CNN continues to struggle after being forced to fire three members of the network's ace investigative team over a fake news story on former Trump administration figure Anthony 'the Mooch' Scaramucci and a Russian investment fund. The anti-Trump network had to endure the humiliation of having to retract the story and issue a public apology to Scaramucci that inflicted what may be permanent damage on the brand.

Then, having been repeatedly bludgeoned by President Trump via Twitter and in press conferences, the network has backed off of the 24/7 Russian conspiracy mongering and trying to fill airtime with other subjects.

Like advising teenagers how to perform sex acts including buggery to assist them with the process of "transitioning" to another gender.

CNN ran a story Monday about a new video documentary created by the network that contains scenes of teaching high schoolers about anal sex, performing oral sex, and transitioning to a new gender.

The documentary, titled, “This Is Sex with Lisa Ling,” features a segment titled, “Sex 101.”

In the video, CNN’s Lisa Ling sits in a classroom with high schoolers, listening to a lesson where a teacher quizzes students on the proper term for a woman receiving oral sex, among other graphic questions.

Other topics taught in this classroom include how to use condoms for anal sex between same-sex couples, after which the CNN host characterizes teaching this as “inclusive.”

The teacher also states that she has students transitioning genders, and that she asks them their preferred pronouns. She also discusses how California passed a new law on sex ed that is creating these discussions in the classroom.

It is not explained why exactly a supposed “news” organization is dispensing smutty sex tips as well as propaganda for transgenderism which seem to be an odd fit on the self-proclaimed “most trusted name in news” but traditional American media is the midst of a serious mental breakdown these days.

Not to mention the hypocrisy of a network that just had a host meltdown over the word “boobs” being uttered that is instructing young people on the proper way to enter through the back door.
