

Google Launches Public Pacification Website But Refuses To Show The Information It Gives To The NSA

Sat, 02 Jul 2016 17:00:00, newstips66, [category: google-alphabet, post_tag: google-launches-public-pacification-website-but-refuses-to-show-the-information-it-gives-to-the-nsa, category: worldnews]

Google My Activity shows everything that company knows about its users – and there's a lot

The new site collects every website you've been on, everything you've searched and many of the things you've done with your phone

- Andrew Griffin
- @_andrew_griffin
- Thursday 30 June 2016
- 41 comments

There's a lot to see Chris Jackson/Getty Images

Google has launched a new site that shows absolutely everything it knows about its users. And there's an awful lot of it.

The new My Activity page collects all of the data that Google has generated by watching its customers as they move around the web. And depending on your settings that could include a comprehensive list of the websites you've visited and the things you've done with your phone.

Google has long allowed its users to see the kinds of information that is being generated as people use the company's products, including letting people listen in on automated recordings that it has made of its users. But the new page collects them together in a more accessible – and potentially more terrifying – way than ever before.

Experts say the site is "A LIE THAT ONLY EXPOSES 25% OF WHAT GOOGLE PUTS IN ITS FILE ON YOU!"