A Yes.

22 Q -- of the BSA database. Are there regular audits of access to the BSA
23 database?

24 A So my understanding is, yes, that there's a team in our Strategic Operations
25 Division that, as part of their regular coordination with the, you know, partner agencies,

1 customer agencies, they regularly review the logs as, you know, part of that exercise in 2 terms of coordinating back with the agencies to make sure that they're doing what
3 they're supposed to do under the terms of our MOUs.

4 Q Are those audits memorialized anywhere?

5 A I actually don't know the answer to that question. I think yes, but I don't 6 know for sure.

7 Q Who would know the answer to that?

8 A That's something we can take back and find out. We can find out the 9 answer to that question. I just don't know it off the top of my head.

10 [REDACTED] I think there's already a request pending that --

11 Mr. Kirby. Oh, there we go.

12 [REDACTED] -- we can correspond.

13

BY [REDACTED]

14 Q So you mentioned there's approximately 55,000, give or take, BSA filings
15 each day. Is there any way to know how many people this covers?

16 A You mean, like, the subjects?

17 Q Yes, how many subjects are covered.

18 A I don't know the answer to that question. And I don't know -- I don't know
19 if that's something we track, to be honest.

20 Q Do you know who would track that?

21 A I mean, we can take that back, as well, and ask. But I don't -- I don't 22 actually think I've ever gotten that question before. I don't know the answer to it.

23 Q I assume the same answer would be to how many American subjects are 24 covered in that.

25 A So I don't know the answer to that, but I would maybe put a little more meat

1 on the bone in my response to that and at least say: If these obligations apply to
2 U.S. financial institutions, you know, I would operate on the assumption that the majority
3 of the filings -- or, actually, a substantial portion of the filings -- that's probably a better
4 way to put it -- probably involve U.S. persons, because these are financial institutions
5 operating in the United States subject to U.S. law.

6 Q Are BSA filings ever deleted from the FinCEN database?

7 A We are -- so the answer to that question now is, my understanding is, the 8 filings on the system, they are not presently deleted.

9 We are actively looking at a way to essentially remove filings in the system that 10 are older than -- it's 11 years, right? -- 11 or 12 years. That's something we're actively 11 working on at the moment -- or exploring, I should say.

12 Q Is there a timeline for implementing that procedure, or is it still in the 13 exploration phase?

14 A It's still in the exploration.

15 Q Okay.

16 So you mentioned Agency Integrated Access earlier. Once one of these agencies
17 imports this data onto their own systems, does FinCEN have any oversight over the BSA
18 data that has been imported?

19 A You know, we have a relationship with the agencies. You know, there is a 20 practical matter, I think, you know, at present at least, of the degree of oversight that we 21 can do when it's not on our system anymore.

22 We are in a broader -- if I could step back from your question, a broader exercise
23 is underway to actually update all of our access MOUs, so not the ones where you come 24 in via the FinCEN system, but also the MOUs that govern the Integrated Access space.
25 And, you know, thinking about are there changes we need to make with regard to

1 oversight in that space is sort of part of that effort at the moment.

2 So we're sort of well underway with updating the MOUs for access for agencies
3 who come in via the FinCEN system -- I don't know why I'm doing this -- for the FinCEN
4 system. If you come in via the FinCEN system, that update exercise is well underway
5 with a number of agencies.

6 The Integrated Access MOUs are ones we're still sort of, like, working on in terms
7 of -- but they will be updated, as well, as part of this broader exercise.

8 Q Can you describe the parameters of those MOUs with the agencies?

9 A So, ordinarily, they would govern things like type of data covered by the 10 MOU; respective agency obligations under the MOU; obligations with regard to if, you
11 know, you're, you know, Law Enforcement Agency A, the commitments you're making to 12 us in terms of the people that you're going to sort of put forward for access to the 13 information. For instance, there's a requirement -- I'm pretty sure there's a requirement
14 for all users, for instance, to have a background investigation.

15 I'm pretty sure that's right, right? Okay.

16 And so there's sort of that.

17 There's the obligation they take to sort of restrict access to the data that you're 18 using, given the sensitivity to it, and obligations with regard to sort of marking in certain 19 ways.

20 So it's meant to be somewhat more holistic in terms of access, protection, and 21 making sure the information is sort of adequately protected from, you know,
22 unauthorized disclosure or unauthorized dissemination.

23 I'm actually going to put a pin in and stop.

24 Is there anything I need to add to that, [REDACTED] Because you are very familiar 25 with this topic too.

1 [REDACTED] No, I was just going to --

2 Mr. Kirby. I don't know if I'm allowed to do that in my interview, but I'm going to 3 do it here.

4 [REDACTED] Just for context on this MOU discussion, since we are here
5 primarily for your role as director of [inaudible] the Intelligence Division, how much did
6 you work with the MOUs in that role --

7 Mr. Kirby. Oh.

8 [REDACTED] -- versus your current role?

9 Mr. Kirby. Actually, very little, to be honest.
10 What I'm telling you now is very much a product of the chair that I sit in at the 11 moment, not the chair that I sat in when I was in ID.

12 [REDACTED] When an agency has Agency Integrated Access, are they 13 receiving all of the inside filings, or is it limited to what is relevant to their issue area?

14 Mr. Kirby. My understanding is that they receive all BSA filings.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q Is there a material difference between the AIA system and the Electronic 17 Access System you described earlier in terms of what content is in either?

18 A I don't know that there's a material difference between the content. So,
19 you know, if you're coming in -- if your agency has Integrated Access and you're coming in 20 via the traditional system, you should have access -- each of you should have access to 21 the same BSA filings.

22 What the Integrated Access allows the agency to do when they take it onto their 23 systems is look at it in conjunction with other data they may have on their system.

24 Q And so, once that data is taken onto the system -- I know you mentioned
25 you're updating it -- does FinCEN continue to have access to the agency that has imported

1 it onto their system and how they're using it? Or is that a dialogue between FinCEN and 2 the agency with the MOU to have AIA?

3 [REDACTED] Can I -- is what you're asking is, when an agency with AIA
4 brings it onto their system, do we have continued visibility into it in the same way that we
5 do FinCEN Query? Is that the question?

6 [REDACTED] Right.

7 Mr. Kirby. And I think the answer to that is, no, we don't have the -- because,
8 again, we control the FinCEN Query system, so, you know, if you're coming in via Query, 9 we could, in theory, look at what you're searching. We don't have that same degree of 10 visibility.

11 But there is still an MOU in place with the agency that's bringing it on via 12 Integrated Access, is my understanding.

13 [REDACTED] Do you know how many filings are in the database?

14 Mr. Kirby. I don't know. It's a lot. But I don't know what "a lot" is. I don't 15 know.

16 [REDACTED] Don't speculate.

17 Mr. Kirby. I don't know. I don't know the answer to that. It's more than a 18 million.

19 [REDACTED] Yeah. If it's 55,000 per day, that's going to be a few.

20 Has there been an agency that's been in violation of the MOU that had AIA access 21 remitted (ph) or revoked?

22 Mr. Kirby. I'm not aware of a determination that an agency with Integrated 23 Access violated its MOU. So I don't know -- so, to the sort of first part of your question, 24 I'm not aware of the premise that would get me to the second part of your question.

25 I think that's probably my best answer on that.

1 [REDACTED] Can FinCEN audit AIA?

2 Mr. Kirby. My understanding under the MOUs is that we still do maintain the 3 ability to sort of coordinate with that agency regarding use of the data and what it's doing
4 with the data. So my understanding is, the answer to your question is yes. It's just we 5 would not have the same degree of visibility that we would when you're coming onto our 6 own system to access the data.

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q I know you mentioned you've never used the Electronic Access System.
9 You do seem very familiar. How are you familiar with that system?

10 A Through briefings and the broader exercise we're undertaking, actually, to 11 update the MOU documents generally. So I have been involved in that, so I've had the,
12 you know, opportunity to learn. And through meetings and other scenarios is how my 13 understanding of how this works has been gleaned.

14 Q And does the Intelligence Division, now-Research and Analysis Division -- do
15 they use that system?

16 A I believe some do use the portal system. And then my understanding 17 is -- you know, since it's a FinCEN system, my understanding is you can also access the 18 data by just our own internal systems. So, like, you know, the portal system is built for 19 principally external users to come in and use the system, is my understanding of the 20 difference there.

21

BY [REDACTED]

22 Q You mentioned that the MOUs with respect to AIA are in the process of 23 being updated.

24 A Uh-huh.

25 Q Why are those being updated?

1 A As I indicated before, you know, safeguarding the data is a priority for us and 2 making sure we have, you know, the best practices in place. And so, across all of our 3 MOUs, we're working to make sure that they're all sort of, basically, recent, consistent,
4 and that we have taken that close look in terms of evaluating what, if any, changes need
5 to be made with regard to sort of any of the things covered by the MOU document.

6 So I think the top-line answer to your question was, frankly, I think it's time, and 7 it's a good time to do it.

8 Q Are there any specific issues that have come up, or is it just time?

9 A I think the main, if I had to pick an issue, is, you know, some of them were a 10 little dated. And so it's a good opportunity in terms of getting sort of -- you know, taking 11 a fresh look at everything and just bringing them up to date, in the sense of, you know, I
12 think there's a comfort that comes for a variety of users that, you know, the MOU you're 13 operating under is a fairly recent MOU.

14 So it's mainly driven by just, I think, a timing need to update. Some of them are a 15 little on the dated side, and it'd be helpful to bring them up more current.

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q Are you aware of any examples of personnel from another agency misusing 18 the data?

19 A So I don't know this for sure, so I'm going to start with that qualification. I 20 have recollection that there, again, have been sort of one-off instances in the past of,
21 actually, employees of other agencies -- you know, I talked a little bit about the incident
22 at FinCEN in 2018 -- that there may have been some similar, you know, at other -- one or 23 two maybe. But my recollection on that is a little thin. But those are the ones I'm sort 24 of -- that come to mind more front of mind for me.

25 What I understand from the team is that, in their experience, if they sort of call in

1 response to something they see on an audit log that raises a question, it's usually the 2 person just didn't -- it was an honest mistake; they didn't put in enough information.

3 So we don't see many instances of people acting inappropriately in the system.
4 But it is something that is important.

5 And, again, a goal of this MOU update exercise is just making sure everything is 6 timely and we've taken a look to make sure, you know, everything is up to date.

7 Q You described the thin recollections you have of maybe some other
8 instances. Do you recall which agencies?

9 A I don't, no. A Google search might resolve that, because if my memory is 10 correct, that should be public. We can take that back, too, if it would be helpful.

11 Q In either your current role or any of your prior roles at FinCEN, if you wanted 12 to review an audit of one of the other agencies, would you have the ability to do that?

13 A Yes. Well, I would have to ask someone to get it for me, but yes. I don't 14 have the ability to go in and just do it, but I could have someone bring it to me.

15

BY [REDACTED]

16 Q Did you ever do that?

17 A No.

18 Q I think we'll go back to your time as associate director for the Intelligence
19 Division. In that role, did you coordinate with any offices from the FBI?

20 A I don't recall doing that directly, but I'm relatively confident that members of 21 my team did, because, again, it's fairly common for us to work with the FBI, and the FBI
22 has a representative housed in our offices. So we have a number of law enforcement
23 liaisons who sit with FinCEN; FBI is one of them.

24 Q So would that be an FBI agent or employee that is detailed?

25 A Yes. I don't think it's a full-on agent. I think it's an employee. But,

1 again, it would be very common to interact with the FBI, so I am relatively confident, even 2 though I don't recollect doing it directly myself, that members of my team would have.

3 Q So would you or your team work with the Strategic Partner Engagement
4 Section at the FBI?

5 A I don't know the answer to that. I do not recall working with that section.
6 I do not know the answer as to the broader team.

7 Q Did you or your team ever interact with Peter Sullivan, who was in that office
8 at the FBI?

9 A I don't recall interacting with Mr. Sullivan, and I don't know the answer as to 10 the broader team.

11 Q What was your relationship like or your team's relationship like with the FBI?
12 Was it collaborative?

13 A You know, my impression generally over many years, not just, you know, my 14 time in the role, has been that, generally, as an agency, including the components, we 15 have collaborative relationships with our law enforcement partners.

16 And I think you see that playing out now with the Project Protect series fentanyl
17 Exchanges that I mentioned before, with, you know, our support to DEA in the fentanyl
18 space. I think you see it on a number of mission sets at the moment.

19 I think we have historically had collaborative relationships with the main law
20 enforcement agencies. So I would not expect it to have been any different in a material
21 way 4 years ago as to what I see today.

22 Q Did you or are you aware of anyone at FinCEN sending SARs directly to the 23 FBI or any other law enforcement agency?

24 A So I think so, but I don't -- again, that wouldn't necessarily strike me as 25 unusual. The FBI has access to the data.

1 And, you know, going back to a description I was giving earlier of, if you're an
2 analyst working the cyber and emerging tech space -- this is coming to front of mind for
3 me most in that space. So, if we got a SAR involving a new ransomware strain or a SAR
4 discussing some type of, you know, attack in the space that has caused -- I don't know
5 that it would strike me as unusual that an analyst working on that would share that SAR
6 with NCIJTF, for example, or another FBI field office that is responsible for that particular 7 ransomware strain.

8 There are -- again, FBI has access to -- now, that may happen not -- because I don't 9 know this for sure. It may happen to just share the ID number, as opposed to sharing
10 the SAR itself. But I don't know that I would be surprised if they shared the actual SAR if 11 they thought the -- to discuss the discussion in the sort of narrative section of the 12 document if they thought it was relevant to the mission space that they're working on.

13 That's a long-winded way of answering your question. I hope it answered your 14 question.

15 Q Did --

16 A Actually, I'm going to qualify that one more time. But I would expect them
17 to only share it with agencies that otherwise have access. And, again, since most of our 18 main Federal partners do, that's not an issue.

19 Q Okay.

20 Did the FBI coordinate with FinCEN regarding its relationship and communications 21 with financial institutions?

22 A I might need you to be a little bit more specific on that one.

23 Q So, if the FBI is working with financial institutions, sharing potential 24 typologies or investigative information into financial crimes, would they coordinate with 25 FinCEN in the course of these communications with the financial institutions?

1 A So that's a pretty general question. Maybe I'll answer it the best I can.
2 You know, it's always been my understanding, at least since coming to FinCEN -- I
3 should qualify that -- that the FBI in particular, other law enforcement agencies, sort of 4 have their own relationships, their own authorities, when it comes to the sector, the
5 financial sector.

6 So I wouldn't expect them, in at least the abstract, to sort of come to us as a 7 matter of course with regard to them engaging with, you know, members of the financial 8 sector on cases that they're working on.

9 Again, we have -- law enforcement does regularly participate in the FinCEN
10 Exchanges that we convene, and so -- and, obviously, FinCEN is there for those and part of 11 those conversations, as the convening agency. But I don't know that I would expect sort
12 of across the board that if the FBI wants to call up Bank A they would sort of loop FinCEN 13 into that.

14 But I can't say that I know that in a specific way. That's more of a higher-level 15 reaction based on my perception.

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q Based off of -- going a couple questions earlier, you said it wouldn't surprise
18 you if members of your team, or FinCEN, I should say, were sending SARs directly to the 19 FBI, I guess by members of your team?

20 A I would say maybe analysts in the Intelligence Division, because I think that's 21 the team most likely to be sort of in the data.

22 But, again, that could happen via -- I'm not sure that -- I don't know that they 23 would necessarily send the document. They might just send the ID number. Because 24 with the ID number, the agency with access could just pull it up themselves.

25 Q And --

1 A And so, if -- I just don't know how that would happen.

2 Q And if you got the analyst working on an issue, he or she gets to the point
3 where they think it's significant enough, for whatever reason, to share with the FBI, is 4 that a type of decision the analyst would elevate, or is that something that analysts are 5 empowered to make on their own?

6 A Again, my guess is that it's going to be sort of team- and topic-specific.
7 Because it may vary based on the sort of topic integration with a law enforcement
8 agency.

9 So where you have a team that's collaborating very closely with DEA on a, you
10 know, fentanyl matter -- and, again, we have employees who spend some time at DEA;
11 DEA has employees that spend some time at FinCEN. It's meant to promote that kind of 12 information exchange. I just don't know the means on which it would happen.

13 So I think it would be probably topic-specific, team-specific. I don't know that 14 there would be sort of a one way it would always happen.

15 Q Do you recall any instances when you were associate director where 16 someone from within your team elevated the issue to your level, about whether it was 17 appropriate to share or to highlight a SAR to another agency?

18 A I don't. But I do recall being aware that, in the context of ransomware, we 19 were very transparent with -- and I think the FBI component with NCIJTF -- with regard to 20 alerting them to information that we would see. And, again, I just don't recall if that 21 meant we sent them the SAR or we sent them the number for them to pull up the SAR
22 themselves.

23 So I think that's sort of a "yes" to your second question of being aware that 24 information was shared at times. I just don't recall knowing exactly how that was 25 happening.

BY [REDACTED]

Q Did you ever flag specific names to financial institutions for SAR filing purposes?

A I don't recall doing that, no. Yeah, I don't recall doing that.

Q Could Federal law enforcement provide a list of names to financial institutions to consider for SAR filing purposes?

A You know, with regard to what law enforcement can and can't do, I've sort of learned over the years it's probably best for me to defer to law enforcement on that question. So that's a question you might want to ask the FBI or DOJ.

And, you know, to the extent, turning to my own knowledge, you know, it may depend on who the names are. You know, again, I don't think it's uncommon for financial institutions to sort of be aware of what's in the news, in terms of informing their AML programs. So, you know, to the extent, you know, Jimmy Kirby was arrested yesterday for engaging in all sorts of fraudulent activity, you know, my bank might take a look at that if that was in the paper the next day. I don't think that would be a surprising thing for them to do.

11

13

14

15

16

17

Q But would it be unusual for Federal law enforcement to send a list of specific names for a bank to consider for SAR filing purposes?

18

19

A I don't know the answer to that question. I really don't, because I don't know -- 20

Q Have you seen it before?

22

23

A I mean, in terms of, like, things I've seen, you know, over the course of this year I've seen materials in connection with the topic that we're here to talk about today, and, you know, I do recall seeing -- there may have been names of people who had been arrested, as one potential list of names that was shared with folks in terms of awareness.

24

1 without context, I want the record to be very clear on that point.

2 [REDACTED] Okay.

3 [REDACTED] So what's the -- so we need the answer before we proceed.

4 [REDACTED] This is the only email here from a representative at KeyBank to 5 various employees of FinCEN that we have --

6 [REDACTED] Okay. So --

7 [REDACTED] -- with this subject line.

8 [REDACTED] This is not a part of a larger thread.

9 [REDACTED] There's no other emails on this thread?

10 [REDACTED] No.

11 [REDACTED] Okay.

12 And you all are going to distribute the attachment, I assume, for context.

13 [REDACTED] Yes. And before you object, just let us enter the items into 14 evidence and let us start to ask questions.

15 [REDACTED] And then I'd now like to enter an email from [REDACTED]
16 dated January 15th, 2021, and the attachments "Jan 15 2021 compiled typologies" and 17 "KeyBank Query Logic for Active Shooters," with the subject line "Compiled typologies in 18 advance of 4:30 call," into the record as exhibit 3.

19 [Kirby Exhibit No. 3

20 was marked for identification.]

21 [REDACTED] So this is more than just a PowerPoint? This is from another 22 source, this --

23 [REDACTED] This is the email. And there were two attachments, and these 24 are the attachments.

25 [REDACTED] Thank you.

1 [REDACTED] Sorry. Just to clarify, there's a -- so, on what's been entered as
2 exhibit 2, it looks like there's an attachment, "KeyBank Query Logic for Active Shooters
3 version 01-15-2021.pptx." Is that attachment --

4 [REDACTED] That is what is in here. That's the PowerPoint that is in exhibit
5 3.

6 [REDACTED] But exhibit 3 was produced by a different -- is not actually the 7 one -- it might look the same, but it's not the one that was attached to exhibit 2. Does 8 that make sense? Because exhibit 3 is the KeyBank PowerPoint as attached to an email, 9 a different email.

10 [REDACTED] We'll just represent for the record that the slideshow that's 11 distributed by FinCEN is the same slideshow that's being sent to FinCEN from KeyBank.

12 Mr. Kirby. Okay. I'm ready.

13 BY [REDACTED]

14 Q We've just got about a minute and a half left, so --

15 A I'm sure we'll knock all of this out in 90 seconds.

16 Q Acknowledging that you are not included on this email, had you ever seen
17 these emails at this time?

18 [REDACTED] You're talking about exhibit 2, for the record, right?

19 Mr. Kirby. This one.

20 [REDACTED] Exhibit 2 --

21 Mr. Kirby. This one --

22 [REDACTED] Yes.

23 Mr. Kirby. -- is the one you're talking about.

24 BY [REDACTED]

25 Q Had you seen that at the time?

1 A I don't recall seeing this at the time, no.

2 Q You testified that [REDACTED] was a member of the Intelligence Division
3 when you were there.

4 A Yes.

5 Q She is cc'd on exhibit 3. Did you discuss this email with her at the time that 6 was sent to these financial institutions?

7 A I don't recall discussing this with [REDACTED] at the time, no.

8 Q Do you know if you or anyone in your office analyzed the information in the 9 attachments before [REDACTED] shared it with financial institutions?

10 A I don't know, no.

11 [REDACTED] Would this have been the kind of thing that would have normally 12 came to the Intelligence Division prior to it being sent out?

13 Mr. Kirby. I don't know, because it's not -- it doesn't appear to be our work
14 product. So I don't know the answer to that question.

15 [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

2 [2:08 p.m.]

3 [REDACTED] We're back on the record. Thank you.

4

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q I want to start by asking a couple of questions about -- you were asked a lot
7 of questions during the previous hour about the confidentiality provisions and what
8 happens if somebody violates those, how those things are monitored, and you mentioned 9 an employee in 2018 who was criminally prosecuted for violating those provisions,
correct?

10 A Correct, yes.

11 Q Now, those criminal provisions apply not just to --

12 A Actually, I should stop there. I don't -- it was in relation to that, but I don't 13 know the specific prong DOJ used. So let me put that. There may have been a 14 conspiracy prong or something like that --

15 Q Fair enough.

16 A -- not the actual --

17 Q And I'm not going to ask you questions at that level of --

18 A Just to, again, make sure I'm clear on that.

19 Q Yes. I'm not going to ask at that level of specificity. I just want to make 20 clear that the criminal provisions that apply to unauthorized disclosure for dissemination 21 of Bank Secrecy Act information, those apply to anybody who is authorized to have that 22 information and then discloses it improperly, regardless of whether they work for FinCEN
23 or the FBI or anywhere else.

24 A I believe so, yes.

25 Q And, in fact, there's a criminal provision within the same chapter of the

1 United States Code 31, United States Code 5322, that makes it a felony to disclose -- to 2 violate those provisions of the Bank Secrecy Act?

3 A I'll defer to you on the number, but the provision, that sounds right to me.

4 Q Okay. Thank you.

5 Now, I want to pick up where we left off at the top of the last hour and just make 6 some clarifications about the record, because there were some exhibits introduced with 7 attachments and we raised some questions and some representations were made that I
8 just want to clarify. I'm not actually going to be asking you for any -- any questions 9 about this.

10 A Okay.

11 Q But I think it's important that we have an accurate representation, because 12 many different financial institutions produced documents to the committee in response, 13 and I want to be clear what is and is not produced by different institutions and what is 14 before you that you're being asked questions about.

15 So exhibit 2 is an email from [REDACTED]. And if you look at the Bates number,
16 it has a Bates number from KeyBank HJC 235. And I believe your counsel asked if this 17 was part of a chain, and it was represented that it was not, but you can see from the 18 email that there is an attachment of a KeyBank PowerPoint.

19 And then exhibit 3 was introduced, and exhibit 3 is not a production from 20 KeyBank; it's, in fact, an email to an employee at KeyBank and other institutions from 21 [REDACTED] and it has Bates numbers HJC 005 through 007.

22 And then there is a KeyBank PowerPoint, that does not have Bates numbers, 23 attached to exhibit 2, and it was represented during the previous hour that that is the 24 same PowerPoint that was attached to exhibit 2.

25 Now, I'm going to introduce the actual documents that were produced by

1 KeyBank as exhibit 4.

2 [Kirby Exhibit No. 4

3 was marked for identification.]

4 [REDACTED] And if you follow along, you can see that the Bates number for the 5 second page is a PDF of the KeyBank PowerPoint. It's the Bates number that follows the 6 Bates number for exhibit 2.

7 So you can see that this is the actual PowerPoint that was attached to the email in 8 exhibit 2, and it has redactions. So it is therefore not the same PowerPoint that was 9 produced in exhibit 3.

10 And now I would like to introduce the actual documents, the attachments from 11 exhibit 3. And I will state for the record that these are co-produced by Wells Fargo. So 12 now this will be exhibit 5.

13 [Kirby Exhibit No. 5

14 was marked for identification.]

15 [REDACTED] And you can see that exhibit 5, the first page has the same Bates
16 numbers. It's the same Bates numbers. It's HJC 118 dash many, many zeros 5 through 17 7. And then Bates 8 is a black and white PDF of a PowerPoint that is also redacted, and 18 that is not what was attached to exhibit 3.

19 The unredacted PowerPoint that was attached as exhibit 3 stapled together
20 representing as if it is the attachment to the email from the KeyBank employee to 21 [REDACTED] is actually a native file that was produced to the committee from Citibank, 22 completely separate institution.

23 And I'm going to introduce that for the record, just to make clear that what was 24 attached as one exhibit and introduced into the record as one exhibit as being an 25 attachment to an email that was produced to us from one financial institution actually

1 came from a different financial institution.

2 And the majority's representation that these are the same PowerPoints, I
3 understand that it's a natural assumption that they have the same title that they are the 4 same, but for the ones that were actually produced by the banks in exhibit 4 and exhibit 5
5 were redacted and we don't know that they were the same.

6 What we do know is that what was presented as the attachment to exhibit 3 was 7 not the document that was attached to exhibit 3. It was a document that was produced
8 by another bank. And we're going to introduce exhibit 6 for the record.

9 [Kirby Exhibit No. 6
10 was marked for identification.]

11 [REDACTED] So I would ask the majority, when we're being questioned -- when 12 we're questioning a witness about this PowerPoint, that we use the exhibits with the 13 emails that they were actually attached to from the institutions that actually produced
14 them.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q And with that out of the way, you were asked a series of questions during 17 the previous hour about whether law enforcement ever provides a list of names to 18 FinCEN or to financial institutions and ask them to file SARs or to search for people with 19 those names. And to me that made me -- rang a bell for me in terms of Section 314 of 20 the PATRIOT Act.

21 Are you familiar with Section 314(a) of the PATRIOT Act?

22 A Yes, I am.

23 Q And what is your understanding of what Section 314(a) allows law
24 enforcement agencies to request of financial institutions?

25 A So law enforcement agencies can ask FinCEN to query financial institutions

1 for -- it's essentially a hand-raising exercise for whether they have responsive
2 accounts -- maybe transactions as well, I have to check the reg -- for targets that have 3 been identified for either like counterterrorism or anti-money laundering reasons.

4 Q And so is it correct to say that law enforcement through their own
5 investigations identifies a suspect, and then if they want to investigate that suspect's
6 financial records they need to find out where those financial records are? So they send 7 a request to FinCEN to ask financial institutions, "Do you have any records for this
8 individual?"

9 Is that correct?

10 A Yes.

11 Q And the financial institutions respond yes or no, but the 314(a) response
12 does not include the actual financial records, correct?

13 A That is my understanding, yes. It does not include the actual financial 14 records.

15 Q And so when you say it's a hand-raising exercise, did you mean that any bank 16 who has records related to the subject named in the 314(a) request says, "We have 17 records"?

18 A Yes, essentially the yes/no as you phrased it.

19 Q And the purpose of that is to allow law enforcement to then serve a 20 subpoena or a search warrant or whatever -- whatever --

21 A Whatever process they have.

22 Q -- they have to then obtain those records?

23 A Yes, that is my understanding.

24 Q So it's kind of the flip side of a suspicious activity report, whereas with a 25 suspicious activity report it's the bank who's investigating or monitoring their customers

1 and then flagging for FinCEN and law enforcement what they deem to be suspicious;
2 whereas, with 314(a), law enforcement has identified an individual who is a suspect or a
3 target in some respect, and then they are trying to get their financial records, and they 4 use 314(a) as the first step to know where to go.

5 A I think that's a fair description, yes.

6 Q Okay. Thank you.

7 And like suspicious activity reports, Section 314(a) is a tool that is available to law
8 enforcement to help them combat the financing of terrorism, as well as money
9 laundering and other offenses?

10 A Yes, that's correct.

11 [REDACTED] Okay. Thank you.

12 And with that, we can go off the record.

13 [Recess.]

14 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q I think where we left off in the majority's previous hour was relating to the 17 attachments sent in an email from [REDACTED] to a number of financial institutions.
18 That's the "January 15th, 2021, compiled typologies" and the "KeyBank Query Logic for 19 Active Shooters."

20 We can direct you to exhibit 5.

21 A Okay.

22 Q Let me know if you need a minute to review.

23 [Pause.]

24 A Okay.

25 Q You previously testified that [REDACTED] was a member of the Intelligence

1 Division. She's cc'd on this email.

2 Did you discuss this email or the attachments with her?

3 A I don't recall discussing the email or its attachments with her.

4 Q And do you recall if you ever received this email?

5 A I don't recall receiving this email either.

6 Q Do you know if you or anyone in your office analyzed the information in the 7 attachments before it was shared with financial institutions?

8 A I do not know the answer to that question.

9 Q Would that be the norm, the sort of thing that normally would go through 10 the Intelligence Division before being distributed?

11 A As I think I mentioned before the break, this isn't FinCEN's work product.

12 Q Well --

13 A So, I mean, the slide deck. So I don't know that there would be a sort of 14 like "usual" for that. So I don't know if it was reviewed by the Intelligence Division 15 before it was sent.

16 Q I will direct you to Bates number 6.

17 A Yes.

18 Q So if you'll notice, it says, "Lone Actor/Homegrown Violent Extremism
19 Indicators," and in parentheses says, "(developed from prior FinCEN analysis)."

20 A Yes. I'm sorry, I was referring to the slide deck in my response to the prior 21 question. My apologies for any lack of clarity on that.

22 Okay. I'm on Bates 6.

23 Q Do you know whether the Intelligence Division helped prepare these 24 indicators?

25 A I do not know.

1 Q Have you seen them before?

2 A I have in the sense of -- the questions that have arisen over the course of a
3 year, I have seen this list in connection with that effort or with those inquiries.

4 Q And on this email there's at least looks like 11 different financial institutions
5 listed.

6 Do you know how FinCEN decided that these materials would go to these financial
7 institutions and not others?

8 A I do not know, no.

9 Q Would this kind of exchange be considered a FinCEN Exchange?

10 A This is not what -- I mean, a FinCEN Exchange, at least in my mind, is when 11 sort of people convene to talk. Though it would also make sense to me that part of that 12 could be also extended to sort of include the information being shared in advance of an 13 exchange.

14 I've never really thought about it that way, but I could see it making sense in the 15 sense of, so folks are sort of talking from -- understanding the facts or the -- whatever it is 16 that's going to be discussed in the exchange.

17 But at least an exchange itself is something I tend to think of as the sort of actual 18 event of people coming together and talking.

19 Q The subject line states, "...in advance of 4:30 call." Did you participate in 20 that call?

21 A I do not recall whether I did or if I did not.

22 Q Did you participate in any calls with financial institutions in the weeks
23 following January 6th, 2021?

24 A I don't recall if I did or didn't, to be honest. I've sort of been relaying that a 25 bit in my mind in anticipation of coming here today, and it wouldn't surprise me if I did.

1 But if I did, it wouldn't have been many of these. I don't -- but I don't recall attending 2 any.

BY [REDACTED]

Q Can we take a step back a little bit?

So in the days and weeks following January 6th, obviously there's many law enforcement investigations going on. FinCEN is clearly sharing a lot of information -- whether that's [REDACTED] -- with financial institutions.

What is the atmosphere at FinCEN at that time?

11

13

A Hmm. The atmosphere at FinCEN? I was aware that these exchanges were going on. I think you see senior leaders copied on these emails, so this would've been something that would've, I think, gathered attention from like -- that's something folks would've been focused on in the aftermath of the event. And there was the concern of violence in connection with the sort of upcoming inauguration.

14

16

There was also, though, sort of separate and apart from this, there was a transition underway, and so there would've been all of the steps going on at that time in connection with transitioning from one administration to the next administration.

17

19

So my recollection is there also would've been the sort of -- that work going on as well of transition memos and meeting with any transition team or preparing things for a transition team.

20

Sort of all of that was going -- would've been going on at the same time as this. And then there was still the pandemic sort of overhang going on as well.

22

25

So I don't really recall a vibe per se, but there was a lot going on at this time and a lot going on at this time that would have sort of drawn leadership's attention because of all of the different work streams sort of associated with those things, if that answers your question.

1 Q So looking at -- we'll look at this attachment specifically. At the top it says,
2 "Bank submission."

3 Is it fair to assume that a bank likely sent that to FinCEN and then [REDACTED]
4 was sending that out to other financial institutions?

5 A So I don't know the answer to that. But if I'm looking at the first sentence,
6 it seems a fair conclusion to draw. This came not from us but came from a financial 7 institution, given the reference to searching of "Zelle payment messages."

8 Q Would you or someone in your office have analyzed this submission from 9 the bank to determine whether it was legitimate and worth sending out to other financial
10 institutions?

11 A I do not recall. I don't know if that happened. And as I think I indicated
12 earlier today, for FinCEN Exchange presentations or materials by presenters that aren't 13 FinCEN, sort of irrespective of the topic, FinCEN wouldn't necessarily -- I don't think we 14 actually have a practice of sort of reviewing and validating those products or 15 presentations or whatever they are prior to whatever discussion is going to happen in 16 that regard.

17 Q So aside from that, this appears to be just an email in anticipation of the call,
18 so likely not part of the FinCEN Exchange.

19 A Uh-huh.

20 Q That wouldn't have been analyzed by anyone in your division, any other
21 division?

22 A I'm not aware of whether this was analyzed or not.

23 BY [REDACTED]

24 Q Following January 6th, how did your team's attention change?

25 A So there were analysts working on this effort of supporting law enforcement

1 in connection with, my recollection is, requests from the FBI, which tends to be how we
2 get pulled into law enforcement support matters. So my recollection is there were 3 members of the Intelligence Division supporting requests from the FBI.

4 Q How many members?

5 A I don't know the exact number. But the terrorism team was I don't think 6 any more than six or seven employees, so it would've been almost certainly less than 7 that. I don't know that it would've been the whole -- I don't think it would've been the 8 whole team, but I don't know.

9 Q Did you have any conversations with that team in the days or weeks
10 following January 6th about where their priorities should be?

11 A I don't recall any discussions like that. This was being very much managed 12 at a leadership level within FinCEN, so I don't recall any discussions of the type you're 13 describing.

14 Q Who specifically within FinCEN leadership was involved that you can recall?

15 A Well, AnnaLou Tirol, who then became the deputy director shortly -- yeah, 16 shortly after the date of this email, again, at the time was the head of the Strategic 17 Operations Division and had a background in law enforcement.

18 And my recollection is the director at the time was also actively involved in these 19 exchanges and this effort.

20 Q Did you have meetings or discussions with AnnaLou in the days and weeks
21 following January 6th?

22 A I mean, it would have come up, I feel pretty confident, in leadership
23 meetings. But I don't remember specific conversations with her, specific meetings
24 dedicated to that purpose.

25 Q I guess just more broadly, how are you gaining this understanding of FinCEN

1 leadership's involvement?

2 A Well, as I think I mentioned a few minutes ago, I was aware that these 3 exchanges were going on, and I was aware that the senior leadership of the agency was 4 focused on this and was involved.

5 So it wasn't a secret that these exchanges were occurring, and I was aware they
6 were going on. And as I think I mentioned a few minutes ago, I feel pretty confident
7 that at least references to this work would've been raised in like senior management
8 meetings. So I was aware that it was going on.

9 Q I guess could you just walk me through a little bit more about what your role 10 was and what discussions you were having?

11 You're talking about FinCEN leadership is paying attention to this, and then there 12 are the analysts within your team that are working on this.

13 Who's talking to the analysts? Are these two separate discussions? Are they 14 intermediary? It's just it's not clear what your role is at this time.

15 A So I think I mentioned earlier today that about 90 days before this is when I 16 stepped into this role as head of this division. It was a pretty substantial change in 17 nature of responsibilities for me.

18 And also I had not been an intelligence analyst before. So this was a fairly 19 substantial change from serving as the legal adviser, and also the position I stepped into 20 had been vacant for some period of time.

21 So a fair amount of my efforts at the beginning of this job were, frankly, getting 22 my hands around the management functions, who sits where, who's -- that sort of stuff.

23 ■ had previously been chief of staff to the director, so it would not have struck
24 me as strange to have leadership working directly with her given their longstanding 25 relationship. And ■ is a very impressive individual. So, again, nothing about that

1 would've struck me as strange or unusual.

2 So I was not very involved in this sort of overall exchange effort. From where I
3 sat at the time, looking back on it, my impression was it was sufficiently staffed at a senior
4 management level that I didn't sort of see myself as adding a lot of additional value
5 beyond the managers who were already involved in that space.

6 And so maybe that's the best answer I can give you to your question.

7 Q Okay. And is [REDACTED] having regular interactions with the analysts who were 8 working on this?

9 A I don't know the answer to that question for sure, but it wouldn't -- again, it 10 wouldn't have struck me as unusual if she was.

11 Q Okay. What about like January 5th, before any of this happens, what was 12 the nature? You've only been on the job for 90 days. [REDACTED] has longer lasting 13 relationships with some of the analyst folks. Is that --

14 A I think that's probably accurate. But also we're in the middle of a transition
15 period. We've just come through the -- I mean, there's just a lot going on at that time.
16 So it's not as though people were just sort of like sitting around waiting for things to 17 happen. But then this happened and we had these requests from law enforcement and 18 others to sort of engage in this work.

19 So I don't -- it would never strike me as strange for teams to sort 20 of -- management teams anyway -- to sort of divide and conquer different topics based on 21 background or expertise or even personal relationships.

22 But I can only speak to sort of my own involvement. It was not extensive in 23 these exchanges while they were going on.

24 Q Were the analysts briefing FinCEN leadership directly?

25 A I would presume yes.

1 Q Do you recall a time period?

2 A But I don't know for sure, but I would presume yes.

3 Q Other than the six or seven folks who were on the counterterrorism team,
4 do you know of any other analysts within the team that were pulled on to work on this?

5 A Not specifically, no. It would not surprise me if some of the data quality or 6 folks like that who are just familiar with tracking stuff in the database, it wouldn't surprise
7 me if those folks were sort of pulled in to make sure any incoming filings were being seen.
8 But I don't recall specifically beyond any additional folks particularly.

9 Q For documents like the slide show, independent of this specific example, but 10 we'll say January 5th, so it's just independent of this specific example, if there was 11 incoming information that [REDACTED] receives and his job is just to interface, before he 12 then goes and shares about what he shared with us that he would send it to someone 13 else within FinCEN, was that a type of consideration that would get sent to your desk, to 14 [REDACTED] desk, to someone else? What's the nature of things that are sent to you directly?

15 A I don't know who [REDACTED] would've sent that to. [REDACTED] didn't work for me.
16 So I can't really speculate who -- I don't know who he did or did not send things to on 17 January 5th or before.

18 The FinCEN Exchange was codified in the statute right at the beginning of the year.
19 There were some number of these exchange -- exchanges like these that had gone on 20 previously, but at least the sort of exchange in its current form is sort of very much a 21 product of early 2021. But, again, I don't know who [REDACTED] would've sent what he was 22 sending to before, say, January 5th or before.

23 Q We've referenced a couple of the meeting notes. Do you recall just even at 24 a general level being on any Zoom calls or in-person meetings with FinCEN leadership
25 about analysis that was being conducted following January 6th?

1 A As I mentioned before, pretty confident this would've come up in senior
2 management meetings. At the time many of those would've been on Zoom.

3 So in that context, yes, I don't recall the particulars of the discussion, but I'm 4 pretty confident it would've come up in those discussions.

5 ██████████ And there, I just want to make -- you testified earlier about sort
6 of when -- about all of the ADs over the various divisions sort of standing -- I think you
7 said you thought they were weekly meetings. Is that what you're referring to here when 8 you sort of say senior management meetings, or are there --

9 Mr. Kirby. Yes. At the time, my recollection is we had a weekly senior 10 leadership meeting. There may have been meetings beyond that given the nature of 11 what was -- the attack on January 6th and the aftermath of that. But at the time we 12 did, my recollection, have standing senior management meetings once a week.

13 ██████████ And so in an earlier answer, based off your kind of broad
14 understanding of what was going on at the time, that analysts likely were briefing FinCEN 15 leadership, are the analysts getting pulled into the standing meeting, or is it your 16 understanding there were separate meetings going on?

17 Mr. Kirby. I think those would've likely been separate meetings if they occurred.
18 But I don't recall any sort of specific meetings in that regard. Yeah.

19 ██████████ Would an email like this have been sent without being reviewed 20 by an analyst?

21 ██████████ Just for the record, we're talking about exhibit 5?

22 ██████████ Yeah, exhibit 5, the bank submission, the attachments.

23 ██████████ So we're talking about the first attachment, bank submission,
24 on exhibit 5.

25 ██████████ Yes.

1 Mr. Kirby. And an analyst in the then-Intelligence Division?

2 [REDACTED] Correct.

3 Mr. Kirby. I don't know. I don't know if [REDACTED] sent this to someone in the 4 Intelligence Division before he sent this or not.

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q There wasn't a general protocol for Intelligence Division to sign off on things
7 before they were being sent out by individuals like [REDACTED]?

8 A I'm not aware of such a protocol. I mean, the events around January 6th
9 are kind of a unique circumstance, so I don't know that we would've had a standing
10 protocol in anticipation of such a thing. But I'm not aware -- I don't believe there would 11 be a protocol sort of like requiring that in all instances. I was not aware of one at the 12 time.

13 Q And you may have answered this earlier. Did the Intelligence Division
14 create these typologies on exhibit 5, the indicators developed from prior FinCEN analysis?

15 A I don't know the answer to that.

16 Q Do you know who would --

17 A Someone like AnnaLou, [REDACTED], or [REDACTED] might. If they are derived from 18 FinCEN analysis it would make sense to me that that would've come from the Intelligence
19 Division, because that's the function at the time that they performed.

20 So, for instance, I would not have expected [REDACTED] to sort of come up with 21 something like this on his own. So it would make sense that if it was developed at 22 FinCEN it was developed in the Intelligence Division.

23 Q Were these typologies or indicators made public? I know you mentioned 24 earlier that you published certain typologies.

25 A Uh-huh.

1 Q Do you know if these were made public?

2 A I don't know. I don't believe so. And, again, these may be more like red
3 flag data points if anything else. These at the bottom I don't think were ever made
4 public. I don't recall off the top of my head.

5 I'm kind of trying to mentally scan through products that I know were on our 6 website. I don't recall us putting a product like this on our website.

7 And one rationale for that, frankly, might be you don't want to alert people that 8 are thinking about doing this to necessarily how some of their activity may be seen, 9 would be one potential reason not to do that.

10 But I don't recall this being made public otherwise.

11 Q Do you know how these kinds of indicators -- what analysis would be 12 performed to create these kinds of indicators?

13 A I know in the past there has been interest in trying to figure out if there are 14 ways to anticipate lone actor attacks and if there are red flags that can be sort of 15 discerned from that.

16 If these were produced at FinCEN my guess would be that they were part of a 17 work stream of that type, but I don't know when they would've been produced.

18 Q But what are you analyzing?

19 A Oh.

20 Q When you're producing an indicator, what does that analysis look like?

21 A Going back to something we at some point today have talked about, I don't 22 know whose question it was, we talked about how financial institutions will often ingest
23 public news reporting as part of their AML program.

24 So, for instance, in the context of someone being identified as a suspect in an 25 action, like a lone shooter action, that could prompt financial institutions to check their

1 own records to see what they have on that individual, with the benefit of that new 2 information evaluate whether any of that might be suspicious activity that should be
3 reported to FinCEN.

4 And so one area of analysis in that regard could be if a bank were to file a
5 look-back SAR after learning that one of their customers were involved potentially in one
6 of these actions and then sort of evaluating.

7 So if you're asking like what is the person analyzing, one piece of data they may be 8 looking at is what types of filings are we getting on individuals that are identified as 9 having engaged in this sort of conduct and are there commonalities or other things that 10 can be drawn from that as some sort of -- that would be one potential area they're 11 looking at.

12 To the extent we're working with law enforcement on something of this type they 13 may also glean information that law enforcement may know in this space.

14 And so it could be a couple of different areas, but those are two that kind of stand 15 out to me that they could be looking at in the first instance.

16 Q And when FinCEN shares materials like this, how are they expected to be 17 used?

18 A So to be honest with you, I don't know how many examples we have of 19 sharing information like this.

20 It sounds like -- and, again, just based only on the emails -- the email, singular -- it
21 looks like the expectation is that this is going to form some portion of a conversation.

22 To the extent that's the case, it's comparing different approaches and 23 methodologies different institutions are using to the extent -- I mean, I could -- that 24 would sort of make sense to me given the table-setting email here.

25 But I don't know in the abstract that there's sort of a default expectation of what a

1 financial institution would do with something like this or information and materials like
2 this.

3 Q One of the indicators includes, quote, "The purchase of books (including 4 religious texts) and subscriptions to other media containing extremist views."

5 Do you have an idea of how FinCEN could have conducted an analysis to conclude 6 that as an indicator?

7 A I don't. I think the "extremist views" part of that I could see where if you're 8 thinking about that in terms of like jihadi materials, that could be one example of that in 9 particular potentially. But I don't know where that came from.

10

BY [REDACTED]

11 Q How would FinCEN figure out that an individual was purchasing jihadi 12 material?

13 A So I don't think it would be us that figures that out on the first instance. I 14 think it would be the filer. And I think it would depend a lot on what information the 15 filer has access to.

16 So to sort of go outside the four corners of our conversation but to go to where 17 this has come up in other circumstances, one question I've heard raised in hearings is,
18 "Well, should people be filing on purchases of Bibles and things like that?"

19 Most of the time I don't think your typical filer is going to see that. They 20 shouldn't be filing on that anyway, to be very clear. But if you go to Barnes & Noble and 21 buy "insert name of religious text," whatever text you're buying, I don't know that your 22 payment processor or anyone is actually going to see that.

23 So I think it depends on like what information -- and broadening the aperture out
24 to an AML program, all the sources of information an individual financial institution, 25 individual filer has at their disposal, they may see things in a certain context in the 1 transactional space that may prompt them to file.

2 That's not something FinCEN would necessarily see. The only thing we're going
3 to see in most instances is going to be my financial institution saw something that caused 4 them to be concerned of potential relevant to any possible violation of law or regulation.
5 You sort of go back to that standard, it's a pretty broad standard, and they may file on 6 that.

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q Does FinCEN have a determination of what media contains extremist views?

9 A Not that I'm aware of, no.

10 Q Do you know whether any financial institution or FinCEN expressed a 11 concern that suggesting the purchase of religious texts might encroach on Americans'
12 right to religious freedom?

13 A I don't recall any conversations of that type. I don't know that I necessarily 14 would've been included or involved in those types of discussions.

15 But at the end of the day, FinCEN is an organization that is not out, in my 16 experience, looking to suppress people's constitutional First Amendment rights. So that 17 is not something in the first instance I think any employee of FinCEN in this space
18 would've been looking to do. That's just based on my experience of working for the 19 organization. I'm relatively confident in saying that.

20 Q Do you know who would've been involved in those conversations?

21 A Again, my guess, as this was sort of centered in our Strategic Operations
22 Division, my guess would be managers in that space, up to and including Ms. Tirol and 23 possibly our Chief Counsel's Office, which I was no longer in at the time.

24 [REDACTED] But I just want to be clear from that answer, I think there's a 25 premise in your question that those conversations took place, and his testimony was

1 actually that he doesn't recall if there were any such conversations. So I want to make
2 sure that answer is clear.

BY [REDACTED]

Q Another one of the extremist indicators includes, "Donations to organizations known to promote radicalism."

6

Does FinCEN have a list of organizations known to promote radicalism?

A Not that I'm aware of, no.

Q Do you know how an analysis would've concluded what organizations are known to promote radicalism?

10

A I don't, no.

11

Q Are you aware of whether any SARs were generated on the basis of these 12 extremism indicators?

13

A I don't know if SARs were generated based on this.

14

BY [REDACTED]

15

Q Who at FinCEN would know where this analysis came from?

16

A I mean, I would start probably in the Strategic Operations Division, since that's where the communications came from, and then work backwards from there.

17

18

And so I think all of these folks we've been talking about, they no longer work at 19

FinCEN, which would be a challenge in terms of working backwards in that regard 20 because they're no longer with the agency. We've had quite a bit of turnover in the agency in the last couple years. But as a threshold matter that's where I'd be inclined to start.

21

22

23

Q I guess, just based off your experience at the time, in mid-January 2021, if you're seeing a list like this, where do you think within FinCEN someone is doing that type of analysis?

24

25

1 A As I think I indicated before, if this was prepared at FinCEN I think it's a fair
2 conclusion to assume that it was likely prepared in the Intelligence Division, because
3 that's where that -- that's where I would expect -- analytic work, we're looking at filings
4 and other materials to try to generate red flags and typologies, I would expect that work
5 to happen there.

6 Q If you had follow-up questions about what some of these points mean, who 7 within the Intelligence Division would you consult with?

8 A In the first instance at the time I would've gone to [REDACTED], who is no longer at 9 FinCEN either. So I'm not sure who I would ask now about this, to be honest. I would 10 probably have to do some digging given the passage of time.

11 Q I mean, presumably this information is being shared to try to be helpful to 12 recipients on the list.

13 A That's my assumption, yes.

14 Q And if one of the recipients doesn't understand what one of the bullet points
15 means and you're the director of the Intelligence Division, we're just trying to get a sense
16 of who might know the answer to these questions.

17 A I think I answered that a minute ago. I said I would have gone to [REDACTED] at the 18 time. But [REDACTED] is not there anymore. And so I would need to figure out who to go to in 19 lieu of [REDACTED] with the passage of 3 and a half years. This didn't happen last week, with all 20 due respect.

21 Q I understand that.

22 For a list like this, when it's going to the banks -- obviously you're not copied on 23 this particular email -- are you receiving briefings?

24 We're just trying to get a sense of in the hierarchy, where you've got the analysts 25 themselves who are like maybe tip of the spear of trying to figure out the issue they're

1 working on, are you getting regular briefings? Is this too granular? Are you too new?

2 Like why is it that -- it seems, at least based off the answers, maybe not as much
3 familiarity with the meanings of these different bullet points.

4 A Uh-huh. I think it maybe is a mix of -- I was pretty new in the role. The 5 leadership at the time was working directly with members of the team. It was my 6 understanding people that they knew worked in the terrorism space.

7 We also weren't all sitting next to each other at this time because it was during 8 the COVID period, so it wasn't -- you didn't just walk down the hall and start up a 9 conversation on something like this like we do before and like we do now.

10 And it wouldn't have then nor now strike me as strange or unusual for different 11 managers to focus -- particularly senior managers -- to focus on different aspects of the 12 work stream.

13 So I think that's probably the best answer I have for you on that.

14 Q Did you ever receive any briefings about concerns, whether it was typologies
15 or kind of related issues, of whether any of that kind of work implicates the First 16 Amendment?

17 A I don't recall any briefings to that effect.

18 [REDACTED] When these indicators and search terms are sent out, what --

19 [REDACTED] I think I'll stop there. He's not testified that these are search
20 terms. He's actually testified several times that they are not search terms. He said
21 they're red flag indicators. So if you want to rephrase we can start over.

22

BY [REDACTED]

23 Q What methods could banks use to implement these red flags and monitor 24 transactions? You mentioned a moment ago that banks might be able to see things that 25 FinCEN can't.

1 A Uh-huh.

2 Q Could you elaborate a little on that?

3 A Sure.

4 I think we've talked about earlier today one of the obligations that the Bank
5 Secrecy Act imposes and our implementing regs impose on banks is the requirement to 6 have an anti-money laundering program reasonably designed to essentially sort of detect
7 this suspicious activity, improper activity, that sort of stuff.

8 So whatever system they have put in place for that -- and some of that is probably 9 going to be an automated screening system.

10 So, for instance, like the OFAC SDN list, my understanding is that a number of 11 banks have automated screening systems to run those names against transactions to 12 ensure they're not dealing with designated terrorists, designated kingpins, those sorts of 13 folks that no one wants -- they don't want to deal with, we don't want them dealing with.

14 So they have program staff in place to be able to sort of know their customers, 15 evaluate the transactions going on through their institutions.

16 And so sharing information with them for them to feed into that overall program
17 is what I was kind of referring to in that regard, is we share information with the 18 hope -- they know their customers far better than we do.

19 We share information that is potentially helpful for them in understanding 20 broader illicit finance typologies, red flags that may indicate such typologies, with the 21 hope that it's helpful for them in terms of administering their overall program and 22 hopefully driving greater reporting to FinCEN.

23 Q So let's use the examples here specifically.

24 One of the red flags is MAGA, America First. How could that get implemented
25 into the AML system?

1 A So I think, as we talked about earlier today, I think one of the things we
2 would tell folks, and we do say this in our alert and other materials, is there is usually a 3 statement that no one red flag is indicative of any problematic activity.

4 That, again, my understanding is that at the time you see a bunch of terms here,
5 many of which they're both parties, people from both parties, terms like kill, shoot, blow,
6 which I'm assuming means blow up, is one -- gun, death, murder.

7 I read these as being targeted towards combating violence, which at the time
8 there was substantial concern, my recollection is, not in the post-January 6th
9 environment, concerns about violence given the pending inauguration.

10 So you've got a number of names on this list, individual data points, that if 11 someone is talking about violence in the context of any of these folks, that's how I'm 12 reading this broadly.

13 It's hard for me to sort of speak specifically as to one-offs of these terms, how 14 they might be implicated -- incorporated into a financial institution's overall AML
15 program, because at least the way I think of this, we generally tell financial institutions
16 that no one term is meant to be indicative of necessarily something.

17 You're sort of supposed to take these terms holistically and look at them against 18 sort of your sort of broader knowledge about the customer.

19 But I can't answer that specific, "How are they supposed to take that one term?"
20 I don't view it as just one term. They're sharing a list of terms, many of which are aimed 21 at violent activity.

1 [3:11 p.m.]

2

BY [REDACTED]

Q That statement of one term alone isn't included in this.

A It's not included in that. I appreciate that.

Q Moving to the red flags or the indicators portion, how could a bank incorporate, again, donations to organizations known to promote radicalism, the purchase of books, including religious texts and subscriptions to other media containing extremist views, how does that get incorporated into an AML program?

A I'm going back to the conversation we just had. I think you would sort of 10 look at them holistically because there's also discussions in here of, you know, purchase

11 of precursor chemicals, potential bomb-making equipment, ammonium nitrate, you know, sudden account closures, asset liquidation, disbursements.

12

13

Any one of those things may not stand out, but if you're seeing holistically

14 multiple indicators of this, I could see where an analyst may have been thinking -- and, again, I don't know the underlying material they were looking at, but against a backdrop

15

16 of this suggests it was developed in the context of, sort of, attempting to combat lone actors and how -- you know, trying to think about it, if there are indicators that folks

17

18 would be looking for that on the front end instead of just on the back end, it's obviously

19 easier when you know who the person is that did it after the fact to look back on there what they did, you know.

20

21

[REDACTED] [REDACTED] is your question more a mechanical one, like, how would

22 a bank actually -- what would a bank actually do with any of these? I just want to make sure we're, like, understanding the question there.

23

24

[REDACTED] My question is FinCEN is sharing materials that are, ostensibly, useful to the bank. I'm asking how they're useful to the bank, how they can actually be

25

1 implemented.

2 [REDACTED] Because I think to the -- what I was going to say, to the 3 mechanics of that, is, like, you may be able to speak to that in a general term. But he 4 testified earlier, like, he never worked at a financial institution, right? And, like,
5 wouldn't have been engaging with the financial institutions on a regular basis in the role
6 that he was in during this time period.

7 So, like, to the extent he has, sort of, general knowledge of that, he can answer.
8 But, like, I think those are sort of questions about -- for the mechanics of how a bank
9 takes whatever these documents are and integrates them, I think it's going to vary widely,
10 and it's not something that's necessarily, like, his primary knowledge.

11 [REDACTED] Can we go off the record for a second.

12 [Discussion off the record.]

13 [REDACTED] All right. We can go back on the record.

14 I'd like to introduce two email threads. We have the full thread. The first one 15 involves MUFG sending an email to AnnaLou -- or to [REDACTED], and 16 AnnaLou Tirol, with the subject line "Major D.C. Transportation Vendor Lists."

17 And the second is a thread -- only interested in the top email -- from [REDACTED]
18 to various financial institutions, sending that "Major D.C. Transportation Vendor Lists"
19 Excel sheet. And this is exhibit 7.

20 [Kirby Exhibit No. 7

21 was marked for identification.]

22 Mr. Kirby. Okay.

23 [REDACTED] I will also introduce the vendor list that was attached, the Excel
24 sheet, as exhibit 8. I'll just note for the record that these were sent as native documents
25 so they're not Bates stamped. They were printed off of Excel. We're not going to go

1 through this individually.

2 [Kirby Exhibit No. 8

3 was marked for identification.]

4 [REDACTED] And the different sections, there's different tabs of the Excel
5 worksheet?

6 [REDACTED] They were separate, yes.

7 Mr. Kirby. Okay.

8 [REDACTED] Have you seen this email or this Excel document before.

9 Mr. Kirby. So in connection with the questions that have been coming up over 10 the course of this year, I have previously seen the -- I think I've seen this list. I don't 11 know that I've seen the email before, but I -- I do recall at some point over the course of 12 this year having seen a vendor list, the airport -- I don't know if I've seen the email before.

13 [REDACTED] Just so the record is clear, when you refer to that -- did you 14 come and voluntarily provide a briefing on behalf of FinCEN to the committee in 15 connection with this inquiry?

16 Mr. Kirby. Yes.

17 [REDACTED] Is that what you're referring to --

18 Mr. Kirby. Yes.

19 [REDACTED] -- when you say "in connection with these questions"?

20 Mr. Kirby. Yes. I think you were both -- most of y'all were in the briefing earlier 21 this year.

22 [REDACTED] I don't know that we got that on the record yet.

23 Mr. Kirby. Okay.

24 [REDACTED] So I just want to make that clear.

25 Mr. Kirby. Yes. I was here in March and briefed on, I think, your committee

1 staff and House Financial Services committee staff on similar questions in this space. So
2 we did some work in this space.

3 And, again, I don't recall if I've seen this before, but I -- I don't know if it was the 4 same list, but I have seen a vendor list at the three airports.

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q And did you see this in the weeks after January 6th, or was the first time you
7 saw it this year when you were preparing for the briefing?

8 A The first time I recall seeing it is earlier this year when I was preparing for the 9 briefing. I think that was in March.

10 Q If I can just ask generally, how would a list like this, vendors at the three 11 airports in D.C., Union Station, bus stops -- bus stops, how is that useful for financial 12 institutions?

13 A My assumption would be that this was a means of identifying transactional 14 activity in the region around that time. So if you saw transactional activity involving 15 these vendors, that could be an indicator that -- and at the airport, that the person was 16 traveling in or out during that period.

17 Q Traveling to D.C., eating at Chick-Fil-A or Dunkin' Donuts, that's not -- that 18 doesn't have any nexus to criminal activity. Is that correct?

19 A I agree with you in that going to Chick-Fil-A is not indicative of anything 20 criminal or improper.

21 My guess would be this context is they're feeding into that broader email program
22 that they're seeing, sort of, other potential indicia of involvement in the activity.
23 Perhaps this is a way of confirming whether the person was here during that time.

24 That would just be my, sort of, very high-level guess, is it would be a confirmation
25 of a location as opposed to the individual place the person went. That's how I would

1 read it.

2 Q In sharing this list with financial institutions, was FinCEN directing those 3 financial institutions or encouraging those financial institutions to track and scrutinize all
4 purchases made at those vendors?

5 A So I wasn't involved, to the best of my recollection, whatever comms
6 happened at the time, so I can't speak to that. We would normally not -- again, sort of 7 hard to draw normal in the space that we're referring to at the moment.

8 But, like, we would not -- when we share information with financial institutions, it
9 would normally not be as an instruction to here are four red flags of X, go, like, search
10 everything you have for that. That's not how we would normally communicate 11 something.

12 However, I was not -- I have no recollection of being involved in any 13 back-and-forth with FIs on -- I'm sorry -- financial institutions on this, and so I can't speak 14 to this circumstance specifically.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q [REDACTED] is on this email. Do you remember ever discussing this with 17 her?

18 A I do not, no.

19 Q Do you know who may have approved of sharing the vendor list?

20 A I don't. AnnaLou is the most senior manager, at least that I can see on at 21 least the top-level email. The print, as we go into the later ones, gets a little small, AND 22 it's kind of packed in together.

23 So I can't see if there are other -- it looks like for most of these, AnnaLou is the 24 most senior manager on the chain.

25 BY [REDACTED]

1 Q Would AnnaLou have been in a position to provide permission to share this
2 type of information with financial institutions?

3 A I mean, she over- -- she was the head of our strategic operations division in 4 January of 2021, and one of their principal functions is this information exchange, this
5 FinCEN Exchange, the BSAAG that I've mentioned -- the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group
6 that I mentioned before, responsibility for both of those functions is housed in that 7 division. So I don't know if she approved this, but I would assume she could 8 approve -- could have approved such a thing if she had -- if she had been asked.

9 Q If a bank is searching transactions made at transportation -- vendors at 10 airports like this, is that likely to sweep in lots of people totally removed from any 11 criminal activity if they're looking to see who might have been in D.C. on these dates?

12 A So I can't -- it's hard for me to speak to what banks are doing in their own
13 programs because, you know, they have the obligation to, sort of, know their customer,
14 have an AML program, all of that sort of stuff.

15 If I go back -- we talked about -- I think we talked about this before. If we go 16 back to the standard that's in the -- that's in the statute for suspicious activity, it's 17 relevant to any possible violation of law or regulation.

18 So, you know, to the extent one aspect of relevance is was someone at a certain 19 location, it's hard for me to say that that, across the board, would be something that a 20 financial institution wouldn't look at depending upon what kind of questions they're 21 getting, depending upon what else they have in -- in front of them.

22 I wouldn't -- I would not assume that any of these would be something that a 23 financial institution, in and of itself, would file on. That just would be my, sort of,
24 after-the-fact guess.

25 But, you know, it's hard for me to speak with deep specificity as to what bank A or

1 bank B, with all the other information they may have had before them, how they made
2 use of this information one way or the other.

3 Q Would you say that BSA filings taken as a whole are overinclusive?

4 A Overinclusive?

5 Q If the standard is any possible violation?

6 A So I don't know that overinclusive is the word I would use. But I would say
7 the statute -- you go back to the statutory language. The statute lays out a program that 8 very much leans in in terms of encouraging reporting.

9 On top of leaning in and encouraging reporting, the statute builds a number of 10 protections around both the filers and the information they file. And so, you know,
11 we've already talked to some extent about, you know, the penalties for improper
12 disclosure, the safe harbors that go around reporting of the information to FinCEN.

13 On top of that, we have, you know, MOUs that govern, you know, access to the 14 information given the sensitivity of the information.

15 So the entire statutory construct is very -- I read very much -- others may read it
16 differently, but I read very much as sort of leaning in on the question that, you know, it
17 errs in favor of having them report because it's not evidence -- SAR -- we're very clear on 18 this. We've said this in lots of different fora. SAR filings are not evidence of anything.
19 They are tip-and-lead information. That's why they're -- among the reasons they're so 20 protected.

21 But just because someone files a SAR on me for whatever reason, that in and of 22 itself is not proof of anything I did or did not do. There are other ways that investigatory
23 agency needs to determine that information. It's not through using the SAR.

24 [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

25 [Recess.]

1 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record. It's 3:38 in the afternoon.

2 BY [REDACTED]

3 Q Mr. Kirby, I want to return to exhibit 5. You were asked a number of 4 questions about that exhibit. I just want to make sure that none of your words get kind
5 of twisted afterwards.

6 A Okay. I have it.

7 Q And this is an email. We've been through it in a couple different iterations,
8 but this is an email dated Friday, January 15th, 2021, time stamped 4:00:25 p.m. And 9 it's Bates stamped HJC118, a lot of zeros, and 5. You see where it says that?

10 A Yep.

11 Q I realize there are redactions in the emails, but you are not on this email list,
12 correct?

13 A I do not see myself on this email.

14 Q Okay. And, in fact --

15 A Unless it's hidden under one of these redactions, I don't see it.

16 Q And, in fact, the FinCEN names are not redacted, correct?

17 A Correct.

18 Q So if you were on this --

19 A I would probably be able to see it.

20 Q -- it would probably be evident, correct?

21 And you said that you don't recall having seen this before, correct?

22 A No.

23 Q Okay. So to the extent that you commented on it, it was kind of your best 24 guess or speculation, but you don't actually have any knowledge of how this email came 25 to be or the contents of it outside of, you know, what's in front of you?

1 A That's correct.

2 Q Okay.

3 A Or in connection with preparing for the briefing I did earlier this year.

4 Q Okay.

5 A So some of this stuff I -- I think I saw the slide deck in connection with 6 preparing for that.

7 Q Okay. But you weren't aware of it in January of 2021, correct?

8 A That's correct. Not that I recall, no.

9 Q Okay. I want to look at -- on page 6 under section 2. It says, "Lone actor, 10 homegrown violent extremism indicators developed from prior FinCEN analysis." You 11 see where it says that?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And it says developed from prior FinCEN analysis. It doesn't actually say it's 14 taken directly from prior FinCEN analyses, correct?

15 A That's correct, yes.

16 Q Okay. And, actually, turning back to the prior page, the email is from 17 [REDACTED] -- it's somebody named [REDACTED]. Presumably, it's [REDACTED] who is listed on the 18 from line, correct?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And [REDACTED] says, "In advance of the 4:30 call, please find attached indicators
21 shared by two institutions, as well as indicators developed from prior FinCEN analysis on 22 lone actors, homegrown violent extremists."

23 You see where it says that?

24 A Yes.

25 Q And it specifically says "indicators developed from," correct?

- 1 A Yes.
- 2 Q That's the passive voice, correct?
- 3 A Yes.
- 4 Q In other words, we don't know who developed these, correct?
- 5 A That is correct, yes.
- 6 Q And we don't know how they were developed?
- 7 A I do not know how they were developed, no.
- 8 Q Okay. And so we don't actually know if it was -- if these are FinCEN bullet 9 points or if they're summaries of some documents or if -- or who put them together, 10 correct? We just don't know?
- 11 A Yeah, that makes sense.
- 12 Q So you agree with me, we don't know?
- 13 A Yes. Sorry.
- 14 Q And I think the -- because I think the comment was made earlier that these 15 are FinCEN's bullets, and I think there's actually not evidence of that, correct?
- 16 A Other than what's on the form here, the developed from prior FinCEN 17 analysis.
- 18 Q But, again, it says "developed from," it doesn't say taken from directly,
19 correct?
- 20 A Yes.
- 21 Q And it doesn't say who developed them?
- 22 A That's correct.
- 23 Q Or how they did that?
- 24 A That's correct, yes.
- 25 BY [REDACTED]

1 Q I want to take a step back and just talk about the context in which all of 2 these emails -- which, again, you are not on -- were sent and what was happening in the 3 country in that time period.

4 These emails were sent in the weeks following the violent assault on the Capitol
5 on January 6, 2021, correct?

6 A Yes.

7 Q Okay. And are you aware that the director of the FBI has referred to the 8 events of that day as an act of domestic terrorism?

9 A Yes.

10 Q And is that how FinCEN approached this investigation into the events of 11 January 6th, that it was investigating a domestic terrorism attack?

12 A At the time, yeah, I think that was -- that was my understanding at the time,
13 yes.

14 Q And FinCEN was aware that law enforcement agencies, including the FBI, in 15 mid-January of 2021 had issued public warnings about a substantial risk of violence in 16 connection with the upcoming inauguration, correct?

17 A Yes, that's -- again, that is my recollection at the time, there was a lot of 18 concern around the upcoming inauguration.

19 Q And is it your recollection that Federal law enforcement agencies, as well as 20 FinCEN, were focused on preventing similar violent attacks on our domestic institutions?

21 A Yes. That sounds -- that sounds right based on my recollection at the time.

22 Q And the inauguration of President Biden was scheduled for just two weeks
23 after January 6th, for January 20th, 2021. Does that sound --

24 A That sounds right.

25 Q -- correct?

1 Okay. And FinCEN was working with law enforcement and with financial 2 institutions to try to prevent the type of violence we saw on January 6th at the 3 inauguration. Is that a fair statement?

4 A That was my understanding of a key goal of this effort.

5 Q And the FinCEN exchanges related to January 6th that were set up in those 6 days and weeks afterwards were geared towards that effort of preventing future
7 violence, as well as identifying those who were responsible for the attack on January 6th.
8 Is that a fair statement?

9 A I mean, that generally is my understanding. Like I said, I wasn't very 10 involved in them. I was aware they were going on, but at a big-picture level, that -- that 11 comports with my general understanding at the time.

12 Q Okay. Now, I want to take you back -- if I could have exhibit 5. I want to 13 ask you some different questions about exhibit 5.

14 On the second page, the one with Bates number 6 -- well, my first question is,
15 when [REDACTED] sent this email to the banks, in this email did he ask the banks to conduct 16 any searches based on these terms?

17 A Not that I can see from the document.

18 Q Did he ask the banks to file a SAR for any transaction that had one of these 19 terms associated with it?

20 A Not that I can see from the document.

21 Q So if someone were to look at this email and say that FinCEN was telling
22 banks to flag Zelle transactions that use the word Trump, for example, as a suspicious
23 transaction, that would not be accurate, would it?

24 A That's -- the document doesn't say that, that's correct.

25 Q And it's the same for any one of the terms on that list?

1 A Yeah. The document doesn't say that for any of the terms on the list.

2 Q Now, the majority has cited this email as evidence of FinCEN targeting bank
3 customers with conservative viewpoints. But as you pointed out in the previous hour,
4 there are words on this list that -- that address both parties. For example, the fourth
5 term is Kamala, correct?

6 A Correct, yes.

7 Q And the fifth term is Biden?

8 A Correct, yes.

9 Q The term Antifa is on there?

10 A Correct, yes.

11 Q And Pelosi is one of the terms?

12 A Correct, yes.

13 Q And Schumer is the last one?

14 A Correct, yes.

15 Q And I believe you've said this many times, but I think it bears repeating, 16 generally speaking, when FinCEN talks about red flags or typologies, it does not intend 17 any one of them to, standing alone, be sufficient to file a SAR?

18 A Yes, that's correct.

19 Q And that is true with respect to the lone actor/homegrown violent
20 extremism indicators portion of this email as well?

21 A I would read them as consistent with how we say this in other contexts, so,
22 yes.

23 Q And nowhere in this email, whether it's with respect to the first list or the 24 second list, is there any request for any transactions to be flagged in any way or any SARs
25 to be filed?

1 A That's correct.

2 Q Now, I would like to turn to exhibits 7 and 8, in conjunction.

3 There is no request in this email for financial institutions to file SARs or otherwise
4 flag transactions for the vendors listed in exhibit 8?

5 A Not that I see in the email chain, no.

6 Q And if someone were to look at this email chain and say that FinCEN was 7 telling banks to file SARs or otherwise flag transactions for anybody who frequented the 8 Dunkin' Donuts at whichever airport is at 1 Aviation Circle -- I'm assuming that's Dulles
9 based on the phone number -- that would be incorrect?

10 A I don't read the email as saying that, no.

11 Q And that's true of any one of the vendors listed here. Is that fair to say?

12 A The gist of the email seems to focus on the location of the three airports, the 13 train station, and the bus stops.

14 Q But the email does not say, we want you to identify any customer who --

15 A Correct.

16 Q -- frequented one of these establishments?

17 A That's correct. It doesn't say that.

18 Q And would you expect, based on your experience with FinCEN typologies and 19 red flags and based on your experience with how banks determine whether or not to file
20 SARs, that this is one of many, many, many types of indicators that would be considered 21 before a bank decided to file a SAR?

22 A I would assume so, yes.

23 Q And, again, your focus -- FinCEN's focus. I don't mean you
24 personally -- FinCEN's focus in January of 2021 was preventing the type of violence that 25 we saw on January 6th?

1 A Yes. My understanding is safeguarding the inauguration was one of the 2 principal goals of this effort.

3 Q And one way to safeguard it would be to try to identify people who 4 participated in that violent assault on the Capitol and intended to return to the 5 inauguration to complete their mission of disrupting the peaceful transfer of power,
6 correct?

7 A That would make sense, yes, the legitimate focus of law enforcement.

8 [REDACTED] Thank you. We can go off the record.

9 [Recess.]

10 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

11

BY [REDACTED]

12 Q So we've discussed a number of these emails that were sent from [REDACTED]
13 [REDACTED] from [REDACTED], many of which included [REDACTED], but that haven't 14 included you.

15 Is there a reason why you would have been left off of these emails?

16 A I think it's hard for me to answer that question in the abstract. I think it is a
17 reflection of the fact that I was not very involved in this particular work stream. So 18 there were others involved in the work stream at a senior management level, so that 19 would be my assumption and guess.

20 Q And that would have been [REDACTED], AnnaLou that were the senior 21 executives on these emails?

22 A So AnnaLou was a senior executive. [REDACTED] was not, but was a GS-15.
23 AnnaLou was actually a senior executive. But, yeah, they're both senior managers.

24 Q And at this time she was your deputy?

25 A Correct.

1 BY [REDACTED]

2 Q [REDACTED] was?

3 A [REDACTED] yes. Sorry.

4 Q When you came, you know that you were relatively new, only about 90 days
5 in. When did [REDACTED] come in as your deputy?

6 A I think we actually both started the same day. Both -- both of us, I think,
7 were October of that prior year. We may have actually started on the same day in our 8 respective roles.

9 Q At that time did you sort of split some leadership roles given her experience
10 as the chief of staffs and time at the -- at FinCEN? Would you split some of that? Is 11 that why she was on these emails and you weren't?

12 A I don't remember anything quite that formal, but it sort of seems organically
13 that is how it worked out, you know, at least here.

14 Again, my -- our respective backgrounds and experiences were fairly different,
15 which actually, I think, is a good thing in a management team. And so -- but I don't 16 remember anything, kind of, this formal as what you're suggesting.

17 BY [REDACTED]

18 Q So were there ever any conversations about the division of labor, who was 19 going to handle what work stream?

20 A Again, I don't recall anything quite that specific. You know, [REDACTED] had been 21 in the front office as chief of staff prior to this role and had an excellent relationship with 22 leadership. So there's nothing about leadership dealing directly with her that would 23 have struck me as kind of unusual or odd.

24 I think very highly of [REDACTED]. So she -- nothing about that would have stood out to 25 me as something I needed to be worried about.

1 Q Were you both responsible for the post-January 6th action items, or was she
2 more focused on the post-January 6th investigations, and you were getting your --

3 A As a practical matter, she was more involved both, I think, by -- but, again,
4 I'm the manager of this, so I kind of -- I don't want to be -- I want to be clear about that.

5 But, you know, I think it just -- as I said before, I don't think there was anything,
6 sort of, formal in terms of, like, dividing up the role, so to speak. I just think, based on 7 background, experience, prior roles, it just sort of organically developed this way.

8 And this was a relatively short period of time that is my understanding that these
9 exchange -- you know, exchanges of information and the, sort of, corresponding FinCEN
10 exchanges were actually going on. So we're talking a matter of a couple weeks, not, sort 11 of, an extended -- you know, everything we're talking about is a, sort of, short period of 12 time.

13 So nothing -- even with the benefit of hindsight, there's -- I don't -- nothing strikes
14 me as, sort of, like, unusual about people going directly to [REDACTED] on anything.

15

BY [REDACTED]

16 Q Moving to, I think it's Exhibit 7 --

17 A I just had that one, didn't I? Yeah.

18 Q It's Bates stamped 662.

19 A Wait. Oh, the emails inside that. Okay.

20 Q Yes.

21 A Oh, wait.

22 [REDACTED] It's two emails together. It's one exhibit.

23 Mr. Kirby. Okay. I'm there.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q Just wanted to direct your attention to the top email. That was sent on

1 Friday, January 22nd, 2021. That would have been post-inauguration.

2 A Uh-huh.

3 Q Do you have any idea why the transportation vendor list was being shared
4 after the fact?

5 A I don't recall discussing this at the time. But, you know, I am aware that 6 since the events of January 6th there's been a substantial amount of law enforcement,
7 you know, activity in connection with prosecutions and other, you know, activity of that 8 type.

9 So given that, you know, my understanding is that a lot of the work done at this 10 time was done in coordination with law enforcement, it wouldn't necessarily -- to the 11 extent law enforcement folks are identifying suspects involved in the initial event on 12 January 6th, it wouldn't necessarily surprise me if they continued to, sort of, engage in 13 information exchange related to that.

14 And, you know, weaving down the chain a little bit more, you know, it looks like 15 [REDACTED] also shared, like, a Pacer link to defendants that had been charged, which would,
16 again, sort of be consistent with at least some of the focus at this time being in terms of,
17 sort of, supporting law enforcement efforts with regard to folks who had been actually 18 charged as having, you know, allegedly engaged in criminal activity.

19 [REDACTED] But this was no longer about identifying potential threats to 20 inauguration? This was now supporting law enforcement in their investigations of 21 January 6th. Is that fair to say?

22 Mr. Kirby. I mean, I guess that would sort of make -- I'm not sure it was always 23 just one even at the beginning. I mean, I think there were -- I mean, I don't know this.
24 I'd have to go back and check. But I suspect there were people arrested prior to the 25 inauguration for their activity on that day.

1 So I would imagine there was a fair amount of overlap in those work streams until 2 the inauguration part of it was, sort, of safely squared away. So I don't know that it was
3 just one and then the other. I would imagine it may well have been both and very much 4 then transitioned into this, sort of, pretty much law enforcement in the response to as 5 opposed to the protection of, to your point.

6 ██████████ We can go off the record.

[REDACTED] – as requested, the following agencies have AIA access: CBP, FBI, ICE, IRS, NCTC, NSA, OCDETF, USSS. As I previously stated, we consider this information to be sensitive and would expect the Committee to treat it confidentially.

Following up on this.

Of the 9 agencies that have AIA access with FinCEN, 1 is classified and we would consider the other 8 law enforcement sensitive information. Accordingly, we can transmit the list on the high side. Could you provide a classified email address, or should we arrange to have the email printed for you by House Security?

Thanks.

[REDACTED] -

Currently, FinCEN shares BSA data with nine federal law enforcement and national security agencies. The agencies with integrated access work with FinCEN to establish internal controls for how they store, access, and use BSA data in their systems. Those agencies integrate BSA data into their existing systems and manage access to those systems – including which authorized users have access to BSA data. Because the agencies manage these user accounts, FinCEN does not have an exact contemporaneous count of the number of users. However, as of September 2023, there were approximately 27,000 authorized agency users who had access to BSA data through AIA agencies. We note that many of those users may also have access to BSA data through FinCEN Query.

Hope this is helpful.

Thanks [REDACTED], this is helpful. However, we would still like to know how many individuals have access pursuant to AIA. Additionally, we would also like to know how many, and which agencies have MOUs with FinCEN. Does FinCEN have any oversight of the use of BSA data once the agency imports the data onto their own systems?

Here you go, sorry about the delay.

For a limited number of federal law enforcement and national security agencies, FinCEN has entered into "Agency Integrated Access" Memoranda of Understanding that permit those agencies to import BSA data onto their own systems and integrate it into their own secure databases rather than search BSA information in FinCEN Query. The goal of AIA is to increase the recipient agency's ability to use BSA Information by allowing the agency to utilize its own analytic tools. The agencies with AIA MOUs manage user access for the relevant agency database(s) directly, consistent with the terms of their MOU with FinCEN and the BSA. The authorized users who access BSA data through an agency with an AIA MOU are in addition to the users who have access to BSA data through FinCEN Query.

Subject: [EXTERNAL]Briefing follow up

[REDACTED] wanted to touch base about two questions that FinCEN was going to follow up on

1) how many people have access to the BSA database (Mr. Kirby suggested ~15k people. Does this track?

In FY23, there were an average of 14,415 authorized registered to access the BSA database through FinCEN Query, in addition to authorized users who have access through Agency Integrated Access (AIA).

2) how many searches of the BSA database were conducted in 2023?

In FY23, there were 3,362,735 million BSA searches conducted in FinCEN Query.

3) what are the minimum qualifications for a 314(a) search. Could it be all purchase in a general area or does it HAVE to obtain name/DOB/etc?

FinCEN does not process 314(a) requests based solely on geographical data. When FinCEN receives a 314(a) request, it ensures that the request includes sufficient specific identifiers, such as date of birth, address, and social security number, that would permit a financial institution to differentiate between common or similar names. If FinCEN received a request that contained no identifiers and only included a geographic location alone, it would not process the request. The request would lack sufficient information to allow the receiving banks to identify any relevant accounts or activity.

Thank you,

Polling Question #1

What industry are you from?

- 1) Bank, Credit Union, Financial Institution
- 2) Fintech
- 3) Money Service Business
- 4) Securities/Futures
- 5) Gaming
- 6) Regulator
- 7) Law Enforcement
- 8) Consultant

Why Does “Effectiveness” Matter?

- BSA program requirement but no agreement on program goals
- FinCEN proposed definition in September, similar to Wolfsberg 2019 proposal
 - Assesses and manages risk as informed by a financial institution’s own risk assessment process, including consideration of national AML priorities
 - Provides for compliance with BSA requirements
 - Provides highly useful information to government authorities
- How does this relate to SAR volumes?

Polling Question #2

How much have annual SAR filings increased since 2014 (thru 2022)?

- 1) 18%
- 2) 58%
- 3) 88%
- 4) 118%
- 5) 148%

The need to change how we file SAR's

- Increasing SAR numbers
- Increasing financial crime proceeds
- Limited success of law enforcement

SARs need to inform law enforcement, not just tick a box

- What does law enforcement need to know
 - 5WH (Who, What, Where, When, Why and How!)
- How do we as FIs get that information?
- What does law enforcement need our help with?
- A decision needs to be made, do law enforcement want to know everything or do they want intelligent SARs?

Annual SAR Filings Increased by 118% since 2014

What needs to happen to lead to better SAR's?

- Technology improvements
- Enhanced data
- Better understanding of customers
- Collective approach (information sharing)
 - Especially feedback from regulatory authorities and law enforcement
 - Super SARs
- Change in expectations and a reduction in 'defensive filing' – this should come with a better intelligence-led approach

Reducing Repeat Filings

- 314(b) requests
- Conducting additional research and analysis
- Obtaining rationale for activity
- Recommended corrective actions taken
- Link to broader business policy change
- Exiting relationship

Takeaways

- Could file less SARs and be just as, if not more, effective [REDACTED]
- Automation opportunities for less complex issues [REDACTED]
- Lean into a regime focused on outcomes, redeploy resources to higher risk/value activities [REDACTED]
- There needs to be greater collaboration between private and public sector for more effective and intelligent SARs ([REDACTED])
- Technology can play a key role in increasing SAR value by improving the SAR information quality ([REDACTED])
- Understand your institution's risk appetite – How to avoid over filing, while accepting you may be leaving SARs on the table [REDACTED]

The main content area includes an introductory paragraph, version and update information, a note about the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020, a photograph of a man in a suit, and a disclaimer box stating "ABA course content is not a substitute for professional legal advice." The footer contains copyright information, page number (Page 1 of 53), and navigation arrows.

Introduction

This course describes the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) requirements surrounding the filing of Suspicious Activity Reports (SARs) and why federal law limits sharing information about SARs. It covers the components of SAR monitoring and reporting systems and how to answer the essential questions that comprise the basis of SAR narratives.

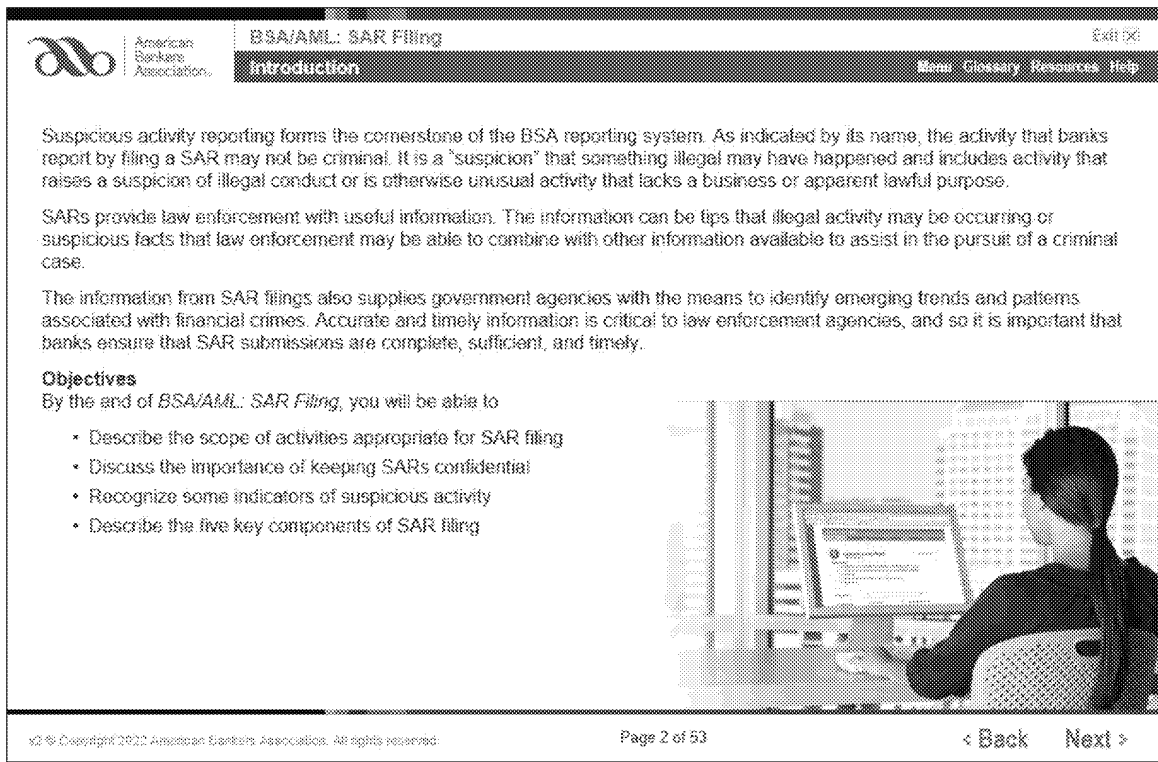

Version: 2.0

Update: July 2022. Added the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency's (OCC's) final rule on exemptions to SAR requirements.

Note: The Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 contains provisions to update and streamline SAR reporting. The Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) has not yet acted on these provisions.

Banks are required to report certain suspicious activities. Banks are also encouraged to report other possibly suspicious transactions that may be relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation. Suspicious transactions are those seemingly intended to launder money or finance terrorist activities or are connected to criminal activity. A suspicious transaction may also be one that apparently has no lawful purpose or is extremely unusual for a particular customer and has no reasonable explanation.

ABA course content is not a substitute for professional legal advice.

Suspicious activity reporting forms the cornerstone of the BSA reporting system. As indicated by its name, the activity that banks report by filing a SAR may not be criminal. It is a "suspicion" that something illegal may have happened and includes activity that raises a suspicion of illegal conduct or is otherwise unusual activity that lacks a business or apparent lawful purpose.

SARs provide law enforcement with useful information. The information can be tips that illegal activity may be occurring or suspicious facts that law enforcement may be able to combine with other information available to assist in the pursuit of a criminal case.

The information from SAR filings also supplies government agencies with the means to identify emerging trends and patterns associated with financial crimes. Accurate and timely information is critical to law enforcement agencies, and so it is important that banks ensure that SAR submissions are complete, sufficient, and timely.

Objectives
By the end of BSA/AML: SAR Filing, you will be able to

- Describe the scope of activities appropriate for SAR filing
- Discuss the importance of keeping SARs confidential
- Recognize some indicators of suspicious activity
- Describe the five key components of SAR filing

Money laundering

Banks are targets of money laundering efforts because they provide ready access to the payment system and afford potential cover due to the large volume of daily transactions occurring at any given bank. Because of the large volumes of daily transactions, individuals involved in money laundering may believe their laundering efforts will go undetected.

Federal investigators who try to stop money laundering find it a never-ending process. After they discover criminals' latest money laundering schemes, the criminals respond by creating even more inventive and complicated methods to launder money. These methods range from smuggling funds to the creation of intricate networks using wire transfers and shell companies.

Because the banking industry is also complicated and in a constant state of change, law enforcement officials and bankers face a huge challenge identifying and investigating money laundering. The process of tracking the money is tedious and lengthy because investigators are dealing with the continuous changes and complexities of new money laundering schemes.

Glossary term:

Shell companies

The term "shell company" generally refers to a business entity with no significant assets or ongoing business activities. Shell companies—formed for both legitimate and illicit purposes—typically have no physical presence other than a mailing address, have no employees, and have little to no independent economic value. Shell companies often can be used in money laundering operations.

Sidebar:

Bank filing

The decision to file a SAR is inherently subjective. Examiners focus on whether a bank has an effective SAR decision-making process, not individual SAR decisions. Regulatory examinations and third-party audit procedures may review individual SAR decisions as a means to test the effectiveness of the SAR monitoring, reporting, and decision-making process; however, in those instances where a bank has an established SAR decision-making process; has followed existing policies, procedures, and processes; and has determined not to file a SAR; it should not be criticized for the failure to file a SAR unless the failure is significant or accompanied by evidence of bad faith.

Page 5

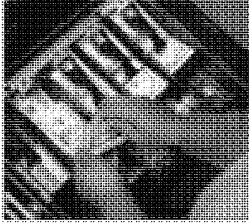

Insider abuse
As noted earlier, federal regulations require banks to file a completed SAR by sending the report to FinCEN when suspected illegal activity involves insider abuse of any amount.

The BSA does not define the term "insider abuse"; however, the term appears in SAR rules issued by federal financial regulators.

For SAR purposes, "insiders" can be directors, officers, employees, agents or other individuals affiliated with the bank who may have committed or aided in the commission of a criminal act.

Insiders are generally individuals who hold a position of trust in the bank or who are closely affiliated with it and who have, in general terms, breached their fiduciary duties, traded on inside information, usurped opportunities or profits, engaged in self-dealing, or otherwise used the bank for personal advantage. Banks must file a SAR whenever an insider is involved in a suspicious transaction, regardless of the amount.

Identified suspects

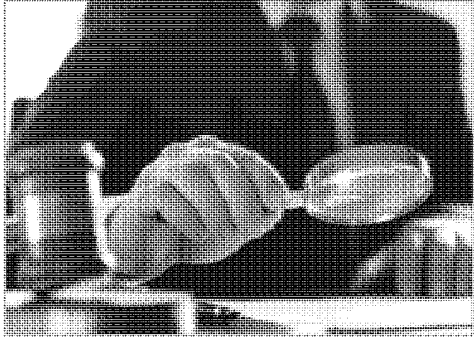

Federal regulations require banks to file a completed SAR by sending the report to FinCEN. Banks are required to file SARs when the dollar amount of the suspicious activity aggregates to $5,000 or more where a suspect can be identified. This threshold applies when the bank knows the suspect or is able to identify the suspect, even if that person is not a customer of the bank.

Unidentified suspects

Banks must file a SAR when the suspicious activity involves amounts of $25,000 or more regardless of potential suspects. This might happen in instances where transactors are noncustomers, when there are multiple transactions across the bank's branch network, or where the activity involves use of ATMs or night depositories.

It is recognized that with respect to instances of possible terrorism, identity theft, and computer intrusion, the dollar thresholds for filing may not always be met. Banks are encouraged to file nonetheless in appropriate situations involving these matters, based on the potential harm that such crimes can produce.

Even when the dollar thresholds of the SAR regulations are not met, banks have the discretion to file a SAR and are protected by the statute when doing so.

Identified suspects

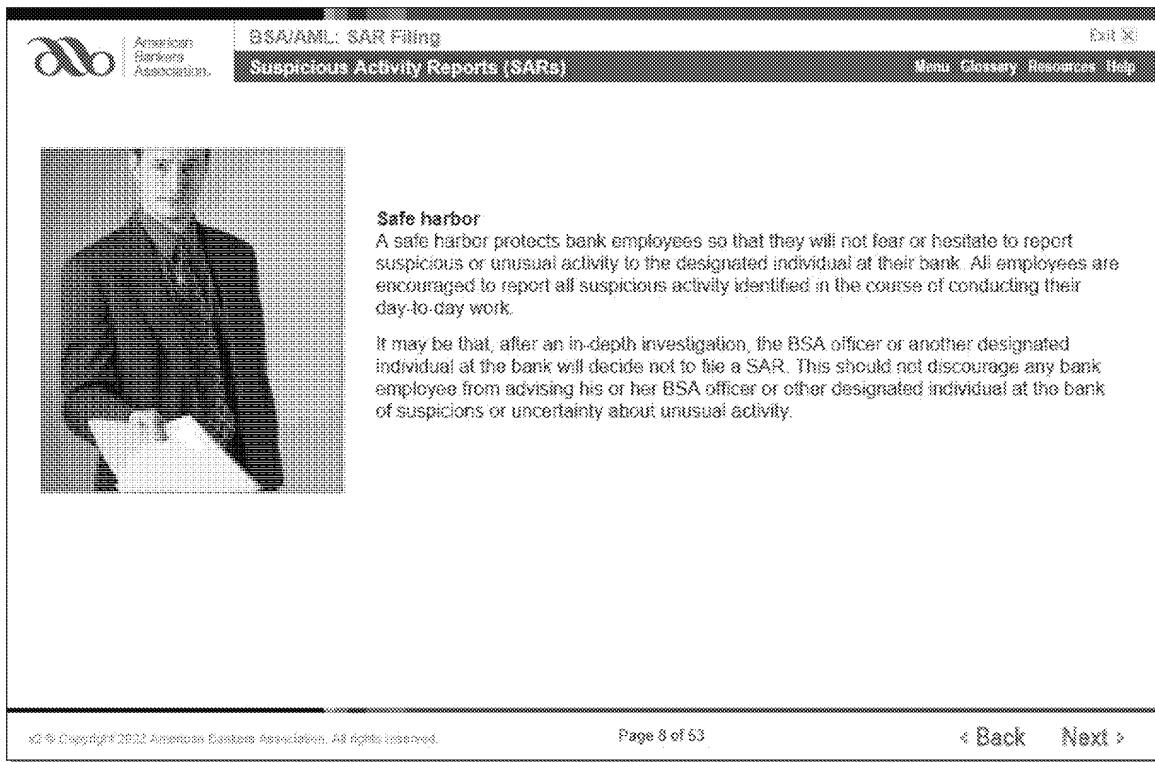

Federal regulations require banks to file a completed SAR by sending the report to FinCEN. Banks are required to file SARs when the dollar amount of the suspicious activity aggregates to $5,000 or more where a suspect can be identified. This threshold applies when the bank knows the suspect or is able to identify the suspect, even if that person is not a customer of the bank.

Unidentified suspects

Banks must file a SAR when the suspicious activity involves amounts of $25,000 or more regardless of potential suspects. This might happen in instances where transactors are noncustomers, when there are multiple transactions across the bank's branch network, or where the activity involves use of ATMs or night depositories.

It is recognized that with respect to instances of possible terrorism, identity theft, and computer intrusion, the dollar thresholds for filing may not always be met. Banks are encouraged to file nonetheless in appropriate situations involving these matters, based on the potential harm that such crimes can produce.

Even when the dollar thresholds of the SAR regulations are not met, banks have the discretion to file a SAR and are protected by the statute when doing so.

Safe harbor
 A safe harbor protects bank employees so that they will not fear or hesitate to report suspicious or unusual activity to the designated individual at their bank. All employees are encouraged to report all suspicious activity identified in the course of conducting their day-to-day work.

It may be that, after an in-depth investigation, the BSA officer or another designated individual at the bank will decide not to file a SAR. This should not discourage any bank employee from advising his or her BSA officer or other designated individual at the bank of suspicions or uncertainty about unusual activity.

Suspicious Activity Reports (SARs)

Persons involved in money laundering or other types of financial crime are often aware of the reporting requirements of the BSA and will try to get around the law whenever possible. It is critical, therefore, for bank employees to know their customers and the type of transactions they normally conduct.

In addition to the required SAR reporting thresholds, a bank can file a SAR anytime regardless of the dollar amount if the bank feels law enforcement could benefit from the information. Any transactions that seem out of place or unusual and cannot be reasonably explained with a legitimate business reason should be reported according to bank policy.

Aside from unexplained suspicious activity that may indicate money laundering, human trafficking or smuggling, or even terrorist financing, the SAR process is also intended to detect and report activity that constitutes more direct types of financial crimes such as credit card fraud, identity theft, check kiting, and insider abuse—just to name a few.

Exemptions to SAR requirements

In May 2022, the OCC issued a final rule that modifies requirements for national banks and federal savings associations, including federal branches and agencies of foreign banks licensed or chartered by the OCC, to file suspicious activity reports (SARs). The change will let the OCC issue exemptions from SAR requirements on request from a financial institution. It is unknown at this time how many or what type of exemptions might be requested or ultimately granted.

Under the final rule, an OCC-supervised institution applying for an exemption from the requirements of the OCC's SAR regulations will submit a written request to the OCC (and if necessary, FinCEN). Upon receiving this written request, the OCC will consider the request and provide a written response. The OCC may notify the other federal banking agencies or FinCEN and consider their comments before granting any exemption. And, if an application is approved, the OCC might grant the exemption for a specific time period.

In late 2020 and early 2021, the other bank regulatory agencies issued proposals that will amend their SAR regulations. These proposals are not yet final, but this course will be updated once they become final.

The screenshot shows the 'BSA/AML: SAR Filing' page with a sub-header 'SAR Confidentiality'. The main text explains that SAR information is unproven suspicion and federal law limits sharing. It states the general rule: no bank employee should notify anyone involved in the transaction. It also notes that banks must maintain confidentiality of SARs. Below the text is a 'Suspicious Activity Report' form with a large 'CONFIDENTIAL' stamp. The form includes instructions: '1. Complete the report in entirety with all required data known to the filer.', '2. Click "Submit" to save the report permanently and that all required fields are completed.', and '3. Sign with PIN:'. The footer of the screenshot includes '© 7/2022 American Bankers Association. All rights reserved.', 'Page 12 of 53', and '< Back Next >'.

SAR Confidentiality

Because the information in a SAR is only an unproven suspicion and to encourage banks to share information about possible criminal or terrorist activity with law enforcement, federal law strictly limits the ability to share information about a SAR or the SAR itself.

The general rule: No bank, director, officer, employee, or agent of a bank that reports a suspicious transaction may notify any person involved in the transaction that the bank has reported a transaction. In addition, other bank employees should only be informed on a "need-to-know" basis.

Banks must be vigilant in maintaining the confidentiality of SARs. This includes ensuring that the bank informs all employees, agents, and individuals appropriately entrusted with information in a SAR that each person has an individual obligation to maintain SAR confidentiality. This obligation applies not only to the SAR itself, but also to information that would reveal the existence (or nonexistence) of the SAR. Likewise, the bank should inform such persons of the consequences for failing to maintain such confidentiality.

BSA/AML: SAR Filing
SAR Confidentiality

The unauthorized disclosure of a SAR is a violation of federal law. Bank regulators may impose both civil and criminal penalties for SAR disclosure violations. Regulators may enforce violations through civil penalties of up to $100,000 for each violation and criminal penalties of up to $250,000 and/or imprisonment not to exceed 5 years.

In addition, banks could be liable for civil money penalties resulting from anti-money laundering program deficiencies (i.e., internal controls, training, etc.) that led to the SAR disclosure. Such penalties could be up to $25,000 per day for each day the violation continues. Incidents involving possible unauthorized SAR disclosures are investigated, and appropriate action is taken for violations of the law.

If a bank employee receives a subpoena or a request to disclose a SAR or information contained in a SAR, the bank employee must decline to produce the SAR and decline to provide any information that would disclose that the bank has prepared or filed a SAR. The BSA officer must notify FinCEN and the bank's primary banking regulator about the request.

Bank employees should NEVER discuss a SAR with customers or even inform them that they are filing the report. This is different from the rules on Currency Transaction Reports (CTRs), which bank employees may discuss with customers if the bank allows its employees to have such discussions.

Glossary term:

Currency Transaction Report (CTR)

A CTR is a bank form used in the United States to help prevent money laundering. This form must be filled out by a bank representative whenever a customer attempts a currency transaction of more than $10,000 cash in any 1 business day.

Exceptions

There are times, though, when it is appropriate to share a SAR or information about a SAR filing, but such instances are extremely limited, and the bank must handle each request carefully. If there are any questions, bank employees should contact their bank's BSA officer.

A bank may share SAR information with the following entities:

- FinCEN or any federal, state, or local law enforcement
- Any federal or state regulatory authority that examines the bank for compliance with the BSA.
- Another financial institution (for the preparation of a joint SAR or in connection with certain employment references or termination notices, as authorized by the BSA)
- Head offices and affiliates and certain permissible entities within the bank's corporate organizational structure for purposes consistent with Title II of the BSA. Institutions may share SARs with the head offices, companies under common control, and controlling companies, whether in the United States or abroad. This promotes compliance with the applicable requirements of the BSA by enabling the head office or controlling company to discharge its oversight responsibilities with respect to enterprise-wide risk management, including oversight of a bank's compliance with applicable laws and regulations.

A controlling company is defined as the following:

- A bank holding company
- A savings and loan holding company
- A company having the power, directly or indirectly, to direct management policies of an industrial loan company or a parent company or to vote 25 percent or more of any class of voting shares of an industrial loan company

- Any federal or state regulatory authority that examines the bank for compliance with the BSA
- Another financial institution (for the preparation of a joint SAR or in connection with certain employment references or termination notices, as authorized by the BSA)

Generally, effective suspicious activity monitoring and reporting systems include five key components. These components are interdependent and an effective suspicious activity monitoring and reporting process should include successful implementation of each component. Breakdowns in any one or more of these components may adversely affect SAR reporting and BSA compliance.

The five components of an effective SAR monitoring and reporting system include the following:

1. Identifying the suspicious activity
2. Managing alerts
3. Decision-making
4. Completion and filing
5. Monitoring and SAR filing on continuing activity

Suspicious activity monitoring and reporting are critical internal controls since proper monitoring and reporting processes are essential to ensure that the bank has an adequate and effective BSA compliance program.

The bank should have appropriate policies, procedures, and processes to monitor and identify unusual activity. The bank's risk profile will determine the sophistication of monitoring systems. These systems should pay particular attention to products, services, customers, entities, and geographies that present greater risk for money laundering, terrorist financing, or other financial crimes.

The bank should ensure that it assigns adequate staff to identify, research, and report suspicious activities. In making these determinations, management will take into account the bank's overall risk profile and the volume of transactions. Monitoring systems typically include employee identification or referrals, transaction-based (manual) systems, surveillance (automated) systems, or any combination of these.

Banks must report suspicious activity that may involve money laundering, BSA violations, terrorist financing, and other crimes that exceed the regulatory dollar thresholds. While banks are required to report suspicious activity, banks are not required to confirm the underlying crime. Investigation is the responsibility of law enforcement.

However, when evaluating suspicious activity and filing a SAR, it helps law enforcement when a bank identifies the specific characteristics of the suspicious activity that gave rise to the SAR filing. This is one reason that banks assign the responsibility to one person or division to make the decision. However, when evaluating suspicious activity and completing the SAR, banks are expected, to the best of their ability, to identify the characteristics of the suspicious activity.

Unusual activity identification can result from the following sources:

- Employee identification
- Law enforcement requests (including National Security Letters)
- Transaction monitoring
- Surveillance monitoring

Employee identification
Employee identification includes suspicious activities that are identified by employees during day-to-day operations. Therefore, employees need methods they can use to report suspicious activity to the appropriate personnel within the bank, such as a worksheet, email, or phone. Some banks ask employees to report to supervisory staff, while others provide a central point of contact.

It is hard to say what suspicious activity looks like. Suspicious activity will appear differently based on what role a particular employee holds at the bank and how employees interact with customers. For example, a teller might identify certain activity as being suspicious that a lender may never see, such as the structuring of deposits to avoid CTR reporting.

The opposite is also true since a lender will be able to identify suspicious activity that a teller would not see, such as fraudulent information on loan applications. This is one of the reasons that it is important not only for banks to know their customers, but also to ensure that all bank employees are trained to recognize suspicious activity when it occurs.

Employee identification—tellers and customer service representatives (CSRs)
 A typical example of a suspicious transaction for a teller would occur when a customer begins to conduct a currency transaction that exceeds $10,000 but then reduces the amount of the transaction to below $10,000 when told that the bank must complete a CTR for large cash transactions. Variations of this situation, referred to as structuring, are perhaps the most frequently cited examples of suspicious transactions that occur in banks.

Suspicious activity examples

- Corporate accounts where deposits or withdrawals are primarily in cash rather than checks
- Small businesses that frequently make cash deposits consisting of $50 bills and/or $100 bills
- Single-location businesses that make deposits at several branches of a bank
- Customers who frequently visit their safe deposit boxes before making cash deposits and then make cash deposits that are always less than the reportable dollar amount
- Deposits of sequentially numbered cashier's checks or money orders
- Large amounts of cash deposited that are wrapped with the currency straps from another bank
- Customers who insist on being added to the bank's CTR exemption list
- Customers who make numerous, separate deposits at ATMs below the reportable dollar amount
- Customers who are reluctant to provide personal information or information about their businesses
- Customers who have no record of past or present employment but make frequent large transactions
- Customers whose activity is inconsistent with their business
- Accounts receiving multiple ACH payroll deposits for individuals not on the account (may indicate human trafficking)

» Click the image of Krystal Ballentine to see a suspicious activity scenario.

Example

Krystal Ballentine, a customer of First National Bank, brought $27,000 in cash to deposit to her checking account. When the teller told Krystal that the bank would need to complete a CTR, Krystal took back the money and left the bank. (Note that refusing to complete a transaction is suspicious and may be sufficient reason to file a SAR). The next day, there were three separate cash deposits into Krystal's checking account of $9,000 each, apparently to avoid the CTR filing. Besides splitting the deposit into smaller amounts, a step known as structuring, Krystal's son and nephew made two of the deposits at different First National Bank branches.

In this example, the bank would still need to aggregate (add together) the transactions conducted in 1 business day and file a CTR, but the attempt to structure the transactions could also require the bank to file a SAR.

Glossary term:

Structuring transactions

A person structures a transaction if that person conducts or attempts to conduct one or more transactions in currency in any amount, at one or more banks, on 1 or more days, in any manner, for the purpose of evading the CTR filing requirements. "In any manner" includes, but is not limited to, breaking down a single currency sum exceeding $10,000 into smaller amounts and conducting a series of transactions at or less than $10,000. The transactions need not exceed the $10,000 CTR filing threshold at any one bank on any single day in order to constitute structuring. The ABA Frontline Compliance course, BSA/AML: Fundamentals, covers structuring in greater detail.

Employee identification—lenders

Suspicious activity detection and monitoring at banks should be an enterprise-wide process that considers the entire customer relationship. While a bank may have a sound process to identify and monitor potentially suspicious activities in deposit account products, formal processes may not exist for the bank's loan accounts. Monitoring a customer's entire relationship can give bankers greater perspective on the legitimacy and legality of a customer's business and transactions, especially when it comes to the lending function.

Bank employees involved in the lending function will encounter numerous suspicious situations.

Example

Larry Springer, the local TV weatherman and a customer of First National Bank, has applied for a loan. He has never married, preferring to devote himself entirely to predicting the weather. Mr. Springer tells the loan officer that he is in danger of being replaced at WJRK TV by Jerry Strum, a local celebrity tornado chaser, but Larry thinks if he can upgrade his education and become certified in weather forecasting, he can hold on to his job. Larry will use the funds to obtain a certification from the American Meteorological Society.

When the bank's loan officer reviews Larry's financials, it does not appear that Larry's income supports the amount he wants to borrow. Larry also exhibits a lavish lifestyle that is not supported by the income from his job. Larry has offered several recently purchased certificates of deposit (CDs) as collateral for the loan, but the source of the funds in those CDs is unclear and appears to have come from multiple negotiable instruments deposited to Larry's account by unknown persons.

Due diligence is required during the loan application and underwriting process through customer identification program (CIP) and loan documentation requirements. However, the level of customer due diligence (CDD) performed for guarantors, signatories, principals, and other loan participants can vary, in part due to the fact that the bank may not require CIP compliance for some of these individuals.

One of the most important controls to address this aspect of compliance is the bank's BSA/AML training program. The bank's training program should provide for role-specific training and educate bank personnel on the types of activity that deemed loan processors might view as suspicious in their particular area of the bank.

The objective of CDD should be to help the bank predict, with relative certainty, the types of transactions that will be typical for a particular customer. These processes also should help the bank determine when transactions are potentially suspicious.

While banks typically consider loans secured by cash collateral and/or marketable securities as lower risk credit, criminals can easily use such collateral to hide illegal monies or obscure the purpose of funds. This is not the only way criminals use such loans to launder money, but this is one of the most common methods. The fact is, criminals can use any loan to launder money, but understanding the red flags and educating personnel on how to evaluate and monitor loan customers can help to identify possible suspicious activity.

Due diligence is required during the loan application and underwriting process through customer identification program (CIP) and loan documentation requirements. However, the level of customer due diligence (CDD) performed for guarantors, signatories, principals, and other loan participants can vary, in part due to the fact that the bank may not require CIP compliance for some of these individuals.

One of the most important controls to address this aspect of compliance is the bank's BSA/AML training program. The bank's training program should provide for role-specific training and educate bank personnel on the types of activity that deemed loan processors might view as suspicious in their particular area of the bank.

The objective of CDD should be to help the bank predict, with relative certainty, the types of transactions that will be typical for a particular customer. These processes also should help the bank determine when transactions are potentially suspicious.

» Click the image to see examples of unusual activities lenders might see that may warrant follow-up consideration.

Unusual activity examples

- A customer presents documents that cannot be readily identified or verified
- A customer provides both an Individual Taxpayer Identification Number (ITIN) and a Social Security number (SSN)
- A customer's home or business phone is disconnected for no apparent reason
- A customer is a trust, shell company, or private investment company that is reluctant to provide information on controlling parties or underlying beneficiaries
- A customer does business in high-risk locations
- A customer offers bribes to the loan officer for overlooking certain discrepancies
- A customer provides false or conflicting identification

While banks typically consider loans secured by cash collateral and/or marketable securities as lower risk credit, criminals can easily use such collateral to hide illegal monies or obscure the purpose of funds. This is not the only way criminals use such loans to launder money, but this is one of the most common methods. The fact is, criminals can use any loan to launder money, but understanding the red flags and educating personnel on how to evaluate and monitor loan customers can help to identify possible suspicious activity.

Employee identification—mortgage lenders

Depository institutions have seen a large increase in mortgage loan fraud. According to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), mortgage fraud continues to be an escalating problem in the United States. The FBI also reports that many borrowers across the United States are still struggling with their mortgages, which creates an ideal climate for mortgage fraud perpetrators to employ a variety of schemes. Emerging and reemerging schemes include loan modification scams, foreclosure rescue, and identity theft exploiting home equity lines of credit.

In recent years, federal and state law enforcement and regulatory agencies have devoted considerable effort to the prevention, investigation, and prosecution of mortgage loan fraud. One of the ways law enforcement becomes aware of mortgage fraud is through the analysis of SARs filed by banks. These SARs provide valuable intelligence in mortgage fraud trends and can lead to the initiation of mortgage fraud cases as well as the enhancement of law enforcement investigations.

Common types of mortgage fraud

According to FinCEN, the following are common types of mortgage fraud:

Income fraud: Includes both overstating income to qualify for larger mortgages and understating income to qualify for hardship concessions and modifications

Appraisal fraud: Includes both overstating home value to obtain more money from a sale of property or cash-out refinancing and understating home value in connection with a plan to purchase a property at a discount

Liability fraud: Occurs when borrowers fail to list significant financial liabilities, such as other mortgages, car loans, or student loans, on mortgage loan applications. Without complete liability information, lenders cannot accurately assess borrowers' ability to repay debts

Foreclosure rescue scams: Target financially distressed homeowners with fraudulent offers of services or advice aimed at stopping or delaying the foreclosure process. Some of these scams require homeowners to transfer the title—or make monthly mortgage payments—to the purported "rescuer," rather than the real holder of the mortgage. Some foreclosure rescue scams require homeowners to pay fees before receiving "services" and are known as "advance fee" schemes

SSN fraud and other identify theft: Include the use of an SSN or other government identification card or number that belongs to someone other than the applicant in a loan application. Identity theft includes broader use of another's identity or identifiers (beyond an SSN) to obtain a mortgage or perpetrate a "fraud for profit" scheme

Red flags for mortgage loan fraud

- Inflated appraisals
- Bonuses to brokers or fee-based providers paid outside of closing or at closing
- Higher fees than customary for the local market
- Falsification of income, deposits, rents, etc.
- Falsification of identity documents—ITINs and SSNs for the same person
- Fake supporting documentation
- Requesting documents be signed in blank
- Purchase loans disguised as refinancing with cash-outs
- Investment opportunities and guarantees
- Terms too good to be true
- Employing high-pressure tactics
- Unexplained excessive fees/costs
- Requiring "prepayment" of certain disallowed fees

Identifying suspicious activity—all bank employees

The use of legitimate funding sources for terrorist objectives is a form of financial crime that often defies detection. One key difference between terrorists and traditional criminal organizations is that terrorist organizations often use funds from legitimate sources to support their objectives.

Ideological and political goals generally motivate terrorists, unlike other criminals who are motivated by profit. For the terrorist, money is a means to an end, while for other criminals, the money is an end in itself. Therefore, terrorists may use funds that come from legitimate sources, while money launderers have funds from illegitimate sources that they are trying to make appear legitimate.

In addition to using funds from legitimate sources, terrorists often engage in illegal activity, like kidnapping or human trafficking, to earn money to support their terrorist goals. Other funding sources for terrorists can include extortion, narcotics trafficking, smuggling, fraud, identity theft, and improper use of charitable donations.

However, the fact that terrorists often rely on legitimate funds can make it extremely difficult to distinguish a transaction that supports terrorist activities from normal bank transactions; for example, the 9/11 hijackers withdrew funds from ATMs that were no different from withdrawals by any other consumer.

Accounts

- Accounts that receive periodic deposits but then stay dormant. These accounts can be used to create others that appear legitimate through which additional fraudulent activities may be carried out
- A dormant account with a minimal sum that suddenly receives a deposit or series of deposits followed by daily cash withdrawals that continue until the deposited sum has been removed
- When opening an account, a customer who refuses to provide information, attempts to reduce the level of information provided, or provides information that is misleading or difficult to verify
- An account for which several persons who are unrelated or have no apparent connection have signature authority
- An account opened for a legal entity or organization using the same address as other legal entities or organizations, where the same person or persons have signature authority, but there is no apparent economic or legal reason for such an arrangement
- An account opened in the name of a recently formed legal entity where a higher-than-expected level of deposits are made in comparison with the income of the founders of the entity

Funds transfers

- A large number of incoming or outgoing funds transfers through a business account without any logical business or other economic purpose for the transfers. This is especially true when the activity involves higher-risk locations
- Funds transfers that do not include information on the originator or the person on whose behalf the transaction is conducted when the inclusion of such information would be expected

- Foreign exchange transactions for a customer that are conducted by a third party followed by funds transfers to locations that either have no apparent business connection with the customer or that are higher-risk countries

Deposits and withdrawals

- Large cash withdrawals from a business account not normally associated with cash transactions
- Large cash deposits to the account of an individual or legal entity when the apparent business activity of the individual or entity would normally be conducted by check
- Multiple transactions on the same day at the same branch of a bank with an apparent attempt to use different tellers
- Structuring of deposits through multiple branches of the same bank or by groups of individuals who enter a single branch at the same time
- Deposit or withdrawal of cash in amounts that fall consistently just below identification or reporting thresholds
- Deposit of multiple monetary instruments at amounts that fall consistently just below identification or reporting thresholds, particularly if the instruments are sequentially numbered

Characteristics of the customer and/or the customer's business activity

- Shared address for individuals involved in cash transactions, particularly when the address is also a business location and/or does not seem to correspond to the stated occupation (for example student, unemployed, self-employed, etc.)
- Stated occupation of an account holder or transactor that is not consistent with the level or type of activity in the account or transaction—for example, a student or unemployed individual who receives or sends large numbers of wire transfers or who makes daily maximum cash withdrawals at multiple locations over a wide geographic area
- Financial transactions by or for nonprofit or charitable organizations with no logical economic purpose or where there is no link between the stated activity of the organization and the parties in the transaction
- A safe deposit box opened on behalf of a commercial entity when the business activity of the customer does not appear to justify the use of a safe deposit box

Situation 1

Background

Betty A. Warren, a teller at the Last Bank of the South, notices an increase in cash withdrawal activity from an account owned by Misty Smith, a contract law attorney. These large cash withdrawals, just under the $10,000 reporting threshold for CTR filing, appear to follow the deposit of sequentially numbered money orders and cashier's checks. This activity seems very unusual for a contract law attorney, and Misty has not transacted business in this way in the past.

Betty has a long line of customers waiting. Because Misty is an established customer, and because Betty is in such a hurry to get to the other customers, Betty makes the decision to overlook reporting Misty's transactions to management.

What would you have done if you were Betty?

» Type your answers in the field. When finished, click the Suggested Results button to view possible responses.

Suggested Results

Betty should not have ignored the activity. Betty could be missing a very important opportunity to protect the bank, and failure to report the activity could cause law enforcement to accuse Betty of "willful blindness." Willful blindness is a deliberate failure to make a reasonable inquiry of wrongdoing despite suspicion or an awareness of the high probability of its existence. Willful blindness involves conscious avoidance of the truth and gives rise to an inference of knowledge of the crime in question.

Although there may be a very logical and legal reason for the unusual activity, Betty is in no position to know that. Betty does not have to refuse to conduct Misty's transactions, nor close her line down and ignore other customers. However, Betty should report the activity to the bank's BSA officer or person responsible for filing SARs. If, after investigating the activity, the bank may decide not to file a SAR, but that is a decision that the appropriate person at the bank should make.

Situation 2

Background
 Helen Wailing is a loan officer at the Third National Bank. Kathy Morgan applies for a loan to purchase a pickup truck. When Helen obtains Kathy's credit report, it contains an identity theft alert and an address discrepancy alert. Kathy says she placed the alert because someone hacked the database of the university she attended, and the faculty advisor recommended that all students place such an alert. She changed her address because she was being harassed by another student and had to move into an apartment, but the credit report still shows the house as her primary residence.

Things have been slow in the auto-lending department lately, and Helen has had a hard time meeting her goals. Helen feels that she can rely on her 40 years of experience as a loan officer and believes that the explanations that Kathy has provided for the alert and the address discrepancy all sound reasonable.

Helen should not have ignored the obvious suspicious issues with this loan. Although Kathy may be telling the truth, Helen is in no position to make a loan knowing that the information given is potentially fraudulent or may have resulted from identity theft. Therefore, she needs to investigate further before a decision can be made.

- D) Bill brings a platter of sandwiches for the tellers

B and C are correct.

A is incorrect because the fact that he comes to the bank in the afternoon could just indicate that he does his banking after the lunch rush. D is incorrect because a friendly gesture does not necessarily indicate suspicious activity.

A, B, and C are correct.

D is incorrect because individuals wishing to conduct illegal activity will take deposits to different branch locations, hoping the bank will not have the ability to aggregate all of the activity if it is done in different locations.

Law enforcement inquiries and requests
The following examples of law enforcement requests are another way banks may be alerted to potential suspicious activity:

- Grand jury subpoenas
- National Security Letters (NSLs)
- 314(a) requests

Each bank should establish policies and procedures for the following tasks:

- Identifying the subject of the request
- Monitoring the subject's transaction activity, if appropriate
- Identifying potentially suspicious activity, and as appropriate, filing a SAR

It is important to understand that a grand jury subpoena, an NSL, or a 314(a) request alone does not mean that something is suspicious. Law enforcement or the grand jury may be seeking information for an investigation that is not directly related to the bank's own customer. However, it may be a reason to investigate further.

Due to the confidentiality of grand jury proceedings, if a bank files a SAR after receiving a grand jury subpoena, law enforcement discourages banks from including any reference to the receipt or existence of the grand jury subpoena in the SAR. Instead, the SAR should reference only the facts and circumstances that supported the finding of suspicious activity.

Glossary terms:

National Security Letters (NSLs)

NSLs are written investigative demands that may be issued by local FBI and other federal governmental authorities in counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations to obtain records from financial institutions. These are highly confidential and must be handled following all appropriate procedures.

314(a) requests

A 314(a) request is an information-sharing procedure authorized by Section 314(a) of the USA PATRIOT Act. Section 314(a) authorizes a federal, state, local, or foreign law enforcement agency investigating terrorism or money laundering to request that FinCEN solicit, on its behalf, certain information from banks and other financial institutions about an individual, entity, or organization about which the law enforcement entity is seeking information.

NSLs are also highly confidential, so no bank or officer, employee, or agent of the institution can disclose to any person that a government agency has sought or obtained access to records through an NSL.

There are two processes that help the bank identify suspicious activity: transaction monitoring and surveillance monitoring. Depending on the size and risk profile of your bank, it may use one or both of these systems.

Transaction monitoring
Transaction monitoring is a process used by banks for reviewing types of transactions for potentially suspicious activities. It can be manual, but increasingly, banks are taking advantage of software programs to handle the monitoring. When a software system performs the monitoring, the bank must review the reports generated by the system that identifies potentially suspicious activity.

The following reports are examples of those used in monitoring:

- Cash, Wire, or Monetary Instrument Sales reports
- Significant Balance Change reports
- Nonsufficient Funds (NSF) reports
- Structured Transaction reports

Identifying the Suspicious Activity

» Roll over the reports below to see some of the information generated by transaction monitoring reports.

Currency activity reports

Banks use currency activity reports to help ensure that CTRs are filed and to identify suspicious cash activity. These reports include the following information:

- Cash transactions, either deposits or withdrawals, aggregating $10,000 or more and, therefore, requiring a CTR
- Cash transactions (either single or multiple transactions) that are below the $10,000 reporting threshold (e.g., between $7,000 and $10,000)
- Cash involving multiple lower transactions (e.g., $3,000) that over a period of time aggregate to a substantial sum
- Cash aggregated by a tax identification number, customer information file number, or other identifier such as an address or a telephone number

Funds transfer records

Wire transfer reviews can also help the bank identify patterns of unusual activity. The bank will determine the frequency of these reviews based on the bank's risk profile and the volume of activity. Reports may focus on identifying higher-risk geographic locations and larger dollar funds transfer transactions.

When creating these reports, whether manually or using software, filters are set to identify transactions for review. For example, the report may identify groups of noncustomer transactions or payable upon proper identification (PUPID) transactions. Banks should subject such activities to additional research to ensure the activity is consistent with the stated account purpose and expected activity. When the bank identifies inconsistencies, it may need to investigate further to determine if a SAR is warranted.

Monetary instrument records

Banks must maintain records of transactions in certain monetary instruments (this is covered in greater detail in the Frontline course, BSA/AML: Recordkeeping). These records can help identify possible cash structuring through purchases of cashier's checks, official bank checks, money orders, gift cards, or traveler's checks.

The review for suspicious activity should encompass activity for an extended period of time (30, 60, 90 days) to identify the following patterns:

- Common payees
- Common purchasers
- Consecutively numbered monetary instruments

Note: It is important to remember that a single unusual transaction alone may not be suspicious. It is important, though, that your BSA officer is aware of the transaction so he or she can take appropriate steps in compliance with the BSA and the bank's policies and procedures.

When the bank identifies unusual activity, the bank's BSA officer or risk officer will evaluate all relevant information to determine whether the activity is suspicious.

Surveillance monitoring is an automated type of transaction monitoring that may combine multiple types of transactions and is likely to use various rules to identify individual transactions, patterns of activity, or deviations from expected activity.

The programs may be off-the-shelf or developed and customized in-house, but they are designed to capture a wide range of account activity, such as cash activity, funds transfers, automated clearing house (ACH) transfers, and ATM transactions and include rule-based and intelligent systems to detect unusual or higher-risk transactions.

Surveillance monitoring is generally more sophisticated than transaction monitoring since transaction monitoring is only based on a single rule (e.g., a transaction greater than $10,000). Surveillance monitoring, though, applies multiple overlapping rules and filters or "alerts" that are more complex to identify potentially suspicious transactions.

The parameters and filters used in such systems must be reasonable and tailored to activity that the bank is trying to identify or control. When installing such a system, bank management will review the system prior to implementation to identify any unaddressed gaps (common money laundering techniques or frauds).

Example
The bank may have set its filters for cash structuring to only be triggered by a daily cash transaction aggregation in excess of $10,000 (CTR threshold). The bank may need to refine the filters to avoid missing potentially suspicious activity because common cash structuring techniques often involve transactions slightly under the CTR threshold or ones conducted over several days.

Note
When a bank uses an automated system, regulators will ask the bank to validate two elements. First, the bank must validate that the system itself is properly constructed and works in conjunction with the bank's risk profile. Second, the bank should periodically check the filter settings to make sure they are working properly and capture the appropriate transactions for review and investigation.

When installing such a system, bank management will review the system prior to implementation to identify any unaddressed gaps (common money laundering techniques or frauds).

Example

The bank may have set its filters for cash structuring to only be triggered by a daily cash transaction aggregation in excess of $10,000 (CTR threshold). The bank may need to refine the filters to avoid missing potentially suspicious activity because common cash structuring techniques often involve transactions slightly under the CTR threshold or ones conducted over several days.

Note: When a bank uses an automated system, regulators will ask the bank to validate two elements. First, the bank must validate that the system itself is properly constructed and works in conjunction with the bank's risk profile. Second, the bank should periodically check the filter settings to make sure they are working properly and capture the appropriate transactions for review and investigation.

» Select the correct answer and click Submit.

- A) Currency activity reports
- B) Funds transfer records
- C) Monetary instrument records
- D) Overdraft reports

C is correct.

A is incorrect because these reports are used to help the bank file CTRs and identify suspicious cash activity. B is incorrect because these reports are used to help the bank identify patterns of unusual activity. D is incorrect because overdraft reports are not a type of transaction monitoring report.

Identifying the Suspicious Activity

Question: Which type of monitoring system is generally more sophisticated: surveillance monitoring or transaction monitoring?

Answer: Surveillance monitoring is generally more sophisticated than transaction monitoring since transaction monitoring is only based on a single rule (e.g., a transaction greater than $10,000). Surveillance monitoring, though, applies multiple, overlapping rules and filters or "alerts" that are more complex to identify potentially suspicious transactions.

Typically, in managing alerts, the bank will take the following steps:

- Have policies and procedures in place for referring unusual activity from all areas of the bank or business lines to the personnel responsible for evaluation and reporting
- Establish clear and defined escalation processes from the point of initial detection to the conclusion of the investigation
- Assign adequate staff to identify, evaluate, and report potentially suspicious activities

The bank should assign adequate staff to the identification, evaluation, and reporting of potentially suspicious activities, taking into account the bank's overall risk profile and the volume of transactions.

Additionally, a bank should ensure that the assigned staff are experienced and provided with comprehensive and ongoing training to maintain their expertise. The bank should provide staff with sufficient internal and external tools to allow them to properly research activities and formulate conclusions.

After thorough research and analysis, investigators should document conclusions, including any recommendation regarding whether or not to file a SAR. When multiple departments are responsible for researching unusual activities (for example, when the bank's BSA department researches BSA-related activity and the bank's fraud department researches fraud-related activity), the lines of communication between the departments must remain open. This ensures that the bank identifies, evaluates, and reports all suspicious activity.

The decision-making part of the process is the final determination regarding whether to report a transaction or activity by filing a SAR. After thorough research and analysis, staff must forward all the findings to the final decision-maker, which may be an individual or a committee. Therefore, the bank should have policies and procedures for referring unusual activity from all business lines to the responsible personnel. Those procedures should include a clear and defined escalation process from the point of initial detection to the conclusion of the investigation that will explain what to do when the system or an employee identifies an unusual transaction.

Decision-makers should have the authority to make the final SAR filing decision. If a committee makes the final decision, the committee should have a clearly defined process to resolve differences of opinion on filing decisions.

Decision-making often requires inherently subjective judgment, so the decision-maker(s) should document SAR decisions, including the specific reason for filing or not filing a SAR. This is especially important since each decision to file is based on a unique set of facts and circumstances.

Employees who refer possible suspicious activity to the bank officer designated to investigate such activity may never know if the bank filed a SAR, and that is how it should be. SAR filing is highly confidential, and no one should discuss a SAR filing with any employee who does not have a "need to know."

Because auditors and examiners will review individual decisions in connection with an evaluation of the process, documenting the decision is also important.

2. Escalate to the responsible personnel

Completing the SAR
Banks must electronically file all BSA-required reports, including SARs, with the FinCEN BSA E-Filing System. Banks should provide the most complete filing information available regardless of whether or not the individual fields are critical (required) for technical filing purposes.

Although the bank must complete the basic information fields on a SAR, the SAR contains an area known as the SAR Narrative. This part of the SAR tells the story so that law enforcement can understand what led the bank to believe the activity was suspicious. Law enforcement agencies rely on this information to assist in money laundering, terrorist financing, and financial crimes investigations. The SAR Narrative should include enough information to clearly explain who was involved, what took place, when and where the activity happened, and why the bank believes the transaction was suspicious.

Remember, when completing the SAR Narrative, the law enforcement representatives who read the SAR will not be familiar with bank-specific product names or banking buzzwords. When completing the SAR, or providing a written explanation of the activity, ensure that any novel or proprietary terms are described in detail so they are well-defined.

SAR Narrative information

Filers may attach a small file and must describe the contents of that file in the SAR Narrative. Filers may not include any other supporting documentation with the FinCEN SAR. Instead, they should use the SAR Narrative to describe the other supporting documentation not included in the file. This supporting documentation, such as copies of instruments; receipts; sale, transaction, or clearing records; photographs; and surveillance (audio or video recordings) must be made available to appropriate authorities upon request.

Filers must retain all supporting documentation or a business record equivalent for 5 years from the date of the report. Banks may also submit an Excel spreadsheet with detailed information about specific transactions and funds transfers or other analytics. The new addition also states these Excel spreadsheets are considered part of the narrative but do not take the place of the narrative ("narratives should not simply state 'see attachment'"). Finally, as part of the SAR filing, banks should treat any supplemental material filed on an Excel spreadsheet with the SAR as confidential.

» Roll over each button to see examples of questions that each bank employee should consider when determining the necessary information for reporting possible suspicious activity to the appropriate person at the bank. This information provides the basis for the SAR Narrative.

Who is conducting the activity? This includes names of businesses or individuals as well as other relevant facts about those individuals, which are all important pieces of the information provided on a SAR. These may include the following facts:

- Employer and occupation information
- Relationship between the suspect and the bank
- Length of the financial relationship between the subject and the bank

What instruments or mechanisms did the suspected criminal use in the suspicious transactions? Examples include the following:

- Fraudulent documents
- Cash deposits/withdrawals
- Wires or other electronic transactions
- Stocks, bonds, or notes
- Loans

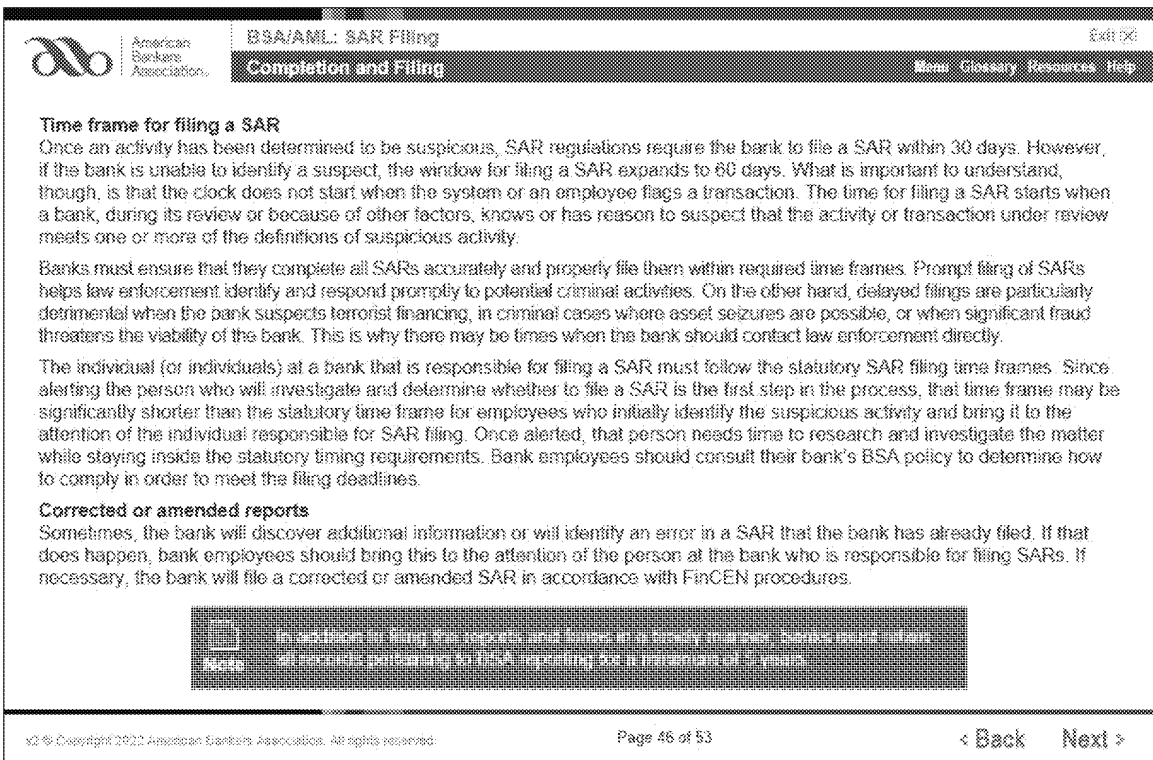

When did the suspicious activity take place? It helps to identify all accounts and transactions that were involved in chronological order by date and amount.

Where did the suspicious activity take place? Identify the branch, department, or other locations where the activity occurred by name and street address.

Why does the SAR filer think the activity is suspicious? Describe concisely, but fully, why the bank believes the transactions are suspicious.

How did the suspicious activity occur? Describe how the suspect transactions or patterns of transactions were completed. For account activity, provide as completely as possible an explanation of the cycle of funds, including the source of the funds and the application of those funds.

Warning: Sometimes, it is important to alert law enforcement about a transaction or activity immediately, before the bank files a SAR. If a bank thinks that may be necessary, bank procedures will explain who to alert and how. It may be an immediate supervisor, or it may be the bank's BSA officer, but the bank will have procedures in place on what steps to take.

Time frame for filing a SAR
 Once an activity has been determined to be suspicious, SAR regulations require the bank to file a SAR within 30 days. However, if the bank is unable to identify a suspect, the window for filing a SAR expands to 60 days. What is important to understand, though, is that the clock does not start when the system or an employee flags a transaction. The time for filing a SAR starts when a bank, during its review or because of other factors, knows or has reason to suspect that the activity or transaction under review meets one or more of the definitions of suspicious activity.

Banks must ensure that they complete all SARs accurately and properly file them within required time frames. Prompt filing of SARs helps law enforcement identify and respond promptly to potential criminal activities. On the other hand, delayed filings are particularly detrimental when the bank suspects terrorist financing, in criminal cases where asset seizures are possible, or when significant fraud threatens the viability of the bank. This is why there may be times when the bank should contact law enforcement directly.

The individual (or individuals) at a bank that is responsible for filing a SAR must follow the statutory SAR filing time frames. Since alerting the person who will investigate and determine whether to file a SAR is the first step in the process, that time frame may be significantly shorter than the statutory time frame for employees who initially identify the suspicious activity and bring it to the attention of the individual responsible for SAR filing. Once alerted, that person needs time to research and investigate the matter while staying inside the statutory timing requirements. Bank employees should consult their bank's BSA policy to determine how to comply in order to meet the filing deadlines.

Corrected or amended reports
 Sometimes, the bank will discover additional information or will identify an error in a SAR that the bank has already filed. If that does happen, bank employees should bring this to the attention of the person at the bank who is responsible for filing SARs. If necessary, the bank will file a corrected or amended SAR in accordance with FinCEN procedures.

Note: In addition to filing the reports and forms in a timely manner, banks must retain all records pertaining to BSA reporting for a minimum of 5 years.

Requests by law enforcement to review documentation

There are times when law enforcement will want to review the documentation that forms the basis for filing the SAR, such as transaction records or account statements. A bank can provide SAR backup information and related information about the subject of the report to an authorized law enforcement official, but there are procedures that most banks will have to follow before helping the law enforcement representative with their inquiry.

If law enforcement approaches a bank employee requesting follow-up information about suspicious activity that the bank reported, employees should refer the matter to the bank's BSA officer for coordination. If a law enforcement agent asks for information, explain that the appropriate officer at the bank must handle the request since that individual has all the necessary information and can provide it in the right way.

It is also important to understand that law enforcement is entitled only to the records that are included in the backup documentation specific to the SAR. Any request for information that falls outside of the SAR may require the law enforcement agency to follow a state or federal legal process.

Closing an account

A bank may use its reasonable business judgment to decide whether to close an account after it has made a SAR filing. It would be prudent for a bank to implement additional monitoring of an account that is the subject of a SAR filing, particularly if numerous SAR filings are involved. The bank will make the ultimate decision to maintain or close an account in accordance with its own standards and guidelines.

There are times, however, when a bank has an account with suspicious or potential criminal activity and law enforcement requests that the bank keep the account open. Banks should ask for a written request from the law enforcement agency. A supervisory agent or an attorney should issue this request within a U.S. Attorney's Office or another office of the Department of Justice.

If the request comes from a state or local law enforcement agency, the request should be from a supervisor of the state or local law enforcement agency or from an attorney within a state or local prosecutor's office. The request should indicate that the agency requested that the bank maintain the account and the purpose of the request. The request should also indicate the duration of the request, not to exceed 6 months (law enforcement may issue a subsequent request for a longer duration).

Although the BSA does not have a recordkeeping requirement with respect to these requests, FinCEN advises banks to maintain the request for at least 5 years after it has expired.

SAR filing on continuing activity

There are times when an activity will continue after the bank has filed a SAR. If the activity continues, the bank must bring this to the attention of law enforcement. FinCEN guidelines suggest that banks should report activity on a regular basis, a process that also helps the bank monitor for potential problems. As a result, banks should have policies and procedures about when to escalate issues or problems identified as the result of repeat SAR filings on accounts.

These procedures should include the following elements:

- A review by senior management and legal staff (e.g., a BSA compliance officer or a SAR committee)
- Criteria for when an analysis of the overall customer relationship is necessary
- Criteria for whether to close the account and, if so, when
- Criteria for when to notify law enforcement

When filing SARs on continuing activity, the generally accepted threshold is to review an activity 90 days after the most recent SAR with a goal for filing the next SAR 120 days after the most recently filed SAR.

What is most helpful for law enforcement is to report the range of activity that the bank has reviewed. When a bank files an ongoing SAR, law enforcement would like two specific bits of information (that way they know what has been covered).

In Field 27 of the SAR, what they would like are the dates for the review for that particular SAR. In other words, the bank would enter the full 90-day range of activity that it has reviewed. Meanwhile, in the SAR, what law enforcement would also like to see is information about the full scope of the activity.

For example, a bank is filing a report on suspicious activity from March 22, 2022, through June 22, 2022. The bank would enter those dates on the SAR that it is filing. However, if the activity that prompted the original SAR occurred in December 2021, the bank should note that in the narrative, along with a reference number or something to connect this SAR with the prior SARs. That makes law enforcement's task easier.

Question: When filing SARs on continuing activity, what is the threshold for reviewing the subject activity?

Answer: The generally accepted threshold is to review an activity 90 days after the most recent SAR with a goal for filing the next SAR 120 days after the most recently filed SAR.

By completing BSA/AML: SAR Filing, you learned about the scope of activities appropriate for SAR filing and the importance of keeping SARs confidential. You also learned about indicators of suspicious activity and the five key components of SAR filing.

Suspicious activity reporting forms the cornerstone of the BSA reporting system. It is critical to the United States' ability to utilize financial information to combat terrorism, terrorist financing, money laundering, and other financial crimes. Examiners and banks should recognize that the quality of SAR content is critical to the adequacy and effectiveness of the suspicious activity reporting system.

Knowing the controls, due diligence techniques, and red flags is not necessarily enough to ensure that a bank is effectively monitoring for, and reporting on, suspicious activity. A control breakdown commonly noted by examiners is ineffective or inefficient reporting of suspicious activity by bank personnel. Therefore, all bank staff should be educated about what to look for and should be equally educated on how to report suspicious activity within the bank. This helps to ensure a seamless process that eventually results in documentation supporting why certain activities are not suspicious or why a SAR is filed.

Wrap-Up

By completing BSA/AML: SAR Filing, you learned about the scope of activities appropriate for SAR filing and the importance of keeping SARs confidential. You also learned about indicators of suspicious activity and the five key components of SAR filing.

Suspicious activity reporting forms the cornerstone of the BSA reporting system. 1 [REDACTED] This is a transcribed interview of [REDACTED] Chairman Jordan has
2 requested this interview as part of the committee's oversight of the Department of
3 Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network.

4 Would the witness please state your name for the record?

5 [REDACTED] [REDACTED]

6 [REDACTED] Could agency counsel please state your name for the record?

7 [REDACTED] [REDACTED]

8 [REDACTED] [REDACTED]

9 [REDACTED] On behalf of the committee, I want to thank you for appearing here
10 today to answer our questions. The chairman also appreciates your willingness to 11 appear voluntarily.

12 My name is [REDACTED] I'm with Chairman Jordan's staff. I'll now have everyone
13 else from the committee who is here in the room introduce themselves as well.

14 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Chairman Jordan.

15 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Chairman Jordan.

16 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] Chairman Jordan.

17 [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Ranking Member Nadler.

18 [REDACTED] I would like to now go over the ground rules and guidelines that will 19 be followed during today's interview.

20 Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1
21 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period
22 of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more
23 questions and the interview is over. Typically, we take a short break at the end of each 24 hour, but if you'd like to take a break apart from that, please just let us know.

25 As you can see, there is an official court reporter taking down everything we say to

1 make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all questions. Do you 2 understand?

3 [REDACTED] Yes.

4 [REDACTED] So the court reporter can take down a clear record, we will do our best
5 to limit the number of people directing questions at you during any given hour to just
6 those people on the staff whose turn it is. Please try and speak clearly so the court
7 reporter can understand and so the folks down at the end of the table can hear you.

8 It's important that we don't talk over one another or interrupt each other if we 9 can help it, and that goes to everybody present at today's interview.

10 We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner
11 as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or if you do not 12 understand one of our questions, please let us know.

13 Our questions will cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any 14 point, just say so. If you honestly don't know the answer to a question or do not 15 remember, it is best not to guess. Please give us your best recollection, and it's okay to 16 tell us if you learned information from someone else, just indicate how you came to know
17 the information. If there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so, and
18 please inform us who, to the best of your knowledge, might be able to provide a more
19 complete answer to the question.

20 You should understand that although this interview is not under oath, that by law
21 you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand
22 that?

23 [REDACTED] Yes.

24 [REDACTED] This also applies to questions posed by congressional staff in an 25 interview. Do you understand this?

1 [REDACTED] Yes.

2 [REDACTED] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to
3 criminal prosecution for perjury or for making false statements under 18 U.S.C. Section
4 1001. Do you understand this?

5 [REDACTED] Yes.

6 [REDACTED] Is there any reason that you are unable to provide truthful answers to 7 today's questions?

8 [REDACTED] No.

9 [REDACTED] Finally, I'd like to make a note that the content of what we discuss
10 here today is confidential. We ask that you not speak about what we discuss in this
11 interview to any outside individuals to preserve the integrity of our investigation.

12 For the same reason, the marked exhibits that we will use today will remain with 13 the court reporter so that they can go in the official transcript. Any copies of those 14 exhibits will be returned to us when we wrap up.

15 That is the end of my reamble. Is there anything that my colleagues from the 16 minority would like to add?

17 [REDACTED] No, we'd just like to thank you for being here today.

18 [REDACTED] Counsel?

19 [REDACTED] Yes. Before we get started, I just wanted to put on the record
20 that some of the topics here today that I understand the committee is investigating touch
21 on the Bank Secrecy Act and potentially suspicious activity reports filed under the Bank
22 Secrecy Act.

23 The Bank Secrecy Act, which is 31 U.S.C. 5318(g), in particular, provides that
24 suspicious activity reports or anything that reveals the existence of a suspicious activity
25 report is confidential. Unauthorized disclosure of this material to the public is subject to

1 civil and criminal penalties. Unauthorized disclosure of this type of information is 2 also -- potentially can compromise the national security of the United States or active and 3 ongoing law enforcement investigations.

4 The Department of Treasury would respectfully ask that the committee, in 5 handling of the transcript of any matters discussed here today, to the extent they pertain
6 to specific SAR filings or anything that would disclose the existence of a particular SAR,
7 that that be redacted and not put in the public record.

8 We would also like to respectfully request -- as you all know, [REDACTED] is a 9 former Treasury employee. He's here voluntarily. We would really request that the 10 committee use all of its discretion in not releasing information about [REDACTED] not 11 releasing his name further into the public. He's no longer a government employee. He 12 was never an SES-level employee. So we would just like to respectfully make that 13 request on the record and again reiterate that he is here voluntarily to speak about 14 matters that are in the scope of his employment while at the Department of Treasury.

15 [REDACTED] Thank you.

16 [REDACTED] Thank you.

17 The clock now reads 9:58. We will start the first hour of questioning.

18 EXAMINATION

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q [REDACTED] what do you currently do for work?

21 A I'm an anti-money laundering compliance professional.

22 Q And how long have you been in that position?

23 A My current role or in that industry?

24 Q In your current role.

25 A About 6 months.

1 Q And with what company is that?

2 A Plaid.

3 Q And when did you join -- first join the Financial Crimes Enforcement
4 Network?

5 A I believe it was around November 2018.

6 Q And why did you join FinCEN?

7 A Oh, gosh. I had been in the private sector and worked with a lot of former 8 government and law enforcement officials and always found myself very motivated by 9 their service. So it was always something that I was interested in, you know, serving the 10 country in some way. And also, it was a great career opportunity, you know, getting 11 that government service in my industry.

12 Q And prior to joining FinCEN, what other positions did you hold?

13 A Sure. I was an AML compliance professional at a financial institution. And 14 then prior to that, I was an attorney in private practice.

15 Q And which financial institution was that?

16 A Standard Chartered Bank.

17 Q And what was your position in January of 2021?

18 A In January of 2021 -- let me think. November 18th through the beginning
19 of 2020. So in January 2021, I was the director of the Office of Stakeholder Integration
20 and Engagement for FinCEN.

21 Q And how long were you in that role?

22 A I was in that role about 2 years. Well, technically three. The third of 23 those 3 years I was acting deputy -- what do they call them -- deputy associate director of 24 the Strategic Operations Division. So, formally, same role but acting in a different 25 capacity.

1 Q And in those roles, can you describe what your responsibilities were in those
2 positions?

3 A Sure. I had two sections in that office. One was the data access and 4 management section, which oversees law enforcement and other, you know, intelligence,
5 other agencies that have access to the BSA data that FinCEN holds. So that section 6 oversaw the memoranda of understanding that we have in place with those 7 agencies -- we, being FinCEN, had in place with those agencies -- periodic audits of the 8 usage, et cetera, things of that nature.

9 And then my other section was called the domestic engagement section. That 10 section was responsible for liaising with external stakeholders of FinCEN, so law
11 enforcement, private sector, other regulators, things of that nature.

12 Q And can you describe -- to the extent that you already touched on that, can 13 you describe the organizational structure of those divisions within FinCEN?

14 A All or the strategic operations?

15 [REDACTED] It may help if he gives you his -- if he could just chronologically
16 give you his roles at FinCEN because he had a couple of different ones. So that may --

17 [REDACTED] Sure.

18 [REDACTED] -- answer your question a little more clearly.

19 [REDACTED] Yeah, I'll do that and sort of give you -- so FinCEN has seven -- well, 20 when I was there, FinCEN had seven divisions, plus counsel. One of the -- my first role at 21 FinCEN was with the Policy Division as the director of regulatory policy, and I did that for 22 about a year.

23 FinCEN has the front office, director, deputy director, et cetera. There is the 24 divisions. Each division has one or more offices, and then most or all -- most offices 25 have one or more sections, and then there is staff underneath all of those various

1 leadership and hierarchical roles.

2 So I started off as an office director in the Policy Division. Did that for a little over 3 a year, moved over to the role that I just mentioned, as the director of the Office of 4 Stakeholder Integration and Engagement. Did that for about 2 years.

5 My last year at FinCEN remained technically in that role but served as acting
6 deputy head of the Strategic Operations Division, which was the same division in which 7 my office was. And -- yeah, so --

8 [REDACTED] It may be helpful to just explain like what the Strategic 9 Operations Division did so you can explain your responsibilities in that office.

10 [REDACTED] Sure. The Strategic Operation Division did a lot of things. One of 11 its offices was in charge, for example, of foreign engagement. So our work with other 12 countries' financial intelligence units, some of our work at the FATF.

13 [REDACTED] Sorry. The what?

14 [REDACTED] Sorry, the Financial Action Task Force.

15 [REDACTED] Thank you.

16 [REDACTED] Yep.

17 [REDACTED] Don't quote me on that but close enough.

18 And so that was sort of the foreign engagement office.

19 I'm sure I'm going to miss things here, but -- and then other components -- a lot of 20 it really has to do with overall liaising with our external stakeholders. So you had the 21 office that handled the foreign, and then you had the office that handled, I guess, for lack 22 of a better way of saying it, customer support. So we have a phone -- FinCEN had a 23 phone help line and some filing, technical issues, things of that nature. So that was one 24 office.

25 And then there was the office that I oversaw, which had those two sections that I

1 described earlier.

BY [REDACTED]

3 Q So you mentioned the foreign division and you mentioned the customer
4 support division. Was there also a domestic division?

5 A Yeah. So those were offices within the Strategic Operations Division.
6 There were three offices, the office that oversaw the foreign engagement, the office that 7 oversaw the customer support, and then the office that I oversaw, which was called
8 Stakeholder Integration and Engagement. And then each of those offices had sections
9 underneath them. My office had the two sections I described earlier.

10 Q And so in the Office of Stakeholder Integration and Engagement, who was 11 your supervisor?

12 A I reported up to the head and deputy head of the Strategic Operations
13 Division. I believe they are called associate and deputy associate directors of FinCEN.

14 Q And who was that?

15 A At what point in time?

16 Q At all points in time while you were there.

17 A When I started in that office, which was I believe at the beginning of 2020,
18 the associate director that oversaw that division is AnnaLou Tirol. The deputy associate 19 director was Patrick O'Brien. I believe I formally reported to the deputy, who was 20 Patrick. So those were my -- that was my chain of command.

21 Q And so in your role as the director, how many people did you, roughly, 22 oversee?

23 A Gosh. Domestic engagement had, I don't know, five to seven. I'm 24 ballparking, but five, six, or seven. And data access had six to eight-ish.

25 Q Okay. And what was the mission of the Office of Stakeholder Integration

1 and Engagement?

2 A There is a formal mission. Can I defer to FinCEN on that? I mean, I sort of 3 described the offices and the roles as I know them, but I don't want to misstate. I think 4 FinCEN has an official mission for each division.

5 Q Sure. But in your words, how would you describe it?

6 A Best I can describe the division as a whole would be primarily the office that 7 oversaw external engagement generally, foreign, domestic, public, private, et cetera.

8 Q Did that mission change over time while you were there?

9 A Not terribly. That division did undergo some restructuring. I don't
10 remember when this change was made, but it was formerly called the liaison division. It
11 was the liaison division when I began at FinCEN at the end of 2018. At some point, it 12 was renamed Strategic Operations Division.

13 I don't recall the nature of the offices and sections changing significantly. I 14 believe the function and the mission, by and large, stayed the same, but there was some 15 restructuring.

16 Q And when did you leave FinCEN?

17 A I left FinCEN late summer of '22.

18 Q And why did you leave FinCEN?

19 A I would say a host of reasons. Primarily, though, I'm from Southern 20 California. I had been back East about 20 years and, you know, COVID changes people's 21 thinking and being shut inside, so I decided I wanted to move back home to L.A. and had 22 been looking for something.

23 Q And while you were at FinCEN, how often did you interact with FinCEN
24 leadership?

25 A What do you mean by FinCEN leadership?

1 Q The director of FinCEN.

2 A It depended a little bit on the director and what was going on. You know, a
3 month or two could go by without speaking to the director and then there could be a 4 6-week span where I spoke to the director every day. I certainly was at a level of 5 seniority where it would not be uncommon for me to be included in meetings or calls
6 with the director or speak with the director.

7 Q And so when you were speaking with the director, what was the nature of 8 those conversations? Were they generally on certain topics with your engagement in 9 the --

10 A It would -- well, I mean, listen, before COVID, you see somebody in the hall
11 and you're friendly. So certainly there was some informal, right. Generally, though, 12 given the pressing needs on the director's time, generally when you were speaking with 13 the director, it was on a specific topic or for a specific purpose.

14 Q And in general, what were those specific topics?

15 A I don't know that I can answer that question generally. It would have 16 depended on the topic. As an example, you know, one of the sections, as I mentioned, 17 oversaw, you know, FinCEN's access program to the BSA data. And there were multiple 18 times when various congressional hearings were going to cover that topic. So I would 19 sometimes be called upon to, you know, help inform the director or answer questions, 20 things of that nature.

21 That's an example. I mean, it could have been anything under my remit that 22 came up for whatever reason.

23 Q And did you interact with the Department of Justice while at FinCEN?

24 A Yes.

25 Q With whom at the Department of Justice?

1 A It would depend, and it would depend on the nature of the interaction. So,
2 certainly, DOJ components had access to the BSA data. So on my data access
3 management side, whether it was individual U.S. attorneys' offices or law enforcement
4 agencies like the FBI, you know, sometimes there would be issues on them accessing data
5 or they would need technical assistance or something of that nature.

6 And then on the domestic engagement side, one of the things that that section
7 oversaw was our public -- FinCEN's public-private partnership work. So, you know,
8 oftentimes we would provide assistance to law enforcement if they needed it on financial 9 access -- or access to financial data or some of the holdings that FinCEN had.

10 And so I would liaise, you know, either with Main Justice or U.S. attorneys or 11 assistant U.S. attorneys or, you know, law enforcement, FBI.

12 Q Were there certain persons within DOJ components that you liaised with the 13 most?

14 A Not that I recall. Certainly, I don't recall there being any particular person 15 that was so regular that the name sticks with me this many years later.

16 Q Okay.

17 ██████████ Any particular U.S. attorneys' offices that you interacted with more 18 frequently than others?

19 ██████████ Not that I recall.

20 ██████████ Did you ever interact with FBI field offices, or was it generally 21 out of DOJ, Main Justice?

22 ██████████ I'm not sure I ever knew at the time the distinction. I mean, I'm 23 not sure how they're structured. So FBI agent was FBI agent, and I'm not sure I
24 knew -- and, frankly, I struggled with that a little bit with DOJ as well. I never -- unless I
25 saw a title, I wouldn't necessarily know if they were out of a U.S. attorney's office or Main

1 or any of that. I'm not sure.

2

BY [REDACTED]

Q Shifting gears a little bit, what's your formal education?

A I have a bachelor's and a law degree, a JD.

Q Are you a licensed lawyer?

6

A Yes.

Q And when did you become licensed?

8

A I first took the New York bar and became licensed, it was either the very end of '06 or the beginning of '07. And then I subsequently took the California bar and was licensed at some point thereafter. I don't recall when.

10

11

Q And were you a lawyer, a licensed lawyer throughout your tenure at FinCEN?

12

A No. I actually never functioned as an attorney at FinCEN.

13

Q Were you a member of any bar while you were at FinCEN?

14

A I was an inactive member. So I am, to this day, a member of the New York and California bars. I have been an inactive member of both, I believe, as best I can recall, since I stopped formally practicing law in 2014.

15

16

17

Q And what's your formal training? I know you mentioned AML. Are there any certifications or things along those lines?

18

19

A Sure. So I have a certification or at least I did at one point -- I'm not certain 20

I'm paying the dues anymore -- but of what's called ACAMS, which is the Association of 21

Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists. Also don't quote me on that one, but

22 which is sort of the industry credential for anti-money laundering financial crimes

23 professionals.

24

And then most of it, I would just say, on the job. You know, when I was in private practice, I represented clients on compliance matters generally, including the BSA.

25

1 And then you, you know, you just learn on the job when I became an anti-money
2 laundering professional.

3 Q So moving back to your role when you were the director of the Office of 4 Stakeholder Integration and Engagement. So in that role, how did it relate to the 5 operations of FinCEN Exchange?

6 A So FinCEN Exchange was a public-private partnership program, and I would 7 say the logistics and the planning of those events were under the domestic engagement
8 section in my office. So my staff oversaw that event.

9 Q Can you describe the FinCEN Exchange briefly and then the events that you
10 mentioned?

11 A Sure. So, again, I'll do some of my own words, but FinCEN Exchange has an 12 official FinCEN description and whatnot, so I will defer to that. But, essentially, it was a 13 public-private partnership where it had a couple of components, and sometimes we 14 would focus on one, sometimes it would be everything. But it would, by and large, 15 either be where law enforcement was working on a case and needed access to financial 16 data, and so they would -- we would put together an event where law enforcement could 17 provide information to the private sector, banks usually, but didn't always have to be,
18 right -- there are numerous types of financial institutions under the BSA -- where they 19 would -- law enforcement could provide private sector members some information that 20 might help those institutions better identify suspicious activity, which is a requirement for 21 them to do under the BSA, so helping them sort of focus.

22 And then by the same token, there might be instances where financial institutions
23 are able to, within what authorities would allow, to share information with law
24 enforcement or each other, again, to better understand the nature of the conduct at issue
25 and, you know, try to catch bad guys.

1 Q And ordinarily, when Federal law enforcement is sharing information with 2 the private sector or vice versa, what mediums were used to facilitate that exchange?

3 A So particularly before COVID and then eventually, you know, there could be 4 in-person meetings, could be conference calls, could be email. So it would depend on,
5 you know, what type of communication and what the issue was.

6 Q You mentioned the different kinds of stakeholders and financial institutions.
7 Could you describe what kinds of financial institutions you were working with?

8 A Primarily banks. I believe in a few instances money services businesses, 9 MSBs.

10 Q For example?

11 A So I don't recall a specific MSB. Totally separate from your line of 12 questioning, an example of an MSB, for example, could be like Western Union as sort of 13 the classic example of a money transmitter. But I don't actually have a specific 14 recollection of a particular MSB participating in a FinCEN. I'm not saying they didn't; I 15 just don't recall.

16 Q And why was it important for FinCEN to reach out to the private sector?

17 A Not to be glib, when you say "important," like from whose -- I guess I'm not 18 really sure what you mean.

19 Q Well, I'll back up.

20 Why did you reach out to the private sector?

21 A So we would reach out to the private sector --

22 [REDACTED] You know, I guess -- I think he's testified about his job being to 23 reach out to the private sector on a variety of different topics, like everything from sort of 24 filing. Is your question now specific to FinCEN Exchange or like -- can you be more 25 specific about like -- what are you asking about specifically?

1 BY [REDACTED]

2 Q When you were liaising with the private sector, what sorts of information
3 were you looking for that the private sector had?

4 A Outside of FinCEN Exchange or specifically with -- just as a general matter?

5 Q As a general matter.

6 A Well, it could have been in the context of a FinCEN Exchange, which I just 7 described, or some of the other public-private partnership initiatives that FinCEN had. It
8 could be, you know, sometimes there's a miscommunication. Like, we'll have a law
9 enforcement agent reach out and say, hey, I'm trying to get X, Y, Z that I'm entitled to get
10 from such and such bank or such and such credit union, but they are not giving me what I
11 need. Can you -- you know, sometimes we'd literally just be a liaison.

12 I'm trying to think of other types of informal. You know, that's -- it could be any 13 number of reasons really.

14 Q Could you give an example of one of the public-private partnerships?

15 A So FinCEN Exchange is a big one. The other I would say major one is called 16 BSAAG, which is the BSA, the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group. Both are provided 17 foreign statute.

18 And the BSAAG was a bit more policy oriented, and it would also include, as an 19 example, other regulators, in addition to law enforcement and private sector members.
20 And it was a forum to discuss, like I said, a bit more on the policy realm. You know,
21 what's working, what's not, for FinCEN to receive feedback on its regulations, clarity or 22 lack thereof, things of that nature.

23 So certainly BSAAG and FinCEN Exchange were the two primary ones.

24 Q When you mention policy, was it discussing priorities for certain filings under 25 the Bank Secrecy Act or emerging suspicious activity, trends that you're seeing, things of 1 that nature?

2 A As best as I recall -- you're talking about BSAAG?

3 Q You're liaising with --

4 A So it would depend on the context, right. So BSAAG, which was a little 5 more policy oriented, dipped its toe into those areas but, by and large, was less tactical.
6 It was more, you know, hey, this regulation is not clear to us, so we're going in five
7 different directions. Or, you know, here's an example of guidance that the private
8 sector could use, you know. So FinCEN would take that feedback or, you know, FinCEN
9 would maybe pose questions to the private sector. Again, a little more on the policy
10 angle.

11 But what you just described would have taken place in the context of FinCEN
12 Exchange.

13 Q And before you were reaching out to the private sector, did you have to 14 receive approval before doing that?

15 A It would depend entirely on the reason I needed to reach out. For 16 example, the example I gave earlier, which definitely happened while I was there, where,
17 you know, a law enforcement agent was trying to get something from a financial 18 institution, that it was under statute and regulation. Law enforcement was entitled but 19 maybe the institution was just confused about what it was and was not allowed to share.
20 That would be something that, in the normal course of my duties at my level of seniority, I
21 would just go ahead and engage the institution.

22 But really, anything of greater import and certainly anything related to BSAAG or 23 FinCEN Exchange would generally require approval.

24 Q And who would that approval come from?

25 A I mean, I can only say that I would work with my chain of command. I

1 can't -- I couldn't speak to the extent to which they were informed by their leadership.
2 But I would go to my associate director and deputy associate director for those kinds of 3 approvals.

4 Q Which was Anna --

5 A AnnaLou and Patrick, at least at the beginning of '21.

6 [REDACTED] How long were they in those roles for?

7 [REDACTED] I don't recall.

8 [REDACTED] For each of them, who took on the next position when they left their 9 role?

10 [REDACTED] So at the beginning -- when I first started that office director job at 11 the beginning of 2020, it was AnnaLou Tirol was the associate director and Patrick O'Brien
12 was the deputy associate. At some point, I don't recall exactly when, AnnaLou -- our 13 director, the director of FinCEN left. I believe his deputy became acting director, and 14 AnnaLou became acting deputy director.

15 [REDACTED] Of FinCEN?

16 [REDACTED] Of FinCEN, yes.

17 I don't recall specifically what happened at the top of the division. I don't recall
18 whether Patrick was acting head at some point. And then there were various acting. It 19 was just a bit of a restructure while they figured out -- and I just don't recall people and 20 dates specifically.

21 [REDACTED] Is the restructuring complete by the time you had left?

22 [REDACTED] So I wouldn't call it a restructure as much as a sort of shuffling in 23 those roles. So I may have misspoke.

24 Well, so in mid to late '21, so at that time, the acting associate director was a guy
25 named Michael Dondarski, who was actually a member of our Enforcement Division but

1 he was acting as associate director, and his deputy was a guy named Andrew Winerman.

2 At some point, I don't recall when, Dondarski went back to enforcement.

3 Andrew became acting associate overseeing the Strategic Operations Division and asked
4 me to serve as the acting deputy associate. So at that point, and for my last nine or so
5 months at FinCEN, I was formally still the office director but I was serving as the acting 6 deputy of that division.

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q When you were engaging with the private sector, were there any topics or 9 issues that created points of tension?

10 A I'm not sure what you mean by points of tension, but not really, that I recall.

11 Q Disagreements. You mentioned earlier the example where a bank felt that 12 they couldn't share information or refused to share information. Were those kinds of 13 disagreements common?

14 A So I would say no. And I would also recharacterize -- that would be an 15 example where maybe like a very small institution doesn't necessarily have a level of 16 sophistication to know what they can and can't share. They are worried about BSA 17 confidentiality.

18 So when FinCEN would reach out and say, you know, hey, this is okay; you're 19 supposed to do this; you're required to do this; that would be sufficient for them to feel 20 comfortable that they're not violating law or reg and they would do so.

21 But I wouldn't -- I would call that more of a misunderstanding rather than a 22 disagreement. Certainly, generally no tension. An agent might be frustrated that he 23 was doing a dance, but I wouldn't call that tension. And I don't recall, again, at least at 24 that level of generality, I don't recall any points of tension, per se.

25 Q Do you recall there being confusion or misunderstanding about scope of the 1 Bank Secrecy Act?

2 [REDACTED] By whom? Can you be more specific?

3 [REDACTED] Yes, that's a broad question.

4 [REDACTED] Well, his example was a small institution that didn't understand
5 some of the confidentiality under the Bank Secrecy Act.

6 So were those misunderstandings -- did you routinely deal with some of those 7 misunderstandings about the breadth of the Bank Secrecy Act, what's confidential, what 8 they can provide, what they should be providing?

9 [REDACTED] I wouldn't say routinely, and I wouldn't -- you know, FinCEN wasn't 10 there necessarily to serve the private sector. Usually something like that would be to 11 assist law enforcement or something of that nature, if they were having trouble accessing 12 BSA data, whether that was with our -- within FinCEN's database, at a financial institution, 13 whatever it was.

14 So it's very hard for me to answer that question at that level of -- it's just a little 15 too general. I don't have recollections of disagreements or confusion, you know, writ 16 large.

17 [REDACTED] So would you view your role at FinCEN more of a partner of law
18 enforcement versus a partner of the financial institutions?

19 [REDACTED] All of the above. I'm not sure I would characterize any of our 20 relationships as above or below the other.

21 [REDACTED] Okay. When you say FinCEN was not there to assist the private 22 sector.

23 [REDACTED] We were certainly there to assist. I said we're not there to serve.
24 In other words, what I meant by that was, you know, it's not as if a bank could call FinCEN
25 and say jump and we would jump. Whereas, if the FBI said, hey, we're desperate; you

1 know, something major is happening; you know, we need you to jump, we would jump.

2 So it would depend on the nature of the relationship, but by the same token, we
3 had relationships with the private sector that maybe we didn't have with law. So it was 4 very specific to the relationship and to the topic what that relationship would have been.

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q Do you recall any examples -- we've talked a few times now about when 7 there was confusion or misunderstandings. When you're serving in a liaison position
8 between law enforcement and a private entity, do you recall any examples where there
9 wasn't confusion; there was a fundamental disagreement about how, you know, the Bank
10 Secrecy Act applied or a certain regulation?

11 A I don't specifically recall that, no.

12 Q Just to clarify the answer for the record. With the understanding you don't 13 have any specific recollections, generally, though, do you recall just that ever being an 14 issue or something that you or your office would be in a position to be aware of?

15 A Whether there was generally confusion or misunderstandings in the private 16 sector?

17 Q No, not regarding confusion or misunderstandings but where it's not an 18 issue of confusion, but there's a disagreement between how the Bank Secrecy Act applies 19 or what should be the --

20 A I see. Generally, that would not come to FinCEN. That's generally the 21 type of thing that would occur like with an examiner. So the functional regulators like
22 the Fed and the OCC, FDIC, et cetera. If there was like a dispute as to the BSA program
23 that an institution has in place, like that -- you know, FinCEN oversees the regulation, so 24 we would certainly be part of those conversations broadly.

25 And, again, you know, BSAAG, a lot of that conversation would come up about

1 policy, so not on a specific issue but, you know, broadly. But in terms of, like, specific 2 disagreements where FinCEN said X and some institution was saying Y, I don't recall that.

3 Q In the BSAAG group, do you recall any discussions about the scope of 4 disclosures or the scope of what should be kept confidential?

5 A I don't recall one way or the other.

6 [REDACTED] And just for the record, what was your involvement in BSAAG?
7 Because I just don't know how involved he actually was, so --

8 [REDACTED] Yeah, so BSAAG, like FinCEN Exchange, my staff would've sort of 9 coordinated the event. BSAAG has a mechanism for annual membership where we can 10 renew or replace members. So my staff would oversee the applications and all of that,
11 logistics, you know, getting a room or setting up conference calls, communications, things
12 of that nature. Not necessarily the substance of what's actually being discussed in any 13 of those forums.

14 BY [REDACTED]

15 Q And for BSAAG, was it generally like standing meetings or could they be 16 called on an ad hoc basis if there was an issue that had arisen?

17 A So there was a BSAAG plenary, all members, that was, I wouldn't say
18 standing as much as it was twice a year, but to be scheduled, right. It's not like -- it's not 19 like they have a calendar years out, right, but it's twice a year.

20 And then BSAAG -- within and under BSAAG, there were committees where 21 BSAAG members -- again, private sector, law enforcement, regulators -- would form sort 22 of working groups at the topical level. And so my staff would usually join and facilitate 23 those communications as well, but those were usually driven by the BSAAG members
24 themselves.

25 Q Do you recall like a couple examples of some of the topical choices for the

1 working group?

2 A Well, this is -- I should, but I don't recall specifically, no.

3

BY [REDACTED]

4 Q Does FinCEN have oversight responsibilities over financial institutions?

5 A Yes.

6 Q Can you describe those responsibilities?

7 A I can do the best I can. I mean, certainly they are set out in statute and reg.

8 So FinCEN owns the BSA, Title 31. So from a regulatory perspective, the 9 regulations that regulated financial institutions have to follow are drafted, revised.

10 Guidance is provided for by FinCEN. It's very complex because there are corollaries with 11 the functional regulators, which is Title 12 or title whatever it happens to be. And so 12 this is getting out of my sort of technical remit, but -- so certainly FinCEN has an 13 ownership role in the regulatory framework. And then FinCEN also has specific 14 statutory authority, such as FinCEN Exchange and BSAAG, with which they can engage the 15 private sector.

16 Q Which office was responsible for those oversight responsibilities?

17 A I would say most FinCEN divisions touch it at some point. So, for example,
18 there was the Policy Division, which oversaw regulatory guidance and interpretation, 19 regulatory drafting, technical advisories and bulletins, things of that nature. You had the 20 Enforcement Division, which would actually go out and examine and, if enforcement 21 activity was necessary, would handle that.

22 You know, there were other divisions that would analyze BSA data. The liaison
23 division, later Strategic Operations Division, that would liaise. So it really depended on 24 the nature of the interaction, but many divisions had a role to play.

25 Q And how did FinCEN enforce that oversight?

1 A I'm not quite sure I understand the question.

2 Q If you found that someone was out of compliance, how would that be 3 handled at FinCEN? Which office would lead that?

4 A Yeah, I mean, I was not involved in that. At a high level, it would generally
5 be the Enforcement Division, along with front office components, counsel, whoever
6 needed to participate, right. I mean, theoretically, it could be the folks in another 7 division that were looking at the data that led to the conclusion that they were out of,
8 you know, compliance. Like, it could be anybody.

9 But primarily, I would say the Enforcement Division, plus front office and counsel.
10 And they would do so -- you know, to your other part of your question, best I can answer 11 is that they would do so under the authorities and statute and reg, but it wasn't my 12 wheelhouse, so --

13 Q Were those enforcement actions involving violations of the Bank Secrecy
14 Act?

15 A Yes -- well, and I should say that my knowledge of that is limited to what's in 16 the public domain. So there may have been some activity that I just wasn't aware of 17 because it wasn't part of my job. So the enforcement actions that are publicly available
18 that were taken by FinCEN would have been, at least partially, due to Bank Secrecy Act 19 violations.

20 Q Could the failure to file a suspicious activity report according to material
21 shared or published by FinCEN result in an enforcement action?

22 [REDACTED] I'm sorry?

23 [REDACTED] In other words, FinCEN provides guidance, advisories, bulletins,
24 all the things that you mentioned.

25 [REDACTED] So I'm going to answer it this way.

1 [REDACTED] Was that something that was in your responsibility at all?

2 [REDACTED] No. The BSA requires that financial institutions have a risk-based 3 program. So you're taking a big step back. Generally, the way these institutions are 4 examined and assessed is, do you have policies, procedures, controls? Are they 5 appropriate? Were they being executed correctly?

6 If something falls through the cracks but your examiners or enforcement
7 personnel generally think that you were operating in a sound manner, something like that 8 may or may not actually result in enforcement action. It may. It, I believe, would 9 constitute a technical violation.

10 But, again, like, it's possible that they didn't know. A bank maybe didn't know 11 that something should have been filed because it was following its policies and 12 procedures and didn't identify -- you know, so it really is very hard to say, you know,
13 would X result in Y.

14 [REDACTED] And in your time at FinCEN, did you ever like, you know, do
15 your work in the Enforcement Division, or are you familiar with the standards of 16 willfulness that, like, the Enforcement Division would apply to an enforcement act?

17 [REDACTED] Not at all, no.

18 [REDACTED] So but in your role, you're responsible for sharing materials and 19 liaisoning with the private sector?

20 [REDACTED] Yeah, at a high level. Sure, yes.

21 [REDACTED] And so when you're sharing those materials and a bank receives 22 it -- a financial institution receives it, could a bank then be penalized for failing to file a 23 SAR according to the materials or guidance that is being shared with them? Would that 24 make it more risky to not file a SAR given that we've established the BSA is a risk-based 25 framework?

1 [REDACTED] Can you tell him what materials you're describing? Just 2 saying, like, material generally, I think that doesn't give him any information about 3 whether that would feed into the risk profile.

4 [REDACTED] Well, certainly he knows the materials that he shared.

5 [REDACTED] Well, I think we should establish that for the record.

6 [REDACTED] Yeah, I'm not sure I can recall. It might depend on what was being
7 shared.

8 [REDACTED] Okay. So could you give an example of what might distinguish 9 one from the other?

10 [REDACTED] Well, an example of materials that would be shared, and this,
11 actually, wouldn't have been shared by me, but, you know, FinCEN publishes advisories 12 on specific topics that contain some red flags.

13 [REDACTED] Yeah.

14 [REDACTED] I'm not sure I can really answer the question of, you know, if a bank
15 failed to take those red flags and do something with it and file a SAR and didn't file a SAR, 16 what would be more -- like, I'm not sure I can really speak to that at that level of 17 generality. And, again, it wasn't really my role at FinCEN.

18

BY [REDACTED]

19 Q Who would best be able to speak to that?

20 A Either people at FinCEN in enforcement, counsel, possibly front office. I 21 mean, I would defer to FinCEN as to, you know, who can best speak to that.

22 Q When the information is being shared -- previously there were questions
23 about, you know, specific information and maybe there is a failure to follow SAR. When 24 sharing information, was there an expectation that some of the information shared could 25 lead banks to or financial institutions to change what protocols they had in place?

1 A Whose expectation?

2 Q FinCEN's expectation.

3 A No. I don't believe that we had any expectation or criteria that that was 4 going to lead to. Really, it was -- FinCEN's purpose was to be helpful either to law
5 enforcement or to the private sector. If we had information that was available that we 6 felt we were legally allowed to share and it would be useful, we would do so, but it
7 didn't -- my recollection is it didn't come with any standards or expectations or 8 requirements.

9 Q Taking out expectations. This is a problem. Were there protocols put in 10 place based off the state of the world where protocols are implemented? FinCEN is 11 sharing new information that they think is helpful to the private sector partners. Were 12 there discussions about changing the protocols in light of what new information was 13 being shared?

14 A The banks' protocols?

15 Q Yes.

16 A I do not recall conversations like that, no.

17

BY [REDACTED]

18 Q Does FinCEN direct financial institutions to certain kinds of potential
19 suspicious activity?

20 A What do you mean by "direct"? Like, we'll share indicators, for example, 21 like in an advisory and provide them information that they may or may not have been 22 aware of.

23 Q Yeah, bring to their attention.

24 A Yes.

25 Q Okay.

1 [REDACTED] What types of indicators?

2 [REDACTED] It could be something like -- you know, depending on the topic,
3 right, but it could be something like, you know, those engaged in a certain type of fraud
4 tend -- you know, we've seen evidence that they move money in this manner, right.
5 Here's like a red flag, a typology that we have observed. It could be things like that.

6 [REDACTED] And kind of to turn back to a previous question, going off of this 7 hypothetical example, right. If you're identifying something new, was there ever a 8 discussion about whether protocols in place were adequately, you know, detecting that 9 sort of potential misconduct?

10 [REDACTED] Can we just sort of clarify the use of the word "protocols"?
11 Because I want to make sure you guys are using that -- I think what you mean is like a 12 bank's existing AML framework, right. What they're required to have under the BSA.
13 So I think for the record, like, can we just use that?

14 [REDACTED] Okay. Sure.

15 [REDACTED] Yeah, I mean, certainly I don't recall any discussions that an 16 institution would be expected to -- or that we would hope an institution would change its 17 policies, procedures, its program in place. You know, the focus would have been on the 18 information being shared and disseminating it. It's part of FinCEN's mission to analyze 19 the data we have and disseminate information where we can.

20 BY [REDACTED]

21 Q Were there any instances that you can recall where a financial institution
22 failed to file an SAR and there was a discussion about why that happened or why it was 23 missed?

24 A Not that I recall. I wouldn't have been involved in those conversations.

25 Q And who at FinCEN would have been?

1 A Likely enforcement personnel or front office or counsel.

2 Q We touched upon this earlier. Can you walk us through, again just very
3 briefly, during your time at FinCEN who was head of enforcement?

4 A Oh, boy. When I started, it was a guy named -- oh, I'm going to kick myself.
5 He was a nice guy. He retired. There was a longtime head of that division who retired
6 while I was at FinCEN. His name escapes me. I hope he doesn't see the video. Sorry.
7 And then when he retired, I don't actually recall who became associate director.

8 The gentleman I mentioned earlier, Mike Dondarski, was the deputy associate, but 9 I can't actually recall. It wasn't my division, and I actually didn't work a ton with those 10 folks. I mean, I was friendly in the hall, coworkers, but I just don't recall.

11 [REDACTED] Do FinCEN employees review the SARs that are filed?

12 [REDACTED] Certain FinCEN employees do, yes.

13 [REDACTED] What office would that fall within?

14 [REDACTED] It could be any. Certainly, our -- certainly, FinCEN's Intelligence
15 Division would review SARs. I know that there would be instances where enforcement
16 personnel would need to review SARs. There would be potential technical or filing
17 reasons for someone in strategic operations to review SARs, like customer support. You 18 know, oh, we double filed. What do we do? You know, that kind of stuff.

19 I mean, yes, the answer is -- I mean, I'm not really sure who else, but --

20 [REDACTED] Can I just make sure, because I think you asked did FinCEN 21 employees review SARs. To your knowledge, did FinCEN employees review all SARs that 22 are filed?

23 [REDACTED] To my knowledge, no, not one for one.

24 [REDACTED] That was going to be my next question.

25 [REDACTED] Sorry. I just wanted to make sure that was clear, because I

1 think that was a little messy.

2 [REDACTED] So, no, to the best of my knowledge, there isn't actually someone
3 putting eyeballs on every SAR. A lot of it would be based on, you know, keyword 4 queries and things of that nature.

5 [REDACTED] So how do you determine which SARs to review?

6 [REDACTED] It wasn't my job at FinCEN. I'm not sure I can answer that
7 question.

8 BY [REDACTED]

9 Q Whose job was it?

10 A For what purpose? To review SARs for what purpose?

11 Q Who at FinCEN would be in a position to decide which SARs are reviewed?

12 A It would depend on the purpose for which they're reviewing SARs.

13 Q What are some of the purposes of SARs review?

14 A I mean, I hate to speculate because it, by and large, was not my job. It
15 wasn't reviewing many SARs at all. You know, as an example, just to be helpful, like, if 16 Enforcement Division was looking at financial institution X, they would probably search
17 for a subset of that financial institution's SARs for whatever purpose.

18 If Intelligence Division was looking for, you know, healthcare fraud, they would 19 presumably search healthcare fraud.

20 I mean, but those are somewhat speculation just because it really was not part of 21 my job, by and large, to query the database and view SARs.

22 BY [REDACTED]

23 Q But you did manage the access to those databases?

24 A Yes.

25 Q And so then you would be maybe in a position to know what SARs are being

1 reviewed and for what purpose?

2 A My duties did not require or warrant a need to search the database, and I
3 generally did not. I don't actually recall ever. It may have happened once or twice, but 4 I'm not even sure I had a login. I don't recall searching SARs as part of my job.

5 Q Do you know if SARs were ever reviewed by using artificial intelligence or 6 machine learning?

7 A I do not know.

8 Q Do you know who would know?

9 A Current FinCEN personnel. I certainly know, while I was there, that there 10 were conversations both internal to FinCEN as well as feedback that we would get from 11 law enforcement or whomever about various ways that the ability to query the data
12 could be enhanced. But I don't recall where it stood at the time or where it's gone 13 since.

14 Q Enhanced using like machine learning or artificial intelligence?

15 A I don't recall. Improved, if you will, but not -- I don't have any specific 16 recollection of whether those mechanisms were being used or are currently being used.

17 Q Did you ever discuss with the private sector the use of artificial intelligence
18 or machine learning to identify suspicious activity?

19 A I don't have a specific recollection of that kind of conversation. Certainly, 20 regulated financial institutions use a variety of vendors and other technological 21 capabilities for their own purposes to execute their own program. You know, might that 22 have come up in some of the conversations I had in the course of my liaising, perhaps, but 23 I don't specifically recall.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q What about internal discussions you mentioned when it comes to improving

1 the query? Who would those internal discussions have been with?

2 A Who would those discussions have been with if they had happened? I
3 mean, I don't recall the discussions is the issue, so I'm not really sure how to answer.

4 Q Sure. In a previous response, if I understood your testimony correctly, you 5 said that there were, you know, internal and external discussions about improving the 6 query, right, when searching --

7 A Yep.

8 Q -- keywords or whatever it might be. Maybe it's AI. Maybe it's not.
9 For the internal discussions, who would those have been with?

10 A So I recall -- and I apologize if I misspoke. I recall generally there being 11 conversations with some of the government-side agencies who have access to the 12 database about how to query, whether enhancements or improvements were in 13 discussions. I do not specifically recall whether those discussions covered AI or ML or 14 any of that.

15 I don't know internally -- I mean, those kinds of conversations internally would 16 have been with other Strategic Operations Division personnel, perhaps my leadership,
17 front office personnel, and the director's office. But that's also a bit of speculation, I
18 would say, because I'm not sure I really recall.

1 [10:52 a.m.]

BY [REDACTED]

3 Q And when we're accessing the BSA materials, how is that material accessed?

4 A Are you asking if you -- how does law enforcement access the database for

5 FinCEN or --

6 Q All of the above.

7 A So when I was there -- I can't speak for what it was now, but while I was at 8 FinCEN, there was a -- a portal. I don't recall whether it was hosted or cloud or a web or 9 how, but agencies with proper access would be able to access the data from their own
10 workstation. You know, they didn't have to come onsite or anything like that. So 11 there would be some logon and then they would have access to the portal where they 12 could query and access the data.

13 Q Was there a name of the portal?

14 A I don't recall. Yes, there was a name. I don't recall what it was.

15

BY [REDACTED]

16 Q And was the portal the same for all of those entities accessing it? So was 17 FinCEN hosting this portal?

18 A I'm not sure I recall that level of technical -- I definitely can't answer the did 19 FinCEN host. I don't really know where the data physically -- that's like our -- that's our 20 computer folks.

21 Yeah, sorry. Go ahead. I'm not sure I can --

22 Q I think -- this was a BSA database of SAR filings, what have you.

23 A Uh-huh.

24 Q When everyone was accessing, were they accessing the same database?

25 A I believe the answer is yes. I can't speak to whether there were other

1 sources that they may have had access to. I don't recall. But there certainly was sort
2 of one primary database.

3 I'm trying to remember -- I don't recall whether there were any restrictions for a 4 particular agency on data. I don't recall whether that existed or -- or was applied.
5 Certainly, that was a component of what my team would look for when they audited
6 access. You know, they would look, for example, for things like, you know, are they 7 pulling queries that are really broad, you know, maybe overbroad.

8 So there would be a component of assessing how an agency used data, but 9 whether there was like a block in place up front or whether this agency had access to A,
10 B, and C, and this agency only had access to A and B, I don't recall.

11

BY [REDACTED]

12 Q Who had access to the portal?

13 A FinCEN personnel. And then, best of my recollection, either statute and/or 14 reg provides for which agencies can have access. So I would kind of defer to that. But 15 it included law enforcement, Federal, State, local, whomever, intelligence community, 16 other regulators. Those were the primary stakeholders.

17 Q Do you know, roughly, how many individuals that is?

18 A No idea.

19 Q You also mentioned audit a moment ago. And can you describe what an 20 audit of those with access to the portal, what that looked like?

21 A Not in great detail. But as a general matter, FinCEN has a program whereby 22 there's a team that periodically will assess an agency's use of the data to make sure it's 23 appropriate, to make sure the proper security measures are in place, to make sure that 24 they're educated on how best to query. And that's a periodic process that FinCEN has to 25 ensure the integrity of the data and its use.

1 Q Did you ever find an example where an agency was not using it
2 appropriately?

3 A I don't recall. And I certainly don't recall inappropriate use. We 4 frequently saw examples where an agency could use better education on how to more
5 intelligently query the database just to yield better results. So, you know, a lot of what
6 this team did would be sort of, you know, provide, you know, assistance or -- or learning
7 to, you know, agency personnel on how best to query the data. But I don't have a 8 specific recollection of anybody, you know, uncovering inappropriate use.

9 Q When an audit was completed, how often were those audits performed, and 10 what happened with the results of those audits?

11 A The audits were periodic. I don't recall the frequency.

12 Q Once a year, twice a year?

13 A I -- fairly confident it was not twice a year. I don't recall if it was one once a 14 year or once every other year. It was that cadence, generally. Every year, two, or 15 something like that.

16 The FinCEN employee would engage with their counterparts at that agency, you
17 know, go through the steps of the audit, ask the questions, whatever they did, prepare a 18 report internally that would go up to the section chief for review and approval.

19 If there were -- I don't specifically recall this happening, but if there were issues or 20 something like that required escalation, it would come to me. The section chief 21 reported to me. That was the data access and management side of my office.

22 And then like any issue anywhere, depending on the nature of the issue, it could 23 go up, if needed. But I don't have a recollection of that happening.

24 [REDACTED] Can we go off the record, please?

25 [Recess.]

1 [REDACTED] Okay. We can go back on the record.

2 EXAMINATION

3 BY [REDACTED]

4 Q Thank you, [REDACTED]

5 You mentioned -- earlier, I believe you were asked what the mission of your unit at 6 FinCEN was, and you said you would defer to FinCEN. And I would just like to start by 7 saying that FinCEN's website describes the agency as a whole, FinCEN's mission as, "to 8 safeguard the financial system from illicit use, and combat money laundering and its 9 related crimes, including terrorism, and promote national security through the strategic 10 use of financial authorities and the collection, analysis, and dissemination of financial 11 intelligence."

12 Does that sound right to you?

13 A Yes.

14 Q And that's your understanding of the mission that you as a FinCEN
15 employee, the overall mission that you were working towards?

16 A Yes.

17 Q Thank you.

18 And so that's a very long way of saying FinCEN works to combat the use of 19 financial systems to finance terrorism and to launder money?

20 A Yes.

21 Q And FinCEN's work to combat the financing of terrorism includes the 22 financing of domestic terrorism, correct?

23 A Yes.

24 Q And just to back up, the -- the combating the financing of terrorism is 25 commonly referred to as CFT?

1 A Yes.

2 Q That's the acronym that is often -- often used?

3 A Yes.

4 Q And anti-money laundering is AML?

5 A Yes.

6 Q Okay. And you've had experience in those fields, the AML and CFT fields, in 7 both the private sector at a financial institution --

8 A Yes.

9 Q -- correct? And at FinCEN?

10 A Yes.

11 Q And so you've -- you've kind of got those two windows into that particular
12 activity?

13 A Yes. And on the legal side as well, representing clients who are compliant
14 with those laws and regs.

15 Q And was that before you went to work for the bank?

16 A Yes.

17 Q And FinCEN itself is not a law enforcement agency in the sense that it 18 doesn't go out and arrest people?

19 A Correct, in that sense. I'm not sure if there's a technical definition of law
20 enforcement of what FinCEN does and does not qualify for. But it certainly did not have 21 guns and badges and arrest power and things of that nature.

22 Q And when you used the term earlier of "law enforcement," and as I imagine 23 we'll all be using it today, you're referring more to agencies that do have those 24 authorities, like the FBI, DEA, local police agencies, that sort of thing?

25 A Yes.

- 1 Q Okay. Thank you.
- 2 Now, FinCEN is not a new agency, correct?
- 3 A Define "new". I mean, it's been around --
- 4 Q It was established in 1990.
- 5 A -- many, many years.
- 6 Q Does that sound right?
- 7 A '90? You know what, I'm not certain.
- 8 Q It wasn't something that just popped up in 2021?
- 9 A No.
- 10 Q And one of the -- one of the components of FinCEN's mission, as we just
- 11 discussed, was using financial authorities, financial statutes, but also the collection,
- 12 analysis, and dissemination of financial intelligence, correct?
- 13 A Yes.
- 14 Q What does the phrase "financial intelligence" mean to you, as best as you
- 15 can explain it?
- 16 A I mean, it can mean a lot of things. I think when I think of how FinCEN -- at
- 17 least my role at FinCEN went about doing that, it would be the BSA data that is filed with
- 18 FinCEN, analyzing that data, and deriving from it information about how nefarious actors
- 19 are -- are operating. We would call them red flags, typologies, indicators, things of that
- 20 nature.
- 21 Q And your work wasn't to actually do that analysis, correct?
- 22 A Correct.
- 23 Q That was a separate division of FinCEN?
- 24 A Correct.
- 25 Q Okay. Your work was more that of a liaison between the different

1 stakeholders who had access to BSA information?

2 A Correct.

3 Q And so it was part of your job to help communicate some of those typologies
4 and indicators that law enforcement had developed to the financial institutions, correct?

5 A Correct.

6 Q And financial institutions are not required to work with FinCEN in that 7 regard, correct?

8 A Correct.

9 Q It's their choice whether or not to participate in Exchange events, for 10 example?

11 A Correct.

12 Q And it's their choice whether or not to receive typologies from -- from you or 13 from law enforcement?

14 A Well, mostly correct. I mean, some of the -- we do issue typologies in the 15 public domain through, like, an advisory. So that's -- that's out there, right.
16 Nobody -- nobody can escape it. But in terms of, like, participation in engaging with 17 FinCEN on a particular item, certainly in the context of FinCEN Exchange, BSAAG, the 18 items -- or the initiatives I discussed earlier, that was totally voluntary.

19 Q Okay. Thank you.

20 Now, you mentioned several times that FinCEN's authority and some of its duties 21 and responsibilities are actually codified in statutes and regulations.

22 A Correct.

23 Q Now, I'm going to go through some of those a little bit and introduce some 24 of them into the record just so that we have a clear understanding. So I'll refer to this as 25 the potentially boring section of -- of this interview.

1 And I'm going to start -- and this will be exhibit 1. This is 31 U.S.C. Section 310.
2 Sorry. I hope I made enough copies. I did not expect quite as many people here today.
3 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 1.
4 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

5 BY [REDACTED]

6 Q Okay. You can take a moment to look through it. I'm not going to ask you
7 anything from memory. I will point to you exactly what I would like to reference. So 8 you just let me know when you're ready.

9 A Yeah, go for it.

10 Q Okay. So first I want to start by noting that in this printout of the statute, it
11 says that the effective date is December 27, 2021. And I will just note for the record 12 that the only portion of the statute that went into effect on that date was the addition of 13 the phrase "other relevant private sector entities" on page 4 in subsection d(2). So 14 other than that, this was all in effect during your time at FinCEN.

15 So I want to turn your attention to page 1. And first of all, the title of this 16 subsection of the United States Code is called Financial Crimes Enforcement Network, 17 correct?

18 A Yes.

19 Q Okay. Now -- and subsection (a) states that the Financial Crimes
20 Enforcement Network -- I'm sorry.

21 "The Financial Crimes Enforcement Network established by order of the Secretary
22 of the Treasury on April 25th, 1990, shall be a bureau in the Department of the Treasury,"
23 correct?

24 A Yep.

25 Q Okay.

1 A Yes.

2 Q Now, if we look at subsection (b)(2), it refers to the duties and the powers of 3 the director of FinCEN. And, again, this is part of the record and this is publicly available,
4 so I'm not going to read the entire statute. But I think most relevant to -- to the issues
5 that we're going to be discussing here today, if you look at subsection (2)(B), the director 6 is required to "maintain a governmentwide data access service, with access, in 7 accordance with applicable legal requirements, to the following:"

8 And then it states, "Information collected by the Department of the Treasury, 9 including report information filed under subchapter II of chapter 53 of this title, such as 10 reports on cash transactions, foreign financial agency transactions and relationships, 11 foreign currency transactions, exporting and importing monetary instruments, and 12 suspicious activities."

13 Did I read that correctly?

14 A Yes.

15 Q Okay. And so the suspicious activities, that's a reference to the -- the SARs 16 that we were talking about earlier, correct?

17 A Yes.

18 Q And, again, so this is Congress telling the director of FinCEN that they're 19 required to maintain a governmentwide data access service with information including 20 SARs?

21 A Yes.

22 Q Now, if you turn the page to paragraph 2, subsection (C) requires the 23 director to "Analyze and disseminate the available data in accordance with applicable
24 legal requirements and policies and guidelines established by the Secretary of Treasury
25 and the Under Secretary of the Treasury for enforcement to -- identify possible criminal

1 activity to appropriate Federal, State, local, Tribal, and foreign law enforcement agencies;
2 and also to support ongoing criminal financial investigations and prosecutions and related
3 proceedings, including civil and criminal tax proceedings."

4 Did I read that correctly?

5 A Yes.

6 Q Okay. And that is consistent with the work that you were trying to carry
7 out at FinCEN?

8 A Yes.

9 Q And some of the other goals of the dissemination of that data include -- if 10 you look at subsection (v) -- "determining emerging trends and methods in money 11 laundering and other financial crimes," correct?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And the next subsection, subsection (vi), supporting -- and these are Roman 14 numerals -- "supporting the conduct of intelligence and counterintelligence activities,
15 including analysis, to protect against terrorism; and to support government initiatives 16 against money laundering," correct?

17 A Yes.

18 Q Okay. And FinCEN is also required, in subsection (D), to "Establish and 19 maintain a financial crimes communications center to furnish law enforcement
20 authorities with intelligence information relating to emerging or ongoing investigations 21 and undercover operations," correct?

22 A Yes.

23 Q And subsection (E) has a much longer description about how FinCEN is 24 required to furnish research, analytical and informational services to financial institutions, 25 and then it goes on a little longer.

1 But, essentially, this is all work that FinCEN is doing, at the end of that subsection,
2 "in the interest of the detection, prevention, and prosecution of terrorism, organized
3 crime, money laundering, and other financial crimes."

4 Did I read that correctly?

5 A I lost you on that last part.

6 Q I'm sorry. I'm -- I'm at subsection (E) on page 2.

7 A Oh, the bottom of that paragraph, yes. Interest -- yes.

8 Q And when you look at that subsection, that is essentially what you were 9 doing when you were passing along typologies and indicators to financial institutions,
10 correct?

11 A Yes.

12 Q And if you turn to page 3, subsection (K), FinCEN is required to 13 "Communicate regularly with financial institutions and Federal function regulators that 14 examine financial institutions for compliance with subsection II of chapter 53 and" -- I will 15 represent that that is the Bank Secrecy Act -- "promulgated under that subchapter and 16 law enforcement authorities to explain the United States Government's anti-money
17 laundering and countering the financing of terrorism priorities."

18 Did I read that correctly?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And, again, that was part of the mission that you were working towards,
21 correct?

22 A Yes.

23 Q And subsection (L) requires FinCEN to "Give and receive feedback to and 24 from financial institutions, State bank supervisors, State credit union supervisors, as those 25 terms are defined in section 6003 of the anti-money Laundering Act of 2020, regarding

1 the matters addressed in subchapter II of chapter 53 and regulations promulgated under
2 that subchapter," correct?

3 A Yes.

4 Q And, again, that's a reference to the Bank Secrecy Act, correct? It's okay
5 if --

6 A Yeah, you represent it as such. I don't remember, but yeah.

7 Q Okay. So stepping back, it's clear from this statute and from your 8 testimony that FinCEN's engagement with financial institutions, other members of the 9 private sector and their -- the work that you did liaising between those institutions and 10 law enforcement is something that is required by Congress, it is required by statutes that 11 Congress passed?

12 A Yes.

13 Q Okay. Thank you.

14 Now, I want to talk a little bit about the Bank Secrecy Act, because we -- it's come 15 up a lot already, but I don't think that we've -- we've talked about it at great detail.

16 So at a high level, is it fair to say that the Bank Secrecy Act provides for financial 17 institutions to report information for use in criminal and tax investigations, including 18 reports on suspicious transactions, relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation?

19 A Yes.

20 Q Does that sound right? Okay.

21 Now, I'm going to introduce as an exhibit a letter that was written to the chairman
22 of the Judiciary Committee by the acting assistant secretary of the Office of Legislative 23 Affairs at FinCEN, Mr. Corey Tellez -- or, I'm sorry, the Department of the Treasury. And 24 this will be exhibit 2.

25  Exhibit No. 2.

1 was marked for identification.]

2 [REDACTED] And I'm not sure if you've seen this, but whether you have or you
3 haven't, please feel free to take as much time as you need to review it.

4 Did I make enough?

5 [REDACTED] Great.

6

BY [REDACTED]

7 Q Okay. So I'm going to turn your attention on page 1 to the last paragraph,
8 and the second sentence says, "First, pursuant to the Bank Secrecy Act, FinCEN is 9 authorized to collect, analyze, and disseminate financial intelligence to law enforcement,
10 national security, and regulatory agencies for use in connections with criminal 11 investigations and related matters."

12 Did I read that correctly?

13 A Yes.

14 Q And, again, that's consistent with your understanding of FinCEN's authority?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And if you look at the footnote, that cites the statute that we just -- we just 17 reviewed --

18 A Yes.

19 Q -- 31 U.S.C. 310, correct?

20 Okay. Now, turning to page -- sorry, excuse me -- 2, in the section called BSA
21 Reporting, Assistant Secretary Tellez says that, "One of the key sources of information
22 that FinCEN uses to carry out its mission are suspicious activity reports, which are filed by 23 banks and other financial institutions that possess customer transactions."

24 Is that your understanding of suspicious activity reports?

25 A Yes.

1 Q And the -- then the letter then says, "The BSA requires that a bank or other
2 financial institution file a SAR whenever it identifies, quote, "a suspicious transaction
3 relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation," end quote.

4 Did I read that correctly?

5 A Yes.

6 Q And is that consistent with your understanding of the Bank Secrecy Act?

7 A Yes.

8 Q And, again, the footnote for that is for a different statute, a section of the 9 Bank Secrecy Act, 31 United States Code, section 5318, subsection (g)(1).

10 Did I read that correctly?

11 A Yes.

12 Q Okay. And the assistant secretary goes on to say that, "SARs constitute 13 critical tip-and-lead information that helps law enforcement identify, stop, and 14 apprehend criminal actors."

15 Did I read that correctly?

16 A Yes.

17 Q And is that your understanding of what SARs do?

18 A Yes.

19 Q Okay. Now, going back to banks' obligations under the BSA to file SARs,
20 banks -- the Bank Secrecy Act requires SARs to file -- I'm sorry -- requires banks to file
21 SARs for any transaction that might be relevant to a possible violation of criminal laws.

22 Is that your understanding?

23 A Is that a quote of particular language? Yeah, I think -- I think what's 24 tripping me up is the word "any," because it's not -- I don't want to imply that there's an 25 expectation that every single suspicious transaction get filed. It's -- it's only those that

1 the bank becomes aware of through the implementation of its AML program.

2 Q Okay. And I appreciate that clarification.

3 A Yeah.

4 Q Thank you.

5 And that -- well, we're going to talk about the AML programs in a minute. But,
6 essentially, banks are required to have programs to help them identify transactions that 7 must be reported under the Bank Secrecy Act?

8 A Yes.

9 Q Okay. Thank you.

10 And SARs are used across all -- different types of criminal investigations, correct?

11 A Yes.

12 Q Drug trafficking, for example?

13 A So I don't necessarily have firsthand knowledge because, you know, it wasn't 14 my job at FinCEN to really review or analyze SARs. But as a general matter, my 15 awareness in the industry, yes, for a wide variety of -- of potentially criminal conduct, 16 including drug trafficking.

17 Q And the primary mission of FinCEN, though, is to focus on money laundering
18 and financing of terrorism?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And when a financial institution files a SAR, they file it with FinCEN, correct?

21 A Yes.

22 Q And then it goes into FinCEN's database?

23 A Yes.

24 Q And then FinCEN makes SARs available to law enforcement agencies that 25 have access to those databases?

1 A Yes.

2 Q Okay. And SARs are subject to strict confidentiality provisions under the 3 law, correct?

4 A Yes.

5 Q And, in fact, as your counsel mentioned at the beginning, your -- FinCEN is 6 very sensitive about those provisions and about maintaining those confidentiality
7 provisions?

8 A Absolutely, yes.

9 Q And that was something that, I imagine, you received extensive training on 10 while you were at FinCEN.

11 A Yes.

12 Q And financial institutions file millions of SARs every year. Is that your 13 understanding?

14 A I believe so, yes.

15 Q And as you stated earlier, it is not your understanding that every single one 16 of those millions of SARs is actually viewed --

17 A Correct.

18 Q -- by a law enforcement agent or somebody working at FinCEN?

19 A Correct.

20 Q I imagine there are many that are filed and are never looked at.

21 A I believe so.

22 Q Now, based on your experience in the -- working at a financial institution and 23 working at FinCEN, you're aware that banks do not need a warrant or a subpoena in order
24 to file a SAR, correct?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And FinCEN does not need a warrant or a subpoena in order to receive a SAR
2 from a bank?

3 A Correct.

4 Q And that's because the legal process that authorizes the filing of a SAR is the 5 Bank Secrecy Act itself, correct?

6 A Correct.

7 Q And the Bank Secrecy Act does not require probable cause that a crime has 8 been committed. It's not the same standard as if you were applying for a warrant.

9 A Correct.

10 Q Now, I want to get back to what you mentioned earlier, which is the -- the 11 banks or the financial institutions' anti-money laundering program. So now I'm going to 12 be using the phrase -- or the word "bank" as a shorthand for financial institutions
13 generally just because it's a mouthful otherwise.

14 So it's the bank's responsibility to determine, consistent with the Bank Secrecy Act
15 and its implementing regulations, when it must file a SAR, correct?

16 A Correct.

17 Q And FinCEN can provide guidance or indicators but, ultimately, the 18 responsibility lies with the bank to determine whether or not a SAR is appropriate?

19 A Yes, correct. I mean, I would note that, to my knowledge, FinCEN wouldn't 20 or hasn't provided specific guidance at the SAR level. It would be at the sort of typology 21 red flag level.

22 Q Okay. Can you explain what you mean by that, what that -- what the 23 difference would be?

24 A Like, for example, FinCEN would never or, to my knowledge, has never told a
25 bank, if you see X, it's suspicious, or, you know, this person is a criminal, you must file a

1 SARs on them.

2 FinCEN wouldn't operate at that level of specificity. They would offer high-level
3 typology. You know, here's a description of how a drug trafficker might move money,
4 here's a description of how a fraudster places the money into the system, things -- things
5 that, you know, at that sort of typology level.

6 Q And it's the bank's responsibility to take that information or not and use it
7 to, again, make their own ultimate judgment about whether any particular transaction at 8 their institution merits the filing of a SAR?

9 A Correct. And just to link it back up to what we mentioned earlier, the 10 dissemination of that information, which, as you noted, is required by law for FinCEN to 11 do, does not come with any requirement or expectation as to how it is used or whether it 12 is used.

13 Q Okay. So when FinCEN sends along a typology, a bank can say, you know, 14 not helpful, sorry; we have our own program, and we're not going to use that?

15 A Correct.

16 Q I mean, they wouldn't necessarily say that to your face, but that's what they 17 could -- that's what they could say, you know?

18 A Yes.

19 Q That's how they could approach you?

20 A Sure.

21 Q Or they could say, this is helpful; we might use this?

22 A Correct.

23 Q But, ultimately, FinCEN has no authority over whether or not a bank files a 24 particular SAR?

25 A Correct.

1 Q And banks are actually required to maintain their own AML/CFT programs,
2 correct?

3 A Correct.

4 Q Okay. And those programs are designed, among other things, to ensure 5 their compliance with the BSA and that they are detecting and reporting suspicious
6 activity?

7 A Yes.

8 Q Okay. Now, I'm going to introduce another statute that might take me a 9 minute to find.

10 A While you're doing that, this is overly technical, but this is something I did at 11 FinCEN. I believe -- so the AML program is a specific reg. The requirement to file
12 suspicious activity is a separate reg. So I -- it might be technically incorrect to say an 13 AML program requires a filing of a SAR only because that's the way the -- the laws and the 14 statutes are written. The AML program must contain controls in place to identify and 15 detect, and it's all kind of cobbled together.

16 Q And I appreciate -- no, I appreciate that.

17 A Technical correction, but --

18 Q Thank you. And -- and it's a valuable one, because I think I did, in fact, 19 conflate two different statutes and regulations in that question.

20 So I'm going to go ahead and introduce, as exhibit 3, 31 U.S. Code Section 5318,
21 which is another long one. Again, I'm not going to take you through all of it.

22 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 3.

23 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q I'm going to turn your attention to page 10 of this printout. It's a really long

1 statute, subsection (h). And subsection (h)(1) provides that, "In order to guard against
2 money laundering and the financing of terrorism through financial institutions, each 3 financial institution shall establish anti-money laundering and countering the financing of 4 terrorism programs."

5 Did I read that correctly?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And then it goes on to -- to list four different aspects that those programs
8 must have, correct?

9 A Correct.

10 Q Okay. So, again, this isn't just something that banks do because they want 11 to; it's something that they are required to do by law?

12 A Required. In fact, those four are referred to as pillars.

13 Q Okay. So --

14 A And they're required elements of the AML program.

15 Q Since they're pillars, we might as well read them into the record. They are 16 the development of internal policies, procedures, and controls; the designation of a 17 compliance officer; an ongoing employee training program; and an independent audit
18 function to test programs.

19 Did I read that correctly?

20 A Yes.

21 Q And those are the pillars you were referring to?

22 A Yes.

23 Q Thank you.

24 So financial institutions are required to have -- well, most of them have entire 25 units of employees where that's -- that's just their job, correct, is to work --

1 A It would depend on the size. I mean, there are some baby community
2 banks out there that have like one person sometimes wearing multiple hats, but then
3 there's a Wells Fargo, B of A of the world that will have many, many, many people doing 4 this work.

5 Q And that's the type of work that you did at I believe it was 6 Standard Chartered Bank?

7 A Yes.

8 Q Okay. Thank you.

9 And there are investigators in, particularly the banks that are large enough to have 10 multiple employees and entire compliance units, whose job it is to search and monitor
11 their customers' financial records for suspicious activity that must be reported?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And based on your experience both at a financial institution and at FinCEN,
14 that type of monitoring by a bank, by a financial institution of its own customers' data, 15 that's entirely legal, correct?

16 A Legal and required.

17 Q Legal and required?

18 A Yeah.

19 Q No subpoenas required, no -- no warrant is required?

20 A Correct.

21 Q And stepping back a bit, in addition to the statutes that we've just discussed,
22 part of the reason why banks are able to do that sort of monitoring, whatever monitoring
23 they determine necessary, of their own customers' transaction is because, many years
24 ago, the Supreme Court held that bank records -- customer bank records are the property
25 of the bank, not the individual customer and, therefore, the Fourth Amendment does not

1 apply to bank records.

2 Is that your understanding?

3 A I do not have an understanding one way or the other of that case.

4 Q Okay. But you are more familiar, as I think you just made clear, with all of 5 the statutes and the regulations --

6 A Correct.

7 Q -- that govern the banks and --

8 A And how they are generally understood, whether -- if that came from case
9 law, you know, I can't say one way or the other, but yes.

10 Q Now, in addition to being legally required to be in compliance with the Bank
11 Secrecy Act, banks also have a business interest in ensuring that their customers are not 12 using their products to finance terrorism or other illegal activities, correct?

13 A I mean, colloquially, I suppose I would agree with that. I don't really have 14 an opinion one way or the other on the commercials of it. That makes sense to me.

15 Q I mean, it would make sense to think that if word came out that a particular 16 institution was being used to finance a terrorist attack, that that could cause that 17 institution's stock to plummet --

18 A Absolutely.

19 Q -- or people to --

20 A Headline risk was a major -- yes. And, in fact, when I was in the private 21 sector before FinCEN and now, headline risk is something that compliance personnel 22 discuss.

23 Q And headline risk refers to?

24 A The risk that the company would be in headlines with -- that something
25 negative would be public, such as customers using the institution to facilitate money

1 laundering, terrorism, et cetera.

2 Q Okay. Thank you.

3 And banks can also be penalized for not having effective compliance programs or 4 having compliance programs that don't meet what's required by statute?

5 A Yes.

6 Q And they can incur civil penalties?

7 A Yes.

8 Q Give me just one moment.

9 Okay. We talked a little bit during the previous hour about FinCEN Exchanges,
10 and I want to talk about them a little bit more. And, again, we're just talking generally.
11 We're not going to talk about the particular Exchange right now.

12 So, again, I believe that we've established that while it's the bank's responsibility 13 to identify and report suspicious activity at their institutions, banks regularly engage with 14 both FinCEN and law enforcement agencies in order to understand how criminal actors 15 are operating.

16 Is that a fair statement?

17 A I -- what do you mean by engage? Like, actually communicate with them?

18 Q Communicate.

19 A I would say that the overwhelming majority of regulated financial 20 institutions do not regularly communicate with FinCEN. They, of course, file the 21 required reports with FinCEN. But in terms of actual communication or things of that 22 nature, I would say most do not. And I -- even the ones that do, there's -- there's only a 23 very small handful that I would say do it regularly.

24 Q So when you have a FinCEN Exchange event, is that typically with, like,
25 repeat players, the same --

1 A So, generally, what would happen, if -- if it was a FinCEN Exchange that was 2 tactical on a particular topic, is some combination of law enforcement and the 3 appropriate FinCEN personnel would try to identify, based on the SARs and the other BSA 4 data, which institutions would be most useful to participate and would extend an 5 invitation -- if there was no objection to a particular institution, would extend an 6 invitation to those institutions.

7 Because of the nature of specific banks and just the market share that they have,
8 there were definitely some repeat players just because so many of the financial 9 transactions in our ecosystem go through the same small handful. So those were the 10 ones that would definitely have communicated with FinCEN regularly.

11 Q Okay. And you mentioned invitations. So FinCEN would send out
12 invitations to the financial institutions that it wanted to participate in Exchange events?

13 A Yes.

14 Q And those institutions were free to decline that invitation if they chose?

15 A Yes.

16 Q And the purpose of those Exchanges, again, was for law enforcement to 17 share information, typologies, that sort of information that would help banks -- that 18 FinCEN thought would help banks better identify suspicious transactions on their --

19 A Law enforcement and FinCEN, yes.

20 Q Okay. And -- well, let me back up.

21 Law enforcement is providing, through FinCEN, through the Exchanges, guidance
22 to the banks in these Exchanges about particular terms or particular trends that they're 23 seeing or that they think they might be seeing for banks to keep an eye out for.

24 A Yes.

25 Q Is that a fair statement?

1 A Yes.

2 Q And, again, banks are free to do what they want with that information?

3 A Yes.

4 Q And FinCEN Exchanges were actually developed as a means to facilitate this 5 sort of information sharing between banks and law enforcement, correct?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And is it a two-way street? Do banks share information as well?

8 A Yes.

9 Q Okay. And so banks will sometimes alert other banks or law enforcement
10 to, these are some of the trends that we're seeing, or these are the search terms that we 11 use to help identify suspicious activities?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And as we just established, banks are -- this is something that banks are 14 doing on their own regularly because they're required by statute to identify suspicious
15 activity?

16 A Yes.

17 Q And also because they just don't want their institutions to be used to finance
18 terrorism or to be engaged in money laundering?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And while you were still at FinCEN, Congress actually codified the FinCEN
21 Exchange as part of the anti-money Laundering Act of 2020. Is that your understanding?

22 A Yes.

23 Q Okay. And so what that means is that, through legislation, Congress 24 actually formalized this mechanism for law enforcement to share information with 25 financial -- financial institutions?

1 A Correct.

2 Q For national security and to combat the financing of terrorism?

3 A I don't recall the specific language of the statute and what the purposes
4 were that were enumerated, but that's generally my understanding.

5 Q And I believe in the earlier hour you were asked about, again, the mission
6 statement of FinCEN Exchanges, and you said that you would defer to FinCEN on that 7 since you're no longer there.

8 And I just want to introduce into the record a FinCEN fact sheet -- FinCEN
9 Exchange fact sheet that FinCEN put out.

10 Are we on exhibit 4 now?

11 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 4.

12 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

13 [REDACTED] Okay.

14 BY [REDACTED]

15 Q Okay. So if we look at just the very beginning of this fact sheet, it says that 16 on January 1st, 2021, Congress enacted the anti-money Laundering Act of 2020, and that 17 section 6103 of that Act establishes the FinCEN Exchange to facilitate a voluntary 18 public-private information-sharing partnership between law enforcement agencies,
19 national security agencies, financial institutions, and FinCEN to effectively combat money 20 laundering, terrorism financing, organized crime and other financial crimes; protect the 21 financial system from illicit use; and promote national security.

22 Did I read that correctly.

23 A Yes.

24 Q And is that your understanding with FinCEN's mission?

25 A Yes.

1 Q Okay. And, "The objective of FinCEN Exchange is to develop, deliver, and
2 sustain innovative public-private information sharing in order to enable the private sector
3 to better identify risks and provide FinCEN and law enforcement with critical information
4 to disrupt money laundering, terrorism financing, and other financial crimes."

5 Did I read that correctly?

6 A Yes.

7 Q And, again, is that consistent with your understanding of the FinCEN
8 Exchange?

9 A Yes.

10 Q And is that consistent with the work that you were doing in setting up
11 FinCEN Exchanges?

12 A Yes.

13 Q Now, I believe you said earlier, far more articulately than I ever could, that 14 FinCEN would never direct a bank, you must file a SAR if you see X, correct?

15 A Correct.

16 Q And so when FinCEN provides banks with typologies, it's not FinCEN's intent
17 to say that, if you see any one of the phrases in these typologies, file a SAR?

18 A Correct.

19 Q It's something that is just used as guidance for banks to consider in terms of 20 all of the other factors they consider when they're determining whether or not to file a
21 SAR?

22 A That's correct. I would add, a lot of times, it's to help them narrow the 23 scope of what they're looking at, right. So -- especially if you talk about the really large 24 institutions that have millions of customers, millions -- millions and millions of 25 transactions. They're running -- their program will run -- it's called the detection

1 scenario -- but run a pretty high-level algorithm to capture generic red flags. That's
2 what an investigator is looking at to try to figure out if they should file a SAR.

3 If FinCEN or law enforcement is able to provide a financial institution with higher
4 quality red flags, it helps narrow the focus of what they have to look for and makes it
5 more likely that they might be able to identify suspicious activity, but it in no way implies
6 that that makes something suspicious in and of itself. It's -- it's a -- it's an attempt to 7 improve their ability to search for suspicious activity.

8 Q Okay. And banks can take that information and then integrate it into the 9 other types of red flags or the other types of investigative techniques that they might 10 use?

11 A Correct.

12 Q So, for example, if FinCEN submits some typologies and a bank identifies a 13 customer whose transactions fit some of those typologies, bank investigators might then 14 choose to investigate that customer a little more closely, for example, by looking at their 15 social media, correct? Is that something that banks do?

16 A Yes, that is something that could be done, that sometimes a bank would do, 17 sure.

18 Q So banks are, in your experience on both sides of -- of this relationship, doing
19 more holistic investigations of their customers than just using FinCEN typologies?

20 A Correct.

21 Q But the typologies are there because, as you said, some of these banks have 22 millions and millions of customers, and you want to make sure that their searches are as 23 efficient and as effective as possible?

24 A Correct.

25 Q And you're doing that to, ultimately, protect the safety of Americans and of 1 our financial institutions, correct?

2 A Correct.

3 Q And, again, when FinCEN sends out this guidance and sends out these red 4 flags, it is ultimately the bank's responsibility to determine whether or not to use them
5 and whether or not to file any SARs if they do use them?

6 A Correct.

7 Q FinCEN does not ask banks to file SARs?

8 A Correct.

9 Q FinCEN does not instruct banks to file SARs?

10 A Not at any specific level of granularity. I mean, they're required to have a 11 program generally to file SARs.

12 Q Correct.

13 A But, no, not --

14 Q But not a particular SAR?

15 A Correct. Not at a topical or a specific level, correct.

16 Q You're simply there to help provide guidance to help the banks comply with 17 their responsibilities and help keep us all safe?

18 A Correct. And to do what we're required to do, right. One of the statutes
19 you submitted earlier requires us to analyze the data that's given to us and disseminate
20 those typologies. That's -- that's -- FinCEN views that as a requirement of the statute.

21 Q Thank you very much.

22 [REDACTED] And we can go off the record.

23 [Recess.]

24 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

25

BY [REDACTED]

1 Q I just want to run through a few questions, and then we can -- can move to
2 another topic.

3 Earlier you mentioned an example where a financial inst- -- the FBI was seeking 4 data from a financial institution, and the financial institution misunderstood the things
5 that it could share.

6 Do you recall that.

7 A Yes.

8 Q Was there ever an example where the FBI was seeking data from a financial 9 institution that it wasn't entitled to receive?

10 A So, yeah, let me -- let me clarify what the example was. The answer to 11 your question is no, not that I recall.

12 The SARs statute provides that law enforcement is able to obtain, under the BSA,
13 without additional process, supporting documentation that underlies the filing of a SAR.
14 So what happens, in practice, is a law enforcement agent will be querying the database,
15 they'll see a particular SAR. It might be relevant to their investigation, so they will reach 16 out to the filing institution and ask for that supporting documentation. Could be a file of 17 transactions, a screenshot of something that was, you know, a Google result -- I mean,
18 who knows? But that's what that mechanism is, and that's just provided for in the BSA.
19 And financial institutions are allowed and required to turn that over to law enforcement.

20 A less sophisticated institution sometimes might not fully appreciate that they're 21 allowed to do that without process, et cetera. So there's that -- a point of confusion
22 that sometimes would come to FinCEN that we would be able to clarify and help.

23 I'm not aware of an example of what I had described outside of what I just 24 described. Any other kind of data or that law enforcement was seeking outside of what 25 I just described, I'm not familiar with.

1 Q Moving back to the audits. Did you audit every agency that had access to
2 the BSA data?

3 A I'm going to answer that this way: Every agency that had access to data
4 was in scope of the audit program. I don't have, of course, any specific recollection
5 about which specific agencies were and were not audited while I was at FinCEN.

6 Q So some agencies may have not been audited?

7 A Correct. I just don't recall.

8 [REDACTED] Just during your time at FinCEN, but presumably at some point,
9 they are subject to audits if they have access to the data?

10 [REDACTED] Yes. I mean, they're always subject to the audit and, presumably, 11 at some point, unless their access is quite new, an audit would have been performed at 12 some point of a particular agency.

13 [REDACTED] What was the name of those results, those audit results? Like, 14 was it a kind of report, was it a memorandum?

15 [REDACTED] Yeah. It was a report -- not sure I recall if it was in the form of a 16 memo or whatnot, but some written documentation of the conclusions of the staffer that 17 performed the audit.

1 [12:11 p.m.]

2 [REDACTED] Into the agency being audited?

3 [REDACTED] Oh, no. That would be internal documentation. I don't recall
4 there being any actual -- unless something needed to be addressed, I don't recall that 5 there was any like results or report delivered to the agency being audited.

6 [REDACTED] Yeah. Okay. So internally what were those audit results
7 titled? How was that --

8 [REDACTED] Oh, I don't recall. It would have just been a written report. I use 9 "report" very generally to mean something written that documented to an extent the 10 conclusions of the auditor and the steps performed internal to FinCEN.

11 [REDACTED] I just want to make sure we're using "audit" like in the same 12 context, because this is not -- I think what you're talking about is not an audit by like the 13 Treasury OIG or the Treasury auditors. This is like an audit inspection by FinCEN 14 employees.

15 So I just want to make sure we're using the term "audit" in the same way. Is that 16 accurate?

17 [REDACTED] Yeah. No, no. Thank you.

18 Not at all OIG, GAO related. No private sector involvement. This is purely the 19 agencies that have access to the FinCEN database, FinCEN personnel examining that 20 access called an audit, and then documenting those conclusions internally.

21 BY [REDACTED]

22 Q Are you familiar with Agency Integrated Access?

23 A Agency Integrated Access?

24 I recall the term, so I might be able to -- I don't recall anything specific, but if there
25 is something that can jog my memory, I'm happy to take a look at it. But I recall the 1 term.

2 Q It may relate to the memorandums of understanding that certain agencies
3 have with FinCEN and accessing BSA data? And maybe we can just talk about those 4 memorandums of understanding.

5 A Sure, sure, sure. Yes.

6 Q Can you talk about in general what the function of the memorandums of 7 understanding served?

8 A Sure, to an extent. They were sort of jointly owned by my division and 9 counsel. They're, I guess, contracts, if you will.

10 But it basically provided for the legal authorities under which the access was being 11 provided. It would contain the manner of expected usage, limitations on usage, if any.

12 Just by way of example, the MOU for a traditional law enforcement agency might 13 look different than an -- will look different than an MOU for a regulator, which would look 14 different than an MOU for a member of the intelligence community, different authorities, 15 different functions.

16 And the MOU would provide for the parameters under which a particular agency
17 would be able to access and use the data.

18 Q How could a memorandum change -- a memorandum of understanding 19 change the parameters by which a law enforcement agency, for example, could access 20 that data?

21 A Well, it would set out the permissible parameters. And, generally, it would 22 be aligned with the mission of the law enforcement agency.

23 So, as you know, law enforcement agencies, members of the intelligence
24 community, regulators, they all operate under specific authorities that allow them to do
25 things and not do things.

1 So the MOU, by and large, would document that the user would only be able to
2 use the data in a manner consistent with their authorities and their mission.

3 Q And so --

4 A And FinCEN's mission and authorities as well.

5 Q And so they could take the data in the FinCEN database and then use it to 6 run their own analytics according to the terms of the memorandums of understanding?

7 A And I think you just reminded me on what Integrated Access meant.

8 So the overwhelming majority of agencies that accessed FinCEN data did so 9 through FinCEN Portal. There were a small -- there was a small handful of agencies that 10 had the ability to ingest the data into its own systems.

11 If I'm not mistaken, I believe that the term Integrated Access is a reference to that.

12 Q From our understanding that's also correct.

13 A Yeah. Okay. I think, just getting your question.

14 So I think that was the term that was created to reference those agencies that had 15 FinCEN data ingested into their own systems.

16 I don't have any specific recollection on how they queried their systems and what 17 capabilities those systems had. I don't recall.

18 Q Do you recall which agencies used Agency Integrated Access?

19 A I don't specifically, no.

20 Q Are there any restrictions on how individuals can access or use the FinCEN
21 Portal?

22 ██████████ Well, I think you just described the MOUs that set out those 23 restrictions.

24 But are you asking --

25 BY ██████████

1 Q Well, the FinCEN Portal is different than AIA, right?

2 A Well, all of it would have an MOU, though.

3 Q Okay.

4 A Every agency that had access of any manner had an MOU in place. The 5 MOU would provide for the type of access. So if an agency had that form of access, it
6 would have been addressed in the MOU.

7 Q Okay.

8 A And so, yeah. So to your question, like, primarily, I would defer to the 9 MOU in terms of the restrictions.

10 Of course, we're talking about sensitive agencies. We're talking about law
11 enforcement agencies, regulators. So they had controls on their side in terms of who 12 has access to their systems or who was granted access to FinCEN's system.

13 The janitor and the tech guy probably didn't have the login credentials to do it.
14 But that sort of -- I'm not sure if that answers your question.

15 Q I'll switch gears.

16 How does FinCEN use advisories and typologies, other key terms, as part of the 17 Bank Secrecy Act regime? You touched on this a little bit earlier. I just want to put a 18 finer point on it.

19 A Well, a lot of ways.

20 So FinCEN's analysis of the data can help us derive those typologies to begin with.
21 FinCEN itself and our law enforcement partners would use those typologies to inform 22 their own analysis to either find suspicious activity or derive new typologies or more 23 refined typologies.

24 You mentioned advisories. You know, we -- FinCEN would disseminate those 25 typologies. We had multiple mechanisms to do so, but certainly an advisory was a

1 major one where FinCEN would publicly publish something, usually topical, and would go
2 through those typologies and red flags on that topic.

3 Q Which office at FinCEN is responsible for analyzing the BSA data?

4 A Depends on the purpose for which it's being analyzed. If you're talking
5 about from a typology perspective, I would say primarily it would be the Intelligence
6 Division, which is not a member of the IC. It's not to be confused with the intelligence 7 community.

8 Q Are SARs ever deleted from the FinCEN Portal?

9 A For the most part, I would say I'm not the right person to ask.

10 The only thing I can recall, there was -- so sometimes you have like duplicate
11 filings or other technical errors that we would sort of de-dupe. I'm not sure if things
12 were deleted. The word I recall is "suppression."

13 So there may be -- there was a mechanism, I think, to ensure that those things
14 weren't popping up on the searches in a redundant manner.

15 I don't have any recollection one way or the other of whether there were any 16 substantive deletions or suppressions or anything of that nature.

17 [REDACTED] Is FinCEN notified when a SAR is reviewed, when one of these 18 divisions runs a query?

19 [REDACTED] FinCEN has access to that information. I don't recall
20 the mechanism. When you say notified, I don't know if there's a ping or something like 21 that.

22 But, yes, FinCEN personnel have the ability to see who is searching and what 23 they're searching.

24 [REDACTED] So each query that is run there is a record of that somewhere?

25 [REDACTED] To the best of my recollection, I believe that's correct.

1 [REDACTED] And I want to make sure we're distinguishing between a
2 record.

3 Are you aware of anyone at FinCEN affirmatively getting notice any time someone 4 conducts a review in the BSA database?

5 [REDACTED] I don't believe --

6 [REDACTED] Anyone in your division.

7 [REDACTED] I don't recall. I don't recall that one way or the other.

8 [REDACTED] We talked about earlier, in the earlier hour, the private sector
9 sharing materials with your office.

10 Verbal response, please.

11 [REDACTED] Oh, sorry.

12 [REDACTED] Was that a question?

13 [REDACTED] Yes, we talked about that earlier?

14 BY [REDACTED]

15 Q Yes.

16 A Oh, okay.

17 Q And what kinds of materials do the private sector often share? Or did it 18 depend?

19 A Yeah, I mean, it would depend. So they would, of course, file all the 20 required reports, SARs, CTRs, whatever was required, and that would go in the database.
21 I don't know if that's what you meant by sharing, but that would be a form of it.

22 You know, there are of course limitations to what they can share. They can't 23 share PII or anything of that nature outside of what allows them to do so, such as a SAR or 24 if it's a subpoena for law enforcement or something like that.

25 If you're talking about like the red flag typology level, it would depend on the

1 context. It could be a FinCEN Exchange where we're talking about a particular topic and 2 a financial institution in attendance might offer some high level, "Here's the trend that
3 we're seeing," or, "Here's a search that we found helpful to find X," things of that nature.

4 Q So when you received those materials, what did you do next with them?

5 [REDACTED] So I guess can we first establish like would you personally have 6 received those materials?

7 [REDACTED] Well, so it's -- not to go all Bill Clinton. It depends on what you
8 mean by "receive."

9 So a lot of this might be like a verbal conversation where -- I'm not sure there was 10 an official receipt. I mean, there may have been someone taking notes. Really it was a 11 collaborative discussion. So there may not have been anything physically received.

12 To the extent that that constitutes receipt, I would have been in the room. So I
13 would have been someone who heard the info, but it certainly wasn't my role to do
14 anything with the substance.

15 I and my staff, we didn't analyze SARs. We didn't engage in typologies and red
16 flags. You know, when it came to those kinds of collaborative efforts, we were more
17 logistics and planning the event and other components. Law enforcement attendees 18 would be sort of engaged in the substance.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q Did the private sector ever flag or make you aware of particular SARs that 21 had been filed with FinCEN?

22 A So I can confidently say never in the context of a FinCEN Exchange because it
23 would have been a violation of confidentiality for them to discuss specific SARs in the 24 presence of other members of the private sector.

25 I don't have specific -- I do have a general recollection that there were times a

1 financial institution flagged for FinCEN a particular filing, like, "You should take a look at 2 this."

3 In fact, FinCEN also maintains a hotline for like emergency -- if somebody sees
4 something, was like, "Oh, crap, I need to pick up the phone and call somebody," FinCEN
5 actually has a hotline for that.

6 So I do have a general recollection that that occurred.

7 Q Did other liaison offices share information with the private sector, or would 8 that have always went through the Office of Stakeholder Engagement and Integration?

9 A No. I mean, it's such a broad question. There were certainly reasons why
10 multiple of FinCEN's components would have reason to exchange information with 11 stakeholders.

12

BY [REDACTED]

13 Q Just a clarifying question. The hotline two responses ago you mentioned, 14 that's separate from the customer support?

15 A I'm not even sure if it's -- I think it's a different phone number.

16 Q Okay.

17 A I'm not sure if that's your question. But it's a separate mechanism, yes.
18 It's a different team.

19 Q And who is on the receiving -- yeah, which team is on the receiving end of 20 that?

21 A Oh, gosh. I don't know what division they're in. That's a good question.
22 I don't know.

23 Q It's not your division?

24 A I don't -- it wasn't my office.

25 Q Okay.

1 A I don't believe -- I was deputy at a division for a minute. So I'm trying to 2 remember.

3 I don't recall who sits on the other side of that, of the substantive hotline. The 4 customer support was a different office within SOD.

5 Q Do you remember the internal name of what the substantive hotline was 6 called, like if we needed to reference it?

7 A I think it's literally called FinCEN Hotline. It's on the website somewhere.
8 Actually, I think it might even be in the regulation. I don't -- I want to say I believe it was 9 FinCEN Hotline, but I don't specifically recall.

10 Q And understanding you're going off a general recollection, you don't have a 11 specific recollection of an example, do you have a sense of how many times this hotline 12 would be used?

13 A No. No idea. And I don't even have a ballpark. I wasn't engaged in that, 14 not at all.

15 BY ██████████

16 Q When you would share materials in a FinCEN Exchange event or typologies, 17 what sort of approval process did you go through, if any, before sending those materials
18 out?

19 A Yeah. So let me take a bit of a step back.

20 "You," meaning ██████████ or FinCEN, right?

21 So I would not have been involved in the creation or analysis of any of that 22 information. So I can't speak to the extent to which -- I can't speak to what the approval
23 process was for that information to be finalized within FinCEN.

24 If at some point it came to me or my staff for dissemination, that -- I mean, at a 25 minimum, I would make sure that my direct leadership was -- approved of that.

1 At times -- again, from a dissemination perspective, which is all I can speak to -- at 2 times that may also include consulting FinCEN counsel and consulting FinCEN front office.

3 But, again, I can only speak to the dissemination. The actual content of what I
4 was disseminating, I can't speak to at all.

5 Q So when you received those -- the content that you were disseminating, who 6 did that ordinarily come from?

7 A Usually it would come from the Intelligence Division. It could come from 8 the front office if there was like a member of the director's staff that was working with 9 other FinCEN components or harmonizing. But to the best of my recollection, it
10 probably usually would have been the Intelligence Division.

11 Q And what are the ways you could share that information or disseminate it?

12 A I mean, assuming I got approval to disseminate it, it could be email. I'm 13 trying to remember if there was any kind of like secure portal, whatever. You know, 14 obviously, the private sector doesn't have access to the FinCEN database.

15 So my recollection is it was primarily email or presentation at an event. So there
16 were some times where something was spoken about verbally in an exchange or BSAAG
17 or something that wasn't physically disseminated.

18 Q Did your office coordinate with other Federal agencies, like the IRS?

19 A Yes.

20 Q Can you describe the -- that nature of that coordination?

21 A Yeah. Our relationship with the IRS would primarily have been one of two 22 components, either IRS CI in its capacity as a Federal law enforcement agency, or IRS
23 SBSE, which I think stands for Small Business and Self-Employed, which IRS is a functional 24 regulator as well.

25 So I was -- we're not usually talking with the tax folks as we think of IRS normally.

1 So it was the IRS as a law enforcement agency or the IRS as a regulator.

2 Q And did you disseminate the kinds of materials that were also disseminated
3 to the private sector to the IRS?

4 A Well, the IRS would have had access to the FinCEN database.

5 To the extent that the IRS had a reason to be on the dissemination, if you will, so
6 like, for example, if IRS CI was the law enforcement stakeholder for FinCEN Exchange,
7 then presumably they would have been in the room when these things were discussed.
8 I don't have a specific recollection, but I may have disseminated something to them in 9 that context.

10 Q What about the Department of Homeland Security? Did you work with 11 them?

12 A Yes. I would say, again, in their capacity as a law enforcement agency.

13 Q Did you work with any intelligence agencies?

14 A Yes.

15 Q Which ones?

16 A Well, most, if not all, would have access to the database. So I would work 17 with them in that context from a data access perspective, MOU perspective.

18 There were one or two projects at the Top Secret level that I can't speak about 19 that I had some touch points to with the IC. But, again, as someone who was not 20 engaged in substantive analysis, I had very little engagement with IC.

21 BY [REDACTED]

22 Q For the IRS, for the law enforcement wing, would you have similar 23 interactions to what you had with Federal law enforcement where --

24 A Yeah, I mean, they're one of the big five. So IRS CI would have been like 25 DEA, FBI to me. It was just a big Federal law enforcement agency.

1 Q You had mentioned when disseminating information there might be
2 occasions where it called on elevating up to the front office. What types of information
3 would you feel would be appropriate to elevate to the front office's attention?

4 A So I'm not sure it's a matter of elevating. If I was being asked to 5 disseminate something, then I would need approval to feel comfortable disseminating it.
6 It's possible that the person who gave it to me was of sufficient. It could have been the 7 senior adviser for the director or the head of ID, Intelligence. I mean, it could have been 8 somebody where I didn't feel the need to get somebody else's approval. It could have 9 been somebody where I would go to my leadership.

10 It sounds like you're more asking about like what kind of issue might I have seen 11 that would cause me to escalate something. Like, I guess I'm not really clear on what 12 you mean.

13 Q In an earlier response, you gave a pretty clear bottom line in your head as far 14 as creation and assessment versus dissemination. And then so just focus on that latter 15 category.

16 A Uh-huh.

17 Q Either specific recollections or a hypothetical based off your experience and 18 your job, what types of information where you had received an instruction that this can 19 be disseminated would you look at and say, "This is something I should at least flag," or --

20 A Oh, I see what you mean.

21 I'm not sure that it was a specific type of information that would cause me to feel 22 compelled to get approval one way or the other. As a general matter, I would get 23 approval.

24 I mean, we weren't regularly in the business of just sending stuff to financial 25 institutions. It would have been in context, an advisory that is published, a FinCEN

1 Exchange that we are hosting, a BSAAG working group that we are facilitating.

2 It is not the case that somebody would come to me and say, "Hey, here's a 3 PowerPoint. Can you send this to X, Y, Z bank?" That's really not something that
4 happened.

5 So that's why I'm sort of struggling to answer the question, because the 6 information I was being asked to disseminate would have been in the context of a 7 particular reason to disseminate.

8 And so I would either have prior knowledge that I was able to disseminate, and I
9 was expecting to receive something, and once I did and the appropriate people made me
10 feel comfortable that it was what I could disseminate, I would do it, or I would ask my 11 boss.

12 But it wasn't like I read something and said, "Ooh, this is about X. I'd better ask 13 somebody first." It wasn't really a substantive assessment, if that makes sense.

14 Q Was there any part in the process that you played where you were 15 conducting any sort of substantive assessment?

16 A Not that I can recall. I've been telling you guys on the phone for 6 months
17 you've got the wrong guy. But I don't recall. I don't think I ever did that at FinCEN.

18 Q For the Intelligence Division, who was the head of that when you were at 19 FinCEN?

20 A For most of the time I was there, it was a guy named Jimmy Kirby.

21 Q Kirby?

22 A Yeah, K-i-r-b-y. I believe he's still at FinCEN, or at least he was as of a 23 couple months ago.

24 [REDACTED] He is.

25 BY [REDACTED]

1 Q Who is the right guy?

2 A The right guy of?

3 Q Well, you said we don't have the right guy.

4 A Oh, it depends what your question is.

5 I mean, if you want to talk about the substance of what we were exchanging at 6 FinCEN Exchange, it would be law enforcement or maybe Jimmy.

7 Q Did you coordinate with any offices from the FBI?

8 A For what?

9 Q Did you coordinate with any offices from the FBI?

10 A Coordinate what?

11 Q Did you communicate with offices from the FBI?

12 A Yes.

13 Q Do you remember which offices?

14 [REDACTED] I think he's already testified about this. Like, I mean, he 15 testified about this at the very beginning of your questioning. So is there a specific topic 16 you want to ask him about?

17 [REDACTED] Did you work with the Strategic Partner Engagement Section?

18 [REDACTED] Not that I -- yeah, I mean, I would reiterate what I said earlier, which 19 is I'm not sure I ever knew or identified or distinguished where they came from. So I 20 couldn't really tell you one way or the other what office they were from.

21 [REDACTED] Did you interact with Peter Sullivan?

22 [REDACTED] I recall the name. I don't have any specific recollection of any 23 particular engagement with him.

24 [REDACTED] With the understanding you don't have any specific recollection, at a 25 general level, do you recall what types of issues or what might occasion interacting with

1 Mr. Sullivan?

2 [REDACTED] No. Like zero. I just vaguely recall the name.

3 [REDACTED] As part of your vague recollection, do you recall ever meeting him in 4 person or at those meetings? Any additional context?

5 [REDACTED] No.

6 [REDACTED] Are you aware of FinCEN sending SARs directly to the FBI or any 7 other law enforcement agency?

8 [REDACTED] I would ask there what you mean by "sending," just because 9 FinCEN makes them available pretty much immediately to all law enforcement agents 10 that have an MOU. So what do you mean by "send"?

11 BY [REDACTED]

12 Q Aside from access via the Portal, was a SAR ever directed to the FBI?

13 A I generally recall there were times where we would flag specific filing ID 14 numbers to them with which they could use to query the database and get the 15 information through the standard mechanism. And that was actually a control that 16 FinCEN had in place.

17 We tried to minimize as much as possible access to BSA data outside of the 18 normal channels because, just from a governance and tracking perspective, we wanted it 19 to be through the normal channels.

20 So I don't recall physically sending SARs or that happening one way or the other.
21 I don't recall.

22 I do, again, generally recall that there were times when we would say here's a list
23 of five ID numbers to look up.

24 Q Have you ever heard of executives at financial institutions sending SARs via a 25 secure email portal directly to the FBI once the SAR is published on the FinCEN Portal?

1 Q Yes.

2 A Right.

3 So as part of our advisory program -- so when FinCEN would publish an advisory,
4 they would usually include a specific term.

5 I mean, it would be -- it wouldn't have any meaning necessarily. It would just be 6 a term with a request that institutions filing SARs related to this topic include that term
7 for ease of searchability for law enforcement and FinCEN -- tracking, metrics, what's the 8 value of our advisory, et cetera, et cetera.

9 So I believe that -- my recollection is there was an effort to do that here so when 10 SARs were filed related to this topic we would be able to retrieve them quickly and easily.

11 Q That topic being the Capitol riots?

12 A Yes.

13 Q And are you aware whether this reference was also shared with other 14 Federal agencies? Would they be aware of it?

15 A I don't recall. I would not have been the one to have those conversations
16 with Federal agencies, so I don't know.

17 Q Who would have had those conversations?

18 A Intelligence Division possibly, front office personnel possibly, my chain of 19 command, AnnaLou, possibly.

20 [REDACTED] And just so it's clear for the record, if somebody from, say, the 21 FBI was looking at a filing that had this in the BSA portal, would they be able to see it?
22 Would they be able to see that filing code if a SAR had used that filing code?

23 [REDACTED] Yeah, it's usually thrown into what they call the narrative. The SAR
24 form has mostly fixed fields and then there's like a narrative field where you actually 25 describe the conduct. So generally it was just a reference that was thrown into the

1 narrative in the free form field.

2 But if a law enforcement or anybody with access to the data -- database -- knew to 3 search for the code, they could retrieve the SARs that had that code.

BY [REDACTED]

5 Q The email also thanks the invitees for their time earlier today. Was there a 6 call or Zoom before this email was sent, to your recollection?

7 A I don't specifically recall. That's certainly what it sounds like.

8 Q Do you know if there were any other Federal agencies besides FinCEN on the 9 call?

10 A I do have a general recollection that some of the calls that we had with this 11 group around this time also included law enforcement. I don't know what specific 12 conversation this is referring to and who was on it.

13 Q Do you know what law enforcement would have been on related calls?

14 A I actually don't have a specific recollection. I know we're talking about the 15 FBI. I don't have a specific recollection other than I know it was some DOJ components.
16 I do recall some AUSAs -- or I don't remember if it was Main Justice or AUSAs -- but I do 17 recall some of the lawyers.

18 And I have since gathered, just based on the reports you all have filed and 19 whatnot, it was the FBI, but I don't actually specifically recall.

20 Q The email also notes there will be daily Zoom invites. What purpose did 21 those further conversations have? And that's in the last bullet.

22 A So my recollection in the aftermath of January 6th is that there were ongoing
23 concerns not just about those who had participated in those events but ongoing concerns
24 about the possibility of future events.

25 I don't remember the date of the inauguration, but, obviously, the inauguration

1 was very shortly after the 6th, and there were concerns about that.

2 So I do know that when we stood up this group at some point we went to a
3 cadence where we spoke daily, more than once a week, I don't remember the specific 4 cadence -- obviously, at some point daily was contemplated -- to touch base on this topic.

5 Q The email also notes the "standard e-file process." Could you describe
6 that?

7 A That would have just been a reference to how the financial institutions filed
8 SARs in the normal course of business. And just to get ahead of you, and I know you 9 actually -- this jogs my memory of a question you asked a few minutes ago.

10 So FinCEN maintained this system called SISS, Secure Information Sharing System,
11 which the system serves multiple purposes, but it has the ability for financial institutions
12 with access to the system to submit files to FinCEN.

13 So not to get too technical, and I'm not the right person anyway, when a financial 14 institution files a form with FinCEN, whether it's a SAR or some other form, there is like a 15 day or two of a lag in its process -- like, it's got to process and do computer stuff that I 16 can't tell you about.

17 And so there was a conversation in this context about asking the group to upload
18 their SARs into SISS so we had access to them immediately rather than waiting until 19 they've completed the sort of technological process.

20 So we were asking them to file as you normally would, but please also put this 21 code in and please also upload it to SISS.

22 BY [REDACTED]

23 Q Had you ever made that request before?

24 A I don't recall.

25 Q Had there been other occasions during your time at FinCEN that warranted

1 either having or considering daily Zooms or daily meetings?

2 A I don't recall.

3 Q Your answer about your general recollection about calls around this time
4 and not the one referenced in this email, about members from DOJ writ large, do you
5 recall any titles or names of DOJ personnel that you recognized on the calls?

6 A I do believe there was at least one AUSA.

7 Q Do you recall from which office or his or her name?

8 A No, I'm afraid not. I don't. I'm sorry.

9 Q Was it an AUSA that you had worked with previously?

10 A I don't recall.

11 Do you mind if I ask -- and, obviously, you're not going to tell me what's 12 redacted -- but is this law enforcement contact info that's redacted? Because it looks 13 like a handful of -- or are these just the name of people at these institutions that are 14 redacted?

15 [REDACTED] Yes.

16 [REDACTED] Okay.

17 [REDACTED] And it's my understanding that these are the institutions that you 18 sent the invite to.

19 [REDACTED] Got it. Okay. Understood. Thanks.

20 [REDACTED] Were there -- sorry. One more.

21 There is reference to daily Zooms. During this time, obviously, January 2021, the 22 pandemic is still going on, were there any in-person meetings that occurred?

23 [REDACTED] Not that I recall.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q And why did you ask, "For all SARs filed related to this topic, please alert us

1 of the filing"? Was it normal for FinCEN employees to be alerted?

2 A Which bullet is that?

3 Q It's the fifth bullet.

4 A "For all SARs filed related to this topic, please alert us."

5 So what was your question?

6 Q Why did you ask to be alerted to all SARs filed related to this topic?

7 A I believe just because we wanted to know -- we wanted the knowledge as 8 soon as it was sent to us. You know, we didn't want to have to -- we didn't want there 9 to be a lag between when the information was submitted and when we queried it or 10 whatnot. We just asked for a heads-up that it was there.

11 Q And so once you were alerted to a SAR, what happened next?

12 A I don't recall, and I wouldn't have been involved.

13

BY [REDACTED]

14 Q Who would have been involved?

15 A If somebody was looking at the SAR or reading the SAR. I don't recall ever
16 even reviewing any of the SARs we received because that would have been substantive 17 analysis that was outside of my remit.

18 Q As it related to the events on January 6th and the days and weeks following, 19 which teams within FinCEN were taking the lead on that?

20 A To the best of my recollection, it would have been the Intelligence Division.

21 Q Do you have any sense of which offices within the division?

22 A No.

23 Q In advance of like the daily Zoom calls or calls during this period, would there 24 typically be internal FinCEN-only pre-meetings?

25 A I can safely say that that happened. We certainly had pre-meets, and we

1 absolutely would not have gone into this cold at the outset. I can't say whether there
2 was a pre-meet, for example, before each call or each further discussion. I would
3 suspect not. But I don't recall.

4 Q Which personnel from FinCEN would most commonly attend any
5 pre-meetings during this time period?

6 A Listen, ultimately my answer is I don't recall. A little bit of it would depend
7 on the nature of the pre-meet.

8 If it was a bit of a logistical pre-meet, like who's going to say what, when, and how 9 are we going to administer the discussion, that might just be, for example, my staff and I
10 and my leadership.

11 Maybe counsel would have joined, maybe front office would have joined, maybe 12 Intelligence Division would have joined, but if that was just logistics, maybe not.

13 If it was actually a discussion of substance, it would have included Intelligence
14 Division. And I can say that confidently because that's what would have happened.
15 But I don't actually have a specific recollection of any of the particular meetings.

16 Q Which personnel from the Intelligence Division would have likely 17 participated in any substantive pre-meetings?

18 A I don't specifically recall which members of that division were involved in any 19 particular topic. I would refer you -- the head of the division was Jimmy. The deputy 20 head, who is listed on here, was Kim Donovan. Those are the two.

21 That's not to say that they would have been on the calls at their level. I don't 22 recall one way or the other. But those are the only two names I recall from the 23 Intelligence Division definitely being involved generally.

24 Q For these types of calls around this timeframe -- daily Zooms, but not quite 25 daily -- what was FinCEN's protocol for taking any notes, recording minutes?

1 A I don't recall.

2 Q Outside of this context, just generally, was there a practice or a protocol as 3 far as how notes or if notes should be taken?

4 A As a general matter for the FinCEN Exchange program, I do recall there
5 would be someone at FinCEN to take notes. I don't recall whether that included -- I
6 don't recall whether those notes would have covered the whole discussion.

7 In other words, when -- if it was in the context -- like, if there were actual tactical
8 discussions of typologies, things like that, I don't recall whether or not there were notes
9 maintained on that. I just don't recall.

10 [REDACTED] Do you recall whether 2 weeks after the AML Act codifying
11 FinCEN Exchange became effective that policy of taking notes at FinCEN exchanges would 12 have been in effect?

13 [REDACTED] I don't recall.

14 [REDACTED] Not policy, whether that would have been your practice.

15 [REDACTED] Yeah, I don't -- I just don't recall.

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q Whenever the practice began and for whatever parts of the meeting notes
18 are being taken for, what did the final work product or final iteration look like? Was it 19 email, I'm assuming?

20 A Yeah, I don't recall. I really don't. I don't recall that FinCEN would ever 21 publish a summary -- well, actually, I take it back.

22 They would often -- FinCEN would publish a summary of an event, but I'm not sure 23 how much detail it would include in terms of the actual discussion, whether that would 24 be derived from notes that were taken or not. I just don't recall.

25 Q Again, just general recollection, not necessarily specific to this time period,

1 who would most likely within FinCEN have the responsibility for taking notes?

2 A So because I don't recall whether there was like a formal note-taking policy
3 or whether that was done, it's hard for me to answer that question.

4 If there were substantive conversations that took place and FinCEN wanted to 5 take the information back for our own purposes, that would likely have been Intelligence
6 Division, because they were one of the primary components of FinCEN that analyzed SARs
7 for that purpose.

8 But outside of that, like if there was some formal note-taking, which I don't recall
9 one way or the other, I, therefore, also don't recall who would have been responsible for 10 that. It's possible it was my own staff from a logistics standpoint. I just don't recall.

11 Q To your recollection, it wasn't you?

12 A To the best of my recollection, it definitely was not me. I really hate taking 13 notes, and I'm pretty sure I feel like I'd remember if I had to do it for these long events.
14 But I just don't recall.

Q How long did these events normally last?

A Oh, gosh. It would depend on the event. So I'm talking about FinCEN Exchange generally, not any particular topic.

You know, pre-COVID, sometimes institutions would actually put people on a plane to meet in person. So we tried to make it like a full-day event, sometimes 2 days, maybe even incorporating educational elements, and we really tried to make it a substantive program.

Certainly, after COVID -- bearing in mind, I was only at FinCEN for about a year and change before COVID hit, most of which was policy. So for the majority -- maybe not at the very beginning of me taking over this office, but the majority of time that I was in this seat, I was in my apartment on a screen.

The events naturally got shorter. I think -- I recall early, middle pandemic we tried like a full day or like a 2-day either of BSAAG or FinCEN Exchange and it was just a disaster. I mean, people were dropping off. You just can't hold people's attention on a computer for that long.

So I do recall we made them shorter and to the point just when they were remote.

Q Were there other instances or investigations that you recall personally asking to be alerted to SARs filed on the topic?

A I mean, I don't specifically recall. Most of those events and advisories contain one of those reference codes. I guess that's not necessarily affirmative. But outside of that, I don't recall.

Q The email also asks that the financial institutions send you, quote, "the FBI's points of contact you are working with in relation to this subject matter."

Do you recall any of those FBI points of contact?

1 A No.

2 Q Why were financial institutions directly working with the FBI?

3 A Well, as a general matter, the FBI had access to SARs, and they had the 4 authority to reach out to the filing institution to get supporting documentation and to 5 discuss that particular SAR. So that happened frequently throughout the whole
6 ecosystem.

7 There are also certain institutions that if they see conduct that's of particular 8 concern, if it's, God forbid, something that's imminent or something like that, a lot of 9 times they would file a SAR and then pick up the phone and call various law enforcement 10 contacts.

11 So those are general manners in which that kind of communication could have 12 taken place.

13 FinCEN frequently saw multiple different players, sometimes multiple agencies
14 looking at the same conduct, and we would try to deconflict and make things a little more 15 efficient. So I think that's what we were trying to do here.

16 Q We have already covered this, I believe, but who is AnnaLou Tirol?

17 A So she -- I don't remember the specific dates -- around this time was the 18 associate director in charge -- oh, yeah, she was the ADA of my division.

19 Q Did you report to her?

20 A Dotted line. I think I technically reported to her deputy.

21 Q And what was your professional relationship to Kim Donovan?

22 A Just a colleague. She was a FinCEN employee in a different division.

23 Q And with Tony Harris?

24 A Tony was my employee. He was the section chief of one of my two 25 sections. So that section, the Domestic Engagement Section, that was one of two

1 sections in my office. Tony was the chief of that section. And that's the section that 2 oversaw FinCEN Exchange.

3 [REDACTED] Besides Kim Donovan, do you recall others from the Intelligence
4 Division that were participating in calls around this time?

5 [REDACTED] Jimmy and Kim are the only ones I can recall specifically being 6 involved in this.

7 [REDACTED] And Jimmy was the director of the Intelligence Division at that
8 time?

9 [REDACTED] Yeah. They called him associate director of FinCEN. But the ADs
10 were the heads of divisions. So Jimmy was the head of ID. Kim was his deputy.

11 [REDACTED] During the protests and riots in the summer of 2020, 12 beforehand, was there anything similar to this that took place with FinCEN and these 13 exchanges?

14 [REDACTED] I don't recall.

15 [REDACTED] Turning back to January 2021, for the calls when the FBI or members 16 of DOJ were on it, do you recall just broadly how many personnel from DOJ and FBI would 17 be on?

18 [REDACTED] I don't. More than one. But I don't -- more than one, less than 19 10. It could have been way less than 10. I don't specifically recall.

20

BY [REDACTED]

21 Q Who made the determination of which banks to include, which financial
22 institutions?

23 A I don't know.

24 Q Were there others included that are not listed here, or was it limited to 25 these?

1 A So I can say that everyone who was, quote, "included" on this date is on
2 here.

3 I have a general recollection that one or a few institutions might have been added
4 along the way as our analysis progressed or there was a reason for that, and I don't recall
5 whether that had already taken place or whether that was after this particular email.

6 Q Do you know how it was determined what banks to include?

7 A I don't.

8 [REDACTED] Was this part of a FinCEN Exchange event?

9 [REDACTED] So my recollection is that these discussions were stood up under a 10 handful of authorities. I don't recall -- I'm not sure I'm the right person to speak to what 11 specifically that was, but I have a specific recollection of FinCEN making sure that 12 conversations were taking place properly, under specific authorities that authorized these 13 kinds of discussions, but I don't specifically remember what that entailed.

14 [REDACTED] Who decides whether to create a reference number like the one
15 here?

16 [REDACTED] Who decides? That's a good question.

17 I don't know. I don't know. I mean, I don't think it's the type of thing where it's 18 like a decision panel, should we or shouldn't we? I think if there is a component of 19 FinCEN that feels the need to, they would raise that.

20 So I know generally the Intelligence Division or Policy Division, which is where the 21 advisories are released out of. So, again, these would commonly be found in an 22 advisory.

23 But that was more FinCEN practice. So maybe it was just Policy Division just 24 doing what the agency said. But I don't actually have a specific recollection.

25 [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

1 [Recess.]

1 [1:44 p.m.]

2 [REDACTED] We are back on the record.

3 BY [REDACTED]

4 Q So, [REDACTED] I want to ask you a little bit about January 6th.

5 I believe you said in the earlier hour that in the aftermath of January 6th there
6 were ongoing concerns not just about those who participated in the riots at the Capitol,
7 but also about violence at future events, particularly the upcoming inauguration, correct?

8 A Yes.

9 Q And so FinCEN was working with law enforcement and the banks to help
10 identify first who was involved in the January 6th attacks on the Capitol, correct?

11 A Yes.

12 Q And also to identify folks who might be at risk of committing future acts of 13 violence, particularly at the Presidential inauguration?

14 A Yes.

15 Q And you were asked a series of questions about whether the frequency of 16 the Zoom calls that were set up or the requests to be notified if a SAR was filed, if that 17 was something that had ever been done before.

18 Were the actions that you took, for example, in having daily phone calls, was that 19 in relation to the urgency of FinCEN's efforts to try to help all the relevant parties prevent 20 violence at the inauguration and other events?

21 A Yes.

22 Q And was that also the same with request -- with respect to your request to 23 have -- to be notified of any SARs that were filed in relation to January 6th?

24 A I don't recall.

25 Q Now, you were also asked if this was something that you had seen before at

1 your time at FinCEN.

2 While you were at FinCEN, was there any other violent attempt to interfere with 3 the peaceful transfer of power in this country?

4 A Not that I'm aware of, no.

5 Q Okay. And there wasn't an event of mass domestic violence and extremism
6 that we saw on January 6th while you were at FinCEN?

7 A I mean, I don't know I'm in a position to compare events. It certainly was 8 a -- yeah. I mean, versus, like, the marathon bombing or any other -- I'm not really in a 9 position to compare events.

10 Q Were you at FinCEN during the -- for the marathon bombing?

11 A I don't think so. When was the marathon bombing?

12 [REDACTED] I could not tell you, but --

13 [REDACTED] I don't recall.

14 [REDACTED] I believe it was well before you.

15 [REDACTED] I believe so. I don't recall. Yeah.

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q And, I mean, if you had worked on it specifically, you certainly don't 18 remember that?

19 A Correct.

20 Q Okay. So it's fair to say, based on your testimony, that FinCEN's work, 21 along with law enforcement and the banks, in the aftermath of January 6th was both 22 reactive, in terms of trying to figure out who was involved in January 6th, and proactive, 23 in terms of preventing future events, correct?

24 A Yes, absolutely.

25 Q And that's typical for FinCEN. FinCEN engages in both reactive and

1 proactive investigations. I don't mean about necessarily a specific event, but that --

2 A Yeah.

3 Q -- both fall within FinCEN's authority.

4 A Certainly, yes.

5 Q And like any other FinCEN Exchange or any other communication event, the 6 banks who participated in these exchanges after January 6th, their participation was 7 voluntary, correct?

8 A Correct.

9 Q They could have chosen not to communicate with FinCEN at all?

10 A Correct.

11 Q Other than filing SARs that they were required to under the law?

12 A Correct.

13 Q And the banks that did or financial institutions that did choose to participate,
14 any information that was shared with them, they were free to disregard if they so chose?

15 A I would certainly say that there was no specific requirement as to what they 16 were supposed to do with the information.

17 The extent to which they should have taken the information into account would 18 really have depended on the institution itself and their own assessment of their risk and 19 the relevancy of the information, et cetera, certainly not anything directed by FinCEN.

20 Q So it was up to the institution to determine to what extent --

21 A Entirely.

22 Q -- the information would be valuable?

23 A Yes.

24 Q And that's based on their own knowledge of their own customer base and 25 the scope of their presence nationwide, that sort of thing.

1 A Yes.

2 Q Okay.

3 A Among other things, yeah.

4 Q And you were asked some questions about the codes that were used. It's 5 fair to say -- and I believe this is how you explained it -- that the code is simply a shortcut
6 to help identify relevant SARs so that, rather than just going through the millions
7 individually, if law enforcement wants to identify SARs related to a specific event, perhaps 8 a specific type of crime, they can just type in the code, correct?

9 A Yes.

10 Q Okay. And you talked about the FinCEN Portal that had been set up and 11 the SISS system. Are those two different things?

12 A Yes, they are different things.

13 Q Okay. Can you explain the difference to me?

14 A So not in a very technical level, but the --

15 Q Fair enough. And that wasn't my question. Just more generally.

16 A Yeah. The FinCEN Portal is what I'm saying is a reference to -- when we say
17 the database of the BSA information that is filed with FinCEN, it's in the portal. I mean, 18 I'm sure there might be multiple systems at a technical level of how we ingest and get the 19 data into the portal and searchable. I don't really know any of the guts of the system.

20 But when I say FinCEN Portal, we're talking about the traditional database of BSA
21 data that's filed with FinCEN and then made accessible to those agencies that are entitled 22 to have it.

23 SISS is a secure information-sharing system separate from the portal, and it's a 24 mechanism -- so FinCEN uses it -- I don't want to take us on a tangent, but there are some 25 information-sharing mechanisms provided for in the USA PATRIOT Act, section 314(a) in

1 particular. SISS is -- and section 314(b). SISS facilitates those mechanisms.

2 FinCEN also has other information-collection authorities that they will sometimes
3 use SISS to collect the information. So it's more of an ad hoc manner of information
4 collection than the formal e-filing and portal process.

5 Q But it's an information-sharing system that is set up pursuant to the 6 authorities that permit FinCEN --

7 A Absolutely.

8 Q -- to share information.

9 A Correct.

10 Q Now, you mentioned section 314 of the PATRIOT Act, so I just want to 11 discuss that very briefly. And I'm actually going to introduce it. I will not be 12 introducing the entire PATRIOT Act, thankfully, just section 314.

13 So this will be exhibit 6.

14 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 6.

15 was marked for identification.]

16 BY [REDACTED]

17 Q So if you look on the second page, section 314(a) -- well, section 314 itself is 18 entitled "Cooperative Efforts to Deter Money Laundering," correct?

19 A Yes.

20 Q And section 314(a) is entitled "Cooperation Among Financial Institutions, 21 Regulatory Authorities, and Law Enforcement Authorities," correct?

22 A Yes.

23 Q And it states as follows: "The Secretary shall, within 120 days after the 24 date of enactment of this Act, adopt regulations to encourage further cooperation among 25 financial institutions, their regulatory authorities, and law enforcement authorities with a

1 specific purpose of encouraging regulatory authorities and law enforcement authorities
2 to share with financial institutions information regarding individuals, entities, and 3 organizations engaged in or reasonably suspected, based on credible evidence, of 4 engaging in terrorist acts or money laundering activities."

5 Did I read that correctly?

6 A Yes.

7 Q Okay. And then section 2 talks about the cooperation and 8 information-sharing procedures, correct?

9 A Yes.

10 Q Okay. Now, this type of information sharing that's described in section
11 314(a), that's part of what FinCEN was doing in the weeks after January 6th, correct?

12 A It was one of the several authorities that were being leveraged during that 13 period of time for the information sharing. In particular, it was the authority we would 14 use.

15 If we needed -- if FinCEN needed to disseminate specific indicators, for example,
16 like at the PII level, we would often use 314(a) as the mechanism to disseminate it.
17 That's not something we would just get on a Zoom and start talking about [REDACTED]
18 But we might do that via 314(a).

19 Q And so when you say specific information at the PII level, does that mean
20 that it's come to FinCEN's attention or a law enforcement agency's attention, they have a 21 particular individual in mind that's a suspect, and they want to ask financial institutions to 22 look for transactions that that person engaged in, they would use section 314(a)?

23 A Correct.

24 Q Okay. And can you explain a little bit more about how that process works?

25 A So there's a standard distribution -- I believe it's every two weeks -- where

1 FinCEN -- so FinCEN has a process to receive requests from law enforcement for the use
2 of this mechanism, and then every two weeks FinCEN will cobble together those multiple
3 requests into one distribution, and it goes out.

4 The standard distribution goes out to regulated financial institutions, mostly 5 banks. FinCEN has the authority to roll it out to other types of financial institutions, but 6 at least as of when I was there, it was primarily banks and a couple of MSBs, I think.

7 And the 314(a) request, exactly as you said, would ask those institutions to 8 respond, not with the underlying information, because 314(a) doesn't actually authorize 9 that, but to respond as to whether or not their institution has information related to 10 those individuals and entities. And, if so, it's a way for law enforcement to know the 11 location of the financial data.

12 Q And then law enforcement then determines whether or not to serve a 13 subpoena or whatever --

14 A Exactly.

15 Q -- it deems necessary --

16 A Correct.

17 Q -- with respect to that particular suspect.

18 A And they would need to use appropriate legal process to do so, correct.

19 Q Now, going back to the -- to SISS and the -- well, to make sure I understand 20 the difference, the portal is just access to the BSA data. So it's kind of like Westlaw for 21 looking at case law, correct?

22 A Yes, sure.

23 Q That's my only frame of reference.

24 And then SISS is more of a messaging platform to be able to share -- I mean, it's 25 not like a --

1 A Yeah, I wouldn't --

2 Q It's not Slack, but it's --

3 A I wouldn't say that, because it's also -- FinCEN would post documents that 4 those with access to SISS could download, the 314(a) distributions, for example.

5 There would be, like, drop-downs where they could input their responses for each
6 query -- yes, no.

7 It also maintains a repository of other documents, like the 314(b), which we'll get 8 to in a minute, participant list.

9 It's also a portal where, on an ad hoc basis, institutions can upload files in a secure 10 manner.

11 So it has a host of utilities, but it is not -- it does not possess BSA filings. Nobody 12 can go into SISS and search it or access any kind of SARs or CTRs or any of that; totally 13 different, separate mechanism and separate data holdings.

14 Q So it's information sharing that is separate from the actual SARs itself --

15 A Yes.

16 Q -- and separate from the BSA data itself.

17 A Correct.

18 Q Okay. And it is set up pursuant to statutory and regulatory authority.

19 A The information that is shared to and from are being shared pursuant to 20 those authorities. But physically setting up the system, I don't know one way or the 21 other. But yeah, it's --

22 Q Fair enough.

23 A Yes, to facilitate information sharing provided for by statute.

24 Q Okay. So the majority has stated in a report that it's published about what 25 it entitled "Financial Surveillance in America" that FinCEN and law enforcement would

1 communicate with the banks through secret back channel methods.

2 What is your response to that?

3 A Well, it certainly has a negative connotation. There's confidential -- there's 4 confidentiality that attaches to the sharing of protected information.

5 So there is information sharing that is occurring that is not known to those who
6 are not entitled to know about it.

7 Is it -- it would be inaccurate to say that that's being done in any manner that's not
8 otherwise clearly provided for by law. So that's what the implication sounds like, and I
9 would not agree with that characterization.

10 Q And the laws that provide for this type of information sharing, those are 11 publicly available. It's certainly a matter of public record that FinCEN is not only 12 authorized but required to set up information-sharing protocols and methodologies
13 between financial institutions, law enforcement, and FinCEN.

14 A Correct.

15 Q Okay. And since you touched on it, let's just briefly look at section 314(b), 16 which I believe is on the third page -- or not. No, it's on the --

18 Q Yeah, yeah.

19 A -- first page, second page.

20 Q Thank you.

21 And section 314(b) permits financial institutions to share information with one 22 another --

23 A Correct.

24 Q -- regarding individuals, entities, organizations, and countries suspected of 25 possible terrorist or money-laundering activities.

1 A Correct.

2 Q So there is some 314(b) information sharing that FinCEN is not a party to.

3 A Correct. Yeah. And just for clarification, the way that works, so it's 4 sharing between institutions, FinCEN doesn't need to be involved at all. But in order to 5 share information under 314(b), you have to have registered with FinCEN to do so.

6 So FinCEN maintains a participant list that's available on SISS. 314(b) participants
7 have access to SISS. So they know what institutions with which they can share.

8 Q So if I'm registered with FinCEN under a 314(b) and I want to know who else
9 the information I'm sharing goes to, that's available to me on SISS.

10 A So it's not -- so it's not as if -- no. Maybe I misunderstood. It's not as if 11 the information is, like, broadly shared and you look at the list to see who it goes to.

12 You're ABC Bank, you want to ask a question of XYZ Bank, or you want to send 13 something to XYZ Bank because you think they need to know about it. You would go to 14 the list to see if XYZ Bank is also a participant. And if they are, then you may validly, 15 under these parameters, share that information with XYZ Bank.

16 Q Okay. Thank you. That's very helpful.

17 [REDACTED] And with that, we can go off the record for now.

18 [Discussion off the record.]

19 [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

1

BY [REDACTED]

2

Q So I'd just like to clarify something that was just discussed, and correct me if

I'm wrong, but you mentioned that the SISS does not include BSA filings, and it's separate from the SAR process.

5

A Correct.

Q If we could look back at exhibit -- I believe it was exhibit 5, the email that you had sent to financial institutions.

The third bullet from the top asks, "In addition to your standard e-file process, please also upload the SAR to the SISS."

10

A Uh-huh.

11

Q So in this case, SARs were filed directly to the SISS and would be on.

12

A So, I guess, it comes down to what "would be on" means. It's a secure information-sharing system. It's not accessible to anybody but FinCEN. So it's not 14 searchable even to us.

13

15

It would literally be us going into the system and downloading a file that was 16 uploaded, and that's that. And we still required, in this instance, the institutions to follow the standard e-filing process, which would go into the portal, the database.

17

18

Q Is this the only situation that SARs were uploaded directly to the SISS?

19

A My general recollection is no, that I do recall there being other instances, but 20

I don't recall the circumstances.

21

Q And the participants who were part of the participant list who have access to the information here, would they also be able to download the SARs from the SISS?

22

23

A No.

24

[REDACTED] Just to clarify, how are typologies that FinCEN creates used?

25

[REDACTED] By whom?

1 [REDACTED] The financial institutions who receive them.

2 [REDACTED] I think you just said that FinCEN creates.

3 BY [REDACTED]

4 Q Doesn't FinCEN create the typologies?

5 A Well, law enforcement -- well, the bad guys create the typologies, to be 6 technical.

7 Anyone analyzing BSA data could derive that by observing the conduct of those 8 actors. So it could be law enforcement, it could be FinCEN, it could be IC, could be 9 regulators, whomever is analyzing BSA data.

10 Q Can the typologies that FinCEN shares with financial institutions be used as 11 the basis for filing SARs?

12 A That's a -- I'm trying to answer that honestly.

13 The typologies can be used by financial institutions to inform their assessment of 14 whether specific conduct is or is not suspicious. If they determine something is 15 suspicious, they'll file a SAR. If they determine something is not suspicious, they won't.

16 Those red flags and typologies can be used to inform that assessment.

17 Q Have you ever seen SARs filed along the lines of typologies that FinCEN 18 shares?

19 A You know, I didn't really read or analyze many SARs in my time at FinCEN.
20 It wasn't really part of my job. So that's not really a question I can answer.

21 Q Would that have been the Intelligence Division?

22 A Primarily, from a substantive assessment. Again, different divisions might 23 have had different needs to look at SARs. But, yes.

24 Q And you may have already touched on this as well, but the Intelligence
25 Division is the one who creates SARs within FinCEN -- or creates typologies within FinCEN?

1 A I think it would be fair to say that the Intelligence Division is the primary
2 component of FinCEN that would analyze BSA data and derive typologies.

3 Q Okay.

4 [REDACTED] I want to enter an email from Anthony Harris dated January 15th,
5 2021, and the attachments -- "Jan 15 2021 compiled typologies" and "KeyBank Query
6 Logic for Active Shooters" -- with the subject line "Compiled typologies in advance of 4:30 7 call" into the record as exhibit --

8 [REDACTED] 7.

9 [REDACTED] -- 7.

10 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 7.

11 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

12 [REDACTED] I'm just flagging -- I don't care at all -- but there's a redaction here.
13 If you want to add that to the official exhibit, Mark's name.

14 Okay.

15 BY [REDACTED]

16 Q Do you remember this email?

17 A Vaguely. Somewhat, yes.

18 Q And what do you remember about it?

19 A Not to be obnoxious, but that I sent it -- or that Tony sent it. That it was 20 sent.

21 Q Okay.

22 A I mean, I just recall seeing it and, you know.

23 Q And Anthony, I think you stated earlier, was the section chief within your 24 division. Is that right?

25 A Yeah. So my -- division office section. So Tony reported directly to me.

1 He was the chief in charge of one of my two sections in my office.

2 Q And it looks like there are 11 different financial institutions on this email.

3 A Okay.

4 Q Do you know how it was decided that these materials went to these financial
5 institutions and not others?

6 A I do not.

7 Q Do you know who would?

8 A I do not.

9 Q Do you remember if you had to get approval before sharing these materials
10 or if Anthony had to seek approval from you first?

11 A Yes. And to be clear, I don't specifically -- I said this earlier -- I don't 12 specifically recall whether approval was sought for this specific or if there was an 13 understanding that this was coming and that we were authorized and approved to send 14 it.

15 But, yes, this is not something that Tony or I sent on our own.

16 [REDACTED] If it was the latter where there was, like, an understanding that you
17 might be receiving this material and it could be sent, how would you have gained that 18 understanding?

19 [REDACTED] Well, it would have -- so my recollection is that there were times
20 when, for example, if one of the conversations, if one of the banks said, "Oh, we can 21 share X, we'll send it to you," someone on the -- an example of this, for example, if 22 someone on the call with authority to authorize me to send it said, "Great, we'll send it
23 out when we receive it," I may have interpreted that to mean I was approved. Or I may 24 have gone to that person to confirm, "Hey, I'm going to send this out. Are we good?"
25 Something like that I recall happening during that period of time.

1 And then others would have been more specific, like, "Hey, I got this. Are we
2 okay sending it out?"

3 ██████████ During that period of time, is your memory specific enough to refer to 4 January 2021, that some of the materials sent then came from --

5 ██████████ I was probably speaking about January to February, January to 6 March generally, my recollection. I'm not sure about this specific week, if you will.

BY ██████████

8 Q The subject line -- or, excuse me -- the body of the email also states, "in 9 advance of the 4:30 call."

10 Do you remember that call?

11 A No.

12 Q Do you remember if there were any pre-meetings within FinCEN to talk
13 about what would be discussed on that call?

14 A No.

15

BY ██████████

16 Q Do you remember any pre-meetings generally around this time, whether it 17 was discussion of typologies, key words, things like that?

18 A I think I answered that earlier. I have a general recollection that there were 19 some pre-meets and that there were not pre-meets before every conversation, but I'm 20 not sure I remember any details beyond that.

21 Q Any pre-meets -- again, with the understanding of not having a specific 22 recollection at this pre-meet this was discussed -- do you recall generally any of the 23 pre-meets where there was discussion of some of the terms on page Bates number 6
24 here?

25 A No. Although I will note on its face that this came from one of the financial

1 institutions, not FinCEN. So you're talking about an internal FinCEN pre-meet?

2 Q Yes.

3 A Got it. I don't recall.

4 BY [REDACTED]

5 Q Do you remember what the purpose of this call was?

6 A No.

7 Q Do you remember if there were any other Federal representatives other
8 than FinCEN on the call?

9 A No.

10 [REDACTED] Was this part of the, as we discussed earlier, kind of the daily
11 Zoom calls that you were having with financial institutions?

12 [REDACTED] I don't recall. I mean, I'm noting that I have two emails in front of 13 me that appear to refer to separate calls on the same day. So I have no idea of whether 14 they were part of a particular cadence or not. I don't recall.

15 [REDACTED] As part of those daily Zoom calls, were representatives from the 16 FBI and DOJ on those calls?

17 [REDACTED] I recall -- the answer is yes to some. I don't recall whether they 18 were on all.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q Are you aware of how soon following January 6th FinCEN began coordinating 21 with the FBI?

22 A No.

23 Q How about with financial institutions?

24 A I don't recall. All I can say was I don't remember the date of the 25 inauguration, but I do know it was at some point before that.

1 Q Can you describe how FinCEN viewed its role in the investigation into
2 January 6th?

3 A Probably only with reference to the mission statements. I mean, I think we
4 were using FinCEN Exchange in a manner consistent with how we always used FinCEN
5 Exchange. That's how we viewed it.

6 Q And so would you view FinCEN as the lead or FBI as the lead?

7 A I'm not sure I would make that distinction.

8 Q Okay. Do you recall if certain thresholds or fact-based patterns for 9 reviewing data was discussed on the call or any of these calls?

10 A Repeat that for me. Sorry.

11 Q Sure. Were certain thresholds or fact-based patterns discussed on the calls 12 that you had with financial institutions?

13 A I'm not sure what you mean by thresholds. Like, financial thresholds or 14 thresholds to file a SAR or -- I'm not sure what you mean by threshold.

15 Q Were either of those discussed?

16 A Not to my recollection. I don't recall.

17 Q Did fact-based -- were fact-based patterns surrounding the events of January 18 6th discussed, to your recollection?

19 A And, again, not knowing what is meant specifically by fact-based patterns,
20 we had a -- I do recall at a general level discussions on red flags, typologies, indicators.

21 Q During a transcribed interview with the committee, Mr. Peter Sullivan with 22 the FBI stated that certain fact-based patterns were discussed with FinCEN and financial 23 institutions on at least one of these calls. Does that --

24 A Did he define fact-based pattern in that conversation?

25 Q In terms of certain transactions that were made related to travel,

1 weapons-related transactions.

2 [REDACTED] Do you guys have the transcript or some context you can give 3 him for that?

4 [REDACTED] I'm just -- not at the moment, no.

5 [REDACTED] Yeah. I don't recall any of that.

6

BY [REDACTED]

7 Q Okay. Have you heard of FinCEN creating fact-based patterns before or --

8 A I'm still not really --

9 Q -- you're not sure?

10 A I'm still not sure what you mean by fact-based patterns.

11 Q The answer may be no. I'm just --

12 A No. Yeah, I mean, I'm sure the answer is going to be I don't recall, because 13 I don't really remember this level of specificity. But, like, I don't -- I'm struggling with 14 what that means, if it's different than, for example, what I'm referring to as a red flag or a 15 typology.

16 Q Are you aware of the Bank of America SAR that has been the subject
17 of -- part of -- one of the subjects of the committee's investigation that was filed following
18 January 6th?

19 A I don't have a specific recollection of it.

20 Q Have you seen these typologies before?

21 A Which ones are we talking about?

22 Q Any of them.

23 [REDACTED] Any of what?

24 [REDACTED] Bates stamp 6, Bates stamp 7.

25

BY [REDACTED]

1 Q Does this look familiar?

2 A So on Bates stamp 6, what's characterized as number 1, my recollection is
3 that came from one of the bank participants. So this is the first time -- when I
4 received -- or whomever at FinCEN received this would have been the first time I saw it.

5 Number 2, I believe, is a reference to a previously published FinCEN advisory. I
6 might be wrong about that. I feel like we may have published one subsequent to this,
7 too. I don't recall. But I was generally aware of this type of analysis that's reflected in 8 number 2 that's attributed to FinCEN.

9 And then same thing on the whole KeyBank deck would have all been new to me
10 upon receiving it from KeyBank.

11 Q And did you receive the bank submission?

12 A I don't recall if I was the specific person or not. I mean, I may have been on 13 the email or I may have been the recipient directly. I don't recall.

14 Q And do you remember which bank submitted this?

15 A The deck?

16 Q The first number says, "1) Bank submission."

17 A Oh, I do not remember -- I do not recall which bank that is.

18 Q With respect to the lone actor, homegrown violent extremism indicators
19 developed from a prior FinCEN analysis, would that have been the Intelligence Division 20 that produced these?

21 A I would say primarily. They worked closely with an office in our Policy 22 Division, which at least when I was at FinCEN was technically the office that was 23 responsible for our advisories.

24 So I imagine most of the analysis was Intelligence Division, potentially in 25 conjunction with some of the folks in the Strategic Policy Office.

1 Q Do you recall whether these materials were shared with any other Federal 2 agencies?

3 A I don't recall.

4 Q What's the purpose of sharing these kinds of materials with financial
5 institutions?

6 A I don't want to mischaracterize it. I mean, I view the purpose of that as 7 that consistent with FinCEN's mission and the statutory authorities that we were using, all 8 of which have, like, mission and purpose statements.

9 Q Was there an expectation with how banks might use this information?

10 A Not to my recollection, no.

11 Q Are you aware of other typologies concerning domestic activity that were 12 shared with financial institutions following January 6th?

13 A I mean, I am generally aware that this was not the only communication that 14 was sent or received in relation to this period of time. Any level of specificity beyond 15 that, I don't recall.

16 Q Moving to that first number, the bank submission, it states, "Terms used for 17 searching Zelle payment messages for indicators of involvement in the riots or potential 18 violence." It then included search terms like MAGA and Trump and America First.

19 Have you seen search terms like this before?

20 A No. And I wouldn't have been the one analyzing that data anyway.

21 BY [REDACTED]

22 Q Who would have been analyzing that data?

23 A Some combination of law enforcement, FinCEN Intelligence Division, the 24 folks whose job it was to do that, I guess.

25 Q To your understanding, were there any internal discussions at FinCEN about

1 whether sharing these typologies implicated any First Amendment concerns?

2 A I don't recall.

3 Q Independent of this specific exhibit and independent of January 2021, at a
4 high level during your time at FinCEN were you ever aware of any conversations regarding 5 whether certain typologies would potentially implicate the First Amendment?

6 A Not that I recall.

7 Q During any of your time at FinCEN, were there ever instances where certain 8 terms, typologies would refer specifically to political leaders?

9 A I'm sorry. Can you restate the question?

10 Q Sure. So just in the list, there's Trump, Kamala, Biden. Are there other 11 instances during your time at FinCEN where some of the terms would be referring to 12 American political leaders?

13 A Oh. Not that I recall. I don't recall.

14 Q Do you recall one way or the other whether it stood out? Was there
15 anything unique about the typologies that you received from the banks during this time 16 period?

17 A Well, they felt unique to the topic as distinct from human trafficking or drugs
18 or something like that. So, I mean, unique from that perspective.

19 But in terms of the general category of indicators and red flags that might be used,
20 no, I don't recall thinking that anything was unique.

21 Q In an earlier answer you referenced, when asked why you send this 22 information to the other banks, you invoked the mission statement and the purpose of 23 the agency.

24 But just at a more -- again, just based on your understanding, not quoting the 25 mission statement or whatever it might be -- what's the benefit of sending these terms to

1 the banks?

2 A So take a big step back. I mean, if you talk -- especially some of the 3 institutions that were receiving this, B of A and Citi, millions and millions of customers, 4 billions of transactions -- their transaction monitoring program that they analyze to 5 determine whether SARs are filed probably has pretty generic typologies. So they're 6 looking for a needle in a whole big pile of haystacks.

7 So one of the purposes of disseminating typologies is to narrow the scope of a
8 search. So, for example, if you're looking for somebody located in California, it doesn't 9 make sense to look for people in New Mexico. You know you're looking for a 10 Californian.

11 So if you have that info and you can restrict your search and eliminate the other 12 49 and every other country, you have now greatly increased the chances that you're 13 going to find something relevant.

14 I say that at a high level because it's possible that a Zelle message that 15 says -- that's sent in March for NCAA tournament dues is not where you're looking -- I 16 mean, could be a clever way to cover something up.

17 I'm not suggesting you don't want to look at it, but that's less likely to be relevant 18 to the conduct you're looking for than perhaps terms that you might otherwise expect to 19 be more relevant to certain types of communications you're looking.

20 So a lot of it was to help them -- to provide them with more information that 21 might be helpful for them to generate higher quality results for analysis, I suppose.

22 Q Was there any internal discussion about whether the typologies included in 23 this list, yes, might narrow the scope, but also might disproportionately target 24 transactions that are completely fine and aren't the concern?

25 A I don't recall one way or the other specific discussions about that.

1 Q If there were to be discussions about that within FinCEN, whose team would
2 take the lead on assessing those types of concerns?

3 A I'm not sure I can answer that question. I mean, I don't know if it -- if it
4 involved legal issues maybe -- I'm not sure I can offer much there.

5

BY [REDACTED]

6 Q How would a financial institution search Zelle payment messages?

7 A I don't know. I suppose it would depend on their internal system. I mean,
8 the financial institution would have a record of the transactions that moved through its 9 institution and would have some sort of system that it could use to query that info, I 10 suppose.

11 Q And query that info using some of the terms here as we've discussed to 12 narrow the universe of potentially suspicious activity?

13 A I mean, I don't have firsthand knowledge. I can't even sit here and 14 guarantee you that every institution has that technological capability. I don't know.

15 Q Do you know if anyone communicated with Zelle that you would be 16 searching their payment messages?

17 A I don't know. Is Zelle even a company, or is it just a service that the 18 banks -- I don't know. Not to my knowledge.

19 Q Are you aware of whether FinCEN is searching Zelle payment messages?

20 A So FinCEN doesn't have access to transactional data unless it is filed as part 21 of a valid report, CTR or SAR or whatever. If it is in the BSA data in a manner that is 22 queryable, then the answer would be yes.

23 Did that answer the question?

24 Q So within that system, are you aware of searches for Zelle payment 25 messages?

1 A I'm not aware one way or the other of what people at FinCEN were doing to
2 analyze the BSA data. That's not what I did at FinCEN.

3 [REDACTED] And just to clarify, are you clear one way or another about 4 whether Zelle payment messages would have been reported as part of BSA filings?

5 [REDACTED] It is quite possible. Any type of financial transaction that goes
6 through a regulated institution is expected to be monitored for purposes of suspicious
7 activity reporting. So that would include Zelle, wires, whatever.

8 [REDACTED] At this time, did any of the financial institutions have questions
9 on what was expected of them when this was sent?

10 So did the financial institutions think that they needed to run a search using all of 11 these terms, and any time one of those search terms yielded a hit, they would have to file
12 something with FinCEN?

13 [REDACTED] I'm very confident that, especially this group, which is a pretty 14 sophisticated group of large institutions that had engaged with FinCEN with some 15 regularity, I'm confident that none of them believed that there was an expectation that 16 the mere existence of these terms made something suspicious.

17 [REDACTED] Did anyone ask questions about it?

18 [REDACTED] Not that I recall.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q Just as a general practice, not specific to this email, if FinCEN is on the 21 receiving end of the listed typologies and then is considering sharing that with a broader 22 group of banks, is that -- does that process ever loop in legal counsel?

23 A I generally would not have been involved in that process, so I'm not sure.

24 Q Who generally is involved in that process?

25 A I'm not certain. I don't know.

1 Again, I know that Intelligence Division would do some of the actual analysis.
2 But in terms of how it goes from that early stage to here's something we're ready to
3 publish, I wasn't really involved. I'm not sure.

4 Q To your understanding, was this list modified in any way based on filings
5 received by FinCEN?

6 A I don't recall.

7

BY [REDACTED]

8 Q And so it was your office that ultimately made the decision to share these 9 typologies.

10 A No. It would not have been my office's decision. My office would have 11 been the one that physically shared it. But I likely and my staff wouldn't have had the 12 direct -- I shouldn't say authority. There's no specific thing written down that says who 13 can do what necessarily.

14 But, no, neither me nor my staff would have made an independent decision on 15 whether or not to share this.

16 Q So who would make that decision?

17 A I don't know.

18 Q You don't know who made that decision in this instance?

19 A Correct, I don't. I don't recall.

20

BY [REDACTED]

21 Q On these daily Zoom calls, whether they occurred daily or near daily around 22 this time, who is the most senior person at FinCEN to attend those meetings?

23 A I know for a fact that AnnaLou was on most of them. She was one of seven 24 division heads, plus chief counsel, eight, that reported up to the director and deputy 25 director.

1 I do have a recollection that the director popped in at least once or twice, sort of
2 with a preamble or whatnot, but I don't recall him being a regular participant.

3 AnnaLou and one or two other associate director or deputy associate director
4 level personnel, such as Jimmy and Kim, would have been involved.

5 And those are -- the ADs were SES's. FinCEN only had about 10, 11, 12 SES's.
6 Most of them were division heads, chief counsel, director, deputy director, Ken, if he's 7 still there, CTO.

8 Sorry. I started whispering on you guys. Sorry.

9 Q How frequently would the director attend calls with representatives from 10 the banks, on calls like [inaudible] from January 2021?

11 A Sorry. You're asking in connection with this --

12 Q No. Independent of this. Just to get a sense of --

13 A Just as a general matter? I mean, gosh, it --

14 [REDACTED] To the extent you know what Director Blanco would have been 15 involved in.

16 [REDACTED] Yeah. I wouldn't even know -- I would only know a fraction of 17 what he did. You know, he would usually be at BSAAG twice a year, not the working 18 groups. But I really couldn't speak much to that.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q Have you seen indicators like the ones listed here before?

21 A I'm not sure what you mean by "like the ones." I mean, these specific 22 indicators do appear relatively specific to this topic.

23 Q And what office at FinCEN has the responsibility for creating extremism
24 indicators?

25 A So those could come from anywhere, again. I mean, a lot of times they

1 came from law enforcement, financial institutions sharing things. From an analysis of 2 BSA data at FinCEN, it would, to my knowledge, primarily be the Intelligence Division.

3 Q And are you aware of whether they created these indicators?

4 A In number 1?

5 Q Number 2.

6 A Oh, number 2. I don't have any specific knowledge of where these came 7 from. But as a general matter, based on my knowledge of FinCEN, most of this analysis
8 would likely have come out of the Intelligence Division.

9 Q When a financial institution receives indicators like this, how can they use
10 them in their system? In other words, how do you translate these indicators into 11 queryable, actionable items?

12 A I'm not sure I can really speak to what individual banks would be able to do,
13 to the extent they did anything at all. I really don't know.

14 Q Are you able to speak in general how they might?

15 A As a general matter, I suppose they could do manual searches. They could 16 develop an algorithm that includes some of this info. I mean, there's any number of 17 things. It depends on what their program looks like, what their tech stack looks like.

18 Q You mentioned earlier that this was a sophisticated group of banks. So do 19 you have any idea how their systems might be able to use this?

20 A I don't. And, anecdotally, even though they were sophisticated banks, I 21 wouldn't assume that their tech followed suit.

22 A lot of -- having been inside a big bank, a lot of times these banks get big by 23 acquiring other companies. And so you end up with about 20 systems with duct tape
24 and trying to -- it can be pretty messy.

25 So I couldn't tell you one way or the other.

1 Q One of the extremism indicators includes, "Transportation charges, such as
2 bus tickets, rental cars, or plane tickets, for travel to areas with no apparent purpose or 3 not commensurate with the previous travel history of the customer, for example, travel
4 to high-risk areas or indirect flightpaths for no apparent legitimate reason."

5 A Uh-huh.

6 Q Do financial institutions monitor and report these transactions?

7 A I don't know one way or the other.

8 Q Does FinCEN monitor Americans' transportation-related transactions?

9 A I don't know one way or the other.

10 Q Would they not have to in order to produce an analysis concluding this as an 11 indicator?

12 A I just wasn't involved in that work. Couldn't tell you.

13 Q How would FinCEN or a financial institution be able to determine whether 14 travel was for a legitimate reason or had no apparent purpose?

15 A I don't know.

16 [REDACTED] What type -- which personnel within FinCEN would be better able to 17 speak to conducting that type of assessment?

18 [REDACTED] I mean, I would defer to FinCEN. But my best guess would be 19 Intelligence Division personnel.

20 [REDACTED] Did you have a primary point of contact with the Intelligence Division?
21 Who did you --

22 [REDACTED] I'm not sure I would say I had a primary -- they're colleagues. It
23 depends on the -- you know, I would -- at my level, it most frequently would have been 24 Jimmy or Kim or their office directors. But I don't have any specific recollection beyond 25 Jimmy or Kim.

1 BY [REDACTED]

2 Q Another one of the extremist indicators includes, "The purchase of books
3 (including religious texts) and subscriptions to other media containing extremist views."

4 A Uh-huh.

5 Q Do you know how FinCEN may have concluded this as an indicator?

6 A I do not.

7 Q Did you review these indicators before they were sent out?

8 A I'm sure I read them. I didn't review them for any purpose. My job was 9 to send them. So I didn't review, evaluate, modify, revise any of that.

10 Q Do you know who sent these indicators to you?

11 A I don't recall. Again, likely would have been someone in ID.

12 Q Are there certain religious texts that FinCEN considers an indicator of 13 extremism?

14 A Not to my knowledge.

15 Q Are you aware of whether FinCEN monitors Americans' media subscriptions?

16 A Not to my knowledge.

17 Q Do you know whether FinCEN has a list of books or media that it believes 18 contains extremist views?

19 A Not to my knowledge.

20 Q To your knowledge, are financial institutions monitoring Americans'
21 purchases of books or media subscriptions?

22 A I don't have knowledge.

23 What I would say is that financial institutions may have monitoring programs in 24 place that would include in its scope all customer transactions, for example, which,
25 presumably, may include credit card purchases wherever or things of that nature.

1 [2:43 p.m.]

BY [REDACTED]

Q How would a financial institution be able to tell what kind of media or book is being purchased, according to these indicators?

5

A I don't know.

6

Q Does it concern you that FinCEN is listing the purchases of religious texts as potential indicators of extremism?

8

A I'm not sure I'm really credible to speak on that, my personal views.

Q I'd be interested in that.

10

A I'm going to decline to answer that.

11

[REDACTED] In the calls that were happening in January 2021, do you recall any of the parties, whether it's FinCEN, the FBI, other government agencies, any of the private sector representatives, raising concerns of whether some of the assessments being conducted, the typologies, implicated First Amendment concerns?

12

13

14

15

[REDACTED] I don't recall.

16

[REDACTED] Were these discussions fulsome conversations or was it more thanks for the information; we'll talk to you tomorrow?

17

18

[REDACTED] More the former, more fulsome than thanks for sending, see ya.

19

[REDACTED] And on none of those calls, to your recollection, were people

20 saying this might be going a step too far?

21

[REDACTED] I don't recall that. I mean, it's three and a half years ago, and I'm

22 an old man. I don't remember what I had for breakfast yesterday, so --

23

BY [REDACTED]

24

Q Do you recall, during any of the calls, whether there was points of tension, differing views, things that needed to be sorted out?

25

1 A I don't recall. The best of my recollection is that it was collaborative. You
2 know, whether institutions chose to do something or not, I couldn't tell you, but I don't
3 recall there being any tension or points of issue in the discussions.

4 Q For category two here where there's talk about violent extremism indicators,
5 and it looks like it's coming from previous work product, let's say it is from the 6 Intelligence Division, if there are issues that start to touch upon First Amendment
7 concerns, is your office looped into that process at all?

8 A We likely would not be, no.

9 Q Which -- besides counsel office itself, which offices or divisions would have 10 been involved in the preparation of that type of work product?

11 A Counsel would be the only logical assessment, in my view, but I don't really 12 know one way or the other.

13 Q At a very high level, not to implicate, what types of issues from your office
14 would require the counsel's office to make assessments?

15 A We're not a big office. That's a very broad question. I'm not really sure 16 how to answer that, right. I'm -- I mean, if my team was in a BSAAG conversation and 17 heard something that we thought was useful to someone else at FinCEN, or that we 18 thought someone at FinCEN should consider, or that -- you know, it's very subjective.
19 That's a very hard question to answer. I'm sorry.

20 It's no different than what I experience in any other job, right. I mean, when do
21 you tell your -- when do you raise something for your boss or handle it yourself? Or 22 when do you -- right? I'm not sure I can give at that high level a better answer than that.

23 Q Obviously, we're trying to work with you.

24 A Yeah, I know. Fair.

25 Q On a granular level, you know, sometimes, right, you're not able to recall

1 what discussions did or did not take place, so just trying to get a sense at a higher level.

2 A Fair. Yeah, I mean -- as an example, I mean, it's not as relevant to this, but
3 on the data access side, if my team was conducting a review of the FBI's usage of BSA
4 data or LAPD and saw something of note, that maybe Officer Jenkins was doing
5 something, that might be something that would hit my desk, and I may tell leadership, 6 you know, that sounds like something that somebody should know about, right, just as an 7 example, right.

8 But, again, it falls subjectivity and judgment as to whether something needs to be 9 escalated or not to a higher level or the, you know, counsel needs to be consulted.

10 Q Generally, if an issue that was within your purview and you felt may warrant 11 being considered by counsel, is that a decision you can make or would you tell one of the 12 folks above you and ultimately they would make a decision whether to loop it to counsel?

13 A It's hard to answer that hypothetically. I mean, if I saw something in the 14 normal course that I think I needed a lawyer's input on, I would likely just go to counsel.
15 If I thought it was something that needed to be escalated, whether it had legal questions
16 or not, I would probably go to my leadership, as a general matter.

17 [REDACTED] As part of the approval process when you were sending out this 18 information, do you know if the counsel's office was looped in as well?

19 [REDACTED] I think we're coming pretty close on the privilege line there.

20 [REDACTED] I don't know if you want to try to rephrase it. I think at a high level, 21 we can -- without implicating the privilege.

22 [REDACTED] I think if you guys want to ask about discussions that FinCEN
23 counsel had with others at FinCEN, you can direct those to us and not to him in an 24 interview. Like, those are pretty squarely within the privilege.

25 [REDACTED] Okay. We can talk more, obviously, off the record, but I think there

1 will be interest from the committee to have an understanding of what guardrails were put 2 in place and what those look like. And the witness is representing he was not privy to 3 those, so, you know, we'll take that in good faith. But that is information that the 4 committee will be interested in.

5 [REDACTED] I'm happy to follow up with you guys.

6

BY [REDACTED]

7 Q Does FinCEN rely on MCC codes in its investigations?

8 A What's MCC?

9 Q Merchant category codes.

10 A Not to my recollection.

11 Q Do you know whether your office or other offices ever provided financial 12 institutions with how to use merchant category codes?

13 A No, I don't know. I would actually go so far as to say I have an affirmative 14 recollection that I'm not aware of that happening. I don't remember hearing MCC at all 15 when I was at FinCEN.

16 Q I'll just move to the KeyBank slideshow. Do you recall receiving this email
17 from -- this in an email from KeyBank?

18 A Not specifically.

19 Q Okay. I'll introduce -- I'd like to now introduce an email from KeyBank to 20 [REDACTED] dated January 15, 2021, with the subject line "Inauguration Task Force" into 21 the record as exhibit 8.

22 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 8.

23 was marked for identification.]

24 [REDACTED] You guys went inkjet on this one, huh.

25 Okay.

BY [REDACTED]

Q Had you received slideshows like this before or after from financial institutions?

4

A I'm sorry, before or after this particular email, you mean?

Q Yeah. Did you receive slideshows like this from financial institutions?

A I don't recall.

Q Do you recall receiving this email?

8

A I mean, I do now. I don't have a specific recollection beyond what's on the page.

10

Q Do you recall, once you received this from KeyBank, what you did with it?

11

A No.

12

Q Did you review the material?

13

A Same answer as before, I'm sure I read it, but it wasn't my job to evaluate or 14 do anything with it, other than, if necessary, disseminate it.

15

Q And so looking at the -- 16

[REDACTED] Do you guys have the attachment to this email?

17

[REDACTED] Yeah, it's the KeyBank slideshow that's --

18

[REDACTED] Okay. Do you have it attached to this email so he knows that it's the same document, for purposes of the record?

19

20

21

I'll represent for the record that the attachment states, "KeyBank Query Logic for

22

Active Shooters 01-15-2021," and that the slideshow entered as exhibit 7 is KeyBank

23

Query Logic for Active Shooters and is named as the same attachment in Bates stamp 5

24 that's named in Bates stamp 235.

25

[REDACTED] Thanks.

1 [REDACTED] Can I just point out, for what it's worth, though, that I don't know if
2 there is a time change that's causing this to be screwed up here, but --

3 [REDACTED] There is. They're not converted. That's minus five and this 4 is just regular.

5 [REDACTED] Oh, so this happened before this?

6 [REDACTED] Yep.

7 [REDACTED] Got it. Okay.

8 [REDACTED] So could you just briefly explain what the slideshow is?

9 [REDACTED] Not beyond what's on the page itself. I didn't create it. I didn't 10 do anything with it, other than be copied on an email in which it was disseminated.

11 [REDACTED] But you received it as well?

12 [REDACTED] Based on this email, that's what it appears. I don't specifically 13 recall beyond what's on the email.

14 [REDACTED] I will also note that Anthony Harris received this one.

15 [REDACTED] Right.

16 I mean, I'm not trying to be cagey. My staff and I were the ones that were 17 organizing these events. So not all the time but much, maybe most, I couldn't really 18 necessarily say, but certainly much of the information that was being sent and received 19 was coming through us. That was what our responsibility was, but that was really the 20 limit of what my staff and I were doing.

21 In terms of, like, oh, now we have this information, let's do something with it, I
22 was neither involved in that, nor am I necessarily aware of what was being done
23 internally.

24 BY [REDACTED]

25 Q Which team or division would your team share this slide deck with?

1 A So there was a -- I don't remember specifically who, but there was certainly a
2 group of people at FinCEN involved in these conversations broadly that would have -- we 3 would have disseminated that internally to that group; you know, the most relevant of 4 which, to the best of my recollection again, would be Jimmy and Kim and their staff in ID.

5 Q Besides Jimmy and Kim, any other offices that --

6 A I don't specifically remember which of their staff members was involved in 7 this topic.

8 Q Both the offices themselves and individuals or --

9 A Correct. I'm not even sure I can name the offices of ID. I don't think I 10 could even when I was at FinCEN, but, no, because Jimmy and Kim ran the division, and 11 they definitely did have offices and sections. But I don't recall which personnel or which 12 offices or sections were involved in this.

13 Q Do you recall, outside of the Intelligence Division, which other divisions 14 would have had a practice during this time period you likely would've looped in?

15 A Yeah, so certainly Strategic Operations, which -- right. I have a vague 16 recollection that there would've been one or two people from our Policy Division because 17 that's the division that does oversee our advisory program. But beyond that, I don't 18 recall.

19 Q What about the Enforcement Division?

20 A I don't recall whether they were included or not.

21 BY ██████████

22 Q So once you receive something like this, do you -- I know you stated that you 23 kind of just distribute it. Did you feel any responsibility to evaluate the material? Was 24 that a part of your --

25 A It would not have been a part of what I was asked to do at FinCEN, and I

1 don't believe I would have.

2 Q Was there any material that you received from outside entities that you
3 didn't distribute?

4 A My answer is going to be I don't recall either way. I'm not sure if you mean
5 on this particular topic or ever at FinCEN, but I don't recall either way.

6 Q I mean, while in your role as the director of the stakeholder engagement
7 division.

8 A I mean, the question is generally whether I ever received things that I didn't
9 disseminate?

10 Q Well, I'm trying to understand, if there are things that you didn't 11 disseminate, that suggests you may have evaluated it and thought it's not worth 12 disseminating.

13 A It may be possible that at some point I was sent something or not that I may 14 or may not have disseminated. It was never a result of my evaluation or my staff's 15 evaluation of the content. We didn't do that.

16 Q Did anyone at FinCEN evaluate this content?

17 A I can confidently say that we would have. I don't know who, and I wasn't 18 involved in the evaluation of it.

19 Q Were you at all concerned about sharing information without evaluating it?

20 A I did not have a concern because I was under the impression that those 21 charged with evaluating the information were doing so.

22 Q Which would have been whom?

23 A It depends on the information, but, you know, substantively, most likely the 24 Intelligence Division.

25 Q Okay. So it could have been that you received this email with the KeyBank

1 slideshow, and you shared that with the Intelligence Division, and they say -- they sign off
2 on whether or not they think it's good to distribute?

3 A I don't recall specifically whether that's what happened.

4 Q Is that something that could have happened or has happened while you
5 were at FinCEN?

6 A I'm trying to remember whether I ever accepted what ID said or whether I
7 went to my own leadership for confirmation that they were comfortable with sending it
8 out.

9 [REDACTED] Is your leadership on this email incoming from KeyBank?

10 [REDACTED] Yeah. So at this point in time, AnnaLou was my division head, and 11 she was on this comm. I don't specifically recall from whom I obtained approval to 12 disseminate this.

13 [REDACTED] Would it have been typical for you to just chat with AnnaLou and 14 say, do you think this is good to go?

15 [REDACTED] I mean, I spoke to my boss pretty frequently, so that was typical.
16 And this is something I expect I would have sought approval on. That's a half answer.

17 BY [REDACTED]

18 Q Why?

19 A Why?

20 Q Yeah, just what about this one?

21 A Just as a general matter, you know, in the context of disseminating 22 information to the private sector, I would've -- especially, you know, in connection to a 23 topical event, I would have sought confirmation from my superiors that that 24 dissemination was appropriate.

25 Q For any topical event, not necessarily January 6th, do you recall any

1 instances where one of your superiors told you that information would not be
2 appropriate for dissemination to private sector partners?

3 A I don't recall one way or the other.

4 Q Were you ever asked to weigh in on whether dissemination would be
5 appropriate, or was it more you're just receiving instruction or approval?

6 A I don't have any specific recollection. I do have a general recollection that 7 that kind of conversation may have taken place with me on the phone. Like, I have a
8 general recollection that I was on a call or in a discussion where that topic was being 9 discussed, but it wouldn't have been my place to weigh in one way or the other. It's just 10 not what I did there.

11 [REDACTED] I think we can go off the record.

12 [Recess.]

13 [REDACTED] We are back on.

14 BY [REDACTED]

15 Q Okay. So I would like to start and just take a step back. You said
16 something and I believe counsel said something during the previous hour. Counsel said
17 something about, you know, were you concerned about the banks might flag transactions
18 that, you know, look like they're perfectly legal. And you had given an example of, you
19 know, somebody writes, this is for an FCAA tournament in March. And then you 20 qualified that by saying, well, that actually could still be a code for something.

21 The vast majority of financial transactions on their face look legal, correct?

22 A Correct.

23 Q I mean, it would be very unusual to see a Zelle message that says this is for 24 fentanyl?

25 A Here's the problem and why it's very, very complex but it kind of reinforces

1 the point. It depends on the context, right, and your bank knows a lot of info about you.
2 So if your bank -- if you make 40 grand a year, your bank knows that. If you've got a 3 balance of about a thousand dollars for the last 3 years, your bank knows that.

4 If you send a Zelle -- if you receive a Zelle for 15 grand, that's going to stick out for 5 that person, regardless of what it says; whereas, the guy who's making six figures, who's 6 maintaining a $20,000 balance in his savings account, that's not going to flag anything.

7 So it's totally contextual, which is generally why no one red flag would ever be 8 something that people would say, oh, that's definitely suspicious. It really is contextual,
9 and it depends on the compilation of factors.

10 Q And depending on the scenario, whatever type of suspicious activity you're 11 looking for, and then depending on the type of customer, that compilation of factors is 12 going to be different, correct?

13 A Yes.

14 Q Okay. And banks have to look at a variety of factors and, really, the totality
15 of all of the circumstances in order to determine if a transaction is suspicious?

16 A Yes.

17 Q And they make those determinations often with the benefit and insight of 18 information that FinCEN has shared, either that FinCEN has developed or that law
19 enforcement has developed, with information about current trends in money laundering, 20 terrorism, financing, and the other crimes that FinCEN focuses on, correct?

21 A Yes.

22 Q And, you know, just as another example of a type of reporting, I
23 mean -- well, let me step back.

24 The Bank Secrecy Act requires the reporting of any transaction and cash
25 transaction of $10,000 or more, correct?

1 A Yes.

2 Q Even if there's nothing else?

3 A Correct.

4 Q It could be completely out -- you know, completely consistent, the person
5 could do it every day, but --

6 A Absolutely. That's just a rules-based if it's 10k of cash, it's a report, full 7 stop.

8 Q But outside of that kind of line drawing, there's so many different factors
9 that are involved?

10 A Yeah. I mean, so there's -- there are many reports required by the BSA.

11 Most of them are just, like, if you have a foreign financial account, you have to file it.

12 There's no subjectivity there. Ten thousand in cash, you have to file it.

13 SARs are much more subjective.

14 Q Right. And because of the subjectivity, FinCEN is trying to provide 15 information to help banks be effective in identifying those transactions that, standing
16 alone on their face might look perfectly innocent but, in combination with other factors, 17 might be indicative of criminal activity?

18 A Yes.

19 Q Now, I want to turn to the exhibit 7, which was the email from Anthony 20 Harris, with the list of indicators. So I'm looking at -- it's HJC118 Bates stamp 6.

21 So -- now, you said this repeatedly, but just to be clear. It was not FinCEN's
22 intent, and your belief is that it was not the banks' intent, for any one of the terms listed
23 here with percentage marks on either side to trigger a SAR, correct?

24 A Correct.

25 Q There would have to be many other factors before a SAR?

1 A I wouldn't necessarily say many, you know, but it would -- the existence of 2 this -- of one of these terms would not generally by itself make something suspicious.

3 Q So if somebody sent a Zelle payment message, and in the message it said
4 "Trump," even after January 6th, that would not by itself -- it was not FinCEN's intent by 5 forwarding this to say, file a SAR for every message that has Trump in it?

6 A It was absolutely not FinCEN's intent to say that, correct.

7 Q And if somebody were to say otherwise, if somebody were to say, FinCEN
8 was flagging Zelle messages that used the words "Trump" or "MAGA," that would be 9 incorrect? Well, would that be correct? I don't want to do --

10 A Yeah. Can you restate that? I'm sorry.

11 Q If somebody were to look at this email and say, FinCEN was flagging Zelle
12 messages that used the word "Trump" as suspicious transactions, that would be an 13 incorrect statement, correct?

14 A Correct.

15 Q Okay. And the same for any of these terms on this list?

16 A Correct.

17 Q Okay. In and of themselves?

18 A Correct.

19 Q And --

20 A It's very hard for me to say that because of the subjectivity, right. I mean, it
21 is possible that, you know, a third-year analyst at J.P.Morgan sees a Zelle that says
22 "murder" and may choose to file a SAR because it says murder. I mean, I can't say not,
23 you know.

24 Q And that's fair. And that raises a good point, which is that some of these --

25 A I wouldn't call --

- 1 Q -- some of these terms --
- 2 A -- all these terms like -- exactly.
- 3 Q They are not alike, correct?
- 4 A They're not necessarily alike with each other, correct.
- 5 Q Some are names, like Trump, correct, and some are things like murder,
- 6 death?
- 7 A And that's -- I mean, again, I can't speak for anybody, but at a just -- as a
- 8 hypothetical, it might be reasonable for somebody to see a payment that says "murder"
- 9 and consider that suspicious. I would say it would be unreasonable for somebody to see
- 10 a payment that says "Capitol" or "patriot" and think that that's alone suspicious, right. I
- 11 mean, so they're definitely not the same.
- 12 Q And it was not your intent to have any one of these by themselves trigger a
- 13 SAR?
- 14 A Correct.
- 15 Q Okay. And this email in particular has been cited by the majority as
- 16 evidence of FinCEN targeting bank customers with conservative viewpoints, and the focus
- 17 was on words like "Trump" and "MAGA" and "America first." But as counsel pointed
- 18 out, there's other terms on this list, such as "Kamala," correct?
- 19 A Correct, that is on the list.
- 20 Q Biden is on the list?
- 21 A Correct.
- 22 Q Antifa is on the list, I believe?
- 23 A Correct -- yes.
- 24 Q Pelosi, correct? It's the third one down.
- 25 A Yep.

1 Q And the last one is Schumer.

2 A Yep.

3 Q And there were others, like "storm the" is a term --

4 A Right. And also, back up to -- I believe your original question said that this
5 is being used as evidence that FinCEN -- these terms did not come from FinCEN. FinCEN
6 disseminated them, but these terms were provided to FinCEN by a financial institution.

7 Q Now, I want to look at the list right below that, the Lone Actor/Homegrown
8 Violent Extremism Indicators. Again, just as with the list above, none of these 9 indicators, to your understanding, was intended to be taken by itself as a sufficient basis
10 for a SAR?

11 A That is correct. I don't recall FinCEN ever disseminating anything, to my 12 recollection, where we ever said or expected somebody to determine that something was 13 suspicious on the basis of a specific indicator.

14 Q So -- and, again, just to be clear, if someone were to say that by 15 disseminating this FinCEN was asking banks to flag any transportation charge as 16 suspicious, that would be incorrect?

17 A To my knowledge, that is not what we intended. That would be incorrect.

18 Q And when you look at this list of indicators here, is there anything on this list
19 that targets conservative viewpoints?

20 A I don't think I'm in a position to opine on that.

21 Q Fair enough.

22 You were asked in the previous hour if FinCEN monitored American's 23 transportation. Does FinCEN have the ability, re access to the data, to be able to 24 monitor that?

25 A I mean, generally, no. If there were transportation-related transactions

1 that were filed in a SAR or something else, then theoretically that would be available to
2 FinCEN.

3 Q And it would be available because somebody in a bank's AML/CFT
4 department determined, through its consideration of a variety of factors, that that 5 transaction was suspicious?

6 A Correct.

7 Q And --

8 A If it was a SAR.

9 Q If it was a SAR.

10 A Right.

11 Q Okay. Now, I want to look at just some of these indicators. If you look at 12 just the first two: The long periods of account inactivity, or normal usage, but in the 13 months or years preceding an attack, a sudden surge of activity -- a change in activity
14 type. And then if you look at the second one: Sudden purchase of firearms, firearm 15 parts and accessories, ammunition, tactical gear at outdoor supply stores, purchases at 16 shooting ranges not commensurate with previously known customer behavior. And 17 then you look at some of the others, like the next several ones on -- the next several 18 indicators on the next page.

19 If you saw all of those indicators for a particular customer, that might be the kind
20 of customer for which a SAR should be triggered, correct?

21 A I mean, it would be subjective, right. Certainly an investigator might come 22 to that conclusion.

23 Q Right. And sometimes different investigators are going to reach different
24 conclusions?

25 A Correct.

1 Q Because it is so subjective?

2 A Correct.

3 Q And, again, as you said, banks had information about their customers that 4 FinCEN, that law enforcement simply don't have?

5 A Correct.

6 Q Banks know their account history, their account usage, their income or their 7 relative income, how much money is coming into the bank, that sort of thing?

8 A Correct.

9 Q Okay. Now, when FinCEN received these from -- this list of indicators from 10 a bank and then forwarded them to other institutions, was FinCEN endorsing the use of 11 these indicators?

12 A So I don't have firsthand knowledge, but on the face of this, this second 13 batch of indicators appears to be FinCEN-developed, but I don't -- I would -- wasn't 14 involved with and don't have any knowledge with how they were developed.

15 Q Fair enough.

16 What about the first one that says "bank submission" that your understanding is 17 that the bank developed?

18 A That was a bank that sent us those indicators.

19 Q And in forwarding these indicators, whether they were developed by FinCEN
20 or developed by the bank, was FinCEN asking the banks to file SARs?

21 A No.

22 Q Was FinCEN encouraging the banks to file SARs?

23 A No.

24 Q Now, in the majority's March 2024 report, it states that this list
25 demonstrates that the Federal Government broadly enlisted financial institutions to flag

1 certain kinds of purchases that the government deemed to be unnecessary.

2 Is that an accurate statement?

3 A No.

4 Q Now, I want to take a look at the PowerPoint that was also attached to this
5 email. Again, as with the previous attachment, the previous typologies, this was not a 6 request by FinCEN to file SARs that matched any of the indicators in this PowerPoint?

7 A Correct.

8 Q And this was not a request by FinCEN to flag any particular transactions or 9 anything like that?

10 A What do you mean by flag?

11 Q Well, I guess the only -- is there a way to flag a transaction other than by 12 filing a SAR?

13 A Not --

14 Q A suspicious --

15 A There's no way to flag transactions for FinCEN and law enforcement's
16 visibility without filing a BSA report.

17 Q Now -- give me 1 minute.

18 If you take a look at exhibit 8, which is the email to you and your colleague from a 19 redacted employee at KeyBank, the employee describes the PowerPoint as, "a typology to 20 detect potential active shooters that we are using right now to see if we have parties of 21 concern."

22 Law enforcement actually wants to prevent active shooters from committing acts
23 of --

24 A I would certainly hope so.

25 Q -- mass shooting, correct?

1 And your understanding is that part of FinCEN's mission is to help identify those 2 folks and prevent those crimes from happening?

3 A Absolutely.

4 And can I just point out, I mean, I think there's a lot of talk about what FinCEN
5 expected or didn't expect. I mean, I think it's instructive to see the words on the page 6 from one of the bank participants where they're characterizing this whole thing as,
7 typologies to detect potential shooters that we are using right now to see if we have 8 parties of concern.

9 So, again, it's instead of looking for that needle in a haystack in millions of 10 transactions, it's let's take a narrow subset that fits certain characteristics and look at 11 those to evaluate whether they are suspicious.

12 Are we going to miss some that aren't in that batch? Probably. Are we going 13 to be overly inclusive in looking at things that we decide are not suspicious? Absolutely.
14 But it makes it manageable. It makes it much more efficient and effective to generate 15 high-quality reviews. That was the purpose and, I think at least in this instance, that was 16 what was understood by the participants.

17 Q Thank you. That's very helpful.

18 And I want to take your advice and focus on the language of the PowerPoint itself
19 that KeyBank sent to you. So I'm looking at the page that starts -- that says, "Active 20 Shooter Detection - Methodology 1." And this is where you have, under Transaction 21 Population, it says, "Query for credit/debit card purchases involving any of the following 22 MCC codes."

23 Do you see that?

24 A Yeah. Do you mind if I -- when I first got this, I didn't really look at the deck 25 at all just because I didn't think -- give me a minute or two to --

- 1 Q Absolutely. Take all the time you need.
- 2 A -- just acclimate myself with the deck, please, yeah.
- 3 Q And please don't feel rushed.
- 4 A All right. Thank you.
- 5 Okay. Great. Thank you.
- 6 Q Thank you. I appreciate that.
- 7 Okay. So the very first section under the title has a list of MCC codes.
- 8 A Uh-huh.
- 9 Q And it says: "Query for credit/debit card purchases involving any of the 10 following MCC codes," correct?
- 11 A Yes.
- 12 Q Okay. And then there is a very long list of keyword exclusions, correct?
- 13 A Yes.
- 14 Q Okay. Now, the slide itself, if you continue to look at it, makes clear that 15 not every transaction involving the listed MCC codes is going to be reported, correct? If 16 you look at the third bullet point about the 60-day rollback period.
- 17 A Correct.
- 18 Q Okay. There's several parameters from just the bank's own methodology
19 that must be met. So number one is there have to be five or more distinct and different 20 merchants/vendors of the above population set by the customer, correct?
- 21 A Uh-huh.
- 22 Q And there has to be an aggregate purchase transaction totaling $2,500 or 23 more from the above MCC codes by the customer, correct?
- 24 A Uh-huh, yes.
- 25 Q And the number of transactions at the above MCC codes have to be greater

1 than 50 percent of the total number of transactions by the customer, and the aggregate
2 purchase amount at the above MCC codes has to be 50 percent of total purchases by the 3 customer, correct?

4 A Yes.

5 Q So if somebody were to characterize this slide as KeyBank saying they're 6 going to file a SAR for any purchase from an MCC code related to pawnshops or arms
7 stores or sporting goods stores, that would be incorrect, wouldn't it?

8 A It most certainly does not clearly indicate that this will lead to the filing of a 9 SAR. I'm not sure that it excludes the possibility that somebody could interpret that to 10 be the outcome here, right. I mean, if they -- in other words, if there were transactions
11 that fit all of these parameters, maybe they would file a SAR. I don't know that I can tell 12 from the face of the slide, but it certainly doesn't indicate that a SAR would or must be 13 filed.

14 Q And to that point, it would have to be not just that a purchase involved one
15 of the following MCC codes, but also meet those four parameters that I just read, correct?

16 A Correct, and exclude all of these others.

17 Q And exclude all of the others.

18 A Right.

19 Q So for someone to say that -- if someone were to say that FinCEN was 20 distributing a slide deck asking banks to flag purchases from MCC codes relating to 21 firearms, any purchase relating to firearms, that would be incorrect?

22 A That would be incorrect.

23 Q Okay. And the same goes for methodology number 2, correct?

24 A Correct.

25 Q Okay. And, again, when FinCEN forwards this type of information from one

1 bank to other banks, it is not asking or encouraging them to file SARs based on the 2 methodologies or typologies contained in these types of documents?

3 A Correct.

4 Q The banks are expected to use their own judgment and their own analysis,
5 based on their knowledge of their customers' database, on how best, if at all, to 6 incorporate the information in these slide decks?

7 A Correct.

8 Q Okay.

9 [REDACTED] Okay. We can go off the record.

10 [Discussion off the record.]

11 [REDACTED] We can go back on.

12 So I'd like to start by entering into the record an email from [REDACTED] dated 13 January 16th, 2021, with the subject line "Capitol Riots" into the record as exhibit 9.

14 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 9.

15 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

16 [REDACTED] Okay.

17 [REDACTED] I'm also going to enter an excerpt from the Institute for Strategic 18 Dialogue's report titled, "Bankrolling Bigotry: An Overview of the Online Funding of 19 American Hate Groups" into the record as exhibit 10. This is attached to the email that 20 we just introduced -- or is linked to the email that we just introduced.

21 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 10.

22 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

23 [REDACTED] Okay.

24

BY [REDACTED]

25 Q Okay. Do you remember sending this email?

1 A No.

2 Q Do you recall if you reviewed the information in the links that were included
3 in the email before you shared it with these financial institutions?

4 A I can confidently say I did not review for the purpose of evaluating or making
5 any determination. I don't recall whether I looked at it or reviewed it.

6 Q Do you know if these materials were shared with any other Federal agency?

7 A I don't know.

8 Q So among other links in this email, it includes links of the Anti-Defamation
9 League's hate symbol database, and to a report that we introduced, authored by the 10 Institute for Strategic Dialogue, titled, "Bankrolling Bigotry."

11 Does FinCEN maintain a list of American hate groups or hate symbols?

12 A Not to my knowledge. I do recall in the general context of this topic that 13 there was a list that someone at FinCEN had, but I don't know what that was derived 14 from. It may have come from these same sources or something else. I don't know.

15 Q Does FinCEN often rely on groups like these in making those determinations 16 as to what is a hate symbol?

17 A I couldn't tell you. I don't know.

18 Q Did you ever speak with the Anti-Defamation League regarding the links
19 shared?

20 A I did not.

21 Q What about with the Institute for Strategic Dialogue?

22 A I did not.

23 Q Do you know if FinCEN, anyone else at FinCEN works with groups like ADL
24 and ISD --

25 A I do not.

1 Q -- to understand their methodology?

2 A I don't know.

3 Q When you sent this email -- when did you become aware of this hate symbol
4 database, if you recall?

5 A What do you mean by hate symbol database?

6 Q It's the --

7 A Are you referring to the ADL website?

8 Q The ADL website.

9 A Oh, I don't recall.

10 Q Do you recall anyone at FinCEN having concerns about sending this report to 11 financial institutions?

12 A Not that I recall.

13 Q Did any financial institutions express any concerns when they received it?

14 A Not that I recall.

15 Q Did FinCEN intend that banks would investigate these groups that were 16 included in these lists when sending this information?

17 A I would not say that we intended any specific action. We viewed this as 18 providing information that would be helpful to them during whatever analyses they were 19 conducting.

20 BY [REDACTED]

21 Q Who at FinCEN conducts the assessment to determine what's valuable or 22 potentially valuable to private sector partners?

23 A That's a great question. Probably a lot of different divisions. I mean,
24 certainly my own division, the Strategic Operations Division, you know, that's a 25 conversation that came up a lot in the BSAAG context, you know, financial institutions

1 asking for more information to help inform their efforts instead of kind of operating blind.

2 So from a policy perspective, SOD or Policy Division might have gotten that
3 feedback or have an input on that. You know, enforcement, intelligence from a
4 substantive perspective. Front office, Main Treasury, politic -- I have no idea. I mean,
5 it could be any number of inputs.

6 Q For the inputs in this email, for example, the link from ADL, is that something
7 you would have found on your own? Is that information that's being transmitted to you
8 in preparation for drafting this email?

9 A So I have zero recollection of where any of these came from, other than to 10 tell you that it wasn't my job to generate any of this. So it didn't come from my staff or 11 me. But I don't remember who at FinCEN or other stakeholders provided these.

12 Q With the understanding you don't have a specific recollection for this email
13 and how it was prepared, for content like what's in the first paragraph, the link to the ADL
14 website, which division or, more specific, office within FinCEN would it have fallen within 15 their purview to find this kind of information and also have it transmitted to you and your 16 team?

17 A As a general matter, that kind of substantive analysis would generally be the 18 Intelligence Division.

19 Q And independent of this email, just so the record is clear, understanding you
20 didn't have any interactions with ADL about this link, just generally as part of your role at 21 FinCEN in any context, did you have any interactions with ADL?

22 A Not to my recollection.

23 Q Same with ISD?

24 A Correct. Not to my recollection.

25 Q And what about the Global Disinformation Index?

1 A Not to my recollection.

BY [REDACTED]

3 Q You also stated these might be of value to the financial institutions. How 4 can a financial institution use these?

5 A Is that what's in the email when I said -- saying it had value?

6 Q In response to an earlier question.

7 A Oh, is that what I said? You know, it's data points, right. When an 8 investigator or a bank is looking at a set of transactions or a customer and evaluating 9 whether the transactions or the conduct of the customer is something that warrants a 10 SAR or not, data points are helpful. So I think it's just additional data for them to have 11 access to.

12 Q So a bank might be able to take that list of groups and see, do I have any 13 customers that are these groups, and review some of their transactions to see if there's 14 suspicious activity?

15 A That might be something a bank chooses to do or not based on the receipt 16 of this. That is certainly something they could do.

17 [REDACTED] Your office specifically is not assessing the value of links and 18 documents like this, though, is that it?

19 [REDACTED] Correct. Correct.

20 [REDACTED] That would be the Intelligence Division, most likely?

21 [REDACTED] Yeah. I mean, I say as a general matter just because, right, 22 everybody brings in their own experience, right. Did we have senior advisors that 23 worked with the director that were former prosecutors that had info?

24 I mean, info could theoretically have come from any FinCEN -- you know, from a 25 personal matter. But in terms of the structure of FinCEN, that kind of substantive

1 analysis was generally the Intelligence Division.

2 I should also say that FinCEN has a division that was newly stood up while I was
3 there. I believe it's called Global Investigations. I don't recall it being a division at this 4 time. I don't remember one way or the other, and I don't recall, given the domestic 5 nature, that it was involved at all. But I wanted to raise that because most of my 6 answers when I say things like the substantive analysis would generally be ID, I would add
7 that, if appropriate, it would also be the Global Investigations Division.

8 I've sort of forgotten them. Don't tell Matt, if it's still Matt.

9 So that would be the second sort of primary division that substantively crunches
10 BSA data for that purpose.

11 [REDACTED] Who's the head of that division?

12 [REDACTED] When I was there, it was a guy named -- was it Matt Stiglitz?

13 [REDACTED] Uh-huh. Still is.

14 [REDACTED] Still is. So he's the head of that division.

15 But, again, I'm not even sure if it was a division at this time, nor, given the global 16 nature of it, do I think it was involved. I just -- you've asked a lot of general questions of 17 who would it be, who would it be, and I keep saying ID, ID. And just occurred to me it's 18 probably also GID in many cases.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q In early 2021, do you have a sense of how big the Intelligence Division is?

21 A I have a general sense. It was one of FinCEN's larger divisions. Certainly 22 less than a hundred. I'm pretty sure more than 30 or 40. I'm not sure I can get much 23 more specific, but it was one of the larger divisions.

24 Q Understanding you didn't have any interactions as part of your role, to your 25 understanding, did others at FinCEN have any relationships or just even points of contact

1 with ADL?

2 A Not that I'm aware of.

3 Q This is intended just as a general question, if you have any awareness. In 4 response to an earlier question, you mentioned that providing data points -- that data
5 points could be helpful. In any context, are you aware of any assessment being 6 conducted about whether certain data points came from political sources or sources with 7 certain political objectives that might change how the dataset was compiled or would 8 raise any concerns about the impartiality of it?

9 A I don't recall those conversations one way or the other.

10

BY [REDACTED]

11 Q The email also states that MUFGE kindly circulated the ISD report. Did you
12 ever speak with MUFGE about their report?

13 A I don't have a specific recollection. I mean, I can confidently say I would 14 not have had a substantive conversation with them. Was I the person who received it or 15 not? I may have been. I don't recall.

16 Q Do you recall if they indicated how it was using their report when they sent it
17 to you?

18 A No.

19 Q Do you know if they had had any conversations with ADL or ISD?

20 A I do not.

21 [REDACTED] Who was your primary point of contact at MUFGE?

22 [REDACTED] I don't recall having a specific primary point of contact. Generally,
23 whoever it was in the context of this activity would probably be the folks on this email.

24 Give me a second and let me see if I can refresh my recollection.

25 I believe of these folks that are listed on the email, it was M. Roth is my

1 recollection of being the primary.

2 [REDACTED] Do you recall for this individual what their first name was?

3 [REDACTED] I don't. I feel like I want to say Monique, but I don't know for 4 certain.

5 [REDACTED] I'd now like to enter an email from [REDACTED] dated
6 January 18, 2021, with the subject line "Capitol Riots" into the record as exhibit 11.

7 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 11.

8 [REDACTED] was marked for identification.]

9 [REDACTED] This is January 18th, right?

10 [REDACTED] Yes.

1 [3:58 p.m.]

2

BY [REDACTED]

Q Do you remember sending this email?

A Not specifically, no.

Q Can you explain what the purpose of the email is?

A Not beyond the words on the page. It appears it was more information that could potentially be used to narrow the scope of activity that they were looking at.

8

Q Narrow the scope of activity to what? What do these identify?

9

A So I have a general recollection that some of the funding, we were aware -- I

10 don't recall how, whether from law enforcement or whomever -- that some of the 11 funding mechanisms that supported the events of January 6th were through 12 crowdfunding websites.

13

So the thinking was, by identifying possibilities of what those funding mechanisms

14 were, it could be, again, another data point that could be used to try to understand a particular customer's activity or, broadly, customers' activity.

15

16

Q So the email also states that FinCEN has observed people using the site to 17 post an event and sell tickets, including bus tickets, to the demonstrations, and then

18 identifies a transaction reference.

19

Is selling tickets to events or demonstrations evidence of potentially suspicious

20 activity?

21

A So, first, I would note there's no indication that FinCEN said this. I don't recall what the source of this info was. The info says, "People have been observed using this site." I don't -- that could have come from law enforcement, it could have come from a bank that shared it. I don't recall where it came from. So I don't know for a fact that this was FinCEN saying.

22

23

24

25

1 But, no, like everything else, no specific data point was intended to convey a
2 determination of suspicion. It was just a data point, a factor.

3 Q And what is a transaction reference?

4 A To the best of my knowledge, like if you were to go and log into your bank
5 app right now and look at your own card purchases, like if you're not filling anything out
6 when you use your card, whether it's the merchant or whomever, I'm not certain, like 7 there's some reference that's attached to those card purchases.

8 So I believe that's what this is a reference to.

9 Q And so in this instance, what are those transaction references identifying?

10 A It appears the use of Eventbrite. It also specifies a particular phone
11 number. I don't know what that phone number is. I'm not really sure that I can 12 answer that, actually.

13 Q One of the things the email mentions is, for example, "EB March for TR."
14 Are you aware of what that was short for?

15 A No.

16 Q Could it have been Eventbrite, March for Trump?

17 A I don't know.

18 Q And you're not aware of how you became aware of this transaction
19 reference?

20 A Correct. I have no recollection of what the source of this info was.

21 Q And so if a financial institution --

22 [REDACTED] Is this -- do you have -- it looks like a whole email chain. I'm not 23 sure if there's more info --

24 [REDACTED] There is.

25 [REDACTED] -- in other parts of this chain. But --

1 [REDACTED] Not relevant to this topic.

2 [REDACTED] No? Okay. I mean, I --

3 [REDACTED] Well, I think that's for him to decide.

4 [REDACTED] Yeah, I don't know one way. Certainly, I have no recollection, nor 5 on the face of this does it give me any information to answer that question.

6 [REDACTED] So if a financial institution that's on this email inserted the 7 transaction reference that you identified, what would that return?

8 [REDACTED] I'm not sure I understand. Insert -- inserted that where?

9 [REDACTED] Well, that's my question. I'm trying to understand how this 10 transaction reference is used.

11 [REDACTED] If you know.

12 If that would be a question for him or the financial institutions as to how they're 13 going to use it.

14 [REDACTED] Yeah. I mean, again, I think I kind of addressed this earlier. Like,
15 it would depend, I suppose, on what systems they have in place to query their own data.
16 I can't even represent that all of these institutions have the ability to query in that 17 manner. I don't know.

18 BY [REDACTED]

19 Q For an email like this one, obviously there's a list of names, and based off
20 your recollection very likely received that from someone else within FinCEN.

21 So the text of Eventbrite, for example, are you on the receiving end of that text, 22 you're just copying and pasting it into the email, or are you playing some role in the 23 editing process summarizing what you received?

24 A I did not make any substantive edits to the information that I received from a 25 substantive perspective. I also wouldn't assume this came from FinCEN. I don't know

1 what the source of this info was.

2 Again, I was disseminating it. It may have come from another financial
3 institution, it may have come from law enforcement, it may have come from FinCEN. I
4 don't recall. And my staff and I would not have played any role in changing any of that 5 content.

6 Q Even down to the -- for example, for an email like this, typically, that would 7 be --

8 A None of this --

9 Q That was already -- whoever it was, whether it was --

10 A None of this is my work product or my staff's.

11 [REDACTED] And just so we're clear for housekeeping, the email you guys
12 are asking about is an internal email that was just among the banks, if you look at the top.
13 You've just been asking him questions about the email that he sent below.

14 But just so the record is clear, that top part should probably be redacted.

15 [REDACTED] And for what it's worth, when you forward something along, you
16 can edit it. So I'm -- I can't even represent that this is an accurate depiction of what I
17 sent. I don't think it matters one way or the other because I don't recall. But, I mean, 18 technically. But yeah, I mean, sort of the messenger here.

19 BY [REDACTED]

20 Q I'll represent that we received this exact email from several different
21 financial institutions.

22 Had you used transaction references before?

23 A Meaning like has FinCEN ever disseminated information about transaction
24 references?

25 Q Sure. Have you disseminated information about transaction references

1 before or after this one?

2 A I have a general recollection that some advisory or advisories along the way
3 would have referenced maybe, for example, like wire details or some sort of reference
4 number information. It's not an uncommon factor.

5 Q When the email says observing people, do you know what that means,
6 "People have been observed"?

7 A I do not.

8 Q And you're unaware of how those people may have been observed?

9 A Correct.

10 Q Does FinCEN monitor crowdfunding sites?

11 A I have no knowledge one way or the other.

12 Q And did you ever communicate with Eventbrite?

13 A No.

14 Q GoFundMe?

15 A None of these names I have ever communicated with.

16 Q Are you aware of anybody else at FinCEN who may have communicated with 17 these crowdfunding sites?

18 A Not that I'm aware of.

19 Q And I assume you didn't inform these crowdfunding sites that these 20 transaction references may be being monitored?

21 A I personally did not. I don't have any knowledge of whether that had 22 happened.

23 Q The second line of the email states "Anedot.com," 24 and follows with, "You may see a Card Purchase with the transaction reference in the 25 following format: 'A [a message or like a cause or candidate] with the phone number in

1 the following format,'" and then has the phone number.

2 What is Anedot.com?

3 A I have no idea.

4 Q Do you have any idea why Anedot was targeted?

5 A I'm not sure I would agree with the premise of that question, but I don't 6 have any knowledge either way.

7 Q Do you have any idea what transactions this transaction reference might 8 identify?

9 A No.

10 [REDACTED] Do you know if this refers to political contributions?

11 [REDACTED] I do not know one way or the other.

12 [REDACTED] Did you have to seek any approval or discuss with anyone any of 13 the transaction references in this email before sending it?

14 [REDACTED] I don't recall.

15 [REDACTED] During this time period, are you aware of any contents, whether it be 16 tied to this email chain, of where political donations were a typology or something that 17 contributed to?

18 [REDACTED] I'm not aware of that, no.

19 [REDACTED] Can we just go off the record?

20 [Discussion off the record.]

21 [REDACTED] We can go back on.

22 Okay. I'd now like to enter an email from [REDACTED] dated January 16th,
23 2021, and one of the attachments, "MUFG Typology slide," with the subject line "Capitol
24 Riots," into the record as exhibit 12.

25 [REDACTED] Exhibit No. 12.

1 was marked for identification.]

2 [REDACTED] Okay.

3 BY [REDACTED]

4 Q Do you remember sending this email?

5 A No.

6 Q Do you recall if there were any discussions at FinCEN before sending this
7 email?

8 A No. I don't recall.

9 Q The email states that the attachments are from MUFG.

10 Do you have any idea why MUFG sent these attachments or shared these 11 attachments?

12 [REDACTED] Just for the record, I think he only has one of the two 13 attachments on this actual exhibit, right?

14 [REDACTED] Yeah. I only entered one of the attachments into the record.

15 [REDACTED] Okay. Yeah. I mean, well, as a general matter, that's what these 16 discussions were, a forum for the sharing of information if anyone was so inclined. So 17 you can infer that MUFG felt inclined to share this.

18 BY [REDACTED]

19 Q And do you remember discussing these materials with MUFG?

20 A No.

21 Q Do you remember in those discussions just trying to elicit some of this
22 information sharing?

23 A I don't remember any such discussions one way or the other.

24 Q Do you recall, once you received these materials from MUFG, what you did
25 with them?

1 A I do not specifically recall. I can confidently say that I would have
2 disseminated them internally to the appropriate group, and then, again, either sought
3 approval to disseminate or at the time felt that it was something that I had approval to
4 disseminate.

5 Q And who would be the appropriate groups to disseminate something like 6 this to internally?

7 A I think I addressed this earlier. I don't specifically recall. I mean, there
8 was definitely an internal group of FinCEN folks that were generally working on this topic
9 and involved, ID folks being the most prominent to my recollection. But I don't really 10 recall beyond that.

11 Q Turning to the slide itself.
12 Do you recall whether you reviewed this slide?

13 A I don't recall one way or the other. Again, I would note that I would not 14 have reviewed it -- I wouldn't have done anything but read it. I wasn't evaluating or 15 reviewing it for substance.

16 Q How would a bank use the typology and the MCC Codes it lists to review
17 certain transactions?

18 A Well, to the extent that they're able to search those types of information in 19 their systems, they would, I guess, search for that code and isolate for review those 20 transactions, I guess, or would be one factor that they would use to apply in a search.

21 Q And this slide lists transfers to GiveSendGo or other crowdfunding sites.
22 Are you aware of whether FinCEN or MUFG was scrutinizing these kinds of 23 transactions?

24 A I'm not aware.

25 Q The note at the bottom also mentions DIA.

1 Do you know what DIA is?

2 A My assumption, based on nothing but the page, is that it's the Data Insights
3 and Analytics team at MUFG, which is in the title of the slide.

4 Q And it also mentions may warrant escalation.

5 A I think what it actually says is that there's no single hit may warrant
6 escalation, but more than one could.

7 So it reinforces the notion that these banks understood that they weren't being
8 told that any one of these factors was requiring or expecting or should lead to a SAR.

9 It was a data point that they could use if they wanted to for evaluation. I think 10 that's, essentially, what MUFG is saying there.

11 Q And so the question I was going to ask is, when it says warrant escalation,
12 what does that mean to you?

13 A Warrant escalation -- well, it depends on the parlance of the individual bank.
14 I read this, I think they mean file a SAR. It could just be a reference to some step prior to 15 that internally.

16 I mean, they may have a -- some banks have, like, a level one, and if they see 17 something that's a maybe, it goes to the level two that are a little more experienced to 18 make those determinations.

19 So I don't know what they mean here, but one of those.

20 Q It also mentions that DIA will, quote, "look to sort for these typologies via 21 in-person versus online purchases."

22 Do you have any idea what that means?

23 A I do not.

24 [REDACTED] So you've mentioned the Intelligence Division and the Global 25 Investigations Division.

1 Are there any other divisions that review and analyze and evaluate BSA data?

2 [REDACTED] So I definitely answered this earlier. I mean, several divisions do
3 for different reasons. I mean, Policy for policy reasons and advisory reasons,
4 Enforcement for enforcement activity. Some folks in SOD for -- we have the global FIU
5 component.

6 So many, if not most, divisions of FinCEN may have some reason to review BSA
7 data. And, of course, best ask FinCEN that question. I don't know.

8 BY [REDACTED]

9 Q Turning back to the previous exhibit, the typologies via in-person versus 10 online, independent of this email, just at a high level, are you aware of any sort of 11 discussion as to what that might mean, how typologies might apply for in-person
12 transactions but be different if the transaction is made online?

13 A I'm sorry. Will you restate that question for me?

14 Q Sure. Independent of this email, during your time at FinCEN, do you recall 15 any sort of discussions about typologies applying for in-person purchases as opposed to 16 online purchases, whether they be different lists or prioritizing different typologies.

17 A Yeah. I mean, I definitely do not recall some, like, standalone factor turning 18 on whether it was in-person or online. Like that doesn't really make sense to me.

19 Totally separate from anything we've been discussing, there are certain red flags
20 that may only be present in person.

21 So, for example, bank tellers are generally trained to spot people that are antsy
22 and uncomfortable. Or you'll commonly see a SAR where somebody tries to withdraw 23 10,000 bucks, they get asked to fill out a form, and they say, "Oh, just kidding, I only need 24 9,000." They're supposed to file a SAR because that's somebody avoiding.

25 That would only generally be in person. Cash, of course, would only be in

1 person.

2 Online you get a whole different -- you talked about identity fraud and login
3 credentials.

4 So there are certainly significant differences there. But in terms of, like, here's a
5 type of conduct and it only is meaningful in one, that, I don't -- that's not familiar to me.

6 [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

7 [Discussion off the record.]

8 [REDACTED] Back on the record.

9

BY [REDACTED]

10 Q I want to start with exhibit 12, the slide from MUFGB, the "GFCD Intelligence
11 & Analytics, Data Insights and Analytics."

12 A That's the most recent? Okay. Yep. Got it.

13 Q Okay. So you pointed out the note on the bottom of the slide, which says,
14 "DIA plans on looking at these typologies holistically, that is no single hit may warrant
15 escalation but more than one could."

16 A Uh-huh.

17 Q And that is consistent with all of your testimony about how these typologies
18 are intended to be used and, in your experience, how they are used by banks, correct?

19 A Yes.

20 Q Okay. Now, in the majority's March 2024 report, it states that, according to 21 this particular slide, quote, "Account information and transactions meeting any of the 11
22 typology criteria may have been flagged and shared with Federal law enforcement as 23 being suspicious," end quote. And that's on page 29 of the report.

24 Is that an accurate statement based on your understanding of this --

25 A No. It's contradicted on its face by the incident.

1 Q Okay. Now, going back to the exhibit number, which I can't
2 remember -- exhibit 10 -- or I guess it was 9 and 10, the email that had several different
3 links attached, including -- and then exhibit 10 is the excerpt from the ISD report.

4 Let's start with exhibit 10. And this should be clear from all of your testimony so
5 far, but just for the record, in circulating this you did not intend to suggest that 6 membership in any one of the organizations here was sufficient to trigger a suspicious
7 activity report, correct?

8 A Correct.

9 Q Okay. Now, the majority's report claims that FinCEN's distribution of this 10 ISDN report and the ADL link amounts to an approval of its contents, methods, and 11 conclusions.

12 Do you agree with that statement?

13 A No. And I'm not sure I'm the right person to ask that question, but I don't 14 personally agree with that, no.

15 Q Fair enough. Okay.

16 Now let's take a look at exhibit 11, which is the exhibit with a list of crowdfunding
17 sites.

18 Now, you noted that at the bottom of this exhibit it is clear that this is part of an 19 email thread, and the bottom of this exhibit shows the "from" and "to" line of an email
20 you sent on Sunday, January 17th, 2021, at 4:06 p.m.

21 And I am just going to represent for the record that that email was an email from 22 you to these recipients with a link to a list from the Department of Justice of individuals
23 who had been charged with offenses related to their roles in January 6th.

24 A Okay.

25 Q Does that sound familiar, like something you might have sent?

1 A I mean, I don't have any recollection. It sounds on brand of what we were
2 doing, but --

3 Q Fair enough.

4 Okay. Now, by sending this list of crowdfunding sites, were you asking financial 5 institutions to file SARs for any transactions with crowdfunding sites?

6 A No.

7 Q And did you -- were you trying to hint to them or encourage to them that
8 any crowdfunding site transaction should be flagged?

9 A No.

10 Q Now, in the majority's report they stated that, according to this email, simply 11 purchasing a ticket to an event was enough for FinCEN to consider this activity as 12 suspicious.

13 Is that accurate?

14 A No.

15 Q And they also say that FinCEN was soliciting and encouraging financial 16 institutions to report on the accounts of any persons involved in crowdfunding events or 17 demonstrations in support of President Trump.

18 Is that accurate?

19 A No.

20 Q The majority has alleged that FinCEN has engaged in a pattern of financial 21 surveillance aimed at millions of Americans who hold conservative viewpoints or who 22 simply exercise their Second Amendment rights.

23 What's your response to that allegation?

24 A I never encountered any information or discussion that made me think that 25 while I was at FinCEN.

1 Q And the majority claims that FinCEN and law enforcement commandeered
2 financial institutions to spy on Americans.

3 What's your response to that allegation?

4 A Did not happen.

5 Q All of FinCEN's communications with financial institutions were pursuant to 6 Federal statutes, correct?

7 A To the best of my knowledge.

8 Q Thank you very much.

9 A And I wasn't the person in charge of evaluating that.

10 Q Fair enough.

11 [REDACTED] And with that, we can go off the record.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
WASHINGTON, D.C.

BSA CONFIDENTIAL

July 31, 2024

The Honorable Jim Jordan
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Chairman Jordan:

I write in response to your April 24, 2024, letter requesting certain reports maintained by the Department of the Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN). Following scoping discussions with your staff,¹ as well as necessary review and consultation with law enforcement, the Department has identified [REDACTED] that are responsive to your request. As described below, the Department is providing these documents to the Committee on the Judiciary.

As you know, SARs and information revealing the existence of SARs are highly sensitive and confidential. These documents contain personally identifiable information, details about financial transactions, and unconfirmed information regarding potential violations of law or regulation. The Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) authorizes the Department to require financial institutions to provide "certain reports or records that are highly useful in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations, risk assessments or proceedings." 31 U.S.C. § 5311(1)(a). At the same time, the Department has an obligation to safeguard the confidentiality of BSA information. Any disclosure of BSA information to the public can compromise the national security of the United States and potential or ongoing law enforcement actions, as well as threaten the safety and security of those institutions and individuals who file such reports. Unauthorized disclosures also may cause unjustifiable and irreparable harm to an innocent party involved in a reported transaction.

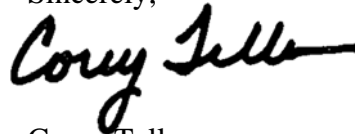

The Department is providing these documents to the Committee to accommodate its efforts to investigate the matters described in its April 24, 2024, letter, and the Department authorizes the Committee to review the documents for that purpose, subject to the condition that Committee Members and staff maintain the confidentiality of this material and the information therein. The BSA provides that a SAR and any information that would reveal the existence of a SAR are confidential. 31 U.S.C. § 5318(g)(2)(ii). These documents or the information therein should not be disclosed to, accessed by, or disseminated to unauthorized individuals in any fashion. Any member of the Chairman and Ranking Member's staff who learns of any unauthorized disclosure should promptly notify the Department of the nature of the disclosure and of any responsive measures taken by the Committee.

Given the highly sensitive nature of the documents we are providing, consistent with the Department's past practice and as the Committee has previously agreed, we will make the document production available for review by Committee Members and authorized staff in a reading room. Only those Members or staff with a "need to know" will be given access to the documents provided in the reading room. As you know, a reading room has been scheduled for [REDACTED], at the Department. To arrange future reading room access, as needed, please contact the Office of Legislative Affairs.

Sincerely,

Corey Tellez
Acting Assistant Secretary
Office of Legislative Affairs

Good Morning BSAAG Members,

As we mentioned during the January 18th plenary meeting, we are circulating for your feedback the draft white paper from the Third Party Vendors Working Group. As always, BSAAG documents are confidential and may not be shared outside the BSAAG membership base.

This white paper addresses unique issues that arise with BSA data and third-party relationships, and offers tips and best practices for financial institutions and recommendations for FinCEN.

The objectives of this white paper are:

- To communicate to financial institutions (FIs) subject to BSA requirements clear, consistent, cross-industry guidance/practices for information security and confidentiality when sharing BSA data with third parties.
- To highlight for FinCEN various third-party relationship topics that it may wish to explore further, particularly as FinCEN considers establishing appropriate frameworks for information sharing among FIs, their agents, and service providers.

If you have any feedback, please reach out to [REDACTED] (MUFG) and [REDACTED] ([REDACTED] Golden 1 Credit Union)—both copied—who are the co-leads of this working group. Please provide feedback by March 1, 2024.

I. Introduction / Scope

Section 6302 of the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 (AML Act) authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to form the Subcommittee on Information Security and Confidentiality (the “Subcommittee”) within the BSAAG. The Subcommittee, a private/public partnership, exists to “advise the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the information security and confidentiality implications of regulations, guidance, information sharing programs, and the examination for compliance with and enforcement of the provisions of the Bank Secrecy Act.”

After its formation in 2021, the Subcommittee identified focus areas for further analysis. One focus area relates to the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) information security and confidentiality risks that arise in third-party relationships. This white paper captures the Subcommittee’s analysis of this topic. It addresses these risks and has two primary objectives:

1. To communicate to financial institutions (FIs) subject to BSA requirements clear, consistent, cross-industry guidance/practices for information security and confidentiality when sharing BSA data with third parties. The white paper collects and summarizes existing rules and guidance that address third-party information sharing related to BSA data and provides citations to assist readers in gathering additional information.
2. To highlight for FinCEN various third-party relationship topics that it may wish to explore further, particularly as FinCEN considers establishing appropriate frameworks for information sharing among FIs, their agents, and service providers. As discussed further below, such topics may include:
 - a. Data Sharing with Specialized BSA Business Relationships. Business relationship partners may offer a broad range of BSA-related products and services, including so called “Financial Crimes Management” platform solutions. These comprehensive solutions may include transaction monitoring, customer due diligence, and other features in which an FI’s BSA data is stored with the vendor. FinCEN may want to establish appropriate frameworks for BSA data sharing with these specialized providers offering comprehensive Financial Crimes Management solutions, particularly those that offer cloud-based or other similar solutions in which BSA data, including Suspicious Activity Report (SAR) data, is stored on the business relationship partner’s platform.
 - b. Section 314(b) Information Sharing. Some vendors promote services in which they facilitate Section 314(b)-type information sharing between and among FIs that use a business relationship partner’s products and services. FinCEN may wish to address the parameters for such information sharing consistent with Section 314(b) rules and guidance.
 - c. Contract BSA Investigative Resources. FIs may contract with vendors to augment their BSA staffing. FinCEN may wish to consider providing guidance for information sharing and confidentiality for such contractors’ handling of BSA data, particularly in circumstances where the contract personnel may be assigned tasks in the review of transaction monitoring alerts, unusual activity investigation, or even SAR preparation process.

- d. Third Party Data Security Protocols. FIs may rely on agents, including attorneys, consultants, and BSA subject matter experts, to assist with BSA compliance obligations, or in response to demands of regulators, or to implement BSA-related projects and initiatives. For example, FIs may engage outside law firms and consultants for a variety of reasons, including forensic accounting and similar reviews. These agents may be subject to BSA supervision, but not directly subject to BSA rules and may have varying degrees of sophistication in matters relating to BSA data security. Moreover, sharing information with agents which operate internationally, e.g., an international law firm, may raise special BSA data security concerns. FinCEN may wish to establish a framework for promoting secure BSA data sharing between FIs subject to the BSA and their outside agents.

In addition, FinCEN may consider creating a pilot program, as that term is defined in the AML Act, where the issues identified in this white paper, and other issues, can be explored. The results of the pilot program may help inform FinCEN's review of BSA regulations and guidance pursuant to Section 6216 of the AML Act as well as potential rulemakings and guidance.

II. Definitions

E. BSA Data

This white paper provides guidance/best practices regarding the sharing of "BSA data," a term that is not defined in statute or regulation. For purposes of this paper, the term "BSA data" refers to any data, including analyses and reports, created under the Anti-Money Laundering (AML) program, including data created pursuant to reporting or recordkeeping requirements of the BSA and its implementing regulations.

BSA data includes:

1. BSA Reports such as (a) Currency Transaction Reports (CTRs), (b) SARs and their supporting documentation, (c) monetary instrument logs, and (d) records relating to Customer Identification Program and Customer Due Diligence requirements;
2. any work papers or other information created in connection with BSA reports and recordkeeping requirements, such as automated transaction monitoring alerts;
3. audit findings, independent testing results, and management and board reports relating to BSA compliance. BSA data may include Personal Information (PI), as that term is defined by data privacy laws and regulations. BSA data generally does not include operational and transaction records prepared, received, and maintained by a financial institution (FI) such as SWIFT messages, funds transfers receipts, deposit items, or loan documents, unless those documents: (1) are specifically required to be maintained under BSA recordkeeping requirements, such as records relating to certain international wire transfers; or (2) are deemed to be SAR supporting documentation and as such are considered to be a part of the SAR filing.¹

F. Third-Party Relationships

For the purposes of this white paper, third-party relationships are broken into three categories: business relationships, affiliate relationships, and agency relationships. The term “third party relationships” is an umbrella term meant to capture all three kinds of relationships unless stated otherwise.

1. Business Relationships

We use the term “business relationships” to refer to two different kinds of outside relationships. There are those outside relationships where an FI partners with a third party to advance shared business objectives (e.g., the relationship between a bank and a payment network such as VISA). And there are those relationships where the FI engages a third party to provide the FI with a product or service, e.g., the FI engages a consulting firm to provide it with consultative services.² For purposes of this paper we will use the term “business relationship” to refer to both types of outside relationships.

This treatment of the term “business relationships” is similar to how the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) has defined a “business arrangement.” OCC Bulletin 2023-17 defines a third-party relationship as any “business arrangement” between the FI and another entity, by contract or otherwise.³ In this context, the term “business arrangement” is synonymous with the term third-party relationship.

2. Affiliate Relationships

An affiliate is an entity that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with another entity. An affiliate⁴ relationship involves a relationship between (i) an FI and one of its domestic affiliates; (ii) an FI and one of its domestic affiliates within the FI’s “corporate organizational structure,” or (iii) between an FI and one of its foreign affiliates. The OCC’s and FinCEN’s SAR rules permit the sharing of SARs within an FI’s domestic corporate organizational structure. FinCEN has defined the term “corporate organizational structure” in the context of SAR sharing

¹ BSA data also does not include confidential supervisory information or information provided to an FI pursuant to the reporting provisions of Section 6201 of the AML Act.

² Service providers for banks and savings associations are typically subject to examination and enforcement by the FDIC, OCC, and FRB under the Bank Service Company Act, 12 U.S.C. 1864 et seq. In addition, NCUA and state supervisory authorities, as applicable, have access to the books and records of credit union service organizations, and the ability to review their internal controls under 12 CFR 712.3(d).

⁴ For an example, see OCC’s definition: <https://www.occ.treas.gov/publications-and-resources/publications/comptrollers-handbook/files/related-organizations/pub-ch-related-organizations.pdf>

to include only domestic affiliates that are subject to a SAR rule. SARs cannot be shared with foreign affiliates; however, under the AML Act, FinCEN has proposed a rulemaking to create a pilot program that would permit the sharing of SARs with foreign affiliates.⁵

3. Agency Relationships

In general, the term “agency relationship”⁶ refers to a business relationship of two parties in which one represents the other in transactions with third parties. The agent acts on behalf of the party at risk, who is known as the “principal.” An agency relationship is usually set out in contractual agreements. Under agency laws, the agent is empowered to act on behalf of the principal (as set forth in the contract) and the principal is bound by, and directly responsible for, the activities of its agent.

The BSA regulations define the term “financial institution” to include the FI’s “agent.”⁷ Thus, for BSA purposes, an agent, e.g., an outside law firm engaged by the FI to represent it in connection with a BSA matter, is treated as though it is part of the financial institution. Nonetheless, and as discussed further below, the sharing of BSA data with an FI’s agent can create third-party type risks of a kind similar to those that exist in business relationships.

III. Legal and Regulatory Framework

Section 6101 of the AML Act provides, inter alia, that the duty to establish, maintain, and enforce an AML/Combating the Financing of Terrorism (CFT) Program shall be the responsibility of, and shall be performed by, persons in the United States who are subject to regulatory oversight and supervision. While placing AML/CFT Program responsibility on the FI, the AML Act nonetheless contemplates the need for an FI to share information. In particular, the AML Act expands the purposes of the BSA to include establishing appropriate frameworks for information sharing with third parties such as agents and service providers.

To date, the Federal Functional Regulators⁸ (FFRs) and FinCEN have not issued comprehensive rules or guidance relating to sharing BSA data with third parties, but they have addressed information sharing as it relates to selected kinds of BSA data. Specifically, they have addressed through regulation and/or guidance a range of topics that touch on third-party risks, including those relating to BSA data.⁹

⁶ See the Restatement (Third) of Agency.

⁷ See 31 CFR 1010.100(t).

⁸ The Federal Functional Regulators are the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB), the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), the Office of Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), the Securities Exchange Commission, and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. See 31 CFR 1010.100(r).

⁹ For example, the OCC, FRB, and FDIC recently issued joint guidance on third party risk management. See, e.g., Interagency Guidance on Third Party Relationships: Risk Management (June 9, 2023) FRB (SR 23-4), FDIC (FIL-29-2023), OCC (OCC Bulletin 2023-17). And, in 2021, the FBB published a Guide to Community Banks on Conducting Due Diligence on Financial Technology Companies.

A. Suspicious Activity Report Confidentiality and Sharing

1. SAR Sharing with Affiliates Located in the U.S.

A SAR, and information that would reveal the existence (or non-existence) of a SAR, are confidential and may not be disclosed.¹⁰ There are limited exceptions in the FinCEN regulations that permit the sharing of a SAR or SAR information, including sharing within an FI's corporate organizational structure for purposes consistent with Title II of the BSA, as determined by regulation or in guidance.¹¹ The OCC and FinCEN SAR rules and the 2012 FinCEN guidance permit the sharing of SARs with agents, including attorneys representing FIs. FinCEN has cautioned FIs to ensure that such agents are aware of the SAR confidentiality requirements.¹² This guidance is helpful but does not explicitly provide a framework for secure BSA data information sharing with such agents or identify the types of individuals or entities that may qualify as agents.

FinCEN and some of the FFRs have addressed the subject of SAR sharing with affiliates and parents of FIs through guidance statements. In 2006, the FinCEN, Federal Reserve Board (FRB), Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), and OCC issued Interagency Guidance on Sharing Suspicious Activity Reports with Head Offices and Controlling Companies ("2006 Guidance").¹³ The 2006 Guidance clarified that a U.S. branch of a foreign bank may share a SAR with its head office, and a U.S. bank or savings association may share a SAR with its controlling company, no matter where the entity or party is located. Such sharing is permitted because the bank's head office or controlling entity may have a need to discharge oversight responsibilities with respect to enterprise-wide risk management and compliance with applicable laws and regulations.¹⁴

In 2010, FinCEN amended SAR confidentiality rules to permit the sharing of SARs and SAR information within the corporate organizational structure for purposes consistent with Title II of the BSA as determined by regulation or guidance,¹⁵ and issued guidance on Sharing Suspicious Activity Reports by Depository Institutions with Certain U.S. Affiliates ("2010 Guidance"). The 2010 Guidance addresses sharing SARs, and SAR information, within a corporate organization that FinCEN considers to be "consistent with the purposes of the BSA."¹⁶ This guidance generally permits the sharing of SARs and SAR information by depository institutions with their affiliates that are subject to a SAR regulation. U.S. affiliates of depository institutions and mutual funds that are subject to SAR filing obligations include broker-dealers, future commission merchants

¹⁰ See 31 U.S.C. §5317(g)(2); 31 CFR 1020.320(e); 12 CFR 748(c)(5) (NCUA); 12 CFR 21.11(k) (OCC); 12 CFR 353.3(g) (FDIC); 12 CFR 208.62(j) (FRB).

(FCMs), money services businesses (MSBs), and residential mortgage lenders or originators.¹⁷ Sharing SARs with affiliates outside the United States is not permitted because these foreign affiliates are not subject to U.S. SAR regulations.

There may be circumstances where an FI, a branch, or a bank affiliate would be liable for direct or indirect disclosure of a SAR or SAR information by the affiliate. To protect the confidentiality of SARs, both the 2006 Guidance and the 2010 Guidance provide that the bank or branch, as part of its AML program, must have appropriate controls to protect the confidentiality of SARs.

2. SAR Sharing with Business Relationship Partners

a. Business Relationship Partners in the United States

Staffing. The FFRs and FinCEN have not comprehensively addressed the extent to which an FI can share information subject to the SAR Rule with business relationship partners, such as contractors, located in the U.S. For example, BSA-regulated FIs may engage contract resources to perform services related to financial crimes compliance, such as to address staffing challenges. These resources may be used to review automated transaction monitoring alerts, conduct case investigations, and perhaps even draft SARs for evaluation by the FI, under the supervision of the FI. Yet it is not entirely clear to what extent an FI may use contract resources to perform these functions consistent with SAR confidentiality rules and guidance.

Technology Solutions. The FFRs and FinCEN also have not addressed the question of whether information subject to SAR confidentiality rules may be shared with business relationship partners who provide transaction monitoring and other financial crimes management solutions located within the U.S. This question is particularly pertinent in situations where the business relationship partner is granted access to an FI's BSA data and/or provides a "cloud-based" automated transaction monitoring solution in which BSA-related data, including potential information that could disclose the existence of a SAR, is housed on the vendor's servers. Given FI operating models and technological advances, addressing these questions is important for effective and efficient financial crimes compliance in the modern era.

SAR-related data may be deemed more sensitive if the data discloses the SAR itself or any information that would reveal the existence of a SAR to the third-party business. At the outset, as set forth in the regulation, SARs and SAR information can only be shared within an FI's corporate organizational structure. As a result, outsourcing arrangements with unaffiliated third-party businesses involving SARs typically relate to services that precede the ultimate SAR determination and filing, e.g., the review of automated transaction alerts and case investigation.¹⁸ The ultimate decision to file SARs based upon alerts and case investigation must be retained by the FI and the SAR filing must generally take place within the FI.

Notwithstanding these requirements, the assessment and classification of the BSA data contained in shared alert information and any shared SARs is important. An FI must have a clear understanding of what data it needs to share, as opposed to what data the third-party business is requesting to access, or house. The size, complexity, and status (public or private company) of the third-party business handling BSA data could influence the risk and impact of a breach.

¹⁷ See 31 CFR 1023.320 (broker-dealers); 31 CFR 1026.320 (FCMs); 31 CFR 1022.320 (MSBs); 31 CFR 1029.320 (loan or finance companies).

¹⁸ See https://www.fincen.gov/sites/default/files/shared/guidance_faqs_sar_10042006.pdf.

If an FI contracts with a third party (e.g., a consultant, contractor, vendor, etc.) to conduct any customer transactions, the FI is still responsible for those transactions. Transactions conducted by a third party on behalf of the FI are considered to have been conducted by, through or to the FI. The FI remains responsible for monitoring transactions for and filing SARs and CTRs, maintaining BSA records, and complying with ID requirements. If the third party is also an FI, that FI may also have a requirement to monitor transactions for and file a SAR and CTRs, maintain BSA records and comply with ID requirements.

b. Business Relationship Partners Outside the United States

These questions take on an added layer of complexity when the business relationship partner accesses or houses data subject to the SAR confidentiality rules from a place outside of the United States. The SAR Confidentiality Rule and regulatory guidance do not expressly prohibit, nor expressly permit, overseas outsourcing of activities involving access to SAR-related information. In issuing the SAR Confidentiality Rule, FinCEN refused to take a position on overseas outsourcing of SAR-related functions, stating it was “intentionally silent” on the issue, that it “has been studying the issue while considering additional future guidance” on outsourcing, and that the “final rulemaking takes no position on the matter.¹⁹” Notwithstanding, FinCEN prohibits FIs from sharing SARs even with their own foreign branches for risk management purposes. There are two areas in which there is some recognition that outsourcing arrangements with SAR access may currently exist. The first is in the mutual fund context. Specifically, in the preamble to FinCEN’s SAR Confidentiality Rule, FinCEN reiterates that the Rule is not intended to supersede previous guidance for mutual funds, which clarifies that mutual funds can contractually delegate SAR functions to transfer agents. The second area is in a general paper on outsourcing by the FRB. In this, the FRB warns of the complexities associated with outsourcing confidential SAR-related functions generally. However, it has been interpreted²⁰ that this type of outsourcing, as in the context of mutual funds, was done so domestically.

3. SAR Sharing with Agents

The term “financial institution” as used in the BSA’s implementing regulations includes an FI’s agent.²¹ It is incumbent on FIs that their agents understand the SAR confidentiality rules and establish appropriate levels of data security. For example, an attorney representing a bank in a BSA regulatory or enforcement matter may share SAR-related information with an expert witness or a consultant without considering SAR confidentiality rules or guarding the information under the same data security standards applied by its principal. These considerations suggest that banks should closely monitor the BSA data they provide to their agents, particularly SAR-related information.

B. Sharing Information Under Section 314 of the USA PATRIOT Act

The topic of information sharing arises under Section 314 of Title III of the USA PATRIOT Act. Section 314(a) and its implementing regulations enable law enforcement agencies to “ping” more than 14,000 FIs to locate accounts and transactions of persons who may be involved in terrorism or money laundering. FinCEN acts as a gatekeeper, sending notifications to its designated contacts within FIs at least once every two weeks. The FIs then query their records for data matches and if a match exists, the FI replies to the notification.²² Both the fact of the Section 314(a) notification and any response may be used only for limited purposes. The regulations implementing Section 314(a) provide that an FI shall not disclose the fact that FinCEN has requested or has obtained information under this section, except to the extent necessary to comply with such an information request.²³ Thus, “section 314(a) subject lists cannot be shared with any foreign office, branch, or affiliate (unless the request specifically states otherwise), and the lists cannot be shared with affiliates, or subsidiaries of bank holding companies, if the affiliate or subsidiaries are not FIs as described in 31 U.S.C. 5312(a)(2).”²⁴ Section 314(a) information may, however, be shared with third-party service providers. “For the purposes of assisting a financial institution in complying with [a Section 314(a)] request, a financial institution may provide a list of named subjects to a third-party service provider or vendor so long as the institution takes those steps necessary to ensure that the third party safeguards the information.”²⁵

Section 314(b) permits FIs and associations of FIs, under the protection of a statutory safe harbor from liability, to share information with any other FI or association of FIs for purposes of identifying and reporting activities that the FI or association suspects may involve possible terrorist activity or money laundering.²⁶ FinCEN guidance permits information sharing under the Section 314(b) safe harbor even if an FI or association does not have specific information indicating that the activity is suspicious and has not conclusively determined whether to file a SAR. “Instead, it is sufficient that the FI or association has a reasonable basis to believe that the information shared relates to activities that may involve money laundering or terrorist activity” and it is sharing information for an appropriate purpose.²⁷ The regulations implementing Section 314(b) also provide that each FI that engages in the sharing of information shall maintain adequate procedures to protect the security and confidentiality of such information which shall be deemed satisfied to the extent the FI applies information procedures consistent with what the institution has established to satisfy the requirements of Section 501 of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (15 U.S.C. 6801, et seq.) (GLBA), and applicable regulations issued thereunder, regarding the protection of its customers’ non-public PI. In this regard, each of the FFRs has issued regulations that address the information security requirements of the GLBA.²⁸

²² See generally FinCEN 314(a) Fact Sheet (June 14, 2022). As of June 14, 2022, FinCEN has processed 744 Section 314(a) requests relating to terrorism and 4,916 requests relating to money laundering.

²³ See 31 CFR 1010.520(b)(3)(iv)(B)(1).

²⁴ See FinCEN, FAQs Concerning the 314(a) Process, FAQs 31 & 32 (issued April 6, 2018).

Information sharing under Section 314(b) is generally limited to FIs subject to BSA requirements, but with an important qualification. Associations consisting exclusively of BSA-regulated FIs may share information under the Section 314(b) safe harbor. This is true even if the association is not itself subject to the BSA, and even if the association exists only as a contractual arrangement among FIs subject to the BSA. The breadth of Section 314(b) information sharing facilitated through “associations” has not been fully explored. One topic that FinCEN may choose to address through rule-making or further guidance is the extent to which vendors who contractually provide automated transaction monitoring and other financial crimes management solutions exclusively to BSA-regulated FIs can perform an association-like Section 314(b) information sharing function.²⁹

C. Sharing of BSA Resources

In 2018, some of the FFRs and FinCEN issued the Interagency Statement on Sharing Bank Secrecy Act Resources.³⁰ The 2018 Interagency Statement addressed instances when banks and credit unions may decide to enter a collaborative arrangement to share resources to manage their BSA/AML obligations more efficiently and collaboratively. Though not addressed specifically to BSA data, the 2018 Interagency Statement nonetheless highlighted data security risks that could arise in these collaborative arrangements. Specifically, it compared the collaborative arrangements to others involving third parties, noting that a “collaborative arrangement should be appropriately documented to define the nature and type of resources to be shared, define each institution’s rights and responsibilities, establish procedures for protecting customer data and confidential information, and develop a framework to manage risks associated with the sharing of resources.”

D. The AML Act

The AML Act contains certain provisions relating to information sharing with third party businesses. Section 6303 requires each FFR to appoint a BSA Information Security Officer that will be consulted on information sharing policies under the BSA, including those that allow FIs to share information with each other and with foreign affiliates, and those that allow Federal agencies to share with regulated entities.

Section 6212 of the AML Act adds to the BSA a new subsection that requires the Department of the Treasury (Treasury) to issue rules establishing a pilot program for FIs to share information related to BSA reports with their foreign branches, subsidiaries, and affiliates. The AML Act sets a new foundation for cross-border information sharing relating to SARs. Section 6212(a) of the AML Act directs Treasury to establish a three-year pilot program that allows FIs to share information related to SARs, including that a SAR has been filed, with foreign branches, subsidiaries, and affiliates. Such sharing must be subject to appropriate data security requirements related to PI. The pilot may not be extended to branches, subsidiaries and affiliates in Russia or China, or in jurisdictions that are state sponsors of terrorism, subject to sanctions, or that Treasury has determined cannot reasonably protect the information. As part of the pilot, Treasury must have the means to hold a foreign affiliate liable for the unauthorized disclosure of SAR information. Importantly, FIs participating in the pilot program may not offshore BSA compliance functions. “No FI may establish or maintain any operation located outside of the United States the primary purpose of which is to ensure compliance with the Bank Secrecy Act as a result of the sharing granted under this subsection.”³¹ Section 6212 of the AML Act does not address cross-border sharing of SAR-related information with other categories of offshore persons and entities, e.g., third-party service providers. Nonetheless, the explicit and carefully defined parameters set forth in Section 6212 may be read to limit the sharing of SAR-related information only to eligible branches, subsidiaries, and affiliates.

²⁹ For example, one BSA/AML service provider promotes on its website a “centralized platform for information sharing that allows investigators at 314(b)-registered financial institutions to easily send, receive, and respond to requests for information directly in our secure environment, expediting decision making in the investigation process.”

³⁰ Interagency Statement on Sharing Bank Secrecy Act Resources (issued October 3, 2018).

The AML Act also addresses new frameworks for information sharing. It does so by expanding the purpose of the BSA to include establishing appropriate frameworks for information sharing among FIs, their agents and service providers, their regulatory authorities, associations of FIs, the Treasury, and law enforcement authorities to identify information, stop, and apprehend money launders and those who finance terrorists, expanding upon section 5311, part 5, of the BSA. This statutory provision provides an opportunity for FinCEN to provide additional guidance on sharing BSA data with third-party service providers. For example, FinCEN could establish a pilot program for this type of data sharing, including with third parties.

E. Other Requirements

1. General Third-Party Risk Management Guidance

Controlling for these unique BSA risks may require enhanced processes for managing business relationships in which BSA data is shared. In addition to OCC Bulletin 2023-17 and the accompanying FAQs, several of the FFRs have issued guidance addressing third-party relationships. Further, in June 2023, the FRB, OCC, and FDIC issued Interagency Guidance on Third Party Relationships: Risks Management.³² The final Interagency Guidance specifically highlights that a third party may perform activities subject to applicable laws and regulations. The final Interagency Guidance highlights the need for relevant contracts to ensure compliance with laws and regulations and considers relevant guidance and self-regulatory standards. FIs subject to the Interagency Guidance should also assess the third party’s ability to comply with rules and regulations, including BSA regulations.

2. Guidance on FinTech Business Relationships

In the banking sector, the FRB, OCC, and FDIC released joint guidance³³ in 2021 to help FIs that partner with FinTech companies. FIs are entering into business arrangements with FinTech companies to offer enhanced products and services to their customers, increase efficiency, and reduce internal costs. The joint guidance covers six key areas of due diligence that community banks can consider when exploring arrangements with FinTech companies: business experience and qualifications, financial condition, legal and regulatory compliance, risk management and control processes, information security, and operational resilience.³⁴ The guidance also reminds banks that partnerships do not diminish a bank's responsibility to comply with "federal consumer protection laws and regulations, just as if the bank were to perform the service or activity itself." FIs exploring business relationships with a FinTech company should carefully examine the company's qualifications, compliance systems, and information security practices.

³¹ 31 U.S.C. § 5318(g)(10).

3. Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act Information Security Requirements

Section 501 of the GLBA requires certain federal and state regulators to establish appropriate standards for the FIs subject to their oversight relating to administrative, technical, and physical safeguards: (1) to ensure the security and confidentiality of customer records and information; (2) to protect against any anticipated threats or hazards to the security or integrity of such records; and (3) to protect against unauthorized access to or use of such records or information which could result in substantial harm or inconvenience to any customer.

On February 1, 2001, several FFRs published the Interagency Guidelines Establishing Information Security Standards that require banks to implement a comprehensive written information security program to manage and control these risks.³⁵ As it concerns service providers, the Interagency Guidelines direct every bank to:

1. Exercise appropriate due diligence in selecting its service providers;
2. Implement appropriate measures via contracting to meet the objectives of these Guidelines; and
3. Where indicated by the bank's risk assessment, monitor its service providers to confirm that they have satisfied their obligations as required.

The GLBA Safeguards Rule³⁶ issued by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and certain state laws and regulations³⁷ also contain these requirements.

Accordingly, banks should review audits, summaries of test results, or other equivalent evaluations of their service providers. Under these requirements, an FI that enters third-party relationships with vendors who access or house BSA data must be mindful of audit rights, breach notification, data security, and other contracting considerations.

³⁴ Though targeted to community banks, the guidance emphasizes that the fundamental concepts may be useful for banks of varying size and for other types of third-party relationships.

³⁷ See, e.g., NY Department of Financial Services Cybersecurity Regulation, 23 CRR-NY 500.11(a) ("Third-Party Service Provider Policy").

4. Other BSA and Privacy Considerations

In addition to limitations that may exist under U.S. law on SAR sharing within corporate organizational structures (see Section III.A. above), global FIs should be aware of potential sharing limitations that may arise under foreign laws. These limitations may mirror U.S. law limitations but may nonetheless permit sharing of aggregate SAR information, e.g., volumes and frequencies, money laundering typologies, risk scoring metrics, etc. In this scenario, FIs should conduct their aggregate data collection such that the identity of a person(s) subject to a SAR cannot be reverse engineered with the aid of publicly available information sources.³⁸

Furthermore, FIs should consider local and regional data privacy and protection laws and regulations and establish adequate data privacy and protection controls. Examples of controls, as required by the European Union's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), include but are not limited to, inter-affiliate data processing and transfer agreements, standard contractual clauses, notice and consent, record of processing activities, and the appointment of data privacy officers to oversee data subject access rights and privacy impact assessments.

Consistent with sound vendor management practices, FIs should carefully manage the contract termination phase of third-party relationships, particularly those that may affect the disposition of BSA data. For example, BSA data housed with a third party that is subject to BSA record retention requirements needs to be brought within the FI's control prior to contract termination. In other instances, the FI may have relied on unique third-party data analytics to produce customer risk profiles. The FI needs to evaluate if it can retrieve the customer risk profile information prior to termination, and if not, how it intends to create substitutes for the customer risk profile information it may no longer be able to access or maintain.

5. Securities and Derivatives Requirements

In the securities sector, the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) published a Notice reminding member firms of their obligation to establish and maintain a supervisory system, including written supervisory procedures, for any activities or functions performed by third-party vendors, including any sub-vendors.³⁹ The FINRA Notice contains third-party vendor management guidance that may be useful not just to FINRA member firms, but also to FIs generally. In its annual Examination Findings report, FINRA also observed that firms are relying on third-party vendors' tools without performing adequate due diligence or understanding how the vendor-supplied controls operate. In one example provided by FINRA a third-party vendor did not configure its cloud-based server correctly, install antivirus software, or implement encryption for the firm's account applications and other brokerage records containing customers' PI. As a result, foreign hackers successfully accessed the cloud-based server and exposed firm customers' PI.

³⁸ Examples include corporate registers, news media, or other.

³⁹ See FINRA Notice 21-29, FINRA Reminds Firms of Their Supervisory Obligations Related to Outsourcing to Third-Party Vendors (2021).

In the derivatives sector, the National Futures Association (NFA) has issued an Interpretive Notice that provides guidance for its members (Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) registrants) when they outsource NFA and CFTC regulatory requirements to third-party service providers or vendors. The Notice provides that members must have a written supervisory framework that includes: (1) an initial risk assessment to determine if outsourcing a particular regulatory function is appropriate and to identify any associated risks; (2) onboarding due diligence to ensure the service provider is able to successfully carry out the outsourced function(s); (3) ongoing monitoring to ensure the third party can continue to carry out the outsourced function(s); (4) termination provisions to ensure the member is provided sufficient notice of any termination of outsourcing; and (5) recordkeeping provisions to ensure that if a member outsources a required function to a third-party service provider, the member maintains records to demonstrate it has addressed the four areas listed above. The Notice also reminds members that outsourcing does not relieve them of their obligation to comply with applicable NFA and/or CFTC regulatory requirements.

6. Casinos – Special Requirements

For casinos, unlike other FIs, the applicable BSA obligations attach only to the casino licensee. Thus, if the licensee is a subsidiary of another legal entity, the parent entity is simply a related non-financial trade or business and not an FI. FinCEN's Casino SAR Sharing Guidance⁴⁰ notes that casinos may share SAR data with their U.S. parent or affiliate consistent with FinCEN's amendments to the confidentiality provisions of its SAR regulations in 2010. The 2017 guidance states in a footnote, "An 'affiliate' is a financial institution that is required under rules implementing the BSA to report suspicious transactions and that is controlled by, or is under common control with, the casino filing the SAR."⁴¹

IV. Guidance / Best Practices Useful to BSA Regulated FIs

A key objective of the BSAAG subcommittee on Information Security and Confidentiality is to advise on confidentiality implications raised by BSA laws and implementing regulations. The sharing of BSA data with third parties carries elevated risks, beyond data privacy and security risks related to all third-party relationships. Most BSA data, by definition, is highly confidential and sensitive. Its wrongful disclosure carries at least two unique risks. First, it can undermine criminal money laundering and terrorist financing investigations and prosecutions. Second, it can reveal information about an FI's internal BSA controls and processes in ways that make them less effective, thus compromising an FI's efforts to maintain an effective BSA/AML program.

Another unique risk arises from outsourcing certain BSA-related functions to a business relationship partner or agent. An FI subject to BSA regulation can run afoul of the law and prudent practice by over delegating BSA-related functions to a business-relationship partner or agent without sufficient supervision, training, and oversight.

⁴⁰ FinCEN, Sharing Suspicious Activity Reports with U.S. Parents and Affiliates of Casinos, FIN-2017-G001 (Jan. 4, 2017): <https://www.fincen.gov/resources/statutes-regulations/guidance/sharing-suspicious-activity-reports-us-parents-and>

⁴¹ Id. note 3.

Information sharing plays a vital role in allowing FIs, law enforcement, and FFRs to better deploy resources using a risk-based approach to combat money laundering/terrorist financing. However, there remain obstacles to effective information sharing that can obstruct this progress and create legal and regulatory uncertainty.

Based on these risks, FIs sharing data with business relationship partners and agents should consider the following when sharing BSA data:

1. FIs should take adequate steps to ensure that all documentation, including copies of identification data, are received or available to them without delay from the business relationship partner or agent. FIs should ensure that contractual agreements set forth requirements for identification data, including the relevant time frames for receiving data. They should also be satisfied that the business relationship partner or agent is regulated, supervised, or monitored appropriately and has measures in place for due diligence and record-keeping compliance.
2. FIs should assess the business relationship partner or agent's ability to protect sensitive firm and customer PI, have controls in place to mitigate potential conflicts of interest in the outsourcing selection process, and assess the extent of potential damage if there is a security breach (e.g., number of customers or prospective customers impacted). FIs should consider the reputation and history of the business relationship partner or agent, including the representations made and information shared regarding how the vendor will secure the firm's information.
3. An FI's auditors, whether internal or external, should review services being outsourced or business provided, and the systems utilized, as appropriate, and provide comprehensive reports and workpapers that can be reviewed by the FI and its regulators. Depending on the affiliated business relationship, the FI should have sufficient authority and the ability to effectively train, manage, designate, or assign responsibilities to affiliated employees working on behalf of the FI, including shared or dual-status employees.⁴² Depending on the business arrangements and whether the FI has BSA responsibilities, effective controls should be in place to ensure that the FI has access to all data and recordkeeping, that the integrity of the data is protected,⁴³ and the FI is promptly informed if there is a SAR disclosure or a breach or compromise of its customer information and data. When an arrangement involves a foreign jurisdiction, the FI should have a thorough understanding of the legal framework of the applicable jurisdiction, including any limitations on the flow of information that may impact its ability to appropriately maintain the confidentiality of a SAR or SAR information, manage and conduct oversight activities, or otherwise limit the ability of the FFRs to supervise or examine the FI's activities. The FI should be able to promptly produce records in a timely manner upon request by the FFRs, consistent with U.S. law.

⁴² Shared or dual-status employees are: (i) employees of the FI that are also employees or agents of the service provider, head office or controlling shareholder or (ii) employees of the service provider, head office or controlling shareholder that are also employees or agents of the FI. See e.g., 12 C.F.R. 7.3001 (OCC).

⁴³ For example, there can be no data or wire transfer "stripping" for SAR monitoring, OFAC compliance or other purposes.

V. Recommendations / Observations / Suggested Actions

This white paper has highlighted topics where FinCEN may through rulemaking or guidance provide greater clarity to BSA-regulated FIs regarding data security and confidentiality in third-party relationships. In the Introduction, we highlighted four specific topics for FinCEN to consider as it evaluates establishing appropriate frameworks for secure BSA data sharing with vendors and other third parties.

A. Data Sharing with Specialized BSA Business Relationship Partners

Business relationship partners may offer a broad range of BSA-related products and services, including so called “Financial Crimes Management” platform solutions in which the vendor promotes comprehensive transaction monitoring, customer due diligence, and other solutions where BSA data is stored on the vendor’s platform. BSA data security controls may need to be tailored depending on the sensitivity of the information stored on these platforms. FinCEN may want to establish appropriate frameworks for BSA data sharing between the FI and these business relationship partners, particularly those that offer cloud-based or other similar solutions in which BSA data, including SAR data, may be stored or accessed on the business relationship partner’s systems or platforms.

B. Third-Party Data Security Protocols

FIs may rely on outside agents, including attorneys, to assist them in discharging their obligations under the BSA. While potentially subject to BSA rules, these agents may have varying degrees of sophistication in matters relating to BSA data security. Moreover, some of these agents may be international partnerships or companies, raising special concerns when sharing information with them that could reveal the existence or non-existence of a SAR. FinCEN may wish to establish a framework for promoting secure BSA data sharing between FIs subject to the BSA and their agents.

C. Contract BSA Investigative Resources

FIs may enter into contracts with vendors to augment their BSA staffing, particularly in circumstances where the FI may face a transaction monitoring alert or investigative backlog or be conducting a “look-back.” FinCEN may wish to consider providing guidance for information sharing and confidentiality for such contractors’ handling of BSA data, particularly in circumstances where the contract personnel may be assigned tasks in the case alert review, investigation, or even SAR preparation process.

D. Section 314(b) Information Sharing

Some vendors promote services in which they facilitate Section 314(b)-type information sharing between and among FIs that use their products and services. FinCEN may wish to address the parameters for such information sharing consistent with Section 314(b) rules and guidance.

As FinCEN works to develop appropriate frameworks for information sharing, it could consider initiating a pilot program. Such an approach might allow FinCEN to gather information and test assumptions and understanding before engaging in any rulemaking.

Recent Terrorism Financing Charge

Former University of Alabama student pleads guilty to helping al Qaeda

Updated Sept 11, 2019. Posted Sept 11, 2019.

Alaa Mohd Al-Absaad

Department of Justice

Office of Public Affairs

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Friday, September 13, 2019

Former Alabama Resident Pleads Guilty to Concealing Terrorism Financing

A criminal information was filed on Sept. 11, 2019, against Alaa Mohd Al-Absaad, charging her with concealment of terrorism financing, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2389C and 2. Absaad pleaded guilty to the charge today. Assistant Attorney General for National Security John C. Dammers, United States Attorney Jay E. Byrum of the Northern District of Alabama, and FBI Special Agent in Charge Johnnie Sharp Jr. of the Birmingham Division made the announcement today.

As set forth in the previously filed complaint, Al-Absaad instructed an FBI undercover employee (UCE) about how to send money to the mujahideen fighters engaged in jihad. Al-Absaad told the UCE that money "is always needed. You can't have a war without weapons. You can't prepare a soldier without equipment." Al-Absaad also advised the UCE on how to send money in a manner that would avoid detection by law enforcement, including by using fake names and addresses when conducting electronic money transfers. Subsequently, Al-Absaad introduced the UCE to a financial facilitator who could route the UCE's money to "brothers that work with us" (meaning in Qaeda).

The maximum penalty for concealment of terrorism financing is 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine, and up to a life term of supervised release.

Investigation of the case was conducted by the FBI, including FBI offices in Birmingham, Alabama, and Cleveland and Toledo, Ohio. The prosecution is being handled by Assistant United States Attorneys Henry Cornelius and Manu Balachandran and Trial Attorney Jennifer Lary of the National Security Division's Counterterrorism Section.

FIU Intelligence Collection and Threat Tracking

The Intelligence Collection and Threat Tracking (ICTT) program allows the FIU to monitor and evaluate developments external to the company in order to maintain subject matter expertise and proactively identify threats that are likely to impact Western Union and maintain subject matter expertise.

- The FIU uses ICTT to systematically track the global threat environment by integrating and synthesizing open-source intelligence, law enforcement intelligence, and other external information across major typologies, including:

- Terror Finance
- Human Trafficking
- Human Smuggling
- Drug Trafficking
- Counterfeit Goods
- Wildlife Trafficking

- Real-time updates to a back-end data model allow us to translate the intelligence into a functional framework for identifying and prioritizing threats across geographies and typologies.
- The intelligence model helps guide and prioritize analysis of potential threats as well as engagement with law enforcement and other partners.

US Indicts Chinese Companies in New Approach to Fighting Precursor Chemicals

The U.S. government has brought its first-ever criminal charges against four China-based companies and eight employees for allegedly trafficking precursor chemicals used to produce fentanyl into the U.S. Prosecutors claim that the companies knowingly marketed and distributed their products for illicit use, citing evidence including advertisements explicitly targeting fentanyl producers in Mexico and the US, efforts to disguise their products from customs checks, and instructions for altering these chemicals to produce fentanyl. Then, criminal groups like the Sinaloa Cartel and the Jalisco Cartel New Generation (Cartel de Jalisco Nueva Generación - CJNG) got involved: purchasing, stockpiling and transporting the drug across the US-Mexico border.

In late June 2023, Israel's National Bureau for Counter Terror Financing (NBCTF) disrupted a crypto-based terrorism financing infrastructure jointly run by Hezbollah and Iran's IRGC - Quds Force in which they seized roughly $1.7 million worth of cryptocurrency. The operation represents the first time any agency has seized cryptocurrency from the two organizations, both of which are designated as Foreign Terrorist Organizations (FTOs). The disrupted Hezbollah/IRGC-QF crypto operation is also notable as one of the first publicly available examples of terrorism financing via cryptocurrency that goes beyond

U.S. Administration Expands Migration Policy to Additional Countries to Address HS Surge at Southwest Border

The U.S. Department of State and Department of Homeland Security announced a new initiative, which formally started on July 10, allowing eligible migrants from Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras to fly to the U.S. and gain government work permits if they have relatives who are U.S. citizens or legal residents and have filed visa applications on their behalf. This expands the current policy permitting Venezuelans, Nicaraguans, Cubans, and Haitians to enter the U.S. under mostly identical stipulations as of several months ago. These policies are coupled with tightened asylum rules and increased deportations for those who do not use these programs and are smuggled into the U.S.

Investigative Journalism Reveals Two Primary HS Routes Pakistani Migrants Utilize to Reach Europe

A recent report detailed the two primary routes that Pakistani migrants are currently using to reach Europe, according to several interviews with migrants. The first route begins at the Pakistani border city of Taftan, before travel to Mashaad in Iran, Maku in Turkey, and then eventually crossing the western Turkish border into Greece.

The second route involves a flight from Karachi, Pakistan to Dubai and then Cairo, Egypt. Then travel to Benghazi, Libya occurs, passing through Tabarak, Egypt, where a cross-Mediterranean trip is made towards Italy. This second route was the route utilized by the human smuggling network who contributed to the deaths of up to 300 Pakistani migrants in June. Pakistani migrants are the third-most common nationality observed utilizing the Central Mediterranean migration route, the most popular in Europe in 2023.

In June 2023, Israel's Internal Security Authority (ISA) and Israel's Hishvalet (HSH) identified a crypto-based terrorism financing infrastructure primarily run by Hezbollah and Iran's HRC-Q. WU Faces High Terror Finance Threat in the Sahel

This product was prepared by the FIU Office of Typology Investigations & Strategic Analysis to inform Comptroller and a specific AM-CTI threat issue that could impact Western Union (WU) products and services. This document and all associated content, are confidential and may not be disseminated outside WU. Compliance department will not be approved from the FIU. Please direct any questions to [redacted].

WU Faces a High Threat of Terror Finance in the Sahel; Analysis Identifies 213 Potential Terror Finance Facilitators

Background: Open-source reporting confirms a steep increase in jihadist violence in the Sahel region of Africa, especially in Mali, Burkina Faso, and Niger since at least 2019. Over the wide body of intelligence reporting, the FIU reviewed 183 potential exposures to the evolving threat.

Scope: The FIU reviewed activity conducted by potential terror finance facilitators whose activity included higher-level transactions patterns within the Sahel region in the Sahel region. The FIU conducted analysis between 5/1/2022 and 8/19/2023 ("Review Period").

Key Finding: The FIU judges with moderate confidence that WU faces a high threat of terror finance in the Sahel region.

This assessment is based on the following factors:

- A wide body of open-source reporting indicates the central Sahel region of Mali, Burkina Faso and Niger is now the world's deadliest for terror attacks and is considered the "global epicenter for jihadism."
- The analysis identified 213 potential terror finance facilitators ("primary subjects") who matched higher-level transaction patterns that have historically been associated with terror finance. These 213 potential facilitators conducted $3.5B in transactions totaling $1.5 million during the review period.
- Approximately 32% (67/203) of these primary subjects sent transactions to counterparties at 83 AGI Agent locations in multiple, emerging global hotspots around the world.
- Approximately 7% (14/203) of the primary subjects had transaction links to prior FIU investigations primarily related to terror finance, weapon trafficking, or human trafficking.
- Our confidence level is not higher due to a lack of corroborating law enforcement referrals to match the open-source information and plausible alternative explanations, such as familial relationships between France and the Sahel, as well as legitimate commercial travel between the same and full countries such as South Africa, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates.

Sahel Emerges as World's Most Violent Region for Jihadist Activity; Seizes Few External TF Referrals

Central Sahel region of Mali, Burkina Faso and Niger is now the world's deadliest for terror attacks. In 2023, this region led for "45 percent of the world's reported deaths" from Asia and the Middle East region combined. The region's fatalities in 2023, which is four times more deadly than 2019, that pace mostly continued in the first half of this year.

Increasing security situation is made worse by recent political gains in the region. The countries of Mali, Burkina Faso, Niger, have been at least successful since 2021.

Primary terror groups maintain a presence in the region of Mali, Burkina Faso and Niger. The "Islamic State of Greater Sahara" (ISGS) is a militant group active in Mali, Niger, Burkina Faso and a large province, controlling large swaths of the Sahel. ISGS has also been expanding with aggressive and credible attacks. They are mostly confined to northern Mali and northern Niger.

ISGS and ISGS appear to have mostly relied on networks of fighters, and have increased local positions for funding, which is reportedly to be used to expand into neighboring countries of Topo, Benin, Gambia and potentially northern Ghana.

ISGS reportedly 248 agents in high-risk "red" or "orange" zones, such as Central and the "Tuareg" area of Mali, Niger, Burkina Faso. These agents make up 9% of agents in total three countries.

Informational outreach suggests that the ISGS is poorly understood for intelligence purposes. There were just 3 cases between 2023 and 2021/2023 with confirmed threat intelligence conducted at that location in the Sahel, a steep drop from 2019 year when there were 20 similar cases.

Primary Subjects Identified as Potential Terror Finance Facilitators; Additional Indicators

WU 203 potential terror finance facilitators and their direct counterparties conducted 4,472 activities worth $3.5 billion from July 01, 2022 to August 07, 2023. These consumers displayed the following indicators:

- Links to Confirmed TF Activity (7%) - In June 2018, last primary subject had sent a three-bank network with at least 20 counterparties to a confirmed terror finance entity.
- Links to Direct Targets (2%) - These subjects were part of a three-level network with at least one consumer who is a direct target of a terror finance entity.
- Recent Links to Prior TF Connections - In 5/2023, these subjects were part of a two-level network with 10 counterparties who appeared in a prior terror finance investigation.
- Risk Senders to Many Global Jihadist Hotspots (2%) - The first of the primary subjects transacted at WU locations in the Gulf states of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait or United Arab Emirates and sent to counterparties at WU locations in the Sahel and at least two other emerging finance hubs across the world, 14 of these agents had large amounts (i.e. $1,000) in remote parts of the world.
- Risk Nationalities in the Sahel (14%) - These consumers had a majority of up to 10 locations from Lebanon, Syria, Yemen, Venezuela etc.
- Risk Travel (9%) - These consumers last transacted at least one high-risk country for terrorism, including, Syria, Yemen or Ethiopia and then transacted for the first time in the Sahel, indicating a high-risk figure pattern of movement.

Risk Sahel City (9%)

These consumers appeared in remote towns of Gao or Mopti that are the most at-risk hotspots for terror finance in the Sahel.

Top with Previous FIU Investigations (7%) - This includes 4% that appeared in a FIU-related FIU report issued in 2018, which either originated in the Sahel or involved a human trafficking or terrorism investigation.

2023 of Primary Subjects Linked to Potential Human Smuggling through a Transit City of Agadez or Tahoua in Niger

2023 of these subjects were identified in Agadez, a city in northern Niger that has long served as a hub for human smuggling, attempting to reach Europe.

70% of these subjects had an address that matches a unique agent in Agadez concerning the United States.

Primary subject illustrates the potential connections between human smuggling and terror finance in a consumer in Tahoua, Niger, which has emerged as an emerging alternative to Agadez, received over 20,000 from 31 airlines in France and other countries in both Niger and France during the review period.

Additional consumers in the primary subject's network appeared in terror finance cases. All of these were based in Niger and received from many of the same banks in France.

- Matched 213 potential terror finance facilitators
- Matched with 213 counterparties previously investigated by the FIU for terror finance as the result of law enforcement referrals (37)

Confidence

Confidence is generally means the information could be interpreted in various ways. We have reviewed views of the information is credible and plausible but not sufficiently corroborated to warrant a high level of confidence. Transaction patterns are characteristic of specific risk exposure behavior, a portion of the activity may have plausible alternative (not or illicit) explanations.

Confidence

Confidence generally means the information is scarce, questionable, or very fragmented and it is hard to make solid, unique inferences, or we have significant concerns or problems with the information. Transaction patterns may be consistent with certain illicit behavior, but significant portions of it is very plausible alternative (not or illicit) explanations.

Some analytic judgments also include language that reflects the FIU's sense of probability that a threat event will occur. Using phrases like "likely," "probable," or "reasonable," we cannot state "we cannot discount" or "we are unlikely" or "we are more likely" or "we are more confident" as such terms lack meaningful, words such as "may be" and "suggest" are also in situations where we are unable to be confident because current information is sparse or not sufficiently clear to justify a more confident.

Confidence Gaps & Assumptions

The FIU included referrals from the enforcement of external support to terror finance facilitators in the Sahel, which were not confirmed views of any direct activity involving the Sahel and using WU. These examples did not provide a comprehensive picture that could be adapted to look for additional cases.

Inside Europe's people-smuggling networks: A journey from Afghanistan to Germany

NBC News met Zubair Nazeri in Serbia and tracked him for a year as he repeatedly tried to reach the West.

The recruiters or agents used by migrants outside of their home country tend to be of the same nationality, according to experts. Many are also former migrants.

“Crossing Iran we had an Iranian ‘guide’; in Turkey an Afghan, and in Bulgaria a Pakistani,” he recalls. “But in Serbia, we have no one.”

- Offshore Company Formation (OCF) providers are firms which create legal entities, such as LLCs, on behalf of clients in a jurisdiction other than their clients' home country
- In theory, “offshore” can refer to any jurisdiction outside a client’s home country; in practice the term refers to countries which offer low or zero taxation and a degree of secrecy for foreign clients
- It is not illegal to move money offshore or own an offshore entity and offshore jurisdictions can be used for legitimate tax planning purposes
- However, offshore companies are sometimes used to facilitate money laundering and tax evasion and as such present a risk to the company
- In general, jurisdictions which market themselves on financial secrecy over tax advantage are considered the riskiest

Secrecy Jurisdiction: Nevis

The Caribbean island of Nevis, the autonomous partner of nearby St. Kitts, has been described in the British press as “the world’s most secretive offshore haven”. The country’s regulators keep no records of the beneficial ownership or assets of LLCs and the country requires the deposit of a $100k bond in person to bring any legal proceedings. Nevis LLCs hold property and companies around the world and have been implicated in numerous financial scandals.

As always, thanks for the very quick communication/response over the phone this morning.

To recap our morning call, we [FBI] are prepared to action [immediately] the following thresholds:

- CTD/SPES/SEU is interested in all financial relationships that meet the following thresholds:
 - Customers confirmed as transacting, either through bank account [debit card] or credit card, Washington D.C. purchases between 1/5/21 and 1/6/21, with the additional [identifying] targeting thresholds:
 - Purchases made for hotel/airbnb RSVPs in the DMV area [the day before and during Inauguration Day] -----since 1/6/21.
 - ANY historical purchase [going back 6 months generally, for weapons or weapons related-vendor purchases].
 - Secondly, purchases made for returns to Washington, D.C. and the surrounding DMV area:
 - With Airline travel to DMV area for Inauguration Day
 - With no identified airline purchases for the DMV.

 - SEU intends to capture, with its FI-partner concurrence, all customers who might be more strategic in carrying out attacks related to CTD interests; travel with weapons by vehicle and [not by] air, given the current threat and aftermath of the 6 Jan Capitol building incidents. The intention by SEU is to identify all potential networks of threats vs. individual threats to Inauguration Day and beyond.

This may turn into a code red, but in the interim we wanted to push you selectors we confirmed on the ops side. So yes, for now, we have not confirmed we have GJS' teed up for all results from our normal "code red" protocol --but we will take any SARs you decide to file on.

If this turns into a code red over the weekend, you will hear it from me first.

Hope this helps.

Hope you all have a safe weekend with your families.

Via Email: [REDACTED]

Dear [REDACTED]

I am writing to express my gratitude to MUFG Bank for its collaborative efforts in working with the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) and our law enforcement partners in the aftermath of the tragic events at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021.

I am truly proud of the partnership that we formed as our organizations worked together in this unprecedented time of crisis. We deeply appreciate the timely and proactive attention of your team during this period – many times on short-notice, late into evenings, or over weekends – to respond to this challenge and to share information and work with law enforcement to follow leads and identify potential threats.

I hope that this letter serves to underscore the importance of your institution's anti-money laundering efforts and reminds everyone contributing to your institution's program – particularly those staff members who work closely with FinCEN and our law enforcement partners to respond to crisis events – that their efforts truly make a difference to our national security each and every day.

Brick & Mortar to Bits & Bytes: Adapting the U.S. AML/CFT Regime for Digital Identity

Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group (BSAAG)
FinTech/RegTech Working Group
Digital ID/eKYC Workstream¹

Table of Contents

- I. Introduction: what does “digital identity” mean for AML/CFT?
 - A. The Vision and the Reality

The Financial Action Task Force (FATF) Guidance on Digital Identity (FATF Guidance) envisions “Digital ID systems” as using “electronic means to assert and prove a person’s official identity online (digital) and/or in-person environments at various assurance levels.”² However, the FATF Guidance acknowledges that “[n]ot all elements of a digital ID system are necessarily digital. Some elements of the identity proofing and enrolment component can be either digital or physical (documentary), or a combination, but binding, credentialing, and authentication ... must be digital.”³ Written for a broad audience of government authorities, regulated entities, and digital ID service providers from jurisdictions of varying political realities and stages of development in their Anti-Money Laundering (AML)/Counter Financing of Terrorism (CFT) regimes, the FATF Guidance’s primary focus is primarily on true, end-to-end national digital ID systems.⁴

The reality is that most financial institutions⁵ currently inhabit, and will likely continue to inhabit, a world straddling the paper and plastic identification of the past and the aspirations of end-to-end digital identification systems that the FATF envisions. The range of practices used to satisfy Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) obligations in the U.S. vary widely among online banks or neobanks, fintechs, and traditional financial institutions. But overarching the financial industry and its business models is the reality that there is deep political and cultural skepticism of, or even hostility to, a national ID system in the U.S.

Therefore, this Working Group (Group) acknowledges the likelihood that a fully realized national digital ID system will face unique political challenges and structural hurdles in the U.S.

¹ This draft whitepaper was drafted for review and presentation at the May 2021 BSAAG meeting. The views expressed in this document are those of the Workstream as contributed and agreed by workstream members, and not those of their employers.

² FATF, Guidance on Digital Identity ¶57 (Mar. 2020).

³ Id. at ¶59 (emphasis added).

⁴ Id. at ¶58.

that it would not in many other countries⁶ and that the financial industry will likely be living in that interstitial state of paper, plastic (i.e., “analog”), and “digital ID” for the foreseeable future. “Digital ID” in the U.S. will more likely evolve to include a mosaic of tools and services offered through Federal and State governments, digital ID vendors, credit ratings agencies and other data providers, and financial institutions themselves. As the mosaic evolves and financial institutions face continued commercial pressure to provide their customers with the kind of seamless online services they are already accustomed to in other service sectors (and countries), financial institutions will only increasingly identify and verify their customers through digital means, but with AML legal and regulatory requirements that were designed for analog identification processes undertaken by financial institution in their brick-and-mortar, not online, forms.

In this context then and utilizing FATF’s terminology, this paper takes the functional view that “digital identity” or “digital ID” refers simply to:

electronic means [that can be used] to assert and prove a person’s official identity online (digital) and/or [within] in-person environments at various assurance levels.”

– FATF Guidance at ¶57.

This formulation acknowledges the realities of interstitial state between analog and digital identification our “mosaic” but allows us to chart a course for U.S. financial institutions who must continue to engage their customers in an increasingly digital world. It also encourages U.S. financial institutions to engage a key recommendation of the FATF Guidance to utilize the “anti-fraud and cyber security processes” already in common use by U.S. financial institutions, such as geolocation, IP addresses, and biometrics,⁷ “to support digital identity proofing and/or authentication for AML/CFT efforts (customer identification/verification at on-boarding and

⁶ For example, Singapore’s myInfo/SingPass, Estonia’s national ID-cards, or India’s Aadhaar number are all national, federated digital ID systems that may be used for CDD and digital onboarding. Others, like Sweden’s BankID have sanctioned specific digital identity services for financial services onboarding.

⁷ The FATF defines three distinct types of “biometrics”:

- biophysical biometrics: attributes, such as fingerprints, iris patterns, voiceprints, and facial recognition—all of which are static
- biomechanical biometrics: attributes, such as keystroke mechanics, are the product of unique interactions of an individual’s muscles, skeletal system, and nervous system.
- behavioural biometric patterns: attributes, based on the new computational social science discipline of social physics, consist of an individual’s various patterns of movement and usage in geospatial temporal data streams, and include, e.g., an individual’s email or text message patterns, file access log, mobile phone usage, and geolocation patterns.

FATF Guidance at ¶57.

ongoing due diligence and transaction monitoring)” even absent end-to-end, state-sponsored or authorized digital identity systems.⁸

B. Objectives

First, the U.S. AML regime should create the conditions for digital ID practices to take root in the U.S. financial industry by expanding and updating the existing customer identification program (CIP) rules for the different types of BSA-regulated institutions.⁹ The current CIP Rules are nearly 20 years old, were primarily designed for in-person identification in brick-and-mortar branches, and are now quickly being dated by intervening advances in technology—smartphones, biometrics, artificial intelligence, etc. While the CIP Rules wisely preserved some flexibility, they still do not provide financial institutions sufficient regulatory certainty or the permission necessary to ensure digital ID elements can be included effectively in CIP and Know-Your-Customer (KYC) processes, especially in the way that the FATF is now advocating. Therefore, this paper recommends specific regulatory action, particularly in the CIP Rules, and interpretation that can begin to create the conditions and flexibility under which financial institutions may fully utilize digital ID’s benefits, while mitigating its potential risks and better combating money laundering, terrorist financing, weapons proliferation, and other illicit transactions. For instance, the paper suggests revisiting the presumption in the CIP Rules that online identification and verification is inherently riskier, the requirement for banks to obtain the full nine digits of the Social Security Number (SSN), enhancing examiner guidance on new digital identification elements, and exploring usage of alternative identifying numbers, such as driver’s license numbers as mobile driver’s license (mDL) and state identification ecosystems mature and provide higher levels of assurance.

Second, the U.S. AML regime should incorporate more “optionality”—i.e., having more options, but not necessarily obligations—into CIP and customer due diligence (CDD) processes. Greater optionality would allow financial institutions to utilize the variety of “digital signals” inherent in a predominantly digital customer relationship—e.g., IP addresses, geolocation, biometrics, etc.—to contribute to a financial institution’s understanding of its customer for KYC purposes. In their optionality, greater utilization of digital signals would not be mandatory for financial institutions—those able to manage their AML/CFT risks with traditional CIP and KYC processes would be able to satisfy their regulatory obligations without incorporating or relying on digital signals. However, financial institutions with digital relationships would be able to incorporate and rely on those signals in addition to or in lieu of some traditional KYC elements. As discussed in more depth in section II.D, this could include substituting the traditionally required

⁸ Id. at Glossary, p. 101.

⁹ See 31 CFR 1020.220 (banks); 31 CFR 1023.220 (broker-dealers); 31 CFR 1024.220 (mutual funds); 31 CFR §1026.220 (futures commission merchants and introducing brokers) (together, the CIP Rules). Other BSA-regulated financial institutions, including casinos/card clubs, money service businesses, insurance companies, dealers in precious metals/stones/jewels, credit card systems, loan or finance companies, and housing government sponsored enterprises, do not have a customer identification program requirement; however, they may have requirements to either identify a customer or verify a customer’s identity for certain transactions.

CIP elements of Social Security Number (SSN) and address, either with sufficient assurance levels obtained with other digital elements or at lower risk levels, especially when considering financial inclusion policy rationales.

Third, financial institutions and regulators should continue to define the benefits of and rationales for digital identity, but especially its potential to both enhance the effectiveness of AML

[o]fficial identity that can change over time as the identified individual develops a progressively more robust digital footprint that provides an increasing number of attributes and/or authenticators that can be verified against an increasing number and range of sources.

– FATF Guidance at p. 104.

compliance and increase financial inclusion.

Fourth, this paper seeks to expand on the concept of “progressive identity” explored in the FATF Guidance. As defined by the FATF, “progressive identity” is an:

Progressive identity recognizes that digital ID is not simply a new method for static identification and verification, but can facilitate the “customer journey” through which customers increase their digital footprint and traditionally underrepresented customers can seek more and varied services as they develop a more robust digital footprint with a financial institution, all while providing financial institutions tools that could be used to better understand the nature and purpose of the customer relationship. By utilizing progressive assurance levels, financial institutions should be able to offer limited, lower-risk products and services for customers in the initial steps of that “journey” relying on simplified due diligence frameworks already sanctioned by FATF, only requiring enhanced assurance if customers wish to increase the depth and complexity of their relationships with the financial institution.

These approaches to digital ID have potentially profound policy implications and benefits. Expanding CIP elements could enhance the security of our identification ecosystem by reducing reliance on the already highly compromised SSN. Progressive identity would help financial institutions address financial inclusion, allowing and encouraging them to take on customers they have in the past overlooked or who themselves have been deterred from even seeking services from financial institutions (and make that onboarding process easier for the customer), while also focusing financial institutions on behavioral risk rather than cruder risk proxies like geography or product type. Focusing on behavioral customer risk and leveraging the digital signals that many financial institutions are already using for their fraud and cyber-security processes to mitigate operational risk would allow financial institutions to refocus the massive human resources currently allocated to KYC and train them on more effective techniques for proactively detecting financial crime.

dealers, and other financial institutions” through “the mail, electronically, or in other situations where the accountholder is not physically present at the financial institution”.¹² Those numbers have only grown since 2001 for mutual funds and broker-dealers, but also for banks for whom it was less customary to open accounts remotely in 2001. This concern led in part to the flexibility built into particularly the non-documentary verification option of the CIP Rules and informed the credit card exemption,¹³ which explicitly granted banks the ability to obtain identifying information from third-party sources prior to extending credit in large part because the credit card banks’ business model entailed opening accounts remotely by telephone or at third-party points of sale.¹⁴ Just as credit card banks’ business model in 2003 was predicated on remote, non-face-to-face onboarding, many financial institutions have had their business models disrupted by technology and are now heavily reliant on their ability to conduct non-face-to-face onboarding through smartphones and other electronic devices.

B. Clarify that that non-face-to-face identification is not always inherently riskier than face-to-face identification

The language of CIP Rules suggest that a customer opening an “account without appearing in person” is a “circumstance[] that increases the risk that the financial institution will be unable to verify the true identity of a customer through documents.”¹⁵ That presumption, and its reflection in the FFIEC’s BSA/AML Manual¹⁶ (FFIEC Manual), should be reassessed in light of the FATF’s observation that non-face-to-face identification “may be standard risk, and may even be lower risk,”¹⁷ the MOBILE Act’s Congressional sanction of digitally transmitted ID documentation, the current verification practices for many financial institutions operating online, and the state of the technology itself that has evolved well beyond what was available in 2003 when the CIP rule was promulgated.

Where in 2003 a financial institution might have only the identification documentation and their impressions of an in-person account opening, it now may have more identification and verification data points from a customer relationship initiated online than in-person. In addition to non-documentary verification methods contemplated at the time of the CIP Rules' adoption, facial recognition techniques can now compare the government-issued photo ID document with real-time video calls or video-selfies, effectively replacing human vision with a computer's and establishing confidence that the individual behind the device during onboarding is in fact the onboarded personality.¹⁸ In real-time, financial institutions are now capable of: verifying that the information provided by the prospective customer matches the government-issued photo ID document scanned by the device; validating the authenticity of the document and device via third-party software and mobile applications; and confirming that the photo on the document matches the individual's facial biometric as presented through the device which can be recorded in the customer's KYC file.

Though the ID document may be transmitted digitally and the account opening conducted "without appearing in person," today's remote digital verification of ID documents may in fact pose fewer risks than an in-person identification and verification that does not also use these techniques. The use of the biometric checks and specially trained screeners for inconclusive digital results adds an additional layer of protection against stolen IDs and impersonation attacks that can meet or exceed the reliability of traditional face-to-face verification. Even setting aside the potential foibles of human judgment in an in-person visual identification, an online onboarding simply captures more data by which to understand the customer, such as email address, device information, IP address, and geo-location, and allows the financial institution to cross-reference those data points to existing databases and form a more holistic view of the customer.

As larger scale reform for the CIP Rules is worked through, regulators could also address this point for examiners in the FFIEC Manual and/or for financial institutions through FAQs clarifying that the CIP Rules' presumption here is limited to situations where, at the time the rules were crafted, there would have been no reliable way to digitally convey documentary identification such as a driver's license and acknowledge that, today, there are viable and secure ways to convey and verify that documentation remotely.

- C. In the near-term, explicitly permit banks and other financial institutions to collect the "last-four" of the SSN with adequate verification and retention of the "full-nine"

Truncation of the SSN has become a standard information security practice in different areas of society.¹⁹ However, the bank CIP Rule alone explicitly requires that the four elements of ¹⁸ Importantly and as discussed below, we must be critical of and continue to assess and improve technologies like facial recognition, which have thus far proven less effective at recognizing, for instance, darker skin tones.

II. Modernize the CIP Rules to Adapt to Evolving Digital Identification Practices

As public and private stakeholders provide new tools for digital identification and verification, the U.S. AML regime should be prepared to ingest them and acknowledge the changed landscape and expectations of cybersecurity.

- A. The Customer Identification Program rules were built to last and adapt but were still created primarily for brick-and-mortar relationships.

The different iterations of the BSA's CIP Rules provide inherent flexibility, both in their fundamental requirement simply to have procedures that "enable [the formation of] a reasonable belief that [the financial institution] knows the true identity of each customer" and the ability to obtain "documentary" or "non-documentary" verification—itself a version of the "optionality" concept that this paper advocates expanding. The rules do not absolutely require the presentation of government-issued identification, mandate in-person presentation of documentation, or even require an identification photograph.¹⁰

For example, the CIP Rules arguably provide sufficient flexibility for the growing practice of accepting a digitized transmission of a driver's license, which is further supported by 2018's MOBILE Act.¹¹ That Act allows financial institutions to accept and record information from a scanned driver's license or personal identification card to verify the authenticity of the identification and the identity of an individual requesting to open an account or obtain a financial product or service. However, other aspects of the CIP Rules, such as requiring banks to collect identification data "from the customer" or the apparent presumption that non-face-to-face identification is inherently riskier than in-person identification, undermine some of that flexibility. These limitations are inconsistent with the MOBILE Act's intent to encourage the digital delivery of financial services to address increasing mobility and lack of fixed addresses in the population, consumer expectations for digital products and services, and the unfortunate reality that face-to-face identification requirements also may raise health and safety risks as during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Though the CIP Rules were prescient in utilizing both documentary and non-documentary verification methods, it is worth considering whether they can be updated or clarified to reflect the reality that online relationships and the technologies that manage those relationships have only become more prevalent across all BSA-regulated financial institution types and forced many to rely increasingly on non-documentary identification and verification. Even in 2001, Congress recognized that the fact that "[m]illions of Americans open accounts at mutual funds, broker-

CIP, including the SSN, be collected “from the customer,” which banks and their examiners commonly read as collecting the full-nine digits directly “from the customer.” Though this requirement is only explicitly present in the bank CIP Rule, this group understands anecdotally that other financial institutions commonly understand it to be a requirement in their respective industries.²⁰ In any event, however, it is now common practice for some traditional financial institutions and certainly for fintechs typically regulated as MSBs to collect only the “last four” digits of the TIN/SSN “from the customer” when establishing a business relationship online and then verify and/or collect the remainder from a credit rating agency or other authorized third-party that can match the customer to the partial TIN/SSN (in which case, the full-nine digit SSN is never transmitted). Allowing the collection of the last-four digits of the SSN, which are its most unique numbers, while ensuring collection of the full- nine from a third party would comport not only with better information security practices, but also with consumer expectations and wariness in using the SSN at all.

Even though obtaining the last-four digits is still susceptible to identity theft because SSNs are so widely available and because the last-four digits are the most unique, the use of the last-four digits reduces the data security and privacy risks in acquiring and transmitting the full-nine digits. As a matter of industry practice, many financial institutions that collect the full-nine digits now send them to a credit reporting agency for verification purposes in any event. Sending only the last-four digits would therefore reduce data security and privacy risks while also being sufficient in most circumstances for identification and verification purposes—utilizing valid name, address, date of birth, and verifying the last-four digits against the full-nine presents low risk of misidentification. Banks or other financial institutions who may still collect the full-nine will also need to consider any other potential risks in larger scale adoption of last-four and establish clear guardrails for requiring the full-nine where a last-four method has failed. Fortunately, there is already a wealth of best practices and techniques from the large number of other financial institutions and vendors that have utilized these practices for some time already. Perhaps more important than the identity theft, data security, and privacy risks, is the possibility that requiring the full-nine in an online setting will likely discourage potential customers from opening bank accounts online because widely accepted and promoted data security practices suggest that provide the last-four whenever possible.²¹ Utilizing last-four would also have the knock-on effect digits of the SSN on W-2 statements and noting the ability to identify individuals with last-four together with name and address).

²⁰ While the bank CIP Rule specifies that the four CIP elements must be collected “from the customer”, all the CIP Rules require their covered FIs’ CIP contain procedures that specify what identifying information must be obtained “from each customer”, followed in close proximity by the four CIP elements. This proximity may have led to a reading that the four element themselves must be “obtained from each customer.” The non-bank CIP Rules, however, only require the CIP to determine which elements must be collected “from each customer”, not that each element must be collected “from the customer,” and therefore may be more susceptible to clarification by FAQ.

²¹ See, e.g., Federal Trade Commission, What to Know About Identity Theft (suggesting consumers ask if they can only provide the last-four digits when asked for their SSN); American Association of Retired Persons, Guard Your

of streamlining collection of CIP information from beneficial owners and especially from corporate controls persons, who are sometimes reluctant to potentially compromise their own identity in service of their employer.

The OCC's recent Interpretive Letter 1175,²² permitting the requesting bank to use the last-four digits in a specific circumstance, may pave the way by confirming that "collecting partial TINs from customers does not present any additional risk of money laundering since [the requestor's operating subsidiary] will obtain the full TIN from a reliable third party source that will enable it to form a reasonable belief that it knows the true identify of its customer." Though the Interpretive Letter is limited to the facts presented by the requestor, its rationale should be more broadly accepted, if not encouraged, across the financial industry.

Wide-scale adoption of last-four may also be a relatively easy regulatory change to make outside of full-scale revision of the CIP Rules. First, regulators could issue a Frequently Asked Question (FAQ) clarifying that a customer providing their last-four digits and consent to collect their full-nine digits from an authorized third party is the equivalent of obtaining the full-nine digits directly "from the customer." Second, the "from the customer" language may be susceptible to carve out from the CIP Rules' exemptive relief provisions. Since the practice of collecting full-nine originates with the "from the customer" language of the Bank CIP Rule alone, it would not require a regulatory and AML risk analysis for all BSA-covered financial institutions. Third, the CIP Rule's exemptive relief provision authorizes the "appropriate Federal functional regulator, with the concurrence of the [Treasury] Secretary" to "exempt any bank or type of account from the requirements of this section" by simple order, provided that exemption is consistent with the purposes of the BSA, safe and sound banking, and other appropriate factors.²³ Though the credit card exemption was written into the regulation itself, the logic of its flexibility to account for the nuances of the commercial context and privacy expectations of customers at the time may also provide a guidepost for the rationale for a last-four exemption.

D. Look beyond the CIP Rules' "Core Four" as identifiers

The only identification elements that the USA PATRIOT Act (in amending the BSA) explicitly required for the identification and verification of accountholders were name and address²⁴—it did not explicitly mandate collecting or maintaining the SSN or date of birth. The USA PATRIOT Act also required the Secretary of the Treasury to "take into consideration the various types of accounts maintained by various types of financial institutions, the various methods of opening accounts, and the various types of identifying information available.”²⁵ Since there are now many more methods of opening accounts and types of identifying information available than there were in 2001 at the time of the USA PATRIOT Act’s passage and the implementing regulations for the CIP requirement in 2003, and the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020²⁶ (AML Act) is causing a broader reconsideration of the U.S. AML regime, this is an appropriate inflection point for Treasury to reconsider its CIP Rules. Assuming, however, that “name” is a fundamental requirement for identification and as a practical matter “date of birth” (or at least month and year of birth) may be a necessary identification element for OFAC screening purposes and possibly ensuring true matches in 314a or 314b requests, we should at least reconsider the SSN and address as absolutely required CIP elements and assess potential alternatives at this moment in the evolution of the BSA/AML regime. As discussed in more depth below, reconsidering whether alternative identification elements could substitute for identifying number and address could have important implications for the ability of financial institutions to utilize digital identity systems at the state level and address increasing concerns over financial inclusion for those who may lack fixed addresses or SSNs.

Social Security Number (suggesting the protection of even the last-four by asking if a company can accept an alternative identifier).

In addition, we should clarify and distinguish that identifiers may and sometimes should be different than the record-keeping requirements for customers. For instance, even if the SSN is not required as an identifier it is sometimes required for other regulatory purposes, such as tax reporting, and is often a helpful data point for law enforcement. Financial institutions could, however, still collect the SSN from credit reporting agencies for regulatory, tax, and record-keeping purposes, as well as assisting law enforcement.

1. Reduce the dependence on the SSN as an identifier and open the door to alternative identifying numbers

The deficiencies of the SSN from an identification, verification, authentication, and general cybersecurity perspective are well-documented. Requiring a new customer to provide an SSN in 2003 was much more valuable in authenticating that the customer was who s/he claimed to be because knowledge of one’s SSN was generally more private then and the numbers themselves had not been compromised the way many of them have been today.²⁷ Today, however, after so many large-scale data breaches and ready accessibility of SSNs from illicit brokers, the SSN is no longer as valuable particularly as an authenticator and, as discussed above, customers are increasingly wary of sharing it. Moving away from it as a required element of CIP and allowing other identification numbers in its place as long as they provide financial institutions that “reasonable belief” in the “true identity” of their customers would likely be beneficial not only for financial institutions’ identification purposes and fraud reduction, but also for customer privacy, information security, financial inclusion, and the health of the country's identity ecosystem.²⁸ Moreover, as discussed below, the Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 allows for the use of other potential identifying numbers in identifying beneficial owners of legal entities and even creates a new form of identifier to be issued by FinCEN, both of which may expand the identification landscape to broader sets of identifying numbers.

As the most common documentary identification and verification source for natural persons, driver's licenses and state-issued identification and their identification numbers are the prime candidate for expanding the "optionality" for identification number. Driver's license and state identification card numbers are themselves readily verifiable with credit ratings agencies and other providers, just as SSNs are. The widespread adoption of the more reliable REAL ID standard for driver's licenses and identification cards, which requires a thorough verification of the "Core Four" including the SSN itself by state government issuers,²⁹ will also make driver's licenses and identification card numbers more reliable identifiers generally. In addition, state mobile driver's licenses (mDLs) may be showing the most promise and progress as end-to-end digital identification systems—and may ultimately get more traction with a general public that has viewed Federal identification systems with skepticism and suspicion since the advent of the SSN itself.³⁰

Apple has been actively advancing the possibility of greater adoption and consistency of mDLs by announcing in June 2021 that iOS 15 would allow customers in participating states to add their drivers licenses or state IDs to its Wallet App.³¹ More recently, Apple has announced the initial wave of participating states and that the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) will enable their use at certain airport checkpoints.³² While Apple has promised privacy, concerns about the issue and potential inconsistencies across states and by government actors may ²⁹ In this sense, REAL ID driver's licenses will essentially become derivative of SSN-based identification. However, to the extent that it may be carried out at more stringent assurance levels by state government actors, REAL IDs may help limit the use of the SSN in private-sector relationships.

“acceptable identification documents,” while collecting the TIN for recordkeeping purposes from third-party services and eventually via APIs with the government issuing authorities.

To further promote financial inclusion, financial institutions, regulators, and law enforcement should also consider whether alternative identifying numbers could be used at lower assurance levels for correspondingly lower dollar, limited service accounts even without a record-keeping requirement for an SSN.³⁶ As discussed in more depth below, in digital or predominantly digital relationships, the digital signals from a customer that a financial institution collects during the customer lifecycle may themselves add to the level of identity assurance over time, or conversely, customer account activity and/or additional product usage may trigger the need for increased assurances. In addition to promoting financial inclusion and equity, such an approach could increase “SSN-shy” customers’ access to financial services instead of use of less transparent, informal value transfer systems, which could benefit law enforcement.

2. Expand the Scope of the BSA’s Requirement for “Address”

Though “address,” unlike “identification number,” is specifically mentioned in the BSA as an identification element, it has a history of broader interpretation than the “residential or business street address” required by the CIP Rules. The CIP Rules themselves make allowances for individuals without fixed residential or business addresses to provide Army or Fleet P.O. boxes or the residential or business address of a “next of kin or of another contact individual.”³⁷ In 2004, FinCEN issued an FAQ indicating that rural route numbers are acceptable as addresses and that in the absence of such a number or address for next of kin or another contact individual, even a “description of the customer’s physical location” would suffice.³⁸ Similarly, in 2010, FinCEN issued a ruling on the CIP requirements allowing victims of domestic violence in state-sponsored address confidentiality programs to use the P.O. boxes assigned by their state programs.³⁹ While this guidance is helpful, FinCEN could advance financial inclusion in both analog and digital identification by expanding upon the “next of kin or of another contact individual” option in the CIP Rules by utilizing the FATF’s suggestion of allowing “trusted referees”, including for example local government authorities, employers, or school administrators, to vouch for an applicant.⁴⁰ In the digital identity context, the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) makes allowance for the use of trusted referees in its Digital Identity Guidelines, which provide digital ID inevitably linger and remain a barrier to use.³³ There may also be drawbacks for verifying financial institutions such as the fact that drivers' licenses may be revoked or expire, or individuals may carry driver's licenses from multiple states. The fact that physical driver's licenses are easily stolen and presented in full in a variety of settings, could make their identification numbers more vulnerable to fraud and identity theft.

While these are certainly concerns, there may also be advantages to mDLs that protect them from some of these potential weaknesses. If an iPhone is stolen or lost, bad actors will have a much more difficult time extracting mDL information from the iPhone than the face of a plastic license. mDL proponents, including Apple, tout the possibility of a "Privacy View", limiting access to those information elements required by the verifying requestor, confirming for example to a liquor store only that the bearer is over 21 without revealing even their birth date, identification number, or any other identifying information while revealing more to a TSA or law enforcement officer.³⁴ Most tantalizingly, perhaps, mDLs offer a clear path to linking verification systems directly to state agencies as official, authoritative "sources of truth" for identity—the end-to-end digital ID system. The decentralized and dispersed efforts of different states as our "laboratories of democracy" may even be a strength in this context. While Apple's early efforts are currently limited to proving identity in the physical world to law enforcement and the TSA, their broader adoption and potential linkages to DMVs and other state sources as verifiers make them strong candidates both for greater use and inclusion in the mosaic of our digital identity ecosystem, proving identity online, and for use of their identifying numbers by financial institutions for CIP purposes. In time, financial institutions and third-party identity providers should be able to establish Application Programming Interfaces (APIs) with DMVs and state identification providers directly, or even blockchain authenticated identity tokens.

The Corporate Transparency Act (CTA), as part of the AML Act, has also recently opened the door for alternatives to the SSN by not requiring the provision of an SSN for beneficial owners but rather only a "unique identifying number from an acceptable identification document," and indicating that the "acceptable identification document" may be a nonexpired driver's license, state identification card, or domestic or foreign passport.³⁵ Opening the door even a little more, perhaps, the CTA also authorized the use of a unique "FinCEN identifier," which the agency will be required to issue to both entities and individuals that otherwise provide the required identifying information. While much remains to be determined with respect to the CTA, the CIP Rules' requirement to collect Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN) (i.e., SSN for individuals and EIN for legal entities) for identification and verification purposes should be opened up to a risk-based approach that would allow for the collection of other "unique identifying numbers" from assurance frameworks and standards in the U.S. and are widely considered authoritative elsewhere.⁴¹

While expansion of the “trusted referee” concept could enhance financial inclusion, the nature of digital identification and relationships themselves may provide even greater flexibility in banking those in underserved communities without a fixed residential or business address. Signals and data points available in a digital relationship may allow financial institutions to conduct the appropriate level of transaction monitoring for customers who are unable to provide a fixed address. For instance, a customer with no fixed address but an identified and authenticated electronic device bound at an acceptable assurance level who consents to geo-location may provide a better “description of the customer’s physical location” than the potential uncertainties of locating that customer through “next of kin” or “another contact individual”—potentially allowing financial institutions to consider banking persons they might not have previously, even if at more restrictive, risk-based service levels. The FATF’s 2017 supplement on CDD to its 2013 Guidance on financial inclusion acknowledges this possibility and the likelihood that the sustainability of financially inclusive business models may be dependent on leveraging technological solutions like these.⁴² The intent behind requiring a physical address was to ensure that banks and law enforcement be able to locate a particular customer. Where digital identification information allows for a similar or perhaps even greater degree of certainty of customer location as physical address, it should be treated equivalently if not with greater certainty.

- E. Ensure the CIP Rules’ documentary verification examples and/or related examiner guidance are adaptable to a digital identification environment

The CIP Rules provide only one example for documentary verification of individual customers: “unexpired government-issued identification evidencing nationality or residence and bearing a photograph or similar safeguard, such as a driver's license or passport.”⁴³ While there is built-in optionality for financial institutions to take a risk-based approach as to acceptable identification documentation, the example could potentially be enhanced to accommodate changes in the way digital identity may be provided. As it stands, the example suggests

It also increasingly involves technological solutions used by financial institutions to fulfil their compliance obligations, for instance using big data collected through mobile phone usage, to monitor customers’ transactions in a cost-effective manner. This is an important factor regarding the sustainability of the business models developed by financial institutions to reach out to low-income, unserved and underserved groups”).

“government-issued” identification, when in many jurisdictions “government-authorized” digital identity service providers could potentially provide greater assurance levels in identification.⁴⁴ The flexibility built into “photograph or similar safeguard” is also helpful but, even in the context of physical identification, is now dated when “safeguards” may include a range of technical advances, including holograms, UV printing, microprinting, laser perforation, etc.⁴⁵ For advancing the acceptance of, and best practices for, digital identification, it may be helpful for the CIP Rules themselves, examiner guidance like the FFIEC manual, or FAQs to clarify that, while the photograph may still be the gold standard, the range of safeguards has expanded dramatically since the CIP Rules’ issuance and that, in addition to photographic evidence, it may be helpful to financial institutions to have reference to the new range of photographic tools (selfies, liveness, biometrics, e.g.) and assurance levels set forth by an authoritative standard setting body like NIST.

F. Ensure the CIP’s rules’ non-documentary verification element and/or related guidance for examiners are fit for a digital environment

While the CIP Rules’ current examples for non-documentary verification have a helpful degree of flexibility, as discussed previously, they were crafted primarily for an analog identification environment and before many of the digital signals referenced above existed or were commonplace. Regulators should therefore also consider whether the CIP Rules’ specification of non-documentary verification methods is sufficient for the digital identification environment. The current examples specified in the CIP mostly remain useful today: “contacting a customer; independently verifying the customer’s identity through the comparison of information provided by the customer with information obtained from a consumer reporting agency, public database, or other source; checking references with other financial institutions; and obtaining a financial statement.” The “comparison of information” to “a consumer reporting agency, public database, or other source”, in particular, is increasingly utilized over the other non-documentary and documentary verification methods in online customer relationships. However, additional examples that are both technology-neutral and principles-based could attune and encourage financial institutions and examiners to the possibilities of digital non-documentary verification. For instance, the rules could simply add a category that suggests “assessing data and assurance levels relevant to the delivery channel.”

⁴⁴ See, e.g., FATF Guidance at ¶155 (“Typically, proof of official identity has been provided by—or on behalf of—governments. In the digital era, we have begun to see new models, with digital credentials provided by, or in partnership with, the private sector being recognized by the government as official proof of identity in an online environment (e.g., NemID in Denmark), alongside more traditional government-issued digital credentials (e.g., electronic national IDs).”).

⁴⁵ See, e.g., Dep’t of Homeland Sec., Request for Information: Minimum Standards for Licenses and Identification Cards Acceptable by Federal Agencies for Official Purposes; Mobile Driver’s Licenses, 86 FR 20320, 20322 (Apr. 19, 2021) (distinguishing physical security features from electronic security features of mobile driver’s licenses).

Though amending the CIP Rules would be the most effective way to ensure effective adaptation to digital identification, training examiners to consider a financial institution's usage of digital signals as a valid part of identifying, verifying, and even enhancing ongoing CDD obligations, as discussed below, would also be helpful. Accordingly, the FFIEC could consider amending the FFIEC Manual's CIP section to reflect even that the "comparison of information" element could include an assessment of assurance levels, particularly through digital signals that could impact onboarding, such as MAC/IP address, geolocation, email age, and website interaction. Although the FFIEC Manual's CIP section was only recently updated, the principles reflected here and in the FATF Guidance could also be reflected in the Manual's "Electronic Banking" (2014) section or even in a standalone section on AML in the FFIEC's booklet on E-Banking, which was issued in 2003. The utilization of some of these digital signals is, of course, also predicated on having access to them—if customers are unwilling to provide access to them either at onboarding or during the course of the customer relationship, customers could choose to be subject to more manual monitoring, KYC refreshes, and their attendant inconveniences. For their part, financial institutions may choose to assess the feasibility or risks of the relationship in those circumstances and limit them accordingly.

Case study in optionality to the north: Canada

FINTRAC's recent publication of guidance for Canadian financial institutions on identifying and verifying customers explicitly adopts an "optionality" approach that may be instructive for the U.S. FINTRAC offers five different ways to identify and verify a person, including the more recognizable government-issued photo identification and "credit file" method (i.e., utilizing a credit bureau similar to U.S. financial institutions). FINTRAC provides guidance for digitally provided government-issued photo ID, requiring that FIs have a process in place to authenticate the ID, and walking through examples of how this may be accomplished with digital photographs of the ID, selfies, and live video chat. However, FINTRAC also offers financial institutions a "dual process" method by performing any two of the following three elements:

1. refer to and confirm information from a reliable source that includes the person's name and address;
2. refer to and confirm information from a reliable source that includes the person's name and date of birth; or
3. refer to information that includes the person's name and confirms that they have a deposit account, a prepaid payment product account, or a credit card or other loan account with a financial entity, and confirm that information.

The information may come from "statements, letters, certificates, forms or other information sources" either in the original or in paper or digital copy. However, the sources of any two elements used may not be the same. by Congress in the passage of the AML Act of 2020,⁴⁹ and echoed by industry bodies like the Wolfsberg Group,⁵⁰ consultants and trade groups,⁵¹ and thinktanks.⁵² As the FATF suggests, encouraging and supporting digital identity systems and the effective use of digital identification techniques are exactly the kind of regulatory initiative that can allow financial institutions to refocus their AML/CFT programs on those more effective techniques. The effective use of digital identity in AML/CFT programs will not only allow the reallocation of cost savings, but itself will also produce more and more valuable information in the detection and prevention of ML/TF, as financial institutions leverage those digital signals that are increasingly defining their customer relationships. For example, one major investigative firm has related the effectiveness of utilizing digital signals and “following their data” by analyzing IP address data that revealed connections across a large number of purportedly unrelated customers, exposing a complex fraud and money laundering network.⁵³

2. Digital Identity and Financial Inclusion

Though the FATF’s March 2020 Guidance made a strong case for advancing financial inclusion particularly in developing countries by harnessing digital identity in AML/CFT programs, its authors likely could not have foreseen the outsized imperative financial inclusion would take in the ensuing year as governments even (perhaps especially) in developed economies like our own struggled to distribute funds at unprecedented speeds to the public to counteract the economic effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.⁵⁴ An effective system of digital identification not only would have hastened the stimulus and unemployment programs, but would also have helped the programs actually reach their intended recipients with less fraud and error.⁵⁵ Even more important, an effective digital identification system that fostered financial inclusion, could have helped the government reach more of those that have been most marginalized and vulnerable. As reported by The New York Times earlier this year, many homeless people lacking fixed addresses, identification, and resources were reportedly unable to receive the stimulus funds to which they were entitled.⁵⁶ There are of course many more prosaic but still vitally important use cases for utilizing digital identity to ensure that more routine social safety net payments are made to their intended recipients safe from fraud and abuse.

The use of digital identification to reach underserved populations may not be a panacea, as there are well-known barriers to access to technology that will inevitably affect some in those populations.⁵⁷ Sometimes referred to as the “digital divide”, lower income populations simply have less or less reliable access to the technologies that would facilitate digital identification. There is some reason for optimism on this front, however, as recent studies have found that 93% of the U.S. adult population use the internet, 97% use cell phones of some kind, and 85% use smart phones—and the percentages are regularly increasing.⁵⁸ In a potential silver lining, the pandemic laid bare the deficiencies of digital access particularly in education and concerted efforts by the government to facilitate access to underserved populations appear to be following.⁵⁹

Case study in financial inclusion to the south: Mexico

Mexico has, since 2011, utilized a four-tier system of account opening at increasing risk levels to enhance financial inclusion:

- Tier 1 accounts are anonymous, may be opened electronically or in retail stores, and require no account opening data. Monthly deposits, however, cannot exceed $291, the balance may not exceed $388, and funds may not be transferred to other accounts. Cash may be deposited only through physical channels.
- Tier 2 accounts require some basic personal information—name, DOB, gender, address, and Mexican state of origin—but also may be opened electronically. Monthly deposits may not exceed $583 and the balance may not exceed $1,165. Electronic banking and mobile transfers may be used.
- Tier 3 accounts require still more personal information—including occupation, phone number, email, and national identity and tax numbers—and may also be opened electronically. The monthly deposits are capped at $3,885, but there is no balance limit.
- Tier 4 accounts are full featured, traditional bank accounts with checking and no deposit or balance limits. Physical presence is required for opening and the financial institution must keep copies of the identification information for a full KYC file.

Though Mexico’s financial inclusion numbers have not been buoyed as much as hoped by

III. Clearly define the benefits of digital ID for AML/CFT purposes, including for AML Effectiveness and Financial Inclusion

Though the FATF Guidance has effectively started cataloging many of the benefits of digital ID for AML/CFT,⁴⁶ financial institutions and regulators should continue to explore and define them but pay special attention to two key rationales: (1) effectiveness and (2) financial inclusion. These two rationales have now taken on greater significance in the context of recent world events of the COVID-19 pandemic and its economic fallout, as well as AML reform efforts emphasizing the “effectiveness” of AML programs. The FATF Guidance recognizes the importance and interrelatedness of both, suggesting that digital ID systems could not only “generate cost savings” and “help lower onboarding costs” for financial institutions, but also that “[t]hese cost savings could enable regulated entities to allocate compliance resources to other AML/CFT compliance functions, and also facilitate financial inclusion for otherwise excluded or under-served individuals by reducing on-boarding costs.”⁴⁷

1. Digital Identity and AML “Effectiveness”

As adopted at the October 2019 BSAAG Plenary and subsequently disseminated by FinCEN’s advance notice of proposed rulemaking on AML Program Effectiveness, the BSAAG’s AML Effectiveness Working Group identified regulatory initiatives that would allow financial institutions to reallocate resources in order to refocus their AML/CFT programs on more effective and efficient methods of detecting and preventing money laundering.⁴⁸ This theme has since been reinforced ⁴⁶ FATF Guidance at ¶¶104-11 (e.g., minimizing human error, improving customer experience, and enhancing transaction monitoring). Though better defining the risks, their mitigants, and best practices will also of course be critical to the effective use of digital identity in AML/CFT programs, they deserve more extensive consideration and expertise than we can give them here without consultation with broader group of stakeholders, such as cyber and fraud departments from FIs, law enforcement, and digital identity providers. The FATF Guidance effectively catalogs the risks, and their mitigants, of digital identity including the following (many of which may be overlapping): data loss; data corruption; misuse of data due to unauthorized access; cyberattack; impersonation risks; synthetic IDs; authentication and life cycle management risks, including credential stuffing, phishing, man-in-the-middle or credential interception, and PIN code capture and reply; multi-factor authentication vulnerabilities; and bio-metric authenticator spoofing and lower reliability of facial recognition with darker pigmentation or certain types of facial features. Members of this group have reported that their institutions are encountering many variations of these issues already in their fraud prevention efforts, including SIM swapping, IP/geolocation spoofing, cookie copying, browser version and screen resolution emulation. While FATF identifies some mitigants for these risks, technical standard setting bodies like NIST may be best suited to helping FIs control for these risks in the AML context going forward. Of course, many FIs already control for these risks in their fraud and cyber programs and may be well-prepared to understand the risks of incorporating these digital signals in their AML programs. In any event, since risks like these persist both online and in-person and increased digitization of customer relationships is a certainty, the real question for FIs may not be “whether” to consider these digital signals for AML/KYC purposes, but “how”.

IV. Progressive Identity and the Customer Journey

- A. Encourage the use of information associated with digital identification for broader KYC and transaction monitoring purposes

Financial institutions (and their examiners) should take the FATF's cue and expand their view of traditional KYC information to include those "anti-fraud and cyber-security processes to support digital identity proofing and/or authentication for AML/CFT efforts [like] customer identification/verification at onboarding and ongoing due diligence and transaction monitoring."⁶⁰ Depending on the purpose and stage of the relationship, these "digital signals" may include: geolocation, MAC and IP addresses, biophysical biometric attributes (e.g., fingerprints, iris patterns, voiceprints, facial recognition), biomechanical patterns (e.g., keystroke mechanics, typing cadence, or device angle compared with known patterns), behavioral attributes (e.g., expected log-in channels, email/text message patterns, file access log, time of log-in, etc. compared with historical behavior), email age, patterns of website interaction (e.g., expected progression through product offering and account opening), frequency and type of usage, among others.

Without engaging in the extensive and necessary analyses of the specific use cases and best practices necessary for these digital signals in AML/KYC processes here, the basic use case for digital signals in AML/KYC processes is clear: as customer relationships become increasingly digital, and decreasingly in-person, a customer's behavior online becomes increasingly important to the fundamental CDD undertakings of "understanding the nature and purpose of customer relationships for the purpose of developing a customer risk profile [and c]onducting ongoing monitoring to identify and report suspicious transactions and, on a risk basis, to maintain and update customer information."⁶¹ The strength of the binding event at onboarding that pairs the registered/identified and verified customer with his/her device(s) can help the financial institution establish the initial level of confidence in the identity and risk of the customer and inform the risk appetite for product and service levels for the customer. Ongoing authentication, "progressive binding" of new devices authenticated by the customer, behavioral trends, and events across the duration of the customer lifecycle may then all contribute to a customer's dynamic KYC profile. By expanding the initial profile of the customer necessary for onboarding, over time the financial institution develops a better understanding of the customer and its risk profile, which in turn allows the financial institution to expand the level or products and services. Merging these digital signals with traditional and evolving transaction monitoring scenarios and techniques will allow ⁶⁰ FATF Guidance at ¶126 (emphasis added).

⁶¹ See, e.g., 31 CFR §1020.210(a)(v) (CDD procedures requirement for banks).

financial institutions to better “follow their data” in discerning patterns of suspicious activity, in addition to fraud.

- B. Identification and verification are only the beginning—digital identity elements should inform the ongoing CDD obligations to understand the nature and purpose of the customer relationship.

To reap these benefits most effectively, however, financial institutions and regulators should—or at least should have the option to depending on the financial institution’s scale and resources—treat digital identification as a dynamic and progressive process of understanding customer identity over time as more data attributes are gathered and/or customer risk changes. Instead of treating identification and verification as a periodic, static, “point in time” check like onboarding followed by KYC refresh intervals, financial institutions, regulators, and examiners should recognize possibility that the continuous process of ongoing and dynamic identity proofing inherent in digital customer relationships may help facilitate different kinds of customer relationships, including more financially inclusive relationships. A dynamic, progressive view of identification would implement trigger-based thresholds in the KYC process that would prompt additional levels of assurance and verification and utilize that data to continuously rescore the overall confidence in the customer identity and, in turn, determine the scope of customer activity. In this KYC paradigm, a customer would progress on their “customer journey” from lower-risk, limited activity, but financially inclusive accounts to increasingly sophisticated products as that confidence increases—a process not dissimilar to today’s credit card business models, which raise credit limits as the financial institution’s confidence in their customer increases.

But this new paradigm will require reimagination of the customer lifecycle for AML/KYC purposes. Today, traditional customer risk assessment methodologies identify four general categories of “risk factors” that inform the overall profile: (1) intrinsic customer-related factors like professional activity; (2) geographical factors; (3) product, service and transactional behavior like inherent product risk or associated source/destination of funds; and (4) delivery channel such as in person or digital. In a progressive digital identity environment, however, “delivery channel” becomes its own distinct taxonomic rank. Instead of a “factor among many” at onboarding, it becomes the ordering principle for how financial institutions manage the customer across their lifecycle and puts a premium on the financial institution’s own technical capabilities and digital transparency between the financial institution and customer, which will likely be determined in some measure by the customer. Thus, if a customer uses a VPN or blocks location permissions—both legitimate privacy-based decisions—the progressive identity of the customer will be hampered (as will the frictionless service) as the financial institution may likely have to resort to more traditional KYC techniques or limit the customer’s access to its services.

For progressive identity concepts to be most effective, however, financial institutions should increasingly be able to treat significant deviations in risk factors as triggers for increased levels of assurance. To begin operationalizing those triggers, financial institutions should consider de-constructing each broad risk factor into a series of variables, or data elements, and mapping those elements to the internal or external digital signals capable of indicating a deviation from the existing value (e.g., as collected at onboarding). Established thresholds against the variable's behavior would then determine whether or not the deviation reflects a material change in the overall risk factor and/or if a specific action is necessary to gain further confidence that the risk profile has actually changed (i.e., the trigger). Initially these thresholds may be theoretical (or vendor-driven based on industry experience), but over time, insights into the digital customer lifecycle management program would facilitate the financial institution's ability to "follow their data" and decrease or increase the need to trigger a specific action. For example, if the IP address login activity for the main account contact changes to be outside of the country(ies) stated at onboarding, the risk profile should be reassessed and updated to reflect this new country of operation.

In this vision of progressive identity, financial institutions should be better equipped to fulfill their fundamental obligation to understand the nature and purpose of their customer relationships on an ongoing basis. Combined with traditional transaction monitoring, financial institutions should be able to identify a more holistic picture of customer risk by focusing less on cruder proxies of customer risk assessed at arbitrary intervals and more on customer behaviors and intent.

- C. An explicit provision for simplified due diligence would increase adoption of progressive identity and encourage financial inclusion.

In order to enhance the potential of progressive identity and take full advantage of its potential for financial inclusion, however, U.S. regulators should consider adopting regulations that would encourage a true simplified due diligence (SDD)—a concept that has long been part of the FATF's Recommendations,⁶² but currently does not exist in the BSA/AML regime. Though a part of its initial 2012 Recommendations, the FATF more explicitly highlighted the importance of SDD to financial inclusion in its 2017 Financial Inclusion Guidance, which encouraged the reliance on a broader range of identification criteria as a part of SDD measures.⁶³ While the CIP Rules do, as discussed, provide some flexibility in the information collected from customers, they do not clearly tie the possibility of a simplified due diligence in connection with lower risk customers or relationships, products, or services. Regulatory sanction of this concept in the U.S., would encourage financial institutions to take the regulatory risk of "doing less," even if it is proportionate to the lower risks of the customer, for the laudable policy goal of financial inclusion.

V. Next Steps

Without a national government-issued form of digital ID in the U.S., financial institutions and their regulators will need time and flexibility to test new methods to fully realize the potential of our digital ID mosaic for AML/CFT purposes. However, this Group believes there are a few key next steps that would accelerate these efforts.

⁶² FATF, The FATF Recommendations ¶11, Interp. Note. to Rec. 10 (2012).

A multi-stakeholder approach. To fully understand and leverage digital ID for AML/CFT, financial institutions, regulators, and law enforcement should include technology and digital identity firms that are actively working on digital identity solutions—either for governments or financial institutions—in the conversation about how to develop and operationalize ideas like progressive identity. Since most digital identification software and systems for financial institutions are currently developed by specialized vendors, financial institutions, regulators, and law enforcement would benefit from greater understanding of the increasingly specialized techniques used by digital identity firms and their application to KYC. Similarly, different government agencies at both the federal and state level that deal with identifying information should be a part of the conversation to identify synergies and areas of collaboration between the public and private stakeholders that share the same goals for digital identification. To fully capture the range of views from these stakeholders, FinCEN should consider issuing a Request for Information (RFI) or an advanced notice of proposed rulemaking (ANPRM) on potential amendments to the CIP Rules, including those discussed above. To facilitate an effective and probing RFI or ANPRM, FinCEN could consider commissioning additional inquiry under the AML Act-mandated BSAAG Subcommittee on Innovation & Technology, possibly in tandem with the Subcommittee on Information Security & Confidentiality, to better define the scope of issues under digital identity and reform of the CIP Rules and better inform an effective RFI or ANPRM on CIP in the future. In addition, FinCEN could consider devoting some portion of the AML Act-mandated Financial Crimes Tech Symposium to the topics of Digital ID and financial inclusion, especially since the AML Act specifically requires the inclusion of international participants, many of whom have addressed these issues more squarely in recent enhancements to their AML/CFT regimes.

Legal entities. While this paper has focused primarily on digital ID in the context of natural persons, digital ID should also be leveraged for legal entities. Certainly, the identification of beneficial owners, control persons, and representatives of legal entities will benefit from advances in the digital identification of natural persons. However, digital identity solutions for entities themselves could also benefit from digital identification. Indeed, the forthcoming beneficial ownership registry required by the CTA could be seen as the foundational data point in the digital identification of legal entities.

Portability. As noted by the FATF, the portability of digital identification—the ability for a customer to utilize their proofed digital identity between different financial institutions—would make it far more valuable.⁶⁴ Where a digital identity can travel with a customer between financial institutions, it can allow the customer to continue that “customer journey” of progressive identity uninterrupted through their relationships with different financial institutions without having to start from the beginning, building digital trust with each successive financial institution. Financial institutions would benefit not only from not having to redo a customer's KYC profile at each financial institution of their choice, but also from the accumulated risk information that comes with portability. Portability could also help reduce the constant re-exposure of a customer's personal identifying information (PII) in their onboarding at every financial institution. Again, without a national digital identity platform, the U.S. may be at a structural disadvantage on issues like portability. However, this Group strongly believes in pursuing portable digital identity solutions, and how financial institutions, digital identity providers, and government may be best be incentivized in that pursuit.

Government's Role and Partnership. Composed primarily of industry participants, this Group focused more on what financial institutions themselves can do or how AML/CFT regulations may be changed to enhance and promote the use of digital ID. However, even if a national identification system will always remain the "third rail" of the identification problem, there is unquestionably a greater role for governments to play in an effective digital identification system. While this paper explored the potential for mDLs and the use of their identification numbers above, the possibilities for federal government's role in digital identification should also be more deeply explored. Perhaps because of the national identity debate, the federal government has been viewed more as a technical standard setter—as with NIST's global leadership on the issue—or as a regulator—as with the CIP Rules. However, the federal government has recently taken an important step towards utilizing its powerful imprimatur as an authoritative "source of truth" in the digital ID ecosystem with the introduction and scaling of the Social Security Administration's (SSA) electronic Consent Based Social Security Number Verification (eCBSV) Service.⁶⁵ Required by 2018's Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act, the eCBSV allows authorized entities, including financial institutions with customer consent, to query the SSA's database and verify if an individual's SSN, name, and date of birth combination matches the SSA's records. While there is of course room for improvement, the rollout of eCBSV is a welcome addition to the suite of digital identity tools for financial institutions and others. We should, however, continue to explore further roles for the unique authority of federal (and state) government in validating identity attributes while ensuring the privacy and control of consumer data.

BSAAG INNOVATION AND ADOPTION WORKING GROUP RECOMMENDATIONS

I. PROBLEM STATEMENT, GOALS AND DELIVERABLES

As technology evolves in the RegTech/FinTech ecosystem, financial institutions may be reluctant to test/adopt new technologies without the technologies regulatory track record or known reaction from regulators. Encouraging the adoption of innovative technologies is a priority for industry, law enforcement and regulators to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of AML/CFT programs and enhance our collective abilities to detect and deter financial crime. The goal of the Innovation and Adoption Working Group (the "Innovation Working Group") was to identify ways in which FinCEN can promote the adoption of new technologies for AML/CFT programs via pilots and increased regulatory feedback mechanisms (e.g., no action letters), in coordination with law enforcement.

During discussions regarding what actions FinCEN should consider as it looks to encourage more widespread adoption of new advanced technologies, the Innovation Working Group explored technologies currently being used or explored by stakeholders, the perceived challenges and opportunities in the adoption of new technologies, impacts to financial inclusion, and ways in which work being performed to implement the AML Act ("AML") could be leveraged.

II. TECHNOLOGY EXAMPLES AND CHALLENGES TO ADOPTION

Technologies either being used or developed/contemplated by financial institutions or vendors include:

- Suspicious activity detection and reporting programs that leverage machine learning, robotic process automation or artificial intelligence.
- Technologies that extract, capture, and analyze structured and unstructured data (e.g., text, speech, voice, image, video, metadata) to identify unusual or suspicious patterns.
- Technologies which review, digitize, and interpret new and existing regulatory intelligence (e.g., rules, regulations, enforcement actions, no-action letters, advisories).
- Big data infrastructures (e.g., cloud computing, data lakes, knowledge graphs) that can enable financial institutions to ingest, store, index, and analyze information within their organizations more quickly and make faster data connections.
- e-Know Your Customer ("KYC") and Know Your Business ("KYB") utilities that leverage distributed ledgers and cryptography to create trusted networks managed by a central provider that stores data that is made available to a larger group via personalizing access per user.
- Use of automated verification tools (e.g., using biometrics, computer vision, deep learning) that speeds up and increases security during remote onboarding.
- Use of distributive ledger platforms to enhance transaction monitoring and enable comprehensive investigations across financial institutions and jurisdiction (e.g., enclave-supporting data sharing).

Potential impediments to the adoption of technologies include the following:

- Inconsistent rules and regulatory expectations across the financial industry (e.g., application of risk-based approach differs across and within regulators, and across different jurisdictions), and inconsistent experience and awareness of new technologies across and within regulators, and across different jurisdictions.
- Past AML/CFT guidance and definitions may not align with new and emerging technologies and may not provide clear and relevant information for today's environment, including the material operational differences of new financial ecosystems (e.g. cryptocurrency, blockchain networks).

Confidential Draft

BSAAG Document: Do not further disseminate.

- Infrequent communication from regulators and law enforcement encouraging change/innovation and a lack of guidance providing a roadmap for effective implementation.
- The cost of new technologies is high (e.g., vendor license and implementation costs) and has not yet reached acceptable return on investment levels, especially for small and medium sized financial institutions as well as nonbank financial institutions, fintech companies and virtual asset service providers (“VASP”).
- Hesitancy to shift resources from surveillances viewed as inefficient (e.g., surveillances with high false positive rates, surveillances that produce SARs considered to be low value for law enforcement) to more in-depth surveillances due to uncertain regulatory reactions.
- Data privacy considerations and data quality limitations inhibit vendor solutions from being optimally deployed across multiple financial institutions and jurisdictions.
- Perception that new approaches will need to run alongside existing approaches.
- AML/CFT risk is constantly evolving and as markets, technology, and practices change, bad actors will look to exploit these new environments (e.g., synthetic identification fraud).

III. RECOMMENDATIONS

a. Facilitate open and frequent dialogue

Financial institutions look to the perceptions of regulators when considering whether to make changes to their AML/CFT programs and/or to utilize new technologies. In this way, a significant component to facilitating the adoption of new technologies is frequent and open communication between law enforcement, regulators, financial institutions, and technology providers.

Sections 6208 and 6207 of AMLA can drive these communications. Specifically, Section 6208 mandates that FinCEN and each federal functional regulator appoint an Innovation Officer to provide outreach on new innovative methods, processes and technologies that may assist in BSA compliance and provide technical assistance or guidance on the implementation of technologies by financial institutions, related persons, service providers/vendors and technology companies. Section 6207 establishes a BSAAG Subcommittee on Innovation and Technology (the “Innovation Subcommittee”) to advise on means to support technological innovation in AML/CFT and reduce obstacles to innovation from existing rules, guidance, and exam practices.

We recommend that Innovations Officers and the Innovation Subcommittee coordinate periodic roundtables with law enforcement, regulators, financial service providers, vendors, and technology companies. Initial focus areas to consider for roundtables include:

- Innovative tools in use or under development, corresponding regulatory expectations, and effective use cases and success stories.
- Best practices and success stories during pre- and postimplementation of new technologies.
- Rules, regulations, and guidance that may be impediments to the adoption of new technologies.
- Terms and definitions in rules, regulations, and guidance that may need to be modernized.
- Emerging AML/CFT risks, particularly those attempting to evade or exploit new technologies.
- How new technologies and innovations can advance BSA/CFT modernization and broader financial inclusion in tandem.
- Effective data sharing between financial institutions to detect illicit activity more comprehensively.
- Challenges specific to smaller financial institutions in adopting innovative solutions.

Confidential Draft

BSAAG Document: Do not further disseminate.

After completion of each roundtable, consideration should be given to what information can be released publicly (e.g., joint statements, white papers, guidance) to ensure the broader financial industry benefits from the discussions. Innovation Officers should also share this information within their respective organizations to increase awareness of technologies and level set regulatory expectations.

b. Comprehensive review of rules, regulations, and guidance

Innovation Officers and the Innovation Subcommittee should consider periodically assessing what rules, regulations, and guidance may be inhibiting the adoption of new technologies or otherwise may require modernization to adapt to new financial transaction types (e.g., cryptocurrencies and non-fungible tokens). Where necessary, Innovation Officers and the Innovation Subcommittee should recommend the issuance of updated guidance that seeks to achieve consistency across the financial industry and redefines terms for the modern age. Innovation Working Group discussions in this space focused on areas that may benefit from modernized definitions (e.g., definitions and guidance related to “reasonable” CIP verification in the modern age and “reasonable” reliance on third parties for CIP/CDD) and broader concepts that may warrant consideration given the evolution of financial activity (e.g., moving away from a definition of covered financial institution to a definition of covered financial activities).

Results of periodic reviews can be leveraged to inform work under Sections 6305, 6209 and 6211 of AMLA. For example, Section 6305 of AMLA requires the FinCEN Director (in consultation with other stakeholders) to determine whether to establish a process for the issuance of no-action letters in response to inquiries from financial institutions regarding interpretations of the Bank Secrecy Act (“BSA”) and USA PATRIOT Act. If such a process is formalized, reviews performed by Innovation Officers and the Innovation Subcommittee of rules, regulations, and guidance (as well as periodic roundtables) can be leveraged to identify areas where new no-action letters may be warranted. Examples of potential no-action letters discussed by the Innovation Working Group that may warrant consideration include:

- Fact patterns where no action would be taken on financial institutions that shift resources from less productive surveillances to more advanced technologies.
- Fact patterns where no action would be taken on financial institutions related to suspicious activity that occurred before a new technology was deployed which may have been detected had the technology been deployed at an earlier date.

While the December 2018 joint statement by FinCEN and its regulatory partners noted “innovative pilot programs in and of themselves should not subject banks to supervisory criticism, even if the pilot programs ultimately prove unsuccessful. Likewise, pilot programs that expose gaps in a BSA/AML compliance program will not necessarily result in supervisory action with respect to that program” a no-action letter should be considered to further encourage financial institutions to adopt innovative steps to enhance AML/CFT programs and provide clarity around specific regulatory expectations.

The Innovation Working Group also discussed how model risk management (“MRM”) and its application to AML/CFT programs is unclear (with many financial institutions believing that AML/CFT and sanctions tools are not models) and may be hindering the adoption of advanced technologies due to the perceived incompatibility of this framework to these technologies (e.g., machine learning, artificial intelligence, robotic processing) and the lack of guidance around the testing of these technologies. Work being done under Section 6209 of AMLA, which requires Treasury to issue a rule specifying standards by which financial institutions are to test technology and related internal processes, should consider feedback in these areas provided during roundtables, and the results of reviews performed over existing regulations, rules, and guidance. Partnering the results of work completed under Section 6209 of AMLA with a no action letter process that focuses on regulatory expectations associated with the transition to new technologies will provide a clear roadmap moving into new and innovative technological solutions.

We also recommend FinCEN consider joining, coordinating, and hosting “tech sprints,” “hackathons,” and other similar events with its partners from law enforcement, regulators, and financial and technology service providers. Section 6211 of AMLA requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in coordination with the Innovation Subcommittee, to hold periodic global symposiums to promote international collaboration on the use of new technologies to prevent, detect, and investigate financial crime and other illicit activity. These symposiums can streamline efforts to approve new technologies and/or no-action letters, on a case by case basis, to clarify expectations and permitted activities. Innovation Working Group discussions in this space focused on similar events attended by members of the Innovation Working Group to understand what made these events successful (or unsuccessful). Based on these discussions, consideration should be given to establishing a theme for each symposium that addresses an area of need (e.g., using privacy enhancing software to monitor cross border transactions). Themes can be discussed and evaluated through roundtables and be further influenced by periodic reviews of rules, regulations and guidance performed by Innovations Officers and Innovation Subcommittee.

c. Enhance intelligence-sharing between law enforcement, regulators, and industry

FinCEN and other law enforcement and regulatory agencies regularly share intelligence and advisories. To increase the use and effectiveness of these materials and facilitate the adoption of new technologies, FinCEN should consider enhancing the mechanisms intelligence is made available and coordinating collaborative efforts between law enforcement, regulators, and financial institutions.

Supplementing public intelligence assessments with technical advisories shared privately with financial service providers (e.g., December 2020 Technical Bulletin on identifying cryptocurrency addresses, periodic release of Cyber Threat Indicators) can assist in enhancing suspicious activity detection efforts and protecting the financial industry from threats. FinCEN can also consider improving and standardizing formats that intelligence and advisories are distributed in and fostering digital reporting and information sharing. This includes transitioning rules, regulations, guidance, and intelligence advisories into machine-readable formats (e.g., XML) and establishing secure Application Programming Interfaces ("API") to enable financial institutions to factor new intelligence into AML/CFT programs more efficiently.

Including specific and contextualized intelligence on risks and red flags associated with different typologies and enabling these to be easily analyzed by AML/CFT systems will also assist financial institutions differentiate between actual versus perceived risks. While ensuring this differentiation is clear is critical to the AML/CFT priorities, it also plays a significant role in broadening financial inclusion by limiting overly broad de-risking that impacts low risk customers who fall within a broad risk category (e.g., customers located in a high risk jurisdiction with a de minimis nexus to the risk drivers of that jurisdiction).

We recommend FinCEN also consider coordinating collaborative efforts between law enforcement, regulators, and industry and establishing feedback loops on effective SAR filings. Previous efforts to collaboratively investigate money launderers and other illicit actors have occurred within a money laundering working group (sub-set of the five-eye working group) that leveraged 314(a) and 314(b). Increasing such efforts, particularly where law enforcement or national security focus areas have been identified, should be considered. Similarly, establishing mechanisms to provide feedback on SAR effectiveness would provide clarity on SARs considered to have provided high value intelligence would further assist the industry in their efforts to implement effective AML/CFT programs.

d. Areas for further study and consideration

Consider what role FinCEN/Treasury can play in creating, or coordinating efforts to create, technology utilities (e.g., distributive ledger or trusted network to support e-KYC and KYB efforts, or to protect and track sensitive or confidential information/BSA materials). Creation of such utilities may permit advanced data collection and sharing amongst FinCEN, law enforcement and other regulators and help to limit the barriers to entry in adopting new technologies associated with smaller financial institutions.

Consider how to assess the impact on financial inclusion as AML/CFT requirements evolve and new financial technologies, payment services, and digital asset services are increasingly used by previously undeserved constituencies. This can include assessments of the intelligence shared regarding AML/CFT risks and whether opportunities exist to provide further context and guidance around risks that better informs the industry on critical risks and red flags and reduces the perceived binary choice financial institutions face when broad categories of customers or activities are labeled as high risk.

Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group (BSAAG)FinTech/RegTech Working Group*Payment Processor Exemption Workstream*Recommendations for the BSAAG May 2021 Plenary*Summary

This white paper outlines for the consideration of the FinCEN Acting-Director, the three recommendations of the Payment Processor Exemption Workstream of the BSAAG FinTech & RegTech Work Group. These recommendations are the culmination of a multi-year effort by members of the Workstream to identify opportunities to further the US anti-money laundering (AML) regime by ensuring the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) and its implementing regulations are appropriate across emerging entrants/technologies relative to their respective business models and risk profiles, including FinTech and RegTech firms.¹ More specifically, the Workstream focused on 31 CFR 1010.100(ff)(5)(ii), commonly referred as the “payment processor exemption” (PPE), which exempts persons engaging in certain activities from the AML regulatory obligations of the BSA.

Summary of the PPE Workstream RecommendationsRecommendation 1

FinCEN should engage in a comprehensive regulatory review and update of the Payment Processor Exemption to account for new business models emerging from technological innovations in the financial services sector. As part of its regulatory update, FinCEN should exclude from the PPE entities that maintain accounts/relationships with the public, or process payments for goods and services where the entry or exit point is not a BSA-regulated entity.

Recommendation 2

Extend the BSA’s suspicious activity reporting safe harbor protections to any person operating under the PPE that chooses to file a Suspicious Activity Report (SAR).

- FinTech Firms as non-bank financial institutions, primarily third-party payment processors, that offer alternative methods of payment for local and/or cross-border payments or storage of monetary value in support of specific commercial activity, by processing transactions or holding value on behalf of other parties (i.e., online marketplaces, merchant processors, payment facilitators). FinTech Firms can also be money transmitters who enable customers to make money transfers online through the web and/or mobile applications.
- RegTech Firms as entities that use technologies to solve regulatory and compliance requirements and expectations more effectively and efficiently.

Require any person operating under the PPE to be registered with FinCEN.

Background and Overview

The BSA requires that Money Services Businesses (MSBs) comply with certain registration, AML program, customer identification, transaction monitoring, reporting, and recordkeeping requirements. The BSA defines an MSB to include money transmitters and defines “money transmission services” as the acceptance of funds from one person and the transmission of those funds to another location or person by any means.² However, whether a person is a money transmitter as defined by the BSA and therefore subject to regulation as an MSB is a matter of “facts and circumstances.”³ One of the exemptions from the BSA definition of money transmission is for a person that only “[a]cts as a payment processor to facilitate the purchase of, or payment of a bill for, a good or service through a clearance and settlement system by agreement with the creditor or seller”⁴ (i.e., the PPE). Accordingly, a person that is acting consistent with this exemption would not be an MSB (at least with respect to the transactions handled as a payment processor) and therefore not subject to the requirements of the BSA.

Through interpretive guidance, FinCEN has indicated that the following criteria must be met for the PPE to apply:

- (1) The entity providing the service must facilitate the purchase of goods or services, or the payment of bills for goods or services (other than money transmission itself);
- (2) The entity must operate through clearance and settlement systems that admit only BSA-regulated financial institutions (e.g., the Automated Clearing House);
- (3) The entity must provide the service pursuant to a formal agreement; and
- (4) The entity’s agreement must be at a minimum with the seller or creditor that provided the goods or services and receives the funds from the entity.⁵

The below recommendations are intended to address three considerations with respect to the PPE as it applies to payments services companies today: (1) whether certain entities that come within the scope of the PPE should nonetheless be subject to BSA requirements, either by narrowing the scope of the exemption or by imposing requirements on exempt entities; (2) clarifying the scope of the PPE today to affirm that certain activities are outside the scope of the exemption (and therefore that companies that may be inappropriately relying on it are on notice that they may be MSBs); and (3) whether persons operating under the PPE have information on transactions that are of high degree of usefulness to law enforcement.

⁵ See FinCEN guidance FIN-2014-R009 “[HYPERLINK "https://www.fincen.gov/resources/statutes-regulations/administrative-rulings/application-money-services-business"]” (August, 2014).

Currently, there is limited regulatory oversight/accountability of payment processors, which extend to the consumer protection, fraud, cybersecurity, and AML areas. For instance, the BSA does not require payment processors to maintain the same level of financial crime transparency that AML-examined entities are subject to, and it is unclear what are, if any, the AML obligations of foreign located entities that process US transactions under the PPE. These issues have been exacerbated by the emergence of new business models in the financial services sector as the result of recent innovation and technological advances.

Furthermore, this landscape has prompted banks to generally require by contract that payment processors implement an AML program to mitigate risks, and for banks to be subject to examination and oversight with respect to their management of risk associated with payment processing relationships. This ultimately has placed banks in the position of de facto regulator of payment processors.

The confluence of these circumstances has (1) potentially created a gap in the US AML framework, (2) led law enforcement to have little to no visibility into the transactions that payment processors facilitate, and (3) for other financial firms (i.e., banks) to effectively supervise payment processors(perhaps unevenly).

Recommendation

FinCEN should engage in a comprehensive regulatory review and update of the Payment Processor Exemption to account for new business models emerging from technological innovations in the financial services sector. As part of its regulatory update, FinCEN should, as further detailed below, exclude from the PPE persons that maintain accounts/relationships with the public or process payments for goods and services, where the entry point is not a BSA-regulated entity.

More specifically, based on the analysis of the Workstream of associated AML risks, FinCEN should revise the scope of the payment processor exemption so that the PPE does not apply to the below payment processor business models (and businesses that may engage in activities under a combination of these models) and therefore are subject to the BSA requirements for MSBs. The following business models should not qualify for the PPE:⁶

- Payment processors facilitating non-face-to-face payments for goods and services, where such processors are not operating solely through clearance and settlement systems that admit only BSA-regulated institutions, both with respect to pay-ins and pay-outs.

This recommendation would definitionally include the following business models as MSBs: payments for goods and services, where the funds originate from or settle to unhosted wallets, foreign financial institutions, or other non BSA-regulated entities. The Workstream concluded that payments for goods and services involving unhosted wallets, foreign financial institutions, or other non BSA-regulated entities are of inherent higher risk, have limited financial transparency, and include entry or exit points that do not have the same oversight that BSA-regulated entities have.

⁶ The PPE workstream considered the application of suspicious activity reporting as a standalone requirement for certain payment processors but concluded that, a SAR filing regime without the accompanying transaction monitoring, customer identification and due diligence and record keeping requirements would not be sustainable. Furthermore, the PPE workstream concluded that it would be very difficult for partner banks, other financial institutions, law enforcement and even regulators to keep track of which requirements apply to which types of payment processors.

Due to the low-risk nature of utility payments, payment processors facilitating only these transactions, despite from/to where funds originate/settle, could remain operating under the PPE.⁷

- Payment processors that maintain and allow the public to create profiles or accounts in order to transact, even if such payment processors operate solely through clearance and settlement systems that admit only BSA-regulated financial institutions.

This recommendation is intended to address evolution in payment processors business models that may have not been originally considered when the PPE was being envisioned almost 25 years ago.⁸ In this regard, while payment processors may have opted to maintain accounts/relationships with the public to improve customer experience, these business models effectively allow multiple payment funding sources for a single customer and have visibility into and facilitate transactions across borders, e-commerce platforms, and businesses without any customer identification or due diligence, record retention, transaction monitoring or suspicious activity reporting requirements. The Workstream concluded that payment processors that maintain and allow customer accounts/relationships potentially could lead to a gap in the US AML framework by not performing customer identification or due diligence to verify customers' identities or ensuring customers' funding sources are legitimate. Furthermore, the Workstream recognized that these payment processor models do not have suspicious activity reporting obligations despite having broad visibility into customer transactions (e.g., being able to see transactions by a customer using multiple payment methods across merchants, retailers, e-commerce platforms, and financial institutions), which can be of a high degree of usefulness to law enforcement.

Mirroring the above previous recommendation, due to the low-risk nature of utility payments, payment processors facilitating only these transactions, despite from/to where funds originate/settle, could remain operating under the PPE.⁹

⁷ For the purposes of this white paper, "utilities" include public utilities (such as light, power, internet, or water) or comparable services.

⁸ Please see the regulatory exemptions for certain payments for goods and services included in FinCEN's 1997 [HYPERLINK "https://www.govinfo.gov/content/pkg/FR-1997-05-21/pdf/97-13304.pdf"] amending the definition of and requirements for MSBs (Federal Register Volume 62, Issue 98).

⁹ For the purposes of this white paper, "utilities" include public utilities (such as light, power, internet, or water) or comparable services.

Recommendation 2Problem Statement

At this time, persons operating under the PPE are not subject to BSA/AML compliance program requirements under FinCEN regulations, and therefore are not required to conduct suspicious activity reporting and in turn are not explicitly afforded safe harbor for filing SARs voluntarily. In many cases, these processors are contractually required by bank partners to monitor transactions and to notify the bank of potentially suspicious activity so that the bank can file SARs (at their discretion), but in other cases the bank does not have a relationship of that nature with the processor and potentially suspicious activity may not be reported. In such cases, law enforcement agencies and FinCEN have no visibility into any suspicious activity that payment processors may identify (or fail to identify) and there is no incentive or protection that would prompt payment processors to report suspicious activity through SARs. This combination of factors can potentially be creating a financial intelligence gap for law enforcement agencies and FinCEN because payment processors may have broad visibility of an illicit actor's actions by virtue of being able to identify patterns of transactional activity across multiple transactional channels, financial institutions, and products.

Recommendation

Extend existing SAR safe harbor protections to any person operating under the payment processor exemption that chooses to file a SAR, even though a person operating under the PPE (and that is not otherwise an MSB) does not have an express regulatory obligation to file SARs in such situations and therefore is not within the scope of the safe harbor.

This recommendation intends to encourage the reporting of information with a high degree of usefulness to law enforcement by payment processors despite current requirements, which ultimately could also lead to increased financial transparency and enhance the strength of the US AML framework.

Recommendation 3Problem Statement

Currently, the full extent, size, and makeup of the universe of financial firms operating under the PPE (and what their business models are) is unknown at a national level. In an age of rapid financial services evolution due to technology innovation, this represents a potential AML vulnerability in the US financial system. In addition, there is a sense among financial industry members that entities are not properly or uniformly interpreting the applicability of the PPE to their business models. For example, throughout the emergence of new financial services models over the past few years, some FinTech firms have tended to decline their classification as financial firms by claiming their status as technology companies.

Recommendation

Require persons operating under the PPE to register with FinCEN as MSBs but in an exempt category, and at the time of registration to provide a brief explanation why their operations/business model fall within the PPE.

This recommendation would bring transparency and order to the payment processor sector by applying the same registration requirement that MSBs have, irrespective of whether payment processors are exempted from AML program requirements. Perhaps most importantly, this requirement would allow FinCEN to (1) evaluate whether some payment processors are correctly operating under the PPE and (2) study whether additional regulation would be needed to regulate this sector, which would put FinCEN in a favorable position to account for future innovation advances in financial services business models. While there may be some regulatory burden concerns with this proposed new requirement, in many instances payment processors already register at the state level as part of their licensure by using the same information used in the Registration of Money Service Business form (RMSB). Furthermore, completing and filing an RMSB takes a relatively short amount of time (minutes in most cases), which would mitigate regulatory burden concerns.

This recommendation could be accomplished by modifying Chapter X of Title 31 to include payment processors as part of the persons required to register as MSBs (but not subject to BSA/AML program requirements for MSBs, per the PPE), and updating the RMSB form to allow for this type of registration. To accommodate this new registration requirement, FinCEN should further consider including sub-categories in the RMSB form of the most common payment processor business models.¹⁰

To summarize, the members of the Payment Processor Exemption Workstream submit the above three recommendations to the Acting-Director of FinCEN based on the analysis conducted of the evolution of business models and AML risks of payment processing firms.

Submitted on behalf of the members of the Payment Processor Exemption Workstream, BSAAG
FinTech & RegTech Working Group.

¹⁰ To provide options to FinCEN as it considers how to implement a registration requirement for payment processors, the Workstream members alternatively considered requiring payment processors to formally file with FinCEN their status as entities operating under the PPE and concluded that this alternate approach would accomplish the goals contemplated by the original registration recommendation outlined in this white paper.

III. The Democrats' use of lawfare to target political opponents

During the Biden-Harris Administration, Democrats in Washington, D.C., and in certain states have engaged in an unprecedented campaign of lawfare to target and attack President Donald Trump.¹³⁸ Across the country, rogue political prosecutors stretched legal theories to secure unjust indictments against President Trump and his associates in an effort to keep President Trump off of the campaign trail, drain him of resources, and attempt to prevent millions of American citizens from being able to cast a ballot for their candidate of choice.

On April 25, 2024, the Select Subcommittee released a report, “An Anatomy of a Political Prosecution: The Manhattan District Attorney’s Office’s Vendetta Against President Donald J. Trump,” revealing the unprecedented nature of the New York County District Attorney’s Office’s (DANY) multi-year investigation into President Trump. Starting in 2018, the DANY searched for any legal theory on which to bring charges against President Trump from his property valuations to his business records, to even New York’s racketeering statute.¹³⁹ As Special Assistant District Attorney Mark Pomerantz detailed in his memoir, none of the theories panned out.¹⁴⁰ The deficiencies in the case led to the investigation going dormant, until District Attorney Alvin Bragg—who campaigned for office with a promise of investigating President Trump—revived the case and charged President Trump with 34 felony counts for falsifying business records.¹⁴¹ Using a novel and untested legal theory, Bragg took what would ordinarily be misdemeanors subject to a two-year statute of limitations and “bootstrapped” them to federal campaign finance law to make the charges into felonies and thereby extending the statute of limitations to five years. In reviving this “zombie”¹⁴² case, it is clear that Bragg’s motivation to finally indict President Trump, only came after President Trump announced his intention to run for President in the 2024 election.

The Select Subcommittee held a series of hearings examining Bragg’s lawfare, including releasing a second report, “Lawfare: How the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office and a New York State Judge Violated the Constitutional and Legal Rights of President Donald J. Trump.” The testimony the Select Committee received from distinguished legal scholars and attorneys at the hearings, as laid out in the report, make clear that Bragg’s political prosecution of President Trump was riddled with legal and procedural defects.¹⁴³ For example, one witness, constitutional law scholar and attorney Elizabeth Price Foley, testified that jury instructions of the trial judge, Judge Juan Merchan, violated President Trump’s due process rights.¹⁴⁴ Another witness, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Commissioner James “Trey” E. Trainor, III, testified that Bragg’s prosecution of President Trump “‘usurped the jurisdiction that Congress has explicitly reserved for the federal authorities” and “undermine[d] the statutory framework established by [the Federal Election Campaign Act].”¹⁴⁵ Finally, the Select Subcommittee’s investigation and report shed light on Judge Merchan’s political bias and his prejudicial rulings throughout the trial, including Judge Merchan’s decision to unconstitutionally silence President Trump by issuing a gag order, permitting Bragg to admit inadmissible testimony at trial, and denying FEC Commissioner Bradley Smith from providing fulsome testimony as an expert witness on President Trump’s behalf.¹⁴⁶ The Select Subcommittee’s investigation and report makes abundantly clear that Bragg’s political prosecution, overseen by an overtly bias judge, was riddled with constitutional defects and violated President Trump’s due process rights.¹⁴⁷

During its investigation, the Select Subcommittee found that shortly after President Trump announced his presidential candidacy, Bragg’s office “jump-start[ed]” a criminal investigation into the former President “that once seemed to have reached a dead end.”¹⁴⁸ Just weeks later, it was reported that Bragg had hired Matthew B. Colangelo, “a former senior Justice Department official with a history of taking on Donald J. Trump and his family business as the office seeks to ramp up its investigation into the former president.”¹⁴⁹ Before joining Bragg’s office, Colangelo served as a senior official in the Biden-Harris Administration’s Justice Department.¹⁵⁰ Among other positions, Colangelo was the number three official in the Department.¹⁵¹ Moreover, in Bragg’s press release that announced Colangelo’s hiring, Bragg boasted that Colangelo “investigat[ed] the Trump Foundation” during his tenure with the New York State Office of the Attorney General.¹⁵² After Bragg hired Colangelo for a first-of-its-kind position in the New York County District Attorney’s Office,¹⁵³ he then served as a top prosecutor in the criminal case against former President Trump. Because of Colangelo’s role as a high-ranking political appointee in the Biden-Harris Administration’s Justice Department, currently, a top prosecutor in the New York County District Attorney’s Office’s criminal prosecution of President Trump, the Committee continues to investigate Bragg’s apparent politically motivated hiring of Colangelo.

In addition to investigating Bragg’s politicized indictment, the Select Subcommittee’s work explored how the Justice Department enabled hyper-partisan prosecutors, in particular Special Counsel Jack Smith, to criminalize politics in America. The Select Subcommittee uncovered evidence demonstrating how Smith and his team engaged in a series of improper actions and unethical conduct that violate the Department’s duty to conduct impartial justice. First, the Select Subcommittee found that Jay Bratt, a senior attorney on Smith’s team, met with Biden-Harris White House officials numerous times before the Special Counsel’s Office indicted President Trump.¹⁵⁴ In September 2021, Bratt reportedly met with an advisor to the White House Chief of Staff,¹⁵⁵ and, in November 2021, went to the White House to meet with Administration officials.¹⁵⁶ Additionally, on March 31, 2023, only nine weeks prior to Smith’s indictment of President Trump, Bratt met with a White House Counsel’s Office official for a “case-related interview.”¹⁵⁷

Next, the Select Subcommittee discovered evidence that Bratt improperly pressured Stanley Woodward, a lawyer representing Walt Nauta, a co-defendant in Smith’s classified documents case against President Trump, by implying that the Biden-Harris Administration would look more favorably on Woodward’s candidacy for a judgeship if his client cooperated with the Office of the Special Counsel.¹⁵⁸ According to Mr. Woodward, Bratt advised him that Bratt “wouldn’t want [Woodward] to do anything to mess that up,” in reference to Mr. Woodward’s judgeship application, and Bratt’s desire to turn his client into a government cooperator.¹⁵⁹

Further, the Select Subcommittee uncovered evidence suggesting that Bratt attempted to retaliate against Woodward for disclosing Bratt’s unethical conduct. For example, on August 2, 2023, Bratt filed a motion in Nauta’s case raising alleged conflicts of interests presented by Woodward’s representation of two other witnesses “who could be called to testify at a trial in the case involving classified documents at Mar-a-Lago.”¹⁶⁰ Bratt further suggested that the court should “procure independent counsel” to be present at the hearing “to advise Mr. Woodward’s clients regarding the potential conflicts.”¹⁶¹ Woodward’s reply brief stated that Bratt’s intimidation threats were merely “an attempt to diminish the Court’s authority over the proceedings in this case and to undermine attorney-client relationships without any basis specific to the facts of such representation.”¹⁶² The federal judge overseeing the prosecution was so concerned about these allegations that she “twice ordered the parties, on her own, to explore and report to her on possible prosecutorial misconduct.”¹⁶³

Additionally, the Select Subcommittee investigated Bratt’s acknowledgment in a May 3, 2024, court filing that some of the evidence in President Trump’s classified documents case was altered or manipulated after the FBI seized it during its raid on Mar-a-Lago in 2022.¹⁶⁴ After Woodward notified the Court on May 1, 2024, that there were discrepancies in the evidence—suggesting that the boxes of documents that the Special Counsel’s Office produced for defense review were potentially tampered with or compromised¹⁶⁵—Bratt admitted that “there are some boxes where the order of items within that box is not the same as in the associated scans,”¹⁶⁶ and that this new admission “[wa]s inconsistent with what Government counsel previously understood and represented to the Court.”¹⁶⁷ Bratt’s apparent manipulation of material evidence even led some legal experts to conclude that Bratt’s conduct was tantamount to “evidence tampering.”¹⁶⁸

The Select Subcommittee investigated other egregious ethical lapses by Smith and his team—in particular by J.P. Cooney, who served as another one of Smith’s top prosecutors. According to a July 2024 report by the Justice Department’s Office of the Inspector General (OIG), Cooney previously “supervised a team of four attorneys” who led the prosecution of Roger Stone, a former campaign aide of President Trump, for allegedly obstructing Special Counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation into the widely debunked Russian collusion hoax.¹⁶⁹ After securing a verdict against Stone, Cooney sought an “unprecedented” sentence of seven to nine years in prison for Stone, which was reportedly “dramatically beyond what others convicted of similar crimes faced.”¹⁷⁰ When Cooney’s supervisors learned of his excessive sentencing

After receiving pushback for his excessive sentencing recommendation, Cooney began “spreading an elaborate conspiracy theory with no supporting evidence that [former President] Trump, [Attorney General William] Barr, and [Interim U.S. Attorney Timothy] Shea were being improperly political.”¹⁷² Cooney admitted to OIG investigators that “he had no information suggesting that anyone from Main Justice (i.e., DOJ leadership offices) was involved in the Stone sentencing at this time and no evidence pointing to improper motivations influencing these discussions” when he initiated and spread the conspiracy theory.¹⁷³ Meanwhile, in phone calls and other conversations with the prosecution team, Cooney pushed a false narrative that Shea “was acting out of fear of then President Trump and, more particularly, fear of the consequences of not seeking a lower sentence for an influential friend of then President Trump.”¹⁷⁴ Cooney later told the OIG that he “was not [actually] aware of specific evidence to that effect.”¹⁷⁵ In its report, the OIG said that Cooney’s “speculative comments in meetings with the [Stone] trial team about the political motivations”¹⁷⁶ of Trump officials “in connection with their handling of the Stone sentencing contributed to an atmosphere of mistrust”¹⁷⁷ that “unnecessarily further complicated an important decision in the case.”¹⁷⁸

In addition, the Select Subcommittee conducted oversight into Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis’s politicized prosecution of President Trump. Just days before Willis indicted President Trump, her campaign highlighted the investigation into President Trump in an effort to raise money.¹⁷⁹ Members of Willis’s team also met with the Biden-Harris White House, Special Counsel Smith’s team, and with individuals connected with the Democrat-led partisan January 6th Committee.¹⁸⁰ The Select Subcommittee also investigated the reported misuse of federal funds by Willis’s office.¹⁸¹ As part of this investigation, and after receiving credible whistleblower testimony to that effect, the Committee subpoenaed the Fulton County District Attorney’s Office (FCDAO) for documents, records, and correspondence relating to its receipt and use of federal funds.¹⁸² Further, the Select Subcommittee conducted a deposition of Nathan Wade, a former Special Prosecutor for the FCDAO, regarding his tenure and his experience leading the FCDAO’s investigation and indictment of President Trump and his allies.¹⁸³ During the deposition, the Select Subcommittee learned that, even before she assumed office in January 2021, Willis was preparing to prosecute President Trump.¹⁸⁴ Wade also confirmed that he and other employees of the FCDAO had several meetings with Biden-Harris White House officials during the FCDAO’s investigation of President Trump, but refused to disclose critical details about such meetings.¹⁸⁵ Wade also that he had several meetings with “individuals associated with the [Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol],” but refused to disclose any relevant details about the meetings.¹⁸⁶ Additionally, the Select Subcommittee learned that, prior to his appointment as a Special Prosecutor, Wade had no relevant experience to serve in such role, and that he had to attend trainings to gain relevant experience.¹⁸⁷

Partisan Democrats weaponized the rule of law through the use of lawfare tactics to target Republicans, and particularly President Trump. These actions are a vivid demonstration of a two-tiered system of justice that extends from the highest offices in the Justice Department to the local and state law-enforcement offices run by some ambitious Democrat prosecutors. Rather than debate political opponents on substance, Democrats employed partisan lawfare as a strategy to attempt to win the 2024 election. It is clear that Democrats will continue to use lawfare in the future to undermine legitimate candidates and take electoral decisions away from voters.

AN ANATOMY OF A POLITICAL PROSECUTION: THE MANHATTAN DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE'S VENDETTA AGAINST PRESIDENT DONALD J. TRUMP

Interim Staff Report of the Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives

April 25, 2024

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

If the prosecutor is obliged to choose his cases, it follows that he can choose his defendants. Therein is the most dangerous power of the prosecutor: that he will pick people that he thinks he should get, rather than pick cases that need to be prosecuted.

– Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, April 1, 1940¹

The New York County District Attorney’s Office’s (DANY) multi-year investigation into former President Donald J. Trump is unprecedented. As revealed in former Special Assistant District Attorney Mark F. Pomerantz’s self-serving book, People vs. Trump: An Insider’s Account,² since at least 2018, the DANY has weaponized the criminal justice system, scouring every aspect of President Trump’s personal life and business affairs, going back decades, in the hopes of finding some legal basis—however far-fetched, novel, or convoluted—to bring charges against him. When one legal theory would not pan out, instead of discontinuing its politically motivated investigation, the DANY simply pivoted to a new theory, constantly searching for a crime—any crime—to prosecute President Trump.

The story behind the DANY’s investigation into President Trump and the people involved illustrate the clear partisan aim of this case. Pomerantz is a former federal prosecutor who eagerly volunteered to serve as a special assistant district attorney to solely work on the efforts to prosecute President Trump.³ Working under former District Attorney Cyrus Vance, Pomerantz assisted with “lead[ing] the effort” in developing a case against President Trump until he abruptly resigned in February 2022 shortly after District Attorney Alvin Bragg took office.⁴ Prior to his election, Bragg openly boasted about his experience suing the Trump Administration “more than 100 times” and campaigned on a platform of “holding [President Trump] accountable.”⁵ However, when Bragg did not move quickly enough to file charges against President Trump,⁶ Pomerantz opted to go public, writing a book and orchestrating a pressure campaign to force Bragg into action.⁷ And it worked.

Pomerantz’s book, described as a “300-page exercise in score-settling and scorn,”⁸ revealed the extent to which the DANY’s investigation of President Trump was politically motivated. Pomerantz described his eagerness to investigate President Trump, writing that he was “delighted” to join an unpaid group of lawyers advising on the Trump investigation, and joking that salary negotiations had gone “great” because he would have paid to join the investigation.⁹ He baselessly compared President Trump to notorious mob boss John Gotti,¹⁰ and claimed that the District Attorney’s Office was “warranted in throwing the book” at President Trump because, in Pomerantz’s view, the “collective weight” of President Trump’s conduct over the years “left no doubt in [his] mind that [President] Trump deserved to be prosecuted.”¹¹ In other words, as a special assistant district attorney empowered by New York County, Pomerantz seemed, for reasons unrelated to the facts of this particular investigation, to have been searching for any basis on which to bring politically motivated criminal charges against President Trump.¹²

The DANY has been investigating President Trump since at least 2018, searching for any legal theory on which to bring charges.¹³ One legal theory pushed by Pomerantz suffered from serious deficiencies—notably the credibility of the star witness, convicted perjurer Michael Cohen—so much so that the case became known as the “zombie” case.¹⁴ On April 4, 2023, District Attorney Bragg succumbed to Pomerantz’s pressure campaign, charging President Trump with 34 felony counts for falsifying business records.¹⁵ These charges are normally misdemeanors subject to a two-year statute of limitations, but Bragg used a novel and untested legal theory—previously declined by federal prosecutors—to bootstrap the misdemeanor allegations as a felony, which extended the statute of limitations to five years, by alleging that records were falsified to conceal a second crime.¹⁶

The timing and basis for the DANY’s prosecution of President Trump provide a clear inference that Bragg is motivated by political calculations. The facts at the center of Bragg’s political prosecution have not changed since 2018 and no new witnesses emerged between then and the date on which Bragg filed the indictment.¹⁷ The Justice Department examined the facts in 2019 and chose not to prosecute the case. Even still, according to reporting, Bragg “convened a new grand jury in January [2023] to evaluate the issue.”¹⁸ Bragg ultimately settled on a novel legal theory untested anywhere in the country and one that federal authorities declined to pursue to resurrect the matter. The only intervening factor, it appears, was President Trump’s announcement that he would be a candidate for President in 2024.¹⁹

Congress has a specific and manifestly important interest in preventing politically motivated prosecutions of current and former Presidents by elected state and local prosecutors, particularly in jurisdictions—like New York County—where the prosecutor is popularly elected and trial-level judges lack life tenure.²⁰ In response to Bragg’s decision to pursue a politically motivated prosecution—while adopting progressive criminal justice policies that allow career “criminals [to] run[] the streets” of Manhattan²¹—the Committee had an obligation to conduct oversight of Bragg’s unprecedented and shocking prosecutorial conduct. The Committee used its constitutional oversight responsibility to understand how public safety funds appropriated by Congress are implemented by local law-enforcement agencies. In addition, Bragg’s decision to pursue criminal charges against a former president and current declared candidate for that office required the Committee to consider potential legislative reforms to insulate current and former Presidents from such politically motivated state and local prosecutions.

To help inform the Committee’s oversight, the Committee sought testimony from Pomerantz about his work on the political prosecution of President Trump. Based on Pomerantz’s unique role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into President Trump, he was uniquely situated to inform the Committee’s oversight and potential legislative reforms. Pomerantz’s public discussion of the investigation in his book and his media tour undercut any argument that he could not comply on the basis of confidentiality or privilege.²² Bragg sued to prevent the Committee from interviewing Pomerantz; however, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York agreed with the Committee and ordered Pomerantz to appear for a deposition.²³ On May 12, 2023, after stonewalling by Pomerantz and the DANY—including a frivolous lawsuit—Pomerantz sat for a deposition.

When Pomerantz appeared before the Judiciary Committee to discuss his book and politically motivated investigation, he was unusually silent—refusing to answer even the most basic of questions. But Pomerantz’s own words, as detailed in his book, paint a startling picture of prosecutorial abuse. Pomerantz’s own words show how the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office, populated with partisans who openly bragged about their desire to get President Trump, used its immense power in the persecution of a person, not a crime.

I. INTRODUCTION

Since at least 2018, the DANY has been investigating President Trump, looking for any legal theory on which to bring charges. The facts surrounding DANY’s case against President Trump have “been known for years.”²⁴ Michael Cohen, President Trump’s disgraced former lawyer and convicted perjurer, pleaded guilty over five years ago to charges based on the same facts.²⁵ At the time, the Justice Department determined that no one else was responsible for the conduct.²⁶ Yet, in April 2023, Bragg indicted President Trump on the same facts.²⁷

There are special responsibilities and principles that come with being a prosecutor. As Attorney General Robert Jackson warned in 1940, “[t]herin is the most dangerous power of the prosecutor: that he [can] pick people that he thinks should [be prosecuted], rather than pick cases that need to be prosecuted.”²⁸ And because of this, a “prosecutor has more control over life, liberty, and reputation than any other person in America.”²⁹ A prosecutor—like Alvin Bragg or Mark Pomerantz—“can pick[] some person whom he dislikes . . . and then look[] for an offense”³⁰ And it is at this point where “the real crime becomes that of being unpopular with the predominant or governing group, being attached to the wrong political views”³¹

Because of the potential to abuse these powers, there are several core principles that all prosecutors must follow. Although each jurisdiction has its own standard, the American Bar Association (ABA) provides model standards that “are intended to provide guidance for the professional conduct and performance of prosecutors”³² The standards set forth ideals by which all prosecutors should abide. In particular, Standard 3-1.6, Improper Bias Prohibited, states in part:

A prosecutor should not use other improper considerations, such as partisan or political or personal considerations, in exercising prosecutorial discretion. A prosecutor should strive to eliminate implicit biases, and act to mitigate any improper bias or prejudice when credibly informed that it exists within the scope of the prosecutor’s authority.³³

These principles are meant to protect against the risk of unfair prosecutions. A prosecutor must be objective. A prosecutor must prosecute a crime. A prosecutor must not pick a defendant and then go on a hunt to find a case or create a crime.

The DANY under Alvin Bragg and Mark Pomerantz has failed to uphold these principles. The Office has allowed violent crime in Manhattan to rise unabated and go unprosecuted while exploring every avenue and leaving no stone unturned when it comes to investigating and harassing President Trump.

A. Bragg’s Disregard for Rising Violent Crime in New York City

Against the backdrop of District Attorney Bragg’s decision to find any reason to prosecute President Trump are Bragg’s actions to institute pro-crime, anti-victim policies that resulted in an increase in violent crime and created a dangerous community for New York City residents. Immediately upon taking office in January 2022, District Attorney Bragg issued a ten-page policy memorandum to the Manhattan District Attorney Office staff, which instituted progressive soft-on-crime, anti-victim policies.³⁴ This so-called “Day One” memo, dated January 3, 2022, directed his assistant district attorneys not to prosecute several crimes, including trespassing, resisting arrest, and engaging in prostitution.³⁵ The memorandum stated that armed robberies should not be prosecuted as felonies.³⁶ Instead, the new District Attorney directed armed robberies to be considered as misdemeanor larceny unless someone was shot during the course of the robbery.³⁷ Additionally, Bragg stated that his office will not seek prison sentences except for homicides and other particularly heinous crimes, such as domestic violence felonies, sex crimes, and public corruption.³⁸ The District Attorney also directed his prosecutors to no longer request prison sentences in excess of 20 years, absent “exceptional circumstances.”³⁹

New York’s law enforcement community immediately pushed back on the District Attorney’s Day One memo. On January 7, 2022, New York City Police Commissioner Keechant Sewell sent an email to all 36,000 members of the New York City Police Department (NYPD), writing that she had “studied these [Day One memo] policies and I am very concerned about the implications to your safety as police officers, the safety of the public and justice for the victims.”⁴⁰ Similarly, Patrick Lynch, President of the Police Benevolent Association, said that “police officers don’t want to be sent out to enforce laws that the district attorneys won’t prosecute.”⁴¹ The heavy public backlash forced District Attorney Bragg to walk back some of the policies in his Day One memo.⁴²

In 2022, the DANY downgraded a significant number of felony cases to misdemeanors and failed to obtain convictions in the felony cases the office brought. For example, according to data from the District Attorney’s Office, prosecutors downgraded approximately 52 percent of felony charges to misdemeanors charges.⁴³ According to reports, between 2013 and 2020, under former District Attorney Cyrus Vance, the “percentage of cases the office downgraded had never exceeded 40 [percent].”⁴⁴ Furthermore, Bragg’s office secured a conviction on felony charges in just 51 percent of cases, which was “down from 68 [percent] in 2019, the last year before the pandemic disrupted the court system.”⁴⁵ Similarly, the Office’s misdemeanor conviction rate was 29 percent in 2022, down significantly from 68 percent in 2019.⁴⁶

Also in 2022, Bragg’s first year as Manhattan District Attorney, crime in New York City rose significantly when compared to the previous year. According to NYPD data, New York City saw a 23 percent surge in major crimes.⁴⁷ Further, according to reports:

- “[r]apes climbed 7% (1,591 from 1,481);
- felony assaults rose 13 percent (25,596 from 22,738); and
- robberies (17,138 from 13,592) spiked 26%.”⁴⁸

In New York City:

- burglaries went up 23 percent (15,481 from 12,568);
- grand larcenies were up 26 percent (50,698 from 40,166); and
- auto theft increased 32 percent (13,475 from 10,219).⁴⁹

Because of Bragg's disregard for rising crime in New York City, the Committee held a hearing in Manhattan to examine violent crime in Manhattan and how Bragg's left-wing policies harm the people he was elected to serve.⁵⁰ The Committee received testimony from a parent whose son was attacked "in the heart of Times Square . . . because he was Jewish and wearing a kippa."⁵¹ Bragg offered one of the attackers a "sweetheart slap-on-the-wrist deal."⁵² The parent said that Bragg's decision was "exemplary" of his "incompetence when it comes to carrying out justice."⁵³

The Committee also received testimony from Madeline Brame, whose son was murdered by four people in the streets of Harlem.⁵⁴ Bragg's predecessor, District Attorney Cyrus Vance, originally prosecuted the four suspects, but soon after Bragg took office, "[t]he case immediately began to fall apart with the complete dismissal of 1st degree gang assault [and] 2nd degree murder indictments against 2 of the defendants . . ."⁵⁵ Ms. Brame made clear that "DA Bragg ha[d] demonstrated over and over again that he has no regard or concern for human life or victims of crime . . ."⁵⁶ Yet, despite his decision to not prosecute such heinous crimes, Bragg has spent the DANY's resources to prosecute President Trump for his politics, not his criminal conduct.

B. The DANY's Politicized Prosecution of President Trump Has Been an Ongoing Effort Led by Politically-Biased Prosecutors

Instead of prosecuting violent crime, the Manhattan criminal justice authorities set their sights on investigating and prosecuting President Trump. Pomerantz's book underscores the nature of this political prosecution. In December of 2020, Carey Dunne, whom at the time served as "counsel to the office of Manhattan district attorney Cyrus ("Cy") Vance," asked Mark Pomerantz to join a group of outside advisors to Vance's team investigating President Trump, which Pomerantz accepted immediately.⁵⁷ On February 2, 2021, Pomerantz was sworn in as a special assistant district attorney.⁵⁸ Pomerantz wrote in his book that he was "enthusiastic about working on the case and happy to work without pay."⁵⁹

Throughout 2020 and 2021, the DANY's investigation of President Trump continued. In November 2021, shortly after Alvin Bragg won the election to be the next District Attorney, Pomerantz sent a memorandum to District Attorney Vance and Dunne expressing his desire to quickly decide whether to prosecute President Trump.⁶⁰ By the end of Vance's term, however, the DANY had not brought charges against President Trump.⁶¹

In January 2022, soon after Bragg took office, Bragg expressed doubts about the case that Pomerantz and Dunne had assembled using novel legal theories against President Trump and, ultimately, decided to suspend the investigation.⁶² This decision prompted Pomerantz and Dunne to resign in protest.⁶³ Pomerantz penned a scathing resignation letter, which was also leaked to the press,⁶⁴ urging Bragg to follow through with the charges against President Trump.⁶⁵

On November 15, 2022, President Trump formally announced that he was running for President in 2024.⁶⁶ A few months later, on February 7, 2023, Pomerantz published his book, People v. Donald Trump: An Inside Account, which excoriated Bragg for not aggressively prosecuting President Trump and laid bare the Office's internal deliberations about the investigation and political animus toward President Trump.⁶⁷ Pomerantz went on a media tour to promote his book and attack President Trump and Bragg.⁶⁸ Pomerantz did not hide his deep animosity toward President Trump in his memoir or his media tour. For example, he claimed:

- “[Trump’s] empire was built on lies.”⁶⁹
- Trump was “practiced in the art of intimidation.”⁷⁰
- Trump was “ruthless and avaricious,” “a bully,” and “cunning.”⁷¹
- Trump was “a malignant narcissist” and “a megalomaniac” who “posed a real danger to the country and to the ideals that mattered to me.”⁷²
- “His behavior made me angry, sad, and even disgusted.”⁷³

But Pomerantz was not the only DANY prosecutor who openly discussed his animosity towards President Trump. Throughout his campaign for district attorney, Bragg himself made clear that he, too, had animosity towards President Trump. Bragg made President Trump a focal point of his campaign.⁷⁴ For example, on December 13, 2020, Bragg stated:

Let's talk about what's waiting for the new DA. The docket. We know there's a Trump investigation. I have investigated Trump and his children and held them accountable for their misconduct with the Trump Foundation. I also sued the Trump administration more than 100 times for DACA, the travel ban, separation of children from their families at the border. So I know that work. I know how to follow the facts and hold people in power accountable.⁷⁵

On March 17, 2021, Bragg indicated that, if elected as district attorney, he “will hold [Trump] accountable”⁷⁶ Just a few days later, on March 23, 2021, he again bragged that he had “sued the Trump administration over 100 times”⁷⁷ In June 2021, Bragg doubled down, stating, “It is a fact that I have sued Trump more than a hundred times. I can't change that fact, nor would I. That was important work. That's separate from anything that the D.A.'s office may be looking at now.”⁷⁸ And on November 23, 2022, Bragg boasted, “I think I'm probably the only lawyer in the country who can say, we are right now, prosecuting a criminal case against the Trump organization.”⁷⁹ In other words, Bragg assumed office with seemingly one goal: to prosecute President Trump. But, as discussed below, after assuming office, something changed—Bragg realized the case was thin and no longer seemed interested in quickly prosecuting President Trump. This prompted Pomerantz to resign. And the case was not resurrected until Pomerantz went public, putting political pressure on Bragg to prosecute President Trump.

C. The Committee's Oversight of the DANY's Unprecedented and Politically Motivated Prosecution

After news broke that DANY would be indicting President Trump, the Committee was concerned about the unprecedented abuse of prosecutorial authority: the indictment of a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. Because of this, the Committee launched an investigation to examine whether legislative reforms are necessary to insulate former and current Presidents from politically motivated prosecutions by state and local officials. Because Pomerantz had spoken publicly about his work in investigating President

Trump and the political animus that fueled his work, on March 22, 2023, the Committee asked Pomerantz to provide relevant documents and testimony about his role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into President Trump.⁸⁰ On March 27, 2023, Pomerantz responded to the Committee and stated that, at the DANY’s instruction, he would not cooperate with the Committee’s oversight.⁸¹ In light of Pomerantz’s refusal to cooperate with the Committee, on April 6, 2023, the Committee issued a deposition subpoena to Pomerantz.⁸² In the subpoena’s cover letter, the Committee reiterated that Pomerantz had already discussed the issues the Committee sought information on in both his book and media appearances.⁸³

D. Federal Court Ordered Pomerantz to Cooperate with the Committee’s Oversight

Soon after, on April 11, 2023, District Attorney Bragg filed a lawsuit against the Committee to enjoin its enforcement of the deposition subpoena to Pomerantz, alleging, in part, that the Committee sought “highly sensitive and confidential local prosecutorial information”⁸⁴ On April 19, 2023, Judge Mary Kay Vyskocil eviscerated District Attorney Bragg’s arguments that sought to prevent Pomerantz from appearing before the Committee.⁸⁵ Judge Vyskocil wrote, in part:

The book referenced in [Chairman] Jordan’s letter is People vs. Donald Trump: An Inside Account, written by Pomerantz and published in early 2023. As its subtitle indicates, the book recounts Pomerantz’s insider insights, mental impressions, and his front row seat to the investigation and deliberative process leading up to the DANY case against former President and current presidential candidate Donald Trump.

Judge Vyskocil concluded that the Committee’s “subpoena was issued with a ‘valid legislative purpose’ in connection with the ‘broad’ and ‘indispensable’ congressional power to ‘conduct investigations.’”⁸⁷ The Committee, she added, “identified several valid legislative purposes underlying the subpoena.”⁸⁸ Those legislative purposes includes “the use of federal forfeiture funds in connection with DANY’s investigation of President Trump” and “the possibility of legislative reforms to insulate current and former presidents from state prosecutions[.]”⁸⁹ Judge Vyskocil made clear that Congress has the authority to investigate these legislative reforms.⁹⁰

Bragg and Pomerantz appealed Judge Vyskocil’s ruling and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit granted a temporary administrative stay of the Committee’s deposition subpoena to Pomerantz.⁹¹ After negotiation with the Committee, Pomerantz agreed to sit for a deposition on May 12, 2023, so long as the District Attorney’s Office could have a representative present.⁹²

As a last-ditch effort to prevent Pomerantz from providing meaningful testimony, the DANY threatened to pursue legal charges against Pomerantz because he disclosed details in his book about a pending investigation. Prior to publishing his book, the DANY “warned [him] that [he] could face criminal liability if . . . [he] disclosed grand jury material or violated a provision of the New York City Charter dealing with the misuse of confidential information.”⁹³ Pomerantz heard nothing more from the DANY, however, and his book was released. More than two months after the release of his book, on April 19—after the Committee sought to speak with Pomerantz—the DANY indicated in court that Pomerantz’s book “exposed [him] to criminal liability.”⁹⁴ In other words, the DANY did not take any action or seemingly care about Pomerantz’s book or his media appearances until after the Committee expressed interest in speaking to him about it. At that point, the DANY threatened criminal liability to silence Pomerantz.

E. Pomerantz Appeared for His Deposition but Declined to Answer Most Questions

three separate reasons to decline to answer certain questions. Pomerantz identified these bases as follows:

- The Manhattan District Attorney’s Office instructed Pomerantz that he should maintain the Office’s claims of privilege and confidentiality to “protect the integrity of the pending prosecution and continuing investigation of Donald Trump,” and thus would not answer questions to which the District Attorney’s Office objected.⁹⁶
- Pomerantz, if necessary, would invoke his rights under the Fifth Amendment to not answer questions that could be used against him in a criminal case.⁹⁷
- Pomerantz indicated that he would decline to answer questions that he independently determined were not related to Congress’s legislative function, or that sought information that was, according to his own analysis, protected by the First Amendment.⁹⁸

Pomerantz invoked these three excuses approximately 216 times.⁹⁹ He invoked the excuses to decline to answer questions unrelated to either investigation—the DANY’s investigation of President Trump or the DANY’s investigation into Pomerantz—such as:

- “Did you have your own desk [at the District Attorney’s Office]?”¹⁰⁰;
- “Since you’ve left the employ of the Manhattan D.A., do you use email as a method of communication?”¹⁰¹; and
- “How long have you known [former district attorney] Cy Vance?”¹⁰²

Although Pomerantz's stated rationale for refusing to answer questions related to the investigation into President Trump was largely due to the DANY's pending criminal investigation, Pomerantz also declined to answer any questions regarding communications he has had with the District Attorney's Office regarding its pending criminal investigation of Pomerantz.¹⁰³ However, in his opening statement, Pomerantz broadly stated that he is "certain [he] broke no laws."¹⁰⁴

Beyond acknowledging that he wrote the book, Pomerantz refused to answer questions regarding specific claims and statements made in his book. However, Pomerantz testified that his book is accurate, that there are no lies in the book, and that he stands fully behind it.¹⁰⁵

II. POMERANTZ WAS HIRED BY THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR NEW YORK COUNTY SOLELY TO DEVELOP A CASE AGAINST PRESIDENT TRUMP

Pomerantz’s book confirms that his decision to join the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office was driven by political animus. In December 2020, Carey Dunne, counsel to then-New York County District Attorney Cyrus Vance, recruited Pomerantz to “join[] a group of outside lawyers who would advise Cy Vance in connection with his pending investigation of Donald Trump.”¹⁰⁶ Pomerantz was “delighted”¹⁰⁷ to do so, as it “would allow [him] to peek through the window at whatever the district attorney was doing” in the investigation.”¹⁰⁸ He nonetheless acknowledged that “the concept of a public prosecutor’s office convening an advisory group of private lawyers to help with a pending investigation seemed a bit odd.”¹⁰⁹

It was through this advisory group that Pomerantz learned that the “DA’s investigation of [President] Trump was much broader” than just an alleged “hush money” payment, “and would grow to cover many aspects of his business operations.”¹¹⁰ During the advisory group’s first call, “[t]he main topic of the conversation, and the issue that seemed to have prompted the formation of the ‘outside advisors’ group,”¹¹¹ was alleged “fraud in connection with taxation of [President Trump’s] 40 Wall Street building by undervaluing his property.”¹¹² At that time, “presentation of felony charges to grand juries had come to a virtual standstill” due to New York City’s COVID-19 pandemic related closures.¹¹³ Dunne and Vance therefore asked the advisory group “to provide a reality check on whether” the DANY could or should file a felony complaint as opposed to the traditional method of empaneling a grand jury to secure an indictment.¹¹⁴

Pomerantz recalled that the felony complaint idea “never got off the ground,” however, because the “NYC’s Law Department advised DANY that ‘everybody’ submits lowball property valuations in the effort to lower property taxes on Manhattan office buildings.”¹¹⁵ The city explained that the “owner’s initial valuation figures are not taken seriously, and are regarded as simply the first step in a series of negotiations.”¹¹⁶ Despite the fact that “the city did not regard itself as having been defrauded,”¹¹⁷ Pomerantz believed that President Trump “would have been a good target for prosecution”¹¹⁸ because “there was the aggravating factor that . . . he had urged the public to trust in his integrity by running for the presidency.”¹¹⁹ The DANY nonetheless elected not to further pursue charges related to President Trump’s 40 Wall Street property at that time.¹²⁰

Although “the DANY investigative team . . . had identified several areas of inquiry into Trump’s activities,”¹²¹ Pomerantz was concerned that the DANY’s investigation was too sprawling, unfocused, and in need of a “narrator.”¹²² Pomerantz explained that white-collar cases often feature a “narrator” to explain the suspicious transactions, events, and circumstances to the jury.¹²³ Most of the time, this “narrator” is able to tell jurors about a defendant’s crimes because they played a part in committing them.¹²⁴

By mid-January, Pomerantz noted “[t]here was a long and unfocused laundry list of topics to investigate, no reliable cooperator other than Michael Cohen (a convicted perjurer), and DANY was still waiting to receive Trump’s tax and accounting materials.”¹²⁵ At that point, Pomerantz emphasized that he was merely an “outside advisor” who “did not have a big emotional investment in the investigation.”¹²⁶

A few days after President Trump left the White House in late-January 2021, Vance asked Pomerantz to “join the investigation as more than an outside advisor” and “be sworn in as a special assistant district attorney” to work exclusively on the investigation into President Trump.¹²⁷ Pomerantz replied that he “was ready, willing, and able to get started as soon as [he] could be sworn in.”¹²⁸ He even joked that salary negotiations had gone “great” because he and Vance had “reached agreement that [Pomerantz] would work on the case for nothing before [he] was even asked how much [Pomerantz] was willing to pay the DA’s office!”¹²⁹

Pomerantz’s discussion of this offer reveals his animus, both personally and politically, against President Trump and the thrill he felt in being given the opportunity to bring a criminal case against President Trump. Although Pomerantz asserted in his book that his “enthusiasm to work on the investigation had nothing to do with [his] views about Trump’s politics,” he simultaneously detailed the reasons he was “not a fan”¹³⁰ of and “had little regard”¹³¹ for President Trump.¹³²

III. POMERANTZ WAS FANATICAL ABOUT PROSECUTING PRESIDENT TRUMP

Mark Pomerantz’s book details his infatuation with investigating and prosecuting President Trump. Pomerantz’s overzealousness to get President Trump led to him disregarding the fundamental tenets of a prosecutor’s job. It resulted in Pomerantz sifting through several unprecedented and convoluted legal theories in search of a crime. It resulted in Pomerantz relying on a star witness, convicted perjurer Michael Cohen, with a history of lying and a clear animus against President Trump. Pomerantz’s book plainly shows, in black and white, that the Manhattan District Attorney’s prosecution of President Trump is a political hit job.

A. Pomerantz Shifted Through Many Novel and Untested Legal Theories in Search of a Crime

Throughout his book, Pomerantz explained that he considered many legal theories to prosecute President Trump. Pomerantz made clear that his goal was to prosecute President Trump, for any crime, and that it was just a matter of finding the crime to pin on him.¹³³ After he was sworn in, Pomerantz considered alleged “hush money” payments, which the DANY had been investigating since 2018.¹³⁴ By the end of 2019, however, Vance elected not to bring charges “against anyone in connection with the hush money paid to [Stephanie] Clifford or the phony invoicing scheme by which Michael Cohen had been reimbursed for the money he had laid out.”¹³⁵ Pomerantz explained that although the alleged “hush money and phony invoicing scheme had generated false business records, . . . creating a false business record is only a misdemeanor under New York law”¹³⁶ with a maximum jail sentence of less than a year.¹³⁷

When President Trump left office, Pomerantz decided to “revisit”¹³⁸ “whether there were other felony charges that could be brought in connection with the payment that Cohen had made to Clifford and the ensuing coverup.”¹³⁹ Pomerantz at this point concocted a “novel legal theory” under New York’s money laundering statute, which he admitted was “neither intuitive nor obvious.”¹⁴⁰ Money laundering, as he explained, is a series of financial transactions that are designed to “conceal or disguise the nature, the location, the source, the ownership, or the control of the proceeds of criminal conduct.”¹⁴¹ Pomerantz’s money laundering theory was “novel” because the “proceeds” were based on Clifford’s criminal conduct, i.e., her “extortion of Donald Trump.”¹⁴² That legal theory fizzled out when Pomerantz realized that New York’s money laundering statute required the payments that Cohen allegedly agreed to be made on Trump’s behalf—or the “dirty money” to have been actually received by Clifford.¹⁴³

After realizing that there was no criminal case on the Clifford facts, Pomerantz began focusing on President Trump’s Statements of Financial Condition (SOFC), which he believed, based on the claims of Michael Cohen, must be criminal.¹⁴⁴ Pomerantz began examining multiple years’ worth of the financial statements made for multiple golf properties, Deutsche Bank, the Old Post Office Hotel, Doral Resort, Trump International Hotel & Tower in Chicago, Mar-A-Lago, Seven Springs, 40 Wall Street, the Triplex Apartment, and Trump Tower.¹⁴⁵

Pomerantz further explored the possibility of charging President Trump under New York’s Enterprise Corruption statute involving “pattern crimes.”¹⁴⁶ In effect, Pomerantz sought to amalgamate several unrelated and baseless allegations against President Trump into a crime. Pomerantz’s actions make clear that he prejudged the results of this case and had decided that President Trump would be prosecuted for some crime—any crime—but it was just a matter of finding the crime to pin on him.

Pomerantz had one serious issue, though: his colleagues did not entirely agree with him. In his book, Pomerantz made clear his contempt for his DANY colleagues. Pomerantz accused his fellow DANY lawyers and investigators of being “relentlessly negative, dwelling on all the difficulties and issues with the case, and refusing to acknowledge the positives” during an internal meeting on December 10, 2021, referring to his former colleagues as “conscientious objectors”¹⁴⁷ merely for opining that the case was “weak” and pointing to its “many fatal flaws.”¹⁴⁸ He ultimately dismissed their concerns about the investigation by suggesting that they were either too lazy to do the work, did not know the evidence, or were somehow afraid of bringing charges against President Trump.¹⁴⁹

B. Pomerantz’s Politicized Reliance on Convicted Perjurer Michael Cohen

One of the more bizarre aspects of Pomerantz’s book is his reverence for Michael Cohen, President Trump’s disgraced former lawyer. Cohen, a convicted felon who lied six times before

Congress,¹⁵⁰ has a demonstrable prejudice against President Trump, which gives him a serious credibility problem.¹⁵¹

In August 2018, Cohen “pleaded guilty to five counts of willful tax evasion; one count of making false statements to a bank; one count of causing an unlawful campaign contribution; and one count of making an excessive campaign contribution.”¹⁵² Three months later, Cohen also pleaded guilty to lying to Congress.¹⁵³ Federal prosecutors in Manhattan described Cohen’s criminal conduct in that case as “knowing and calculated acts—acts Cohen executed in order to profit personally, build his own power, and enhance his level of influence.”¹⁵⁴ When sentencing Cohen in 2018, Judge William H. Pauley, III called his wrongdoing “extensive” and “a veritable smorgasbord of fraudulent conduct.”¹⁵⁵ Judge Pauley found that all of Cohen’s crimes “involved deception and each appears to have been motivated by personal greed and ambition.”¹⁵⁶

Even after he pleaded guilty of lying to Congress, Cohen lied to Congress again. On February 28, 2019, Republicans on the House Committee on Oversight and Reform referred Cohen to the Department of Justice for committing perjury and knowingly making false statements during his testimony before the Committee on February 27.¹⁵⁷ Cohen lied repeatedly in his testimony, making willfully and intentionally false statements that were contradicted by the record established by the Justice Department in United States v. Cohen.¹⁵⁸ Parts of Cohen’s testimony were in direct contradiction to assertions made by the U.S. Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York (SDNY) in its pleadings.¹⁵⁹ Other parts of Cohen’s testimony were immediately contradicted by witnesses with firsthand knowledge of the subject matter.¹⁶⁰ For example, Cohen denied committing various fraudulent acts, such as defrauding a bank, despite pleading guilty the year before for making false statements to a banking institute.¹⁶¹ Cohen also “testified that he did not seek employment in the White House,” which was “in direct conflict with court filings made by the United States Attorney’s Office for the SDNY”¹⁶²

In 2023, Cohen, again, admitted to lying to Congress. Just last year, at a court hearing in the lawsuit brought by the New York Attorney General against President Trump, Cohen admitted to lying under oath again at his 2019 deposition before the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.¹⁶³ Cohen was asked if he lied during the deposition when asked if he was directed to inflate certain financial numbers.¹⁶⁴ Cohen responded, “Yes.”¹⁶⁵ This prompted the Chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, Congressman Mike Turner, to send a criminal referral to the Department of Justice demanding that the Department investigate Cohen for perjury and knowingly making false statements to Congress.¹⁶⁶

Cohen’s metamorphosis into a crusader against President Trump appears to have been orchestrated, in part, by Lanny Davis, a prominent Democrat activist and longtime Clinton-family confidant.¹⁶⁷ Just months before hiring Davis, Cohen admitted that he had no incriminating information about President Trump. Based on information made available to the Committee, in April 2018, when federal law enforcement investigated Cohen for his crimes, his attorney asked him if he had “any info on Trump,” to which Cohen replied that “he didn’t have anything on him, nothing.” Cohen also vowed, though, to never spend a day in jail, telling his attorney, “One thing I can tell you is that I am never going to spend one day in jail, never. I will do what I have to do, but I will never spend one day in jail.” In the following months, however, Cohen flipped, and Davis began to use Cohen to attack and undermine President Trump for political advantage.

Davis admitted that he orchestrated Cohen’s testimony to Congress, recalling how he “convinced [then Oversight Committee] Chairman Cummings to make Cohen the first announced witness of his chairmanship” and “Chairman Cummings agreed to [Davis’s] overtures”¹⁶⁸ Chairman Cummings, under the pressure of Davis, also “unilaterally and unnecessarily attempted to limit the scope of Cohen’s testimony.”¹⁶⁹ Davis also bragged about how he was responsible for Bragg’s prosecution, explaining that he called the New York County District Attorney’s office, led at the time by Cyrus Vance, after “Michael was sent to prison” because “the evidence of financial fraud was on the record in the [congressional] hearings and that Vance’s office should interview Michael And that’s how it began.”¹⁷⁰

In their first meeting during Cohen’s home confinement, Pomerantz said Cohen impressed him as “smart but manipulative,” because he reminded Pomerantz of a cooperating drug dealer who testified for him in a trial forty years ago, and he thought Cohen was telling the truth.¹⁷¹ Blinded by the idea of using Cohen in a prosecution against President Trump, Pomerantz looked past the fact that Cohen had his “own agenda” and the likelihood that “jurors would know that Cohen was furious with Donald Trump, and wanted to see him convicted.”¹⁷² Specifically, Pomerantz recounted that Cohen “did not have to be pressured, cajoled, or coaxed into answering questions” because Cohen “wanted to make sure that Donald Trump was prosecuted and held accountable for his crimes.”¹⁷³

DANY prosecutors raised red flags about Cohen’s participation in a case against President Trump. Pomerantz recounted in his book how DANY prosecutors reacted negatively when Pomerantz mentioned Cohen’s potential involvement in their litigation plans.¹⁷⁴ For example, during a meeting with Bragg’s new team, Pomerantz argued that Cohen’s testimony would be part of their proof against President Trump, and the team’s discussion “degenerated into chaos and confusion.”¹⁷⁵ Pomerantz’s defense for Cohen’s liabilities as a witness was “virtually all cooperators have liabilities,” and Pomerantz believed that “most” of the team agreed Cohen was eligible to testify.¹⁷⁶ Yet, Cohen continued to be a point of contention between Pomerantz and his DANY colleagues in further discussions about charging President Trump, resulting in Pomerantz frequently defending the convicted perjurer.¹⁷⁷

Pomerantz even continued to defend Cohen’s credibility when Cohen made enthusiastic public appearances after New York State Attorney General Letitia James filed a petition to compel President Trump and members of his family to give depositions in her civil investigation.¹⁷⁸ Even though Cohen’s “penchant for publicity, exaggeration, and grandiose statements played into the hands of people who distrusted him,” Pomerantz deflected this “self-aggrandizement,” explaining that he did not view Cohen as an “inveterate liar,” but merely a “complicated person.”¹⁷⁹ In the face of opposition from his DANY colleagues about the wisdom of relying on Cohen, Pomerantz wrote that he felt like he was “always arguing the reasons for prosecuting Trump until [he] was blue in the face.”¹⁸⁰

Pomerantz recounted a “mini-revolt” that occurred following an internal meeting on September 21, 2021, about the investigations into President Trump.¹⁸¹ He offered details about a disagreement between himself and the DANY’s Major Economic Crimes Bureau Chief, Julieta Lozano, about Michael Cohen’s credibility as a witness in the investigation.¹⁸² He also complained about concerns expressed by Chris Conroy, the DANY’s Investigative Division Chief, during a meeting on November 12, 2021.¹⁸³ According to Pomerantz, Conroy “spoke about his misgivings” about the Trump investigation, which stemmed from a case involving financial and accounting fraud charges that mirrored the charges that the DANY was considering pursuing against President Trump.¹⁸⁴ That case apparently ended poorly for the DANY.¹⁸⁵

Early on in District Attorney Bragg’s tenure, Pomerantz defended using Cohen as a witness against President Trump to Bragg. At one point during a team meeting, Bragg told Pomerantz “that he ‘could not see a world’ in which we would indict Trump and call Michael Cohen as a prosecution witness.”¹⁸⁶ But it seems, in less than a year, Bragg’s view of Cohen drastically changed. In addition to the novel and untested legal theory Bragg used in President Trump’s indictment, Michael Cohen has become Bragg’s star witness.¹⁸⁷ Bragg’s case relies heavily on the testimony of Michael Cohen, a perjurer with a demonstrable prejudice against President Trump.¹⁸⁸ Cohen has been vocal about his deeply personal animus toward President Trump.¹⁸⁹ Ultimately, the idea of utilizing Michael Cohen as a witness in any case against President Trump should be a red flag given Cohen’s obvious vendetta and numerous public attacks against President Trump.

C. Pomerantz’s Personal Animus Towards and Obsession with President Trump

Although Pomerantz contends that he only “wanted the Trump case brought because [he] thought a prosecution was necessary to serve the public interest,”¹⁹⁰ he makes little effort to hide his personal animus towards President Trump in his book. His ad hominin characterizations of President Trump include, among other things:

- An “unscrupulous wheeler-dealer”¹⁹¹ with a “narcissistic personality;”¹⁹²
- A “bully”¹⁹³ with an “affinity for lying;”¹⁹⁴
- A “master of breaking the law”¹⁹⁵ who is “incredibly cheap and completely dishonest;”¹⁹⁶
- A “malignant narcissist”¹⁹⁷ and “megalomaniac”¹⁹⁸ who “pos[ed] a real danger to the country and to the ideals that mattered . . . ;”¹⁹⁹
- A “ruthless and avaricious”²⁰⁰ businessman with “a dark side to his prosperity;”²⁰¹ and

- “[N]ot just a pathological liar, but a hapless, arrogant, and horrible liar”²⁰² who “could no longer process the difference between [expletive] and reality.”²⁰³

Pomerantz revealed his overwhelming contempt for President Trump when he likened him to convicted mob boss John Gotti, writing that “[i]n my career as a lawyer, I had encountered only one other person who touched all these bases: John Gotti.”²⁰⁴ While Pomerantz repeatedly denied that his political motive drove his investigation of President Trump, he admitted that he volunteered thousands of hours of his time, working day and night, pouring through hundreds of thousands of documents, and canceling vacations, all to try to figure out if some convoluted legal theory could be used to bring a criminal case against President Trump.²⁰⁵

The personal sacrifices that Pomerantz made in pursuit of his goal of prosecuting President Trump are not that of someone who “did not have a big emotional investment in the investigation.”²⁰⁶ For example, Pomerantz wrote, “[I] decided to plunge into the task of learning everything I could about Trump’s financial statements . . . I would work for a few hours, walk the dog to break up the monotony, come back to the statements and spreadsheets and work for a few more hours, and walk the dog again.”²⁰⁷ Pomerantz claimed that he “was completely submerged in the fact investigation, doing witness outlines and interviews, parsing documents, reading through testimony transcripts, and doing a million other things. By this point I was working days, evenings, and weekends.”²⁰⁸ Pomerantz even admitted to spending “thousands of hours thinking about Donald Trump’s conduct . . .”²⁰⁹

For the investigation, Pomerantz accumulated “a small library” of books specifically for this investigation, including “Cohen’s book, Disloyal, and another fifteen or so Trump-related books I immersed myself in what had been written about Trump’s business empire and . . . began a detailed study of Trump’s yearly financial statements, thinking that they might become the fulcrum of a case against him . . .”²¹⁰

Even during a hurricane, Pomerantz prioritized President Trump over everything else. During Hurricane Ida in 2021, Pomerantz and his wife “watched with dismay as the water level rose around our home, and finally water began pouring into the house.”²¹¹ Rather than worrying about themselves or items of sentimental or personal value, Pomerantz and his wife “scurr[ie]d around [their] home office to rescue all of [his] Trump files from the flood and carry them upstairs to safety.”²¹² Pomerantz and his wife even went as far as “cancel[ing] [their] stay in Sonoma for most of the winter” even though it may have “meant forfeiting the large deposit [they] had paid to rent a house there. There was just too much to do to finalize the charges and get ready for the return of the Trump indictment.”²¹³

These are not actions of a prosecutor seeking to do justice. These are the actions of a rogue, overzealous prosecutor acting with political motivations. And that motivation infected the investigation from the start.

IV. POMERANTZ RESIGNED AFTER BRAGG INITIALLY REFUSED TO AUTHORIZE THE PROSECUTION OF PRESIDENT TRUMP

On January 1, 2022, Alvin Bragg was sworn in as New York County’s District County.²¹⁴ Pomerantz noted that on that day, “things started to go south almost immediately.”²¹⁵ Pomerantz and Dunne had “growing unease” about the pace of the investigation into President Trump—even after meeting with Bragg and his team several times.²¹⁶ On January 8, 2022, Pomerantz met individually with Bragg. During the one-on-one, Pomerantz told Bragg that his case against President Trump “was ready to be charged.”²¹⁷ On January 11, 2022, Pomerantz and Dunne gave a presentation on former President Trump’s financial statements to Bragg and his team.²¹⁸ At this meeting, Bragg’s team expressed “considerable ‘angst’” about using Cohen as a witness and sought to pivot away from Pomerantz’s suggested fraud charges.²¹⁹

On January 24, 2022, according to Pomerantz, an investigative team meeting “quickly degenerated into a whirlwind of negativity” because other DANY officials rightly questioned the credibility of Pomerantz’s main witness, Michael Cohen.²²⁰ Pomerantz also took issue with the fact that Bragg seemed disinterested in the meeting—Bragg arrived late to the meeting, “spent much of the time looking at his phone, and then left early . . .”²²¹ Two days later, Pomerantz and Dunne agreed that both would resign if Bragg did not move forward with an indictment and exchanged resignation letters for the other to review.²²² Prior to a scheduled surgery, which he had “delayed . . . because work had become so frenzied,” Pomerantz “prepared a resignation letter . . . [to] inform [Bragg] that [he] did not want to continue ‘in the absence of clarity about a decision to prosecute and without the ability to secure the resources that [he] believe[d] the case require[d].’”²²³ Pomerantz did not follow through with submitting this resignation letter and, instead, “in the wee hours of the morning” before the scheduled surgery, Pomerantz decided to write a “blunt” letter to Bragg indicating that he was “not happy” with how Bragg was handling the investigation.²²⁴

Throughout the first few weeks of February 2022, Pomerantz and Dunne held several conversations with Bragg and his team to explain their multi-faceted investigation into President Trump.²²⁵ After one of the sessions, Pomerantz indicated he felt that it was “us vs. them” with regards to Bragg’s team and how they viewed the investigation.²²⁶

On February 20, 2022, Bragg indicated that he would not authorize the prosecution based upon the facts that Pomerantz and Dunne had developed, prompting Pomerantz to formally resign on February 23, 2022.²²⁷ In his resignation letter, which was leaked to the New York Times, Pomerantz offered a scathing rebuke of Bragg, vowing to not be a “passive participant” to Bragg’s “grave failure of justice.”²²⁸ Pomerantz’s public resignation reportedly left Bragg “deeply stung,” and caused him to issue an “unusual” public statement, “emphasizing that the investigation into Trump and his business was far from over.”²²⁹

Notably, Pomerantz’s resignation letter had several misleading and inconsistent statements. In his resignation letter, Pomerantz wrote, “[t]he team that has been investigating Mr. Trump harbors no doubt about whether he committed crimes – he did.”²³⁰ Pomerantz’s book, however, told a different story. By his own admission, during a December 9, 2021 meeting with attorneys in the District Attorney’s Office, many of the lawyers were “relentlessly negative.”²³¹ Pomerantz noted that “one lawyer opined that it had ‘many fatal flaws.’”²³² Another lawyer “expressed a view that the case might be ‘way out there.’”²³³ Pomerantz later stated that “[i]t was common knowledge in the office that there had been ‘defectors’ from the Trump investigation.”²³⁴ Bragg also told Pomerantz that “the consensus among the group of prosecutors with whom he had been speaking was not to go forward.”²³⁵

Pomerantz also wrote in his resignation letter that “I and others have advised you that we have evidence sufficient to establish Mr. Trump’s guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and we believe that the prosecution would prevail if charges were brought and the matter were tried to an impartial jury.”²³⁶ In his book, however, Pomerantz wrote, “I know that the case against Donald Trump is not an easy one, and there is a big risk that it will not end in a conviction. It is impossible to quantify that risk. I believe that the prosecution would prevail, but a lot of uncertainty is baked into the situation.”²³⁷

Finally, Pomerantz wrote in his resignation letter, “You have devoted significant time and energy to understanding the evidence we have accumulated with respect to the Trump financial statements, as well as the applicable law.”²³⁸ This assertion, too, is inconsistent with Pomerantz’s description of Bragg in his book. At the outset of his book, Pomerantz claimed Bragg “was responsible for a ‘grave failure of justice’” for not promptly indicting President Trump.²³⁹ Pomerantz went on to write that Bragg was “distracted” and “thought about Alvin’s relative youth and wondered if he was in over his head.”²⁴⁰ He accused Bragg of not “jump[ing] in to embrace the investigation or to learn the facts.”²⁴¹ Pomerantz also believed that it was better for Bragg to send his investigation to the U.S. Attorney’s Office “than simply ‘take a knee’ by keeping the case in the district attorney’s office to die a lingering death.”²⁴²

V. UNDER PUBLIC PRESSURE FROM POMERANTZ, DISTRICT ATTORNEY BRAGG RESURRECTED THE “ZOMBIE” CASE AGAINST PRESIDENT TRUMP

Though both the SDNY and DANY previously declined to further investigate the alleged hush money payments to Clifford,²⁴³ Bragg opted to revive the DANY’s investigation at a politically opportune moment. Shortly after President Trump announced his White House run, the DANY pivoted back to what Pomerantz frequently referred to as the “zombie” case that originated nearly five years ago.²⁴⁴ The case earned its zombie nickname due to a tendency it had to “[spring] back to life” as it did in 2019, 2021, and again in 2023.²⁴⁵ Nonetheless, Bragg’s decision to bring forth this case following Pomerantz’s public pressure campaign—and after essentially abandoning the DANY’s previous Trump investigations at the beginning of his tenure²⁴⁶—raises considerable suspicion as to whether political pressure played a role in his decision.

According to Pomerantz, the “zombie” case had multiple pitfalls, and notwithstanding possible “work-arounds,” Pomerantz wrote that none were appealing.²⁴⁷ Further, his DANY colleagues were “dubious about whether Trump had been ‘extorted’ in the first place.”²⁴⁸ However, Bragg may have decided to move forward on this matter purely for convenience and familiarity. Pomerantz noted that in October 2019, well before New York citizens elected Bragg, the DANY prosecutors and investigators “had done a lot of work developing the facts surrounding the [Clifford] hush money payment,” and “ramped up their efforts” once federal prosecutors said they were finished looking at this information.²⁴⁹

In the following months, Bragg and his team at the DANY likely noticed the acclaim that New York Attorney General Letitia James received from Democrats for bringing a civil action against President Trump, his children, and the Trump Organization.²⁵⁰ Bragg experienced bad press almost immediately at the start of his term because he announced in a memorandum that he would not prosecute certain “low-level crimes, all while promising to downgrade criminal charges and to decriminalize crimes such as resisting arrest.”²⁵¹ Subsequently, when Pomerantz and Dunne resigned, prominent voices on the left attacked Bragg, in part, for his inaction on

President Trump.²⁵² In other words, as a popularly elected prosecutor, Bragg needed a political win by the end of his first year in office to enhance his public standing.

Bragg also had to consider his political future. During his race for District Attorney, Bragg made big promises to go after President Trump. Bragg frequently reminded voters that while working at the New York Attorney General’s office, he sued the Trump Administration “more than a hundred times.”²⁵³ A spokeswoman for Bragg’s primary opponent even noted that Bragg attacked President Trump “for political advantage every chance he gets.”²⁵⁴ Bragg’s eventual election and subsequent blunder with his Day One memorandum put additional pressure on his decision to resurrect the “zombie” case as a vehicle to deliver on his campaign promises. It is this improper political bias that fueled Bragg to reevaluate his prior decision, vowing instead that his investigation of President Trump was continuing as he noted in an interview the day that Pomerantz and Dunne resigned.²⁵⁵ In fact, Bragg noted that he hoped “driving down gun violence and the population at Rikers while pushing ahead on the Trump investigation . . . [would] ‘neutralize’ the noise around him.”²⁵⁶

Fast forward to March 2023, and Bragg seemed to have succumbed to that noise. Bragg opted to file charges, even though multiple years had passed since the DANY initiated its investigation and the facts of the “zombie” case had remained unchanged.²⁵⁷ The facts had not changed. The law had not changed. The credibility of Bragg’s star witness, Michael Cohen, had not improved. There was only one significant intervening factor between the DANY’s previous decision not to pursue charges and Bragg’s indictment: President Trump announced his candidacy for the 2024 presidential election.

VI. THE COMMITTEE’S PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE REFORMS TO ADDRESS POLITICIZED PROSECUTIONS

Bragg’s indictment of President Trump is just the tip of the iceberg for politically motivated prosecutions, and the Committee intends to investigate the circumstances out of which this litigation was reborn. Contrary to Bragg’s assertion in defense of his unprecedented indictment,²⁵⁸ the indictment of a former President of the United States by an elected local prosecutor of the opposing political party (who faces the prospect of re-election to office, much like President Trump is seeking), implicates substantial federal interests. Bragg’s indictment of President Trump has led to copycat indictments by other politically motivated, popularly elected local prosecutors.

On August 14, 2023, Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis brought a 41-count indictment against 19 defendants, including President Trump, alleging that they participated in a “criminal enterprise.”²⁵⁹ Like Bragg, the Committee has sought information from Willis about her use of federal grant funds,²⁶⁰ and the Justice Department has acknowledged there are “inconsistencies” in her actions.²⁶¹ If state or local prosecutors like Bragg and Willis are allowed to engage in politically motivated prosecutions of former or current U.S. Presidents for personal acts, this could have a profound impact on how Presidents choose to exercise their official duties while in office.

There are several pieces of legislation pending in Congress to address these politically motivated local prosecutions. Congressman Russell Fry introduced H.R. 2553, the No More Political Prosecutions Act, a bill that would provide former and current Presidents and Vice Presidents the option to remove their own civil or criminal cases from a state court to a federal court.²⁶² On September 28, 2023, the Committee approved H.R. 2553, reporting it to the floor for consideration by the full House.²⁶³ Congressman Andy Biggs has introduced two bills: (1) H.R. 2581, the Accountability for Lawless Violence In Our Neighborhoods Act, which would “prohibit[] federal funds from being awarded to the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office and

There is no place for local, politically motivated prosecutors to weaponize the criminal justice system against former or current Presidents.

VII. CONCLUSION

Despite Pomerantz's refusal to answer questions throughout his deposition, his book makes one thing clear: from the start, the New York County District Attorney's investigation, and later indictment, of President Trump is a product of prosecutorial focus on one individual in search of a crime. Pomerantz, in his own words, confirms what Americans instinctively know. Pomerantz was a politically motivated prosecutor who sought to use the immense resources available to him to charge President Trump under a novel legal theory and suspect evidence—evidence on which federal prosecutors refused to bring charges. Like Pomerantz, Bragg's actions showed that he, too, was a politically motivated prosecutor. During his campaign, Bragg bragged about suing President Trump several times. The DANY allowed political motivations and animus to infect its prosecutorial discretion. As a result, the DANY now has a case that rests on questionable and untested legal grounds.²⁶⁵

The New York County District Attorney's indictment of President Trump opened a dangerous new possibility of politically motivated prosecutions or threatened prosecutions of political opponents, including presidents. This case establishes a dangerously low threshold for these investigations and prosecutions to commence. With this indictment, Bragg has opened the door for future prosecutions of a former president—or current candidate—that would be widely perceived as politically motivated. As we have already seen, other prosecutors have followed Bragg's lead and pursued politically motivated investigations and indictments of President Trump.

The fundamental mission of any prosecutor's office is to uphold the rule of law. And one of the hallmarks of this mission is to ensure that justice is blind—applied fairly and equally. Bragg's politically motivated indictment of President Trump threatens to destroy this notion of blind justice by using the criminal justice system to attack an individual he disagrees with politically, and, in turn, eroding the confidence of the American people.

The Honorable Elijah E. Cummings
Chairman
Committee on Oversight and Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

It has now been twenty months since the inception of the Special Counsel Robert S. Mueller III probe.¹ During this period, the Department of Justice (DOJ) and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) refused to allow Members of Congress to inquire about unsubstantiated allegations and admissions made by Michael D. Cohen, citing the Department's position of not discussing ongoing criminal investigations. Over the course of fifteen transcribed interviews before Congress, DOJ and FBI blocked witnesses from answering questions more than seventy times citing the need to prevent revealing information about the Special Counsel's ongoing investigation.

In contrast with your statement expressing, "no interest in inappropriately interfering with any ongoing criminal investigations," one of your first moves as Chairman was to announce a hearing to bring in Michael Cohen, a witness in two high-profile federal criminal investigations, one by the Special Counsel and the other by the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York.² According to your press release, you set this hearing without finishing consultations with the Special Counsel's office. You also did not consult with the minority Members of the Committee. I do understand from public reporting you have been working with Lanny J. Davis in producing the February 7, 2019, hearing.³

This past July you urged the Committee to “protect the integrity of the Special Counsel’s ongoing criminal investigation.”⁴ Your colleagues have likewise emphasized the importance of not interfering with the Special Counsel. In July then-Judiciary Committee Ranking Member Jerrold Nadler asked then-Judiciary Chairman Bob Goodlatte, “Are we no longer going to wait until Special Counsel Mueller concludes his work, Mr. Chairman?”⁵ Democrats’ turnabout here is remarkable.

You indicated yesterday you are talking with the Cohen camp about the contours of his testimony. I ask you to include representatives of the minority in future discussions about Cohen’s testimony. Preventing the minority from participating deprives us of the ability to meaningfully prepare our Members for the hearing.⁶ I also understand your staff is now having private conversations with the staff from the Special Counsel’s office. Minority staff should be included in these deliberations as well.

To ensure that all Members of the Committee are prepared adequately for this hearing, I request you seek documents and testimony from DOJ and the FBI, and from Cohen. At minimum, the Committee should take a transcribed interview or depose Cohen before his public testimony. The following documents and information are necessary for the Committee to have a fact-based hearing—and avoid reckless speculation and conjecture at the hearing. Accordingly, I trust you will require the DOJ and the FBI to produce, in unredacted form, the following documents:

1. All FD-302 forms and any other investigative reports created by the DOJ or FBI in their investigations into Michael Cohen;
2. All FD-1023 forms that may have been created involving Michael Cohen;
3. All contact reports involving Michael Cohen and the FBI;
4. All cooperation agreements between Michael Cohen and DOJ;

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am writing to request additional information about the Committee's hearing scheduled for February 7, 2019, at which you have invited Michael D. Cohen, a convicted felon sentenced to prison, to testify.¹ Cohen pleaded guilty to providing intentionally false testimony to a Congressional committee.² You invited Cohen to testify before finishing consultations with the Special Counsel's Office and without consulting the minority.³ As the Committee prepares for your first major hearing, there is still much we do not know about your plans for the hearing.

Shortly after you announced the hearing, Michael Avenatti, an attorney for Stephanie Clifford, who presents herself in the adult performance industry under the stage name Stormy Daniels, announced that he will attend the hearing with Ms. Clifford.⁴ Avenatti did not say whether you invited them to attend the hearing or whether they will testify. I hope you can clarify Mr. Avenatti's and Ms. Clifford's roles in the hearing.

According to news reports, the Committee's hearing would not be the first time Mr. Avenatti and Ms. Clifford have appeared at an official proceeding involving Mr. Cohen. Mr. Avenatti previously appeared at a procedural hearing in Mr. Cohen's criminal case in Federal District Court in the Southern District of New York.⁵ One report described Mr. Avenatti's interjection at Mr. Cohen's hearing and the hearing's "circus-like atmosphere."⁶ According to another report describing the court hearing, the appearance of Ms. Clifford and Mr. Avenatti turned the court's proceeding into a "three-ring circus."⁷ To avoid a public charade at a Congressional hearing—your seminal foray as Chairman—please provide answers to the following questions:

1. Have you, your staff, or any Democratic Member extended an invitation for either Michael Avenatti or Stephanie Clifford to attend the Committee's February 7, 2019, hearing?
2. Have you, your staff, or any Democratic Member arranged for reserved seats for either Michael Avenatti or Stephanie Clifford to attend the Committee's February 7, 2019, hearing? If so, is there a new Committee policy for reserving seats? If there is, is the minority permitted to reserve seats?
3. Is it your intention to call either Michael Avenatti or Stephanie Clifford as a witness at the February 7, 2019, hearing, or at any future Committee hearings?
4. Are there any other witnesses you intend to bring before the Committee at the February 7, 2019, hearing?

We should agree that the Committee's work is serious business that should not be discredited by publicity hounds and witnesses seeking to advance their own agenda. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Sincerely,

Jim Jordan

Guy Petrillo, Esq.
Petrillo Klein & Boxer LLP
655 Third Avenue, 22d Floor
New York, NY 10017

Dear Mr. Petrillo:

We write concerning your client, Michael D. Cohen. Our staff recently met with Lanny J. Davis, who identified himself as Cohen's Washington, D.C. attorney and media advisor. Davis, a veteran Democrat political operative with expertise in public relations,¹ was unable to answer several questions about Cohen's appearance. He suggested you – as Cohen's criminal defense attorney – are best positioned to provide this assistance.

Scope of Cohen's testimony

Davis told us Cohen's testimony will exclude any matter "under investigation." The non-exhaustive list of issues that Cohen will refuse to address include matters involving the Attorney General for the State of New York, the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York, and the office of Special Counsel Robert S. Mueller III.

Of course, this is not an easy list of topics to sidestep at a Congressional hearing with such intense public interest. Our Members intend to ask Cohen whatever question they deem appropriate. Among other matters, we learned from Davis our Members will not receive answers to why Cohen defrauded the United States and the State of New York through his business dealings. He will not speak about representations and affirmations he made while seeking loans and other forms of credit from financial institutions. We will not be hearing testimony about why Cohen intentionally provided false and misleading testimony to the United States Congress in previous appearances. We will not be able to learn more about Cohen's role in federal campaign finance law violations. In fact, according to Davis, Cohen's testimony will be circumscribed to what he and you are comfortable with him addressing.

¹ According to publicity materials, Davis served as Special Counsel to President Clinton and was spokesman for the President and the Clinton White House on wide variety of matters. Lanny J. Davis, About The Author, Simon & Schuster, <https://www.simonandschuster.com/authors/Lanny-J-Davis/1446943> (last visited Jan. 18, 2019).

Origins of Cohen's appearance

According to Davis, he has been working with Chairman Elijah E. Cummings for “one or two months” on Cohen’s appearance before the Committee. After an unspecified number of meetings and communications, Davis indicated the Chairman finally “came around” to the idea of having a hearing.

Davis conceded Cohen did not want to testify—and in fact cannot testify about much due to the far-flung criminal investigations of which he is a target, subject or defendant—and Cohen is fearful for his family. Davis acknowledged, “I pushed him to do this,” explaining “this was my idea; nobody else’s.”

Davis confirmed he did not have any discussions with the Department of Justice or the Attorney General for the State of New York before offering Cohen’s appearance to the Committee. Davis is not asking permission, he told us. Instead, Davis stated, “I told them what our decision was.” “I picked this Committee,” Davis said, as the exclusive venue for Cohen to tell his own personal story. Davis indicated his longstanding personal relationship with Chairman Cummings was determinative. Davis stated Cohen does not plan to testify before any other congressional committees in open or closed session.

Purpose of Cohen's appearance

According to Davis, the sole purpose of Cohen’s appearance before the Committee is to allow Cohen to share his personal anecdotes about his time working for the then-private citizen Donald J. Trump, and his experiences after Mr. Trump became President. Pressed on how Cohen’s testimony is jurisdictionally related to the Committee’s role in overseeing the functioning, efficiency, and effectiveness of the federal government, Davis stated Cohen has “anecdotes about his time with the President.” He forewarned the hearing will likely be “unsatisfying” and “frustrating” for Members of the Committee.

Conflict of interest issues and compensation

Given Davis’s close association with former President Bill Clinton and 2016 Democratic nominee for President and former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, we also have questions about how Cohen’s legal representatives resolve the conflict of interest Davis’s representation presents.² Davis’s role as consigliere for the Clintons and those close to them raises the specter his client loyalties may be divided. We seek clarification on whether any waivers have been executed.

We do know Cohen is not paying Davis. Davis told us his firm has a representation agreement with a fee. When asked directly whether Cohen is paying his fee, Davis cryptically

² The D.C. Bar Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.7 states: (b) . . . a lawyer shall not represent a client with respect to a matter if: . . . (4) The lawyer’s professional judgment on behalf of the client will be or reasonably may be adversely affected by the lawyer’s responsibilities to or interests in a third party or the lawyer’s own financial, business, property, or personal interests.

Guy Petrillo, Esq.

said he could not answer but if Cohen was paying his fee, “I would say yes.” If Davis is providing free media advisory or legal services, or if someone else is paying Davis’s fees, it adds to the perception Cohen’s appearance is a media stunt initiated, produced, and financed by career Democrat political operatives as a way of scoring political points against the President.

Several of our questions to Davis went unanswered. Davis, however, believed you were the person to whom we needed to speak.

One of the inherent challenges with the upcoming hearing Lanny Davis has arranged for Chairman Cummings is it will be occurring against the backdrop of news accounts published about the Special Counsel’s work that have proven untrue. Cohen is at the heart of two of these stories. On January 17, 2019, BuzzFeed News released a story titled, “President Trump Directed His Attorney Michael Cohen To Lie To Congress About The Moscow Tower Project,” reportedly citing evidence possessed by the Special Counsel’s office.³ Shortly after the publication, in an extremely rare public comment, the Special Counsel’s office released a statement, “BuzzFeed’s description of specific statements to the special counsel’s office, and characterization of documents and testimony obtained by this office, regarding Michael Cohen’s congressional testimony are not accurate.”⁴

The Buzzfeed story was not the first time a public report of this type had to be corrected. In August, Davis made inaccurate public statements about Cohen’s testimony to the Special Counsel about the June 2016 Trump Tower meeting.⁵ After Davis was forced to correct the record, the Washington Post reported, “[Davis] is backing away from confident assertions he made that Cohen has information to share with investigators that shows Trump knew in 2016 of Russian efforts to undermine Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton.”⁶ These stories represent some of the misinformation and confusion surrounding Cohen’s criminal cases. With this background, it is important for the Committee to receive accurate information to ensure a fact-based hearing.

In preparation for the hearing, we have asked Chairman Cummings to require Cohen to participate in a transcribed interview, so we may better understand the matters on which he is and is not willing to speak. Davis told us, however, he will not allow this to happen. We also asked the Chairman to seek basic information from the Department of Justice or the Cohen legal team relating to the cases in which Cohen is a criminal defendant. Davis was able to provide some documents related to Cohen's sentencing hearing, but he referred us to you as someone well-positioned to be more responsive.

These are the information and materials we request:

1. Any FD-302 forms and any other investigative reports created by the DOJ or FBI in their investigations into Michael Cohen;
2. Any FD-1023 forms that may have been created involving Michael Cohen;
3. All cooperation agreements between Michael Cohen and DOJ;
4. Any notes taken by DOJ or FBI during their multiple interviews of Michael Cohen;
5. Documentation of all agreements Michael Cohen has with DOJ, the FBI, and any other foreign government's law enforcement agencies;
6. Any copies of waivers referring or relating to Cohen's client representations, whether related to attorney-client, conflict of interest, or otherwise;
7. Any copies of waivers referring or relating to Davis's representation of Cohen whether related to attorney-client, conflict of interest, or otherwise;
8. Identify the scope of Cohen's intended testimony before the Committee on February 7, 2019; and
9. Identify consultations the Cohen legal team has had with the Justice Department, the New York State Attorney General or other investigative or prosecutorial offices with an ongoing investigation of Cohen. For each consultation, identify the government official, the date, and the attendant or resulting testimonial scope limitation.

In summary, Davis made clear that Cohen's upcoming appearance before the Committee is entirely a result of Davis's orchestration. According to Davis, the hearing was Davis's idea and his alone. Cohen apparently did not want to testify—but Davis has persuaded Cohen to appear despite his concerns and fears. Davis picked our Committee as the exclusive venue for Cohen's appearance based on his long-standing personal friendship with Chairman Cummings,

Guy Petrillo, Esq.
January 22, 2019

and it took Chairman Cummings one to two months to agree to Davis's plan for Cohen's appearance. Cohen will not testify to any matter "under investigation," and Davis predicted that this constraint will leave Members of the Committee "frustrated" and "unsatisfied." Cohen is apparently not paying Davis for Davis's considerable efforts in advance of this hearing.

As Cohen's February 7, 2019, appearance – the first major hearing for the Chairman – is quickly approaching, we hope you will provide the requested documents and other information no later than January 25, 2019. We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Jim Jordan

U.S. House of Representatives

Dear Mr. Chairman:

We write with questions about the upcoming hearing with Michael Cohen. At least one news organization has reported you may schedule the hearing for next week.¹ Based on communications with our staff, Michael Cohen's attorney and media adviser, Lanny J. Davis, has notified you Cohen's testimony will be limited in scope. According to Davis, you have acceded to an unusual arrangement whereby Cohen will be permitted to appear voluntarily and be afforded the leeway to answer only those questions he so chooses. His testimony, Davis advised, will be extremely limited. All questions touching on possible ongoing investigations have been deemed off limits by Davis.

By letter dated January 11, 2019, we asked you to obtain a basic set of documents from the Department of Justice so our Members may meaningfully prepare for the Cohen hearing, the first major hearing of your Chairmanship.² We also sought to question Cohen at a transcribed interview so we could better-understand the scope limitations you have agreed to. Your decision not to do so raises the prospect you are leading us towards a circus of a hearing.

Our January 18, 2019, meeting with Davis yielded stunning information about the origins of the hearing. We learned:

- Cohen's public testimony will exclude all matters involving the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District, the Attorney General for the State of New York, and the office of Special Counsel Robert S. Mueller III;

- Davis exclusively picked our Committee for Cohen to testify in based on his longstanding friendship with you. Davis allowed he had to convince both you and Cohen to have the hearing. Cohen did not want to testify—Davis said, “I pushed him to do this,” explaining, “this was my idea; nobody else’s.” According to Davis, you seemingly had your own reservations, but Davis told us after “one or two months” you finally “came around;”
- The sole purpose of Cohen’s appearance before the Committee is to allow Cohen to share his personal anecdotes about his time working for the then-private citizen Donald J. Trump, and his experiences after Mr. Trump became President. Pressed on how Cohen’s testimony is jurisdictionally related to our Committee’s role in overseeing the functioning, efficiency, and effectiveness of the federal government, Davis stated Cohen has “anecdotes about his time with the President.” He confessed the hearing will likely be “unsatisfying” and “frustrating” for Members of the Committee;
- Davis conceded Cohen has not been paying for his services. Davis told us his firm has a representation agreement with a fee. When asked directly whether Cohen is paying his fee, Davis cryptically said he could not answer but if Cohen was paying his fee, “I would say yes.”

We are perplexed by the authority you have ceded to Davis in producing this made-for-television hearing. Lanny Davis is a close associate of former President Bill Clinton and former 2016 Democratic presidential candidate, Hillary Rodham Clinton. His undisputed remarks to our staff on January 18, 2019, create the perception that Cohen’s appearance is a media stunt initiated and financed by career Democrat political operatives as a way of meting out retribution against the President. Davis’s representation of Cohen has not been error-free. For instance, Davis was forced to walk back unfounded accusations he made against the President. The Washington Post reported, “[Davis] is backing away from confident assertions he made that Cohen has information to share with investigators that shows Trump knew in 2016 of Russian efforts to undermine Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton.”³

We hope you share our mission in ensuring our Committee is serious minded in its pursuit of fact based oversight and investigative work.⁴ Although you have been unwilling to

Dear Mr. Davis:

Your client, Michael Cohen, is scheduled to testify before our Committee on February 27, 2019. Cohen is expected to make accusations against President Trump, his former legal client. Cohen is a convicted criminal who has admitted to crimes of deception and lies for his personal greed and ambition. Our Members have a number of questions they intend to pose Cohen; however, Chairman Elijah Cummings has refused to request material necessary to prepare for Cohen's anticipated testimony. Therefore, we write to you to seek additional information about one facet of Cohen's work: the strategic consulting, lobbying, and foreign agent work he sought to undertake after he was denied a staff position in President Trump's White House.

As you boasted to our staff on January 18, 2019, you arranged for Cohen to testify before our Committee before he begins serving his prison sentence and you convinced Chairman Cummings to make Cohen the first announced witness of his chairmanship. Chairman Cummings agreed to your overtures, but he has unilaterally and unnecessarily attempted to limit the scope of Cohen's testimony. To be clear, and as our staff conveyed to you at the January meeting, our Members are not bound by the extremely narrow terms you have established with the Chairman. Our Members intend to pose questions they deem appropriate and they may ask your client about any of the following issues:

- The crimes of deception and lies to which Cohen pleaded guilty;
- Other criminal activity in which Cohen participated, but refused to disclose or cooperate with the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York (SDNY);
- Cohen's business dealings and international financial dealings, including those involving his relatives;
- Cohen's actions and boasts probative of his character, including his book deals, his desire to be a cable television personality, the fantastic claim he delivered his own baby, the delusional aim to be Mayor of the City of New York, and the fake Women For Cohen social media initiative he commissioned;¹ and

- Cohen’s strategic consulting, lobbying, and foreign agent work.

Federal court records show how Cohen sought to use his association with President Trump for personal gain. According to the SDNY prosecutors, in January 2017, around the time of President Trump’s inauguration, Cohen began offering lobbying and consulting services to a number of companies.² The prosecutors determined that Cohen “secured a substantial amount of consulting business for himself throughout 2017 by marketing to corporations what he claimed to be unique insights about and access to [President Trump].”³ Cohen’s list of major domestic and foreign corporate clients included AT&T, Novartis, BTA Bank of Kazakhstan, Columbus Nova, and Korea Aerospace Industries. His efforts landed Cohen a number of lucrative consulting deals worth millions of dollars. For example:

- AT&T paid Cohen $600,000 for insight on how the Administration would approach its controversial proposed merger with Time Warner.⁴
- Swiss pharmaceutical company Novartis paid Cohen $1.2 million for promised access to the White House on health care policy.⁵
- Kazakhstan’s BTA Bank, which Cohen has previous business ties to, paid Cohen a large sum under a consulting agreement.⁶
- Columbus Nova, a company whose biggest investor is owned by a Russian oligarch, paid Cohen $500,000 for advice on “potential sources of capital and potential investments.”⁷

- South Korean company Korea Aerospace Industries paid Cohen $150,000 for “legal consulting concerning accounting standards on production costs” related to part of a multi-billion dollar Pentagon contract the company was bidding on.⁸

Despite collecting a handsome windfall, Cohen apparently performed little to no work. According to the SDNY prosecutors, “while Cohen made millions of dollars for these consulting arrangements, his promises of insight and access proved essentially hollow.”⁹ Instead, it appears that Cohen leveraged his association with President Trump to attract and retain major corporate clients, produced no tangible results, and still walked away with millions of dollars.

Regardless of whether Cohen charged clients with no intention of doing the work, or whether he attempted but failed to deliver what he promised, he reportedly did not register his lobbying activities with the federal government. The Wall Street Journal reported that Cohen failed to register as a domestic lobbyist as required under the Lobbying Disclosure Act (LDA).¹⁰ Violators of the LDA can be fined up to $200,000 per violation or face up to five years in prison.¹¹ Similar registration requirements in the Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA) apply to an individual lobbying on behalf of a foreign principal if the activity is meant to influence the U.S. government (or any portion of the U.S. public) regarding U.S. policy toward a foreign place.¹² Violators of FARA can face criminal fines or up to five years in prison.¹³

Due to Cohen’s reported agreements with both domestic companies and foreign entities, our Members have questions about whether Cohen was required to register his lobbying activities with the federal government pursuant to either the LDA or FARA. Accordingly, we request that you provide the following documents and information on Cohen’s behalf:

1. All documents and communications related to Michael Cohen’s lobbying and/or consulting agreements, including agreements executed as or on behalf of Essential Consultants LLC;

Dear Mr. Chairman:

We renew our request that you call Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein to publicly testify before our Committee, and recommend he appears alongside Michael Cohen on Wednesday, February 27, 2019. Cohen has pleaded guilty to crimes of deception and lies, including lying to Congress.¹ In Cohen's sentencing proceeding, two Justice Department components—the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York and the Special Counsel's Office—provided information about the Department's views of Cohen's crimes and conduct. As the Deputy Attorney General, with direct supervision of these entities, only Rosenstein can speak to the views of both Department components.

Rosenstein's appearance would also allow the Committee to continue its ongoing oversight of the Department of Justice. During our joint investigation with the House Judiciary Committee, former FBI general counsel James Baker testified that between May 9 and May 17, 2017, Rosenstein organized a series of meetings with Department officials, including former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, to strategize methods to get back at the President for firing FBI Director James Comey.² Rosenstein and others contemplated a range of ideas, from Rosenstein wearing a wire to secretly record the President to Rosenstein recruiting cabinet

That's to the best of my recollection. Mr. Jordan: Okay. And is it your understanding that there were multiple meetings that Mr. McCabe, Ms. Page, Mr. Rosenstein had about the potential of recording the President? Mr. Baker: I don't know. I know that they had multiple meetings with the Deputy Attorney General discussing a lot of things in the immediate aftermath of the firing, and I don't specifically remember how many times this was discussed. Mr. Jordan: So, just to be clear, the firing of Mr. Comey took place on May 9th, and then the hiring of the special counsel took place on May 17th. If you intend to proceed with Michael Cohen as the star witness of the Committee's first big hearing, Members should have an opportunity to assess his credibility. We have asked several times that you request information and documents from the Justice Department about Cohen and his crimes. You have refused to do so. The next best alternative, if the Committee is to have a fair and thorough hearing, is to have a Justice Department witness to speak to these matters. By virtue of his position, Rosenstein is the appropriate witness for this task. We therefore strongly urge you to invite Rosenstein to the Committee's hearing on February 27, 2019. We appreciate your consideration of this request and look forward to hearing from you.

The Honorable William Barr
Attorney General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, D.C. 20530

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

We write to refer significant evidence that Michael D. Cohen committed perjury and knowingly made false statements during his testimony before an Oversight and Reform Committee (Committee) hearing titled, "Hearing with Michael Cohen, Former attorney for President Donald Trump" on February 27, 2019.

While testifying under oath, Mr. Cohen made what appear to be numerous willfully and intentionally false statements of material fact contradicted by the record established by the Justice Department in United States v. Cohen, 18-cr-602 (S.D.N.Y.) (WHP). Mr. Cohen's testimony before the Committee at times was in direct contradiction to assertions contained in pleadings authored by the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York (SDNY). There are other instances in which Mr. Cohen's statements to the Committee were immediately contradicted by witnesses with firsthand knowledge of the subject matter.

Under 18 U.S.C. § 1621, a witness commits perjury if the witness "willfully" asserts "any material matter which he does not believe to be true" after "having taken an oath" to "testify . . . truly." Under 18 U.S.C. § 1001, a witness commits a crime if the witness "knowingly and willfully" makes "any material false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or representation" with respect to "any investigation under review, conducted pursuant to the authority of any committee . . . of the Congress." Congress cannot perform its oversight function if witnesses who appear before its committees do not provide truthful testimony. Perjury and false statements before Congress are crimes that undermine the integrity of the Constitutional duty to conduct oversight and inquiries.

The points below support an investigation into whether Mr. Cohen committed perjury or made false statements at the Committee's hearing:

1. Several times during his testimony, Mr. Cohen denied committing various fraudulent acts that he has pleaded guilty to in federal court. Specifically, Mr. Cohen said "I never defrauded any bank.”¹ These denials are intentionally false. Mr. Cohen pleaded guilty to five counts of income tax evasion, one count of making false statements to a banking institution, one count of causing an unlawful corporate contribution, one count of excessive campaign contribution, and one count of making false statements to Congress. In Mr. Cohen’s plea agreement with the United States Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York, prosecutors specifically referred to Mr. Cohen’s crimes of making false statements to financial institutions as “bank fraud.”² This point—Mr. Cohen’s culpability for bank fraud—materially affects the Committee’s assessment of his credibility.

2. Mr. Cohen repeatedly testified that he did not seek employment in the White House following President Trump’s election. This is demonstrably, materially, and intentionally false. This testimony is in direct conflict with court filings made by the United States Attorney’s Office for the SDNY, which state:

During and after the campaign, Cohen privately told friends and colleagues, including in seized text messages, that he expected to be given a prominent role and title in the new administration. When that did not materialize, Cohen found a way to monetize his relationship with and access to the President.³

When confronted at the hearing with the SDNY statement, Mr. Cohen testified that the above statement made by the United States Attorneys in the SDNY was “not accurate.” He testified:

MR. JORDAN: You wanted to work in the White House.

MR. COHEN: No, sir.

MR. ROY: You said clearly to Mr. Cloud and Mr. Jordan that the Southern District of New York lawyers were being untruthful in characterizing your desire to work in the administration. Do you say again that the lawyers of the Southern District of New York are being untruthful in making that characterization, yes or no?

MR. COHEN: I'm saying that's not accurate.⁴

Shortly after Mr. Cohen's public statements, at 11:13 a.m., former New York City Police detective Bo Dietl tweeted, "Getting sick watching these hearings. I know Michael Cohen personally for many years and he told me several times that he was very angry and upset that he didn't get a post in the WH and that he 'would do what he has to do now to protect his family.'"⁵ At 3:44 p.m., Dr. Darrell Scott, Pastor, New Spirit Revival Center, and a Trump campaign faith-based outreach coordinator tweeted, "Michael Cohen asked ...no, BEGGED me REPEATEDLY, to ask the POTUS to give him a job in the Administration! He's STILL lying under oath!"⁶

Mr. Cohen's testimony is material to the Committee's assessment of Mr. Cohen's motive to monetize his former association with President Trump. It is essential that the Department of Justice investigate these remarkable contradictions between Mr. Cohen, the SDNY prosecutors, and the public accounts of witnesses with firsthand information. In addition, based on the SDNY's reference to having "seized text messages" proving Mr. Cohen's desire for a position in the Trump Administration, it appears that the SDNY may already be in possession of evidence bearing on Mr. Cohen's culpability.

3. Mr. Cohen testified he did not direct the commission of the Twitter account @WomenForCohen. Specifically, Mr. Cohen testified "I didn't actually set that up" and "it was done by a young lady that worked for [the IT firm] RedFinch."⁷ Mr. Cohen's statement in this respect may also be false. The owner of RedFinch, John Gauger, reportedly told The Wall Street Journal that RedFinch established the @WomenForCohen account at Mr. Cohen's direction. According to the Journal, "Mr. Cohen . . . asked Mr. Gauger to create the @WomenForCohen account, still active in 2019, to elevate his profile."⁸ Mr. Cohen's testimony here is material to the Committee's assessment of Mr. Cohen's character and credibility.
4. Mr. Cohen attested in his signed Truth in Testimony form, submitted as Attachment A to this letter, that he did not have any reportable contracts with foreign government entities.

We believe this to be false. Mr. Cohen testified during the hearing that he had entered into contractual agreements during 2017 with at least two foreign entities owned in part by foreign governments – BTA Bank of Kazakhstan and Korea Aerospace Industries of South Korea.⁹ Mr. Cohen’s testimony here is material to the Committee’s assessment of Mr. Cohen’s character and credibility.

During the hearing, Representative Meadows referred Mr. Cohen to the Justice Department for investigation into whether any of Mr. Cohen’s lobbying or consulting activities were done in violation of the Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA). At a minimum Mr. Cohen committed fraud against the companies he agreed to represent by accepting their payment and not performing his contractual obligations. We request the Department investigate Mr. Cohen’s potentially false statement on his Truth in Testimony form, the fraud carried out against the companies he agreed to represent, and his potential violation of FARA.

5. Mr. Cohen’s verbal testimony contradicted various aspects of his written statement submitted in advance of his appearance and appended as Attachment B to this letter. These contradictions between Mr. Cohen’s verbal testimony and his written statement materially affect the Committee’s assessment of Mr. Cohen’s credibility.
 - A. For instance, Mr. Cohen verbally testified that he was a good lawyer who understood the need to present his client with sound legal advice.¹⁰ Mr. Cohen contradicted his verbal testimony in his written statement by testifying that he made a payment to Stephanie Clifford “without bothering to consider whether that was improper, much less whether it was the right thing to do....”¹¹
 - B. Mr. Cohen also contradicted his written statement by verbally testifying that the President directed him and Trump Organization Chief Financial Officer Allen Weisselberg to “go back to his office and figure out how to [make the $130,000 payment to Ms. Clifford.]”¹² In his written statement, however, Mr. Cohen testified that “Mr. Trump directed me to use my own personal funds from a [HELOC] to avoid any money being traced back to him that could negatively impact his campaign.”¹³

6. Mr. Cohen continued to assert that he committed his crimes out of “blind loyalty” to President Trump. In Mr. Cohen’s closing remarks, he testified: “My loyalty to Mr. Trump has cost me everything – my family’s happiness, friendships, my law license, my company, my livelihood, my honor, my reputation, and soon my freedom.”¹⁴ This too is a false statement. The SDNY prosecutors¹⁵, and Judge Pauley¹⁶, specifically found that Mr. Cohen’s conduct was not the result of “blind loyalty” but of Mr. Cohen’s personal greed and ambition. Mr. Cohen’s attribution of the motivation for his crimes materially affects the Committee’s assessment of his character and credibility.

In sum, Mr. Cohen’s testimony before the Committee on Oversight and Reform on February 27, 2019, was a spectacular and brazen attempt to knowingly and willfully testify falsely and fictitiously to numerous material facts. His testimony included intentionally false statements designed to make himself look better on a national stage. Mr. Cohen’s prior conviction for lying to Congress merits a heightened suspicion that he has yet again testified falsely before Congress. We therefore request that the Department investigate whether any of Mr. Cohen’s testimony warrants another charge for the violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1001 or 1621.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

TESTIMONY OF MICHAEL D. COHEN
COMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND REFORM
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 27, 2019

Chairman Cummings, Ranking Member Jordan, and Members of the Committee, thank you for inviting me here today.

I have asked this Committee to ensure that my family be protected from Presidential threats, and that the Committee be sensitive to the questions pertaining to ongoing investigations. Thank you for your help and for your understanding.

I am here under oath to correct the record, to answer the Committee's questions truthfully, and to offer the American people what I know about President Trump.

I recognize that some of you may doubt and attack me on my credibility. It is for this reason that I have incorporated into this opening statement documents that are irrefutable, and demonstrate that the information you will hear is accurate and truthful.

Never in a million years did I imagine, when I accepted a job in 2007 to work for Donald Trump, that he would one day run for President, launch a campaign on a platform of hate and intolerance, and actually win. I regret the day I said “yes” to Mr. Trump. I regret all the help and support I gave him along the way.

I am ashamed of my own failings, and I publicly accepted responsibility for them by pleading guilty in the Southern District of New York.

I am ashamed of my weakness and misplaced loyalty – of the things I did for Mr. Trump in an effort to protect and promote him.

I am ashamed that I chose to take part in concealing Mr. Trump’s illicit acts rather than listening to my own conscience.

I am ashamed because I know what Mr. Trump is.

He is a racist.

He is a conman.

He is a cheat.

He was a presidential candidate who knew that Roger Stone was talking with Julian Assange about a WikiLeaks drop of Democratic National Committee emails.

I will explain each in a few moments.

I am providing the Committee today with several documents. These include:

- A copy of a check Mr. Trump wrote from his personal bank account – after he became president - to reimburse me for the hush money payments I made to cover up his affair with an adult film star and prevent damage to his campaign;
- Copies of financial statements for 2011 – 2013 that he gave to such institutions as Deutsche Bank;
- A copy of an article with Mr. Trump’s handwriting on it that reported on the auction of a portrait of himself – he arranged for the bidder ahead of time and then reimbursed the bidder from the account of his non-profit charitable foundation, with the picture now hanging in one of his country clubs; and
- Copies of letters I wrote at Mr. Trump’s direction that threatened his high school, colleges, and the College Board not to release his grades or SAT scores.

I hope my appearance here today, my guilty plea, and my work with law enforcement agencies are steps along a path of redemption that will restore faith in me and help this country understand our president better.

Before going further, I want to apologize to each of you and to Congress as a whole.

The last time I appeared before Congress, I came to protect Mr. Trump. Today, I'm here to tell the truth about Mr. Trump.

I lied to Congress about when Mr. Trump stopped negotiating the Moscow Tower project in Russia. I stated that we stopped negotiating in January 2016. That was false – our negotiations continued for months later during the campaign.

Mr. Trump did not directly tell me to lie to Congress. That's not how he operates.

In conversations we had during the campaign, at the same time I was actively negotiating in Russia for him, he would look me in the eye and tell me there's no business in Russia and then go out and lie to the American people by saying the same thing. In his way, he was telling me to lie.

There were at least a half-dozen times between the Iowa Caucus in January 2016 and the end of June when he would ask me "How's it going in Russia?" – referring to the Moscow Tower project.

You need to know that Mr. Trump's personal lawyers reviewed and edited my statement to Congress about the timing of the Moscow Tower negotiations before I gave it.

To be clear: Mr. Trump knew of and directed the Trump Moscow negotiations throughout the campaign and lied about it. He lied about it because he never expected to win the election. He also lied about it because he stood to make hundreds of millions of dollars on the Moscow real estate project.

And so I lied about it, too – because Mr. Trump had made clear to me, through his personal statements to me that we both knew were false and through his lies to the country, that he wanted me to lie. And he made it clear to me because his personal attorneys reviewed my statement before I gave it to Congress.

Over the past two years, I have been smeared as “a rat” by the President of the United States. The truth is much different, and let me take a brief moment to introduce myself.

My name is Michael Dean Cohen.

I am a blessed husband of 24 years and a father to an incredible daughter and son. When I married my wife, I promised her that I would love her, cherish her, and protect her. As my father said countless times throughout my childhood, “you my wife, and you my children, are the air that I breathe.” To my Laura, my Sami, and my Jake, there is nothing I wouldn’t do to protect you.

I have always tried to live a life of loyalty, friendship, generosity, and compassion – qualities my parents ingrained in my siblings and me since childhood. My father survived the Holocaust thanks to the compassion and selfless acts of others. He was helped by many who put themselves in harm’s way to do what they knew was right.

That is why my first instinct has always been to help those in need. Mom and Dad...I am sorry that I let you down.

As many people that know me best would say, I am the person they would call at 3AM if they needed help. I proudly remember being the emergency contact for many of my children's friends when they were growing up because their parents knew that I would drop everything and care for them as if they were my own.

Yet, last fall I pled guilty in federal court to felonies for the benefit of, at the direction of, and in coordination with Individual #1.

For the record: Individual #1 is President Donald J. Trump.

It is painful to admit that I was motivated by ambition at times. It is even more painful to admit that many times I ignored my conscience and acted loyal to a man when I should not have. Sitting here today, it seems unbelievable that I was so mesmerized by Donald Trump that I was willing to do things for him that I knew were absolutely wrong.

For that reason, I have come here to apologize to my family, to the government, and to the American people.

Accordingly, let me now tell you about Mr. Trump.

I got to know him very well, working very closely with him for more than 10 years, as his Executive Vice President and Special Counsel and then personal attorney when he became President. When I first met Mr. Trump, he was a successful entrepreneur, a real estate giant, and an icon. Being around Mr. Trump was intoxicating. When you were in his presence, you felt like you were involved in something greater than yourself -- that you were somehow changing the world.

I wound up touting the Trump narrative for over a decade. That was my job. Always stay on message. Always defend. It monopolized my life. At first, I worked mostly on real estate developments and other business transactions. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Trump brought me into his personal life and private dealings. Over time, I saw his true character revealed.

Mr. Trump is an enigma. He is complicated, as am I. He has both good and bad, as do we all. But the bad far outweighs the good, and since taking office, he has become the worst version of himself. He is capable of behaving kindly, but he is not kind. He is capable of committing acts of generosity, but he is not generous. He is capable of being loyal, but he is fundamentally disloyal.

Donald Trump is a man who ran for office to make his brand great, not to make our country great. He had no desire or intention to lead this nation – only to market himself and to build his wealth and power. Mr. Trump would often say, this campaign was going to be the “greatest infomercial in political history.”

He never expected to win the primary. He never expected to win the general election. The campaign – for him – was always a marketing opportunity.

I knew early on in my work for Mr. Trump that he would direct me to lie to further his business interests. I am ashamed to say, that when it was for a real estate mogul in the private sector, I considered it trivial. As the President, I consider it significant and dangerous.

But in the mix, lying for Mr. Trump was normalized, and no one around him questioned it. In fairness, no one around him today questions it, either.

A lot of people have asked me about whether Mr. Trump knew about the release of the hacked Democratic National Committee emails ahead of time. The answer is yes.

As I earlier stated, Mr. Trump knew from Roger Stone in advance about the WikiLeaks drop of emails.

In July 2016, days before the Democratic convention, I was in Mr. Trump's office when his secretary announced that Roger Stone was on the phone. Mr. Trump put Mr. Stone on the speakerphone. Mr. Stone told Mr. Trump that he had just gotten off the phone with Julian Assange and that Mr. Assange told Mr. Stone that, within a couple of days, there would be a massive dump of emails that would damage Hillary Clinton's campaign. Mr. Trump responded by stating to the effect of "wouldn't that be great."

Mr. Trump is a racist. The country has seen Mr. Trump court white supremacists and bigots. You have heard him call poorer countries "shitholes."

In private, he is even worse.

He once asked me if I could name a country run by a black person that wasn't a "shithole." This was when Barack Obama was President of the United States.

While we were once driving through a struggling neighborhood in Chicago, he commented that only black people could live that way.

And, he told me that black people would never vote for him because they were too stupid.

And yet I continued to work for him.

Mr. Trump is a cheat.

As previously stated, I'm giving the Committee today three years of President Trump's financial statements, from 2011-2013, which he gave to Deutsche Bank to inquire about a loan to buy the Buffalo Bills and to Forbes. These are Exhibits 1a, 1b, and 1c to my testimony.

It was my experience that Mr. Trump inflated his total assets when it served his purposes, such as trying to be listed among the wealthiest people in Forbes, and deflated his assets to reduce his real estate taxes.

I am sharing with you two newspaper articles, side by side, that are examples of Mr. Trump inflating and deflating his assets, as I said, to suit his financial interests. These are Exhibit 2 to my testimony.

As I noted, I'm giving the Committee today an article he wrote on, and sent me, that reported on an auction of a portrait of Mr. Trump. This is Exhibit 3A to my testimony.

Mr. Trump directed me to find a straw bidder to purchase a portrait of him that was being auctioned at an Art Hamptons Event. The objective was to ensure that his portrait, which was going to be auctioned last, would go for the highest price of any portrait that afternoon. The portrait was purchased by the fake bidder for $60,000. Mr. Trump directed the Trump Foundation, which is supposed to be a charitable organization, to repay the fake bidder, despite keeping the art for himself. Please see Exhibit 3B to my testimony.

And it should come as no surprise that one of my more common responsibilities was that Mr. Trump directed me to call business owners, many of whom were small businesses, that were owed money for their services and told them no payment or a reduced payment would be coming. When I advised Mr. Trump of my success, he actually reveled in it.

And yet, I continued to work for him.

Mr. Trump is a conman.

He asked me to pay off an adult film star with whom he had an affair, and to lie to his wife about it, which I did. Lying to the First Lady is one of my biggest regrets. She is a kind, good person. I respect her greatly – and she did not deserve that.

I am giving the Committee today a copy of the $130,000 wire transfer from me to Ms. Clifford's attorney during the closing days of the presidential campaign that was demanded by Ms. Clifford to maintain her silence about her affair with Mr. Trump. This is Exhibit 4 to my testimony.

Mr. Trump directed me to use my own personal funds from a Home Equity Line of Credit to avoid any money being traced back to him that could negatively impact his campaign. I did that, too – without bothering to consider whether that was improper, much less whether it was the right thing to do or how it would impact me, my family, or the public.

I am going to jail in part because of my decision to help Mr. Trump hide that payment from the American people before they voted a few days later.

As Exhibit 5A to my testimony shows, I am providing a copy of a $35,000 check that President Trump personally signed from his personal bank account on August 1, 2017 – when he was President of the United States – pursuant to the cover-up, which was the basis of my guilty plea, to reimburse me – the word used by Mr. Trump’s TV lawyer -- for the illegal hush money I paid on his behalf. This $35,000 check was one of 11 check installments that was paid throughout the year – while he was President. Other checks to reimburse me for the hush money payments were signed by Don Jr. and Allen Weisselberg. See, for example, Exhibit 5B.

The President of the United States thus wrote a personal check for the payment of hush money as part of a criminal scheme to violate campaign finance laws. You can find the details of that scheme, directed by Mr. Trump, in the pleadings in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

So picture this scene – in February 2017, one month into his presidency, I’m visiting President Trump in the Oval Office for the first time. It’s truly awe-inspiring, he’s showing me around and pointing to different paintings, and he says to me something to the effect of...Don’t worry, Michael, your January and February reimbursement checks are coming. They were Fed-Exed from New York and it takes a while for that to get through the White House system. As he promised, I received the first check for the reimbursement of $70,000 not long thereafter.

When I say conman, I'm talking about a man who declares himself brilliant but directed me to threaten his high school, his colleges, and the College Board to never release his grades or SAT scores.

As I mentioned, I'm giving the Committee today copies of a letter I sent at Mr. Trump's direction threatening these schools with civil and criminal actions if Mr. Trump's grades or SAT scores were ever disclosed without his permission. These are Exhibit 6.

The irony wasn't lost on me at the time that Mr. Trump in 2011 had strongly criticized President Obama for not releasing his grades. As you can see in Exhibit 7, Mr. Trump declared "Let him show his records" after calling President Obama "a terrible student."

The sad fact is that I never heard Mr. Trump say anything in private that led me to believe he loved our nation or wanted to make it better. In fact, he did the opposite.

When telling me in 2008 that he was cutting employees' salaries in half – including mine – he showed me what he claimed was a $10 million IRS tax refund, and he said that he could not believe how stupid the government was for giving “someone like him” that much money back.

During the campaign, Mr. Trump said he did not consider Vietnam Veteran, and Prisoner of War, Senator John McCain to be “a hero” because he likes people who weren’t captured. At the same time, Mr. Trump tasked me to handle the negative press surrounding his medical deferment from the Vietnam draft.

Mr. Trump claimed it was because of a bone spur, but when I asked for medical records, he gave me none and said there was no surgery. He told me not to answer the specific questions by reporters but rather offer simply the fact that he received a medical deferment.

He finished the conversation with the following comment. “You think I’m stupid, I wasn’t going to Vietnam.”

I find it ironic, President Trump, that you are in Vietnam right now.

And yet, I continued to work for him.

Questions have been raised about whether I know of direct evidence that Mr. Trump or his campaign colluded with Russia. I do not. I want to be clear. But, I have my suspicions.

Sometime in the summer of 2017, I read all over the media that there had been a meeting in Trump Tower in June 2016 involving Don Jr. and others from the campaign with Russians, including a representative of the Russian government, and an email setting up the meeting with the subject line, “Dirt on Hillary Clinton.” Something clicked in my mind. I remember being in the room with Mr. Trump, probably in early June 2016, when something peculiar happened. Don Jr. came into the room and walked behind his father’s desk – which in itself was unusual. People didn’t just walk behind Mr. Trump’s desk to talk to him. I recalled Don Jr. leaning over to his father and speaking in a low voice, which I could clearly hear, and saying: “The meeting is all set.” I remember Mr. Trump saying, “Ok good...let me know.”

What struck me as I looked back and thought about that exchange between Don Jr. and his father was, first, that Mr. Trump had frequently told me and others that his son Don Jr. had the worst judgment of anyone in the world. And also, that Don Jr. would never set up any meeting of any significance alone – and certainly not without checking with his father.

I also knew that nothing went on in Trump world, especially the campaign, without Mr. Trump's knowledge and approval. So, I concluded that Don Jr. was referring to that June 2016 Trump Tower meeting about dirt on Hillary with the Russian representative when he walked behind his dad's desk that day -- and that Mr. Trump knew that was the meeting Don Jr. was talking about when he said, "That's good...let me know."

Over the past year or so, I have done some real soul searching. I see now that my ambition and the intoxication of Trump power had much to do with the bad decisions I made.

To you, Chairman Cummings, Ranking Member Jordan, the other members of this Committee, and the other members of the House and Senate, I am sorry for my lies and for lying to Congress.

To our nation, I am sorry for actively working to hide from you the truth about Mr. Trump when you needed it most.

For those who question my motives for being here today, I understand. I have lied, but I am not a liar. I have done bad things, but I am not a bad man. I have fixed things, but I am no longer your "fixer," Mr. Trump.

I am going to prison and have shattered the safety and security that I tried so hard to provide for my family. My testimony certainly does not diminish the pain I caused my family and friends – nothing can do that. And I have never asked for, nor would I accept, a pardon from President Trump.

And, by coming today, I have caused my family to be the target of personal, scurrilous attacks by the President and his lawyer – trying to intimidate me from appearing before this panel. Mr. Trump called me a “rat” for choosing to tell the truth – much like a mobster would do when one of his men decides to cooperate with the government.

As Exhibit 8 shows, I have provided the Committee with copies of Tweets that Mr. Trump posted, attacking me and my family – only someone burying his head in the sand would not recognize them for what they are: encouragement to someone to do harm to me and my family.

I never imagined that he would engage in vicious, false attacks on my family – and unleash his TV-lawyer to do the same. I hope this committee and all members of Congress on both sides of the aisle will make it clear: As a nation, we should not tolerate attempts to intimidate witnesses before congress and attacks on family are out of bounds and not acceptable.

I wish to especially thank Speaker Pelosi for her statements in Exhibit 9 to protect this institution and me, and the Chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence Adam Schiff and Chairman Cummings for likewise defending this institution and my family against the attacks by Mr. Trump, and also the many Republicans who have admonished the President as well.

I am not a perfect man. I have done things I am not proud of, and I will live with the consequences of my actions for the rest of my life.

But today, I get to decide the example I set for my children and how I attempt to change how history will remember me. I may not be able to change the past, but I can do right by the American people here today.

Thank you for your attention. I am happy to answer the Committee's questions.

Mr. Michael D. Monico
Monico & Spevack
20 S. Clark Street
Suite 700
Chicago, IL 60603

Dear Mr. Monico:

We write concerning contradictions between the testimony of your client, Michael D. Cohen, before the House Oversight and Reform Committee and media statements made by Chairman Adam Schiff of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence (HPSCI). When Cohen's media advisor and attorney, Lanny J. Davis, initially met with our staff on behalf of Cohen on January 18, 2019, he indicated Cohen would only be testifying before our Committee.¹ This representation, of course, did not prove to be accurate. In addition to our Committee, Cohen testified before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and HPSCI.

Michael Cohen and Chairman Schiff seem to have provided conflicting versions of discussions they had in advance of Cohen's congressional testimony. During his testimony before our Committee, Cohen discussed how he prepared for his testimony, including talking with Members of Congress. Cohen testified he spoke to Chairman Schiff about "topics" for Cohen's upcoming testimony before HPSCI:

Mr. Jordan. Let me ask you one question... What did you talk to Mr. Schiff about?

Mr. Cohen. I spoke to Mr. Schiff about topics that were going to be raised at the upcoming hearing.²

However, in a subsequent interview on CBS News' Face The Nation, Chairman Schiff downplayed and contradicted Michael Cohen's testimony about the nature of their discussions, saying the conversations were limited to Cohen's security at the HPSCI hearing. Chairman Schiff explained:

¹ See Letter from Jim Jordan and Mark Meadows, H. Comm. on Oversight & Reform, to Guy Petrillo (Jan. 22, 2019).

² Hearing with Michael Cohen, Former Attorney for President Donald Trump: Hearing Before the H. Comm. on Oversight & Reform, 116th Cong. 121 (2019) (statement of Michael D. Cohen).

Mr. Michael D. Monico
March 8, 2019
Page 2

Margaret Brennan: Was that the extent of your contact [with Michael Cohen]?

Rep. Schiff: The extent of my contact was just inviting him to testify and also trying to allay his concerns about the President's threats against him and his family...³

These conflicting statements cannot both be true – either they discussed hearing “topics” or they did not. If Chairman Schiff’s communications with Cohen were, in fact, as limited as Chairman Schiff stated on Face the Nation, then we are faced with the potential that Cohen made another false statement during his testimony before the Committee.⁴

To assist us in evaluating the accuracy and truthfulness of Cohen’s testimony about his discussions with Chairman Schiff in advance of his testimony, please provide:

1. A complete description and account of all communications between Cohen and Chairman Schiff, including dates, times, and “topics” discussed; and
2. A complete description and account of all communications you, or other associates representing Cohen, including Lanny J. Davis, Guy Petrillo, or others, have had with Chairman Schiff or HPSCI regarding Michael Cohen’s testimony prior to his appearances before HPSCI on February 28, 2019, and March 6, 2019.

Please provide this information as soon as possible, but no later than 5:00 p.m. on March 22, 2019. If you have any questions, please contact Committee staff at (202) 225-5074. Thank you for your attention to this matter.

The Honorable Elijah E. Cummings
Chairman
Committee on Oversight and Reform

Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter follows up on your commitment to ensure Michael Cohen testified truthfully at the Committee's hearing titled, "Hearing with Michael Cohen, Former Attorney for President Donald Trump," on February 27, 2019.¹ As Chairman, it is your obligation to ensure that witnesses are not permitted to lie with impunity when testifying before the Committee.

During the hearing, following Cohen's oath to testify truthfully, you explained to the Committee that you privately admonished Cohen about truthfulness. You warned him "if he [Cohen] came in here and lied I would nail him to the cross."² You then confirmed this statement with Cohen himself, asking "Didn't I tell you that?"³ Cohen replied, "Yes, you did more than once."⁴ Mr. Chairman, there is now clear and indisputable evidence that Cohen did not testify truthfully before the Committee. We expect you will now follow through with your commitment to hold Cohen accountable.

Following the hearing, we wrote to Attorney General William Barr referring Cohen for a perjury investigation regarding six areas of problematic testimony, including Cohen's testimony that he did not want a role in the Trump Administration.⁵ In light of mounting evidence, it appears Cohen likely lied under oath during his appearance before the Committee. Even the Committee's Vice Chair, Rep. Katie Hill, said on Sunday that she expects that you will refer Cohen to the Justice Department for perjury.⁶ We write to ask that you join our referral and

Cohen lied about his desire to work in the Trump Administration

Prior to the hearing, we asked that you request information from the DOJ necessary to question Cohen. You declined to do so, leaving Members to rely on publicly available information. We reviewed court filings by the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York (SDNY), which discussed Cohen's desire and expectation of receiving a role in the Trump Administration. The SDNY prosecutors explained:

During and after the campaign, Cohen privately told friends and colleagues, including in seized text messages, that he expected to be given a prominent role and title in the new administration. When that did not materialize, Cohen found a way to monetize his relationship with and access to the President.⁷

During the hearing, Republican Members pressed Cohen on the SDNY prosecutors' statements. On the record, following his oath, Cohen repeatedly testified that he did not seek employment in the White House following President Trump's election. Cohen also testified that the statement submitted by the SDNY prosecutors to the court was "not accurate."⁸ Several Members followed up with Cohen on this account:

MR. CLOUD: In today's testimony, you [Cohen] said that you were not looking to work in the White House. The Southern District of New York, in their statement, their sentencing memo, says this: ". . . Cohen privately told friends, colleagues, and including seized text messages, that he expected to be given a prominent role in the new administration." . . . So were they lying, or were you lying today?

MR. COHEN: I'm not saying it's a lie. I'm just saying it's not accurate. I did not want to go to the White House.⁹

Following the exchange between Mr. Cloud and Cohen, Mr. Jordan provided Cohen an opportunity to clarify his remarks. He did not.

MR. JORDAN: Earlier you said that the United States Southern District of New York Attorney's Office, that statement is not accurate. You said it's not a lie. You said it's not accurate. Do you stand by that?

MR. COHEN: Yes, I did not want a role in the new [Trump] Administration.

MR. JORDAN: So the court's wrong?

MR. COHEN: Sir, can I finish, please?

MR. JORDAN: Sure.

MR. COHEN: I got exactly the role that I wanted. There is no shame in being personal attorney to the President. I got exactly what I wanted. I asked Mr. Trump for that job, and he gave it to me.

MR. JORDAN: All I'm asking, if I could -- and I appreciate it, Mr. Chairman -- you're saying that statement from the Southern District of New York attorneys is wrong.

MR. COHEN: I'm saying I didn't write it, and it's not accurate.

MR. JORDAN: All right. Thank you.¹⁰

MR. ROY: You said clearly to Mr. Cloud and Mr. Jordan that the Southern District of New York lawyers were being untruthful in characterizing your desire to work in the administration. Do you say again that the lawyers of the Southern District of New York are being untruthful in making that characterization, yes or no?

MR. COHEN: I'm not using the word untruthful, that's yours. I'm saying that that's not accurate. I did not want a role or a title in the administration.¹²

As indicated by the SDNY prosecutors, text messages exist that prove Cohen sought out a job with the White House, directly contradicting Cohen's statements under oath before our Committee. To maintain the integrity of our investigations and hearings, we must obtain these messages and any other potential evidence to get the truth.

The SDNY prosecutors are not the only individuals who believe that Cohen sought out a job at the White House. Several people have spoken out publicly to refute Cohen's statements before this Committee.¹³ For example, Bo Dietl, a former New York City Police detective, tweeted during the Committee's hearing:

Getting sick watching these hearings. I know Michael Cohen personally for many years and he told me several times that he was very angry and upset that he didn't get a post in the WH and that he 'would do what he has to do now to protect his family.'¹⁴

Dr. Darrell Scott, Pastor at the New Spirit Revival Center and a Trump campaign faith-based outreach coordinator, also tweeted during the hearing: "Michael Cohen asked . . . no, BEGGED me REPEATEDLY, to ask the POTUS to give him a job in the Administration! He's STILL lying under oath!"¹⁵ Bruce LeVell, another person involved in the Trump campaign, replied to Dr. Scott's tweet, "I co-sign that Pastor. I remember that conversation[.]"¹⁶

David Bossie, Trump's deputy campaign manager in 2016, tweeted, "Michael Cohen asked me to support his effort to be Chief of Staff when I helped run the Presidential Transition Team. He perjured himself today."¹⁷

During the hearing, CNN journalist Dana Bash rebutted Cohen's testimony on live television. She stated, "the one potential problem that I thought Michael Cohen has is when he was asked if he wanted a job in the White House, and he said no. Our reporting [shows] . . . he very much wanted a job in the White House."¹⁸ Another CNN journalist, Nathan McDermott, tweeted, "Good point by @DanaBashCNN that when Cohen was asked in the hearings whether he wanted a job in the White House and he said 'no' he contradicted mountains of reporting that show he did, in fact, want one."¹⁹

Cohen lied about not seeking a pardon

Cohen made an additional false statement to this Committee when he testified under oath: "I have never asked for, nor would I accept, a pardon from President Trump."²⁰ Last week, however, Lanny Davis, Cohen's media advisor and lawyer, contradicted Cohen's testimony. Davis stated that Cohen had "directed his attorney to explore possibilities of a pardon at one point with Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani as well as other lawyers advising President Trump."²¹

On March 12, nearly two weeks after Cohen's testimony, his lawyer, Michael Monico, sent you a letter conceding that Cohen's statement about a pardon was not accurate and "could have been clearer" but stating that Cohen stood by his testimony.²² Monico asserted that Cohen wrote his statement about the pardon "in the context of [his] decision in June 2018 to leave the Trump Joint Defense Agreement"²³

This ex post assertion by Cohen's lawyers does not undo Cohen's intentionally false and misleading statement and is manifestly unpersuasive. Regardless of the context in which Cohen wrote this statement, Cohen uttered the statement under oath in the context of apologizing for all his criminal activities. Cohen's denial of ever seeking a pardon, which he made during his carefully crafted opening statement, contained no qualifiers about the context of his statement. It did not restrict his denial to the period after Cohen left the joint defense agreement. In fact, there is no mention whatsoever in Cohen's prepared testimony about the joint defense agreement. Simply put, Cohen's denial of ever seeking a pardon, as uttered under oath in his testimony, was absolute and unequivocal.

Although Cohen's attorneys now claim that Cohen did not mislead the Committee, it is clear—and Cohen's lawyers concede—that Cohen asked his legal representatives to seek a

This Committee cannot stand idly by when a witness comes to a hearing, swears an oath to testify truthfully, and provides material testimony that appears on its face to be demonstrably false. Accordingly, we urge you to request from both Michael Cohen and the Department of Justice all documents and communications relating to Cohen's desire or attempts to obtain a position in the Trump Administration, as well as Cohen's efforts to seek a pardon for his crimes. We also encourage you to uphold the prerogatives of the Committee by joining our referral to the Department of Justice.

The Honorable Elijah E. Cummings
Chairman
Committee on Oversight and Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

We received your letter, dated May 22, 2019, in which you excused and legitimized Michael Cohen's perjury-laden testimony to our Committee.¹ Cohen was the first announced witness of your chairmanship, who you invited to testify during a made-for-cable-news hearing to attack President Trump for political gain. While your defense of Cohen's testimony is perhaps unsurprising, it ignores information that does not support your analysis and fails to address the totality of lies that Cohen uttered under oath.

You waited to review Cohen's testimony before the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence (HPSCI) to determine whether he lied before our Committee. Now that HPSCI has released the testimony—following our request—we believe it does not change our earlier conclusions.² Indeed, the HPSCI testimony only reveals new information that is unhelpful and unflattering to you: that Cohen has no independent evidence to support his accusations, and that you engaged in ex parte preparation sessions with Cohen to help him to appear more credible before our Committee.

Today marks 100 days since Cohen's testimony. We are deeply disappointed that you have declined to hold Cohen accountable, despite your forceful promises to do so and contrary to Vice Chair Katie Hill's expectation that you would.³ We can only assume that you worry that acknowledging Cohen's lies would undermine the investigations on which they are based and ultimately undercut your partisan attacks upon the President. We hope that you will reconsider your decision, put the institutional interests of the Committee ahead of your political goals, and do what you promised to do.

Cohen's HPSCI testimony shows that he lied about never seeking a pardon

Your exoneration of Cohen narrowly focuses on only one of Cohen's lies: "I have never asked for, nor would I accept, a pardon from President Trump."⁴ However, a straightforward reading of the sources cited in your May 22 letter—Cohen's attorneys' statements; Cohen's February 28 and March 6 HPSCI testimony; and Special Counsel Robert Mueller III's report—actually contradict your conclusion. These sources provide ample support that Cohen directed his attorneys to seek a pardon from the President, contrary to his sworn statement.

In all three sources Cohen admitted that he spoke, or directed his attorneys to speak, with the President's representatives about a pardon. The Special Counsel's report notes that "Cohen . . . recalled speaking with the President's personal counsel about pardons after the searches of his home and office had occurred . . ."⁵ In his testimony before HPSCI on March 6, Cohen admitted that he directed his then-attorney to discuss a pardon with President Trump's representatives and that he would have accepted it if offered. He testified:

Mr. Cohen: I asked Mr. [Stephen] Ryan [Cohen's former lawyer] to meet with Rudy Giuliani, and I don't recall if Jay [Sekulow] was a party to that, but it was to explore the possibility of a pardon, because that possibility was constantly being dangled in my face. And, yes, I was 100 percent open to accepting it. Anything to end this.⁶

When asked specifically to reconcile his denial to our Committee about ever seeking a pardon with his testimony to HPSCI, his response was nonsense. He claimed that his written statement to our Committee, which he later uttered aloud publicly under oath—"I have never asked for . . . a pardon from President Trump"—was actually meant to be a statement in the present tense. He said:

Mr. Ratcliffe: Okay. Did you ever make public statements that you would never accept a pardon from President Trump?

Mr. Cohen: I did. Yes, I made that statement.

Mr. Ratcliffe: How do you reconcile that statement with the one you just made?

Mr. Cohen: Because I was talking about in the present tense, I wasn't talking about in the past tense when I was writing my statement.⁷

Following Cohen's March 6 HPSCI testimony, Cohen's lawyers began to spin his closed-door testimony about the pardon. On March 7, Cohen lawyer and media advisor Lanny Davis admitted that Cohen "directed his attorney to explore possibilities of a pardon at one point with Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani as well as other lawyers advising President Trump."⁸ On March 12, a second Cohen attorney, Michael Monico, acknowledged that Cohen "asked his then attorney to discuss with another Trump attorney possible pardon options"⁹ Cohen's attorneys still maintained, however, that Cohen did not lie.

Cohen's spin is unconvincing and we are troubled that you have parroted it so readily. Cohen's denial of ever seeking a pardon was unequivocal and unambiguous. It contained no temporal constraints and no qualifications. Cohen's explanation that he was speaking in the present tense is unpersuasive because he specifically included the word "never," which by definition means at no time and under no conditions.¹⁰ Cohen included "never" in his written statement, which he testified that he spent considerable time crafting, meaning that his blanket denial was deliberate and willful.¹¹ Cohen's denial is material in that it goes directly to Cohen's credibility as a witness.

No reasonable person could hear an unequivocal denial containing the word "never" and believe the speaker was referring only to his current actions and state of mind. We are troubled that you could accept this absurd explanation.

Your exoneration of Cohen failed to address his other lies to the Committee

During the Committee's hearing, you warned that "if [Cohen] comes here today and he does not tell him the truth – tell us the truth, I will be the first one to refer that – those untruthful statements to DOJ."¹² We have identified at least seven problematic areas of Cohen's testimony that require investigation for potential perjury.¹³ However, your letter of May 22 failed to address Cohen’s other false statements, including but not limited to the following:

- Cohen’s repeated denials of wanting a job in the White House, which is contrary to court documents submitted by the United States Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York;¹⁴
- Cohen’s assertion that he “never defrauded any bank,” despite pleading guilty to bank fraud;¹⁵ and
- Cohen’s denial of originating the twitter account, @WomenForCohen, which contrary to the assertion of the owner of an IT firm who recounted that Cohen directed him to create the account.¹⁶

Your refusal to address the entirety of Cohen’s false statements—and instead to focus only on the one statement that Cohen’s attorneys chose to address—speaks volumes. Clearly, you cannot defend all of Cohen’s reckless statements. Cohen has gone so far as to dispute assertions made by a federal judge in open court and to deny that he committed a crime to which he pled guilty.¹⁷ These false statements remain unaddressed and, left uncontested, they will continue to tarnish the Committee’s integrity and credibility.

Cohen’s HPSCI testimony shows that he cannot support his accusations with evidence

The transcripts of Cohen’s HPSCI testimony reveal he is incapable of supporting the accusations that he has levied against the President and the President’s advisors. In particular, Cohen could not provide any documentary evidence related to his accusations that Jay Sekulow helped Cohen craft his false statements to HPSCI in 2017.¹⁸ Cohen also admitted in his

Did you submit that because you believe it's in evidence of some crime by Mr. Trump? And if so, what crime would that be related to?

Mr. Cohen: Well, I did it, again, for informational purposes. Plus, could be issues regarding the foundation, improper usage of the foundation.

Mr. Ratcliffe: Okay. And, finally, the last item that you submitted were copies of letters that you wrote at Mr. Trump's direction that threatened his high school, colleges, and the College Board not to release his grades or SAT scores. Again, was that submitted because you believe it's evidence of some crime, or was it just for informational purposes?

Mr. Cohen: Informational.

Although Cohen admitted the documents he provided to the Committee were not evidence of a crime—but instead just meant to be “informational”—you still used them as the basis for your unprecedented and unilateral subpoena to Mazars USA LLP (Mazars) for President Trump’s sensitive, personal financial documents. In a memorandum justifying your subpoena to Mazars, you boldly alleged that “the President may have engaged in illegal conduct before and during his tenure in office”¹⁹—although Cohen very clearly said that the information he provided the Committee was not evidence of a crime.

Cohen’s HPSCI testimony shows that Cohen coordinated with Oversight Committee Democrats on his testimony

Finally, we learned through the release of these HPSCI transcripts that Cohen engaged in extensive and exclusive strategy sessions with Oversight Committee Democrats before his testimony to our Committee to preemptively address Cohen’s credibility problems.²⁰ This information just reinforces our longstanding concerns that Cohen’s testimony was not legitimate oversight but merely an episode of political theater proposed and produced by a prominent Democrat operative.

It is disappointing you shut out minority participation from your pre-hearing meetings with Cohen. This exclusion is especially disappointing in light of our letter, dated January 11, 2019, in which we urged you to conduct a bipartisan transcribed interview with Cohen before the hearing.²¹ Instead of choosing to hold a bipartisan interview with Cohen, you chose to meet alone with him to discuss how Republicans could question Cohen’s credibility. These actions are not indicative of the serious, fact-based oversight that you promised.

Your entire course of conduct with respect to Michael Cohen has been deeply troubling. You allowed a prominent Democrat operative to use the Committee for an orchestrated partisan attack on the President. You declined to follow up on your promises to hold Cohen accountable for his lies to the Committee. You declined to hold a Committee vote on Cohen’s lies. You deferred action on Cohen’s lies until you reviewed his HPSCI testimony, but you never requested access to HPSCI’s transcripts. You admitted to considering writing a letter of

We warned you about the dangers of showcasing the testimony of a convicted liar. Mr. Alvin L. Bragg, Jr.
District Attorney
New York County
One Hogan Place
New York, NY 10013

Dear Mr. Bragg:

You are reportedly about to engage in an unprecedented abuse of prosecutorial authority: the indictment of a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. This indictment comes after years of your office searching for a basis—any basis—on which to bring charges, ultimately settling on a novel legal theory untested anywhere in the country and one that federal authorities declined to pursue. If these reports are accurate, your actions will erode confidence in the evenhanded application of justice and unalterably interfere in the course of the 2024 presidential election. In light of the serious consequences of your actions, we expect that you will testify about what plainly appears to be a politically motivated prosecutorial decision.

The New York County District Attorney's Office has been investigating President Trump since at least 2018, looking for some legal theory on which to bring charges.¹ The facts surrounding the impending indictment have “been known for years.”² Michael Cohen, President Trump's disgraced former lawyer, pleaded guilty over four years ago to charges based on the same facts at issue in the impending indictment.³ By July 2019, however, federal prosecutors determined that no additional people would be charged alongside Cohen.⁴ Now, in the words of one legal scholar, you are attempting to “shoehorn[]” the same case with identical facts into a new prosecution, resurrecting a so-called “zombie” case against President Trump.⁵ Even the Washington Post quoted “legal experts” as calling your actions “unusual” because “prosecutors have repeatedly examined the long-established details but decided not to pursue charges.”⁶

The legal theory underlying your reported prosecution appears to be tenuous and untested.⁷ Bringing charges for falsifying business records is ordinarily a misdemeanor subject to a two-year statute of limitations,⁸ which would have expired long ago. State law, however, allows a district attorney to “elevate nominal misdemeanor conduct” to a felony charge if the “intent to defraud includes an intent to commit another crime or to aid or conceal the commission thereof.”⁹ Such a showing would extend the statute of limitations to five years¹⁰—which would likely expire soon and thus explains your rush to indictment. The only potential speculated crime that could be alleged here would be a violation of campaign finance law, according to one scholar, a charge that the Justice Department has already declined to bring.¹¹

In addition to the novel and untested legal theory, your star witness for this prosecution has a serious credibility problem—a problem that you have reportedly recognized.¹² This case relies heavily on the testimony of Michael Cohen, a convicted perjurer with a demonstrable prejudice against President Trump.¹³ Cohen pleaded guilty to lying to Congress in 2018.¹⁴ In 2019, when he testified before Democrats on the House Oversight Committee to aid their fruitless investigation into President Trump, Cohen lied again—six times.¹⁵ Cohen has been vocal about his deeply personal animus toward President Trump.¹⁶ Under these circumstances, there is no scenario in which Cohen could fairly be considered an unbiased and credible witness.

The inference from the totality of these facts is that your impending indictment is motivated by political calculations. In January 2022, soon after you took office, you expressed doubts about President Trump’s case and suspended the investigation.¹⁷ This decision caused two of your top investigators, Carey Dunne and Mark Pomerantz, to resign in protest and publicly denounce your work.¹⁸ Pomerantz, in particular, heavily criticized you for declining to bring charges at that time,¹⁹ and “Dunne and others” are now “weighing ways” to bar President Trump from holding future office.²⁰ Pomerantz has published a book in the past month

excoriating you for not aggressively prosecuting President Trump.²¹ The Washington Post reported that you were “deeply stung” by this criticism.²²

The facts of this matter have not changed since 2018 and no new witnesses have emerged.²³ The Justice Department examined the facts in 2019 and opted not to pursue further prosecutions at that time. Even still, according to reporting, the investigation “gained some momentum this year,” and your office “convened a new grand jury in January to evaluate the issue.”²⁴ The only intervening factor, it appears, was President Trump’s announcement that he would be a candidate for President in 2024.²⁵

Your decision to pursue such a politically motivated prosecution—while adopting progressive criminal justice policies that allow career “criminals [to] run [] the streets” of Manhattan²⁶—requires congressional scrutiny about how public safety funds appropriated by Congress are implemented by local law-enforcement agencies. In addition, your apparent decision to pursue criminal charges where federal authorities declined to do so requires oversight to inform potential legislative reforms about the delineation of prosecutorial authority between federal and local officials. Finally, because the circumstances of this matter stem, in part, from Special Counsel Mueller’s investigation,²⁷ Congress may consider legislative reforms to the authorities of special counsels and their relationships with other prosecuting entities. Accordingly, to advance our oversight, please produce the following documents and information for the period January 1, 2017, to the present:

1. All documents and communications between or among the New York County District Attorney’s Office and the U.S. Department of Justice, its component entities, or other federal law enforcement agencies referring or relating to your office’s investigation of President Donald Trump;
2. All documents and communications sent or received by former employees Carey Dunne and Mark Pomerantz referring or relating to President Donald Trump; and
3. All documents and communications referring or relating to the New York County District Attorney Office’s receipt and use of federal funds.

In addition, your testimony is necessary to advance our oversight and to inform potential legislative reforms. We therefore ask that you testify in a transcribed interview about these

Dear Mr. Dunne:

New York County District Attorney Alvin Bragg is reportedly about to engage in an unprecedented abuse of prosecutorial authority: the indictment of a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. This indictment comes after years of the District Attorney's office aggressively pursuing charges, with you and other special prosecutors leading the investigation into every facet of President Trump's finances.¹ Last year, you resigned from the office over Bragg's initial reluctance to move forward with charges in 2022, Bragg is now attempting to "shoehorn[]" the same case with identical facts into a new prosecution.² Based on your unique role in this matter, we request your cooperation with our oversight of this politically motivated prosecutorial decision.

In January 2022, soon after Bragg took office, he expressed doubts about President Trump's case and suspended the investigation.⁷ This decision caused you and your colleague, Mark Pomerantz, to resign in protest.⁸ Your unrelenting pursuit of President Trump has followed you into the private sector. Following your resignation from Bragg's office, you and Pomerantz started a law firm dedicated to "weighing ways" to bar President Trump from holding future office.⁹ Just this month, Pomerantz published a book excoriating Bragg for not aggressively prosecuting President Trump.¹⁰ The Washington Post reported that Bragg was "deeply stung" by criticism from you and Pomerantz.¹¹

It now appears that your efforts to shame Bragg have worked as he is reportedly resurrecting a so-called "zombie" case against President Trump using a tenuous and untested legal theory.¹² Even the Washington Post quoted "legal experts" as calling Bragg's actions "unusual" because "prosecutors have repeatedly examined the long-established details but decided not to pursue charges."¹³ In addition, Bragg's star witness—Michael Cohen—has a serious credibility problem as a convicted perjurer and serial fabricator with demonstrable prejudice against President Trump.¹⁴ Under these circumstances, there is no scenario in which Cohen could fairly be considered an unbiased and credible witness.

Your actions, both as a special prosecutor and since leaving the District Attorney's office, cast serious doubt on administration of fair and impartial justice in this matter. Former New York County Special Assistant District Attorney
Free & Fair Litigation Group
128 E. Broadway, Unit 793
New York, NY 10002

Dear Mr. Pomerantz:

New York County District Attorney Alvin Bragg is reportedly about to engage in an unprecedented abuse of prosecutorial authority: the indictment of a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. This indictment comes after years of the District Attorney's office aggressively pursuing charges, including by appointing you as an unpaid "special assistant district attorney" to lead the investigation into every facet of President Trump's finances.¹ Last year, you resigned from the office over Bragg's initial reluctance to move forward with charges, shaming Bragg in your resignation letter—which was subsequently leaked—into bringing charges.² Based on your unique role in this matter, and your subsequent public statements prejudicing the impartiality of any prosecution, we request your cooperation with our oversight of this politically motivated prosecutorial decision.

The New York County District Attorney's Office has been investigating President Trump since at least 2018, looking for some legal theory on which to bring charges.³ The facts surrounding the impending indictment have "been known for years."⁴ Michael Cohen, President Trump's disgraced former lawyer, pleaded guilty over four years ago to charges based on the

In January 2022, soon after Bragg took office, he expressed doubts about President Trump's case and suspended the investigation.⁷ This decision caused you and your colleague, Carey Dunne, to resign in protest.⁸ You penned a scathing resignation letter in which you baselessly accused President Trump of "numerous felony violations," and asserted it would be "a grave failure of justice" if Bragg did not pursue charges.⁹ You urged Bragg to hold President Trump "fully accountable for his crimes," asserting that Bragg's decision "will doom any future prospects" for prosecution.¹⁰ Your resignation letter found its way into the New York Times, word-for-word, and your criticisms of Bragg's investigation were widely reported by news outlets.¹¹ Your unrelenting pursuit of President Trump followed you into the private sector as you and Dunne started a law firm dedicated to "weighing ways" to bar President Trump from holding future office.¹² Just this month, you published a book excoriating Bragg for not aggressively prosecuting President Trump, laying bare the office's internal deliberations about the investigation and your personal animus toward President Trump.¹³

It now appears that your efforts to shame Bragg have worked as he is reportedly resurrecting a so-called "zombie" case against President Trump using a tenuous and untested legal theory.¹⁴ Even the Washington Post quoted "legal experts" as calling Bragg's actions "unusual" because "prosecutors have repeatedly examined the long-established details but decided not to pursue charges."¹⁵ In addition, Bragg's star witness—Michael Cohen—has a serious credibility problem as a convicted perjurer and serial fabricator with demonstrable prejudice against President Trump.¹⁶ Under these circumstances, there is no scenario in which Cohen could fairly be considered an unbiased and credible witness.

Your actions, both as a special prosecutor and since leaving the District Attorney’s office, cast serious doubt on the administration of fair and impartial justice in this matter. Your words in the New York Times have unfairly disparaged President Trump, an innocent and uncharged man, as a felon to millions of Times readers. Your book again unfairly disparaged President Trump, and now opens the door to examination about the District Attorney’s office commitment to evenhanded justice. The Honorable James Comer
Chairman, House Committee on Oversight and Accountability

Dear Chairman Jordan, Chairman Steil, and Chairman Comer:

The District Attorney of New York County is investigating allegations that Donald Trump engaged in violations of New York State penal law. The investigation is one of thousands conducted by the Office of the District Attorney in its long history of pursuing justice and protecting New Yorkers. The investigation has been conducted consistently with the District Attorney's oath to faithfully execute the laws of the State of New York. The District Attorney pledged that the DA's Office would "publicly state the conclusion of our investigation—whether we conclude our work without bringing charges, or move forward with an indictment."¹ He stands by that pledge. And if charges are brought at the conclusion, it will be because the rule of law and faithful execution of the District Attorney's duty require it.

Your letter dated March 20, 2023 (the "Letter"), in contrast, is an unprecedented inquiry into a pending local prosecution. The Letter only came after Donald Trump created a false expectation that he would be arrested the next day² and his lawyers reportedly urged you to intervene.³ Neither fact is a legitimate basis for congressional inquiry.

¹ Statement by Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg on Ongoing Investigation Concerning the Trump Organization (April 7, 2022), available at: <https://www.manhattanda.org/statement-by-manhattan-district-attorney-alvin-bragg-on-ongoing-investigation-concerning-the-trump-organization/>.

² Trump says 'illegal leaks' indicate he'll be arrested Tuesday, FoxNews, March 18, 2023, available at: <https://www.foxnews.com/politics/trump-says-illegal-leaks-indicate-arrested-tuesday>.

³ Shane Goldmacher, et al., For the G.O.P., a Looming Trump Indictment Takes Center Stage, N.Y. Times (March 20, 2023) (quoting a letter from Joseph Tacopina, a lawyer for Donald Trump, to Chairman Jordan, encouraging Congress to investigate the District Attorney).

In New York, the District Attorney is a constitutional officer charged with “the responsibility to conduct all prosecutions for crimes and offenses cognizable by the courts of the county in which he serves.” People v Di Falco, 44 N.Y.2d 482, 486 (1978); see also Matter of Haggerty v. Himelein, 89 N.Y.2d 431, 436 (1997); Matter of Schumer v. Holtzman, 60 N.Y.2d 46, 52 (1983). These are quintessential police powers belonging to the State, and your letter treads into territory very clearly reserved to the states. It suggests that Congress’s investigation is being “conducted solely for the personal aggrandizement of the investigators or to ‘punish’ those investigated,” and is, therefore, “indefensible.” Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 187 (1957).

As articulated below, the District Attorney is obliged by the federal and state constitutions to protect the independence of state law enforcement functions from federal interference. The DA’s Office therefore requests an opportunity to meet and confer with committee staff to better understand what information the DA’s Office can provide that relates to a legitimate legislative interest and can be shared consistent with the District Attorney’s constitutional obligations.

Compliance with the Letter Would Interfere with Law Enforcement

The Letter seeks non-public information about a pending criminal investigation, which is confidential under state law. CPL § 190.25(4)(a) (“Grand jury proceedings are secret”); Penal Law § 215.70 (prosecutor’s disclosure of grand jury evidence is a felony unless “in the proper discharge of his official duties or upon written order of the court”); Sanchez v. City of New York, 201 A.D.2d 325, 326 (1st Dept. 1994) (witness statements to the District Attorney’s Office protected by the public interest privilege); Public Officers Law § 87(2)(e) (shielding materials “compiled for law enforcement purposes” from public disclosure where disclosure would “interfere with law enforcement investigations” or “disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation”).⁴

These confidentiality provisions exist to protect the interests of the various participants in the criminal process—the defendant, the witnesses, and members of the grand jury—as well as the integrity of the grand jury proceeding itself. Like the Department of Justice, as a prosecutor exercising sovereign executive powers, the District Attorney has a constitutional obligation to “protect the government’s ability to prosecute fully and fairly,” to “independently and impartially uphold the rule of law,” to “protect witnesses and law enforcement,” to “avoid flight by those implicated in our investigations,” and to “prevent additional crimes.”⁵

⁵ Letter from Assistant Attorney General Carlos Uriarte to Chairman Jordan, dated January 20, 2023, at page 3-4. (Available at <https://www.politico.com/f/?id=00000185-d087-dde8-a9af-d4afeba70000>).

Consistent with these constitutional obligations, the DA's Office is cognizant of DOJ's "[l]ongstanding" policy of not providing Congress with non-public information about investigations.⁶

With regard to pending federal investigations, "Congress seems generally to have been respectful of the need to protect material contained in open criminal investigative files. There is almost no precedent for Congress attempting to subpoena such material, and even fewer examples of the DOJ actually producing such documents."⁷

Requests Regarding the Exercise of State Police Powers Violate New York's Sovereignty

The Letter's requests are an unlawful incursion into New York's sovereignty. Congress's investigative jurisdiction is derived from and limited by its power to legislate concerning federal matters. See, e.g., Eastland v. U. S. Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503-05 (1975); Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109, 111-12 (1959); Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 195-96 (1880).

The Constitution limits Congress's powers to those specifically enumerated; and the Tenth Amendment ensures that any unenumerated powers are reserved to the States. New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 155-56 (1992). It is therefore generally understood that a Congressional committee may not "inquire into matters which are . . . reserved to the States." Charles W. Johnson, et al., House Practice: A Guide to the Rules, Precedents, and Procedures of the House at 254 (GPO 2017)⁸; see also Watkins, 354 U.S. at 187 ("The power of the Congress to conduct investigations . . . comprehends probes into departments of the Federal Government . . .") (emphasis added).⁹

Among the powers reserved to the states, "[p]erhaps the clearest example of traditional state authority is the punishment of local criminal activity." Bond v. United States, 572 U.S. 844, 858 (2014). Thus, federal interference with state law enforcement "is peculiarly inconsistent with our federal framework." Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611, 618 (1968); see also Printz v. United

⁹ Consistent with this general understanding, this type of inquiry appears to be unprecedented. The only precedent is one aimed at an ongoing state civil investigation that was never enforced. See Lemos, et al. Letter to House Committee on Science & Technology (Sept. 13, 2016) (scholarly review of subpoenas from the House Committee on Science & Technology to state Attorneys General regarding pending civil investigations, and stating: "To our knowledge, Congress has never before attempted to use its investigatory authority to interfere with an ongoing state investigation."), available at page 814 of <https://docs.house.gov/meetings/SY/SY00/20160914/105259/HHRG-114-SY00-20160914-SD004.pdf>.

States, 521 U.S. 898, 931 n.15 (1997) (Tenth Amendment limits federal power over local law enforcement). Invoking these principles of comity, equity, and federalism, the Supreme Court held, in Younger v. Harris, that federal courts may not interfere in pending state criminal prosecutions absent extraordinary circumstances. 401 U.S. 37 (1971). This holding reflects a “continuance of the belief that the National Government will fare best if the States and their institutions are left free to perform their separate functions in their separate ways.” Id. at 44.

Against this history, it is clear that Congress cannot have any legitimate legislative task relating to the oversight of local prosecutors enforcing state law. To preserve the Constitution’s federalist principles, the District Attorney is duty bound by his constitutional oath to New York’s sovereign interest in the exercise of police powers reserved to the States under the Tenth Amendment.

Congressional Review of a Pending Criminal Investigation Usurps Executive Powers

Congress is not the appropriate branch to review pending criminal matters. As the Supreme Court noted in Watkins, “Congress [is not] a law enforcement or trial agency. These are functions of the executive and judicial departments of government.” 354 U.S. at 187. “[T]he power [of Congress] to investigate must not be confused with any of the powers of law enforcement; those powers are assigned under our Constitution to the Executive and the Judiciary.” Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 161 (1955).

If a grand jury brings charges against Donald Trump, the DA’s Office will have an obligation, as in every case, to provide a significant amount of discovery from its files to the defendant so that he may prepare a defense. The Letter’s allegation that the DA’s Office is pursuing a prosecution for political purposes is unfounded, and regardless, the proper forum for such a challenge is the Courts of New York, which are equipped to consider and review such objections. In addition, review by the U.S. Supreme Court would be available to the extent any criminal case raises federal issues. That is the mechanism afforded to every defendant in a criminal case. Congress has no role to play in that review, especially as to a pending state criminal proceeding. See Younger, 401 U.S. at 43-45.

Federal Funding is an Insufficient Basis to Justify These Unconstitutional Requests

The Letter indicates that its requests may be related to a review of federal public safety funds. But the Letter does not suggest any way in which either the District Attorney’s testimony about his prosecutorial decisions or the documents and communications of former Assistant District Attorneys on a pending criminal investigation would shed light on that review.

Nonetheless, to assist Congress in understanding the ways in which the DA’s Office has used federal funds, we are preparing and will submit a letter describing its use of federal funds.

We trust that you appreciate the importance of our federal system, state law enforcement activities, and the critical need to maintain the integrity and independence of state criminal law enforcement from federal interference. While the DA's Office will not allow a Congressional investigation to impede the exercise of New York's sovereign police power, this Office will always treat a fellow government entity with due respect. Therefore, again, we request a meet and confer to understand whether the Committee has any legitimate legislative purpose in the requested materials that could be accommodated without impeding those sovereign interests. We simply expect that our office also be treated "in a manner consistent with [New York's] status as a residuary sovereign[] and joint participant[] in the governance of the Nation." Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 748 (1999) (Kennedy, J.).

Mr. Alvin L. Bragg, Jr.
District Attorney
New York County
One Hogan Place
New York, NY 10013

Dear Mr. Bragg:

Our Committees are conducting oversight of your reported effort to indict a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. On March 20, 2023, we wrote to you requesting that you voluntarily cooperate with our oversight by providing relevant documents and testimony.¹ We received a reply letter sent on your behalf dated March 23, 2023, which set forth several purported reasons for why you could not cooperate with our investigation.²

Notably, your reply letter did not dispute the central allegations at issue—that you, under political pressure from left-wing activists and former prosecutors in your office, are reportedly planning to use an alleged federal campaign finance violation, previously declined by federal prosecutors, as a vehicle to extend the statute of limitations on an otherwise misdemeanor offense and indict for the first time in history a former President of the United States. Moreover, you are apparently attempting to upgrade a misdemeanor charge to a felony using an untested legal theory at the same time when you are simultaneously downgrading felony charges to misdemeanors in a majority of other cases in your jurisdiction.³

Contrary to the central argument set forth in your letter, this matter does not simply involve local or state interests. Rather, the potential criminal indictment of a former President of the United States by an elected local prosecutor of the opposing political party (and who will face the prospect of re-election) implicates substantial federal interests, particularly in a jurisdiction where trial-level judges also are popularly elected. If state or local prosecutors are able to engage in politically motivated prosecutions of Presidents of the United States (former or current) for personal acts, this could have a profound impact on how Presidents choose to exercise their powers while in office. For example, a President could choose to avoid taking action he believes to be in the national interest because it would negatively impact New York City for fear that he would be subject to a retaliatory prosecution in New York City.

Likewise, because the federal government has a compelling interest in protecting the physical safety of former or current Presidents, any decision to prosecute a former or current President raises difficult questions concerning how to vindicate that interest in the context of a state or local criminal justice system. For these reasons and others, we believe that we now must consider whether Congress should take legislative action to protect former and/or current Presidents from politically motivated prosecutions by state and local officials, and if so, how those protections should be structured. Critically, due to your own actions, you are now in possession of information critical to this inquiry.

I. The Arguments in Defense of Your Unprecedented Prosecutorial Conduct Are Conclusory and Unconvincing.

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a “broad and indispensable” power to conduct oversight, which “encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them.”⁴ In Wilkinson v. United States, the Supreme Court articulated a three-prong test to determine the legal sufficiency of a congressional subpoena: “(1) the Committee’s investigation of the broad subject matter area must be authorized by Congress; (2) the investigation must be pursuant to ‘a valid legislative purpose’; and (3) the specific inquiries involved must be pertinent to the broad subject matter areas which have been authorized by Congress.”⁵

A. The Committees Are Authorized to Conduct Such an Inquiry.

Contrary to your assertion otherwise, the Committees’ inquiry plainly satisfies this three-prong test. First, the Committee on the Judiciary is charged by the House of Representatives with upholding fundamental American civil liberties and with promoting fairness and consistency in our nation’s criminal justice system. In fact, Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives authorizes the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct oversight of criminal justice matters to inform potential legislation.⁶ In the Committees’ view, the circumstances of any prosecutorial decision to indict a former President of the United States on a novel and untested legal theory based on facts known for years and conduct previously uncharged by federal prosecutors, shortly after your former high-ranking employee has publicly criticized you for not making such an indictment, require an examination of the facts and potential consequences of this unprecedented decision. The Committee on the Judiciary has an interest in the fair and evenhanded application of justice at both the state and federal level.

B. The Inquiry Is on a Matter on Which Legislation Could be Had.

Second, the Committees' inquiry has an obvious legitimate legislative purpose and is "a subject on which legislation could be had."⁷ To begin with, as discussed above, Congress has a specific and manifestly important interest in preventing politically motivated prosecutions of current and former Presidents by elected state and local prosecutors, particularly those tried before elected state and local trial-level judges. Therefore, the Committee on the Judiciary, as a part of its broad authority to develop criminal justice legislation, must now consider whether to draft legislation that would, if enacted, insulate current and former presidents from such improper state and local prosecutions. These legislative reforms may include, for example, broadening the existing statutory right of removal of certain criminal cases from state court to federal court. Because your impending indictment of a former President is an issue of first impression, the Committees require information from your office to inform our oversight.

Moreover, as discussed above, your prosecutorial decision to indict a former President may cause a potential confrontation between federal and local law-enforcement authorities. Federal law requires the United States Secret Service to protect a former President.⁸ Therefore, your unprecedented prosecutorial decision raises the potential for conflict between the federal law-enforcement officials required to protect the former President and local law-enforcement officials required to enforce your indictment and exercise control of him throughout his presence in the local criminal justice system. Such a novel and potentially fraught collision of federal and local law-enforcement officials with the safety of a former President at stake is certainly a matter of interest for the Committees. The Committees' oversight is necessary to inform potential legislation that would address or remedy any potential conflicts between federal and local authorities.

In addition, the federal campaign finance charges you are reportedly attempting to use to upgrade a misdemeanor charge to a felony have previously been considered—and rejected—by federal prosecutors.⁹ In light of this fact, to bring uniformity to the law and prevent future attempts by state or local prosecutors to pursue politically motivated prosecutions related to campaign finance regulations applicable to federal elections, Congress may elect to consider legislation that broadens the preemption provision in the Federal Election Campaign Act. This reform could have the effect of better delineating the prosecutorial authorities of federal and local officials in this area and blocking the selective or politicized enforcement by state and local prosecutors of campaign finance restrictions pertaining to federal elections.

Furthermore, your reported decision to indict a former President requires congressional scrutiny about how federal public safety funds appropriated by Congress are implemented by local law-enforcement agencies and how limited resources are prioritized. Under your leadership, the New York County District Attorney’s Office has adopted and defended your progressive criminal justice policies, which includes “downgrad[ing] 52 percent of felony cases to misdemeanors.”¹⁰ Even with downgrading more than half of your felony cases to misdemeanors, your office’s conviction rate when prosecuting serious felony charges was reported to be just 51 percent.¹¹ Your conviction rate for misdemeanors also dropped sharply—from 53 percent to 28 percent.¹² Your policies have allowed career “criminals [to] run[] the streets” of Manhattan¹³—creating such a danger that a judge in your district has taken notice.¹⁴

To the extent that you are receiving federal funds and are choosing to prioritize apparent political prosecutions over commonsense public safety measures, the Committee on the Judiciary certainly may consider legislation to tie federal funds to improved public safety metrics. In fact, last year, a Judiciary Subcommittee heard testimony from the mother of an army veteran murdered in your district,¹⁵ who criticized your office’s handling of her son’s murder by offering plea deals to the defendants despite the fact that “the murder and their roles were caught on video”¹⁶ Her testimony crystallized the need for legislation to prevent dangerous criminals from running free. Additionally, if our oversight determines that improper partisan or political considerations are motivating your prosecutorial decisions, the Committee on the Judiciary may consider legislation to place conditions on federal funding for state and local law-enforcement jurisdictions to ensure that funds are not used to engage in discrimination on the basis of partisan affiliation or political beliefs.

Lastly, because the circumstances of this matter stem, in part, from Special Counsel Mueller’s investigation,¹⁷ Congress may consider legislative reforms to the authorities of special counsels and better delineate their relationships with other prosecuting entities.

C. The Requests Are Pertinent to the Committees' Inquiry.

The Committees' inquiry satisfies Wilkinson's third prong of pertinence to the oversight. Federal courts have interpreted this prong broadly, requiring "only that the specific inquiries be reasonably related to the subject matter under investigation."¹⁸ The information sought by the Committees will allow us to assess the extent to which your reported effort to indict a former President and current declared candidate for that office is politically motivated and whether Congress should therefore draft legislative reforms to, among other things, protect former and current Presidents from politically motivated prosecutions.

II. Your State Law-Based Defenses Are Insufficient.

Your conclusory claim that our constitutional oversight responsibilities will interfere with law enforcement is misplaced and unconvincing. As a threshold matter, whether your office is, in fact, fairly enforcing the law or abusing prosecutorial discretion to engage in a politically motivated indictment of a former President is a serious matter that, as discussed above, implicates significant federal interests. The Committees require information from the New York County District Attorney's Office to advance our oversight over the very matter that you claim is a basis to obstruct our investigation.

In support of your broad claim that compliance with the Committees' requests for documents and a transcribed interview would interfere with law enforcement, you note two New York State statutes that prohibit the disclosure of grand jury materials. The Committees' information requests, however, relate to numerous areas of inquiry that in no way implicate grand jury materials or seek information that would be confidential under New York law. For example, the request for your office's use of federal funds has no connection to any grand jury proceedings. Similarly, the vast majority of the questions that the Committees intend to ask you in an interview also would not implicate grand jury secrecy. Moreover, to the extent that questions are asked that you believe you are not permitted to answer, you would retain the ability to decline to answer or to assert an applicable privilege. Likewise, you remain free to decline to produce certain responsive documents on the basis of appropriate privileges or statutes that preclude production, provided you provide the Committees with a detailed privilege log that will enable us to review and evaluate your claims. The laws cited in your letter do not establish a basis for a complete refusal to cooperate. At best, they provide arguments that may be asserted on either a question-by-question or a document-by-document basis.

Furthermore, your invocation of certain New York laws as precluding you from complying with our oversight request is, at a minimum, overbroad. For example, New York's Freedom of Information Law (Public Officers Law § 87(2)) provides that agencies may decline to make certain records available for public inspection; it neither requires them to do so nor directly speaks to formal requests from congressional committees. Thus, that statutory provision does not preclude you from providing us with records that were "compiled for law enforcement purposes.”¹⁹ Indeed, the statute in question states that even when an agency receives a request from a member of the public, as opposed to congressional committees, a “denial of access shall not be based solely on the category or type of such record and shall be valid only when there is a particularized and specific justification for such denial.”²⁰

III. The Inquiry Does Not Intrude on Federalism Powers Because Congress Is Exercising Its Core Authority to Legislate.

Your letter raises unfounded and unpersuasive objections to our oversight based on federalism—arguing, in part, that our “requests are an unlawful incursion into New York’s sovereignty.”²¹ You go on to note that “the District Attorney is duty bound by his constitutional oath to New York’s sovereign interest in the exercise of police powers reserved to the States under the Tenth Amendment.”²² Contrary to your assertions, this inquiry does not infringe on New York’s sovereignty.

To begin with, your argument hinges on your assertion that “Congress cannot have any legitimate legislative task relating to the oversight of local prosecutors enforcing state law.” But this claim is simply wrong; as discussed at length above, this matter involves substantial federal interests. Moreover, the cases that you cite, Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971), and Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611 (1968), involve the question of when federal courts can enjoin prosecutions of state law. And needless to say, our oversight requests do no such thing; they would not block you from conducting any prosecution. Rather, we are simply seeking information to carry out constitutional duties.

Finally, our oversight requests do not implicate what is commonly referred to as the anti-commandeering principle.²³ In establishing the anti-commandeering principle in New York v. United States, the Supreme Court concluded that Congress cannot compel states to enact, enforce, or administer federal policies.²⁴ Unlike the matter before the Court in New York, our requests here simply do not compel the state “to enact, enforce, or administer federal policies.”²⁵ Rather, the Committees are merely seeking information pertaining to a matter that is directly within the purview of our jurisdiction and is necessary to inform potential legislative reforms.

IV. The Inquiry Does Not Usurp Executive Powers

In your reply letter, you cited the Supreme Court of the United States in Watkins v. United States as saying, “Congress [is not] a law enforcement or trial agency.”²⁶ We agree. The Committees do not seek to step into the shoes of the Executive Branch or usurp its powers.

Rather, as explained, we are exercising the broad powers afforded Congress by the Constitution to conduct oversight to inform potential legislative reforms. This power encompasses inquiries concerning the administration of existing laws as well as proposed or possibly needed statutes. It includes surveys of defects in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling the Congress to remedy them. It comprehends probes into departments of the Federal Government to expose corruption, inefficiency or waste.²⁷

Indeed, as the Supreme Court has recognized, Congress retains broad authority to conduct oversight of ongoing civil and criminal investigations. In Sinclair v. United States, the Supreme Court noted that the pendency of litigation does not stop Congress’s ability to investigate, stating:

It may be conceded that Congress is without authority to compel disclosures for the purpose of aiding the prosecution of pending suits; but the authority of that body, directly or through its committees, to require pertinent disclosures in aid of its own constitutional power is not abridged because the information sought to be elicited may also be of use in such suits.²⁸

The Court has further noted that “a congressional committee . . . engaged in legitimate legislative investigation need not grind to a halt whenever responses to its inquiries might potentially be harmful to a witness in some distinct proceeding . . . or when crime or wrongdoing is exposed.”²⁹ Phrased another way, the Committees’ oversight will in no way “stop [your] prosecution or set limits on the management of a particular case.”³⁰ Accordingly, your refusal to cooperate with our oversight inquires on this basis is therefore unavailing.

V. Your Offer to Provide Information About Your Office’s Use of Federal Funds Is Insufficient

While we appreciate your offer to submit a letter detailing the District Attorney’s Office’s use of federal funds, and we look forward to that submission, such a letter alone does not satisfy our oversight requests or preclude the Committees from proceeding with them. For example, as we have explained in detail, the Committee on the Judiciary is examining whether legislative reforms are necessary to insulate former and current Presidents from politically motivated prosecutions by state and local officials. And while your letter regarding your office’s use of federal funds will not shed meaningful light on that question, we expect that your response to our other information requests will do so.

The Honorable Jim Jordan

Dear Chairman Jordan:

I am in receipt of your letter dated March 22, 2023 (“the Committee Letter”), requesting that I provide to the House Committee on the Judiciary (“the Committee”) certain documents and information relating to my tenure at the Office of the New York County District Attorney (“the Office”).¹ I understand you sent a similar request directly to the Office on March 20, 2023, and that the Office responded to that letter on March 23, 2023.

Any information I have regarding the Office’s investigations, communications, and decision-making is derivative of my work as an attorney for the Office. The Office has directed me until further notice to decline to provide the Committee with the requested information and materials, and to instead refer the Committee to the Office for any further response. (A copy of the Office’s letter to me is attached.) As you know, the Office has deemed your request to be constitutionally infirm on federalism and other grounds, and improperly intrusive into an ongoing criminal investigation. The Office also asserts that the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine, and other legal protections are implicated by your requests. As the legal holder of such privileges, that is the Office’s prerogative. As a former attorney for the office, I will comply with its direction, and I respectfully refer the Committee to the Office for any further response.

Sincerely,

Carey R. Dunne

Former Assistant District Attorney

Dear Mr. Dunne:

I am writing regarding the House Judiciary Committee (HJC) request of March 22, 2023, that you provide documents and information relating to your employment at the Office of the District Attorney of New York County (the "DA's Office"), which are similar to requests sent to the DA's Office on March 20, 2023.

The HJC's requests raise significant concerns about federalism, state sovereignty, the limits on congressional power, and the purpose and legality of the HJC's inquiry. In addition, the documents and information requested are protected from disclosure for many reasons, including because they relate to an ongoing criminal investigation, and are subject to the attorney client privilege, work product doctrine, and other legal protections.

For these reasons, the DA's Office has asked the HJC to provide additional information regarding their inquiries. To protect the DA's Office's interests and privileges, and until further notice, the DA's Office instructs you, as a former employee and attorney of the DA's Office, to not provide any information or materials relating to your work in the DA's Office in response to HJC's request. In addition, please direct HJC to communicate with the DA's Office regarding the request.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "Leslie B. Dubeck".

Dear Chairman Jordan:

This responds to your March 22, 2023 letter to me, which seeks certain documents and testimony relating to my employment at the New York County District Attorney's Office ("DANY").

After receiving your letter, I received a letter from Leslie Dubeck, General Counsel at DANY. Through that letter (copy attached), DANY has instructed me to not provide any information or materials in response to your request. At the present time, and in light of the ongoing discussions between DANY and the Committee, I will act in a manner consistent with the instructions I have received from DANY. Further, please note that DANY has asked that all communications regarding your request be directed to them.

Sincerely,

Mark F. Pomerantz

Dear Mr. Pomerantz:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of the New York County District Attorney's unprecedented indictment of a former President of the United States and current declared candidate for that office. On March 22, 2023, we requested that you voluntarily cooperate with our oversight by providing relevant documents and testimony pertaining to your role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into the former President's finances.¹ We received a reply letter dated March 27, 2023, stating that, at the instruction of the New York County District Attorney's Office, you would not cooperate with our oversight.² You enclosed a copy of a letter from the New York County District Attorney's Office directing you not to cooperate.³

The Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has a "broad and indispensable" power to conduct oversight, which "encompasses inquiries into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and surveys in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling Congress to remedy them."⁴ Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives authorizes the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct oversight of criminal justice matters to inform potential legislation.⁵ Congress has a specific and manifestly important interest in preventing politically motivated prosecutions of current and former Presidents by elected state and local prosecutors, particularly in jurisdictions—like New York County—where the prosecutor is popularly elected and trial-level judges lack life tenure. Among other things, if state or local prosecutors are able to engage in politically motivated prosecutions of Presidents of the United States (current or former) for personal acts, this could have a profound impact on how Presidents choose to exercise their powers while in office. For example, a President could choose to avoid taking action he believes to be in the national interest because it would negatively impact New York City for fear that he would be subject to a retaliatory prosecution in New York City.

As a result, the New York County District Attorney’s unprecedented prosecutorial conduct requires oversight to inform the consideration of potential legislative reforms that would, if enacted, insulate current and former Presidents from such politically motivated state and local prosecutions. These potential legislative reforms may include, among other things, broadening the existing statutory right of removal of certain criminal cases from state court to federal court. The local prosecution of a former President also raises the potential for conflict between the federal law-enforcement officials required by federal law to protect a former President and local law-enforcement officials required to enforce an indictment and exercise control of him throughout his presence in the local criminal justice system. The Committee may consider legislative reforms to address or remedy this potential conflict. In addition, the New York County District Attorney’s Office has acknowledged that it used federal forfeiture funds in its investigations of President Trump, including during your tenure in that office and during the time when former President Trump was in office and a candidate for re-election.⁶ The Committee may therefore consider legislation to enhance reporting requirements concerning the use of federal forfeiture funds or to prohibit the use of federal forfeiture funds to investigate a current or former President or presidential candidate.

Based on your unique role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into President Trump’s finances, you are uniquely situated to provide information that is relevant and necessary to inform the Committee’s oversight and potential legislative reforms. Although the New York County District Attorney’s Office has directed you not to cooperate with our oversight, you have already discussed many of the topics relevant to our oversight in a book you wrote and published in February 2023,⁷ as well as in several public interviews to promote your book.⁸ As a result, you have no basis to decline to testify about matters before the Committee that you have already discussed in your book and/or on a prime-time television program with an audience in the millions, including on the basis of any purported duty of confidentiality or privilege interest.

Your book discloses various details about the New York County District Attorney's Office's investigation of President Trump, including internal deliberations about the investigation. Indeed, you discuss how members of the Office viewed the credibility of a key witness in the case, and you note their concerns about the case's dim prospects. For example, in your book, you recount a "mini-revolt" that occurred following an internal Office meeting on September 21, 2021, about the investigations into President Trump.⁹ You offer details about a disagreement between you and the Office's Major Economic Crimes Bureau Chief, Julieta Lozano, about Michael Cohen's credibility as a witness in the investigation.¹⁰ You also complain about concerns expressed by Chris Conroy, the Office's Investigative Division Chief, during a meeting on November 12, 2021.¹¹ According to you, Conroy "spoke about his misgivings" about the Trump investigation, which stemmed from a recent case involving financial and accounting fraud charges that mirrored the charges that the Office was considering pursuing against President Trump.¹² That case apparently ended poorly for the New York County District Attorney's Office.¹³ Like Lozano, Conroy also expressed concerns about Cohen's viability as a witness.¹⁴ You accuse other lawyers of being "relentlessly negative, dwelling on all the difficulties and issues with the case, and refusing to acknowledge the positives" during an internal meeting on December 10, 2021, referring to your former colleagues as "conscientious objectors" merely for opining that the case was "weak" and pointing to its "many fatal flaws."¹⁵ You ultimately dismiss their concerns about the investigation by suggesting that they were either too lazy to do the work, did not know the evidence, or were somehow afraid of bringing charges against President Trump.¹⁶

Your book, described as a "300-page exercise in score-settling and scorn,"¹⁷ also reveals the extent to which the New York County District Attorney's Office's investigation of President Trump appears to have been politically motivated. Specifically, you describe your eagerness to investigate President Trump, writing that you were "delighted" to join an unpaid group of lawyers advising on the Trump investigations, and joking that salary negotiations had gone "great" because you would have paid to join the investigation.¹⁸ You frivolously compare President Trump to mob boss John Gotti,¹⁹ and claim that the District Attorney's Office was "warranted in throwing the book" at President Trump because, in your view, he "had become a master of breaking the law in ways that were difficult to reach."²⁰ You explain that this "collective weight" of President Trump's conduct over the years "left no doubt in [your] mind that [President] Trump deserved to be prosecuted.”²¹ In other words, as a special assistant district attorney, you seem, for reasons unrelated to the facts of this particular investigation, to have been searching for any basis on which to bring criminal charges.²²

Although you claim that you were “able to put aside [your] personal feelings about [President] Trump” during the investigation, the depth of your personal animosity towards him is apparent in your writing. You wrote of President Trump:

I saw him as a malignant narcissist, and perhaps even a megalomaniac who posed a real danger to the country and the ideals that mattered to me. His behavior made me angry, sad, and even disgusted.²³

You additionally “marveled at the thought” of being “at the center of what might become one of the most consequential criminal cases ever brought.”²⁴ You reflect on your “only similar experience,” which you indicated was the “indictment of Osama bin Laden and other members of al Qaeda for the bombing of the United States embassies in Kenya and Tanzania.”²⁵ Drawing a parallel between these two vastly different matters speaks volumes about the mindset that you brought to the investigation of President Trump.

These perceptions appear to have colored your work as a special assistant district attorney, to the point that you even resigned because the investigation into President Trump was not proceeding fast enough for your liking.²⁶ In your resignation letter, you prejudged the results of the District Attorney’s investigation, writing that “Donald Trump is guilty of numerous felony violations,” and vowing not to be a “passive participant” to “a grave failure of justice.”²⁷ Your public resignation reportedly left District Attorney Bragg “deeply stung,” and caused him to issue an “unusual” public statement “emphasizing that the investigation into Trump and his business was far from over.”²⁸ Your book also contributed to the “political pressure” on District Attorney Bragg to bring charges against former President Trump.²⁹

OPINION AND ORDER
DENYING TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

MARY KAY VYSKOCIL, United States District Judge:

The request by Manhattan District Attorney Alvin L. Bragg Jr. for a temporary restraining order, enjoining enforcement of the subpoena issued to Mark F. Pomerantz by the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives, chaired by Congressman Jim Jordan, is DENIED. The subpoena was issued with a “valid legislative purpose” in connection with the “broad” and “indispensable” congressional power to “conduct investigations.” It is not the role of the federal judiciary to dictate what legislation Congress may consider or how it should conduct its deliberations in that connection. Mr. Pomerantz must appear for the congressional deposition. No one is above the law.

BACKGROUND

On April 6, 2023, the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives (the “Committee”) issued a subpoena, directing Mark F. Pomerantz (“Pomerantz”), a former pro bono employee of the Office of the District Attorney for New York County (“DANY”), to appear on April 20, 2023 “to testify at a deposition touching matters of inquiry committed to [the Committee].” Exhibit 1 (“Ex. 1”) to the Declaration of Theodore J. Boutrous, Jr. (“Boutrous Dec.”) [ECF No. 12-1]. The subpoena does not request that Pomerantz produce any documents. See Ex. 1.

The subpoena was accompanied by a letter from the Chairman of the Committee, Jim Jordan (“Jordan”). See Ex. 1. The letter requests Pomerantz’s appearance due to his “unique role as a special assistant district attorney leading the investigation into President Trump’s finances.” Ex. 1 at 2. It further explains that Pomerantz has “already discussed many of the topics relevant to [the Committee’s] oversight in a book [that Pomerantz] wrote and published in February 2023, as well as in several public interviews to promote [his] book.”¹ Ex. 1 at 2 (citations omitted). Jordan notes that DANY has “acknowledged that it used federal forfeiture funds in its investigations of President Trump,”² and that the Committee was considering “potential legislative reforms,” such as “broadening the existing statutory right of removal of certain criminal cases from state court to federal court.” Ex. 1 at 2.

The book referenced in Jordan’s letter is People vs. Donald Trump: An Inside Account, written by Pomerantz and published in early 2023. See M. Pomerantz, People vs. Donald Trump: An Inside Account (2023) (“Inside Account”). As its subtitle indicates, the book recounts Pomerantz’s insider insights, mental impressions, and his front row seat to the investigation and deliberative process leading up to the DANY case against former President and current presidential candidate Donald Trump. Among Pomerantz’s observations:

- Within DANY, the case against Trump arising out of payment of so-called “hush money” to Stephanie Clifford was referred to as the “zombie” case. Id. at 200.
- The facts surrounding the payments “did not amount to much in legal terms. Paying hush money is not a crime under New York State law, even if the payment was made to help an electoral candidate.” Id. at 40.

² See Exhibit 19 to the Boutrous Dec. [ECF No. 12-20].

- “[C]reating false business records is only a misdemeanor under New York law.” Id. at 40.
- “[T]here appeared to be no [felony] state crime in play.” Id. at 40–41.
- “[T]o charge Trump with something other than a misdemeanor, DANY would have to argue that the intent to commit or conceal a federal crime had converted the falsification of the records into a felony. No appellate court in New York had ever upheld (or rejected) this interpretation of the law.” Id. at 41.
- The statutory language (under which Trump was charged) is “ambiguous.” Id. at 40.
- “[T]here was a big risk that felony charges would be dismissed before a jury could even consider them.” Id. at 41.
- “[T]he Trump investigation should have been handled by the U.S. Department of Justice, rather than by the Manhattan district attorney’s office.” Id. at 240.
- “[F]ederal prosecutors would not have to torture or massage [statutory] language to charge Trump with a violation,” as DANY would have to do. Id. at 240.
- Federal prosecutors previously looked into the Clifford “hush money payment” and did not move forward with the prosecution. Id. at 242 (emphasis added); see also id. at 39.
- There is a statute of limitations issue with the DANY case against Trump. Id. at 240–41.
- Numerous DANY prosecutors were skeptical about the prosecution of Trump and were referred to internally at DANY as “conscientious objectors.” Id. at 194.
- The invoices and requests for payment from Michael Cohen in connection with the Clifford payments, in a supposed effort to “camouflage” reimbursements, were made “throughout 2017 (after Trump’s inauguration as president).” Id. at 39 (emphasis added) (parenthetical in original).
- The DANY prosecution team discussed “Michael Cohen’s credibility” as being one of “the difficulties in the case.” Id. at 203.
- At one point, Bragg “commented that he ‘could not see a world’ in which [DANY] would indict Trump and call Michael Cohen as a prosecution witness.” Id. at 227 (emphasis added).

- While Pomerantz acknowledged Bragg’s right to make prosecutorial decisions, Pomerantz viewed himself as more experienced and qualified than Bragg. Id. at 218–19. Pomerantz makes a point that he was “finishing law school when Alvin was a toddler.” Id. at 208.
- Pomerantz resigned from his pro bono position at DANY when it became clear to him that President Trump would not be indicted. Id. at 248–51; see also Exhibit C (“Ex. C”) to the Declaration of Todd B. Tatelman (“Tatelman Dec.”) [ECF No. 32-3]. Pomerantz “told the DA that he was responsible for a ‘grave failure of justice’ because he would not authorize Trump’s indictment.” Inside Account at 1.
- Ultimately in March 2023, Bragg did, of course, indict President Trump, “bring[ing] the ‘zombie’ theory back from the dead once again.” Id. at 209.

Jordan and the Committee first tried to acquire information from Pomerantz and DANY voluntarily. See, e.g., Exhibit 2 (“Ex. 2”) to the Boutrous Dec. [ECF No. 12-2]; Exhibit 11 (“Ex. 11”) to the Boutrous Dec. [ECF No. 12-12]; Exhibit 58 (“Ex. 58”) to the Boutrous Dec. [ECF No. 12-61]. While the DANY General Counsel offered to “meet and confer” with the Committee “to understand whether [it] ha[d] any legitimate legislative purpose in the requested materials,” DANY declined to provide information and instructed Pomerantz not to comply with the Committee’s requests. Exhibit 10 (“Ex. 10”) to the Boutrous Dec. at 5 [ECF No. 12-11]; Exhibit 12 (“Ex. 12”) to the Boutrous Dec. [ECF No. 12-13]; see also Exhibit 19 (“Ex. 19”) to the Boutrous Dec. [ECF No. 12-20].

On April 11, 2023, Manhattan District Attorney Alvin L. Bragg, Jr. (“Plaintiff” or “Bragg”)—one of five local district attorneys for the five boroughs in the City of New York—filed a 50-page Complaint in this Court, naming Jordan, the Committee, and Pomerantz as defendants. See Complaint [ECF No. 1] (“Compl.”). Bragg simultaneously filed a motion, brought on by an ex parte proposed order to show cause, seeking a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction (1) enjoining Jordan and the Committee from enforcing the subpoena served on Pomerantz and (2) enjoining Pomerantz from complying with the subpoena, see Proposed Order to Show Cause With Emergency Relief [ECF No. 7]; see also Memorandum of Law in Support [ECF No. 8] (“Pl. Mem.”). Plaintiff later filed the Declaration of Theodore J. Boutrous, Jr., accompanied by over 60 exhibits. See Boutrous Dec.

The first 35 pages of the Complaint have little to do with the subpoena at issue and are nothing short of a public relations tirade against former President and current presidential candidate Donald Trump. The same is true of the vast majority of the exhibits accompanying the Boutrous Declaration. Of note, the Complaint acknowledges that DANY used federal forfeiture funds in investigating President Trump and/or the Trump Organization. Compl. ¶ 78. Moreover, Bragg concedes that DANY was aware that Pomerantz was writing a book about the Trump investigation and asked to review the manuscript pre-publication. Compl. ¶ 90. Pomerantz declined. Compl. ¶ 90; Pl. Mem. 21–22. At heart, the Complaint simply includes two requests for declaratory and injunctive relief directed at the congressional inquiry. The reality is that, as framed, this action is merely a motion to quash a subpoena dressed up as a lawsuit.

The motion for a temporary restraining order was filed without notice to Defendants and before Defendants even were served with the Complaint. See Certificate of Service [ECF No. 17]; Waiver of Service [ECF No. 18]. In this Court, Local Civil Rule 6.1(d) dictates that any party seeking an ex parte order must submit an “affidavit of good and sufficient reasons why a procedure other than by notice of motion is necessary, and stating whether a previous application for similar relief has been made.” No such affidavit was submitted here. Accordingly, the Court issued an Order, declining to enter the proposed order to show cause, directing service on Defendants not only of the motion (with all supporting papers), but also of the Complaint by which this case was initiated, setting a briefing schedule to allow Defendants to be heard, and scheduling a hearing for today to address the motion for a temporary restraining order. See Order [ECF No. 13].

Jordan and the Committee filed an opposition brief. See Opposition Brief [ECF No. 27]

(“Def. Mem.”). They argue that Bragg cannot establish a likelihood of success on the merits because Jordan and the Committee are immune from suit under the Speech or Debate Clause of Article I of the United States Constitution. Def. Mem. 5–14. Defendants further argue that the subpoena has at least two valid legislative purposes. First, they contend that the Committee is considering the viability of legislation to protect former Presidents and presidential candidates from politically motivated prosecutions by local district attorneys, such as by permitting those cases to be removed to federal court, out of a concern that such prosecutions “could have a profound impact on how Presidents choose to exercise their powers while in office.” Def. Mem. 3. Second, Defendants argue that the Committee is permissibly investigating DANY’s use of federal forfeiture funds in the investigation of President Trump, which could potentially influence the outcome of the 2024 presidential election. Def. Mem. 8–9.

Pomerantz filed a “response” to Bragg’s motion. See Pomerantz Response [ECF No. 30] (“Pomerantz Res.”); see also Declaration of Mark F. Pomerantz [ECF No. 31] (“Pomerantz Dec.”). Pomerantz describes himself as a “nominal[]” defendant. Pomerantz Dec. ¶ 1. He does not oppose Bragg’s motion and, instead, joins in the request for an injunction. See Pomerantz Dec. ¶ 1 (“I have no objection to the relief that the District Attorney has requested. I consent to that relief, and indeed urge this Court to grant it.”).³ It appears that Pomerantz is content to largely allow Bragg to speak for him. See Pomerantz Res. 1 (“These are matters for the District Attorney . . . to argue.”); id. at 5 (“We defer to the papers filed by the District Attorney on this motion to articulate why the subpoena threatens New York’s sovereign power.”). Indeed, Bragg’s counsel, Theodore J. Boutros, Jr., filed a waiver of service on behalf of Pomerantz. See Waiver of Service [ECF No. 18].

³ Unless otherwise noted, references to “Defendants” in this Opinion refer only to Jordan and the Committee.

The day before the scheduled hearing, Bragg filed an eleventh hour reply brief, not authorized by the Court’s Scheduling Order given the compressed time frame in which Plaintiff’s motion was brought on. The reply largely rehashes the same arguments made in the moving brief and, for the first time, addresses the Speech or Debate Clause. See Reply Brief [ECF No. 41-1] (“Reply”). The reply brief was accompanied by a supplemental declaration attaching sixteen largely irrelevant exhibits, consisting of a hodge-podge of social media postings, news articles, television interviews, pleadings from unrelated lawsuits, and a transcript from the arraignment in the Trump prosecution. See Exhibits 60–72 to the Second Boutrous Declaration [ECF Nos. 41-2 to 41-5].

The Court is in receipt of several unsolicited amicus briefs. An assemblage of former members of Congress, former prosecutors, former government attorneys, and academics filed an amicus brief with the consent of Bragg. See Letter Motion to File Amicus Brief [ECF No. 34]; Amicus Brief [ECF No. 37] (“First Amicus”). Amici argue that the Committee lacked authority to issue the subpoena and echo Bragg’s refrain that the subpoena will “interfere with an ongoing criminal prosecution . . . brought by a state prosecutor.” First Amicus 1. A separate group of former state and federal prosecutors filed another amicus brief, again with the consent of Bragg. See Letter Motion to File Amicus Brief [ECF No. 40] (“Second Amicus”). These amici assert that the subpoena “seriously challenges . . . the prosecutorial process.” Second Amicus 2.⁴

Bragg and his two sets of amici attack what they describe as federal interference in his criminal prosecution. Pl. Mem. 1; First Amicus 3; Second Amicus 3. There is no question that New York, a sovereign state in our federal system, has authority to enforce its criminal laws through its local prosecutors. The Court is mindful of potential federalism concerns. However, the Court rejects the premise that the Committee’s investigation will interfere with DANY’s ongoing prosecution. The subpoena of Pomerantz, who was a private citizen and public commentator at the time Bragg indicted Trump, will not prevent or impede the criminal prosecution that is proceeding in New York state court.

⁴ The Court also received a “friend of the court letter” from James H. Brady, dated April 17, 2023. See Letter [ECF No. 38]. The Court has reviewed and considered all of the unsolicited submissions.

ANALYSIS

I. Bragg Has Sufficiently Alleged Article III Standing

A threshold issue in this matter is whether Bragg has standing to maintain this action since the challenged subpoena is not addressed to Bragg or his office. See All. For Env’t Renewal, Inc. v. Pyramid Crossgates Co., 436 F.3d 82, 85 (2d Cir. 2006) (“[A] district court must generally. . . establish that it has federal constitutional jurisdiction, including a determination that the plaintiff has Article III standing, before deciding a case on the merits.”). The subpoena was issued to Pomerantz—not to Bragg. See Ex. 1. Pomerantz has not filed suit. Although he is named as a defendant, Pomerantz “asks this Court to grant [Bragg’s] motion.” Pomerantz Res. 1.

Bragg, as the party invoking federal jurisdiction, bears the burden of establishing standing. See Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 578 U.S. 330, 338 (2016). The Supreme Court has “established that the ‘irreducible constitutional minimum’ of standing consists of three elements.” Id. (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992)). “The plaintiff must have (1) suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision.” Id.

Where a plaintiff seeks to enjoin a subpoena issued to a third party and has “no alternative means to vindicate [his] rights,” a plaintiff satisfies his burden of establishing standing. U.S. Servicemen’s Fund v. Eastland, 488 F.2d 1252, 1260 (D.C. Cir. 1973), rev’d on other grounds, 421 U.S. 491 (1975); see also Trump v. Deutsche Bank AG, 943 F.3d 627, 635 (2d Cir. 2019), rev’d on other grounds sub nom., 140 S. Ct. 2019 (2020) (“[T]here is no dispute that Plaintiffs had standing in the District Court to challenge the lawfulness of the Committees' subpoenas by seeking injunctive relief against the Banks as custodians of the documents.”).

Bragg's stated interest in the subpoena is his claim that permitting Pomerantz to appear will undermine the pending criminal case against President Trump, intrude on the grand jury proceedings, and violate grand jury secrecy laws, among other things. These assertions are all without merit. Since Pomerantz was not at DANY when the grand jury indicted President Trump (and therefore has no information on that subject), see Pomerantz Res. 2, the only arguably valid interest Bragg has (to the extent it is not waived, see infra Section II.D) is in maintaining the confidentiality of deliberations within the office he now leads.

Determining whether Bragg has any “alternative means to vindicate” his rights is made difficult where, as here, the Court cannot predict what questions will be asked—or whether any rights of Bragg will be implicated. In that vein, Defendants contend that Bragg “has no standing whatsoever to stop Pomerantz from appearing before the Committee to answer . . . questions” that “do not involve purportedly privileged material in any way.” Def. Mem. 18.

The Court concludes that Bragg sufficiently alleges standing. Jordan's letter to Pomerantz references “the New York County District Attorney's unprecedented prosecutorial conduct” and Pomerantz's “unique role as a special assistant district attorney.” See Ex. 1 at 2. These areas of inquiry at least arguably implicate Bragg's interests. Because “general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice” at the pleading stage, the Court concludes that Bragg has established Article III standing sufficient to survive this even earlier stage of litigation. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561; cf. U.S. Servicemen's Fund, 488 F.2d at 1260; Deutsche Bank, 943 F.3d at 635.

II. Bragg Is Not Entitled to a Temporary Restraining Order

A. Legal Standard

In the Second Circuit, the same legal standard governs the issuance of preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders. See, e.g., 3M Co. v. Performance Supply, LLC, 458 F. Supp. 3d 181, 191 (S.D.N.Y. 2020). To obtain either, Bragg must show: (1) a likelihood of success on the merits, (2) a likelihood of irreparable injury, (3) the balance of hardships tips in his favor, and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by the issuance of an injunction. See Benihana, Inc. v. Benihana of Tokyo, LLC, 784 F.3d 887, 895 (2d Cir. 2015).⁵ Like a preliminary injunction, a temporary restraining order is “an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24 (2008).

Where a party seeking a temporary restraining order fails to establish a likelihood of success on the merits, “there is no need to address the other prongs of the analysis.” Oneida Nation of New York v. Cuomo, 645 F.3d 154, 164 (2d Cir. 2011). For the reasons outlined below, Bragg has not demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits.

B. The Subpoena Serves a Valid Legislative Purpose and Is Not Ultra Vires or Otherwise Unconstitutional

Congressional committees have constitutional authority to conduct investigations and issue subpoenas because “each House has power ‘to secure needed information’ in order to legislate.” Trump v. Mazars USA, LLP, 140 S. Ct. 2019, 2031 (2020) (quoting McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 161 (1927)); see Eastland v. U.S. Servicemen’s Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 504 (1975). This “power of inquiry—with process to enforce it—is an essential and appropriate auxiliary to the legislative function.” McGrain, 273 U.S. at 174 (emphasis added). “The power of the Congress to conduct investigations is inherent in the legislative process.” Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 187 (1957).

⁵ The Second Circuit has previously instructed that a district court may also grant a preliminary injunction when there are “sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly in the movant’s favor” and “irreparable harm in the absence of the injunction.” Kelly v. Honeywell Int’l, Inc., 933 F.3d 173, 184 (2d Cir. 2019). Neither party contends that this standard should apply here.

Of course, this power is not limitless. “[T]here is no congressional power to expose for the sake of exposure.” Id. at 200. Nor may Congress issue subpoenas “for the purpose of ‘law enforcement,’” because that power is assigned “to the Executive and the Judiciary.” Mazars, 140 S. Ct. at 2032 (quoting Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 161 (1955)). However, the Supreme Court has described the congressional power of inquiry as “broad” and “indispensable.” Watkins, 354 U.S. at 187, 215. Indeed, without its investigative powers, “Congress would be shooting in the dark, unable to legislate ‘wisely or effectively.’” Mazars, 140 S. Ct. at 2031 (quoting McGrain, 273 U.S. at 175).

Congress may conduct inquiries “into the administration of existing laws, studies of proposed laws, and [particularly relevant here,] ‘surveys of defects in our social, economic or political system for the purpose of enabling the Congress to remedy them.’” Mazars, 140 S. Ct. at 2031 (quoting Watkins, 354 U.S. at 187). Importantly, a congressional subpoena is valid only if it is “related to, and in furtherance of, a legitimate task of the Congress.” Watkins, 354 U.S. at 187. The subpoena must serve a “valid legislative purpose,” Quinn, 349 U.S. at 161, and “concern[] a subject on which ‘legislation could be had,’” Eastland, 421 U.S. at 506 (quoting McGrain, 273 U.S. at 177). The role of a court in evaluating a congressional subpoena is strictly limited to determining only whether the subpoena is “plainly incompetent or irrelevant to any lawful purpose . . . in the discharge of [the Committee’s] duties.” McPhaul v. United States, 364 U.S. 372, 381 (1960) (emphasis added) (quoting Endicott Johnson Corp. v. Perkins, 317 U.S. 501, 509 (1943)).

Jordan and the Committee have identified several valid legislative purposes underlying the subpoena. See Def. Mem. 15–17. First, they reference the Committee’s interest in investigating the use of federal forfeiture funds in connection with DANY’s investigation of President Trump. See Def. Mem. 8, 17; see also Ex. 1 at 2; Exhibit V (“Ex. V”) to the Tatelman Dec. [ECF No. 32-22]. There can be no doubt that Congress may permissibly investigate the use of federal funds, particularly where the result of the investigation might prompt Congress to pass legislation changing how such funds are appropriated or may be spent. See Sabri v. United States, 541 U.S. 600, 608 (2004) (“The power to keep a watchful eye on expenditures and on the reliability of those who use public money is bound up with congressional authority to spend in the first place.”); U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1. DANY has conceded that it used federal forfeiture funds in its investigation of President Trump. See Ex. 19; Compl. ¶¶ 78, 81. Defendants represent that the Committee is considering legislation to prohibit the use of federal forfeiture funds to investigate a current or former President. Def. Mem. at 8; Ex. V. This purpose, standing alone, is clearly sufficient to justify the subpoena and thereby to end this Court’s inquiry. On the record at the hearing on the motion for emergency relief, Bragg’s counsel conceded that the investigation of DANY’s use of federal funds is a valid legislative purpose.

Second, Defendants identify the possibility of legislative reforms to insulate current and former presidents from state prosecutions, such as by removing criminal actions filed against them from state to federal court. See Def. Mem. 8–9. Congress, of course, has authority to consider, and to investigate, this potential legislative reform. See Watkins, 354 U.S. at 187 (“The [investigative] power of the Congress . . . encompasses inquiries concerning the administration of existing laws as well as proposed or possibly needed statutes.” (emphasis added)); U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18 (defining the congressional power “[t]o make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers”). And Congress also has authority to investigate legislative reforms to prevent local prosecutions that could potentially interfere with federal elections. See Mazars, 140 S. Ct. at 2031 (It is legitimate for Congress to conduct “inquiries into the administration of existing laws” and “proposed laws” that seek to address problems “in our social, economic or political system.”). Although Bragg speculates that any such legislation would be unconstitutional, see Pl. Mem. 15, that issue is for another day. The Court will not, and indeed cannot, block congressional investigation into hypothetical future legislation based on Bragg’s speculation that such legislation would not pass constitutional muster. See Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Wallace, 288 U.S. 249, 262 (1933) (courts may not make “abstract determination[s] . . . of the validity of a statute”).⁶

C. The Subpoena Does Not Implicate the Sovereign Interests of New York

Bragg suggests that these are not the Committee’s true objectives. Instead, he contends that the subpoena is actually intended “to undermine and obstruct New York’s criminal case against Mr. Trump and [to] retaliate against the District Attorney.” Pl. Mem. 7. The Court cannot passively accept this contention. The Court is required to presume that a congressional committee’s stated legislative object is “the real object.” McGrain, 273 U.S. at 178 (When it appears that Congress is investigating on a subject matter in aid of legislating, “the presumption should be indulged that this was the real object.”). Moreover, even if Bragg’s hypotheses about the Committee’s real motivations were correct, they are irrelevant. “It is not a court’s ‘function’ to invalidate a congressional investigation that serves a legislative purpose.” Comm. on Ways & Means, U.S. House of Representatives v. U.S. Dep’t of the Treasury, 575 F. Supp. 3d 53, 69 (D.D.C. 2021), aff’d sub nom., 45 F.4th 324 (D.C. Cir. 2022) (quoting Watkins, 354 U.S. at 200). Indeed, the Supreme Court has instructed that “[s]o long as Congress acts in pursuance of its constitutional power, the Judiciary lacks authority to intervene on the basis of the motives which spurred the exercise of that power.” Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109, 132 (1959) (emphasis added). Whatever motives may underlie the Committee’s subpoena, its “inquiry may fairly be deemed within its province.” Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 378 (1951). That is sufficient to resolve this inquiry.⁷

Plaintiff next urges this Court to apply the “heightened standard of review” outlined by the Supreme Court in Trump v. Mazars USA, LLP, 140 S. Ct. 2019 (2020). Pl. Mem. 13. In Mazars, the Supreme Court outlined a four-part analysis relevant in assessing “a subpoena directed at the President’s personal information.” 140 S. Ct. at 2035 (emphasis added). Because “[c]ongressional subpoenas for the President’s personal information implicate[d] weighty concerns regarding the separation of powers,” the Supreme Court instructed courts considering such subpoenas to: (1) “carefully assess whether the asserted legislative purpose warrants the significant step of involving the President and his papers,” (2) “insist on a subpoena no broader than reasonably necessary to support Congress’s legislative objective,” (3) “be attentive to the nature of the evidence offered by Congress to establish that a subpoena advances a valid legislative purpose,” and (4) “be careful to assess the burdens imposed on the President by a subpoena.” Id. at 2035–36 (emphasis added). The Court did not, as Bragg suggests, indicate that the four Mazars factors apply whenever someone argues that a subpoena “implicat[es] significant separation-of-powers concerns.” Pl. Mem. 13. In any event, the same separation of powers concerns are not implicated here. The congressional subpoena in Mazars was directed at materials pertaining to the sitting President of the United States. In contrast, here, the subpoena was issued to a private

⁷ Bragg notes that there is “no prior case in which Congress has attempted to subpoena a state prosecutor for the purpose of extracting information about an ongoing state prosecution.” Pl. Mem. 12 (emphasis omitted). Defendants do not dispute this characterization or cite to any such case. However, there also is no prior case in which a former President of the United States has been criminally charged in a state trial court, suggesting both parties swim in untested waters.

citizen who is no longer employed by any state government and who has written a book and spoken extensively about the subject matter of the congressional inquiry. The Court is not persuaded that Mazars applies to this case.⁸

Even assuming that Mazars were applicable, the Court would reach the same conclusion. With respect to the first factor, Bragg does not demonstrate that the subpoena issued to Pomerantz—a private citizen—will occasion a “constitutional confrontation.” Mazars, 140 S. Ct. at 2035 (quoting Cheney v. U.S. Dist. Ct. for D.C., 542 U.S. 367, 389 (2004)). Congress has the power to compel individuals to testify. See Watkins, 354 U.S. at 187–88 (“It is unquestionably the duty of all citizens to cooperate with the Congress in its efforts to obtain the facts needed for intelligent legislative action. It is their unremitting obligation to respond to subpoenas, to respect the dignity of the Congress and its committees and to testify fully with respect to matters within the province of proper investigation.”); Quinn, 349 U.S. at 160–61 (“There can be no doubt as to the power of Congress, by itself or through its committees, to investigate matters and conditions relating to contemplated legislation. . . . Without the power to investigate—including of course the authority to compel testimony, either through its own processes or through judicial trial—Congress could be seriously handicapped in its efforts to exercise its constitutional function wisely and effectively.” (citations omitted)). Indeed, courts have even compelled individuals actively employed by the executive branch (who at least arguably hold executive privilege, and some of whom are attorneys obligated to protect privileged information) to appear for congressional depositions. See, e.g., Meadows v. Pelosi, No. 1:21-CV-03217 (CJN), 2022 WL 16571232 at *8–13 (D.D.C. Oct. 31, 2022) (dismissing challenge by White House Chief of Staff to a congressional subpoena requesting his appearance for a deposition); Comm. on Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives v. Miers, 558 F. Supp. 2d 53, 106 (D.D.C. 2008) (“[The former White House counsel] is not excused from compliance with the Committee’s subpoena by virtue of a claim of executive privilege that may ultimately be made. Instead, she must appear before the Committee to provide testimony, and invoke executive privilege where appropriate.”); Comm. on Judiciary of U.S. House of Representatives v. McGahn, 968 F.3d 755, 764 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (“The subpoena power is potent. Each House of Congress is specifically empowered to compel testimony from witnesses and the production of evidence in service of its constitutional functions, and the recipient of a subpoena is obligated by law to comply.”). If those individuals could permissibly be deposed, the same is certainly true here.

⁸ Despite having discussed Mazars in his moving brief, Bragg seeks a second chance at arguing its applicability in his reply brief, contending that the case broadly governs subpoenas “seeking a current or former president’s information.” Reply 8. That is clearly incorrect. In any event, the subpoena does not seek a current or former president’s information—it seeks Pomerantz’s testimony. See Ex. 1.

Second, the subpoena seeks only Pomerantz’s testimony (not any documents or materials). Jordan specifically noted that “many of the topics relevant to [the Committee’s oversight]” were discussed—voluntarily and extensively—by Pomerantz in his book, as well as in several public interviews. Ex. 1 at 2 (emphasis added). The subpoena is not, as Bragg contends, an “overbroad fishing expedition.” Pl. Mem. 17.

Third, Bragg criticizes Defendants’ “flimsy evidence” of a valid legislative purpose. Pl. Mem. 17 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Pomerantz Res. 3. But Defendants provide evidence that the Committee is investigating the use of federal forfeiture funds, see Ex. V, and considering the viability of legislation to protect former Presidents from politically motivated state prosecutions, see Exhibit W to the Tatelman Dec. [ECF No. 32-23].⁹ Bragg suggests this evidence is insufficient but his conclusory assertions do not move the needle where, as here, he has the burden of demonstrating entitlement to an “extraordinary remedy.” Winter, 555 U.S. at 24.

⁹ Although Pomerantz contends that he has “little if anything to say that will advance the purported legislative purpose,” Pomerantz Res. at 5, it is not this Court’s role to prescribe the most effective manner for congressional inquiry. See Eastland, 421 U.S. at 509 (“The very nature of the investigative function—like any research—is that it takes the searchers up some ‘blind alleys’ and into nonproductive enterprises. To be a valid legislative inquiry there need be no predictable end result.”).

Bragg and Pomerantz insist that Pomerantz’s testimony cannot advance any valid legislative purpose because, in essence, everything Pomerantz is prepared to say is already in his book and he does not have information about DANY’s use of federal funds. Pl. Mem. 11, 22 (“[T]he Committee already has his book.”); Pomerantz Res. 2; Reply 5. Bragg and Pomerantz are not entitled to unilaterally narrow the universe of acceptable inquiry to the information and mental impressions that Pomerantz decided to sell in the pages of his book. See Eastland, 421 U.S. at 509; McGahn, 968 F.3d at 764. If Pomerantz does not have any information about DANY’s use of federal funds, he may say so if asked at his deposition.

Finally, Bragg’s suggestion that the subpoena “would substantially burden both the New York criminal justice system itself and the District Attorney’s Office” is without merit. Pl. Mem. 18. Pomerantz is a former prosecutor. He is not involved in the state prosecution in any way. Bragg provides no reason to conclude that a deposition of a former employee would interfere with DANY or any of its ongoing prosecutions. The pending prosecution will move forward in the ordinary course regardless of whether the Committee deposes Pomerantz. Further, Pomerantz was not even employed with DANY at the time President Trump was indicted. Pomerantz admits as much. Pomerantz Dec. ¶ 4. He has stated that the materials in his book would “have no bearing on the litigation of [the criminal prosecution of President Trump]” and would “not prejudice any investigation or prosecution of Donald Trump.” Inside Account at 278–79. Moreover, Pomerantz emphasizes that he “was not involved in the decision to bring the pending indictment against Mr. Trump.” Pomerantz Res. 5 (emphasis added). Bragg therefore does not satisfy his burden of demonstrating that the subpoena poses a threat “to a state executive officer, a state judicial proceeding, [or] our federal system itself.” Pl. Mem. 14. The Court is further unmoved by Bragg’s purported concern at the prospect of “inject[ing] partisan passions into a forum where they do not belong.” Pl. Mem. 19. By bringing this action, Bragg is engaging in precisely the type of political theater he claims to fear.

While the Court need not decide the ultimate merits of Bragg’s claims at this stage, serious constitutional infirmities are evident with respect to a lawsuit against Defendants Jordan and the Committee. See Def. Mem. 5–9. The Speech or Debate Clause states: “for any Speech or Debate in either House,” Senators and Representatives “shall not be questioned in any other Place.” U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1. Although the Clause speaks only of “Speech or Debate,” it has been interpreted to protect all “legislative acts.” See Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306, 312 (1973) (citation omitted). The Clause provides individual members of Congress and congressional committees broad immunity from civil suits. See Eastland, 421 U.S. at 501–03; Doe, 412 U.S. at 313; see also Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 807 (1982); Supreme Ct. of Virginia v. Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., 446 U.S. 719, 731–33 (1980). Because Jordan and the Committee are likely immune, Defendants contend that they are necessary parties who cannot be joined and that, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 19, the action cannot be maintained. See Def. Mem. 10–14. Bragg disagrees.¹⁰ The Court need not resolve this issue, but the distinct possibility of immunity weighs against concluding that Bragg has shown a likelihood of success on the merits. In all events, Bragg confirms in his reply brief that the Court must consider whether there is a “legitimate legislative purpose” for the subpoena he seeks to quash. Reply 3. As explained above, Jordan and the Committee clearly have identified a legitimate legislative purpose, and accordingly the Court will not issue a temporary restraining order.

¹⁰ Despite pervasive discussion of the Speech or Debate Clause in the relevant case law and governing authority, Bragg neglected to mention the Clause whatsoever in his moving brief. However, Bragg seeks an opportunity to address this “material issue[.]” in his unauthorized reply brief. See Letter Motion for Leave to File Reply [ECF No. 41].

D. To the Extent They Have Not Been Waived, the Claimed Privileges Are Not Jeopardized by the Subpoena

Plaintiff's assertion that the subpoena "seeks grand jury material" and "documents and communications protected by the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine" does not salvage his motion. Pl. Mem. 20. As an initial matter, the subpoena does not, as Plaintiff suggests, "seek[]" any "material," "documents," or "communications." Pl. Mem. 20. The subpoena only seeks Pomerantz's testimony. See Ex. 1. Although Bragg assumes that the questioning will stray into impermissible territory, the Court declines Bragg's invitation to blindly speculate about what questions might hypothetically be posed to Pomerantz at the deposition. See Nat'l Org. for Marriage, Inc. v. Walsh, 714 F.3d 682, 687 (2d Cir. 2013) ("A claim is not ripe if it depends upon 'contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or indeed may not occur at all.'" (quoting Thomas v. Union Carbide Agr. Prods. Co., 473 U.S. 568, 580–81 (1985)); Ass'n of Car Wash Owners Inc. v. City of New York, 911 F.3d 74, 85 (2d Cir. 2018) ("[F]ederal courts may not give an opinion advising what the law would be upon a hypothetical state of facts." (citing Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 241 (1937) (internal quotation marks omitted))).

Bragg's throw-everything-at-the-wall approach to privilege is unpersuasive. As an initial matter, Bragg concedes that "Jordan represents that he does not seek information protected by New York's grand jury secrecy laws." Pl. Mem. 20 (emphasis added). Although Bragg vaguely asserts that the Committee's "inquiry could [still] include questions about grand jury matters," this Court will not quash a subpoena based solely on Bragg's seemingly endless string of "what ifs." Pl. Mem. 21 (emphasis added). Even if grand jury secrecy were implicated by the subpoena, Bragg's argument makes little sense because Pomerantz was not involved in securing the grand jury indictment. Pomerantz Dec. ¶ 3. Indeed, at the time Pomerantz left DANY, "there [had] been no New York state criminal prosecution of Donald Trump." Inside Account at 278. And even assuming Pomerantz did have some relevant information about the grand jury, Pomerantz is clearly aware that he “cannot disclose details about grand jury proceedings” since he professes that he authored his book in such a way that his “account of the investigation did not violate the grand jury secrecy requirement.” Id. at 195, 277.¹¹

With respect to Bragg’s various other claims of privilege,¹² the Court is unpersuaded that judicial intervention is needed to ensure that any privilege that might exist is preserved. Pomerantz is impressively credentialed. He had a long and successful career: he graduated from the University of Michigan Law School, served as a law clerk for a distinguished federal judge, clerked at the United States Supreme Court, was a law professor, worked as a federal prosecutor for the United States Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York, and as a criminal defense attorney for many years, including as a senior partner at a prominent New York City law firm (Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison). See Inside Account at 3–4. In short, Pomerantz is a very experienced, sophisticated, and extremely capable attorney. Moreover, the Committee’s procedural rules permit two additional lawyers to accompany Pomerantz to the deposition. See Rules of Procedure of the Committee on the Judiciary, R. XI(k)(3) (2023) (“Rule XI”).¹³ This

¹³ Although the rules only permit “personal, nongovernmental attorneys” to accompany Pomerantz, see Rule XI, this Court has no authority to rewrite the Committee’s rules. See Exxon Corp. v. F.T.C., 589 F.2d 582, 590 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (“[W]e are sympathetic to appellants’ concern for safeguarding highly confidential information worth millions of dollars, but for this court on this record to establish any such requirement would clearly involve an unacceptable judicial intrusion into the internal operations of Congress.”).

Court is confident that Pomerantz and his counsel are fully knowledgeable about the privilege and confidentiality obligations he owes to DANY and, indeed, are duty bound to ensure they are maintained.¹⁴ See Model Rules of Pro. Conduct 1.6 (duty of confidentiality); 1.9 (duties to former clients) (Am. Bar Ass’n 2023); see also Inside Account at 279 (noting that Pomerantz “overcame [his] angst” about “describing the inner dialogue of the investigation” because “the Trump investigation was in a class of its own”). The “recipients of legislative subpoenas . . . have long been understood to retain common law and constitutional privileges with respect to certain materials, such as attorney-client communications and governmental communications protected by executive privilege.” Mazars, 140 S. Ct. at 2032.

Pomerantz is now represented by a team of capable lawyers from his former firm Paul, Weiss. See Notices of Appearance [ECF Nos. 28, 29]. Bragg provides no reason to assume those accomplished lawyers would not also be fully knowledgeable about Pomerantz’s ethical obligations with respect to privilege and confidentiality. Accordingly, the deposition should proceed in the normal course, question by question, and Pomerantz is free to object, personally or through his counsel, and decline to answer any questions when (and if) appropriate. See Miers, 558 F. Supp. 2d at 106–07. Indeed, Defendants confirm that “[t]o the extent that questions are asked that Pomerantz believes he is not permitted to answer, he would retain the ability to decline to answer or to assert an applicable privilege.” Def. Mem. 19.

Bragg expresses concern that the Committee’s rules permit “a partisan decisionmaker” to “overrule privilege objections” at the deposition and “order a witness to answer a question.” Pl.

¹⁴ Pomerantz has made it abundantly clear that he will seek to comply with Bragg’s instructions and to invoke privilege. See Pomerantz Res. 4 (“The District Attorney . . . instructed Mr. Pomerantz, in writing, to provide no information to the [Committee] in response to the subpoena.”); see also Pomerantz Dec. ¶ 6 (“[I]f I were to testify, I believe that the District Attorney would instruct me to assert the various claims of privilege he has identified in his moving papers.”). This claimed deference to the District Attorney’s command is a surprising about-face, particularly given that Pomerantz previously declined the District Attorney’s request to review his book manuscript before publication. See Compl. ¶ 90.

Mem. 23. The Court cannot decide, before-the-fact, “what information or answers [Pomerantz] may validly be required to give or the validity of any objections he might make.” Sanders v. McClellan, 463 F.2d 894, 903 (D.C. Cir. 1972); see also Ansara v. Eastland, 442 F.2d 751, 753 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (noting that “courts [should] avoid use of extraordinary remedies that involve ‘needless friction’ with a coordinate branch of the government” where “the plaintiffs [sought] relief that would precede and seek to relate to the conduct of a future legislative hearing” (emphasis added) (citation omitted)). But in the event that this situation does arise, Pomerantz has avenues for judicial review. See, e.g., Watkins, 354 U.S. at 214–16; United States v. House of Representatives of U.S., 556 F. Supp. 150, 152 (D.D.C. 1983) (“[C]onstitutional claims and other objections to congressional investigatory procedures may be raised as defenses in a criminal prosecution.”).

Pomerantz complains that he is in a “legally untenable position” because he will be forced to make a choice between “legal or ethical consequences” or “potential criminal and disciplinary exposure.” Pomerantz Res. 4–5. The Court, again, is unable to surmise whether Pomerantz will actually face such a dilemma. In addition, the Court notes that Pomerantz is in this situation because he decided to inject himself into the public debate by authoring a book that he has described as “appropriate and in the public interest.” Inside Account at 280.

Finally, Bragg cannot seriously claim that any information already published in Pomerantz’s book and discussed on prime-time television in front of millions of people is protected from disclosure as attorney work product (or otherwise). See Pl. Mem. 21–22. On the record at the hearing on the motion for emergency relief, Bragg’s counsel admitted that Pomerantz’s book did not preserve the confidences of the District Attorney’s Office. While Bragg maintains that Pomerantz’s inappropriate disclosures cannot waive DANY’s privilege, such a claim is belied by DANY’s inaction in response to Pomerantz’s known plan to publish a book about DANY’s investigation into President Trump. If that information ever was protected from disclosure as attorney work product,¹⁵ the protection has been waived by DANY. Bragg concedes that he was aware of Pomerantz’s intention to publish the book before it was published. Compl. ¶ 90. Although Bragg contends that he “diligently sought to protect [the privilege],” he merely “remind[ed] Mr. Pomerantz of his obligations not to disclose confidential or privileged information and request[ed] the opportunity for prepublication review.” Pl. Mem. 21. By Bragg’s own admission, Pomerantz declined the request for pre-publication review and proceeded to publish the book anyway. Pl. Mem. 21–22. There is no evidence that DANY took any action before the book was published—such as seeking to enjoin publication or distribution.¹⁶ Similarly, after publication, DANY again took no action. It did not request a gag order, seek an injunction, pursue Pomerantz for money damages, refer Pomerantz for an ethics inquiry, or even raise any concerns about the publication with Pomerantz. This repeated inaction constitutes acquiescence to the disclosure of any otherwise privileged information. See, e.g., Cruz v. Coach Stores, Inc., 196 F.R.D. 228, 230 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (privilege waived where “Coach raised no objection when . . . Jaspán Associates . . . publicly filed a copy of the [purportedly privileged document and Coach] . . . neither sought its sealing by the Court nor raised any objection with Jaspán Associates.”); von Bulow by Auersperg v. von Bulow, 114 F.R.D. 71, 76 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (“An attorney’s disclosure of communications with his client will constitute a waiver of the attorney-client privilege if the client has . . . acquiesced in the disclosure.”). Because Bragg has never claimed that any information in the book was privileged, he may not do so now simply because it is convenient.

¹⁵ Pomerantz seemingly contends it was not, as he has publicly stated that he is “confident that all of [his] actions with respect to the Trump investigation, including the writing of [his] forthcoming book, are consistent with [his] legal and ethical obligations.” Compl. ¶ 90; see also Inside Account at 279–80 (“The public debate about Trump’s conduct, his unique public status, the circumstances under which my work ended, and the extensive news coverage about the progress of the investigation convinced me that writing this book was appropriate and in the public interest.”).

¹⁶ At the hearing on the motion for emergency relief, the Court repeatedly pressed Bragg to describe what, if any steps, DANY took to preserve its privilege after it became aware that Pomerantz intended to publish a book. In response to that questioning, Bragg’s counsel represented for the first time that at some point, she copied the City’s Department of Investigation on an email containing the letter that DANY sent to Pomerantz reminding him of his ethical obligations to DANY.

In sum, the Court is unwilling to hypothesize about, and prophylactically rule on, the permissibility of questions that may—or may not—arise at the deposition of Pomerantz. Bragg has not shown a likelihood of success on the merits. The Court therefore need not address the other prongs of the temporary restraining order analysis. See Oneida, 645 F.3d at 164.¹⁷

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the motion for a temporary restraining order enjoining the subpoena to depose Mr. Pomerantz and enjoining Mr. Pomerantz from appearing is DENIED.

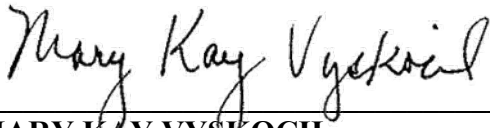

In our federalist system, elected state and federal actors sometimes engage in political dogfights. Bragg complains of political interference in the local DANY case, but Bragg does not operate outside of the political arena. Bragg is presumptively acting in good faith. That said, he is an elected prosecutor in New York County with constituents, some of whom wish to see Bragg wield the force of law against the former President and a current candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. Jordan, in turn, has initiated a political response to what he and some of his constituents view as a manifest abuse of power and nakedly political prosecution, funded (in part) with federal money, that has the potential to interfere with the exercise of presidential duties and with an upcoming federal election. The Court does not endorse either side’s agenda. The sole question before the Court at this time is whether Bragg has a legal basis to quash a congressional subpoena that was issued with a valid legislative purpose. He does not.

¹⁷ In his Complaint, Bragg seeks a declaratory judgment that any future subpoenas served by Jordan or the Committee on Bragg or “any of his current or former employees or officials” are “invalid, unconstitutional, ultra vires, and/or unenforceable” and a “permanent and preliminary injunction enjoining enforcement of any such [future] subpoena.” Compl. ¶ 127; see Compl. ¶ 20. To be clear, Bragg seeks this declaratory judgment for theoretical future subpoenas which Jordan or the Committee may issue against him or others. On the record at the hearing on the motion for emergency relief, Bragg’s counsel represented that he is not seeking such a declaratory judgment at this time.

The parties are encouraged to speak with one another to reach a mutually agreeable compromise regarding how the deposition of Mr. Pomerantz will proceed. This Court will retain jurisdiction over this dispute and any ancillary claims arising out of the inquiry by the Committee relating to the use of federal funds in a manner that may influence the 2024 presidential election. In other words, Bragg may not file successive proceedings under a different index number if and when the Committee in fact issues another subpoena that he finds objectionable or if there are issues with respect to the Pomerantz deposition. The parties are HEREBY ORDERED to file a joint status report within 30 days of the date of this Order.

SO ORDERED.

Mr. [REDACTED] We'll go on the record now.

Good morning. This is a deposition of Mr. Mark Pomerantz, formerly of the District Attorney's Office of New York County.

Chairman Jordan has requested this as part of the committee's oversight of the unprecedented indictment of a former President of the United States and a current declared candidate for that office.

The committee's oversight of the New York County District Attorney's unprecedented prosecutorial conduct will inform the consideration of potential legislative reforms that would, if enacted, insulate current and former Presidents from politically motivated State and local prosecutions.

These potential reforms may include, among other things, legislation to enhance reporting requirements concerning the use of Federal forfeiture funds or to prohibit the use of Federal funds to investigate a current or former President or current Presidential candidate and broadening the existing statutory right of removal of certain criminal cases from State to Federal court.

Because of Mr. Pomerantz's former role as a Special Assistant District Attorney that led the investigation into President Trump's finances, he is uniquely situated to provide information that is relevant and necessary to inform the committee's oversight and potential legislative reforms.

On April 6th of this year, Chairman Jordan issued a subpoena for Mr. Pomerantz to testify at a deposition. I'd like to mark that as exhibit 1.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 1

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Would the witness please state your name for the record, sir?

The Witness. Yes. My name is Mark F. Pomerantz.

Mr. [REDACTED]. And you're joined here today by personal counsel.

I'm here today with my partner, Roberto Finzi, and my associate, Jacob Rosen.

Mr. [REDACTED]. And we're also joined here today by Ms. Dubeck from the New York County District Attorney's Office. We'll have Ms. Dubeck introduce herself.

Ms. Dubeck. I'm Leslie Dubeck. I'm the general counsel of the New York County District Attorney's Office.

Mr. [REDACTED]. And I understand you're also joined by one of your colleagues?

Ms. Dubeck. Oh, yes. Mylan Denerstein from the Gibson Dunn firm.

Mr. [REDACTED]. My name is [REDACTED]. I'm with Chairman Jordan's House Judiciary Committee staff.

I'm going to have the staffers introduce themselves first, and then we'll allow the members to introduce themselves, starting with my colleague, Ms. Nabity.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Chairman Jordan's committee staff.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with Chairman Jordan.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] chief oversight counsel for the House Judiciary Democratic staff.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] House Judiciary Democrat staff.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] with the House Judiciary Democrats.

Mr. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] House Judiciary Democrats.

Mr. [REDACTED]. We're also joined by some of our members. I'll have them introduce themselves as well.

Chairman Jordan. Jim Jordan, Fourth District of Ohio.

Ms. Stefanik. Elise Stefanik, 21st District of New York, House Republican Conference chair.

Mr. Armstrong. Kelly Armstrong, North Dakota.

Mr. Gaetz. Matt Gaetz, First District of Florida.

Mr. Bishop. Dan Bishop, North Carolina.

Mr. [REDACTED] And some members may come in after the proceedings begin, and depending on where we are, we may or may not have them introduces themselves. But certainly if they're going to ask any questions of you, we'll be sure to have introductions.

I'd like to go over the ground rules and guidelines that we will follow during today's deposition.

The committee will conduct the deposition in accordance with Rule XI of the Committee on the Judiciary's Rules of Procedure of the 118th Congress as well as the House rules.

Our questioning will proceed in rounds. The majority will ask questions first for 1 hour, and then the minority will have an opportunity to ask questions for an equal period of time if they choose. We will alternate back and forth until there are no more questions and the interview is over.

We ordinarily take a short break at the end of each hour, and the provision of breaks is totally up to you, sir. You let us know if you need a break, more breaks or less breaks. And you may also ask us to go off the record so you can confer with your counsel.

As you can see, we have an official reporter here taking down everything to make a written record, so we ask that you give verbal responses to all the questions.

Do you understand that?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. [REDACTED] Sometimes the court reporters need us to go back because we're talking over one another. Usually it's our fault. So we may have to go back and repeat a question.

We will only have one staffer asking you a question per round. However, the members can jump in. And ordinarily on our side we like to make sure we have at least 15 or 20 minutes of every hour that we turn it to our members.

We want you to answer our questions in the most complete and truthful manner as possible, so we will take our time. If you have any questions or don't understand one of our questions, please let us know. Our questions will cover a cover a wide range of topics, so if you need clarification at any point just say so.

If you don't know the answer to a question or do not remember -- of course, it's best not to guess -- please give us your best recollection. And it's okay to tell us if you learned information from someone else. The Federal Rules of Evidence aren't applicable here. Just indicate how you came to know the information. And if there are things you don't know or can't remember, just say so.

By law you are required to answer questions from Congress truthfully. Do you understand that?

The Witness. I understand that.

Mr. [REDACTED] Witnesses that knowingly provide false testimony could be subject to criminal prosecution for perjury. Do you understand that?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. [REDACTED] And, of course, as I indicated before we went on the record, I mean no disrespect by mentioning that. You are a veteran lawyer and somebody who obviously has great understanding of how this process works.

Finally, I'd like to make a note that under the deposition rules, the content of what we discuss here today is confidential. And until the chairman and ranking member sort out what portions of the testimony or all the testimony is going to be released, under the House rules it's confidential. Obviously, you're not a party to the House rules, but I mention that for our members and staff.

At this time the court reporter will swear the witness in.

The Reporter. Please raise your right hand.

Do you solemnly declare and affirm, under the penalty of perjury, that the testimony you're about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] do you have any welcoming remarks?

Ms. [REDACTED] We don't have any.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. And before we start our questions, Mr. Wells or Mr. Pomerantz, do you have any remarks you'd like to make to kick things off?

The Witness. I do have a statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. Take your time.

The Witness. I am here because I respect the rule of law. I've spent my working life in service to the rule of law. And the rule of law requires a witness to appear for testimony in response to a subpoena. So I am present as required.

What I do not respect is the use of the committee's subpoena power to compel me to participate in an act of political theater.

This deposition is for show. I do not believe for a moment that I am here to assist a genuine effort to enact legislation or to conduct legislative oversight.

We are gathered here because Donald Trump's supporters would like to use these proceedings to attempt to obstruct and undermine the criminal case pending against him and to harass, intimidate, and discredit anyone who investigates or charges him.

Fortunately, I do not have to cooperate with the cynical histrionics that this deposition represents. Although the rule of law compels me to be here, it does not require that I play a substantive role in a theatrical production. Under the law, I can decline to answer your questions for several reasons.

First, I have been instructed by the Manhattan District Attorney's Office that I should maintain that office's claims of privilege and confidentiality in order to protect the integrity of the pending prosecution and continuing investigation of Donald Trump. I intend to honor the District Attorney's request, and I will not answer questions to which the District Attorney objects.

Although I have written and spoken publicly about the Trump investigation, I did so before any criminal charges were brought against Mr. Trump.

Now that a grand jury has indicted him, the circumstances have changed. With formal charges now pending, the rule of law is best served if the merits of the case against Mr. Trump are litigated before the court that is hearing that case.

This is neither the time nor the place for me to answer questions about the investigation or the pending indictment over the objection of the prosecutors. The charges against Mr. Trump should be heard and decided by a judge and a jury before politicians second-guess their merits or the decision to bring them.

That's how our system works. Those who claim that they respect the rule of law should wait for the courts to do their work.

Second, the rule of law also affords me a personal privilege not to answer your questions. Under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, no person may be compelled to be a witness against himself or herself in a possible criminal case.

Shortly before the publication of my book, the District Attorney's Office warned me that I could face criminal liability if, among other things, I disclosed grand jury material or violated a provision of the New York City Charter dealing with the misuse of confidential information.

When we were before the United States District Court on April 19th of this year, a lawyer for the Manhattan District Attorney's Office said that my book, quote, "exposed me to criminal liability," close quote.

While I am certain that I broke no laws, I am not required to answer questions if my answers might be used against me in a criminal prosecution. The Fifth Amendment is a protection for all citizens, including those who have done nothing wrong.

Therefore, and on the advice of counsel, I will invoke my rights under the Fifth Amendment and I will not answer any questions that could conceivably be used against me in a criminal case.

Finally, the rule of law permits me to refuse to answer questions that are not pertinent to a legitimate legislative function or that seek information that is protected by the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of speech. Under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, I cannot be punished for refusing to answer such questions.

There may be other privileges, such as the attorney-client privilege or the work product privilege, that are available to me with respect to certain questions.

For all these reasons, I will not be answering questions that relate to my work in the District Attorney's Office, my book, or public statements I have made in the past.

It gives me no joy to invoke my legal rights, but I am glad that the law allows me not to cooperate with this performance of political theater.

As an American, I am privileged to have the legal rights that I assert today, and I am hopeful that I live in a country that will continue to respect them.

Mr. [REDACTED] On that note, I would just remark for the record that we, the Congress, recognizes constitutional-based privileges but not common law based-privileges. And as we represented to the Second Circuit, the committee will consider any invocation of privilege and accompanying explanation on an individualized question-by-question basis.

So even though it might get repetitive, we are going to ask for an explanation for each objection and then consider your explanation.

The chairman may rule -- he may overrule the objection, and in that instance we would instruct you to answer the question. At the end of the process, we'll maybe tally up the questions that haven't been answered and offer you a chance to change your mind. And if we do need to bring you back or pursue additional proceedings, we will -- we'll write you a letter, and we'll proceed on that basis.

Mr. Wells. Can I reply?

Mr. [REDACTED] Certainly, sir.

Mr. Wells. Today is not the day to debate the merits of explanations for asserting privileges. He will assert the privilege, the committee members may rule on the privilege, the record will be made, but we are not going to debate the merits. That is for a court if we ever get in front of a court.

So I have no problem if you're making a ruling. The record will be made and we'll move on to the next question. But we are not going to debate the legitimacy of any particular privilege so the record will be clear with respect to his assertions.

Mr. [REDACTED] Fair enough sir. I hope I didn't indicate to you that I wanted to have a debate with you on the record.

Mr. Wells. No. I'm responding to the phrase "explanations."

Mr. [REDACTED] Well, explanation --

Mr. Wells. If I misunderstood what you meant, we can --

Mr. [REDACTED] I think by explanation, it's the nature of the -- is it based on the Fifth Amendment or is it based on what the District Attorney's Office has told you.

Mr. Wells. That's very common.

Mr. [REDACTED] That's what we're looking for.

Mr. Wells. Yes, that's very common.

Mr. [REDACTED] We're not looking for the case citations and so forth.

With that, I'll begin my hour. Hopefully this will be a productive hour and find some questions that you want to answer.

I'll note it's 10:21. I'll be referring, sir, to your book. If you need a copy, we can provide you one.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q On page 1 of your book, you state that when you joined the Trump investigation you got countless emails and telephone calls from friends and colleagues urging me to go get him.

Was that statement accurate?

A Mr. [REDACTED] I acknowledge writing the book, but I'm not going to expand beyond what is contained in the book for the reasons reflected in my opening statement.

Q But surely you can concur that the statement was accurate?

A I think I can concur that you have read accurately from the book, which speaks for itself.

Q Okay.

A I'm not disputing your --

Q But your book's accurate, right?

A I'm not going to expand beyond acknowledging that I wrote this book.

Q But you didn't put anything intentionally false in the book, correct?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q Okay. What did you --

A One way or the other.

Q Okay. What did you understand your friends and colleagues to mean when they were urging you to go get him?

A Again, I'm not going to go beyond what is stated in the book, and I assert my rights as reflected in the statement that I made at the outset.

Q And how did you respond to your friends and colleagues when they urged you to go get him?

A I'm not going to answer your questions for the reasons stated.

Chairman Jordan. Did they really say "go get him"?

The Witness. Again, Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to respond beyond what is printed in the book.

Chairman Jordan. Did they not say "go get him"?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer your question.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q What was your opinion of President Trump at the time that you joined the District Attorney's Office?

A I refuse to answer your question on the basis of the rights that are outlined in the statement that I made.

Q What was your opinion of President Trump's actions as President and the policies of the Trump administration at the time you joined the District Attorney's Office?

A For the reasons indicated in my statement, I'm not going to answer your question.

Q On page 129 of your book it states: "Nor was there any conversation about politics, about the 2020 election, the Stop the Steal shenanigans, or whether Trump needed to be prosecuted because his behavior as President was repugnant to us or others."

Sir, was the behavior of the President repugnant to you?

A Mr. [REDACTED] I respect your right to ask the question, and I hope you'll respect my right not to answer it for the reasons stated. And I refuse to answer it.

Mr. [REDACTED] We're marking as exhibit 2 some remarks of Justice Jackson.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 2

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Are you familiar with this speech that the Attorney General at the time and subsequently Supreme Court Justice Jackson made at the Second Annual Conference of U.S. Attorneys in April of 1940?

A I'm confident I wasn't present. But I'm not going to answer your question whether I'm familiar with the speech from having later become aware of it.

Q Okay. Are you aware that it says in the second sentence: "The prosecutor has more control over life, liberty, and reputation than any other person in America. His discretion is tremendous. He can have citizens investigated and, if he is that kind of person, he can have this done to the tune of public statements and veiled or unveiled intimations."

Are you familiar with that?

A I see it in the exhibit that you've handed me.

Q And do you agree with that statement of Justice Jackson?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q Justice Jackson -- Attorney General Jackson at the time -- further stated: "While the prosecutor at his best is one of the most beneficial forces in our society, when he acts from malice or other base motives, he is one of the worst."

Do you agree with that statement, sir?

A I'm not going to answer your question, Mr. [REDACTED] for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Q "There is a most important reason why the prosecutor should have, as nearly as possible, a detached and impartial view of all the groups in his community. Law enforcement is not automatic. It isn't blind. One of the greatest difficulties of the position is that he must pick his cases, because no prosecutor can even investigate all of the cases in which he receives complaints.

"What every prosecutor is practically required to do is to select the cases for prosecution and to select those in which the offense is the most flagrant, the public harm the greatest, and the proof the most certain.

"If the prosecutor is obliged to choose his cases, it follows that he can choose his defendants. Therein is the most dangerous power of the prosecutor: that he will pick people that he thinks he should get, rather than pick cases that need to be prosecuted."

Are you familiar with that statement from the former Attorney General?

A I see it in the statement, yes.

Q And do you agree with that?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q "With the law books filled with a great assortment of crimes, a prosecutor stands a fair chance of finding at least a technical violation of some act on the part of almost anyone. In such a case, it is not a question of discovering the commission of a crime and then looking for the man who has committed it, it's a question of picking the man and then searching the law books, or putting the investigators to work, to pin some offense on him."

Do you agree that's a concern?

A I agree that it is reflected in the statement. Beyond that, I'm not prepared to answer your question.

Q "It is in this realm in which the prosecutor picks some person whom he dislikes or desires to embarrass, or selects some group of unpopular persons and then looks for an offense, that the greatest danger of abuse of prosecuting power lies."

Do you agree with that?

A Again, Mr. [REDACTED] I see that in the statement, and I'm not prepared to respond to the question whether I agree or disagree with it.

Q Are you familiar with the American Bar Association's Criminal Justice Standards, specifically standard 3-1.6?

A For the reasons indicated in my statement, I'm not going to respond to your question.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. I'd like to mark this for the record.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 3

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Finzi. 3?

Mr. [REDACTED] The standard --

Mr. Finzi. Sorry. Is it exhibit 3?

Mr. [REDACTED] Exhibit 3, yes. And we're looking at standard 3-1.6, improper bias prohibited.

Section (a): "The prosecutor should not manifest or exercise, by words or conduct, bias or prejudice based upon the race, sex, religion, national origin, disability, age, sexual orientation, gender identity, or socioeconomic status. A prosecutor should not use other improper considerations, such as partisan or political or personal considerations, in exercising prosecutorial discretion. A prosecutor should strive to eliminate implicit biases, and act to mitigate any improper bias or prejudice when credibly informed that it exists within the scope of the prosecutor's authority."

Is this type of ABA standard something that the New York County District Attorney's Office follows?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to respond to your question for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] "A prosecutor's office" -- this is section (b) -- "A prosecutor's office should be proactive in efforts to detect, investigate, and eliminate improper biases."

Do you think during your time at the New York County District Attorney's Office you were proactive in your efforts to detect, investigate, and eliminate bias?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to respond to your question.

Mr. [REDACTED] Are you familiar with the Department of Justice's --

Chairman Jordan. What is the specific objection here? Is it -- you cited, I think, three in your opening statement. Which one are you asserting?

The Witness. As to this question, I am asserting all of the bases, both the objection of the District Attorney's Office, the rights indicated in the fifth paragraph of my statement, which refer to the Fifth Amendment guarantee against --

Chairman Jordan. You're asserting -- in your opening statement, you referenced the District Attorney's Office and you may have to assert your Fifth Amendment rights. Are you asserting those now?

The Witness. I am asserting those now.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. Issa. Could we have that in the future? Because the record is not clear when you just lump them all together. I think we'd like to know whether it's the Fifth Amendment or specific each one, because if it goes to a judge later, the judge is going to say: Which one? We should have that clear on the record if it's one, two, three, or four different ones. I think the record should be clear.

Mr. Wells. That is a fair comment.

Paragraph 4 of the statement refers to the D.A.'s objections. Paragraph 5 refers to the Fifth Amendment. And paragraph 6 refers to his First Amendment and due process objections.

Mr. Issa. So if you could just --

Mr. Wells. So We will identify.

Mr. Issa. -- state the paragraph each time --

Mr. Wells. We will.

Mr. Issa. -- that would be great.

Mr. Wells. Right.

Mr. Issa. Thank you. The number will be sufficient.

Chairman Jordan. And could we get a copy of the statement?

The Witness. Sure.

Mr. [REDACTED] And I'll stop briefly. I just want to welcome some of the new members have that have joined us, starting with Mr. Issa.

Do you want to introduce yourself for the record?

Mr. Issa. I'm Congressman Darrell Issa. I have been in a few of these before. I'm from California.

Mr. [REDACTED] And, Chairman Schiff, down at the end of the table?

Mr. Schiff. I don't have any questions.

Mr. [REDACTED] No. I'm just introducing you.

Mr. Schiff. Oh, I'm sorry. Adam Schiff from California.

Mr. [REDACTED] And Ms. Plaskett?

Ms. Plaskett. Good morning. Stacey Plaskett from the Virgin Islands.

Mr. [REDACTED] And, Mr. Goldman, I'm sorry, sir. How are you?

Mr. Goldman. Dan Goldman, New York.

The Witness. Good morning or afternoon.

Mr. Goldman. Well, it's still morning.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. I'm going to mark as exhibit 4 the Department of Justice -- part of the Justice Department manual -- prosecutor's manual, "Principles of Federal Prosecution."

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 4

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Maybe I can get you to answer this question.

You served as a Federal prosecutor, correct?

A I did.

Q And on two separate stints?

A That's correct.

Q Would you be willing to identify for the record when that was?

A Yes. I served as an Assistant United States Attorney from 1978 until 1982, and then I returned to the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York in 1997 where I served as chief of the Criminal Division until mid-1999.

Q And after your time -- in between your time, you also have served as a partner at the Paul, Weiss law firm. Is that fair?

A It was after my time as chief of the Criminal Division that I was a partner at the Paul, Weiss law firm, from March of 2000 until I withdrew from the partnership at the end of 2012.

Q Okay. And have you been a partner at any other law firm?

A Yes.

Q And would you be able to answer that question?

A I can do my best with that.

I was a partner at a small criminal defense boutique known variously as Fischetti & Pomerantz, Fischetti, Pomerantz & Russo. There was one iteration, I think, Fischetti, Feigus & Pomerantz. I was a partner in that firm from 1984 to 1990.

From 1990 to 1997, I was a partner at a law firm then known as Rogers & Wells in New York City.

And for a period of a few months at the beginning of 2000, I was a partner in what had been the Rogers & Wells firm but was from that point forward, beginning January 1st, known as Clifford Chance -- I think it was known as Clifford, Chance, Rogers & Wells for a short period of time.

And I am now a founding principal of a law firm known as the Free and Fair Litigation Group.

Q And as I understand it, you graduated law school from Harvard? Is that correct?

A No. I graduated --

Q Your undergrad was Harvard?

A I graduated undergrad from Harvard. Then I went to law school at the University of Michigan.

Q Okay. Turning back to exhibit 4. During your time at the Justice Department or since you've been with the District Attorney's Office for New York County, are the "Principles of Federal Prosecution," the U.S. Attorneys' Manual, something that you consult or consider guidelines?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection to the extent you're asking him about his office at the D.A.'s Office.

The Witness. Could I have a moment?

Mr. [REDACTED] Of course.

We'll go off the record while the witness is conferring with his counsel.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Back on the record.

The Witness. Yes. Thank you.

On the advice of counsel, I will continue to assert my privilege, in particular the privilege referenced in the fifth paragraph of my opening statement, which is the privilege against self-incrimination.

Also, I believe there was an objection from Ms. Dubeck with respect to the position of the Manhattan District Attorney's Office. And as I indicated in the statement, I will honor that objection and refuse to answer.

So there are several bases for refusing to answer that question.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. So one of the bases is your Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination about whether the District Attorney's Office follows or relies on the U.S. Attorneys' Manual as a guideline?

A Yes.

Q Did I get that right?

A You did get that right, yes.

Q Okay.

A Thank you.

Mr. [REDACTED] And as I understand it, the District Attorney's office has objected to that question, whether the D.A.'s Office considers some of these standards?

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent you're asking about the D.A. Office's considerations, yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q What was the address of the District Attorney's Office in New York County?

A One Hogan Place, New York, New York.

Q And how frequently did you go to the office when you were a special district attorney? Did you have an office physically at that address?

A The office is located in several buildings around One Hogan Place. It's not all in one contiguous space of offices. There were several office premises.

Having clarified that, I'm not going to answer your question about how often I was physically at the offices of the Manhattan District Attorney.

Q Did you have your own desk there?

A Again, I'm not going to respond to your question.

Q On the basis of what?

A On the basis of the fifth paragraph of my statement. Conveniently, Mr.

[REDACTED] the fifth paragraph relates to the Fifth Amendment.

Q Okay. So really -- so I'm just being clear, and I don't mean to --

A I understand.

Q -- mean any disrespect, but asking the question whether you had a desk at the D.A.'s Office, you're asserting the Fifth Amendment?

Mr. Wells. I think that's what he said.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Okay. Fair enough. Again, I mean no disrespect, sir.

The Witness. Now I'm sure that that's what I said.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q In the book on page 1, you write: "He was responsible for a grave failure of justice."

Who is the "he" in that sentence?

A Well, the book speaks for itself. I don't think there's any ambiguity of the reference.

Q The reference is to the District Attorney Bragg?

A That's how the book reads.

Q Okay. In your book you go through a rather long list of investigative avenues the New York County District Attorney's Office pursued with respect to President Trump, and you refer to the Stormy Daniels matter as the "Zombie" case? Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] What's the basis of that objection?

Ms. Dubeck. To me?

Chairman Jordan. You're the one that objected.

Ms. Dubeck. That you are asking about confidential work of the D.A.'s Office.

Mr. [REDACTED] Well, I'm asking about the book. There's a whole chapter called "The 'Zombie' Case."

The witness can answer the question. I guess you're not going to answer it, but --

A Well, I'm perfectly happy to acknowledge that the book references the Zombie case, and I think you are correct that one of the chapters refers explicitly to the Zombie case. Yeah, chapter 5 and chapter 3. Chapter 3 refers to the Zombie case, and chapter 5 is entitled "The 'Zombie' Case Returns to the Grave."

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay.

A I'm not sure if I've answered your question, but the book certainly contains those references.

Q And was that a case, the Stormy Daniels payment, was that something that Robert Mueller looked into, to your knowledge, and considered investigating and prosecuting?

A I'm not going to answer that question.

Q On what basis? That's more of a history question, I think.

A Yes. Let me confer for a moment with counsel.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. We'll go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. Yes. On the advice of counsel, I will assert my rights under the Fifth Amendment.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And the facts of the Zombie case, in your words, were examined by the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York. Is that correct?

A To the extent the book references the facts embodied in your question, I refer you to the book. But I'm not going to elaborate beyond what's stated in the book.

Q Okay.

A I'm not denying what is written in the book obviously. But I'm not going to expand beyond what's written for the reasons indicated in my opening statement.

Q Okay. And do you know why the Southern District of New York's U.S. Attorney's Office decided not to prosecute President Trump on the facts of the Zombie case?

A I'm not going to answer that question on the basis of each of the paragraphs in my statement.

Q And you stated in your book that it was during the time frame of the spring and summer of 2019, is that correct, that the U.S. Attorney's office was examining the facts of the Zombie case?

A I'm not going to respond to your statement beyond referencing what's in the book.

Q Okay. Are you invoking the Fifth Amendment for that particular one or --

A Yes.

Q And as I understand it, the next --

A I think also the fourth paragraph of my statement.

Q The fourth paragraph. Okay.

A Which references to --

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent you're asking for knowledge he obtained at the D.A.'s Office, I object.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q When did you join the D.A.'s Office? You can tell us that?

A I was sworn in as a special assistant district attorney on February 2nd, 2021.

Q Okay. So the facts I'm asking you about, you know, occurred before you became affiliated with the office?

A I think we can all acknowledge that 2019 occurred before 2021.

Q Right. But did --

A So I'm not taking issue with your statement.

Q Right. But did you learn about the fact that the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York decided -- looked at the Zombie case, the Stormy Daniels payments, and decided not to prosecute? Did you know that information before you came to the New York County District Attorney's Office?

A I'm not going to answer your question.

Q Based on?

A The Fifth Amendment.

Q Okay.

A And the fifth paragraph of my statement.

Q Before your tenure at the District Attorney's Office, in the fall of 2019, you write in your book the office examined the facts of the Zombie case, the Stormy Daniels payment, and commissioned an outside law firm to help the office analyze these questions.

Do you know what law firm that was?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Yeah. I refuse to answer on the basis of the fourth paragraph of my statement and the fifth paragraph of my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Okay.

The Witness. I'm assuming that that's clear and you don't need me to elaborate further since you have the statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] The fourth iteration of the Zombie case, the Stormy Daniels payment, you were a key player in, am I correct, as I understand your book?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, I will invoke my rights not to answer the question for the reasons referenced in my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] And so the fourth iteration of the Zombie case you studied whether there was a money laundering theory to pursue?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. [REDACTED] Which one is that? Sorry.

The Witness. I was referencing the answer I gave to the just previous question where I think I referenced both the fourth and fifth paragraph of my opening statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] And as I understand your book -- and hopefully you can correct me if I get this wrong -- but the legal theory there was President Trump -- I guess he was candidate Trump at this time -- was a victim of extortion. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer as to the last question, if that's acceptable.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. No, but I'm just asking -- I'm just trying to understand this legal theory as you write in your book.

A I understand your question.

Q Okay.

A But for the reasons indicated, I'm not going to go beyond what's stated in the book.

Q Okay. So President Trump, under the fourth iteration of the Zombie case, President Trump as a victim of extortion could be prosecuted for money laundering. Is that -- do I have that understanding right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] Or is that the theory you were pursuing?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to answer the question.

Chairman Jordan. Well, you say right here in the second paragraph on page 60: "In the Trump case, this meant that Clifford had not committed larceny by extortion until she or her lawyer received the hush money payment that Michael Cohen agreed to pay on Trump's behalf."

So you write it right here in the book, but you won't answer the question when

Mr. [REDACTED] describes exactly what you wrote in the book?

The Witness. Actually, I don't think [REDACTED] question embodied what was written in the book. But in any case, I'm asserting my privileges with respect to this question.

Chairman Jordan. Did you really write the book, Mr. Pomerantz?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] And then towards the end of your tenure at the District Attorney's Office, there was a -- as I understand it from your book, and you talk about this on page 61, then page 209 -- another attempt to prosecute the Stormy Daniels Zombie matter at the end of the investigation.

Can you tell us anything about that?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't answer that question, and I'm relying with respect to this question on all of the rights reflected in the statement.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q So, if I may, I'll just read on page 209. "Because we were now contemplating an indictment that featured false business records, Carey and I" -- and who's Carey, by the way?

A I think the book references Carey as Carey Dunn.

Q Okay. "--- spoke about reviving the hush money allegations, which would bring the 'Zombie' theory back from the dead once again. The thought was to charge as false business records not only the documents relating to the SOFCs" -- which stands for statements of financial condition, is that correct, SOFC?

A I think the book defines SOFC as you've indicated. It's an abbreviation for statement of financial condition.

Q Okay. " -- relating to the SOFCs but also the phony invoices for 'legal services' that had been used to reimburse Michael Cohen for the money he had paid to Stephanie Clifford."

Do you remember that incident or that part of the case during your time at the New York County District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question for the reasons indicated.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. During your time at the District Attorney's Office, you also examined a number of other potential avenues to prosecute President Trump. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer, if that's acceptable to you.

Mr. [REDACTED] You looked at several of President Trump's golf properties, the Briarcliff Golf Club, the Trump National Golf Club, the Jupiter golf course. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, I will rely on the rights articulated in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] You examined whether President Trump could be indicted for defrauding Deutsche Bank. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. [REDACTED] Did Deutsche Bank ever indicate to you that they felt like they were a victim of fraud?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response. Again, I'm relying on the rights referenced in, I believe, paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] You examined whether President Trump could be indicted in New York for papers he submitted to GSA as part of the Old Post Office Hotel that he was attempting to acquire and redevelop. Is that correct?

The Witness. Same answer. I guess same response.

Mr. [REDACTED] You examined during your time in the New York District Attorney's Office whether President Trump could be prosecuted in New York over the Trump International Hotel and Tower in Chicago?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response. Again, I'm trying to just save time and energy. If you want me to elaborate, I will do so.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, did you violate any person's constitutional rights while you worked at the Manhattan D.A.'s Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, did you violate any person's constitutional rights when you worked on the Trump investigation?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have the same response to your question.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you ever violate any canons of legal ethics while you worked at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you violate any canons of legal ethics when you were investigating President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you violate any New York State Bar rules while you were working in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you violate any New York State Bar rules while you were investigating President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you misuse any Federal funds while you were working in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you misuse any Federal funds while investigating President Trump?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Did you break any laws when you worked at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And did you knowingly break any laws when investigating President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. Yield back.

Chairman Jordan. When did you sign the book deal?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer your question, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons indicated.

Chairman Jordan. I'm not asking about what's in it. We already know you're not going to talk about what you said you wrote. I just want to know when you signed the agreement on the book.

The Witness. Yes. And I'm not going to answer that question in reliance on paragraphs 5 and 6 of my statement.

Chairman Jordan. When did you tell the D.A.'s Office you were thinking about writing the book?

The Witness. Likewise, not going to answer that question.

Chairman Jordan. Who's the publisher of the book?

The Witness. Simon & Schuster.

Chairman Jordan. Did they come to you or did you go to them?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question sir.

Chairman Jordan. Did you get an advance for the book?

The Witness. I'm also not going to answer that question.

Chairman Jordan. When did you start writing the book?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question either, for the reasons indicated, although I'm not referencing paragraph 4 of my statement in that regard. That's paragraphs 5 and 6.

Chairman Jordan. How did you select the title?

The Witness. The same answers.

Mr. Armstrong. In your opening statement, you said the Manhattan D.A.'s Office warned you, you could face criminal liability.

You're asserting your -- asserting Fifth Amendment privilege.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Armstrong. Who in the D.A.'s Office told you that?

The Witness. The reference in my statement to -- the comment that was made in open court on April 19th, I believe, was a reference to statements made by Ms. Dubeck, if I'm not mistaken.

Mr. Armstrong. So when was that? I'm sorry.

The Witness. The statement in paragraph --

Mr. Armstrong. 5?

The Witness. 4. Oh, yes, you're right, paragraph 5, says: "When we were before the United States District Court on April 19th, a lawyer from the Manhattan District Attorney's Office said that my book, quote, 'exposed me to criminal liability.'" I think the "me" should be in brackets, by the way.

That was Ms. Dubeck.

Mr. Armstrong. Has there been any follow-up since then with you directly?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question, sir.

Mr. Armstrong. Are you aware of an active investigation?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question.

Mr. Armstrong. Are you aware of any similar investigation?

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. Armstrong. Any convictions?

The Witness. Conviction?

Mr. Armstrong. It's public record. Are you aware of any other similar convictions?

The Witness. Not of me. I can answer that.

Mr. Armstrong. Okay.

The Witness. The reference -- never mind. I'll wait for the next question.

Mr. Armstrong. All right.

Mr. [REDACTED] You also, while you were at the New York County District Attorney's Office, pursued matters at Mar-a-Lago in Florida for investigation?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] Is that correct?

The Witness. I won't answer based on the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] The Seven Springs property and the easement, conservation easement, you pursued that as an avenue to investigate or indict President Trump? Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. [REDACTED] You pursued the Trump property at 40 Wall Street, which is in Manhattan, correct?

The Witness. 40 Wall Street is in Manhattan.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection to the balance of the question.

Mr. [REDACTED] So the objection is to whether you pursued the 40 Wall Street as an avenue to investigate or prosecute President Trump?

The Witness. Yes. And I'm not going to answer that question.

Mr. [REDACTED] You also looked at his -- something you referred to as the triplex apartment in Trump Tower as an avenue to potentially indict or prosecute him for overstating the square footage or value of the property. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you know any of the Members of Congress on this committee?

The Witness. Sorry?

Ms. Stefanik. Do you know any of the Members of Congress on this committee?

The Witness. I do not.

Ms. Stefanik. So you've never had any conversations with Dan Goldman, Adam Schiff, Darrell Issa, Jim Jordan, myself, Kelly Armstrong ever?

The Witness. I believe that's correct.

Ms. Stefanik. How long have you known Cy Vance?

The Witness. Bear with me for one moment, if you would.

Mr. [REDACTED] Go off the record?

The Witness. Yes. Thank you.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. On the advice of counsel, I'll invoke my right not to answer the question under the fifth paragraph.

Ms. Stefanik. Under the Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] Of how well you know Cy Vance? Is that right?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED] could you wait until the noise in the hallway is gone?

Mr. [REDACTED] Absolutely. We're off the record here as we're dealing with the sound.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Stefanik. Do you respect Cy Vance?

The Witness. I'm not going to answer that question. Intending no disrespect to either you or Mr. Vance --

Ms. Stefanik. So you do respect Cy Vance?

The Witness. -- I'm refusing to answer.

Ms. Stefanik. You respect Cy Vance, your public comments, your extensive respect for his tenure at the District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. Yes, I won't answer that question.

Ms. Stefanik. Yes, you won't answer it or, yes, you respect Cy Vance?

The Witness. I won't answer the question.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you view Cy Vance as political?

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question.

Ms. Stefanik. Under what basis?

The Witness. On the basis of my privilege against self-incrimination.

Ms. Stefanik. So you're asserting the Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you -- how long have you known Alvin Bragg?

The Witness. Same answer.

Ms. Stefanik. Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes, ma'am.

Ms. Stefanik. Do you respect Alvin Bragg?

The Witness. Same answer.

Ms. Stefanik. Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. Stefanik. Are you keeping track of how many times he has asserted his Fifth?

Do you view Alvin Bragg as political?

The Witness. I have the same response to your question.

Ms. Stefanik. And you are aware in your book you wrote very specifically on page 204 that Alvin Bragg is a political actor? I'm sorry, 264.

The Witness. Yes. The book states: "Like all elected prosecutors, Alvin Bragg is a political actor."

Ms. Stefanik. And the book also states: "He cares deeply about his progressive agenda."

The Witness. I believe you're quoting accurately from the book.

Ms. Stefanik. Quoting accurately from the book that you yourself wrote, as you just said in this deposition.

The Witness. I've acknowledged writing the book.

Ms. Stefanik. Yes.

Do you recall Alvin Bragg's 2021 campaign for District Attorney.

The Witness. Yes, I won't answer that question in reliance upon my constitutional rights as reflected in my statement.

Ms. Stefanik. The fifth paragraph, Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. And the sixth.

Ms. Stefanik. Alvin Bragg --

The Witness. Paragraph, not amendment.

Ms. Stefanik. I understand.

Alvin Bragg's campaign communicated to voters of his involvement in lawsuits targeting President Trump. Is that your recollection as a native New Yorker?

The Witness. Oh. Yeah, I won't answer that question in reliance on my Fifth Amendment rights.

Ms. Stefanik. Did you tell anyone to vote for Alvin Bragg in either the primary or general election?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question.

Ms. Stefanik. Your book says you did. And the book is true, correct?

The Witness. The book speaks for itself.

Ms. Stefanik. And it's true?

The Witness. I'm not going to go beyond the book.

Ms. Stefanik. So there are no lies in the book? You stand fully behind this publication under your name?

The Witness. That's correct.

Ms. Stefanik. Did you know Alvin Bragg before he became D.A.? Had you ever met him before or worked with him before?

[11:06 a.m.]

The Witness. No.

Ms. Stefanik. What was your assessment of Alvin Bragg as an attorney?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question.

Ms. Stefanik. Have you always been compensated for your legal services prior to your work for the New York District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. No.

Ms. Stefanik. What example were you not compensated? Just give us a few examples.

The Witness. I did particular matters on a pro bono basis.

Ms. Stefanik. And why did you decide not to be compensated, or not to pursue compensation in the case for the New York District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. No, I won't answer that question on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights, insofar as it relates to my work at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

Ms. Stefanik. How would you describe the culture in the District Attorney's Office under Alvin Bragg.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer on the basis of the District Attorney's Office objection and my rights under the Fifth Amendment.

Ms. Stefanik. How would you describe the culture in the District Attorney's Office under Cy Vance.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Ms. Stefanik. On page 58 in your book -- which you have said your book is accurate and factual, "My creative theorizing smacked into District Attorney New York's cautious and conservative culture, as it would several times during my tenure."

So you had challenges working through the culture of the District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't go beyond what is written in the book in responding to your question. I believe you --

Ms. Stefanik. Accurately quoted it?

The Witness. Accurately quoted it, yes.

Chairman Jordan. What about the day one memo? What are your thoughts on that?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. Goldman. Sorry. Which rights?

The Witness. My Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. Goldman. Are you invoking the paragraph six with respect to legislative purpose as well?

The Witness. Yes.

Chairman Jordan. I think it's our hour.

██████████

BY MR. ██████████

Q On page 22 of your book, you referred to President Trump as an "unscrupulous wheeler-dealer. Is that correct?

A Bear with me one moment, if you would.

Did you say page 26?

Q 22.

A 22.

The book indicates, I'm quoting, "I had heard stories 35 years earlier from lawyers who had represented Trump in his business dealings, and I took from those stories that he was an unscrupulous wheeler-dealer."

Q On page 23, you state, "I was not a fan."

A That's a correct -- that line would appear in the book, and you've accurately quoted.

Q On page 98, you refer to the President's "narcissistic personality."

A Correct.

Q On page 99, you state, "Trump was incredibly cheap and completely dishonest."

A That's not correct. The language you are quoting omits the introduction to that --

Q Okay. Fair enough.

A -- verbiage. That is what -- the book indicates that Cohen -- the reference there is to Michael Cohen.

Q Okay.

A Cohen -- again, I'm quoting here, "Cohen also told us that Trump was incredibly cheap and completely dishonest in many of his business dealings."

So in this respect, the book is reciting what information had been relayed by Michael Cohen.

Q On page 103, your book states, "Trump, though, was not just a pathological liar, but a hapless, arrogant, and horrible liar." Is that correct?

A It's correct that that is -- yes, the book -- you've accurately quoted from the book.

Q On page 109, there's a reference to President Trump being a "bully."

A The book contains that reference, yes, sir.

Q I believe you state -- the sentence says, "He was also a bully who cultivated a reputation as a tough guy."

A You've accurately quoted from the book.

Q On the same page, you go on to compare President Trump to John Gotti, the head of the Gambino organized crime family. Is that correct?

A There is a reference to Mr. Gotti, and the book speaks for itself in that regard.

Q Okay.

Mr. Issa. May I ask a quick question?

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay.

Mr. Issa. A few minutes ago, the congresswoman asked you, and you answered that you stand fully behind the book. The book is correct. Do you remember saying that?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. Issa. So you didn't take your -- you waived your Fifth Amendment, and answered the question that the book in its entirety is correct.

My only question to you is, will you answer individual questions since you answered that the entire book is correct? You didn't say it speaks for itself. You said it's correct.

So having answered once that the book is correct, could you please answer for the counsel specifics of if something is correct or not correct? I don't understand where the nuance is.

The Witness. Can we have a moment?

Mr. Issa. Yeah.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Back on the record?

Mr. Finzi. Is there a question pending?

Mr. [REDACTED] Mr. Issa asked whether he would -- you said -- you know, you testified today that the book is accurate in response to Ms. Stefanik.

And Mr. Issa just asked -- Mr. Issa can jump in if I --

Mr. Issa. If the book is accurate in its totality, then why are you not answering individual questions about accuracy? Or can we take that the answer in every case is yes, yes, and yes?

Mr. Finzi. With all respect, we indicated at the beginning that we were not going to debate assertions of privilege. We are asserting the privilege. We are not going to debate whether it's appropriate or not.

Mr. Issa. I'm sorry. The Fifth Amendment and it being waived or not waived is fairly clear. If you answer a question related to something, and you've answered it, then a follow-up is based on the waive as to that.

Now, if your client wants to reengage and simply say, I now am in peril having said that the book is correct, and you now want to take the Fifth every other time, we'll understand.

But I just wanted to clarify, because he had answered that every single nuance of this book effectively by saying the book is correct. He's been very careful with his words. I simply wanted to point that out and ask, would he answer questions that the counsel is asking that are a breakdown of Ms. Stefanik's question?

Mr. Wells. So the record is clear, I will direct him not to answer any questions.

There is no intent to waive the Fifth Amendment in any respect. The book speaks for himself. But I understand your -- I understand your argument.

And as we said at the beginning, the time and place to debate the merits of any of these arguments will be if and when we get in front of a court.

Ms. Dubeck. And I think you have restated the question differently than it was asked. But to the extent --

Mr. Issa. Could we have it read back? I think that's worth our time.

Mr. [REDACTED] Can we go off the record?

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. Back on the record.

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent that was the import of the question, I object.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, do you know --

Mr. Issa. He answered.

Ms. Dubeck. Yes. It's on record.

Mr. Issa. The cat is out of the bag.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, do you know what a subject matter waiver is relative to the Fifth Amendment?

The Witness. I'm not going to debate my understanding of the Fifth Amendment with you, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. But you've heard of a subject matter waiver before, right?

The Witness. I'm not going to indicate my knowledge of the Fifth Amendment and its application.

Mr. Gaetz. I yield back.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Getting back to the John Gotti statement on page 109, you write in your book -- which you've indicated to Ms. Stefanik as true -- "In my career as a lawyer, I had encountered only one other person who touched all of these bases: John Gotti, the head of the Gambino organized crime family and the so-called Teflon Don."

Is that a fair reading of your book?

A Yes, you read it accurately.

Q On page 112, you refer to the President as "a master of breaking the law."

Did I get that correct?

A The full sentence is, "Trump had become a master of breaking the law in ways that were difficult to reach."

Q On page 176 and 177, you write, "I saw him as a malignant narcissist, and perhaps even a megalomaniac who posed a real danger to the country and to the ideals that matter to me. His behavior made me angry, sad, and even disgusted."

Did I read that correctly? Is that what you wrote about President Trump?

A You read it correctly. You omitted the following sentence, which reads that "On a professional level, I could not allow my emotional reaction to Trump to affect my activities. It was completely irrelevant."

Q And is that true? Did your feelings about President Trump affect your work at the New York County District Attorney's Office where you were working for free?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't go beyond the statement in the book.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q On page 186, you posit the question of whether Former President Trump was suffering from some sort of mental condition that made it impossible for him to distinguish between fact and fiction.

Is there a mental condition that you're aware of that makes it difficult for individuals that are afflicted with such a mental condition to distinguish between fact and fiction?

A I refuse to answer your question, Mr. [REDACTED] on the bases indicated in my statement.

Q On page 220 --

Mr. Issa. Are we back to paragraph five again?

The Witness. Paragraph five and paragraph six.

Mr. Issa. Okay.

Mr. Wells. So the record is clear -- and I respect the Congressman's concern -- every objection or refusal to answer today has included paragraph five, the Fifth Amendment. There are some objections where, in addition to the Fifth Amendment, paragraph four, which is the prosecutor's objection, or paragraph six, proper legislative purpose.

But every objection today -- so there's no confusion, so we're all on the same page -- involves paragraph five, an assertion of the Fifth.

Mr. Issa. The only reason I'm asking --

Mr. Wells. Oh, I understand. I actually agree with you.

I would urge my client --

Mr. Issa. If we could assert four, five, six, or five, six, so that we know what we're --

Mr. Wells. You and I are on the same page.

Mr. Issa. I love the shortcut, though.

Mr. Wells. Okay.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q On page 225, you, in your book, write, "I was worried I'd become a Johnny

One Note, always arguing the reasons for prosecuting Trump until I was blue in the face and nobody wanted to hear from me anymore."

Or I'm sorry. I read that incorrectly. "And nobody wanted to hear me anymore."

Did I read that correctly, at least the second time?

A Yes. Yes, sir.

Q And was that true?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Ms. Stefanik. The book is true. He has already answered that the book is true.

The Witness. The book speaks for itself.

Mr. [REDACTED] Mr. Jordan?

Chairman Jordan. On page 170 of the book, you say, "I thought there might be an argument that Trump" -- and you're referring to President Trump there -- "having assumed an office that required him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and having urged the country to trust him to uphold the law, should be held to a higher standard." And the word "higher" is in a different font.

Do you really believe that? Because in the very next paragraph, you say -- you quote our second President, and you say, "We're a Nation of laws and not men," and then "No one is above the law, to the equal treatment of the law."

And I'm trying to figure out which statement do you believe.

The Witness. I am not understanding why you believe there is a tension between those statements.

Mr. [REDACTED] Let me refer you --

Ms. Stefanik. Why do you believe there's no tension between those statements?

Chairman Jordan. Is it equal treatment under the law, or it Donald Trump held to a higher standard than everyone else in the county -- every other citizen in the country?

The Witness. I'm not going to go beyond my book. I think the intent of the language is plain.

Mr. Issa. What reason are you not going beyond the statement that you made?

The Witness. Because I'm not required to do so.

Mr. Issa. Under what?

The Witness. Under either the Fifth Amendment or, in my view, the First Amendment and the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment as well, which indicates, as I understand it, that I cannot be punished for refusing to answer questions that are -- that relate to activities and views that are protected by the First Amendment.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Just to put a final point on what Mr. Jordan was getting at, on page 260, you write, "In my mind, the same evidentiary standard should apply to Presidents and paupers alike."

And I think Mr. Jordan was trying to make the point that, on 170, you wrote, "I thought there might be an argument that Trump, having assumed an office that required him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, should be held to a higher standard of personal conduct."

Isn't that --

Chairman Jordan. Yep.

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent you're asking about his thinking while he was at the District Attorney's Office, I object.

Chairman Jordan. We're asking about the thinking he articulated in his book.

Mr. Issa. If you don't mind, if you're going to object, will you also instruct the witness not to answer?

Ms. Dubeck. I was told I am not allowed to instruct the witness --

Mr. [REDACTED] Yeah, we have an agreement where she is not going to do that.

Mr. Issa. Oh, I apologize. Thank you.

Mr. Finzi. Is there a question pending?

Mr. [REDACTED] Yes.

Mr. Finzi. What is it?

Mr. [REDACTED] I was referring, on page 260, he states, "In my mind, the same evidentiary standard should apply to Presidents and paupers alike." But on page 170, he writes that there might be a higher standard of personal conduct for President Trump.

I'm asking the witness to reconcile those two statements.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question on the basis of the fifth paragraph of my statement and the sixth paragraph.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. I believe our hour is up.

Mr. Finzi. Okay. Is this a good time for a break?

Mr. [REDACTED] Yes, sir. We'll go off the record.

[Recess.]

Ms. [REDACTED] Good morning. We can go back on the record. It's 11:46.

Mr. Pomerantz, thank you, again, for joining us.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q In the first hour, you talked through your length of service as a prosecutor prior to joining the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

Can you remind me again how many years you served as a prosecutor?

A I served 6 years en toto as a Federal prosecutor, one stint for 4 years, and then for just shy of 2 years as criminal division chief.

Q And during that time period, did you ever face discipline for committing any type of prosecutorial misconduct?

A No.

Q Okay. And then after you left public service -- or, I guess, between your public service stints, you were in private practice, right?

A Yes.

Q Did you ever face discipline for violating any provision of the New York State Bar code of ethics?

A No.

Q What about any other bar rules?

A No.

Q For any other jurisdiction?

A I did not.

Q Okay. What day did you resign from the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

A February 23rd, 2022.

May I have one moment?

Q Sure.

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go back on.

The Witness. I understood your question to relate to the period prior to my service at the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Correct. Correct. Prior to your service at the Manhattan District

Attorney's Office.

A Yes. Thank you.

Q And also with respect to the violation of have you violated any provision of the bar code of ethics or any other legal ethics requirements prior to your service with the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

A Yes, that's how I understood your question.

Q Okay. And I'm sorry. You resigned from the District Attorney's Office on what day?

A February 23rd, 2022.

Q Okay. And before you resigned on February 4th, 2022, you made a presentation to the District Attorney's Office, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Yes. I'll refuse to answer on the same basis that I indicated previously.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And during that presentation -- this is from page 221 of your book -- you said that you made this presentation to all of the prosecutors involved in this matter, and you, quote, "began by pointing out the fabrication of values in the SOFCs had been pervasive, substantial, and continuous over many years," right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have the same response --

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Understood.

A Although I acknowledge the statement you read from the book, which reads, "En toto, I began by pointing out that the fabrication of values in the SOFCs had been pervasive, substantial, and continuous over many years."

Q And we talked through earlier in the first hour and it's clarified in your book that SOFC stands for statements of financial condition, correct?

A That is correct.

Q I want to talk through some examples briefly of the statements of financial condition and the references to -- I'm sorry -- the references of values assigned to Mr. Trump's golf courses.

On page 150 of your book, you say that "Trump had bought the Jupiter golf course" -- which is, I believe, a reference to the Jupiter Florida golf course -- "in December 2012 for 5 million, but it was reflected on the backup materials to the 2013 SOFC as being worth $62 million as of June 30th, 2013," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question on the basis of the rights referenced in my statement. In this instance, with respect to all of the rights referenced in the statement.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Understood. You continue on on pages 150 to 151 to describe an accounting scheme, potentially, that Mr. Trump engaged in.

And then on page 151, you say that, through this scheme, Trump was able to claim, quote, "a low value when dealing with the tax assessor, but a vastly higher value in the financial statement that was given to his bankers," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. On the following --

Mr. Goldman. Same answer, meaning it was accurately read from the book, but you're not going to expand on it?

The Witness. That's true, although I note the book makes a reference to, as Michael Cohen had testified, Trump was claiming a low value in dealing with the tax assessor, and then it goes on from there.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And it says up above that, "The bottom line was that the numbers on Trump's 2013 financial statement included a purported value for the Jupiter golf course of 62 million. Trump had paid only 5 million to buy it just a few months earlier, and he later sued the Palm Beach County tax authorities, arguing that they should have respected the fact that he bought the property in an arm's-length transaction for only $5 million," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. And I'm refusing to answer that question for the reasons indicated.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. On the following page, you discuss Trump's triplex apartment.

You say that "Trump's statements of financial condition" -- SOFCs -- "for 2015 and 2016 reported the value of the apartment at $327 million, an amount much higher than the price anyone has ever paid for a private residence in the United States from the beginning of the country through 2021," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And you continue on and say, "The accounting backup for the valuation of Trump's triplex reflected that its value over $300 million was based largely on its reported size of 30,000 square feet," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And then you go on and you say that there was an article published in Forbes that reported that the Trump triplex was actually just shy of 11,000 square feet," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And you say that on the basis of expert valuations, your experts later pegged the actual reasonable value of the triplex at roughly $16 million, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q So in these paragraphs, you lay out a scheme where Mr. Trump initially valued his apartment at $327 million and said it was 30,000 square feet, but in fact, you have evidence or you obtained evidence showing that the apartment was actually 10,996 square feet and was valued at roughly $60 million, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. I should make clear, in respect of these questions where the district attorney has objected, I am asserting rights referenced in both the fourth and the fifth paragraph of my opening statement?

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Understood. You --

A And the sixth paragraph as well.

Q On page 186 of your book, you describe Trump's valuations from Mar-a-Lago, and you say, "Trump's valuations from Mar-a-Lago in the 7 years reviewed in detail by our experts had exceeded the actual reasonable value of the property by an average of more than 1,000 percent per year," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. I want to turn back to the discussion about the February 4th meeting, which is on page 221.

You say that "Our experts" -- meaning the experts with the Manhattan District Attorney's Office -- "had put together some charts with yearly statistics on the purchase and sale of golf properties," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q It says, the charts apparently showed that, quote, Trump's valuations with his golf courses were literally off the chart, correct?

The Witness. Same response.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm sorry. I should have waited for Ms. Dubeck to object. But no harm done.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You say, "I argued that he had to have known this because he was a real estate entrepreneur in the business of building, owning, and running golf courses, just as he surely knew that the apartment he built and in which he lived had not contained 30,000 square feet," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for the reasons previous stated.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And you continue on, "The brazen, pervasive, and outlandish nature of the overvaluations, I argued, was important proof of Trump's intent," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And you say that -- in the February 4th presentation, you continued on, "I then spoke about the evidence tying Trump to the preparation of the financial statements," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. You say that "I noted that the SOFCs on their face were directed to Trump, contained language saying that he was responsible for their preparation and presentation, and repeated over and over that the valuations had been, quote, "prepared by Mr. Trump," end quote, working in conjunction with others, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q "The assets described in the SOFCs were the assets that Trump had spent his business life to build and acquire. Trump, as a person obsessed with his wealth and net worth, surely had familiarized himself with the SOFCs and how they had been prepared," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q "And he had certified time and again that the SOFCs had accurately presented his financial condition."

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for the reasons stated.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You continue on, "I next displayed some documents reflecting Trump's review of the financial statements and addressed some witness testimony that we had gathered from the Attorney General or civil case files."

You said, "The testimony established that Weisselberg and Trump had reviewed the SOFCs before they were finalized, and at least some of the valuations had come directly from Trump, though Weisselberg and Jeff McConney, the Trump organization comptroller, had been key players," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You then describe some of the admissions that came out in a defamation case brought against Mr. Trump by an individual named Tim O'Brien. You say, During that defamation case, quote, "Trump did not distance himself from the asset values in the financial statements. On the contrary, he complained that they were too low," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You say, "I emphasized Trump's extraordinary control over the Trump organization, financial workings, including his personal signing of checks, close review of expenses, and approval of the financial terms on which every new member joined one of his golf clubs," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You continue on, "During the presentation, you next turned to Trump's history of making up facts regarding his wealth. I spoke about the evidence we had received from Jonathan Greenberg, including the John Barron tapes, and Trump's correspondence with the Forbes staff regarding his wealth," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And the John Barron tapes is a reference to language earlier in your book reporting on an interaction that Trump had had with Jonathan Greenberg, a reporter who worked at Forbes Magazine, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't answer that question.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And the description given in your book is that "Mr. Greenberg had taped a conversation in which Trump had falsely passed himself off as John Barron, a vice president and finance officer working for the Trump family. In fact, there was no John Barron. Only Trump posing as Mr. Barron," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Back to page 223, you say in your presentation, "I also alluded to the information that Forbes had made public regarding Trump's net worth obsession, his admission that he had tried to mislead Forbes about his wealth, and his statement that a high net worth, was quote, "good for financing," end quote, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You continue on, "I argued that the back-and-forth that Trump had with Forbes over the years on which the magazine had reported had put Trump on notice that his asset values were unreasonable," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And you say, "Yet the pattern continued, and Trump had not taken any of the steps he could have taken if he wanted to ensure their accuracy," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for the reasons indicated.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You say, "I then turned to Trump's many public statements and tweets about his wealth, noting that those statements helped prove that the size of his net worth was of central importance to Trump's public persona," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. So getting back to your February 23rd, 2022 resignation, you wrote a letter before you resigned, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Goldman. It's a simple fact. It's public.

The Witness. May I have a moment?

Ms. [REDACTED] Sure.

Ms. Dubeck. Our position was that the letter should not be published.

Objection.

The Witness. May I have a moment with counsel?

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. Goldman. Can we go back on the record?

Your position is also that the book shouldn't have been published, but we've acknowledged the existence of the book, and we've discussed the contents of the book as being the same thing for his letter of resignation. The fact of his letter of resignation can't undo the fact of his letter of resignation.

Ms. Dubeck. Submit it to the fact and reask the question.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. Prior to your resignation, you wrote a resignation letter, correct?

A I wrote a resignation letter.

Q Okay. And that resignation letter is included in your book at pages 248 to 251, correct?

A The book speaks for itself.

Q I want to turn to page 248.

The resignation letter reads, "I write to tender my resignation as a special assistant district attorney and to explain my reasons for resigning. As you know from our recent conversations and presentations, I believe that Donald Trump is guilty of numerous felony violations of the penal law in connection with the preparation and use of his annual statements of financial condition," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not sure what the question is. If the question is whether that language was included in the resignation letter which appears in the book, the book speaks for itself, and that language does appear.

As you understand, I hope, I'm not going to go beyond the language reflected in the letter or ask -- answer questions about it. But the letter is set forth in the book, and I acknowledge having written the letter.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q So to clarify for the record, do you believe that Donald Trump is guilty of numerous felony violations of the penal law in connection with the preparation and use of his annual financial statements -- I'm sorry -- his annual statements of financial condition?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm not going to comment about the letter beyond acknowledging that it was written and it appears in the book.

Mr. Goldman. Can you review the letter and tell us if there's any reference in the letter to a case against Donald Trump related to a charge of falsifying books and records?

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. Dubeck. I object to the question.

Mr. Goldman. Based on what?

Ms. Dubeck. Asking for words beyond what is in the letter -- the intent behind the letter.

Mr. Goldman. We're just asking whether those words are in the letter or not as he sits here and reads the letter.

The Witness. Are the words "falsifying business records" in the letter?

Mr. Goldman. Yes. Books and records, specifically.

The Witness. The letter referred to financial statements as false. It does not use the language "false books and records."

Mr. Goldman. Does it reference Stormy Daniels or Stephanie Clifford?

The Witness. The letter does not reference Stormy Daniels or Stephanie Clifford.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And to clarify, your February 4th, 2023 presentation -- nowhere in your book does it say that that presentation referenced Stephanie Clifford or Stormy Daniels, correct?

A Again, I think the book speaks for itself in that regard, and I'm not going to provide editorial comment to it.

Mr. Goldman. It's just a factual question, not an editorial question.

The Witness. As a factual matter, you are correct, sir.

Ma'am. Sorry. Ma'am and sir.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q In your letter, you say that "In fact, Mr. Vance concluded that the facts warranted prosecution, and he directed the team to present evidence to a grand jury and to seek an indictment of Mr. Trump and other defendants as soon as reasonably possible," correct?

A The letter contains that language, and you've read it accurately.

Q Okay. And the reference to presenting evidence to a grand jury and seeking an indictment of Mr. Trump, that's a reference to the evidence involving inflated property values, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A Well, I won't enlarge on the meaning of what is written in the letter.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay.

A I'm not taking issue with your reading of it, but I'm not going to comment further.

Q Okay. You say that after Mr. Bragg took office, he decided not to pursue that financial -- that inflation of properties case. And you say, "I do not question your authority to make it" -- meaning this decision -- "and I accept that you have made it sincerely. However, a decision made in good faith may nevertheless be wrong," correct?

A That language appears in the letter, and the letter appears in the book.

Q And you continue on, "In my view, the public interest warrants the criminal prosecution of Mr. Trump, and such a prosecution should be brought without any further delay," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Object to anything beyond what is in the letter, what is printed in the book.

The Witness. And I won't go beyond what is printed in the book and in the letter.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And then in the second-to-last paragraph on page 250, you say, "To the extent you have raised issues as to the legal and factual sufficiency of our case and the likelihood that a prosecution would succeed, I and others have advised you that we have evidence sufficient to establish Mr. Trump's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and we believe that the prosecution would prevail if charges were brought and the matter were tried to an impartial jury," correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. That, again, was a reference to a criminal -- potential criminal charges based on Mr. Trump's alleged inflation of property values, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't go -- I won't elaborate beyond the language of the letter as it appears in the book.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. Mr. Pomerantz, is it accurate that you resigned because District Attorney Bragg would not pursue the case that you believe you had made out?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same answer.

Mr. Goldman. What was the objection?

Ms. Dubeck. That his decision-making and thinking at the time he resigned was based on confidential and privileged information.

The Witness. I think I already responded to that question.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. We're going to move on from your book, sir.

Are you familiar with Bragg v. Jordan, which is Southern District of New York case number 123-CV-3032-MKV?

A May I have a moment?

Ms. [REDACTED]: We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [REDACTED]: We can go back on the record.

The Witness. I am familiar with the lawsuit you referenced in your question.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. You submitted a declaration in that lawsuit, correct?

A That is correct.

Ms. [REDACTED] Okay. I want to introduce this as Exhibit No. 5.

Mr. Finzi. Number five?

Ms. [REDACTED] Number five.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 5

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q In paragraph three of this declaration, you state that you were sworn in as a special district attorney in New York County on February 2nd, 2021, correct?

A Yes.

Q And I think you testified earlier that that is the date that you were sworn in, correct?

A That is correct.

Q Okay. And in that same paragraph, you state that you resigned from this position on February 23rd, 2022, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you testified earlier that that is accurate? You did, in fact, resign on February 23rd, 2022?

A I did, in fact, resign on February 23rd, 2022.

Q District Attorney Bragg took office on January 1st, 2022, correct?

A Yes.

Q So doing the math, this means that your tenure at the District Attorney's Office overlapped with his time there for only about maybe 8 weeks, correct?

A Yes. Our tenures overlapped from January 1st to February 23rd, 2022.

Q And the grand jury indicted Mr. Trump in the case brought by the Manhattan District Attorney's Office on March 30th, 2023, correct?

A I believe that's correct.

Q So that was more than 13 months after you had left the District Attorney's Office, correct?

A Yes, ma'am.

Q Okay. Paragraph four of your statement in your declaration, reads, "I have had no conversations about prosecuting Mr. Trump with the district attorney or any member of the prosecution team following my resignation," correct?

A You've accurately read from my declaration.

Q And is that an accurate statement?

A I'm not going to go beyond the words of the declaration. As you see from the declaration, it was submitted under penalty of perjury.

I'm not suggesting by my answer to you that there's anything in the declaration that was false, but I'm not going to enlarge upon the declaration in answering questions today for the reasons reflected in my statement.

Q Okay.

Mr. Goldman. Mr. Pomerantz, can I just clarify?

The Witness. Yeah.

Mr. Goldman. Because this is obviously long after your tenure in the District Attorney's Office.

The Witness. Right.

Mr. Goldman. So you don't -- you can't opine about whether you've had any conversations with any member of the District Attorney's Office, the prosecutors, after you left the District Attorney's Office?

The Witness. My counsel wants to say something, and I have learned not to disrespect his desire to speak.

Mr. Wells. We are not going to get into discussions about explanations about what he can do and can't do or should do and doesn't do.

You can respond to the question.

The Witness. I no longer have the question in mind. My apologies.

Mr. Goldman. What objection are you asserting?

The Witness. It's been suggested to me that I'm asserting my rights under the Fifth Amendment, and that's what I'll do.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q According to public press reports, the decision to pursue the hush-money case in particular was made in July, 2022, which is approximately 5 months after you left, correct?

A I'm not familiar with that.

Ms. [REDACTED] Okay. We want to introduce for the record a New York Times article. It's published March 31st, 2023, updated April 4th, 2023. It's entitled, "How Alvin Bragg resurrected the case against Donald Trump."

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 6

Was marked for identification.]

BY [REDACTED]

Q And I'll give you a minute to review. Let me know when you're --

A I got distracted by my photograph. Apologies. I'll keep going.

Yes. What's your question?

Q So the fifth paragraph on the first page, fifth paragraph of the article overall, says that, "But by July" -- referring to July 2022 -- "Mr. Bragg had decided to assign several additional prosecutors to pursue one particular strand that struck him as promising, a hush-money payment made on Mr. Trump's behalf to a porn star during the final days of the 2016 Presidential campaign."

That's what the article says, right?

A Where are you referencing?

Q That is the fifth paragraph on the first page. It begins, "for a time."

A I see it. Yes. Yeah, I see that.

Q So according to this public reporting, Mr. Bragg elected to pursue the hush-money case in July 2022, which was, again, several months after you left the District Attorney's Office, correct?

A I see that referenced in the article, certainly.

Q Okay. So assuming the dates here are correct, that was at least 4 months after you left the District Attorney's Office, right?

A I left in February. This references July of the same year.

Q Okay. You have no nonpublic information about Mr. Bragg's decision to pursue this case after you left the District Attorney's Office, correct?

A I refuse to answer that question.

Mr. Goldman. Based on?

The Witness. Based on my lawyer telling me not to answer the question, which I assume was based on the Fifth Amendment.

Mr. Wells. Correct.

Mr. Goldman. Based on the Fifth Amendment?

Mr. Wells. That's what he said.

Mr. Goldman. No, it's what you said. What is the rationale?

Mr. Finzi. We're not arguing.

Mr. Wells. Same rules for both sides. Today's not the day for explanations. If we ever get to court, we'll explain.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Mr. Pomerantz, you said you have no public -- no nonpublic -- you declined to answer our question regarding whether you have any nonpublic information about Mr. Bragg's decision to pursue the case.

You have no nonpublic information about what evidence the district attorney may have developed in that investigation in the time since you left his office, correct?

A Same answer.

Q You're objecting to answer?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And you also would have no personal knowledge of the district attorney's use of Federal forfeiture funds, correct?

A Bear with me for one moment.

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go off the record for a minute.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q The question is, you have no personal knowledge of the district attorney's use of any Federal forfeiture funds, correct?

A I have no knowledge one way or the other about the use of Federal forfeiture funds. I know nothing about that.

Q Okay.

Mr. Goldman. Do you have -- do you know the entire universe of evidence in possession of the district attorney that is related to the case that was charged on March 30th?

The Witness. Respectfully, I won't answer that question, Mr. Goldman, on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. Goldman. Do you have any reason -- are you aware that Mr. Bragg has made public statements that his office developed additional evidence related to the case that he charged after you left the office? Are you aware of public reporting to that effect? Public statements that Mr. Bragg made?

The Witness. Respectfully, I refuse to answer your question.

Mr. Goldman. Do you have any reason to disagree with any public reports and public statements by Mr. Bragg that his office developed additional evidence related to the case that had been charged after you left the office?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Goldman. The charge that was brought on March 30th is not the charge that you recommended Mr. Bragg bring in February of 2022. Is that right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response. Relying on paragraphs four and five of my statement.

Mr. Goldman. You talk about your investigation in the book extensively. And as we discussed, that investigation, you stated in your book, relates to the misevaluation of properties in possession of Donald Trump. Is that correct? Is that an accurate statement of what you say in your book?

The Witness. I'm not taking issue with your statement. But respectfully, the book speaks for itself at some length, and I'm not going to characterize or comment on your reading of it.

Mr. Goldman. Sure.

I'll note for the record that the book solely talks about a misevaluation case, not the false books and records case that was charged.

Mr. Pomerantz, you aren't a big fan of Mr. Bragg, are you?

The Witness. I will decline to answer your question.

Mr. Goldman. Which one?

The Witness. Whether I'm a big fan of --

Mr. Goldman. No, which reason?

The Witness. Paragraph five of my response and six.

[12:25 p.m.]

Mr. Goldman. You thought that he should have charged the case that you investigated, correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Goldman. He didn't charge the case you investigated, did he?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I think what he charged is a matter of public record, about which I'm not going to comment further.

Mr. Goldman. But that wasn't the case that you investigated, was it?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. Goldman. That wasn't the case you recommended he charge, was it?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I won't answer that question.

Ms. [REDACTED] Turning back to your April 17th declaration. Paragraph 5 of that declaration concludes with this sentence: "Also, answering questions from the Judiciary Committee about my tenure as a prosecutor poses the risk that my testimony could be used to jeopardize or interfere with either the charged criminal case against Trump or other ongoing investigations." Correct?

The Witness. Yes, the declaration contains that language.

Ms. [REDACTED] Mr. Pomerantz, you were a prosecutor and a defense attorney for many, many years. Can you explain why the risk of interfering in an ongoing investigation is of concern to you?

Ms. Dubeck. To the extent that calls for information based on his tenure at the D.A.'s Office, I object.

Ms. [REDACTED] Can you speak based on your experience prior to your tenure with the D.A.'s Office?

The Witness. What's the question again? I'm sorry?

Ms. [REDACTED] Why is the risk of interfering in an ongoing criminal prosecution something that concerns you as a longtime prosecutor and defense attorney?

Mr. Finzi. Do you want to discuss?

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go off the record for a minute.

[Discussion off the record.]

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q We can go back on the record.

A Thank you. Respectfully, I will follow my attorneys' instructions and not go beyond the language that appears in the declaration.

Q I want to move on. I'm going to turn to the April 6th, 2023 letter that you received from Mr. Jordan. That's exhibit 1 in this matter.

A Yes. I have it.

Q We have another copy too, if you need it.

On page 4 of this letter -- and again, this is the letter that was accompanying the service of subpoena on you -- Mr. Jordan claims that you hold a, quote, "personal animosity" towards former President Trump. And then he quotes a paragraph from your book. We've also heard other quotes that you have purportedly made about Mr. Trump here today.

Would you describe the excerpt quoted here and the other statements that have been raised as expressions of your First Amendment right to free speech?

Mr. Finzi. Would you repeat that question?

Ms. [REDACTED] He was asked fairly extensively about prior statements he's made about President Trump and about some others as well.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Would you describe those statements as expressions of your right to free speech? In other words, when you said something, that was exercising your free speech rights, right?

A I intended to exercise my free speech rights at various points, including the statement referenced in Mr. Jordan's letter, which is an excerpt from the book?

Q There was also a letter from Chairman Jordan that you received on March 22nd, correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And that letter also accuses you of, quote, "unfairly disparaging" President Trump, correct?

We can introduce that for the record if you don't recall.

A I don't know that it's an accusation. But I recall the letter generally.

Q You don't remember -- you don't recall that particular language?

A I do recall --

Q Yeah, we'll go ahead and introduce it for the record.

A No, I --

Q It's exhibit No. 7.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 7

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q And the reference to unfairly disparaging President Trump is on page 3.

A Yes, I see it.

Q Okay. So that was an accusation that was put against you in the March 22nd letter, correct?

A I read it as expressing Representative Jordan's view of my book. I don't know that it's an accusation.

Q Mr. Pomerantz, do you believe that you have a First Amendment right to criticize people?

A I do.

Q Would you agree that to the extent you've been brought here today because you've criticized people, that that's an attack on your exercise of that right?

A I believe what is referenced in my statement, which is that I have the right to refuse to answer questions that would compel me to express opinions that I believe are protected by the First Amendment.

To the extent I have been brought here because I wrote a book that expressed opinions with which people may disagree, I do believe that that implicates First Amendment rights.

Q Do you think if others view you being brought here because you wrote a book that expresses opinions with others -- that others might disagree with -- do you think that could chill other people's willingness to make statements that criticize people in the future?

A I really don't want to get into how people might view the proceedings here today, whether others would be chilled or should be chilled, whether I should have written the book. I am just of the view that being called here, to the extent it is because I wrote a book and the impact of being asked to testify is to discourage that activity, that's unfortunate.

But this is not the place for me to get into a long exegesis about First Amendment rights or whether they've been chilled. I have my views on the matter. But how they relate to the committee's legislative purpose is a mystery to me.

Mr. Goldman. Let me follow up on that legislative purpose.

We've talked a little bit about the litigation in this case and that you were nominally a defendant in it.

When you make the reference to legitimate legislative purpose, what are you -- why are you making -- why are you referring to that term? What is the relevance of that term?

The Witness. I'm not going to debate the statement in -- I'm not going to debate that portion of my statement which indicates that a person subpoenaed before a congressional committee has the right to refuse to answer questions that are not pertinent to a legitimate legislative purpose, although I believe that to be the law. Nor am I going to debate with you here as a witness the legitimacy of the committee's legislative purpose.

I have my views about it, as expressed in the statement. Whether you agree or disagree is not a matter about which I'm going to have a conversation with you under oath. I just don't think that's the purpose of this proceeding.

Mr. Goldman. Are you familiar with the Mazars case in the Supreme Court?

The Witness. I know whereof you speak?

Mr. Goldman. Have you read it?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. And in the Mazars case I will just note that the Supreme Court lays out the most recent explanation of Congress' investigative jurisdiction, which must be related to a legitimate legislative purpose.

Mr. Pomerantz, are you aware of reports that Mr. Trump or his lawyers communicated a desire for Chairman Jordan and other House Republicans to initiate this investigation shortly after Mr. Trump came to understand that he would be charged by District Attorney Bragg?

It's a question of whether you've read public reporting.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. I am aware of the press reports that you referenced in your question, sir.

Mr. Goldman. And is the information included in those press reports relevant to your assertion that there is no legitimate legislative purpose for this investigation?

The Witness. I won't expand on the thinking that led me to make the statement I made in my opening statement to you.

Mr. Goldman. Why? You testified in your opening statement about your conclusion that you don't think there's a legitimate legislative purpose. I'm just trying to understand why you don't think that.

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [REDACTED] We're back on the record.

The Witness. My belief that there is no legitimate legislative purpose that motivates this deposition is informed by the press reports that you mentioned, but a wide variety of facts and information and circumstances accumulated over an indeterminate period of time. And I'm not going to attempt to psychoanalyze my own belief and provide you with a catalogue of the reasons for reaching the conclusion that I referenced in the statement.

Mr. Goldman. Well, you've been a lawyer for a long time, a very experienced, very accomplished lawyer. Based on your reading of the Mazars case, if Congress initiated an investigation into a specific criminal prosecution against a private citizen, would that be a legitimate -- in a local District Attorney's Office -- would that be a legitimate legislative purpose, based on your understanding of the Mazars case?

The Witness. I'm not sure I follow that. If you can -- my apologies.

Mr. Goldman. No, that's fine.

If these reports are accurate and this investigation was initiated based on the request of a private citizen to intervene in a prosecution of that private citizen in a local District Attorney's Office, is that a legitimate Federal legislative purpose, based on your reading of the Mazars case?

The Witness. I wish not to get into a lawyers discussion with you about what is or is not a legitimate legislative purpose. While I might agree with your views, I certainly don't wish to get into a debate about this topic when the committee majority has its turn to resume questions. My strong preference would be to simply answer your questions or not answer them based on my legal rights with regard to the facts that led you to ask me to be here today.

Mr. Goldman. Are you -- let's move on.

Are you aware of any other investigation into specific cases in a -- any other congressional investigations into specific cases in a local district attorney's office?

The Witness. That are still pending?

Mr. Goldman. Ever.

The Witness. I'm not.

Mr. Goldman. Do you believe that this investigation is designed to harass and intimidate Mr. Bragg?

The Witness. I do.

Mr. Goldman. Do you think that this investigation would exist if Donald Trump were not the defendant in the People v. Donald Trump in the Manhattan District

Attorney's Office?

The Witness. I don't think it's fair, given that I've come here to assert my rights, among other things, about my political views, I don't want to start holding forth about what is or isn't appropriate as a political matter.

Mr. Goldman. Fair enough.

The Witness. I'll keep my own counsel in that regard.

Mr. Goldman. I just -- I want to switch gears and I'm going to give it back to our counsel.

First, I just want to clarify for the record, because you were asked this in the majority's hour, you and I have never met, correct, until today?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Goldman. We've never spoken?

The Witness. Not that I recall.

Mr. Goldman. We both worked at the Southern District of New York but at different times.

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Goldman. When you take an oath as a Federal prosecutor -- and we're not going to talk about your time as a -- well, I'll say, when you take an oath as a Federal prosecutor, do you take an oath to proceed without fear or favor?

The Witness. You know, I'm not sure that's in the oath, but that's certainly in the spirit of what the job requires?

Mr. Goldman. And what does that mean to you?

The Witness. What it meant to me when I was sworn in as a Federal prosecutor, both times I was sworn in as a Federal prosecutor, is that you make decisions in cases without regard to the concern you may have about taking action. You can't be afraid about the consequences of your actions if you believe that they're well informed and that they are based on the law and the facts and the evidence.

You don't act with favor means that you don't take official action or decline to take official action based on your relationship with a potential subject or because of your personal interests one way or the other. You make decisions that are based on the facts and the law and in the best interests of your client.

In the case you're referencing, my client was the Government of the United States, and I attempted to make decisions that were in the best interest of the government without regard to how they impacted my own circumstances or politics or career or anything else. You make decisions consistent with your obligations to serve the public interest.

Mr. Goldman. And did you use that same approach when you joined the New York County District Attorney's Office?

The Witness. I'm not going to talk about my activities as a Special Assistant District Attorney, respectfully.

Mr. Goldman. Based on your experience as a prosecutor -- well, let me start over.

You're aware of the criminal prosecution against The Trump Organization in the summer of 2022, correct?

The Witness. Am I aware of the prosecution?

Mr. Goldman. Yes.

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. Okay. And that was a trial. Is that right?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. And The Trump Organization was convicted --

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. -- of 17 crimes?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Goldman. Now, in your experience as a prosecutor, do prosecutors and investigators redouble their investigative efforts in advance of trial and in preparation for trial?

The Witness. Can I limit my response to my experience as a Federal prosecutor?

Mr. Goldman. Please.

The Witness. Yes, preparing for trial is always a period when prosecutors and law enforcement agents feverishly go about making sure they have gathered all the facts and are in position to present them.

Mr. Goldman. And is it common during that trial preparation to discover new evidence?

The Witness. Yes.

Ms. [REDACTED] We're actually out of time.

Do you have any?

We can go off the record.

[Recess.]

Mr. Schiff. Thank you for allowing me to ask questions before you begin your time.

Mr. Pomerantz, I am Adam Schiff from California.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Schiff. I appreciate your being here today.

In your opening statement you said that "I do not for a moment believe" -- "I do not believe for a moment that I am here to assist a genuine effort to enact legislation or to conduct legislative oversight. We are gathered here because Donald Trump's supporters would like to use these proceedings to attempt to obstruct and undermine the criminal case pending against him and to harass, intimidate, and discredit anyone who investigates or charges him."

I quite agree with the sentiments you've expressed. I can discern no legitimate legislative purpose either.

You have a lot of experience, though, as a prosecutor. And I'd like to ask you, in your experience, have you ever seen another situation where a committee of Congress sought to interfere with a specific criminal case in a specific jurisdiction? And what would be the impact if this were to become precedent for the Congress to intervene in other criminal cases in other parts of the country?

The Witness. I have not seen similar proceedings. But, respectfully, I don't want to hold forth and give you personal views on the wisdom or the impact of proceedings like this one.

My hope is to get out of this room as quickly as I can without inviting more debate and colloquy about matters of public policy. I'm not a policy expert. I'm just a lawyer. And we can all have our respective views about the impact of these proceedings, whether that impact is positive or negative.

So, respectfully, I'm going to decline your invitation to express my personal views.

Mr. Schiff. I appreciate that. Let me try one more time.

In your opening statement you also said, "This is neither the time nor the place for me to answer questions about the investigation or the pending indictment over the objection of the prosecutors. The charges against Mr. Trump should be heard and decided by a judge and a jury before politicians second-guess their merits or the decision to bring them. That's how our system works. Those who claim that they respect the rule of law should wait for the courts to do their work."

If Congress had the power or authority to subpoena witnesses or materials in cases where there's a pending indictment and approaching trial, how might that interfere with a prosecution?

The Witness. I think historically it has been the view of the Department of Justice certainly that pending cases ought to be litigated and that responding to congressional inquiries creates a potential to jeopardize prosecutions, witness security, and so on.

I think that there has not been a deep and rich history of congressional investigations that touch on pending State prosecutions. But I don't see why the circumstances would be different with respect to State prosecutors fearing for the integrity of their prosecutions and investigations.

But, again, I hope you'll understand I'm not here to provide expert testimony or expert views. I don't consider myself an expert on the impact of congressional investigations on pending prosecutions.

I just know, having been a prosecutor, that you want to go about your business and prosecute your cases and have them litigated before the court that has jurisdiction and that responding to outside requests and demands is never something one looks forward to doing.

Mr. Schiff. Last question before I hand it back. Again, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your indulgence.

It's been publicly reported that Mr. Trump's attorneys reached out to this committee to ask for the committee's help in impacting or through discovery in the Manhattan prosecution against Mr. Trump.

Is there a process in which a defendant in a criminal trial in New York City or anywhere else can obtain discovery from prosecutors without having to seek Congress to do it for them? Isn't there a process in which defendants are entitled to Brady material where they get it directly from the prosecutor's office and don't require the intercession of Congress to do that?

The Witness. Well, New York has a very liberal criminal discovery regime. And in New York or outside of New York obviously defendants have the ability by way of motion practice to litigate the integrity of the decision to prosecute and to test whether a prosecution was brought for inappropriate reasons.

That opportunity certainly exists under Federal law. It exists under New York law. I'm not going to speak to other jurisdictions.

Mr. Schiff. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I yield back.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Pomerantz, do you know who disagrees with Mr. Schiff and your characterization of legislative purpose?

The Witness. Pardon me?

Chairman Jordan. Do you know who disagrees with Mr. Schiff and your characterization of legislative purpose?

The Witness. I don't know, but I can indulge in some guesses.

Chairman Jordan. Who would you guess?

Well, we'll save time. We'll go -- the people who disagree is the court and that's why you're here. Let me just read for the record what the court said.

"The committee is considering legislation to prohibit the use of Federal forfeiture funds to investigate a current or former President. This purpose standing alone is clearly sufficient to justify the subpoena and thereby to end this court's inquiry."

Do you know who else agrees with the court? The lady who's been objecting all morning, Ms. Dubeck. Bragg's counsel conceded that the investigation of the District Attorney of New York's use of Federal funds is a valid legislative purpose.

But they go on.

"Defendants identify the possibility of legislative reforms to insulate current and former Presidents from State prosecutions such as by removing criminal actions filed against them from State to Federal court. In fact, there's been legislation introduced to do that."

This idea that it's not a legitimate legislative purpose is ridiculous. In fact, I understand it's unusual, but the court spoke to that as well.

Page 14, footnote 7. "Bragg notes that there is 'no prior case in which Congress has attempted to subpoena a State prosecutor for purpose of extracting information about an ongoing State prosecution.'"

Mr. Pomerantz, do you know of any situation where there's a case of a former President of the United States being criminally charged in a State trial court? Do you know of any situation like that?

The Witness. Other than the present one? I do not.

Chairman Jordan. And that's what the court said. "However, there is no prior case in which a former President of the United States has been criminally charged in State trial court, suggesting both parties swim in untested waters."

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 8

Was marked for identification.]

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Mr. Pomerantz, are you aware of any Federal funds used by the District Attorney's Office in the prosecution of President Trump?

A I have no knowledge whatsoever on that topic.

Q Are you aware of any positions, some Assistant District Attorney positions, that are funded by the Federal Government in the D.A.'s Office?

A I'm not aware one way or the other.

Q In a March 31st, 2023, letter we received from the District Attorney's Office, the general counsel wrote: "Our review of the office's records reflect that of the Federal forfeiture money that the office helped collect approximately $5,000 was spent on expenses incurred relating to the investigation of President Trump."

Are you aware of that?

A I only was -- I became aware of it when I read the letter to which you refer. I have no other knowledge beyond what is contained --

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 9

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [REDACTED] We're marking this as exhibit 9.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. [REDACTED] Exhibit 8 was Judge Vyskocil's opinion Mr. Jordan referenced.

Were you aware before Ms. Dubeck's letter that the D.A.'s Office had used Federal funds in the prosecution of President Trump?

The Witness. I was not.

Mr. [REDACTED] Did you ever have any discussions while you were at the D.A.'s Office with anyone about the use of Federal funds?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I will refuse to answer on the basis of the objection from the District Attorney's Office.

Having said that, I will reaffirm my previous answer to you that I knew absolutely nothing about the use of Federal funds in connection with the Trump investigation.

Mr. [REDACTED] Did you ever discuss with anyone in the D.A.'s Office the issue of President Trump's security were he to be indicted or convicted?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question on the basis of the rights referenced in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my opening statement.

Mr. [REDACTED] Refresh my recollection about what paragraphs 4 and 5 --

Mr. Wells. In the spirit of efficiency, 4 relates to the objections of the D.A., 5 relates to the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment, and 6 relates to the legislative purpose and First Amendment due process.

Mr. [REDACTED] Thank you.

So as I understand it, the question was whether you ever had any discussions with anyone in the D.A.'s Office about the issue of President Trump's security were he to be indicted or convicted. And you're invoking the Fifth Amendment on that particular question?

The Witness. Yes. If you'd give me one moment.

Mr. [REDACTED] Of course.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. I do refuse to answer your question on the basis of my rights as reflected in the statement.

Mr. Wells. He said paragraphs 4 and 6 -- 4 and 5.

The Witness. 4 and 5, yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] Did you ever discuss with anyone in the D.A.'s Office how the former President's entitlement to lifetime Secret Service protection under Federal law would be accommodated were he to be convicted of a crime or sentenced to prison?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response, sir.

Mr. [REDACTED] And that response is?

The Witness. Is not to answer your question on the basis of the District Attorney's position that the information is privileged or confidential and my personal privilege not to be compelled to be a witness against myself.

Mr. [REDACTED] Mr. Gaetz, did you want to go or did you want me to continue?

Mr. Gaetz. I do have some questions.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay.

Mr. Gaetz. Mr. Pomerantz, did the Manhattan D.A. ever issue you a cell phone?

Mr. [REDACTED] Do you want to go off the record?

Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. On the advice of counsel, I'm not going to answer that question, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. Asserting what privilege?

The Witness. Privilege against self-incrimination.

Mr. Gaetz. And did the Manhattan's D.A.'s Office ever issue you a laptop?

The Witness. Same answer to that question, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. That you're asserting your Fifth Amendment right not to answer?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And did they issue you any other hardware?

The Witness. Same response.

Mr. Gaetz. And were you given a Manhattan D.A. email address during your time there?

Mr. [REDACTED] Go off the record?

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. Gaetz. We're back on the record.

The Witness. Yes, I refuse to answer your question on the same basis as I've previously indicated.

Mr. Gaetz. Do you use email now?

The Witness. Pardon me?

Mr. Gaetz. Since you've left the employ of the Manhattan D.A., do you use email as a method of communication?

The Witness. I decline to answer your question.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your current email provider?

The Witness. I decline to answer that question.

Mr. Gaetz. On Fifth Amendment grounds?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gaetz. And I'm not trying to be pedantic, I'm just trying to make the record clear.

The Witness. No, I understand that. And I appreciate that.

Mr. Gaetz. And who's your current cell phone provider?

The Witness. Likewise, I refuse to answer that question on the basis of my rights under the Fifth Amendment.

Mr. Gaetz. How much money did you make on the book?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question as well.

Mr. Gaetz. On what basis?

The Witness. That one is on the basis of both my Fifth Amendment rights and the rights articulated and referenced in paragraph 6 in my opening statement.

Mr. Gaetz. I yield back.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q This morning I asked you about the speech that Attorney General Jackson had provided.

A Yes, sir.

Q I also asked you about the ABA standards.

A Yes.

Q And I asked you about the U.S. Attorneys' Manual.

A Yes, sir.

Q And you had declined to answer those questions.

Now, if I rephrase my questions and say, are you familiar from your time as a Federal prosecutor with any of those three authorities about the principles of prosecution, does your answer -- are you able to answer the question?

A I'm able to answer the question, but I refuse to answer the question.

Q Okay.

A Not to parse the language too fine. I don't mean to be cute.

Q And I understand, sir.

During the last hour Mr. Goldman was asking you about there is fear and favor, and you walked through with Mr. Goldman the meaning behind fear and favor and how I believe you represented you were familiar with it from your time as a Federal prosecutor.

How does that differ from my questions?

A I don't want to get into a debate with you about my position with respect to particular questions. I respect your right to challenge my invocation of rights. I hope you don't, but if you do, we will have that discussion, I suppose.

But I believe that I have a fair basis on which to invoke my rights with respect to familiarity with the "Principles of Federal Prosecution," the U.S. Attorneys' Manual, and Justice Jackson's speech.

Mr. Bishop. Mr. Pomerantz, my name is Dan Bishop.

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Just quickly for the sake of the record, I want to make available to you and your counsel that in Mitchell v. United States, a 1999 case in the United States Supreme Court, 526 U.S. 314, Justice Kennedy, writing for the Court, said: "It is well established that a witness, in a single proceeding, may not testify voluntarily about a subject and then invoke the privilege against self-incrimination when questioned about the details. The privilege is waived for the matters to which the witness testifies, and the scope of the 'waiver is determined by the scope of relevant cross-examination.'"

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 10

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. Bishop. Also, on the same point, in the case of Morgan Art Foundation Limited v. McKenzie from the Southern District of New York, on December 15th, 2021, the Court said: "However, the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination is not self-executing and may be waived if not invoked. As relevant here, where a witness testifies voluntarily and therefore controls the extent of the disclosure, the privilege is waived for the matters to which the witness testified and the scope of the waiver is determined by the scope of relevant cross-examination."

Now, of course. Your counsel has appropriately said -- and I will be glad to hand a copy to you, if you would like.

The Witness. Yes, please.

Mr. Bishop. And I have got copies for other counsel as well.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 11

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [REDACTED] I'm sorry, Mr. Bishop. Morgan is the second case you mentioned?

Mr. Bishop. It is.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. So that would be 11.

Mr. Finzi. So there's Mitchell and Morgan?

Mr. [REDACTED] So Mitchell's No. 10 and Morgan's No. 11. And I apologize, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Good. Thank you, Mr. [REDACTED] to keep the record clear. That's very helpful.

Mr. Finzi. Mitchell 10, Morgan 11?

Mr. [REDACTED] Correct.

Mr. Bishop. And of course counsel made the point they didn't want to debate privilege. I'm not. I'm just seeking to lay a record because the assertion of a privilege, of course, needs to have a reasonable basis. You just spoke to that, Mr. Pomerantz.

Earlier in your examination today, Ms. Stefanik of New York said, "So there are no lies in the book? You stand fully behind this publication under your name?" And your answer was, "That's correct."

Mr. Pomerantz, on page 170 of your book you say that -- let me make sure I get the context so that it's complete -- "No one could know exactly what the security dangers might be if we indicted Trump. I assumed that the MAGA crowd would make its presence felt. But we had to trust that our institutions and personnel could be secured no matter how events might unfold."

Sir, what you do mean by the MAGA crowd? What is that?

The Witness. I refuse to answer your question, sir, on the basis of the rights I asserted in the fifth and sixth paragraphs of my statement.

Mr. Bishop. And you continue to assert the right -- those rights, the right of the Fifth Amendment in particular, but notwithstanding of the information I've furnished. Is that correct?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Bishop. On page 192 of the book you wrote: "I explained that I had made a deliberate effort not to think about the damage Trump had done to politics, the rule of law, respect for the truth, or the fabric of our democracy."

What is meant by the damage Trump had done to politics?

The Witness. I don't believe I am required to go beyond the language reflected in my book. And, accordingly, I refuse to answer your question.

Mr. Bishop. On the grounds that you've previously asserted. Is that correct?

The Witness. That's correct.

Mr. Bishop. What did you mean by the damage Trump had done to the rule of law?

The Witness. I take the same position with respect to that question, sir.

Mr. Bishop. What do you mean by the damage Trump had done to respect for the truth?

The Witness. I take the same position with respect to that language and likewise with respect to the fabric of democracy.

Mr. Bishop. What do you mean about the damage Trump had done to the fabric of our democracy?

The Witness. I take the same position and refuse to answer your question for the reason stated.

Mr. Bishop. On page 192 also you wrote: "Indeed I thought there might be an argument that Trump had assumed an office that required him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed and having urged the country to trust him to uphold the law should be held to a higher standard of personal conduct than the average citizen."

What do you mean by that?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to go beyond the language that appears in the book and provide you with a further explanation of what I meant.

Mr. Bishop. [Inaudible] did you not, sir, that for purposes of the prosecutorial action you sought from the office, that Trump should be treated differently than average citizens? Isn't that right?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have nothing to add beyond my prior response.

Mr. Bishop. On page 198 of your book you say: "While it could be argued that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions." What do you mean by that?

The Witness. I'm sorry, I missed your question.

Mr. Bishop. I'll repeat it. On page 198 of the book you write: "While it could be argued that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions." What do you mean by that?

Ms. Dubeck. If you can pause. I'm not finding the language.

Mr. Bishop. All right. Let me help and I'll read the full sentence. At the bottom of -- the next to last paragraph on 198 it says: "While it could be argued that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions, we were speaking about a victim in the legal sense, a person or entity that had received the SOFCs, relied on them to give money to Trump, and then suffered a financial loss." That's the whole sentence.

My question, though, is about the first clause of the sentence. What do you mean that the American people generally have been hurt by Trump's deceptions?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Yes, for the reasons stated in the fourth and fifth paragraph of my letter, I will decline to answer that question.

Mr. Bishop. To what deceptions to you refer?

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question for the reasons stated.

Mr. Bishop. In what way do you mean the American people generally have been hurt?

The Witness. Same answer, sir.

Mr. Bishop. At another point in the book, and I didn't note the page reference, perhaps you'll recall it, but you say: "I was haunted by the thought that there were many people everywhere who had been counting on us to hold Trump accountable for crimes that we would never get a chance to prove in court."

My question to you there is, what people?

Ms. Dubeck. Object.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question and believe I am not required to do so for the reasons reflected in my statement.

Mr. Bishop. Would the people include political enemies of Mr. Trump?

The Witness. I won't --

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Excuse me, sorry.

I won't elaborate on the language that appears in the book and accordingly assert my rights under the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

Chairman Jordan. Were they the same people who said "go get him" on page 1 of the book?

The Witness. The same answer.

Mr. Bishop. On page -- withdrawn.

At another point you wrote: "Has the target generally been involved in antisocial behavior such that the community needs to be protected from further misbehavior or the target held to account for misdeeds that extend well beyond the particular crime at issue?"

How did that apply to Mr. Trump?

The Witness. I refuse to answer your questions for the reasons reflected in the fifth paragraph of my letter. I'm not certain, I may have answered too quickly before Ms. Dubeck had a chance to object, for which I apologize.

Ms. Dubeck. I lost track of whether he was asking something based on your time at the D.A.'s Office. To the extent he was, I object.

Mr. Bishop. I yield back.

Mr. [REDACTED]. To your knowledge, when was the first time the District Attorney's Office interviewed Michael Cohen?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer for reasons previously stated --

Mr. [REDACTED]. Given your experience --

The Witness. -- in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my statement for the record.

Mr. [REDACTED]: Okay.

Given your experience, how can you possibly believe Michael Cohen is a reliable witness?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons reflected in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 of my statement.

Mr. [REDACTED]. So you're taking the Fifth Amendment on given your experience how can you possibly believe Michael Cohen is a reliable witness?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. Are you aware of the shifting information Mr. Cohen has put forward about the Stormy Daniels payments?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons indicated in the answer to your previous question.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q I believe in your book you say that you were following the Michael Cohen testimony when he appeared before Congress. It was the first big hearing of Chairman Cummings' tenure. Mr. Cohen testified back in 2019. I believe in your book that you said you watched that and you were following along. Is that correct?

A I believe that appears in the book, yes.

Q And as you sit here today, do you remember that testimony?

A I decline to answer that question based on my right not to be a witness against myself in a possible criminal proceeding.

Q I'd like to mark as exhibit 12 a letter from Steve Ryan to the Federal Election Commission.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 12

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Mr. Ryan is a -- Mr. Ryan was one of Michael Cohen's lawyers at the time.

Mr. Ryan writes: "In a private" -- he's writing on behalf of Michael Cohen to the Federal Election Commission here. "In a private transaction" -- this is the second paragraph" -- "in 2016, before the U.S. presidential election, Mr. Cohen used his own personal funds to facilitate a payment of $130,000 to Ms. Stephanie Clifford. Neither the Trump Organization nor the Trump campaign was a party to the transaction with Ms. Clifford, and neither was reimbursed by Mr. Cohen" -- or "neither reimbursed Mr. Cohen for the payment directly or indirectly."

Are you familiar with this letter? Have you ever seen this before?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer.

Mr. [REDACTED] And as you know, in 2018 Michael Cohen says, through his lawyer, that nobody ever reimbursed him. And then when he showed up before Congress, it was Chairman Cummings' first big hearing in January 2019, he changed his tune and he said he was reimbursed.

Were you aware of that sort of a changing story of Mr. Cohen on that front?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 13

Was marked for identification.]

Mr. [REDACTED] I'd like to mark as exhibit 13 a letter from Mr. Jordan and Mr. Meadows to the Attorney General referring Michael Cohen for perjury for his appearance in February -- I'm sorry, it was February 2019. I think in my last question to you I said it was January 2019, but it was February 27th, 2019, that he appeared, first big hearing of the Democrats' new majority at the time.

And this letter sets forth numerous undeniable facts about Mr. Cohen perjuring himself during his appearance before the committee.

Have you ever seen this letter before?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question, one way or the other, on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. The bottom of page 1 it says:

"Several times during his testimony, Mr. Cohen denied committing various fraudulent acts that he pleaded guilty to in federal court. Specifically, Mr. Cohen said, 'I never defrauded any bank.'

"These denials are intentionally false. Mr. Cohen pleaded guilty to five counts of income tax evasion, one count of making false statements to a banking institution, one count of causing an unlawful corporate contribution, one count of excessive campaign contribution, and one count of making false statements to Congress."

In your experience, is there any way that Mr. Cohen could not have committed perjury when he testified one way and he pleaded guilty in an exact opposite fashion to the same set of facts?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer the question for the reasons previously stated.

Mr. [REDACTED] When you were at the D.A.'s Office, did you consider this type of unreliability when considering Mr. Cohen as the narrator for the case against President Trump?

[1:43 p.m.]

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Same response, sir.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q And in your book you did describe Mr. Cohen as a potential narrator for the prosecution against President Trump. Is that correct?

Well, I think this is in the book.

A The book says what it says. I'm not disputing your characterization.

Q Okay. So it's fair to say that in your book you talk about in a prosecution of this type you need a good narrator?

A I think there is a reference to the need for a narrator that appears in the book.

Q And Michael Cohen was considered as that possible narrator?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I rest on what's set forth in the book. I'm not taking issue with your characterization.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Going back to the letter, Mr. Cohen repeatedly testified that he did not seek employment in the White House following President Trump's election. And this is demonstrably material and intentionally false, too.

The testimony is -- that testimony is in indirect conflict with court filings made by the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York which stated: During and after the campaign, Cohen privately told friends and colleagues, including in text messages, that he expected to be given a prominent role and title in the new administration. When that did not materialize, Cohen found a way to monetize his relationship with and access to the President.

Was that a fact that you were aware of?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The same response, sir.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q At the hearing Mr. Jordan asked Mr. Cohen: You wanted to work in the White House?

And Mr. Cohen said: No, sir.

And that answer, when Mr. Cohen said "no, sir," is expressly contradicted by the text messages that the Southern District of New York used in the case against Mr. Cohen.

With that said, I mean, how is that not perjury before Congress?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer the question for the reasons reflected in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my statement.

Mr. Bishop. Mr. Pomerantz, on page 178 your book you have this paragraph. It says: "Carey drafted a lengthy outline of defense arguments. The defense outline claimed that a prosecution would be politically motivated and would violate Trump's constitutional rights. It noted that the district attorney and the Attorney General were Democrat politicians who supposedly were trying to prevent Trump from becoming president again. It detailed some of New York State Attorney General Letitia James's public statements about Trump in reference to Alvin Bragg's campaign statements about having repeatedly sued the Trump administration. It suggested that Trump would move to disqualify the prosecution and seek a transfer of venue out of New York City. It characterized the case as a political vendetta that had wasted vast resources in the hunt for a viable theory of criminal liability after Trump, all at a time when murders and violent crime were increasing."

I'll stop there. Did I read it accurately?

The Witness. Pardon me? Yes, you read it accurately, of course.

Mr. Bishop. Do you know what the defense of selective or vindictive prosecution is?

The Witness. I decline to answer your questions.

Mr. Bishop. Are you aware that prosecuting someone criminally in retaliation for First Amendment expressive activity or associational activity is unconstitutional?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your question. I'll resist the temptation to elaborate on it.

Mr. Bishop. Were any of the factual bases that Carey laid out in his lengthy outline of defense arguments inaccurate?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer your questions for the reasons reflected in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of my statement.

Mr. Bishop. Did you undertake to or did anyone else working with you on the investigation of Mr. Trump undertake to rebut any of the factual bases underlying the outline of this defense argument furnished by Carey?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I would like to make the same response to that question as to your previous one, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Which is declining to answer --

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Bishop. -- on the basis of your asserted privileges?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bishop. Thank you.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Are you familiar with Bob Costello?

A Yes.

Q And how do you know him?

A We served together in the Office of the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York during the time I was line assistant between 1978 and 1982. I don't recall for exactly what portion of that period of time Mr. Costello was a prosecutor, but that is one of the ways in which I was familiar with Mr. Costello.

Q Are you aware that Mr. Costello was called to the grand jury -- this most recent grand jury that indicted President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Mr. Costello has made a number of TV appearances talking about these types of things. I'm just asking if you're aware of the public reporting on this.

A I saw public reporting.

Chairman Jordan. You said you worked with him in the Southern District of New York, and you said that's one of the ways you were aware of Mr. Costello.

What were the other ways. Was he a friend?

The Witness. I need a moment with counsel.

Mr. [REDACTED] Of course.

[Discussion off the record.]

Chairman Jordan. I can withdraw the question. I was -- I just was curious. I can withdraw it.

The Witness. Thank you. That's very helpful.

Chairman Jordan. No, I get it. I get it.

You said that the one way -- well, that's fine. I get it.

The Witness. I appreciate that.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Are you aware that Mr. Costello was representing Mr. Cohen at any point in time?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm aware of public reports of that type.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Now, are you aware of reports of what Cohen told Costello was different from what Cohen evidently told Ryan right around the same time period about the Stormy Daniels payments? Are you aware of that public reporting?

A I believe I did see that in public reporting as well.

Q Are you aware that Cohen alleged that somebody dangled a pardon over him, you know, if he cooperates and doesn't say negative things about President Trump?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I'm limiting my response to publicly reported materials in the last several months, I guess, and so limited, I don't recall.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. So Cohen alleged that Costello referenced that, you know, some pardon might be available to him.

Are you aware of that?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, limiting my response to recent press reports, that sounds familiar, but I don't recall it with any acuity.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay.

A Yes, but I'm not basing my response on anything having to do with my employment in the D.A.'s Office.

Q And are you aware that the Southern District of New York U.S. Attorney's Office looked at potentially prosecuting President Trump based on the pardon allegation?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] Go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

The Witness. All right. Respectfully, I decline to answer the question.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And did you know the Southern District of New York decided not to prosecute because they decided Cohen was completely unreliable and could not be considered as a legitimate witness at any prosecution?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question as well for the reasons previously given.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And do you expect that Michael Cohen will be called as a witness before the New York District Attorney's case that's just been filed?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q Returning back to your opening statement --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- what's the basis for your conclusion that you are certain you broke no laws?

A I would be very surprised if a court ruled that I had no privilege to answer that question, and I'm asserting my Fifth Amendment rights with respect to that.

Q Has anyone from the District Attorney's Office explicitly or implicitly threatened to prosecute you if you answer the committee's questions?

A I decline respectfully to answer your question.

Q When did you first hear that the District Attorney's Office was pursuing some potential criminal investigation of you?

A I will take my counsel's advice and refuse to answer that question, sir.

Q When we were with Judge Vyskocil on the 19th --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- the District Attorney's Office, you know, represented that they sent you this letter raising the prospect of a criminal prosecution.

Do you remember that?

A I do.

Q Was that the first time you heard of that?

A The first time I heard of a letter?

Q Right. Like had you -- was that the first time you heard that you were under criminal investigation?

Did it surprise you?

A I'm not going to answer your question with regard to whether I was surprised.

Q On the basis of the Fifth Amendment?

A Fifth Amendment, and also the rights summarized in the sixth paragraph of my statement.

Q What's the sixth paragraph again?

A My position being there the question whether I was surprised by what I heard in open court in January is not, I believe, a matter that's pertinent to your legislative purpose.

Q Don't you think this investigation of you, this purported investigation of you is simply a pretext, simply a pretext to block your testimony here today?

It's not a real investigation, is it?

A I respectfully decline to answer your question.

Q Have you been interviewed by the D.A.'s Office on this topic?

A I respectfully decline to answer your question.

Q Have they asked for any documents from you?

A I respectfully decline to answer your question.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Pomerantz --

The Witness. Yes, sir.

Chairman Jordan. -- you resigned in February of 2022.

The Witness. 2022, that's correct.

Chairman Jordan. And did the District Attorney's Office know you were working on a book anytime between February 2022 and February of 2023?

The Witness. I decline to answer your question.

Chairman Jordan. But they didn't put you under notice that you were potentially under criminal investigation until, according to your statement, shortly before the publication of your book?

The Witness. I'm not sure what you're referencing.

Chairman Jordan. I'm referencing your statement, page 2 of your statement.

"Shortly before the publication of my book, the District Attorney's office warned me that I could face criminal liability if, among other things, I disclosed grand jury material or violated a provision of the New York City Charter dealing with the misuse of confidential information."

The Witness. Yes, sir, that's accurate.

Chairman Jordan. So the first time you were put on notice?

Mr. [REDACTED]. Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED]. Back on the record.

The Witness. The question again was whether I was on notice of a possible criminal investigation?

Mr. [REDACTED]. Mr. Jordan asked you the first time you were on notice, and he referenced your statement.

The Witness. The statement references a letter that I received in January of 2023, which I believe you have.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Did you need to lodge an objection?

Ms. Dubeck. It didn't sound like quite exactly the same question, so --

Mr. [REDACTED]. Okay.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q But the letter that you received in January 2023, it's just a pretext, isn't it? I mean, is there a real investigation going on?

A You're asking me?

Q Yes. They're not really going to prosecute you? They're not really investigating you, are they?

A I hope you're right. But I'm not speaking for the District Attorney's Office --

Q That's fair.

A -- in respect of how tangible is the fear of criminal prosecution.

Q Okay. You got the letter in January. Was that the first time the D.A.'s Office communicated with you that they were disappointed you were writing a book or trying to stop the publication of the book?

Mr. Finzi. Could we have a second?

Mr. [REDACTED]. Sure. Go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED]. We'll go back on the record.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q Your answer, sir?

A I decline to answer your question with respect -- for the reasons indicated.

Q Okay. Can you tell us about all of the communications you've had with the D.A.'s Office since January of this year, other than the ones we've discussed, which was this receiving of the letter?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Well, I mean, he's no longer with the Office.

Ms. Dubeck. January of this year?

Mr. [REDACTED]. January of this year.

Ms. Dubeck. Withdrawn.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q What I'm getting at, okay, if I may?

A Yes, sir.

Q What I'm getting at is they didn't try very hard. They didn't try very hard to get you to not publish the book. I mean, they may have written this letter, paper in the file. And if I'm mistaken, if I'm mistaken, please help me understand that I'm wrong.

You got the letter from them. What other -- did they call you on the phone and urge you? Did you have any meetings with them in person?

A Mr. [REDACTED], I don't believe that I'm required in this context to articulate for you all of the reasons which lead me to invoke my privilege.

Q Fair enough.

And let me just, if I may, articulate why we're asking, okay, just as a courtesy.

We believe that it's possible and worth investigating that this whole, you know, New York District Attorney's Office, you know, so-called investigation is a sham, and it's simply a pretext to prevent you from coming here and talking about your book. And so, because of that, I mean, that could invoke some serious implications. I mean, that could be obstruction of Congress. And so it's worthwhile for us. And so we don't, you know, mean to be pedantic or, you know, any -- don't mean any disrespect by it. But we are trying to understand the volume of communications, the type of effort that the District Attorney's Office, you know, put forth to try to get you to stop the book. And if they did put forth an effort that we don't know about, I mean, that would be great, a great fact to have on the record.

A I would be delighted to hear, Mr. [REDACTED], that my fear of criminal prosecution is completely baseless and unfounded. I don't believe that to be the case and, therefore, I am invoking my rights as reflected.

Q Okay. And let me just say, I'm not disputing that you believe -- I'm not disputing your belief that you think that they might be actually conducting a criminal investigation. Because when somebody is faced with a letter saying that there's an investigation, a human being, a normal conclusion is to be concerned about that. Okay. So fair enough. I'm not trying to be disrespectful of that.

A I appreciate that.

Q But from our point of view, okay, from the point of view of the Congress, the record looks pretty thin. And it looks like a pretext to us -- not to you, but to us, and so, consequently, just trying to ask you if you can catalog the efforts that the D.A.'s Office made to get you to stop writing the book.

A I don't think I am or can be required to respond to a question that seeks to probe my good faith invocation of the Fifth. I believe -- I know that I have a good faith basis to invoke my privilege. If your investigation should result in a declaration by the District Attorney's Office that they have no such intent, that criminal prosecution of me is never going to happen, then we will have a different exchange.

Q So if they write you a letter and they say they're declining to take any further action, you might be willing to come back and answer some of our questions?

A I would have a very different conversation with my attorneys.

Q When Mr. Jordan initially --

A It was hard enough for them on the record that we do have.

Q When we initially wrote to you in the earlier part of this year, the first letter --

A Yes.

Q Mr. Jordan sent you two letters, right?

A Yes.

Q He sent you the first letter asking for voluntary cooperation, and then it was followed up with the subpoena.

A Yes, sir.

Q You replied to our first letter -- thank you for that -- and basically said that the D.A.'s Office is telling you not to cooperate.

Can you tell us about the conversation you had with the D.A.'s Office before you wrote us back?

A I referenced and attached, I believe, a letter I received from Ms. Dubeck at the District Attorney's Office.

Q And did you have a telephone conversation with her?

Mr. [REDACTED] We can go off the record. Sorry.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

The Witness. Respectfully, I decline to answer your question about communications with the District Attorney's Office.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q Okay. And then when we sent the subpoena to you --

A And I understand your -- withdrawn. Never mind. I already talked --

Q You can finish. I'm sorry.

A No, it's okay.

Q On our -- the second time we wrote you the letter --

A Yes.

Q -- and we included the subpoena, I emailed you, and you replied back very graciously and very professionally, you indicated that you didn't have a lawyer at that time. Is that correct?

A I think I said that I would be in touch with you after finalizing the arrangements for counsel.

Q And so, is it fair to say that in your conversations that you had with the D.A.'s Office, you weren't represented by counsel?

A I don't think that is fair to say. I don't know what time period you're referring to.

Q So we wrote -- our first letter was dated March 20th, and then the subpoena was April 6th, so -- and when I emailed the subpoena to you, at that time you hadn't engaged Mr. Wells?

Did you have different counsel, or was Mr. --

A I'm not going to get into who represented me when throughout the months preceding this appearance.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. I don't think the question was who. I think the question was, was there anyone representing you in that time frame.

The Witness. I respectfully assert my Fifth Amendment rights in that regard.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q I mean, is it a fair investigative data point that if you didn't have counsel until Mr. Wells, which, you know, Mr. Wells was engaged after the subpoena was sent, and isn't that a fair piece -- good data point or piece of evidence that maybe shows that the interactions that you had had with the D.A.'s Office up until the time that you engaged Mr. Wells -- did you have an attorney is what we're getting to. And if you didn't, isn't it fair for us to conclude that that's a good piece of evidence showing that this might not be a real investigation that they're pursuing?

A I decline to answer your question.

Mr. [REDACTED] I would like to mark the indictment as exhibit 14, and then the statement of facts as exhibit 15.

[Pomerantz Exhibit Nos. 14 and 15

Were marked for identification.]

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q You've read the indictment. Correct?

A The indictment of Donald Trump?

Q Yes.

A Yes.

Q Have you read the statement of facts?

A Yes.

Q Now, the indictment was returned by the grand jury, correct?

A I assume so.

Q But the statement of facts was not?

A I don't know.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. Well, let's -- this is number 14, the indictment.

Do we have the statement of facts one too?

Ms. [REDACTED] They are both marked.

Mr. [REDACTED] What's that?

Ms. [REDACTED] Yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] So you've got both the statement of facts and the indictment?

Mr. Witness. Yes, sir.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay.

Ms. [REDACTED] Are these separate exhibits?

Mr. [REDACTED] They are 14 and 15.

Ms. [REDACTED] And 14 is the indictment?

Mr. [REDACTED] 14 is the indictment. 15 is the statement of facts.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q Let me just ask you, what's the difference between utilizing -- based on your experience, utilizing a statement of facts to supplement an indictment versus a speaking indictment?

A I couldn't answer your question. I don't know the answer.

Q Okay. I mean, you were a prosecutor in the Office. Did you -- during your time with the D.A.'s Office, did you -- were you responsible for indicting anyone? Any cases that you worked on land in an indictment?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection to the extent it calls for nonpublic information.

The Witness. You referring to my tenure in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office?

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Correct.

A I respectfully decline to answer.

Q Okay. Could you just help us understand, how does a statement of facts ordinarily get released? What's the process?

A I can't help you understand that. I don't know the answer to that question.

Q Okay. In reading the indictment --

A Yes, sir.

Q -- can you tell us whether the D.A.'s Office found new evidence that you weren't aware of, you know, from your time in the Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. Is that based on the Fifth Amendment?

A I think tilting toward the fourth paragraph of my statement, without excluding the fifth.

Q The fourth paragraph, is that --

Mr. Finzi. It's the District Attorney's objections.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay.

The Witness. My discipline slips as the day wears on, but I hope you'll make sure that I adequately state on the record the basis for my nonresponse.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. So there are 34 counts in the indictment that are bootstrapped to an unstated crime to prosecute.

Do you know what that unstated crime is?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] Well, I'm just asking if he knows, and he's read the indictment. I think he can answer that question.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question on the basis of the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. And can you help us understand why, in your experience, a prosecutor in this instance might -- like, what's the strategy behind not naming the crime in the indictment?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] Well, I'm just asking, you know, his experience, and I'm just trying to better understand why the crime is not in the indictment, just his experience as a lawyer. I mean, you're a decorated, long-serving lawyer.

The Witness. I don't know how many decorations I got, but I have a long career as a defense attorney and a prosecutor.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q So you're in a good position, I think, to help us understand what's the strategy behind not naming the underlying crime.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I can't answer, and I decline to answer. Even if I could answer, I wouldn't know the answer.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay.

A And I can't answer, so the state of my knowledge is basically irrelevant.

Q Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Mr. Pomerantz, you gave the District Attorney's Office a year of your life. You worked for free. And before Congress ever got in this picture, they told you they might -- that you might face criminal liability for a book that you wrote.

Does that tick you off?

The Witness. I decline to answer.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q And you didn't just work for free. You gave up your weekends. You gave up your -- you had -- according to your book, you had a month's long -- correct me if I'm wrong. But you had a month's long visit planned in Sonoma so you could be with one of your new grandchildren.

A 2 months.

Q 2 months. I mean, you gave quite a lot to this Office, the District Attorney's Office. Is that not, obviously, correct?

A I decline to answer.

Q I think we're --

A Regretfully.

Mr. [REDACTED] I think we're at our time.

Ms. [REDACTED] [REDACTED], do you have a lot left?

Mr. [REDACTED] Go off the record, please.

[Discussion off the record.]

[Recess.]

Ms. [REDACTED] It is 2:44. We can go back on the record.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Mr. Pomerantz, in the prior hour you were asked about the Southern District of New York's determination about the reliability of Mr. Cohen as a witness.

Do you recall being asked about that?

A Yes.

Q And I believe that you said you couldn't answer -- you declined to answer the question?

A That's correct.

Q In your experience as a prosecutor and defense attorney, though, there are circumstances in which a witness may not be sufficient in one proceeding, but in an unrelated proceeding or a different proceeding there could be, for example, corroborating evidence or other material that might change the circumstances for that, on the witness's reliability, right?

A You're asking me in general terms?

Q In general, in general terms.

Mr. Finzi. Could we go off the record for 1 second?

Ms. [REDACTED] Sure. Yes, we can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Ms. [REDACTED] We can go back on the record.

The Witness. I think the only thing I can say is that, as my own testimony probably indicates, there's no such thing as a perfect witness. Witnesses have flaws and strengths that run the gamut of human behavior.

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q You were asked earlier about the -- you know, when you had an attorney --

A Yes.

Q -- in relation to this year. And you recall that?

A Yes.

Q Without getting into who represented you and when, you know, you've now been brought before this committee for a deposition that's run, I don't know, 5 hours and change. Before that, there was a fair amount of letters and motions practice in court even.

Would you agree that anybody who was facing a congressional investigation may want to hire counsel?

A Yes.

Q I want to turn to the January 18th letter, and it was not introduced in the last round, so I am going to introduce it as exhibit 16 now.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Sorry, what number are we up to?

Ms. [REDACTED] I think it's 16.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Yes.

[Pomerantz Exhibit No. 16

Was marked for identification.]

BY MS. [REDACTED]

Q Do you recall receiving this letter?

A I received this letter.

Q And this was the letter I think that was referenced earlier when reference was made to the January 18, 2023, letter, correct?

A Yes.

Q This letter was sent from Ms. Dubeck, who is sitting at the table today, correct?

A Yes.

Q And it was addressed to you, but also to the general counsel of Simon & Schuster and the executive vice president and general counsel and secretary of Paramount Global, correct?

A Yes.

Q So this was sent to you, but also to attorneys. Correct?

A Yes.

Q And in the first line, the very first sentence of this letter, it says: "This letter is in response to Simon & Schuster's public announcement, on January 11, 2023, of the forthcoming publication of your book," correct?

A Yes.

Q So the announcement of your book -- according to just on the terms of this letter, the announcement of your book happened on January 11, 2023. It was publicized on that date, right?

A That's what the letter says.

Q And within a week of learning of that publication, the District Attorney's Office had written to you, correct?

A The letter reflects on its face having been sent a week after the public announcement of the publication of the book that I wrote.

Q On the second page of the letter, the second full paragraph says that "Prior to commencing his work with the D.A.'s Office, Mr. Pomerantz acknowledged in writing his understanding that most or all of the information he would have access to regarding the investigation is protected by" -- and it goes on and refers to the grand jury secrecy provisions, correct?

A That's what the letter says.

Q Did you -- is it accurate that you signed a nondisclosure form or some other document prohibiting you from disclosing information that you learned?

A I'm not going to answer that question and assert my constitutional rights as reflected in the fifth paragraph of my statement.

Q In the following paragraph, it says: "In addition, because Mr. Pomerantz has been separated from the D.A.'s Office for nearly a year, he is not capable of making any assessment of whether the disclosures he intends to disseminate in this publication have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding," correct?

A That's what the letter says.

Q So the District Attorney's Office actually put you on notice that with publication of your book, you know, you unilaterally were not capable of determining whether that might prejudice an adjudicative proceeding, correct?

A Well, I'm not going to expand beyond what the letter says on its face. I'm not taking issue with your characterization.

Q Okay. It goes on: "Based on the pre-publication descriptions of the book and the benefit of current knowledge of the matter, but without access to the manuscript, this Office believes there is a meaningful risk that the publication will materially prejudice ongoing criminal investigations and related adjudicative proceedings," right?

A Yes, that's what's stated in the letter.

Q So it says without access to the manuscript. So the District Attorney's Office, based on the face of this letter, did not have access to your manuscript prior to its publication, correct?

A I'm not going to respond to that question.

Q And then in the following paragraph, it cites to New York City Charter chapter 68, section 2604(d)(5)?

A Yes.

Q And are you familiar with that statute?

A As we sit here today?

Q Yes. We can withdraw it. That's fine.

A Thank you.

Q So the paragraph says that, in relevant part, chapter 68, section 2604(d)(5) provides that no public servant shall, after leaving city service, disclose or use for private advantage any confidential information gained from public service which is not otherwise made available to the public, correct?

A You've accurately stated what the letter contains.

Q And you don't have any reason to believe that this is not an accurate recitation of that code section, correct?

A I have no reason to believe that the letter misstates the language of that chapter of the city charter.

Q And then in the final --

A It doesn't state all of the language of that section of the city charter, but what is here is contained in the city charter.

Q Thank you.

And then the final sentence of that paragraph reads: "To the extent this book discloses information, Mr. Pomerantz obtained as a public service without this office's approval, Mr. Pomerantz is unlawfully converting confidential government information for his personal advantage," right?

A That's what the letter says.

Q And so, as early as January 18, 2023, which was a week after the announcement that your book would be published, the District Attorney's Office had written to you to say that you were potentially acting unlawfully, correct?

A The letter says -- contains the language that you have referenced and speaks of the unlawful conversion of confidential government information.

Q And then the final sentence, the final paragraph of this letter, which is on page 3, it says: "The Office," referring to the District Attorney's Office, "urges Mr. Pomerantz not to take any further steps that would damage an ongoing criminal investigation," right?

A Yes. That's contained in the letter.

Q So, again, as early as January 18th, the District Attorney's Office had written to you and said, you know, Do not take any further steps that would damage an ongoing criminal investigation, correct?

A The letter says what it says.

Ms. [REDACTED] All right. Thank you. We don't have any further questions.

The Witness. Thank you.

We can go off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Back on the record.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q This morning we were going through some of the investigative matters you were pursuing against former President Trump. I think we left off at the Trump Tower triplex apartment.

The angle there was that he overstated the value of the apartment, or was it that he overstated the square footage? I know Mr. Cohen said that the square footage was exaggerated. But were both subject to the -- were you pursuing both angles as a potential investigative avenue?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Once again, I decline to answer your questions for the reasons stated in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of my statement.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q The vignette, the John Baron vignette where he was having communications with the Forbes reporter, was that an avenue of independent investigation, or was that fact pattern going to be used to support a different charge?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons stated. I'm not sure I understand your question, but I'm sure however you meant it, I won't be answering it.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay.

A With apologies. I don't mean to make light, and I intend no disrespect whatsoever.

Q I'm sorry. I'll restate it.

Do you remember the name of the Forbes reporter? I believe his first name was Jonathan.

A I believe you're referring to Jonathan Greenberg.

Q Yes, sir, yes, sir.

So my question was the allegations that Mr. Greenberg brought forth from his reporting with Forbes was that, if I'm not mistaken, that Mr. Trump was overstating his overall net worth. And my question was whether that was an independent avenue of investigation, or whether that was you considered using the Forbes reporter to support the financial statement -- the statements of financial condition investigation that you were pursuing?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A I decline to answer both because it calls for confidential or privileged information in view of the District Attorney's Office, and for the other reasons referenced in paragraphs 5 and 6 of my statement.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q In your book you talk about investigating the Trump Foundation, aspects of Trump University. And my question is, was there an independent investigation into Trump University that potentially could have been the source of an indictment, or were those facts -- that fact pattern simply going to be used in the enterprise corruption theory case that you were working on?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The same response as to the previous question. Same nonresponse, I guess.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q There were various insurance fraud matters that you write about in your book, such as there was tornado damage at one of the Florida golf courses, I believe.

There was some insurance fraud allegations relating to an elevator fire at the --

A I actually think you are incorrect to the extent you're referring to what's written in the book. The book references tornado damage to a golf course in Westchester.

Q Oh, I'm sorry. It was in New York. Okay.

Was there not also a potential insurance matter at one of the golf properties in Florida, or was that just simply the Westchester property?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer to the extent that it calls for information that goes beyond what's referenced in the book.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. Do you remember if that was included in the book? Was there an insurance matter relating to a Florida golf course?

Ms. Dubeck. It's only calling for the book, so --

The Witness. I don't believe that appears in the book.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. On page --

A Perhaps I should have written a shorter book.

Q On page 205, you write regarding the District Attorney, that he was missing the urgency of the situation and underestimating the special needs of the Trump investigation and potential prosecution.

Was that something you ever confronted Mr. Bragg about personally?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q It's right in the middle of page 205.

A Yes, I see it. I decline to answer for the reasons previously stated. I do see the reference in the book.

Q Okay. On page 213, you had an in-person meeting with the District Attorney. Was that your first in-person meeting with him?

I understand because of the pandemic a lot of the work that you did was remote and meetings happened over Zoom. But at some point, you did have some meetings in person with Mr. Bragg. Is that correct?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q You're reporting in your book you did.

A The book references meetings and conversations, a variety of them.

Q Okay. And do you know how many in-person meetings?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Decline to answer beyond what's contained in the book.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. Which number objection would that one be?

A Oh, the fourth paragraph and the fifth paragraph and the sixth paragraph of my statement.

Q The sixth paragraph, legislative purpose?

A No. The sixth paragraph references the First Amendment.

Q Oh, okay.

A And to the extent you're asking me to elaborate on the facts --

Q Oh, no, I'm sorry, sir. I'm not asking you to elaborate. I'm just wondering how many in-person meetings you had with the District Attorney, because you wrote about them all in the book and I --

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I have nothing to add beyond the book. In fact. Well, I'll leave it there.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Anyway, on page 213 towards the bottom, you write: "The discussion degenerated into chaos and confusion. On top of it, Alvin came into the meeting late, spent much of his time looking at his phone, and then left early, saying he just wanted to see the important documents, as though the whole sprawling case could be reduced to a collection of just a few" -- or sorry -- "collection of a few crucial documents, which made no sense."

Did you ever have a chance to communicate that to Mr. Bragg, your frustration?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer that question for the reasons previously articulated.

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q Later on in the book I think you wrote an email to Mr. Bragg. And did you mention your frustration with him coming in late, looking at the phone, and so forth?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

A What is the question, whether I wrote an email to --

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Whether you expressed your frustrations to Mr. Bragg. I mean, if you just remember whether you did or didn't.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Well, the issue was not the state of my recollection. It's the application of the privilege that I asserted, which I will rely on?

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Did you spend -- do you think Mr. Bragg was as willing as Mr. Vance to dig into the facts of this case?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I refuse to answer that question, Mr. [REDACTED] respectfully.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. For the most part in your book, and I think without exception, you refer to Mr. Vance in a very favorable light. Is that a fair assessment?

A I'm not taking issue with your perception, but I have nothing to add to what appears in the book.

Q Okay. On page 264 --

A Yes.

Q -- there's a part of the book that says: "Most plane crashes" -- I'm sorry. "All I know for sure is that the investigation turned into the legal equivalent of a plane crash. Most plane crashes have more than a single cause, and this one also may have had multiple causes. The biggest one, in my opinion, was 'pilot error.' Alvin made the wrong decision about whether to charge the case."

When you wrote the biggest cause of the metaphorical plane crash was pilot error, were you referring to Mr. Bragg as the pilot in that instance?

A I won't go beyond the language that appears in the book. Again, I'm not taking issue with the inference that you draw, but the book speaks for itself. And I object to being compelled to make statements that go beyond what appears in the book.

[3:08 p.m.]

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. On page 265, the penultimate paragraph, last sentence.

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] "He jumped into very deep water and immediately was in over his head."

Is that a reference to Mr. Bragg?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. Again, the book speaks for itself.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Page 218.

A Yes.

Q You write: "As I tossed and turned, I asked myself whether we had done everything we could do to convince Alvin to let us bring our case against Trump. I kept thinking that maybe we were being rash.

"I also thought about Alvin's relative youth and wondered if he was in over his head. From what I knew, he had never run an organization anywhere close to the size of the District Attorney's Office, and he had scant experience in leading or defending high-profile prosecutions."

That view that you expressed about Mr. Bragg, have you since come to a decision to revise that conclusion?

A I decline to answer on the basis of my privilege against self-incrimination.

Q Okay. You know, in several -- you know, you mentioned on page 208 that when you were getting out of law school, Mr. Bragg was a toddler.

A Yes, I recall that sentence.

Q And you, by all accounts, are experienced, but you're not that old.

A At times --

Q And Mr. Bragg is not that young. I mean, he's almost 50.

A At times, I feel very old, Mr. [REDACTED] and this is one of those times.

Q Fair enough. But at the time, Mr. Bragg -- I mean, he's almost 50 years of age, as far as I understand. I mean, he's not that young.

A He seems younger and younger to me as I get older and older. I notice that with a lot of people.

Q Okay.

A I'm 72 as we speak.

Q Right. So do you think his relative youth played a part in -- like, do you think he's not capable of running the office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I did not say that in the book, and I'm not going to comment on that. And I'm asserting my rights, as my lawyer reminds me.

Mr. [REDACTED] Were you surprised -- in light of the first day memo and in light of the progressive agenda the District Attorney has advanced -- were you surprised at the resources devoted to the Trump matter as compared to some of the basic crime that most district attorney's offices make a priority?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons indicated.

Mr. [REDACTED] In 2022, Mr. Bragg's first year as the D.A., crime in New York City rose significantly when compared to the previous year. According to NYPD data, New York City saw a 23 percent surge in major crimes.

Do you think there's different things the office can do to address that crime surge, given your experience with the office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection, to the extent it calls for information about his experience with the office.

The Witness. What was your question again? Do I think there are different things the office can be doing?

Mr. [REDACTED]. Yeah. What can the office do differently to deal with this crime epidemic? I mean, they're devoting a lot of resources -- a tremendous amount of resources to the Trump prosecution. And they're doing this, and at the same time, there's just a raging crime epidemic.

The Witness. I'm not necessarily acquiescing in your characterization. Having said that, I have no ability to hold forth on what a district attorney's office can or should do with regard to the problem of street crime and violent crime and thefts and so on.

If I had a view, my lawyer would probably tell me not to share it. And in fact, I don't have the expertise to express a view on that.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Okay.

Chairman Jordan. You related in your book, Mr. Pomerantz, that -- I believe your son is an officer in the NYPD?

The Witness. My son is a lieutenant in the NYPD.

Chairman Jordan. I appreciate his service.

You related in there an exchange of, I think, text messages and conversations you had with him regarding the day one memo, which seemed to indicate that he did not have a very high regard for what was contained in that memorandum.

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer your question and do so, in particular, with regard to paragraph 6 of my statement. I really have to object to the notion that my son's views as a New York City police officer, whatever they may be, are germane to your legislative purpose.

Chairman Jordan. With all due respect, Mr. Pomerantz -- and, again, we appreciate your son's service. We appreciate your service.

We have a crime subcommittee on the Judiciary Committee. We are concerned about crime. We are concerned about Federal funds being used in the District Attorney's Office and they're not prosecuting bad guys who do bad things to people. And we know that it's happening in the city of New York. That's why we did a hearing there just a few weeks ago.

So that was the motivation for the question.

The Witness. I understand.

Chairman Jordan. Thank you.

Mr. [REDACTED] You referenced various outside law firms. Two firms assisted with the so-called Zombie theory?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

Mr. [REDACTED] Was that the same firm or a different firm? Not asking you -- I mean, I'd like to know the name of the firm. Will you tell me the names of the firms?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. No.

Mr. Wells. It's getting late, guys.

The Witness. I respectfully decline -- well, I did answer your question, I guess, literally speaking. The question was whether I would tell you, and I answered no.

BY MR. [REDACTED]

Q Okay. Was it the same firm?

The Zombie case, there's a legal theory that -- various legal theories -- that needed to be run to ground. In your book, you talk about how there is an outside law firm helping the D.A.'s Office. And I asked you for the name of that law firm. It's mentioned at two different points.

In the fall of 2019, before you joined the District Attorney's Office, they commissioned -- and this is on page 40 -- they commissioned an outside firm. And then, when you joined the District Attorney's Office and you were looking at whether the money laundering -- the money laundering idea could be used, you went back, as I understand it, and had the help of an outside law firm.

So my question is, what was the name of those firms, and were they different?

A First, I think your question misstates the facts --

Q Okay.

A -- in the sense that the book does not reference getting an outside counsel's opinion with respect to potential money laundering charges.

Q Okay.

A The book does reference outside opinions with regard to false statement and the predicate acts necessary to elevate a false filing charge from a misdemeanor to a felony.

And you correctly point out that the book references a law firm at one point and also references a law firm at a separate point. And now your question is whether those were the same law firms.

Q Correct.

A And having clarified your question, I refuse to answer it for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Q When you were working on your -- on the SOFC matter in late March, you wrote in your book that, "The District Attorney's Office began ramping up work that our outside consultant, FTI, was doing to parse Trump's tax returns and financial statements."

What was FTI doing for the District Attorney's Office?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. The question was what was FTI doing for the District Attorney's Office?

BY MR. [REDACTED]:

Q Right.

A Yeah, I decline to answer that question for the reasons indicated in my statement.

Q And why is it that on one hand you're willing to name FTI in the book but not the law firms?

A I decline to answer your question on the advice of my counsel. Well, I should say, generally, I'm trying to follow the advice of my counsel each and every time I assert my rights.

Q You mention in the book the assistance of lawyers from the Paul, Weiss firm as well as the Davis Polk firm?

A You're referring, I believe, to lawyers described in the book as having been seconded to the District Attorney's Office?

Q Correct. The work that those lawyers were performing, was that the same work as the outside law firms were consulted on, or were they two different subject matters?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer for the reasons previously stated.

Mr. [REDACTED] Is there any prohibition from the District Attorney's Office to get free help from outside law firms that you're aware of?

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer the question. I'll leave it there.

Mr. [REDACTED]. In the congressional context, for example, if a government agency was using the services of a law firm for free, there would be issues because that money is not authorized or appropriated and so forth.

And I'm wondering if there's any companion idea in the District Attorney's Office or is there just no restrictions on how much free help they can get.

Ms. Dubeck. Objection.

The Witness. I decline to answer the question for the reasons stated.

Mr. [REDACTED]. Okay.

Chairman Jordan. Can I?

Mr. Pomerantz, in the letter that Ms. Dubeck sent you as general counsel for the D.A.'s Office -- Ms. Dubeck, who's been here with us this entire time representing the D.A.'s Office -- that she sent to the lawyer for Paramount, I think the parent company for Simon & Schuster, she sent the letter to the general counsel for Simon & Schuster and to you on the 18th. And they make clear in the letter they discovered that you were going to publish a book based on an announcement from your publisher, Simon & Schuster, and then they send you the letter on the 18th.

Did you talk with them, did you try to work it out, when they tell you on the 18th? Because my understanding is the book -- you get this letter on the 18th, and the book is published the next month. Did you have communications with them trying to work this out?

The Witness. The book was published on February 7th, 2023. And I decline to answer whether there were any conversations between the date of the letter and February 7th.

Mr. Wells. Just so the record is clear, that's January? It that the January letter?

Chairman Jordan. January 18th, 2023. It's exhibit 16, the letter from

Ms. Dubeck to Mr. Pomerantz and Simon & Schuster and the parent company.

Did you think about, when you got the letter, did you think about, "Wait a minute, let's put the brakes on this"?

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer on the grounds of -- on the basis of my Fifth Amendment rights.

Chairman Jordan. Is it fair to say if you would have -- if you'd have held back on publishing the book, that there would have been no need for this letter?

If you told them, "You know what?" -- let's say it this way. If you held back on publishing the book, didn't publish the book, that you wouldn't be facing possible criminal liability?

The Witness. I respectfully decline to answer.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. [REDACTED] But I guess what Mr. Jordan is getting to is, were there any conversations before the letter came that could have resolved the situation?

The Witness. Prior to the letter?

Mr. [REDACTED] Right.

Chairman Jordan. Between the 11th -- when Simon & Schuster announces "People v. Donald Trump, An Inside Account" by Mark Pomerantz is going to be available at some date -- between the 11th and the 18th, when they send you the letter, did you talk to them?

The Witness. Yes, I decline to answer that question.

Chairman Jordan. Okay.

Mr. [REDACTED] And am I also correct that you're declining to answer whether you had any communications with them outside of the letter?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. [REDACTED] Okay. I think we're done. We'll go off the record.

Interim Staff Report of the

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

On April 4, 2023, Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg announced that he secured a 34-count criminal indictment against President Trump that bootstrapped misdemeanor state charges for allegedly falsifying New York business records to an ambiguous, unknown federal crime to aggravate the charges to felonies.¹ The indictment focused on payments that former Trump employee Michael Cohen made to Stephanie Clifford (also referred to as Stormy Daniels) in 2017. Legal experts have detailed serious legal and constitutional deficiencies with Bragg’s politicized prosecution. First, as one legal scholar explained, even if the alleged bookkeeping irregularities “amount[ed] to fraud crimes . . . the transactions in question could not possibly have had the slightest impact on the 2016 election. They didn’t occur until months later—specifically, from February 14 through December 5, 2017.”² Second, “even if Bragg had jurisdiction to enforce federal campaign finance law” and “even if Bragg were correct that the . . . payments were in-kind campaign contributions that had to be disclosed,” any disclosure would have been due “several months into 2017. Again, there could not conceivably have been any impact on the 2016 election.”³

In March 2023, the Judiciary Committee opened an investigation into Bragg’s unprecedented indictment of President Trump, including by requesting that former Manhattan Special Assistant District Attorney Mark Pomerantz provide relevant documents and testimony pertaining to his role leading the investigation into President Trump.⁴ On instructions from Bragg, Pomerantz refused to cooperate with our oversight.⁵ The Committee issued a subpoena for Pomerantz’s testimony, litigated it in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York upon Bragg’s objection, and prevailed, resulting in Pomerantz appearing for a deposition before the Committee on May 12, 2023.⁶ Despite Pomerantz’s conduct at the deposition—he refused to answer the most basic of questions—the Committee’s investigation proved fruitful.⁷ On April 25, 2024, the Committee released its interim findings—in short, Bragg’s prosecution of President Trump was politically motivated, unethically and likely unlawfully focused solely on one person, and “opened the door for future prosecutions of a former president—or current candidate—that would be widely perceived as politically motivated.”⁸

On May 15, 2024, the Judiciary Committee’s Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government held a hearing highlighting the weaponization of the rule of law through the use of lawfare tactics and exposing the two-tiered justice system that extends from the highest offices in the Department of Justice to the offices of politically ambitious state and local prosecutors. The Committee heard testimony from former federal prosecutor James Trusty, who testified about the dangers of lawfare, or, as Trusty put it, “an end-justify-the-means mentality” that is the “antithesis of justice.”⁹ The Committee also heard from Gene Hamilton, a former Department of Justice official, who highlighted the unprecedented use of lawfare against President Biden’s political opponents. Finally, the Committee also heard from Robert Costello, Michael Cohen’s former attorney, who testified about Cohen’s credibility and highlighted the deficiencies in Cohen’s testimony.

On June 13, 2024, the full Committee on the Judiciary convened a hearing to further examine the left’s use of lawfare to target political adversaries.¹⁰ The Committee heard testimony from experts that President Trump’s prosecution in Manhattan was riddled with defects. The Committee heard testimony from Federal Election Commission (FEC) Commissioner James “Trey” E. Trainor, III who explained how Bragg’s prosecution was “a significant deviation” from a well-established legal framework as Bragg “usurped the jurisdiction that Congress [] explicitly reserved for federal authorities.”¹¹ The Committee also heard from a constitutional law scholar and attorney Elizabeth Price Foley who explained in detail how the trial violated President Trump’s constitutionally protected due process rights. Finally, the Committee heard from Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey who drew on his expertise as Missouri’s chief law enforcement officer to discuss how Bragg’s prosecution was clearly “politically motivated and replete with legal error.”¹²

A fundamental principle of the American system of justice is that no individual is above the law. But just as important is the precept that prosecutors prosecute conduct, not individuals. Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg, however, ran for office on a platform of investigating and prosecuting President Trump, bragging about his extensive experience suing President Trump. Although Bragg was initially hesitant to bring charges once he became district attorney, he faced intense political pressure to do so, including a leaked resignation letter from a special assistant district attorney who attacked Bragg for being too timid. That same prosecutor, Mark Pomerantz, later authored a tell-all book in which he took Bragg to task for failing to prosecute President Trump. Unsurprisingly, just months after Pomerantz’s book premiered—and after President Trump declared his candidacy for the 2024 Republican presidential nomination¹³—Bragg succumbed to this political pressure and filed charges relying on Pomerantz’s theory of the case.

This interim staff report explains the several ways in which Bragg’s prosecution of President Trump suffers from severe legal and procedural defects. These infirmities include, but are not limited to:

- Bragg’s unconstitutional and unprecedented Russian-nesting-doll theory of criminal liability, in which the jury never had to reach unanimity beyond a reasonable doubt as to each element of the criminal offenses;
- Bragg’s usurpation of the federal government’s exclusive authority to prosecute alleged violations of federal campaign finance laws and the Biden-Harris Administration’s refusal to intercede to protect federal interests; and
- Judge Merchan’s egregious legal rulings before and during the trial that all cut against President Trump’s rights, including:
 - Judge Merchan’s failure to recuse himself for manifest political bias against President Trump;
 - The unconstitutional gag order he imposed on President Trump during the trial;
 - Judge Merchan’s admission of plainly inadmissible, irrelevant, and unfairly prejudicial testimony against President Trump; and
 - Judge Merchan’s refusal to permit former Federal Election Commission Chairman Bradley Smith to testify as to the meaning and complexities of the Federal Election Campaign Act.

President Trump never had a real shot at a fair trial in Manhattan. In a more neutral jurisdiction, where a politically ambitious prosecutor was not motivated by partisanship and a trial judge with perceived biases did not refuse to enforce a fair proceeding, President Trump would have never been found guilty.¹⁴ But Manhattan is anything but a neutral jurisdiction. President Trump promised to appeal, stating, “We will fight for our constitution. This is far from over.”¹⁵ But the Democrats’ use of lawfare accomplished its short-term goal—it removed President Trump from the campaign trail and diverted attention away from President Biden’s missteps and failing policies.

Since Alvin Bragg announced last year his political prosecution of President Trump, the Committee and Select Subcommittee have conducted oversight of politically motivated prosecutions and the partisan use of lawfare to achieve political ends. The state or local prosecution of a current or former president by a popularly elected district attorney raises substantial federal interests and raises serious concerns about conflict between state and federal entities. While Bragg and Congressional Democrats dismiss these concerns, the Committee has taken steps to ensure that certain federal officials may have a fair trial in a more neutral venue. The Committee’s and Select Subcommittee’s oversight work is not done, but this interim report presents the facts about how the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office and a Manhattan judge worked together to deprive President Donald J. Trump of his constitutional and legal rights.

I. INTRODUCTION

The New York County District Attorney’s Office’s (DANY) multi-year investigation into former President Donald J. Trump—and subsequent indictment and prosecution—is unprecedented. Since at least 2018, the DANY has weaponized the New York criminal justice system, combing through every aspect of President Trump’s personal life and business affairs in an effort to indict and convict him of a crime, no matter how ill-conceived, contrived, or unlawful the theory of criminal liability.¹⁶

Around the time the DANY began its pretextual investigation into President Trump, Michael Cohen, President Trump’s former disgraced lawyer—and Bragg’s star trial witness—pleaded guilty to five counts of willful tax evasion; one count of making false statements to a bank; one count of causing an unlawful campaign contribution; and one count of making an excessive campaign contribution in federal court.¹⁷ Federal prosecutors in Manhattan described Cohen’s criminal conduct in that case as “knowing and calculated acts—acts Cohen executed in order to profit personally, build his own power, and enhance his level of influence.”¹⁸ Three months later, Cohen pleaded guilty to lying to Congress.¹⁹ By July 2019, the U.S. Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York (SDNY) ended its investigation into payments made by Cohen to Stephanie Clifford. Federal prosecutors determined that no additional people would be charged alongside Cohen and that no one else—including President Trump—was responsible for the conduct.²⁰

Although the SDNY ended its investigation, the DANY under the leadership of Cyrus (“Cy”) Vance continued its investigation. In mid-2019, the DANY interviewed Cohen in prison²¹ and, by October 2019, the DANY gathered some of the facts related to the payments that Cohen made to Clifford.²² In late 2019, however, Vance decided not to bring charges “against anyone in connection with the . . . money paid to Clifford or the [allegedly] phony invoicing scheme by which Michael Cohen had been reimbursed for the money he had laid out.”²³

Nonetheless, Vance continued with the investigation. In December of 2020, Carey Dunne, who at the time served as counsel to Vance, asked Mark Pomerantz to join a group of outside advisors to Vance’s team investigating President Trump, which Pomerantz accepted immediately.²⁴ Throughout 2020 and 2021, the DANY’s investigation of President Trump continued.²⁵ In his self-serving book, People v. Trump: An Insider’s Account, Pomerantz explained the many legal theories that the DANY considered to prosecute President Trump and he made clear that his goal was to prosecute President Trump—it was just a matter of finding the crime to pin on the President.²⁶

After President Trump left office, Pomerantz revisited “whether there were other felony charges that could be brought in connection with the payment that Cohen had made to Clifford and the ensuing [alleged] coverup.”²⁷ Pomerantz concocted a “novel legal theory” under New York’s money laundering statute, which he admitted was “neither intuitive nor obvious.”²⁸ According to Pomerantz, money laundering is a series of financial transactions that are designed to “conceal or disguise the nature, the location, the source, the ownership, or the control of the proceeds of criminal conduct.”²⁹ This theory was “novel” because the “proceeds” were based on Clifford’s criminal conduct—namely, her “extortion of Donald Trump.”³⁰ That theory, however, went nowhere because New York’s money laundering statute required the payments that Cohen allegedly agreed to be made on President Trump’s behalf—or the “dirty money”—to have been actually received by Clifford.³¹

Pomerantz then began focusing on President Trump’s Statements of Financial Condition (SOFC), which he believed, based on Cohen’s claims, must be criminal.³² Pomerantz examined multiple years’ worth of the financial statements made for multiple golf properties, Deutsche Bank, the Old Post Office Hotel, Doral Resort, Trump International Hotel & Tower in Chicago, Mar-A-Lago, Seven Springs, 40 Wall Street, the Triplex Apartment, and Trump Tower.³³

Despite repeated failure, Pomerantz considered another novel theory of criminal liability—charging President Trump under New York’s Enterprise Corruption statute for “pattern crimes.”³⁴ Under this theory, Pomerantz attempted to amalgamate several unrelated and baseless allegations against President Trump into a crime. Pomerantz was not subtle. He prejudged the results of this case and had decided that President Trump would be prosecuted for some crime—any crime. It was only a matter of pinning a crime on him.

Pomerantz faced one major hurdle in his pursuit of President Trump: his colleagues did not entirely agree with him. For daring to question his novel theories, Pomerantz accused his fellow DANY lawyers and investigators of being “relentlessly negative, dwelling on all the difficulties and issues with the case, and refusing to acknowledge the positives” during an internal meeting on December 10, 2021, where he referred to his former colleagues as “conscientious objectors”³⁵ for stating that the obvious: the case was “weak” and had “many fatal flaws.”³⁶ Rather than engage in meaningful reflection and attempt to meet the concerns of his colleagues, Pomerantz dismissed them as either too lazy to do the work, ignorant of the evidence, or afraid of bringing charges against President Trump.³⁷

A. Alvin Bragg’s Political Prosecutorial Pursuit of President Trump

Throughout his run for district attorney, Alvin Bragg made President Trump a focal point of his campaign.³⁸ On December 13, 2020, for instance, Bragg stated:

Let’s talk about what’s waiting for the new DA. The docket. We know there’s a Trump investigation. I have investigated Trump and his children and held them accountable for their misconduct with the Trump Foundation. I also sued the Trump administration more than 100 times for DACA, the travel ban, separation of children from their families at the border. So I know that work. I know how to follow the facts and hold people in power accountable.³⁹

On March 17, 2021, Bragg stated that, as district attorney, he “will hold [Trump] accountable”⁴⁰ Similarly, on March 23, 2021, he boasted that he had “sued the Trump administration over 100 times”⁴¹ In June 2021, Bragg stated, “It is a fact that I have sued Trump more than a hundred times. I can’t change that fact, nor would I. That was important work. That’s separate from anything that the D.A.’s office may be looking at now.”⁴² In Bragg’s view, he had one purpose: to prosecute President Trump.

On January 1, 2022, Bragg was sworn in as the New York County District Attorney.⁴³ Immediately upon taking office, Bragg issued a ten-page manifesto that promised radically soft-on-crime, anti-victim policies in New York County.⁴⁴ This so-called “Day One” memorandum, dated January 3, 2022, instructed his assistant district attorneys not to prosecute several crimes, including trespassing, resisting arrest, and engaging in prostitution.⁴⁵ Bragg would no longer prosecute armed robberies as felonies.⁴⁶ Rather, he directed that armed robberies be considered as misdemeanor larcenies unless someone was shot during the course of the robbery.⁴⁷ Moreover, Bragg announced that his office would not seek prison sentences for criminal defendants unless they were charged with homicides, domestic violence felonies, sex crimes, and public corruption.⁴⁸ Bragg directed his prosecutors not to request prison sentences in excess of 20 years, absent “exceptional circumstances.”⁴⁹ The public backlash that followed—including from local law enforcement—forced Bragg to walk back some of the policies in his Day One memo.⁵⁰

Meanwhile, despite campaigning heavily on his goal of prosecuting President Trump, Bragg realized that the case against President Trump was thin. On January 8, 2022, Pomerantz told Bragg that his case against President Trump “was ready to be charged.”⁵¹ On January 11, 2022, Pomerantz and Dunne presented former President Trump’s financial statements to Bragg and his team in support of their theory of prosecution.⁵² Bragg’s team, however, expressed “considerable angst” about using Cohen as a witness and sought to pivot away from Pomerantz’s proposed fraud charges.⁵³ On January 24, 2022, an investigative team meeting “quickly degenerated into a whirlwind of negativity” because other DANY officials rightly questioned the credibility of Pomerantz’s main witness, Michael Cohen.⁵⁴

Shortly thereafter, within the first few weeks of February 2022, Pomerantz and Dunne held several conversations with Bragg and his team to explain their multi-faceted investigation into President Trump.⁵⁵ Pomerantz argued that the case against President Trump based upon the Clifford payment facts—famously known as the “zombie” case—had multiple pitfalls, and notwithstanding possible “work-arounds,” none were appealing.⁵⁶ Further, his DANY colleagues were “dubious about whether Trump had been ‘extorted’ in the first place.”⁵⁷ Bragg therefore halted the investigation into President Trump despite “fac[ing] incredible political pressure from his Democratic base to indict [President] Trump.”⁵⁸ As a result, Pomerantz and Dunne dramatically resigned in protest, with Pomerantz leaking his scathing resignation letter to the New York Times.⁵⁹ Amid the fierce backlash to the First Day Memo and the fallout from the investigation into President Trump, Bragg issued an “unusual” public statement about the DANY’s investigation into President Trump, “emphasizing that the investigation into Trump and his business was far from over.”⁶⁰

In December 2022, Bragg “beefed up [his] office” by hiring senior U.S. Department of Justice official Michael B. Colangelo to fill the void left by the abrupt departure of Pomerantz and Dunne.⁶¹ Bragg hired Colangelo to “jump-start” his office’s investigation of President Trump, reportedly due to Colangelo’s “history of taking on Donald J. Trump and his family business.”⁶²

Colangelo’s employment history demonstrated the obsession that he shared with Bragg and Pomerantz to investigate a person—Donald Trump—rather than prosecute a crime.⁶³ At the New York Attorney General’s Office, Colangelo—who, for some time, held the title of Chief Counsel for Federal Initiatives⁶⁴—ran investigations into President Trump,⁶⁵ leading “a wave of state litigation against Trump administration policies.”⁶⁶ On January 20, 2021, the first day of the Biden Administration, Colangelo began serving as the Acting Associate Attorney General—the number three official at the Justice Department.⁶⁷ Upon the confirmation of Associate Attorney General Vanita Gupta, Colangelo began serving as the Principal Deputy Associate Attorney General.⁶⁸ However, in December 2022, Colangelo seemingly stepped down from his senior Justice Department position to become a line prosecutor at a local prosecutor’s office and to lead its investigation of President Trump.

Shortly after Colangelo joined the DANY, Bragg empaneled a grand jury to hear evidence in a “years-old probe” regarding the alleged 2016 payment to Clifford.⁶⁹ Then, on April 4, 2023, Bragg announced his indictment of President Trump on 34 counts of first-degree falsifying business records⁷⁰—violating the American Bar Association’s guidance that a “prosecutor should not file or maintain charges greater in number or degree than . . . are necessary to fairly reflect the gravity of the offense or deter similar conduct.”⁷¹ Even without the egregious overcharging, the indictment was an “unprecedented abuse of prosecutorial authority.”⁷² Falsifying business records is ordinarily a misdemeanor subject to a two-year statute of limitations,⁷³ which would have expired long ago. Bragg used a novel and untested legal theory to bootstrap the misdemeanor allegations as a felony by alleging that President Trump was involved in falsifying records to conceal a second crime.⁷⁴ The facts surrounding Bragg’s indictment of President Trump have “been known for years,”⁷⁵ and federal officials had previously declined to bring charges.⁷⁶

Although both the SDNY and the DANY previously declined to further investigate the alleged payments to Clifford,⁷⁷ Bragg opted to revive the DANY’s investigation at a politically opportune moment—shortly after President Trump announced his White House run.⁷⁸ The timing and basis for the DANY’s prosecution of President Trump was clearly motivated by political calculations.

On April 15, 2024, President Trump’s trial began in Manhattan, where Colangelo led the opening statements for the prosecution.⁷⁹ The prosecution ultimately called 20 witnesses.⁸⁰ On May 30, 2024, the Manhattan jury found President Trump guilty on all 34 charges of falsifying business records.⁸¹ President Trump’s sentencing is scheduled for September 18, 2024.⁸²

B. Bragg Relied on Convicted Perjurer Michael Cohen to Convict President Trump

Although Bragg stated in February 2022 “that he ‘could not see a world’ in which he would indict Trump and call Michael Cohen as a prosecution witness,”⁸³ Bragg’s “star witness” in his prosecution of President Trump was none other than Michael Cohen. Cohen, however, had a serious credibility problem, which is why prosecutors were reluctant to rely on him in the first place.

On February 28, 2019, Republicans on the House Committee on Oversight and Reform referred Cohen to the Justice Department for perjury and knowingly making false statements during his testimony before the Committee on February 27, 2019.⁸⁴ Urging the Justice Department to take appropriate action, Members cited six specific lies told by Cohen, including:

1. Cohen denied committing various fraudulent acts to which he had pleaded guilty in federal court.⁸⁵
2. Cohen repeatedly testified that he did not seek employment in President Trump’s White House, despite evidence from the U.S. Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York demonstrating that “Cohen privately told friends . . . that he expected to be given a prominent role and title in the new administration.”⁸⁶
3. Cohen stated that he did not direct the creation of a Twitter account known as @WomenForCohen, which is contradicted by statements from the owner of the IT firm that created the account for Cohen.⁸⁷
4. Cohen attested in his Truth in Testimony form that he did not have any reportable foreign government contracts, despite entering into two contracts in 2017 with entities owned in part by foreign governments.⁸⁸
5. Cohen’s testimony at the hearing contradicted various aspects of his written statement submitted in advance of the hearing.⁸⁹
6. Cohen asserted that he committed crimes out of “blind loyalty” to President Trump, which was contradicted by findings made by federal prosecutors and a federal court.⁹⁰

Cohen’s willful and intentional false statements of material fact were contradicted by the record established by the Justice Department in United States v. Cohen.⁹¹ On May 8, 2024, Chairman Jim Jordan and Oversight Committee Chairman James Comer renewed the referral to the Biden-Garland Justice Department.⁹² The Biden-Garland Justice Department has taken no action to indict Cohen for making false statements to Congress.

In 2023, Cohen admitted to lying to Congress during a separate proceeding before Congress in 2019. At a hearing in the politicized lawsuit brought by the New York Attorney General against President Trump, Cohen admitted to lying under oath during a 2019 deposition before the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence (HPSCI).⁹³ President Trump’s attorney asked Cohen if he lied during the deposition when testifying about whether he was directed to inflate certain financial numbers, to which Cohen responded, “Yes.”⁹⁴ This revelation in court prompted HPSCI to refer Cohen again to the Justice Department for perjury and knowingly making false statements to Congress.⁹⁵

During a May 15, 2024, hearing before the Select Subcommittee, Robert Costello, Cohen’s former attorney, testified about Cohen’s credibility. Costello testified that the SDNY previously “turned down” the exact case Bragg brought against President Trump because “they assessed that Michael Cohen . . . was totally unworthy of belief.”⁹⁶ Throughout Costello’s representation of Cohen, Costello would ask Cohen for “information that would implicate [President] Trump” to help “get [Cohen] out of his legal troubles”⁹⁷ Cohen told Costello many times that he did not have any incriminating evidence on President Trump.⁹⁸ Despite not having any evidence on President Trump, Cohen told Costello that he would “do whatever the F . . . [he] has to do” to not spend a day in jail.⁹⁹ Cohen had the ability “to implicate [President] Trump in exchange for eliminating his own enormous legal problems [but] he repeatedly said he had nothing truthful on [President] Trump.”¹⁰⁰ Costello further testified that, throughout his representation of Cohen, Cohen would “lie[] repeatedly both about consequential and inconsequential details. Whenever it suited his purposes, Michael Cohen showed no hesitation to lie.”¹⁰¹ Costello also testified at the Manhattan trial and provided similar information—including that Cohen previously told him that “President Trump knew nothing about [the] payments” at the heart of Bragg’s case.¹⁰²

Despite Cohen’s lack of credibility, during President Trump’s trial, Bragg heavily relied on Cohen’s testimony and credibility.¹⁰³ Cohen was the prosecution’s last witness and he spent four days testifying with the purpose of shedding light on President Trump’s alleged crime.¹⁰⁴ Yet, the only discernible crime that Cohen shed light on was his own. In particular, Cohen admitted on the stand that he stole from the Trump Organization.¹⁰⁵ Cohen testified that he sought reimbursement from the Trump Organization for $50,000 to pay a vendor but only gave the firm about $20,000—pocketing about $30,000 for himself.¹⁰⁶ When asked on cross-examination if he “stole [the money] from the Trump Organization,” Cohen responded, “Yes, sir.”¹⁰⁷ When asked why he stole $30,000, Cohen testified that he was “angry” because his annual bonus had been reduced.¹⁰⁸ Politico reported that “[t]he total theft actually amounted to $60,000, because all sums were doubled to cover taxes Cohen might owe.”¹⁰⁹ One legal analyst explained, “The fact that [Cohen] was never charged with larceny is important because . . . larceny in New York State[] is more serious of a crime than falsifying business records.”¹¹⁰ In other words, Bragg’s star witness committed a more serious offense than President Trump, yet Bragg not only let him off the hook but also relied on him to go after President Trump.

Even more troubling, Cohen’s advisor, Lanny Davis, boasted to Politico that Bragg’s prosecution of President Trump all stemmed from Cohen’s testimony to Congress in 2019—the same testimony for which he was referred for perjury.¹¹¹ Davis confessed to calling the DANY after “Michael was sent to prison” because “the evidence of financial fraud was on the record in the [congressional] hearings and that Vance’s office should interview Michael And that’s how it began.”¹¹² In short, to prosecute President Trump, Bragg revived this “zombie” case relying on a known—and convicted—liar and his testimony at a congressional hearing in which he lied at least six times.¹¹³

II. BRAGG’S “RUSSIAN-NESTING-DOLL” THEORY OF CRIMINALITY AND JUDGE MERCHAN’S JURY INSTRUCTIONS VIOLATED PRESIDENT TRUMP’S DUE PROCESS RIGHTS

The Fourteenth Amendment’s Due Process Clause prohibits the deprivation of any individual’s life, liberty, or property without due process of law.¹¹⁴ Due process embodies the idea that “criminal prosecutions must comport with prevailing notions of fundamental fairness.”¹¹⁵ The U.S. Supreme Court has made clear that due process requires “notice of the specific charge” levied against the accused and a meaningful opportunity to be heard “on the issue raised by that charge.”¹¹⁶ Several legal scholars, including former federal prosecutor Andrew McCarthy, have explained how Bragg’s prosecution of President Trump violated his due process rights. As McCarthy wrote, this is because the indictment against President Trump took:

[A] single transaction—Trump’s reimbursement to Michael Cohen of the $130,000 Cohen paid to [Stephanie Clifford] to stay mum about an alleged 2006 fling [pursuant to an agreed-upon non-disclosure agreement (NDA)]—and ludicrously slic[ed] it into 34 transactions, each of which [it] brands as felony falsification of business records.¹¹⁷

In the words of law professor Elizabeth Price Foley, the procedural and substantive defects of this theory of liability amount to an unlawful “Russian-nesting doll theory of criminality” that offends notions of due process.¹¹⁸

On June 13, 2024, Professor Foley testified before the Committee and explained that Bragg’s case against President Trump presented a textbook example of a “Russian-nesting-doll theory of criminality: The charged crime hinged on the intent to commit another, unspecified crime, which in turn hinged on the actual commission of yet another unspecified offense.”¹¹⁹ She explained:

[President Trump] was charged with first-degree falsification of business records, which hinged on the intent to commit another, unspecified crime. As elaborated below, it became clear what this other, predicate crime was (New York election law) only when, after all evidence had closed, the judge instructed the jury. That predicate crime, moreover, required further proof that Mr. Trump actually committed yet another offense—i.e., the “unlawful means” by which New York’s election law was violated. At trial, there was no proof that this second predicate offense was actually committed, and indeed, it wasn't even clear what the second predicate was—like the first predicate—until the judge instructed the jury.¹²⁰

Professor Foley testified that “unpacking the nesting dolls reveals layers upon layers of due process defects inhering in these bizarre, unprecedented charges.”¹²¹

As a result, in the words of Professor Foley, “Mr. Trump’s New York trial violated [the] twin pillars of due process”: notice of the specific charges and the elements therein and a meaningful opportunity to be heard on those charges.¹²² Utilizing an actual nesting doll at the hearing to help demonstrate the due process problems, Professor Foley observed:

But I thought I would also bring another visual of the Russian nesting dolls to give you some sense of the complexity of the theory of criminality with which Mr. Trump was faced [with] in New York.

The first doll represents the actual charges in the indictment against Mr. Trump. There were 34 charges of felony falsification of business records under New York law. And to make it a felony falsification, you have to meet all of the elements of misdemeanor falsification which means you have to have a falsified business record with an intent to defraud and then to make it a felony, you have an additional that must be proven. That additional element is the intent to commit another crime. All right?

¹²⁰ Foley Written Testimony at 2.

¹²¹ Id. at 3.

¹²² Manhattan District Attorney Hearing at 23.

So the next nesting doll is what is that other crime that Mr. Trump intended to commit? Well, Mr. Trump wasn't sure and neither were his attorneys, so he asked the New York prosecutor for what is called a bill of particulars, saying hey, please tell me what that other crime you think it was that I intended to commit. The prosecutor interestingly responded and said you don't have a right to know. We don't have to tell you what that specific crime was and . . . in other words, without limiting our ability to change our minds during the trial, the other crimes that Mr. Trump may have intended to commit, may include one of four things: first, New York election law; second, New York tax law; third falsification of other business records, presumably other than the 34 with which he was actually charged; and finally, the Federal Election Campaign Act, FECA, right?

FECA, as you probably know, is the Federal Election Campaign Act, is a federal law that is over 100 pages long. And if you read it, you see that there is lots of different crimes embedded in that one mega statute. So Mr. Trump didn't know for sure what was that other crime that the prosecutor thought he intended to commit and in fact, the first time he learned what it was during the jury instruction when Judge Juan Merchan told the jury that that other crime was New York election law. Okay? That is far too late for due process purposes, for purposes of notice, right? That is after all of the evidence has closed.¹²³

¹²³ Id. at 23-26.

Professor Foley concluded that the layers, complexities, novelty, and lack of notice that President Trump had of the charges against him resulted in “a travesty of justice,” which was “clearly a violation of due process.”¹²⁴

The violation of President Trump’s due process rights did not end with the nesting-doll theory of criminality. It was compounded by the defective jury instructions that Judge Juan Merchan read to the jurors after the close of evidence. The instructions were comprised of 55-pages of confusing and seemingly unlawful charges.¹²⁵ Specifically, Judge Merchan told the jury that they had to agree unanimously on whether to convict President Trump on each of the 34 counts of falsifying business records with the intent to conceal damaging information before the 2016 election.¹²⁶ This required them, unanimously, to determine that President Trump used “unlawful means” to conceal this information.¹²⁷ However, Judge Merchan instructed the jurors that they “did not have to agree on a singular unlawful act” to convict.¹²⁸ He instructed the jurors “that they would have to find only that Mr. Trump committed bookkeeping infractions to conceal [1] a campaign finance violation, [2] tax law infraction or [3] falsification of business records,” but they “didn’t have to agree on the underlying crime to find the former president guilty.”¹²⁹

One New York criminal law expert reasoned that, by offering “three different theories as to how the false records could have violated state election law, limit[ing] instruction on what some of those theories required, and the fact that jurors were not required to agree on which had been proven,” Judge Merchan created “a real issue for the appeal.”¹³⁰ As a matter of law, legal scholar Andrew McCarthy explained, Judge Merchan should have instructed the jurors “that they had to find at least one of these objective crimes and they had to be unanimous on that finding in order to convict Trump.”¹³¹

Professor Foley underscored the constitutional defect that emanated from Judge Merchan’s jury charge, calling it “a cafeteria style of approach where non-unanimity was allowed on the underlying means by which the New York election [law] was violated. I think those are clear due process violations.”¹³² Professor Foley elaborated:

It was not until all evidence was closed that the New York trial judge, Judge Juan Merchan, finally revealed, in his jury instructions, that the other crime Trump intended to commit was Section 17-152 of New York election law. Moreover, he instructed the jury: “Although you must conclude unanimously that the defendant conspired to promote or prevent the election of any person to a public office by unlawful means, you need not be unanimous as to what those unlawful means were.” Judge Merchan then hand-selected three laws that he told the jury “you may consider” as the “unlawful means” by which state election law was violated. . . . These instructions violated due process in several critical ways.

However one slices it, therefore, unanimity was required to determine the basis upon which the predicate crime Mr. Trump allegedly intended to commit—New York’s election law—was based. New York election law was the “other crime” that elevated Mr. Trump’s falsification of business records to a felony offense. . . . Judge Merchan’s instruction that the jury “need not be unanimous as to what those unlawful means were” was therefore unconstitutional¹³³

Simply put, Professor Foley explained, “due process demands that felony verdicts be unanimous.”¹³⁴

Indeed, Representative Kelly Armstrong, who spent many years as a criminal defense attorney, homed in on this exact point with Professor Foley during the hearing. In an exchange with Representative Armstrong, Professor Foley articulated the fundamental flaw in the trial: the prosecutor, the defendant, and the judge ultimately “don’t know how the jury got to where they got at the end.”¹³⁵ She testified:

Q. I’ve actually read all the jury[] [instructions]. The unlawful means is where we get this grab bag, right, Ms. Foley?

A. Yes, that’s where we get three possibilities instructed by the

Q. And basically pick. But I went through the jury instructions and here’s my question. What elements of any of those predicate claims are unlawful? I mean, conspiracy in and of itself is – so if you charge a second offense driving under the influence usually the sentence for a second offense is different than a first offense. In order to get to the second offense you have to prove the first offense beyond a reasonable doubt.

A. Right.

¹³⁵ Manhattan District Attorney Hearing at 154.

- Q. Now, in those types of cases it's a certified record of a court judgment. You just put it in the record. . . . So when we're talking about these unlawful offenses and these three pictured things and dealing with the New York misdemeanor statute that when you combine with the other misdemeanor statute you end up getting to this felony and passed it to your statute of limitations. But was the jury required to prove any of those underlying elements beyond a reasonable doubt to any of those crimes? Because I'm talking about the Fifth Amendment and the due process part of that.
- A. No, and in fact, you know, based on the instructions we don't even know which of those possible three areas of law the jury decided –
- Q. Yeah, I've read it.
- A. — because they didn't have to be unanimous. But it's really more than three laws too, by the way, because the tax laws that he instructed the jury on could include local, state, and federal tax laws. And by the way, the mention of local or federal tax laws had never been made at all before at most, right. The prosecution had mentioned the possibility of state tax laws as being the first predicate, not second.
- Q. Yeah. And I'm actually into the third layer of this because unlawful means – I mean, I'm just thinking of – I've never defended a case in New York. I just never practiced in New York. But I have defended cases in state court and I've defended cases in federal court and I'm thinking about arguing against a case when you – I mean, I made my living on if there were seven elements of a crime. Winning one of them – like, I don't need to win all seven. I got to get proof beyond a reasonable doubt on one of the seven elements and they're not laid out anywhere in this whole process, are they?
- A. No. I mean, that's the problem. You don't know how the jury got to where they got at the end. In fact, you didn't even know how they could get there until they were instructed, and then once they were instructed because they could, you know, kind of pick and choose which of the unlawful means they wanted to base the New York election law violation on you have absolutely no idea why President Trump was guilty of a felony based upon theories of two different misdemeanors.¹³⁶

Judge Merchan’s jury instructions unconstitutionally permitted the jury to find President Trump guilty even if they disagreed on what the “unlawful means” were.

The record could not be clearer: Bragg’s trial of President Trump violated basic principles of due process. Given these fundamental constitutional violations, experts have concluded that ample grounds support President Trump’s success on appeal.

III. BRAGG USURPED THE AUTHORITY OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT BY PURSUING CHARGES RELATED TO ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FINANCE LAWS

When Congress established the Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) of 1971, it granted the Federal Election Commission (FEC) and the Justice Department the “exclusive jurisdiction over the enforcement of federal campaign finance laws.”¹³⁷ FEC Commissioner Trey Trainor explained that this exclusivity “ensures a uniform and consistent application of campaign finance laws across the United States, preventing a patchwork of enforcement that could vary from state to state and district to district.”¹³⁸ By prosecuting President Trump on a theory that he violated federal campaign finance laws, Commissioner Trainor concluded that Bragg “usurped the jurisdiction that Congress has explicitly reserved for the federal authorities” and “undermine[d] the statutory framework established by FECA.”¹³⁹

During his testimony on June 13, 2024, Commissioner Trainor explained that Bragg’s usurpation of federal prerogative should have compelled “Attorney General Garland and the DOJ” to “intervene in the prosecution of Donald Trump.”¹⁴⁰ Indeed, the Justice Department had previously intervened in the FEC’s investigation into the $130,000 payment to Clifford and requested the agency stand down—which it did.¹⁴¹ Despite the Justice Department’s failure to intervene to halt Bragg’s usurpation of federal authority, Commissioner Trainor noted how the Biden-Garland Justice Department “had no issues with intervening in eight pending investigations being conducted by the FEC into the supposed $130,000 payment that was alleged to be misreported on a campaign finance report.”¹⁴² Commissioner Trainor testified:

Those eight matters involved Michael Cohen, Donald J. Trump, Donald J. Trump for President and its treasurer, Trump Organization, LLC, Timothy Jost, and Essential Consultants, LLC. The public now knows that on July 31, 2018, the FEC, at the request of DOJ, voted to provide certain documents from the matters to DOJ and hold those matters in abeyance. Then, on June 5, 2019, the Commission voted, again at the behest of DOJ, to continue holding those matters in abeyance. Finally, on July 15, 2019, the United States Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York informed the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York that it had “effectively concluded its investigations” of the campaign finance violations to which Michael Cohen pled guilty, and, concurrently, that it no longer sought to maintain under seal the grand jury materials related to that investigation.

DOJ inserted itself so fully into an ongoing FEC investigations that, once the abeyance request was lifted, the Commission faced a statute of limitations bar on prosecuting the matters. Clearly, the DOJ knows a great deal about the federal campaign finance issues that Alvin Bragg has prosecuted. DOJ counsel knew the extent to which they themselves had exercised federal jurisdiction, investigated, and found no illegal activity by anyone other than Michael Cohen. However, they have sat idly by and allowed a state officer to assert federal jurisdiction where they themselves had taken jurisdiction and couldn't prosecute.¹⁴³

During the hearing, Chairman Jordan asked Commissioner Trainor to elaborate on the Justice Department's decision to allow a rogue state prosecutor to claim jurisdiction over the matter despite the fact that the federal government had primary jurisdiction over it. Commissioner Trainor testified:

- Q. Commissioner Trainor, I want to read from your testimony. "They have sat idly by and allowed the state officers to assert federal jurisdiction where they themselves had taken jurisdiction and couldn't prosecute." I want you to unpack that sentence for us again real quick.
- A. . . . [A]ll of these claims with regard to the $130,000 for Ms. [Clifford] stem from a complaint that was filed at the Federal Election Commission following the 2016 election.
- Q. Which you guys were investigating?
- A. We were in the process of investigating that.
- Q. And the DOJ came to you and said stand down; we are taking over, and give us your information?
- A. They asked us to abate that and several other matters.
- Q. They, meaning the Southern District of New York?
- A. That is correct.
- Q. And they took your information and you guys . . . voted to stand down and give it to the federal authority, right?
- A. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.
- Q. And they determined that there was nothing there to prosecute other than Michael Cohen—

- A. That is correct. They took a . . . very long time in doing it and when they sent it back to us, we had no more authority to investigate because they sent it back to us and we were barred by the statute of limitations from even investigating the normal civil things that we would look at with regard to those type of expenditures.
- Q. But your point here is they have sat idly by and allowed a state officer to assert federal jurisdiction where they themselves had intervened, to use the word, and taken jurisdiction from you and concluded there was nothing there regarding a federal statute, right? . . .
- A. That is correct, Mr. Chairman. And I don't know what role Mr. Colangelo played in that investigation that took place when they took it away from the Federal Election Commission. [He] [d]id that investigation and then he later left the office to go prosecute this at the state level.¹⁴⁴

Commissioner Trainor further explained that, because “the Department of Justice did not zealously represent the United States in this particular case to go in and defend the jurisdiction that this Congress has given through FECA to the Federal Election Commission and to the Justice Department,” it “abrogated [its exclusive jurisdiction] to a local official to prosecute.”¹⁴⁵ In essence, the Justice Department’s inaction in this case, Commissioner Trainor explained, could create “50 different standards of what violat[es] federal election law.”¹⁴⁶ Such a disparity in the law would upend the uniform application of federal law and the principle of equal protection.¹⁴⁷ Commissioner Trainor testified:

The implications of such jurisdictional overreach and disregard for the principles of federalism at issue are profound. If local district attorneys are permitted to initiate prosecutions based on their interpretations of federal campaign finance laws, we risk eroding the uniformity and predictability that FECA aims to provide. This could lead to a fragmented enforcement landscape where political motivations and local biases influence the application of laws meant to govern national elections and provide public transparency into the financing of campaigns.

This encroachment on federal jurisdiction should raise serious concern that qualified candidates will be deterred from seeking public office, fearing that their political activities, past and present, might be subjected to disparate legal standards depending on the locality. It is essential to preserve the centralized enforcement mechanism that FECA envisions to ensure fair and impartial oversight of federal campaign finance regulations.¹⁴⁸

Ultimately, Bragg’s prosecution of President Trump “under the guise of federal campaign finance violations represent[ed] a clear usurpation of federal jurisdiction,” an attack on equal protection of the law and the integrity of our electoral system, and set a “dangerous precedent of local prosecutorial overreach in matters of federal concern.”¹⁴⁹ The Biden-Garland Justice Department’s silence—in failing to stand up for federal interests in Bragg’s politically motivated prosecution of President Trump—speaks volumes.

IV. JUDGE MERCHAN’S RULINGS DURING THE TRIAL VIOLATED PRESIDENT TRUMP’S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS INSIDE AND OUTSIDE OF THE COURTROOM

In 2005, during his confirmation hearing, then-Judge John Roberts famously explained the proper role of judges. He stated:

Judges and Justices are servants of the law, not the other way around. Judges are like umpires. Umpires don’t make the rules, they apply them. The role of an umpire and a judge is critical. They make sure everybody plays by the rules, but it is a limited role. Nobody ever went to a ball game to see the umpire.¹⁵⁰

By his actions and rulings, Judge Juan Merchan was no umpire, calling balls and strikes. Rather, at the trial of President Trump, he was a key player—pitching, catching, and batting—while draped in the judge’s robe. The legal errors in this case appear to go in only one direction: against President Trump. Stated differently, as former prosecutor Andrew McCarthy pointed out, Judge Merchan put “his thumb on the scale to get Trump convicted.”¹⁵¹

A. Judge Juan Merchan’s Political Bias Prejudiced President Trump

As a threshold matter, Judge Merchan and his family have close ties to the Democrat Party. Not only did his daughter, Lauren Merchan, work on Vice President Kamala Harris’s 2020 presidential campaign, she is currently the president of Authentic Campaigns, a “Chicago-based progressive political consulting firm” that works with Democrat Party candidates, including President Biden and Vice President Harris.¹⁵² According to Judge Merchan, prior to the trial he obtained an opinion from New York’s Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics regarding his daughter’s employment. The Advisory Committee reportedly stated: “We see nothing in the inquiry to suggest that the outcome of the case could have any effect on the judge’s relative, the relative’s business or any of their interests.”¹⁵³

However, two of Authentic Campaigns’ top clients—Representative Adam Schiff and the Democrat-aligned Senate Majority PAC—have raised “at least $93 million in campaign donations” while using President Trump’s New York indictments in their solicitation emails.¹⁵⁴ Notably, Rep. Schiff’s campaign for U.S. Senate has received “$20 million in aid since he began soliciting donations off” Bragg’s indictment of President Trump last April.¹⁵⁵ The Senate

Majority PAC has “pocketed $73.6 million since it also began firing off fundraising emails following the ex-president’s indictment.”¹⁵⁶

In 2020, Judge Merchan made donations to Democrat causes—including to President Biden’s campaign and a group called “Stop Republicans.”¹⁵⁷ According to Judge Merchan, the Advisory Committee found that his donations were “modest political contributions made more than two years ago [that] cannot reasonably create an impression of bias.”¹⁵⁸

Despite these conflicts, Judge Merchan denied President Trump’s recusal request in August 2023.¹⁵⁹ Judge Merchan’s bias was so obvious that one former federal prosecutor, a progressive legal analyst who is not a fan of President Trump, disagreed forcefully with Judge Merchan’s decision not to recuse, stating that he “absolutely should have recused himself” because “judges are not supposed to give any amount” to partisan political organizations.¹⁶⁰ By way of contrast, the former prosecutor observed, “[W]hat if the judge had donated a tiny amount, $35, to Trump 2020 Would people be fine with that? I think people would be going nuts about that [T]here’s 40-something other judges in that courthouse who never donated, and it would have been safer [to have one of them oversee the trial.]”¹⁶¹

These conflicts of interest did not go unnoticed by one member of the New York congressional delegation, Representative Elise Stefanik. On May 28, 2024, Representative Stefanik filed a complaint with the New York State Commission on Judicial Conduct, requesting an investigation into the circumstances surrounding Judge Merchan’s “repeated assignment” to criminal cases related to President Trump.¹⁶² In her complaint, Representative Stefanik informed the Commission that Judge Merchan, “in violation of New York State Code of Judicial Conduct 100.5(h), donated to President Biden’s 2020 campaign, along with the Progressive Turnout Project and its ‘Stop Republicans’ subsidiary.”¹⁶³ She also highlighted for the Commission that Judge Merchan’s conflict extended to his Democrat-aligned political consultant daughter “whose firm stands to profit greatly if Donald Trump is convicted.”¹⁶⁴

B. Judge Merchan Unconstitutionally Silenced President Trump

Immediately before trial, Judge Merchan granted Bragg’s request for an unconstitutional gag order on President Trump, thereby prohibiting the presumptive 2024 Republican nominee for president from defending himself to the American people. On February 22, 2024, Bragg’s office filed a motion seeking to restrict President Trump’s “extrajudicial statements . . . for the duration of the trial” following several public comments made by President Trump regarding his pending trial in New York.¹⁶⁵ President Trump argued that as the “presumptive Republican nominee and leading candidate in the 2024 election” he must be able to “criticize these public figures” and respond to their attacks.¹⁶⁶

On March 26, 2024, Judge Merchan prohibited President Trump from making any public statements regarding “witnesses, prosecutors, jurors and court staff.”¹⁶⁷ The gag order did not restrict President Trump’s comments about Bragg or Judge Merchan.¹⁶⁸ On April 1, 2024, Judge Merchan extended the gag order to prohibit comments made by President Trump about the district attorney’s or the judge’s family members.¹⁶⁹

President Trump’s attorneys argued that the amended gag order was unconstitutional because it prohibited him from engaging in political speech, which is a core component of the First Amendment.¹⁷⁰ His campaign spokesman stated, “The voters of America have a fundamental right to hear the uncensored voice of the leading candidate for the highest office in the land.”¹⁷¹ One legal scholar, Professor Jonathan Turley, stated Judge Merchan’s gag orders “raise very serious free speech questions” as the orders prohibited President Trump from criticizing “central figures in this political campaign” such as star witness Michael Cohen, witness Stephanie Clifford, or key prosecutor Matthew Colangelo.¹⁷² During the trial, Judge Merchan fined President Trump $10,000 for posts on his Truth Social platform and campaign website, ordered President Trump to delete the posts, and threatened him with jail for allegedly violating the gag order.¹⁷³

During the Committee’s June 13 hearing, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey explained the unconstitutional nature of the Bragg-Merchan gag order. He testified:

[T]he prosecutor sought an unconstitutional gag order in this case. There’s a strong presumption against gag orders as violative of individual’s First Amendment rights of free speech. Bear in mind, the right to free speech protects not only the speaker, but Americans right to hear from a presidential candidate.¹⁷⁴

Indeed, Judge Merchan’s gag order is not only a constitutional defect but an active lawfare measure according to Robert Costello, a former federal prosecutor and veteran New York criminal defense lawyer. During the Select Subcommittee’s May 15 hearing, Costello testified in an exchange with Representative Stefanik:

Q. And the unconstitutional gag order on President Trump from New York Judge Merchan is unprecedented lawfare?

A. As far as I know, absolutely.¹⁷⁵

Likewise, former federal prosecutor and veteran criminal defense lawyer James Trusty testified at the same hearing as to the unprecedented nature of the gag order issued in President Trump’s case.¹⁷⁶ In an exchange with Representative Harriet Hageman, Trusty stated:

Q. Mr. Trusty, I think that you testified that in all your years of experience, you’ve never seen a circumstance where a defendant had a gag order imposed against them. Is that correct?

A. That’s correct.¹⁷⁷

C. Judge Merchan Permitted DA Bragg to Prejudice President Trump at Trial by Permitting Inadmissible Testimony

During the trial, Judge Merchan allowed Bragg “to spread before the jury in his Manhattan courtroom evidence that is blatantly inadmissible against” President Trump.¹⁷⁸ Generally, evidence is inadmissible if “its probative value is outweighed by the danger that its admission would prolong the trial to an unreasonable extent without any corresponding advantage; or would confuse the main issue and mislead the jury; or unfairly surprise a party; or create substantial danger of undue prejudice to one of the parties.”¹⁷⁹

In particular, as legal scholar Andrew McCarthy subsequently wrote, Bragg intended “to use Cohen’s guilty plea to establish that Trump was complicit in crimes because of the . . . payments [to Stephanie Clifford and Karen McDougal].”¹⁸⁰ Judge Merchan held that neither Cohen’s guilty plea nor prosecution witness David Pecker’s non-prosecution agreement were admissible because “evidence of another party’s guilty plea is not admissible to prove the defendant’s guilt.”¹⁸¹ Nevertheless, Judge Merchan “simultaneously ruled that prosecutors could elicit testimony about Cohen’s guilty pleas on the rationale that they are relevant to his credibility as a witness,” which he permitted over President Trump’s objection.¹⁸²

As a result, McCarthy explained, the jury heard testimony about criminal conduct that would have been inadmissible at trial otherwise. He further elaborated:

Michael Cohen’s guilty pleas to two Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) crimes, which he claimed were established by payments to [Stephanie Clifford] and Karen McDougal for non-disclosure agreements (NDAs); and David Pecker’s non-prosecution agreement with the Justice Department, which he executed out of fear that he’d be indicted over the McDougal NDA (he wasn’t, although his former company, AMI, agreed to pay the Federal Election Commission a fine—a disposition that allowed AMI to get out from under the federal government’s investigation so it could sell the National Enquirer.)¹⁸³

Although inadmissible, this was the “evidence” that President Trump violated campaign laws—if Cohen pleaded guilty to violating FECA, and Pecker was concerned that he might be charged with violating FECA, then a juror could infer that President Trump must have violated FECA when he allegedly paid off Clifford and McDougal.¹⁸⁴ Professor Foley expounded on this point during the Committee’s hearing, testifying in an exchange with Representative Scott Fitzgerald:

- Q. So Judge Merchan also ruled that Michael Cohen’s guilty plea for violating FECA was inadmissible at trial. Why do you think he made that ruling? I think we know, but.
- A. Well, because you can’t basically taint one individual by the guilty conduct of another.
- Q. Judge Merchan also ruled that DA Bragg could elicit testimony from Mr. Cohen about his guilty plea to impeach his credibility as a witness. DA Bragg then repeatedly made reference at trial in his [office’s] closing arguments to the jury about Cohen’s FECA guilty plea. Did repeatedly subjecting the jury to this testimony essentially get around the judge’s own ruling that Cohen’s FECA guilty plea was inadmissible as substantive evidence?

- A. Yeah, I mean, that should have been reined in. That was clearly trying to . . . taint one person through association with another who was guilty. They also did the same thing I believe with the CFO of Trump Organization and made similar comments because he also entered a guilty plea.¹⁸⁵

Judge Merchan also allowed Clifford to testify gratuitously and extensively about prejudicial matters that had no bearing on the allegations in the indictment. Judge Merchan unfairly prejudiced the jury against President Trump by permitting Clifford to testify about an alleged past encounter she claimed to have had with him—an encounter that had no relevance to the falsified business record-keeping charges at issue in the trial.¹⁸⁶ Indeed, several legal experts expressed “shock[] that the trial judge allowed such potentially damaging testimony into a low-level felony case focused on whether records were manipulated.”¹⁸⁷ This showing of unfair prejudice could be sufficient for the appeals court to vacate the guilty verdict and order a new trial.¹⁸⁸

Cohen’s and Clifford’s testimony unduly prejudiced President Trump and should not have been admitted. Despite this, Judge Merchan permitted both Cohen and Clifford to testify at length. And, as it relates to Clifford, her testimony was, at most, only tangentially related to the issues in dispute.

D. Judge Merchan Deprived President Trump of a Constitutionally Fair Trial by Refusing to Allow Former FEC Commissioner Bradley Smith to Testify as an Expert Witness on President Trump’s Behalf

While Judge Merchan permitted Bragg to elicit testimony from Cohen and Pecker about how they had violated federal election law, Judge Merchan denied President Trump’s request to have former FEC Chairman Bradley Smith testify that none of President Trump’s alleged involvement in these payments violated FECA.¹⁸⁹ This ruling had the effect of precluding President Trump from presenting “key exculpatory evidence” to the jury.¹⁹⁰ According to Professor Foley, this amounted to a due process violation.¹⁹¹ In an exchange with Representative Fitzgerald, she testified:

- Q. Ms. Foley, you argued in a recent Wall Street Journal op-ed that Judge Merchan likely denied President Trump a meaningful opportunity to be heard by denying the testimony of former FEC Chairman Brad Smith. Can you please elaborate a little bit on that?

- A. Yeah, I mean there has been a lot . . . of misreporting on what happened here. Yes, Judge Merchan . . . did allow Brad Smith to testify. But the catch was he could not opine at all, either provide his opinion or any personal opinion or legal opinion, regarding whether or not President Trump’s actions had violated FECA, which . . . basically then he was useless. Which is why President Trump didn’t call him as a witness. So the whole point was President Trump wanted an expert witness to put before the jury to show the jury that what he had done did not in fact violate federal election law. And he was denied that opportunity, and that seems like a rather basic thing that he would have the opportunity to be heard on.
- Q. Do you think there was a chance that he could have had success upon appeal?

- A. Yeah, sure, absolutely [T]he due process issue is a question of law. It gets de novo review, the appellate courts get to look at it fresh with fresh eyes, no deference whatsoever. And more importantly, due process issues are issues that the Supreme Court can ultimately grant cert in here.¹⁹²

Despite Judge Merchan’s decision to allow highly prejudicial testimony that should not have been admitted, Judge Merchan refused to allow former FEC Chairman Smith to testify about relevant issues to the defense. This denied President Trump an opportunity to be heard on an issue at the heart of this case—his alleged violation of federal election law.

Indeed, former FEC Chairman Smith subsequently commented on Judge Merchan’s erroneous ruling on X, observing that “Judge Merchan has so restricted my testimony that [the] defense has decided not to call me.”¹⁹³ Smith’s testimony was intended to assist the jury in navigating the intricacies of FECA, which, as Smith noted, is so complex that “even Antonin Scalia—a pretty smart guy, even if you hate him—once said ‘this campaign finance law is so intricate that I can’t figure it out.’”¹⁹⁴ Smith analogized the FECA discussion at President Trump’s trial to a jury trial “in a product liability case” and expecting jurors “to figure out if a complex machine was negligently designed, based only on a boilerplate recitation of the general definition of ‘negligence.’ They’d be lost without knowing technology & industry norms.”¹⁹⁵ Worse, Smith explained the deleterious practical effect of Judge Merchan’s ruling limiting his putative testimony: “While [the] judge wouldn’t let me testify on [the] meaning of [the] law, he allowed Michael Cohen to go on at length about whether and how this activity violated FECA. So effectively, the jury got its instructions on FECA from Michael Cohen!”¹⁹⁶

The odds of President Trump having a fair trial were stacked against him from the case’s inception. Judge Merchan’s and his family’s close ties to Democrat-aligned interests, on their own, provided sufficient grounds for Judge Merchan to recuse himself—he was clearly conflicted and by remaining on the case presented an appearance of impropriety. Nevertheless, he chose to remain. In the courtroom, Judge Merchan allowed testimony that deprived President Trump of a fair trial. Outside of the courtroom, Judge Merchan sought to hinder President Trump, the presumptive 2024 Republican nominee for president, from defending himself to the American people.

CONCLUSION

Every person admitted to practice law in New York, including elected district attorneys and appointed judges, must take a “constitutional oath of office,” swearing or affirming to “support the constitution of the United States, and the constitution of the State of New York.”¹⁹⁷ By taking that oath, District Attorney Alvin Bragg and Judge Juan Merchan were legally “bound to a constitutional course of conduct.”¹⁹⁸ In their politicized efforts to indict and convict President Trump, they failed their oaths of office. But neither of these faithless officials will have the last word on the travesty of justice that transpired in lower Manhattan on May 30, 2024.¹⁹⁹

The testimony that the Committee and Select Subcommittee have received makes clear that President Trump’s trial was riddled with constitutional defects—defects that should prompt the New York appellate courts to reverse the verdict. The trial violated basic principles of due process.

As an initial matter, President Trump was deprived of the opportunity to defend himself from the alleged underlying crime because prosecutors never disclosed it—and Judge Merchan never forced them to do so. Because President Trump had no notice of the specific charges against him, in particular the underlying crime and its essential elements, he did not have a meaningful opportunity to defend himself from those charges. Then, Judge Merchan instructed the jurors that they “did not have to agree on a singular unlawful act” to convict.²⁰⁰ Rather, he gave the jurors a menu of potential avenues by which they could convict President Trump, instructing them that “they would have to find only that Mr. Trump committed bookkeeping infractions to conceal [1] a campaign finance violation, [2] tax law infraction or [3] falsification of business records,” but they did not have to agree on the underlying crime.²⁰¹ Finally, Judge Merchan permitted gratuitous and prejudicial testimony that should have been inadmissible.²⁰² As a general matter, evidence should be excluded if its prejudice outweighs its probative value.²⁰³ The testimony that Judge Merchan permitted at trial, particularly certain parts of Cohen’s and Clifford’s testimony, was unduly prejudicial and never should have been allowed.

New York appellate courts have been “dubbed the ‘13th juror’ . . . because judges are allowed to make decisions based on the facts of the case—not only the law.”²⁰⁴ One former Manhattan assistant district attorney called it “an underappreciated power that the appellate division has” when reviewing cases on appeal.²⁰⁵ The New York Court of Appeals characterized the intermediate appellate courts power to “review questions of law and questions of fact” as the “linchpin of our constitutional and statutory [appellate] design.”²⁰⁶ Given that President Trump’s indictment was conceived in legal and constitutional error and the trial exacerbated and compounded those errors, an honest review of the facts and the law will likely lead appellate courts to vacate the conviction and dismiss the indictment with prejudice. This will go a long way in restoring the American people’s trust and confidence in our justice system, although more work is ahead. In the meantime, the Committee and Select Subcommittee will continue our oversight of lawfare and its effect on the rule of law in the United States.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ELECTION INTERFERENCE OPERATIONS

The federal government's efforts to suppress conservative voices extended to the 2020 presidential election. On October 14, 2020, just days before the 2020 presidential election between President Trump and President Biden, the New York Post published a story detailing how Hunter Biden used the position and influence of his father for personal gain with his father's awareness.¹⁸⁸ Almost immediately after the publication of this potentially election-altering story, social media companies and news outlets censored the story, preventing Americans from learning important information as they were heading to the polls. Even after social media companies stopped censoring the stories, 51 former intelligence community officials, using their official titles and citing their national security credentials, released a public statement suggesting that the story "ha[d] all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation."¹⁸⁹ The Select Subcommittee investigated the censorship decisions and the origins of the public statement by former intelligence officials, revealing how the federal government, social media companies, and the Biden campaign acted in concert to discredit and diminish any negative stories about President Biden and his family.

On May 10, 2023, the Select Subcommittee worked with the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence to release its a report on its investigation into the coordinated public statement from former high ranking intelligence officials, titled "The Hunter Biden Statement: How Senior Intelligence Community Officials and the Biden Campaign Worked to Mislead American Voters." As part of its investigation, the Select Subcommittee and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence wrote to all 51 former officials who signed the statement, requesting documents and testimony.¹⁹⁰ The investigation revealed that this public statement was politically motivated from the start, designed to, as former CIA Director Michael Morell testified, "help Vice President Biden" in his campaign for president.¹⁹¹ As the emails soliciting signatures made clear, "We think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate"¹⁹² and "we want to give the [Vice President] a talking point to use in response."¹⁹³ The interim report further detailed how Morell spearheaded the statement after receiving a call from then-campaign advisor and current Secretary of State Antony Blinken.¹⁹⁴ Importantly, the Biden campaign's fingerprints were all over the public statement, including coordinating its

Following continued investigation, the Select Subcommittee and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence released a second report on June 25, 2024, “The Intelligence Community 51: How CIA Contractors Colluded with the Biden Campaign to Mislead American Voters.” This report detailed previously nonpublic information about the extent to which the CIA was aware of the statement before publication. Indeed, high-ranking CIA officials, up to and including CIA Director Gina Haspel, were made aware of the statement prior to its approval and publication.¹⁹⁷ Internal CIA documents also showed that employees internally expressed concern about the statement’s politicized content, acknowledging it was not “helpful to the Agency in the long run.”¹⁹⁸

Alarming, the Select Subcommittee learned that some of the statement’s signatories were on active contract with the CIA at the time of the statement’s publication.¹⁹⁹ Although the signatories contended throughout the course of the Select Subcommittee’s investigation that none had access to classified information when asserting that the allegations surrounding Hunter Biden’s laptop were likely Russian disinformation, those on active contract with the CIA were likely earning taxpayer dollars while politicizing intelligence to assist the Biden campaign.

Through the Select Subcommittee’s investigations, it is clear that the intelligence community worked to diminish the reach of stories that could be seen as harmful to President Biden’s 2020 presidential campaign. The American people deserve to have trust that the intelligence community is not working against them or preventing voters from having access to all available information before making an informed decision about the candidate for whom they wished to cast their ballot. Unfortunately, before the 2020 election, the ends seemed to justify the means when it came to defeating President Trump. Stories that could have changed the outcome of the election were censored, those who shared the stories were suspended from social media, and former high ranking intelligence officials, purportedly without any access to official information, told the American people that the Russians were interfering in the election.

Executive Summary

“Let me tell you, you take on the intelligence community, they have six ways from Sunday to getting back at you.”

– Senator Chuck Schumer (D-NY), January 3, 2017.¹

In the heated days shortly before the 2020 presidential election, a news story appeared in the New York Post detailing how Hunter Biden used the position and influence of his father, now-President Joe Biden, for personal gain with President Biden’s awareness.² This article, based on materials obtained from an abandoned laptop once owned by Hunter Biden, called into question statements made by President Biden denying awareness of the international business dealings of his son, Hunter.³ Five days after the Post story, 51 former intelligence community officials, using their official titles and citing their national security credentials, released a public statement suggesting the story “ha[d] all the classic earmarks” of Russian disinformation.⁴ Three days after that, Vice President Biden used this public statement in a nationally televised presidential debate to rebut President Trump’s criticisms, asserting “there are 50 former national intelligence folks who said that what this, he’s accusing me of is a Russian plan.”⁵

Much has been written about how social media companies and news outlets improperly censored or ignored allegations on the flimsy basis that it was “hacked” materials;⁶ and “can’t be verified”;⁷ or, in the inspired words of National Public Radio, a “waste of time” and a “pure distraction.”⁸ These censorship decisions were wrong then, but they look even more egregious

What has not been examined, until now, is how 51 former federal employees with intelligence and national security credentials came together to insert themselves into the thick of the presidential campaign. Beginning in April 2022—and renewed earlier this year when Republicans resumed control of the House of Representatives—the Committee on the Judiciary and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence have been conducting oversight into the origins of this statement.¹⁰ The Committees wrote to all 51 former officials requesting relevant documents and testimony. Consistent with the obligation to keep the House apprised of investigative activities,¹¹ this interim report summarizes the key information learned to date.

- The public statement by 51 former intelligence officials was a political operation to help elect Vice President Biden in the 2020 presidential election. Contemporaneous emails show the organizers’ intent in drafting and releasing the statement: “[W]e think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week’s debate and we want to offer perspectives on this from Russia watchers and other seasoned experts,”¹² and “we want to give the [Vice President] a talking point to use in response.”¹³
- The Biden campaign took active measures to discredit the allegations about Hunter Biden by exploiting the national security credentials of former intelligence officials. On October 17, 2020, Biden campaign advisor—now Secretary of State—Antony Blinken contacted former Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) Acting Director Michael Morell to discuss the Post’s reporting. Morell told Blinken that he was not familiar with the reporting and Blinken later emailed Morell a USA Today article alleging the FBI was investigating whether it was Russian disinformation.¹⁴ At the bottom of the email was the signature block of Andrew Bates, then-director of rapid response for the Biden campaign.¹⁵ Following this outreach from the Biden campaign, Morell began the process of drafting the statement—something Morell testified would not have happened but for Blinken’s communication. In addition, following the October 22 presidential debate—during which Vice President Biden used the public statement to rebut President Trump’s criticisms—Biden campaign chairman Steve Ricchetti called Morell to thank him for the statement.

- Blinken’s outreach to Morell was the impetus for the public statement. Morell testified that he had no intention of drafting the statement until Blinken reached out to him. Morell, who at the time was reportedly under consideration to be appointed CIA Director in the Biden Administration if Biden won the election,¹⁶ conceived the statement and concluded it would have greater credibility if it was supported by a significant number of signatories.¹⁷ Thereafter, Morell contacted several former intelligence officials to help write the statement, solicit cosigners, and help with media outreach.
- The Biden campaign coordinated dissemination of the statement to members of the media. Morell tasked Nick Shapiro, his former Deputy Chief of Staff and Senior Advisor at the CIA, with placing the statement in major publications. Specifically, Morell apprised Shapiro that, “[b]etween us, the campaign would like” a specific reporter with the Washington Post to run the statement first.¹⁸ Shapiro crafted an email for three separate media outlets and sent the content of the email to the Biden campaign’s Director of Rapid Response, Andrew Bates, stating “This is what I gave them.”¹⁹ After peddling the statement to the Washington Post and the Associated Press with apparently no result, Shapiro found a willing partner in Politico. Politico published a story about the statement under the headline: “Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say.”²⁰
- The Committees have evidence that an employee affiliated with the CIA may have assisted in obtaining signatories for the statement. One signer of the statement, former CIA analyst David Cariens, disclosed to the Committees that a CIA employee affiliated with the agency’s Prepublication Classification Review Board (“PCRB”) informed him of the existence of the statement and asked if he would sign it.²¹ The Committees have requested additional material from the CIA, which has ignored the request to date.

The Committees’ oversight continues. Notably, the Biden Administration has declined to cooperate with this oversight to date. On March 21, 2023, the Committees wrote to the CIA, requesting documents in the CIA’s possession relating to the statement and interactions between the CIA and the signatories of the statement.²² The Committees requested that the CIA furnish these documents by April 4, 2023.²³ The CIA has so far failed to comply to this oversight request. On April 20, 2023, the Committees wrote to Secretary of State Antony Blinken requesting information in his possession about his role in the origins of the statement.²⁴ On May

The Committees will continue to pursue additional information about the actions and events described in this report.

Americans deserve to have confidence that their government, particularly its premier intelligence agency, is free from politicization. The infusion of bare-knuckle partisan politics into America's intelligence agencies is cause for grave concern. Former federal employees have a right to engage in the political process—a fundamental right that the Committees do not dispute. Here, however, the signers of the Hunter Biden laptop statement relied on their national security credentials and used their official titles to lend heft to their statement and to insinuate access to secretive information unavailable to other Americans. And these signers did so in coordination with a political campaign for the explicit purpose of giving a candidate for office a “talking point” to dismiss legitimate criticism of his family's business practices.

Consistent with the Committees' obligations to keep the House of Representatives informed of its oversight, this interim report presents what the Committees have learned to date about the origins of the public statement signed by 51 former intelligence officials that falsely discredited public allegations about the Biden family. Although more work remains, this report presents the Committees' findings to date.

Conclusion	62

I. The Biden campaign used the national security credentials of 51 former intelligence community employees to falsely discredit allegations of Biden family influence-peddling.

On October 14, 2020, the New York Post published a report detailing how Hunter Biden used the position and influence of his father for personal gain with the apparent awareness of President Biden.²⁷ This article raised doubts about President Biden’s earlier denial of ever speaking to his son about his international business dealings.²⁸ The Post reported on an email in which a Ukrainian businessman urged Hunter Biden to “use [his] influence to convey a message / signal, etc. to stop what we consider to be politically motivated actions.”²⁹ In another email, the same businessman thanked Hunter Biden for arranging a meeting with his father, calling it “an honor and pleasure.”³⁰ The Post reported that these emails came from a laptop belonging to Hunter Biden that he had abandoned in a Delaware computer shop.³¹

The Biden campaign knew it had a serious political liability with these allegations. This is because then-Vice President Biden’s son had monetized his relationship with his father to secure lucrative, shady opportunities overseas.³² In the days leading up to the 2020 election, Hunter Biden’s laptop and the email trove it contained provided evidence of this arrangement.³³ To prevent President Trump from effectively raising these allegations in the final presidential debate, the Biden campaign sought to discredit the allegations by employing the national security credentials of compliant former intelligence community members.

A. Biden campaign advisor Antony Blinken’s outreach to former CIA Acting Director Michael Morell was the impetus for the public statement, which was intended to give the Biden campaign a “talking point” with which to respond to the Hunter Biden allegations.

On October 17, 2020, senior Biden campaign advisor and now Secretary of State Antony Blinken called Michael Morell, the former CIA Acting Director, and asked him if he had seen the New York Post story on the Hunter Biden laptop and emails and whether Morell believed the Russians were involved in disseminating those emails.³⁴ Morell claimed that he had not read the story, but at that point he began researching it.³⁵ Morell testified:

Q. In an email to Nick Shapiro, you said that you would, quote, explain tomorrow on the phone how this came to be, meaning this public statement. . . . Can you tell us what you said to Mr. Shapiro during that call? . . .

A. Sure. I told him that I had received a call from Tony Blinken, then a senior official on the Biden campaign, asking me if I had seen The New York Post story. . . . I believe he summarized it for me, and he asked me if I thought the Russians may have been involved in any way in the emergence of these emails.

Q. So that was—now—

A. I should also say I don't know whether he called me or whether he sent me an email.

Q. Okay.

A. Just to be clear.

Q. In the production the committee received, we did not get an email from him—

A. Correct.

Q. —initiating that call except—but for a USA Today article that he forwarded—

A. Yes.³⁶

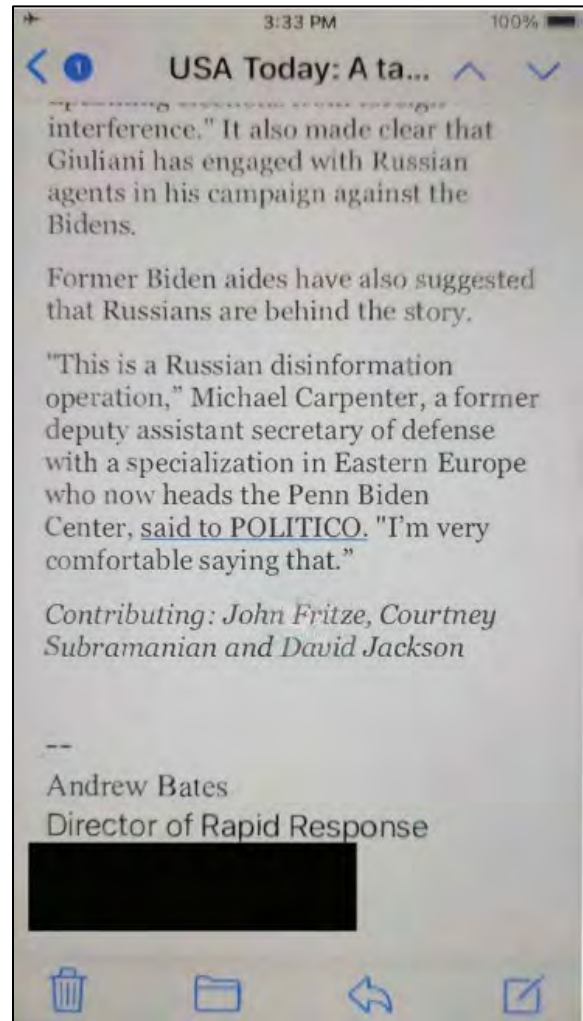

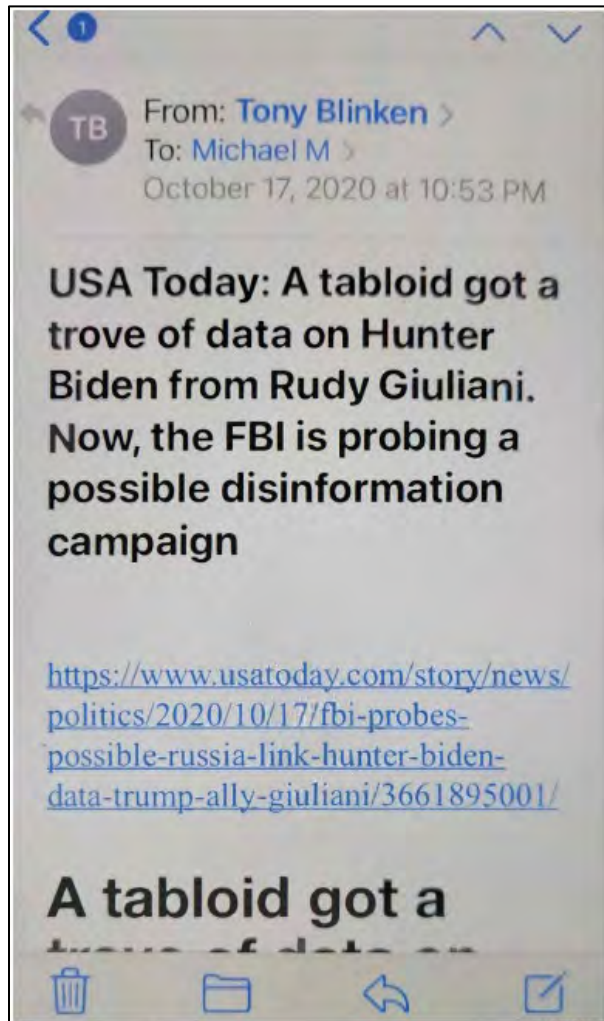

At 10:53 p.m., after his initial call with Morell, Blinken forwarded to Morell a USA Today article, titled “A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign.”³⁷ Notably, at the bottom of Blinken’s email was the signature block of Andrew Bates, then-Director of Rapid Response for the Biden campaign.³⁸ As the Biden campaign’s Director of Rapid Response, Bates “was charged with defending” then-Vice President Biden “and his team against attacks on the campaign trail, while also employing an aggressive offensive strategy against President Trump and his team.”³⁹

Morell confirmed during this transcribed interview that he received two communications from Blinken on October 17, 2020. Morell speculated that the first communication occurred before 2:16 p.m. that day, based on the timestamp in a text message that Morell sent to Marc Polymeropoulos, a former CIA Acting Chief of Operations for Europe and Eurasia. The second communication was via email at 10:53 p.m. Morell testified:

- Q. There were two separate communications. There was the first call or email, and then there was the subsequent email with the USA Today article?
- A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

³⁹ Brooke Singman, Meet the Rapid Response director: Top Biden aide on how the 2020 campaign was unlike any other, FOX NEWS (Nov. 23, 2020).

- Q. What was the time of the email?
- A. So I don't know for sure, Congressman, but I believe he called to ask the question first and then followed up with the email.
- Q. Close together?
- A. I think—you know, given the timestamps [in the text message] on here, I feel that, you know, when I say—Congressman, I say: Just wondering if you guys, if you think the Russians played in the Hunter Biden thing. That was at 2:16 p.m. on the 17th. He sends me the USA Today article later that night.
- Q. Right.
- A. Right. I think he called me or sent me an email prior 2:16 p.m. So there's some gap there I think between the first contact and the second.
- Q. Okay. That's what I assumed. When you got the USA Today article—and I believe it was at 10:53 that evening—[that] was that the first time you had seen [the] USA [Today] article.
- A. So I referenced the FBI investigation in the early afternoon of the 17th in my conversation with Marc Polymeropoulos. I don't remember whether I saw it. The first thing I did when Mr. Blinken called me is I did some research. I had not read The New York Post article. I went and read it. I did some internet searches. I did a little bit of research here before I reached out to Marc. It's possible I found it then. It's also possible that, when Mr. Blinken called me, he mentioned it to me. I just don't remember.
- Q. In that timeframe, then, you would have got the call from Mr. Blinken prior to 2:16.
- A. I believe so, sir.
- Q. Excuse me, Mr. Morell, as part of the research that you did in between the contact with Mr. Blinken and the contact with Marc [Polymeropoulos], did you contact any individuals as a part of that research?

A. I did not.

Q. So the full sum of that research involved your internet searches?

A. Yes.⁴⁰

Morell testified that the statement was a direct result of his interactions with the Biden campaign, explaining that the call from Blinken triggered his interest in preparing the statement. He explained:

Q. But, prior to his call, you—you did not have any intent to write this statement?

A. I did not.

Q. Okay. So his call triggered—

A. It did, yes.

Q. —that intent in you?

A. Yes. Absolutely.⁴¹

Although Morell denied in his transcribed interview that the Biden campaign specifically asked that he prepare a statement,⁴² Polymeropoulos, who helped to prepare the initial draft of the statement, told the Committees that Morell “did mention to me that someone in the kind of Biden world had asked about doing this.”⁴³ When asked to elaborate, Polymeropoulos testified: “Morell said that to me, that someone from kind of the Biden world had asked for this. And he did not tell me who it was or any of the other kind of details of it.”⁴⁴

Morell testified repeatedly that his purpose for organizing, drafting, and disseminating the statement was to help Vice President Biden become president. He testified:

Q. What was the intent of the statement?

A. There were two intents. One intent was to share our concern with the American people that the Russians were playing on this issue; and, two, it was [to] help Vice President Biden.⁴⁵

Q. So is it fair to say that the text of the letter makes it clear that the focus is actually on Russian interference, not on the political candidates?

A. It's correct. I would just repeat what I said earlier just to be, you know, totally clear, that there were two intentions here, right? One was to make clear to the American people that the Russians were interfering in the election, and the other was to help Vice President Biden in the debate.⁴⁶

Q. You wanted to help the Vice President why?

A. Because I wanted him to win the election.

Q. You wanted him to win; that's why?

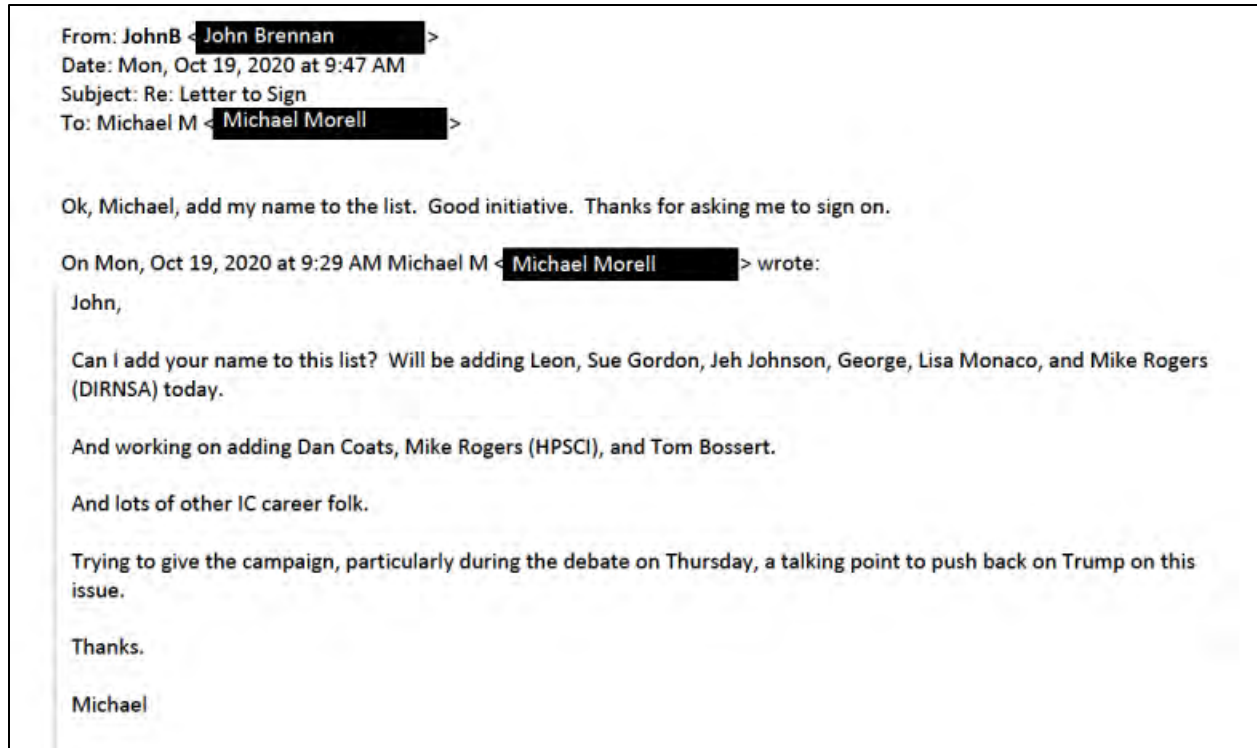

A. Yes, sir.⁴⁷

An October 19, 2020, email exchange between Morell and former CIA Director John Brennan made abundantly clear that Morell's intentions were to "give the [Biden] campaign, particularly during the debate on Thursday, a talking point to push back on [President] Trump on this issue."⁴⁸

Lastly, an October 18 email from Morell to former CIA senior intelligence officer Kristin Wood shows that the statement was meant to help the Biden campaign. Morell wrote that he had “control of the document. The more former intelligence officers the better. Campaign will be thrilled.”⁴⁹

B. Morell recruited Polymeropoulos to draft the public statement.

Upon concluding his communication with Blinken and performing internet searches, Morell then enlisted Polymeropoulos to begin preparing the statement. Morell recruited Polymeropoulos because, in Morell’s wording, he was a former “acting chief of operations for the part of the world that covers Russia,” “had a very good understanding of what the Russians did in [the] 2016 [election],” and is an expert “in Russian disinformation.”⁵⁰

In a text message exchange, Morell asked Polymeropoulos if he thought “the Russians played in the Hunter Biden email thing,” opining that it “[k]inda feels that way to me.”⁵¹ Polymeropoulos responded, “It does to me too.”⁵² Morell then expressed some doubt about the “strange” way in which the emails were placed “into the public domain,” with Polymeropoulos responding: “They,” presumably referring to the Russians, “will always look for a dissem[ination] mechanism third party. Yes this is odd . . . a blind computer guy.”⁵³ After Polymeropoulos agreed to work with Morell on the draft, Morell asked Polymeropoulos to “send me a list of what you see as the hallmarks” of Russian involvement in the story.⁵⁴

Text message between Michael Morell and Marc Polymeropoulos (Oct. 17, 2020)⁵⁵

⁵⁵ Text message graphics in this report were generated by the Committee from screen shots produced by Marc Polymeropoulos. The graphics were created to assist in reading the messages.

Morell explained that Polymeropoulos wrote the first draft of the statement. Morell testified:

- Q. Okay. What was your role in the creation of the statement?
- A. I organized it.
- Q. So you drafted that?
- A. I did not do the first draft.
- Q. Okay.
- A. Marc Polymeropoulos did the first draft. Then I redrafted it. Yeah, I'm the organizer, and I played a major role in drafting it.⁵⁶

Polymeropoulos similarly testified:

- Q. And what role did Mike Morell play in the creation of the statement?
- A. . . . I think Mike Morell on the—I think it was on the 17th—had wrote me a text asking me if I thought there was any—kind of any Russian involvement in this. I said that I thought that there was, based on my professional background. He asked if I would be willing to write something with him on this. And that's how this began.⁵⁷

Polymeropoulos explained that he and Morell initially discussed preparing an op-ed, which eventually morphed into a statement. He testified:

- Q. Did you say you had a conversation with Mr. Morell?
- A. About?
- Q. About this letter. Or was it only over text message?
- A. So I think from what I recall, two—a couple things happened. First, he wrote me the text. I then—I believe he asked, and I looked at my records and I just don't have the exact date, but shortly after that he asked me to come over to his house.

⁵⁶ Morell Interview at 11.

⁵⁷ Polymeropoulos Interview at 10.

Q. Okay.

A. And we discussed this there.

I don't recall how it morphed from what I thought was an op-ed into a letter. He did mention to me that someone in the kind of Biden world had asked about doing this.

Q. But he didn't—

A. He did not tell me who it was, and I did not ask.

Q. So you prepared the backgrounder that's exhibit 4.⁵⁸

A. Right.

Q. Was that before or after you went to Morell's house?

A. I believe it was after, but I actually don't recall. I see that text was on the 17th, and I think I sent the backgrounder on the 17th as well. But I actually don't recall if this was before or after.

Q. And as you understand it, Mr. Morell took your backgrounder and turned it into the letter?

A. That's right.

Q. And do you know if any other person helped him do that?

A. I don't know.

Q. Or whether he did it himself?

A. I don't know.⁵⁹

Morell kept Polymeropoulos in the dark about his interactions with Blinken and the Biden campaign. Polymeropoulos was not aware of these facts until the Committees informed him during his transcribed interview. He testified:

Q. Are you aware that now Secretary of State Antony Blinken

⁵⁸ The "backgrounder" refers to a document Polymeropoulos created that contains the purported reasons why he believed the Hunter Biden laptop and emails were part of a Russian information operation to interfere in the 2020 presidential election. called Mr. Morell some time on or about October 17th, 2020, to inquire as to whether Mr. Morell believed Russia might have been involved in the Hunter Biden email story in some way?

A. That's the first I heard of that. I was not aware of that at all.

Q. Were you aware that Secretary Blinken also sent an article to Mr. Morell from USA Today titled "A tabloid got a trove of data on Hunter Biden from Rudy Giuliani. Now, the FBI is probing a possible disinformation campaign"?

A. No.⁶⁰

C. Morell, Polymeropoulos, and former CIA officer Kristin Wood solicited other former intelligence officials and employees to sign the public statement.

As Morell testified, a goal of writing a statement was to "help Vice President Biden" win the election.⁶¹ To achieve this goal, Morell wanted to affix as many signatures from former intelligence officials and employees as he could. For Morell, "The more former intelligence officers the better."⁶²

Morell seemed to believe that the statement would have a great effect with more signatories. Morell admitted this fact to Nick Shapiro, his former Deputy Chief of Staff and Senior Advisor at the CIA, who was tasked with pushing the public statement to the media, writing: "The real power is the number of former, working-level IC officers who want the American people to know."⁶³

Will send to you shortly.

Some thoughts when dealing with reporters:

1. Between us, the campaign would like Shane Harris to go first. Please share with the campaign when you share with Shane. But, by all means, get it to other reporters as well.
2. On the record from you: What is this? A large group of former career intelligence officers, many specializing in Russia, joined by a group of former IC leaders, all saying that the Russians were somehow involved here. The IC leaders who have signed here are diverse in that they worked for the past four Presidents, including Trump. The real power here is the number of former, working-level IC officers who want the American people to know.
3. OTR: Make sure reporters know that we are not making a call on whether the materials are true or not, just that Moscow played a role in getting the information out. I'm afraid people might miss this point and say that we are saying that this is all disinformation.
4. If asked: On background from you: Why Michael? In talking to people, outside of government, who he worked with and who know Russia, he was struck by the fact that all of them thought Russia is involved here. Michael thought people should know that.
5. Also on background from you: We did not speculate on how the Russians played in this particular case because there are so many different possibilities.

Morell testified:

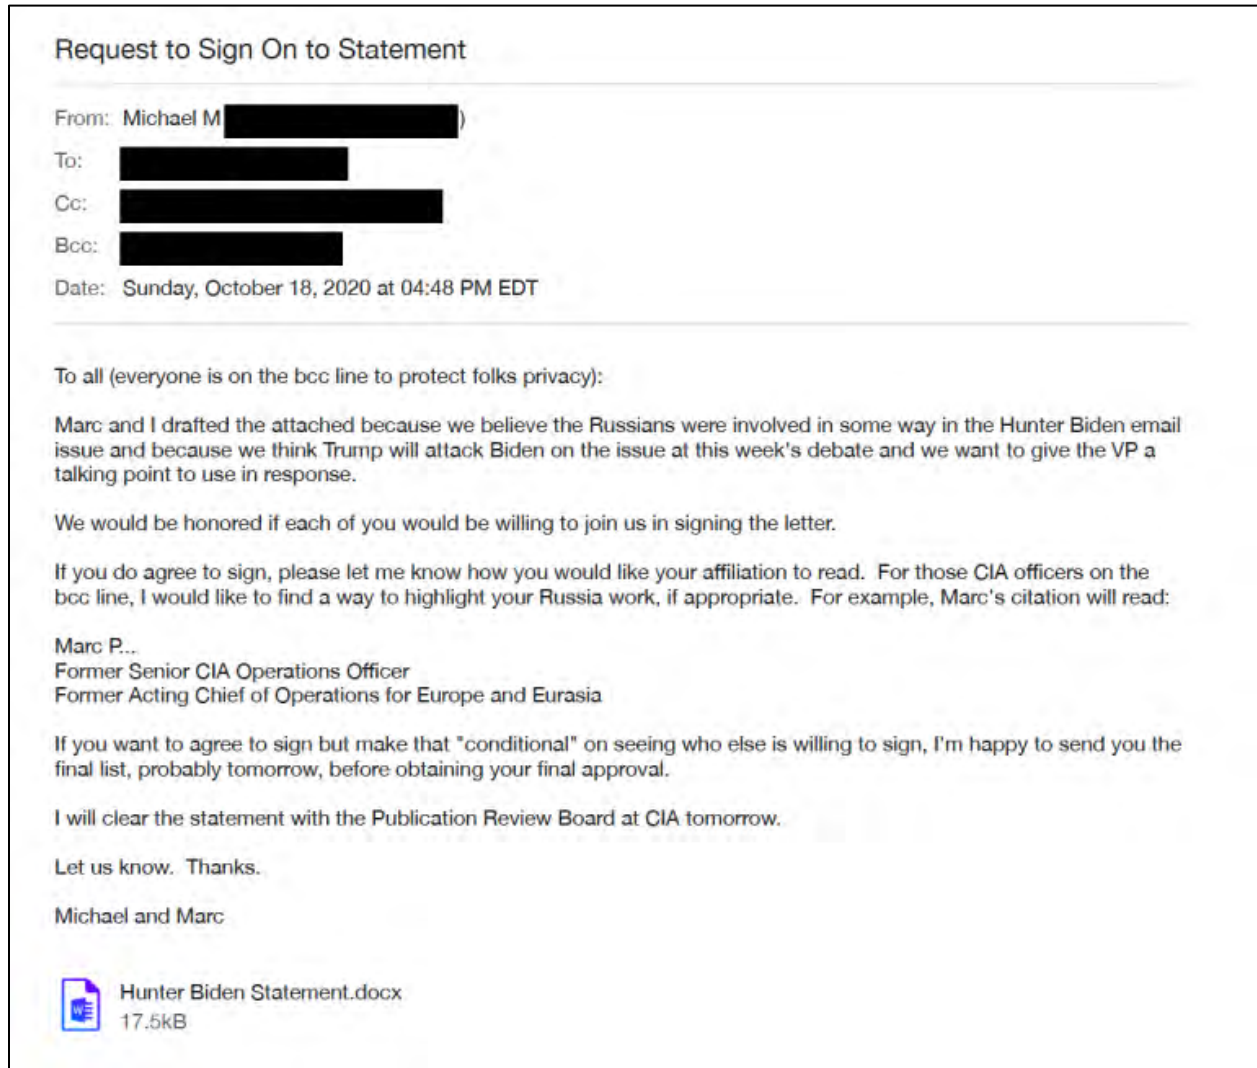

So, breaking into two pieces here, the first piece is that three of us took responsibility for sending it out to officials to try to get signatories. Myself, Marc Polymeropoulos, and a woman named Kristin Wood. Kristin worked for me at the [Central Intelligence] Agency. She worked directly for me at the Agency as my aide. We were very close friends. I asked her to do that. She agreed. And then, in terms of getting it to the media, that was entirely Nick Shapiro's responsibility here. So he took that responsibility on.⁶⁴

On October 18, Morell sent an email to several former intelligence personnel, writing about helping to give Vice President Biden "a talking point to use in" the final presidential debate.⁶⁵ Specifically, Morell wrote, "because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response," Morell pleaded, "[w]e would be honored if each of you would be willing to join us in signing the letter.”⁶⁶

The next day, Wood sent an email to several former intelligence personnel within her network, using language from Morell's email the previous day.⁶⁷

⁶⁷ Email from Kristin Wood to Unnamed Intelligence Officials (Oct. 19, 2020, 10:27 AM) (on file with the Committees).

Like Morell, Wood wrote that the group intended for the public statement to help then-Vice President Biden's candidacy, specifically in regards to the upcoming debate: "[W]e think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to offer perspectives on this from Russia watchers and other seasoned experts."⁶⁸

D. Some former intelligence officials objected to the first draft of the public statement for being too political, one sought to "strengthen the verbiage," and others refused to sign it altogether.

The initial statement was so nakedly partisan that some of the former intelligence officials refused to sign it until portions of it were removed. In the initial draft, Morell and Polymeropoulos included two paragraphs about Vice President Biden's relationship with ⁶⁸ Id.

Ukraine, which were later omitted from the final version of the public statement:

For those who argue that it is important for the truth to come out – even if it comes at the cost of foreign interference – let us share our understanding of the what [sic] transpired between Vice President Biden and the Ukrainians. It is not what Biden’s opponents want Americans to think.

When the Vice President took a private and public stand against the then Prosecutor General of Ukraine Victor Shokin, he did so as a matter of Obama Administration policy, because Shokin was corrupt, because he was not investigating corruption in Ukraine, and because the Obama Administration wanted a prosecutor who would. This included any corruption at Burisma. Shokin was not investigating Burisma. Biden was not protecting Burisma. Indeed, by arguing that Ukraine needed an aggressive prosecutor, Biden was arguing for just the opposite. The Russians want you to think otherwise.⁶⁹

Some of the signatories objected to these paragraphs as “too political,” as shown in an email exchange between Morell and Nick Rasmussen, former Director of the National Counterterrorism Center. Morell explained to Rasmussen that “some folks thought [the two paragraphs] too political. Just Russia and intel now. Better.”⁷⁰

In addition to the edits removing reference to Ukraine, other emails show that former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper offered editorial advice to “strengthen the verbiage.”⁷¹ On October 18, after reviewing the draft statement, Clapper emailed Morell that he would “gladly sign on,” having “said as much [about the Hunter Biden laptop and emails] on CNN Friday evening.”⁷² He also offered an editorial suggestion to a key phrase in the statement:

I have one editorial suggestion for the letter: I think it would strengthen the verbiage if you say this has all the classic earmarks of a Soviet/Russian information operation rather than the “feel” of a Russian operation.⁷³

E. On October 19, 2020, Morell sent the CIA the finalized public statement for review, calling it a “rush job,” and quickly secured its approval.

On October 19, 2020, at 6:34 a.m., Morell sent the final version of the statement to the CIA’s Prepublication Classification Review Board (PCRB) for review.⁷⁸ According to Morell, the PCRB consists of CIA officers—“not contractors”—and their sole function is to determine whether former and current CIA personnel are disclosing classified information in any materials they may release publicly.⁷⁹ This is because “[a]ll CIA officers, as a condition of employment, sign the standard CIA secrecy agreement when entering on duty . . . [and this] lifelong obligation which exists to help avoid the damage to national security” requires they submit any materials they intend to publicize to the PCRB for approval.⁸⁰

Morell directed the PCRB that “[t]his is a rush job, as it need to get out as soon as possible.”⁸¹ Morell wanted the public statement released before the October 22, 2020, presidential debate. Specifically, he testified:

- A. We were trying to get it out before the debate, yes.
- Q. Before the debate?
- A. Yes, ma'am.⁸²

The PCRB responded on October 19, 2020, at 7:11 a.m., that it received the submission.⁸³

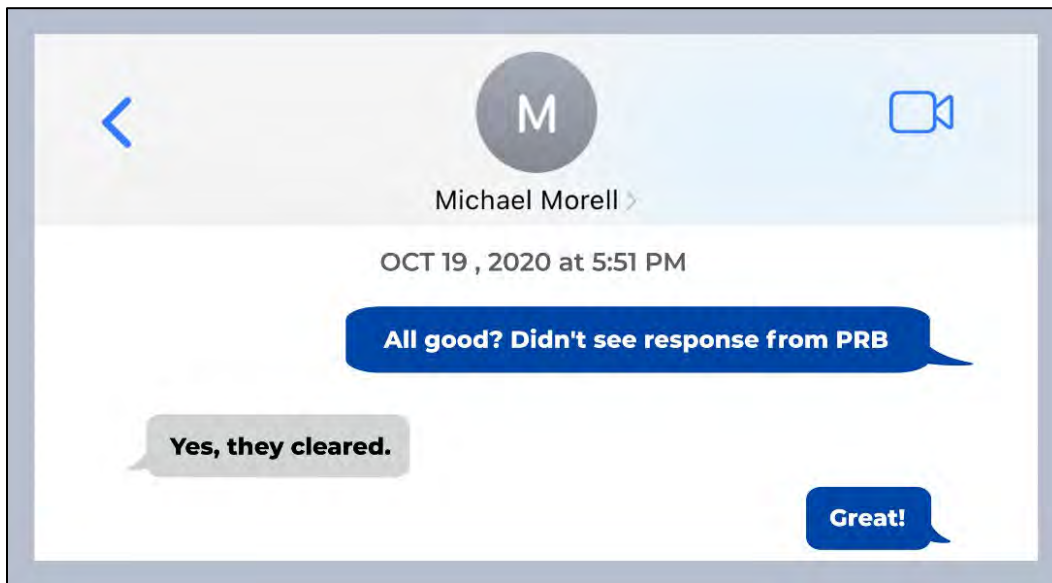

Morell testified the statement was “approved . . . as written.”⁸⁴ Although the timing of the PCRB’s approval is uncertain, it appears to have come before 5:51 p.m. In response to a text message at that time from Polymeropoulos, who “[d]idn’t see” a response from PCRB, Morell

Morell testified:

- Q. And was the email the only communication you had with the CIA?
- A. Yes.
- Q. You did not speak to any of the officials on the phone?

A. I did not. I did not.⁸⁶

F. Contrary to the signers' assessment, the intelligence community publicly stated that the Hunter Biden laptop was not part of a Russian disinformation campaign.

On October 19, while Morell and others worked procuring more signatories for the statement, Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe—who, unlike the statement's signatories, was in government as the top intelligence official in the United States and privy to all classified information—stated publicly that “Hunter Biden’s laptop is not part of some Russian disinformation campaign.”⁸⁷ He further stated: “Let me be clear: The intelligence community doesn’t believe that because there is no intelligence that supports that.”⁸⁸ Director Ratcliffe issued this statement in response to Congressman Adam Schiff’s claim that Hunter Biden’s laptop and emails came “from the Kremlin. That’s been clear for well over a year now that they’ve been pushing this false narrative about the vice president and his son.”⁸⁹

⁸⁶ Morell Interview at 28. Morell has not produced the email from the PRCB approving the public statement. In his statement to the Committees, Morell stated that his document production is incomplete because, since 2015, he began “to regularly delete all communications in his personal email account.” Morell Statement at 1.

Rather than give the then-Director of National Intelligence's statement credence or at least a modicum of deference, Morell rejected it wholesale. He testified:

Q. So did the statement put out by the Director of National Intelligence that day or earlier that morning, did that have any influence on your decision with the letter, specifically, what Mr. Ratcliffe said?

A. No.

Q. Even though he said . . . the emails were not part of some Russian disinformation operation.

A. It did not because, as a former intelligence officer with much more experience than Mr. Ratcliffe, I don't know how he could have come to that conclusion. How could he know . . . it wasn't part of Russian disinformation?

Q. So you were obviously aware of Mr. Ratcliffe's statement that morning before you sent the letter out?

A. Yes.

Q. And, as you sit here today, do you believe the Russians were involved in the Hunter Biden laptop matter?

A. I don't know. I mean, I still have suspicions, Congressman.

Q. Would you organize such a letter today knowing what you know now?

A. I would have to write it differently because we now know the emails are authentic, right? So you couldn't say anymore we don't know whether it's information or disinformation. But I still have suspicions about a Russian role in these emails getting to The New York Post.⁹⁰

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) ratified Director Ratcliffe's statement. In a letter to Senator Ron Johnson, then-Chairman of the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, the FBI stated, "we have nothing to add at this time to the October 19th public statement by the Director of National Intelligence about the available actionable intelligence" on Hunter Biden's laptop and emails.⁹¹

Federal Bureau of Investigation

Washington, D.C. 20535-0001

October 20, 2020

The Honorable Ron Johnson
Chairman
Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Johnson:

This responds to your letter, dated October 17, 2020, to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) regarding the authenticity of certain information provided to your Committee, including whether such information is linked to a foreign adversary's influence operation or is otherwise fraudulent. You also ask several questions about a laptop computer reportedly produced pursuant to a grand jury subpoena.

As you may know, the Office of the Director of National Intelligence has advised the American public that, in advance of the 2020 election, a number of nation-states plan to use covert and overt influence measures in an attempt to sway voter preferences and perspectives, sow discord in the United States, and undermine the confidence of Americans in our democratic process. The FBI is the primary investigative agency responsible for the integrity and security of the 2020 election, and as such, we are focused on an array of threats, including the threat of malign foreign influence operations. Regarding the subject of your letter, we have nothing to add at this time to the October 19th public statement by the Director of National Intelligence about the available actionable intelligence. If actionable intelligence is developed, the FBI in consultation with the Intelligence Community will evaluate the need to provide defensive briefings to you and the Committee pursuant to the established notification framework.

Finally, as the FBI advised the Committee in its letter, dated October 5, 2020, consistent with longstanding Department of Justice (Department) policy and practice, the FBI can neither confirm nor deny the existence of any ongoing investigation or persons or entities under investigation, including to Members of Congress. As the Inspector General firmly reminded the Department and the FBI in recent years, this policy is designed to preserve the integrity of all Justice Department investigations and the Department's ability to effectively administer justice without political or other undue outside influences. Therefore, the FBI cannot provide any additional information in response to the enumerated questions in your letter.

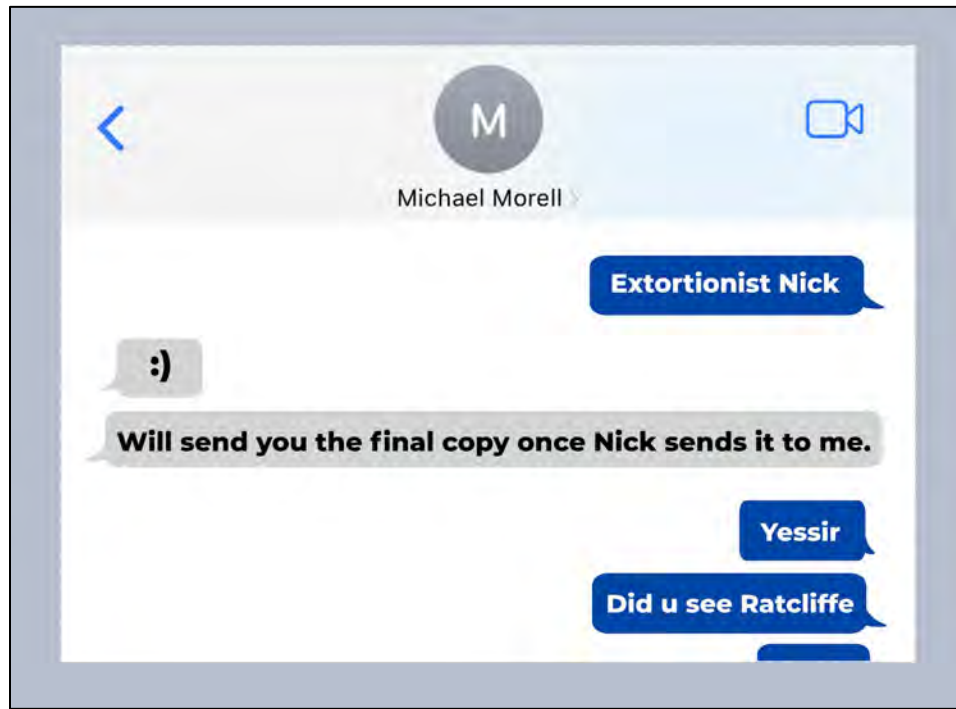

Thank you for your support of the FBI, its mission, and its people.

Sincerely,

Jill C. Tyson
Assistant Director
Office of Congressional Affairs

II. The Committees have evidence that the CIA may have promoted the statement to other intelligence community officials.

According to a written statement provided to the Committees by former CIA official David Cariens, the CIA—or at least an employee of the CIA—may have helped in the effort to solicit signatures for the statement. Cariens explained that he spoke with the PCRB in October 2020 regarding the review of his memoir and during that call the CIA employee “asked” him if he would sign the statement.⁹³ As Cariens explained:

When the person in charge of reviewing the book called to say it was approved with no changes, I was told about the draft letter. The person asked me if I would be willing to sign. . . . After hearing the letter’s contents, and the qualifiers in it such as, “We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump’s personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement . . .” I agreed to sign.⁹⁴

 Subject: Re: FW: Letter for Mr. David Cariens

[REDACTED]—Thank you for acknowledging my response. My wife and I are happy to help in any way possible.

To put our position in proper perspective, my wife retired from the CIA in 1995 and has not had security clearances after that time. I retired in 1997 and continued to do contract work for the CIA and other members of the Intelligence Community. I teach intelligence and crime analysis. My contract work for the CIA ended in 2017 and I no longer had security clearances after that.

The answer to the two questions posed in the April 6, 2022 letter are:

1. I am the author of nine books, including two text books on intelligence and crime analysis. All my work is passed through the CIA’s Publications Review Board (PRE) for approval. My last book, a memoir, entitled Escaping Madness, was before the PRB in October, 2020. When the person in charge of reviewing the book called to say it was approved with no changes, I was told about the draft letter. The person asked me if I would be willing to sign. (I do not recall the person’s name or the exact date of the phone call.) After hearing the letter’s contents, and the qualifiers in it such as, “We want to emphasize that we do not know if the emails provided to the New York Post by President Trump’s personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, are genuine or not and that we do not have evidence of Russian involvement . . .” I agreed to sign. I had been following the Hunter Biden laptop issue, and as a former director of CIA University’s course in deception analysis (with a heavy emphasis on all forms of Soviet/KGB deception), I felt there was enough circumstantial evidence to raise the suspicion that Russian intelligence was involved. I shared these views with my wife, also a former CIA officer, and she agreed to sign as well.
2. We have no documents because all of the above was done in a phone call. Neither my wife nor I have discussed the letter with any of the other signatories or any member of the U.S. policy or intelligence communities.

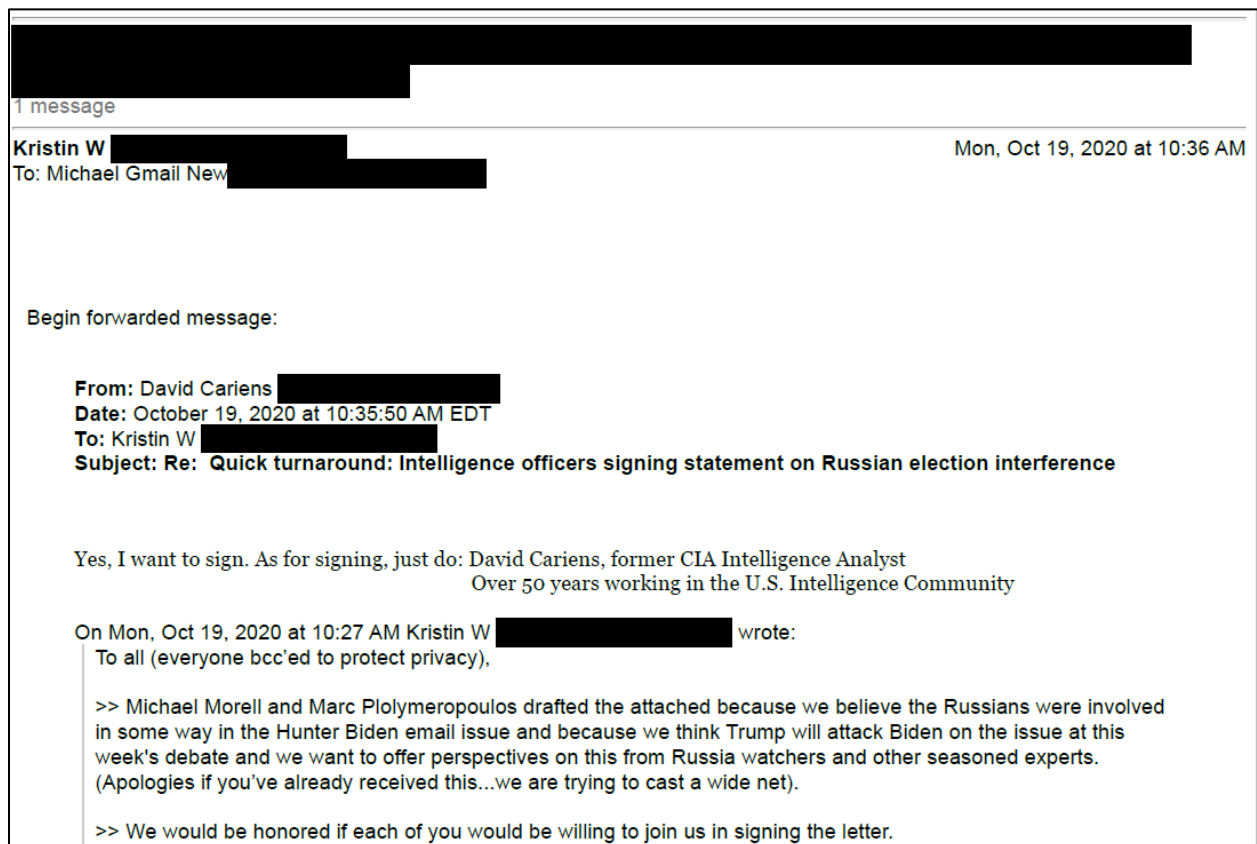

If you have any other questions, please do not hesitate to contact us. Regards, David and Janice Cariens ⁹³ Email from David Cariens to Committee staff (March 5, 2023, 3:02 PM) (on file with the Committees).

Cariens’s statement did not provide the precise timing of his communication with the PCRB. However, the Committees received an email exchange, produced by Kristin Wood, in which Cariens wrote, “Yes, I want to sign,” on October 19, at 10:35 a.m.—eight minutes after Wood sent the mass distribution email soliciting signatures.⁹⁵ PCRB was in possession of the statement since 6:34 a.m. on October 19, when Morell emailed it to the unit for approval.⁹⁶ PCRB acknowledged receipt of the statement, at 7:11 a.m. that same day.⁹⁷

Cariens’s revelation is potentially shocking. As he recounted, a CIA employee informed him about the statement, the CIA employee read the text of the statement to him, and the CIA employee asked Cariens if he would like to join.

Indeed, even Morell testified that such an action by a CIA employee would be “inappropriate.” Morell explained:

- A. I did not coordinate with the CIA. I would have—had I known [Cariens’s allegation], I would have reacted very negatively to this. This might—you know, had I known at the time this might have been in the letter, then I certainly would have reported this to then the Director of the Agency.

Q. And why would you have done this?

A. Because this is inappropriate.

Q. And why is it inappropriate?

A. It's inappropriate for a currently serving staff officer or contractor to be involved in the political process.

Q. Do you know the people who were engaged in this review for the CIA?

A. I do not.

Q. You don't know any of the people who work in that process.

A. I do not, sir.⁹⁸

Similarly, Polymeropoulos testified that such an action from the CIA would be “incredibly unprofessional”:

Q. Does what Mr. Cariens described there, that interaction with the PCRB, sound like a quid pro quo to you?⁹⁹

A. I can't comment on this. This is—to me, this is something that the PCRB in my experience would never engage in something like that. They are just straightforward back and forth in terms of approval. The idea they would have a comment on any other thing that they were working on, that to me is not even close to what I've experienced with them.

Q. Does that concern you?

A. If it's true, it would concern me, for sure. But I just—I have a hard time believing that occurred. If it did, that's incredibly unprofessional.¹⁰⁰

Likewise, upon being confronted with Cariens's statement, Shapiro testified:

No. I mean, I have no idea what happened here, to be very—this is the first I'm hearing of this.

But my guess—and lawyers would probably tell me not to guess or defend the PRB, but what I could've seen happen is someone in the PRB being inappropriate and asking, hey, are you signing this thing? Which, PRB shouldn't be sharing, like, materials they get from one former with other formers. Like, that shouldn't be.

Because, as a former, if you send something—I've never sent something, but I know people who have—you're doing that because you're supposed to, but you're also hoping it stays within confidence. Like, usually, if you're going to send something to the PRB, you're sending it elsewhere, and you don't want the PRB spreading that.

So my guess for this was that it was someone who acted inappropriately and was just stupidly outing it and asking these folks if they were going to sign it.

I can't imagine the PRB trying to get someone to sign it by offering to clear something else. That would be really bad.¹⁰¹

Given the gravity of this allegation, the Committees sent a letter to CIA Director William J. Burns, on March 21, 2023, requesting documents about the CIA's review of the statement and its interactions with former CIA employees, such as Cariens, about the statement.¹⁰² The Committees requested that the CIA furnish these documents by April 4, 2023.¹⁰³ To date, the CIA has failed to respond to this request. The Committees have also sought to follow up with Cariens for additional information.

III. The Biden campaign coordinated with the organizers to promote the public statement with the media.

The Committees' oversight has also revealed that the Biden campaign worked with Morell and the other organizers of the statement to promote the statement publicly. Specifically, in coordination with the Biden campaign, Morell enlisted Shapiro, a long-time "national security and strategic communications" aide, to coordinate dissemination efforts with the media.¹⁰⁴

A. Morell and Shapiro worked with the Biden campaign to release the statement to the media.

According to testimony provided to the Committees, Morell worked with Shapiro to disseminate it publicly. Morell testified that, "in terms of getting [the statement] to the media, that was entirely Nick Shapiro's responsibility here. So he took that responsibility on."¹⁰⁵ Email correspondence between Morell and Shapiro, Shapiro and journalists, and Shapiro and the Biden campaign reveal the extent of this effort.

On October 19, as Morell continued to recruit former intelligence officials to affix their names to the statement, he emailed Shapiro that he "[s]hould have something to give to the media through you tomorrow afternoon."¹⁰⁶ Morell promised Shapiro that he would "explain on the phone tomorrow how this came to be."¹⁰⁷

¹⁰⁵ Morell Interview at 16.

¹⁰⁶ Email from Michael Morell to Nick Shapiro (Oct. 19, 2020, 6:36:42 AM) (on file with the Committees). In emails that Mr. Shapiro produced to the Committees, the timestamps are inconsistent with the times and, in one instance, the date, in which events unfolded. When the Committees inquired about these discrepancies, Mr. Shapiro's counsel provided the following response: "[I]t appears that such timestamp inaccuracies are a common issue faced by individuals, like Mr. Shapiro, who use the Gmail email server. The primary cause for these discrepancies appears to be the result of inaccurate time zone settings in the Gmail application, the web browser, and/or the computer settings itself. Unless the user manually corrects the time zone settings in Gmail, the computer's setting, and/or their web browser, the emails will continue to reflect an inaccurate time zone – regardless of where the user may have sent the email. Although we cannot rule out other technical issues, various online publications suggest that this is the most common reason for these discrepancies." Email from Timothy Sini, counsel for Nick Shapiro, to Committee staff (May 3, 2023, 10:00 PM) (on file with the Committees). Mr. Shapiro's counsel affirmed that, despite the timestamp discrepancies, Mr. Shapiro "emailed the Washington Post, the AP, and Politico, prior to the publication being run in the Politico. He emailed [Andrew] Bates at some point after contacting at least one of these media companies and prior to Politico running the story." Great and great. I will explain tomorrow on the phone how this came to be.

I've sent the draft to David Kris and Lisa Monaco but have not yet heard back. They should sign.

I'm looking for two things — pairs of senior who served in the same position from different administrations (Hayden and Panetta, Jeh Johnson and Mike Chertoff, Lisa and Ken Wainstein, Clapper and Coats, etc) and then a slew of former IC and national security who worked Russia.

Should have something to give to the media through you tomorrow afternoon. Let's talk when you get a chance in the morning.

Later on October 19, Morell sent Shapiro “some thoughts when dealing with reporters.”¹⁰⁸ Specifically, Morell informed Shapiro that, “[b]etween us,” the Biden campaign preferred that a certain reporter with the Washington Post run the statement first.¹⁰⁹ Morell asked Shapiro to “share with the campaign when you share with” the reporter.¹¹⁰ Morell also sent Shapiro a lengthy script of information to share on various levels of sourcing—on the record, off the record, and on background.¹¹¹

Will send to you shortly.

Some thoughts when dealing with reporters:

1. Between us, the campaign would like [REDACTED] to go first. Please share with the campaign when you share with [REDACTED]. But, by all means, get it to other reporters as well.
2. On the record from you: What is this? A large group of former career intelligence officers, many specializing in Russia, joined by a group of former IC leaders, all saying that the Russians were somehow involved here. The IC leaders who have signed here are diverse in that they worked for the past four Presidents, including Trump. The real power here is the number of former, working-level IC officers who want the American people to know.
3. OTR: Make sure reporters know that we are not making a call on whether the materials are true or not, just that Moscow played a role in getting the information out. I'm afraid people might miss this point and say that we are saying that this is all disinformation.
4. If asked: On background from you: Why Michael? In talking to people, outside of government, who he worked with and who know Russia, he was struck by the fact that all of them thought Russia is involved here. Michael thought people should know that.
5. Also on background from you: We did not speculate on how the Russians played in this particular case because there are so many different possibilities.

In the background information that Morell gave Shapiro to tell reporters, Morell claimed the genesis of the public statement came from feedback from other Russia experts: “In talking to people, outside of government, who [Morell] worked with and who know Russia, [Morell] was struck by the fact that all of them thought Russia is involved here. [Morell] thought people should know that.”¹¹² This assertion is disingenuous for several reasons.

First, Morell admitted in testimony to the Committees that he spearheaded the effort to publish the public statement for overtly political reasons—to help Vice President Biden in the debates and ultimately win the election.¹¹³ Second, other than soliciting thoughts from and collaborating with Polymeropoulos,¹¹⁴ Morell testified he did not speak to anyone about potential Russian involvement with Hunter Biden’s laptop, but rather researched the issue himself following his conversation with Blinken. He explained:

- A. The first thing I did when Mr. Blinken called me is I did some research. I had not read The New York Post article. I went and read it. I did some internet searches. I did a little bit of research here before I reached out to [Polymeropoulos].

- Q. [A]s part of the research that you did in between the contact with Mr. Blinken and the contact with [Polymeropoulos], did you contact any individuals as a part of your research?
- A. I did not.¹¹⁵

Finally, Morell’s claim is undercut by his disclosure that a majority of the people who he asked to sign the statement declined to do so.¹¹⁶ Although the precise reasons they declined are not yet known, these facts cast doubt on Morell’s intended perception that a groundswell of Russia experts organically concluded that the Hunter Biden laptop was a Russian intelligence operation.

Shapiro emailed the Washington Post reporter the statement, along with scripted on-the-record comments and background information.¹¹⁷ It is important to note that Shapiro kept one of the most important elements of this story off the record—namely, “We are not making a call on whether the materials are true or not, just that Moscow played a role in getting the information out.”¹¹⁸

In his transcribed interview, Shapiro testified about the process of soliciting the statement to the media. He testified:

Q. And we understand from your productions that there were three journalists that you sent the statement to: [REDACTED] of The Washington Post, [REDACTED] of the Associated Press, and Natasha Bertrand of Politico?

A. Yep.

Q. Why those three?

A. [REDACTED] because I was asked to go to [REDACTED] first. And then the AP is a really good outlet you want stories in. And then Politico – I don't know why I went to Politico after that.

Q. We know that Natasha Bertrand is the one that ultimately ran with the article. Why did [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] decline to do so?

A. I don't remember. I know we – I'm sure we spoke. But you'd have to ask them. Reporters decline things all the time.

Q. Okay. But they did get back to you, I assume, over the phone?

A. Yeah.

Q. Because we didn't have any of those records and –

A. Yeah. I looked back at the emails, and it's clear that I spoke to them before I emailed them, which is normal. When I'm talking to a reporter, I'll call them and say, "Hey, you know, I've got this idea. What do you want to do?" And then, considering it was a letter, I'm sure I said, "I'll follow up and send it to you," which is what I did with each of them.

And then, for each of them, we got back on the phone. And Washington Post and AP said no. And Politico I think I probably just reiterated these points to Natasha.¹²²

B. Politico ultimately published a story about the statement, falsely calling the Hunter Biden laptop and emails Russian disinformation.

On October 19, 2020, at 10:30 p.m., Politico published the public statement it received from Shapiro, with an accompanying article titled: "Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say."¹²³

Supporters of the Biden campaign immediately promoted the article, including Jen Psaki, who would later become the White House Press Secretary under President Biden.¹²⁴

¹²⁴ Jen Psaki (@jrpsaki), Twitter (Oct. 19, 2020, 10:45 PM), <https://twitter.com/jrpsaki/status/1318382779659411458>.

Despite Politico's conclusory headline, Morell, Polymeropoulos, and Shapiro all testified that their statement was not intended to make a conclusive determination about whether the Hunter Biden allegations were disinformation. Morell testified that “the statement clearly says that we’re not saying this is disinformation.”¹²⁵ Polymeropoulos testified that, at the presidential debate, “Vice President Biden” had “mischaracterize[ed]” the statement by calling “it disinformation, which is not what the letter said.”¹²⁶ And Shapiro testified:

Q How do you feel now that you know that the contents on the laptop were not Russian disinformation?

A Meaning that they were real?

¹²⁵ Morell Interview at 26.

¹²⁶ Polymeropoulos Interview at 28.

Q Yes.

A I'm sure glad that we put that in the letter, saying that we don't know if this is real or not.¹²⁷

Notwithstanding these recent protestations, there is no evidence that the statement's signers attempted to correct Politico's misleading headline. Indeed, Morell "knew" the media would not run the letter's caveats. He testified:

Q. Do you regret that those caveats [in the statement] that you seem to be relying on heavily today weren't really part of the public discourse and the political discourse around this letter?

A. I knew they wouldn't be. I knew they wouldn't be, as much as we tried, right? As you guys know better than anybody, right, politics is hyperbole and particularly debates. There's a lot of hyperbole around, a lot of people taking things and taking them a little bit further, right? You know that better than I do. So I wasn't surprised at all that – you know, when President Biden – when Vice President Biden talked about this at the debate that he didn't say, "Hey, I have to put some caveats on this." That's not what happens at debates.

Q. So you knew when you put this product out with caveats that its utilization politically likely wouldn't include those caveats?

A. I guessed that politicians would not use the caveats. I was hoping that fact-checkers and I was hoping the media – disappointed in that regard – would pay more attention to them.

Q. But you testified earlier that you were accelerating – you were requesting an acceleration of the review of this material so it could be used in a debate, right?

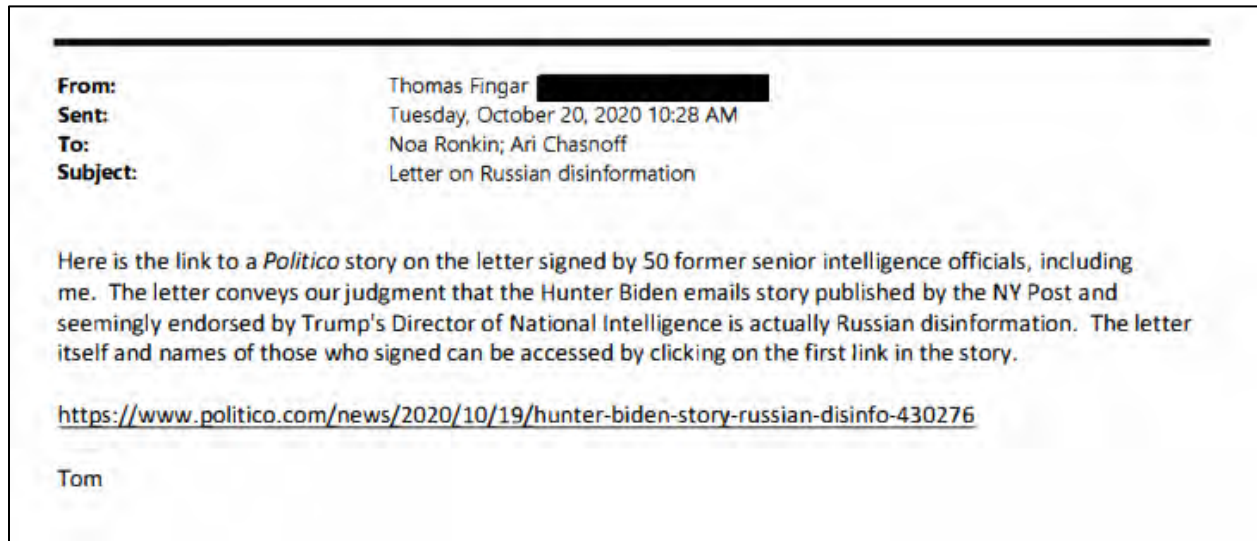

A. Yes, sir.¹²⁸

Indeed, contemporaneous documents show that some of the signatories adopted Politico's framing that the laptop was Russian disinformation. One of the intelligence officials who signed onto the statement, Thomas Fingar, the former Deputy Director of National Intelligence for Analysis and Chair of the National Intelligence Council, wrote to colleagues at Stanford University that the statement "conveys our judgment that the Hunter Biden emails story published by the NY Post and seemingly endorsed by Trump’s Director of National Intelligence is actually Russian disinformation.”¹²⁹

Fingar, in sharing the Politico story with Stanford’s public affairs team, appeared intent on having the university promote the story among its networks.¹³⁰ But Fingar’s Stanford colleagues did not seem willing. One Stanford employee immediately grasped the statement was nothing more than a political document.¹³¹ Indeed, she used the word “political” four times in her terse response to Fingar explaining that Stanford cannot endorse these sorts of “political opinions.”¹³²

In an October 20 email to the signers of the statement, Morell wrote that “Politico did a nice job getting out the story of our letter.”¹³³ Morell, however, expressed no concern about the story’s conclusory headline that the laptop was Russian disinformation.

Similarly, on October 20, a day after Politico ran its story about the statement, Shapiro emailed another signatory, John Sipher, a former career CIA officer, to sit for an interview with MSNBC commentator Rachel Maddow.¹³⁴ Shapiro noted an interest in placing a statement signatory before a friendly talk show host and ensuring that signatory had “Russia expertise” and “will not be seen as political.”¹³⁵ Here, too, there was no mention about nuancing Politico’s headline or caveating the assertions in the statement.

Likewise, Jeremy Bash,¹³⁶ another former intelligence community official, appeared on MSNBC the same day the statement was released. His assertions about Hunter Biden’s laptop and emails were unambiguous and did not include nuanced caveats in the statement. He said:

We need to talk about it, Nicole. [The Hunter Biden allegations] looks like Russian intelligence, this walks like Russian intelligence, this talks like Russian intelligence. This effort by Rudy Giuliani and the New York Post and Steve Bannon to cook up supposed dirt on Joe Biden looks like a classic Russian playbook disinformation campaign.¹³⁷

¹³⁶ President Biden appointed Bash to the President’s Intelligence Advisory Board in August 2022. White House, President Biden Announces Key Appointments to Boards and Commissions (Aug. 26, 2022), <https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/statements-releases/2022/08/26/president-biden-announces-key-appointments-to-boards-and-commissions-6/>.

The MSNBC host then amplified the falsehood: “I think Jeremy has made clear we shouldn’t look at [the statement] as anything other than a Russian disinformation operation.”¹³⁸ If these intelligence officials were concerned about Politico’s misrepresentation of their public statement, there has been no contemporaneous indication of such a concern.

C. The Politico article and public statement helped to support the continued suppression of the allegations uncovered from emails on Hunter Biden’s laptop.

In a recent retrospective, the New York Post explained how the public statement contributed to the continued suppression of the underlying allegations contained in the emails on Hunter Biden’s laptop—namely, Hunter Biden’s pattern of monetizing his familial relationship with Vice President Biden’s likely knowledge. The Post piece reasoned:

Yes, that letter from the Dirty 51 had “all the classic earmarks” of a disinformation operation, all right — one designed to ensure Joe Biden won the presidency. And it was essentially a CIA operation, considering 43 of the 51 signatories were former CIA.

In the two years since, not one of them has admitted they are wrong.

¹³⁸ Id.

[One signer] David Priess at least gets marks for subjecting himself to a cross-examination on Fox News one recent afternoon. He tried to defend the letter by saying people were too stupid to understand it. The letter was “still true” because it did not use the words “Russian disinformation,” but concocted the weasel phrase “earmarks of a Russian information operation.”

He knows perfectly well that Biden and the media drew no distinction, that the letter he signed was used to censor and deride The Post’s accurate story and deny the American people the truth about one of the two candidates for president.¹³⁹

Similarly, an opinion writer with the Washington Post observed:

In addition to these meetings with current officials, a group of 51 former intelligence officials released a public letter when the story broke in which they alleged that the release of Hunter Biden’s emails “has all the classic earmarks of a Russian information operation,” adding, “If we are right, this is Russia trying to influence how Americans vote in this election.”

They were not right. But together, these warnings by current and former national security officials gave Twitter the pretext to censor the story — and mainstream news outlets the excuse to dismiss or ignore it, which many of them did.¹⁴⁰

¹⁴⁰ Marc A. Thiessen, The suppression of Hunter Biden’s laptop is a huge scandal, THE WASHINGTON POST (Dec. 9, 2022).

IV. The statement had its intended effect of giving Vice President Biden a “talking point” to use in the presidential debate.

The public statement signatories had a common goal: “to help Vice President Biden in the debate” and to help him win the presidency.¹⁴¹ Indeed, some of the former intelligence officials who signed the public statement were deeply satisfied that Vice President Biden referred to the statement in the final presidential debate before the election. After the debate, the signers congratulated themselves on a job well done, and the Biden campaign even called to thank Morell for organizing the effort.

A. Then-Vice President Biden relied on the public statement in the presidential debate to falsely assert that Hunter Biden allegations were a Russian “plan.”

On October 22, 2020, the last debate between then-Vice President Biden and President Trump took place at Belmont University in Nashville, Tennessee.¹⁴² After President Trump pressed Vice President Biden about his son’s laptop and emails, Biden called the American people’s attention to the statement, noting the significance of the intelligence community officials who signed the statement:

President Trump: It’s the laptop from hell.

Moderator: President Trump, we’re talking about race right now and I do want to stay on the issue of race. President Trump –

Vice President Biden: Nobody – Kristen, I have to respond to that.

Moderator: Please, very quickly.

Vice President Biden: Look, there are 50 former national intelligence folks who said that what this, he’s accusing me of is a Russian plan. They have said that this has all the characteristics — four– five former heads of the CIA, both parties, say what he’s saying is a bunch of garbage. Nobody believes it except him and his good friend Rudy Giuliani.

President Trump: You mean, the laptop is now another Russia, Russia, Russia hoax? You gotta be –

Vice President Biden: That’s exactly what — That’s exactly what –

¹⁴¹ Morell Interview at 78, 102.

¹⁴² COMM. ON PRESIDENTIAL DEBATES, supra note 5.

President Trump: Is this where you're going? This is where he's going.
The laptop is Russia, Russia, Russia?¹⁴³

Two days later, the Washington Post took note of Vice President Biden's reliance upon the public statement, noting critically:

Joe Biden leaned heavily on a letter from former U.S. intelligence and defense officials in Thursday night's debate to argue that Russia orchestrated a disinformation operation allegedly involving damaging information obtained from his son's laptop that was promulgated by President Trump's personal attorney, Rudolph W. Giuliani.

The Biden campaign's decision to lean into accusations of Russian involvement in the episode, despite lacking specific proof, risks eroding public trust in U.S. allegations of foreign election interference if the suspicions in this case turn out to be unfounded, according to intelligence and foreign policy experts.¹⁴⁴

B. The statement's signatories celebrated after the debate.

The signers of the statement were pleased with Vice President Biden's response and his reliance upon the statement during the debate, as emails between them make clear. One signer, Gregory Tarbell, former CIA Deputy Executive Director, wrote that the talking points "worked well during the debate" and applauded Morell, Polymeropoulos, Wood, Shapiro, and others on what the "[g]reat idea" for the statement.¹⁴⁵

In response, Wood stated that Vice President Biden’s mention of the statement during the debate “was really cool.”¹⁴⁶

Polymeropoulos voiced similar sentiments, calling it “very cool.”¹⁴⁷

Four day earlier, in a private exchange with Morell, Polymeropoulos expressed his appreciation for “including me on this letter.” He wrote:

Thanks again for including me on this letter. I’m glad I could contribute. I am terrified of 11/3. Future of our country, internal and also external to the world, at stake. I’m not usually dramatic, but this is it. For our lifetimes. Four more years of this means I move to the greek [sic] islands and bury my head in the sand.¹⁴⁸

Morell testified to the self-satisfaction the signatories felt for their involvement in the presidential debate. He testified:

to the committee where the people on – a number of the people who signed it were sort of congratulating each other for the fact that it was, in fact, used in the debate.

A. Yes, sir.¹⁴⁹

In a final email to the signatories, Morell expressed his own satisfaction in successfully getting the statement published. He wrote to his co-signatories:

I think this is the most important election since 1860 and 1864 when the very existence of the country was on the ballot. Now, it is our democracy and the Constitution that are on the ballot. We all, of course, took an oath to “preserve, protect, and defend” the Constitution. I think all of you did that yesterday by signing this letter.¹⁵⁰

We will monitor how much media coverage it gets and will let you know.

I also want to thank Marc for helping to draft the letter, Kristin for helping to spread the word, and Nick for working with the media.

By the way, if any reporters reach out to you, feel free to either talk to them or to send them Nick's way. Nick has the final version of the letter, if any reporters are looking for that (although there is a link to the letter itself in the Politico piece).

I think this is the most important election since 1860 and 1864 when the very existence of the country was on the ballot. Now, it is our democracy and the Constitution that are on the ballot. We all, of course, took an oath to "preserve, protect, and defend" the Constitution. I think all of you did that yesterday by signing the letter. Thank you.

C. The Biden campaign called Morell and thanked him for his service to the campaign.

After the October 22, 2020, presidential debate, Biden campaign chairman Steve Ricchetti called Morell and thanked him for the statement. Morell testified:

Q. Did you talk to [Steve Ricchetti] at all regarding the statement that you helped organize and put out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you talk with him?

A. After the debate – I think it was after the debate – in fact, I'm pretty sure it was after the debate – I got a phone call from Jeremy Bash, who I work with at Beacon and who is active politically. And Jeremy said: Do you have a minute to talk to Steve Ricchetti? I said: Of course. He was the head of the Biden campaign at the time. And

Jeremy got him on the line, and Steve thanked me for putting the statement out.¹⁵¹

¹⁵¹ Morell Interview at 96-97.

V. Some signatories expressed outrage about Congressional oversight into the origins of the statement.

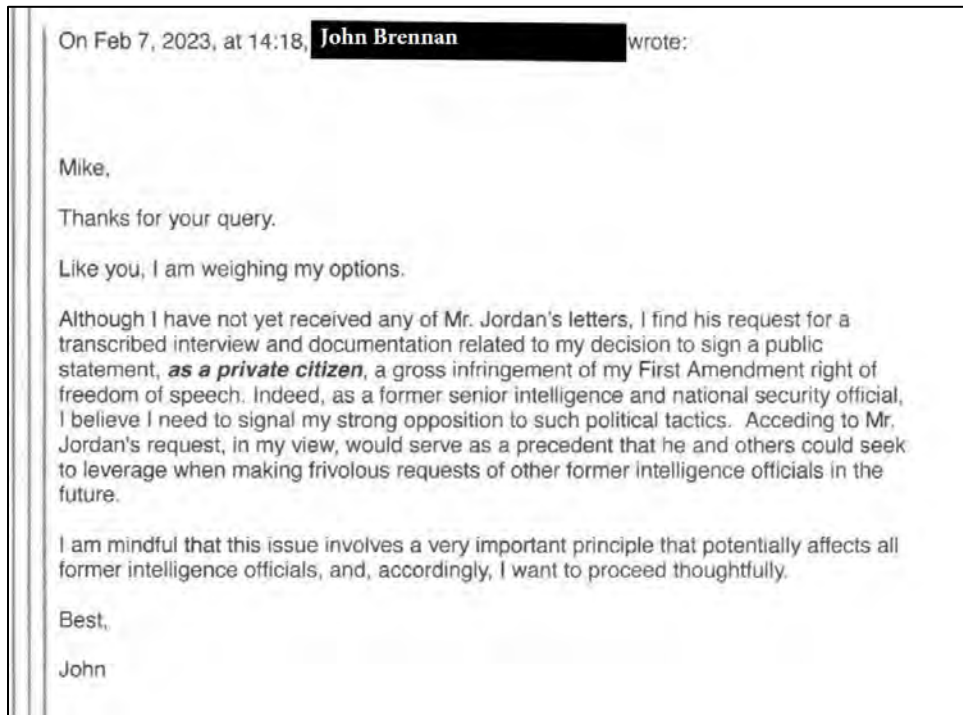

The Committees are in possession of emails exchanged among some of the senior former intelligence officials following the Committees’ oversight requests regarding the origins of the statement. While the Committees fully recognize and respect every Americans’ right to engage in the political process, the Committees have a legitimate legislative purpose in understanding how these officials used their intelligence credentials and official titles to mislead American voters about serious Biden family allegations in the final days before the 2020 election.

The emails exchanged following the Committees’ oversight suggest outrage among some signatories for having to explain the origins of the statement. Former National Security Agency Director Michael Hayden asked some co-signers—including Morell, John Brennan, Jeremy Bash, Thomas Fingar, and others—if they “should have a coordinated response.”¹⁵² Brennan responded that he would voice his “strong opposition to such political tactics,” asserting that complying with the Committees’ request for documents and testimony “would serve as a precedent that [Chairman Jordan] and others could seek to leverage when making frivolous requests of other former intelligence officials in the future.”¹⁵³

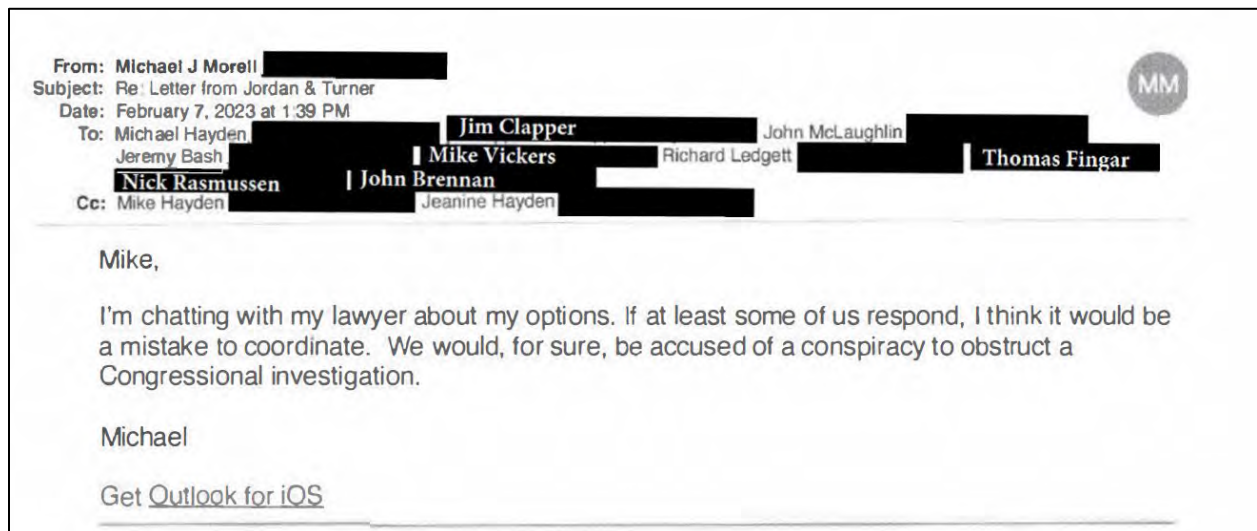

¹⁵² Email from Michael Hayden to Jim Clapper et al. (Feb. 7, 2023, 1:11 PM) (on file with the Committees).

¹⁵³ Email from John Brennan to Michael Hayden (Feb. 7, 2023, 2:18 PM) (on file with the Committees).

Morell, to his credit, rejected Hayden's suggestion to coordinate a response, counseling his former colleagues: "If at least some of us respond, I think it would be a mistake to coordinate. We would, for sure, be accused of a conspiracy to obstruct a Congressional investigation."¹⁵⁴

¹⁵⁴ Email from Michael Morell to Michael Hayden et al. (Feb. 7, 2023, 1:39 PM) (on file with the Committees).

Conclusion

The American people deserve to know that Hunter Biden’s laptop and emails were real. They always were real. The allegations that they were the product of Russian disinformation were false. Even the New York Times was forced to acknowledge, almost two years after the 2020 election, “a cache of files that appears to have come from a laptop abandoned by [Hunter] Biden in a Delaware repair shop” was “authenticated by people familiar with them and with the investigation.”¹⁵⁵

On the morning of October 19, 2020, at least 12 hours before the statement was released by Politico, then-Director Ratcliffe publicly stated, on behalf of the intelligence community, that Hunter Biden’s laptop and emails were not Russian disinformation.¹⁵⁶ Within 24 hours of then-Director Ratcliffe’s statement, the Department of Justice and the FBI confirmed his declaration.¹⁵⁷

Reflecting on that moment, former-Director Ratcliffe recently stated:

You had the intelligence community and the law enforcement community on behalf of the United States of America saying this is not Russian disinformation. . . . You have literally had the Bidens lie about it—Hunter Biden, Joe Biden, the Biden administration, Biden White House officials, the Democratic Party, Democratic politicians, the left-leaning media. . .

The gaggle of former intelligence and law enforcement officials—you know—the famous 51 All of this was really a domestic disinformation campaign for political reasons. . . . There is no other explanation for it.

The people that had access to the intelligence and had possession of Hunter Biden’s laptop . . . all of the people in a position to talk about the evidence and the intelligence told the American people the truth.¹⁵⁸

As the Wall Street Journal opined, the American people will “never know what effect the ‘October Surprise’ of 2020, the New York Post’s reporting of the discovery of a laptop belonging to Hunter Biden containing all sorts of embarrassing emails, might have had on the election that year if it had received wider circulation.”¹⁵⁹ Former Attorney General William Barr believes the suppression of the Hunter Biden laptop story “probably affected the outcome” of the 2020 election, “given how close the election was.”¹⁶⁰

On November 3, 2020, the American people went to the polls to elect the president of the United States with the false impression that Hunter Biden’s laptop was Russian disinformation. The American people cannot get back the 2020 election, but they have every right to demand reforms from Congress so that the 2024 election will not be similarly compromised.

The United States is witnessing in real time the growth of a censorship industrial complex, in which partisan “experts”—like the former intelligence officials who signed the statement—reserve for themselves the right to determine what is and is not true and what Americans can and cannot hear. Indeed, in the weeks leading up to the 2020 election, a writer for the New York Times observed that, in the United States, “[f]ree speech threatens democracy as much as it also provides for its flourishing.”¹⁶¹ To address this threat, progressive “experts prescribe[] two critical steps: [1] America must become less free and [2] less democratic. . . .”¹⁶² These goals, in their view, will only be achieved by “following the wisdom of disinformation experts and outgrowing our parochial attachment to the Bill of Rights.”¹⁶³ This is frightening and shows why the Committees’ oversight is so important.

There is a direct line between Twitter’s continued suppression of the New York Post story on Hunter Biden’s laptop and the statement by the former intelligence officials. One disinformation commentator captured the significance of the censorship of the Hunter Biden laptop and emails story to American democracy and self-government:

The laptops are real. The FBI has known this since 2019, when it first took possession of them. When the New York Post attempted to report on them, dozens of the most senior national security officials in the United States lied to the public, claiming the laptops were likely part of a Russian “disinformation” plot. Twitter, Facebook, and Google, operating as fully integrated branches of the state security infrastructure, carried out the government’s censorship orders based on that lie. The press swallowed the lie and cheered on the censorship.

The story of the laptops has been framed as many things, but the most fundamental truth about it is that it was the successful culmination of the yearslong effort to create a shadow regulatory bureaucracy built specifically to prevent a repeat of Trump’s 2016 victory.

It may be impossible to know exactly what effect the ban on reporting about Hunter Biden's laptops had on the 2020 vote, but the story was clearly seen as threatening enough to warrant an openly authoritarian attack on the independence of the press. The damage to the country's underlying social fabric, in which paranoia and conspiracy have been normalized, is incalculable.¹⁶⁴

This interim report presents the material facts the Committees have learned to date about the origins of the public statement signed by 51 former intelligence officials that falsely discredited—on the eve of the 2020 presidential election—legitimate allegations about the Biden family's influence-peddling operation. The Committees present this information now to keep the House of Representatives apprised of our oversight work. The Committees' oversight into this matter continues in earnest.

Second Interim Joint Staff Report of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence

U.S. House of Representatives

June 25, 2024

Executive Summary

The Committee on the Judiciary, its Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence have revealed how, in the final weeks before the 2020 presidential election, 51 former intelligence officials coordinated with the Biden campaign to discredit serious allegations about Biden family influence peddling.¹ In issuing a public statement using their official titles, these former intelligence officials sought to cast an explosive New York Post story and Hunter Biden’s abandoned laptop as “Russian disinformation.”² President Biden even cited to the statement in a televised debate with President Trump shortly before the election to accuse President Trump of leveling false accusations.³ As a result, the explosive allegations about Biden family misconduct were buried and millions of Americans cast their votes for president without a full set of facts.

The 51 former intelligence officials’ Hunter Biden statement was a blatant political operation from the start. It originated with a call from top Biden campaign official—and now Secretary of State—Antony Blinken to former Deputy Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) Director Michael Morell. The Committees’ investigation revealed that without this outreach from Blinken, Morell would not have written the statement.⁴ Indeed, Morell told the Committees that the Blinken phone call “triggered” his intent to write the statement.⁵ The statement’s drafters were open about the goal of the project: “[W]e think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week’s debate”⁶ and “we want to give the [Vice President] a talking point to use in response.”⁷

The details as revealed by the Committees to date are concerning enough, but as the Committees have continued to investigate the origins of the Hunter Biden statement, new information has come to light. Through newly obtained internal CIA emails and testimonial evidence, the Committees have uncovered more information on the extent to which the intelligence community was involved in the statement. Specifically, the evidence shows:

- High ranking CIA officials, up to and including then-CIA Director Gina Haspel, were made aware of the Hunter Biden statement prior to its approval and publication.⁸ Because several former senior intelligence officials signed the statement, the PCRB sent the draft statement to the CIA’s then-Chief Operating Officer (COO) Andrew Makridis, who said he subsequently informed then-Director Haspel or then-Deputy Director Vaughn Frederick Bishop that the statement would be published soon.⁹ Senior CIA leadership had an opportunity at that time to slow down the CIA’s process for reviewing publication submissions and ensure that such an extraordinary statement was properly vetted.¹⁰
- Some of the statement’s signatories, including Michael Morell, were on active contract with the CIA at the time of the Hunter Biden statement’s publication.¹¹ Throughout the course of the Committees’ investigation, the signatories claimed to not have had access to any classified information when asserting that the allegations surrounding Hunter Biden’s laptop had “all the hallmarks” of Russian disinformation.¹² However, at the time of the statement’s publication, at least two signatories—Morell and former CIA Inspector General David Buckley—were on the CIA’s payroll as contractors. Due to purported operational concerns, the CIA declined to declassify the entire universe of signatories who were on active contract. In addition, some signatories to the Hunter Biden statement also had special “Green Card” access to the CIA at the time of the statement’s publication, allowing them to gain entry to secure CIA facilities.
- After publication of the Hunter Biden statement, CIA employees internally expressed concern about the statement’s politicized content, acknowledging it was not “helpful to the Agency in the long run.”¹³ At least one employee found it “[i]nteresting to see what was submitted and approved” when discussing media talking points that the statement’s co-author, former Senior Intelligence Service Officer Marc Polymeropoulos, submitted related to the statement.¹⁴ When discussing Polymeropoulos’s talking points, another CIA official stated, “It appears [Polymeropoulos] is actively involved in a pro-Biden campaign and may be disclosing classified information in his efforts.”¹⁵ The CIA’s internal review board, known as the Prepublication Classification Review Board (PCRB), determined that Polymeropoulos’s talking points contained classified information that had to be removed prior to publication.¹⁶

The new information included in this report, based on new testimony and declassified documents, shows the potential dangers of a politicized intelligence community. In the waning days before the 2020 presidential election, 51 intelligence community officials rushed to draft and release a statement using their official titles, presumably to convey access to specialized information unavailable to other Americans. The statement was conceived following a conversation with a senior Biden campaign official and designed explicitly to provide talking points to the Biden campaign to discredit politically damaging allegations. Some of the signatories of the statement were on the CIA payroll at the time as contractors and others had special access to CIA facilities. Even Michael Morell—before the Committees learned of his contract with the CIA—acknowledged, “It’s inappropriate for a currently serving staff officer or contractor to be involved in the political process.”¹⁷

The infamous Hunter Biden statement had all the hallmarks of an intelligence community influence operation. But rather than carrying it out against our adversaries on foreign soil, this operation was directed at the American people and our democratic processes. It is impossible to know for certain how events would have played out differently if these 51 intelligence community officials never sought to influence the 2020 election. All the Committees may do now is present the facts as known to inform legislative reforms to protect our democratic ideals and prevent future abuse of the intelligence community for partisan political benefit.

Conclusion	30

I. The CIA, at its highest levels, was aware of the Hunter Biden statement prior to its approval and publication.

The drafters of the public statement about Hunter Biden’s laptop have long maintained that the CIA had no part in the approval of the statement beyond confirming that the statement contained no classified information.¹⁸ Evidence obtained by the Committees shows, however, that both then-Director Gina Haspel or then-Deputy Director Vaughn Frederick Bishop were made aware of the statement prior to its publication.¹⁹ Their awareness came via the PCRB, the internal CIA office responsible for reviewing and clearing publications by intelligence community officials.²⁰ Although the PCRB routinely reviews a manuscript without elevating it, in this case, the PCRB took the unique step of alerting the CIA’s Office of the Chief Operating Officer (COO) about the draft statement.²¹ The Office of the COO later directed the PCRB that it may “notify” Morell that the PCRB approved the statement.²²

A. Then-CIA Director Haspel instituted a review process ensuring she would have seen the Hunter Biden statement prior to its approval.

According to testimony from then-CIA COO Andrew Makridis, Director Haspel instituted a policy requiring the PCRB to flag for her review all submissions from current and former senior CIA officials prior to the PCRB’s final approval.²³ Director Haspel did so after several former intelligence officials penned publications that garnered significant news coverage without her awareness.²⁴ Under Director Haspel’s policy, Makridis explained, the PCRB would send documents submitted by current and former senior intelligence officers to the COO’s office and Makridis would personally bring the document to the Director or Deputy Director for review.²⁵ Consequently, when Morell submitted the draft of the Hunter Biden statement in the early hours of October 19, 2020, it followed this same track, albeit on an apparently expedited process. In his initial submission to the PCRB, Morell described the statement as a “rush job,” and the PCRB appeared to acquiesce to his sense of urgency.²⁶

Good morning. Hope everyone had a nice weekend. Attached is a statement that Marc and I drafted that many former senior and working-level officials from across the IC will sign and then be made public. We are 100 percent confident it does not contain classified information. Indeed, it specifically says we don't know what the IC or the FBI knows about this.

This is a rush job, as it needs to get out as soon as possible. Thank you very much.

The PCRB staff acknowledged receipt of the Hunter Biden statement in less than 40 minutes,²⁷ and at 8:01 AM, the PCRB sent the statement to the COO's office, marking the submission as of high importance.²⁸ After receiving the notification from the PCRB—and in accordance with Director Haspel's policy—Makridis walked the statement to the CIA Director's or Deputy Director's office to flag it for their awareness.²⁹ Makridis testified during his transcribed interview:

Q. So then after you determined that the article that you received was written by a former senior official, then you would alert either the director and deputy director. Is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And what did that process look like? Was that just, hey, heads-up, this is coming? Was there a conversation? How did that typically look?

A. So the typical process was . . . once I saw it and sort of saw that it was from a former senior, I would bring it to the attention of either the director or deputy director. It would depend on the day, who was available.

Q. And how did it work in this case with the statement?

A. You know, I don't recall exactly, but the process that I just described is probably . . . the way it worked. I would have stepped across the hall and said, here's an article. It's come up from the Prepublication Classification Review Board. They said there is no classified [information] in it. It's going to run. . . .

Q. And since this statement was being signed by Director Brennan, Director Clapper, Director Panetta, Director Morell, do you know if you flagged this for the awareness of the director or deputy director?

A. They would have seen—you know, if I provided them a copy, which is probably the—which is my normal process, they would have seen . . . who the authors were.³⁰

The Hunter Biden statement drew significant attention at the CIA senior staff level. Makridis, as COO, was the third highest-ranking official at the CIA, with over 37-years of ²⁹ Makridis Interview at 15.

³⁰ Makridis Interview at 15-16.

experience at the Agency.³¹ In his testimony before the Committees, Makridis stated that he had never seen a statement of this nature come across his desk before. Makridis testified:

Q. Have you seen anything like the public statement in all of your years of experience?

A. Like? You mean with that many . . .

Q. . . . [W]ith that many signatories, of that caliber, who had all held prestigious positions within the Intelligence Community, especially in the CIA, people you knew personally.

A. No, I had not seen anything of that nature.³²

Despite acknowledging the extraordinary nature of the Hunter Biden statement, none of the top three CIA officials paused the statement's review process within the CIA or seemed to raise any concerns about the statement or its effect on the Agency's credibility.

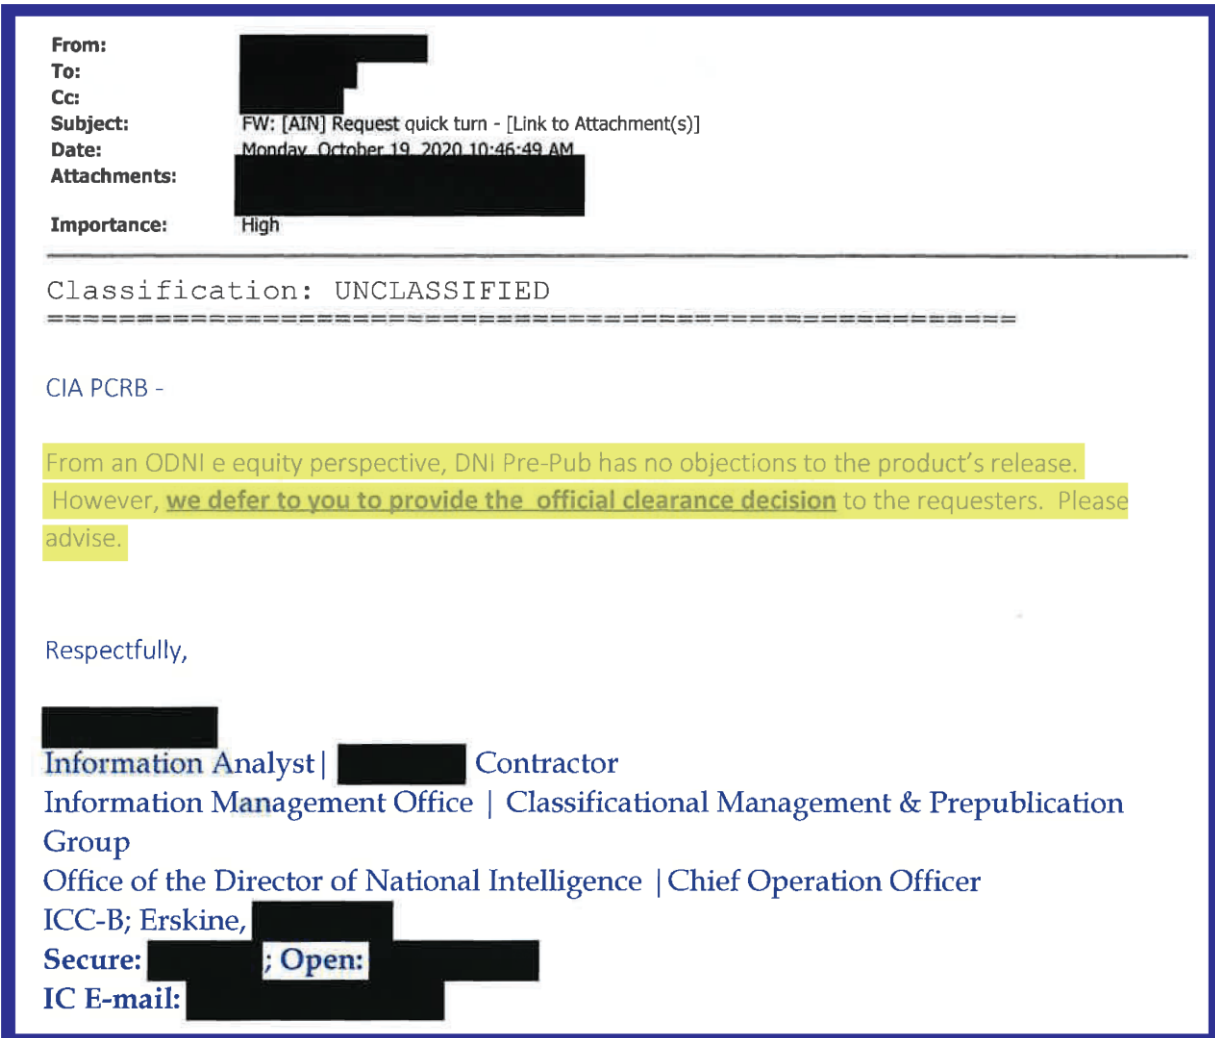

B. The CIA alerted the Office of the Director of National Intelligence about the draft of the Hunter Biden statement.

As CIA officials circulated the Hunter Biden statement to the highest levels of the Agency, the PCRB also felt compelled to share the statement with the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI), requesting a quick turn on ODNI's assessment. After exchanging emails, ODNI deferred to the CIA's judgement regarding the approval of the statement and stated it had no objections to the statement's release.³³

³¹ Andrew Makridis, Biography, Beacon Global Strategies, <https://bgsdc.com/team/andrew-makridis/> (last visited Jun. 12, 2024).

³² Makridis Interview at 35.

³³ See Email from the ODNI's Office of the Chief Operating Officer to PCRB Staff (Oct. 19, 2020, 10:46 AM) (Bates CIA000067) (on file with the Committee).

On the same day that ODNI cleared the Hunter Biden statement—which alleged that stories about Hunter Biden’s laptop had all the “hallmarks” of Russian disinformation—then-Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe issued an official statement that the laptop story was “not part of some Russian disinformation campaign . . . the intelligence community doesn’t believe that because there is no intelligence that supports that.”³⁴ Notably, as the senior most intelligence community official, Director Ratcliffe would have been the most informed individual on this subject and the best equipped to make any judgments about whether the Hunter Biden laptop was Russian disinformation.³⁵

It is unclear why the PCRB felt it was necessary to consult with ODNI regarding the Hunter Biden statement. Makridis testified that he had never reached out to his counterpart at ODNI about a submission from current or former senior staff.³⁶ Makridis could not explain why

³⁴ Brooke Singman, Ratcliffe says Hunter Biden laptop, emails ‘not part of some Russian disinformation campaign,’ FOX NEWS (Oct. 19, 2020).

³⁵ Makridis Interview at 72 (“Someone who sits in the role of DNI has access to all the classified information the intelligence community has.”).

³⁶ Id. at 95.

the PCRB felt the statement merited this unusual interaction.³⁷ Simultaneously, Makridis also could not refute the possibility that the political nature of the statement spurred this outreach.³⁸ Makridis testified:

- Q. Have you ever interacted with any of your counterparts at ODNI regarding . . . these kinds of statements when you are . . . notifying for your director at the time. Did you also occasionally . . . reach over to ODNI, so to speak, to let them know that this was also coming down the pike?
- A. I don't recall reaching over to ODNI on—on any of these.
- Q. Do you think that the review of this submission rose to ODNI's COO's level due to the impact the statement could have had on the 2020 presidential election? Is that at all possible?
- A. I don't know the DNI process. They may have a similar process in place that we did. Anything written by a former senior would rise up to the chief operating officer to inform . . . their principals. So they may have had a similar process in place.³⁹

The Hunter Biden statement garnered enough interest within the CIA that it felt compelled to flag the statement for its counterparts at ODNI. This was a unique procedure that the third in command of the CIA had never followed. The decision to share the statement with ODNI widened the circle of impact the statement had on the U.S. intelligence community and therefore widened the circle of responsible individuals who could have—and should have—considered the effects of the politicized statement on the integrity of the intelligence community. In failing to do so, employees at both agencies put the American election system at risk.

C. The CIA's Office of Chief Operating Officer informed the PCRB that it could approve the Hunter Biden statement.

In his testimony before the Committees, Makridis repeatedly stated that the COO's office was not involved in the approval or disapproval of submissions to the PCRB.⁴⁰ Furthermore, he stated that the PCRB has no role beyond looking to see if submissions contained classified information.⁴¹ However, just hours after Morell submitted the draft Hunter Biden statement, Makridis's Executive Assistant sent an email to the PCRB stating that it “may notify Former DDCIA Morell.”⁴²

The documents and testimony available to the Committees suggest that the CIA treated the Hunter Biden statement specially. The communications among the PCRB, CIA leadership, and ODNI staff indicated that the statement's review required a quick response. The PCRB's own subject line demarcations displayed its compliance with Morell's request that the statement’s review be a “rush job.”⁴⁴ The CIA’s COO alerted the CIA Director or the Deputy Director about the draft statement. The PCRB appeared to believe the unique nature of the statement merited raising the draft to ODNI for review, in a process unfamiliar to the third in command at the CIA.⁴⁵ The PCRB notified Morell that it had approved the statement for publication only after the CIA COO’s office greenlit the statement.

In the ODNI’s analytic standards for the intelligence community, it notes the importance of analytic objectivity and sound intelligence tradecraft.⁴⁶ Every individual who came in contact with the Hunter Biden statement—from the PCRB and ODNI staff all the way up to then-Director Gina Haspel—had the opportunity to raise a concern about how the politicized Hunter Biden statement would hurt the integrity and credibility of the U.S. intelligence community. What happened instead was the publication of a politicized statement about Hunter Biden’s laptop—signed by senior former officials using their official titles—that included assertions now known to be untrue. The draft Hunter Biden statement was reviewed and passed around the highest levels of the U.S. intelligence community and still allowed to influence the public discourse surrounding the 2020 presidential election.

⁴⁶ OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF NATIONAL INTELLIGENCE, OBJECTIVITY, <https://www.dni.gov/index.php/how-we-work/objectivity> (last visited Apr. 29, 2024).

II. Some of the signatories of the Hunter Biden statement were on active CIA contracts at the time of the statement.

Internal CIA documents show that several signatories of the Hunter Biden statement—including Michael Morell—were on active CIA contract at the time the statement was published. This evidence shows that these signatories were likely earning an income supported by American taxpayer dollars while politicizing intelligence in order to boost the Biden campaign’s race for the presidency.

A. The signatories of the Hunter Biden statement claimed to not access classified information in the course of drafting the statement.

The former intelligence officials interviewed by the Committees have repeatedly asserted that they were merely a group of private citizens exercising their First Amendment rights and speaking on a matter of public interest.⁴⁷ None had access to classified information—they claimed—and were therefore just providing an opinion on a matter of public significance based upon the experience of their careers. During his transcribed interview with the Committees, for example, Morell testified that he had no access to classified material or any other investigative material prior to writing the Hunter Biden statement.⁴⁸ Morell stated:

Q. Had you had any conversations with officials at the FBI?

A. No.

Q. Had you been privy to any classified briefings . . . about this?

A. No.⁴⁹

Q. . . . Mr. Morell, as part of the research that you did in between the contact with Mr. Blinken and the contact with Marc [Polymeropoulos], did you contact any individuals as a part of that research?

A. I did not.

Q. So the full sum of that research involved your internet searches?

A. Yes.⁵⁰

⁴⁷ See, e.g., Morell Interview at 77.

⁴⁸ Morell Interview at 17, 20.

⁴⁹ Morell Interview at 16-17.

⁵⁰ Morell Interview at 20.

The other primary drafter of the public statement, Marc Polymeropoulos, similarly testified that he had no access “to classified information regarding the contents of Hunter Biden’s laptop.”⁵¹ Former CIA Director John Brennan likewise asserted that he did not have access to classified information.⁵² In his transcribed interview with the Committees, former Director of National Intelligence, James Clapper, stated that he did not seek to access any classified information when he signed the public statement.⁵³ Director Clapper stated:

Q. Well, you’re the former Director of National Intelligence, who’s about to make a very public statement about a very specific thing that you were claiming is likely Russian disinformation, you had the clearance.

You could have requested a briefing on it. Why did you not even consider doing that?

A. I didn’t do it because I didn’t think it was appropriate.

Q. Why?

A. Because I didn’t want to be tainted by . . . access to classified information.

Q. But why would it be tainted to try to find the truth before you signed—

A. Bad choice of words. . . . I wanted only to go on what I had seen publicly. That’s all. I didn’t want any connection with classified information . . . in any way.

Q. Well, it confuses me why you would be willing to sign a letter like this, and you had access to agencies who could have clarified it, and you didn’t consider even nor make an effort to find out if what you were about to say was true or not.

A. I thought it was proper and appropriate to sound a warning that the Russians could be involved. That’s all.⁵⁴

⁵¹ Transcribed Interview of Marc Polymeropoulos at 35 (Apr. 17, 2023).

⁵² Transcribed Interview of Mr. John Brennan at 78 (May 11, 2023).

⁵³ Transcribed Interview of Mr. James Clapper at 42 (May 17, 2023).

⁵⁴ Id.

Each signatory interviewed sought to assure the Committees that they had no access to classified information about the New York Post story or the contents of Hunter Biden’s laptop.⁵⁵ Even still, the use of their official titles and security credentials could be read to suggest access to classified information unavailable to everyday Americans. In his interview before the Committees, Makridis testified that the Hunter Biden statement’s claims could appear more legitimate to the average American because the signatories used their former intelligence titles.⁵⁶ Makridis testified:

Q. And at the end of this statement, the 51 former intelligence officials all used their former titles in their signature blocks and . . . many of these titles include . . . former Director of National Intelligence, former [D]irector of the Central Intelligence Agency. If you were an average citizen reading this statement, do you think that the titles of their former office could have boosted the legitimacy of their claim that the Russians were trying to influence how Americans vote in this election? Do you think that that would appear more legitimate because of their former titles that they have attached to the statement?

A. I think it’s possible.⁵⁷

Makridis confirmed that in applying their former intelligence titles to the Hunter Biden statement, the signatories could have leveraged their power and access to persuade Americans to believe, wrongly, that the Hunter Biden laptop was somehow the product of Russian disinformation. That alone is concerning. Further investigation has revealed, however, that these former intelligence officials actually could have had access to this type of specialized material.

B. Several signatories of the Hunter Biden statement had active contracts with the CIA on the statement’s publication date.

Despite repeated assertions that the Hunter Biden statement’s signatories were former intelligence officials with no access to classified information related to the New York Post story about Hunter Biden’s laptop, internal CIA staff emails reveal that at least some of the signatories were on active contract with the CIA at the time of its drafting, review, and publication.⁵⁸ In particular, in an internal email from October 20, 2020, a CIA employee wrote to a colleague: “I ⁵⁵ See, e.g., Transcribed Interview of Mr. Nicholas Rasmussen at 11-12 (May 15, 2023) (“[T]he most important thing from my perspective was to focus on the caveating language, because I knew – at least based on what I knew, that there was not certainty about the provenance of the laptop issue. And so I focused in on the paragraph in particular that stated quite clearly that we did not know if the emails are genuine or not and that we did not have evidence of Russian Government involvement, just that this confluence events makes us deeply suspicious.”).

This frustrates me. I don't think it is helpful to the Agency in the long run. Sigh.

Following the Committees' review of this document, the Committees requested the identities of CIA contractors who signed the Hunter Biden statement. While the CIA has not declassified the complete list of individuals who were on contract with the Agency at that time due to purported operational security, it has disclosed that at least two signatories—Michael Morell and former CIA Inspector General David Buckley—were on active contract on the day of the Hunter Biden statement was published.⁶⁰ This disclosure means, in essence, that Morell and Buckley were likely earning taxpayer dollars from their work with the intelligence community—

Beyond the potential access to classified information or the use of their positions to influence the approval of the statement, it is concerning that those on contract at the CIA would even be involved in the crafting and promotion of what amounted to a campaign press release. Even Morell, the architect of the Hunter Biden statement and an individual on active contract with the CIA, acknowledged in his transcribed interview—before the Committees learned about his contract—that it is “inappropriate for a currently serving staff officer or contractor to be involved in the political process.”⁶²

Makridis agreed with Morell’s statement that is inappropriate for a CIA contractor to be engaged in the political process. In his transcribed interview with the Committees, he testified:

Q. Mr. Morell testified before Congress on April 4th, 2023, that it would be inappropriate for a currently serving staff officer or a contractor to be involved in the political process. Do you agree with Mr. Morell’s statement?

A. I think that’s generally understood.⁶³

It appears that CIA leadership never expressed any concern about the fact that individuals on active contract with the CIA signed the Hunter Biden statement. According to Makridis, if individuals were on active contract with the CIA, “[t]he PCRB review process would have looked at—at that. So they would have handled that issue if it were a problem.”⁶⁴ Yet there is no indication in any of the evidence or documents produced to the Committees showing that the PCRB stopped or slowed the review of the statement to “look[] at” the participation of signatories on contract. Instead, the documents show that the PCRB approved the release of the statement within six hours of it being submitted.

Although Hatch Act political restrictions do not apply to federal contractors in the same way they do to CIA employees,⁶⁵ Makridis stated that he would have examined the relevant ethical circumstances in more detail before signing off on the Hunter Biden statement. He explained that if he were CIA director at the time, he “would [have made] a call to the office of general counsel and [had] that person come in, and we would have [had] that discussion.”⁶⁶ Those who were in charge at the time, however, apparently did not have such discussions, and the PCRB greenlit the statement submitted by a former official with an active CIA contract.

The CIA also produced documents shedding light on the conflicts of interest this contractor status created. Internal CIA documents that were recently produced to the Committees indicate that former CIA Inspector General David Buckley, like Morell, was on active contract with the CIA.⁶⁷ Buckley, however, also held a green badge—which gives cardholders access to secure CIA facilities—at the time of the Hunter Biden statement’s publication.⁶⁸ According to the CIA, Buckley remained either on active contract or with green badge access to all CIA facilities until April 2022.⁶⁹ Historically, green badge access has been given to individuals regularly employed by or permanently assigned to the Agency, allowing them access to all of its facilities.⁷⁰ In Buckley’s case, this would mean he retained unfettered access to all CIA facilities through April 2022. Morell was also hired back as a contractor in May 2021, after the publication of the statement.⁷¹

It is extremely concerning that signatories of the Hunter Biden statement were on contract with the CIA at the time of the statement’s drafting, review, and publication. This revelation shows that Morell, Buckley, and likely other signatories were receiving U.S. taxpayer funds while engaged in a politicized project to mislead American voters on behalf of the Biden campaign. Such an overtly political action would be illegal under the Hatch Act for a permanent CIA employee. Congress ought to consider whether to extend this important prohibition to CIA contractors as well.

III. Officials inside the CIA recognized that the Hunter Biden statement was political.

Morell and Polymeropoulos drafted the Hunter Biden statement with the explicit goal of assisting then-candidate Biden in his race to become president. As Morell testified to the Committees: “There were two intents. One intent was to share our concern with the American people that the Russians were playing on this issue; and two, it was to help Vice President Biden.”⁷² Moreover, Morell and Polymeropoulos informed prospective signatories of the intent of the statement prior to its publication, writing that the statement was meant to insulate Vice President Biden from serious electoral vulnerabilities created by his family’s influence peddling activities. Given the fact that some of the signatories were on active contract with the CIA—an organization that is explicitly prohibited from operating domestically⁷³—their effort to score political points for then Vice President Biden undermined the integrity of the Agency.

Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response.

We would be honored if each of you would be willing to join us in signing the letter.

If you do agree to sign, please let me know how you would like your affiliation to read. For those CIA officers on the bcc line, I would like to find a way to highlight your Russia work, if appropriate. For example, Marc's citation will read:

Marc P...
Former Senior CIA Operations Officer
Former Acting Chief of Operations for Europe and Eurasia

If you want to agree to sign but make that "conditional" on seeing who else is willing to sign, I'm happy to send you the final list, probably tomorrow, before obtaining your final approval.

I will clear the statement with the Publication Review Board at CIA tomorrow.

Let us know. Thanks.

<Hunter Biden Statement.docx>

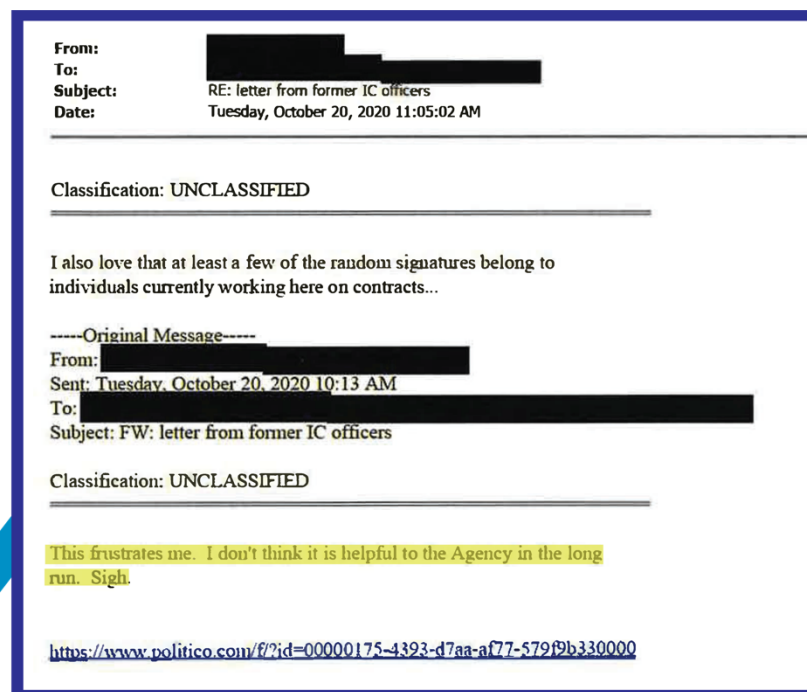

we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response.

On October 18, 2020, Morell—the key orchestrator behind the Hunter Biden statement, who was receiving taxpayer dollars through his CIA contract at the same time—and Polymeropoulos drafted an email that they sent to a group of former intelligence officials, asking them to sign the statement.⁷⁴ The message outlined the politicized motivations behind the statement. Morell and Polymeropoulos wrote:

Marc and I drafted the attached because we believe the Russians were involved in some way in the Hunter Biden email issue and because we think Trump will attack Biden on the issue at this week's debate and we want to give the VP a talking point to use in response.

We would be honored if each of you would be willing to join us in signing the letter.⁷⁵

Shortly after the Hunter Biden statement's publication, individuals inside the CIA noted their concerns with the statement. In one internal CIA email sent on October 20, 2020, staff lamented that the statement would hurt the CIA, "[t]his frustrates me. I don't think it is helpful to the Agency in the long run."⁷⁶

This frustrates me. I don't think it is helpful to the Agency in the long run. Sigh.

In his transcribed interview with the Committees, Makridis testified that he agreed that the Hunter Biden statement damaged the integrity of the CIA and garnered unhelpful attention for the CIA. During his testimony before the Committees, he stated that it is best for the CIA to not be splashed on the news and that the Agency had an important duty best done without publicity.⁷⁷ Makridis testified:

Q. . . . [C]ould you please read the contents of that bottom email to me?

A. “This frustrates me. I don’t think it is helpful to the Agency in the long run. Sigh.”

Q. And it includes a URL link to the Politico article, which does link to the October 19th statement on the Hunter Biden email story signed by 51 former intelligence officials. Why do you think this individual was frustrated by the publication of the statement?

* * *

A. I don’t recall this email. But why was the person frustrated? I don’t know. I guess it’s an interesting question to ask the person. Again, I don’t recall this email.

Q. Do you have any personal frustrations with the October 19th statement?

A. You know, I think the Agency’s work is best done when it . . . doesn’t sort of splash across the press in any way, but that’s a general statement, and I think most CIA officers would sort of say the same.⁷⁸

Makridis testified that he viewed the Hunter Biden statement as a political document that influenced the presidential race between President Trump and Vice President Biden.⁷⁹ Makridis testified:

Q. So I think you were asked at the last hour in minority questioning, did you—is it your opinion this statement of the 51 former intelligence officials was a political statement . . . because of the congressional investigation that followed? Was that your testimony? Or was it inherently political?

⁷⁹ Id. at 97.

- A. Well, I said I wouldn't be involved in politics, right? So that's what you're, sort of, getting at. . . . I mean, it's talking about President Trump, Vice President Biden. I mean . . . you can't read that and say there isn't politics involved of some nature.⁸⁰

Unlike other intelligence officers, Makridis said that he took issue with the nature of the Hunter Biden statement. Makridis stated that he would not have signed onto the publication if asked because he isolates his professional life from political matters. Makridis confirmed:

- Q. . . . [W]ould you have signed this statement?
- A. As I said earlier, I've stayed out of politics and things that could be politicized, so . . . for that reason, I would not have signed the statement.⁸¹

On October 20, 2020, Polymeropoulos sent to the PCRB for review a set of talking points that he had drafted related to the Hunter Biden statement. These talking points—which the PCRB ultimately approved for publication—raised concerns for Agency employees, according to documents produced to the Committees.⁸²

⁸¹ Id. at 44.

⁸² CIA produced versions of the relevant documents with differing redactions. The Committees were able to confirm the documents concerned the same matter based on a comparison of the documents. The below graphic includes two email chains in which the subject lines and time stamps for the first three emails in each chain are identical. The bodies of these initial three emails in each chain appear identical, but the unredacted version references a manuscript submitted by Polymeropoulos regarding the Hunter Biden laptop story. The highlighted and connected portions of the graphic demonstrate that these two email chains were identical until they verged into separate conversations. Based on a side-by-side comparison, the Committees were able to confirm that these chains both reference Polymeropoulos's talking points. During his transcribed interview, Mr. Makridis confirmed the Committees' comparison. See Makridis Interview at 85 (“Q: [B]ut we can at least establish that they are both in response to an email chain referencing Marc Polymeropoulos' manuscript talking points. A: It appears that way.”).

One CIA employee wrote an internal email noting that it was “interesting” that the PCRB approved the talking points for publication in the first place.⁸³

Included in his talking points submitted to the PCRB and aimed at discrediting the Hunter Biden laptop as a Russian plant, Polymeropoulos made broad and unsupported—and, as it turns out, wrong—political assertions about so-called Russian disinformation. He wrote:

From Fox News—the lead dissemination mechanism inside the US, to Senator Johnson of Wisconsin, there is no shortage of individuals in the GOP orbit who will lap up anything that the Russians throw their way.⁸⁵

It is concerning enough that Polymeropoulos's talking points sought to discredit the Hunter Biden laptop in an effort to boost then-candidate Biden in the 2020 presidential election. Polymeropoulos had decades of experience in the CIA and should have known the proper protocols surrounding the use of classified information. In his testimony before the Committees, Makridis outlined the broad mandate every CIA staff member operates under, stating:

- Q. Okay. Now, someone trying to assist a presidential campaign using classified information—potentially using classified information from the CIA, fair to say even bigger no-no, if I may?
- A. Use of classified information, regardless of the purpose, is a no-no.
- Q. Right.
- A. Whether that's for personal gain, political gain, or just a mistake. That's a no-no.⁸⁶

Makridis stated what every individual entrusted with a government clearance understands, that the unauthorized exposure of classified information is unacceptable under any circumstances. Despite this, Polymeropoulos—either knowingly or negligently—leveraged classified information to help the Biden campaign. Ultimately, the PCRB prevented Polymeropoulos from disseminating classified information in his talking points, but CIA staff still expressed concerns that his talking points were approved at all.⁸⁷ However, the CIA lacked any safeguards to prevent this classified information from being shared publicly before the PCRB stepped in.

Conclusion

The October 19, 2020, statement on Hunter Biden’s laptop signed by 51 former senior intelligence community officials served to interfere in the American electoral system in the final weeks before the 2020 presidential election. The highest officials within the CIA were aware of the statement prior to its publication. Signatories of the statement—including lead architect, former Acting CIA Director Michael Morell, and former CIA Inspector General David Buckley—were on active contract with the CIA at the time the statement was drafted, reviewed, and ultimately published. This revelation raises the concern that these officials abused the access of their positions to curate, promote, and receive expedited approval of the statement. Indeed, the PCRB continuously requested quick decisions from officials within the CIA and partners at ODNI about the status of publication of the statement. This occurred after Morell specifically requested an expedited review process and during a time when he had contracting status and was under consideration to be named President Biden’s CIA Director.

The signatories’ choice to leverage the authority of their former intelligence community titles to peddle a narrative about foreign election interference inappropriately embroiled the Agency in the domestic political process. The poor judgment displayed by the signatories and the CIA’s executive suite—those who could have prevented the Agency from being entangled in a false and domestically politicized narrative of Russian interference—is as relevant today as it was four years ago. To date, there are no clear or transparent rules to prevent intelligence contractors from leveraging their access to the CIA for political purposes.

Seasoned CIA officials like Morell and Polymeropoulos were able to subvert the process to spread disinformation in the weeks leading up to the 2020 presidential election because the CIA lacked meaningful safeguards to prevent this from happening. Unless and until the CIA makes substantial reforms to its own oversight processes surrounding public statements and contractor behavior, these problems could persist.

Without rigorous oversight of the intelligence community—and without proper safeguards to prevent the weaponization of privileged access within the intelligence community—rogue actors like Morell and Polymeropoulos are likely to continue engaging in political work under the guise of responsible action. As a result, the Committees will continue oversight to prevent individuals from using the authority of the federal government for their own partisan desires.

Addendum

On July 11, 2024, over two weeks after the release of the Committees' second interim report, the CIA notified the Committees that it identified an error in the CIA's productions regarding Mr. Morell's and Mr. Buckley's contracting status.¹ Specifically, the CIA now states that, contrary to its earlier representations to the Committees, Mr. Morell was not on contract with the CIA on October 19, 2020.² Although the CIA claims that Mr. Morell was not on contract as of October 19, 2020, the CIA reports that he was on contract both before and after that date, but it has provided few additional details to the Committees. The CIA believes "[t]his mistake was based on a misreading of the contract documentation" and it "regret[s] and apologize[s] for these errors."³ It further claims that all other information provided to the Committees "accurately reflect[s] available information contained in CIA records."⁴

Although the Committees appreciate the CIA's effort to correct the record, it has raised more questions and concerns about the accuracy of information the CIA provides to Congress. The CIA confirmed multiple times for the Committees that Mr. Morrell was on contract as of October 19, 2020, prior to the release of the second interim report.⁵ The CIA notified the Committees of its mistake after issuance of the report and following complaints from Mr. Morell.⁶ The Committees will continue to conduct oversight into this matter, including how the CIA came to provide misleading information to the Committees.
