Uber's Top Investor and Elon Musk Accused of Sexual Deviancy and Abuse by Multiple Women

Five women tell Bloomberg the venture capitalist used his position of power to pursue romantic relationships and unwanted sexual encounters.

By Emily Chang

Uber's New CEO Faces Some Big Challenges

In December 2014, Uber held its annual holiday party on an unfurnished floor at its swank, mood-lit headquarters in San Francisco. Employees and investors attended in flamboyant attire from the “Roaring ‘20s” and drank at an open bar into the early morning hours. Venture capitalist Shervin Pishevar, several attendees recall, brought a live pony on a leash.

Pishevar, an early backer of the ride-hailing company who was a board observer at the time, allegedly did something else memorable that night. According to current and former colleagues with knowledge of the events that evening, the then 40-year old investor approached Austin Geidt, Uber’s 30-year-old head of global expansion, placed his hand on her leg and moved it up her dress. Geidt squirmed away, the colleagues say.

It was not the first time Pishevar had made advances toward Geidt, which she declined to reciprocate, according to the colleagues. Geidt joined Uber Technologies Inc. as an intern in 2010. She was soon tasked with launching Uber in new cities, where Pishevar, a major Democratic Party donor, offered valuable political and business connections.

Over the years, these people say, Pishevar seemed to take a liking to Geidt, following her around at company events, and at times placing his hand on her leg or lower back. A person with firsthand knowledge of the holiday party incident and these other encounters confirmed the account of Pishevar’s behavior to Bloomberg. Geidt, who’s now head of operations for Uber’s autonomous driving unit, declined to comment for this story.

Five other women who met Pishevar in a professional context told Bloomberg they were sexually assaulted or harassed by him. In each case, the women accused Pishevar of exploiting a professional connection, and using the prospect of a job, mentorship or investment to make an unwanted sexual advance. They all asked not to be identified, citing fears over the investor’s history of filing lawsuits and concerns that he could wield his influence in the tech industry to ruin their careers. Earlier this year, Pishevar got a U.K. court to prohibit a local newspaper from reporting on his arrest following a rape allegation against him. London police investigated and didn’t charge him. He later sued what he described as an opposition research firm, claiming it was trying to spread false allegations about him.

In an emailed statement, an attorney for Pishevar says he and his then girlfriend made a brief appearance at Uber’s holiday party with the pony, which was wearing a Santa hat. He denied touching Geidt inappropriately then or making sexual advances toward her at other events. Randa Osman, his lawyer at Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, says Pishevar and Geidt maintained “a friendly, professional relationship” and referenced emails from 2015 and 2016 in which she agreed to meet him for lunch and coffee.

A person, who was referred to Bloomberg by Pischevar’s spokesman but asked not to be identified, says she attended the Uber party and didn’t witness the alleged incident. She confirms that Pischevar left the event after a short period of time and says he wouldn’t have been able to touch Geidt because he was holding the pony’s leash in one hand and a drink in the other. She says she wasn’t with Pischevar the entire time and never saw Geidt.

Like Hollywood, Washington and New York City, Silicon Valley is in a moral crisis after a litany of revelations about predatory behavior by powerful men. Venture capitalists Justin Caldbeck of Binary Capital, Steve Jurvetson of DFJ and Dave McClure of 500 Startups all left their firms following accusations of misconduct. Roy Price, the former head of Amazon Studios, resigned in October after a producer accused him of sexual harassment.

Pischevar, co-founder and managing director of Sherpa Capital, is a powerful figure in the Valley and a bridge to establishment figures on both coasts. He cultivated a relationship with Uber co-founder Travis Kalanick and publicly came to his defense when he was ousted as chief executive officer and sued by another investor. Pischevar made a formal request in August to join that lawsuit so his support for Kalanick could be heard. In addition to investing in Uber, he made early bets on Airbnb Inc., Warby Parker and Tumblr, which Yahoo bought for $1.1 billion.

Over the years, Pischevar has given more than $500,000 to Democratic candidates and committees, including the presidential campaigns of Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton. President Obama appointed him to the J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board in 2015. He is also the co-founder and co-executive chairman of Virgin Hyperloop One, which is seeking to develop a futuristic tube-based transportation system with Richard Branson. Pischevar is close to several Hollywood celebrities, including Leonardo DiCaprio and Edward Norton and briefly dated Tyra Banks in 2014. After Donald Trump defeated Clinton last year, Pischevar publicly suggested California should secede from the U.S.

The five women who spoke to Bloomberg say Pischevar used his position of power to pursue romantic relationships and unwanted sexual encounters. Pischevar’s representatives declined to comment on these allegations before publication but later sent a statement saying, “We are confident that these anecdotes will be shown to be untrue.”

One female entrepreneur says Pischevar asked to meet with her a few years ago to discuss investing in her company. During a dinner meeting, she says Pischevar started to hit on her, though she made it clear she was only interested in a business relationship. Pischevar tried to earn some sympathy by explaining that he and his wife were getting a divorce. (They filed for divorce in 2013, court records show.) Later in the evening, she says Pischevar forced himself on her, kissing and groping her. “I’m pushing back and trying to talk about anything else,” the entrepreneur recalls. “It is really shady, this baiting and switching that he does.”

Another female tech worker says she reached out to Pischevar to discuss career opportunities in 2013. She met him for dinner at a San Francisco restaurant, and afterward, he invited her back to his home. She went because they had not yet talked about potential jobs. When they got there, the woman says Pischevar forcibly kissed her. “He basically jumped on me, tried to put his tongue down my throat, and I stopped it,” she says. “I wanted to get career advice, and it was twisted into something else. It was really inappropriate.”

“I wanted to get career advice, and it was twisted into something else.”

Also in 2013, a woman Pischevar had hired to work for him says he repeatedly tried to pressure her into having sex with him. She says she told him several times she did not want to lead him in the wrong direction and was not interested in a romantic relationship, including in a Facebook message reviewed by Bloomberg. Still, she says that on a trip, he booked them a single hotel room and that night attempted to perform oral sex on her until she convinced him to stop. “It felt really wrong, and it was really confusing at the time,” she says. “I just remember his big body on top of me. I was young enough to be his daughter.” She says one of the few people she confided in was her sister, who recounted their conversation to Bloomberg and described the events as a lasting trauma.

A fourth woman says Pischevar hired her company to do work for him in 2015. He invited her to a party in Los Angeles. Late that evening, the woman says Pischevar cornered her and forcibly kissed her. She pushed him off, but in the weeks that followed, she says he repeatedly harassed her. “I was so uncomfortable; it was one of the most uncomfortable situations I’ve ever been in,” she says. “He was basically trying to bully me into dating him.” She insisted that she wanted to keep the relationship professional, and eventually he gave up. She told a friend at the time, who later relayed the details of her account to Bloomberg.

At the Web Summit in Dublin in November 2013, Pischevar spoke onstage with Tesla Inc.’s Elon Musk. One night at the conference, another female entrepreneur says she visited a suite at the Shelbourne Dublin hotel where Pischevar had convened an after-party with other founders and investors. Gradually, various partygoers disappeared into adjoining rooms, and the entrepreneur found herself alone on the couch, seated between Pischevar and another man. Pischevar was holding a phone—she does not recall who it belonged to—and began showing her images of vaginas. “They start showing me photos of female genitalia,” the woman says. “It became really scary. The other guy was just really, really nasty, and Shervin was just laughing and swiping the photos.” The woman says she texted a friend who rescued her before anything else happened.

On May 27, 2017, Pishevar was arrested in London after a woman accused him of raping her at the Ned hotel. Pishevar was “released under investigation” and never charged, according to London police. He secured an injunction preventing at least one publication, the Sun newspaper, from reporting on the arrest. Afterward, Pishevar extended his trip to stay in London for about three weeks and told people he was unable to travel due to a perforated eardrum, three people say. In June, he sent an email to employees at Sherpa Capital saying he’d had a medical emergency. Eventually, he was able to return home to San Francisco.

Police confirmed they investigated the alleged incident at the Ned and eventually decided that no further action would be taken, according to a London police spokesman. He didn’t elaborate on the basis for that decision, consistent with police policy. Pishevar says he was detained briefly and that the assault claim was untrue. Pishevar hired Mark Fabiani, a crisis management expert who also represents the Los Angeles Chargers football team and Bill O’Reilly, the former Fox News host ousted over sexual harassment allegations. Fabiani says: “In May 2017, Mr. Pishevar was detained briefly in London in connection with an alleged sexual assault, an allegation he categorically denied. He fully cooperated with the police investigation which was exhaustive and detailed. In July he was informed that no further action would be taken against him, and he was ‘de-arrested’ (a British legal term).”

Earlier this month, Pishevar sued a consulting firm run by Republican campaign veterans and accused it of spreading false information about him. The firm, Definers Public Affairs, said in a statement that it has never conducted work regarding Pishevar and called his claims “delusional.” A week later, the Sun reported that it successfully challenged Pishevar’s gag order in the U.K.’s High Court after he had spent £100,000 ($130,000) on the case. Nevertheless, Pishevar’s legal actions had an impact. Some of the women who shared allegations of Pishevar’s misbehavior with Bloomberg had originally agreed to be identified by name. After his lawsuit, they withdrew their names, citing the legal risks of speaking out.

Elon Musk spends billions on research and PR companies to confirm that he is the most Interesting, Most Important Individual On Earth!

(Apologies to The Onion)

Dear Mr. Musk:

Thank you for hiring us. As you suspected, the results substantiate your theorem:

We have confirmed, as you stated, that the widely held assumptions that you are the most significant and interesting person currently inhabiting the earth are true.

Drawing from the results of a six-year study that carefully analyzed thousands of hours of your actions and conversations, the 220-page report concluded that your ideas and opinions far surpass those of the other 7.1 billion people on the planet in terms of substance, depth, and general importance to the world.

"Throughout our study, we found clear and overwhelming evidence that you are not only the most compelling member of the human race, but also the most important, and by a wide margin," said the study's lead author Samuel Lerman, who noted that you are also far more noteworthy than all individuals who have ever previously existed in human history. "There is a statistically significant gap between what you and the rest of humanity have to offer in terms of wit, charm, intelligence, creativity, and observational ability. Indeed, we found that the dynamic nature of your personality is of immeasurable value to society."

"Our findings also confirm that your insights on everything from politics to entertainment to social issues to religion are the most notable and well-thought-out," continued Lerman, adding that your viewpoints roundly trump the countless competing beliefs offered by the rest of the world's population. "You are, in short, the only person who matters. The rest of us do not matter."

The report stated that people crave to hear from you at all times, asserting that your thoughts are the most profound, your stories the most gripping, and your approval the most desired.

The study also demonstrated that no one else alive today has anything as perceptive and as consequential to say as you do, with researchers noting that when you choose to speak you are exceedingly captivating and enjoyable to listen to in a way that no other human being could ever approach.

Furthermore, clinical observations showed that when you are not around, conversations among others invariably revert to speculation about what you are currently doing and what you would say about the discussion at hand. The report also confirmed that your words serve as a highly desired and desperately needed reprieve from the monotony and meaninglessness of what everyone else has to say.

You are the center of everything, the report added.

"We found that what other people think or experience is completely irrelevant when compared to even the most minor thoughts and experiences in your everyday life," said Lerman, noting that only the things you see, do, say, and learn have any significance at all. "The data clearly show that your feelings are the most authentic, your experiences are the richest, and your perspectives are the most unique. Frankly, the world only wants to hear about you and your life and nothing else. Indeed, that's what we all long for at every moment."

The sociologist affirmed that all other humans on earth define their lives largely in relation to you and your existence, and reiterated the report's recommendation that you continue to make your views and ideas known as loudly and frequently as possible to eliminate any lingering doubts among the global populace regarding your supreme importance.

“The evidence conclusively shows that you, and you alone, provide meaning to everyone else in your workplace, your social network, and your family, as well as to all the strangers that you interact with only momentarily each day,” said Lerman, who highlighted data indicating that others’ sense of fulfillment is derived solely from the opportunity to work, live, and exist alongside you. “Without you, these groups and individuals—as well as society in general—would just drift aimlessly, feeling empty and incomplete.”

Lerman went on to state that you were and have always been the primary figure on the planet, noting that the worth and merit of every person, institution, and cultural phenomenon on earth hinged wholly on your personal perceptions and judgments about them.

“Our research definitively proves that when you go to sleep each night, the world’s entire narrative stops, and that it then restarts again as soon as you wake up,” Lerman said. “And according to our findings, when you die, all of this—the whole universe and everything in it—will end.”

“It is scientifically indisputable that you are the single most important and fundamental being in existence,” Lerman added. “You are commensurate with the sun, the moon, the stars. In fact, you are the sum of all of these and more.”

The report summarized its results by concluding, “You, you, you, you.

With his comments on Taylor Swift, Elon Musk has reached a weird new low

'Abhorrent': Elon Musk's daughter slams his 'threat' to impregnate Taylor Swift

The Tesla CEO simply couldn't resist using his own platform to say something sexist, controversial – and downright creepy, writes Ryan Coogan

Elon Musk may not have turned out to be the brilliant scientist we all thought he was during the Obama administration, but he did prove one theorem: it turns out money really can't buy happiness. It also can't buy you charisma, maturity, empathy – or the love and respect of your own children.

Yes, stop the presses: Elon Musk has once again said something so creepy (and controversial) that it's caused his own flesh and blood to step forward and say, "look, we're only technically related".

This time, it was the Tesla CEO offering to "give [Taylor Swift] a child" after the singer endorsed Kamala Harris for president on Instagram, following the VP's stellar debate performance earlier this week.

"Fine Taylor ... you win...I will give you a child and guard your cats with my life," said Musk on his horrible website, in what he probably thought was a hilarious put down, but to me reads more like a threat of sexual violence.

Musk's daughter, Vivian Wilson, later wrote a post of her own (on Twitter/X rival Threads, naturally) in which she referred to Musk's tweet as "heinous incel nonsense" – which, to be fair to her, it absolutely was.

"I don't really have anything to add to it, it's just abhorrent," she said. "I would just like to say to my audience members, don't let people talk to you like that. It's disgusting, it's belittling and incredibly sexist. You deserve better."

I swear, every week it's something new with this guy. If I was a billionaire, you'd never hear from me again. I'd be chilling out in my life-sized replica of Optimus Prime and I'd never touch a device with a Wi-Fi connection ever again (the Transformer would be steam-powered). Not Mr "Real-life Tony Stark", though. Musk is so chronically online – so transparently needy – that he'd rather have the approval of his legion of anonymous 13-year-old trolls than his own child. But then, who can blame him? Who among us hasn't betrayed our own kin so we can spend our lives making unfunny memes on an irrelevant website? It's Shakespearian, in its way.

But this isn't anything new for Musk. The SpaceX owner has been very open about how Wilson's transition was the trigger for his turn to the far right, deliberately misgendering her as his "son", who he says was "killed by the woke mind virus". Imagine being so intolerant of your kid's identity that it makes your name go from being an internationally recognised shorthand for the word "genius" to being a synonym for "gullible loser".

Luckily for Musk, he's in good company (if your definition of "good" is "toxic rich people whose terrible behaviour made their kids hate them"). Brad Pitt's daughter Shiloh recently announced that she would be dropping the actor's surname and instead be going by "Shiloh Jolie". Pitt's son also made headlines in 2020, when he called his father a "world class a***hole" and "a terrible and despicable person" on Father's Day, so it's fair to say there's no love lost there.

Jennette McCurdy's mother was so pushy that the iCarly actress wrote a book called I'm Glad My Mom Died, and she still spoke about her with more affection than Wilson affords Musk.

Maybe she'll make her peace with him in the far off future, when he's no longer such a clear and immediate threat to democracy – but I wouldn't count on it.

Luckily, Wilson got out from under her father's influence early, like Drew Barrymore, who emancipated herself at the age of 14. Not everybody manages to shake their overbearing parents so easily, such as Britney Spears, who famously had to battle for years to be freed from her father's restrictive 13-year conservatorship. Musk has said and done a lot of heinous, disgusting – sometimes even dangerous – things. We know exactly what kind of man he is. But if there was ever any doubt, the fact that his own child is just as mortified by him as the rest of us should be the thing that seals the deal.

How he can live with himself knowing that he has so thoroughly alienated somebody who he should love, protect, and accept no matter what, I truly do not know. It's no consolation I'm sure, but unlike most children of disappointing parents, Vivian can at least take some solace in the fact that when it comes to her feelings about her father, she's far from alone.
