

GOOGLE OFFICIALLY BECOMES

'EVIL' IN CODE OF CONDUCT

Google employees resigned this month over the company's autonomous weapons project

POPULAR VIDEOS

Watch Johnny Depp look for Biggie's killer in
'City of Lies' trailer

Emery set to become next Arsenal manager
after Arteta talks stall

Arsenal confirm Cazorla will leave the club this summer

ANTHONY CUTHBERTSON
@ADCuthbertson

 CLICK TO FOLLOW
THE INDEPENDENT TECH

The most famous phrase in Google’s corporate philosophy, “Don’t be evil,” has been almost entirely removed from the technology giant’s code of conduct.

Google, which is now a subsidiary of Alphabet after a corporate restructuring in 2015, previously included the phrase “Don’t be evil” at the very start of its code, and another two times within the first two paragraphs.

The simple language was replaced by vague and less specific wording such as “ethical business conduct”.

“The Google Code of Conduct is one of the ways we put Google’s values into practice,” the updated guidelines begins.

“It’s built around the recognition that everything we do in connection with our work at Google will be, and should be, measured against the highest possible standards of ethical business conduct.”

Gadgets and tech news in pictures