From the San Francisco Chronicle:

San Francisco school board votes to destroy controversial Washington High mural

Jill Tucker June 26, 2019 Updated: June 26, 2019 3:57 p.m.

The San Francisco school board unanimously voted Tuesday to destroy a controversial school mural featuring slaves and a dead Native American, saying the removal equates to necessary reparations for historic wrongs. ...

“It might be art and it can also be racist; it can be both,” said board member Alison Collins. “It’s not just about removing them from public view, it’s also about righting a wrong.”

Painting over the mural would cost at least $600,000, with the majority of the cost in producing an environmental impact report.

And people wonder why California can't build high-speed rail ...

In addition, supporters of the mural have vowed to sue if the board voted to destroy it and legal costs could add to the cost, district officials said.

Other options included covering the mural with panels, which would cost up to $825,000, or obscuring it with curtains, which would have cost up to $375,000.

I can cover it with curtains for the low, low, lowest bid price of $374,000. San Francisco, call me!

Supporters argued the historic work, painted by Russian emigre Victor Arnautoff, is an important piece of art that is actually critical of oppression and imperialism and that destroying it or covering it equates to book burning.

Arnautoff was a Communist Party USA member. He led an eventful life. The son of an Orthodox priest in Russia, he became a White Russian cavalry officer, then the cavalry colonel for a Chinese warlord. In Mexico, he became the assistant to the famous Stalinist painter Diego Rivera, Frida Kahlo's husband. He moved to San Francisco and was hired to paint Rivera-like murals by the New Deal Works Progress Administration. During the McCarthy Era, Republicans tried to get him fired from Stanford, but the university didn't heed them. In the early 1960s, he retired from teaching art at Stanford and moved to the Soviet Union, where he died in Leningrad in 1979.

Critics, including students and community groups, called for the 1,600-square-foot mural to be painted over with white paint

Probably in 2029, San Francisco will pay $3.75 million to paint over the white paint with anti-racist beige paint.

Those costs are just eye-popping.

But it's a poorly executed painting, in my opinion, with a brutal political message only a commie could like. Look at that Indian on the ground. He's so badly rendered I'm not even sure if he's on his back or on his stomach.

I'd vote to replace it with a mural featuring an all-black cast of characters showing one set of Africans selling another set into slavery. Executed by the Chinese guy who made the MLK statue on the Capitol Mall in DC.

OK, I went over to Sherwin-Williams paint calculator. 1600 square feet, we will need four gallons per coat. Let's say we need two coats, so that's 8 gallons. Lowes sells Valspar Pro ExpressCoat Flat Antique, white latex for 10.98 per gallon. So, all told, we need to spend approximately $88.00 on paint. Double that for drop cloths, brushes, rollers, etc we should be able to do this job for about $170 in materials.

Well, I'm leaving home and going to San Francisco to take up painting.

A left wing artist paints a left wing mural and angry left wing radicals want it destroyed because it is right wing. And it will cost $875K to deface the third rate art work. And they will spend weeks of meeting time arguing loudly about it. And it will all pale in importance to smashing another Robert E Lee statue, which is their supreme act of virtue and courage. Can't we just beat these people and move on?

If it's white, it just ain't right.

Obviously the white history denigrating, denying numpties were not happy enough with tearing down old Confederate war memorial statues and painting over exquisite murals of George Washington, that were probably painted as part of FDR's socialist WPA. Happening in a California school

Thanks Steve. Damn right this was a communist FDR series of murals

China already has 200 million public surveillance cameras

China land area: 3,600,000 square miles

Surveillance cameras per square mile: 55.5.

Mathematically, that would be one camera every 0.133 miles. If they were equally spaced out (one camera every 0.133 miles), you could never be more than about 80 seconds' walk from a Communist surveillance camera, assuming 20 minutes to walk a mile ($([0.133/2]*20)*60$). And that's to walk all the way up to the camera itself. Less for being within the view of one.

There's no more clear indication of America's decadence and loss of can-do attitude than the fact that simply painting over a wall can cost such an astronomical amount of money. No wonder everything is outsourced to the Chinese.

Also the obsession with destroying any remnant of the past that might remotely appear "racist" is now becoming a form of insanity.

I don't see what's racist about the mural. Is now simply featuring slaves "racist"?

Should we deny that slavery ever existed?

Maybe one of the slaves should have a blond woman on his arm, to promote mixed couples, and then it would be alright?

Imagine if the Italians started destroying the Colosseum because "Romans were racist and had slaves".

As demented as Europeans have become, there is still a general respect for the past. At least for now. I'm aware that globalists hate that too.

A Stalin-sent hit squad led by a famous painter shot up Rivera's house with submachine guns trying to kill Trotsky, but missed. I think maybe they killed one of Trotsky's grandchildren.

But after Trotsky got icepicked, Rivera and Kahlo decided it was a good idea to announce that they'd been for murdering Trotsky.

The school board had better tread carefully. Almost all states have public art preservation statutes that govern the alteration or removal of public art. It may not be legal to destroy the mural without approval from the state commission that regulates public art.

Also, the artist's estate may still hold the copyright in the work. Destroying it without permission could subject the school district to damages.

Fresco painting has always fascinated me. It seems so difficult, and the work becomes one with the wall. These high school murals seem very well done. Couldn't there have been a way to make them a "teachable moment"?

I hope that the budget for removal includes money to professionally photograph the works in detail, and publish a book in them. Where are the tech billionaires now? They funded Willy Brown High School, which was just another "fix black people" money hole failure. How about funded the removal and relocation of the frescoes.

I also hope that the removal is widely covered in the international press. San Francisco deserves to be humiliated as the idiot city that it is.I

It probably would have been better to just let extremists vandalize the works, just like with statues. Then remove what's left.

These “costs” are largely a scam. Environmental Impact Study = Friends of Some Politico who are being rewarded for their support.

If they were serious, they’d run a story that Viktor was secretly a White Nationalist, and have the police stand down while AntiFa or whoever take it down for free, as is the case with Confederate memorials elsewhere.

Of course, if the AntiFa do enough damage, then the politicians can reward their construction and environmental impact study friends even more city money. Winning!

I wonder if there is some plausible legal theory under which the contractors and their employees could be directly sued, bypassing the school district, for violation of artwork preservation laws or something? Preservationists could make an announcement of their plans at a press conference, and soon the school district could find themselves without any way implementing their decision, short of putting on the old overalls themselves, or hiring sanctuary city Mexicans who don’t know any better, at which point on-site preservationist protestors could don ICE windbreakers.

The 14 photos of the hearing at the San Francisco Chronicle that Steve linked to are worth a look. There is quite an anti-destruction contingent. They look white, reasonably affluent, and their signs suggest a classical liberal view. The burn-it-down contingent includes no or virtually no blacks, a few SJW looking types, maybe college or antifa age, but mostly what look to me like stocky, five-foot Mexican or Central American types. Who are these people?

Having watched the New York Amazon HQ2 hearings and having done some background research on that, I realize that these hearing are attended by all kinds of crazy people and lots of activists, some having little to do with the issue. Kind of like the protests in Bonfire of the Vanities. But I really wonder who is behind both sides of this issue? It seems like something that should be subject to a public vote by the citizens. Is there a way to may an outcome like that happen?

They're doing a lot of damage, but the decay in news has to do largely with the collapse of newspaper revenue from classifieds. It's a lot cheaper to hire a few people fresh out of college to churn out articles on 'Why My Hair is Intersectional' than it is to send them around town figuring out why the local nursing home spends so much money but gives such awful care, and less likely to annoy the rich family that owns the nursing home.

Wanting to sleep around the way men used to has been a big motivator for many feminists. (The other big one is wanting to make their own money.)

The catch is, of course, they get annoyed when they get dumped, and decide it's patriarchy, or decide they prefer other women, or both.

I am convinced that if Western Civ had found a better solution for making masculine women happy we would have avoided a lot of trouble. Oh well, at least it should provide some amusement to the historians in 22nd century Beijing. "And here is how the baizuo wrecked their culture..."

This definitely plays a role – when I was young and attending a diverse and vibrant public school, there was a lot of debate between black students about who was ‘real’ versus not 100% black, some of it centered around their skin tone.

Also worth mentioning with Curry though is that a lot of NBA players grew up in genuinely tough circumstances, and Curry was a rich kid, so on top of his color he no doubt had a childhood that 99% of the kids in this country couldn’t touch.

Yes, that was the point I was trying to make.

I sometimes wonder if having the right to bear arms makes us complacent since we think we are protected with that ace-in-the-hole if things ever got bad. You hear guys talking about how things taking place overseas could not happen here because our government would never try that stuff on an armed population. But then you watch as rights, and things we took for granted, are eroded slowly but surely.

I can’t imagine what will happen when the left gets a 5-4 Supreme Court decision stating that the 2nd amendment is a group right, not an individual’s. Eleven years ago we only got a 5-4 decision that supported an individual right. It won’t take much to flip the court the other way. At that point our right to bear will be illegal, but it will have been accomplished legally and constitutionally. So what happens?

Do cons tell us we have to obey the constitution?

Mao, I think, once stated that power flows through the barrel of a gun. That might have been true, but I don't think it is now. For all the guns we have, we don't seem to be getting much power flowing out of them.

We can't leave all those AA Environmental Engineers rotting in their African Students Unions. Environmental Impact Studies are just another name for things they do together.

I am convinced that if Western Civ had found a better solution for making masculine women happy we would have avoided a lot of trouble.

Trying to make people happy is doing manhood wrong.

Who are these people?

People who want to live in their own country, not George Washington's.

Trump's answer on the liberalism question was widely derided by the usually suspect, but is sure makes plenty of sense to those paying attention.

Wow, I had no idea they were that extensive. I suppose there's something "problematic" to be found in every one of them.

But if you want to really see problematic, check out the murals in the lobby of the old San Francisco Post Office (now a food court for the lunchtime office crowd, known as the Rincon Center) down at Mission and Spear. The general theme there is the white man/Anglo conquering California from the Injuns and the Mexicans.

I suppose you're right, though for some reason, the old ways failed.

Well yeah, men have been trying to make women happy since the stone age.

“You can’t make someone (else) happy” is a psychiatric standby from way back. Doesn’t make it less true. Happens to jive with rediscovery of manhood by online dissidents.

“Political power grows out of the barrel of a gun” only if you are willing to use it. The Left is more prone to violence than the Right. Even in WW II, it was the communists in France that were most willing to fight the Nazi occupiers and communists in Malaysia who fought the Japanese. Leftists are animated by anger and a resentment of the status quo. By nature, people on the right are more law abiding and respectful of authority. They may be more dangerous when violent because of military experience and/or familiarity with firearms, but they are less prone to lash out.
