

Coca-Cola Accused of Funding Colombian Death Squad

Coca-Cola has been accused of being part of the "para-economy." | Photo: EFE

Follow us

OPINION

High Stakes for Grenada: Election on Revolution's Annivers...

by Earl Bousquet

I Remember Mama: One Man's, and Boy's, Odyssey Through Ab...

by Edward Rhymes

New Slave Masters: Short Reflection on Independent Jamaic...

by Tina Renier

The Battle of Khaled Al Hamedi Against the Impunity of NA...

by Marinella Correggia

Coca-Cola was accused of hiring hitmen from a prominent paramilitary group between 1990 and 2002 to kill at least 10 trade union leaders.

U.S.-based Coca-Cola company along with more than 50 other companies were accused by Colombian courts of financing terrorism for their ties to the now-disbanded paramilitary organization, United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia, a fact trade union leaders have been denouncing for decades.

RELATED:
Brazilian Coca-Cola
Manufacturer
Accused of Slave Labor

The cases against the companies will be heard in a transitional justice tribunal after the peace deal with the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia and the government is signed.

Coca-Cola was accused of hiring hitmen from the AUC between 1990 and 2002 to kill at least 10 labor union leaders who were trying to organize Coca-Cola's plants. U.K. oil company BP has also be taken to court for its funding of AUC, along with kidnapping and human rights abuses.

WATCH: Colombia: Inquiry Underway into Businesses That Funded Paramilitaries

Other companies suspected of financing terrorism, commonly referred to as the “para-economy,” include Colombia’s largest beverage company Postobon, cement company Cementos Argos, state oil company Ecopetrol and banana distributor Chiquita Brands International.

IN DEPTH:* The Colombian Peace Process Explained

In June, families of victims killed by paramilitary groups opened a federal lawsuit against Chiquita in the U.S. for supporting the AUC. The company was estimated to have made at least 100 payments to the group worth US$1.7 million between 1997 and 2004.

The right-wing AUC coalition, deemed a terrorist organization by the Colombian government, disbanded in 2006. The paramilitary group was responsible for a number of massacres, human rights abuses, kidnappings and extortions that resulted in the displacement of thousands of Colombians.

Some politicians and authorities have been sentenced in relation to links with the AUC, the majority of businesses involved have not been punished for their illegal financial activities.

Investigations and punishment of businesses involved with paramilitary groups have commonly stuttered over whether payments were voluntary or not and if companies received any benefits in return.

Tags

Colombia

Crime

Corruption

Latin America

Coca Cola

Colombia Reports-Guardian-Insight Crime

by teleSUR / mm-RT-egb