Dark patterns can take up many masks when it comes to anonymously controlling your data, and “misdirect” you into believing that you’re in total control.

For instance, did you ever think Google can still track you even if you turn location services off using the settings on your phone? I hate to break it to you, but it’s true.

AP News has confirmed that Google does track your location for its Maps, Google Search and Weather even if you have turned Location services off. And toggling that location icon on the notification
