Fisker Automotive's troubles have gone from bad to worse. The California start-up that created the $107,000 Fisker Karma plug-in hybrid had to suspend work on its second model, the $50,000 Nina, due to a lack of funds. Now, its flagship car has suffered the worst possible black eye: it broke down in the middle of a Consumer Reports test.

Consumer Reports waited 16 months to buy the Karma and paid full price for it at a dealership (as it does for all vehicles it tests). The publication had
