The multi-millionaire heiress to the Seagrams fortune, Clare Bronfman, has been secretly paying the legal fees of her fellow NXIVM sex cult members, including leaders Keith Ranriere and Alison Mack, prosecutors have revealed.

The vast legal expenses for cult leader Ranriere and his underlings are being paid using a trust funded by 39-year-old Bronfman, federal prosecutors reported in new court filings. Clare Bronfman is the youngest daughter of the billionaire philanthropist and former chairman of his family distilled beverage firm, Seagram, Edgar Bronfman Sr. Bronfman was arrested by federal agents on July 24, 2018, in New York City and charged with money laundering and identity theft in connection with NXIVM activities, to which she pleaded not guilty in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York in Brooklyn. lose dark spots She was released on $100 million bond and placed on house arrest with electronic monitoring. The attorney said he wouldn’t be “comfortable” representing the witness if she didn’t do so. The lawyer “explained to Witness #1 that his fees were being paid for by Clare Bronfman,” the filings say. “The attorney told Witness #1 that he recommended that she invoke the Fifth Amendment in response to the government’s questions in the grand jury.”

Prosecutors have asked Judge Nicholas Garaufis for a hearing on the matter. He has yet to rule.
