2015 Which Famous Assholes Are Going To Burning Man ...

Inside New York's 700-Member "Millennials-Only" East Coast Burning Man Type Sex Club

by Tyler Durden

Daniel Saynt, a Puerto Rican bisexual ex-Jehovah's Witness who changed his name and opened up 700-member NYC "Millennials only" sex club "NSFW" (New Society for Wellness), has a few rules for those seeking to get their group-sex on.

- You have to be hot
- You have to be young
- You have to be interesting and active on social media
- Saynt has to be able to imagine himself having sex with you or next to you

NSFW has 700 members who all meet the following criteria: attractive, successful and social-media savvy

"If a guy applies and says, 'I just want to have sex with as many girls as possible,' that's not someone we want here," said Saynt. "I use my bi[sexual] sense ... Like, do I want to hook up with them? Would I want this person having sex next to me? If not, then we won't accept them."

All is not lost however for fat, sexually frustrated New York City millennials - as they'll have ample time to work on their sex-club bodies and social skills while NSFW chews through its waiting list of over 300 horny people, while more than 9,000 applicants didn't make the cut.

The average age of a NSFW member is 28, who pay a one-time membership fee of $96, and an extra charge of $30 - $150 per sex party. Around 60% of members are in open relationships, and the majority are bisexual. As we've mentioned, Saynt's standards are incredibly high.

"Being a hot woman, I don't want to fuck everyone and I don't want everyone to think they can fuck me," said member Lola Jean, 28, who works as a sex educator and is known in the sex-club community as a wrestling dominatrix. "At other parties, it's hard to be the hottest person in the room and have all this attention coming at you — but here, everyone is hot so they all get it."

The club also holds thematic events:

*THE bacchanals — the biggest of which take place at city venues such as House of Yes — celebrate themes ranging from BDSM and foot-fetish workshops to caviar dinner parties, but all end with little to no clothing on and plenty of hooking up.

"Members dress in layers to allow for various stages of nudity as the night develops," said member Melissa Vitale, 25, a publicist. Sometimes there is a strict all-black dress code that includes masks. -NY Post

Saynt, born Daniel Santiago, grew up poor in New York. Raised by Puerto Rican parents who were strict Jehovah's Witnesses, he attended church every Sunday, woke up at 6 a.m. every day, and spent 10 hours a week at Bible study.

"As per the tenets of his religion, he did not celebrate birthdays or holidays, including Christmas." -NY Post

"It's not just a religion, it's a lifestyle," said Saynt. "Your friends, family and everyone you interact with are all Jehovah's Witnesses."

Then Saynt had his first sexual experience at 13 with another boy from the neighborhood.

"It was very confusing and scary being in a faith that is so traditional in their approach to LGBT people," Saynt said of the Jehovah's Witnesses - who consider homosexuality a punishable sin. "It really stunts you."

In 2001 - against his parents' wishes to become a missionary, Saynt enrolled at Berkeley College in Midtown, graduating in 2005 with a degree in e-commerce and legally changing his surname to from Santiago. Saynt says that he began to sexually experiment in college, hooking up with men and women on Craigslist and attending sex parties.

After a failed six-year attempt at a straight marriage, Saynt left the digital lifestyle-marketing company he co-founded and opened up an Eyes-Wide-Shut tier sex club in NYC.

"I got tired of selling shoes and handbags and beauty things that people don't need," said Saynt of his fashion-marketing days. "I wanted to sell things that make people happy, like sex."

SAYNT began accepting applications for NSFW in 2015. Potential members must answer a detailed questionnaire about their fantasies and preferences, submit photos of themselves and provide links to their social-media accounts. -NY Post

"We look for people with a story to share," said Saynt. "If you can't share a conversation with someone, you can't share a bed."

In order to decide who makes the cut, Saynt has a trusted "council" of five judges "want people who post photos of themselves with friends and at local hot spots, doing fun activities and traveling the world. Hateful political views, too few photos or awkward close-ups are an automatic "No."

Members who enter NSFW's Williamsburg clubhouse will find six beds in the basement with mesh dividers, adorned with Christmas lights, lanterns, and a large "XXX" marquee sign which greets guests over the door.

Photos of tattooed models holding pizza and hot dogs over their genitals line the walls. Black leather toys are on display for members to test.

Wonder if they've got this one?

Saynt isn't just selling experiences either - he's selling sex dolls out of his sex club!

Saynt's marketing company, also called NSFW, works with brands such as Real Love Sex Dolls to market directly to club members by letting them test out and buy discounted products. The partnerships, in turn, help fund the parties.

So - in addition to all the hot sex with incredibly attractive people, members receive the fringe benefit of a discount on a wide variety of sex toys.

BURNING MAN IS A SILICON VALLEY FRAT HOUSE PORNO ABUSE NIGHTMARE

'Women showing their breasts to get booze, long lines for the kinky dome and meals with a side of MDMA': First-time festival-goer reveals what Burning Man is REALLY like and claim the Orgy Dome is so 'boring you'd rather have a NAP'

- Writer Zoe Bernard went to the eight-day arts and culture festival last month to discover just how wild the festival was
- Burning Man revelers told her about the festival's lame Orgy Dome, long lectures on consent and criticized its contradicting debauchery
- The debauchery involved 'naked women wielding leather paddles' to 'implore bystanders to pull their pants down for a spanking'
- Furthermore, 'several ramshackle bars require women to bare their breasts if they wish to drink' - and a man said he had to show his penis to get a snow cone
- Some 70,000 revelers gathered for the eight-day party north of Reno, Nevada

A first-time Burning Man reveler has recounted that while the festival has its wild side, revelers complained that its orgies were 'lame'.

Business Insider writer Zoe Bernard went to the eight-day arts and culture festival last month to write about how wild the event, that attracts 70,000 revelers, really is.

Bernard penned a piece for Business Insider about her time in the temporary city known as the playa, north of Reno, Nevada, with two friends. Before she arrived, she was under the impression the party would be 'like Woodstock with less shade' mixed with 'some weird sex stuff'.

But once there, one of her campmates complained that the 'Orgy Dome is so boring' and men and women were required to listen through a 'long lecture about consent'.

Zoe Bernard, a first-time reveler at Burning Man, recounted her wild experiences at the festival this year in a piece she wrote for Business Insider

While speaking of the kinky dome further, one of Bernard's campmates complained that they had 'to wait in line forever' and 'once you get in, it's the most organized sex you'll ever have in your life'.

Another reveler agreed - and chimed to add that the dome is a great place for a nap.

But outside the Orgy Dome, debauchery unfolded.

This included 'naked women wielding leather paddles implore bystanders to pull their pants down for a spanking' and 'couples bedecked in feathers and dust masks' as they prepared for their wild adventures.

'Nudity is ubiquitous, and informally enforced in bizarre and ridiculous ways.

'Several ramshackle bars require women to bare their breasts if they wish to drink there.'

One man in the camp said he had to show his penis to get a snow cone.

Even more questionable, there was a 'small sampling of activities available [such as] fellatio contests, something advertised as "p---y massages"' and 'genital prints made in the "traditional Japanese method."'

There was such a thing as Slut Olympics and a Bubbles and Boobs VIP Party that was advertised, 'Bring your boobs!'

One workshop at the festival allowed revelers to learn to 'write erotic poetry in binary code (010101).'

Many meals consisted of chili with a side of MDMA, warm Modelo, sardines and pickles.

One campmate even said: 'I think I'm immune to drugs... I've taken so much LSD that it no longer has any effect on me.'

WE TOLD YOU SO: GOOGLE EXISTS BECAUSE OF FAKE TRAFFIC

For over a decade, an alliance of investigators from www.googleinvestigations.com has filed charges about Google's criminally fraudulent operations. Now, their charges have been validated by industry experts. Hillary Clinton based her Presidential campaign on Google's promise to deliver the White House via internet election rigging of voter impressions but she lost because Google could only deliver fake voters.

Google Issuing Refunds to Advertisers Over Fake Traffic, Plans New Safeguard

Some advertisers question level of refunds, want more details about fraudulent traffic

Alphabet Inc.'s GOOGL -0.37%. Google is issuing refunds to advertisers for ads bought through its platform that ran on sites with fake traffic, people familiar with the situation said, as the company develops a tool to give buyers more transparency about their purchases.

In the past few weeks, Google has informed hundreds of marketers and ad agency partners about the issue with invalid traffic, known in the industry as "ad fraud." The ads were bought using the company's DoubleClick Bid Manager.

Google's refunds amount to only a fraction of the total ad spending served to invalid traffic, which has left some advertising executives unsatisfied, the people familiar with the situation said. Google has offered to repay its "platform fee," which ad buyers said typically ranges from about 7% to 10% of the total ad buy.

The company says this is appropriate, because it doesn't control the rest of the money. Typically, advertisers use DoubleClick Bid Manager to target audiences across vast numbers of websites in seconds by connecting to dozens of online ad exchanges, marketplaces that connect buyers and publishers through real-time auctions.

The ad spending flows through to the exchanges. The problems arise when ads run on publisher sites with fraudulent traffic, such as those where clicks are generated by software programs known as “bots” instead of humans. This is an issue of growing concern to marketers. It is difficult to recoup the money paid to those sites when the issue is discovered too late.

Advertisers often receive small credits from Google and their other ad-tech vendors when they detect discrepancies, but in this case, for some buyers, the instance of fraud discovered was larger than usual.

Scott Spencer, director of product management for Google, acknowledged that refunds have been paid, but he declined to provide a dollar figure for the amount being returned. Some ad buyers said the refund amounts range from “less money than you would spend on a sandwich” to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Some agencies and advertisers would have been impacted more than others, depending on their level of spending during the period and the types of ads they bought.

“Today, we can’t disclose the information about third parties,” Mr. Spencer said. “So when we aren’t able to catch invalid traffic before it impacts our advertisers and we’re unable to refund their media spend, it hurts us, even if we’re not responsible.”

Google is working on a fix it hopes will provide some clarity over which technology providers in the ad-buying chain are responsible for issuing refunds. It is also working on technology to ensure advertisers automatically receive a full credit back from Google and its partners if incidents occur again.

The company said it is entering discussions with the 100-plus exchanges, ad networks and publishers DoubleClick Bid Manager plugs into and asking them to display to ad buyers whether they are willing to refund the entire media spend if ad-fraud instances occur. Buyers could then opt to filter out the sources of inventory that don’t have such a policy.

Mr. Spencer said Google expects “high rates of adoption” among exchanges, and that the ones it had spoken to so far had been “very supportive” of the effort.

Another point of contention among those receiving refunds is that they haven’t been given details about where their ads ended up or specific details about the exploits the fraudsters used, so that advertisers and agencies can apply their own safeguards in the future.

“We need to be very careful about commenting on or discussing specifics about bots or our detection,” Mr. Spencer said. “Often fraudsters will change their approaches and strategies based on our public comments.”

Of the billions of dollars flowing into online advertising each year, a percentage is inadvertently shown to sites with fake traffic, with fraudsters siphoning off advertisers’ money for themselves.

The industry’s efforts to rein in fraud appear to have an impact. Some $6.5 billion in ad spending will be wasted this year to fraud, down 10% from 2016, according to a report released in May by the Association of National Advertisers and ad-fraud detection firm WhiteOps.

The methods the fraudsters use are highly sophisticated. Some infect unsuspecting consumers’ computers with malware to form a “botnet” that clicks on ads in the background.

Fraudsters are often adept at covering their tracks, which can make their activity difficult to spot until after the event has occurred.

For years, Google has had teams dedicated to filtering out fraud before an advertiser makes a bid on an ad. Those teams can also prevent exchanges from being paid if an ad has already been bid on, but invalid traffic is quickly detected. The teams also work to discover historical instances of fraud, which is what happened in this particular case.

Google said the buyers it contacted in this instance were impacted by invalid traffic over the course of a few months this year, primarily in the second quarter. Part of that traffic affected video ads, which carry higher ad rates than typical display ads and are therefore an attractive target for fraudsters.

Google has also joined a number of industry initiatives, such as the “Ads.txt” project launched in May by the Interactive Advertising Bureau, an industry trade body. The tool lets premium publishers insert a text file on their web servers to list all the ad tech vendors authorized to sell their inventory so ad buyers can confirm which platforms are selling legitimate ads.

“When people talk about [ad fraud], there’s a big specter to it and a big concern about invalid traffic in digital,” said Mr. Spencer. “It’s not that large in terms of a percentage of what people are buying, but it can be a little bit scary to buyers, and our goal is to remove that to improve the trust overall in the ecosystem.”

California couple is accused of drugging and raping women at Burning Man

(CNN) A well-known surgeon from Newport Beach and his girlfriend are accused of drugging and sexually assaulting two women, and Southern California authorities said they believe there could be many more victims.

Grant William Robicheaux, 38, and Cerissa Laura Riley, 31, are charged with rape by use of drugs, oral copulation by anesthesia or controlled substance, assault with intent to commit sexual offense, and possession of a controlled substance for sale. Robicheaux is also accused of firearms violations.

ORANGE COUNTY, CA

On Robicheaux's phone, investigators found hundreds of clips of women in various states of consciousness, Orange County District Attorney Tony Rackauckas told reporters Tuesday. He said that many of the women in the videos appeared unable to consent to sexual contact. Many of the videos also included Riley, he said.

"Based on this evidence we believe that there might be many unidentified victims out there," he said.

Rackauckas estimated there were more than 1,000 videos. He did not say whether the same women were seen in multiple clips.

Attorneys Scott Borthwick and Philip Cohen issued a statement on behalf of Riley and Robicheaux denying the allegations of nonconsensual sex.

"They have been aware of these accusations for a number of months, and each of them will formally deny the truth of these allegations at their first opportunity in court," the attorneys said.

"Dr. Robicheaux and Ms. Riley believe that such allegations do a disservice to, and dangerously undermine, the true victims of sexual assault, and they are eager to have the proper spotlight shed on this case in a public trial."

Riley and Robicheaux each paid $100,000 bail last week when they were arrested. They will be arraigned October 25.

The district attorney says Riley and Robicheaux met a 32-year-old woman at a restaurant in Newport Beach in April 2016, and on another occasion invited her to a party, took her back to his apartment once she was intoxicated, gave her drugs and raped her. The incident was recorded on video, Rackauckas said. The victim contacted Newport Beach police the next day and tested positive for multiple controlled substances.

Six months later, prosecutors say, another woman alleges the couple sexually assaulted her at the apartment after she got drunk at a bar with them. The DA's office says she awoke and screamed for help until a neighbor called police to the scene. Authorities don't know if that incident was also recorded, Rackauckas said.

Authorities believe Riley approached the women first, then invited Robicheaux over, Rackauckas told reporters.

The district attorney's office asked that any women who think they may have been sexually assaulted by the couple contact the office's lead investigator, Eric Wiseman. Authorities said the couple traveled to festivals such as Burning Man in Black Rock Desert in Nevada, Dirtybird Campout festival in central California and the Splash House festival in Palm Springs, California.

"We believe the defendants used their good looks and charm to lower the inhibitions of their potential prey," Rackauckas said.

Robicheaux went to Louisiana State University for his undergraduate degree and his medical training, graduating in 2007. He was licensed in California on May 30, 2009.

He appeared on an episode of Bravo's "Online Dating Rituals of the American Male" in 2014. Rackauckas said no women from the Bravo show have been connected with the cellphone videos.

While the district attorney said investigators will want to talk to Robicheaux's patients, he said there is no evidence any incidents happened in a medical setting.

"None of the allegations in this matter relate to or concern Dr. Robicheaux's medical practice or patients in any way," the defense attorneys said.

What do you do when you've got the munchies in the middle of an unforgiving desert? If you're an elite "Burner," just ring for your private chef.

Burning Man is an otherworldly, nine-day-long arts festival set on a sprawling, dry lake bed — the playa, to those in the know — in Black Rock City, Nev. From Aug. 26 to Sept. 3.

Attendees, aka Burners, adopt new identities ("playa" names), don elaborate costumes (or wear nothing at all), take drugs, party on fantastically decorated mutant vehicles ("art cars") and ritualistically burn an enormous wooden man.

During the festival, which debuted in 1986, attendees are meant to practice decommodification, meaning that money and marketing are verboten. Also a must: radical self-reliance, which means bringing everything they need to survive — including water — since civilization is miles and miles away.

At least, that's the idea. But recent years have marked a shift for Burning Man: It's become something of an "It" networking event for Silicon Valley tech gurus and stifled Wall Streeters looking to blow off steam. But they're not interested in totally roughing it — and that's led to the creation of lavish camps known as "Billionaire's Row" with all the luxuries of the Ritz, including private chefs.

While most festival attendees refuel with canned soups, beef jerky and protein bars, those with limitless resources pay as much as $50,000 to camp in style with seated dinners and toothsome tasting menus.

"My clients fly in," Keven Lee (known as "Cheven" or "Sipha" on the playa), a Los Angeles-based private chef for a camp of 1-percenters, tells The Post. "They are the elite: celebrities, billionaires, sports stars, developers, you name it. They trust me to take care of them 24/7" — whether that means soothing someone who's "wiggling out on mushrooms” or preparing a Michelin-worthy dinner.

For the past two festivals, Lee, 40, has prepared four gourmet meals a day for a camp of 180 — a feat that he says takes a “motherf - - king rock star” to organize.

To pull it off, Lee arrives at Burning Man with six assistants and a convoy of vehicles, including two 26-foot-long refrigerated trucks. He then builds a 38-foot-long kitchen from scratch in the middle of the desert. The camp of 53 luxury RVs and six art cars is built around a central lounge and dining area with a nightclub, where top DJs spin 24 hours a day, all powered by four 15,000-amp generators. His fee to cook for the camp starts at $250,000, before alcohol (usually cases of Whispering Angel, Don Julio 1942 and Dom Pérignon).

“We try to level up to the atmosphere. I'm not walking in with a bright white coat and frickin' toque on,” says Lee, who cooks in a pink tutu and bomber jacket. Last year, he had 250 pounds of fresh fish flown in on a jet. He used it in hand-rolls, which he made at 4 a.m. for people in light-up fur coats chanting his name.

“We make the most tweaked-out, ripping edible displays,” adds Lee, whose company, My World on a Plate, also caters for production companies and events such as the Sundance Film Festival. “I've got rock-star chefs from Maui who are beyond the bada-es of the bada-es carving ninja stars, orchids and the most gorgeous blooming flowers out of watermelon, radishes and rainbow carrots.”

An array of waters infused with fresh fruits and herbs keep Burning Man attendees hydrated.

Lia Paulina Holmgren, 35, a dominatrix, therapist and German sex-club owner who has attended the festival for the past 10 years and stays in Lee's camp, says that while she adores the fresh, organic produce he prepares, it's the ambiance that makes the dining experiences at Burning Man so special.

“It's all about how you dine,” Holmgren, who goes by “Lia Blossom” at the festival, says.

“You are in the dust in costumes with people who are probably Silicon Valley billionaires. It's just so fierce.” In the spirit of Burning Man, Holmgren says she typically brings gummy bears or melons to gift to strangers.

Last year, Manhattan-based chef Sander Kooijman — who specializes in Indonesian cuisine and has yet to take a playa name — took over as private cook to a camp of about 100 Burners in the finance, fashion and real-estate industries.

“What they have in common is that they like to party hard, and Burning Man gives them that opportunity,” he says.

This year, he plans to up his game, schlepping tons of food including 1,500 eggs, 100 pounds of chicken breast, 30 watermelons and eight different Indonesian seasonings to the event. His fee starts at $40,000, before booze.

Burning Man's Asshole Staff And Douche-Bag Attendees Own Worst Enemy

Kooijman says he was awed last year by the sheer size of the festival, the logistics of setting up a mobile kitchen in a dust bowl and catering to the demands of guests on LSD.

“Last year, I really underestimated the amount of tablecloths I would need, because after a day, it was filthy,” he tells the Post. “They eat like maniacs. Breakfast is dinner and dinner is breakfast.”

Of course, many long-time Burners look askance at the event’s velvet-rope glampers and the culinary one-upmanship that can occur. Camps at Burning Man are expected to be more or less welcoming. And the VIP encampments for the likes of Mark Zuckerberg or Google’s Sergey Brin have been accused of building walls with RVs and refusing to serve food and drinks to outsiders.

“It strikes me as odd to go to Burning Man for the food,” says an eight-year festival veteran who asked to be identified by his playa name, RCT. “The wonderful things there have absolutely nothing to do with fine dining.”

However, he adds that there are many food-themed camps at the festival that do give back.

“There are camps that specialize in food that do wonderful things for the community,” he says. “You will be wandering around in the dust and darkness, and suddenly, a truck will appear with nice, grilled-cheese sandwiches.”

Camp Baconeers, for instance, specializes in doling out bacon to the public. Stop by Barbie Death Camp and Wine Bistro afterwards for fine wine in a cheap, paper cup — no invitation necessary.

But at the end of the day, at Burning Man, like anywhere else in the world, “if you want the best service,” says Lee, “you better have deep pockets.”

Tech Elites Recreate The Absolute BS Cultism Of Burning Man Inside Their Living Rooms

- Naive Starry Eyed Idiots Rationalize Their 'Sense of Coolness' In Self Promoting Fake Religion-like "salon's.

36 Reactions

By Alex Williams, New York Times

To Chad Mureta, a Silicon Valley app guru, the intimate salons of Jess Magic, a New Age troubadour, are “like drugs, without taking anything.”

To Sanjiv Sidhu, a so-called software savant whose fortune was once estimated at over $6 billion, Magic’s invitation-only salons are the perfect escape from a business culture where one-upmanship is “crowding out our need to connect.”

To Jason Silva, the tech futurist and TV personality, her gatherings are a safe space for entrepreneurs who “sacrifice friendships, relationships and time,” only to “realize that it’s lonely at the top.”

Tech elites who are looking for more than extra zeros in their bank statements are finding it in an unlikely place: so-called songversations, emotion-heavy gatherings that combine philosophical rap sessions with improvised music, run by a ukulele-strumming songstress who describes herself as a “heartist.”

Branded as “Soul Salons,” they import the cosmic-explorer sensibility of Burning Man’s dusty playa into the cozy living rooms of prominent entrepreneurs, where they sing freestyle on topics as diverse as environmental degradation and heartbreak. Think of it as a free-jazz equivalent of an Esalen retreat.

Burning Man's Asshole Staff And Douche-Bag Attendees Own Worst Enemy

The tech A-list is a curious place to land for Magic, 37, who speaks in the soothing tones of a massage therapist and divides her time between Cardiff, California, and Bali, Indonesia. Until a few years ago, Magic ran a nonprofit for survivors of sexual trauma.

Despite her wood-nymph aura, or maybe because of it, Magic has found herself in some button-down circles. In 2016, she performed at the Women Economic Forum in New Delhi and at a star-studded birthday party of her friend Ken Howery, a founder of PayPal, on Necker Island.

"I don't know if you'd call this a breakthrough," she said, "but I got Peter Thiel to sing along and Elon Musk to smile."

Magic, who seems to approach every topic with a sense of giddy wonder, as if she just fell in love five minutes ago, believes that her appeal is rooted in the spiritual hollowness so many business elites feel, despite their wealth.

"The finance and tech scene is still riding the waves of hypermasculine values," she said. "Coffee to get through the day, alcohol to wind down, then sleeping pills at night to turn off the mind from all that they have going on."

"People forget that they are human beings rather than human doings," she added.

Enter the Soul Salon, which Magic calls "a play date for your inner child" and performs as a "gift," she said (although guests are invited to "contribute in accordance with the value they feel they received").

The salons usually start with a theme — say, the emptiness of consumer culture. As key phrases arise, Magic will begin strumming and humming, weaving those lines of dialogue into a lilting melody. The effect is vaguely akin to Joni Mitchell performing freestyle rap at Davos.

As the extemporaneous song grows, others join in with musings of their own, call-and-response style. Not every captain of industry can carry a tune, of course, but that's not the point. As Magic likes to say, "We don't sing to be good, we sing to be free."

Andrew Hewitt, creator of GameChangers 500, which ranks the world's top "for-benefit" businesses, said he has "witnessed some of the headiest Silicon Valley titans be deeply touched through these experiences."

"For people who live most of the time in their head," Hewitt said, "this feels like magic."

Magic is now extending her song beyond Silicon Valley, with a 10-city tour (a mix of private salons and public events, starting at $35) stretching from the summer solstice to the fall equinox.

The tour began in New York on June 22, when 150 people showed up at a cavernous gallery in Chelsea around 7 p.m., many dressed in flowing tie-dyed pants, caftans and silk head wraps. (A photography show and a talk sponsored by Peace Accelerators took place at the same time.)

Magic looked ready to jam with the “Exile on Main St.”-era Rolling Stones, wearing skintight bell bottoms and platforms, and admitted to being nervous.

“One of the reasons why I do what I do, and why I am, honestly, on this planet, is to show up with such a level of vulnerability and sincerity and authenticity, that it almost gives people permission to let it go for a little while,” she said.

Whatever the topic, Magic speaks with a faraway sense of wonder, her hazel eyes seeming to sparkle. When the singing commenced, Magic invited the assembled to sit on the floor in a semicircle, where a musician named Elijah Ray droned a mystical tune that called to mind images of saffron robes and singing bowls.

As the music swirled, Charles Eisenstein, a proponent of what he calls “sacred economics,” talked about the unending human injury to Mother Earth. “If you knew she could feel, would you stop?” he said.

When his monologue wound down, Magic rose and began a Norah Jones-style ballad, picking up phrases from Eisenstein’s talk. “If we believed,” she sang in a soulful jazz scat, “that me, that me, that me and the river were the same, would it change my ways?”

At first, the audience sat silent, seemingly puzzled. But slowly people began to clap their hands and sway to the beat. A man with a floppy hat and wizardlike robe began to gyrate around the dance floor.
