

manipulations on the tax-write-off losses from the Solyndra crash

- Feinstein, and her staff, sabotaged other applicants who were competing for the same funds as Tesla and Solyndra
- Even after Solyndra went bankrupt, the Feinstein family continued to profit off of the Solyndra scandal by re-leasing the buildings and collecting real estate profits
- Feinstein's family ran the property sales and leasing contracts for the Tesla and Solyndra buildings
- Gary D. Conley, a Bay Area solar and Hydrogen company CEO, whistle-blew on the corruption at Tesla and Solyndra and was later found with a bullet in his head behind a Northern California Air Force base. His family, and friends, charge that his death was "suspicious"
- Feinstein's family and associates held stock in Tesla, Solyndra and other "Clean Tech" companies, which they acquired at key pre-announcement points, most likely based on insider information and the payola from bribes provided as stock warrants
- Feinstein, and her staff told Fremont, California city officers to not engage in discussions with competing applicants
- Although other, competing, applicants had been in written discussions, and negotiations, with senior executives at Toyota for the use of the NUMMI plant, Feinstein warned Toyota that only Tesla would be supported for the use of the plant. This was before anyone from Tesla had contacted anyone from Toyota, the owners of the plant, and after Elon Musk had been published in the press saying that Tesla could have no use for the building.

Conclusion:

The facts, evidence, testimony and surveillance clearly prove that Dianne Feinstein used her public office to stage a corruption program to provide public cash and resources to herself and her family for covert profits at taxpayer expense. She used her office to assist in the attacks and sabotage of U.S. companies who were competing for the same funds that she was manipulating.
