Musk also called Altman a 'swindler' and a 'liar' and shared a post of him cheering Trump's election loss in 2020.

Trump was later asked about Musk's dissent, but swatted away any concerns by pointing out that Musk 'he hates one of the people in the deal.'

He insisted 'they are putting up the money.'

'The government's not putting up anything. They're putting up money. They're very rich people, so I hope they do. And, I mean, Elon doesn't like one of those people.'

Altman himself also shot back at Musk, writing on X: 'i realize what is great for the country isn't always what's optimal for your companies, but in your new role i hope you'll mostly put US first.'

A Republican insider said Trump's staff is privately 'furious' over Musk's statements, given his enormous following and reach.

Steve Bannon, a former top Trump aide who has had public falling outs with Musk in the past, told Politico Musk needed to be 'sat down' and told to 'sort it out immediately.'

It has also exacerbated fears that Trump and Musk could be headed toward a monumental fallout which could spell drama for the new administration.
