

Seven people have been rushed to hospital after a Tesla was wrecked as it ploughed into a lamppost on a busy London street.

Footage shows the aftermath of the crash as the mangled white car sits ruined outside a Sainsbury's Local store and pedestrians lie sprawled on the pavement.

Bits of black debris are also scattered at the junction of Mile End Road and Harford Street in Stepney Green, east London where the collision took place on Sunday afternoon.

Three ambulances, a trauma team and fire engine are understood to have been sent out with two of the injured needing to be urgently taken to a major trauma centre.

A London Ambulance Service spokesman said: 'We were called at 5.26pm on Sunday to reports of a road traffic collision in Mile End Road, E1.

'We sent a number of resources to the scene including three ambulance crews.

'We also dispatched a trauma team in a car from London's Air Ambulance.

'The first paramedic arrived in less than seven minutes.
